Foreword

FROM the day the United Nations came into being, it has had to face diverse issues arising from massive changes in human affairs. As this transition has generated new demands and expectations, global concerns have vastly multiplied. These range from banishing the spectre of a nuclear holocaust to reducing poverty, eradicating racial discrimination and promoting the rights of the disadvantaged such as women and children, the handicapped and the elderly. Added to them have been emergencies of various kinds: some man-made like armed conflicts, others the result of natural disasters including famine and drought. On all these questions, the United Nations is the central instrument through which States can jointly devise the appropriate policies or courses of action.

Decisions made at the United Nations are often inadequately reported in the world press. It is understandable, therefore, that only those professionally involved are well acquainted with the working of the world Organization. Far removed from the headlines is the quiet drama, the unsung heroism infusing the enterprise of the United Nations in far-flung lands. Unarmed, a blue-bereted soldier dies while trying to keep apart warring parties in a country not his own; a tree is planted to hold back the encroaching desert; a shelter is built for refugees to provide against the coming monsoon; and a malnourished child receives the food vital to her very existence. This is the human face of plans and programmes launched by the world body.

I commend the Yearbook of the United Nations to everyone who wishes to study how, in a particular year, nations addressed the complex problems confronting them. The tale is told without embellishment; the record is of success as well as stalemate but it has to be judged on a continuous basis. At any rate, the direction of the effort—towards a world with steadily less fear, misery and violence and greater order, justice, respect for human rights and compassion—is beyond question.

About the 1984 edition of the Yearbook

The 1984 YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS has been designed as a reference tool for use not only by diplomats and other officials but also by writers, researchers, journalists, librarians and students, in fact all who might need readily available information on a particular activity of the United Nations system.

The Yearbook covers, during a calendar year, the main activities of the United Nations (Part One) and those of each related organization in the United Nations system (Part Two).

The 1984 edition is subject-oriented like previous editions. Part One (United Nations), containing 50 chapters, is divided into five major sections: political and security questions, economic and social questions, trusteeship and decolonization, legal questions, and administrative and budgetary questions.

Each chapter is divided into a hierarchy of topics, with each level having a heading of distinctive appearance. The assignment of headings implies no editorial judgement about the relative importance of a topic.

Structure and scope of articles

Presented under each topical heading is a summary of pertinent United Nations activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities, and the views of States in written communications. The 1984 edition also gives the position of those States explaining their votes in the principal organs of the Organization. Such explanations are generally given when a recorded vote was taken. At the end of each chapter or subchapter is a list of references, linked by numerical indicators to the text. These references indicate document symbols, previous Yearbook volumes supplying additional information, and previous resolutions and/or decisions by the principal United Nations organs. The Yearbook covers the following:

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, where applicable, those of subsidiary bodies, including sub-commissions and sub-committees, are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council, with information on their adoption, are reproduced under the relevant topic. Where provisions of other resolutions and decisions of those bodies are mentioned, the full text can be found by using the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS at the end of this volume.

Major reports. Most 1984 reports of the Secretary-General on which a United Nations body took action during the year, along with selected reports from other United Nations sources such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly under the relevant topic(s). The document symbols of all reports cited in an article appear in the references.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For all major activities financed outside the United Nations regular budget, information is given on contributions by individual countries and on expenditures. Financial data are generally obtained from the audited accounts prepared for each fund, and cover the 1984 calendar year unless otherwise specified.

Views of States. Each written communication sent to the United Nations by a Member State and circulated separately as a document of a principal organ has been summarized under the most relevant topic.

All substantive debates in the Security Council have been analysed by Yearbook editors, and their main points can be found under the pertinent topic(s). Users wishing details on the position of individual States in the principal organs of the United Nations or any of their main/sessional committees should refer to the meeting numbers to be found at the end of the summaries of procedural action following all resolution/decision texts.

Related intergovernmental organizations. Part Two of the Yearbook describes the 1984 activities of each specialized agency and the International Atomic Energy Agency, based on information prepared by them. Included are data on budgets, contributions by member States, and principal officials.

Texts

The Yearbook reproduces the texts of all resolutions and substantive decisions adopted in 1984 by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council. These texts, together with the title (if any) of the resolution/decision, are followed by the procedural details giving: date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, with document symbols of drafts, approved amendments and committee reports; and a list of sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and all relevant meeting numbers of the principal organs and the General Assembly's Main Committees. Details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole also follow the text.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title.

Short titles may be used in subsequent references. They employ key words, usually not capitalized, from the formal title, such as "Committee on colonial countries" for "Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples". Capital letters are used when the only difference between full and short title is the omission of a term such as "Ad Hoc", "International", "Special" or "United Nations" ("Committee against Apartheid", for "Special Committee against Apartheid"). These short titles have no official standing.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The 1984 edition has been designed to enable the user to locate information on United Nations activities in a number of ways.

By subject: Broad subjects may be located in the table of contents on pages vi-xii. Each chapter opens with an introduction highlighting the main developments. Where a main topic is subdivided, shorter introductions may precede subchapters. Cross-references give chapters for related information. The SUBJECT INDEX may be used to locate individual topics and specific references to the bodies dealing with each.

By body: Although the Yearbook is oriented by subject rather than by body, surveys of the work of many bodies appear under the topic of their main concern. For the principal organs, APPENDIX IV gives the 1984 agenda for each session. The members, officers, and date and place of sessions of each body are given in APPENDIX III. The SUBJECT INDEX lists bodies by the key word(s) of their formal title: "Apartheid, Special Committee against".

By resolution and decision number: A numerical list of all resolutions and substantive decisions adopted in 1984 by the principal organs, with page numbers for their text, appears in the final pages of this volume.

Each resolution/decision text appears in an article together with the circumstances of its adoption. Summaries of relevant provisions of other resolutions or decisions may also be added where applicable.

Other information: The annual report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization in 1984 is reproduced, beginning on page 3. A list of Member States, with their dates of admission to the United Nations, comprises APPENDIX I. The Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice, is in APPENDIX II. An INDEX OF NAMES follows the SUBJECT INDEX.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References at the end of each article in Part One of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1984 on the topic, arranged in the order in which they are referred to in the text. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/39/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the thirty-ninth session, beginning with A/39/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1984/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1984 sessions, beginning with E/1984/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/C.1/-, E/C.2/- and E/C.3/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, the First (Economic), Second (Social) and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees, respectively; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/CN.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1984/1); and one for decisions, beginning, since 1983, with 101 (decision 1984/101).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1 (1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals, e.g. resolution 2177(LI) of the fifty-first session. The Council's decisions are not numbered.

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special series symbols, including the following:

|           |  |
|-----------|--|
| ACC/-     | Administrative Committee on Co-ordination  |
| CD/-      | Conference on Disarmament  |
| CERD/-    | International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination  |
| DC/-      | Disarmament Commission   |
| DP/-      | United Nations Development Programme   |
| HS/-      | Commission on Human Settlements  |
| ID/-      | United Nations Industrial Development Organization   |
| ITC/-     | International Trade Centre   |
| LOS/PCN/- | Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea |
| TD/-      | United Nations Conference on Trade and Development   |
| UNEP/-    | United Nations Environment Programme   |

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the text of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly and dated 5 September 1984.<sup>(1)</sup>

After nearly three years as Secretary-General of the United Nations, I am more convinced than ever of the need to preserve and strengthen the Organization as a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations. I also believe that an extended and tolerable future for all humanity ultimately depends upon our success in making the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations the basis of the day-to-day relations of Governments and peoples. On the eve of our fortieth anniversary, in this, my third, report on the work of the Organization I intend to examine the basic premises of our activity in the United Nations which is the practical embodiment of the concept of multilateralism.

The original intent of the United Nations was to provide a framework in which Governments of differing persuasions could, in their wisdom, work out solutions to international problems and, if necessary, together take action to put those solutions into effect rather than engaging in conflict. As the Preamble to the Charter puts it, the main purpose was, and is, "to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security". The basic assumption was that all nations had a vital common interest in peace and in an orderly and equitable world and would be prepared to co-operate to achieve it.

Unfortunately the history of post-war international relations has so far shown that the common interest in peace and security has tended to assert itself only when things have reached a dangerously critical stage. Until that stage short-term national interest and opportunism tend to override the common interest. We are still very far from general acceptance of the principles of the Charter as rules to be lived by at all times by all Governments in their international relations.

In these circumstances, it is paradoxical that while contemporary realities have strengthened the need for the use of multilateral means for dealing with our problems and enlarged the scope for growth and development through multilateralism, there is an increasing questioning of the rules, instruments and modalities of multilateral co-operation. There is also, on occasion, an apparent reluctance to make the effort required to use international organizations effectively.

The past year has been a time of great-Power tension accentuated by a lack of progress in disarmament and arms limitation which has heightened fears of nuclear confrontation; of violence or threatened violence in several parts of the world; of continued economic difficulties in spite of a recovery in certain developed countries, and a deterioration in the situation of many developing countries; of drought and famine in several regions; and of a tendency to side-step major problems in a way which is likely in the long run to increase frustration and bitterness. Virtually nothing that has happened has shown that these problems can be solved effectively by purely bilateral or unilateral efforts.

Why has there been a retreat from internationalism and multilateralism at a time when actual developments both in relation to world peace and to the world economy would seem to demand their strengthening? We need to consider this question carefully if we are to make our institution work better. I hope very much that political scientists and intellectuals the world over, as well as political leaders and diplomats, will ponder this essential problem on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations.

After the Second World War there was admittedly a certain over-confidence in the capacity of international institutions, born of a desperate desire to build a new and better world. It then seemed possible to establish, as a first priority, a system for maintaining international peace and security under the provisions of the Charter. If such a system could become effective, the main obstacle to disarmament and arms limitation, the insecurity of nations, would be removed, and the rule of law rather than the rule of force would at last begin to come into its own on the international level. With these co-operative achievements a world community would have come into being, capable of directing its affairs by reason and enlightened self-interest. The system would include equitable economic institutions and steady progress in social justice and human rights.

What has happened to that majestic vision? It was soon clouded by the differences of the major Powers. The advent of atomic weapons brought with it a new doctrine of security based on nuclear deterrence, a doctrine which was not taken account of when the Charter was drafted. Moreover, the world turned out to be a more complex, far less orderly place than had been hoped at San Francisco. The problems of post-war international peace and security were less clear-cut and less susceptible to the kind of international action envisaged in the Charter. The forces of nationalism and fears for national security, far from abating after the Second World War, were soon very much on the increase. The international community's inability to solve many of its problems, whether political or economic, even when it could agree in principle on what the solution should be, gave rise to a process of side-stepping the United Nations and recourse to other measures—force, unilateral action or confronting military alliances—which weakened reliance on the Organization.

In looking back, however, it would be a grave mistake to underestimate, or simply take for granted, what has been achieved and what is now being done by the United Nations system. During a period of revolutionary change it has accomplished a great deal for the betterment of the human condition.

The United Nations has played a decisive role in the process of decolonization which has brought independence to hundreds of millions of people. The Security Council has throughout its existence considered many of the difficult problems of conflict in the world and on a large number of occasions has come up with a basic formula on which their solution might be based. It has also taken numerous actions to limit and control conflict. Peace-keeping operations have successfully controlled violence in a number of critical areas. Nor should we forget that, although there have been a number of regional conflicts, their escalation into global conflict has been avoided. Even on the most difficult question of disarmament and arms limitation a number of agreements have in fact been reached.

The United Nations Development Programme, together with the specialized agencies, has come to represent a vital source of economic and technical assistance for developing countries. The United Nations Children's Fund has brought life and hope to millions of children and mothers and is the leading influence in furthering technological communication advances that can bring a virtual survival revolution for children in Asia, Africa and Latin America. The specialized agencies have, in their various fields of activity, made major contributions to the alleviation of global problems.

The United Nations has provided authoritative definitions of the fundamental rights and freedoms which all human beings should enjoy. It is responsible for the development of the Convention on the Law of the Sea which provides a broadly accepted new régime for the oceans. In the past 40 years more has been done by the United Nations in codifying international law than in all the previous years of history together. Millions of refugees have gained protection and assistance through United Nations instruments and agencies; international humanitarian activity and concern have been mobilized on an unprecedented scale; guidelines have been established to deal with many of the most critical problems of our time, and the Governments and peoples of the world have been sensitized to their importance through the great international conferences and programmes which the United Nations has sponsored, the most recent of which was the International Conference on Population held in August this year.

All of these accomplishments required a multi-lateral structure of co-operation. Moreover, in some situations the United Nations, or the Secretary-General, remains essential to communication between the parties. I think, for example, of Cyprus, over which at this moment I am engaged in a new effort to find a just solution; of Afghanistan, the Iran/Iraq war and South-East Asia. The critical value of peace-making and peace-keeping efforts would be instantly evident if they were to cease. It is essential, in considering our problems, to remember the positive side of the United Nations account and to keep in perspective politically-motivated criticism.

However, for all of the accomplishments of the past decades, and they have been major, the fact of the matter is that the three main elements of a stable international order—an accepted system of maintaining international peace and security; disarmament and arms limitation; and the progressive development of a just and effective system of international economic relations—have yet to take hold as they should.

In dealing with the most vital problems of the widest concern, we often witness heated rhetoric rather than a reasoned co-operative approach. In such an atmosphere, which extends far beyond the Organization, the United Nations, which should be used to provide constructive solutions, provides a convenient target of criticism.

The United Nations reflects in a unique way the aspirations and frustrations of many nations and groups all over the world. One of its great merits is that all nations—including the weak, the oppressed and the victims of injustice—can get a hearing and have a platform even in the face of the hard realities of power. A just cause, however frustrated or disregarded, can find a voice in the United Nations.

This is not always a well-liked attribute of the Organization, but it is an essential one.

What needs to be studied in the light of experience is whether present practices in the United Nations are in all instances best suited to promote concrete and just solutions and strengthen confidence in an Organization the essence of which is its universality. If confrontations in the deliberative organs are carried too far, either by one side or the other, they destroy the possibility of a consensus which could form the basis for practical action. I am totally in sympathy with the pursuit of just aspirations, however great the difficulties. But for the good of all, as well as of the United Nations itself, we should assess very carefully the most effective and correct method of using the Organization. The United Nations is a willing and patient horse, but it should not be ridden to a standstill without thought of the consequences.

We should beware of blurring the separate and specific functions of the main organs and specialized agencies by treating them as interchangeable platforms for pursuing the same political aims. Issues must be dealt with primarily on their own merits and in their own context. Otherwise the fever of one or two issues can pervade the entire body politic of the United Nations.

The non-implementation of resolutions, as well as their proliferation, has tended to downgrade the seriousness with which Governments and the public take the decisions of the United Nations. Very often the only outcome of such a process is to ask the Secretary-General to make yet another report to the next session, thus perpetuating a stalemate which, to be resolved, requires governmental and inter-governmental action. This process, and the almost automatic repetition of some agenda items and debates, is expensive and time-consuming both in terms of meetings and documentation, as well as often being ineffective in terms of practical results. I believe that such tendencies have been debilitating to the efforts of the Organization in the cause of peace and economic co-operation. I hope that Member States, even during the forthcoming session of the General Assembly, will give serious thought to the best way of doing business.

Two years ago in my first annual report I made a series of suggestions as to how the Charter system of international peace and security might be made to work better. Although the Security Council has devoted many hours of thoughtful consultations to these and related ideas, concrete results are still needed for which the impetus must come from the highest political levels. I feel that the realization of the full potential of the United Nations depends upon a willingness to take active steps to experiment with new approaches.

In recent years the collective capacity and influence of the Security Council have been insufficiently tested. There are important issues where the members of the Council, including the permanent members, hold substantially similar views. And yet other factors not directly related to these problems inhibit the Council from exerting collective influence as envisaged in the Charter.

The same consideration applies to peace-keeping. We are often urged to strengthen the peace-keeping capacity of the United Nations, the implication being that this is a matter that can be handled without regard to the political relations of Member States and particularly of members of the Security Council. A number of lessons have been learned recently about the nature of peace-keeping, but it is essential to emphasize the fundamental issue. Peace-keeping is an expression of international political consensus and will. If that consensus or will is weak, uncertain, divided or indecisive, peace-keeping operations will be correspondingly weakened. There are occasions when the differences among members of the Security Council even make it impossible to take any peace-keeping action at all. The strongest peace-keeping operation would be one which had the unreserved support, political, diplomatic and financial, of all the Members of the United Nations and even the actual participation of the permanent members of the Security Council under the mandate of the Council. This may be unrealistic at present, but it is also the political truth which indeed applies across the whole range of the activities of the Organization.

I give the example of peace-keeping to demonstrate the process by which internationalism becomes discredited in the public mind. Peace-keeping is one of the more successful innovations of the United Nations. But when this technique cannot be used in a situation which obviously requires it, because the members of the Security Council are divided on the matter, the public generally concludes that there is something wrong with the United Nations and with the concept of internationalism. This conclusion is, of course, easier than analysing the conflicting positions and motives of Governments which are the real cause of the impasse and of the failure of the United Nations to act or to respond.

I do not have any simple solutions to offer to this problem. Obviously a radical improvement in the international political climate would make a profound difference, but we cannot rely on miracles. In the mean time we could perhaps work on a few ideas for improving the situation, on the assumption that our common and agreed objective is human survival in reasonably decent conditions.

I myself have put forward some ideas and suggestions on a number of issues—about Lebanon, for example, and the Middle East problem—but the reactions so far have been mixed. I notice that there is a tendency at present in the direction of bilateral or unilateral action, or no action at all. And yet bilateral or unilateral approaches do not seem to be noticeably effective in most cases. Nor is this surprising, for by their very nature many of the disputes that we face around the globe require the building of a wide consensus if solutions are to hold.

I suggest that we review the current tendency in relation to specific situations. I very much hope, for instance, that we shall see real—and long overdue—progress in proceeding to the independence of Namibia on the basis of the United Nations plan. I also hope that in the coming months we shall see the full and concrete co-operation and positive action which are needed to ensure the success of the untiring efforts which the Contadora Group is making for peace in Central America.

In many disputes accusations and counter-accusations are freely traded over a situation which, to most people, is mystifying and complex. What harm would be done if United Nations teams were dispatched to clarify and certify what the real facts are? Surely such clarification of the situation by objective observers might help to reduce international tension and strengthen other efforts. Let us ask ourselves what useful steps can be taken in a given situation rather than starting by thinking of all the extraneous reasons why they cannot be taken.

Most of all we need to reaffirm the Charter concept that threats to international peace and security, from whatever source or in whatever region of the world, override ideological or other differences between States and entail an obligation on all States to agree and co-operate. Under the terms of the Charter some situations clearly require immediate consideration and action by the Security Council regardless of political disagreements. Surely one such situation is when a national frontier is violated and the State concerned calls for United Nations action.

There must of course be a substantial improvement in the international climate if there is to be meaningful progress in the limitation and reduction of arms. This is a field in which it is essential to utilize the full potential of multilateral and bilateral negotiations, both to improve mutual understanding of the reasoning behind military postures and negotiating positions and to reach substantive, balanced arms regulation and disarmament agreements. During the past year there has been little sign of movement in this direction, and the arms race has continued to burgeon both qualitatively and quantitatively.

It is only realistic to recognize that nuclear disarmament will depend primarily on agreement among the nations having nuclear weapons, especially, and beginning with, the two most powerful. It is equally true, however, that success or failure in the reduction of nuclear weapons can have a most important bearing on the future of the entire international community. To approach nuclear disarmament exclusively as a factor in the relations of the nuclear Powers and their allies is to do injustice to the broad and grave responsibility that the possession of nuclear weapons carries with it. It is also unfortunate and, I believe, unnecessary to allow the course of disarmament negotiations on the whole range of issues in the multilateral forums to be largely governed by tension stemming from other causes. The fact is that progress on the issues included in the agenda of the General Assembly and its subsidiary bodies, and especially on those currently before the Conference on Disarmament, could help to restore confidence and improve the critical bilateral relationship on which the international political climate so heavily depends.

It is especially valuable in times of tension that a multilateral structure is available within which nations, despite their differences, can come together for dialogue and serious negotiations, whether in the General Assembly, the Security Council or the Geneva Conference on Disarmament. In fact, the possibility exists in that Conference for nuclear and non-nuclear countries to work together towards agreement on such vital subjects as measures to avoid nuclear war, the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests, the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and the complete prohibition and destruction of chemical weapons. If, instead, the Conference is used mainly for the public presentation of rigid positions and rhetorical exchanges, the potential of this broadly representative negotiating forum will be largely wasted. I urge all concerned—East, West, non-aligned and neutral alike—to recognize that the need for disarmament measures—both nuclear and conventional—is too compelling to allow this to happen.

Let me turn to another aspect, namely, multilateral co-operation through the United Nations in the economic and social spheres. We are here in the presence of a slightly different set of political realities and in a predominantly North-South dimension. Global economic relations have changed significantly since the immediate post-war years when most international economic institutions began their work. There has been growing frustration among the developing countries, a large international constituency which has looked upon the institutions of multilateral economic co-operation established after the Second World War as insufficiently responsive to the needs of those countries. This perception has been strengthened in light of the serious economic difficulties which have affected them in the 1970s and early 1980s. Their attempts in the United Nations, through an essentially political process, to obtain changes in that system have not had the desired results, as shown by the failure to launch global negotiations. It is in a way comprehensible that some developed countries, whose influence in those institutions has been paramount, should find this shift difficult to accept and should tend to favour retaining the existing institutional structures and decision-making machinery as they are.

It is easy to criticize United Nations economic institutions because such institutions often fall short of their high aims. Conflicting national interests in a time of flux and change make such a falling short virtually inevitable. Nevertheless, multilateral co-operation has already achieved much, most of it taken for granted as soon as it is achieved. In an economically interdependent world where the growth and stability of the North is intertwined with accelerated development of the South, it is hard to see how international economic problems can be solved, except through intensified multilateral co-operation. Despite the difficulties involved in such co-operation, it is shortsighted to turn away from the concept of multilateralism and the institutions which embody it.

There is a distinction to be made between United Nations operational activities in the field of development at the national level where much is being achieved, and activities at the global level, in trade, money and finance, for example, where there is a high degree of frustration.

The support provided by the United Nations system for development, excluding the World Bank, now amounts to over $2 billion a year. High priority is given to the low-income countries with particular attention to the problems of the poorest of the poor. In a period of restricted resources, continuous efforts are being made to ensure more effective operational co-operation within the United Nations system.

It should be mentioned that in the domain of "global" issues, the "achievements" of the Organization cannot be measured simply in terms of the number of treaties and agreements negotiated and signed. Of course, there have been many of these. But many of the contributions of the United Nations are in less tangible forms: for example, the extent to which the United Nations has succeeded in raising global consciousness on key issues, the critical situation in Africa being a case in point, or in shaping the framework of international debates on major problems. For instance, I have consistently stressed the importance of finding solutions to the acute debt problem that go beyond the short term and that take into account the need to ensure growth in the export earnings of developing countries. It is, similarly, in no small measure due to the discussions on the International Development Strategy that the world community today gives a high priority to the cause of development which, in its simplest form, must be understood to mean the raising of the living standards of the vast majority of mankind in this interdependent world, and in a manner that benefits the global economy as a whole.

This aspect of the work of the United Nations has recently met with some doubts and criticisms. These need to be faced. Where substantive issues are raised, they need to be adequately debated, and misunderstandings dispelled. Otherwise, the normal functioning of important organs of the United Nations will be impaired. One of these, for example, relates to the complex issue of the relative roles accorded in United Nations discussions to Governments and to the private sector.

Another matter frequently raised is the extent to which issues that are essentially economic and technical are politicized in the United Nations. I have mentioned one aspect of this problem earlier in this report. There is another aspect. In the present world few issues in human affairs can be regarded as completely unpolitical. Nevertheless, the extent to which economic issues are politicized in the United Nations should also be understood as a reflection of the frustrations which developing countries feel in their long attempt to reshape their economic destiny. The absence of global policy-makers—i.e., politics in the best sense—to meet this need is also a factor in this frustration. There is an additional factor: many Governments feel that only when economic issues are politicized will they attract the attention of the highest level of decision makers. And many economic issues are so complex that only decisions at the highest levels can make any significant impact in the current situation.

The difficulties which the community of nations experiences in strengthening economic co-operation in the United Nations stem from a number of causes. A new consensus on economic issues in the light of world economic and political realities has not yet emerged. There is disagreement on the cause of the trouble as well as on what to do about it. Ideological differences on economic problems further complicate the issue. But the absence of a consensus, which will take time to emerge, need not prevent progress in critical areas.

These are not difficulties which can be ignored or willed away. The world is not just one country or one point of view. If we are serious about the future, this is the context in which we need to seek practical solutions to both short-term and long-term problems. Patience, perception and persistence are more relevant to this search than relentless criticism whether from one side or another.

Human solidarity demands these qualities. If we do not address current economic problems seriously and urgently, we will not be able to confine them to the economic sphere alone. In our world of growing economic interdependence, impoverished people faced perpetually with a variety of overwhelming economic and social crises constitute not only a challenge to international conscience, but a threat to international stability as well.

Respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms is one of the basic principles of the United Nations. A human rights philosophy based on the concept of an international rule of law pervades the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the codifying instruments adopted by the United Nations since its establishment. These instruments are the yardstick for measuring regard or disregard for human rights.

In this area, too, we constantly encounter trenchant criticism. I welcome such criticism in the hope that it will spur everyone, including the critics, on to a more serious assessment of the importance—and the difficulty—of reducing injustice in an unjust world, of promoting development in a world divided between rich and poor, and of instilling the virtues of mercy and compassion into people many of whom are fighting—or believe they are fighting—for their lives.

I spend much of my time, sometimes with encouraging results, on human rights and humanitarian problems, which I regard as uniquely important. Despite the existence of definitive norms developed within the United Nations, perceptions differ greatly. One person's freedom fighter is another person's terrorist; one's champion of human rights is another's subversive; one's plaintiff is another's criminal. The reality is that many are dispossessed, many confined, many tortured and many starve. This is the world we have to deal with.

In the field of human rights, gross violations, such as the system of apartheid, are obviously the first priority for the Organization. In addition, it is my concern to help individuals whose human rights may have been violated. In particular, I seek to facilitate the release of those who may have been imprisoned or sentenced for political reasons. The criteria for judging such efforts must be whether they advance the cause of human rights and not whether they serve the political interest of one side or another.

The primary responsibility in this important matter rests, of course, with Governments which have entered into firm commitments towards each other and towards their peoples to respect internationally recognized standards proclaimed by the United Nations. We must try to create the conditions which will encourage all Governments to ensure respect of human rights in accordance with those standards. At the same time, we should examine existing United Nations practices and consider ways and means to make them more effective in dealing with gross violations of human rights wherever they occur.

The question of human rights is closely linked with the humanitarian activities of the United Nations. It seems to be a general rule that in times of recession or other difficulties, the weakest developing countries suffer the most, and the weakest groups in those countries are the most vulnerable of all.

In such cases, multilateral action through the United Nations is essential to alleviate the plight of the victims—action parallel to and co-ordinated with the remarkable work of non-governmental agencies. Various institutions within the United Nations system, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Children's Fund and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, as well as the specialized agencies, have done much in this field.

During the past year, the United Nations has focused attention on two major problems. In December 1983, I launched an appeal for help to the many African countries which were facing the worst drought in the twentieth century. The Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa in July of this year was another manifestation of multilateral co-operation in dealing with urgent social and humanitarian problems.

It is essential that we learn from our experience to approach future humanitarian problems in a coherent manner which takes account of all their elements. We must develop better means of alleviating and preventing crises. We must improve our capacity to provide humanitarian assistance quickly. In order to establish an early warning system, I have requested the heads of the various agencies of the United Nations as well as those of my field offices to inform me, on an urgent basis, of any situation which in their view could give rise to a major humanitarian crisis. Such a system should enable the United Nations to react to cases of emergency more adequately and speedily. The problems are enormous, but I believe that the level of public and governmental consciousness of the need to provide assistance in great humanitarian tragedies is growing. It is a fundamental responsibility of the international community to come to the aid of its least fortunate and most afflicted members.

The growing problem of narcotic drugs has become a major international anxiety, not least because of its effect on the future of children and young people. It has become more and more evident that international and multilateral efforts provide the best hope for arresting and reducing the traffic in and use of drugs, which have such appalling effect on both individuals and the societies in which they live. The institutions of the United Nations system, in co-operation with Governments and other groups concerned with the problem, are actively working to deal with it. Greater effort is needed, however, and, for my part, I have taken steps to improve the co-ordination within the United Nations system of this vital activity.

Finally I wish to mention the steady increase in various forms of politically motivated violence, including hijacking, kidnapping, car-bombing and assassination. Our society is in some sectors becoming an armed camp. Order, civility and even public life are under serious threat in many parts of the world. As usual, the toll of innocent victims is appalling. It is not enough to deplore or condemn or try to control such acts of violence. Attention has also to be focused on ways of dealing with the root causes of these phenomena.

The machinery of international co-operation must be serviced by an efficient and solid secretariat. One of my priorities is to improve the efficient functioning of the Secretariat, so that I may be able to satisfy Member States that all necessary human and other resources—but not more than is needed—are available and are being effectively used. To this end, last year I asked some of my senior colleagues to advise me on measures that could be taken to improve the administration and functioning of the Secretariat. On the basis of their advice, I have now decided on a number of actions designed either to increase efficiency or reduce costs, or both. For example, I have directed that there shall be a temporary suspension of recruitment. I shall report on these matters to the General Assembly in greater detail shortly. I very much hope that the Assembly will be mindful, in the resolutions it adopts, of my objectives.

The success of any programme for administrative improvement requires the active co-operation not only of all the members of the Secretariat but also of the Member States themselves. To this end I intend to ascertain the views of the membership on a number of approaches which I believe could with advantage be explored.

The General Assembly will be called upon to consider this year a number of issues of personnel policy including, in particular, those concerning salaries and other conditions of service of the staff. Different points of view inevitably will arise, and indeed have already been expressed to me, on the adequacy of these conditions of service. I am sure that Member States will recognize that the achievement of the highest standards of competence and integrity called for by the Charter requires corresponding and appropriate conditions of service.

The current system of salaries, allowances and pensions extends far beyond the United Nations itself. It affects all the agencies which, with the United Nations, participate in what has come to be known as the “common system”. The General Assembly has repeatedly stressed the need to preserve and promote that linkage, without which the recruitment and administration of staff for the many participating organizations would be a chaotic exercise. The common system is also one in which a number of organs—notably the International Civil Service Commission and the Joint Staff Pension Board—have a regulatory role to play. I am confident that the discussion in the Assembly on these issues will take these facts into account.

In considering the purpose and necessity of multilateralism, we should not forget that national interest generally stands first in the priorities of Governments. There is also, however, a growing sense of the international interest, the common good of humanity, and the preservation and wise stewardship of the world's resources for the benefit of future generations. That is why there is a widespread commitment to the United Nations and a general interest in making the Organization work better. Quite naturally different Governments or groups of Governments have different ideas about the work of the United Nations and wish it to work on their terms. To make the United Nations work better, what is needed, above all, is a determined and persistent effort to strike a balance between national and international interest.

In conclusion, therefore, I wish to repeat my call for a multilateral and rational approach to the problems of international peace and development. I believe that this is what the peoples of the United Nations really desire in spite of all the difficulties and irritations encountered by Governments in trying to make a multilateral system work. It is widely understood that without such a system we shall run unacceptable risks and that it is therefore irresponsible to weaken the multilateral approach. Without the safety net which multilateral organization provides, the world would certainly be a much more dangerous and disorderly place.

In the United Nations we have now had nearly 40 years of experience, 40 years of change, and, for all the conflict of our time, 40 years without a global war. Let us look back at the road we have travelled, distil the experience and set out again refreshed and with a new determination. The purposes for which the United Nations was set up are essential for the future of our planet. The vision expressed in the Charter remains, and we should rally to it.

Chapter I

Disarmament

Little progress was made in 1984 in disarmament or arms limitation, despite the continuing arms race absorbing more than $800 billion in estimated global military expenditures for the year.

The General Assembly, at its 1984 regular session, decided to convene an International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, with a view to examining the implications of the continuing military expenditures for the international economic and social situation, and recommending remedial measures. The Assembly, acting on the recommendations of the First Committee, also adopted 62 other resolutions on disarmament and related international security questions, many of which reflected competing approaches to substantive issues. While most resolutions dealt with arms control and disarmament measures, the Assembly also adopted the statute of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research and requested the Secretary-General to prepare new studies—one on nuclear deterrence and the other on the climatic effects of nuclear war.

The Conference on Disarmament, the main intergovernmental negotiating body known until 1984 as the Committee on Disarmament, and the United Nations Disarmament Commission, a deliberative body composed of all United Nations Member States, continued to discuss much the same issues as in previous years. Outside the United Nations framework, the USSR and the United States announced, in November, their intention to hold bilateral negotiations early in 1985.

General aspects of disarmament

The Secretary-General, in his 1984 annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the United Nations (p. 3), emphasized that it was essential to use the full potential of multilateral and bilateral negotiations to improve mutual understanding and reach substantive, balanced arms regulation and disarmament agreements. Addressing the Assembly on 12 December, he stressed that nuclear hostilities would be suicidal; a nuclear war could never remain limited and a conflict of hours or minutes would render meaningless the entire work of civilization.

Communications. In 1984, the Secretary-General received a large number of communications calling for arms control and disarmament, some being submitted under a variety of related agenda items (see p. 21).

By a letter dated 29 March,<sup>(1)</sup> France transmitted on behalf of the 10 States members of the European Economic Community (EEC) the declarations adopted on 27 March by the EEC Ministers for Foreign Affairs, in which they expressed their support of arms control and disarmament negotiations and of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe. Similar support for such negotiations was expressed in the Declaration on East-West Relations and Arms Control, issued at the London Economic Summit (7-9 June) and transmitted by the United Kingdom on 12 June.<sup>(2)</sup>

In a Joint Declaration issued on 22 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the heads of State or Government of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania urged efforts to reduce and eliminate the risk of war between nations.

In the final communiqué of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1984 session of the General Assembly (New York, 1-5 October), transmitted by India on 8 October,<sup>(4)</sup> the participants asserted that international peace and security could be ensured only through general and complete disarmament, expressed concern over the escalation of tension in Europe and the growing stockpiling and introduction of new weapon systems, and called on the major Powers to undertake arms control and disarmament negotiations.

By a letter of 5 December,<sup>(5)</sup> the German Democratic Republic transmitted a communiqué adopted by the Committee of Foreign Ministers of the States Parties to the Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance (Berlin, 3 and 4 December), welcoming the November announcement on the holding of USSR–United States negotiations on nuclear and space weapons (see p. 24), expressing their readiness to negotiate agreements based on equality and equal security, and supporting a wide range of disarmament measures.

The United Kingdom, by a letter dated 21 December,<sup>(6)</sup> transmitted a communiqué by the North Atlantic Council Foreign Ministers (Brussels, Belgium, 13 and 14 December), stating, among other things, that none of their weapons would ever be used except in response to attack.

Other appeals for peace and disarmament were from: the National Conference of Delegates of the Polish United Workers' Party (Warsaw, 18 March);<sup>(7)</sup> the Interaction Council, comprising 26 former heads of Government (Brioni, Yugoslavia, 24–26 May);<sup>(8)</sup> the National Seminar on Peace and Disarmament (Lomé, Togo, 6–9 August);<sup>(9)</sup> recommending, among other things, the establishment at Lomé of a regional institute for research on peace and disarmament; and the Conference of Veteran Organizations on Security, Disarmament and Co-operation in Europe (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 18–20 October).<sup>(10)</sup>

Some communications submitted under the item on general and complete disarmament also dealt with the Assembly's annual review of its 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security (see p. 114).

Proposed comprehensive programme

No agreement was reached in 1984 in the Conference on Disarmament<sup>(11)</sup> towards a comprehensive programme of disarmament. The programme was first envisaged in paragraph 109 of the Final Document<sup>(12)</sup> of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly in 1978—the first such session devoted to disarmament—and had been considered annually since 1980 by the Committee on Disarmament (as the Conference was formerly known) without success. In December 1983,<sup>(13)</sup> the Assembly had urged the Conference to renew its work on elaborating the programme, and to submit a progress report in 1984 and a draft programme not later than 1986. In December 1984, the Assembly again urged that the draft be completed in 1986 (resolution 39/148 I).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament, re-established by the Conference on 28 February 1984, held two meetings between 10 and 24 July under the chairmanship of Alfonso García Robles (Mexico). It agreed that current circumstances were not conducive to resolving outstanding issues and that it would not be fruitful, therefore, to pursue work at the Conference's 1984 session. The Committee expressed the hope that maximum efforts would be made to ensure that early in 1985 the circumstances would permit the resumption and conclusion of work on the programme.

The Ad Hoc Committee's report was adopted by the Conference on 23 August as part of its report to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 17 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/148 I without vote.

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in paragraph 109 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the Assembly called for the elaboration of a comprehensive programme of disarmament encompassing all measures thought to be advisable in order to ensure that the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control becomes a reality in a world in which international peace and security prevail and in which the new international economic order is strengthened and consolidated,

Recalling also its resolution 38/183 K of 20 December 1983, in which it urged the Conference on Disarmament, as soon as it considered that the circumstances were propitious for that purpose, to renew its work on the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament previously requested, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a progress report on the matter and to submit to the Assembly not later than at its forty-first session a complete draft of such a programme,

Having examined the progress report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament, which is an integral part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1984 session,

Noting that in its report the Ad Hoc Committee stated that it was agreed that circumstances were not conducive to making progress towards the resolution of outstanding issues and expressed the hope that maximum efforts would be exerted to ensure that early the following year the circumstances would be such as to permit the resumption of the work on the elaboration of the programme and its successful conclusion,

1. Regrets that during the 1984 session of the Conference on Disarmament it was not possible to renew the work on the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament;

2. Urges that all efforts be made so that the Conference on Disarmament may resume its work on the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament early in its 1985 session with a view to submitting to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a complete draft of such a programme;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the progress of its work.

General Assembly resolution 39/148 I

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/C.1/39/749) without vote, 19 November (meeting 41); 12-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.31); agenda item 59 (i).

In explanation of position, Belgium said it had agreed to the consensus despite the contradiction it saw between the last preambular paragraph and paragraph 2; it doubted whether circumstances would change so quickly that any useful purpose could be served by a speedy resumption of the activities of the Conference.

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, the main multilateral negotiating body and formerly known as the Committee on Disarmament, was renamed and its status changed at the beginning of its 1984 session, pursuant to a 1982 General Assembly resolution<sup>(14)</sup> evolving from proposals considered at the Assembly's second (1982) special session devoted to disarmament.<sup>(15)</sup> Accordingly, the position of Chairman was redesignated as President and the subsidiary bodies as committees.

The Secretary-General, in his 1984 annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the United Nations (p. 3), urged that full use be made of the Conference's potential as the broadly representative negotiating forum, and that it not be used for the public presentation of rigid positions and rhetorical exchanges.

Expressing disappointment over the lack of concrete agreements in the Conference in 1984 on any disarmament issues, the Assembly, in December, called on it to concentrate on substantive negotiations on priority issues (resolution 39/148 N) and reaffirmed the right of all States not members of that body to participate in its work (resolution 39/148 L).

Activities of the Conference. The Conference met in 1984 at Geneva from 7 February to 27 April and from 12 June to 31 August.<sup>(11)</sup> Holding 49 formal and 50 informal plenary meetings, it considered—in addition to the proposed comprehensive programme of disarmament (see p. 12)—a nuclear-test ban, cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, prevention of nuclear war, chemical weapons, prevention of an arms race in outer space, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, and radiological weapons. Details on developments on these questions during the year can be found elsewhere in this chapter.

The Conference re-established, on 28 February, ad hoc bodies on chemical weapons, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, and the comprehensive programme of disarmament; and, on 17 April, an ad hoc committee on radiological weapons. On 8 March, the Conference decided, in the light of its new nomenclature, to designate each subsidiary body dealing with a specific agenda item as an "ad hoc committee"; the decision involved no financial or structural implications, nor change in the Conference's working procedures or rules of procedure, and it was to have no bearing on the views of members on the substance of matters under consideration.

As regards its membership, the Conference, which had agreed in principle to an increase by not more than four States,<sup>(16)</sup> decided to continue consultations with a view to taking a decision and reporting to the General Assembly in 1985. The Conference also held three informal meetings on the question of its improved and effective functioning, focusing on a working paper—prepared by an informal group of seven members—incorporating various proposals. It was understood that consideration of the matter would continue in 1985.

In a letter of 17 May to the Secretary-General,<sup>(17)</sup> Iraq, a non-member of the Conference, protested that Iran had prevented it from exercising the right of reply in the Conference in April.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 17 December 1984, adopted two resolutions on the work of the Conference on Disarmament: one on its report (39/148 N) and the other on participation in its work by non-members (39/148 L).

The Assembly adopted resolution 39/148 N by recorded vote.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 B of 11 December 1979, 35/152 J of 12 December 1980, 36/92 F of 9 December 1981, 37/78 G of 9 December 1982 and 38/183 I of 20 December 1983,

Recalling also the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, and the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should play the central role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament and on the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Reaffirming that the establishment of ad hoc committees offers the best available machinery for the conduct of multilateral negotiations on items of the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament and contributes to the strengthening of the negotiating role of the Conference,

Deploring the fact that, despite the repeated requests of the General Assembly and the expressed wish of the great majority of members of the Conference on Disarmament, the establishment of an ad hoc committee on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and on nuclear disarmament was once again prevented during the 1984 session of the Conference,

Deploring also the fact that the Conference on Disarmament has not been enabled to set up ad hoc committees under item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear-test ban", on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, on the prevention of nuclear war and on the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

1. Expresses its deep concern and disappointment that the Conference on Disarmament has not been enabled, this year either, to reach concrete agreements on any disarmament issues to which the United Nations has assigned greatest priority and urgency and which have been under consideration for a number of years;

2. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its work, to further its mandate more earnestly through negotiations and to adopt concrete measures on the specific priority issues of disarmament on its agenda, in particular those relating to nuclear disarmament;

3. Once again urges the Conference on Disarmament to continue or to undertake, during its 1985 session, substantive negotiations on the priority questions of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and other relevant resolutions of the Assembly on those questions;

4. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to provide the existing ad hoc committees with appropriate negotiating mandates and to establish, as a matter of urgency, the ad hoc committees under item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear-test ban", on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, on the prevention of nuclear war and on the prevention of an arms race in outer space;

5. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, without further delay, negotiations with a view to elaborating a draft treaty on a nuclear-weapon-test ban;

6. Also urges the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its work on the elaboration of a draft convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction and to submit the preliminary draft of such a convention to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

7. Once again calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to organize its work in such a way as to concentrate most of its attention and time on substantive negotiations on priority issues of disarmament;

8. Calls upon the members of the Conference on Disarmament that have opposed the negotiations on substantive issues of disarmament to enable the Conference, by adopting a positive stand, to fulfil effectively the mandate that the international community has entrusted to it in the field of negotiations on disarmament;

9. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 39/148 N

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 123-1-21 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/749) by recorded vote (113-1-19), 19 November (meeting 41); 27-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.56); agenda item 59 (b).

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Madagascar, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Nepal,<sup>a</sup> Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom.

In explanation of vote, the United States asserted that, in recent years, the authors of drafts on the topic had increasingly sought to reflect an extreme view of what the Conference on Disarmament could and should attempt to accomplish and, by inference, castigated members holding other views.

The Netherlands felt the text failed to take into account the consensus character of the Conference, took sides in the discussions in that body, especially as regards its subsidiary bodies and their mandates, and over-emphasized the negative aspects of its work. France found it unfitting for the Assembly to call on the Conference to act on the mandates of its subsidiary bodies. Similarly,

Belgium regarded the draft as giving instructions to the Conference and as conveying the impression that complex and subtle problems could be solved through setting up and mandating working groups. Australia objected to the call for a nuclear-weapon-test ban, a goal far more limited in scope than its aim of banning all nuclear tests.

Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 28 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it affirmed that all the peoples of the world had a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations, that, consequently, all States had the duty to contribute to efforts in the field of disarmament and that all States had the right to participate in disarmament negotiations,

Recalling its resolution 38/183 F of 20 December 1983, in which it called upon the Governments of all States to contribute substantially, inter alia, to halting and reversing the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field, and thus to reducing the danger of nuclear war,

Taking note of the fact that at the 1984 session of the Conference on Disarmament, twenty-one States not members of the Conference participated in its work,

1. Reaffirms the right of all States not members of the Conference on Disarmament to participate in the work of the plenary meetings of the Conference on substantive questions;

2. Requests the States members of the Conference on Disarmament not to misuse the rules of procedure of the Conference so as to prevent States not members from participating in the work of the plenary meetings of the Conference.

General Assembly resolution 39/148 L

Approved by First Committee (A/39/749) by recorded vote (107-0-21), 20 November (meeting 43); draft by Iraq (A/C.1/39/L.47); agenda item 59 (g).

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal,* Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Canada, Ethiopia, Germany, Federal Republic of India, Iran, Israel, Italy, Liberia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Introducing the draft, Iraq said the proposal did not aim at changing the Conference's rules of procedure, but at making it possible for non-members to contribute to its work.

Italy, New Zealand, Sweden and the United Kingdom, although sympathetic to the idea put forward, objected to the Assembly's attempting to alter the rules of procedure of the independent Conference or their application. The United States felt that paragraph 1 failed to make it clear that non-members participated in the Conference in accordance with those rules. France expressed the reservation that paragraph 2 could be interpreted as inviting the Conference to ignore the rules relating to decision-making.

In 1984, the Assembly adopted a number of other resolutions concerning the Conference on Disarmament. It called on the Conference to take up specific topics, such as: a comprehensive programme of disarmament (39/148 I), the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament (39/148 C, D, K, O, P), prohibiting nuclear weapons (39/63 H), a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty (39/53), banning nuclear-weapon tests (39/60), banning the neutron weapon (39/148 E), strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States (39/57, 39/58), new types of weapons of mass destruction (39/62), chemical weapons (39/65 A-C), and the arms race in outer space (39/59).

Disarmament Commission

Disarmament Commission activities. The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, held its 1984 session in New York, holding nine plenary meetings between 7 May and 1 June.<sup>(18)</sup> It also met on 3 and 5 December to organize its work and elect officers for 1985.

Its agenda included items on aspects of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race; reduction of military budgets and expenditures; South Africa's nuclear capability; guidelines for confidence-building measures; and the relationship between disarmament and development. Details on the Commission's discussion of these questions can be found elsewhere in this chapter.

The Commission established a Committee of the Whole, which in turn established a contact group to deal with the item on aspects of the arms race; in addition, a working group was set up for each of the other four substantive items on the agenda. None of them, however, was able to conclude its work in 1984; they recommended that the Commission either further pursue its efforts to reach agreement, or refer the questions concerned to the General Assembly's 1984 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/148 R without vote.

General Assembly resolution 39/148 R

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/39/749) without vote, 19 November (meeting 41); 13-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.70); agenda item 59 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 41; plenary 102.

In another 17 December resolution (39/148 O) on implementing the recommendations of the 1978 special session on disarmament, the Assembly called on the Commission to intensify and improve its work with a view to making recommendations on specific items on its agenda. In addition, the Assembly instructed the Commission on certain topics, among them: implementation of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade (39/148 Q), South Africa's nuclear capability (39/61 B), the naval arms race (39/151 I), confidence-building measures (39/63 E), and a review of the United Nations role in disarmament (39/151 G).

Implementation of recommendations adopted at two special sessions of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament—its first in 1978<sup>(19)</sup> and its second in 1982<sup>(15)</sup>—continued to be monitored in 1984, leading to the Assembly adopting 29 resolutions and one decision relating to those recommendations.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1978 special session

In 1984, the General Assembly adopted 18 resolutions and one decision on implementation of recommendations it had adopted in 1978 at its tenth special session—the first such session devoted to disarmament. They dealt with unilateral nuclear disarmament measures (39/148 A), bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations (39/148 B, G), cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament (39/148 C, K), non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war (39/148 D), prohibiting the nuclear neutron weapon (39/148 E), nuclear-war prevention (39/148 F, P), the statute of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (39/148 H), a comprehensive programme of disarmament (39/148 I), Disarmament Week (39/148 J), implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session (39/148 L, O), international co-operation for disarmament (39/148 M), the work of the Conference on Disarmament (39/148 N) and the Disarmament Commission (39/148 R), and review of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade (39/148 Q). The decision (39/423) dealt with the work of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/148 O by recorded vote.

Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Having reviewed the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, as well as the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 34/83 C of 11 December 1979, 35/46 of 3 December 1980, 35/152 E of 12 December 1980, 36/92 M of 9 December 1981, 37/78 F of 9 December 1982, 38/183 H of 20 December 1983 and its decision S-12/24 of 10 July 1982,

Deeply concerned that no concrete results regarding the implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session have been realized in the course of more than six years since that session, that in the mean time the arms race, particularly in its nuclear aspect, has gained in intensity, that there has been further deployment of nuclear weapons in some parts of the world, that the absence of constructive dialogue among the nuclear-weapon States has reached unprecedented levels, that annual global military expenditures are approaching the staggering figure of $1,000 billion, that mankind is faced with a real danger of spreading the arms race into outer space, that urgent measures to prevent nuclear war and for disarmament have not been adopted and that continued colonial domination and foreign occupation, open threats, pressures and military intervention against independent States and violations of the fundamental principles of the Charter of the United Nations have taken place, posing the most serious threat to international peace and security,

Expressing serious concern that even the limited negotiations on arms reduction and disarmament which were already under way have been stalled,

Convinced that the renewed escalation of the nuclear-arms race, in both the quantitative and qualitative dimensions, as well as reliance on nuclear deterrence and on the use of nuclear weapons, has heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations,

Further convinced that international peace and security can only be ensured through general and complete disarmament under effective international control and that one of the most urgent tasks is to halt and reverse the arms race and to undertake concrete measures of disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, and that, in this respect, the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States have the primary responsibility,

Noting with great concern that no real progress in disarmament negotiations has been achieved for several years, which has rendered the current international situation even more dangerous and insecure, and that negotiations on disarmament issues are lagging far behind the rapid technological development in the field of armaments and the relentless growth of military arsenals, particularly nuclear arsenals,

Considering that it is more than ever imperative in the present circumstances to give a new impetus to negotiations in good faith on disarmament, in particular nuclear disarmament, at all levels and to achieve genuine progress in the immediate future, and that all States should refrain from any actions which have or may have negative effects on the outcome of disarmament negotiations,

Convinced that the success of disarmament negotiations, in which all the people of the world have a vital interest, can be achieved through the active participation of Member States in such negotiations, contributing thereby to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament,

Stressing that the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which was unanimously and categorically reaffirmed by all Member States at the twelfth special session as the comprehensive basis for efforts towards halting and reversing the arms race, retains all its validity and that the objectives and measures contained therein still represent one of the most important and urgent goals to be achieved,

1. Expresses its grave concern over the acceleration and intensification of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, as well as the continued, very serious deterioration of relations in the world, and the intensification of focal points of aggression and hotbeds of tension in different regions of the world, which threaten international peace and security and increase the danger of nuclear war;

2. Calls upon all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take urgent measures in order to put an end to the serious aggravation of the international situation, to promote international security on the basis of disarmament, to halt and reverse the arms race and to launch a process of genuine disarmament;

3. Invites all States, particularly nuclear-weapon States and especially those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, to take urgent measures with a view to implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, as well as to fulfilling the priority tasks set forth in the Programme of Action contained in section III of the Final Document;

4. Calls upon great Powers to undertake genuine negotiations in a constructive and accommodating spirit and taking into account the interest of the entire international community in order to halt the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, and to achieve disarmament;

5. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to concentrate its work on the substantive and priority items on its agenda, to proceed to negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, on the prevention of nuclear war as well as the prevention of an arms race in outer space without further delay and to elaborate drafts of treaties on a nuclear-weapon-test ban and on a complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

6. Calls upon the Disarmament Commission to intensify its work in accordance with its mandate and to continue improving its work with a view to making concrete recommendations on specific items on its agenda;

7. Invites all States engaged in disarmament and arms limitation negotiations outside the framework of the United Nations to keep the General Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament informed on the status and/or results of such negotiations, in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon,<sup>a</sup> Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Iceland, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, United Kingdom.

The revised text resulted from consultations among the sponsors on two drafts—one by the German Democratic Republic<sup>(20)</sup> and one by the 28 other States. By the former draft, on the obligation of States to contribute to effective disarmament negotiations, which was not pressed to a vote, the Assembly would have called for the holding of negotiations in the spirit of the 1978 Final Document,<sup>(12)</sup> for avoiding actions which might have negative effects on such talks and for preserving existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements.

Prior to acting on the draft that became resolution 39/148 O, the Assembly adopted the fifth preambular paragraph by a recorded vote of 117 to 19. The same paragraph had been approved in the First Committee by a recorded vote—requested by the United Kingdom—of 100 to 19, with 3 abstentions.

Three of the States which voted against the paragraph explained their position on that paragraph and the text as a whole. The United States said that, while in sympathy with various aspects of the text, it found certain language provocative and insensitive to the views of others. The United Kingdom asserted that the sponsors had failed to negotiate on the language used in the text and expressed, instead, their own partisan opinions. Australia considered that the preambular paragraph contained an unacceptable attack on the concept of deterrence, which it considered as the only current guarantor of global security; further, the call for a nuclear-weapon-test ban reflected a more limited concept than that which it favoured.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 special session

In 1984, the General Assembly adopted 11 resolutions on implementation of the recommendations of its 1982 special session on disarmament. They were on: the World Disarmament Campaign (39/63 A, D, J), the United Nations fellowships programme on disarmament (39/63 B), a nuclear-arms freeze (39/63 C), confidence-building measures (39/63 E), regional disarmament (39/63 F), a nuclear-weapons freeze (39/63 G), a convention against nuclear weapons (39/63 H), convening the Assembly's third special session on disarmament (39/63 I), and disarmament and international security (39/63 K).

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the decision adopted at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, concerning the convening of the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling its resolution 38/73 I of 15 December 1983 in which it decided that the third special session devoted to disarmament should be held not later than 1988,

Desiring to contribute to the furthering and broadening of positive processes initiated through the laying down of the foundations of an international disarmament strategy at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Decides to set, at its fortieth session, the date of the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament and to establish the Preparatory Committee for the third special session.

Implementation of the 1979 Declaration on co-operation for disarmament

As in previous years, the General Assembly, in 1984, again called for implementation of its 1979 Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament.<sup>(21)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/148 M by recorded vote.

International co-operation for disarmament

The General Assembly,

Stressing again the urgent need for an active and sustained effort to intensify the implementation of the recommendations and decisions unanimously adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, as contained in the Final Document of that session and confirmed in the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling the Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament of 11 December 1979 and General Assembly resolutions 36/92 D of 9 December 1981, 37/78 B of 9 December 1982 and 38/183 F of 20 December 1983,

Stressing the vital importance of eliminating the danger of a nuclear war, halting the arms race and attaining disarmament, particularly in the nuclear field, for the preservation of peace and the strengthening of international security,

Deeply concerned over the continued nuclear-arms race and the initiation of a new, quantitatively and qualitatively more dangerous round of that race, which has an immediate negative impact on the development of the international situation and international relations,

Bearing in mind the vital interest of all States in the adoption of concrete effective disarmament measures, which would release considerable financial and material resources to be used for the economic and social development of all States, in particular developing countries,

Considering the increased activity of peace and anti-war movements against the arms race and for disarmament,

Convinced of the need to strengthen constructive international co-operation based on the political goodwill of States for successful negotiations on disarmament, in accordance with the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Emphasizing the duty of States to co-operate for the preservation of international peace and security, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as confirmed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, of 24 October 1970, the obligation to co-operate actively and constructively for the attainment of the aims of disarmament being an indispensable part of that duty,

Stressing that, within the framework of international co-operation for the attainment of the aims of disarmament, it is necessary to avert nuclear war by means of gradual limitation and reduction of nuclear armaments up to a complete liquidation of all their kinds on the basis of the principle of equal security,

Expressing the conviction that concrete manifestations of political goodwill, including unilateral measures, such as an obligation not to make first use of nuclear weapons, improve conditions for resolving disarmament issues in a spirit of co-operation among States,

Stressing that proposals, relatively simple in their execution and at the same time effective, and agreements aimed at eliminating the use or the threat of use of force, be it on a world-wide or regional scale, contribute considerably to that end,

Bearing in mind that the United Nations bears primary responsibility and plays a central role in unifying efforts to maintain and to develop active co-operation among States in order to resolve the issues of disarmament,

1. Calls upon all States, in implementing the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, to make active use of the principles and ideas contained in the Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament by actively participating in disarmament negotiations, with a view to achieving concrete results, and by conducting them on the basis of the principles of reciprocity, equality, undiminished security and the non-use of force in international relations, and to refrain at the same time from developing new channels of the arms race;

2. Stresses the importance of strengthening the effectiveness of the United Nations in fulfilling its responsibility for maintaining international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of refraining from war propaganda, in particular nuclear war—global or limited—and from the elaboration and dissemination of any doctrines and concepts endangering international peace and justifying the unleashing of nuclear war, which lead to deterioration of the international situation and to further intensification of the arms race and which are also detrimental to the generally recognized necessity of international co-operation for disarmament;

4. Declares that the use of force in international relations as well as in attempts to prevent the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples is a phenomenon incompatible with the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament;

5. Expresses the firm conviction that, for effective international co-operation for the attainment of the aims of disarmament, it is inevitable that the policy of States, primarily of those which dispose of nuclear weapons, be directed to averting a nuclear war;

6. Appeals to States which are members of military groupings to promote, on the basis of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, in the spirit of international co-operation for disarmament, the gradual mutual limitation of military activities of these groupings, thus creating conditions for their dissolution;

7. Calls upon all Member States to cultivate and disseminate, particularly in connection with the World Disarmament Campaign, launched by the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament, in particular through their educational systems, mass media and cultural policies;

8. Calls upon the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue to consider, in order further to mobilize world public opinion on behalf of disarmament, measures aimed at strengthening the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament through research, education, information, communication and culture;

9. Calls upon the Governments of all States to contribute substantially, while observing the principle of undiminished security, to halting and reversing the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field, and thus to reducing the danger of nuclear war.

In explanation of vote, Oman stated that its agreement with the principle set forth in the text should not be taken as approval of some of the paragraphs or in connection with the cold war between the major Powers.

Implementation of the 1980 Declaration on the Second Disarmament Decade

In 1984, the General Assembly called for a review, in 1985, of the implementation of its Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade.<sup>(22)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 17 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/148 Q without vote.

Review of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, by which it adopted the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade,

Expressing its concern that the purposes and objectives of the Decade are far from being realized,

Alarmed at the continued escalation of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race,

Also alarmed at the recent findings of the possible consequences of a nuclear war under present circumstances, as documented by competent scientists,

Deeply concerned at the continued dissipation of ever-increasing human and material resources on the arms race,

Expressing its anguish that no negotiations are taking place on the crucial issue of nuclear weapons,

Convinced of the urgent necessity for the resumption of negotiations, both bilaterally between the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America and multilaterally by the Conference on Disarmament,

1. Decides to undertake at its fortieth session, in 1985, a review and appraisal of the implementation of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade;

2. Requests the Disarmament Commission at its 1985 session to make a preliminary assessment of the implementation of the Declaration, as well as suggestions to ensure progress, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

3. Calls upon the Disarmament Commission to include in its assessment any relevant matters which, in the view of any Member State, require such review;

4. Requests Member States to submit to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Disarmament Commission in implementing the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/148 Q

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/39/749) without vote, 19 November (meeting 42); 10-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.65); agenda item 59.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 39, 42; plenary 102.

In explanation of position on the final preambular paragraph, the USSR called attention to its frequently expressed position with regard to the need for the resumption of negotiations. Believing that bilateral negotiations between the USSR and the United States held the best hope under current circumstances for progress in nuclear disarmament, the United Kingdom questioned the usefulness of the reference in that paragraph to multilateral negotiations.

Disarmament negotiations

The importance of disarmament negotiations was emphasized in a number of 1984 General Assembly resolutions, among them 39/148 M on implementing the 1979 Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament, 39/148 N on the work of the Conference on Disarmament, 39/148 O on implementing the recommendations of its 1978 disarmament special session, and 39/155 on implementing the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security.

Areas of ongoing or proposed negotiations, covered elsewhere in this chapter, concerned nuclear-war prevention (39/148 P) and nuclear disarmament (39/148 C, K), security of non-nuclear-weapon States (39/57, 39/58), and negotiations for a treaty or a convention against: nuclear-weapon tests (39/52, 39/60), the arms race in outer space (39/59), the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons (39/63 H), chemical and bacteriological weapons (39/65 A-C), the neutron weapon (39/148 E), the naval arms race (39/151 I) and radiological weapons (39/151 J).

Nuclear weapons

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly in 1984 adopted 26 resolutions dealing with nuclear questions, including one on a new subject—the climatic effects of nuclear war, also known as nuclear winter.

As in the past, the Assembly called on States to pursue nuclear disarmament and nuclear-war prevention through efforts including negotiations aimed at freezing or banning such weapons, prohibiting nuclear-weapon tests or banning the use of fissionable material for weapons purposes. It continued to support the call for nuclear non-proliferation through the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, and called for the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States.

Communications. In the course of the year, the Secretary-General received a number of communications containing calls for various nuclear disarmament measures, including, in particular, resumption of the USSR–United States negotiations (see also p. 24). Several letters dealt with the deployment of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

On 9 January,<sup>(1)</sup> Mongolia transmitted two statements of 7 December 1983 pointing out that the deployment of United States medium-range nuclear missiles, which it described as first-strike weapons, had disrupted the Geneva talks on the limitation of that type of weapon and had launched a new round of the arms race.

By a letter dated 9 April,<sup>(2)</sup> Romania transmitted an appeal of 24 March by its Grand National Assembly addressed to the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, the United States Congress and parliaments of European countries and Canada, calling on them to diminish international tension and halt the nuclear-arms race; in particular, it appealed to the two major nuclear Powers to resume nuclear disarmament negotiations, and to the others to work towards halting the emplacement of United States medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe and the application of the nuclear countermeasures announced by the USSR. The call was repeated by the Romanian Communist Party—an extract of whose report was transmitted on 29 November<sup>(3)</sup>—along with its support for establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones in the Balkans and in north and central Europe, and for preventing militarization of outer space.

Hungary, by a letter of 24 April,<sup>(4)</sup> transmitted an appeal by a meeting of the States members of the Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance (Budapest, 19 and 20 April) to those of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) to co-operate in terminating the deployment of new medium-range nuclear missiles, withdrawing those already placed and realizing various disarmament measures in Europe.

In a Declaration issued on 22 May,<sup>(5)</sup> the heads of State or Government of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania urged China, France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States to halt all testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems as a necessary first step, to be followed immediately by substantial reductions in nuclear forces. The Declaration also called for a halt in the nuclear-arms race to allow for renewed talks on nuclear disarmament.

The Declaration was endorsed by Peru, which, in its note verbale of 7 June,<sup>(6)</sup> considered as particularly important the appeal to the five States for a substantial reduction in nuclear forces. It was also supported by the USSR which, on 1 June,<sup>(7)</sup> stated that its proposals for reducing nuclear confrontation could be translated into action as soon as the United States removed its obstacles to their discussion. By a letter of 14 June,<sup>(8)</sup> the United Kingdom, also supporting the Declaration, stated that nuclear deterrence had contributed to peace in Europe and called for USSR–United States negotiations on balanced reductions.

Letters dealing with nuclear disarmament were also submitted in connection with the Assembly's annual review of its 1970 Declaration on strengthening international security (see p. 114).

In November, the USSR and the United States announced that they would enter into new negotiations aimed at reaching mutually acceptable agreements on a whole range of questions concerning nuclear and outer-space arms. The meeting was scheduled for early January 1985.

Activities of the Conference on Disarmament. Questions relating to nuclear-arms limitation and disarmament were discussed—again without tangible results—by the Conference on Disarmament<sup>(9)</sup> in 1984.

Consensus could not be reached either in the contact group, which had been set up to discuss how the Conference should proceed on the topic, or in the Conference itself, where proposals for the mandate of an ad hoc committee had been submitted, respectively, by a group of eight socialist States members of the Conference and by the group of 21 (the non-aligned and neutral States within the Conference—Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire). The socialist group envisaged such a committee to begin elaborating practical measures for the cessation of the arms race and nuclear disarmament, while the group of 21 suggested that the proposed body should recommend to the Conference the best ways to initiate multilateral negotiations of agreements. A group of Western States asserted that they were not convinced of the need for such an ad hoc committee.

Disarmament Commission activities. As in 1983, the Disarmament Commission<sup>(10)</sup> considered in 1984, under a two-tiered agenda item, various aspects of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament in order to expedite negotiations aimed at effectively eliminating the danger of nuclear war; and a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament in accordance with priorities established by the General Assembly in 1978 at its first special session devoted to disarmament.<sup>(11)</sup>

Following the Commission's decision that both aspects of the agenda item should be dealt with in the Committee of the Whole, the Committee established a contact group, which held 12 meetings between 10 and 31 May under the leadership of the Commission Chairman. In addition to a compilation of proposals considered by the Commission in 1983,<sup>(12)</sup> the contact group had before it seven working papers submitted, respectively, by China, the German Democratic Republic, Mexico, Romania and the USSR, as well as by a group of socialist States and a group of Western and other States. Again unable to agree on a set of recommendations on the agenda item, the group submitted an updated compilation for 1984—which was subsequently annexed to the Commission's report—and recommended continued consideration of the topic.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/148 C by recorded vote.

Nuclear weapons in all aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, it expressed its profound preoccupation over the danger of war, in particular nuclear war, the prevention of which remains the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Reaffirming that nuclear weapons pose the most serious threat to mankind and its survival and that it is therefore essential to proceed with nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming also that all nuclear-weapon States, in particular those which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility for the fulfilment of the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament,

Stressing again that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons alone are more than sufficient to destroy all life on Earth, and bearing in mind the devastating results which nuclear war would have on belligerents and non-belligerents alike,

Recalling that at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it decided that effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war had the highest priority and that it was essential to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race in all its aspects in order to avert the danger of war involving nuclear weapons,

Stressing that any expectation of winning a nuclear war is senseless and that such a war would inevitably lead to the destruction of nations, to enormous devastation and to catastrophic consequences for civilization and life itself on Earth,

Recalling further that, in its resolution 35/152 B of 12 December 1980, it noted with alarm the increased risk of a nuclear catastrophe associated both with the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and with the adoption of the new doctrines of limited or partial use of nuclear weapons, which are incompatible with its resolution 110(II) of 3 November 1947, entitled "Measures to be taken against propaganda and the inciters of a new war", and which give rise to illusions of the admissibility and acceptability of a nuclear conflict,

Noting with alarm that to the doctrine of a limited nuclear war was later added the concept of a protracted nuclear war and that these dangerous doctrines lead to a new twist in the spiral of the arms race, which may seriously hamper the reaching of agreement on nuclear disarmament,

Gravely concerned about the renewed escalation of the nuclear-arms race, in both its quantitative and qualitative dimensions, as well as reliance on the doctrine of nuclear deterrence, which in fact are heightening the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and lead to increased tensions and instability in international relations,

Taking note of the relevant deliberations of the Disarmament Commission in 1984 with regard to item 4 of its agenda, as contained in its report,

Stressing the urgent need for the cessation of the development and deployment of new types and systems of nuclear weapons as a step on the road to nuclear disarmament,

Stressing again that priority in disarmament negotiations should be given to nuclear weapons, and referring to paragraphs 49 and 54 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,<sup>(13)</sup>

Recalling its relevant resolutions on this subject,

Welcoming the Joint Declaration issued on 22 May 1984 by the heads of State or Government of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania, as well as the positive response this Declaration has met with in many States,

Noting that the Conference on Disarmament, at its 1984 session, discussed the question of the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and, in particular, the establishment of an ad hoc committee for negotiations on that question,

Regretting, however, that the Conference on Disarmament was prevented from reaching agreement on the establishment of an ad hoc committee for the purpose of undertaking multilateral negotiations on the question of the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament,

Considering that efforts will continue to be made in order to enable the Conference on Disarmament to fulfil its negotiating role with regard to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, and that for this purpose all members of the Conference on Disarmament should display a constructive approach to such negotiations, bearing in mind the high priority they have accorded to this question in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament is the most suitable forum for the preparation and conduct of negotiations on nuclear disarmament,

1. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to proceed without delay to negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and especially to begin the elaboration of practical measures for the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and for nuclear disarmament in accordance with paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, including a nuclear-disarmament programme, and to establish for this purpose an ad hoc committee;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Abstaining: Bahamas, Chad, Dominican Republic, Gambia, Honduras, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Niger, Paraguay, Senegal, Sweden, Uruguay, Zaire.

In explanation of vote, Austria and Finland said they supported the thrust of the draft, despite reservations on certain formulations in the preamble; Finland had reservations, in particular, about the sixth to ninth preambular paragraphs. Similarly, Bangladesh agreed with the text's underlying spirit, despite what it saw as one-sided or contradictory positions; its vote did not imply endorsement of any negotiating position of the principal contenders.

Also on 17 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/148 K by recorded vote.

Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in paragraph 11 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the Assembly stated that the nuclear-arms race, far from contributing to the strengthening of the security of all States, on the contrary weakens it and increases the danger of the outbreak of a nuclear war and that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons are more than sufficient to destroy all life on Earth,

Recalling also that, in paragraph 47 of the Final Document, the Assembly expressed the belief that nuclear weapons pose the greatest danger to mankind and to the survival of civilization, that it is essential to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race in all its aspects in order to avert the danger of war involving nuclear weapons, and that the ultimate goal in this context is the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting that, in the Political Declaration adopted at the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, it was declared that the renewed escalation of the nuclear-arms race, both in its quantitative and qualitative dimensions, as well as reliance on doctrines of nuclear deterrence, had heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations, and that it was also stated that nuclear weapons were more than weapons of war, that such weapons were instruments of mass annihilation,

Believing that all nations have a vital interest in negotiations on nuclear disarmament because the existence of nuclear weapons in the arsenals of a handful of States and the quantitative and qualitative development of such weapons directly and fundamentally jeopardize the vital security interests of both nuclear- and non-nuclear-weapon States alike,

Considering that it is necessary to halt all testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems as a first step in the process which should lead to the achievement of substantial reductions in nuclear forces, and welcoming in this context the Joint Declaration issued on 22 May 1984 by the heads of State or Government of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania,

Convinced of the urgent need to take constructive action towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

1. Believes that efforts should be intensified with a view to initiating, as a matter of the highest priority, multilateral negotiations in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to establish an ad hoc committee at the beginning of its 1985 session to elaborate on paragraph 50 of the Final Document and to submit recommendations to the Conference as to how it could best initiate multilateral negotiations of agreements, with adequate measures of verification, in appropriate stages for:

(a) Cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems;

(b) Cessation of the production of all types of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, and of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(c) Substantial reduction of existing nuclear weapons with a view to their ultimate elimination;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on its consideration of this subject;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament".

The Netherlands found the draft unbalanced, in that it did not mention the need for bilateral negotiations between the two major nuclear-weapon States, while proposing unrealistically, in its view, multilateral negotiations in the Conference. Also pointing to the lack of reference to bilateral negotiations, Australia regretted that the draft attacked the concept of deterrence which it considered as the only guarantor of global security currently available. Japan said it had difficulty accepting some of the preambular paragraphs, particularly those referring to a moratorium and doctrines of nuclear deterrence.

Brazil, which saw the aspirations of the international community embodied in the draft, stressed that the role of the Conference on Disarmament was to facilitate negotiations and not to interfere with negotiating processes outside its own framework. The German Democratic Republic said that obstructing the multilateral negotiating process on nuclear disarmament was contrary to the 1978 Final Document.<sup>(13)</sup> The USSR said it was the fault of the United States that the multilateral negotiations had not begun.

USSR-United States negotiations

At the end of 1984, the SALT II Treaty—Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, concluded in 1979 at Vienna, Austria—had not entered into force, although each party had agreed to adhere to its substantive provisions as long as the other reciprocated. No bilateral negotiations on nuclear-weapons questions took place in 1984, but the two parties announced on 22 November their agreement to enter into new negotiations on the subject in 1985.

A number of the 1984 communications received by the Secretary-General concerning nuclear disarmament referred specifically to the bilateral negotiations (see p. 21).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions (39/148 B and G), as recommended by the First Committee, dealing with the bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations.

It adopted resolution 39/148 B by recorded vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

Recalling its resolution 38/183 P of 20 December 1983,

Deeply regretting that the bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations at Geneva between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America are not continuing,

Firmly convinced that an early agreement in those disrupted negotiations, in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces, would be of crucial importance for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Deeply concerned that the absence of negotiations has impeded efforts to strengthen international peace and security and to achieve progress towards disarmament,

Convinced that, through negotiations pursued in a spirit of flexibility and responsibility for the security interests of all States, it is possible to reach agreement,

1. Urges the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to resume, without delay or pre-conditions, bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations in order to achieve positive results in accordance with the security interests of all States and the universal desire for progress towards disarmament;

2. Calls upon the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to spare no effort in seeking the attainment of the final objective of the negotiations;

3. Invites the Governments of the two States mentioned above to work actively towards the enhancement of mutual trust in order to create an atmosphere more conducive to disarmament agreements;

4. Expresses its firmest possible encouragement and support to efforts to resume negotiations and bring them to a successful conclusion.

General Assembly resolution 39/148 B

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 98-16-24 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/C.1/39/749) by recorded vote (86-17-24), 20 November (meeting 44); 12-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.5); agenda item 59 (k).

Sponsors: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Rwanda, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

In explanation of vote, the USSR said it was not prepared to engage in talks while it was the target of new missiles stationed in Europe and when presented with an ultimatum as the text essentially did; it asked the United States to remove the obstacles it had placed in the way of such negotiations. The United States, reiterating its regret that the USSR had walked out of the negotiations, said it was ready to resume talks without pre-conditions; it felt the text was simple and effective and prescribed no pre-conditions or set of procedures for the commencement of negotiations or the negotiations themselves.

Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia viewed the text as one-sided and lacking in real incentive or common basis for the resumption of negotiations.

Cuba felt it attempted to justify the actions that had led to the breaking off of the bilateral negotiations; Cuba could not accept the so-called appeal for the resumption of negotiations without pre-conditions. Mexico considered more effective the procedures detailed in a draft which it had co-sponsored (see resolution 39/148 G below).

China asserted that the two Powers should first cease deploying new nuclear missiles and agree on substantial reductions of nuclear weapons.

Bangladesh, Finland, Nigeria and Pakistan said their votes expressed a position of principle, without endorsing any particular negotiating approach or taking a stand on substantive issues. Nigeria, however, regretted the impression created that the talks were undertaken when convenient and interrupted at will. While finding some parts of the text one-sided and contradictory, Bangladesh felt the underlying spirit of the text conformed with the common aspiration of humanity. Sri Lanka could not identify itself with some of the language and restrictive scope of the text, and said it could not endorse any particular reason for the interruption of talks or negotiating approach. Indonesia felt that, given the current situation, the words "without pre-conditions" in paragraph 1 would not be conducive to attaining the objectives being pursued, and Greece added that it would have voted in favour of the draft if it had not been for that expression. Tunisia appreciated that the resumption of negotiations required conditions acceptable to both parties and due recognition of their urgent security needs.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it approved by consensus a Declaration, contained in section II of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, in paragraph 27 of which, inter alia, it proclaimed that, in order effectively to discharge the central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament which belong to the United Nations in accordance with its Charter, the United Nations should be kept appropriately informed of all steps in this field, whether unilateral, bilateral, regional or multilateral, without prejudice to the progress of negotiations,

Recalling also that at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, Member States reiterated their solemn commitment to implement the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, the validity of which received their unanimous and categorical reaffirmation,

Regretting the interruption of the two series of bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations begun on 30 November 1981 and 29 June 1982, respectively, between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America,

Deplores that, prior to such interruption, it had already become evident that the negotiations were not producing the desired results,

Bearing in mind that the General Assembly on several occasions has requested the major nuclear-weapon States to proclaim a freeze embracing, inter alia, a ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery vehicles,

1. Requests the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to inform the General Assembly, before the closure of its thirty-ninth session, of the reasons for the interruption of their negotiations, the present situation and the prospects for their resumption;

2. Urges again the Governments of the two States mentioned above to examine immediately, as a way out of the present impasse, the possibility of combining into a single forum the two series of negotiations which they had been carrying out and of broadening their scope so as to embrace also the "tactical" or "battlefield" nuclear weapons;

3. Invites those Governments to consider the advisability of conducting henceforward their bilateral negotiations in a subsidiary body of the Conference on Disarmament whose membership could be limited to themselves, a possibility which was expressly contemplated when article 25 of the rules of procedure of the Committee—now the Conference—on Disarmament was approved;

4. Reiterates once more its request to the two negotiating parties that they bear constantly in mind that not only their national interests but also the vital interests of all the peoples of the world are at stake in this question;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations".

Introducing the draft, Mexico said the text contained new elements, in the last preambular paragraph and in paragraphs 1 and 3, in addition to some of the language used in a December 1983 Assembly resolution on the topic.<sup>(14)</sup>

The United States said the text lacked an objective approach; it disagreed that the previous negotiations, prior to interruption, were not producing desired results, rejected the call for a nuclear freeze, asserted that the States concerned must be allowed flexibility in their negotiating process, and stated that negotiations on such delicate and complex matters vital to security required a degree of confidentiality. In a similar vein, Italy said the text contained concepts and language that contradicted some of its basic positions; it could not accept the freeze proposal or the assessment of the interrupted negotiations. The USSR sympathized with the sponsors' motives, and said it could have supported a number of provisions of the text, particularly the appeal for a freeze proclamation. Bangladesh asked the parties involved to keep in mind the vital interests of all humanity. Supporting the text, Pakistan said it was not partial to any negotiating approach.

Unilateral nuclear disarmament measures

Study by expert group. The Group of Governmental Experts on Unilateral Nuclear Disarmament Measures—experts from Austria, Egypt, Mexico and Pakistan, appointed by the Secretary-General in pursuance of a December 1983 General Assembly resolution<sup>(15)</sup>—held three sessions in 1984 (Geneva, 13-17 February, 30 April-7 May; New York, 27-31 August) and submitted its study on the topic to the Secretary-General, who forwarded it to the Assembly in October.<sup>(16)</sup>

The Group concluded that the dynamics of the arms race could be traced to a series of unilateral and reciprocal decisions taken by States in the name of national security, and that its de-escalation and reversal could, therefore, be facilitated by unilateral initiatives of States aimed at reducing the level of international tension, creating an atmosphere of mutual trust and confidence and improving the environment for arms control and disarmament negotiations. It listed four priority areas for unilateral measures with a view to promoting and complementing disarmament negotiations: a nuclear-test ban; nuclear-war prevention, including the non-first-use of nuclear weapons and a nuclear freeze; security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States; and prevention of an arms race in outer space.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 17 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/148 A by recorded vote.

Unilateral nuclear disarmament measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/183 J of 20 December 1983, in which it requested the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts and applying the methods customary in these cases, a report on ways and means that seemed advisable for stimulating the adoption of unilateral nuclear disarmament measures which, without prejudice to the security of States, would come to promote and complement bilateral and multilateral negotiations in this sphere,

Recalling also the concrete proposal submitted to the Disarmament Commission at its 1983 session to the effect that the preparation of a study on unilateral measures would be at present of particular value in view of the impasse existing in both the bilateral and the multilateral negotiations,

Recalling further the conclusion of the General Assembly at its tenth special session, to the effect that unilateral measures of arms limitation or reduction could contribute to limiting the arms race,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General transmitting the study prepared by the Group of Governmental Experts on Unilateral Nuclear Disarmament Measures,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the study on unilateral nuclear disarmament measures;*

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the Group of Governmental Experts on Unilateral Nuclear Disarmament Measures that assisted him in the preparation of the study;

3. Takes note of the conclusions of the study and trusts that they may encourage nuclear-weapon States to take the steps necessary to promote and orient adequately disarmament negotiations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the reproduction of the report as a United Nations publication and, making full use of all the facilities of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to publicize the report in as many languages as is considered desirable and practicable.

General Assembly resolution 39/148 A

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 126-133 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/749) by recorded vote (118-13), 20 November (meeting 44); 6-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.4); agenda item 59 (h).

Sponsors: Austria, Ecuador, Egypt, Mexico, Pakistan, Sweden.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom.

In explanation of vote, the Federal Republic of Germany said the report lacked political objectivity and created the notion that unilateral initiatives did not require mutual trust; it objected to the unqualified condemnation of the doctrine of nuclear deterrence and also regretted that one of the earliest endeavours at unilateral disarmament—its contractual undertaking of 1954 not to produce nuclear, biological and chemical weapons—had not been given the attention it deserved. The United Kingdom said the report showed a distinct bias in handling information and put forward opinions which were at best partial and at worst actively discriminatory; it expressed concern at what it felt was the increasing politicization of studies conducted by United Nations expert groups, and asserted that it was not acceptable for a single political group to use a United Nations study in order to endorse its own interests.

Denmark saw the report as a point of departure for further deliberations, but stressed that its vote did not signify its support for all its parts. The USSR said the study took a generally constructive approach, but failed to reflect the numerous steps it had unilaterally initiated in order to create favourable conditions for arms control and disarmament negotiations. The USSR disagreed with the experts' view that it shared with the United States a responsibility for the current stalemate; reproduction of the study should not involve any additional financial expenditure.

Prevention of nuclear war

Little progress was made in 1984 in the Conference on Disarmament on the issue of nuclear-war prevention, and the General Assembly, in December, again requested it to negotiate with a view to agreeing on practical measures to that end (resolution 39/148 P). No action was taken on a second proposal made in the Assembly, on prevention of war in the nuclear age.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In 1984, the Conference on Disarmament<sup>(9)</sup> took up the prevention of nuclear war, including all related matters, as a separate agenda item from the question of the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, in accordance with a December 1983 General Assembly request<sup>(17)</sup> that the Conference establish a subsidiary body to negotiate on reaching agreement on measures for preventing nuclear war.

A contact group, set up to consider establishing a subsidiary body, considered proposals submitted to that effect by a group of socialist States<sup>(18)</sup> and by the group of 21.<sup>(19)</sup> The latter's proposal—that an ad hoc committee should consider initially all existing and future proposals relating to the item, including appropriate and practical measures for preventing nuclear war—was supported by the socialist States and China, although they regarded it as a minimum mandate.

The Western delegations, however, could not support the proposal nor suggest any amendment to make it acceptable to them. Therefore, no consensus was reached on the question of a subsidiary body.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

While the General Assembly adopted, in 1984, a resolution on nuclear-war prevention, a second draft on the topic was withdrawn by the sponsors (see p. 29).

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 17 December, adopted resolution 39/148 P by recorded vote.

Prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing nuclear-arms race,

Deeply concerned by an increased danger of nuclear war as a result of the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and the serious deterioration of the international situation,

Conscious that removal of the threat of nuclear war is the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Reiterating that it is the shared responsibility of all Member States to save succeeding generations from the scourge of another world war, which would inevitably be a nuclear war,

Recalling the provisions of paragraphs 47 to 50 and 56 to 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the procedures designed to secure the avoidance of nuclear war,

Recalling also that at the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, it was stated that nuclear weapons are more than weapons of war, they are instruments of mass annihilation,

Recalling further its resolutions 36/81 B of 9 December 1981 and 37/78 I of 9 December 1982 and, in particular, its resolution 38/183 G of 20 December 1983, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, as a matter of the highest priority, negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on appropriate and practical measures for the prevention of nuclear war,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1984 session,

Noting with grave concern that the Conference on Disarmament was once again unable to start negotiations on the question during its 1984 session,

Taking into account the deliberations on this item at its thirty-ninth session,

Convinced that the prevention of nuclear war and the reduction of the risk of nuclear war are matters of the highest priority and of vital interest to all peoples of the world,

Also convinced that the prevention of nuclear war is a problem too important to be left to the nuclear-weapon States alone,

1. Notes with regret that despite the fact that the Conference on Disarmament has discussed the question of the prevention of nuclear war for two years, it has been unable even to establish a subsidiary body to consider appropriate and practical measures to prevent it;

2. Again requests the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, as a matter of the highest priority, negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on appropriate and practical measures for the prevention of nuclear war and to establish for that purpose an ad hoc committee on the subject at the beginning of its 1985 session;

3. Expresses its conviction that, in view of the urgency of this matter and the inadequacy or insufficiency of existing measures, it is necessary to devise suitable steps to expedite effective action for the prevention of nuclear war;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on steps to that effect which should be completed in time to be transmitted to the Conference on Disarmament in April 1985 and submitted to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

5. Invites all Governments to submit to the Secretary-General, not later than 1 February 1985, their views on steps to expedite effective action on the question of the prevention of nuclear war so that they might be taken into account in the preparation of the above-mentioned report;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Prevention of nuclear war".

General Assembly resolution 39/148 P

Introducing the text, Argentina explained that the envisaged report should not be a compilation of responses but, rather, provide an overview of the question of nuclear-war prevention, making use of the comments from Governments and containing the ideas the Secretary-General had developed on the question.

In explanation of vote, the Byelorussian SSR appealed to all those eager to see immediate and effective steps taken for nuclear-war prevention to support the text. France felt that the terms of the draft went beyond what was desirable as regards the range and objectives of the discussions; it was premature to contemplate negotiations on agreement on practical measures, before an in-depth discussion identified what could actually be done within the Conference on Disarmament.

Several delegations also spoke on a nine-nation draft on "Prevention of nuclear war, including all related matters: prevention of war in the nuclear age";<sup>(20)</sup> which, at the sponsors' request, was not acted on.

The draft—proposed by Australia, Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Norway, Turkey and the United Kingdom—would have had the Assembly: reaffirm the urgency of reducing and removing the threat of nuclear war and eliminating the threat of all armed conflict as the ultimate goal of the international community; declare that a nuclear war could not be won and that a conventional war might involve the risk of escalating to nuclear war; urge all States never to use force except in exercising their right of individual or collective self-defence; reject doctrines and policies aimed at achieving military superiority; and call on the USSR and the United States especially to agree on reducing to the lowest possible level their strategic and intermediate-range nuclear weapons.

Argentina, India, Mexico and Yugoslavia subsequently submitted a series of amendments<sup>(21)</sup> affecting most of the nine-nation draft and shifting its emphasis clearly to the nuclear aspects of the question.

Stating that the sponsors had decided not to press their draft to a vote, the Federal Republic of Germany said a minority of delegations had drawn a distorted picture of the draft—largely based on the language of the United Nations Charter—as advocating or legitimizing the use of nuclear weapons. It stressed that the Western security policy helped to remove the menace of war in all its forms, while many of the criticisms voiced against it suggested that conventional attacks were a legitimate part of international life and should be exempt from defensive action. The sponsors had no intention of splitting the group of non-aligned countries, in which the draft had aroused particular interest as well as internal controversy; it regretted that the amendments had been submitted in spite of a formal undertaking by leaders of that group not to take such action.

Several States expressed satisfaction at the draft's withdrawal. In the opinion of India—the current Chairman of the group of non-aligned countries—the draft represented a radical departure from the approach the international community had adopted, such as in the 1978 Final Document,<sup>(13)</sup> on nuclear-war prevention; it was unrealistic to expect the Assembly to endorse the partisan view of a group of countries belonging to a particular military alliance. In addition, India felt that treating nuclear war as an extension of war in general, and lumping all wars together, represented a dangerous over-simplification or a wilful disregard of contemporary realities; not attending to the immediate need to prevent nuclear war, it said, could deny humanity a chance to work towards eliminating all wars. Stating that no commitment had been made in meetings of the group on non-submission of amendments, Mexico viewed the draft as an attempt surreptitiously to obtain amendments to what had been adopted in the 1978 Final Document. Argentina added that some elements in the draft ran counter to the fundamental positions of the non-aligned countries and legitimized the doctrine of nuclear deterrence. Brazil believed the draft sought to justify policies and practices contrary to the Charter and the Final Document. Cuba and Czechoslovakia stressed that the most urgent task was to prevent the outbreak of nuclear war.

Australia, a sponsor, regretted the withdrawal of the proposal, both on the substantive grounds that it affirmed fundamental principles embodied in the Charter concerning the refusal to accept war, and for the procedural reason that the amendments—which, if accepted, would have destroyed the thrust of the original text—had been put forward after a similar draft resolution on nuclear-war prevention (see p. 28) had been approved. It rejected any suggestion that the draft had departed from, or had quoted selectively, the Final Document, and stressed that the text had unequivocally reaffirmed the importance of nuclear disarmament.

Climatic consequences of a nuclear war

Two draft texts were presented to the General Assembly in 1984 on the climatic consequences of a nuclear war—sometimes referred to as nuclear winter—with the Assembly, in December, adopting a text proposed by eight non-aligned countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/148 F by recorded vote.

Climatic effects of nuclear war: nuclear winter

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, after referring specifically to "the threat to the very survival of mankind" posed by the existence of nuclear weapons, it declared, in paragraph 18, that removing the threat of a world war—a nuclear war—is the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Noting that, in spite of recent scientific endeavours, the environmental and other climatic consequences of a nuclear war still pose a major challenge to science,

Noting that, as a result of recent atmospheric and biological studies, there have been new findings which indicate that in addition to blast, heat and radiation, nuclear war, even on a limited scale, would produce smoke, soot and dust of sufficient magnitude as to trigger an arctic nuclear winter which may transform the Earth into a darkened, frozen planet where conditions would be conducive to mass extinction,

Recognizing that the prospect of nuclear winter poses an unprecedented peril to all nations, even those far removed from the nuclear explosions, which would add immeasurably to the previously known dangers of nuclear war,

Conscious of the urgent need to continue and develop scientific studies to increase the knowledge and understanding of the various elements and consequences on climate, including nuclear winter,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to compile and distribute as a document of the United Nations appropriate excerpts of all national and international scientific studies on the climatic effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter, published so far or which may be published before 31 July 1985;

2. Urges all States and intergovernmental organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations, through their intermediary, to transmit to the Secretary-General, prior to the above-mentioned date, the relevant material in their possession which may be useful for the above purpose;

3. Recommends that the above-mentioned document be examined at the fortieth session of the General Assembly in connection with the item dealing with the prevention of a nuclear war.

General Assembly resolution 39/148 F

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 130-0-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/749) by recorded vote (123-0-10), 27 November (meeting 49); 8-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.22/Rev.1); agenda item 59 ff.
Sponsors: Bangladesh, India, Mexico, Pakistan, Romania, Sweden, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Belgium, Colombia, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

A second text on the topic—sponsored by Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and Japan, entitled “Studies on climatic effects of nuclear war including a possibility of nuclear winter”<sup>(22)</sup>—was not acted on at the request of the sponsors. By that draft, the Assembly would have invited Member States to submit to the Secretary-General any reports or studies on large-scale climatic effects of a nuclear conflict, clarifying underlying hypotheses as well as methods of analysis employed therein, and requested him to provide the Assembly in 1985 with an annotated list of those studies.

Mexico, in introducing the draft that became resolution 39/148 F, stated that the specialized studies carried out on the subject were not so numerous and that their sources—Australia, Canada, Sweden (where studies had been initiated in 1980), the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States—were relatively few, well-known and accessible.

Prior to acting on the draft as a whole, the First Committee rejected, by recorded votes, two oral amendments proposed by Canada, the first—to replace the third preambular paragraph by “Bearing in mind that some recent scientific studies have concluded that a nuclear war could trigger large-scale climatic consequences, leading in the worst analysis to what is sometimes termed a nuclear winter”—by 63 votes to 24, with 31 abstentions, and the second—to have the document in question compiled and distributed “within existing resources”—by 56 votes to 27, with 35 abstentions. In proposing the amendments, Canada had asserted that the draft should deal with all possible climatic effects and not focus exclusively on one possibility, especially at the current stage of research.

In explanation of vote, Canada regretted that its efforts towards a consensus text had been in vain; despite its continuing reservations about certain passages in the eight-nation draft, it cast an affirmative vote because it believed the question should be studied at the United Nations.

Japan, which supported both the text as a whole and the proposed amendments, had reservations about the manner in which the concept had been presented in some parts, as well as the financial aspects; instead of sounding alarmist and giving the impression that nuclear winter was a proven scientific fact, it would have been more advisable for the Assembly to take an unbiased position, while making it clear that, nuclear winter or not, nuclear war should be prevented. Similarly, Belgium felt that the fourth preambular paragraph confused hypothesis with proven theory. Also feeling that the language prejudged the results of continuing scientific studies on the topic, the United Kingdom regretted that the draft's sponsors had been unable to agree to relatively small changes; it expected the resolution to have no additional financial implications.

Proposed convention against nuclear weapons

In 1984, the Conference on Disarmament,<sup>(9)</sup> which could not agree on a subsidiary body on nuclear disarmament, was unable to negotiate on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, the draft text of which had been provided by the General Assembly in December 1983.<sup>(23)</sup>

In December 1984, the Assembly again called on the Conference to undertake work on such a convention (39/63 H) as well as on an international instrument on the non-first-use of nuclear weapons (39/148 D).

Another proposal entitled "Prohibition of use of nuclear weapons",<sup>(24)</sup> submitted by Nigeria but not put to a vote at its request, would have had the Assembly convene in 1985, as part of the activities marking the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, a plenipotentiary conference to adopt a legal instrument prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December 1984, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/63 H by recorded vote.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind and to the life-sustaining system posed by nuclear weapons and by their use, inherent in concepts of deterrence,

Conscious of an increased danger of nuclear war as a result of the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and the serious deterioration of the international situation,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament is essential for the prevention of nuclear war and for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Further convinced that a prohibition of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and which would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its session in 1984, was not able to undertake negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text annexed to General Assembly resolution 38/73 G of 15 December 1983,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, as a matter of priority, in order to achieve agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text of the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the results of those negotiations.

ANNEX

General Assembly resolution 39/63 H

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 128-17-5 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/750) by recorded vote (113-17-5), 21 November (meeting 45); 14-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.50); agenda item 60 (ff).

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Romania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Greece, Ireland, Israel, Japan.

Cameroon said its affirmative vote did not necessarily mean endorsement of the procedures and approaches recommended in the draft. Mongolia held that an international convention prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons would help strengthen mutual confidence and trust, and thus help create conditions favourable for adopting practical measures of nuclear disarmament. The Byelorussian SSR and Hungary also spoke in support of the text.

On 17 December, acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/148 D by recorded vote.

Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race, in particular in the nuclear field,

Recalling that, in accordance with the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority,

Recalling also that this commitment was reaffirmed by the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Bearing in mind its relevant resolutions on this subject,

Reaffirming that the most effective guarantee against the danger of nuclear war and the use of nuclear weapons is nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and which would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming also that the nuclear-weapon States have the primary responsibility for nuclear disarmament and for undertaking measures aimed at preventing the outbreak of nuclear war, inter alia, by establishing corresponding norms regulating relations between them,

Convinced that the renunciation of the first use of nuclear weapons is a most important and urgent measure for the prevention of nuclear war, and taking note of the broad, positive international reaction to the concept of non-first-use of nuclear weapons, including the appeal contained in the Final Communiqué adopted at the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirtieth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October 1984,

1. Considers that the solemn declarations by two nuclear-weapon States made or reiterated at the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, concerning their respective obligations not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, offer an important avenue to decrease the danger of nuclear war;

2. Expresses the hope that those nuclear-weapon States that have not yet done so would consider making similar declarations with respect to not being the first to use nuclear weapons;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider under its relevant agenda item, inter alia, the elaboration of an international instrument of a legally binding character laying down the obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war".

General Assembly resolution 39/148 D

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 101-19-17 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/749) by recorded vote (95-19-15), 21 November (meeting 45); 4-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.12), orally revised; agenda item 59.

Sponsors: Cuba, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Romania.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Bahamas, Brazil, Burma, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Paraguay, Philippines, Saint Lucia, Uruguay, Zaire.

Introducing the draft on behalf of the sponsors, the German Democratic Republic recalled that China and the USSR had already pledged not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, and expressed the hope that the other nuclear-weapon Powers would act likewise.

In explanation of vote, the Federal Republic of Germany stated that the call for a non-first-use commitment emanating from the USSR had to be viewed in the context of the East-West relationship where Western Europe was confronted by the vast military superiority of the USSR and its allies. Moreover, it felt that the nuclear non-first-use concept provided no incentives to deal with existing nuclear arsenals and preserved them at their current level, and weakened the interdiction of force and condemnation of all wars as contained in the United Nations Charter. Norway, though supporting efforts to reduce dependence on nuclear weapons, viewed the draft as being directed at NATO's defensive strategy.

Brazil thought that the prevention of nuclear war was not served by the non-first-use concept, which implied legitimizing the ulterior use of such weapons. Colombia said the concept should also include conventional weapons.

Argentina, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Finland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Liberia, Mongolia, Sweden and the USSR saw in the draft a valid course of action, pending the achievement of nuclear disarmament. Argentina added, however, that the total elimination of nuclear weapons was the ultimate solution, and India likewise stressed the need to forswear the use or threat of use of such weapons under all circumstances. Indonesia also emphasized that all use of nuclear weapons must be proscribed, but felt that the last preambular paragraph did not fully reflect the complexities of the issue involved. Finland reaffirmed its declared policy that nuclear weapons should never be used.

Ireland expressed reservations about paragraph 3, regarding the activity foreseen for the Conference as impractical under the existing circumstances. Sweden felt that the establishment of a rough parity in conventional forces at a lower level would facilitate such commitments; a firm commitment to that effect, made through an international instrument of legally binding character dealing solely with the issue and promoting concrete measures for implementing effective non-first-use policies, would contribute to preventing nuclear warfare. Liberia stressed that there must be commitments by States, because mere declarations could be reversed by any party. The USSR, which had made the declaration, said similar action by other nuclear-weapon States would amount to a general refusal to use nuclear weapons. Czechoslovakia said claims about the so-called military superiority of the socialist States served only to build a smoke-screen around the plans of the Western countries for what was called a limited nuclear war. The Byelorussian SSR and Mongolia expressed their support for all efforts aimed at outlawing the use of nuclear weapons.

Proposed negotiations on the neutron weapon

For the fourth consecutive year, the General Assembly, in 1984, requested the Conference on Disarmament to start without delay negotiations aimed at concluding a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling, deployment and use of nuclear neutron weapons, also known as enhanced radiation weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/148 E by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that the achievement of nuclear disarmament will require urgent negotiation of agreements, inter alia, for the cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems, which is especially emphasized in paragraph 50 (a) of that Document,

Recalling also that in paragraph 50 of the Final Document it is also underlined that in the course of negotiations consideration can be given to mutual and agreed limitation or prohibition, without prejudice to the security of any State, of any types of nuclear armaments,

Stressing that the development and production of the nuclear neutron weapon is a dangerous consequence of the continuing qualitative arms race in the field of nuclear weapons, especially through the qualitative improvement and development of new nuclear warheads by enhancing specific characteristics of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming its relevant resolutions on the prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon,

Sharing the world-wide concern expressed by Member States, as well as by non-governmental organizations, about the continued and expanded production and introduction of the nuclear neutron weapon in military arsenals, which escalates the nuclear-arms race and significantly lowers the threshold of nuclear war,

Aware of the inhuman effects of that weapon, which constitutes a grave threat, particularly to the unprotected civilian population,

Noting the consideration by the Conference on Disarmament at its 1984 session of issues connected with the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament as well as the prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon,

Regretting that the Conference on Disarmament was prevented from reaching agreement on the commencement of negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, including the prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon in an appropriate organizational framework,

1. Reaffirms its request to the Conference on Disarmament to start without delay negotiations within an appropriate organizational framework, with a view to concluding a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling, deployment and use of nuclear neutron weapons as an organic element of negotiations, as envisaged in paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this question by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on this question to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon".

General Assembly resolution 39/148 E

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 71-11-53 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/C.1/39/749) by recorded vote (61-11-51), 20 November (meeting 44); 19-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.20); agenda item 59 (d).

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Mozambique, Poland, Romania, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 44; plenary 102.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahrain, Barbados, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Panama, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Liberia, Luxembourg, Maldives, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Saint Lucia, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Thailand, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zaire.

Introducing the draft on behalf of the sponsors, the German Democratic Republic said the nuclear neutron weapon, which it considered as a prototype of a third generation of nuclear weapons being developed, lowered the nuclear threshold and served to give material form to aggressive nuclear doctrines.

In explanation of vote, Bangladesh, Brazil, Egypt, Oman, Pakistan and the Sudan said all nuclear weapons, without singling out one specific type, should be prohibited; Ireland believed likewise, although it considered the neutron weapon to be a particularly destabilizing nuclear device. Australia did not believe the neutron weapon could be the subject of a separate disarmament treaty because of the difficulty of verification. Denmark reiterated its stance that, while it opposed the production of the neutron weapon and would not accept it on its territory, it saw the draft as an attempt to split the Western allies in an important area of defence policy.

Proposed nuclear-weapon freeze

In December 1984, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions (39/63 C and G, 39/151 D) calling for a freeze on nuclear armaments. A number of States explained in single statements their positions on these texts (see p. 31).

In November, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly, in accordance with a December 1983 resolution,<sup>(25)</sup> a note<sup>(26)</sup> containing information received from the USSR regarding its views on the freeze.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 12 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/63 C by recorded vote.

Nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Recalling also that, on those occasions, it pointed out that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons are more than sufficient to destroy all life on earth and stressed that mankind is therefore confronted with a choice: halt the arms race and proceed to disarmament, or face annihilation,

Noting that the conditions prevailing today are a source of even more serious concern than those existing in 1978 because of several factors, such as the deterioration of the international situation, the increase in the accuracy, speed and destructive power of nuclear weapons, the promotion of illusory doctrines of "limited" or "winnable" nuclear war and the many false alarms which have occurred owing to accidental reasons,

Noting also that at the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, it was declared that the renewed escalation in the nuclear-arms race, both in its quantitative and qualitative dimensions, as well as reliance on doctrines of nuclear deterrence, had heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations,

Bearing in mind that in their Joint Declaration, issued on 22 May 1984, the Heads of State or Government of six States Members of the United Nations, coming from five different continents, urged the nuclear-weapon States as a necessary first step to halt all testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems,

Believing that it is a matter of the utmost urgency to stop any further increase in the awesome arsenals of the two major nuclear-weapon States, which already have ample retaliatory power and a frightening overkill capacity,

Believing also that it is equally urgent to initiate or resume negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute the most effective first step for the achievement of the above-mentioned two objectives, since it would encourage the initiation or resumption of negotiations and prevent the continued increase and qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations would take place,

Firmly convinced that at present the conditions are most propitious for such a freeze, since the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America are now equivalent in nuclear military power and it seems evident that there exists between them an overall rough parity,

Conscious that the application of the systems of surveillance, verification and control already agreed upon in some previous cases would be sufficient to provide a reasonable guarantee of faithful compliance with the undertakings derived from the freeze,

Convinced that it would be to the benefit of all other States possessing nuclear weapons to follow the example of the two major nuclear-weapon States,

1. Urges once more the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to proclaim, either through simultaneous unilateral declarations or through a joint declaration, an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would be a first step towards the comprehensive programme of disarmament and whose structure and scope would be the following:

- (a) It would embrace:
  - (i) A comprehensive test ban of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
  - (ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
  - (iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
  - (iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;
- (b) It would be subject to appropriate measures and procedures of verification, such as those which have already been agreed by the parties in the case of the SALT I and SALT II treaties, and those agreed upon in principle by them during the preparatory trilateral negotiations on the comprehensive test ban held at Geneva;
- (c) It would be of an initial five-year duration, subject to prolongation when other nuclear-weapon States join in such a freeze, as the General Assembly urges them to do;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has already submitted the report requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/73 E of 15 December 1983;

3. Hopes that the other major nuclear-weapon State will find it possible to comply also with the request of the General Assembly before the closure of its thirty-ninth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 39/63 C on a nuclear-arms freeze".

General Assembly resolution 39/63 C

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 129-12-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/750) by recorded vote (111-12-7), 20 November (meeting 44); 6-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.32); agenda item 60 (le).

Sponsors: Indonesia, Mexico, Pakistan, Romania, Sweden, Uruguay.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Bahamas, China, Iceland, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Saint Lucia, Spain.

Explaining its vote, the Netherlands said the military imbalance prevailing in Europe—contrary to the draft's assertion—had to be brought down to the lowest possible level of parity before a freeze could be considered; rather than a declaratory freeze, bilateral negotiations should resume immediately without pre-conditions. Norway regretted that the draft failed to stress requirements such as verification and negotiated agreement among the parties concerned; it had reservations on those paragraphs questioning the defensive strategy of the alliance to which it belonged and endorsing one-sidedly the policies of one nuclear Power concerning a freeze.

Australia said it voted for the first time for a nuclear freeze proposal to express support for the broad aspirations to that end; as a first step, it favoured a mutual and verifiable freeze of nuclear-weapon testing, production and development, to be followed by negotiations on reductions. The USSR said that, given the current approximate parity in nuclear and conventional capabilities, an agreement on freezing and reducing levels of nuclear weapons would harm no one's security.

The Netherlands felt the other two texts on the topic (see p. 36) fell further short of the standards it used to measure the draft that became resolution 39/63 C. Guyana believed that resolution fully covered the objectives of the other two proposals, and voted accordingly in order to avoid duplication and unnecessary proliferation of resolutions.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly, on 12 December, adopted resolution 39/63 G by recorded vote.

Freeze on nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/100 A of 13 December 1982 and 38/73 B of 15 December 1983 concerning a freeze on nuclear weapons,

Convinced that in this nuclear age lasting world peace can be based only on the attainment of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Further convinced that the highest priority objectives in the field of disarmament have to be nuclear disarmament and the elimination of all weapons of mass destruction,

Recognizing the urgent need to halt the arms race, particularly in nuclear weapons,

Recognizing further the urgent need for a negotiated reduction of nuclear-weapon stockpiles leading to their complete elimination,

Noting with deep concern that nuclear-weapon States have not so far taken any action in response to the call made in resolutions 37/100 A and 38/73 B,

1. Once again calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to agree to a freeze on nuclear weapons, which would, inter alia, provide for a simultaneous total stoppage of any further production of nuclear weapons and a complete cut-off in the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Freeze on nuclear weapons".

General Assembly resolution 39/63 G

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 127-11-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/750) by recorded vote (110-12-9), 20 November (meeting 44); draft by India (A/C.1/39/L.49); agenda item 60 (b).

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Bahamas, China, Guyana, Iceland, Israel,* Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Saint Lucia, Spain.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Introducing the text, India said a freeze would be simple, direct and immediately enforceable, as compared to the meagre and always uncertain outcome of the protracted negotiations on nuclear-arms reduction.

Norway felt that the text, while calling for an agreement among the parties concerned, failed to deal explicitly with the need for adequate verification. The USSR interpreted the last preambular paragraph as referring to those nuclear-weapon States that not only had failed to respond to the call for a freeze, but had even spoken against it.

On 17 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/151 D by recorded vote.

Nuclear-weapon freeze

Expressing its deep alarm over the continuation and intensification of the nuclear-arms race, which seriously increases the threat of nuclear war,

Conscious of the fact that further buildup and improvement of nuclear weapons is not only dangerous but senseless,

Taking into account the great responsibility of nuclear-weapon States for the preservation of universal peace and the prevention of nuclear war,

Recalling its previous resolutions calling for a nuclear-weapon freeze both in quantitative and in qualitative terms,

Recalling also that on several occasions it has expressed the firm conviction that at present the conditions are most propitious for such a freeze,

Noting the wide support for the Joint Declaration of the Heads of State or Government of six States Members of the United Nations, issued on 22 May 1984, which contained an appeal to the nuclear-weapon States to halt testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery,

Deeply regretting that some nuclear Powers have not responded positively to its relevant appeals or to appeals and proposals by other States made repeatedly during the last two years,

Convinced that a nuclear-weapon freeze would raise the level of trust among States, ease international tension and create a favourable atmosphere for drastic reductions of nuclear arsenals,

Convinced also that striving for such reductions on the basis of equal security up to the complete elimination of nuclear weapons should become a binding norm of conduct for the nuclear-weapon States,

1. Reaffirms its appeal to all nuclear-weapon States to freeze, from a specific date, their nuclear arsenals on a global scale and under appropriate verification, as provided for in its resolution 38/76 of 15 December 1983;

2. Urges once again the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which possess the largest nuclear arsenals, to freeze, in the first place and simultaneously, their nuclear weapons on a bilateral basis by way of example to the other nuclear-weapon States;

3. Strongly believes that all the other nuclear-weapon States should subsequently and as soon as possible freeze their nuclear weapons;

4. Stresses the urgent need to intensify efforts aimed at the speedy achievement of agreements on substantial limitations on and radical reductions of nuclear weapons, with a view to their complete elimination as the ultimate goal.

Approved by First Committee (A/39/755) by recorded vote (95-18-13), 20 November (meeting 44); 10-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.25); agenda item 65.

Against: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Bahamas, Chad, China, Costa Rica,<sup>a</sup> Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Ivory Coast, Paraguay, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sweden, Uruguay, Zaire.

Explaining its vote, Norway said the text contained no important substantive improvements on the previous year's resolution.<sup>(27)</sup> Indonesia, supporting the thrust of the draft, emphasized that the importance of a freeze, as only a means to an end, should be judged in conjunction with the provisions in paragraph 4.

A number of States explained in single statements their positions on the three texts which became resolutions 39/63 C and G, and 39/151 D.

Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States asserted that, given the current military situation, freeze proposals were tantamount to unilateral disarmament and to expecting the Western European countries to acquiesce in a codification of the USSR superiority and to live with that threat for an indefinite period. The Netherlands also spoke of the existing military imbalance in Europe, and Canada stated that all arms-control agreements must enhance mutual security, which could not be achieved if current imbalances were locked in. The Federal Republic of Germany noted that, according to paragraph 29 of the 1978 Final Document,<sup>(13)</sup> a freeze decision should not be taken independently from underlying security situations and force relationships.

The Federal Republic of Germany and the United States feared that a freeze would diminish incentives for the USSR to negotiate seriously on nuclear-arms reduction. Among those rejecting a declaratory freeze, Canada and the Netherlands stressed the importance of resumption, without pre-conditions and delay, of bilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament. France added that such negotiations must begin with defining and establishing a satisfactory balance, and Canada asserted that they should take into account the legitimate security interests of both sides and provide for adequate verification measures. The Federal Republic of Germany agreed that the verification issue was consistently underemphasized in the drafts. The United States also argued that the verification of some aspects of a freeze would require measures beyond national technical means; it therefore believed that the time required for negotiating a freeze and its verification would be better spent negotiating deep reductions. For Canada, the texts did not deal with the potentially destabilizing problem of peaceful nuclear explosions. Australia stressed the requirement for mutuality and balance, and called for resumption of negotiations on the intermediate-range nuclear forces.

Nigeria supported the three texts in the belief that only a freeze could create the most desirable basis for progress in nuclear disarmament negotiations. Pakistan voted similarly, asserting that it was not partial to any negotiating approach and that it only wanted a thaw in the prevailing situation.

The German Democratic Republic asserted that a nuclear-weapons freeze and reduction were complementary. Czechoslovakia felt that the Western countries' allegation of an imbalance of forces in Europe was an excuse for bringing more of their armaments into the region. For Hungary, a freeze, though not an end in itself, could contribute to making the international situation more propitious to negotiating reduction and elimination of nuclear weapons.

Nuclear non-proliferation

Among the efforts made in 1984 to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons, the preparatory process began at Geneva for the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT).<sup>(28)</sup> The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), for its part, continued its efforts concerning nuclear safeguards, particularly in relation to NPT (see PART II, Chapter I). In resolution 39/12, the Assembly urged States to ensure the effectiveness of IAEA's safeguards system.

The Assembly adopted a number of resolutions relating to nuclear-weapon-free zones, including one on extending the work of an expert group on such zones (resolution 39/151 B).

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

The establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various parts of the world continued to be considered in 1984 by the Disarmament Commission, the Conference on Disarmament and the General Assembly. In addition to the establishment of zones in Africa, the Middle East and South Asia, references were made in debates to informal proposals for zones in the Balkans, northern and central Europe and the South Pacific region.

By a letter of 15 March 1984<sup>(29)</sup> to the Secretary-General, Bangladesh transmitted the resolutions and final declaration adopted by the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, 6-11 December 1983). The meeting supported the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in Africa, the Middle East and South Asia, and condemned the nuclear collaboration between Israel and South Africa.

Group of Experts

The 21-member Group of Governmental Experts on Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones, set up in 1983<sup>(30)</sup> in accordance with a 1982 General Assembly resolution<sup>(31)</sup> to review and supplement a 1975 expert study,<sup>(32)</sup> held two further sessions in 1984—its third (27 February–9 March) and fourth (25-29 June).

On 29 June, the Chairman of the Group, Klaus Törnudd (Finland), informed the Secretary-General that the Group had been unable to reach agreement on the study in time for its submission to the Assembly's session. The letter, with a request that consideration be given to extending the deadline, was annexed to the Secretary-General's report to the Assembly.<sup>(33)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/151 B by recorded vote.

Study of the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in all its aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/99 F of 13 December 1982, in which it decided that a study should be undertaken to review and supplement the Comprehensive study of the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in all its aspects in the light of information and experience accumulated since 1975,

Recalling also that it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of an ad hoc group of qualified governmental experts, to carry out the study and to submit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session,

Recalling further its resolution 38/188 I of 20 December 1983, in which it requested the Secretary-General to transmit to the Group of Governmental Experts on Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones for its consideration and analysis all the relevant documents submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session, as well as the records of the debate on the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, to which is annexed a letter from the Chairman of the Group of Governmental Experts on Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones, informing the Secretary-General that the Group has not been able to conclude the study within the time available and that the experts consider that the work could be completed if the time period of the study were extended;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the study and to submit the report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Group of Governmental Experts for its consideration and analysis all the relevant documents submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, as well as the records of the debate on the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones.

Against: None.

Abstaining: India, United States.

Introducing the draft, Finland said the Group—which had examined five consecutive drafts in four sessions totalling six weeks—was unable even to begin examining the analytical part of the study because it had been held up by slow progress on those chapters intended to summarize facts and describe historical developments. It felt the Group, which believed it could complete the study if its mandate was extended, deserved that chance, adding that none of the experts had intended to detract from the agreed principles and other conclusions reached in the 1975 study, which had retained its value.

Explaining their votes, Cameroon and the United Kingdom emphasized that the extension of the Group's work should be seen as exceptional, while the United States objected to the draft's financial implications. The United Kingdom added that, as with all studies covering a contentious issue, the methodology adopted by the Group should allow for opinions to be given adequate and balanced expression in a consensus report. Egypt attached importance to the completion of the study which, it felt, would make available valuable information for establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones. India said that, although the text was concerned with a purely procedural matter, it could not support the underlying approach that viewed the establishing of such zones as a realistically viable way to cope with the menace of an unchecked escalation of the nuclear-arms race.

While delegations explained in the General Assembly their votes on individual resolutions on the proposed zones, Chile explained its affirmative vote on all of them, saying that it understood, as the fundamental condition for their establishment, the political and legal will of the nuclear Powers in terms of undertaking verifiable commitments and fully respecting the status of those areas.

Africa

Since the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa<sup>(34)</sup> was adopted in 1964 by the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the question of its implementation had been on the General Assembly's agenda. In addition to a resolution on implementation of that Declaration (39/61 A), the Assembly, in 1984 as in previous years, adopted a text on the nuclear capability of South Africa (39/61 B).

Throughout 1984, South Africa's military and nuclear relations with other States were kept under consideration by various other United Nations bodies (see p. 139).

Nuclear weapons and South Africa

Disarmament Commission activities. As in previous years, the Disarmament Commission<sup>(10)</sup> established in 1984 a working group (Working Group II) to consider, in pursuance of a December 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(35)</sup> the question of South Africa's nuclear capability.

The Group, chaired by Davidson L. Hepburn (Bahamas), held 11 meetings and additional informal consultations between 11 and 30 May, using a text submitted in 1983 by Mauritius on behalf of the African States members of the Commission as a basis for discussion and taking into account another 1983 working paper by the Federal Republic of Germany. In the absence of consensus, the Group agreed to annex to its report a working paper produced as a result of its 1984 discussion, and recommended that the Commission refer the question to the Assembly later in the year.

Reports by the Secretary-General. By a February 1984 note to the Security Council,<sup>(36)</sup> the Secretary-General drew the Council's attention to two December 1983 Assembly resolutions—one on the implementation of the 1964 OAU Declaration,<sup>(37)</sup> and the other on South Africa's nuclear capability.<sup>(35)</sup> By the latter, the Assembly had requested the Council to prevent South Africa from acquiring arms or arms technology or enjoying nuclear collaboration. In September, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly on South Africa's nuclear capability,<sup>(38)</sup> stating that he had followed closely South Africa's nuclear activities; at the same time, he drew the Assembly's attention to a report prepared by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR).<sup>(39)</sup>

UNIDIR report. The UNIDIR report on South Africa's nuclear capability<sup>(39)</sup>—prepared, in pursuance of a December 1983 Assembly request,<sup>(37)</sup> in co-operation with the Secretariat's Department for Disarmament Affairs and in consultation with OAU—covered developments since the Secretary-General's 1980 report on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field.<sup>(40)</sup> It found, among other things, that: uranium production in South Africa and Namibia had increased by about 50 per cent in the period from 1978 to 1982; a pilot enrichment plant had been in operation for 8 to 10 years; the first reactor of a nuclear power plant started operations in March 1984 and a second was expected to be completed later that year; research and development on fuel technology to enable South Africa to manufacture its own nuclear fuel was in progress; a decision had been taken to establish a new nuclear research centre; new legislation had been enacted with a view to strengthening the control and management of its nuclear programme; South Africa had stated its readiness to resume discussions with IAEA on safeguards in respect of its semi-commercial enrichment plant, but not its pilot enrichment plant; and South Africa continued to have a technical capability to manufacture nuclear weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 12 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/61 A by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling resolution 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, its earliest on the subject, as well as its resolutions 2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, 31/69 of 10 December

1976, 32/81 of 12 December 1977, 33/63 of 14 December 1978, 34/76 A of 11 December 1979, 35/146 B of 12 December 1980, 36/86 B of 9 December 1981, 37/74 A of 9 December 1982 and 38/181 A of 20 December 1983, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling that in its resolution 33/63 it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent of Africa or elsewhere,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability", undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, as well as the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Expressing regret that, despite the threat South Africa's nuclear capability constitutes to international peace and security, in particular to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Disarmament Commission has, once again, in 1984, failed to reach a consensus on this important item on its agenda,

1. Strongly renews its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

2. Reaffirms that the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity would be an important measure to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security;

3. Expresses once again its grave alarm at South Africa's possession and continued development of nuclear-weapon capability;

4. Condemns South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist régime that enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration which seeks to keep Africa free from nuclear weapons;

5. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to desist from further collaboration with the racist régime that may enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

6. Demands once again that the racist régime of South Africa refrain from manufacturing, testing, deploying, transporting, storing, using or threatening to use nuclear weapons;

7. Appeals to all States that have the means to do so to monitor South Africa's research on, and development and production of nuclear weapons, and to publicize any information in that regard;

8. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to render all necessary assistance that the Organization of African Unity may seek towards the implementation of its solemn Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa".

Against: None.

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

In explanation of vote, Canada expressed a reservation concerning the assertion in the last preambular paragraph, believing that it fell within the purview of the Security Council. Belgium found the assertion in paragraph 3 to be unproven and the language in paragraph 4 to be ambiguous. Similarly, Japan did not fully agree with some assertions, which, it felt, lacked conclusive evidence. Sweden, speaking also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway, voiced reservations about paragraph 7. The Netherlands, though unable to support all ideas in the text, supported the call on South Africa to submit its nuclear installations to IAEA inspection.

The Federal Republic of Germany supported the objectives of the draft, although it continued to have doubts about some aspects, notably "surrounding areas" in connection with the confines of the envisaged zone, to which it gave the strictest possible interpretation. Recalling its concerns about the requirements for nuclear-weapon-free zones in general, Brazil stated that it did not object to a consensus on the text, as particular situations of the region in question warranted special regard.

Also on 12 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/61 B by recorded vote.

Nuclear capability of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/76 B of 11 December 1979, 35/146 A of 12 December 1980, 36/86 A of 9 December 1981, 37/74 B of 9 December 1982 and 38/181 B of 20 December 1983,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State

and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling that, in paragraph 12 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it noted that the accumulation of armaments and the acquisition of armaments technology by the racist régimes, as well as their possible acquisition of nuclear weapons, presented a challenging and increasingly dangerous obstacle to a world community faced with the urgent need to disarm,

Recalling also that in its resolution 33/63 of 14 December 1978, it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Taking note of resolution GC(XXVIII)/RES/423 on South Africa's nuclear capabilities, adopted on 27 September 1984 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency during its twenty-eighth regular session,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability", undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity,

Expressing regret that, despite the threat South Africa's nuclear capability constitutes to international peace and security, in particular to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Disarmament Commission has, once again, in 1984, failed to reach a consensus on this important item on its agenda,

Gravely concerned that South Africa, in flagrant violation of the principles of international law and the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, has continued its acts of aggression and subversion against the peoples and the independent States of southern Africa,

Strongly condemning the continued military occupation by South African troops of parts of the territory of Angola in violation of its national sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity, and urging the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African troops from Angolan soil,

Expressing its grave disappointment that, despite repeated appeals by the international community, certain Western States and Israel have continued to collaborate with the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and that some of the same Western States have, by a ready recourse to the use of the veto, consistently frustrated every effort in the Security Council to deal decisively with the question of South Africa,

Recalling its decision taken at the tenth special session that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the implementation of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa,

Stressing the need to preserve peace and security in Africa by ensuring that the continent is a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

1. Condemns the massive buildup of South Africa's military machine, in particular, its frenzied acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability for repressive and aggressive purposes and as an instrument of blackmail;

2. Expresses its full support for the African States faced with the danger of South Africa's nuclear capability;

3. Reaffirms that the racist régime's acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States and increases the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

4. Condemns all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist régime of South Africa, in particular the decision by some Member States to grant licences to several corporations in their territories to provide equipment, technical and maintenance services for nuclear installations in South Africa;

5. Demands that South Africa and all other foreign interests put an immediate end to the exploration and exploitation of uranium resources in Namibia;

6. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate forthwith all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime;

7. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider as a matter of priority during its session in 1985 South Africa's nuclear capability, taking into account, inter alia, the findings of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on South Africa's nuclear capability;

8. Requests the Security Council, for the purposes of disarmament and to fulfil its obligations and responsibility, to take enforcement measures to prevent any racist régimes from acquiring arms or arms technology;

9. Further requests the Security Council to conclude expeditiously its consideration of the recommendations of its Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa, with a view to blocking the existing loopholes in the arms embargo, so as to render it more effective and prohibiting, in particular, all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the nuclear field;

10. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to follow very closely South Africa's evolution in the nuclear field and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/61 B

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 137-4-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/747) by recorded vote (123-4-11), 21 November (meeting 45); draft by Cameroon, for African Group (A/C.1/39/L.51), orally revised; agenda item 57 (b).

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal.

In explanation of vote, several delegations expressed reservations on a number of paragraphs, while supporting the general objectives of the text. Belgium and the Netherlands objected to prohibiting all forms of collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field. Ecuador disagreed with what it felt was selective language such as in paragraphs 1 and 6. Australia objected to condemning a specific State and expressed misgivings about the call on the Security Council to take actions beyond its constitutional powers. While not agreeing with the formulation of the request to the Council in paragraph 8, the Netherlands supported strengthening the arms embargo against South Africa.

Cuba asserted that the main obstacle to implementing the 1964 Declaration was the nuclear collaboration of certain Western States and Israel with South Africa. Sharing that view, the USSR added that Africa's efforts to create a nuclear-weapon-free zone on its continent, which the USSR supported, must have no effect on generally acknowledged norms of international law, including the principle of free navigation on the high seas. The Ukrainian SSR stressed the urgency of condemning all forms of co-operation with South Africa, particularly military and nuclear.

In explanation of vote on both texts (resolutions 39/61 A and B above), France and Sweden, speaking for the Nordic group, voiced reservations over formulations that, in their view, disregarded the division of competence between the Security Council and the General Assembly.

The Nordic countries, as well as Ireland, deplored the singling out of countries for condemnation. France and Ireland objected to the failure to distinguish between co-operation in or use of nuclear energy for peaceful and weapons purposes. The United Kingdom also believed it wrong to try to limit, in individual cases for political reasons, the right to peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Sharing those views, the United States added that, while it supported efforts for a denuclearized Africa, it could not accept as a fact the nuclear capability of South Africa, as stated in the draft on the Declaration.

Albania stated that its affirmative votes were in keeping with its support for the cause of the African peoples against the racist régime of South Africa, but did not change its position of principle on the issue of nuclear-weapon-free zones.

The question of nuclear weapons and South Africa was also dealt with by the Assembly in resolutions 39/72 A, on comprehensive sanctions against the apartheid régime and support to the liberation struggle in South Africa; 39/72 C, on relations between Israel and South Africa; 39/72 G, on concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid; and 39/155, on review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security. The Assembly also condemned military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa in resolutions 39/42, 39/50 A and 39/72 C.

Latin America

Since the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) by five nuclear-weapon States by 1979,<sup>(41)</sup> only one item concerning that Treaty remained on the General Assembly's agenda: the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I concerning the application of the Treaty to Latin American territories for which extraregional States had de jure or de facto responsibility, such as the colonial Powers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 12 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/51 by recorded vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 38/61 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 3262(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3473(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 32/76 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/58 of 14 December 1978, 34/71 of 11 December 1979, 35/143 of 12 December 1980, 36/83 of 9 December 1981, 37/71 of 9 December 1982 and 38/61 of 15 December 1983 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Taking into account that within the zone of application of that Treaty, to which twenty-three sovereign States are already parties, there are some territories which, in spite of not being sovereign political entities, are nevertheless in a position to receive the benefits deriving from the Treaty through its Additional Protocol I, to which the four States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for those territories may become parties,

Recalling that three of those States—the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the United States of America—became parties to Additional Protocol I in 1969, 1971 and 1981, respectively,

1. Deplores that the signature of Additional Protocol I by France, which took place on 2 March 1979, has not yet been followed by the corresponding ratification, notwithstanding the time already elapsed and the pressing invitations which the General Assembly has addressed to it;

2. Once more urges France not to delay any further such ratification, which has been requested so many times and which appears all the more advisable, since France is the only one of the four States to which the Protocol is open that is not yet party to it;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 39/51 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

General Assembly resolution 39/51

Approved by First Committee (A/39/735) by recorded vote (129-0-9), 21 November (meeting 45); 20-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.14); agenda item 45.

Sponsors: Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay. Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 45, 46; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda,<sup>a</sup> Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Argentina, Belize, Cuba, France, Guyana, Ivory Coast, Malawi, Mali.

In explanation of vote, France and the United States expressed regret that only one country continued to be singled out in the text, while there were countries in the region in question which had not ratified or adhered to the Treaty.

Cuba said it could not unilaterally renounce the right to possess weapons as long as a nuclear Power in its area continued to pursue what it called a hostile and aggressive policy towards Cuba and continued to maintain a military base on its territory.

Middle East

The Secretary-General, in a September 1984 report<sup>(42)</sup> submitted to the General Assembly in response to its December 1983 request,<sup>(43)</sup> expressed the view that, since the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East would contribute to improving the situation in the area, further efforts should be made to that end.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December 1984, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/54 without vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982 and 38/64 of 15 December 1983 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing further the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous to build on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Invites those countries, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with the relevant paragraph of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

4. Further invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

5. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and spirit of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of all concerned parties regarding the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

General Assembly resolution 39/54

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote
Approved by First Committee (A/39/738) without vote, 19 November (meeting 41); draft by Egypt (A/C.1/39/L.54); agenda item 48.
Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 40-42, 45; plenary 97.

Introducing the draft, Egypt pointed out that the 1984 text had two new elements added to the 1983 Assembly resolution on the subject:<sup>(43)</sup> emphasis on the United Nations role in establishing the zone, and a request to the Secretary-General to seek the views of all concerned.

In explanation of position, Argentina and India stated that their going along with the consensus was without prejudice to their stance concerning NPT<sup>(28)</sup> and the application of the IAEA safeguards. Israel reiterated the reservations it had made in the past: among other things, with the Treaty of Tlatelolco serving as a model, the initiative for the zone's establishment should originate with the States in the region, and the consultations for reaching that aim should be carried out directly among them; also the draft omitted to mention the negotiating process, without which the proposed arrangement was unlikely to come about. Iraq asserted that the Treaty of Tlatelolco was not relevant to the Middle East, where the situation was different; existing nuclear-weapons stockpiles in the Middle East obstructed the creation of the proposed zone, and Israel needed to accede to NPT and subject its nuclear installations to IAEA safeguards. Brazil stated that it did not object to consensus on the draft because the particular situation of the Middle East region warranted special regard for its specific characteristics.

Zambia dissociated itself from paragraph 1 as it was not a party to NPT.

Israeli nuclear armament

In an August 1984 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(44)</sup> the Secretary-General recalled that the Assembly, by a December 1983 resolution,<sup>(45)</sup> had requested him to continue following closely Israel's nuclear activities and the nuclear and military collaboration between Israel and South Africa. He reported that he had received no new information in that regard and had nothing to add to his previous reports on the subject (see also p. 150).

By a letter of 12 July to the Secretary-General,<sup>(46)</sup> Israel expressed support for international arrangements aimed at ensuring the inviolability of nuclear facilities dedicated to peaceful purposes; it had no policy of attacking such facilities (see also p. 280).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/147 by recorded vote.

Israeli nuclear armament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on Israeli nuclear armament,

Recalling resolution 38/64 of 15 December 1983, in which, inter alia, it called upon all countries of the Middle East, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, and invited those countries also, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region, to declare their support for establishing such a zone and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council,

Considering that the Israeli statements contained in a letter dated 12 July 1984 continue to disregard the safeguards system of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981 in which, inter alia, the Council called upon Israel urgently to place its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Noting with concern Israel's persistent refusal to commit itself not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons, despite repeated calls by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the International Atomic Energy Agency, and to place its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards,

Conscious of the grave consequences which endanger international peace and security as a result of Israel's development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and Israel's collaboration with South Africa to develop nuclear weapons and their delivery systems,

Recalling its repeated condemnation of nuclear collaboration between Israel and South Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on Israeli nuclear armament,

1. Condemns Israel's continued refusal to implement Security Council resolution 487(1981), unanimously adopted by the Council on 19 June 1981, and its refusal to renounce any possession of nuclear weapons;

2. Requests the Security Council to take urgent and effective measures to ensure that Israel complies with the resolution and places all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Requests again the Security Council to investigate Israel's nuclear activities and the collaboration of other States, parties and institutions in these activities;

4. Reiterates its request to the International Atomic Energy Agency to suspend any scientific co-operation with Israel which could contribute to Israel's nuclear capabilities;

5. Reiterates further its condemnation of the Israeli threat, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, to repeat its armed attack on peaceful facilities in Iraq and in other countries;

6. Reaffirms its condemnation of the continuing nuclear collaboration between Israel and South Africa;

7. Requests the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the League of Arab States and the Organization of African Unity, to prepare a report providing data and other relevant information relating to Israeli nuclear armament and further nuclear developments taking into account, inter alia, the report of the Secretary-General on Israeli nuclear armament, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary support to the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research to enable it to carry out the task entrusted to it under the present resolution and for the Institute to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Israeli nuclear armament".

General Assembly resolution 39/147

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 94-2-44 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/743) by recorded vote (85-2-36), 4 December (meeting 58); 24-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.45/Rev.1); agenda item 53.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/39/806; S-G, A/C.1/39/L.84, A/C.5/39/74. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 38, 56, 58; 5th Committee 44; plenary 102.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Belgium, Bolivia, Burma, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Zaire.

The Assembly, before adopting the text as a whole, adopted, by separate recorded votes, paragraph 3 by 78 to 23, with 27 abstentions, and paragraph 4 by 70 to 26, with 32 abstentions. The First Committee had likewise approved those paragraphs: paragraph 3 by 73 to 23, with 18 abstentions, and paragraph 4 by 68 to 26, with 23 abstentions.

Introducing the draft, Iraq stated that a 1981 expert group report<sup>(47)</sup> had established that Israel had the technical capability to manufacture nuclear weapons, and there was increasing evidence of the growth of Israel's nuclear military capability and of related collaboration with South Africa.

Explaining its vote, Israel stated that the current text, like its predecessors, discriminated against Israel by singling it out for investigation on a matter in which many other Member States found themselves in the same position; many of the sponsors, including some Arab States, either were not parties to NPT or had not fulfilled their NPT obligations. Further, the draft represented interference by the General Assembly in the affairs of IAEA, involving the Agency in a political matter beyond its mandate and incompatible with its statute. An additional biased element in the text, Israel added, was the request to the Assembly to spend more of the limited United Nations resources on another report and UNIDIR to perform a task serving the political ends of Arab States. The United States shared Israel's views as regards the text's discriminatory condemnation and the implications of the request in paragraph 4, and questioned the need for a new report.

Among those voting in favour of the draft as a whole, Ghana said it was aware of the military and nuclear collaboration between Israel and South Africa. Argentina expressed reservations concerning paragraphs 3 and 4, saying that it could not agree to calling for suspension of scientific co-operation. Similarly, the Philippines abstained on paragraph 4 because the IAEA statute contained specific provisions pertaining to the suspension of scientific co-operation with any member country. Greece abstained in the vote on the paragraph, objecting also to expelling Member States from the United Nations system. Both Cuba, whose positive vote did not affect its position regarding NPT, and the USSR, which supported the thrust of the text, had serious misgivings about paragraph 8, which, they felt, might suggest a departure from the voluntary financing of UNIDIR activities.

The question of Israeli nuclear armament was also taken up in Assembly resolution 39/14, on armed Israeli aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations.

South Asia

In an October 1984 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(48)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that he had been in contact with the States of South Asia with regard to a December 1983 Assembly request<sup>(49)</sup> that he render assistance required to promote a nuclear-weapon-free zone in that region, but there had been no request by those States for his assistance. In the course of those contacts, a view had been expressed that he should continue to be available for that purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/55 by recorded vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981, 37/76 of 9 December 1982 and 38/65 of 15 December 1983 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures which can contribute most effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will strengthen the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Recalling that in the above-mentioned resolutions it called upon the States of the South Asian region, and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as might be interested, to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective,

Further recalling that, in its resolution 3265 B (XXIX), it requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting for the purpose of the consultations mentioned therein and to render such assistance as might be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia, and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as may be interested, to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective;

3. Calls upon those nuclear-weapon States that have not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to extend the necessary co-operation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render such assistance as may be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia".

General Assembly resolution 39/55

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 100-3-42 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/739) by recorded vote (90-2-43), 21 November (meeting 45); draft by Pakistan (A/C.1/39/L.6); agenda item 49.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bhutan, India, Mauritius.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Belize, Benin, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Israel, Italy, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Norway, Poland, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

In explanation of vote, India said it had consistently rejected the proposal for reasons explained in the past; the countries of South Asia did not have a consensus on setting up such a zone, and the annual consideration of such a draft introduced discord to the process of regional co-operation.

Those explaining their affirmative votes or abstentions all expressed support for the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, with some listing requirements for their success. Unanimity on the issue based on close consultations among the countries of the region was stressed by Bangladesh,

Brazil, Indonesia, Japan and Sri Lanka. Sweden observed that the resolution did not enjoy unanimous regional support. For Bangladesh, consensus on the delimitation of the zone was important, and, for Sri Lanka, full recognition of the characteristics of the zone. Indonesia and Japan stressed that the initiatives for such a zone should emanate from the countries of the region, as did the United States which listed as other requirements: arrangements for adequate verification of compliance; non-disturbance of existing security arrangements; and unimpeded exercise of rights recognized under international law.

Brazil said the text did not reflect adequately its concerns regarding the requirements for establishing such a zone, among them a commitment by the nuclear-weapon States to respect the zone's status and to refrain from interfering in the negotiating process. Ghana felt all regions should be encouraged to establish nuclear-weapon-free zones, while Australia, which supported one in the South Pacific region, stated that its abstention in the First Committee should not be taken to imply any lack of support for the concept.

Preparations for the 1985 Review Conference on NPT

After the entry into force on 5 March 1970 of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>(28)</sup> two quinquennial review conferences were held—in 1975 and 1980—and a third was scheduled for 1985.

The preparatory process for the third review conference of the parties to NPT was initiated in 1984, with a Preparatory Committee holding two sessions at Geneva.

Sixty-two States parties participating in the first session (2-6 April), under the chairmanship of Ryukichi Imai (Japan), and 57 States parties attending the second session (1-11 October), under the chairmanship of Milos Vojvoda (Czechoslovakia), discussed questions relating to the holding of the Conference, among them, financing, agenda, rules of procedure, final document(s) and background documentation.

The third and final session of the Preparatory Committee was to be held in 1985.

Cessation of nuclear-weapon tests

In 1984, in contrast to the two preceding years, the Conference on Disarmament was unable even to agree on the establishment of a subsidiary body to consider the cessation of nuclear-weapon tests; in December, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions calling on the Conference to negotiate on a test-ban treaty (39/52, 39/53 and 39/60).

By a letter dated 9 July to the Secretary-General,<sup>(50)</sup> the Permanent Commission for the South Pacific (Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru) transmitted its declaration protesting against the resumption by France, in May, of nuclear explosions on Mururoa Atoll as being detrimental to the interests of the States members of the South-East Pacific Maritime System.

Negotiations for a treaty against nuclear-weapon tests

In 1984, the Conference on Disarmament,<sup>(9)</sup> which had been asked again by the General Assembly in December 1983<sup>(51)</sup> to initiate immediately negotiations on a nuclear-weapon test-ban treaty, discussed, but did not reach consensus on, the mandate of an ad hoc subsidiary body on the topic. Proposals submitted included one each by Mexico,<sup>(52)</sup> a group of socialist States,<sup>(53)</sup> and seven Western countries and Japan,<sup>(54)</sup> and two by the Group of 21—in March<sup>(55)</sup> and in July.<sup>(56)</sup> A majority of members, including the socialist States and the Group of 21, maintained that the Conference should revise the mandate of the subsidiary body so as to enable it actually to negotiate a treaty, while others, mainly Western members, felt the work entrusted to it in the previous sessions,<sup>(57)</sup> covering issues relating to verification and compliance, had not been completed.

On the question of nuclear tests, Sweden submitted a working paper<sup>(58)</sup> containing information from the Swedish Defence Research Institute to the effect that 1,469 nuclear explosions were believed to have been carried out between 1945 and 1983, with an annual average in recent years of 51 explosions, or almost one test a week. Sweden appealed to the Conference to make 1984 the year of the comprehensive test-ban treaty.

Verification

Activities of the Conference on Disarmament. Japan submitted to the Conference on Disarmament<sup>(9)</sup> in 1984 a working paper<sup>(59)</sup> based on a step-by-step approach to a comprehensive test ban, by which underground nuclear-test explosions of a yield currently considered technically verifiable multinationally would be taken as a threshold, and an agreement would be reached on banning test explosions of a yield above that threshold; thereafter, the threshold would be lowered as the verification capability was improved. Other working papers submitted in 1984 included one by Australia,<sup>(60)</sup> in which it proposed principles for the verification of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, and another by the Federal Republic of Germany<sup>(61)</sup> on aspects of modern developments in seismic-event recording techniques.

Expert group. In 1984, the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, with a representative of the World

Meteorological Organization (WMO) participating, held its seventeenth<sup>(62)</sup> and eighteenth<sup>(63)</sup> sessions (Geneva, 27 February–9 March and 30 July–10 August) under the chairmanship of Ola Dahlman (Sweden).

In addition to the Group's progress report on each session, the Conference took note of the Group's third report<sup>(64)</sup> on recent developments in seismograph data processing, containing a number of recommendations for further studies concerning the establishment of a global seismic monitoring system under a future nuclear-test-ban treaty, and a paper<sup>(65)</sup> containing an overview of the procedures for a technical test of seismic data using the WMO Global Telecommunication System, to be conducted later in 1984.

Some Western and other delegations supported the continuation of the Group's efforts, while others, including the USSR, felt the Group could not continue its work in a vacuum and that its future work should be related to a negotiating process on a nuclear-test ban.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December 1984, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions on the cessation of nuclear tests (39/52, 39/53 and 39/60), all on the recommendation of the First Committee.

The Assembly adopted resolution 39/60 by recorded vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 38/72 on the immediate cessation and prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned over the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and the growing threat of nuclear war,

Recalling that over the past thirty years the need for cessation and prohibition of nuclear-weapon testing has been in the focus of attention of the General Assembly,

Reaffirming its conviction that the conclusion of a multilateral treaty on the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests by all States would constitute an indispensable element for the success of efforts to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race and the qualitative improvement of nuclear weapons, and to prevent the expansion of existing nuclear arsenals and the spread of nuclear weapons to additional countries,

Stressing once again that the elaboration of such a treaty is the task of the highest priority and should not be made dependent on the attainment of any other measure in the field of disarmament,

Deeply deploring that the Conference on Disarmament has to date been prevented from carrying out negotiations with a view to reaching agreement on such a treaty,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this subject,

1. Resolutely urges all States, and especially all nuclear-weapon States, to exert maximum efforts and exercise political will for the elaboration and conclusion, without any delay, of a multilateral treaty on the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests by all States;

2. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to proceed promptly to negotiations with a view to elaborating such a treaty as a matter of the highest priority, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives, and, for that purpose, to establish an ad hoc committee with a negotiating mandate;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 39/60 on the immediate cessation and prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests".

General Assembly resolution 39/60

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 123-2-24 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/746) by recorded vote (109-2-24), 26 November (meeting 47); 13-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.18); agenda item 56.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-37, 47, 48; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Bahamas, Belgium, Canada, China, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Haiti, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Spain, Turkey, Zaire.

In explanation of vote, Australia, New Zealand and Samoa, supporting a ban covering all nuclear explosive testing, objected to a treaty prohibiting nuclear-weapon tests only; they also found difficulty with other aspects of the text, in particular its failure to deal with the verification question. Similarly, Fiji and Ireland did not accept that a ban should be limited to nuclear-weapon tests. The United Kingdom also saw no possibility of successful negotiation on a comprehensive test ban unless the issue of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes was adequately dealt with.

Zambia stressed the need for a political decision and an end to what it felt was unproductive discussion on verification.

On 12 December, the Assembly also adopted resolution 39/52 by recorded vote.

Cessation of all test explosions of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, which has been examined for more than twenty-five years and on which the General Assembly has adopted nearly fifty resolutions, is a basic objective of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament, to the attainment of which it has repeatedly assigned the highest priority,

Stressing that on seven different occasions it has condemned such tests in the strongest terms and that, since 1974, it has stated its conviction that the continuance of nuclear-weapon testing will intensify the arms race, thus increasing the danger of nuclear war,

Convinced that the existing means of verification are adequate to ensure compliance with a nuclear-test ban and that the alleged absence of such means of verification is nothing but an excuse for further development and refinement of nuclear weapons,

Reiterating the assertion made in several previous resolutions that, whatever may be the differences on the question of verification, there is no valid reason for delaying the conclusion of an agreement on a comprehensive test ban,

Recalling that since 1972 the Secretary-General has declared that all the technical and scientific aspects of the problem have been so fully explored that only a political decision is now necessary in order to achieve final agreement, that when the existing means of verification are taken into account it is difficult to understand further delay in achieving agreement on an underground-test ban, and that the potential risks of continuing underground nuclear-weapon tests would far outweigh any possible risks from ending such tests,

Bearing in mind that the three nuclear-weapon States which act as depositaries of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water in the report they submitted on 30 July 1980 to the Committee on Disarmament, after four years of trilateral negotiations, stated, inter alia, that they were "mindful of the great value for all mankind that the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon-test explosions in all environments will have" as well as "conscious of the important responsibility placed upon them to find solutions to the remaining problems", adding furthermore that they were determined to exert their best efforts and necessary will and persistence "to bring the negotiations to an early and successful conclusion",

Taking into account that the same three nuclear-weapon States undertook twenty years ago, in the above-mentioned Treaty, to seek the achievement of the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and that such an undertaking was explicitly reiterated in 1968 in the preamble to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, article VI of which further embodies their solemn and legally binding commitment to take effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear-arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Bearing in mind the growing negative influence that the total lack of compliance with those undertakings had on both the first and the second Review Conferences of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, held at Geneva from 5 to 30 May 1975 and from 11 August to 7 September 1980, respectively,

Convinced that the maintenance of such a situation would not augur well for the third review conference of that Treaty, which is to take place from 22 April to 3 May 1985, and even for the future of the Treaty itself,

Deploring that, due to the persistent obstruction of a very small number of its members, the Conference on Disarmament has been unable to initiate multilateral negotiation of a treaty for the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests, as it was specifically requested to do in General Assembly resolution 38/62 of 15 December 1983,

Noting that the Conference on Disarmament has already received various concrete proposals on this question, including a complete draft for the eventual text of the treaty as a whole,

1. Reiterates, for the eighth time, its strongest condemnation of all nuclear-weapon tests;

2. Reiterates also once again its grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing continues unabated, against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States;

3. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the highest priority;

4. Reaffirms also its conviction that such a treaty would constitute a contribution of the utmost importance to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and an indispensable element for the success of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, since it is only through the fulfilment of the obligations under the Treaty that its three depositary Powers may expect all other parties to comply likewise with their respective obligations;

5. Urges once more the three depositary Powers of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to abide strictly by their undertakings to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to expedite negotiations to this end;

6. Urges also all States that have not yet done so to adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and, meanwhile, to refrain from testing in the environments covered by that Treaty;

7. Reiterates its appeal to all States members of the Conference on Disarmament to initiate immediately the multilateral negotiation of a treaty for the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests and to exert their best endeavours in order that the Conference may transmit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session the complete draft of such a treaty;

8. Calls upon the States depositaries of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, by virtue of their special responsibilities under those two Treaties and as a provisional measure, to bring to a halt without delay all nuclear-test explosions, either through a trilaterally agreed moratorium or through three unilateral moratoria;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Cessation of all test explosions of nuclear weapons".

Abstaining: Australia, Bahamas, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, Canada, China, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, India, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Spain, Turkey.

Introducing the draft, Mexico said it drew attention, among other things, to the adequacy of existing verification measures and to the discrepancy between the statements and the recent attitude of two of the nuclear-weapon States depositaries of the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water,<sup>(66)</sup> also known as the partial test-ban Treaty.

Australia, New Zealand and Samoa could not endorse the banning of nuclear-weapon tests only or a moratorium on testing by just three nuclear-weapon States; Fiji and Ireland also felt that a future treaty should embrace all nuclear-test explosions. India regarded as important an immediate suspension of testing by all nuclear-weapon States. Australia felt it inappropriate in the current situation to suggest resumption of the trilateral negotiations, and the United Kingdom could not accept the proposed moratorium, or the failure to address how nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes should be dealt with in a comprehensive test ban. Samoa found the verification aspects of the text unsatisfactory, as did Belgium, which questioned why those which regarded that problem as completely resolved had not supported the approach proposed by Japan<sup>(59)</sup> in the Conference on Disarmament (see p. 47). Further, Belgium considered the fifth preambular paragraph to be irrelevant, contending that the Secretary-General did not possess the scientific expertise to state an opinion on that subject.

Ireland disagreed that a comprehensive test ban was indispensable to the success of NPT,<sup>(28)</sup> and Brazil and India abstained because of the linkage in the text between a ban and NPT. Sharing those reservations, New Zealand saw in the formulation of the appeal to the Conference on Disarmament an indication that the draft's sponsors saw little prospect of practical progress.

Argentina, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the USSR and Zambia endorsed the thrust of the draft, with Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and the USSR agreeing specifically with the text's proposed moratorium.

Argentina, Chile and Zambia also had reservations about the references to NPT in the text.

Also on 12 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/53 by recorded vote.

Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Convinced of the urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty capable of attracting the widest possible international support and adherence,

Reaffirming its conviction that an end to all nuclear testing by all States in all environments for all time would be a major step towards ending the qualitative improvement, development and proliferation of nuclear weapons, a means of relieving the deep apprehension concerning the harmful consequences of radioactive contamination for the health of present and future generations and a measure of the utmost importance in bringing the nuclear-arms race to an end,

Recalling that the parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water undertook not to carry out any nuclear-weapon-test explosion, or any other nuclear explosion, in the environments covered by that Treaty, and that in that Treaty the parties expressed their determination to continue negotiations to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time,

Recalling also that the parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons recalled the determination expressed by the parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water in its preamble to seek to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to continue negotiations to this end, declaring their intention to achieve at the earliest possible date the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and to undertake effective measures in the direction of nuclear disarmament,

Recalling further its previous resolutions on this subject,

Taking into account that part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament concerning consideration of the item entitled "Nuclear-test ban" during its session in 1984,

Also taking into account relevant proposals and initiatives put forward in the Conference on Disarmament during its session in 1984,

Expressing its profound regret that, in spite of strenuous efforts, the Conference on Disarmament was unable to reach agreement on the re-establishment at its session in 1984 of an Ad Hoc Committee under item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear-test ban",

Recognizing the important role of the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Recognizing the importance to such a treaty of the work on a global seismic detection network, assigned by the Conference on Disarmament to the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events,

Recalling paragraph 31 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, relating to verification of disarmament and arms control agreements, which stated that the form and modalities of the verification to be provided for in any specific agreement depend on, and should be determined by, the purposes, scope and nature of the agreement,

1. Reiterates its profound concern that, despite the express wishes of the majority of Member States, nuclear testing continues;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States in all environments for all time is a matter of greatest importance;

3. Expresses the conviction that such a treaty would constitute a vital element for the success of efforts to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race and the qualitative improvement of nuclear weapons, and to prevent the expansion of existing nuclear arsenals and the spread of nuclear weapons to additional countries;

4. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to establish at the beginning of its session in 1985 an Ad Hoc Committee under item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear-test ban" and

(a) To resume immediately its substantive work relating to a comprehensive test ban, including the issue of scope as well as those of verification and compliance, with a view to the negotiation of a treaty on the subject;

(b) Taking into account the work previously performed by and the results of the technical test being conducted by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, to take steps for the establishment as soon as possible of an international seismic monitoring network:

- (i) to monitor nuclear explosions;
- (ii) to determine the capabilities of such a network for monitoring compliance with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(c) To initiate detailed investigation of other measures to monitor and verify compliance with such a treaty, including an international network to monitor atmospheric radioactivity;

5. Urges all members of the Conference on Disarmament, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, to co-operate within the Conference in fulfilling these tasks;

6. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to report on progress to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty".

General Assembly resolution 39/53

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 124-0-24 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/737) by recorded vote (109-0-26), 26 November (meeting 47); 25-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.71); agenda item 47.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Angola, Argentina, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Viet Nam.

Prior to adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraph 4 by a recorded vote of 80 to 19, with 41 abstentions. The First Committee had approved that paragraph by a recorded vote, requested by the USSR, of 71 to 18, with 35 abstentions.

Introducing the draft, Australia said paragraph 4 listed the practical steps required to remove the remaining obstacles to a treaty; it was disturbed that the proposals calling for immediate negotiations tended to cover nuclear-weapon tests only, rather than all nuclear tests.

In explanation of vote, the USSR held that the paragraph might be used by the United States and others to block talks on drafting a treaty; that paragraph, it asserted, was aimed at perpetuating an abnormal situation where a verification system was proposed when negotiations were blocked. Similarly, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic and Poland felt the paragraph over-emphasized the verification issue in disregard of the majority view that the technical prerequisites for verification already existed and the details should be settled in the negotiating process.

Argentina and Mexico, while agreeing with many elements of the text, could not accept its failure to appeal to all members of the Conference on Disarmament to initiate the negotiation of a treaty immediately. The Ukrainian SSR felt the proposed mandate would make the subsidiary body counter-productive. Cuba viewed paragraph 4 as promoting paralysis. India viewed the draft as seeking to modify the well-defined objective of a treaty aimed at complete cessation of the testing of nuclear weapons by all States in all environments for all time. For Poland, the eighth preambular paragraph suggested blaming the impasse on all members of the Conference.

Bulgaria said the text allowed for a continuation of testing by those blocking work on the question, over-emphasized the verification issue and put in a wrong perspective the work of the seismic expert group. Czechoslovakia also believed the importance of technical aspects of verification had been over-emphasized.

Chile, Ecuador, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia abstained on paragraph 4 but supported the text as a whole, because of the importance they attached to negotiating a substantive agreement. Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia doubted the practicability of implementing paragraph 4 (b) and (c), with the latter adding that the Conference on Disarmament was not the body within whose framework an international seismic monitoring network should be established. Chile added that academic debates on verification and other matters should not be allowed to block speedy achievement of a final agreement.

The United Kingdom and the United States, which voted for paragraph 4, stressed that verification and other problems relating to security considerations had to be resolved before negotiations could hold any prospect of being productive; while committed to achieving a comprehensive test ban, the United States did not agree that the issue was as urgent as reducing the existing arsenals of weapons.

Belgium, Brazil and Zambia, voting affirmatively in both votes, appreciated the intention of the sponsors, although Zambia regretted the mention of NPT. Belgium particularly favoured paragraph 4 as setting forth the kind of scientific and technical work necessary for credible international verification.

Expressing the hope that the Conference on Disarmament would agree at its 1985 session to initiate negotiations, Nigeria said its affirmative vote on the text did not indicate an endorsement of paragraph 4.

Speaking on all three resolutions on a nuclear-test ban, France reiterated that a test ban should be part of an effective nuclear disarmament process, as stated in paragraph 51 of the 1978 Final Document;<sup>(13)</sup> therefore, it could not associate itself with measures to reduce nuclear weapons or participate in drawing up a test-ban treaty until the two major nuclear Powers, through reductions, made it possible for France to limit its own nuclear capabilities, including its testing.

Fissionable material for weapons purposes

As in previous years, the General Assembly discussed in 1984, under the agenda item on general and complete disarmament, the question of prohibiting the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/151 H by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/91 H of 16 December 1978, 34/87 D of 11 December 1979, 35/156 H of 12 December 1980, 36/97 G of 9 December 1981, 37/99 E of 13 December 1982 and 38/188 E of 20 December 1983, in which it requested the Committee on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to consider urgently the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration,

Noting that the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament for 1984 included the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects" and that the Conference's programme of work for both parts of its session held in 1984 contained the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament",

Recalling the proposals and statements made in the Conference on Disarmament on those items,

Considering that the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear arms race,

Considering that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices also would be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

Requests the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

General Assembly resolution 39/151 H

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 140-0-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/755) by recorded vote (125-1-9), 20 November (meeting 44); 19-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.42); agenda item 65 (f).

Sponsors: Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Philippines, Romania, Singapore, Sweden, Uruguay.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 44; plenary 102.

Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Argentina, Brazil, China, France, India, Mozambique, United Kingdom, United States.

Explaining its vote, India considered the approach partial and inconsistent with the goals set out in the 1978 Final Document;<sup>(13)</sup> it remained convinced of the need for a simultaneous stoppage of the production of nuclear weapons and of all fissionable material for weapons purposes, adding that all States would then have no reason not to accept the same system of equitable and non-discriminatory safeguards on all their nuclear facilities.

The USSR said the question should be regarded as a step towards a nuclear-weapons freeze and nuclear disarmament; it understood the word "work" in the text to mean practical negotiations.

The Assembly's call for stopping the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes was also contained in resolutions 39/63 C and G, on a nuclear-weapons freeze, and 39/148 K, on cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament.

Strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States

The General Assembly, in two 1984 resolutions (39/57 and 39/58), again called for negotiations leading to conclusion of international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons—arrangements also known as negative security assurances.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In 1984, the Conference on Disarmament<sup>(9)</sup> again considered an agenda item on negative security assurances, from 26 to 30 March and from 23 to 27 July. Discussion also took place in an ad hoc subsidiary body, set up in 1979 and re-established on 28 February 1984. That body, subsequently designated as an Ad Hoc Committee, held 11 meetings between 16 July and 15 August under the chairmanship of Borislav Konstantinov (Bulgaria).

In a joint statement submitted to the Conference in June,<sup>(67)</sup> the Group of 21 expressed regret that negotiations on the topic had reached an impasse because several nuclear-weapon States refused to revise their existing unilateral declarations; the Group urged those States to allow the Ad Hoc Committee to elaborate a common formula acceptable to all, to be included in an international instrument as previously called for. Among other documents submitted were one by the USSR on "Not to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances against non-nuclear countries, in whose territory there are no such weapons"<sup>(68)</sup> and another by a group of socialist countries.<sup>(18)</sup>

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Ad Hoc Committee reaffirmed the need for effective security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States and stated that agreement could not be reached due to specific difficulties relating to differing perceptions of security interests and the complexity of the issues. It recommended to the Conference that ways should be explored to overcome the difficulties, that an ad hoc committee be re-established in 1985 and that consultations take place to determine the most appropriate course of action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted two resolutions on negative security assurances.

On 12 December, it adopted resolution 39/57 by recorded vote.

Conclusion of an international convention on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced of the need to take effective measures for the strengthening of the security of States and prompted by the desire shared by all nations to eliminate war and prevent nuclear conflagration,

Taking into account the principle of non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and reaffirmed in a number of United Nations declarations and resolutions,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of such weapons,

Noting with satisfaction the determination of non-nuclear-weapon States in various parts of the world to prevent nuclear weapons from being introduced into their territories and to ensure the complete absence of such weapons in their respective regions, including through the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned, and being anxious to encourage and contribute to the attainment of this objective,

Concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race having entered a qualitatively new stage, and the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons and the danger of nuclear war,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its numerous resolutions on this subject as well as the relevant part of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament, submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Noting that the Conference on Disarmament considered in 1984 the item entitled "Effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons" and the work done by its Ad Hoc Committee on this item, as reflected in the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Recalling the proposals submitted on this subject to the General Assembly and in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention, and the widespread international support for the conclusion of such a convention,

Wishing to promote an early and successful completion of the negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament aimed at the elaboration of a convention on the item,

Further noting that the idea of interim arrangements as a first step towards the conclusion of such a convention has also been considered in the Conference on Disarmament,

Welcoming once again the solemn declaration made by some nuclear-weapon States concerning non-first-use of nuclear weapons, and convinced that, if all nuclear-weapon States were to assume obligations not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, that would be tantamount, in practice, to banning the use of nuclear weapons against all States, including all non-nuclear-weapon States,

Considering that, in the search for a solution to the problem of security assurances, priority should be given to the legitimate security concerns of the non-nuclear-weapon States which, by virtue of their forgoing the nuclear option and of not allowing nuclear weapons to be stationed on their territories, have every right to expect to be most effectively guaranteed against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Being aware that unconditional guarantees by all nuclear-weapon States not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances against the non-nuclear-weapon States having no nuclear weapons on their territories should constitute an integral element of a mandatory system of norms regulating the relations between the nuclear-weapon States, which bear the primary responsibility for preventing a nuclear war, thus sparing mankind from its devastating consequences,

1. Reaffirms once again the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there was once again no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention on this subject, although the difficulties involved were also pointed out;

3. Expresses its regret that specific difficulties related to differing perceptions of security interests of some nuclear-weapon States and non-nuclear-weapon States have once again prevented the Conference on Disarmament from making substantive progress towards the achievement of an agreement;

4. Considers that the Conference on Disarmament should continue to explore ways and means of overcoming the difficulties encountered in the negotiations to reach an appropriate agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue the negotiations, as recommended in the report on its 1984 session, with a view to concluding an international instrument of a legally binding character to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Conclusion of an international convention on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

General Assembly resolution 39/57

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 104-19-20 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/741) by recorded vote (88-19-16), 21 November (meeting 45); 10-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.21); agenda item 51.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Mongolia, USSR, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 45; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Brazil, Burma, China, Colombia, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Honduras, India, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Malaysia, Paraguay, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sweden, Uruguay, Zaire.

Explaining its vote, the Federal Republic of Germany said the call emanating from the USSR for a nuclear non-first-use commitment was directed against the security of Western States which had pledged non-use of weapons except in the case of armed attack; further, that concept provided no incentives to deal with existing nuclear arsenals and preserved them at their current level. It added that the text made no reference to conventional wars, whereas the United Nations Charter condemned all wars; declaratory policy needed confirmation through verifiable action. Japan considered the text lacking in objectivity and balance and failing to refer to a common approach acceptable to all.

Expressing opposition to all wars, Colombia said it would have welcomed the draft if the non-first-use concept also covered conventional weapons. For Ireland, the text did not take into account the possibility of different approaches to achieving international arrangements; by clearly favouring a convention, the text implied further obligations for non-nuclear-weapon States, a requirement which it believed was inappropriate in the case of States already party to NPT. Sweden expressed similar reservations.

Indonesia, although agreeing with the general thrust of the text, would have abstained, had a separate vote been taken, on the final preambular paragraph. While believing that the declarations need not be identical, Liberia said it was more interested in commitments than in declarations, because the latter could be abrogated by any one party.

Argentina, Brazil and India explained their abstentions on the same grounds as on the draft which became resolution 39/58 (see p. 56), as did Chile and the German Democratic Republic which voted in favour.

Also on 12 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/58 by recorded vote.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Deeply concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Taking into account the principle of the non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned about the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 3261 G (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 31/189 C of 21 December 1976,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Recalling its resolutions 33/72 B of 14 December 1978, 34/85 of 11 December 1979, 35/155 of 12 December 1980, 36/95 of 9 December 1981, 37/81 of 9 December 1982 and 38/68 of 15 December 1983,

Further recalling paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Noting the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note of the decision of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the final declaration of the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Dhaka from 6 to 11 December 1983, calling upon the Committee on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Further noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate the political will necessary to reach agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula which could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including in particular those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

General Assembly resolution 39/58

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 146-0-4 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/742) by recorded vote (129-0-5), 21 November (meeting 45); draft by Pakistan (A/C.1/39/L.7); agenda item 52.

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 45; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Argentina, Brazil, India, United States.

Introducing the draft, Pakistan asserted that unilateral declarations could not be considered an acceptable substitute for an international agreement of a binding character.

In explanation of vote, Brazil stated that the subject continued to be approached from the narrow point of view of the security perceptions of the nuclear Powers; such a parochial view of reality presupposed a recognition of the legitimacy of the exclusive possession of nuclear weapons by the current nuclear Powers which, with one exception, had attached qualifications to their unilateral declarations; it stood by the Group of 21 statement, according to which no progress on the question could be achieved as long as the nuclear-weapon Powers maintained their attitudes and policies. Argentina and India said the most credible security guarantees were the complete elimination of nuclear weapons. Argentina said declarations, which were, with a single exception, difficult to understand with regard to the scope of applicability, amounted to lack of assurances, because they were unverifiable. India added that as long as the nuclear-weapon States possessed such arsenals and predicated their security policies on their use, there was little point in the non-nuclear-weapon States seeking security assurances from them.

The German Democratic Republic stressed the urgency of concluding international arrangements, saying that, in their absence, some argued for the permissibility of using nuclear weapons. Czechoslovakia said the possibility of the use of nuclear weapons played a role in Western strategic plans; it emphasized that it favoured measures designed to decrease international tension. While considering the text to be relatively balanced and objective, Japan had some reservations as regards its reference to a specific modality for assurances which, Japan felt, prejudged the work of the Conference on Disarmament. Despite reservations about the idea of an international convention, Sweden supported the text because it also gave consideration to other proposals aimed at effective negative security assurances. Chile supported proposals that gave effective content to the obligation of nuclear-weapon States towards those that had rejected the nuclear option.

Other weapons of mass destruction

Chemical and biological warfare

In 1984, fundamental disagreements persisted on a number of issues relating to an envisaged convention banning chemical and biological weapons, and the General Assembly adopted three resolutions (39/65 A-C) in December, all urging the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its negotiations on such a convention.

A Group of Consultant Experts submitted to the Assembly a finalized report on procedures for investigating violations of the 1925 Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare. In resolution 39/65 D, the Assembly agreed to the holding, in 1986, of a second conference to review the implementation of the 1971 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction.

Implementation of the 1925 Protocol

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1984 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted, in an annex, the final report by the Group of Consultant Experts which, in pursuance of a 1982 Assembly resolution,<sup>(2)</sup> had devised procedures for investigating possible violation of the 1925 Geneva Protocol—which prohibits the use in war of asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases and of all analogous liquids, materials or devices, as well as of bacteriological methods of warfare. Also annexed to the report were the replies of three additional Governments (Canada, Portugal, Spain) to his 1983 request<sup>(3)</sup> for the names of qualified experts and laboratories whose services would be available at short notice to investigate alleged uses of chemical weapons.

The Group—experts from Austria, Ecuador, Egypt, France, Sweden and the United States, acting in their personal capacities—held two sessions in 1984 (Geneva, 24 April–4 May; New York, 13–24 August), as in 1983. In addition to reviewing and modifying its previous report<sup>(3)</sup> in the light of developments, the Group concentrated, among other things, on the systematic organization and assembly of the documentation relevant to identifying signs and symptoms associated with the use of chemical agents. It also focused on procedures related to security, logistic support and transportation, and included in its report a new section dealing with administrative support for implementing and updating the procedures.

Some of the scientific literature and other relevant data available to the Group were organized in three appendices to its report, covering both general and specific references concerning health aspects of potential chemical and biological warfare agents and lists of some such agents. Included among seven other appendices were: an illustrative list of items required for an investigation; a questionnaire for interviews; and model clauses for inclusion in letters—relating to security, logistic support, transportation and laboratory analysis—to be exchanged between the United Nations and States involved in the conduct of an investigation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/98 D of 13 December 1982, and particularly paragraph 7, in which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified consultant experts, to devise procedures for the investigation of information concerning activities that may constitute a violation of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, or of the relevant rules of customary international law and to assemble and organize systematically documentation relating to the identification of signs and symptoms associated with the use of agents covered by the 1925 Geneva Protocol,

Recognizing that the use of such agents in war is universally condemned,

Underlining the importance of impartially and rapidly ascertaining, through an appropriate international procedure as provided for in resolution 37/98 D, facts that may constitute a violation of the provisions of the Geneva Protocol or of the relevant rules of customary international law,

Recalling its resolution 38/187 C of 20 December 1983, in which it took note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to paragraph 7 of resolution 37/98 D and requested him to complete during 1984, with the assistance of the Group of Consultant Experts established by him, the task entrusted to him under the terms of paragraph 7 of resolution 37/98 D, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session,

1. Takes note of the report by the Secretary-General, to which is annexed the report of the Group of Consultant Experts established by him concerning the implementation of the provisions of paragraph 7 of resolution 37/98 D and of resolution 38/187 C;

2. Notes with satisfaction that, with the submission of the report of the Group of Consultant Experts, the provisions for the implementation of resolution 37/98 D are completed.

General Assembly resolution 39/65 E

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 87-18-30 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/754) by recorded vote (83-17-30), 21 November (meeting 46); 13-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.60); agenda item 64.

Sponsors: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, France, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom, Uruguay.
Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 39, 46; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Zambia.

Against: Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Mozambique, Poland, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

Indonesia, joined by many others explaining their votes, asserted that the early elaboration of a comprehensive convention in the Conference on Disarmament would provide the most effective guarantee of non-use of the weapons in question (see also p. 59). Poland, speaking on behalf of the Eastern European States and Mongolia, stressed that no action should be taken which could complicate the process of drafting a convention; it was joined by Brazil, Chile and the Lao People's Democratic Republic in stating that the draft constituted an attempt to undermine and illegally revise the 1925 Geneva Protocol by a United Nations resolution with the participation of non-parties to the instrument, in violation of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.<sup>(4)</sup> The USSR added that the text attempted to impose on the Secretary-General what it considered illegal functions which he could not appropriately carry out under the United Nations Charter. Cuba and Viet Nam pointed out that they had consistently opposed drafts of the kind in question.

Finland held that the lack of verification provisions in the Geneva Protocol must be corrected in the future ban on chemical weapons, either by parties to the Protocol or in the context of negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament. Yugoslavia felt that an effective system of verification should aim at building confidence and promoting co-operation among signatories through universal, not selective, application.

On the other hand, Belgium said the draft attempted to organize the vigilance of the international community with regard to the Protocol and customary international law. Bangladesh said it supported the draft for the same reason it had voted in favour of those on prohibiting chemical weapons (see p. 60).

Second Review Conference of the parties to the biological weapons Convention

In 1984, the General Assembly agreed to the holding in 1986 of a second Review Conference of the Parties to the 1971 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction.<sup>(5)</sup> The first Review Conference, held in 1980,<sup>(6)</sup> had decided that a second would be held at Geneva sometime between 1985 and 1990, at the request of a majority of parties to the Convention. At the end of 1984, 100 States were parties to that instrument.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

During the First Committee's discussion of the topic, Norway informed the Committee that, through a note dated 20 July to the depositary Governments, it had proposed the holding of a second review conference in 1986 and that, as of 29 October 1984, 58 of the 100 States parties to the Convention had supported the proposal; an informal meeting of the States parties (New York, 6 November) had recommended that the preparatory committee of the review conference hold one session in April/May 1986.

On 12 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/65 D without vote.

Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2826(XXVI) of 16 December 1971 in which it commended the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, and expressed the hope for the widest possible adherence to the Convention,

Noting that, in accordance with the provisions of article XII of the Convention, the first Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction was held at Geneva from 3 to 21 March 1980,

Bearing in mind that the Review Conference decided, in its Final Declaration, that a second Review Conference should be held at Geneva at the request of a majority of States parties not earlier than 1985 and, in any case, not later than 1990,

Recalling its resolution 35/144 A of 12 December 1980, in which it welcomed the Final Declaration of the Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention,

1. Notes that, at the request of a majority of States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, a second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention will be held in 1986, and that, following appropriate consultations, a preparatory committee is to be established prior to the holding of the Review Conference;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services, including summary records, as may be required for the second Review Conference and its preparation.

Draft convention on chemical weapons

Activities of the Conference on Disarmament. Negotiations on a convention banning chemical weapons continued in 1984 in the Conference on Disarmament,<sup>(7)</sup> which considered the question from 12 to 16 March and from 9 to 13 July.

In addition to the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons (16 January–6 February 1984),<sup>(8)</sup> which met as agreed by the Committee on Disarmament—the predecessor to the Conference—in 1983,<sup>(9)</sup> the Conference received a large number of proposals during the year.

China put forward its proposals on major elements of a future chemical weapons convention,<sup>(10)</sup> in which it asserted, among other things, that the countries possessing such weapons should first destroy the most toxic and dangerous in their arsenals.

The Federal Republic of Germany submitted three papers—prohibition of transfer and permitted transfers,<sup>(11)</sup> ban on use and the right of withdrawal in a future convention<sup>(12)</sup> and verification of destruction.<sup>(13)</sup> It asserted that all technological prerequisites existed for verifying the destruction and that only a continuous monitoring system could guarantee effective verification.

France, in its proposal on eliminating stocks and production facilities,<sup>(14)</sup> suggested that States parties to a convention should complete such endeavours within 10 years of the convention's entry into force; international on-site inspection would verify the destruction process.

Iran put forward proposals on the general provisions of a convention,<sup>(15)</sup> in which the use of chemical weapons would constitute a war crime.

The Netherlands proposal on size and structure of a chemical disarmament inspectorate<sup>(16)</sup> concluded that a future international inspectorate would be relatively limited in size.

A group of socialist States submitted two documents—improved effectiveness of the work of the Conference on Disarmament in prohibiting chemical weapons,<sup>(17)</sup> containing suggestions for formulating the text of a convention; and the organization and functioning of a consultative committee,<sup>(18)</sup> for ensuring adherence to the convention.

The United Kingdom submitted two documents. One, on a chemical weapons convention: verification and compliance—the challenge element,<sup>(19)</sup> dealt with initiating investigation, in addition to mandatory routine on-site inspection, following a challenge, in order to maintain confidence in a convention. A second, on verification of non-production of chemical weapons,<sup>(20)</sup> dealt with identification of compounds that should be subject to declarations and monitoring, and proposed a classification of compounds according to risk in terms of biological hazard and of threat to the convention.

The United States submitted a text of a draft convention,<sup>(21)</sup> which included a verification proposal based on what were termed open invitation inspections, by which States parties would enter into a mutual obligation to open for international inspection on short notice all their military, government-owned or -controlled facilities. Subsequently, the United States submitted a working paper on a declaration and interim monitoring of stockpiles.<sup>(22)</sup>

Yugoslavia's proposal on national verification measures<sup>(23)</sup> dealt with co-operation between a consultative committee, an international team of experts and a national authority.

Before the beginning of the 1984 session, Sweden submitted two documents, on the verification of the destruction of stockpiles<sup>(24)</sup> and the prohibition of military preparations for use of chemical weapons.<sup>(25)</sup> Denmark,<sup>(26)</sup> Finland<sup>(27)</sup> and Norway<sup>(28)</sup>—which were not members of the Conference—also submitted documents dealing with verification aspects.

Also before the Conference was a 23 February letter from Czechoslovakia, transmitting a proposal made in January by the member States of the Warsaw Treaty Organization to those of NATO on the convening of a meeting in 1984 to exchange views on freeing Europe of chemical weapons.<sup>(29)</sup>

The Conference re-established on 28 February a subsidiary body, subsequently designated as the Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, to elaborate and negotiate a convention. Under the chairmanship of Rolf Ekéus (Sweden), the Committee held 22 meetings between 29 February and 28 August; in addition, the Chairman held a number of informal consultations.

The Committee set up three working groups to deal with specific spheres of the convention: Working Group A, on scope and definitions; Working Group B, on elimination of stocks and facilities; and Working Group C, on compliance. The issues of the prohibition of use of chemical weapons and the structure of the convention were dealt with directly by the Committee Chairman with the assistance of a number of delegations.

The report of the Ad Hoc Committee—later incorporated into the Conference's report to the General Assembly<sup>(7)</sup>—contained three annexes. Annex I reflected the results of preliminary drafting on some provisions of the future convention, based on the results achieved in the Working Groups and the Chairman's proposals. Annex II contained the reports of the Chairmen of the three Working Groups. Annex III contained the texts of the draft convention proposed by the United States,<sup>(21)</sup> the working paper by the socialist States on the consultative committee<sup>(18)</sup> and a 1982 USSR proposal on the basic provisions of a convention.<sup>(30)</sup>

The preliminary structure of the convention, as contained in Annex I of the Ad Hoc Committee's report, consisted of: a preamble; general provisions on scope; definitions and criteria; declarations; measures on chemical weapons; measures on production facilities; permitted activities; national implementation measures; consultative committee; consultations, co-operation and fact-finding; assistance; economic and technological development; relation to other international agreements; amendments; duration, withdrawal; signature, ratification, entry into force; languages; and annexes and other documents. It was understood that the texts reproduced in the annex did not contain all positions or reflect all proposals regarding the placement of provisions; in the texts, differing views appeared within brackets in cases where alternative formulations were suggested.

The Conference on Disarmament adopted the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee that further negotiation and drafting of a convention should be based on the contents of annexes I and II, together with other relevant current and future documents of the Conference. It also agreed that the Committee resume its work between 14 January and 1 February 1985 and deal with, among other things, the issues of permitted activities and verification on challenge; that the Committee be re-established at the beginning of the 1985 session of the Conference; and that a decision be taken in the first part of that session on inter-session work, so that the period between September 1985 and January 1986 would be more fully utilized for negotiations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In 1984, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted three resolutions on the prohibition of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, in each of which it urged the Conference on Disarmament to speed up its negotiations on a multilateral convention to that end.

On 12 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/65 A by recorded vote.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the urgent necessity of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Noting that it has been reported that such weapons have been used,

Noting also international efforts under way to strengthen relevant international prohibitions, including efforts to develop appropriate fact-finding mechanisms,

Rededicating its efforts to protect mankind from chemical and biological warfare,

1. Calls for strict observance of existing international obligations regarding prohibitions on chemical and biological weapons and condemns actions that contravene them;

2. Welcomes the ongoing efforts to ensure the most effective prohibitions possible on chemical and biological weapons;

3. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to accelerate its negotiations on a multilateral convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons and on their destruction.

A number of delegations explained their votes. Cuba said the composition of fact-finding mechanisms—mentioned in the text and being promoted by some in the Conference on Disarmament—discriminated against the non-aligned countries; further, it believed the text tried to conceal, by referring to chemical warfare, the need for an explicit prohibition of the use of chemical weapons. Viet Nam felt the text aimed at whitewashing the chemical warfare conducted in that country by the United States and at covering the production of new kinds of chemical weapons, such as binary weapons. The USSR considered the draft an example of the policy of confrontation. The Lao People's Democratic Republic felt the convention being considered in the Conference on Disarmament would offer the most effective guarantee of the non-use of chemical weapons.

Yugoslavia saw the text as a continuation of an action it had not supported in previous years. Brazil understood that the mention of efforts to strengthen relevant international prohibitions referred specifically to the ongoing Conference negotiations on a convention, which was expected to reinforce the 1925 Geneva Protocol. Similarly, Indonesia supported the kind of comprehensive convention that was being elaborated.

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/65 B by recorded vote.

Prohibition of chemical and bacteriological weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 75 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which states that the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and their destruction represents one of the most urgent measures of disarmament,

Referring to the unanimous and categorical reaffirmation by all Member States at the twelfth special session of the General Assembly of the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Convinced of the need for the earliest conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, which would significantly contribute to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Recalling its resolutions 36/96 B of 9 December 1981, 37/98 A of 13 December 1982 and 38/187 A of 20 December 1983,

Expressing profound concern at the intended production and deployment of binary chemical weapons,

Taking into consideration the decision by the Conference on Disarmament on the mandate for the Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, as well as the work of this Committee during the session of the Conference in 1984,

Deeming it desirable for States to refrain from taking any action that could delay or further complicate negotiations and to display a constructive approach to such negotiations and the political will to reach an early agreement on the chemical weapons convention,

Aware that the qualitative improvement and development of chemical weapons complicate ongoing negotiations on the prohibition of chemical weapons,

Taking note of proposals on the creation of chemical-weapon-free zones aimed at facilitating the complete prohibition of chemical weapons,

1. Reaffirms the necessity of the speediest elaboration and conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

2. Appeals to all States to facilitate in every possible way the conclusion of such a convention;

3. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to intensify the negotiations in the Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons with a view to achieving accord on a chemical weapons convention at the earliest possible date and, for this purpose, to proceed immediately to drafting such a convention for submission to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

4. Reaffirms its call to all States to conduct serious negotiations in good faith and to refrain from any action that could impede negotiations on the prohibition of chemical weapons and specifically to refrain from the production and deployment of binary and other new types of chemical weapons, as well as from stationing chemical weapons on the territory of other States.

Approved by First Committee (A/39/754) by recorded vote (75-1-51), 21 November (meeting 46); 13-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.15); agenda item 64.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Belgium, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Finland, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Paraguay, Philippines, Portugal, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zaire.

Explaining its vote, Belgium said it shared the principles contained in paragraphs 1 and 3 but did not approve paragraph 4, which, in its view, made a pernicious distinction between bad chemical binary weapons which the United States was contemplating and good ones which the USSR was supposed to be producing. Brazil objected to the mention of chemical-weapon-free zones and the singling out of specific types of chemical weapons as matters of special concern. Sharing that view, Australia added that the text made no mention of including a ban on use in the scope of a future convention. Along the same vein, the Netherlands felt that the USSR had failed to match the restraint it believed the United States had shown on chemical weapons. Democratic Kampuchea abstained because one of the sponsors of the text, it asserted, had used such weapons in its territory.

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/65 C without vote.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and to their destruction,

Reaffirming the urgent necessity of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament, which incorporates, inter alia, the report of its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons,

Considering it necessary that all efforts be exerted for the continuation and successful conclusion of negotiations on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

2. Expresses its regret and concern that an agreement on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction has not yet been elaborated;

3. Urges again the Conference on Disarmament, as a matter of high priority, to intensify, during its session in 1985, the negotiations on such a convention and to reinforce further its efforts, inter alia, by increasing the time during the year that the Conference on Disarmament devotes to such negotiations, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives, with a view to the final elaboration of a convention at the earliest possible date, and to re-establish its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons for this purpose with the 1984 mandate;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the results of its negotiations.

General Assembly resolution 39/65 C

12 December 1984      Meeting 97      Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/39/754) without vote, 21 November (meeting 46);

19-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.24); agenda item 64.

Sponsors: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, Kenya, Mongolia, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Rwanda, Spain, Ukrainian SSR, Uruguay, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 39, 46; plenary 97.

In explanation of position, the Netherlands noted that the text, by virtue of its consensus character, underlined the general agreement on the need to work for a ban on chemical weapons. For Brazil, the text was entirely satisfactory.

In a statement on all the drafts on chemical weapons, Finland stressed the importance of strict adherence to the 1925 Protocol until an agreement was reached on a comprehensive ban and said that the Protocol's lack of credible assurances concerning verification must be corrected in a future ban on chemical weapons.

Bangladesh supported resolutions 39/65 A and C despite what it felt were certain one-sided and contradictory positions contained in them, because it believed their underlying spirit conformed with mankind's common desire to promote negotiations on the prohibition of chemical weapons; its vote did not imply endorsement of any negotiating position of the principal contenders.

Alleged uses of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

In 1984, the Secretary-General received communications from several States concerning the alleged use of chemical weapons (see Chapter VII of this section).

On 21 February,<sup>(31)</sup> the United States presented information on the alleged use of chemical and toxin weapons in Afghanistan and South-East Asia, updating a report submitted in 1983,<sup>(32)</sup> asserting, among other things, that there appeared to be a diminution of attacks in Afghanistan, and a decrease in the lethality of attacks in Democratic Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic; at the same time, it claimed that evidence existed of continuing use in those two countries of an as yet unidentified, non-lethal agent or agents.

New weapons of mass destruction, including radiological weapons

In December 1984, the General Assembly requested the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its negotiations leading to a draft agreement banning the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons (39/62) and to continue considering the question of radiological weapons with a view to concluding its work promptly on reaching agreement on a convention prohibiting them (39/151 J).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament<sup>(7)</sup> considered the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons" from 2 to 6 April and from 30 July to 3 August 1984. A contact group was set up at the beginning of the first part of the session to consider the establishment of a subsidiary body on the question.

In a memorandum of 17 February,<sup>(33)</sup> a group of socialist countries members of the Conference proposed such a body to draft, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, a comprehensive agreement on banning the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, and possible agreements on particular types of such weapons, as well as to deal with questions relating to radiological weapons.

Some other delegations continued to maintain that agreements to ban potential new weapons of mass destruction should be negotiated only on a case-by-case basis as those weapons might be identified, and pointed out that none had been identified.

On 17 April, the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons was established with a view to reaching agreement on a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of such weapons. The Committee held 11 meetings from 15 June to 10 August, under the chairmanship of Milos Vejvoda (Czechoslovakia), who also held a number of informal consultations. As in previous years, it continued examining questions relating to "traditional" radiological weapons subject-matter and those relating to prohibition of attacks against nuclear facilities, without setting up two subsidiary bodies to deal with those questions or prejudging the relationship between them. Working papers were submitted in 1984 by the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden and the United Kingdom; the Committee Chairman also presented a working paper in August, reflecting some of the proposals made by delegations during the session.

On 12 July, the Ad Hoc Committee adopted a work programme, by which it decided to discuss—without prejudging the final positions of delegations as regards the link between the two aspects of the issue—problems such as definitions, scope, peaceful uses, cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, and compliance and verification.

The Committee concluded that its discussions had contributed to a better understanding of the issues, as well as to a further search for their solution. Because the Committee's mandate had not been fulfilled, it recommended that the Conference on Disarmament re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee at the beginning of its 1985 session. On 23 August, the Conference adopted the Committee's report as part of its own report to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted two resolutions aimed at banning new weapons of mass destruction.

On 12 December, it adopted resolution 39/62 by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3479(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/74 of 10 December 1976, 32/84 A of 12 December 1977, 33/66 B of 14 December 1978, 34/79 of 11 December 1979, 35/149 of 12 December 1980, 36/89 of 9 December 1981, 37/77 A of 9 December 1982 and 38/182 of 20 December 1983 concerning the prohibition of new types of weapons of mass destruction,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraph 39 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, according to which qualitative and quantitative disarmament measures are both important for halting the arms race and efforts to that end must include negotiations on the limitation and cessation of the qualitative improvement of armaments, especially weapons of mass destruction, and the development of new means of warfare,

Recalling the decision contained in paragraph 77 of the Final Document to the effect that, in order to help prevent a qualitative arms race and so that scientific and technological achievements might ultimately be used solely for peaceful purposes, effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction based on new scientific principles and achievements, and that efforts aiming at the prohibition of such new types and new systems of weapons of mass destruction should be appropriately pursued,

Expressing once again its firm belief, in the light of the decisions adopted at the tenth special session, in the importance of concluding an agreement or agreements to prevent the use of scientific and technological progress for the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Noting that in the course of its session in 1984 the Conference on Disarmament considered the item entitled "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons",

Convinced that all ways and means should be utilized to prevent the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Taking into consideration the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to this question,

1. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, in the light of its existing priorities, to intensify negotiations, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, with a view to preparing a draft comprehensive agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, and to draft possible agreements on particular types of such weapons;

2. Once again urges all States to refrain from any action which could adversely affect the talks aimed at working out an agreement or agreements to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;

3. Calls upon the States permanent members of the Security Council as well as upon other militarily significant States to make declarations, identical in substance, concerning the refusal to create new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, as a first step towards the conclusion of a comprehensive agreement on this subject, bearing in mind that such declarations would be approved thereafter by a decision of the Security Council;

4. Calls again upon all States to undertake efforts to ensure that ultimately scientific and technological achievements may be used solely for peaceful purposes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on the results achieved to the General Assembly for consideration at its fortieth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Approved by First Committee (A/39/748) by recorded vote (111-1-24), 20 November (meeting 43); 26-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.63); agenda item 58.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, China, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

In explanation of vote, Ireland, speaking on behalf of the 10 States members of the European Community, asserted that there should be a prohibition of any new weapons of mass destruction if and when they could be identified; a single blanket prohibition of the type proposed would risk undermining progress in research and development without necessarily helping prevent the emergence of new types of weapons; the approach contained in the text did not reflect the difficulty of establishing the precise delimitations of civilian and military research or the growing interaction between them. Australia shared that view. Sweden also questioned the value of a general prohibition, while supporting efforts to ensure peaceful uses of new major scientific discoveries; it noted with satisfaction that the Conference on Disarmament was requested to draft possible agreements on prohibiting particular weapon types.

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/151 J without vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons

Recalling its resolution 38/188 D of 20 December 1983,

1. Takes note of that part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament that deals with the question of radiological weapons, in particular the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons and its recommendation that, in view of the fact that the Committee's mandate was not fulfilled, the Conference on Disarmament should re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons at the beginning of its 1985 session;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue its negotiations on the subject with a view to a prompt conclusion of its work, taking into account all proposals presented to the Conference to this end, the result of which should be submitted to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all relevant documents relating to the discussion of all aspects of the issue by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons".

Conventional weapons

Conventional arms and armed forces absorbed four fifths of the almost $800 billion spent in 1983 on military activities, according to a study on conventional disarmament, completed in 1984 by an expert group; in resolution 39/151 C, the General Assembly invited States to comment on the study.

The Assembly again invited States to submit their views on holding negotiations on limiting and reducing naval armaments (resolution 39/151 I). A group of governmental experts held two sessions during the year to try to prepare a study on the naval arms race, naval forces and naval arms systems. The Assembly called for wider adherence to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, and its three Protocols<sup>(1)</sup> (resolution 39/56).

Study by Group of Experts

In August 1984, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a study, carried out by a group of experts, on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces.<sup>(2)</sup> The Secretary-General noted that the study constituted the first effort at a comprehensive consideration of the subject as a whole, that over 20 million people had died in some 150 armed conflicts since the end of the Second World War, and that additional efforts were needed for effective conventional disarmament measures, in addition to those for nuclear disarmament.

As approved by the Assembly in 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> work on the study began when its guidelines were finalized by the Disarmament Commission in 1982.<sup>(4)</sup> The Group of Experts on All Aspects of the Conventional Arms Race and on Disarmament relating to Conventional Weapons and Armed Forces—experts from 23 countries, appointed by the Secretary-General in accordance with a 1981 Assembly request<sup>(5)</sup>—held a total of seven sessions between July 1982 and June 1984, including two in 1984 (New York, 23 January–3 February, 11–23 June), under the chairmanship of Skjold G. Mellbin (Denmark), and adopted its report on the study by consensus on 23 June.

The study sought to identify practical approaches to, and realistic measures for, limiting and reducing conventional weapons and armed forces, with a view to achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control. It consisted of four parts—an introduction and chapters on: the nature, causes and effects of the conventional arms race; principles, approaches and measures relevant to conventional disarmament; and conclusions and recommendations. Annexed were guidelines for the study and working papers submitted to the Disarmament Commission by China, Denmark, the German Democratic Republic and India.

The Group stated that the current conventional arms race was closely related to the political tensions and differences between East and West and to confrontations elsewhere, including situations arising from foreign occupation, colonial domination, denial of the right of peoples to self-determination, racism and intervention. Citing information from various sources, the Group noted, among other things, that: conventional arms and armed forces absorbed four fifths of the almost $800 billion spent in 1983 on military activities, the global arms trade had progressively expanded (in constant 1981 prices) from $20.3 billion in 1972 to $34.3 billion in 1982, and during 1978–1982 the USSR and the United States accounted for about a third each of total world arms exports of major weapons. The massive consumption of resources for potentially destructive purposes, the Group concluded, ran counter to the objectives of promoting social progress and better standards of life.

While the Group, in view of the breadth and political sensitivity of the matter, did not make specific proposals, it pointed to certain topics which, depending on particular circumstances, could be pursued in consultations and negotiations, among them: restricting/reducing specified categories of major weapons, the number of military personnel, deployments of different types of armed forces, and military budgets and expenditure; qualitative restrictions on armaments, and qualitative/quantitative limitations on arms transfers; and measures concerned with the peaceful uses of outer space, weapons having indiscriminate effects, confidence-building measures, and reversal or curtailment of foreign military activities.

The Group felt that efforts by the USSR and the United States to improve their mutual relationship would facilitate practical steps of conventional arms limitation and disarmament; at the same time, all States should explore ways of contributing to conventional disarmament.

Given the complexity of the subject, the Group was unable to deal in depth with all the elements set out in the guidelines for the study agreed on by the Disarmament Commission, among them, factual account of all aspects of the conventional arms race, the international transfer of conventional weapons, and the impact of emerging technologies on the arms race. Further, there remained a need for thorough consideration of future developments in the conventional arms race and their impact on international security, and of approaches to negotiating agreements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/151 C without vote.

Study on conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions in which, inter alia, it approved the carrying out of a study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces, to be undertaken by the Secretary-General with the assistance of a group of qualified experts appointed by him on a balanced geographical basis,

Recalling the discussions at the 1981 and 1982 substantive sessions of the Disarmament Commission on the general approach to the study, its structure and scope, which resulted in the establishment of agreed guidelines for the study,

Recalling also its resolution 38/188 A of 20 December 1983, by which it took note of the status report of the Secretary-General and requested him to continue the study and to submit the final report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General containing the study,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces,* prepared by the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the Group of Experts on All Aspects of the Conventional Arms Race and on Disarmament relating to Conventional Weapons and Armed Forces who assisted him in the preparation of the study;

3. Draws the attention of all the Member States to the study and its conclusions;

4. Invites all Member States to inform the Secretary-General, no later than 31 May 1985, of their views regarding the study;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the reproduction of the study as a United Nations publication and to give it the widest possible distribution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report for the General Assembly at its fortieth session containing the views of Member States received regarding the study.

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/39/755) by recorded vote (129-0-6), 19 November (meeting 42); draft by Denmark (A/C.1/39/L16), orally revised; agenda item 65 (c). Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-37, 42; plenary 102.

Explaining its position in the First Committee, China felt that the study failed to emphasize the special responsibilities of the two super-Powers and that its recommendations were not sufficiently specific. The Federal Republic of Germany would have preferred a more detailed analysis of the causes of the world-wide accumulation of conventional weapons. It disagreed that there were no feasible means of reversing the trend, and felt that the conclusions had not been drawn from earlier studies or proposals concerning the steady growth in arms transfer; it recalled a proposal it had made at the beginning of the 1984 Assembly session—that the Assembly should establish a register to provide the international community with data on the extent and flow of the weapons trade.

Ratification of the 1980 Convention and Protocols

In a September report,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, and its three Protocols,<sup>(1)</sup> informed the General Assembly of the status of ratification as at 31 August 1984.

The Convention and Protocols, which entered into force in December 1983,<sup>(7)</sup> provided new rules to protect military personnel, civilians and civilian objects from injury or attack by means of incendiary weapons, land-mines, booby traps and other devices, as well as fragments that cannot be easily detected in the human body by X-rays.

As at 31 December 1984, there were 24 States parties to the Convention, India having ratified it during the year.<sup>(8)</sup> Those States had also accepted the three Protocols dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; and incendiary weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/56 without vote.

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977, 35/153 of 12 December 1980, 36/93 of 9 December 1981, 37/79 of 9 December 1982 and 38/66 of 15 December 1983,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption, on 10 October 1980, of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, together with the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III),

Reaffirming its conviction that general agreement on the prohibition or restriction of use of specific conventional weapons would significantly reduce the suffering of civilian populations and of combatants,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Notes with satisfaction that an increasing number of States have either signed, ratified, accepted or acceded to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, which was opened for signature in New York on 10 April 1981;

2. Further notes with satisfaction that, consequent upon the fulfilment of the conditions set out in article 5 of the Convention, the Convention and the three Protocols annexed thereto entered into force on 2 December 1983;

3. Urges all States that have not yet done so to exert their best endeavours to become parties to the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto as early as possible, so as ultimately to obtain universality of adherence;

4. Notes that, under article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to consider amendments to the Convention or any of the annexed Protocols, to consider additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing annexed Protocols, or to review the scope and operation of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to consider any proposal for amendments to the Convention or to the existing Protocols and any proposals for additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing Protocols;

5. Requests the Secretary-General as depositary of the Convention and its three annexed Protocols to inform the General Assembly from time to time of the state of adherence to the Convention and its Protocols;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Sponsors: Austria, Belgium, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia.

Naval armaments

In 1984, the General Assembly again invited Member States to submit their views on holding negotiations on limiting and reducing naval armaments (resolution 39/151 I). A group of governmental experts, appointed by the Secretary-General in accordance with a December 1983 Assembly request,<sup>(9)</sup> held two sessions in an effort to prepare a comprehensive study—for submission to the Assembly in 1985—on the naval arms race, naval forces and naval arms systems.

Experts' study

Early in 1984, the Secretary-General appointed a Group of Governmental Experts to Carry Out a Comprehensive Study on the Naval Arms Race, Naval Forces and Naval Arms Systems, composed of experts from China, France, Gabon, Indonesia, the Netherlands, Peru and Sweden.

The Group held two sessions in 1984, under the chairmanship of Ali Alatas (Indonesia). At its first session (New York, 9-13 April), the Group agreed on an outline for the draft study, a division of the task of preparing contributions and a timetable for action; at its second session (Geneva, 15-26 October), it considered the first draft of the report and discussed its future work. Two further sessions were scheduled for 1985.

Proposed negotiations

In a September 1984 report, with a later corrigendum,<sup>(10)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the replies received from 11 Member States, in response to its December 1983 request<sup>(11)</sup> for views concerning the holding of negotiations on limiting and reducing naval armaments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 17 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/151 I by recorded vote.

Curbing the naval arms race: limitation and reduction of naval armaments and extension of confidence-building measures to seas and oceans

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/188 F of 20 December 1983,

Convinced that all channels of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, should be effectively covered by the efforts to halt and reverse it,

Disturbed by the growing threat to peace, international security and global stability posed by the continuing escalation of the naval arms race,

Alarmed by the ever more frequent use of naval fleets or other naval formations for demonstrations or use of force and as an instrument to exert pressure against sovereign States, especially developing countries, to interfere in their internal affairs, to commit acts of armed aggression and intervention and to preserve the remnants of the colonial system,

Aware that the growing presence of naval fleets and the intensification of the naval activities of some States in conflict areas or far from their own shores increase tensions in these regions and could adversely affect the security of the international sea lanes through these areas and the exploitation of maritime resources,

Firmly convinced that the undertaking of urgent steps to curb military confrontation at sea would be a significant contribution to preventing war, especially nuclear war, and to strengthening peace and international security,

Aware of the numerous initiatives and concrete proposals to undertake effective measures aimed at limiting naval activities, limiting and reducing naval armaments and extending confidence-building measures to seas and oceans,

Stressing once again the importance of relevant measures of a regional character, such as the implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, and the transformation of the Mediterranean into a zone of peace, security and co-operation,

Reaffirming once again that seas and oceans, being of vital importance to mankind, should be used exclusively for peaceful purposes,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, containing the replies of Member States, including a major naval Power, on the modalities for negotiations, as well as various specific ideas and new proposals for joint measures on curbing the naval arms race and naval activities,

Noting with satisfaction that the prevailing view expressed in these replies strongly favours an early commencement of negotiations aimed at curbing the naval arms race and naval activities, strengthening confidence and security at sea and reducing naval armaments,

1. Appeals once again to all Member States, in particular the major naval Powers, to refrain from enlarging their naval activities in areas of conflict or tensions, or far from their own shores;

2. Reaffirms its recognition of the urgent need to start negotiations with the participation of the major naval Powers, the nuclear-weapon States in particular, and other interested States on the limitation of naval activities, the limitation and reduction of naval armaments and the extension of confidence-building measures to seas and oceans, especially to areas with the busiest international sea lanes or to regions where the probability of conflict situations is high;

3. Invites Member States, particularly the major naval Powers, to consider the possibility of holding direct consultations, bilateral and/or multilateral, with a view to preparing the opening at an early date of such negotiations;

4. Also invites Member States, especially those that have not yet done so, to communicate to the Secretary-General not later than April 1985 their views concerning the modalities for holding the negotiations referred to above;

5. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider this question and to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Curbing the naval arms race: limitation and reduction of naval armaments and extension of confidence-building measures to seas and oceans".

General Assembly resolution 39/151 I

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 70-19-53 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/755) by recorded vote (68-20-45), 20 November (meeting 43); 8-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.55); agenda item 65 (gl.)

Sponsors: Bulgaria, Democratic Yemen, German Democratic Republic, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Poland, Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 40, 43; plenary 102.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Chad, China, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Liberia, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritius, Morocco, Niger, Oman, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Uruguay, Zaire.

Introducing the draft, Bulgaria stated that the sponsors had incorporated the suggestion put forward by one State in its reply to the Secretary-General, and supported by a number of others, to request the Disarmament Commission to consider the matter. They believed that the Commission would provide for the broadest possible involvement of all interested States in preparing for future negotiations, and that its deliberations should in no way be linked to or prejudiced by specific documents or concepts.

Explaining its vote, the Netherlands stated that the deadline for submitting views did not allow Member States to benefit from the ongoing study by naval experts (see p. 67), that the scope of the views requested under the draft was so delineated as to prejudge the results of that study, and that it would set a bad precedent to adopt recommendations encouraging States to ignore those studies previously agreed on by the Assembly; while in favour, in principle, of negotiations on aspects of naval armaments, it felt that the measures indicated in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the draft would be incompatible with the existing geographical disparities affecting the major naval Powers and would run counter to their legitimate interests concerning security and commerce; and the preamble contained partisan notions which cast doubt on the sincerity of the sponsors' desire to achieve results in the negotiations.

Oman stressed that its position was to remain apart from the cold war, and spoke of the imbalance of some paragraphs in the text. Indonesia felt that the Disarmament Commission's consideration should be deferred until the study was submitted. Yugoslavia shared that view.

The USSR considered it timely to entrust the matter to the Disarmament Commission, adding that discussion in the Commission and a continuation of research supplemented each other. Asserting that the draft would make possible a substantive analysis of the subject by providing material for the group of experts to consider, Argentina said that naval armaments, especially in their nuclear aspects, required urgent consideration in a multilateral forum.

Other aspects of disarmament and related matters

The General Assembly decided in 1984 to convene an International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development to examine the issue comprehensively and consider measures for releasing additional resources, through disarmament, for development purposes. It also called on the Security Council to consider—and initiate procedures for halting—the arms race as the international community observed in 1985 the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations.

The Disarmament Commission, at its 1984 session, could not agree on the governing principles on reducing military budgets and expenditures, nor could it finalize guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures. In the mean time, the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets continued refining the standardized reporting instrument, and the Assembly gave an additional year to the Group of Governmental Experts on Military Research and Development to complete a comprehensive study on that subject.

In connection with its consideration of preventing an arms race in outer space, the Assembly took up in 1984 a new agenda item on using outer space exclusively for the benefit of mankind. The Assembly again addressed questions of regional disarmament, as well as proposals on convening a Conference on the Indian Ocean and a World Disarmament Conference.

In September, the first conference to review the implementation of the 1976 Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques found that the instrument had proven its effectiveness.

The World Disarmament Campaign entered its third year of implementation under United Nations auspices, and the Organization's disarmament fellowship programme continued to provide training.

The Assembly adopted the statute of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research. Under the United Nations disarmament studies programme, studies were concluded or in progress during the year; new ones were also authorized by the Assembly.

Military budgets and expenditures

For the fourth consecutive year, the Disarmament Commission was unable to arrive at a consensus on the principles that should govern efforts to freeze and reduce military expenditures. Meanwhile, the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets continued refining the standardized reporting instrument, with a view to submitting its final report to the General Assembly in 1985.

Disarmament Commission consideration. As in previous years, the Disarmament Commission, at its May/June 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> considered two aspects of the reduction of military budgets: harmonization of views on their gradual, agreed reduction and the reallocation to economic and social development of resources thus saved; and examination and identification of ways to achieve verifiable agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures in a balanced manner.

Romania transmitted to the Commission Chairman, on 11 May, a March proposal by the States members of the Warsaw Treaty Organization addressed to those of NATO concerning negotiations on freezing and reducing military expenditures.<sup>(2)</sup>

An informal open-ended working group (Working Group I), re-established by the Commission to consider the question, held nine meetings between 11 and 25 May under the chairmanship of Ion Diaconu (Romania).

The Group based its deliberations on a working paper submitted by the Group's Chairman in 1983,<sup>(3)</sup> as well as on those submitted during the previous sessions of the Commission by Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom;<sup>(3)</sup> by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Poland;<sup>(3)</sup> by Romania and Sweden;<sup>(4)</sup> and by India.<sup>(5)</sup>

Differences in views continued to persist, particularly with regard to transparency, comparability, verification and reporting of military expenditures. The Chairman of the Working Group prepared a working paper towards the end of the session, containing a synopsis of the texts—and stages of agreement—on the principles and the texts of amendments proposed by some members; the working paper was annexed to the Group's report to the Commission.

On 1 June, the Disarmament Commission adopted by consensus the Working Group's report, in which it was suggested, among other things, that the Commission should continue in 1985 considering proposals and ideas on the topic, with a view to identifying and elaborating the principles which should govern further actions of States on freezing and reducing military expenditures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As recommended by the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 12 December 1984, adopted without vote resolution 39/64 A, under the item on reduction of military budgets.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the ever-spiralling arms race and growing military expenditures, which constitute a heavy burden for the economies of all nations and have extremely harmful effects on world peace and security,

Reaffirming once again the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, according to which the gradual reduction of military budgets on a mutually agreed basis, for example, in absolute figures or in terms of percentage, particularly by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, would contribute to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities for the reallocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Convinced that the freezing and reduction of military budgets would have favourable consequences on the world economic and financial situation and might facilitate efforts made to increase international assistance for the developing countries,

Recalling that at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, all Member States unanimously and categorically reaffirmed the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, as well as their solemn commitment to it,

Recalling also that, in the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second United Nations Disarmament Decade, it is provided that during this period renewed efforts should be made to reach agreement on the reduction of military expenditures and the reallocation of resources thus saved to economic and social development, especially for the benefit of developing countries,

Recalling further the provisions of its resolution 34/83 F of 11 December 1979, reaffirmed in its resolutions 35/142 A of 12 December 1980, 36/82 A of 9 December 1981, 37/95 A of 13 December 1982 and 38/184 A of 20 December 1983, in which it considered that a new impetus should be given to the endeavours to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain, in a balanced manner, military expenditure, including adequate measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned,

Aware of the various proposals submitted by Member States and of the activities carried out so far within the framework of the United Nations in the field of the reduction of military budgets,

Convinced that identification and elaboration of the principles which should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets could contribute to harmonizing the views of States and create confidence among them conducive to achieving international agreements in the reduction of military budgets,

Considering that the identification and elaboration of the principles which should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets and the other current activities within the framework of the United Nations related to the question of the reduction of military budgets should be regarded as having the fundamental objective of reaching international agreements on the reduction of military expenditures,

Taking note of the report of the Disarmament Commission on the work accomplished during its session in 1984 on the question of the reduction of military budgets,

1. Declares once again its conviction that it is possible to achieve international agreements on the reduction of military budgets without prejudice to the right of all States to undiminished security, self-defence and sovereignty;

2. Reaffirms that the human and material resources released through the reduction of military expenditures could be reallocated to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries;

3. Calls upon all Member States, in particular the most heavily armed States, to reinforce their readiness to co-operate in a constructive manner with a view to reaching agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures;

4. Appeals to all States, in particular to the most heavily armed States, pending the conclusion of agreements on the reduction of military expenditures, to exercise self-restraint in their military expenditures with a view to reallocating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries;

5. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue, at its 1985 substantive session, the consideration of the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets" on the basis of the relevant working paper annexed to its report, as well as other proposals and ideas on the subject-matter, with a view to finalizing the identification and elaboration of the principles which should govern further actions of States in the field of freezing and reduction of military expenditures, keeping in mind the possibility of embodying such principles in a suitable document at an appropriate stage;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets".

12 December 1984      Meeting 97      Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/39/751) without vote, 19 November (meeting 42); 15-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.19); agenda item 61 (a).

Sponsors: Austria, Bangladesh, Colombia, Costa Rica, Indonesia, Ireland, Malta, Nigeria, Peru, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sudan, Sweden, Uruguay.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 42; plenary 97.

While going along with the consensus action on the text, a number of States explained their positions.

Argentina and Brazil asserted that those States which were militarily the most powerful and responsible for the highest military expenditures should take the initiative in reducing military budgets. For similar reasons, India would have abstained, had a vote been taken.

Belgium, although supporting a number of ideas contained in the text, felt that it failed to attach due importance to comparability and verification, which it said were essential in efforts to reduce military budgets. The United Kingdom said systematic reporting of those budgets, not principles alone, could help strengthen international confidence by contributing to greater transparency in military matters. France also joined in the consensus despite certain reservations, in order to acknowledge that Romania, by co-sponsoring the drafts which became resolutions 39/64 A and B (see below), subscribed to paragraphs 2 and 3 of the latter text referring to the need for the broadest possible participation of States in the standardized reporting system.

Also in 1984, the General Assembly, in agreeing to hold an International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development (resolution 39/160), decided that the Conference should examine, among other things, the implications of the level and magnitude of the continuing military expenditures for the international economic and social situation (see p. 83).

Reporting procedures

Report of the Group of Experts. The Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets—experts from Indonesia, Italy, Nigeria, Peru, Romania, Sweden and the United States, appointed in 1983 by the Secretary-General in pursuance of a 1982 General Assembly request<sup>(6)</sup>—held two sessions in 1984 (New York, 6-17 February and 9-20 July) under the chairmanship of Hans Christian Cars (Sweden).

In its second progress report,<sup>(7)</sup> following one submitted in 1983,<sup>(8)</sup> on the construction of price indices and purchasing-power parities for military expenditures as a means of allowing comparisons and thus facilitating relevant negotiations, the Group stated that it had requested and received data on military expenditures and prices from 7 (Australia, Austria, Finland, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States) of the 10 countries (the remaining three being Canada, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy) which had earlier volunteered to participate in the exercise. At the time of submitting the report in July, the Group was analysing and evaluating the data, with the actual computations to follow, with the assistance of the United Nations Statistical Office. In two 1985 sessions, the Group planned to evaluate the results of those computations in relation to other available means of comparison, and to draft its final report for submission to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In addition to the progress report prepared by the Group of Experts, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in October 1984, with later addenda, an annual report on military expenditures in standardized form reported by 23 States.<sup>(9)</sup> A majority of the responding States had used the standard reporting instrument, consisting of a matrix designed to show how much each force group (such as land, naval and air forces) spent in each resource category (such as personnel, procurement and operations).

On 12 December 1984, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/64 B, under the item on reduction of military budgets.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the arms race and present tendencies to increase further the rate of growth of military expenditures, the deplorable waste of human and economic resources and the potentially harmful effects on world peace and security,

Considering that a gradual reduction of military expenditures on a mutually agreed basis would be a measure that would contribute to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities of reallocating resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Convinced that such reductions could and should be carried out on a mutually agreed basis without detriment to the national security of any country,

Reaffirming its conviction that provisions for defining, reporting, comparing and verifying military expenditures will have to be basic elements of any international agreement to reduce such expenditures,

Recalling that an international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures has been introduced in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 35/142 B of 12 December 1980, and that annual reports on military expenditures are now being received from a number of Member States,

Considering that a wider participation in the reporting system of States from different geographic regions and representing different budgeting systems would promote its further refinement and would, by contributing to greater openness in military matters, increase confidence between States,

Noting, in this connection, the proposal to convene an international conference on military expenditures,

Recalling its resolution 37/95 B of 13 December 1982, in which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a group of qualified experts and with the voluntary co-operation of States, to undertake the task of constructing price indices and purchasing-power parities for the military expenditures of participating States,

Emphasizing that the above-mentioned activities and initiatives, as well as other ongoing activities within the United Nations related to the reduction of military budgets, have the objective of facilitating future negotiations aimed at the conclusion of international agreements on the reduction of military expenditures,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General containing the replies received in 1984 from Member States in the framework of the above-mentioned reporting system;

2. Stresses the need to increase the number of reporting States with a view to the broadest possible participation from different geographic regions and representing different budgeting systems;

3. Reiterates its recommendation that all Member States should report annually, by 30 April, to the Secretary-General, using the reporting instrument, their military expenditures for the latest fiscal year for which data are available;

4. Also takes note with appreciation of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the ongoing exercise undertaken in pursuance of resolution 37/95 B, and which will result in a final report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets with the necessary assistance and Secretariat services;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets".

<sup>a</sup>Later advised the Secretariat it had intended not to participate in the vote.

In explanation of vote, the USSR asserted that the questions of reporting machinery and comparability of military expenses, as well as the proposal for an international conference on military expenditures, were an attempt by some States to shirk from actually reducing military expenditure and to distract attention from the growth in their own military budgets.

Brazil said the text failed to stress the special responsibilities borne by the nuclear-weapon States which, it asserted, should be the first to reduce military budgets. Sharing that view, India added that, in the absence of political will on the part of the major Powers, exercises such as those endorsed in the text merely distracted attention from nuclear disarmament, to which it attached utmost importance.

Argentina, in spite of its affirmative vote, expressed misgivings about the effectiveness of the reporting exercise with only a small number of States participating. The United Kingdom—welcoming the text's emphasis on wider participation in the reporting system and expressing regret that no party to the Warsaw Treaty Organization had participated in the exercise—said that balanced, verifiable agreements to restrain and reduce military expenditures would be difficult to reach without a generally accepted procedure for comparing such expenditures.

Information on military capabilities

Pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(10)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1984 a report<sup>(11)</sup> containing the views of seven States on measures to facilitate objective information on military capabilities.

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies (see p. 91), responding also to the 1983 Assembly request<sup>(10)</sup> through the Secretary-General,<sup>(12)</sup> recommended that UNIDIR (see p. 92), in co-operation with the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI), might consider further the modalities of studying such measures, particularly as they related to nuclear-weapon and other militarily significant States.

Study on military research and development

The Group of Governmental Experts on Military Research and Development, established by the Secretary-General in 1983<sup>(13)</sup> in pursuance of a 1982 General Assembly request,<sup>(14)</sup> held three sessions in 1984 (New York, 13-24 February, 4-15 June and 27-31 August).

The Group—experts from Argentina, China, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, France, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, India, Japan, Peru, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States—was to complete, for the Assembly's 1984 session, a comprehensive study on the scope, role and direction of the military use of research and development, the mechanisms involved, its role in the arms race, and its impact on arms limitation and disarmament, with a view to preventing a qualitative arms race and to ensuring that scientific and technological achievements might ultimately be used solely for peaceful purposes.

On 5 November, the Group's Chairman, Rolf Björnerstedt (Sweden), informed the Secretary-General that, while the Group had made substantial progress in preparing its report, certain issues remained to be resolved; an extension of the Group's mandate could enable it to resolve those issues and to submit its final report at the Assembly's 1985 session. This request was annexed to the Secretary-General's report to the Assembly.<sup>(15)</sup>

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/151 F by recorded vote.

Military research and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/99 J of 13 December 1982 in which the Secretary-General was requested to carry out, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, a comprehensive study of the military use of research and development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General to which is annexed a letter from the Chairman of the Group of Governmental Experts on Military Research and Development informing the Secretary-General that, although substantial progress has been made in the preparation of the report, certain issues remain to be resolved, and that after consultations among the experts an extension of the time period of the study is requested in order to enable the Group to resolve these issues and to submit its final report in time for the fortieth session of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the study, bearing in mind the savings that might be made from the existing budgetary appropriations, and to submit the final report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Abstaining: Belgium, Germany, Federal Republic of, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Turkey.

Introducing the text, Sweden pointed out that what was envisaged in 1985 was not a review of the entire draft report, but an effort to resolve certain differences of opinion.

In explanation of vote, the United States said it approved the substance of the draft, but not its financial implications; it would have liked the text to contain language to keep within existing resources the cost of extending the time allotted to the study. Although the United Kingdom shared that view, it supported the draft because of the importance it attached to both the study and its successful completion; it was disappointed, however, that the Group had failed to complete its work within the allocated time, and urged the experts to be flexible and not insist that their own or their Governments' views be included in their entirety. Cameroon felt that the extension of the Group's mandate should be seen as exceptional.

Review Conference on the Convention to prohibit the hostile use of environmental modification techniques

In September 1984, the first Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques,<sup>(16)</sup> often referred to as the ENMOD Convention, met to examine the effectiveness of that instrument, which had been in force since October 1978. Article II of the Convention defined environmental modification techniques as those for changing the dynamics, composition or structure of the earth or of outer space through the deliberate manipulation of natural processes.

During 1984, Australia, Brazil, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, New Zealand and Sweden became parties to the Convention, bringing the total, as at 31 December, to 47 States.<sup>(17)</sup>

Work of the Preparatory Committee. In 1982, the General Assembly<sup>(18)</sup> had noted that the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Convention and according to its article VIII, intended to convene the Review Conference at the earliest practicable time after 5 October 1983, when the instrument would have been in force for five years. Following consultations, it was agreed that a Preparatory Committee, open to all States parties, would convene at Geneva on 30 April 1984.

The Preparatory Committee met at Geneva from 30 April to 2 May, with 31 States parties participating, set the Conference's date and venue and recommended a provisional agenda for it.

Review Conference. The Review Conference, held at Geneva from 10 to 20 September 1984, was attended by 35 of the 45 States parties at that time, four signatories, four observer States and two non-governmental organizations, as well as representatives of UNEP and WMO. It elected Keijo Korhonen (Finland) as its President.

In its Final Declaration,<sup>(19)</sup> adopted by consensus on 20 September, the Review Conference stressed that the six years since the Convention's entry into force had demonstrated its effectiveness; it noted with satisfaction that no State party had found it necessary to invoke the provisions of article V dealing with international complaints and verification procedures. It also decided that a second Review Conference might be held at Geneva at the request of a majority of States parties not earlier than 1989; if no such meeting took place before 1994, the depositary would be requested to solicit the views of all States parties on its convening.

Related action. UNIDIR, together with SIPRI and in co-operation with UNEP, organized at Geneva, from 24 to 27 April 1984, a symposium on environmental warfare, where special attention was paid to the ENMOD Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/72 of 10 December 1976, in which it referred the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques to all States for their consideration, signature and ratification and expressed its hope for the widest possible adherence to the Convention,

Recalling that the States parties to the Convention met at Geneva from 10 to 20 September 1984 to review the operation of the Convention, with a view to ensuring that its purposes and provisions were being realized,

Noting with satisfaction that in its Final Declaration the Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques concluded that the obligations assumed under the Convention had been faithfully observed by the States parties,

Noting also that the Review Conference found the Convention and its objectives to be of continuing importance and that it was in the common interest of mankind to maintain its effectiveness in prohibiting the use of environmental modification techniques as a means of war,

Noting, in this context, that the Review Conference recognized the need to keep under continuing review and examination the provisions of paragraph 1 of article I of the Convention, in order to assure their continued effectiveness,

Noting that the Review Conference affirmed its belief that universal adherence to the Convention would enhance international peace and security,

Noting furthermore that the States parties to the Convention reaffirmed their strong support for the Convention, their continued dedication to its principles and objectives and their commitment to implement effectively its provisions,

1. Takes note of the positive assessment by the Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques of the effectiveness of the Convention since its entry into force, as reflected in its Final Declaration;

2. Calls upon all States to refrain from military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques;

3. Reiterates its hope for the widest possible adherence to the Convention.

In favour: Afghanistan, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Mexico, Mozambique, Panama, Venezuela.

In explanation of vote, Mexico, recalling that it had voted against the 1976 Assembly resolution—referring the ENMOD Convention to States for their consideration, signature and ratification—said its abstention on what it considered to be a procedural draft did not imply any changes from its previous position; it found article I of the Convention unacceptable, which, in its view, was tantamount to legitimizing the use of environmental modification techniques so long as they had no widespread, long-lasting or severe effects.

Argentina, which also saw the text as procedural, continued to believe that the Convention would be fully operative only after its scope had been expanded; it regretted that the Review Conference had not put into motion machinery that could have led to the revision of article I.

Arms race in outer space

In 1984, the Conference on Disarmament continued to discuss, but was unable to agree on, the mandate of a proposed subsidiary body concerned with preventing an arms race in outer space. The militarization of outer space was also considered by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. Of four draft resolutions before the General Assembly, only one was voted on and adopted (resolution 39/59).

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament<sup>(20)</sup> considered the item on preventing an arms race in outer space from 19 to 23 March and from 16 to 20 July 1984. A contact group—established, as in 1983, and meeting under the President of the Conference—again failed to reach a consensus on an appropriate mandate for an ad hoc subsidiary body on the question; it considered various proposals, including those submitted by the Group of 21 non-aligned countries,<sup>(21)</sup> a group of socialist States<sup>(22)</sup> and a number of Western countries.<sup>(23)</sup>

The Group of 21 continued to maintain that the mandate should spell out the ultimate objective of reaching an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in all its aspects in outer space, as specifically requested by the General Assembly in 1983.<sup>(24)</sup> A number of Western countries held that a subsidiary body should, in the first instance, identify relevant issues through substantive examination. The socialist countries felt that the Western proposal to study issues, without a mandate to negotiate, was being advanced in order to avoid negotiations on the question.

The USSR, by a letter of 20 March,<sup>(25)</sup> submitted to the Conference the text of a draft treaty—on prohibiting the use of force in outer space and from space against the Earth—which it had proposed to the Assembly in 1983.<sup>(26)</sup>

Many delegations expressed concern over the plans for developing new types of weapons systems in outer space in the name of defensive weapons, and urged the Conference to concentrate on urgent negotiations rather than spend time on what they felt were superficial issues.

The Conference reported to the Assembly that, in view of the absence of a consensus on a mandate for an ad hoc committee, no progress was achieved on the item.

Consideration by the Committee on outer space. Pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(27)</sup> the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Vienna, 12-21 June)<sup>(28)</sup> (see next chapter) discussed as a priority matter questions relating to the militarization of outer space. As in 1983, divergent views were expressed on the competence of the Committee, as against that of the Conference on Disarmament, in addressing arms control issues. Some asserted that the Assembly, by its 1983 resolution,<sup>(27)</sup> had given the Committee a clear mandate to consider the issue, while others felt that mandate was a serious mistake. Some others believed that the Committee could make a concrete contribution by supporting negotiations carried out in other forums, while making sure that such involvement would not diminish the Committee's role in promoting cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space. Some proposed that the Committee set up an informal working group for preliminary examination of related questions, while others envisaged a similar body in the Conference on Disarmament to negotiate an agreement or agreements on preventing an arms race in all its aspects in outer space.

On 14 December, the Assembly, in resolution 39/96, again requested the Committee on outer space to consider as a priority matter ways for maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and to report to the Assembly in 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In addition to an agenda item on the report of the Conference on Disarmament<sup>(20)</sup> as it related to preventing an arms race in outer space, the General Assembly took up in 1984 a new item proposed by the USSR, on the use of outer space exclusively for peaceful purposes for the benefit of mankind.

In submitting that request by a letter of 27 September to the Secretary-General,<sup>(29)</sup> the USSR declared that no attack weapons of any kind—conventional, nuclear, laser, particle beam or any other—should be deployed in outer space, whether on manned or unmanned systems, and that any such systems already created should be destroyed. The United Nations, it added, should call for early elaboration through negotiation of reliably verifiable agreements on a bilateral and multilateral basis. A draft resolution was annexed to the letter (see p. 76).

The USSR also transmitted to the Secretary-General three related communications: on 4 July, it submitted a 29 June statement addressed to the United States,<sup>(30)</sup> proposing negotiations on preventing the militarization of outer space; on 30 July, it submitted the text of a 27 July TASS news agency statement charging that the United States had avoided the USSR's proposal,<sup>(31)</sup> and on 4 September,<sup>(32)</sup> it transmitted the text of replies by K. U. Chernenko, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, to questions from the newspaper Pravda. He proposed, among other things, a reciprocal moratorium with the United States on the testing and deployment of strike space systems and the simultaneous commencement of talks.

By a letter of 14 November to the Secretary-General,<sup>(33)</sup> the German Democratic Republic transmitted an appeal from the States participating in the Intercosmos programme on outer space—Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the USSR and Viet Nam—(Berlin, October) stating that the United States plan to create new systems of space weapons added to the danger of nuclear catastrophe, and that the United Nations should adopt immediate measures to ensure the peaceful uses of outer space.

Four draft resolutions were introduced in the Assembly's First Committee, each with a different emphasis. Three of them—submitted, respectively, by the USSR, China and a group of Western countries—were not put to a vote, at the request of the sponsors concerned, to facilitate adoption of a single text on the question. All the texts, with the exception of the USSR draft, were entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

The USSR draft,<sup>(34)</sup> with the same title as the new agenda item, "Use of outer space exclusively for peaceful purposes for the benefit of mankind", would have had the Assembly call on all States, particularly those with major space capabilities: to prohibit for all time the use of force in outer space and from space against the Earth, as well as from the Earth against objects in outer space, and to ban and eliminate space attack systems, including space-based anti-satellite and anti-ballistic missile systems; and to negotiate verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements. The USSR said that verification would be made easier if only for the reason that its proposal called for a complete ban on developing such systems and for eliminating the few that had already been developed.

In December, the Assembly, on an oral proposal by its President, adopted without vote decision 39/415, taking note of the report of the First Committee<sup>(35)</sup> on its consideration of the USSR-proposed agenda item.

Use of outer space exclusively for peaceful purposes for the benefit of mankind

At its 97th plenary meeting, on 12 December 1984, the General Assembly took note of the report of the First Committee.

General Assembly decision 39/415

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 142.

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36; plenary 97.

The draft proposed by China<sup>(36)</sup> would have had the Assembly request the Conference on Disarmament to establish, at its 1985 session, an ad hoc committee to negotiate an agreement or agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space, and urge the USSR and the United States to start serious bilateral negotiations for that purpose. China stressed that bilateral and multilateral talks were complementary and mutually reinforcing, and that talks between the USSR and the United States could not substitute for multilateral negotiations.

The proposal by Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom<sup>(37)</sup> would have had the Assembly reiterate that the Conference had the primary role in negotiating multilateral agreements on using space for peaceful purposes; urge the Conference to give that question priority in 1985 and agree on the establishment of an ad hoc committee and on its mandate; and call on the USSR and the United States to seek with priority mutually acceptable negotiating approaches for effective and verifiable agreements to strengthen international security. On behalf of the sponsors, Italy said the bilateral and multilateral processes were complementary and essential, and that the Conference itself should agree by consensus on a mandate which it deemed to be most appropriate for a helpful and prompt start on the substantive work.

The General Assembly acted on a fourth draft, which was twice revised and sponsored by 17 nations.

On 12 December 1984, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/59 by recorded vote.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Inspired by the great prospects opening up before mankind as a result of man's entry into outer space, Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes, Reaffirming that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming further the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes,

Recalling that the States parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, have undertaken, in article III, to carry on activities in the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding,

Reaffirming, in particular, article IV of the above-mentioned Treaty, which stipulates that States parties to the Treaty undertake not to place in orbit around the earth any objects carrying nuclear weapons or any other kinds of weapons of mass destruction, install such weapons on celestial bodies or station such weapons in outer space in any other manner,

Reaffirming also paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that, in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its resolutions 36/97 C and 36/99 of 9 December 1981, as well as resolutions 37/83 of 9 December 1982, 37/99 D of 13 December 1982, and 38/70 of 15 December 1983,

Gravely concerned at the danger posed to all mankind by an arms race in outer space, in particular the impending danger of exacerbating the current state of insecurity by developments that could further undermine international peace and security,

Mindful of the widespread interest expressed by Member States in the course of the negotiations on and following the adoption of the above-mentioned Treaty in ensuring that the exploration and use of outer space should be for peaceful purposes, and taking note of proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session, and at its regular sessions and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Noting the grave concern expressed by the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space over the extension of an arms race into outer space and the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations, in particular the General Assembly, and also to the Committee on Disarmament,

Convinced that further measures are needed for the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Recognizing that, in the context of multilateral negotiations for preventing an arms race in outer space, bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America could make a significant contribution to such an objective, in accordance with paragraph 27 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Deeply regretting that bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the prevention of an arms race in outer space have not taken place,

Taking note of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to this question,

Aware of the various proposals submitted by Member States to the Conference on Disarmament, particularly concerning the establishment of an ad hoc committee on the prevention of an arms race in outer space and its draft mandate, which had been considered extensively by a contact group and through informal consultations and by formal and informal meetings of the Conference on Disarmament,

Expressing its deep concern and disappointment that, although there was no objection, in principle, to the establishment without delay of such an ad hoc committee, the Conference on Disarmament has not thus far been enabled to reach agreement on a mandate for the ad hoc committee during its 1984 session,

1. Recalls the obligation of all States to refrain from the threat or use of force in their space activities;

2. Reaffirms that general and complete disarmament under effective international control warrants that outer space shall be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it shall not become an arena for an arms race;

3. Emphasizes that further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space should be adopted by the international community;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and to take immediate measures to prevent an arms race in outer space in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, taking into account all relevant proposals, including those submitted at the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly;

8. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to establish an ad hoc committee at the beginning of its session in 1985, with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

9. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to initiate immediately and in a constructive spirit negotiations aimed at preventing an arms race in outer space and to advise the Conference on Disarmament regularly of the progress of their bilateral negotiations so as to facilitate its work;

10. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report on its consideration of this subject to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this subject by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Action on the text in the Assembly followed the adoption of paragraph 8 by a recorded vote of 138 to 1, with 10 abstentions. The First Committee had also taken a recorded vote on that paragraph, approving it by 114 to 1, with 11 abstentions.

Several States explained their votes in the Committee.

The United States, voting against the paragraph and abstaining on the text as a whole, said it could not agree to the Assembly's instructing the Conference on Disarmament on the detailed conduct of its affairs and taking sides between competing mandates for a subsidiary body.

Italy, speaking also on behalf of Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey and the United Kingdom, stated that, while they supported the text as a whole, they abstained in the vote on paragraph 8 because it prejudged the outcome of discussions taking place in the Conference.

France, agreeing that the Assembly should not make explicit recommendations to the Conference on the way it should organize its work, did not consider the provisions in paragraph 8 as a formal proposal for the mandate of the subsidiary body; paragraphs 8 and 9 gave a balanced and realistic reflection of the responsibilities of the Conference as well as those of the Powers with major space capabilities.

The USSR, which voted in favour of the paragraph, welcomed the text as taking account of its position. Australia expressed support for all peaceful uses of outer space as well as other uses which contributed to the preservation of peace and security.

In other 1984 resolutions, the Assembly expressed concern over the danger of the arms race extending into outer space (39/148 J), and urged all States that had not done so to adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (39/52).

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly's 1984 consideration of regional disarmament measures focused on implementing its 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace<sup>(38)</sup> and on the possibility of establishing a zone of peace in South-East Asia.

Report of the Secretary-General. In connection with the Assembly's 1984 consideration of regional disarmament, the Secretary-General, in a September report<sup>(39)</sup> submitted in response to a December 1983 Assembly request,<sup>(40)</sup> informed the Assembly of the related activities carried out by the Secretariat, in particular the Department for Disarmament Affairs, and by UNIDIR.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 12 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/63 F without vote.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/100 F of 13 December 1982 and 38/73 J of 15 December 1983 on regional disarmament,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a further report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of resolutions 37/100 F and 38/73 J;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Regional disarmament: report of the Secretary-General".

General Assembly resolution 39/63 F

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/39/750) without vote, 19 November (meeting 41); 34-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.48); agenda item 60 (h).

Sponsors: Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Guatemala, Ireland, Italy, Liberia, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Singapore, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Zaire.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 39, 41; plenary 97.

Introducing the draft on behalf of the sponsors, Belgium stated that since the item did not seem to need any new momentum from the Assembly and in order to avoid the ritual adoption of a resolution on the subject every year, the text proposed that the topic be discussed further at the 1987 session.

In explanation of position, the USSR asserted that studies on the question of a so-called disarmament fund (see p. 83) should not be included among regional disarmament measures, as had happened in the Secretary-General's report.<sup>(39)</sup> India stated that it would have abstained had the draft been put to a vote, adding that there could not be a piecemeal approach to disarmament in geographical terms and that only a global approach with generally accepted principles, priorities and objectives could have a chance of succeeding.

Zones of peace

Indian Ocean

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean continued, but did not complete in 1984, its preparatory work for the convening, at Colombo, Sri Lanka, in 1985, of a Conference on the Indian Ocean, as had been requested by the General Assembly in 1983.<sup>(41)</sup> The Assembly, in December 1984, called for the holding of the Conference in the first half of 1986 and requested the Committee to complete its preparations in 1985 (resolution 39/149).

Activities of the Committee on the Indian Ocean. The Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, established by the General Assembly in 1972<sup>(42)</sup> to study practical measures for achieving the objectives of the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,<sup>(38)</sup> held three sessions in 1984 in New York—12 to 23 March, 9 to 20 July and 20 to 31 August—with an additional meeting on 21 November to adopt its annual report to the Assembly,<sup>(43)</sup> containing a draft resolution for the Assembly's consideration. Thirty-two formal meetings were held in addition to a number of informal ones, as the Committee continued efforts to harmonize views on the convening of a Conference on the Indian Ocean—as first decided by the Assembly in 1979<sup>(44)</sup> as a necessary step for implementing the Declaration.

Membership of the Ad Hoc Committee rose to 48, with the appointment of Uganda by the Assembly President on 26 July 1984.<sup>(45)</sup>

At its first session of the year, the Ad Hoc Committee agreed to a suggestion by the Chairman to devote equal time to organizational work, including the provisional agenda for the Conference and consideration of appropriate arrangements for any international agreement that might ultimately be reached on maintaining the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, and to substantive issues related to the zone of peace.

At its July session, the Committee accepted a formulation, reached by its Chairman through consultations, that decisions in matters affecting the Indian Ocean would be taken by consensus, it being understood that consensus meant the absence of any formal objection by a delegation against taking a decision. The formulation was meant to guide the Committee's work, but not to be taken as a precedent applicable to other discussions and negotiations.

Among documents submitted to the Committee in 1984 was one, introduced in March by Sri Lanka on behalf of the non-aligned members of the Committee, on a draft framework of the provisional agenda for the Conference.<sup>(46)</sup> In July, the Committee received draft provisional rules of procedure of the proposed Conference,<sup>(47)</sup> prepared by the Secretariat at the Committee's request. The USSR presented, on 10 July, an April 1984 letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Secretary-General, on limiting and reducing naval activities and armaments (see p. 67), including those in the Indian Ocean.

Two different approaches continued to be advocated in the Committee. Most delegations, mainly non-aligned and Eastern European States, were of the opinion that the Committee should proceed without delay to prepare for the Conference with the aim of holding it in the first half of 1985. The Western States, however, emphasized the need for harmonizing views on substantive issues related to the proposed zone of peace and for improving the political and security climate in the region before contemplating the convening of the Conference.

On 31 August, the Committee adopted by consensus parts I and II of its report to the General Assembly, but was not able to agree on part III, containing a draft resolution to be recommended to the Assembly for adoption. As the result of an informal open-ended drafting group meeting to elaborate the text, the Committee adopted that part of the report by consensus on 21 November.

The draft resolution, which was later adopted by the Assembly (see below), differed in a number of ways from a draft text submitted to the Committee in August by Sri Lanka on behalf of the non-aligned members of the Committee.<sup>(49)</sup> By that text, the Assembly would have, among other things: decided to open the proposed Conference in the first half of 1985; requested the Ad Hoc Committee to hold sessions totalling 10 weeks in early 1985, including one session outside New York, to complete the preparatory work; and requested the Secretary-General to set up a Conference secretariat headed by a secretary-general.

Related action. In an October 1984 communiqué,<sup>(50)</sup> the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 1-5 October) expressed concern over the continuous escalation of great-Power military presence in the Indian Ocean area, and reaffirmed their determination to ensure that the Conference be held during 1985. It also expressed satisfaction over initiatives by the President of Madagascar in suggesting the convening of a summit conference on the Indian Ocean at Tananarive.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/149, the draft of which had been recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and approved by the First Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/88 of 14 December 1976, 32/86 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/68 of 14 December 1978, 34/80 A and B of 11 December 1979, 35/150 of 12 December 1980, 36/90 of 9 December 1981, 37/96 of 13 December 1982 and 38/185 of 20 December 1983, and other relevant resolutions, Recalling further the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean,

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Recalling its decision, taken at its thirty-fourth session in resolution 34/80 B, to convene a Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo during 1981,

Recalling also its decision to make every effort, in consideration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area and progress made in the harmonization of views, to finalize, in accordance with its normal methods of work, all preparations for the Conference, including the dates for its convening,

Recalling further its decision, taken at its thirty-eighth session in resolution 38/185, concerning the convening of the Conference in the first half of 1985,

Recalling the exchange of views in the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean in 1984,

Noting the exchange of views on the adverse political and security climate in the region,

Noting further the various documents before the Ad Hoc Committee,

Convinced that the continued military presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean area, conceived in the context of their confrontation, gives urgency to the need to take practical steps for the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,

Considering that any other foreign military presence in the area, whenever it is contrary to the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, gives greater urgency to the need to take practical steps towards the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration,

Considering also that the creation of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean requires the active participation of and full co-operation among the littoral and hinterland States, the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users to ensure conditions of peace and security based on the purposes and principles of the Charter, as well as on the general principles of international law,

Considering further that the creation of a zone of peace requires co-operation and agreement among the States of the region to ensure conditions of peace and security within the area, as envisaged in the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, and respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the littoral and hinterland States,

Calling for the renewal of genuinely constructive efforts through the exercise of the political will necessary for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,

Deeply concerned at the danger posed by the grave and ominous developments in the area and the resulting sharp deterioration of peace, security and stability which particularly seriously affect the littoral and hinterland States, as well as international peace and security,

Convinced that the continued deterioration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area is an important consideration bearing on the question of the urgent convening of the Conference and that the easing of tension in the area would enhance the prospect of success being achieved by the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and the exchange of views in the Committee;

2. Emphasizes its decision to convene the Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo as a necessary step for the implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, adopted in 1971;

3. Takes note of the progress made by the Ad Hoc Committee during 1984;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee, taking into account the political and security climate in the region, to complete preparatory work relating to the Conference on the Indian Ocean, in 1985, in order to enable the opening of the Conference at Colombo thereafter at the earliest date in the first half of 1986 to be decided by the Committee in consultation with the host country;

5. Decides that preparatory work would comprise organizational matters and substantive issues, including the provisional agenda for the Conference, rules of procedure, participation, stages of conference, level of representation, documentation, consideration of appropriate arrangements for any international agreements that may ultimately be reached for the maintenance of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace and the preparation of the draft final document of the Conference;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee at the same time to seek the necessary harmonization of views on remaining relevant issues;

7. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to consult the Secretary-General, at the appropriate time, on the establishment of a secretariat for the Conference;

8. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee as defined in the relevant resolutions, and requests the Committee to intensify its work with regard to the implementation of its mandate;

9. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold three further preparatory sessions in 1985 of a duration of two weeks each, with the possibility of holding a fourth session to be considered as required;

10. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to continue his consultations on the participation in the work of the Committee by States Members of the United Nations which are not members of the Committee, with the aim of resolving this matter at the earliest possible date;

11. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a full report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records, in recognition of its preparatory function.

General Assembly resolution 39/149

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/39/752) without vote, 28 November (meeting 51); draft by Committee on Indian Ocean (A/39/29); agenda item 62.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/39/801/Rev.1; S-G, A/C.1/39/L.81, A/C.5/39/67.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 47, 51; 5th Committee 41; plenary 102.

A number of delegations, in explanation of position, expressed regret over the renewed postponement of the proposed Conference, with many stressing its importance towards implementing the 1971 Declaration. Indonesia said the draft resolution did not reflect its basic position; it was not satisfied with the inordinate delay in the convening of the Conference. Expressing hope that postponement would not become an annual ritual, Democratic Yemen said that, unless genuine efforts were made, the Committee would still face obstacles created by the Western countries and would not complete preparatory work. Similarly, Bulgaria stated that the Ad Hoc Committee's inability to set a date was due to lack of readiness and political will on the part of a minority of its members. Madagascar was disillusioned that, in order to achieve consensus, the Ad Hoc Committee had been forced to make a fourth postponement; it added that harmonization of views on substantive questions, while important, should not be placed above the security needs of the States of the region.

The German Democratic Republic said that some elements in the text practically set pre-conditions and did not contribute to the Conference preparatory work and the establishment of the zone of peace. India regretted that attempts were being made not only to delay implementing the Declaration, which spelt out the nature and scope of the Conference, but also to portray the concept of the zone as a purely regional disarmament measure; it called for restoring a proper sense of direction in the Committee's work.

Pakistan, which felt the draft showed some progress over that of the preceding year, believed that a partial approach dealing only with foreign military presence was unlikely to realize the peace-zone objective; the regional States themselves needed to enter into arrangements, including those for renouncing nuclear weapons; it considered the preparation of a draft final document as an essential prerequisite for the convening of the Conference.

The USSR recalled its proposal that coastal States of the Indian Ocean should declare that they would refrain from worsening the situation in the area, without awaiting the convening of the Conference.

South-East Asia

In resolution 39/5 of 30 October 1984 on the situation in Kampuchea, the General Assembly again urged the South-East Asia countries to renew their efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in the region (see Chapter VII of this section).

Confidence-building measures

Disarmament Commission consideration. In pursuance of a December 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(51)</sup> the Disarmament Commission<sup>(1)</sup> established Working Group III on 7 May 1984 to elaborate guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for their global or regional implementation. The Group held 11 meetings between 11 and 30 May, as well as informal consultations, under the chairmanship of Henning Wegener (Federal Republic of Germany). In addition to the related documents from 1983,<sup>(52)</sup> it had before it four new working papers—those submitted by Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany and a group of socialist countries (Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR), and the Chairman's composite draft of guidelines for confidence-building measures.

In summarizing its work, the Working Group stated that, while the guidelines could not be finalized, its extensive debate had been useful. In its recommendations, which were approved by the Committee of the Whole on 31 May, the Group recommended that the Assembly urge States to consider the widest possible use of confidence-building measures in their international relations, and decide, at its 1984 session, on a format to conclude work on the guidelines as early as possible.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 12 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/63 E without vote.

Consideration of guidelines for confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 38/73 A of 15 December 1983 on confidence-building measures,

Taking note of the views expressed and the useful work accomplished during the 1983 and 1984 sessions of the Disarmament Commission,

Aware of the heightened importance of confidence-building measures as well as of measures of disarmament in the present international situation,

Expressing its regret that, notwithstanding the progress already achieved, the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level could not be elaborated fully within the allotted time frame,

1. Reiterates its invitation to all States to encourage and assist all efforts designed to explore further the ways in which confidence-building measures can strengthen peace and security and promote disarmament;

2. Urges all States to consider the widest possible use of confidence-building measures in their international relations, taking into account the views expressed during the work of the Disarmament Commission;

3. Requests the Disarmament Commission, at its 1986 session, to continue and conclude its consideration of the item "Elaboration of guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level";

4. Further requests the Disarmament Commission to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report containing such guidelines;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Consideration of guidelines for confidence-building measures".

General Assembly resolution 39/63 E

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/C.1/39/750) without vote, 21 November (meeting 46); 39-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.36); agenda item 60 (a).

Sponsors: Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bolivia, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Congo, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Ghana, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Zaire.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 46; plenary 97.

In explanation of position, the USSR expressed concern that the subject had been exploited to create illusions that confidence could be created by building up armaments, if accompanied by openness; it added that confidence-building measures should be determined for each individual case in the light of specific circumstances. India could not support placing confidence-building measures on the same footing as disarmament measures, as in the third preambular paragraph. The Byelorussian SSR regretted that the text did not reflect that confidence-building measures could not replace those for disarmament and that they needed to be buttressed by practical steps.

In another 1984 disarmament resolution (39/151 I), the Assembly reaffirmed the need to extend confidence-building measures to seas and oceans.

Disarmament and international security

Concerned over the deterioration in world affairs, the General Assembly, in 1984, called on the Security Council to hold meetings on the escalating arms race (resolution 39/63 K).

Study on concepts of security. Pursuant to a December 1983 Assembly resolution,<sup>(53)</sup> the Secretary-General established in early 1984 the Group of Governmental Experts to Carry Out a Comprehensive Study of Concepts of Security. The study was to focus on security policies emphasizing co-operative efforts and mutual understanding between States, with a view to developing proposals for policies aimed at preventing the arms race, building confidence in relations between States, enhancing the possibility of reaching agreements on arms limitation and disarmament and promoting political and economic security.

The Group—13 experts from Algeria, Argentina, Australia, China, the German Democratic Republic, India, the Philippines, Romania, Sweden, Uganda, the USSR, Venezuela and Yugoslavia—which held one session in 1984 from 23 to 27 July, under the chairmanship of Anders Ferm (Sweden), adopted an outline and requested the Secretariat to prepare a first draft of the study. Three further sessions were scheduled in 1985 to enable the Secretary-General to submit the final report to the Assembly's 1985 session.

Related action. In October 1984,<sup>(50)</sup> the non-aligned countries (see p. 79) asserted that the escalating arms race, the rise in international tensions and the absence of constructive dialogue among the nuclear-weapon States had reached unprecedented levels; they declared that international peace and security could be ensured only through general and complete disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament under effective international control.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 12 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/63 K by recorded vote.

Disarmament and international securityThe General Assembly,*

Gravely concerned over the sharp deterioration in world affairs characterized by the continued recourse to the use of force, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, and the escalation of the arms race, particularly in new and more destructive nuclear weapons, adding to their quantity and quality,

Concerned also over the vast expenditure, amounting to many billions of dollars, in escalation of the arms race while millions are dying from famine this year,

Bearing in mind that under Article 26 of the Charter the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating plans for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments,

Considering that in these circumstances, coinciding as they do with the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, the international community must cross the threshold and take a historical decision to bring the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, to a halt before it is too late,

1. Calls upon the Security Council to hold a series of meetings devoted to the consideration of the escalating arms race—particularly the nuclear-arms race—with a view to initiating due procedures, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, for bringing it to a halt;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/63 K

12 December 1984 Meeting 97 128-0-19 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/C.1/39/750) by recorded vote (99-0-22), 26 November (meeting 48); draft by Cyprus (A/C.1/39/L.67/Rev.2); agenda item 60 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-37, 48; plenary 97.

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Rwanda, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended not to participate in the vote.

In related action, the Assembly, in resolution 39/155 on implementing its 1970 Declaration on strengthening international security, called for general and complete disarmament under effective international control and, among other things, reiterated its call to the great Powers to abandon policies of confrontation which gave rise to tension and mistrust and to negotiate in good faith, taking into account the interests of the entire international community (see p. 116).

The question of disarmament and international security was also taken up by the Assembly in other 1984 disarmament resolutions, among them 39/59 and 39/148 M and O, and in decision 39/423.

Disarmament and development

In 1984, the General Assembly decided to hold at a future date an International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development (resolution 39/160) and set the venue for the Preparatory Committee (decision 39/424).

Disarmament Commission consideration. In 1984, the Disarmament Commission<sup>(1)</sup> took up consideration of proposals concerning the relationship between disarmament and development—an item added to its agenda in pursuance of a December 1983 General Assembly request.<sup>(54)</sup>

Working Group IV, established by the Commission on 7 May to deal with the topic, held nine meetings between 11 and 30 May under the chairmanship of Uddhav Deo Bhatt (Nepal), who also conducted informal consultations. The Working Group considered a proposal by France for an international conference, as well as replies received by the Secretary-General from 29 Member States—with six additional States replying after the Commission's session<sup>(55)</sup>—in response to the Assembly's 1983 invitation<sup>(54)</sup> for views and proposals concerning the relationship between disarmament and development.

Although members in the Working Group agreed that the world economy, and the economies of the developing countries in particular, would benefit from international action that took into account the close relationship between disarmament and development, opinions differed as to the specific structure and content of the recommendation the Commission might make to the Assembly.

Several members wanted the Commission to recommend that the Assembly decide in 1984 to convene an international conference under the auspices of the United Nations, preceded by thorough preparations. They envisioned the purpose of the conference as being to: conduct a comprehensive review of the relationship; examine the impact of continuing military expenditures on the world economy and the international economic and social situation; and consider ways of channelling a significant part of the resources for military purposes to socio-economic development, particularly of the developing countries.

Another group of countries, however, asserted that the holding of a special conference, which had nothing to do with disarmament measures, would not only be inappropriate, but might be used by the opponents of disarmament as a screen to conceal their unwillingness to take real steps for arms limitation. They proposed that the Commission recommend that the Assembly appeal to the Conference on Disarmament, as the sole multilateral disarmament negotiating body, to accelerate elaborating international agreements on all items of its agenda, and appeal to all Member States to take account of the importance of ensuring that the resources released as a result of implementing disarmament measures would be used to promote the well-being of all peoples and to improve economic conditions in the developing countries.

The Working Group concluded that the Commission should recommend continued efforts to enable the Assembly to reach, at its 1984 session, a broad measure of agreement on the topic.

International disarmament fund for development. In May 1984, UNIDIR submitted to the General Assembly, through the Secretary-General, a report on an investigation, carried out in response to a 1982 Assembly request,<sup>(56)</sup> of the modalities of an international disarmament fund for development.<sup>(57)</sup>

Intended to be more limited and specific in scope than the 1981 study by the Group of Governmental Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,<sup>(58)</sup> the UNIDIR study focused on the political, administrative and financial aspects of such a fund. The report concluded that the establishment of a fund was a desirable and tangible way of recognizing the link between disarmament and development and starting the process of transferring the resources to development. It recommended that the fund be established phase by phase, but only if assured of adequate resources from the beginning.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In separate actions taken in December 1984, the General Assembly decided to convene a Conference and selected the venue of its Preparatory Committee.

On 17 December, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/160 without vote.

Relationship between disarmament and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/71 B, of 15 December 1983, Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, concerning the relationship between disarmament and development,

Considering:

(a) That world-wide military spending has acquired a staggering magnitude and the global trend continues to be towards a faster rate of annual increase in these expenditures,

(b) That this situation stands in dramatic contrast to the sombre state of the global economy and has serious implications for the economic prospects of the world, particularly those of the developing countries,

(c) That the world economy, particularly that of developing countries, would benefit from appropriate international action that took into account the close relationship of disarmament and development,

Also considering that in view of the importance and urgency of giving international consideration and practical expression to that relationship, the time has come for a comprehensive discussion of the subject at a high political level,

Taking note of the report adopted by the Disarmament Commission at the end of its 1984 session,

Taking note, in particular, of the recommendation contained in the report of the Disarmament Commission according to which efforts should be continued to enable the General Assembly to reach, at its thirty-ninth session, a broad measure of agreement on the subject, taking into account the views expressed in the report,

1. Decides to convene an International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, which should be preceded by thorough preparation and should take decisions by consensus;

2. Also decides that the purposes of the Conference should be:

(a) To review the relationship between disarmament and development in all its aspects and dimensions with a view to reaching appropriate conclusions;

(b) To undertake an examination of the implications of the level and magnitude of the continuing military expenditures, in particular those of nuclear-weapon States and other militarily important States, for the world economy and international economic and social situation, particularly for the developing countries, and to make recommendations for remedial measures;

(c) To consider ways and means of releasing additional resources, through disarmament measures, for development purposes, in particular in favour of developing countries;

3. Further decides to set up a Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development composed of fifty-four members, which should formulate and submit, by consensus, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, recommendations as to the provisional agenda, procedure, place, date and duration of the Conference.

General Assembly resolution 39/160

Approved by First Committee (A/39/745) without vote, 21 November (meeting 46); 34-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.72/Rev.1); agenda item 55.

Sponsors: Bahamas, Bangladesh, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Colombia, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, France, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, India, Indonesia, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Nepal, Niger, Norway, Pakistan, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Financial implications. ACABQ, A/39/7/Add.10; 5th Committee, A/39/795; S-G: A/C.1/39/L.79, A/C.5/39/60.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 40, 46; 5th Committee 43; plenary 102.

Introducing the text on behalf of the sponsors, France said the topic could be discussed only in an essentially political conference; it felt that the Preparatory Committee's projected membership of 54—corresponding to that of the Economic and Social Council—would allow for satisfactory representation of the various regional groups.

The United Kingdom believed that the conference should focus on the general relationship between disarmament and development, and on the underlying international and regional security situations which led States to spend scarce resources on defence; currently, it would be inappropriate for such a forum to discuss reallocation of resources. It saw no automatic link between the process of disarmament, the reallocation of resources that might result from such a process and the provision of development aid; it believed that any relationship between disarmament and development should be considered in a more complex triangular relationship that included security.

Argentina, questioning the advisability of changes made during efforts to achieve a generally accepted draft, was concerned about what it saw as a growing trend to impose the consensus rule on all disarmament-related decisions. Brazil expressed similar reservations, adding that the growing trend promoted by the super-Powers and their allies, towards institutionalizing the consensus rule in multi-lateral decision-making, was tantamount to extending the veto power to all occasions.

The Assembly adopted, on an oral proposal by its President, decision 39/424 without vote.

Venue of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1984, the General Assembly decided that the preferred venue of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development should be Geneva, provided that that would not entail any additional expenditure for the United Nations.

General Assembly decision 39/424

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 55.

In follow-up action to resolution 39/160 on 18 December, the Assembly agreed to the President's oral suggestion that he should appoint the Preparatory Committee's members.

Parties and signatories to disarmament agreements

In September 1984, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report on the status of multilateral disarmament agreements,<sup>(59)</sup> based on information received from the States depositaries of those agreements. Listing the parties to and signatories of agreements as at 31 July 1984, the report also contained similar information on the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques (see p. 73), the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (see p. 106), and the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (see p. 66), of which the Secretary-General was the depositary.

As at 31 December 1984, the following numbers of States had become parties to the agreements covered in the Secretary-General's report (listed in chronological order, with the years in which they were initially signed or opened for signature in parentheses):<sup>(60)</sup>

- (Geneva) Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare (1925): 105 parties
- The Antarctic Treaty (1959): 32 parties
- Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapons Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (1963): 111 parties
- Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (1967):<sup>(61)</sup> 84 parties
- Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (1967): 31 parties
- Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (1968):<sup>(62)</sup> 125 parties
- Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (1971):<sup>(63)</sup> 74 parties
- Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (1972):<sup>(64)</sup> 100 parties (see also p. 58)
- Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques (1977):<sup>(65)</sup> 47 parties
- Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (1979):<sup>(65)</sup> 5 parties
- Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (1981): 24 parties

Proposed World Disarmament Conference

The idea of a world disarmament conference, first endorsed by the General Assembly in 1965,<sup>(66)</sup> was again discussed in 1984, as it had been every year since 1971. No further progress was made towards its convening, as the basic positions of nuclear-weapon States remained largely unchanged.

Ad Hoc Committee activities. The 40-member Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference held two sessions in New York in 1984: four meetings each between 2 and 5 April and between 2 and 6 July. Its 1984 annual report<sup>(67)</sup> to the Assembly contained the updated views of the five nuclear-weapon States regarding the holding of such a conference. The Committee, which had been discussing the question since it first met in 1974,<sup>(68)</sup> also informed the Assembly that, through its Chairman, it had maintained close contact with those States so as to remain currently informed of their attitudes.

According to the report, the USSR continued to support the convening of a conference, rejected what it saw as attempts by some nuclear-weapon States to justify their unconstructive attitudes by allusions to the unfavourable international situation, and called for a decision on specific preparatory measures.

China expressed its readiness to support the holding of a conference if the majority of Member States favoured such an opportunity to discuss how the two super-Powers should take the lead in drastically cutting their armaments.

France, noting the absence of consensus on the question, said it had no objection to the Ad Hoc Committee's considering spacing its meetings in view of the persistent impasse. The United Kingdom maintained that, in the current international climate, no useful purpose would be served by preparing for a conference; it also doubted the usefulness of further Committee meetings, and considered it inappropriate for that body to undertake any substantive work. The United States continued to believe it premature to convene a conference, in view of the insufficient political agreement on fundamental disarmament issues, and that an unsuccessful conference would impede future efforts towards concrete and verifiable measures; it also stated that serious consideration should be given to whether or not future meetings of the Committee were warranted.

The Ad Hoc Committee reiterated its previous conclusions: that the idea of a world disarmament conference had wide support, though with varying degrees of emphasis and differences regarding conditions and aspects related to its convening, including the deteriorating international situation; and that no consensus on convening a conference under current conditions had been reached among the nuclear-weapon States, whose participation was widely deemed essential. It suggested that the Assembly might renew the Committee's mandate and request it to maintain close contact with the nuclear-weapon and all other States and to consider any comments and observations which might be made to the Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 17 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/150 without vote.

World Disarmament Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2833(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2930(XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3183(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3260(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3469(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/190 of 21 December 1976, 32/89 of 12 December 1977, 33/69 of 14 December 1978, 34/81 of 11 December 1979, 35/151 of 12 December 1980, 36/91 of 9 December 1981, 37/97 of 13 December 1982 and 38/186 of 20 December 1983,

Reiterating its conviction that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that all States should be in a position to contribute to the adoption of measures for the achievement of this goal,

Stressing anew its conviction that a world disarmament conference, adequately prepared and convened at an appropriate time, could provide the realization of such an aim and that the co-operation of all nuclear-weapon Powers would considerably facilitate its attainment,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference,

Recalling that, in paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it decided that, at the earliest appropriate time, a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

Recalling also that, in paragraph 23 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, the General Assembly considered it pertinent also to recall that in paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session it had stated that at the earliest appropriate time a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

1. Notes with satisfaction that, in paragraph 14 of its report to the General Assembly, the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference stated, inter alia, the following:

"Having regard for the important requirements of the world disarmament conference to be convened at the earliest appropriate time, with universal participation and with adequate preparation, the General Assembly should take up the question at its thirty-ninth session for further consideration, bearing in mind the relevant provisions of resolution 36/91, adopted by consensus, in particular paragraph 1 of that resolution, and resolution 38/186, also adopted by consensus";

2. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to continue to maintain close contact with the representatives of the nuclear-weapon States in order to remain currently informed of their positions, as well as with all other States, and to consider any relevant comments and observations which might be made to the Committee, especially bearing in mind paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "World Disarmament Conference".

General Assembly resolution 39/150

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/39/753) without vote, 19 November (meeting 41);

5-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.23); agenda item 63.

Sponsors: Burundi, Peru, Poland, Spain, Sri Lanka.

Financial implications. ACABQ, A/39/7 Add.10; 5th Committee, A/39/795; S-G, A/C.1/39/L.74, A/C.5/39/59.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-37, 41; 5th Committee 43; plenary 102.

In explanation of position, the United States repeated its position, as set out in the Ad Hoc Committee's report,<sup>(67)</sup> and wondered whether the funding for the Committee might not be better put to other uses.

Public information

In 1984, the World Disarmament Campaign, aimed at generating public understanding and support for the disarmament objectives of the United Nations, entered its third year of implementation. By resolution 39/63 J, the General Assembly provided for the Campaign's regional implementation. The second United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was held in New York during Disarmament Week, and the Assembly, in resolution 39/63 D, decided to hold a third conference in 1985. In resolution 39/63 A, the Assembly called for wider publicity of its work on disarmament, and in resolution 39/148 J stressed the mass media's role in publicizing Disarmament Week.

World Disarmament Campaign

As the World Disarmament Campaign—launched by the General Assembly on 7 June 1982, at the start of its second special session devoted to disarmament<sup>(69)</sup>—entered its third year of implementation in 1984, diversified activities were carried out for informing, educating and generating public understanding and support for the disarmament objectives of the United Nations.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination, at its 1984 session,<sup>(70)</sup> discussed questions relating to the activities of the United Nations Department of Disarmament Affairs in implementing the Campaign.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In an October 1984 report,<sup>(71)</sup> submitted in response to a December 1983 Assembly request,<sup>(72)</sup> the Secretary-General discussed various 1984 activities for promoting the Campaign's objectives, including publication of United Nations information materials; interpersonal communication, seminars and training; special events; a publicity programme; and the roles played by United Nations information centres and other field offices. Activities of relevant agencies and organizations in the United Nations system were also discussed.

The Department for Disarmament Affairs organized or participated in a number of conferences and seminars, among them a regional conference for the World Disarmament Campaign (Leningrad, USSR, 11-15 June) and a national seminar on peace and disarmament (Lomé, Togo, 6-9 August).<sup>(73)</sup>

In another October report,<sup>(12)</sup> submitted in pursuance of a 1982 Assembly request,<sup>(74)</sup> the Secretary-General observed that, as agreed in 1983,<sup>(75)</sup> the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies (see p. 91) and representatives of non-governmental organizations discussed, in September, implementation of the Campaign.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in 1984, adopted three resolutions on the World Disarmament Campaign—two concerning activities and one dealing with the Campaign's financial aspects.

On 12 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, it adopted resolution 39/63 A by recorded vote.

World Disarmament Campaign: actions and activities

The General Assembly,

Aware of the growing public concern at the dangers of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, and its negative social and economic consequences,

Noting with satisfaction the successful implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, launched by the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and its positive impact on the mobilization on a large scale of world public opinion on behalf of peace and disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions 36/92 J of 9 December 1981, 37/100 H of 13 December 1982 and 38/73 F of 15 December 1983, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on world-wide action for collecting signatures in support of measures to prevent nuclear war, to curb the arms race and for disarmament,

Welcoming the voluntary contributions made to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund to carry out the objectives of the Campaign,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General on the progress in the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign during 1984 and on the activities contemplated for 1985,

Convinced that the United Nations system, Member States, with respect for their sovereign rights, and other bodies, in particular non-governmental organizations, all have their role to play in achieving the objectives of the Campaign,

Taking into account the great number of various activities carried out within the framework of the Campaign, including actions for collecting signatures in support of measures to prevent nuclear war, to curb the arms race and for disarmament,

1. Reaffirms the usefulness of further carrying out actions and activities which are an important manifestation of the will of world public opinion and contribute effectively to the achievement of the objectives of the World Disarmament Campaign and thus to the creation of a favourable climate for making progress in the field of disarmament with a view to achieving the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

2. Urges the Governments of all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, in formulating their policies in the field of disarmament, to take into account the main demands of the mass peace and disarmament movements, in particular, with regard to the prevention of nuclear war and curbing the nuclear-arms race;

3. Reaffirms the importance of carrying out the World Disarmament Campaign in accordance with the priorities in the field of disarmament established in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, taking into account that the adoption of effective measures for nuclear disarmament and prevention of nuclear war has the highest priority;

4. Invites once again Member States to co-operate with the United Nations to ensure a better flow of accurate information with regard to the various aspects of disarmament as well as actions and activities of the world public in support of peace and disarmament, and to avoid dissemination of false and tendentious information;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in implementing the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign, to give wider publicity to the work of the General Assembly in the field of disarmament, paying due attention, in particular, to the proposals of Member States and the action taken thereon;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution.

Sponsors: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Romania, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 40, 41; plenary 97.

In explanation of vote, several States objected to the wording of paragraph 4. The United Kingdom could not support what it said appeared to be censorship of a free exchange of ideas. Sharing that view, Belgium added that its democratic tradition made it impossible for it to condemn ideas. Similarly, the United States said it believed in free and unhindered dissemination of information, and it was up to recipients to decide what was true or false.

Liberia, while supporting the text, also had reservations over questioning the credibility of information provided by Member States. Japan regarded the overall tone of the draft as more alarmist and emotional than the versions of previous years.

On 12 December 1984, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/63 J without vote.

World Disarmament Campaign

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in paragraph 15 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it declared that it was essential that not only Governments but also the peoples of the world recognize and understand the dangers in the present situation and stressed that in order that an international conscience might develop and that world public opinion might exercise a positive influence, the United Nations should increase the dissemination of information on the armaments race and disarmament with the full co-operation of Member States,

Recalling with satisfaction that the World Disarmament Campaign, whose first three fundamental objectives are to inform, to educate and to create understanding and public support for the objectives of the United Nations in the field of arms limitation and disarmament, was solemnly launched by unanimous decision of the General Assembly on 7 June 1982 at the opening meeting of the Assembly's twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling also its resolutions 37/100 I of 13 December 1982 and 38/73 D of 15 December 1983 on the implementation of the Campaign,

Taking fully into account the objectives, contents, modalities and financial implications of the Campaign defined by the General Assembly at its twelfth special session,

Reaffirming its conviction that the Campaign should be carried out under the auspices of the United Nations in all parts of the world in a balanced, positive and objective manner and that the universality of the Campaign should be guaranteed by the co-operation and participation of all States and the widest possible diffusion of information relating to it,

Recognizing that, with a view to strengthening the objective of universality and giving the Campaign the confidence and continuity necessary to ensure its maximum effectiveness, there may be a need for arrangements at the regional level, making it possible to develop initiatives, discuss concepts and take specific action in order to promote the objectives of the Campaign with the participation of the countries of the region concerned,

Recalling its resolution 37/100 F of 13 December 1982 on regional disarmament,

Having examined the reports of the Secretary-General of 12 September 1984 on regional disarmament and of 3 October 1984 on the World Disarmament Campaign,

Taking note of the Lomé Peace Message, adopted by the National Seminar on Peace and Disarmament, held from 6 to 9 August 1984,

Convinced that the implementation of the recommendations contained in the aforementioned Peace Message would contribute significantly to the effective promotion of the objectives of the Campaign,

Desiring to make the best possible use of the contributions that have been or may be made by Member States in the form of local or non-convertible currency and also of other types of material assistance in the countries or regions concerned, in order to attain the objectives of the Campaign in specific countries or regions,

Emphasizing the need for maximum economy and maximum results in the administration of the Campaign,

Recognizing the potential beneficial effects in terms of results, efficiency and economy in the use of field offices to carry out all regional or local activities in the context of the programme of activities of the Campaign,

Reaffirming that the United Nations should furnish the informational material and should in general co-ordinate the implementation of the Campaign and that the Department of Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat should supervise and centralize such co-ordination,

Aware of the specific needs of developing countries with regard to programmes of information, research and training in the fields of arms limitation and disarmament,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to provide assistance to such Member States in the regions concerned as may request it with a view to establishing regional and institutional arrangements for the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, on the basis of existing resources and of voluntary contributions which Member States may make to that end;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/63 J

12 December 1984      Meeting 97      Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/C.1/39/750) without vote, 21 November (meeting 46); 18-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.59), orally revised; agenda item 60 (d).

Sponsors: Angola, Botswana, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Djibouti, Guinea, Liberia, Mali, Mozambique, Niger, Senegal, Singapore, Thailand, Togo, Uganda.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 39, 46; plenary 97.

Although joining in the consensus, the Federal Republic of Germany cautioned that regional preferences, if introduced on too broad a scale into the World Disarmament Campaign, might cause the Secretariat to lose overall planning competence for the Campaign and jeopardize the principles of universality. The USSR understood that paragraph 1 would be implemented exclusively on the basis of existing resources and voluntary contributions.

In related action, the Assembly called on Member States to disseminate, in connection with the Campaign, the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament (resolution 39/148 M).

Financing

Report of the Secretary-General. In his October 1984 report to the Assembly,<sup>(71)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that successful implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign depended in part on the active and material support of Member States, especially contributions to the Campaign's Voluntary Trust Fund. He reported that, as at August 1984, 35 countries had made pledges to the Fund, totalling approximately $3.4 million, most of it in non-convertible currencies.

Pledges. The Second United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign, with 63 delegations participating, was convened at United Nations Headquarters on United Nations Day, 24 October, which also marked the opening day of Disarmament Week.

Either during the Conference or at other times in the course of the year, the following pledges were made: Australia ($A 50,000), Austria ($10,000), Cameroon (800,000 CFA francs), Canada ($Can 100,000), China (40,000 yuan renminbi), Hungary (100,000 forint), Indonesia ($5,000), Ireland (5,000 Irish pounds), Kuwait ($10,000), Lao People's Democratic Republic ($500), Mexico ($5,000), New Zealand ($10,000), Norway ($15,000), Pakistan (100,000 rupees), Sweden (180,000 kronor) and Yugoslavia ($5,000).

At the closing of the Conference, its President announced that 14 new pledges totalling $209,192 had been made at the Conference, in addition to written intentions to contribute.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 12 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/63 D by recorded vote.

World Disarmament Campaign

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in paragraph 15 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it declared that it was essential that not only Governments but also the peoples of the world recognize and understand the dangers in the present situation and stressed the importance of mobilizing world public opinion on behalf of disarmament,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/152 I of 12 December 1980, 36/92 C of 9 December 1981, 37/100 I of 13 December 1982 and 38/73 D of 15 December 1983, as well as the reports of the Secretary-General of 17 September 1981, 11 June 1982, 3 November 1982 and 30 August 1983,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 3 October 1984 on the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign during 1984 and the activities contemplated for 1985, as well as its main financial aspects,

Having also examined the part of the report of the Secretary-General of 4 October 1984 dealing with the activities of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies relating to the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, as well as the Final Act of the 1984 United Nations Pledging Conference for the Campaign, held on 24 October 1984,

1. Commends the manner in which, as described in the above-mentioned reports, the World Disarmament Campaign has been geared by the Secretary-General in order to guarantee "the widest possible dissemination of information and unimpeded access for all sectors of the public to a broad range of information and opinions on questions of arms limitation and disarmament and the dangers relating to all aspects of the arms race and war, in particular nuclear war";

2. Recalls that, as was also agreed by consensus at the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, it is likewise an essential requisite for the universality of the World Disarmament Campaign that it receive "the co-operation and participation of all States";

3. Endorses the statement made by the Secretary-General on the occasion of the 1984 United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign to the effect that such co-operation implies that adequate funds be made available and that consequently the criterion of universality also applies to pledges, since a campaign without world-wide participation and funding will have difficulty in reflecting this principle in its implementation;

4. Regrets that most of the States which have the largest military expenditures have not so far made any financial contribution to the World Disarmament Campaign;

5. Decides that at its fortieth session there should be a third United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign, and expresses the hope that on that occasion all those Member States that have not yet announced any voluntary contribution may do so;

6. Reiterates its recommendation that the voluntary contributions made by Member States to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund should not be earmarked for specific activities inasmuch as it is most desirable that the Secretary-General enjoy full freedom to take the decisions he deems fit within the framework of the Campaign previously approved by the General Assembly and in exercise of the powers vested in him in connection with the Campaign;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to give permanent character to his instructions to the United Nations information centres and regional commissions to give wide publicity to the World Disarmament Campaign and, whenever necessary, to adapt, as far as possible, United Nations information materials to local languages;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report covering both the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign by the United Nations system during 1985 and the programme of activities contemplated by the system for 1986;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "World Disarmament Campaign".

Against: None.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Rwanda, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Five Western countries explained their abstentions. France could not support the draft because of paragraph 4; it felt its efforts to disseminate disarmament information as well as its contribution to the budget of UNIDIR represented a sizeable contribution to the Campaign. Similarly, the United Kingdom noted that the Campaign was funded from regular United Nations resources, to which it annually contributed; further, it devoted substantial sums of money to its own disarmament information activities. Recalling that the Campaign was meant to be funded by voluntary contributions, the United States said it could not accept criticism of those who had not contributed. The Federal Republic of Germany added that, contrary to the implication of paragraph 3, the Campaign was to be conducted only if it encompassed all regions of the world without discrimination and if unimpeded access was accorded to the whole spectrum of information available on disarmament matters. Sharing that view, the Netherlands said the draft unduly emphasized the financial aspects of the Campaign, whose success depended essentially on an unqualified free flow of information everywhere.

Disarmament Week (24-30 October)

Disarmament Week—proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1978<sup>(76)</sup> to start on United Nations Day, 24 October—was marked on that day in 1984 at United Nations Headquarters at a special meeting of the Assembly's First Committee, where statements were made by the Assembly President, the Secretary-General and representatives of regional groups.

In his message, the President decried the outlay of huge military expenditures at the expense of development needs, emphasized that the fast pace at which the trade and transfer of conventional weapons had been taking place merited serious attention, and advocated the complete prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and their destruction.

The Secretary-General stressed the importance of international confidence in facilitating real progress in arms limitation and reduction. He called attention to military expenditures, estimated to reach $1 trillion in 1985—a sum that could otherwise benefit humanity, particularly the vast number of people living in conditions of scandalous underdevelopment. He emphasized that the long impasse in arms negotiations had to be broken and called for the opening of successful negotiations on nuclear weapons—the gravest threat to world security.

In October, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in an annual report<sup>(77)</sup> the replies received from 18 Governments and from several United Nations bodies concerning activities in connection with Disarmament Week 1983. A number of international non-governmental organizations (NGOs) also supplied information.

On 25 October, the annual Disarmament Week NGO Forum, sponsored by the Department for Disarmament Affairs and the Department of Public Information, took place in New York. On the same day, an NGO Forum was held at Geneva for the first time with Olof Palme, Prime Minister of Sweden, as key speaker.

In explanation of vote, Japan expressed reservations about what it regarded as alarmist overtones in the language used in the text. Australia felt it included inappropriate language concerning activities of IAEA and other specialized bodies. France felt that paragraph 7 called for activities diverting the agencies and IAEA from their proper fields of action.

Disarmament research

The General Assembly in 1984 approved, by resolution 39/148 H, the statute of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, as prepared and revised by the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies, acting as the Institute's Board of Trustees.

Two new disarmament studies were initiated by the Assembly in 1984.

Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies, established in 1978 to advise the Secretary-General on various aspects of studies on disarmament and arms limitation,<sup>(78)</sup> held its tenth and eleventh sessions in 1984 (30 April–4 May, 10–14 September) under the chairmanship of Hadj Benabdelkader Az-zout (Algeria).<sup>(12)</sup> The Board considered the United Nations studies on disarmament as well as implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign (see p. 86), and discussed the current disarmament situation. It also examined, in its capacity as the UNIDIR Board of Trustees, the UNIDIR work programme and draft statute (see p. 93).

The Board recommended, among other things, that the Assembly mandate a small group of governmental experts to carry out a study on the implications of deterrence (see below). It also agreed on the usefulness of inviting specialists to address the Board, considered a UNIDIR study on conditions and possibilities for negotiating reductions in nuclear weapons, and recommended further study of the question of information on military capabilities (see p. 72).

Disarmament studies

The General Assembly initiated two new disarmament studies in 1984—one, on deterrence and the other on the climatic effects of nuclear war (see p. 29). In addition, four studies were in progress, on nuclear-weapon-free zones, military research and development, concepts of security and the naval arms race.

The year saw the conclusion of two studies called for in previous years by the Assembly—one on unilateral nuclear disarmament measures, and the other on conventional disarmament.

Information on these studies can be found under the related subject headings in this chapter.

Study on deterrence

In 1984, the Advisory Board proposed that a group of governmental experts be asked to carry out a study on the implications of deterrence, which would cover the differing views and their supporting arguments, without attempting to arrive at joint conclusions and recommendations, thus permitting readers to draw their own conclusions.<sup>(12)</sup> The Board also suggested that UNIDIR could be involved in a consultative capacity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted decision 39/423 by recorded vote.

Study on deterrence and its implications for disarmament and the arms race, negotiated arms reductions and international security and other related matters

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee:

(a) Requested the Secretary-General to prepare a study under the title: "Deterrence: its implications for disarmament and the arms race, negotiated arms reductions and international security and other related matters", as recommended by the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies in paragraph 6 of the report of the Secretary-General, to carry out the study in accordance with the recommendations of the Advisory Board in paragraphs 6 and 7 of the same document, and to submit the final report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

(b) Requested those Member States that wished to submit their views on the subject to communicate them to the Secretary-General not later than 1 April 1985.

General Assembly decision 39/423

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 145-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/749) by recorded vote (128-1), 21 November (meeting 46); 8-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.62), orally revised; agenda item 59.

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Germany, Federal Republic of India, Mexico, Romania, Sri Lanka, Yugoslavia.

Financial implications. ACABQ, A/39/7Add.10; 5th Committee, A/39/795; S-G, A/C.1/39/L.77, A/C.5/39/58.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 40, 46; 5th Committee 43; plenary 102.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malte, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

The United States said that, although it considered the topic important, it was obliged to vote against the text because of its commitment to seeing no real growth in the United Nations budget.

The USSR felt the proposed study would reveal why deterrence was being used as an excuse for escalating the arms race; however, the expenditure envisaged should be reviewed with the aim of reducing it substantially.

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

Activities of the Institute. The Director of UNIDIR, in an October 1984 report,<sup>(79)</sup> stated that two reports requested by the Assembly—on establishing an international disarmament fund for development<sup>(57)</sup> (see p. 83), and South Africa's nuclear capability<sup>(80)</sup> (see p. 39)—had been completed and submitted to the Assembly. In the period covered by the report, September 1983 to August 1984, UNIDIR had also completed a number of research projects, while strengthening its scientific capacity. The Director informed the Assembly that UNIDIR, in order to succeed, had to have its statute approved and the material conditions for work assured.

Activities of the Board of Trustees. In 1984, the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies,<sup>(12)</sup> in its capacity as Board of Trustees of UNIDIR, submitted to the Assembly a revised draft statute of the Institute.

In December 1983, the Assembly had returned the draft statute to the Board,<sup>(81)</sup> requesting clarification of provisions that it considered were vague about financial and other arrangements for the Institute. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), which had advised the Assembly on the matter, observed that the vagueness resulted from an attempt to make the statute cover both the UNIDIR financing on a voluntary basis and the possibility of an Assembly decision to fund certain expenditures from the United Nations regular budget.

The Board also approved the report of the Director on the work of UNIDIR (see above),<sup>(79)</sup> approved the 1985 UNIDIR programme of 12 research projects, and adopted proposed budget estimates for 1985, recommending that one third be allocated from the United Nations regular budget.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION

ACABQ recommended in a November report to the Assembly<sup>(82)</sup> that—in order to implement the principle of mixed financing—article VII of the draft statute be changed so that the actual amount of a subvention from the United Nations regular budget to meet the cost of the Director and his staff would not exceed an amount equivalent to one half of the assured income of UNIDIR from voluntary sources in respect of the year for which a subvention was being requested. ACABQ also suggested amendments in articles III and VIII of the draft statute, so as to avoid the artificial formulation of two separate budgets for UNIDIR.

Further, ACABQ recommended against either a grant or an advance from the United Nations regular budget, saying that the autonomous nature of the Institute and the requirement that voluntary contributions should form its principal source of financing could best be preserved if the sums necessary to eliminate the deficit were set aside from future voluntary income.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 November 1984, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, to which the First Committee had earlier referred the draft statute for consideration, endorsed the ACABQ comments and recommendations by 79 votes to 10, with 8 abstentions; endorsement of article VII as amended was by a recorded vote of 75 to 17, with 5 abstentions.

On 17 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/148 H by recorded vote.

United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research The General Assembly,

Considering the role of disarmament research as a means to promote disarmament measures,

Recalling its resolution 37/99 K, section IV, of 13 December 1982,

1. Takes note of annex II to the report of the Secretary-General of 4 October 1984;

2. Approves the statute of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, annexed to the present resolution;

3. Takes note of the report of the Director of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research;

4. Renews the invitations to Governments to consider making voluntary contributions to the Institute;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to give the Institute administrative and other support;

6. Invites the Director of the Institute to report annually to the General Assembly on the activities carried out by the Institute.

Approved by First Committee (A/39/749) by recorded vote (108-1-2), 3 December (meeting 56); 25-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.30/Rev.1); agenda item 59 (//).

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Haiti, Israel, Japan.

The Assembly adopted paragraph 2 of the resolution by a recorded vote of 114 to 3 (Japan, United Kingdom, United States), with 20 abstentions. The First Committee, at the request of the USSR, had similarly approved that paragraph by 88 votes to 3 (Japan, United Kingdom and United States), with 18 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, the United States objected to the mixed funding of UNIDIR, saying that such a system contradicted the 1982 Assembly decision that the activities should be funded voluntarily.<sup>(74)</sup> Sharing that view, the United Kingdom believed that the estimated voluntary contributions should be adequate to finance all activities, and urged that programmes be tempered by economic realities. The USSR, abstaining on paragraph 2, could not agree with the provisions of articles III, VII and VIII of the statute; a dual system of financing might create a dangerous precedent, one which might lead to considerable inflation in the United Nations regular budget. Japan also expressed concern over the financial implications for the United Nations. The Federal Republic of Germany, which abstained in the vote on paragraph 2 because of what it said were the statute's financial ambiguities, and the United Kingdom none the less welcomed the fact that approval of the statute put the Institute's work on a legally sound footing.

The Assembly, by resolution 39/147, requested UNIDIR to prepare a report on Israeli nuclear armament.

UN fellowship programme

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in October<sup>(83)</sup> that the 1984 United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament had started at Geneva during the June-August session of the Conference on Disarmament and was scheduled to end in New York towards the end of the 1984 regular session of the Assembly. Twenty-five fellows from as many States participated in the programme, which consisted of lectures, seminars, research, observation of the Conference on Disarmament and the Assembly's First Committee, and a visit to IAEA at Vienna. The 1984 programme also included study visits, at the invitation of the respective Governments, to the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Romania, Sweden and the United States.

The Secretary-General noted that the programme, established by the Assembly in 1978 at its first special session on disarmament<sup>(76)</sup> to promote expertise in disarmament, especially in developing countries, had trained some 130 government officials from 77 countries in its six years of existence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December 1984, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/63 B without vote.

United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it, inter alia, decided to continue the programme and to increase the number of fellowships from twenty to twenty-five as from 1983,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained one hundred and thirty public officials from seventy-seven countries, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs within their Governments or permanent missions to the United Nations, or representing their Governments at international disarmament meetings,

Recognizing the fact that the programme of studies and activities as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament has continued to expand and intensify,

Believing that existing facilities within the Secretariat for implementing the programme of fellowships can be further utilized to promote expertise in disarmament,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Romania, Sweden and the United States of America for inviting fellows to their countries in 1984 to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To devise a system of evaluating the research papers prepared by the fellows with a view to identifying those that are outstanding;

(b) To publish such papers in an annual issue of an appropriate publication to be devoted to the programme of fellowships on disarmament;

(c) To submit proposals for further utilization of the existing capacity within the Department for Disarmament Affairs for training in the field of disarmament;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the operations of the programme and the implementation of the present resolution.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 39, 41; plenary 97.

Organizational aspects

The Secretary-General, pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(84)</sup> submitted to the Assembly in October 1984<sup>(85)</sup> information received from a number of specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies on activities carried out, within their areas of competence, in contributing to arms limitation and disarmament.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, in its annual overview report for 1983/84,<sup>(86)</sup> noted that the United Nations system was strengthening its co-operation regarding disarmament-related activities through the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions—39/151 E and G—on organizational aspects of disarmament, as recommended by the First Committee.

The Assembly adopted resolution 39/151 E by recorded vote.

Contribution of the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to the cause of arms limitation and disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/188 J of 20 December 1983,

Reaffirming that the United Nations, in accordance with its Charter, has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament and should, accordingly, play a more active role in this field,

Reaffirming also the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral negotiating body,

Stressing again the close relationship between matters concerning international security and disarmament, and the interest in close co-operation between the units in the Secretariat dealing with them,

Convinced that all possible avenues should be effectively utilized for the cause of preventing war, in particular nuclear war, and achieving disarmament,

Reaffirming further the close link existing between disarmament and development,

Convinced that disarmament would contribute to the effective economic and social development of all States, in particular developing countries, by contributing to reducing the economic disparities between developed and developing countries and establishing the new international economic order on the basis of justice, equality and co-operation, and towards solving other global problems,

Convinced also that there is a close relationship between the development of international co-operation in various fields, such as trade, economic development, exploration and use of outer space, environmental protection, health and the prevention of war, in particular nuclear war, and the achievement of arms limitation and disarmament,

Taking note of various activities carried out by the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in pursuance of its resolution 38/188 J as reflected in the note by the Secretary-General,

Noting also the wide range of activities carried out by the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in the framework of the World Disarmament Campaign and in observance of Disarmament Week, reflected in relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Taking note of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-fourth session,

1. Reaffirms its invitation to the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to broaden further their contribution, within their areas of competence, to the cause of arms limitation and disarmament;

2. Recommends that, at periodic meetings of the Secretary-General with the executive heads of the specialized agencies mentioned in paragraph 4 of its resolution 38/188 J, consideration should be given to the elaboration of a plan of co-ordination of the activities of the specialized agencies in the field of disarmament;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including information on relevant activities carried out by the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Contribution of the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to the cause of arms limitation and disarmament: report of the Secretary-General".

General Assembly resolution 39/151 E

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 109-18-14 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/C.1/39/755) by recorded vote (98-17-16), 20 November (meeting 43); 4-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.34/Rev.1); agenda item 65 (h).

Sponsors: Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic.

Abstaining: Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Brazil, China, Denmark, Djibouti, Finland, Greece, Ireland, Liberia, Somalia, Spain, Sweden.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of vote, the United States said that many United Nations agencies had been politicized and had had to neglect their real missions in order to deal with disarmament issues, in which they had no experience or competence. Speaking on behalf of the 10 member States of the European Community, Ireland said they could not support the dilution of the central role of the Department for Disarmament Affairs in co-ordinating disarmament activities within the United Nations system and conducting liaison with governmental and other bodies; they feared that the text would seriously affect the autonomy of the specialized agencies under their respective mandates and that paragraph 2, if implemented, would detract from the Secretary-General's ability to pursue his co-ordinating role in disarmament.

Sweden, while supporting concrete, case-by-case initiatives in the specialized agencies, felt that unqualified recommendations to such bodies to extend their activities to political issues could hamper support for, and work in, those bodies.

On the other hand, the USSR asserted that the specialized agencies would benefit from concrete recommendations with respect to the arms race, arms limitation and disarmament; it expected the appropriate ones to examine their disarmament-related activities during meetings of their executive bodies.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 39/151 G, as recommended by the First Committee.

Review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the primary purpose of the United Nations is to maintain international peace and security,

Reaffirming its conviction that genuine and lasting peace can only be created through the effective implementation of the security system provided for in the Charter of the United Nations and the speedy and substantial reduction of arms and armed forces, by international agreement and mutual example, leading ultimately to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Deeply concerned that the arms race has continued unabated and that world military expenditures are increasing,

Conscious of the need to utilize resources spent on the arms race for constructive development purposes, particularly in the developing countries,

Reaffirming its conviction that the process of disarmament affects the vital security interests of all States and that all States must be actively concerned with and contribute to that process,

Reaffirming further that the United Nations, in accordance with its Charter, has a central role and primary responsibility in the field of disarmament,

Regretting that, especially in recent years, no substantial progress has been made in the field of disarmament,

Recognizing the urgent need for meaningful measures to prevent any erosion of the security of States and initiate the long overdue process of real disarmament, particularly in the nuclear field,

Recognizing further the need for the United Nations, in discharging its central role and primary responsibility in the field of disarmament, to play a more active role in that field in accordance with its primary purpose under the Charter to maintain international peace and security,

Recalling its resolution 31/90 of 14 December 1976 by which it, inter alia, decided to keep the question of the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament under continued review,

1. Invites all States to communicate to the Secretary-General, not later than 15 April 1985, their views and suggestions on ways and means by which the United Nations can more effectively exercise its central role and primary responsibility in the field of disarmament;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit those views and suggestions to the Disarmament Commission before the convening of its substantive session in 1985;

3. Requests the Disarmament Commission, at its substantive session in 1985, to carry out as a matter of priority a comprehensive review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament, taking into account, inter alia, the views and suggestions of Member States on the subject;

4. Requests further the Disarmament Commission to submit its report on the subject, including findings, recommendations and proposals, as appropriate, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session an item entitled "Review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament: report of the Disarmament Commission".

General Assembly resolution 39/151 G

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/39/755) without vote, 20 November (meeting 43); 22-nation draft (A/C.1/39/L.41); agenda item 65.

Sponsors: Bahamas, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of Guinea, Guyana, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, Niger, Singapore, Togo, Uganda, Zaire.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 3-36, 40, 43; plenary 102.

In explanation of position, the United States expressing hope that Member States would use the proposed mechanism to make serious suggestions on how the United Nations might more usefully contribute to disarmament, pointed to the danger of passing numerous, often wordy and contradictory resolutions, and hoped that the current text would begin a move in the correct direction. Argentina expressed doubts about the effectiveness of the procedure outlined in the text, especially the request in paragraph 3 to the Disarmament Commission, with its already heavy agenda, to conduct a comprehensive review of so vast and complex a subject as the United Nations role in disarmament; it also disagreed with the penultimate preambular paragraph for the implication that the United Nations was responsible for the lack of success of disarmament efforts.

Chapter II

Peaceful uses of outer space

The Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, adopted by the General Assembly in 1979, entered into force in July 1984 following its ratification by a fifth State. In December, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/96 by which it invited States that had not become parties to international outer space treaties to do so. It endorsed the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1985 and emphasized the importance of implementing the recommendations of the Second (1982) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82). It urged all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to prevent an arms race in outer space.

The Assembly's 1984 actions were based mainly on the work of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space) (twenty-seventh session, Vienna, Austria, 12-21 June) and that of the Committee's two sub-committees—the Legal Sub-Committee and the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: arms race in outer space. Other administrative and management questions: communications satellite. International Telecommunication Union.

Science, technology and law*Space science and technology

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-first session in New York from 13 to 24 February 1984.<sup>(1)</sup> The Sub-Committee continued to stress the necessity of co-ordination in outer space activities among United Nations organizations. It reiterated that the General Assembly, in 1983,<sup>(2)</sup> had emphasized the urgency of implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82.<sup>(3)</sup> It also continued to consider remote sensing of the Earth by satellites and the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, examined some aspects of the geostationary orbit, and called attention to the progress made in developing various programmes related to space transportation systems. The Sub-Committee's report was reviewed by the Committee on outer space at its June session.<sup>(4)</sup>

UN Programme on Space Applications

During 1984, as part of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications, fellowships were awarded, training courses, workshops and technical meetings were given and technical advisory services were provided.<sup>(5)</sup>

Two one-year fellowships in microwave technology were offered by Austria at the Technical University Graz. Ten fellowships, each for six years, were offered by the USSR for studies in geodesy, cartography, aerial photography and photogeodesy at the Moscow Engineering Institute for Geodesy, Cartography and Air Photography. Three one-year fellowships were offered by the European Space Agency (ESA) at the European Space Research and Technology Centre, Noordwijk, Netherlands; the European Space Research Institute, Frascati, Italy; and the European Space Operations Centre, Darmstadt, Federal Republic of Germany. Negotiations were concluded with Brazil on fellowships in remote sensing technology at the Instituto de Pesquisas Espaciais, São José dos Campos, São Paulo, Brazil.

Two international training courses were given. The ninth United Nations/Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) international training course, held with Italy's co-operation (Rome, 10-28 September), focused on the application of remote sensing to aquaculture and inland fisheries. The course was attended by 20 participants and two observers from 21 countries. It consisted of lectures, case-studies, workshops and practical exercises. Participants received instruction on the practical applications of airborne and satellite remote sensing techniques for mapping of water bodies.

The third United Nations international training course on remote sensing applications to forestry (Moscow, 21 May-9 June) was attended by 24 participants from 24 countries who were technical personnel responsible for their countries' forestry programmes. Expert instruction was provided by FAO, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR. Presentations focused on general aspects of earth resources study; basic principles of space engineering; earth observation systems and methods; characteristics and analysis of images of the environment; applications of air and space images for inventory and evaluation of forest resources; long-term forecast of structures of forests; and methods of thematic forest maps compilation.

Seeking greater co-operation in space science and technology among developed and developing countries, the Programme, in collaboration with the Committee on Space Research and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, sponsored two workshops (Graz, Austria, 25-30 June) focusing on satellite remote sensing of interest to developing countries and on promoting space research in those countries.

In 1982,<sup>(6)</sup> the General Assembly had endorsed the recommendations of UNISPACE-82 that an international space information service be established to direct Member States to data banks and other information sources. In carrying out that mandate, an international meeting of experts on remote sensing information systems (Feldafing and Oberpfaffenhofen, Federal Republic of Germany, 7-11 May 1984) was attended by 56 participants from 24 countries and 11 international organizations, including United Nations specialized agencies. Basic elements of a remote sensing information system were reviewed. Other analysis was of the global status of such systems, emphasizing their specializations, capabilities, accessibility and future directions.

Requests for technical advisory services were received from 47 Member States and, subsequently, consultancy missions were carried out in Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador and Mexico.

The United Nations Expert on Space Applications reported in January 1984 on requests for technical advisory services in basic space sciences, remote sensing, meteorology and communications from countries in the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) region;<sup>(7)</sup> the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) and Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) regions;<sup>(8)</sup> the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) region;<sup>(9)</sup> and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) region.<sup>(10)</sup> A total of 45 countries had responded to a request from the Secretariat for a list of their specific needs; of those, 17 were in the ECA region, 6 in the ECE and ECWA regions, 15 in the ECLA region and 7 in the ESCAP region.

In addition, a regional meeting of experts on space science and technology (Jakarta, Indonesia, 23-25 May)<sup>(11)</sup> brought together individuals responsible for shaping their countries' national/regional policy in space science and technology. Participants expressed concern about the cost of equipment for ground receiving stations and processing and interpretation facilities, the rising cost of satellite data and personnel training. The meeting recommended the establishment of a regional information system for space-related fields and the organization of a regional workshop to set operational and compatible norms and codes for the system.

Voluntary contributions in cash and kind to the Programme were received in 1984 from Austria, Brazil, Cameroon, Chile, China, Cyprus, the Dominican Republic, France, Pakistan and Sweden. The subject of voluntary contributions was dealt with in a September report by the Secretary-General<sup>(12)</sup> on implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82 (see below).

At its June 1984 session, the Committee on outer space endorsed the 1985 Programme as proposed by the Expert and recommended by the Sub-Committee. In December, the General Assembly in resolution 39/96 also endorsed it. Among the activities planned for 1985 were fellowship programmes for in-depth training, technical advisory services to Member States, workshops and training courses, the promotion of greater co-operation in space science and technology, and implementation of recommendations on remote sensing information systems—including the publication of a directory on space information and data services.

Co-ordination in the UN system

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee<sup>(1)</sup> noted the progress achieved in co-ordinating programmes on space activities among organizations within the United Nations system, and continued to stress the need for effective consultations to avoid duplication of activities. The Committee on outer space<sup>(4)</sup> noted the participation in its work and that of its Sub-Committee by United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other international organizations, and expressed appreciation to the Sub-Committee for continuing to stress the necessity of effective consultations and co-ordination.

The sixth Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities, convened by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (Geneva, 1-3 October),<sup>(13)</sup> felt that existing co-ordination machinery was satisfactory and that there were no major questions to be addressed by ACC. It discussed a draft report of the Secretary-General to the Sub-Committee on co-ordination of outer space activities for 1985, 1986 and future years, which was subsequently submitted to the Committee on outer space in November 1984.<sup>(14)</sup> The report listed United Nations organizations and specialized agencies participating in outer space activities, which included remote sensing, communications, meteorology, maritime communications and air navigation. The activities planned ranged from education and training programmes through fellowships, training workshops and summer schools, to expert services and survey missions. The Meeting recommended to ACC that the next such Meeting be held in the latter part of 1985.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 Conference on outer space

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee<sup>(1)</sup> noted that the General Assembly in 1983<sup>(2)</sup> had expressed appreciation to Governments which had made voluntary contributions towards carrying out the recommendations of UNISPACE-82.<sup>(3)</sup> However, since such contributions were not an assured funding source, the Sub-Committee recommended to the Committee on outer space that it request the Assembly to increase the allocation of funds to the Secretariat's Outer Space Affairs Division from the United Nations regular budget.

Pursuant to a 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in September 1984 on implementation of the recommendations of UNISPACE-82.<sup>(12)</sup> He had drawn Member States' attention to the newly mandated and expanded activities of the Programme on Space Applications and asked for their views on making voluntary contributions to carry out the recommendations; as at 10 August, replies had been received from Belgium, Burkina Faso, Cuba, Hungary, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Uganda.

The Sub-Committee requested the Secretariat to invite Member States to submit their views on future projects which would implement the recommendations of UNISPACE-82. The Committee on outer space<sup>(4)</sup> appealed to Member States to reply promptly, in time for the 1985 session of the Sub-Committee. Some delegations agreed with the suggestion about increased funding for the Outer Space Affairs Division. The view was also put forward that the mechanisms of regional co-operation should be studied.

Three groups of experts considered assistance to countries on remote sensing, educational satellites and closer spacing of satellites. The Group of Experts on remote sensing (New York, 21-24 February 1984)<sup>(15)</sup> proposed the establishment of a regularly updated catalogue on satellite remote sensing applications, an archive for remote sensing data and centres to advise developing countries on processing, application, distribution and verification of the data, and the organization of courses about advances in remote sensing.

The Group of Experts on closer spacing of satellites in the geostationary orbit (Geneva, 20-23 March)<sup>(16)</sup> took up the geostationary orbit, the radio frequency spectrum, satellite spacing, coordinating the geostationary orbit, and economic and organizational factors. It found that closer spacing of satellites in orbit was feasible, but that there was no simple solution to the problem of meeting the needs of all countries in an equitable fashion. Further studies of the long-term possibilities for relieving the pressure on the geostationary orbit by use of other geosynchronous orbits should consider particularly the orbital perturbations and consequent station-keeping requirements in such orbits as well as the advances in spacecraft technology that might be required.

The Group of Experts on direct broadcasting satellites for education (Vienna, 12-15 June)<sup>(17)</sup> discussed broadcasting satellites, earth stations, programming, and regional and international co-operation. It concluded that, while the use of satellites for educational purposes was technologically feasible, it was not currently economical for most countries. It said that research contributing to reductions in cost should be encouraged.

Remote sensing of the Earth by satellites

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee<sup>(1)</sup> continued to consider remote sensing of the Earth by satellites. Regarding a list of remote sensing applications,<sup>(18)</sup> which the Secretariat had been compiling, the Sub-Committee reaffirmed that updating of the list should be continued and that more Member States should provide information. The Sub-Committee also reaffirmed that remote sensing from outer space should be carried out with the greatest possible international co-operation, and again emphasized the urgency of providing assistance in the matter to developing countries. It pointed out that FAO, in following up the recommendations of UNISPACE-82, had expanded its remote sensing training activities in co-operation with its members and other United Nations organizations.

The Committee on outer space<sup>(4)</sup> took note of the importance of the compatibility and complementarity of remote sensing systems; of the importance of continuity of data availability in a form compatible with current systems, given the investments made by many countries in ground stations, processing equipment, software, etc.; and of the importance of non-discriminatory and free-of-charge access to information from weather satellites.

Nuclear power sources and safety in spacecraft

The use of nuclear devices as sources of power for spacecraft was considered in 1984 by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee.<sup>(1)</sup> It adopted the report of its Working Group on the subject which it annexed to its report.

The Group (fourth session, New York, 13-17 February) reviewed working papers by Canada, Pakistan and Sweden. It reaffirmed the conclusions it had presented previously, particularly in 1983.<sup>(19)</sup> Some delegations stated that there was a need to establish international criteria on the design and operation of nuclear power sources in outer space. Some declared that space vehicles carrying nuclear reactors in orbit should be used only in orbits with lifetimes of at least 300 years after reactor shut-down, which would be called a nuclear-safe orbit. Space systems carrying reactors with lifetimes of fewer than 300 years after shut-down should include provisions for disposal of power sources by retrieval or reboosting to a higher, nuclear-safe orbit. To be nuclear safe, other delegations felt that orbits with lifetimes of at least 500 or 600 years would be more reasonable and that the disposal system should be highly reliable. Monitoring releases of radioactive material and notification in cases of malfunction also were discussed.

The Group recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to invite Member States to submit their views on radiological risks and environmental impact, safety and reliability, information and emergency planning.

The Committee on outer space<sup>(4)</sup> endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that the item be kept as a priority on its agenda for its 1985 session and that the Working Group continue its work at that session.

Space transportation

Progress made in space transportation systems was considered by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee,<sup>(1)</sup> which particularly noted activities by China, India, Japan, the USSR, the United States and ESA. The Committee on outer space<sup>(4)</sup> endorsed a decision by the Sub-Committee that it continue to consider space transportation systems in 1985.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

Preparatory work by the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) to establish scientific and technical criteria for the World Administrative Radio Conference (WARC) to be held in 1985 and 1988 on the use of the geostationary orbit—in which satellites for communications and other purposes maintain a position approximately 36,000 kilometres above specific points on the Equator—was noted by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee.<sup>(1)</sup> The Sub-Committee recommended that it continue in 1985 to consider the subject and reiterated its request that the study of the physical nature and technical aspects of the geostationary orbit be updated as required.

That decision was endorsed by the Committee on outer space in June.<sup>(4)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

For General Assembly action on space science and technology, see resolution 39/96 below.

Space law

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-third session at Geneva from 19 March to 6 April 1984.<sup>(20)</sup> It considered three substantive items: the legal implications of remote sensing of the Earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles; the possibility of supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; and matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit.

In June,<sup>(4)</sup> the Committee on outer space considered the Sub-Committee's work and recommended that it continue to consider the substantive items in 1985.

Legal aspects of remote sensing from satellites

A working group re-established on 19 March 1984 by the Legal Sub-Committee continued considering until 4 April the legal implications of remote sensing of the Earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles. The group reviewed the 17 draft principles as they appeared at the end of the Sub-Committee's 1983 session,<sup>(21)</sup> and then decided for the second consecutive year to concentrate on principles XI to XV. Those principles concerned State responsibility (XI), access to data by a State whose territory was being sensed (XII), notification to the United Nations of planned sensing activities (XIII), consultation with sensed States (XIV), and the need for prior approval by a sensed State before data on its natural resources could be disseminated by a sensing State (XV). The group devoted most of its time to principles XI, XII and XV. Working papers were submitted by Chile on four of the draft principles, by France on 15 of them, and by Romania on two.

While discussions were not conclusive, the group recommended that work on the draft principles should continue on a priority basis at the Sub-Committee's next session. The draft principles as they appeared at the end of the group's session were set out in an annex to the Sub-Committee's report.

The Committee on outer space in June<sup>(4)</sup> expressed concern at the lack of progress achieved by the Sub-Committee and emphasized the importance of completing the draft principles. The Committee recommended that the item be treated as a priority at the Sub-Committee's 1985 session.

Legal aspects of nuclear power sources in spacecraft

The Legal Sub-Committee re-established on 19 March 1984 a working group to consider supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; the group met between that date and 4 April.<sup>(20)</sup>

Working papers by the Federal Republic of Germany and Sweden and joint working papers by Canada/China/Sweden and Canada/China/the Netherlands/Sweden were submitted to the group and appended to the Sub-Committee's report. The Federal Republic of Germany's paper offered a proposal on repeated and updated notification of the re-entry into the Earth's atmosphere of a nuclear-powered satellite following malfunction. The other papers concerned safety provisions related to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

In the Committee on outer space, some delegations felt that the item should be recognized as a priority and that the time allocated to it in the Sub-Committee be increased. Those delegations also stated that, to make further progress, the Sub-Committee should be given a mandate to draft a set of principles governing the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. Other delegations saw no need to change the basis on which the Sub-Committee had been treating the issue. The Committee recommended that the Sub-Committee continue to consider the question in 1985.<sup>(4)</sup>

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

On 19 March 1984,<sup>(20)</sup> the Legal Sub-Committee established a working group to consider the definition and/or delimitation of outer space, including questions relating to the geostationary orbit. The group, which met from 19 March to 6 April, had before it a working paper by the USSR outlining an approach to the delimitation of airspace and outer space and a joint working paper by Colombia, Ecuador, Indonesia and Kenya containing draft general principles governing the geostationary orbit.

Some delegations stated that a definition and delimitation of outer space was urgent. They suggested that a multilateral agreement be concluded, setting a specific altitude as the upper limit of airspace. Two fundamental questions had to be resolved—first, whether outer space should be viewed as beginning where airspace should be regarded as ending, and second, at what altitude airspace should be regarded as ending. Some delegations expressed support for the USSR paper which envisaged setting the boundary between airspace and outer space at an altitude not exceeding 110 kilometres above sea-level. Others declared that a definition and delimitation was premature. They maintained that there was no current scientific basis for placing a boundary between airspace and outer space at any particular altitude; that development and application of the law of outer space had proceeded satisfactorily without such a definition; and that it would be undesirable to adopt an arbitrary boundary which could create difficulties and impede the development of space technology.

With respect to the geostationary orbit, some delegations said that the United Nations should establish appropriate general principles and ITU should be responsible for technical arrangements. Some of them emphasized that the geostationary orbit lay on the equatorial plane and that the equatorial countries had special rights and responsibilities in relation to segments of the orbit superjacent to their territories; others disagreed.

The view was put forward that the following principles should underlie the legal régime of the geostationary orbit: the relevant provisions of the 1966 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies<sup>(22)</sup> would apply; the orbit could not be the subject of national appropriation; placing of a geostationary satellite in outer space did not vest a State with any property rights to its stationing position; equitable access to the orbit by different States or groups of States should be ensured; the needs of developing States should be considered; and States should co-operate within ITU in placing geostationary satellites.

Other delegations stated that a legal régime for the geostationary orbit was not necessary. They declared that ITU was currently considering the question of access and equitable use, and that WARC in 1985 and 1988 would review it. They said that the working group should not conclude its discussions until those conferences had been held.

The Committee on outer space<sup>(4)</sup> recommended that the Sub-Committee continue considering the definition and delimitation of outer space and the geostationary orbit in 1985.

General Assembly resolution 39/96

14 December 1984 Meeting 100 Adopted by consensus

Approved by SPC (A/39/713) by consensus, 6 December (meeting 49); draft by Austria, for SPC working group (A/SPC/39/L.33); agenda item 72.
Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: SPC 39-45, 47, 49; plenary 100.

Following approval of the resolution, Colombia, Egypt (on behalf of the Group of 77), France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States said they had joined in the consensus to strengthen the work of the Committee on outer space and its sub-committees; however, they felt that the text did not take into account their various concerns.

The German Democratic Republic and Mexico voiced concern about the growing militarization of outer space.

Agreement concerning the Moon and other celestial bodies

The Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, adopted by the General Assembly in 1979,<sup>(23)</sup> entered into force on 11 July 1984, the thirtieth day following the day of deposit of the fifth instrument of ratification—by Austria on 11 June.<sup>(24)</sup> The Agreement had previously been ratified by Chile, the Philippines and Uruguay in 1981 and by the Netherlands in 1983. Other States which had signed but had not ratified the Agreement were France, Guatemala, Morocco and Romania (1980), Peru (1981) and India (1982).

Among other things, the 21-article Agreement stressed that the Moon should be used for peaceful purposes, provided for the establishment of an international régime for the exploitation of the Moon's resources, regarded as the common heritage of mankind, and prohibited its use for any form of military activity.

Chapter III

Law of the sea

The United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea was widely recognized as a significant contribution to the progressive development of international law and one of the most outstanding achievements of the United Nations, the Secretary-General stated in 1984. Adopted in 1982, it established rules governing virtually all uses of the oceans, including navigation, fisheries, mineral resource development and scientific research.

Signatories to the Convention rose to 159 during 1984, while the number of ratifications increased to 14.

The Preparatory Commission, charged with setting up the two main organs under the Convention—the International Sea-Bed Authority and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea—continued its work with meetings at Kingston, Jamaica, and at Geneva.

By resolution 39/73, adopted in December, the General Assembly called on States to safeguard the Convention's unified character and to desist from undermining or defeating its purpose. The Assembly also called on States that had not done so to consider ratifying the Convention.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: naval armaments. Transport: maritime transport. Natural resources: marine resources. Food: fisheries management and development. Environment: marine ecosystems. International Court of Justice: continental shelf delimitation (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Tunisia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta); maritime boundary delimitation (Canada and the United States).

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea*Signatures and ratifications

The number of signatories to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea totalled 159 as at 9 December 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> when the period for signature closed. The Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea had adopted the Convention in April 1982,<sup>(2)</sup> with the General Assembly welcoming that action in December 1982.<sup>(3)</sup>

Signatories in 1984 were: Argentina, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Central African Republic, Comoros, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, European Economic Community, Guinea, Italy, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malawi, Nicaragua, Niue, Qatar, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, Spain, Swaziland and Switzerland.

The number of ratifications to the Convention—which was to enter into force 12 months after receipt of the sixtieth instrument of ratification or accession—increased during 1984 to 14 with the addition of Cuba, the Gambia, the Ivory Coast, the Philippines and Senegal.

A letter from India to the Secretary-General of 8 October<sup>(4)</sup> forwarded the final communiqué of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 1-5 October). They reiterated their support for the Convention and reaffirmed that sea-bed resources could only be lawfully explored and exploited in accordance with it; reiterated their opposition to any mini-convention or other parallel régime inconsistent with the Convention and declared that any such arrangement would be illegal; and encouraged those who had not done so to sign and ratify the Convention.

Developments relating to the Convention

The Secretary-General, pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(5)</sup> submitted a report in November 1984<sup>(6)</sup> on developments relating to the Convention and on the implementation of the 1983 resolution. He stated that it had been widely recognized as one of the international community's most important achievements. Though not in force, the Convention was having a stabilizing effect on the law of the sea through the rationalization of different uses of the oceans and the reconciliation of States' competing interests. It was also having an impact on the attitudes of States towards marine affairs at national and international levels. Nationally, new trends in State practice were developing as States adjusted their policies and legislation to the new legal order for the oceans; at the same time, international organizations concerned with marine affairs were assessing the Convention's impact on their activities.

The report was divided into two parts: the first part contained an overview of the Convention's effect on State practice and on international organizations, and information on other law of the sea developments; the second provided information on the activities of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea (see p. 111).

Most States were adopting national policy and legislation consistent with the Convention, but current State practice with regard to marine affairs was far from integrated. The predominant approach had been a sectoral one; that is, policies tended to relate to such marine sectors as fisheries, oil and gas, or shipping and transport, independently of each other. Inter-sectoral relationships—for example, those between marine and non-marine sectors—were rarely addressed.

The Convention provided a foundation for an integrated national approach to marine-related activities, the Secretary-General pointed out.

Trends in national policy compatible with the Convention were developing in regard to a number of issues. One such trend concerned the question of the nature and breadth of maritime zones under national jurisdiction. The Convention allowed for a territorial sea of up to 12 nautical miles, a further 12 miles of contiguous zone and an exclusive economic zone of 200 miles. Eighty-three States had established a claim to a territorial sea of 12 miles in breadth, while 24 had claimed breadths beyond 12 miles; 60 countries had established exclusive economic zones of up to 200 miles.

Currently, 21 countries had fisheries zones extending up to 200 miles. The essential distinction between an exclusive economic zone and a fisheries zone lay in the extent of jurisdiction retained by the coastal State and the resources over which that jurisdiction might be exercised. Under the Convention, the exclusive economic zone covered all living and non-living resources; fisheries zones pertained only to living resources or to certain species of them.

A few States—France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States—had enacted legislation on the international sea-bed. The legality of such legislation had been challenged in international forums by other States.

The need for orderly regulation of ocean space could best be demonstrated by noting the international conflicts directly related to the question of the uses of the sea. Among them were the mining of the Red Sea; the questions of the Strait of Hormuz and of the Beagle Channel; the Canada/United States disputes over Georges Bank, the Beaufort Sea and the North-West Passage; the Nicaragua/United States dispute regarding the mining of Nicaraguan waters; the Solomon Islands/United States dispute over fishing rights; the Canada/France dispute over the Saint Pierre and Miquelon Isles; the Colombia/Venezuela dispute over the Gulf of Venezuela; and the China/Philippines/Viet Nam dispute over the Spratley and Paracels archipelagoes. (For further information on these topics, refer to the SUBJECT INDEX.)

Several international organizations examined the impact of the Convention on their activities. They included the International Maritime Organization (IMO), the International Civil Aviation Organization, the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the International Hydrographic Organization and the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs.

The Secretary-General's report also reviewed developments in such matters covered by the Convention as peaceful uses of the sea-bed, maritime law, environmental law, legislative developments under UNEP programmes, fisheries management, marine scientific co-operation and rescue at sea, as well as development of regional and subregional co-operation. Several meetings were held in 1984 on these matters.

The United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships (Geneva, 16 July–3 August) considered an international agreement concerning conditions under which vessels should be accepted on national shipping registers (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter V).

The Joint Maritime Commission of the International Labour Office (Geneva, September) took up aspects of labour law related to seafarers (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

The IMO Marine Environment Protection Committee (London, September) adopted amendments to the 1973 International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships,<sup>(7)</sup> as modified by the 1978 Protocol thereto.<sup>(8)</sup> An international conference convened by IMO (London, April/May) adopted two protocols to amend the 1969 International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage<sup>(9)</sup> and the 1971 International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage<sup>(10)</sup> (see PART TWO, Chapter XIV).

The Eighth Consultative Meeting of Contracting Parties to the 1975 Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter (London, February) took action on the report of the Scientific Group on Dumping, including establishing criteria for the allocation of substances in annexes I and II of the Convention and guidelines for the application of annex III.

In its annual overview report for 1983/84,<sup>(11)</sup> the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination declared that the Convention had provided new opportunities for co-operation. The foremost considerations in that respect should be adoption of a unified approach to law of the sea matters and a uniform interpretation and application of the Convention. The complexity of the Convention underscored the importance of maintaining close contact among international organizations and the possibility that regular consultations might be required.

For General Assembly action with regard to the Convention, see resolution 39/73 below.

Preparatory Commission

The Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea met twice during 1984.<sup>(6)</sup> It held its second session at Kingston from 19 March to 13 April, with 88 members and 14 observers attending; and a meeting at Geneva from 13 August to 5 September, when 93 members and 16 observers were present.

Priority was given to adopting rules for the registration of pioneer investors. Three principal issues were addressed: those relating to conflicts arising from the overlapping of areas claimed; the nature of the group of technical experts to assist the Commission in examining applications; and the confidentiality of data and information. The first reading of the draft rules for the registration of pioneer investors and on confidentiality of data and information was completed, and several rules were provisionally adopted.

Applications for registration as pioneer investors had been received from France, India, Japan and the USSR. The Commission decided that, following the adoption of the rules for registration, it would register the first group of applicants at its third session in 1985.

During its Geneva meeting, the Commission was informed that an intergovernmental agreement regarding sea-bed matters had been concluded on 3 August 1984 among eight Governments: Belgium, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States. The Commission was assured that the agreement aimed at avoiding conflicts due to overlapping claims and that it was fully compatible with the Convention. In response, the Group of 77 developing countries and the Group of Eastern European States reiterated their opposition to instruments based on national legislation and reciprocal agreements purporting to regulate sea-bed activities; they asserted that the carrying out of such activities outside the Convention was illegal. The Chairman announced that an understanding had been reached on a procedure and timetable for conflict resolution for the first group of applicants.

At its Kingston session, the Commission discussed the establishment of the Authority, including its staffing. It concluded that the Authority should be cost-effective with a lean staffing structure; the Secretariat was asked to prepare a working paper on the subject. Working papers prepared for the session covered draft rules for the registration of pioneer investors and the confidentiality of data; proposed amendments to the registration rules; draft rules of procedure for the Authority's Assembly; and a proposal by Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom on draft work programmes for the four Special Commissions.

Special Commissions

The Commission's four Special Commissions considered the work allotted to them. Special Commission 1, charged with studying the possible adverse effect of sea-bed mining on developing land-based producer States, had begun to examine relevant data. Special Commission 2 on the Enterprise, the operational arm of the Authority, examined measures necessary to bring the Enterprise into operation. Special Commission 3, mandated to draft regulations for sea-bed mining, took up a first set of regulations dealing with the application for approval of plans of work. Special Commission 4 prepared recommendations regarding establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea.

Developing land-based producer States

Special Commission 1 held seven meetings during the Preparatory Commission's Kingston session. In studying the problems of developing land-based producer States, the Chairman of Special Commission 1 said in a statement to the plenary Commission,<sup>(12)</sup> it was necessary to know which minerals would be produced from the sea-bed; how minerals from that new source would affect existing land-based sources; what those effects would be; the problems that developing States would encounter in connection with them; and what might be done to minimize those problems. Special Commission 1 considered whether it should deal with each of the 50 or so minerals contained in sea-bed polymetallic nodules or limit itself to the minerals which appeared to be economically exploitable; it agreed that it should concentrate on copper, nickel, cobalt and manganese, while keeping in view trends regarding the other minerals. It had before it a Secretariat background paper which presented an overview of the topic along with possible approaches to it and pertinent statistics.

The Enterprise

Special Commission 2 was mandated to take all necessary measures for the early operation of the Enterprise, which was to carry out sea-bed activities, as well as the transport, processing and marketing of recovered minerals. The Chairman of Special Commission 2 informed the Preparatory Commission<sup>(13)</sup> that its discussions had made clear that current economic indicators called for a pragmatic approach to planning for the Enterprise's early operation. Two points were emphasized: first, though all operational options should be studied, a joint venture appeared to be the most feasible; second, initial operations might mature quickly under favourable conditions. Special Commission 2, which held seven meetings during the Preparatory Commission's Kingston session, requested the Secretariat to prepare studies on a charter for the Enterprise and on a model joint venture.

Sea-bed mining code

Special Commission 3, mandated to prepare rules, regulations and procedures for the exploration and exploitation of the international sea-bed "Area" (the sea-bed beyond national jurisdiction), held eight meetings during the Preparatory Commission's Kingston session. Addressing that body, the Chairman of Special Commission 3 said<sup>(14)</sup> that it had adopted a work programme under which the use of terms and the rules, regulations and procedures for prospecting, exploration and exploitation, and the scope of their applicability, would be elaborated. The subject of partnerships or consortia was discussed, particularly whether it was necessary to establish objective criteria for assessing their nationality or the control exercised over them, or to leave these matters to the sponsoring State or States.

International Tribunal

Special Commission 4, which met seven times during the Preparatory Commission's Kingston session, was mandated to prepare recommendations for the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea to be submitted to a meeting of States parties. Speaking to the Preparatory Commission, the Chairman of Special Commission 4 said<sup>(15)</sup> that it had discussed the composition of the Tribunal and its Chambers, the different officials and the precedence that would be applied in the Tribunal and the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber, and the manner of selecting Chamber members. The access of entities other than States to the Tribunal and to the Chamber and the question of advisory opinions also were examined. The Secretariat was requested to prepare draft procedural rules for the Tribunal, using the Rules of the International Court of Justice as a guide.

The site for the permanent seat of the Tribunal in the Federal Republic of Germany was inspected in September (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

For General Assembly action concerning the work of the Preparatory Commission, see resolution 39/73 below.

Functions of the Secretary-General

Office of the Special Representative

The Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General was responsible for executing the central programme on law of the sea affairs and was the core office of the Organization for the law of the sea.<sup>(6)</sup>

Under its mandate to assist States in the Convention's application, the Office acted as the repository for charts and co-ordinates establishing baselines and limits of maritime zones. The Office was engaged in rationalizing the various scales of charts and different methods used for the drawing of baselines and listing of co-ordinates.

The legislative history of the Convention's provisions had been collated and analysed to provide the negotiating background to the text of the Convention; the analyses would be an aid to interpreting the treaty provisions and to its implementation by Governments in national policy and legislation.

The reference library, which was begun at an early point in the Conference, continued to be updated. A selected bibliography on the law of the sea, the first volume in the series "Law of the Sea Studies" under the publication programme, was submitted for printing; it was to be supplemented or revised annually. A comprehensive collection of national legislation on marine affairs, organized by country and subject area, had been supplemented and analysed and extracts were circulated to delegations in the Law of the Sea Bulletin.

Work also continued on obtaining, extracting and evaluating materials on other aspects of State practice in the implementation of the Convention. Among the materials were bilateral or regional arrangements, declarations made when signing or ratifying the Convention, statements made in the records of the Conference or Sea-Bed Committee, and records of other intergovernmental meetings relevant to the Convention. A computerized data storage system was also being set up.

United Nations agencies and bodies co-operated in collecting materials for the preparation of annotations to the Convention.

Requests for information, advice and assistance from the Office grew perceptibly in 1984, the main users being Governments, government agencies, intergovernmental organizations and academic institutions. For example, the Office responded to inquiries on the implications of signing or ratifying the Convention. Moreover, the Office had been requested to give advice on updating, supplementing or modifying national maritime legislation to ensure its conformity with the Convention.

The development of the fellowship programme centred on that set up in 1980 in honour of the late Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe of Sri Lanka,<sup>(16)</sup> who had served as Chairman of the Sea-Bed Committee and then as President of the Conference. Voluntary contributions received indicated that one fellowship each year, beginning in 1985, could be awarded.

Publications in 1984 included the Law of the Sea Bulletin, which covered developments related to the Convention.

The Special Representative and a Secretariat team visited the Federal Republic of Germany from 11 to 14 September to discuss a site proposed at Hamburg for the permanent seat of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea.

For the Assembly's action concerning the Secretary-General's functions, see resolution 39/73 below.

Pioneer investors

The Secretary-General submitted a report to the Preparatory Commission in February 1984,<sup>(17)</sup> summarizing polymetallic nodule pre-production activities. The report covered the exploration phase (information needs, prospecting, determination of the area for exploration) and matters to be considered in a work plan (a definition of reserves, the development of the mining system, processing systems, plant siting, environment protection).

In notes dated 14 February,<sup>(18)</sup> 22 August<sup>(19)</sup> and 23 August 1984,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the Commission that applications for registration as pioneer investors had been received from India, Japan and France, respectively.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1984, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/73.

Law of the sea.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/66 of 3 December 1982 and 38/59 A of 14 December 1983, regarding the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea,

Taking note of the increasing and overwhelming support for the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, as evidenced, inter alia, by the one hundred and fifty-nine signatures and fourteen ratifications as at the closing of the Convention for signature,

Seriously concerned at any attempt to undermine the Convention and the related resolutions of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea,

Recognizing that, as stated in the third preambular paragraph of the Convention, the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole,

Convinced that it is important to safeguard the unified character of the Convention and related resolutions adopted therewith and to refrain from any action to apply their provisions selectively, in a manner inconsistent with their object and purpose,

Noting the increasing needs of countries, especially developing countries, for information, advice and assistance in the implementation of the Convention and in their developmental process for the full realization of the benefits of the comprehensive legal régime established by the Convention, as also recognized by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1983/48 of 28 July 1983,

Noting also that the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea has decided to hold its third regular session at Kingston from 11 March to 4 April 1985 and its summer meeting in 1985 at Geneva, Kingston or New York as it may decide,

Taking note also of activities carried out in 1984 under the major programme on marine affairs, set forth in chapter 25 of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989, in accordance with the report of the Secretary-General as approved in General Assembly resolution 38/59 A,

Recalling its approval of the financing of the expenses of the Preparatory Commission from the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking special note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in response to paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 38/59 A,

1. Recalls the historic significance of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea as an important contribution to the maintenance of peace, justice and progress for all peoples of the world;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the large number of signatures affixed to the Convention as well as at the number of ratifications deposited with the Secretary-General;

3. Calls upon all States that have not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention at the earliest possible date to allow the effective entry into force of the new legal régime for the uses of the sea and its resources;

4. Calls upon all States to safeguard the unified character of the Convention and related resolutions adopted therewith;

5. Calls upon States to desist from taking actions which undermine the Convention or defeat its object and purpose;

6. Expresses its appreciation for the effective execution by the Secretary-General of the central programme in law of the sea affairs under chapter 25 of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989;

7. Further expresses its appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General in response to General Assembly resolution 38/59 A and requests the Secretary-General to continue the activities outlined therein, special emphasis being placed on the work of the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, including the implementation of resolution II of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea;

8. Approves the programme of meetings of the Preparatory Commission for 1985;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to assist States in the implementation of the Convention and in the development of a consistent and uniform approach to the new legal régime thereunder, as well as in their national, subregional and regional efforts towards the full realization of the benefits therefrom and invites the agencies and bodies within the United Nations system to co-operate and lend assistance in these endeavours;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on developments relating to the Convention and on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Law of the sea".

General Assembly resolution 39/73

Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: Turkey, United States.

Abstaining: Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Peru, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

The United States recalled that it had not signed the Convention because part XI governed exploration and exploitation of sea-bed resources in the area beyond national jurisdiction, which ran contrary to its policy; it would continue withholding its pro rata share of the United Nations annual assessment for the regular budget pertaining to the Preparatory Commission and earmarked for part XI.

Several others which had not signed the Convention explained their abstentions. The Federal Republic of Germany felt that it would have to be modified substantially to establish a generally acceptable sea-bed mining régime. Israel held that the Convention contained provisions introduced for political considerations extraneous to the law of the sea. Peru noted that differences between its Constitution and the Convention's provisions made it impossible for it to subscribe to the Convention. The United Kingdom pointed out that, since it had not signed, it must be clear that there were many aspects of the resolution which it could not support.

Japan regretted that there had been criticism of the eight-nation provisional understanding on sea-bed matters concluded in August (see above).

Chapter IV

International peace and security

International peace and security and ways to strengthen it continued to be a major concern of the United Nations in 1984.

In November, the Assembly adopted the Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace (resolution 39/11) and, in December, it urged further action to implement its 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace (39/157).

The Assembly called for measures to prevent further deterioration of the international situation (39/155). It recommended that the Security Council give priority consideration to strengthening collective security (39/154) and encouraged the Council to intensify its efforts to prevent international conflict (39/156). The Assembly expressed regret that the Ad Hoc Committee on implementing the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations had not been constituted (39/158) and renewed the mandate of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations (39/97). Further preparations were made for the International Year of Peace (1986) and an appeal made for contributions to the Voluntary Fund (39/10).

Acting on a new item on State terrorism, the Assembly demanded that no State take action aimed at military intervention and occupation, forcible change in or undermining of the socio-political system of States, destabilization and overthrow of their Governments (39/159).

The Secretary-General, in his annual report to the Assembly (p. 3), declared that most of all a reaffirmation was needed of the Charter concept that threats to peace override ideological or other differences and required that all States agree and co-operate. He emphasized that peace-keeping was an expression of international political will and, if that will were weak, uncertain, divided or indecisive, peace-keeping operations would be correspondingly weakened.

Maintaining international peace and security was also a main topic considered by the Special Committee on the Charter (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament. Human rights: human rights and international security. Legal aspects of international political relations: peaceful settlement of disputes between States; good-neighbourliness between States; non-use of force in international relations; draft Code of Offences against peace and security. International organizations and international law: strengthening the role of the United Nations.

Declarations on international peace and security*Implementation of the 1970 Declaration on international security

Following its yearly review of the implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly, in December 1984, adopted resolution 39/155 in which it called on States, particularly the permanent members of the Security Council, to take a number of actions aimed at preventing the further deterioration of the international situation.

Communications. In relation to the review of the implementation of the Declaration, letters were received from Member States throughout 1984.

On 12 June,<sup>(2)</sup> Hungary forwarded an appeal by the States parties to the 1955 Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance to the member States of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization concerning the joint consideration of the proposal presented by the Warsaw Treaty States in their 1983 declaration<sup>(3)</sup> and the possibility of concluding a treaty on the mutual renunciation of the use of armed force and the maintenance of peaceful relations.

Czechoslovakia and Poland, in a letter of 15 October,<sup>(4)</sup> transmitted a joint statement signed at Warsaw following a meeting of their Foreign Ministers (6 and 7 September) in which they declared it necessary for States to cease interfering in the internal affairs of others, to resume negotiations aimed at ending the arms race, to give up attempts to undermine the realities shaped in Europe after the Second World War and to return to friendly, mutually beneficial co-operation. An extract from a 19 November report of the Central Committee of the Romanian Communist Party, concerning the international situation, was transmitted by Romania on 29 November;<sup>(5)</sup> it stated the conviction that peoples could change the course of events, avert world war and nuclear catastrophe and impose disarmament and world peace. The German Democratic Republic, in a letter of 5 December,<sup>(6)</sup> transmitted a communiqué on a meeting of the Committee of Foreign Ministers of the Warsaw Treaty States (Berlin, 3 and 4 December), expressing concern at the persistence of dangerous tensions in Europe and the world and declaring that international relations must be guided back to détente.

The USSR forwarded a number of communications on the subject of United States foreign policy. Four letters contained statements by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party: one of 26 January<sup>(7)</sup> transmitted the replies by Y. V. Andropov to questions from Pravda (USSR), published on 25 January, while letters of 10 April<sup>(8)</sup> and 4 September<sup>(9)</sup> gave the replies of K. U. Chernenko to the same newspaper which were issued on 9 April and 2 September respectively. Mr. Chernenko's replies to questions from The Washington Post dated 17 October were transmitted in a letter of 22 October.<sup>(10)</sup> A 15 August statement by TASS on the United States President's informal radio remarks was forwarded in a letter of 16 August.<sup>(11)</sup>

On 2 March,<sup>(12)</sup> Mongolia stated that China was continuing to put forward pre-conditions for the normalization of its relations with the USSR; among them was a matter entirely within the competence of Mongolia—a demand, which Mongolia rejected, for the withdrawal from Mongolia of USSR military units.

On 8 October,<sup>(13)</sup> India forwarded the final communiqué adopted by the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 1-5 October), which noted with concern that policies of intervention and interference and the threat or use of force were continuing to be pursued against many countries, with dangerous consequences for peace and security.

Other 1984 letters received under this subject heading dealt with general or nuclear disarmament (see Chapter I of this section) or specific situations, such as: Afghanistan, Central America, China-Viet Nam dispute, Ethiopia-Somalia, Iran-Iraq, Lao People's Democratic Republic-Thailand, and international security of the Mediterranean countries (see SUBJECT INDEX).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/155.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security",

Noting with concern that the provisions of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security have not been fully implemented,

Noting further with concern that the United Nations system of collective security has not been used effectively,

Recalling the duty of States not to intervene in the internal or external affairs of any State, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting the provisions of the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States,

Recalling the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes,

Alarmed by increasing tensions in international relations and the heightened confrontations that characterize the relations between the great Powers, accompanied by the policy of competition for spheres of influence, domination and exploitation in more and more parts of the world, the escalation to new levels of the arms race, particularly in nuclear weapons and the danger of its extension into outer space, all of which pose a grave threat to global peace and security,

Profoundly disturbed by the increasing recourse to the use or threat of use of force, military intervention and interference, aggression and foreign occupation, by the aggravation of existing crises in the world and the outbreak of new ones, by the continued infringement of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of countries, by the denial of the right to self-determination of peoples under colonial and foreign occupation and by attempts to characterize erroneously the struggles of peoples for independence and human dignity as falling within the context of East-West confrontation, thus denying them the right to self-determination, to decide their own destiny and realize their legitimate aspirations, by the persistence of colonialism, racism and apartheid supported by the growing use of military force, by the intensification and expansion of the scope and frequency of manoeuvres and other military activities conceived within the context of big-Power confrontation and used as means of pressure, threat and destabilization, and by the lack of solutions to the world economic crisis in which the deeper underlying problems of a structural nature have been compounded by cyclical factors and which has further aggravated the inequalities and injustices in international economic relations,

Aware of the increasing interdependence among nations and of the fact that in the present-day world there is no alternative to a policy of peaceful coexistence, détente and co-operation among States on the basis of equality, irrespective of their economic or military power, political and social systems or size and geographic location,

Stressing the need for the main organs of the United Nations responsible for the maintenance of peace and security, particularly the Security Council, to contribute more effectively to the promotion of international peace and security by seeking solutions to unresolved problems and crises in the world,

Bearing in mind that the year 1985 will mark four decades since the United Nations was established on the conclusion of the Second World War, which had brought untold sorrow to mankind, and should provide an oc- casion to review the performance of the United Nations system over the past four decades with a view to enhancing its role and effectiveness towards the achievement of peace, security, justice and development.

Urging all States to take effective measures during the year of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations to contribute towards the amelioration of international political and economic relations in the interest of lasting world peace and the progress of mankind,

Noting that the year 1985 will also mark the fifteenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and calls upon all States to contribute effectively to its implementation;

2. Urges once again all States to abide strictly, in their international relations, by their commitment to the Charter of the United Nations and, to this end:

(a) To refrain from the use or threat of use of force, intervention, interference, aggression, foreign occupation and colonial domination or measures of political and economic coercion which violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of other States as well as the permanent sovereignty of peoples over their natural resources;

(b) To refrain from supporting or encouraging any such act for any reason whatsoever and to reject and refuse recognition of situations brought about by any such act;

3. Calls upon all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take immediate steps aimed at:

(a) Promoting and using effectively the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter;

(b) Halting effectively the arms race and achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control and, to this end, to start serious, meaningful and effective negotiations with a view to implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to fulfilling the priority tasks listed in its Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document;

4. Invites all States, in particular the major military Powers and States members of military alliances, to refrain, especially in critical situations and in crisis areas, from actions, including military activities and manoeuvres, conceived within the context of big-Power confrontation and used as a means of pressure on, threat to and destabilization of other States and regions;

5. Urges all States, in particular the permanent members of the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to prevent the further deterioration of the international situation and, to this end:

(a) To seek, through more effective utilization of the means provided for in the Charter, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elimination of the focal points of crisis and tension which constitute a threat to international peace and security;

(b) To proceed without delay to a global consideration of ways and means for bringing about a revival of the world economy and for the restructuring of international economic relations within the framework of the global negotiations with a view to establishing the new international economic order;

(c) To accelerate the economic development of developing countries, particularly the least developed ones;

(d) To implement urgently measures agreed upon to ameliorate the critical economic situation in Africa which is the result, inter alia, of persistent inclement climatic factors;

6. Calls upon all States, particularly the members of the Security Council, to take appropriate and effective measures to promote the fulfilment of the objective of the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger which the nuclear capability of South Africa constitutes to the African States, in particular the front-line States, as well as to international peace and security;

7. Emphasizes the role that the United Nations has in the maintenance of peace and security and in economic and social development and progress for the benefit of all mankind;

8. Reiterates that the current deterioration of the international situation requires an effective Security Council and, to that end, emphasizes the need to examine mechanisms and working methods on a continued basis in order to enhance the authority and enforcement capacity of the Council, in accordance with the Charter;

9. Emphasizes that the Security Council should consider holding periodic meetings in specific cases to consider and review outstanding problems and crises, thus enabling the Council to play a more active role in preventing conflicts;

10. Reiterates the need for the Security Council, in particular its permanent members, to ensure the effective implementation of its decisions in compliance with the relevant provisions of the Charter;

11. Considers that respect for and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms in their civil, political, economic, social and cultural aspects, on the one hand, and the strengthening of international peace and security, on the other, mutually reinforce each other;

13. Welcomes the continuation of the process within the framework of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe and expresses the hope that the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, the continent with the greatest concentration of armaments and military forces, will achieve significant and positive results;

14. Reiterates its call upon great Powers to abandon policies of confrontation which have hitherto given rise to tension and mistrust and to engage without any further delay in genuine and constructive negotiations in good faith, taking into account the interests of the entire international community;

15. Reaffirms that the democratization of international relations is an imperative necessity enabling, under the conditions of interdependence, the full development and independence of all States as well as the attainment of genuine security, peace and co-operation in the world, and stresses its firm belief that the United Nations offers the best framework for the promotion of these goals;

Implementation of the 1978 Declaration on societies and peace

The Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1981 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(14)</sup> submitted in October 1984 a report with a later addendum<sup>(15)</sup> on the implementation of the 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace.<sup>(16)</sup> A total of 20 countries and 15 United Nations organizations had responded to his request for information. The Secretary-General pointed out that several specific measures were proposed in the replies which, if endorsed by the Assembly, might be undertaken by the United Nations prior to a further review of the Declaration's implementation. Among them were the legal and political codification of the concept of the right to life in peace, a report on ways to counter the danger of nuclear war, and a report by a panel of peace research experts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, following the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/157.

Germany said it abstained because it felt the text contained State promotion of ideological directions which might curtail the rights of private organizations; given the fact that few Member States had replied to the Secretary-General's request, only a short procedural text on the question was justified. Supporting these views, the Federal Republic of Germany regretted the absence of any meaningful reference to the concept of human rights, while the Netherlands declared that the notion pertaining to the positive moulding of human consciousness could prejudice the exercise of individual freedom.

Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace

In a letter of 11 July,<sup>(17)</sup> Mongolia requested the inclusion in the agenda of the 1984 General Assembly session of an item on the right of peoples to peace. Annexed to the letter were an explanatory memorandum, which stated that adoption by the Assembly of an appropriate document would make a substantial contribution to the support of the peoples' struggle to achieve a peaceful life, and a draft declaration, which was the basis for a resolution adopted by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 November, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/11.

Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Right of peoples to peace",

Convinced that a proclamation of the right of peoples to peace would contribute to the efforts aimed at the strengthening of international peace and security,

1. Approves the Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the widest dissemination of the Declaration to States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations as well as other appropriate organizations.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace

Aware that in the nuclear age the establishment of a lasting peace on Earth represents the primary condition for the preservation of human civilization and the survival of mankind,

Recognizing that the maintenance of a peaceful life for peoples is the sacred duty of each State,

2. Solemnly declares that the preservation of the right of peoples to peace and the promotion of its implementation constitute a fundamental obligation of each State;

3. Emphasizes that ensuring the exercise of the right of peoples to peace demands that the policies of States be directed towards the elimination of the threat of war, particularly nuclear war, the renunciation of the use of force in international relations and the settlement of international disputes by peaceful means on the basis of the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Appeals to all States and international organizations to do their utmost to assist in implementing the right of peoples to peace through the adoption of appropriate measures at both the national and the international level.

Ireland, speaking for the 10 members of the European Community, explained that their abstention was because there was no agreed legal basis for the assertions in the Declaration and because they questioned how the text could be reconciled with the right to self-defence and would relate to human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Philippines stated that the Declaration merited greater thought, more careful study and more balanced formulation.

Albania said it had not participated in the vote since it believed the draft did not deal with the main aspects of the problem and did not mention the two imperialist super-Powers, the USSR and the United States, whose rivalry for hegemony was detrimental to peace and security.

Implementation of the security provisions of the UN Charter

The Secretary-General, in response to a December 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(1)</sup> reported in a September 1984 note with a later addendum<sup>(2)</sup> that eight Governments had replied to his request for their views on implementing the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. The Assembly had requested that their views be transmitted to the Ad Hoc Committee which was to have been established under the 1983 resolution. However, the Secretary-General said, the Committee had not been formed because of differing opinions regarding the distribution of its seats.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/158.

Implementation of the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/119 of 16 December 1982 and 38/191 of 20 December 1983 on the implementation of the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming that the primary function of the United Nations, in particular through the Security Council, is the maintenance of international peace and security,

Stressing that the purposes of the United Nations can be achieved only under conditions in which States comply fully with their obligations assumed under the Charter,

Alarmed over the growing tendency of States to resort to the use of force, intervention and interference in the internal affairs of other States, thus ignoring the Charter and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Concerned that the Security Council has not always been able to take decisive action for the maintenance of international peace and for resolving international problems,

Recognizing that fundamental approaches to genuine security include, inter alia, the strengthening of the Charter system of collective security,

Conscious of the important role with which the Security Council is entrusted in enhancing the collective security provisions of the Charter for the promotion of peace and security in the world in accordance with the Charter,

Regretting that the provisions of the Charter relating to collective security measures have not been fully implemented,

Taking into account, in this connection, the reports of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth sessions,

Also taking into account the note by the President of the Security Council dated 12 September 1983,

Recalling the Political Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983,

Also recalling the views of the Governments of the five Nordic countries on the strengthening of the United Nations,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General on the implementation of the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security",

1. Regrets that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Implementation of the Collective Security Provisions of the Charter of the United Nations which the General Assembly decided to establish by its resolution 38/191 has not been constituted;

2. Requests the President of the General Assembly, as a matter of urgency, to undertake consultations with the regional groups to appoint fifty-four Member States to constitute the membership of the Ad Hoc Committee on the basis of equitable geographical representation and including the permanent members of the Security Council;

3. Requests the Secretary-General urgently to invite those Member States that have not yet done so to communicate to him not later than 30 April 1985 their views and comments on the matter and to transmit those views and comments to the Ad Hoc Committee as soon as possible;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee, in considering the matter, to take due account of the views and comments of Member States, including their recommendations, and to submit a progress report to the Security Council for its consideration and comments and to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, and a final report to the Assembly at its forty-first session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Implementation of the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security".

Cuba and France explained their negative votes, declaring that the proposed Ad Hoc Committee would duplicate and encroach upon the mandate of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization.

On the other hand, Australia said it supported all efforts to enhance the collective security provisions of the Charter.

Albania stated that it had not participated in the vote because of its reservations on some formulations in the draft and because the draft did not reveal the causes of world insecurity—the super-Powers, other imperialist Powers and reactionary forces.

Strengthening international security

The President of the Security Council issued a note in September 1984<sup>(3)</sup> and recalled a 1983 note<sup>(4)</sup> on Council discussions to enhance its effectiveness in maintaining international peace and security (see p. 372).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1984, the General Assembly, having considered the 1983 and 1984 notes by the Council President, adopted two resolutions on strengthening international security. Both actions were taken following the recommendation of the First Committee.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/154 without vote.

Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/73 H of 15 December 1983, Profoundly concerned over the situation of the international community today in circumstances of tensions and conflicts long continuing between nations, denoting a marked decline in the respect for the Charter of the United Nations and the basic elements of international law,

Gravely concerned over the increasing manifestations of various forms of international terrorism,

Considering that the main organ of the United Nations which under the Charter has the essential characteristic of rendering effective its decisions is the Security Council,

Bearing in mind that the notes by the President of the Security Council dated 12 September 1983 and 28 September 1984, although referring to the subject of collective security, indicate no concrete steps taken or to be taken to implement the relevant provisions of the Charter,

Taking due account of the need that, on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, specific endeavours should be devoted by the international community to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations required by the Charter,

1. Recommends that the Security Council give priority consideration to the need for strengthening the system of collective security provided for in the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/154

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/39/758) without vote, 7 December (meeting 62); draft by Cyprus (A/C.1/39/L.85/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 68 (a). Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 1st Committee 56-62; plenary 102.

While it did not wish to prevent adoption of the draft by consensus, the Netherlands felt that nothing should be done to diminish the Security Council's responsibilities under the Charter for maintaining international peace and security. Turkey stated that it would not have participated if the draft had been put to a vote.

Also on 17 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/156 without vote.

Strengthening of international security: common security

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all nations in promoting an effective approach to security, which will seek the common security of all nations,

Firmly believing that the mind of man can prevail over the weapons of war,

1. Notes with appreciation the relevant information on the consultations in the Security Council, provided by the President of the Council in his notes dated 12 September 1983 and 28 September 1984;

2. Welcomes the important considerations contained therein;

3. Reaffirms, in particular, as the prerequisite for peace, the need for strict compliance by all Member States with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and with the Charter itself, as well as the obligation of States to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council;

4. Expresses its awareness of the respective functions and specific powers of the Security Council and the other principal organs of the United Nations;

5. Welcomes the serious, comprehensive discussions that have already taken place;

7. Stresses the primary responsibility of the Security Council, acting on behalf of the international community, in the collective maintenance of peace and security;

8. Encourages the Security Council, subject to its own priorities, to intensify its efforts in the prevention of international conflict and the peaceful settlement of disputes by envisaging, if possible, a more systematic series of meetings under the agreed five main aspects mentioned in paragraph 2 of the note of the President of the Council dated 12 September 1983;

9. Welcomes further information from the Security Council on the progress achieved, at periodic intervals, as deemed appropriate.

State terrorism

Taking up the question of terrorism under a new agenda item, the General Assembly, in 1984, condemned policies and practices of terrorism in relations between States.

Communications. An item on the inadmissibility of the policy of State terrorism and any actions by States aimed at undermining the socio-political system in other sovereign States was included in the agenda of the General Assembly at its 1984 session at the request of the USSR. In making that request, in a 27 September letter,<sup>(1)</sup> the USSR proposed that the Assembly condemn action aimed at forcibly changing or undermining the socio-political system of sovereign States, and destabilizing and overthrowing their legitimate Governments, and demand that States refrain from initiating, or terminate any ongoing, military action to such end. A draft resolution which became the basis for a resolution adopted by the Assembly was annexed to the letter.

The Assembly also had before it the text of a Declaration on International Terrorism—issued at the London Economic Summit (7-9 June 1984)—as transmitted by the United Kingdom in a letter of 12 June.<sup>(2)</sup> The participating heads of State and Government noted with concern, among other things, the ease with which terrorists operated as well as the increasing involvement of States and Governments in acts of terrorism, including the abuse of diplomatic immunity; they expressed their resolve to combat terrorism by every possible means.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/159 by recorded vote.

Inadmissibility of the policy of State terrorism and any actions by States aimed at undermining the socio-political system in other sovereign States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of any State, as well as the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own form of government and to choose their own economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion and constraint of any kind whatsoever,

Expressing its profound concern that State terrorism has lately been practised ever more frequently in relations between States and that military and other actions are being taken against the sovereignty and political independence of States and the self-determination of peoples,

Noting that all this seriously endangers the independent existence of States and the possibility of ensuring peaceful relations and mutual trust between them and leads to a sharp exacerbation of tensions and a growing threat of war,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all peoples freely to determine their own destiny and the course of their development,

Convinced that the interests of maintaining peace require that relations between States, regardless of ideologies, should be based on strict observance of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as on generally recognized principles and norms of international relations, inter alia, renunciation of the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal and external affairs of States, permanent sovereignty of States and peoples over their natural resources and self-determination and independence of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist régimes,

Categorically rejecting all concepts, doctrines or ideologies intended to justify actions of States aimed at undermining the socio-political system of other States,

1. Resolutely condemns policies and practices of terrorism in relations between States as a method of dealing with other States and peoples;

2. Demands that all States take no actions aimed at military intervention and occupation, forcible change in or undermining of the socio-political system of States, destabilization and overthrow of their Governments and, in particular, initiate no military action to that end under any pretext whatsoever and cease forthwith any such action already in progress;

3. Urges all States to respect and strictly observe, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the sovereignty and political independence of States and the right of peoples to self-determination, as well as their right freely, without outside interference and intervention, to choose their socio-political system and to pursue their political, economic, social and cultural development.

General Assembly resolution 39/159

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 117-0-30 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/39/761) by recorded vote (101-0-29), 7 December (meeting 62); draft by USSR (A/C.1/39/L.2/Rev.2); agenda item 143.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

The text was twice revised by the sponsor, taking into account amendments proposed, and later withdrawn, by two groups—one<sup>(3)</sup> by Belgium, Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, and the other<sup>(4)</sup> by the Bahamas, Cameroon, Costa Rica, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, Papua New Guinea, Singapore, and Trinidad and Tobago.

The text as adopted incorporated such proposals by the first group as inserting the first preambular paragraph, and replacing "State terrorism" with "policies and practices of terrorism in relations between States". Proposals by the second group, also reflected in the final text, concerned deleting from the end of the sixth preambular paragraph "in contradiction to the United Nations Charter and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States", and inserting in paragraph 2 "military intervention and occupation".

Many delegations speaking in explanation of vote said the concept of State terrorism had not yet been clearly defined. Norway said no satisfactory attempt had been made to define it in the text, while Sweden was convinced that the principles laid down in the United Nations Charter excluded any practices that might be understood by the concept. Similarly, Finland said a political solution could not be reached in the absence of a legal framework within which to work.

Colombia felt the text should have condemned all violent actions regardless of the political characteristics of either victim or perpetrator. Turkey said the question of terrorism should be dealt with as a whole, while the text covered only one aspect of the phenomenon; Senegal agreed, adding that it also had reservations about the appropriateness of the First Committee considering the question, which lacked clear definition. Greece voted in favour because it saw improvements in the revised draft, despite the legally unresolved problem of definition. Ghana supported the text on the understanding that the concept would be further refined.

Chile abstained, saying that the presentation and treatment of the question showed that the Assembly was faced with a political rather than a technical and legal exercise, involving elements of confrontation between the nuclear Powers and their alliances. Sharing that view, Brazil rejected what it termed the constant attempts at utilizing the United Nations as an arena for rivalry and confrontation between the two main military alliances. Guyana said that the Assembly's consideration of State terrorism was timely.

Pakistan voted positively, despite a number of shortcomings it saw in the draft, and on the understanding that all forms of foreign interference in the affairs of States were condemned and prohibited. Democratic Kampuchea expressed particular support for the principles expressed in the first preambular paragraph and in paragraph 2; it questioned, however, whether the text's sponsor was sincere in its belief or was trying to force the international community to accept its military intervention and that of its allies as a fait accompli. In a similar vein, China, voting in favour despite reservations about the ambiguity of the phrase State terrorism, hoped the sponsor would set an example by matching words with deeds.

Cuba said that, despite objections by others to including, in a draft on State terrorism, reference to States' permanent sovereignty over their natural resources or the right to choose their socio-political system on the pretext that they were not contained in the Charter, those concepts, as well as prohibition of terrorism as State policy, were contained in the 1981 Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States.<sup>(5)</sup>

International Year of Peace (1986)

The Secretary-General, responding to a December 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted a report in September 1984 with a later addendum on preparations for the International Year of Peace (1986).<sup>(2)</sup> As at 30 October, 26 States had made proposals regarding the Year and two had pledged contributions. The Secretary-General opened a trust fund of voluntary contributions for the Year with the first pledge of $2,000 from Costa Rica. He noted that consultations had been held with the heads of 23 United Nations organizations and that the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Geneva, 26-30 March) had discussed the participation of those organizations in the programme of the Year. Three briefings were organized for non-governmental organizations in New York, Geneva and Vienna, and a list of the organizations that had expressed interest in the activities of the Year was annexed to the Secretary-General's report. Among the proposed activities were joint research, debates, statements, seminars, publications, television and radio programmes, contests, and the issuance of commemorative stamps and a peace medal.

Also annexed to the report was a draft information programme for the Year which was to include pamphlets, a film, radio specials, a conference of non-governmental organizations, and in-depth briefings on the themes of international peace and security and peace-keeping and peace-making.

Chapter V

Africa

In 1984, the United Nations considered a number of political questions concerning Africa and continued to focus on ways to abolish the apartheid policies of South Africa (see below, under "South Africa and apartheid").

The Security Council, the General Assembly, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries), the Commission on Human Rights, and the Commission on Transnational Corporations were the main bodies concerned with apartheid and the related matter of South Africa's relations with neighbouring countries. Regarding those relations, they condemned South Africa's aggression against and occupation of Angola, which South Africa had invaded and bombed in early January. The Security Council condemned South Africa for its premeditated and unprovoked bombing and for its use of Namibia for launching attacks against Angola, demanded that it withdraw, requested States to assist Angola in its self-defence, and reaffirmed that Angola was due appropriate compensation. In December, the Assembly condemned South Africa for its aggression and its economic blockade against Lesotho. Earlier, Lesotho and South Africa had informed the Secretary-General about their respective positions in regard to a proposed non-aggression pact. As for Mozambique, it notified the United Nations in March that it had signed a non-aggression agreement with South Africa.

Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya continued to disagree. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya represented the Government of Chad, while the Sudan complained about aggression by the Jamahiriya, which it denied. The Council considered the Sudan's complaint in March.

Ethiopia and Somalia disputed the cause of military activity in two areas in Somalia. Somalia alleged that Ethiopian forces were in its territory, but Ethiopia denied that it was involved in the area, where, it said, Somalia was confronting resistance from local opposition.

The Assembly reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the Indian Ocean island of Mayotte, appealed for increased contributions to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa which provided scholarships for students from that region, and called for continued co-operation with OAU.

South Africa and *apartheid

In 1984, various United Nations bodies took action on ways to end apartheid—the system of laws imposed by South Africa to enforce racial separation. Those bodies were particularly alarmed about South Africa's "new constitution", which went into effect in September. Under the constitution, the black majority continued to be excluded from Parliament. Three chambers of Parliament were created—for whites, for "coloureds" (South Africa's term for those of mixed race) and for the people of Asian origin. Whites would dominate the Government, owing to their numbers in the Parliament and to the legislative powers of their parliamentary body.

The Security Council adopted two resolutions dealing with the new constitution and its consequences. By resolution 554(1984) of 17 August, the Council declared the constitution null and void. Following protests against the new Government, the Council, by resolution 556(1984) of 23 October, condemned the continued massacres of the oppressed people of South Africa, as well as the arbitrary arrest and detention of leaders and activists of mass organizations. The General Assembly, in resolution 39/2 of 28 September, also rejected the new constitution and declared that the wave of violence and killing of demonstrators that followed was the consequence of its imposition.

As it had done since South Africa adopted its apartheid system, the Assembly repeatedly condemned that Government and called for an end to those policies, including brutal oppression, repression, bantustanization, violence and armed force against the black people and their forced removal from their homes. On 13 December, the Assembly adopted seven resolutions on the issue. By resolution 39/72 A, it urged the Security Council to consider, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, in particular, to halt military and nuclear co-operation with the régime, to impose an oil embargo, to reinforce the arms embargo, and to prohibit financial loans to and new investments in South Africa. The Assembly condemned collaboration with South Africa by Governments, in particular by certain Western States and Israel, reiterated that the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) were the authentic representatives of the people of South Africa and called for assistance to them, and reaffirmed the legitimacy of the armed struggle by the oppressed people.

The Assembly, in resolution 39/72 B, approved the future programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the main Secretariat body dealing with apartheid matters, as recommended by the Committee. In resolution 39/72 C, the Assembly condemned the collaboration between Israel and South Africa and demanded that Israel terminate all such collaboration, particularly in the military and nuclear fields. Further drafting work on the proposed International Convention against Apartheid in Sports was called for in resolution 39/72 D. In resolution 39/72 E, the Assembly called on the Secretariat, Governments, information media, non-governmental organizations and individuals to promote public action in support of the struggle against apartheid. It called for contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa in resolution 39/72 F. In resolution 39/72 G, the Assembly demanded that South Africa release political prisoners and appealed to States to take measures to increase pressure on South Africa, such as cessation of investments in and loans to South Africa, an end to the promotion of trade with it, cessation of military and police co-operation, and an end to nuclear collaboration.

The Security Council took action in resolution 558(1984) adopted in December to strengthen the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa by requesting States not to import arms, ammunition and military vehicles made there.

In regard to political prisoners, the Council, having been alerted that the South African authorities had rejected an appeal against the death sentence imposed on Malesela Benjamin Maloile, a member of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), by resolution 547(1984) of 13 January, called on the authorities to commute the death sentence.

The United Nations continued to take action to limit activities of transnational corporations (TNCs) operating in South Africa. The Commission on TNCs was the main body following those activities, and, having received the Commission's report, the Economic and Social Council commended those that had terminated investments in South Africa and those Governments which were attempting to end activities of their TNCs there. The Council decided to begin preparations in 1984 for public hearings on TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia.

Other bodies which considered various aspects of apartheid were the Commission on Human Rights, the Council for Namibia, the Committee on colonial countries, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports. The United Nations Environment Programme considered the impact of South Africa's apartheid and bantustan policies on the environment (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVI).

General aspects

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly and the Security Council adopted unanimously on 17 October,<sup>(1)</sup> reviewed developments in South Africa since its previous report,<sup>(2)</sup> described its work in promoting the international campaign against apartheid, and made recommendations for further action. Following is a summary of the Committee's work and related developments; fuller information can be found under the relevant subject headings throughout this chapter.

During the year, the South African Government continued its bantustan policy by forcing millions of blacks to live in certain designated areas. It also imposed a new constitution, which provided limited political rights for coloureds—those of mixed-race descent—and Asians but excluded the indigenous African majority, comprising over 70 per cent of the population, from any political rights. At the same time, the Committee stated, South Africa announced some sham "reforms" or "changes" in apartheid with a view to diverting world attention and dividing the black people. Although South Africa signed security agreements with Mozambique and Swaziland, it continued its aggressive acts against other countries of the region but failed to halt the armed struggle of ANC. Stating that propaganda about the peaceful intentions of South Africa or its willingness to make positive changes inside the country was contrary to reality, the Committee called for more decisive action against South Africa, for efforts to dissuade its allies from collaboration with it, and for assistance to the national liberation movements and to front-line States.

The resistance to apartheid was demonstrated in various ways—by strikes by black workers, particularly in the mining, metal and automobile industries; school boycotts by hundreds of thousands of black students; and mass actions by community organizations against community councils and against increases in rent and electricity charges. The Government reacted by detaining, torturing or intimidating political leaders, including leaders of the United Democratic Front, the Azanian People's Organization, the Natal Indian Congress and the Southern Africa Catholic Bishops' Conference. During the year, political arrests and detentions increased, and police banned meetings, raided offices of black organizations, confiscated documents and attacked students at protest meetings and demonstrations. South Africa continued to apply its system of "pass laws", which limited the movement of blacks outside their assigned areas. Blacks arrested for violations of those laws in 1984 numbered 163,000.

The Committee continued to draw the attention of the international community to the situation in southern Africa resulting from South Africa's policies—not only apartheid but also its aggression against neighbouring States. It repeatedly urged the Security Council to take effective measures, including mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, to force South Africa to end those policies. It noted that the apartheid régime had been encouraged to undertake those acts by the protection afforded by major Western Powers, first of all by the United States. Those countries continued to support and collaborate with the régime in military, economic, sports and other areas, and to invest in and provide loans to South Africa. Reiterating its past recommendations for comprehensive mandatory sanctions against the régime, the Committee mentioned, in particular, the cessation of all military and nuclear co-operation, an oil embargo, the termination of trade with and investments in South Africa, and a sports and cultural boycott. It urged the United Nations and other international organizations to refrain from relations with that country, and called on the General Assembly to condemn again all collaboration with South Africa by Governments, TNCs and institutions.

In encouraging the widest possible international action against apartheid in pursuance of Assembly resolutions, the Committee paid particular attention to promoting public action by trade unions, youth and students, and other organizations engaged in the struggle against apartheid. It recommended that the Assembly appeal to the international community to act against the régime and its collaborators, commend organizations for their actions against apartheid, appeal to Governments and organizations to support anti-apartheid movements, and ensure the necessary resources for the Committee to expand its campaign against apartheid. It also gave special attention to the plight of women and children under apartheid.

Another area of special concern—the collaboration between Israel and South Africa—was the subject of a special report,<sup>(3)</sup> issued as an addendum to the Committee's annual report to the Assembly.

The Committee believed that the developments of the past year had further confirmed that South Africa had no intention of abandoning apartheid. Recalling that the Assembly had recognized the right of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement to resort to all means at their disposal, including armed struggle, the Committee welcomed the growing support of the armed struggle by ANC and other organizations and undertook to publicize its progress. In view of this, it recommended that the Assembly reaffirm the legitimacy of the armed struggle, hold the South African Government responsible for any violence and conflict, and urge Governments and organizations to support the oppressed people and their liberation movements—ANC and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC)—in their just struggle.

Communications. During the year, the Secretary-General received a number of communications regarding the apartheid policies of South Africa. The Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid also forwarded several texts which were issued as General Assembly and Security Council documents; some contained declarations adopted by international conferences organized by the Committee under its 1984 work programme (see p. 173).

Two communiqués, issued at the Conference on Southern Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 4 and 5 September), were forwarded on 3 October.<sup>(4)</sup> The Conference was organized by the Socialist International Committee on Southern Africa and the Socialist Group of the European Parliament and was attended also by representatives of the front-line States, ANC and the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) of Namibia. The parties condemned South Africa's occupation of Angola, called for withdrawal of its troops, rejected the United States policy of "constructive engagement" towards South Africa, called for comprehensive, binding international sanctions against that country and pledged to support ANC.

In a statement adopted on 16 March,<sup>(5)</sup> the Committee against Apartheid, pointing out that South Africa was imposing a new racist constitution to dispossess the African majority, affirmed that the international community had a duty to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions and that it must demand the release of political prisoners. It also condemned collaboration with the régime and called for increased assistance to the liberation movements, the front-line States and Lesotho.

Similar calls were made in communications from other bodies throughout the year. These included: the final communiqué and resolutions of the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference (Casablanca, 16-19 January), transmitted by Morocco on 13 March;<sup>(6)</sup> resolutions of the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, 6-11 December 1983), forwarded by Bangladesh on 15 March;<sup>(7)</sup> resolutions of the fortieth ordinary session of the Council of Ministers of OAU (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 27 February-5 March), forwarded by the Upper Volta on 18 April;<sup>(8)</sup> the final communiqué of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 1-5 October), transmitted by India on 8 October;<sup>(9)</sup> and resolutions of the seventy-second Inter-Parliamentary Conference (Geneva, 29 September), forwarded by the Sudan on 16 October.<sup>(10)</sup>

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa waged by all means at their disposal, including armed struggle, for the exercise of their right to self-determination and for the establishment of a society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed, will enjoy equal and full political and other rights and participate freely in the determination of their destiny,

Commending the growing unity, courage and heroism of the oppressed people of South Africa in resisting apartheid and in their struggle for the establishment of a non-racial society in a united South Africa and the opposition to the "new constitution",

Taking note of the heightening and sustained militant struggle waged by the people of South Africa in the political, labour, student and other fields, and the role played by the national liberation movements in intensifying the struggle, particularly the stepping-up of the armed struggle,

Strongly convinced that peace and stability in southern Africa require the total eradication of apartheid and the exercise of the right of self-determination by all the people of South Africa, irrespective of race, colour, sex or creed,

Gravely concerned over the attempts of the Pretoria régime to establish hegemony over southern Africa, and the encouragement given to it by certain Western States,

Deploping the action of certain Governments in Western Europe which received the Prime Minister of the Pretoria régime in May and June 1984 and thereby assisted its efforts to break out of its isolation,

Reaffirming that the elimination of apartheid constitutes a major objective of the United Nations,

Considering that all the organizations in the United Nations system have a duty to make a maximum contribution, within their mandates, to the international campaign against apartheid,

Highly commending the work of the Special Committee against Apartheid in combating the manoeuvres of the Pretoria régime and its collaborators, in informing world opinion of the situation in southern Africa and in encouraging the widest support to the struggle for liberation in South Africa,

Recalling that the racist régime of South Africa has consistently defied the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, and violated its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Considering that, in the light of General Assembly resolutions 38/11 of 15 November 1983 and 39/2 of 28 September 1984 and Security Council resolutions 554(1984) and 556(1984), no recognition can be accorded to the so-called "new constitution" of 1984,

Reaffirming its conviction that comprehensive and mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter, universally applied, are the most appropriate and effective means by which the international community can assist the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and discharge its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Deploping the attitude of those Western permanent members of the Security Council that have so far prevented the Council from adopting comprehensive sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Considering that opposition by certain Western States to sanctions or other effective action against the Pretoria régime has encouraged it to defy the United Nations, escalate violence and repression against the oppressed people in South Africa and commit acts of aggression and destabilization against independent African States,

Recognizing the urgent need for the termination of military, nuclear, economic and technological collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, as well as the cessation of sports, cultural and other relations with South Africa,

Recognizing that the policies and actions of certain Western Powers and Israel are the main obstacles which have frustrated international efforts for the elimination of apartheid,

Deploping, in particular, the actions of those States, in particular the Western States and Israel, which have continued and increased their political, economic and other collaboration with the Pretoria régime,

Gravely concerned that the racist régime of South Africa has continued, despite the mandatory arms embargo instituted by the Security Council in resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, to obtain military equipment and ammunition, as well as technology and know-how, to develop its armaments industry and to acquire nuclear-weapon capability,

Expressing alarm at the growing violation of the arms embargo as well as the continued nuclear collaboration by some Western States and Israel with the apartheid régime,

Convinced of the urgent need to ensure the effective implementation of embargoes imposed or policies declared by most oil-producing and oil-exporting countries with regard to the supply of their oil and oil products to South Africa and to secure a mandatory oil embargo against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Gravely concerned over the activities of those transnational corporations that continue to collaborate with the apartheid régime and of those financial institutions that have continued to provide loans and credits to South Africa and over the failure of the States concerned to take effective action to prevent such collaboration,

Condemning, in particular, the actions of those transnational corporations that continue, through their collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, to enhance its military and nuclear capabilities,

Expressing great appreciation to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in particular anti-apartheid and solidarity movements, trade unions and religious bodies, as well as city and other local authorities, that have contributed to the international campaign against apartheid,

Commending athletes, entertainers and others who have demonstrated solidarity with the oppressed people of South Africa by complying with the boycotts of South Africa,

1. Endorses the annual report of the Special Committee against Apartheid;

2. Commends the declarations of conferences organized or co-sponsored by the Special Committee to the attention of all Governments and organizations;

Strongly condemns the apartheid régime of South Africa for its continued brutal oppression, repression and violence, including the recent use of the armed forces against the black people, its illegal occupation of Namibia and its repeated acts of aggression, subversion and terrorism against independent African States;

4. Condemns the policy of "bantustanization" and the so-called "new constitution" designed to dispossess the African majority of its inalienable rights and to deprive it of citizenship, as well as the continuing forced removals of black people;

5. Again declares that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and non-fragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution of the explosive situation in South Africa;

6. Proclaims that the United Nations and the international community have a special responsibility towards the oppressed people of South Africa, their liberation movements and all those engaged in the legitimate struggle for the elimination of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society ensuring human rights and fundamental freedoms for all the people of the country, irrespective of race, colour, sex or creed;

7. Demands that all troops of the racist régime of South Africa be immediately and unconditionally withdrawn from Angola, that an end be put to the illegal occupation of Namibia and that South Africa respect fully the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of independent African States;

8. Further demands that the racist régime of South Africa pay full compensation to Angola, Lesotho and other independent African States for the damage to life and property caused by its acts of aggression;

9. Declares that the situation in South Africa constitutes a grave threat to international peace and security and that the racist régime of South Africa is guilty of acts of aggression, breaches of the peace and constant violations of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

10. Urges the Security Council to consider urgently measures to ensure the total exclusion of the racist régime of South Africa from the United Nations and its family of organizations;

11. Again requests the Security Council to give special attention to action, under Chapter VII of the Charter, against South Africa and, in particular:

(a) To consider comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa, with priority for measures to ensure the total cessation of all military and nuclear co-operation with the racist régime of South Africa and to institute a mandatory oil embargo against South Africa;

12. Requests all States to refrain from any action that would provide to or imply legitimacy for the Pretoria régime;

13. Condemns all collaboration with the Pretoria régime by Governments, transnational corporations and institutions;

14. Condemns the policies of certain Western States and Israel and of their transnational corporations and financial institutions that have increased political, economic, military and nuclear collaboration with the racist minority régime of South Africa despite repeated appeals by the General Assembly;

15. Rejects and denounces any alliance or co-operation with the Pretoria régime on grounds of strategic or any other interests;

16. Appeals to all States to respect and support the aspirations of the people of South Africa to attain freedom and independence, and to contribute to peace and international co-operation;

17. Calls upon all Governments that have not yet done so:

(a) To terminate all military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa and to take all necessary measures for preventing corporations and enterprises under their jurisdiction from any such collaboration;

(b) To take effective legislative and other measures to ensure the implementation of an oil embargo against South Africa and to take action against corporations and tanker companies involved in the illicit supply of oil to South Africa;

(c) To accede to or ratify the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

(d) To support sports, cultural, academic, consumer and other boycotts of South Africa;

18. Again proclaims that the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity are the authentic representatives of the people of South Africa in their just struggle for national liberation;

19. Recognizes the right of the oppressed people and their national liberation movements to resort to all the means at their disposal in their resistance to the illegitimate racist minority régime of South Africa;

20. Reaffirms, in particular, the legitimacy of the armed struggle by the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movements, and holds the Pretoria régime responsible for any violence and conflict;

Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949;

22. Strongly supports the movement against conscription into the armed forces of the racist régime of South Africa;

24. Urges all Governments and organizations to provide maximal moral, political and material assistance to the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, namely, the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, and all those struggling for freedom in South Africa in uncompromising opposition to apartheid;

25. Decides to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, namely, the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, to maintain offices in New York in order to participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee against Apartheid and other appropriate bodies;

26. Calls upon the international community and all countries to render concrete support and assistance to the front-line and other neighbouring States in the region to enable them to provide adequate security for refugees and to continue to resist the mounting aggression, subversion and economic pressure of the Pretoria régime;

27. Calls upon all specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other international organizations that have not yet done so, to exclude the Pretoria régime forthwith;

28. Urgently calls upon the International Monetary Fund to terminate credits or other assistance to the racist minority régime of South Africa;

29. Again requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to refrain from extending to South Africa any facilities which may assist it in its nuclear plans;

30. Recommends that, in connection with the observance of the International Youth Year in 1985, Governments and organizations give special attention to the role of youth and students in the struggle against apartheid and effectively observe the anniversary of the Soweto uprising on 16 June 1985;

33. Requests and authorizes the Special Committee against Apartheid to intensify its activities for the total isolation of the racist régime of South Africa, for promoting comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa and for mobilizing public opinion and encouraging public action against collaboration with South Africa.

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Botswana, Fiji, Finland, Greece, Ivory Coast, Lesotho, Malawi, New Zealand, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Spain, Sweden.

Prior to acting on the draft resolutions on the question of apartheid, the Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 81 to 33, with 18 abstentions, a motion by Iran that the item be considered as an important question under Article 18 of the Charter and that all draft resolutions and amendments relating thereto should require a two-thirds majority for adoption.

With regard to the text that became resolution 39/72 A, separate recorded votes, by request of the United States, were taken on a preambular paragraph and two operative paragraphs. All three were rejected.

By the preambular paragraph, the Assembly would have expressed grave anxiety at the increased collaboration by the United States with South Africa in pursuance of its policy of "constructive engagement", which had encouraged the régime to defy the United Nations and the international community, entrench apartheid, intensify repression and escalate aggression against African States; the vote was 57 to 54, with 31 abstentions. The operative paragraphs would have had the Assembly strongly condemn the United States constructive engagement policy (the vote was 59 to 57, with 26 abstentions) and appeal to Governments and organizations to persuade the United States and others concerned to desist from their policies of collaboration with the apartheid régime and to co-operate in international action for the elimination of apartheid (62 to 47, with 29 abstentions).

In explanation of vote, many speakers expressed general reservations about the series of seven resolutions on apartheid, which are set out below, as well as specific objections to particular resolutions.

Speaking about the resolutions in general, many States objected to what they described as arbitrary or unfair naming of specific Member States in connection with relations with South Africa. Among those expressing such reservations were Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Ecuador, Finland, speaking for the five Nordic countries, the Federal Republic of Germany, Honduras, Ireland, speaking for the 10 member countries of the European Community (EC), Malawi, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Panama, Portugal, Sri Lanka, Togo, Turkey and the United Kingdom. Barbados opposed selective name-calling on the grounds that it tended to exacerbate a situation rather than to conciliate. Similarly, the Federal Republic of Germany said that was why it supported amendments aimed at deleting the names of countries in resolutions. Israel believed that its being singled out again for specific condemnation in connection with the apartheid question was based on patent falsehoods.

Taking a different approach, Iran said that, when it observed a change by the United States towards the South African indigenous population, it would propose deleting all phrases condemning the United States for its co-operation with South Africa.

A group of countries—Australia, Austria, Finland for the five Nordic countries, Ireland for the EC members, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Portugal—expressed reservations about the endorsement of the use of armed struggle to achieve a solution. Finland affirmed that the United Nations had above all the obligation to encourage peaceful solutions to international problems.

Some countries were opposed to isolating South Africa completely. Belgium believed that a widespread boycott would have effects contrary to those being sought by the international community and that the maintenance of channels of communication with South Africa was necessary in order to bring pressure that would lead to a peaceful dismantling of apartheid structures. Similarly, Ireland (for the EC members) considered that to cut off all relations would be counter-productive to the Assembly's objective—the total eradication of apartheid. Portugal did not believe that completely isolating South Africa could bring about the fundamental changes that the United Nations was seeking. The Netherlands agreed, and added that it had a two-track policy aimed at increasing the political and economic pressure on South Africa while using existing channels of communication to encourage peaceful change. In the view of the United Kingdom, the most effective way to help dismantle apartheid was not through isolation, comprehensive sanctions or other measures which would entrench South Africa's stance and have serious consequences for neighbouring countries, but through dialogue and communication.

Several countries had reservations about the Assembly's request that the Security Council consider mandatory sanctions. Austria believed that the Assembly should respect the prerogatives of the Council with regard to coercive measures and therefore could not support provisions which might be understood as an obligation to curtail relations with South Africa. Similarly, Finland (for the Nordic countries) said that, because of their strict adherence to the Charter, they reserved their position with regard to formulations which failed to take into account that only the Council could adopt decisions binding on Member States. The United States was opposed to destroying the tools for building a future for black South Africans through a policy of economic sanctions that would deprive them of the wages, skills and organizational base needed in their quest for justice.

Botswana, Lesotho and Mozambique said they were not in a position to support the imposition of economic sanctions against South Africa.

Ireland said it would favour imposing a series of graduated sanctions such as a mandatory oil embargo and a ban on foreign investment, but added that they would have to be imposed by the Council, which alone had the power to adopt mandatory sanctions on behalf of the international community.

In regard to the recommendations that South Africa be excluded from the United Nations, Australia, Finland, for the Nordic countries, and Ireland stressed that they upheld the principle of universal membership in the United Nations.

Australia, Finland (for the Nordic countries) and the Netherlands did not support the proclamation of the national liberation movements as the authentic representative of the South African people.

In addition to those reservations applying to the seven resolutions in general, States brought up objections to specific provisions in resolution 39/72 A.

Austria, Burma, Finland, Japan, Peru and Sri Lanka were opposed to singling out particular countries for condemnation. A group of States expressed reservations about the language of the text, describing it as inappropriate, unbalanced, biased or intemperate. The Bahamas, Barbados, Burma, Ecuador, New Zealand, Turkey and the United Kingdom made such comments. The Bahamas said the text had several conflicting elements and selective naming of States detracted from its efficacy because of its lack of balance. Ecuador said it did not agree with certain selective paragraphs which were worded inappropriately and would not bring about a solution to the problem; it preferred instead an approach that would bring about an understanding rather than heightening existing tensions. Turkey had reservations on specific references to Western countries mentioned individually and as a group.

Finland, Ireland and Peru objected to any endorsement, directly or indirectly, of armed struggle. In regard to the proposal for sanctions against South Africa, Ireland and the Netherlands said they did not favour a total severance of contacts. Ireland said total isolation would only have the effect of abandoning black South Africans still further to the whim of the South African authorities, who, without the international community's reprobation, would be even freer from restraints on their treatment of the black majority, and the outside world would have increased difficulty in continuing to monitor the situation. The Netherlands feared that total isolation and comprehensive sanctions would gravely exacerbate existing tensions and inflict suffering on the people of South Africa and neighbouring States, but it believed that the selective, mandatory sanctions mentioned in paragraph 11 pointed the way to possible future collective action against South Africa. Ireland also supported many of the specific measures in that paragraph.

Finland and Ireland supported universal membership in the United Nations and therefore objected to the Assembly's recommending that South Africa be excluded from the Organization. Finland said that paragraphs 10, 11 and 27 were contradictory to that principle and not in accordance with the provisions of the Charter on the mandate of the Security Council.

Malawi said it had abstained in the vote due to historical and geographical factors over which it had no control, and it appealed to South Africa to establish constructive dialogue with its black majority. Japan said its negative vote was because it opposed paragraphs 10, 14, 17 to 20 and 27 to 29.

In addition to resolution 39/72 A, the Assembly adopted six other resolutions on specific measures to eliminate apartheid. It endorsed the work programme of the Special Committee against Apartheid (39/72 B), dealt with relations between Israel and South Africa (39/72 C) and the drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports (39/72 D), and called for information activities to inform world public opinion about apartheid (39/72 E). The Assembly appealed for increased contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa (39/72 F) and recommended action for the Security Council, States and organizations to take to eliminate apartheid (39/72 G).

In related action, the Assembly, in resolutions 39/2 and 39/17, rejected South Africa's new constitution and its policy of bantustanization.

In accordance with an Assembly decision that those having a special interest in the apartheid policies of South Africa should be heard, the Special Political Committee, on 5 and 6 November, heard statements by 18 representatives of non-governmental organizations who had submitted written requests to speak.<sup>(11)</sup> They were:

Philip Oke, Christian Peace Conference; Beatrice von Roemer, International Confederation of Free Trade Unions; Jeanne Woods, National Anti-Imperialist Movement in Solidarity with African Liberation; Vera Michelson, Capital District Coalition against Apartheid and Racism; Arnold Braithwaite, United States Peace Council; Gay J. McDougall, Southern Africa Project of the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law; Kwame Ture, All African People's Revolutionary Party; Quentin Smith, African Heritage; Paul Wee, Lutheran World Federation; Stephanie Urdang, American Committee on Africa; Bojana Jordan, American-South African People's Friendship Association; Julie Nalibov, Revolution in Africa Action Committee; Frank Dexter Brown, National Association of Black Journalists; Yvonne Ismail, Southern Africa Task Force of the People's Organization for Progress; Paula Finn, Art against Apartheid; Richard Harvey, International Association of Democratic Lawyers; Adrien K. Wing, National Conference of Black Lawyers; Vicki Erenstein, National Lawyers Guild.

The Special Political Committee reported the hearings to the Assembly on 16 November;<sup>(12)</sup> subsequently, the Assembly, on an oral proposal of its President, adopted decision 39/407 without vote.

Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa

At its 66th plenary meeting, on 20 November 1984, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Special Political Committee.

General Assembly decision 39/407

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 31.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: SPC 2, 17, 20, 22, 24; plenary 66.

International action to eliminate *apartheid

In its annual report to the Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Special Committee against Apartheid, while expressing concern at the actions of those Powers which continued collaboration with South Africa (see p. 135), noted progress in international action against apartheid and called for further action in that regard.

The Committee commended the African, non-aligned and socialist States for their continued firm position in the struggle against apartheid and in support of the liberation movements in southern Africa. It also commended the important role played by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, OAU, the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and other inter-governmental organizations in this regard, and expressed appreciation to other States for such action. Special mention was made of the decision by the new Government of New Zealand to close the South African Consulate there and to support the boycott of apartheid sport.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that, especially in countries where the Government collaborated with South Africa, public opposition to apartheid was reflected in action by state and local authorities. In the United States, legislation for divestment from South Africa had been enacted or introduced in about 25 states. A number of cities—including New York, Washington, D.C., and Philadelphia—had taken such positions. Over 100 local authorities in the United Kingdom had taken action against apartheid, while the Greater London Council had declared itself an anti-apartheid zone. Commending the cities of Leeds and Sheffield in the United Kingdom for anti-apartheid stands, the Committee continued to encourage similar actions in other countries.

It commended the international trade union movement for taking new steps in solidarity with the black workers of South Africa and the independent trade unions there. It had encouraged action by religious organizations and leaders and was gratified by the response. Regarding relations with the Catholic Church, the Committee noted the disappointment expressed by black clergymen in South Africa at the granting of an audience by Pope John Paul II to the Prime Minister of South Africa, but welcomed a special message given by the Pope to the Chairman of the Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/72 G by recorded vote.

Concerted international action for the elimination of *apartheid

The General Assembly,
*Alarmed by the aggravation of the situation in South Africa caused by the policy of apartheid,*

*Convinced that the root-cause of the grave situation in southern Africa is the policy of apartheid,*

*Noting with grave concern that in order to perpetuate apartheid in South Africa the authorities there have committed acts of aggression and breaches of the peace,*

*Convinced that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of majority rule on the basis of the free and fair exercise of universal adult suffrage can lead to a peaceful and lasting solution in South Africa,*

*Noting that the so-called reforms in South Africa, including the so-called "new constitution", have the effect of further entrenching the apartheid system and further dividing the people of South Africa,*

Recognizing that the bantustan policy will deprive the majority of the people of their citizenship and make them foreigners in their own country,

Recognizing the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community to take all necessary action for the eradication of apartheid, and in particular the need for increased and effective pressure on the South African authorities as a peaceful means of achieving the abolition of apartheid,

Convinced of the vital importance of the strict observance of Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by which the Council instituted a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, and the need to make it fully effective,

Commending the decisions of oil-exporting countries that have declared it their policy not to sell oil to South Africa,

Considering that measures to ensure effective implementation of such embargoes through international co-operation are essential and urgent,

Noting with concern that, through a combination of military and economic pressures, in violation of international law, the authorities of South Africa have sought to destabilize the neighbouring States,

Considering that contacts between apartheid South Africa and its neighbouring States, necessitated by geography, colonial legacy and other reasons, should not be used by other States as a pretext for legitimizing the apartheid system or justifying attempts to break the international isolation of that system,

Convinced that the efforts to entrench apartheid by force will continue to lead to ever-increasing resistance by the oppressed people by all possible means and increased tension and conflict that will have far-reaching consequences for southern Africa and the world,

Convinced that policies of active and direct collaboration with the apartheid régime, instead of respect for the genuine representatives of the great majority of the people, will encourage its repression and aggression against neighbouring States and defiance of the United Nations,

Expressing its full support for the legitimate aspiration of African States and peoples, and of the Organization of African Unity, for the total liberation of the continent of Africa from colonialism and racism,

1. Strongly condemns the policy of apartheid which deprives the majority of the South African population of their citizenship, fundamental freedoms and human rights;

2. Condemns the recent killings, arbitrary arrests and the detention of members of mass organizations for opposing the apartheid system and the so-called "new constitution";

3. Further condemns the overt and the covert aggressive actions of South Africa directed at the destabilization of neighbouring States, and those aimed against refugees from South Africa and Namibia;

4. Demands that the authorities of South Africa:

(a) Release without conditions Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners, detainees and restrictees;

(b) Abrogate discriminatory laws and lift bans on organizations, news media and individuals opposing apartheid;

(c) Grant freedom of association and full trade union rights to all workers of South Africa;

(d) Dismantle the bantustan structures;

(e) Immediately withdraw its troops from southern Angola and end the destabilization of front-line and other States;

5. Urges the Security Council to consider without delay the adoption of effective mandatory sanctions against South Africa;

6. Further urges the Security Council to take steps for the strict implementation of the mandatory arms embargo instituted by it in resolution 418(1977) and, within this context, to secure an end to military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and the import of military equipment or supplies from South Africa;

7. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so, pending mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, to consider national legislative or other appropriate measures to increase the pressure on the apartheid régime of South Africa, such as:

(a) Cessation of further investments in, and financial loans to, South Africa;

(b) An end to all promotion of trade with South Africa;

(c) Cessation of all forms of military, police or intelligence co-operation with the authorities of South Africa;

(d) An end to nuclear collaboration with South Africa;

8. Appeals to all States, organizations and institutions:

(a) To increase humanitarian, legal, educational and other assistance to the victims of apartheid;

(b) To increase support for the liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and to all those struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society;

(c) To increase assistance to the front-line States and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference in order to increase their economic strength and independence from South Africa;

9. Appeals to all Governments and organizations to take appropriate action for the cessation of all academic, cultural, scientific and sport relations that would support the apartheid régime of South Africa as well as relations with individuals, institutions and other bodies endorsing or based on apartheid and also appeals for further strengthening of contacts with those opposed to apartheid;

10. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the total eradication of apartheid and for the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society in which all the people, irrespective of race, colour or creed, enjoy human rights and fundamental freedoms;

11. Pays tribute to and expresses solidarity with organizations and individuals struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

In explanation of vote, several countries expressed reservations about the language of the text which they found discriminatory. Austria, Belgium, Italy and Portugal brought up such objections. Italy and Portugal mentioned paragraphs 5, 7 and 9 in particular, with Italy adding that it supported the goals of the resolution nevertheless. In regard to paragraph 9, Canada did not favour the complete isolation of South Africa and did not interpret that paragraph to endorse the termination of all contacts.

Canada, Japan and the Netherlands also expressed reservations on paragraph 7. Canada said that it did not lend funds to South Africa and was terminating official promotion of trade with it, but those measures did not prevent, by law, Canadians from pursuing trade in peaceful goods or pursuing investment opportunities there. Japan said the paragraph contained an element whose implementation it could not ensure. The Netherlands said it would welcome a mandatory decision by the Security Council to restrict investments in South Africa, but in the sphere of national action it did not wish to prejudge the outcome of its consultations with employer organizations and trade unions to consider in what way investments by Dutch companies in South Africa could be influenced as effectively as possible. The Netherlands shared the view that South Africa must be denied any military nuclear capability but, rather than an appeal to cease all nuclear co-operation, it would have preferred a call on South Africa to accede to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons<sup>(13)</sup> or to accept full-scale safeguards on all its nuclear installations.

Regarding paragraph 8, Canada and Japan said they did not support armed struggle as a means to effect change. They also expressed reservations on paragraph 5: Canada recognized the Security Council's right under the Charter to decide on sanctions, but questioned which new forms might currently be relevant or effective; in Japan's view, the paragraph went beyond the allocation of responsibilities provided for in the Charter.

Malawi said its abstention was because of historical and geographical reasons beyond its control.

Relations with South Africa

At its 1984 session, the General Assembly continued to call for ending relations between South Africa and other countries, particularly military, nuclear, economic, sports and cultural ties. In addition to the Assembly's calls for ending the various relationships to isolate South Africa and force it to abandon apartheid, a number of other United Nations bodies urged similar measures.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid<sup>(1)</sup> felt that South Africa was able to defy the United Nations and give the appearance of strength only because of the collusion and support of the United States, certain other Western Powers and Israel, as well as a number of TNCs and financial institutions. The Committee was distressed at the persistence of certain major Western Powers in increasing collaboration with South Africa and their resistance against the imposition of sanctions against it under Chapter VII of the Charter—the only effective peaceful means available to the international community to eliminate apartheid.

It condemned the May/June 1984 visits of the South African Prime Minister to Portugal, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany, Belgium, France, Austria, Italy and the Vatican, and commended local demonstrations against the visits and France for refusing to receive the Prime Minister officially. At a Committee meeting on 12 June, the Chairman said that, during those visits, the Prime Minister sought respectability, investments and arms. His trip had been accompanied by propaganda that the régime had become peaceful because it had signed some agreements with neighbouring States and had adopted a new constitution. Those agreements had little moral or legal validity, according to the Chairman, and the constitution was a plot to entrench apartheid and exclude the African majority from all rights. The visits were also condemned by other bodies (see p. 138).

When the Committee learned that South Africa would take part in an international air show at Santiago, Chile, correspondence was exchanged between the Committee and Chile, with the Committee expressing the view that the facilities provided to South Africa were contrary to the spirit of the 1977 mandatory arms embargo imposed by the Security Council.<sup>(14)</sup> Chile's position was that no United Nations resolution had been violated because it was only following a widespread international practice.

The Chairman also wrote to Belgium and the United States expressing concern that South African representatives had been invited to the twentieth International Symposium on Applied Military Psychology, held in Belgium from 25 to 29 June and organized by the United States Office of Naval Research. The Chairman said that the invitation represented another instance of collaboration with the military establishment of South Africa by countries which professed to abide by the arms embargo. The Committee was subsequently informed that the invitation to South Africa had been withdrawn.

The Committee expressed its regret at the policies and actions of the Governments which found common interests with South Africa and encouraged it in the pursuit of its crimes against Africa and humanity. The United States, in particular, had opposed international action to deal effectively with the aggression of the régime, the Committee said, and had welcomed and encouraged its manoeuvres to entrench racism and to resort to more aggression. The United States had begun to use the régime as an instrument to secure its own interests, as exemplified by the espousal of the linkage between the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola and the implementation of the 1978 United Nations plan<sup>(15)</sup> for the independence of Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III). Furthermore, it had shown hostility towards the national liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia and had resisted any action against the apartheid régime.

The Committee expressed particular distress at the attitude of the current United States Administration, which viewed South Africa as an ally and espoused "constructive engagement" with the régime in pursuit of its own global strategic interests.

In addition, the Committee expressed regret at the attitude of the United Kingdom which, while dissociating itself from some aspects of United States policy, continued to collaborate with South Africa. It deplored the attitudes of several other Western Powers and it condemned the blatant collaboration by Israel with South Africa (see p. 150). The Committee drew attention to the growing collaboration between South Africa and the local authorities in Taiwan, as well as its links with Chile. The Committee expressed the hope that Governments and peoples of the world would exert their influence to persuade the United States and others to desist from their policies and co-operate in international action for the elimination of apartheid.

The Committee emphasized that the propaganda about the so-called peaceful intentions of the régime must be condemned, and that claims by any Power that its strategic interests required an alliance or understanding with the régime must be rejected.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. In response to the December 1983 request of the General Assembly that it monitor the political, economic, military and cultural boycott of South Africa,<sup>(16)</sup> the United Nations Council for Namibia, in its annual report to the Assembly,<sup>(17)</sup> reported on contacts between Member States and South Africa. The Council based its findings on the work of its Standing Committee II, which issued a report in May 1984<sup>(18)</sup> on such contacts since the adoption of a 1982 Assembly resolution calling on States to terminate all dealings with South Africa.<sup>(19)</sup>

In particular, the Council noted that a number of States continued to maintain political and consular relations with South Africa and to be its major trading partners, despite numerous United Nations resolutions requesting them to isolate that country. The Council concluded that certain Western and other States, including France, Israel, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States, as well as the local authorities in Taiwan, continued to increase their collaboration with South Africa. This collaboration, together with the policy of open support for South Africa adopted by the United States, contributed to the survival of the apartheid policies of the régime, its illegal occupation of Namibia and its aggression against African States. Most States which had had political and diplomatic relations with South Africa prior to the adoption of the 1981<sup>(20)</sup> and subsequent resolutions calling on States to isolate it totally had made little or no effort to discontinue those relations. A small number of those States, however, had taken measures to terminate contacts.

It was clear to the Council that, while an overwhelming majority of States had boycotted South Africa, the support accorded to the régime by certain States not only militated against those genuine efforts, but encouraged it to step up its apartheid policies and entrench its occupation of Namibia.

The Council listed the 37 States maintaining diplomatic and/or consular relations with South Africa, and the 35 countries with South African diplomatic and/or consular missions in their territory in 1983. In addition, the Council reported on the changes during 1984 in other contacts. It noted that some Member States had established contacts with the bantustans, established by South Africa but not recognized by the United Nations and most of its Member States.

In regard to South Africa's relationship with intergovernmental organizations, the Council reported that the régime continued to be represented in the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) (see p. 150) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), and at meetings of the European Economic Community (EEC) and the European Atomic Energy Commission.

At the conclusion of its extraordinary plenary meetings held from 21 to 25 May (Bangkok, Thailand), the Council adopted the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia in which it again condemned South Africa for its apartheid policies and other violations of human rights, and demanded an end to those policies. Rejecting propaganda perpetuated by South Africa and its allies, the Council stated that a relaxation of international action against apartheid was not possible as long as the régime continued to pursue that policy and sought to establish hegemony in the region. The Council deplored the continued assistance rendered to South Africa by the major Western countries and Israel in the political, economic, military and nuclear fields, called for an immediate end to such assistance, and appealed to the international community to isolate South Africa completely. In particular, the Council rejected the policy of so-called constructive engagement of the United States, which it said had encouraged South Africa to intensify its repression of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia.

The Council decided to consult with Governments, non-governmental organizations and other groups, with a view to intensifying pressure on South Africa as well as those States supporting it. In that regard, the Council deemed it important to maintain contacts with those Member States which had not complied with United Nations resolutions, with a view to convincing them to comply, to cease all collaboration with South Africa and to exert pressure on that Government in order to expedite Namibia's independence.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, in a 28 February resolution on human rights violations in southern Africa,<sup>(21)</sup> condemned the increased assistance rendered by the major Western countries and Israel to South Africa in the political, economic, financial and particularly the military fields, demanded that such assistance be terminated immediately and stated that it constituted a hostile action against the people of South Africa, Namibia and the neighbouring States.

In a report of 10 July, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities informed the Commission of the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of assistance given to South Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries, in a decision of 20 August,<sup>(22)</sup> condemned the continued military, economic and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain Western and other States, particularly the United States and Israel, and called for such collaboration to be terminated; it particularly rejected the "constructive engagement" pursued by the United States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in numerous related resolutions, rejected South Africa's apartheid policies and called for an end to contacts with that country.

In resolution 39/17, it condemned the policy of those Western States, Israel and others whose political, economic, military, nuclear, strategic, cultural and sports relations with South Africa encouraged it to persist in suppressing the aspirations of the people to self-determination and independence. In resolution 39/50 A, the Assembly condemned the increased assistance by the same States and stated that it was a hostile act against the people of Namibia and the front-line States since it would strengthen South Africa's military power. By resolution 39/50 D, the Assembly decided to expose the collusion of certain States with the régime.

The Assembly, condemning collaboration with South Africa in resolution 39/72 A, requested States to refrain from any action that would imply or recognize legitimacy of the Pretoria régime, and condemned the policies of certain Western States and Israel and of their corporations that had increased collaboration; furthermore, it denounced any alliance with the régime on grounds of strategic or other interests. All collaboration was again condemned in resolution 39/91, and States were called on to end such ties.

By resolution 39/42, the Assembly condemned those Western States and others, as well as TNCs, which continued their investments in, and supply of arms and oil and nuclear technology to, South Africa. Calling on States to end collaboration in the political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military and nuclear fields and to refrain from entering into other relations, it requested them to end all assistance to South Africa and to isolate it totally. Such collaboration was also condemned in resolution 39/15, on the grounds that it encouraged the persistent oppression of the southern African peoples and denial of their human rights; the Assembly reaffirmed that those giving assistance to the régime became accomplices to racial discrimination, colonialism and apartheid, as well as in the aggression against the liberation movements and neighbouring States.

In resolution 39/72 G, the Assembly appealed to Governments and organizations to cease academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations that would support the régime, as well as relations with individuals and bodies endorsing apartheid, and appealed for further contacts with apartheid opponents. The international community, in resolution 39/16, was called on to give priority to programmes for combating apartheid and to intensify efforts to assist victims of racial discrimination and apartheid, especially in South Africa and Namibia and in occupied territories. The status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid was the subject of resolution 39/19.

Communications. In 1984, several States sent letters to the Secretary-General concerning relations with South Africa.

In connection with the Cyprus question (see p. 240), Cyprus and Turkey exchanged letters on relations between Cyprus and South Africa. On 24 January,<sup>(23)</sup> Turkey forwarded a letter from Nail Atalay, described as the "representative of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", who said that an official from the South African Embassy in Athens had indeed visited southern Cyprus on 17 October 1983, despite denials by the Greek Cypriot administration.<sup>(24)</sup> Cyprus responded on 12 March,<sup>(25)</sup> stating that those allegations were false and malicious and charging that Turkey was following neo-apartheid policies by its partitionist designs against Cyprus. On 16 April,<sup>(26)</sup> Mr. Atalay rejected those accusations.

On 6 January,<sup>(27)</sup> Iran referred to a 1983 letter from Iraq<sup>(24)</sup> regarding the alleged diplomatic relations between Iran and South Africa. Iran said it had broken off those relations immediately after the 1979 Islamic Revolution and, in order to protect its property during the process of liquidation, had established an interests section in the Swiss Embassy in Johannesburg.

India forwarded two texts—on 6 June,<sup>(28)</sup> it transmitted a communiqué adopted that day by the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and on 18 June<sup>(29)</sup> transmitted a letter from Alfred Nzo, Secretary-General of ANC. Both Mr. Nzo and the Movement condemned the official visits by South Africa's Prime Minister to several Western European countries (see p. 135).

A 2 July letter<sup>(30)</sup> from the United Kingdom to the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid referred to a recent Rugby Football Union tour to South Africa (see p. 165) and to claims that it did not fully support the arms embargo against South Africa (see p. 142).

Sanctions and boycotts

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid<sup>(1)</sup> reiterated its call for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa as a means to isolate the apartheid régime. The inability of the international community to take peaceful measures, such as sanctions, had obliged the national liberation movement of South Africa to give up its adherence to non-violence and resort to armed struggle, the Committee said. It recommended that the Assembly request the Security Council to consider the situation in southern Africa and institute sanctions under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter and, pending such action, suggested that States adopt an embargo on military and nuclear co-operation, terminate economic relations, establish an oil embargo, ban foreign investment in South Africa, and prevent transnational corporations from operating there (see p. 146). In addition, the Committee urged States, organizations and individuals to establish sports (see p. 165) and other boycotts of that country.

On 13 February, the Committee heard statements on efforts to establish a cultural boycott. Participants pointed out that many entertainers, in a gesture of solidarity with the oppressed people of South Africa, had rejected lucrative offers to perform there. The Committee reported that since it had published in October 1983 the first register of entertainers who had performed in South Africa since 1981, the number of foreign performers there had declined. Of those who had toured South Africa since the register was issued, most were from the United Kingdom and the United States. A second register was published in 1984. Anti-apartheid groups, trade unions, local authorities, cultural personalities and others stepped up efforts to persuade those who had performed in South Africa not to perform there again and to encourage others to join the cultural boycott.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia<sup>(17)</sup> reported that, during the previous year, the call for world action in support of the cultural and social boycott of South Africa was reiterated in many international forums and by anti-apartheid movements. Despite that action and numerous General Assembly resolutions calling for an end to sports, cultural and social contacts with South Africa, such contacts continued to increase.

The United States policy of "constructive engagement" had encouraged its entertainment promoters to collaborate with South Africa, the Council said. South Africa had created Sun City, an entertainment complex in Bophuthatswana, a declared bantustan, to lure foreigners by paying high fees for entertainers and by claiming that apartheid was not practised at the complex. Between January 1981 and September 1983, more than 200 individuals or groups performed in South Africa. Of those, 86 were from the United States and 50 from the United Kingdom. Other individuals were from Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and Spain, as well as from Puerto Rico and the Republic of Korea. Available information indicated that educational and scientific contacts between South Africa and other countries continued. Nevertheless, there were signs that the international campaign to isolate South Africa was having an effect—some planned sports events had to be cancelled and some entertainers declined offers to perform there. Since the foundation by many well-known personalities on 14 September 1983 of an organization, co-chaired by Arthur Ashe and Harry Belafonte, entitled "Artists and Athletes against Apartheid", a campaign was under way to seek the support of some 15,000 United States entertainers and sports figures and to dissuade them from performing in South Africa until apartheid was dismantled.

The Council predicted that, without decisive action by the international community to isolate South Africa, the result would be catastrophic violence. It believed that the Security Council should impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions without delay because such action was the only effective means to ensure South Africa's compliance with United Nations resolutions. Such action had been thwarted by three permanent members—France, the United Kingdom and the United States; they were urged to bring their policies into accord with the wish of the international community.

In its Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia, the Council for Namibia urged all States, pending the imposition of such sanctions, unilaterally and collectively to adopt measures against South Africa and commended those Governments which had already done so. In addition to action by the Security Council, the Council for Namibia said that Governments and organizations must play a more active role in bringing pressure to bear on South Africa, particularly by adopting sanctions. The Council also urged trade unions to act, including organizing an embargo on all shipments to and from South Africa, as well as on transport and communication with that country.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries also called for sanctions against South Africa. On 20 August,<sup>(22)</sup> it recommended that the Security Council respond to the overwhelming demand of the international community by imposing forthwith comprehensive mandatory sanctions; and on 21 August,<sup>(31)</sup> condemned those Western States and all others which continued their contacts with South Africa, calling on States to terminate all collaboration or to refrain from entering into new relations.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, on 12 March,<sup>(32)</sup> also called for mandatory economic sanctions and appealed to Security Council members to support such proposals. On 28 February,<sup>(21)</sup> it called on States, specialized agencies and organizations to intensify their campaign to mobilize public opinion for the enforcement of sanctions against South Africa.

Action by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. In similar action on 20 August,<sup>(33)</sup> the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination appealed to States which had not done so to suspend all relations with South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Numerous calls for sanctions and boycotts against South Africa were made by the General Assembly in 1984.

In resolution 39/72 G, it urged the Security Council to consider without delay the adoption of effective mandatory sanctions, and, pending such action, appealed to States to consider national legislative or other measures to increase the pressure on the apartheid régime; Governments and organizations were urged to cease academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations with the régime as well as relations with individuals, institutions and other bodies endorsing apartheid, and to strengthen contacts with opponents of apartheid. Again calling for Council sanctions, as well as sports, cultural, academic, consumer and other boycotts by States, the Assembly, in resolution 39/72 A, also urged the Council to consider excluding South Africa from United Nations organizations.

The Council was requested, in resolution 39/2, to take all necessary measures, in accordance with the United Nations Charter, to avert the aggravation of tension and conflict in South Africa and the region. Specific sanctions by the Council were also called for in resolution 39/15. By resolution 39/42, the Assembly again requested States to take legislative, administrative and other measures to isolate South Africa totally.

In resolution 39/50 A, comprehensive mandatory sanctions under the Charter were again declared to be the only effective measures to ensure South Africa's compliance with United Nations resolutions. The Council for Namibia was requested to continue monitoring the boycott and relations with South Africa, and States were requested to co-operate with the Council in fulfilling that function. The Assembly, in resolution 39/50 B, expressed dismay that the Security Council had been prevented by its three Western permanent members from adopting effective measures against South Africa and considered that sanctions would ensure its compliance with United Nations decisions.

Military and nuclear relations

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid continued following developments concerning military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa.<sup>(1)</sup> In March 1984, South Africa announced its largest-ever increase in military spending, the Committee reported. Defence spending went up by 21.4 per cent reaching a record level of 2,086 million pounds sterling, police spending went up by 44 per cent to 437 million pounds, and secret service expenditure rose by 25 per cent to 46 million pounds. According to the International Institute for Strategic Studies in London, South Africa supported an army of 82,400 men, up from 50,500 in 1976. Among its areas of expansion, the South African Defence Force (SADF) reported an air force base currently under construction at Trichardt near the Zimbabwe border, the recently completed airfield in the Transvaal and Natal provinces and plans to establish a ship building industry for naval vessels. SADF was already building strike craft with missiles. In addition, it was developing new weapons such as air-to-air missiles and weapons for use at night.

According to studies referred to in the Committee's report, South Africa had increased its reliance on a wide range of more and more sophisticated equipment while expanding its dependence on imports of foreign military component equipment and technology, despite the Security Council's mandatory arms embargo (see p. 142).<sup>(14)</sup> During 1981-1983, the United States had authorized 29 separate exports to South Africa of commodities on the munitions list worth $28.3 million. Evidence indicated that corporations in other nations had maintained contacts with South Africa's arms industry and that they continued to provide it with valuable military technology. For instance, in March 1984, British customs officials arrested four South Africans for illegal arms procurement for their Government. There were numerous clandestine arms deals between South Africa and some Western corporations that went unnoticed, according to the Committee. South Africa was seeking to sell its arms abroad, and it reportedly produced 143 types of ammunition. In March, its arms manufacturer participated in the international air show Fida '84, held at Santiago, at which it displayed Kukri missiles.

South Africa held its largest military manoeuvres since the Second World War from 24 August to 22 September. More than 4,000 vehicles and 11,000 troops participated along with aircraft.

In addition to certain Western countries, Israel played an important role in building South Africa's military (see p. 150), which the Committee described in an addendum<sup>(3)</sup> to its annual report.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. Collaboration with South Africa in the military and nuclear fields was also considered by the Council for Namibia<sup>(17)</sup> and its Standing Committee II.<sup>(18)</sup>

The Council said South Africa had been able to acquire all the armaments it needed from certain Western and other States, which continued to ignore the mandatory arms embargo imposed against South Africa by the Security Council in 1977.<sup>(14)</sup> Clandestine transfers of arms were carried out from an undetermined number of countries. Currently, South Africa had the largest and most modern military arsenal on the continent. The State-owned Armaments Development and Production Corporation was one of the country's largest industrial groups with assets of about $1.2 billion, but South Africa still relied on considerable imports of technology and machinery as well as the acquisition of production licences.

For many years, South African arms manufacturers had developed contacts with many Western States, Israel and the local authorities in Taiwan. Various ways to circumvent the embargo had been devised, primarily the sale of "civilian" equipment with military applications. Many Western firms had established local subsidiaries in South Africa which were not subject to the embargo. The current United States Administration had relaxed previous restrictions on the sale of certain equipment to the South African military and police; for example, it permitted the sale of light planes, sophisticated artillery shells, cannon barrels and military trucks. Eleven British arms-producing concerns were active in South Africa. In addition, some 300 British mercenaries were serving in SADF. Other mercenaries had been recruited from Australia and New Zealand. Israel was another important source for South Africa's arms, having supplied missile boats, ship-to-ship missiles and small arms. The industrial firms of the Federal Republic of Germany also supplied arms for Pretoria, including parts for tanks and reconnaissance systems, and Spain reportedly supplied small arms and ammunition.

The Council said the development of the nuclear potential of South Africa, a near-nuclear State, had been considerably accelerated by the collaboration extended by certain Western and other States, including the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Israel and the Netherlands. This collaboration had included assistance in the extraction and processing of Namibian uranium, the supply of nuclear equipment, transfers of technology, provision of training and exchange of scientists. South Africa had reportedly obtained from Switzerland, through United States brokers, supplies for its Koeberg nuclear power station near Cape Town; Switzerland, however, informed the Council that it complied with the arms embargo. The uranium was manufactured into fuel rods by the French. France, the United States and other Western countries had participated in constructing South Africa's first nuclear reactor at Koeberg, which became operational in March 1984, and plans were reportedly drawn up for a second reactor to be built by French industrialists, which France denied. South Africa had recruited British nuclear scientists and technicians for the development of its nuclear power industry. In 1984, Israel and South Africa were reported to have established a committee to work out the terms of a long-term agreement under which South Africa would be supplied with technology for nuclear armaments.

In its Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia, the Council denounced South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia and for its acquisition of nuclear weapons capability. It condemned the collusion by Western and other States, particularly the United States and Israel, with South Africa in the nuclear field. The Council called on States to refrain from supplying the régime, directly or indirectly, with installations that might enable it to produce nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment. Also condemned was the military collaboration, including arms traffic, of certain States with South Africa. The Council expressed concern at the possible existence of military and security agreements between South Africa and certain countries in other regions, and considered that such arrangements would violate the arms embargo. It reiterated its request to the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, which operated the Urenco uranium-enrichment plant in South Africa, to have Namibian uranium specifically excluded from the Treaty of Almelo, which regulated Urenco's activities. The Council, calling on the Security Council to prevent the acquisition by South Africa of nuclear weapons and to ensure the cessation of collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field, urged States, corporations, institutions and individuals to cease such collaboration.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 28 February,<sup>(21)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights also condemned the continuing nuclear collaboration of certain Western States, Israel and others with South Africa and urged them to cease supplying nuclear equipment and technology. Governments were urged to end all technological assistance in the manufacture of arms and military supplies in South Africa and Namibia, and in particular to cease all nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 20 August,<sup>(22)</sup> the Committee on colonial countries condemned the military collaboration between South Africa and certain Western and other States, and expressed its concern at their continued nuclear collaboration, which it considered to be a violation of the 1977 Security Council arms embargo<sup>(14)</sup> as well as a threat to international peace and security. The acquisition of a nuclear weapons capability by South Africa added another dimension to a grave situation, and the Committee accordingly called for all such collaboration to be terminated forthwith. It recommended that the Council consider adopting further measures to widen the scope of its arms embargo in order to make it more effective and comprehensive.

Again condemning any military collaboration, particularly by the United States and Israel, and calling for strict compliance with the arms embargo, the Committee, by a decision of 21 August,<sup>(34)</sup> deplored the fact that South Africa engaged in military activities and maintained military installations in Namibia in violation of the United Nations Charter. In that connection, the Committee condemned the co-operation of certain Western and other States with South Africa in supplying it with military equipment and technology, including nuclear equipment and technology capable of being utilized for military purposes. It called for an end to all such co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly joined the other United Nations bodies in calling for an end to military and nuclear relations with South Africa.

In resolution 39/72 A, it requested the Security Council to give special attention to action under Chapter VII of the Charter, including comprehensive mandatory sanctions, with priority for measures to ensure the total cessation of all military and nuclear co-operation; Governments that had not done so were called on to terminate such collaboration and to prevent corporations and enterprises under their jurisdiction from so doing. In addition, IAEA was called on to refrain from extending to South Africa any facilities which might assist its nuclear plans. By resolution 39/72 G, the Assembly appealed to States, pending Council sanctions, to consider national legislative or other measures to increase the pressure on South Africa, such as cessation of all military, police or intelligence co-operation and an end to nuclear collaboration.

The Council was again requested to consider mandatory sanctions in resolution 39/15, particularly the prohibition of technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies in South Africa, and the cessation of all nuclear collaboration.

The Assembly, in resolution 39/50 A on Namibia, condemned the continuing military and nuclear collaboration of certain Western States and Israel with South Africa, in violation of the arms embargo, and called for immediate cessation. It expressed concern at the acquisition of nuclear weapons capability by South Africa and stated that such acquisition constituted a threat to peace and security in Africa. The Assembly condemned the collusion between South Africa, Israel and certain Western States, particularly the United States, in the nuclear field and called on France and all other States to refrain from supplying South Africa with installations that might enable it to produce nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment. Similar condemnations and calls were made in resolution 39/42. In resolution 39/61 B, the Assembly urged the Security Council to prohibit all forms of nuclear co-operation with South Africa and demanded that South Africa submit its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by IAEA. The Assembly took related action in resolution 39/155 on implementing its 1970 Declaration on strengthening international security. It called on States, particularly the members of the Council, to promote the objective of the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger posed by the nuclear capability of South Africa to the African States, in particular the front-line States, as well as to international peace and security.

By decision 39/412 on the military activities of colonial Powers, the Assembly considered that the acquisition of nuclear weapons capability by South Africa constituted a further effort to intimidate States in the region while also posing a threat to all mankind. According to the decision, the continuing military and nuclear assistance rendered to South Africa by certain Western and other States belied their stated opposition to the racist practice of South Africa and made them willing partners of its policies. The Assembly condemned nuclear co-operation and called for an end to it, in particular a halt to the supply of equipment, technology, nuclear materials and related training, which increased South Africa's nuclear capability.

In related action (resolutions 39/61 A and B), the Assembly called for disarmament efforts in Africa.

Arms embargo

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid<sup>(1)</sup> held hearings on 3 April on the implementation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa by the Security Council in 1977.<sup>(4)</sup> Statements were made by Stephen Cary, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the American Friends Services Committee; Jean Sindab, Executive Director of the Washington Office on Africa; Richard Knight of the American Committee on Africa; and Abdul S. Minty, Director of the World Campaign against Military and Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa. They condemned the military and nuclear collaboration of certain States and multinational corporations with South Africa, and observed that materials provided by the United States, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel had enabled South Africa to develop its nuclear capability to the extent that it had become capable of exploding a nuclear device. According to them, the current United States Administration's policy of constructive engagement had led to a significant relaxation of the arms embargo and contributed to the arming of apartheid. They called for the strengthening of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa.

Secretariat report. The Secretariat, in a February report to the Commission on Transnational Corporations,<sup>(35)</sup> described measures adopted by home countries with regard to the operations of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia (see p. 146), including national measures to limit the sale and shipment or the manufacture of arms and related matériel. Such measures had been adopted by Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States. Those steps included: observing a voluntary embargo on the provision of arms to South Africa; taking court action to ensure that the mandatory arms embargo was enforced; adopting legislation prohibiting the sale, transfer or provision to South Africa of arms and related matériel; denying licences for manufacturing and maintaining arms for South Africa; and denying permission for the export of arms or spare parts to that country.

Action by the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia, in its Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia,<sup>(17)</sup> called on the Security Council to tighten the arms embargo against South Africa and to ensure strict compliance by all States. In that connection, the Security Council was called on to implement urgently the recommendations contained in the 1980 report<sup>(36)</sup> of its Committee established by resolution 421(1977)<sup>(37)</sup> concerning the question of South Africa. That Committee had been created to study ways to make the arms embargo more effective.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries, on 20 August,<sup>(22)</sup> also recommended that the Council consider adopting urgently further measures to widen the scope of the arms embargo.

Communication. In a letter of 2 July to the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid,<sup>(30)</sup> the United Kingdom denied claims made at a meeting of the Committee that it did not fully support the arms embargo against South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On numerous occasions in 1984, the General Assembly reiterated its call for reinforcing the arms embargo.

In resolution 39/72 A, it again requested the Security Council to give special attention to action, under Chapter VII of the Charter, against South Africa, including: prohibiting all co-operation with South Africa in the military and nuclear fields by Governments, corporations, institutions and individuals; prohibiting imports of any military equipment or components from it; and preventing co-operation or association with it by any military alliances. The Assembly, in resolution 39/72 G, urged the Council to take steps for strict implementation of the arms embargo and to secure an end to military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and the import of military equipment or supplies from it.

Resolution 39/17 included a demand for the immediate application of the embargo by all countries and more particularly by those that maintained military and nuclear co-operation with the régime and continued to supply it with related matériel.

In resolution 39/50 A, the Assembly called on the Council to tighten the arms embargo, to ensure compliance by all States, and to implement urgently the recommendations contained in the 1980 report of the Council's Committee.<sup>(36)</sup>

By resolution 39/61 B, the Assembly requested the Council, for disarmament purposes and to fulfil its responsibility, to take enforcement measures to prevent any racist régimes from acquiring arms or arms technology and again requested the Council to conclude its consideration of the Committee's recommendations with a view to making the arms embargo more effective.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 December 1984, the Security Council, in resolution 558(1984) adopted unanimously, also took action on the 1977 arms embargo against South Africa.<sup>(14)</sup>

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 418(1977), in which it decided upon a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa,

Recalling its resolution 421(1977), by which it entrusted a Committee consisting of all its members with the task of, among other things, studying ways and means by which the mandatory arms embargo could be made more effective against South Africa and to make recommendations to the Council,

Taking note of the Committee's report to the Security Council contained in document S/14179 of 19 September 1980,

Recognizing that South Africa's intensified efforts to build up its capacity to manufacture armaments undermines the effectiveness of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa,

Considering that no State should contribute to South Africa's arms-production capability by purchasing arms manufactured in South Africa,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 418(1977) and stresses the continuing need for the strict application of all its provisions;

2. Requests all States to refrain from importing arms, ammunition of all types and military vehicles produced in South Africa;

3. Requests all States, including States not Members of the United Nations, to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa on the progress of the implementation of the present resolution before 31 December 1985.

Security Council resolution 558(1984)

13 December 1984 Meeting 2564 Adopted unanimously
Draft by Committee established by resolution 421(1977) (S/16860).

Before the debate began, the Council invited South Africa, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

South Africa said that it was ironic that the Council intended to extend the arms embargo, because the development of South Africa's armament industry traced its origin to the embargo imposed in 1977. As a result, South Africa had created an efficient industry—providing employment for thousands of all races, colours and creeds—for manufacturing arms of all types necessary for its self-defence, and was able to participate internationally in exporting arms. Apparently, certain arms-exporting nations felt threatened by the competition, it said. South Africa would not be deterred by any attempt by the Council to prevent it from exercising its fundamental responsibility, namely, self-defence.

Pakistan, Chairman of the Council's Committee, hoped that adopting resolution 558(1984) would be the prelude to the Council's consideration of the Committee's 1980 recommendations,<sup>(36)</sup> which it felt were vital for enforcing the arms embargo. The Committee's functions had been restricted to compiling data and obtaining information on breaches of the embargo, relying on information gleaned from the international media and from contacts with non-governmental agencies and organizations. If the Committee were to fulfil its mandate, it would need to be revitalized by meaningful Council action in regard to the 1980 recommendations, provision of adequate resources to enable the Committee to monitor the embargo, and willingness by the Council members to strengthen it.

India also urged action on the Committee's recommendations and was joined by the USSR in stating that they would have preferred stronger Council action. In India's view, the Council's request to States to refrain from importing arms, ammunition and military vehicles produced in South Africa should have included "related material of all types". The USSR stressed that it was important to supplement the embargo in order to ensure compliance by eliminating loopholes; however, it added, such measures were not enough and it supported the African countries' long-standing demand for sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter.

Remarking that it had taken the initiative in the Council's Committee to extend the embargo by banning imports of South African arms, the Netherlands pointed out that, since establishment of the arms embargo, South Africa had built up its own manufacturing capacity and become self-sufficient in military equipment.

The United Kingdom said that, in principle, it opposed trade sanctions because they were difficult to enforce, would lead to a hardening of views and tended to harm the poorest and most vulnerable; by adopting a non-mandatory resolution directed against importers, the Council had pursued a realistic course.

Economic relations

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid<sup>(1)</sup> stated that over the previous year, economic collaboration by some Western and other countries with South Africa had increased. Israel's economic relations with South Africa, which covered all aspects of bilateral relations, were also examined by the Committee (see p. 150).

In 1984, South Africa had a favourable trade balance, with exports increasing by 28 per cent in terms of value. Real gross national product increased by 5 per cent due to an improvement in terms of trade. As in previous years, South Africa's major trading partners were Western Europe, Japan and North America. In 1984, the Federal Republic of Germany overtook the United States as the major exporter to South Africa, followed by Japan, the United Kingdom, Italy, France, the Netherlands, Belgium/Luxembourg, Switzerland, Sweden and Canada. The major importers of South African goods, in descending order, were the United States, Japan, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Belgium/Luxembourg, Canada, the Netherlands, Switzerland and Sweden.

Trade missions from several countries continued to visit South Africa. Thirteen British trade missions visited in 1984 to promote their products. Portugal increased its exchange of visits. In Denmark, on the other hand, the Parliament, in May, called on the Government to require from all import companies annual statements on coal imports from South Africa and to inform oil companies and shipowners that it was against Danish policy to transport oil to South Africa. Although Japan did not allow direct Japanese investment in South Africa, trade between them increased.

South African mineral sales increased by 17 per cent in 1984 over the previous year, and mineral sales made up 84 per cent of export revenues. Gold, constituting approximately 50 per cent of South Africa's exports, continued to be marketed through financial institutions in Switzerland (40 to 50 per cent of the total), the United Kingdom (20 per cent) and the Federal Republic of Germany, Hong Kong, Japan and the United States. Agricultural exports were irregular as a result of a severe drought which continued through 1984.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia<sup>(17)</sup> also described economic contacts with South Africa, basing its findings on the report of its Standing Committee II.<sup>(18)</sup> It stated that most of South Africa's trade, investment, loans, transfer of technology and expertise were channelled through TNCs based in the United States, Western Europe and Japan. Some 400 United States companies had subsidiaries in South Africa, and an additional 6,000 United States firms did business there through agency networks. Corporations of France and the Federal Republic of Germany had at least as many subsidiaries there, and British companies with operations numbered 650. In all, some 2,000 TNCs operated in South Africa, supported by externally owned banks and insurance companies.

The Council, in its Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia, urged States, pending the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, unilaterally and collectively, to adopt economic measures against South Africa as called for by the General Assembly, and commended those Governments that had done so.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, on 28 February,<sup>(21)</sup> condemned the activities of foreign economic interests operating in Namibia which were exploiting the Territory's resources and demanded that TNCs refrain from any new investment or activities in Namibia by ending their co-operation with South Africa. The Commission urged Governments that had not done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures, in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that owned and operated enterprises in South Africa and Namibia, with a view to ending their trading, manufacturing and investing activities there.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/72 G, appealed to States that had not done so, pending mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, to consider national legislative or other appropriate measures to increase the pressure on South Africa through various measures, including an end to all promotion of trade with it.

In resolution 39/42, the Assembly again called on States to discontinue all economic, financial and trade relations with South Africa and to refrain from entering into any relations with it which might lend support to its continued illegal occupation of Namibia.

Oil embargo

According to the Council for Namibia,<sup>(17)</sup> South Africa imported about three quarters of its oil requirements at an annual cost of $4 billion, despite an oil embargo called for by the Special Committee against Apartheid<sup>(38)</sup> and implemented by members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and other oil exporters. Two New York trading companies handled much of the oil that South Africa bought secretly.

The Secretariat, reporting to the Commission on TNCs on responsibilities of home countries with respect to TNCs operating in South Africa and Namibia,<sup>(35)</sup> said that, despite the Assembly's repeated call for an oil embargo, no home country had prohibited or restricted the sale, supply or shipment of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa, as far as was known.

The Committee on colonial countries, on 21 August,<sup>(31)</sup> called on those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that had not done so to take measures against oil companies so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly took action on an oil embargo in several resolutions.

In resolution 39/72 A, it again requested the Security Council to consider action, under Chapter VII of the Charter, against South Africa, including comprehensive mandatory sanctions, with priority to instituting a mandatory oil embargo, and imposing an embargo on the supply of oil and oil products to South Africa and on all assistance to the oil industry there. Governments were urged to ensure the implementation of an embargo and to take action against corporations and tanker companies involved in supplying oil to South Africa.

A similar request to the Council was made in resolution 39/15, which included the Assembly's request for an embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic goods to South Africa.

By resolution 39/42, the Assembly called on those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that had not done so to take measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to South Africa.

In resolution 39/50 C on the work programme of the Council for Namibia, the Assembly decided that the Council should contact the management of corporations, tanker companies and other shipping interests involved in the illicit transportation and/or supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa and Namibia.

Foreign investments and loans

According to the Special Committee against Apartheid,<sup>(1)</sup> international financial markets in 1984 provided South Africa with $195 million in syndicated credits and $633 million in bonds. As of January 1984, the total liabilities of South African banks equalled $11 billion, approximately 14 billion rand, showing an increase of 40 per cent over 1981. At the same time, South Africa's assets in foreign banks overseas totalled $2.1 billion. Several factors made Western financial markets attractive for South African companies to seek loans, including the reluctance of most Western Governments to discourage South Africa's access to their markets, high interest rates in South Africa, and the willingness of North American and Western European banks to continue business as usual with South Africa. Loans by United States banks alone to the South African private sector increased to $4.2 billion in 1984 from $1 billion in 1980.

Western European and North American TNCs and South African companies licensed to assemble and sell overseas products increased their activities in 1984 to capture a larger share of the South African market. The falling rate of exchange for the South African rand, coupled with a 15 per cent return on investment, had attracted many United States-based companies to invest in South Africa. Patents, blueprints, new technology, management skills and personnel training continued to be provided to South African firms by their parent companies overseas.

Meanwhile, anti-apartheid movements in the United States and Western Europe gained ground in promoting disinvestment actions by universities, states and municipalities, and further measures were reported in 1984.

The Council for Namibia<sup>(17)</sup> also reviewed foreign investments in and loans to South Africa and provided figures on South Africa's trade with its major partners in 1981 and 1982. The South African economy continued to profit not only from extensive international trade links but also from foreign investments in and bank loans to South Africa, which, until the current recession, accounted for about one third of the growth of the country's gross domestic product.

As at 31 August 1984, there were some 2,000 TNCs operating in South Africa, supported by externally owned banks and insurance companies. Foreign investment, with its financial resources and modern technology, had set up production facilities in some of the most critical areas of South Africa's economy. The Council noted the advantages of the South African system for foreign investors: the absence of labour supply problems, the low cost of labour under the apartheid system, the restriction of trade unions, and the political system of white domination and privilege enforced through organized repression.

The Secretariat in February<sup>(35)</sup> described measures taken by home countries of TNCs to reduce foreign investment, loans, trade and technical assistance to South Africa and Namibia, as repeatedly requested by the General Assembly (see below). The Commission on Human Rights, on 28 February,<sup>(21)</sup> requested all specialized agencies, particularly IMF and the World Bank (see p. 150), to refrain from granting any type of loans to South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/72 A on sanctions against South Africa, again called on the Security Council to give special attention to such action, including prohibiting financial loans to, new investments in and all promotion of trade with South Africa. In resolution 39/15, the Assembly again requested the Council to consider mandatory sanctions under the Charter, including prohibiting loans and investments. Resolution 39/72 G included the Assembly's appeal to States, pending mandatory sanctions by the Council, to consider national legislative or other measures to increase pressure on South Africa, including cessation of further investments and financial loans.

The Assembly took related action in resolution 39/42, calling on States to terminate investments in Namibia or loans to South Africa and to refrain from agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with the régime.

Transnational corporations

In January 1984, the Secretary-General, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in July 1983,<sup>(39)</sup> reported to the Commission on Transnational Corporations on TNC activities and measures by Governments to prohibit investments in South Africa and Namibia.<sup>(40)</sup> According to that report, South Africa's foreign liabilities continued to increase in the early 1980s, mostly through loans, showing an increase of 27.5 per cent in 1981 over the previous year, with direct investment increasing by 21 per cent and non-direct investment by 32 per cent. Despite further pressures on TNCs to disinvest in South Africa, the country continued to attract more capital, at least in the case of TNCs based in the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany. In the same period, the stock of investment of TNCs based in the United States declined after consecutive increases up to 1981. In the case of Namibia, direct investment by TNCs was declining as a result of political uncertainty. There were instances of TNCs reducing their investments in South Africa in 1982-

1983, but those divestments were generally explained by commercial rather than political factors. Overall, TNC involvement in South Africa had increased, especially through indirect investment.

In 1984, Western European and North American-based TNCs increased their activities in South Africa, according to the Special Committee against Apartheid.<sup>(1)</sup> The Council for Namibia<sup>(17)</sup> estimated that some 2,000 TNCs were currently operating in South Africa. It reported that most trade, foreign investment and loans, and transfer of technology and expertise were channelled through TNCs based in the United States, Western Europe and Japan. Some 400 United States companies had subsidiary operations in South Africa, and another 6,000 United States firms did business there through agency networks. Corporations of the Federal Republic of Germany and France had at least as many subsidiaries, and British companies with operations in South Africa numbered at least 650.

In response to a July 1983 Economic and Social Council decision,<sup>(41)</sup> the Secretariat reported in February<sup>(35)</sup> to the Commission on TNCs on measures adopted by home countries with regard to TNC operations in South Africa and Namibia in violation of relevant United Nations actions. The report, updated in March, was based partly on information supplied by countries and partly on information collected from official sources. The Secretariat reported that two codes of conduct had been adopted for companies operating in South Africa: in 1977, EEC adopted a voluntary code for companies with subsidiaries, branches or representation in South Africa; and in 1978, Canada issued a voluntary code concerning employment practices of Canadian companies operating in South Africa. Those codes made recommendations on minimum wages for South African workers, equal pay for equal work, training programmes and working conditions.

Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and the United States were those countries reported to have adopted various measures at the national and local levels to restrict TNC investment in, trade with and the provision of loans and technical assistance to South Africa. Canada, for example, said that in 1977 it had terminated programmes which encouraged or promoted trade with or investment in South Africa. That same year, Denmark and Norway withdrew official support for credits and guarantees in respect of their exports to South Africa, and the Federal Republic of Germany had limited investment guarantees and export credits available to its TNCs operating there. Similarly, in 1979, the Netherlands withdrew government support for export credits or investment guarantees for its companies. France said that it was discouraging its companies from operating in Namibia. Japan reported that its laws and regulations expressly prohibited direct investment by Japanese companies in South Africa and Namibia, and Sweden enacted a law prohibiting new investments by Swedish companies and individuals. In 1983, the United States passed a law to withhold support of IMF loans to and the use of IMF facilities by South Africa (see p. 150) so long as it continued to pursue apartheid. In addition to the United States Government's discouraging new investments in Namibia, a number of 1982 and 1983 state and municipal actions prohibited or terminated the investment of their funds in companies operating in South Africa.

In their communications to the United Nations, Australia, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Spain, Uganda and the USSR indicated that they did not have corporations doing business in Namibia.

The Secretariat concluded that the measures taken so far by home countries to regulate private capital flows to and other business transactions with South Africa by TNCs had been limited. Those measures covered mostly the withdrawal of official guarantees or support for credits to companies investing in or trading with South Africa, and the termination of official export or trade promotion with it. This was apparently due to the fact that most home-country Governments considered themselves under no legal obligation, with the exception of the mandatory arms embargo of 1977, or they lacked the requisite jurisdiction to influence the activities of subsidiaries and affiliates operating under South African law. However, the adoption of measures not related to the arms embargo indicated that the home countries accepted some responsibilities for TNC activities within their national jurisdiction and having operations in South Africa.

The Secretariat report noted that resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council calling for the cessation of TNC activities were generally opposed by the home countries. This matter was under consideration by the Commission on TNCs, the body charged with elaborating a code of conduct on TNCs (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VII). Under the draft code, TNCs would be called on to comply strictly with obligations resulting from Security Council decisions and to respect those resulting from all relevant United Nations resolutions, to refrain from operations supporting South Africa, and to engage in activities to eliminate racial discrimination and apartheid. With regard to investment in Namibia, TNCs would be called on to comply with obligations resulting from Security Council resolution 283(1970),<sup>(42)</sup> by which States were urged to ensure that companies under their ownership or control ceased all dealings with commercial or industrial enterprises or concessions in Namibia.

The Commission on TNCs, at its April 1984 session,<sup>(43)</sup> discussed and took note of the Secretariat's report.

As in previous years, the Commission on Human Rights took action on TNC activity in southern Africa (see also ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII). On 28 February,<sup>(21)</sup> it called on Governments to take measures, in respect of their nationals and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that owned and operated enterprises in South Africa and Namibia, with a view to stopping their trading, manufacturing and investing activities there. It also called on States parties to the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid<sup>(44)</sup> to express their views on the extent and nature of the responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of the apartheid system. Also on 28 February,<sup>(45)</sup> it again urged States to ratify or accede to that Convention, in particular those which had jurisdiction over TNCs operating in South Africa and Namibia, and without whose co-operation such operations could not be halted. In addition, the Commission requested the Group of Three members of the Commission set up under the Convention to continue examining the responsibility of TNCs for the existence of the apartheid system.

A Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in a July report<sup>(46)</sup> to the Commission on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other assistance to South Africa, listed banks, firms and other organizations which gave assistance to South Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII). The list had been updated annually since 1980. On 28 August,<sup>(47)</sup> the Sub-Commission invited the Rapporteur to continue to update the list and welcomed the Commission's recommendation on government measures.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted two resolutions on TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia.

Resolution 1984/53 was adopted by roll-call vote.

Activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia and collaboration of such corporations with the racist minority régime in South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

(e) To bring up to date for the eleventh session of the Commission the report of the Secretariat on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to the transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/53

25 July 1984 Meeting 48 26-3-11 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/141) by roll-call vote (17-3-11), 17 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1984/18); agenda item 10.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Benin, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Djibouti, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: Germany, Federal Republic of, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Canada, Finland, France, Greece, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Sweden.

In explanation of vote, Canada said it could not support a text that gave the impression that the mere presence of TNCs in South Africa constituted collaboration with a racist régime, and because the text implied a certain extraterritorial application of law in Africa to the subsidiaries of external countries; furthermore, it felt that paragraph 13 (e) was too specific and believed that TNC activities could have a beneficial effect on peaceful development in South Africa.

Poland, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said the Western Powers' support to the South African régime encouraged its aggressive attitude and strengthened it as a bastion of colonialism on the African continent; the harm done to the South African majority through TNC activities, amounting to billions of dollars, should be compensated by South Africa and its supporters.

Resolution 1984/52, concerning further preparations for public hearings on TNC activities to be held by the Commission in 1985, was also adopted by roll-call vote.

Organization of public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa, in particular resolution 1981/86 of 2 November 1981, in which it called for the organization of public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, and its resolution 1983/75 of 29 July 1983,

1. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Preparations for the Public Hearings on the Activities of Transnational Corporations in South Africa and Namibia shall commence its work no later than 1 August 1984, and requests it to report on the modalities and subjects of the hearings to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its eleventh session;

2. Calls upon the regional groups that have not yet done so to nominate their representatives to the Ad Hoc Committee.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/52

25 July 1984 Meeting 48 23-0-14 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/141) by roll-call vote (13-0-15), 17 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1984/18); agenda item 10.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Benin, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Djibouti, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Austria, Canada, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Preparations for the Public Hearings on the Activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia held its first two meetings in New York on 31 July,<sup>(48)</sup> at which it elected a Chairman and adopted an agenda. The Committee requested the United Nations Centre on TNCs to draft guidelines on the organization of the hearings and rules of procedure to be used in conducting them. It also requested the Centre to submit a list of persons and institutions to be invited. In response, the Centre drew up suggestions for guidelines relating to the objectives and purpose of the hearings, the topics to be addressed and organizational questions.<sup>(49)</sup> The Committee met again on 25 September and requested revisions to the draft guidelines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/72 A, condemned the policies of certain Western States and Israel and of their TNCs that had increased collaboration with South Africa despite repeated appeals by the Assembly. It took similar action in resolution 39/42, condemning those States and TNCs which continued their investments in, and supply of armaments and oil and nuclear technology to, South Africa, thus buttressing it and aggravating the threat to world peace. The Secretary-General was requested to undertake a campaign to inform world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and, in respect of Namibia, the support they rendered to South Africa.

In resolution 39/15, the Assembly invited the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on discrimination and minorities to update the list of TNCs, banks and other organizations assisting South Africa, and called on the Governments of countries where they were based to put a stop to their trading, manufacturing and investing activities in South Africa and Namibia.

IMF relations with South Africa

In 1984, several United Nations bodies reiterated their appeals to United Nations specialized agencies, particularly the International Monetary Fund, to reject South Africa's requests for loans.

The Committee on colonial countries took such action in two decisions. On 20 August,<sup>(22)</sup> it noted with concern the continued assistance provided to the régime by certain international organizations, as exemplified by the granting of a loan of $1.1 billion in 1982 by IMF.<sup>(50)</sup> The Committee said that such assistance only served to augment the military capability of the Pretoria régime, thus enabling it to continue its suppression of the oppressed majority in South Africa while subsidizing its illegal occupation of Namibia and, at the same time, encouraging the régime to commit aggression against neighbouring States (see p. 177). The Committee reiterated its call on IMF to terminate co-operation with and assistance to the régime and urged all IMF States members to take appropriate action towards that end. The Committee called on all other international organizations to respect the United Nations position on Namibia and to refrain from any co-operation with South Africa.

On 22 August,<sup>(51)</sup> the Committee expressed regret that, notwithstanding repeated assurances by the World Bank that it had terminated business relations with South Africa, the Bank and IMF continued to maintain links with South Africa, as exemplified by its membership in both agencies. The Committee condemned the collaboration between IMF and South Africa, in disregard of General Assembly resolutions, particularly the 1982 loan, and called on IMF to rescind the loan, to put an end to such collaboration and not to grant any new loans. It commended those non-governmental organizations which informed public opinion and mobilized it against IMF assistance to South Africa, and called on them to reinforce those efforts.

The Council for Namibia, in its Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia,<sup>(17)</sup> also noted with concern the continued assistance provided to South Africa by certain specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations, for example the 1982 IMF loan. The Council agreed with the Committee that such assistance only served to allow Pretoria to continue those policies mentioned by the Committee. The Council also called on IMF to terminate co-operation with the régime.

In a resolution of 28 February,<sup>(21)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights also urgently requested all specialized agencies, particularly IMF and the World Bank, to refrain from granting any type of loans to South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/50 A, called on all specialized agencies, in particular IMF, to terminate all collaboration with and assistance to South Africa, since such assistance served to augment its military capability thus enabling it not only to continue its repression in Namibia and South Africa, but also to commit aggression against neighbouring States. The Assembly took similar action in resolution 39/72 A, calling on IMF to terminate credits or other assistance to South Africa.

In resolution 39/43, it regretted that, notwithstanding the assurances of the World Bank that it had terminated business relations with South Africa, the Bank and IMF continued to maintain links with South Africa, as exemplified by its membership in both agencies, which, the Assembly stated, should end all links with the régime. Condemning the collaboration between IMF and South Africa, particularly the 1982 loan, the Assembly called on IMF to rescind the loan, to end such collaboration and not to grant any new loans. It commended those non-governmental organizations which helped inform public opinion and mobilize it against IMF assistance to South Africa, and called for renewed efforts in this respect. The Assembly reiterated its proposal, under the Agreement between the United Nations and IMF, for the inclusion in the agenda of the IMF Board of Governors of an item on the relationship between IMF and South Africa as well as its proposal that the relevant United Nations organs should participate in the Board's meetings at which the item was discussed, and urged IMF to discuss its relationship with South Africa at its annual meeting.

Israel-South Africa relations

On 17 October, the Special Committee against Apartheid unanimously adopted a report on recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa,<sup>(3)</sup> which it submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council as an addendum to its 1984 annual report,<sup>(1)</sup> in accordance with a December 1983 request by the Assembly.<sup>(52)</sup> The Committee stated that despite the denials of Israel, it continued to collaborate with South Africa as well as with the bantustans, resulting in serious consequences for peace and security in southern Africa. The Committee expressed its regret at the unwillingness of certain Western States to recognize the dangers of the collusion between Israel and South Africa and the encouragement they extended to Israel to continue its defiance of the United Nations. Urging the international community to persuade Israel to disengage from its collaboration, the Committee recommended that the United Nations intensify efforts to publicize this collaboration and take action under the United Nations Charter to end it.

The Committee said there had been increasing awareness of the collaboration between the two countries and their close links with the United States, which provided protection to both of them. Despite the unwillingness of certain Western States to consider the serious developments arising from the relations between Israel and South Africa, public opinion in the West was becoming more aware of, and concerned over, the situation.

The main aspect of their collaboration was in the military and nuclear fields. According to a study cited by the Committee, Israel supplied military technology and strategic advice and equipped the South African armed forces; in addition, it served as a conduit to smuggle arms to South Africa. Israel was also assisting South Africa in providing it with nuclear technology, while South Africa was helping to finance the research and development of Israel's Levi aircraft, expected to begin production in 1990. Both States were reported to have established an inter-ministerial committee to work out a long-term agreement under which Israel would supply South Africa with technology for nuclear armaments.

The South African Trade Mission at Tel Aviv announced that South Africa's exports to Israel had risen by 138 per cent from 1981 to 1982, largely because of the growth in the export of base metals and other mineral products. Imports from Israel remained stable in 1982, but over the previous decade had increased sevenfold. Machinery, electrical equipment and parts had become South Africa's largest category of imports from Israel, accounting for 35 per cent of the total from that country.

As for economic relations, South African investment in Israel reached $15 million a year in both 1982 and 1983. South Africa continues to make direct investments in Israel; in accordance with various agreements between the two countries, South African citizens could invest in certain projects, including industrial projects, tourism and hotels, industrial infrastructural developments, commercial centres and community services, film production and the purchase of shares in existing Israeli companies for the purpose of financing production expansion, construction projects, oil exploration and agricultural projects. Koor Industries, Israel's largest industrial conglomerate, had a number of South African interests. South Africa and Israel also co-operated in tourism, the scientific field, sports and cultural exchanges.

Despite its denials, Israel was one of the few countries which maintained contacts on all levels with the bantustans, homelands established by South Africa for blacks, the Committee reported. For example, Israel had been involved in agricultural projects and the development of a television service in Bophuthatswana. A delegation led by "Prime Minister" Chief George Matanzima of Transkei visited Israel in March 1984, accompanied by, among others, Ntutuzeli Lujabe, "Minister for Foreign Affairs", and Major-General Martin Ngceba, "Commissioner of the Transkei Civil Defence Force". Chief Matanzima said that, as a result of the visit, many Israeli industrialists had decided to invest large sums of money in the construction of industries in Transkei. Israel continued to collaborate with the bantustans in military and police affairs; for example, it was helping to plan a pilots' school in Bophuthatswana and was assisting in establishing an intelligence network and air force in Ciskei. The "Deputy Defence Minister" of Ciskei said Ciskei was buying "about six" new aircraft, made in the United States, from Israel. The Israeli Ambassador to Pretoria acknowledged that there were a number of Israeli firms operating in the bantustans. Israeli interests in Ciskei were reported to include the construction of two hospitals, aviation contracts to supply aircraft and train pilots, construction of factories, provision of agricultural training and expertise, and supply of computer systems.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/72 C by recorded vote.

Relations between Israel and South Africa

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions on relations between Israel and South Africa,

Having considered the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa,

Taking note of the declaration and resolutions of the Conference of Arab Solidarity with the Struggle for Liberation in Southern Africa, held at Tunis from 7 to 9 August 1984,

Reiterating that the increasing collaboration by Israel with the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the military and nuclear fields, in defiance of resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council is a serious hindrance to international action for the eradication of apartheid, an encouragement to the racist régime of South Africa to persist in its criminal policy of apartheid and a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and the entire African continent and constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

1. Commends the Special Committee against Apartheid for publicizing the growing relations between Israel and South Africa and promoting public awareness of the grave dangers of the alliance between Israel and South Africa;

2. Again strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration of Israel with the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the military and nuclear fields;

3. Demands that Israel desist from and terminate all forms of collaboration with South Africa forthwith, particularly in the military and nuclear fields, and abide scrupulously by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

4. Calls upon all Governments and organizations to exert their influence to persuade Israel to desist from such collaboration and abide by the resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Requests the Special Committee to continue to publicize, as widely as possible, information on the relations between Israel and South Africa;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to render, through the Department of Public Information and the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, all possible assistance to the Special Committee in disseminating information relating to the collaboration between Israel and South Africa;

7. Further requests the Special Committee to keep the matter under constant review and to report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

At the request of the United States, the Assembly took a separate vote on a preambular paragraph of the draft, by which the Assembly would have expressed grave concern over the policy of the United States which, by its strategic co-operation with Israel and its "constructive engagement" with South Africa, had strengthened the Israel-South Africa alliance. The paragraph was rejected when it failed, in a recorded vote of 65 to 55, with 17 abstentions, to obtain the necessary two-thirds majority (see p. 131).

In explanation of vote, Israel, affirming that it unequivocally rejected racism, said that the resolution's sponsors had put forward unsubstantiated allegations based on speculative press reports and previous one-sided resolutions, seeking to divert attention from the real problems of apartheid and thus undermining the purpose of the debate and subverting the genuine concern for the victims of racial prejudice; a single and impartial standard should be set and applied with regard to the struggle against racism in all its manifestations. Israel had again been singled out as the only country for condemnation based on patent falsehoods.

A number of countries objected to the arbitrary or selective singling out of a Member State. Australia, Austria, Bermuda, Burma, Finland, for the five Nordic countries, Ireland, Malawi, Panama, Peru and the United Kingdom made such comments. Finland said such action made it difficult to maintain the international consensus in the struggle against apartheid. In the view of the Bahamas, the lack of balance in the text was not constructive in obtaining its goals. Australia found the language extravagant. Ecuador said it was inappropriate and would have preferred an attempt to bring about an understanding rather than heightening tensions.

The Assembly also took action on Israel-South Africa relations in other resolutions. By resolution 39/17, the Assembly denounced the collusion between them and expressed support for the 1983 Declaration of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel.<sup>(53)</sup> In resolution 39/146 A on the Middle East situation, it condemned their continuing and increasing collaboration, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields.

Situation in South Africa

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid.<sup>(1)</sup> The Special Committee against Apartheid,<sup>(1)</sup> describing the current political situation in South Africa, drew particular attention to and condemned the so-called constitutional reforms in that country (see p. 157). The Committee said South Africa had accelerated implementation of the policy of bantustanization, its process of confining black people's homes to certain areas, allegedly on a tribal basis. As part of that process, it applied even more stringently the "pass laws", which regulated the movement of blacks in South Africa, and intensified forced population removals. Africans arrested for offences under the pass laws in 1984 numbered 163,000, approximately 21,000 more than in 1983. According to official 1984 figures, 22,936 Africans were forcibly removed, mostly to "homelands". There was a marked acceleration in forced removals after the referendum on the "new constitution" in November 1983. From 1960 to 1982, over 3.5 million people were removed forcibly, and about 1.7 million others were scheduled for removal. In December, South Africa stated its intention to declare Kwa Ndebele "independent". It was to be the fifth homeland to achieve that status from among 10 homelands. No State had recognized any of those entities. In South Africa's terminology, Bophuthatswana, Ciskei, Kwa Ndebele, Transkei and Venda were "independent states" while Lebowa, Gazankulu, Ka Ngwane, Qwa Qwa and Kwa Zulu were "national states".

On 7 July during an audience at the Vatican,<sup>(54)</sup> Pope John Paul II addressed a message to the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid, stating that the local Catholic Church had expressed its protest at the displacement of vast numbers of South African citizens to the places of residence assigned to them by the Government and that a joint ecumenical initiative had been taken by the Southern Africa Catholic Bishops' Conference and the South African Council of Churches to draw the public's attention to that situation. The message was transmitted by a letter of 9 July from the Chairman to the Secretary-General. In South Africa, Archbishop Denis Hurley, Bishop Desmond Tutu and Allan Boesak, President of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, were among church leaders who spoke out against the removals.

According to studies presented at the Second Carnegie Inquiry into Poverty and Development in South Africa (April 1984), one third of African children under 14 years of age were underweight and stunted, their death rate from malnutrition was 31 times higher than that for white children, and the magnitude of poverty and hunger in bantustans and African townships was appalling.

The situation of black workers, who were paid much less than white workers, deteriorated, and legislative and other measures further repressed them and their trade unions. Retrenchments, dismissals, higher rail fares and higher bread prices adversely affected mostly black workers. Their living standards declined by 4.1 per cent from 1982 to 1983, according to a labour economist at the University of Cape Town. The Labour Relations Amendment Act, passed in June 1984 to impose further controls over industrial relations and labour agreements between trade unions and management, required that all collective bargaining agreements, to be enforceable, be submitted to the Department of Manpower. The Aliens and Immigration Law Amendment Bill, introduced in March, was intended to control the influx of black workers and impose penalties on companies which employed aliens, which included the 9 million Africans who lost their citizenship when their homelands were declared independent. Black workers on strike were harassed, intimidated, detained or tried; nevertheless they continued to strengthen their unions. According to official figures for 1984, 426 strikes occurred involving African workers. These actions were mainly concerned with wage demands, working conditions, disciplinary measures and other trade union matters. Some 167,948 African, 4,697 coloured, 1,713 Asian and 6 white workers were involved in strikes, particularly in the mining, metal and automobile industries.

The armed and underground struggle against apartheid continued and freedom fighters took actions against military, economic and other institutions. Among the targets attacked were petrol tanks, railway tankers and lines, a police warehouse, government offices, electricity plants, offices of homelands, a bank and a gold mine. ANC claimed responsibility for most of the attacks.

In protest against the unequal education policy and other practices, black students in substantial numbers boycotted their classes. Church opposition to apartheid also grew as religious leaders, inside and outside South Africa, opposed the forced removals of blacks.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary bodies. Among the actions it took on 28 February 1984 on human rights violations in South Africa and Namibia, the Commission on Human Rights expressed its abhorrence of the system of apartheid and indignation at the forced population removals and the alarming increase in the number of prosecutions under the homelands policy laws.<sup>(55)</sup> The Commission condemned South Africa for its military attacks and economic and political pressures against neighbouring States, the activities of TNCs and other foreign economic interests operating in South Africa and Namibia, and the increased assistance to South Africa by the major Western countries and Israel. It urged States to accede to the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.<sup>(44)</sup>

The Group of Three established under that Convention dealt with, among other things, the question of TNCs operating in South Africa within the context of the crime of apartheid.

The Commission's Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa reported on a wide variety of aspects of the situation in South Africa.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on 30 August<sup>(56)</sup> reaffirmed that apartheid was an international crime and that the apartheid régime was both illegitimate and contrary to the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>(57)</sup> It repudiated South Africa's efforts to entrench white rule through such means as the so-called new constitution and elections held in August, and condemned the mass arrests of political activists, workers and students that preceded and followed those elections.

(For further details, see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII, under "South Africa and Namibia".)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/19, also expressed appreciation of the role of the Group of Three in analysing the periodic reports of States and in publicizing the experience gained in the international struggle against apartheid.

In resolution 39/72 A, it condemned South Africa for its continued oppression, repression and violence, including the recent use of the armed forces against the black people, its "bantustanization" policy, the "new constitution" designed to dispossess the African majority, and the forced removals of black people. It again declared that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society based on majority rule could lead to a just solution in South Africa. The Assembly proclaimed that the United Nations and the international community had a special responsibility towards the oppressed people, their liberation movements and those engaged in the struggle to eliminate apartheid. It declared that the situation in South Africa constituted a grave threat to international peace and security and that the régime was guilty of aggression, breaches of the peace and violations of the United Nations Charter. It expressed support for the movement against conscription into the South African armed forces.

The Assembly, in resolution 39/2, rejected the new constitution and reiterated that only the eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic society could lead to a just and lasting solution of the South Africa situation.

The Assembly took related action in resolution 39/17, condemning bantustanization and reiterating support for the oppressed people of South Africa in its just and legitimate struggle against the régime.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 556(1984) of 23 October, by which it condemned the massacres of the oppressed people and expressed concern over the treatment of demonstrators, the Security Council demanded: the dismantling of the bantustan structures and the cessation of the relocation of the indigenous African people; the abrogation of the bans and restrictions on political organizations, individuals and news media opposed to apartheid; and the unimpeded return of exiles.

Political prisoners and other detained persons

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid.

The Special Committee against Apartheid continued to pay attention to the repression of opponents of apartheid and to the campaign for the release of political prisoners. In its 1984 report,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee said it had intensified its promotion of the campaign for the release of Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners in South Africa, and for an end to all repression against the opponents of apartheid. At a meeting on 12 June, the Chairman of the Committee remarked that it had been 20 years since Mr. Mandela and other leaders were sentenced to life imprisonment for their opposition to apartheid.

On 24 February, the Committee learned of the sentencing of Albertina Sisulu, former executive member of the banned Federation of South African Women and one of the three presidents of the United Democratic Front, to four years in prison for singing freedom songs and supporting ANC at funerals of ANC members and trade union activists in April and June 1983. Mrs. Sisulu, 66 years old, was the wife of an imprisoned ANC leader and the mother of five children. She had been banned for over 18 years and detained and imprisoned several times. Three other members of the Sisulu family were detained in August. The Chairman denounced, in a statement of 29 February, the sentencing of Mrs. Sisulu. He said that the sentence was passed at a time when the international community was observing the Year of the Women of South Africa. The Committee noted that six members of PAC were the longest-serving political prisoners on Robben Island and the Chairman called for their release.

During the preceding year, the Committee said, South Africa intensified repression as opposition to its policies mounted, particularly in protest of the "new constitution". It arrested, detained, tortured, tried or banned opponents of apartheid, including freedom fighters, trade union leaders, church and community activists, students and journalists. It imposed more restrictions on legal organizations and those active in them. Police banned meetings, raided offices of black organizations, confiscated documents and attacked students during protest meetings and demonstrations. According to official reports, 339 persons were detained in 1984 under the Internal Security Act. A South African press report said that, as of 15 February, there were 336 Africans, 5 coloureds and 2 Asians serving sentences for crimes against the security of the State. In March, for similar crimes, 36 Namibians were serving sentences in South African prisons.

Among those arrested were leading members of the United Democratic Front and the Natal Indian Congress because of their opposition to the new constitution. Also arrested were most of the executive board of the Alexandra Youth Congress and the Alexandra Commuters' Committee, about 11 persons, as well as the General Secretary of the Food and Beverage Workers' Union. In Ciskei, police detained the Reverend Smangalis Mkhathshwa, Secretary-General of the Southern Africa Catholic Bishops' Conference. In February, 20 African schoolchildren were arrested in the Atteridgeville township after clashes between police and students, which resulted in the death of a teenager. There were at least four deaths in prison under unclear circumstances. As disclosed in Parliament on 24 February, there had been complaints of assault from detainees held under the Internal Security Act.

On 1 February, 12 persons were under banning orders. In July, there were 134 listed persons who could not be quoted. For external propaganda reasons, the régime had shifted its policy from banning people to banning meetings.

The Committee reported that several persons were convicted of high treason over the year, and in some cases the court equated ANC membership with treason. Others received heavy sentences for possessing banned literature. Those who refused to testify for the State also received jail sentences. Many others were tried for alleged public violence, intimidation and holding illegal meetings, or for having quoted banned persons.

The Chairman of the Committee, in a letter of 20 September to the President of the Security Council,<sup>(58)</sup> said the Committee was anxious about the safety of six South African leaders who had sought refuge in the British Consulate in Durban—Archie Gumede, M. J. Naidoo, George Sewpershad, Mewa Ramgobin, Billy Nair and Paul Joseph—all leaders of the United Democratic Front and the Natal Indian Congress, and five of whom had been detained for opposing the new constitution; the Committee said the international community had an obligation to protect the six and all other opponents of apartheid.

On 19 November, the Chairman issued an appeal to Governments and organizations to condemn the wave of killings and repression by the South African authorities. He said the authorities had deployed military forces against African townships. Official reports said that at least 165 people, mostly blacks, had been killed, hundreds wounded and thousands arrested.

Action by the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia, in its Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action,<sup>(17)</sup> reaffirmed that the liberation struggle in Namibia was a conflict of international character in terms of Additional Pro-ocol I of 1977 to the 1949 Geneva Conventions,<sup>(59)</sup> and therefore demanded that South Africa apply those Conventions. In particular, it demanded that all captured freedom fighters, pending their release, be accorded prisoner-of-war status as called for by the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and Additional Protocol thereto. Furthermore, it demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all Namibian political prisoners held in South Africa and Namibia.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary bodies. The Commission on Human Rights, on 28 February,<sup>(55)</sup> expressed indignation at the scale and variety of human rights violations in South Africa and the homelands (for further details, see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII), in particular the increase in the number of sentences passed and executions which had taken place, the torture of political activists during interrogation, the ill-treatment of captured freedom fighters and other detainees, and the deaths of detainees in prisons under suspicious circumstances. The Commission called for the release of all political prisoners, especially those who had been incarcerated for long terms, including life imprisonment. It renewed its request to South Africa to allow the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa to make on-the-spot investigations of prison conditions and the treatment of prisoners. On the same date,<sup>(60)</sup> the Commission, reiterating that request, expressed indignation at South Africa's ill-treatment of Namibian detainees and captured freedom fighters.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, on 30 August,<sup>(56)</sup> condemned the mass arrests of political activists, workers and students occurring around the time of the elections for segregated houses of South Africa's Parliament. It demanded the immediate release of all political prisoners, including all persons subjected to banning, house arrest and banishment, and of those arrested for opposition to the elections.

Communication. In a letter of 24 August to the Secretary-General,<sup>(61)</sup> India forwarded a statement issued on 22 August on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, deploring the recent raids and arrests in South Africa which it linked to the protest against the elections in South Africa scheduled for 22 and 28 August to establish segregated chambers for coloured people and people of Asian origin; India said the raids and arrests of a number of leaders of the non-white communities were intended to intimidate the local population into submission and passivity, and it called on the people of South Africa to oppose the elections.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, in resolution 556(1984) adopted in October at the time of many demonstrations against the legislative system under the new constitution (see p. 157), demanded the unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees, and condemned the arbitrary arrest and detention of leaders and activists of mass organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly also took action in regard to political prisoners and detainees.

In resolution 39/72 A, it reaffirmed that freedom fighters of South Africa should be treated as prisoners of war in accordance with Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions.<sup>(39)</sup> The Assembly, in resolution 39/72 G, condemned the recent killings, arbitrary arrests and detention of members of mass organizations for opposing the apartheid system and the new constitution. It demanded that the South African authorities release without conditions Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners, detainees and restrictees. By resolution 39/2, it condemned the continued massacre of the oppressed people, as well as the arbitrary arrest and detention of leaders and activists of mass organizations and demanded their immediate and unconditional release. Resolution 39/17 also included the Assembly's condemnation of the arbitrary arrests of the leaders and activists of mass organizations.

In resolution 39/50 A on Namibia, the Assembly demanded that South Africa immediately release all Namibian political prisoners, including all those imprisoned or detained under the internal security laws, martial law or other arbitrary measures, whether such Namibians had been charged or tried or were being held without charge in Namibia or South Africa. It demanded that South Africa account for all "disappeared" Namibians and release any who were still alive. It declared that South Africa would be liable to compensate the victims, their families and the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia for the losses. The Assembly declared that the liberation struggle in Namibia was a conflict of an international character in terms of Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and, in that regard, demanded that the Conventions and Protocol be applied by South Africa, in particular that all captured freedom fighters be accorded prisoner-of-war status.

In resolution 39/17, the Assembly demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, full respect for their fundamental individual rights and compliance with article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,<sup>(57)</sup> under which no one was to be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

Sentencing of an ANC member

By a letter of 10 January 1984,<sup>(62)</sup> Togo, as Chairman of the African Group, requested the President of the Security Council to convene an urgent meeting to consider the question of the death sentence passed by the Supreme Court of South Africa against Malesela Benjamin Maloie, a member of the African National Congress of South Africa. South Africa, referring to that request in a letter to the Secretary-General of 11 January,<sup>(63)</sup> said it constituted unwarranted interference in South Africa's domestic affairs. It added that the facts of the case, which it outlined, related to the common law crime of murder, and pointed out that the death sentence could not be carried out without the authority of the Minister of Justice.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Council met to consider the request on 13 January and unanimously adopted resolution 547(1984).

The Security Council,

Having considered the question of the death sentence passed on 6 June 1983 in South Africa on Mr. Malesela Benjamin Maloie,

Recalling its resolutions 503(1982), 525(1982) and 533(1983),

Gravely concerned over the current decision of the South African authorities to reject an appeal against the death sentence imposed upon Mr. Maloie,

Conscious that carrying out the death sentence will further aggravate the situation in South Africa,

1. Calls upon the South African authorities to commute the death sentence imposed upon Mr. Maloie;
2. Urges all States and organizations to use their influence and to take urgent measures, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the resolutions of the Security Council and relevant international instruments, to save the life of Mr. Malesela Benjamin Maloie.

Security Council resolution 547(1984)

13 January 1984      Meeting 2512      Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/16275).

Following the death sentence imposed on Mr. Maloie and the Security Council action, organizations and individuals throughout the world demonstrated their solidarity with political prisoners. In London, a vigil was held outside the South African Embassy to mark the fifth anniversary of the death of Solomon Mahlangu, a freedom fighter, and to campaign for clemency for Mr. Maloie. Also, Southern Africa—The Imprisoned Society and Amnesty International appealed for clemency for him.<sup>(1)</sup>

Communications. Several communications were sent to the Secretary-General concerning the death sentence. On 21 January,<sup>(64)</sup> Brazil said that, in accordance with the recommendations of resolution 547(1984), it had informed South Africa through diplomatic channels of its support for the appeal of the international community for the commutation of the death sentence imposed on Mr. Maloisse. The Lao People's Democratic Republic, on 25 January,<sup>(65)</sup> forwarded a message of the same date from its Vice-President of the Council of Ministers and Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating that the arrogant attitude of South Africa towards the United Nations and the international community was again demonstrated by the death sentence and the decision of the South African judicial authorities to reject an appeal against that judgement; the effective way to deal with that attitude was to apply comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa. In regard to the Council's recommendation that States use their influence to save Mr. Maloisse's life, Thailand, on 25 January,<sup>(66)</sup> forwarded a message of the same date from its Foreign Minister, stating that Thailand was constrained in its action since it had no diplomatic relations with South Africa.

South African "constitution"

In 1984, both the Security Council and the General Assembly adopted resolutions dealing with South Africa's "new constitution" and the demonstrations which followed protesting the legislative system set up under it. In August (resolution 554(1984)), the Council declared the constitution null and void. In September, the Assembly (resolution 39/2) also rejected it and condemned the continued massacre of the oppressed people of South Africa, as well as the arbitrary arrest and detention of leaders and activists of mass organizations. That condemnation was echoed by the Council in October (resolution 556(1984)).

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. In 1984, the Special Committee against Apartheid repeatedly condemned the constitutional "reforms" in South Africa which it said were designed to perpetuate the apartheid régime and destroy the unity of the people.<sup>(1)</sup> In various statements, the Chairman rejected the "new constitution" of South Africa, adopted in September 1983,<sup>(67)</sup> as another step to dispossess the African majority, to divide the oppressed people and to consolidate racist domination. He pointed out that in South Africa the overwhelming majority of "coloured" people (South Africa's term for those of mixed race) and people of Asian origin had boycotted the fraudulent elections, held in August 1984, to the racially segregated chambers of Parliament. In a statement of 28 August, the Chairman commended the coloured and Indian communities for their boycott.

Under the constitution, the black majority was still excluded from Parliament. The three chambers of Parliament—for whites, for coloureds and for Asians—had 178, 85 and 45 members, respectively. Whites would dominate owing to their numbers and to the legislative powers of their parliamentary body. According to the Committee, the constitution entrenched white domination, attempted to divide the black people, gave illusory power to coloureds and Asians, and created a potentially dictatorial (white) executive by entrenching one-party domination and conferring extraordinary powers on the President.

Black people showed their opposition by peaceful demonstrations in August and September, which were met with violence by the authorities. Scores of people were shot dead and hundreds injured, including children. Hundreds were detained, including leaders of opposition groups. Six leaders of the United Democratic Front and the Natal Indian Congress sought refuge in the British Consulate in Durban on 13 September (see p. 155).

The Committee regretted that the United States had described the plan as a step in the right direction. It noted the courageous resistance by the black people against the new constitution and the overwhelming election boycott by the coloureds and Asians, thus demonstrating their unity in the struggle for a non-racial democratic society.

Citing the Security Council's August resolution (554(1984)) rejecting the constitution (see p. 160), the Committee stated that any régime established thereby was without legitimacy. It added that no Government could maintain normal relations with such a régime and no international organization could regard it as representing a member State; the régime should be expelled forthwith from the United Nations and its agencies. The Committee recommended that the Assembly call on all States and organizations to act in accordance with the Council's resolution and refrain from action implying the legitimacy of the racist régime. It also recommended that the Assembly call on specialized agencies and other associated institutions to take note of resolution 554(1984) and refrain from any relations with the régime. In that regard, it recommended that IMF, the World Bank and IAEA, as well as other international organizations and institutions, be urged to take urgent action.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 8 August,<sup>(68)</sup> Algeria, on behalf of the Group of African States, requested the President of the Council to convene an urgent meeting to consider the so-called constitutional reforms in South Africa.

At four meetings held on 16 and 17 August, Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Benin, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Guyana, Indonesia, Kenya, Kuwait, Mongolia, Nigeria, Qatar, South Africa, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia were invited, at their request, to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote. Certain individuals were also invited to participate, under rule 39<sup>a</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On 15 August,<sup>(69)</sup> Burkina Faso, Egypt and Zimbabwe asked that Mfanafuthi J. Makatini, the ANC representative to the United Nations, be invited, and, by a separate letter of that date,<sup>(70)</sup> that Ahmed Gora Ebrahim, chief representative of PAC, also be heard. Those three States made a similar request on 17 August<sup>(71)</sup> for Lesaoana Makhanda, representative of PAC. At their request, the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries were also invited to speak.

Addressing the Council, South Africa said the debate concerned its internal constitutional arrangements and thus should not be a subject for the Council to consider. According to South Africa, a substantial percentage of its black peoples had, years earlier, opted for political independence, and four independent black States had been created, whether or not the world chose to recognize them. The time had come to include the coloured and Asian peoples in the decision-making process in a meaningful way. Their case needed to be approached differently, owing to the different historical and cultural circumstances. Designed to do away with confrontational politics, the new constitutional system would emphasize consensus. Whatever actions the Council took, they would be irrelevant and South Africa rejected them.

During the debate, most speakers described South Africa's constitutional changes as manoeuvres or ploys to camouflage its true intent of maintaining the whites' domination of the Government. Algeria, speaking for the African Group, China, Czechoslovakia, India, Indonesia, Kuwait, Malta, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe made such statements. For example, Indonesia said the changes proposed by Pretoria represented nothing more than a refinement of bantustanization dressed up in quasi-legal form, which would lead to increased strife and division within South Africa and the region. According to Malta, the new constitution would establish separate chambers for some groups, thus extending the franchise based on racially separate roles to two minority groups (coloureds and Asians), while ensuring the whites' governmental control and excluding the indigenous African population, or 72 per cent of the population, on the grounds that a different constitutional path had been provided for them within the homeland system. Yugoslavia said that the constitutional plan, based on the apartheid system and bantustanization, was an attempt to give an illusion of change, but was aimed at prolonging and consolidating oppression and exploitation of the black population, which was deprived of its basic rights.

Algeria, for the African Group, Benin, the Congo, Cuba, Egypt and India believed that South Africa's plan was part of its propaganda campaign to gain international acceptance and to reverse the trend to isolate it politically. Benin said that campaign was launched to pass off the constitutional proposals as reforms, and it was up to the Council to reject the sham, which merely institutionalized apartheid, and to impress on South Africa that only the eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic society could lead to a lasting solution. In Cuba's view, the new constitution, the United States support for Pretoria, the South African Prime Minister's tour of Western Europe (see p. 135), and the efforts of the Western press to depict the changes as true reform were all components of the campaign to make Pretoria's policies palatable to the public opinion of Europe and the United States. India said the elections were a façade intended to mislead world public opinion, with the objective of diluting opposition to apartheid abroad and reducing the pressure for political isolation and economic disinvestment.

Many countries—Argentina, Benin, China, Czechoslovakia, India, Malta, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Qatar, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, and the Ukrainian SSR—said the real aim of the constitutional changes was to entrench apartheid or racism. Peru, for example, said the so-called reforms had been designed to perfect the racist apparatus in its illegality.

Argentina, Benin, Burkina Faso, China, Czechoslovakia, Kuwait, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Zimbabwe said the South African plan was intended to divide the unity of the oppressed people. The intent, Pakistan said, was to drive a wedge between the different races of South Africa which had presented a united front against apartheid, and to end South Africa's ostracization by the international community, but such deceptive reforms would not weaken the anti-apartheid movement.

<sup>a</sup>Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence".

Among those expressing concern about the denial of citizenship or political rights for the black majority were Algeria, for the African Group, Argentina, Benin, Burkina Faso, France, Guyana, Indonesia, Kuwait, Malta, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom and Zimbabwe. Nigeria said the races were being ranked in a new tricameral system that arbitrarily nominated the whites as the master race, the coloureds as second class, Indians and Asians as third class, and implicitly named a fourth class, thus denationalizing the indigenous populations by not only divesting them of civil and political rights but also creating a landless alien people. Thailand believed that the constitutional proposals would worsen the status and impair further the fundamental rights of the indigenous African majority, and that they constituted another act of repression against that majority. Under the new system, Togo said, black South Africans would be totally excluded from the Government, and the policy of bantustanization was aimed at controlling the blacks while denying them South African nationality. The United States condemned the constitution, as it deplored all constitutions of Governments that did not feature democratic elections in which all adult citizens might participate under conditions of free speech, access to the media, free assembly, majority rule and protection of minority rights.

Those countries which noted that governmental control would remain in the hands of the white minority were Algeria, for the African Group, Burkina Faso, China, Cuba, Indonesia, Malta, Mongolia, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, and Zimbabwe. Burkina Faso said the major goal of the new constitution was to perpetuate the domination of the white minority and, in order to do that, the Government was trying to break the unity of the oppressed majority by instigating internal conflicts and by killing politically the indigenous Africans.

Argentina, Pakistan, Trinidad and Tobago, and Zimbabwe believed that the South African proposals were aimed at pursuing or justifying bantustanization. In Argentina's opinion, the constitutional proposals would consolidate that system, which was designed to deprive the majority still further of its inalienable rights and citizenship. Under the bantustan system, Trinidad and Tobago said, the African majority would be converted into tribal minority groups, fragmented, separated from their families, relegated to eking out an existence in the infertile areas and labouring under appalling conditions and inferior wages; thus black South Africans were relegated to the status of migrant workers in their own land.

Others, including Benin, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia, noted that the new constitution, by giving limited political rights to coloureds and persons of Asian origin, made them eligible for conscription in the South African army.

Guyana and India believed that the co-operation of certain States had encouraged South Africa to pursue its policies—a view shared by Czechoslovakia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, which specifically mentioned the United States policy of constructive engagement with South Africa. According to Czechoslovakia, the factor enabling Pretoria to carry out the apartheid system, with its aggressive consequences for other countries, was the political, diplomatic, military and economic co-operation by the United States and Israel. In Guyana's view, what had helped South Africa sustain apartheid was its conviction that its strategic and economic value would prevent its Western friends from taking action which would help make difficult the survival of apartheid. Nicaragua said South Africa was able to perpetuate its racist régime and commit aggression against neighbouring States because of the protection it enjoyed from the policy of constructive engagement. Similarly, the USSR stated that the Pretoria régime could not behave so arrogantly without the support of its Western allies—the same countries which were blocking mandatory sanctions against South Africa. Qatar urged the Council to take action against the South African constitution because the Government would continue to challenge the will of the international community unless convinced that the States on whose political support it relied had finally decided to take a stand on the side of justice and to join the majority of the international community in United Nations resolutions on apartheid.

In regard to Council action, Algeria, for the African Group, Benin, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Guyana, Indonesia, Kuwait, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Qatar, Sri Lanka, Togo, and Trinidad and Tobago called on the Council to reject the constitution as null and void. Speaking for the African Group, Algeria said it called for such action since the constitution left the structures of apartheid intact and institutionalized the exclusion of 24 million blacks from their fatherland. The Congo said the purpose of the debate was to call on the Council to shoulder its responsibilities by using all the resources conferred on it by the Charter when international peace and security were threatened; it hoped the Council would take appropriate countermeasures that would strip any legitimacy from the manoeuvres of the régime. Egypt stated that the Council's consideration had demonstrated its insistence that the constitutional amendments be rejected, thereby upholding the international community's opposition to racist policies.

Zimbabwe hoped that the Council's message would be the result of a consensus decision so that Pretoria would be served notice that the international community was unanimous in condemning the new constitution and the sham elections leading to its implementation. Sri Lanka also expected a common response from the Council, demanding that South Africa abandon its constitutional changes and introduce such reforms as would confer on all citizens, without distinction, the dignity and rights they deserved.

Nigeria, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Ukrainian SSR believed that the Council should adopt comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa in order to compel it to dismantle apartheid. The Syrian Arab Republic said the Council should adopt such measures to isolate South Africa. The Ukrainian SSR supported the initiative of the African Group, requesting the Council to reject the constitution, as an expression of the will of the international community, as well as effective measures to eradicate apartheid, including mandatory sanctions. China believed that the Council should take all necessary measures to mobilize the international community to support the struggle of the oppressed people for racial equality. Mongolia hoped that the Council would take all necessary measures to force the régime to comply with United Nations decisions and to renounce its repressive policies. Similarly, the Netherlands expressed support for initiatives in the Council which would increase the pressure on South Africa to embark on a process of meaningful reforms towards that goal.

The objective of the United Nations should be the elimination of apartheid, according to Argentina, Benin, Burkina Faso, Guyana, the Ukrainian SSR and Yugoslavia. Indonesia said the constitutional changes would only lead to more resistance on the part of the oppressed and consequent violence in South Africa.

The Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid affirmed the Committee's rejection of South Africa's attempt to impose a constitutional fraud on the oppressed people because it was not founded on the people's sovereignty. The Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries said that, by rejecting the constitution, the Council would leave the South African authorities no doubt that only the eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society in a unified South Africa could lead to a just and lasting solution to the explosive situation facing that country. Also appealing to the Council to reject the new constitution, Mr. Makatini of ANC said that such a move would support the democratic mass organizations inside South Africa which had called for a boycott of pseudo-elections due to take place in September; the boycott movement was co-ordinated by the United Democratic Front, which had been formed a year earlier and comprised 600 organizations opposing the constitution and repressive legislation. Also denouncing the constitution as a fraud, Mr. Makhanda of PAC stated that the inherent racial foundation of the constitution invalidated the argument that the system under the new version would eventually transform itself into an instrument of democratic government based on respect for the individual.

On 17 August, the Council adopted resolution 554(1984).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 473(1980) and General Assembly resolution 38/11 of 15 November 1983, as well as other relevant United Nations resolutions calling upon the authorities in South Africa to abandon apartheid, end oppression and repression of the black majority and seek a peaceful, just and lasting solution in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Convinced that the so-called "new constitution" endorsed on 2 November 1983 by the exclusively white electorate in South Africa would continue the process of denationalization of the indigenous African majority, depriving it of all fundamental rights, and further entrench apartheid, transforming South Africa into a country for "whites only",

Aware that the inclusion in the "new constitution" of the so-called "coloured" people and people of Asian origin is aimed at dividing the unity of the oppressed people of South Africa and fomenting internal conflict,

Noting with grave concern that one of the objectives of the so-called "constitution" of the racist régime is to make the "coloured" people and people of Asian origin in South Africa eligible for conscription into the armed forces of the apartheid régime for further internal repression and aggressive acts against independent African States,

Welcoming the massive united resistance of the oppressed people of South Africa against these "constitutional" manoeuvres,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the elimination of apartheid and for the establishment of a society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour, sex or creed, will enjoy equal and full political and other rights and participate freely in the determination of their destiny,

Firmly convinced that the so-called "elections" to be organized by the Pretoria régime in the current month of August for the "coloured" people and people of Asian origin and the implementation of this "new constitution" will inevitably aggravate tension in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole,

1. Declares that the so-called "new constitution" is contrary to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, that the results of the referendum of 2 November 1983 are of no validity whatsoever and that the enforcement of the "new constitution" will further aggravate the already explosive situation prevailing inside apartheid South Africa;

2. Strongly rejects and declares as null and void the so-called "new constitution" and the "elections" to be organized in the current month of August for the "coloured" people and people of Asian origin as well as all insidious manoeuvres by the racist minority régime of South Africa further to entrench white minority rule and apartheid;

3. Further rejects any so-called "negotiated settlement" based on bantustan structures or on the so-called "new constitution";

4. Solemnly declares that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of universal adult suffrage by all the people in a united and unfragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution of the explosive situation in South Africa;

5. Urges all Governments and organizations not to accord recognition to the results of the so-called "elections" and to take appropriate action, in co-operation with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and in accordance with the present resolution, to assist the oppressed people of South Africa in their legitimate struggle for a non-racial, democratic society;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 554(1984)

17 August 1984 Meeting 2551 13-0-2

B-nation draft (S/16700).

Sponsors: Burkina Faso, Egypt, India, Malta, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Peru, Zimbabwe.
Meeting numbers: SC 2548-2551.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Burkina Faso, China, Egypt, France, India, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Peru, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Zimbabwe.
Against: None.
Abstaining: United Kingdom, United States.

Speaking in explanation of vote, France and the United States expressed reservations about the competence of the Security Council to deal with the matter of South Africa's constitution. In addition, France and the United Kingdom had reservations about some of the language of the resolution, with France mentioning paragraphs 1 and 2. The United Kingdom and the United States believed that the Council's action would not be helpful because an opportunity currently existed for facilitating the process of positive change. According to the United Kingdom, only the people of South Africa could determine their future and it was not for outsiders to prescribe solutions or to determine the validity or otherwise of internal arrangements. The United States did not endorse the constitutional developments, but hoped that the change was a first step towards the goal of equal rights; for that reason, it did not agree with the basic tenets on which the resolution was based.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (September)

In a letter of 26 September to the President of the General Assembly,<sup>(72)</sup> Botswana, on behalf of the African Group, requested that the Assembly consider the situation in South Africa as a matter of urgency, if possible not later than 28 September.

The Assembly, on that day, considered a 37-nation draft resolution introduced by Botswana, which said that it was generally acknowledged that the current explosion of violence in South Africa was a direct consequence of the imposition of a racist "constitution" on its people, even though the Government had a different explanation for it.

In a letter of 28 September to the Secretary-General,<sup>(73)</sup> South Africa said it took exception to the Assembly's consideration of this matter and rejected the draft as unwarranted interference in South Africa's internal affairs. It was seeking to come to terms with the complexities and realities of the region and the challenges posed by its diversity, particularly the problems of a population composed altogether of minorities—of white people, brown people, people of Asian origin and various black peoples; of Christians, Hindus, Muslims and pagans; of first-world and third-world peoples. The Government would not be diverted from its responsibility for the safety and well-being of all South African citizens by the irresponsible activities of the Assembly, and it would continue to promote orderly and evolutionary change for the benefit of all South Africa's peoples, regardless of any resolutions the Assembly might adopt.

After considering the matter on 28 September, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/2 by recorded vote.

Situation in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/11 of 15 November 1983 and Security Council resolution 554(1984) of 17 August 1984, which declared the so-called "new constitution" a further entrenchment of apartheid,

Recalling in particular that Security Council resolution 554(1984) rejected the so-called "new constitution" and declared it null and void,

Also recalling that the said resolutions warned that the imposition of the so-called "new constitution" by the racist régime in South Africa would "further aggravate the already explosive situation prevailing inside apartheid South Africa",

Further recalling its various resolutions and those of the Security Council calling upon the authorities in South Africa to abandon apartheid, to end oppression and repression of the black majority and to seek a peaceful, just and lasting solution in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Aware that the majority of the oppressed people of South Africa have decisively rejected the so-called "new constitution" and that the recent demonstrations, strikes and mass uprisings inside apartheid South Africa by the oppressed people directly emanate from the imposition of the so-called "new constitution",

Commending the united resistance of the oppressed people of South Africa against the imposition of the so-called "new constitution" and recognizing the legitimacy of their struggle to eliminate apartheid and establish a society based on majority rule with equal participation by all the people of South Africa, irrespective of race, colour or creed,

Alarmed by the aggravation of the situation in South Africa, in particular the wanton killing and the maiming of defenceless demonstrators and workers on strike as well as the imposition of virtual martial law conditions intended to facilitate the brutal repression of the black population,

Deeply concerned over the wave of new arbitrary arrests and detention of leaders and activists of mass organizations inside the country, as well as the closure of several schools and universities,

Convinced that South Africa's continued defiance of United Nations resolutions and its imposition of the rejected so-called "new constitution" will inevitably lead to further escalation of the already explosive situation in South Africa and will have far-reaching consequences for southern Africa and the world,

1. Reiterates its rejection of the so-called "new constitution" as null and void;

2. Declares that the current wave of violence and killing of defenceless demonstrators and striking workers is the direct consequence of the imposition of the so-called "new constitution" by the South African racist régime;

3. Condemns the South African racist régime for defying relevant resolutions of the United Nations and persisting with the further entrenchment of apartheid, a system declared a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security;

4. Further condemns the continued massacre of the oppressed people, as well as the arbitrary arrest and detention of leaders and activists of mass organizations, and demands their immediate and unconditional release;

5. Rejects any so-called "negotiated settlement" based on bantustan structures or on the so-called "new constitution";

6. Reaffirms that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and unfragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution of the explosive situation in South Africa;

7. Urges all Governments and organizations to take appropriate action, in co-operation with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and in accordance with the present resolution, to assist the oppressed people of South Africa in their legitimate struggle for national liberation;

8. Requests the Security Council, as a matter of urgency, to consider the serious situation in South Africa emanating from the imposition of the so-called "new constitution" and to take all necessary measures, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, to avert the further aggravation of tension and conflict in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole.

General Assembly resolution 39/2

In explanation of vote, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States objected to some of the language of the resolution. Canada had legal and policy reservations, particularly over the latter part of paragraph 3. France's objections concerned terms used in the second preambular paragraph and in paragraphs 1 and 3, but it voted in favour of the text in order to make clear its condemnation of the brutal repression in the recent uprisings. The Federal Republic of Germany also objected to paragraphs 1 and 3. Italy expressed reservations on paragraph 3 and on some of the other wording, particularly in the seventh preambular paragraph and paragraphs 4 and 7. The United Kingdom regretted that the language of the resolution, notably where it referred to "wanton killing", "virtual martial law", "continued massacre", and "a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security", distorted an already grave state of affairs; nor could it endorse the implicit preference for armed struggle over peaceful solutions. The United States said that its revulsion of the injustice of apartheid did not authorize the Assembly to indulge in rhetoric that could only exacerbate an already violent situation; for this reason, it opposed language such as that in paragraph 3.

Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States questioned the Assembly's competence to declare a constitution of a Member State null and void. Belgium expressed reservations on the formulation of certain provisions which did not take into account the competence of the Assembly and that of the Security Council. The Federal Republic of Germany said the constitution could not be rejected by the Assembly for juridical reasons alone, since it could not pronounce itself on questions reserved by the United Nations Charter for the Council. The Netherlands said it was not for the Organization to pass judgement on the legal validity of a Member State's constitution, nor could the Assembly endorse a call for national liberation because the situation in South Africa was not a colonial one.

Mentioning its reservations on some elements, Japan regretted that the resolution was adopted before all States were given a chance to express their positions in the general debate; on a matter such as this, efforts should have been made for a consensus resolution so as to ensure that it would exert pressure on the South African authorities.

Swaziland had reservations on certain prescriptions designed to solve the situation inside South Africa, and it opposed the use of violence because Swaziland's geographical position and economic vulnerability would cause it to suffer a heavy burden. While stating that the text was the embodiment of the world's opposition to racial discrimination, Malawi reiterated its belief in the policy of dialogue as a means of solving disputes, affirmed that it did not advocate public condemnations as solutions for problems of that region, and appealed to the South African authorities to create a political atmosphere that would promote peace, security and stability and would allow political participation by all South Africans as equals.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

By a letter of 17 October to the President of the Security Council,<sup>(74)</sup> Ethiopia, on behalf of the African Group, requested the Council to consider what it said was the serious situation in South Africa emanating from imposition of the so-called new constitution and to take all necessary measures in accordance with the Charter to avert the further aggravation of tension and conflict in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole. The Council considered the matter on 23 October.

Ethiopia and South Africa, at their request, were invited to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote. Certain individuals were also invited to participate under rule 39<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. On 23 October,<sup>(75)</sup> Burkina Faso, Egypt and Zimbabwe requested that such an invitation be extended to Bishop Desmond Tutu, Secretary-General of the South African Council of Churches and 1984 Nobel Peace Laureate. The Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid was similarly invited, at his request.

South Africa said the Council had again been convened to consider, in violation of the Charter, matters which fell solely within the sphere of South Africa's domestic affairs. Again rejecting any Council decision concerning those affairs, South Africa said it would continue to promote orderly and evolutionary change for the benefit of all its peoples. There was no desire in the United Nations to evaluate the socio-economic and political developments and progress in South Africa fairly and objectively. The current meeting had been called for the purpose of enhancing anti-South African sentiment; those efforts would fail because South Africa's achievements would increasingly receive international recognition. If the United Nations continued on its current course, South Africa would be forced to withdraw its contribution towards peace in southern Africa, and the neighbouring States would suffer as a result.

Speaking for the African Group, Ethiopia said that the draft resolution before the Council contained modest measures that were the minimum demanded by the exigencies of the situation and that could help defuse the current tension; because apartheid remained a threat to international peace and security, the Council was duty-bound to take every measure commensurate with its responsibilities under the Charter and to remain seized of the situation in South Africa. According to India, the Council's resolution rejecting South Africa's constitution (554(1984)) had fortified the resolve of the oppressed people to resist Pretoria's attempts to entrench apartheid; it was a testimony to the courage and wisdom of the vast majority of South Africans that the elections were boycotted on a massive scale and that so many of them had risen in protest rather than yield to injustice.

The Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid said that behind the propaganda about changes, in orchestration with some Western Powers and interests, the régime had been trying to dispossess and denationalize the African majority through bantustanization; it had understood the attitudes of major Western Powers as a licence for repression.

Bishop Tutu, who described the current unrest and protests in South Africa, appealed to the Council to urge the South African authorities to negotiate with the authentic representatives of all sections of the South African community so that freedom could come for all with the least possible violence.

On 23 October, the Council adopted resolution 556(1984).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 554(1984) and General Assembly resolutions 38/11 of 15 November 1983 and 39/2 of 28 September 1984, which declared the so-called "new constitution" contrary to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Gravely concerned at the continuing arbitrary arrests and detentions without trial of leaders and activists of mass organizations inside the country as well as the closure of several schools and universities,

Commending the massive united resistance of the oppressed people of South Africa, including the strike by hundreds of thousands of black students, to the imposition of the so-called "new constitution",

Commending also the Asian and coloured communities in South Africa for their large-scale boycott of the recent "elections" which constituted a clear rejection of the so-called "new constitution",

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the full exercise of the right to self-determination and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society in an unfragmented South Africa,

3. Demands the immediate cessation of the massacres and the prompt and unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees;

4. Reaffirms that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and unfragmented South Africa, can lead to a just, equitable and lasting solution of the situation in South Africa;

5. Urges all Governments and organizations to take appropriate action, in co-operation with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and in accordance with the present resolution, to assist the oppressed people of South Africa in their legitimate struggle for the full exercise of the right to self-determination;

6. Demands the immediate eradication of apartheid as the necessary step towards the full exercise of the right to self-determination in an unfragmented South Africa, and to this end demands:

(a) The dismantling of the bantustan structures as well as the cessation of uprooting, relocation and denationalization of the indigenous African people;

(b) The abrogation of the bans and restrictions on political organizations, parties, individuals and news media opposed to apartheid;

(c) The unimpeded return of all the exiles;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 556(1984)

23 October 1984

14-0-1

8-nation draft (S/16791).

Sponsors: Burkina Faso, Egypt, India, Malta, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Peru, Zimbabwe.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Burkina Faso, China, Egypt, France, India, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Peru, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

In explanation of vote, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed reservations about the language in the resolution. The United Kingdom voted for the text because it did not believe the problems of South Africa could or should be resolved by repression, by the denial of civil and political rights or by violence, but it regretted, and regarded as counter-productive, the exaggerated language in several parts of the resolution, including the term "massacre", to describe the situation; it regarded the expression "crime against humanity" as one of abhorrence rather than a technical legal description and it did not interpret any part of the resolution as falling within the terms of Chapter VII of the Charter. The United States said that some excesses of language prevented it from joining the Council's affirmative vote, although it supported the demands for equal rights, majority rule and respect for minority rights for all South African citizens, as well as equal opportunity, freedom, self-government and self-determination for all citizens of all countries.

France and the Netherlands had particular problems with paragraph 1. The Netherlands mentioned the implicit reference therein to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,<sup>(44)</sup> while France's reservations were in regard to certain terms in the first preambular paragraph and in paragraph 1, particularly concerning the description of apartheid as a "crime against humanity".

The Netherlands and the United Kingdom considered that it was not within the competence of the Council to pass judgement on the validity of a Member State's constitution.

Communications. The Secretary-General received several letters in 1984 concerning South Africa's new constitution.

On 3 July,<sup>(76)</sup> India forwarded a letter sent to the chief representative of ANC (Asian Mission) stationed at New Delhi by the Indian Minister for External Affairs. Stating that the elections for the new legislature of 22 August appeared to be a façade to mislead world public opinion, the Minister said India urged all the people of South Africa, and especially those of Indian origin, to take no part in the so-called election and to maintain unity in the struggle against apartheid and racism.

On behalf of the 10 States members of EEC, Ireland, on 13 September,<sup>(77)</sup> transmitted the text of a declaration on South Africa adopted on 11 September at the Ministerial Meeting on European Political Co-operation. While expressing concern that the frustration of black South Africans at their deliberate exclusion from South Africa's political life and at the lack of political means to express their grievances had led to the recent violence, EEC stated that those negative developments were in contrast to more positive developments in relations between South Africa and its neighbours. Responding to the EEC text on 20 September,<sup>(78)</sup> South Africa affirmed that the events were its internal affair and in no way the concern of any outside authority, and that there were elements who would not allow the democratic process to proceed unhindered so the Government had had no alternative but to take preventive action to protect lives and property.

On 8 October,<sup>(9)</sup> India forwarded the final communiqué adopted by the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly's 1984 session, affirming that the rejection of the constitutional changes by the so-called coloureds and people of Asian origin during the recent elections, as well as by the Security Council in resolution 554(1984), demonstrated solidarity with the black majority in its struggle against apartheid; they believed that the current demonstrations were the result of the régime's imposition of the illegal new constitution.

Apartheid in sports

On 3 April 1984, the Special Committee against Apartheid held a hearing on the sports boycott against South Africa.<sup>(1)</sup> Statements were made by Paul Stephenson, Chairman of the British Black Standing Conference against Apartheid Sport; Sam Ramsamy, Chairman of the South African Non-Racial Olympic Committee; and Abdul S. Minty, on behalf of the British Anti-Apartheid Movement. In addition to urging Governments and sports organizations to discourage sports contacts with South Africa, the participants referred in particular to the planned May/June tour of South Africa by the English Rugby Football Union, which would violate United Nations resolutions, the Gleneagles Agreement of Commonwealth States and the Code of Conduct adopted by the Commonwealth Games Federation in 1982. Despite protests from anti-apartheid movements, political parties, church members and trade unions, the tour went ahead.

The Committee heard statements by African sports leaders on 12 June, which laid the basis for an intensified campaign against collaboration with apartheid sports.

The United Kingdom referred to the Committee's June discussions in a 2 July letter to its Chairman, with a copy to the Secretary-General.<sup>(30)</sup> The United Kingdom said that its position was misrepresented by allegations that the tour had been facilitated by its covert support of apartheid in sports; the tour had been carried out by the English Rugby Football Union, a private body not answerable to the British Government, which had made every effort to dissuade it from proceeding.

In 1984, the Committee continued to publish its semi-annual register of sports contacts with South Africa, listing sports exchanges—including the names and countries of participants—covering the periods 1 July–31 December 1983 and 1 January–30 June 1984. The registers indicated that there had been progress towards the international isolation of South African sport, although improvement had been slow in professional sports as several sportsmen and women were lured to that country by large financial rewards. Overseas-based TNCs in South Africa and South African companies contributed significant amounts of money to sponsor international sporting events there. South Africa was barred from participating in international sports, both amateur and professional, in over 80 per cent of the world, but collaboration with apartheid sports continued in a few countries.

According to the Committee, South Africa and its supporters continued trying to persuade the international community that racial discrimination in sports no longer existed in South Africa; however, no international sports body which had excluded that country from membership had reversed its decision. The International Golfers' Association informed the South African Professional Golfers' Association that it would not allow South African participation in the 1984 World Cup Tournament. Most Governments, except the United Kingdom and the United States, continued to deny visas to South African sports personalities and banned them from participating in international events if they represented South Africa.

The Committee reported on sports contacts with South Africa. In January, Australia, in conformity with its policy on sporting contacts with South Africa, refused visas to representatives of the South African Rugby Board. As for the United Kingdom, it granted citizenship in May 1984 to Zola Budd, a record-breaking South African runner, and she consequently became a member of the British Olympic team for the 1984 Olympic Games.

The Prime Minister elect of New Zealand, David Lange, issued a statement<sup>(79)</sup> on 20 July in regard to New Zealand's bid to host the 1990 Commonwealth Games, affirming that the Labour Government would stand by the country's obligations under the Gleneagles Agreement, not allowing sports teams from South Africa to compete in New Zealand.

In October, Argentina addressed two letters to the Chairman of the Committee about Argentina's opposition to the planned visit of Argentine rugby players to South Africa.<sup>(80)</sup> In the first, it stated that the players were making a private trip and did not represent any official Argentine body. The Government had tried to persuade the players to give up the plan, but it could not prevent travel by its citizens; the Argentine Rugby Union had endorsed the Government's action. By the second letter, Argentina said it would deny visas to South Africans requesting entry into Argentina to engage in sports events; it had requested its Secretariat of State for Sports to ban a South African boxing referee from Argentina, and his visa was cancelled; and the Government had cancelled the permits of stay of a group of South Africans who took part in rugby matches.

The Council for Namibia<sup>(17)</sup> agreed that many Governments and organizations had reaffirmed their commitment to boycott apartheid sports, but some sports bodies and administrators continued their contacts with South Africa under the pretext of separation of sports and politics. It said that from September 1980 to December 1983, sportsmen and women from the United Kingdom and the United States had participated in larger numbers and in more categories than individuals of any other nationality. Individuals from Australia, Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Israel, Spain and Switzerland had also competed in South Africa. For the first time a rugby team from Namibia toured South America and matches were held against teams from Chile and Uruguay, who were joined by some Argentine players.

Draft convention

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, established by the General Assembly in 1976,<sup>(81)</sup> submitted a report<sup>(82)</sup> adopted on 15 October 1984 to the Assembly, in accordance with a December 1983 request.<sup>(83)</sup> Having concluded work on the remaining 5 of the 22 articles, the 24-member Committee submitted the draft Convention to the Assembly in an annex to its report and expressed the hope that the Convention could be finalized in 1985.

In order to complete its work, the Committee sent a delegation to the Ivory Coast from 15 to 20 March to hold consultations with the President and the Secretary-General of the Supreme Council for Sport in Africa. The Council said it had recommended that African countries give support to the new amendments to the draft Convention proposed by the Committee. During 1984, Jamaica and the German Democratic Republic suggested alternative amendments. The Jamaican proposal did not alter the main thrust of the Chairman's 1983 proposed amendments,<sup>(84)</sup> but, as the German Democratic Republic's proposal would have the effect of removing from the Convention any element of the "third-party principle", the Committee decided to send a delegation to Eastern European States for consultations with sports officials to seek a compromise solution. Under that principle, which had been the main focus of negotiations on the draft for the previous four years, States parties to the Convention would be required to boycott countries that allowed the participation of their sportsmen, sportswomen and teams with South Africa in the same manner that South Africa would be boycotted.

The mission visited the German Democratic Republic and the USSR from 7 to 15 September.<sup>(85)</sup> Officials of those two countries expressed reservations about the possible application of the third-party principle and emphasized the need for a convention which would be widely adhered to. The Chairman of the Committee explained that a compromise was being sought that would be flexible enough to meet the objectives of African States, who supported the principle, without endangering the interests of international sports. The Committee intended to invite Member States to comment on the proposals. It recommended that the Assembly extend the Committee's mandate for another year with a view to submitting the draft Convention in 1985, request the Secretary-General to circulate the draft and proposed amendments to Member States to solicit their views, and authorize the Committee to continue its consultations in order to finalize the draft Convention and to secure wider support.

Under the Committee's proposal on the third-party principle, States parties would prohibit entry into their countries for participation in sports activities of sports bodies and sportsmen and women who had participated in sports competitions in a country practising apartheid, and would take steps to prevent the participation of such sports bodies and individuals in international sports competitions. In the case of Governments violating the provisions of the Convention, States parties would take appropriate action, including exclusion of the countries concerned from international sport competition if necessary. An international commission would be set up to monitor implementation of those provisions and make recommendations on possible action by States parties. In addition, the commission would examine complaints of States parties concerning breaches of the Convention by other parties. Under an alternative proposal, States parties would take all necessary action to ensure that their nationals refrained from participating in all sports events which included individuals or teams from a country practising apartheid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/72 D by recorded vote.

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to continue its work with a view to submitting the draft Convention to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Prior to the vote on the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 147 to 1, with 5 abstentions, an amendment by Barbados, which added paragraph 2 of the adopted text.

In explanation of vote, France, Ireland, speaking for the EC members, the Netherlands and New Zealand expressed support for eliminating apartheid from international sports, but added that currently they could not pass judgement on a draft convention.

France voted for the resolution but reserved its position on the contents of any future draft convention. Ireland pointed out that in the EC countries sport was organized on a private basis, but they would continue to discourage sporting contacts involving racial discrimination. Speaking for itself, Ireland hoped that the terms of the proposed Convention would not give it legal or constitutional problems, a position shared by New Zealand, which said it discouraged its sports people from contacts with South Africa until apartheid was abolished.

The Netherlands said it had certain visa requirements for South Africans as a means to restrict their participation in sporting events in the Netherlands, but it could not accept some provisions of the proposed Convention because they were incompatible with certain of its constitutionally guaranteed freedoms.

In related action (resolution 39/72 A), the Assembly called on Governments that had not done so to support boycotts of South Africa, including sports boycotts.

Aid programmes and inter-agency co-operation

The United Nations continued to provide aid to victims of apartheid in 1984. Such aid was provided either through national liberation movements or directly to South African refugees or to individuals for educational and training purposes.

National liberation movements

Various United Nations specialized agencies and other related bodies continued to provide assistance to peoples of colonial countries and their national liberation movements. Those organizations described their assistance in a report which the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter I).

UNDP report and action. The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in a March 1985 report to the Governing Council,<sup>(86)</sup> described UNDP's 1984 assistance programmes to national liberation movements of southern Africa recognized by OAU. Assistance was again extended to three movements: SWAPO of Namibia, and ANC and PAC of South Africa. The assistance continued to focus on the priority areas of promoting professional skills and manpower development through formal education and practical training, and promoting self-reliance in the movements in their respective countries of asylum in such vital areas as food production, public health services and vocational trades. The assistance was aimed at helping the movements to develop the skills necessary for eventually assuming civic responsibility and gainful employment.

In 1984, UNDP staff conducted monitoring visits to all national liberation movement projects in Angola, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia to evaluate the programmes and follow up on earlier recommendations. After consultations with the respective executing agencies, proposals were made for improving the quality and timeliness of programme delivery.

Two related developments took place in 1984 that significantly affected the flow of UNDP assistance to the movements. The first was the signing on 16 March of the Nkomati Accord between Mozambique and South Africa (see p. 184), and the second was the revelation that South Africa had signed an identical agreement in 1983 with Swaziland. Under the Nkomati Accord, both parties agreed not to allow their territories to be used as a base or passage by another State, foreign forces, organizations or individuals preparing to attack the other. In particular, they would forbid and prevent training centres, places of shelter, accommodation and transit for those with such intent. As a result of the Accord, a large number of South African civilians who had sought asylum in Mozambique and Swaziland under the aegis of ANC were compelled to leave those countries. A massive relocation began, with most ANC followers moving north to the United Republic of Tanzania, which had allocated land to ANC with a view to enabling it to establish and develop long-term, self-sufficient settlements at Mazimbu and Dakawa. Those settlements were soon overcrowded and health and educational services were strained, requiring more assistance than originally anticipated.

During 1984, four more projects were approved and begun, bringing the total to 17. Three were completed, leaving 14 by the end of the year. Of the 17 projects, 15 were financed from the UNDP indicative planning figure for national liberation movements and the other 2 from the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The total UNDP contribution was $2,930,133 for the year. As in 1983, most UNDP assistance was for education, mainly at primary and secondary levels, with smaller contributions for health and agricultural production. All the 11 educational projects, valued at $2,061,746, were executed by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. Two health projects, valued at $504,511, were executed by the World Health Organization. The agricultural project, for which $195,350 was spent, was carried out by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

In view of the fact that a tendency had developed over the years for each movement to create its own system and infrastructure of primary and secondary education, most projects were movement-specific. Projects valued at $1,014,115 were directed towards ANC, $548,949 to PAC, and $882,617 to SWAPO.

The UNDP Governing Council, on 29 June,<sup>(87)</sup> took note with appreciation of the Administrator's efforts to improve assistance to the national liberation movements recognized by OAU and requested him to continue assisting them as flexibly as possible within the context of the UNDP mandate. He was also requested to follow through with initiatives aimed at improving the design, implementation and monitoring of assistance projects, to ensure timely delivery of inputs to approved projects, and to continue reporting to the Council.

UNIDO action. The Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) (Vienna, Austria, August) adopted a resolution<sup>(88)</sup> on 19 August, requesting UNIDO to strengthen its technical assistance to the national liberation movements in southern Africa recognized by OAU. It appealed to member States and international organizations to provide increased resources for UNIDO activities within its mandate on all aspects of economic planning in an independent Namibia, in accordance with a 1982 General Assembly resolution.<sup>(89)</sup> It also appealed to member States, the United Nations system and organizations to provide assistance, through those national liberation movements, for the social and economic development of the oppressed majority of southern Africa. The UNIDO Executive Director was requested to report in 1985 to the Industrial Development Board and the UNIDO General Conference on progress in providing technical assistance to those movements.

UNCTAD action. The Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), by a resolution of 21 September,<sup>(90)</sup> requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to implement UNCTAD resolution 147(VI) of July 1983,<sup>(91)</sup> calling on him to undertake, in consultation with OAU, a survey of the economic and social conditions of the oppressed people of South Africa, and urging the UNDP Administrator to provide adequate resources to the UNCTAD secretariat for that purpose. The appeal to UNDP was repeated in the Board's 1984 resolution and the UNCTAD Secretary-General was to report on its implementation in 1985.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid<sup>(1)</sup> repeatedly appealed for more assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU, emphasizing the need for all possible political, moral, humanitarian, educational, material and other assistance. It expressed appreciation to those who had contributed such assistance. The Committee maintained contact with other United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned with assistance to victims of apartheid.

On 6 April, the Committee, at a meeting to mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of PAC, called on the international community to extend assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa.

Among its recommendations to the General Assembly, the Committee suggested the continued authorization of funds from the regular United Nations budget to enable the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU (ANC and PAC) to maintain their offices in New York.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July (resolution 1984/55), the Economic and Social Council recommended that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by OAU be included in the agenda of high-level meetings of the OAU General Secretariat and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations within the United Nations system, with a view to ensuring the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories. The Council noted with satisfaction the arrangements by several specialized agencies and United Nations institutions which enabled representatives of those movements to participate as observers in proceedings concerning their respective countries, and called on those international institutions which had not done so to follow that example and make the necessary arrangements, including defraying the participation costs of those representatives.

A similar recommendation was made by the Committee on colonial countries in a resolution of 22 August.<sup>(51)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In numerous 1984 resolutions, the General Assembly took action related to assistance for national liberation movements.

In resolution 39/17, the Assembly called for a substantial increase in assistance given by States, United Nations organs, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid through their national liberation movements recognized by OAU. Similarly, in resolution 39/72 G, it appealed for increased support for those movements and to all those struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society. By resolution 39/8, the Assembly urged United Nations organizations to expand their co-operation with OAU and, through it, their assistance to the liberation movements.

Resolution 39/72 A included the Assembly's appeal to Governments and organizations to provide maximal moral, political and material assistance to ANC and PAC and all struggling for freedom in South Africa in opposition to apartheid. By that text, the Assembly decided to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the United Nations regular budget to enable those movements to maintain New York offices in order to participate in appropriate deliberations. In resolution 39/15, it again appealed for the extension of all possible co-operation to the liberation movements.

By resolution 39/43, the Assembly echoed the action taken by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1984/55 (see above), without, however, specifying that the participation costs of liberation movement representatives should be defrayed by the organization concerned.

In resolution 39/76 on the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by OAU and/or the League of Arab States, the Assembly called on the States concerned to accord to the delegations of those movements, which were accorded observer status by international organizations, the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for performing their functions.

UN Trust Fund for South Africa

The United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1965<sup>(92)</sup> to provide voluntary assistance to persons persecuted under discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, made five grants totalling $1,925,000 in 1984, according to an October report by the Secretary-General.<sup>(93)</sup> By that report, the Secretary-General submitted the report of the Fund's Committee of Trustees. The Fund received $1,726,396 in contributions during 1984 (see table, p. 170) and a further $481,648 was pledged for that year. The total income since the Fund's inception, including interest, was $19,946,983 and the total amount of grants was $19,586,670 as at 30 September, leaving a balance of $360,313. In December, the Assembly appealed for increased contributions to the Fund.

Other UN assistance

The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see p. 190) also provided educational and training assistance to South Africans, as described by the Secretary-General in an October 1984 report.<sup>(94)</sup> During the 1983/84 school year, it granted scholarships to 777 South Africans, as compared with 613 the year before. Of the 777 scholarships, 378 were new awards and the remaining 399 were extensions of previous grants.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/109, the General Assembly called for further assistance to student refugees in southern Africa.

Other aspects

Among other activities to promote the international campaign against apartheid, the United Nations, and especially the Special Committee against Apartheid, promoted the dissemination of information to inform the public world-wide. Non-governmental organizations were encouraged to participate in this effort, and special meetings, missions and observances were held to promote the campaign. The Committee drew up its work plan, which was approved by the General Assembly in December.

Public information

The Special Committee against Apartheid continued to encourage the widest possible international action against apartheid, paying particular attention to promoting public action by trade unions, youth and students, and all other organizations engaged in the struggle against apartheid.<sup>(1)</sup> The Committee also participated in meetings organized by various organizations (see p. 173). It gave financial and other assistance to several conferences which it helped to organize. In its recommendations to the General Assembly, the Committee said it was essential to give attention to efforts to inform Governments and world public opinion of the serious implications of the offensive of the Pretoria régime against the people of South Africa and Namibia, and the front-line States, in collusion with powerful external interests.

The Committee continued to welcome and encourage the mobilization of world public opinion against apartheid, and action by trade unions, religious bodies and leaders, and organizations of students, youth, women and other segments of the population. It expressed satisfaction with the progress in such mobilization during the year.

The Committee noted the increasing participation of artists in the campaign against apartheid. Many artists contributed works to the Art contre/Apartheid exhibit, supported by the Committee. "Artists and Athletes against Apartheid", a United States organization assisted by the Committee, received the support of many entertainers and athletes in the United States. The Committee encouraged similar activities by artists and intellectuals in other countries.

The Committee attached importance to promoting public opinion against the crimes of the Pretoria régime—which it described as blackmail of independent African States, attempts at denationalization of the indigenous African majority, forced removals of the African people from their land and homes, and repression, torture and killing of patriots—as well as against the collusion of major Western Powers and vested interests with that régime. The demonstrations in European countries against the visit of the Prime Minister of South Africa (see p. 135) showed, according to the Committee, that when the people were informed of the facts, they would not fail to respond in support of the oppressed people and the United Nations. The Committee stated that world public opinion should be encouraged to demand that there be no collaboration with the régime, and that all relevant United Nations resolutions be implemented. Governments and public organizations should be encouraged to persuade the collaborators with apartheid to desist from that course. For these reasons, the Committee recommended that the General Assembly commend the anti-apartheid movements and other organizations concerned for actions against apartheid, appeal to Governments and organizations to support the anti-apartheid movements, and ensure necessary resources to enable the Committee to expand its activities to promote the campaign.

As for its own programme of work, the Committee recommended that activities be organized to pay tribute to the national liberation movement of South Africa, and its leaders and martyrs, in conjunction with the observance of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1985. The Committee planned to co-operate with OAU in promoting such activities, and suggested they be co-ordinated with tributes to all martyrs in the struggle for the emancipation of Africa.

India, by a letter of 20 March to the Secretary-General,<sup>(95)</sup> forwarded the final declaration of the Conference of the Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries (Jakarta, Indonesia, 26-30 January), which included a statement on the international campaign against apartheid. Affirming their support for educating public opinion, the Ministers called on member Governments to encourage the information and mass media in their countries to contribute to the campaign.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1984/55 of 25 July, requested United Nations organizations, in accordance with United Nations resolutions on apartheid, to intensify support for the oppressed people of South Africa and to take such measures as would isolate the régime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid.

In resolution 39/72 A, the Assembly commended the anti-apartheid and solidarity movements, religious bodies, trade unions, youth and student organizations and other groups engaged in campaigns for the isolation of the apartheid régime and for assistance to South African liberation movements recognized by OAU.

Non-governmental organizations

The United Nations, and especially the Special Committee against Apartheid, continued in 1984 to encourage non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to promote the campaign against apartheid.<sup>(1)</sup>

The International Conference for the Independence of Namibia and the Eradication of Apartheid (Geneva, 2-5 July) was attended by anti-apartheid and solidarity organizations from many countries, liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia, and representatives of United Nations Member States based in Geneva. It was organized by the NGO Sub-Committee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia. The Conference adopted two Declarations, one on apartheid in South Africa and the other on Namibia. The Declaration on South Africa condemned those Western countries which collaborated with South Africa, especially those Governments and leaders who had received the Prime Minister of South Africa during his trip to Western Europe (see p. 135).

Among its activities, the Special Committee participated in a number of conferences, seminars and meetings organized by various international and national NGOs. The Chairman sent several messages to conferences and other events. On several occasions, the Committee gave financial and other assistance to conferences which it helped organize.

Following its mission to London on 9 and 10 January to participate in the ceremony for the proclamation of the Declaration of the Greater London Council designating Greater London as an anti-apartheid zone, the Committee delegation met with members of the British Anti-Apartheid Movement and was received by the Mayor and Councillors of the borough of Camden, which had changed the name of the street where the Movement's office was located to "Mandela Street", in honour of Nelson Mandela, the ANC leader imprisoned in South Africa for over 20 years. The delegation also held meetings with leaders of British organizations active against apartheid and with Commonwealth officials and the High Commissioners of front-line States.

The Committee assisted at a press conference on 2 March organized by the British Anti-Apartheid Movement in London and held consultations with the General Secretary of the National Union of Seamen who was head of the Maritime Unions against Apartheid. In April, the Chairman addressed student groups in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and Stanford University, California, and had a series of meetings with a number of anti-apartheid groups in the New York area. During his visit to Paris from 21 to 23 May, he had consultations with the three main French anti-apartheid organizations.

While attending the twenty-fifth anniversary conference of the British Anti-Apartheid Movement in June, the Chairman held consultations with Archbishop Trevor Huddleston and Bob Hughes, Member of Parliament, President and Chairman, respectively, of the Movement. He also held consultations with anti-apartheid movements from Australia, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Switzerland and the United States, as well as other British groups. On his mission to Rome from 6 to 8 July, the Chairman held consultations with leaders of Italian anti-apartheid groups.

At a meeting on 30 November, the Committee heard a statement by Walter Fauntroy, delegate of the District of Columbia in the United States House of Representatives, who informed the meeting about action of North American organizations and leaders against apartheid, and referred in particular to the Free South Africa Movement, which was seeking the release of leaders of non-violent protests. At the same meeting, the Committee consulted with J. N. Scholten, Chairman of the Association of West European Parliamentarians for Action against Apartheid, who said that the increased level of action within South Africa must be supported by action from outside, particularly by the imposition of economic sanctions against South Africa (see p. 144), and he looked forward to closer ties between United States congressmen and West European parliamentarians for joint action against apartheid.

Representatives of 18 anti-apartheid and solidarity groups from Australia, the Nordic countries, the United States and Western Europe met in London on 25 and 26 June and adopted a statement<sup>(96)</sup> saying that South Africa's "agreement" with some African countries had been extracted as a result of military aggression and destabilization (see p. 177), and that there was no significant internal change in South Africa despite the so-called reform constitution (see p. 157). The participants pledged to focus on the total isolation of South Africa, the immediate independence of Namibia and support for the front-line States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/72 E, the General Assembly appealed to NGOs, among others, to co-operate with the United Nations in disseminating information against apartheid, and to intensify the international campaign for the release of Nelson Mandela and all South African political prisoners and detainees.

Meetings, missions and observances

As in previous years, the Special Committee against Apartheid organized or co-sponsored in 1984 a number of meetings, missions and observances to promote the international campaign against apartheid.<sup>(1)</sup> It devoted attention to the dissemination of information on the situation in South Africa, and in southern Africa as a whole, and to the encouragement of public action all over the world on various aspects of the campaign and by various segments of the population. It considered that those efforts should be intensified.

Meetings. The Committee participated in the International Hearings on South African Aggression against Neighbouring States (Oslo, Norway, 22-24 March) (see p. 179).

The North American Regional Conference for Action against Apartheid<sup>(97)</sup> (United Nations Headquarters, 18-21 June) was attended by Governments, the chairmen of relevant United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, the Non-Aligned Movement, OAU, representatives of the southern African liberation movements (ANC, PAC and SWAPO), the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and a number of representatives of religious, trade union, student, anti-apartheid and other organizations from Canada and the United States. The participants unanimously adopted a Declaration,<sup>(98)</sup> in which they noted that the South African régime was intensifying repression internally and conducting a campaign to create the illusion of change in South Africa externally, and that the new constitutional changes were designed to entrench apartheid. The Conference stressed that the United States policy of "constructive engagement" and the continuing support given to South Africa by Canada and certain Western countries was largely responsible for helping to maintain apartheid rule and for the escalation of South African destruction against neighbouring States. Convinced that isolating the régime and cutting off international support would quicken the arrival of peace and freedom for all the people of southern Africa, the Conference adopted a programme of action on ways for Governments, organizations and individuals to help end collaboration with South Africa.

The Conference of Arab Solidarity with the Struggle for Liberation in Southern Africa was organized by the Committee in co-operation with the League of Arab States (Tunis, Tunisia, 7-9 August).<sup>(99)</sup> It also was attended by representatives of Arab States, front-line States, United Nations bodies, OAU, ANC, PAC, SWAPO and PLO and other governmental and non-governmental organizations. In the Declaration, adopted by acclamation,<sup>(100)</sup> the Conference pledged increased support in the struggle for liberation in southern Africa, and total solidarity with Africa in the effort for the emancipation from colonialist and racist oppression. It considered that the continued opposition by the Western permanent members of the Security Council to comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa had permitted the continuation of its crimes. The Conference condemned the close alliance which had developed between the racist régimes in Pretoria and Tel Aviv in their hostility to genuine freedom of African and Arab peoples. Recognizing the importance of intensifying the dissemination of information in Arab countries on the situation in southern Africa, it requested the League of Arab States and Arab Governments and organizations to take steps toward this end.

The Inter-Faith Colloquium on Apartheid (London, 5-8 March)—the first-ever gathering of representatives from the major world religions convened to draw up a common stand against apartheid—was organized by Archbishop Trevor Huddleston, in co-operation with the Committee.<sup>(101)</sup> It was attended by theologians and representatives from the Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh faiths. In their unanimously adopted Declaration, the participants made recommendations for their particular religious communities, including: developing information and education about the effects of apartheid, as well as spiritual and theological reflection on its implications; support for those struggling in South Africa and Namibia for self-determination and for political freedom; support for the policy of isolating the apartheid régime by boycotts in trade, finance, cultural and sporting activities, tourism, emigration and other areas; opposition to the supply of military and nuclear resources to the apartheid régime; support for the rights to property, including equitable land distribution and respect for places of worship; and continued prayer and meditation with and for those victimized by apartheid.

An International NGO Conference for the Independence of Namibia and the Eradication of Apartheid was also held (Geneva, 2-5 July) (see p. 172).

The Seminar on the Legal Status of the Apartheid Régime in South Africa and Other Legal Aspects of the Struggle against Apartheid (Lagos, 13-16 August) was organized by the Committee in co-operation with Nigeria.<sup>(102)</sup> The participants examined the international and national legal implications of the situation in South Africa as a result of its apartheid policies, particularly the legal status of the régime under international law, and the need to develop strategies for concerted legal and political action against it. The Seminar was attended by international jurists, social scientists, international, regional and national legal bodies, anti-apartheid movements and other relevant organizations, as well as United Nations bodies; and other intergovernmental organizations and liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia. In its Declaration,<sup>(103)</sup> the Seminar recognized that recent developments in southern Africa made it imperative for the international community to understand the need for action through the application of international law to a situation which constituted a serious threat to international peace and security. The Seminar found that there was a strong body of law to support the international campaign for the eradication of apartheid and colonialism in South Africa and to provide support for the primary instrument of change, the national liberation movement of the people of South Africa. The régime—which deprived the majority of its people of elementary rights, left them without citizenship and subjected them to racial discrimination—lacked fundamental legitimacy because of its racist and minority foundations. In the view of the Seminar, a United Nations Member State which was in a situation of illegitimacy could be expelled from the Organization. Moreover, a State which had persistently violated the United Nations Charter and which had been expelled would still be answerable to the international community as provided for in Article 2 of the Charter.

In its annual report to the General Assembly issued in September,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee recommended that the Assembly commend the declarations of the conferences it had organized or co-sponsored during the previous year to the attention of Governments, organizations and individuals.

Missions. In 1984, the Committee sent a number of missions and held consultations with Governments as part of its activities in the campaign against apartheid.

The Chairman of the Committee met on 4 April with the Prime Minister of Sweden, who assured him that Sweden would provide all appropriate assistance to those engaged in the legitimate struggle gle against apartheid and to the front-line States. Also in April, during a mission to the United Kingdom, he met with the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and conveyed to him the Committee's view that apartheid was the root cause of the problems in southern Africa. In May, he travelled to Washington, D.C., and had discussions on the situation in southern Africa with the Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs. During his visit to Paris from 21 to 23 May, the Chairman met with the Minister for External Relations of France, who pledged his Government's co-operation in the struggle against apartheid.

The Chairman undertook a mission to Rome and to the Vatican on 6 and 7 July. He met with the Director-General for Political Affairs in the Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. On 7 July, he was received in audience by Pope John Paul II, who presented him with a special message.<sup>(54)</sup> From 28 to 30 August, he visited India for consultations with the Prime Minister, current Chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and other officials.

From 30 October to 6 November, the Chairman visited Norway, Sweden, Denmark and the Netherlands for further discussions with governmental leaders on international action against apartheid in the light of recent developments in South Africa. He emphasized that Western countries were in a position to make the most significant contribution to the eradication of apartheid.

The Committee held consultations with various government officials, including the Minister for External Affairs of France on 9 October; Walter Fauntroy, delegate of the District of Columbia in the United States House of Representatives, on 30 November; and J. N. Scholten, Chairman of the Association of West European Parliamentarians for Action against Apartheid, also on 30 November.

The Committee organized and sent a delegation of women leaders to Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Singapore, Thailand and India from 24 August to 19 September to promote wider awareness of the plight of women and children under apartheid and of the need for increased assistance to them. The delegation was led by Naome Nhwatiwa, Deputy Minister of Information, Posts and Telecommunications of Zimbabwe. In each country, the delegation met with officials of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, had discussions with NGOs and met with members of the news media.

Observances. As part of its activities, the Committee organized or was represented at several special observances in 1984.

As in previous years, it held solemn meetings in observance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (21 March), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa (16 June), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia (9 August), and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October).

In connection with the Day for eliminating racial discrimination, the Committee issued a statement<sup>(104)</sup> noting with satisfaction the actions taken by many cities in support of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa. The Committee appealed to all cities to take appropriate action against apartheid and urged citizens to promote such action through such measures as ceasing purchase of goods originating from South Africa and Namibia; withdrawing investments in companies owned by or operating in South Africa; discouraging transnational corporations and financial institutions from investing in, or making loans to, South Africa; and withholding city facilities from any sporting or cultural event involving South Africans and Namibians, or sportsmen or entertainers who had toured South Africa and were included in the Committee's registers (see p. 165).

At its meeting on 6 January, the Committee issued a statement endorsing the observance of 1984 as the Year of the Women of South Africa, called for by ANC. In that statement, the Committee expressed the hope that the observance of the Year would lead to wider support and solidarity with the oppressed women of South Africa and Namibia and their national liberation movements. It also urged Governments, organizations and media to undertake concrete programmes for that purpose. In related action, the Committee held a solemn meeting on 17 April on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the Federation of South African Women. Drawing attention to the particular oppression inflicted on black women under the apartheid system, the participants emphasized that black women had been the worst sufferers under the pass laws, the bantustan policy, the forced uprooting of millions of African people, and numerous laws enforcing racial discrimination. They explained that black women constituted most of the domestic workers who were denied trade union rights and were subjected to exploitation. Women and children, they added, had been victims of raids by the South African armed forces against refugees in neighbouring countries. (See also ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XIX.)

In addition, the United Nations Council for Namibia held a special meeting on 25 May in observance of Africa Liberation Day and the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Namibia and All Other Colonial Territories, as well as those in South Africa, Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights. The Committee against

Apartheid and the Committee on colonial countries participated in that meeting (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter I).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/72 A, the General Assembly commended the declarations of conferences organized or co-sponsored by the Special Committee against Apartheid to the attention of all Governments and organizations.

Work programme of the Committee against Apartheid

In the light of the current situation in South Africa, the Special Committee against Apartheid, recognizing the need for greater action under United Nations auspices towards the total isolation of the Pretoria régime and support to the national liberation struggle of the South African people, pledged to strengthen its activities, with the assistance of the Secretariat's Centre against Apartheid.<sup>(1)</sup> The Committee said it would need to expand its activities as regards: consultations with Governments and organizations; dissemination of information; promotion of public campaigns for the boycott of South Africa, for support of the liberation struggle, for the unconditional release of South African political prisoners, against collaboration with the Pretoria régime, and on other aspects of mobilization against apartheid; and encouragement of artists, writers, sportspersons, religious leaders and others to contribute to the campaign against apartheid. Towards that end, it intended to organize, co-sponsor or support several conferences or seminars, and to give greater support for public campaigns. It planned to publicize the struggle of the oppressed people against apartheid and for liberation, and the activities of liberation movements recognized by OAU. In that connection, it intended to co-operate with ANC in observing on 26 June 1985 the thirtieth anniversary of the adoption of the Freedom Charter of South Africa.

For its special projects in 1985, the Committee recommended that the General Assembly make an allocation of $400,000, and it appealed for increased voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid and for the special projects. The Committee recognized the need to expand the work of the Centre against Apartheid to meet the increased requirements of the Committee and the international campaign against apartheid, and it planned to consult with the Secretary-General on the most effective arrangements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/72 B by recorded vote.

In explanation of vote, a number of States expressed reservations about the resolution and the Committee's report.<sup>(1)</sup>

Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and New Zealand did not agree with all the conclusions and recommendations made by the Committee.

The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom expressed concern over the report's balance. The former hoped that the Committee would display a more equitable position towards it and other Western States in its publications. Terming the report slanted and in several places seriously misrepresenting its position, the United Kingdom objected to the Committee's tendentious attacks on Member States.

The Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the Netherlands expressed concern over the financial implications of the resolution. Japan was concerned about paragraphs 4 and 5, which it felt gave the Committee an excessively wide margin of discretion, and hoped that it would manage its budget efficiently and report back on how it spent the $400,000. In the view of the Netherlands, the means for implementing the work programme should be found within regular budget resources.

In related action in resolution 39/72 A, the Assembly endorsed the annual report of the Special Committee. By resolution 39/72 C, it requested the Committee to continue publicizing information on the relations between Israel and South Africa, to keep the matter under review and to report to the Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate; the Secretary-General was requested to assist the Committee in disseminating information on the collaboration between those States. The Assembly, in resolution 39/72 E, encouraged the Committee and the Centre against Apartheid to intensify their activities designed to inform world public opinion of the South Africa situation, and promote public action in support of the struggle of the oppressed people and the United Nations objectives.

South Africa and the front-line States of southern Africa

In 1984, several United Nations bodies expressed concern over South Africa's relations with its neighbours. Those countries—Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe—were known as the front-line States. The General Assembly, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Commission on Human Rights and the United Nations Council for Namibia were the main bodies taking such action.

The situation between Angola and South Africa deteriorated in early 1984; in January Angola complained to the Security Council that South African troops had moved further into its territory during a bombing attack. The Council responded in resolution 546(1984), demanding that South Africa unconditionally withdraw its occupation forces from Angola. The Assembly also called for the withdrawal of South African troops. The Committee against Apartheid reported that most of those forces were withdrawn during 1984.

Relations between Mozambique and South Africa took a new direction. The two countries informed the Secretary-General that they had reached a security agreement in March, known as the Nkomati Accord, by which they agreed not to allow their territories to be used for launching acts of aggression against each other.

In an exchange of letters, Lesotho and South Africa mentioned that they might arrive at some kind of security arrangement.

The Committee against Apartheid condemned South Africa's aggression against the front-line States and said the régime was pressuring them to sign non-aggression accords.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> condemned South Africa's actions against the front-line States and expressed concern about the security of the region of southern Africa as a whole.

In a statement issued on 3 January 1984, the Acting Chairman condemned, on behalf of the Committee, the escalation of aggression by South Africa against Angola (see p. 180) since December 1983.<sup>(2)</sup> He said that unless urgent action was taken by the international community, there was danger of escalation of South Africa's aggression all over the region. He urged Governments and organizations to demonstrate their solidarity with Angola and press for comprehensive sanctions against South Africa (see p. 138).

On 16 March 1984,<sup>(3)</sup> the Committee adopted a statement on developments in South Africa and southern Africa as a whole. It reaffirmed that the primary cause of tension and conflict in the region was the apartheid policy, and that tension would remain unless apartheid was eliminated and the people of South Africa as a whole were enabled to establish a non-racial democratic State. It added that South Africa's expressions of willingness to accept non-intervention in neighbouring States—after causing enormous damage to their economies through aggression, destabilization and terrorism—required vigilance by the international community. The Committee urged the community to condemn the actions of Governments, transnational corporations and other interests which, through collaboration with South Africa, encouraged it in its racist, repressive and aggressive policies.

Among its conclusions,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee stated that after a series of acts of aggression, massive destabilization, terrorism and economic blackmail against neighbouring States, the Pretoria régime had proceeded, with the support and encouragement of certain Western States, to pressure front-line States to enter into security agreements with it. It had sought recognition as a regional power with a view to acquiring hegemony over southern Africa in return for serving the interests of major Western Powers. South Africa's offensive, encouraged by the United States policy of "constructive engagement", was accompanied by propaganda that its pressure against neighbouring States to sign agreements reflected a desire to seek peaceful solutions. An unpublicized accord by South Africa with Swaziland, followed by an understanding with Angola (the Lusaka Understanding of February 1984, which provided for the withdrawal of South African forces from Angola) and a non-aggression agreement with Mozambique (the Nkomati Accord of 16 March), had failed to halt the armed struggle of the opposition.

Following the accord with Angola and after a long delay, South Africa withdrew its forces but left behind some 60 soldiers. In addition it continued to support the forces of the Uniao Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) opposed to the Angolan Government. Despite the Nkomati Accord, Mozambique claimed that South African agents continued to supply the National Resistance Movement with arms and ammunition. Reports indicated that just before the signing of the Accord, South Africa had resupplied the Movement with war matériel.

The Committee believed that the South African régime constituted a greater menace than ever to international peace and security. Its agreements were directed against the legitimate struggle of internationally recognized national liberation movements and were intended to provide legitimacy to the Pretoria régime and help it establish a southern African "constellation of States" under its hegemony. Despite the agreements, South Africa continued to occupy Angolan territory and to subvert neighbouring States. It had increased its military budget by 21.4 per cent for 1984-1985 and was expanding military bases near its borders. It staged its biggest military manoeuvres in September 1984. South Africa was able to take such steps because of its confidence in protection by Western Powers against international action, the Committee concluded.

The Committee urged the international community to show concern for the States which had been subjected to aggression and destabilization, and it considered it essential for the United Nations to promote assistance to all front-line States and Lesotho so that they could overcome their economic, security and other problems. It called for urgent action to defend the States which were currently under pressure by Pretoria to sign "security agreements". It urged the General Assembly to demand that the United States and the United Kingdom, in particular, take action to oblige South Africa to end its illegal pressure against neighbouring States. Noting that the difficulties of the front-line States had created certain problems for the national liberation movement of South Africa, the Committee urged the international community to assist the movement to overcome the difficulties caused by the vulnerability of neighbouring States to South Africa's pressure. It recommended that the Assembly urge all States and organizations to provide maximum moral, political and material assistance to the front-line States and Lesotho, to the liberation movements of South Africa and to all those struggling for freedom in that country in opposition to apartheid.

The Committee participated in the International Hearings on South African Aggression against Neighbouring States (Oslo, Norway, 22-24 March), which were conducted by a panel of more than 20 prominent persons presided over by the former Minister for Foreign Affairs of Denmark. Statements were made by the Foreign Minister of Norway, Bishop Desmond Tutu and representatives of the front-line States and Lesotho. The panel adopted a declaration calling for greater efforts to increase the effectiveness of the arms embargo against South Africa, strengthen efforts to obtain binding international sanctions against it, increase assistance to the front-line States and the liberation movements in South Africa and Namibia, exercise more control to isolate South Africa, and strengthen diplomatic, political and economic pressure on it with a view to preventing it from carrying out aggression against neighbouring States.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries also took action on South Africa's aggression against neighbouring States.

In a decision of 20 August,<sup>(4)</sup> the Committee condemned the repeated aggression by South African armed forces against neighbouring States and its use of Namibian territory to launch such attacks, which had resulted in the loss of innocent lives and the destruction of property. It called on Member States to extend all possible assistance to those States so that they might better defend their territorial integrity. On 21 August,<sup>(5)</sup> the Committee, citing South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia, said that in its escalating war against the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, SWAPO, South Africa had committed armed aggression against the neighbouring African countries, particularly Angola, causing extensive loss of human lives and destruction of the economic infrastructure.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In two 28 February resolutions on the violation of human rights in southern Africa, the Commission on Human Rights also condemned South Africa's aggression (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII). It condemned South Africa for its military attacks and its economic and political pressures against neighbouring States and demanding the immediate cessation of the aggression.<sup>(6)</sup> The Commission rejected all policies which encouraged South Africa to intensify its repression of the people of South Africa and Namibia and escalate its acts of aggression against the neighbouring States; and demanded that South Africa cease forthwith its aggression aimed at undermining the economies and destabilizing the political institutions of neighbouring States.<sup>(7)</sup>

Action by the Council for Namibia. The United Nations Council for Namibia, at extraordinary plenary meetings (Bangkok, Thailand, 21-25 May), adopted the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia, which it included in its annual report to the General Assembly.<sup>(8)</sup> In the Declaration, the Council condemned the use of Namibia by South Africa as a staging ground for armed aggression against neighbouring States, in order to intimidate them and to prevent them from supporting the struggle of Namibian and South African peoples for independence. The Council stated that support of the front-line States continued to be important to bring independence to Namibia. It deemed it imperative that the international community increase, as a matter of urgency, financial, material, military and political support to the front-line States to enable them to resolve their own economic difficulties, which were largely a consequence of South Africa's policies, and to defend themselves better against South Africa's attempts to destabilize them.

The Programme called on States to give maximum support, including military assistance, to the front-line States so that they could strengthen their economies and repel South Africa's aggression. The Council called on organizations to extend all possible assistance to those States, and urged Governments, agencies and organizations, to support the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, of which the States were members, to reduce their dependence on South Africa.

Communications. During 1984, several bodies adopted declarations which dealt with relations between South Africa and its neighbours.

On 2 March,<sup>(9)</sup> France forwarded the declaration adopted on 28 February at the EEC Ministerial Meeting on European Political Co-operation. On southern Africa, the 10 EEC States welcomed the initiatives aimed at ending the conflicts in the region—the February Lusaka agreement on military disengagement in southern Angola and the understanding between South Africa and Mozambique. They called on all concerned to seize the opportunity to implement the plan for Namibia's independence outlined by the Security Council in resolution 435(1978).<sup>(10)</sup>

The OAU Council of Ministers (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 27 February–5 March) adopted a series of resolutions,<sup>(11)</sup> including one on the situation in southern Africa. The Council condemned South Africa for its destabilizing policy against neighbouring countries and particularly the recruitment, training and financing of armed bandits and mercenaries directed against States in the region, as well as the military occupation of Angola, and demanded the withdrawal of the South African army; the Council also condemned South Africa's raids against Lesotho and Mozambique.

The Front-line States' Summit Meeting (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 29 April) adopted a final communiqué.<sup>(12)</sup> In regard to the understanding between Angola and South Africa, the heads of State and Government hoped that South Africa would honour its commitment to withdraw its troops from Angola, which they believed would be an opportunity for the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978). As for South Africa's agreement with Mozambique, they hoped that South Africa would honour its commitment to cease destabilizing Mozambique through the use of armed bandits, and expressed appreciation of its support for ANC in the struggle against apartheid.

The Fourth Islamic Summit (Casablanca, 16-19 January)<sup>(13)</sup> confirmed its support for the struggle of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia for liberation through all means and condemned the aggression by South Africa against front-line States and demanded the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola.

In the final communique of the Foreign Ministers and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 1-5 October)<sup>(14)</sup> the participants condemned the aggression, economic pressure and acts of terrorism and sabotage launched by South Africa against independent African countries, and demanded the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on numerous occasions in 1984, condemned South Africa's aggression against neighbouring countries.

In resolution 39/72 A, it condemned the régime for its repeated acts of aggression, subversion and terrorism against independent African States. It demanded that all South African troops be immediately and unconditionally withdrawn from Angola and that South Africa respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of independent African States. The international community and all countries were called on to render concrete support and assistance to the front-line and other neighbouring States in the region to enable them to provide adequate security for refugees and to resist the mounting aggression, subversion and economic pressure of South Africa.

The Assembly, in resolution 39/72 G, condemned the overt and covert aggressive actions of South Africa directed at the destabilization of neighbouring States, and demanded that South Africa immediately withdraw its troops from southern Angola and end the destabilization of front-line and other States.

In resolution 39/50 A on Namibia, the Assembly reaffirmed its conviction that support of the front-line States for the Namibian cause continued to be an important factor in the efforts to bring independence to the Territory. It urged the international community to increase financial, material, military and political support to those States so as to enable them to resolve their own economic difficulties, which were largely a consequence of South Africa's policies of aggression and subversion, and to defend themselves. The Assembly again condemned South Africa for using Namibia as a staging ground to launch acts of subversion, destabilization and aggression against neighbouring States.

By resolution 39/17, the Assembly condemned the establishment and use of armed terrorist groups by South Africa with a view to pitting them against the national liberation movements and destabilizing the legitimate Governments of southern Africa. The Assembly reaffirmed its solidarity with the independent African countries and national liberation movements that were victims of aggression and destabilization by South Africa, and called on the international community to support those countries so that they could strengthen their defence capacity, defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity, and rebuild and develop. Stating that the practice of using mercenaries against sovereign States and national liberation movements constituted a criminal act, the Assembly called on Governments to ban the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territories and the transit of mercenaries through them, and to prohibit their nationals from serving as such.

In resolution 39/43, the Assembly urged United Nations organizations to extend material assistance to the front-line States in order to enable them to support the struggle of the Namibian people for independence and to resist the violation of their territorial integrity by South African armed forces directly or, as in Angola and Mozambique, through puppet traitor groups.

The Assembly, in resolution 39/8, reiterated its appreciation to the Secretary-General for organizing and mobilizing special programmes of economic assistance for African States, in particular for the front-line States and others in the region, to help them cope with the situation caused by South Africa's aggression.

Angola-South Africa armed incidents and South African occupation of Angola

On 1 January 1984, Angola, in a letter to the President of the Security Council,<sup>(15)</sup> requested an urgent Council meeting in the face of what it said was the worsening military situation created by the South African army's movement further north into Angolan territory and the combat occurring between military units of the two countries in localities more than 200 kilometres from the Namibian border.

The Council took action that month, demanding that South Africa withdraw immediately from Angola and cease all violations against its territory.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In response to Angola's request,<sup>(15)</sup> the Security Council held three meetings from 4 to 6 January. Algeria, Angola, Ethiopia, Mozambique, Nigeria, South Africa, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zambia were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without vote.

Addressing the Council, Angola said that just two weeks earlier South Africa had offered a "disengagement" of its troops in Angola to begin on 31 January 1984,<sup>(16)</sup> but, before Angola could begin to study that offer, South Africa had fortified its military positions inside Angolan territory, where they had been in illegal occupation since 1981, and had moved further into Angolan territory—200 kilometres north of the Namibian border. The aggression, including bombing, strafing, rocket attacks, artillery shelling and mine detonations, disproved South Africa's claim that its troops would operate only against Namibian freedom fighters. Sophisticated military arms were available to South Africa through direct and indirect military assistance, in contravention of the Council's embargo on arms sales, by Pretoria's Western friends. South Africa's moves, which began in 1975 and ranged from airspace violations to wholesale slaughter, were aimed at installing a puppet administration in areas under its military occupation. Despite the continuing operations, Angola was willing to test South Africa's offer and had reaffirmed its own offer of 31 December 1983<sup>(16)</sup> to accept a 30-day truce beginning 1 February 1984, if SWAPO agreed and if South Africa withdrew from Angola and promised to initiate the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence.<sup>(10)</sup>

South Africa said that its operations in southern Angola had one objective—protecting Namibia's inhabitants from SWAPO terrorist attacks launched from Angola. It was that State's support in providing facilities and arms to SWAPO that had led to the current situation. As it had stated before, South Africa would not sit idly by while SWAPO operated with impunity from the safety of Angolan territory. The cross-border activities were aimed at eradicating SWAPO bases in Angola; if Angolan forces continued to give military support to SWAPO or interfere with South Africa's operations against it, then they must bear responsibility for the consequences. South Africa denied that its forces had committed atrocities against the civilian population of Angola. It reiterated its 1983 offer<sup>(16)</sup> to begin a disengagement on 31 January 1984 of its forces in Angola, on the understanding that this would be reciprocated by Angola assuring that its own forces, SWAPO and the Cuban forces in Angola would not exploit the situation by threatening the security of Namibia. In regard to the Namibia situation, South Africa remained prepared to begin implementing Security Council resolution 435(1978)<sup>(10)</sup> upon resolution of the problem of Cuban forces in Angola.

Almost all speakers remarked that Angola was bringing its complaint about South African aggression to the Council only two weeks after the Council had condemned such action and demanded that South Africa withdraw.<sup>(17)</sup> Peru recalled that South Africa had violated Angola's sovereignty and territorial integrity ever since its independence.

Mozambique, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania and Viet Nam believed that through such aggressive acts, South Africa was attempting to gain control of southern Africa. According to the USSR, South Africa, expecting impunity, intended to eliminate the progressive régime in Angola and perpetuate racist colonial systems in the region. The Ukrainian SSR spoke similarly, stating that South Africa sought to safeguard apartheid and maintain colonial systems in southern Africa. Nicaragua believed that the latest offensive was aimed at destabilizing neighbouring States and South Africa was attempting to do so by giving support to the counter-revolutionary forces in Angola, financed and trained by South Africa and its allies; the leadership of the Angolan counter-revolution was based in South Africa and its operations depended on Pretoria and a great Power.

Mozambique, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Zambia stated that South Africa was aided in its aggressive acts by certain Western States, and some of those speakers singled out the United States. The Syrian Arab Republic, for example, said that South Africa, thanks to the military power it had gained and to the protection it enjoyed from some Western States, in particular the United States, had arrogated to itself the right to invade other African States. Viet Nam stated that South Africa could act with impunity due to the support and encouragement proffered by international imperialism, particularly by a powerful permanent member of the Council.

France and the Netherlands believed that the cause of the escalation of military operations was the result of South Africa's continued presence in Namibia and its refusal to implement the United Nations plan on Namibian independence.<sup>(10)</sup>

A number of countries—including China, France, India, Nicaragua, the United Republic of Tanzania and Yugoslavia—affirmed that South Africa had used pretexts to justify its occupation of Angola. In China's view, South Africa's pretext of protecting the Namibian people from SWAPO attacks was a complete reversal of right and wrong since the South African occupation of Namibia was in itself illegal. The United Republic of Tanzania remarked that South Africa was attempting to link its withdrawal from Angolan territory to the question of Cuban troops there, as it had attempted to link Namibia's independence to the same issue. Togo, speaking for the African Group, urged the Council to reject "linkage". According to Yugoslavia, the solution to the problem of southern Africa could not remain hostage to the political manoeuvres and delays by South Africa or to its proposals aimed at postponing the solution. Zimbabwe stated that the Council had already rejected South Africa's attempt to justify its aggression by the need to protect the people of Namibia against SWAPO freedom fighters. Concerning South Africa's statement on its security needs, Egypt said that it was not South Africa but Angola that needed to have its security protected against aggression, particularly since South Africa was exploiting its military superiority.

In regard to South Africa's offer to disengage its forces from Angola during a 30-day cease-fire,<sup>(16)</sup> Algeria, Mozambique, the Netherlands and Viet Nam questioned South Africa's sincerity in the light of its current actions against that country, describing the offer either as a smoke-screen to conceal its real intentions or a mockery. The Netherlands hoped that the truce proposed by Angola on 31 December 1983 would meet with more success. France, India and Pakistan also expressed support for the the Angolan proposal for a cease-fire. France requested South Africa not to miss the opportunity of reaching peaceful settlement in southern Africa; to make this peace initiative possible, South Africa should immediately halt its military operation. Describing the proposal as positive and constructive, India noted that the Secretary-General was in direct touch with the parties concerned and looked forward to hearing the outcome of his consultations. Pakistan said that Angola's positive response to South Africa's offer should create an opportunity for the Secretary-General to ascertain whether South Africa was genuinely interested in peace in the region and willing to co-operate in the United Nations plan for Namibian independence.

A number of countries made specific recommendations for Council action. In addition to urging it to condemn South Africa's aggression, many called for a halt in its military operations and an unconditional withdrawal of its troops from Angola. Algeria, Egypt, India, Nicaragua, Peru, Togo, for the African Group, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe called for such action. Algeria, Nicaragua, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia said that the Council should demand compensation from South Africa for the damage caused in Angola. In this regard, Ethiopia, Mozambique, the USSR and Zambia remarked that many innocent lives, including civilians and refugees, had been lost during the South African operations, and extensive damage was done to Angola's economic infrastructure. Both Ethiopia and Viet Nam called for assistance to Angola to help it overcome problems resulting from the aggression. Ethiopia urged Governments to increase material and financial support to the front-line countries, in particular to Angola. Among those calling for compensation for the loss of life and destruction of property, Zambia said that as a result of South Africa's aggression, 2,000 Angolan refugees had fled to Zambia over the previous fortnight.

Many countries called on the Council to take measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter if South Africa failed to comply with its demands. Algeria, China, Egypt, India, Mozambique, Pakistan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia and Zimbabwe made such recommendations. Algeria said the Council's actions had not had a deterrent effect; therefore the Council should invoke Chapter VII which was designed to impose respect for the law. In Mozambique's view, the Council had a choice to make between encouraging South Africa to flout the Charter or taking measures to force it to respect international law through the imposition of sanctions. Malta hoped that the Council would devise more appropriate means to negotiate stumbling-blocks and to encourage further dialogue and progress, relying on the efforts of the Secretary-General in the pursuit of United Nations objectives for southern Africa.

The Upper Volta, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe urged the Council to take a unanimous decision on the problem. The Upper Volta said that the Council must act with firmness in demanding implementation of its resolutions. Previous Council resolutions had raised questions concerning that body's effectiveness, according to Algeria, Ethiopia, Pakistan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania and the Upper Volta.

On 6 January, the Council adopted resolution 546(1984).

Security Council resolution 548(1984)

6 January 1984

13-nation draft (S/16247/Rev.1).

Sponsors: Angola, Egypt, India, Malta, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. SC 2509-2511.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, Egypt, France, India, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Peru, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Upper Volta, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United Kingdom, United States.

In explanation of vote, the United Kingdom said that, while it condemned South Africa's military action in Angola, it could not accept the extreme language of the resolution, in particular in the last preambular paragraph and in paragraph 1, and it questioned whether such language could serve any useful purpose; it also objected to paragraph 6, which might be taken as an invitation to widen the conflict, the third preambular paragraph and paragraph 8, and mentioned that the text did not reflect the latest diplomatic offers.

The United States, which deplored the South African military activity in Angola and welcomed the proposals for disengagement and a 30-day ceasefire, was concerned that the resolution focused on conflict, recrimination and condemnation rather than on the exploration of opportunities for peaceful reconciliation.

The Netherlands said that its positive vote did not mean it was considering measures for the implementation of paragraph 6.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Security Council, the Secretary-General reported on 10 January on the implementation of resolution 546(1984).<sup>(18)</sup> He said he had requested Angola and South Africa to provide all pertinent information on implementation of the resolution.

South Africa replied that it would continue to act against terrorist organizations that sought to determine the future of Namibia through violence; it accepted that its position could entail confrontation with the whole world. With regard to the demand that it withdraw from Angola, the Defence Minister of South Africa, in a statement on 8 January, said the South African security forces had reached their goal with the pre-emptive operations against SWAPO in southern Angola and withdrawal had commenced. South Africa hoped that Angola would cease protecting and supporting terrorist actions against Namibia. The Minister stated that South Africa remained prepared to negotiate with Angola. Angola informed the Secretary-General that there had been no fundamental change in the military situation in Angola and no signs of withdrawal of South African forces, which continued to conduct operations and to occupy parts of southern Angola. The Secretary-General said he would continue to monitor the situation closely.

Communications. In a letter of 24 January to the Council President,<sup>(19)</sup> Angola listed what it said was the number of South African battalions in southern Angola and stated that, from 15 to 17 January, South African forces had violated Angola's airspace about five times by reconnaissance flights. Israel addressed a letter to the Council President on 13 January,<sup>(20)</sup> stating that on 5 January, in the course of the debate on the situation in southern Angola, the Syrian Arab Republic had maligned Israel by injecting irrelevant unwarranted references to Israel.

The Secretary-General also received letters concerning the situation in Angola.

On 3 January,<sup>(21)</sup> Jamaica transmitted a 30 December 1983 statement by its Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs stating that South Africa's aggressive acts against Angola resulted from Pretoria's determination to maintain its illegal hold on Namibia and from its policy that other Governments in the region should be kept in a constant state of weakness and fear; the first step to rectifying the problems of the region would be to achieve independence for Namibia. By a letter of 5 January,<sup>(22)</sup> the USSR forwarded a TASS statement of that date describing the recent actions by South Africa against Angola and saying they were linked to the increased aggressiveness of international, and primarily United States, imperialism; TASS welcomed Angola's December 1983 proposals.<sup>(16)</sup>

On 9 January,<sup>(23)</sup> Guinea-Bissau forwarded a telex from its head of State, on behalf also of Angola, Cape Verde, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe, stating their belief that the United Nations, and the Security Council in particular, must take action under the Charter to establish the responsibility of South Africa for the situation in southern Africa and to ensure assistance to Angola.

The issue of the presence of South African forces in Angola, in particular how it affected the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence, was also brought up by Angola and Cuba in a joint letter of 20 March, by South Africa on 26 March, and by Angola on 17 November (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, on 28 February, demanded that South Africa immediately end aggression against neighbouring countries and withdraw its armed forces from Angola.<sup>(24)</sup> It also condemned South Africa for its persistent acts of subversion and aggression against Angola, including the occupation of a part of its territory, and called on South Africa to cease all acts of aggression against and withdraw all its troops from that country.<sup>(7)</sup>

Lesotho-South Africa dispute

Lesotho and South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General letters exchanged between them in 1984 on security concerns.

On 15 August,<sup>(25)</sup> Lesotho forwarded a message it had sent on 10 August in response to a South African proposal that the two countries enter into a non-aggression pact. While reaffirming its readiness to adhere to the principles of sovereign equality, territorial inviolability and the obligation of every State to prevent its territory from being used for aggression against another, Lesotho said that the two positions were still far apart. It affirmed that it would continue to refrain from interfering directly in the internal affairs of other States.

In reply, South Africa, in a message of 28 August transmitted on 7 September,<sup>(26)</sup> said the facts did not support Lesotho's claim to uphold those principles. In view of Lesotho's failure to meet South Africa's security concerns, South Africa found it difficult to proceed with a feasibility study on the highlands water project, which it said was vulnerable to acts of violence by subversive elements. South Africa remained determined to ensure that its security interests were not jeopardized.

Lesotho, in a 31 August message transmitted on 14 September,<sup>(27)</sup> said the Government was in the process of consulting its people about the South African proposal for a formal security agreement. The study on the water project, a Lesotho project, had progressed uninterrupted, evidence that it was not vulnerable to violence; urging South Africa not to withdraw its participation in the study, Lesotho affirmed that it had no intentions nor means of jeopardizing the security interests of South Africa and it was determined to live in peace with it.

The United Kingdom, in a letter to the Secretary-General of 2 July,<sup>(28)</sup> rejected certain statements made in the Special Committee against Apartheid concerning its policy, including an allegation that it was attempting to coerce Lesotho into signing an agreement with South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/17, condemned South Africa for its acts of destabilization, armed aggression against and economic blockade of Lesotho and urged the international community to extend maximum assistance to that country to enable it to fulfil its international humanitarian obligations towards refugees and to use its influence on South Africa to desist from its terrorist acts against Lesotho. In resolution 39/72 A, the Assembly demanded that South Africa fully compensate Lesotho and other African States for the damage to life and property caused by its acts of aggression. The Assembly called for special economic assistance to Lesotho in resolution 39/183.

Mozambique-South Africa accord

Mozambique, by a letter of 30 March to the Secretary-General,<sup>(29)</sup> forwarded the Agreement on Non-Aggression and Good Neighbourliness signed by the heads of State of Mozambique and South Africa on 16 March at Nkomati. By the Nkomati Accord, the two countries agreed not to allow their respective territories to be used to launch acts of aggression against the other and not to use the territory of third States for aggression against the other. They agreed to set up a joint security commission to monitor the Accord's application.

On 11 April,<sup>(30)</sup> South Africa forwarded to the Secretary-General the address given by its Prime Minister at the signing of the Nkomati Accord. He said the Accord demonstrated that States with different socio-economic and political systems could live together in peace and work together in the pursuit of common interests; South Africa looked forward to a new era of co-operation and peaceful coexistence between the two countries. Mozambique addressed a letter to the Secretary-General on 25 April,<sup>(31)</sup> transmitting excerpts of a speech by its President on 5 April. He stated that the Accord ensured the defence of Mozambique's borders and formed part of the general movement of the coastal States to transform the Indian Ocean into an area free from military bases and nuclear weapons (see p. 78).

Questions involving the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

In 1984, Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya addressed letters to the President of the Security Council concerning their continuing territorial dispute. The Council met at the Sudan's request to consider its complaint of aggression by the Jamahiriya, which the Jamahiriya denied. The Council took no action on a draft resolution on the subject.

For other questions concerning the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, see p. 253 and LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I.

Chad-Libyan Arab Jamahiriya dispute

By a letter of 31 January to the Security Council President,<sup>(1)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a statement issued in Paris by what it described as the legitimate Government of Chad. The statement said that France, which had intensified its military operations in Chad, should expect an appropriate reaction from the citizens of Chad, that it would bear responsibility for a deterioration of the military situation, and that the legitimate Government of Chad had appealed to the Jamahiriya to stand by the forces of national liberation.

Chad responded on 3 February,<sup>(2)</sup> stating that the legitimate Government of Chad was headed by Hissein Habré and that French forces were in Chad to help it defend itself against the aggression of the Jamahiriya, which continued to occupy Chadian territory.

India forwarded to the Secretary-General on 8 October<sup>(3)</sup> the final communiqué adopted by the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly (New York, 1-5 October). The Meeting expressed satisfaction at the decision on the withdrawal of foreign troops from Chad and called on all members of the Non-Aligned Movement to assist that country to complete the task of reconciliation and national reconstruction.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya-Sudan dispute

The Sudan, by a letter of 17 March to the Secretary-General,<sup>(4)</sup> transmitted a letter of the same date from its Foreign Minister, stating that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had committed aggression against Sudanese territory, threatening its security and violating the United Nations Charter and international law; the Jamahiriya had bombed Omdurman on 16 March, killing five Sudanese citizens and destroying four buildings. In a letter of 18 March to the Security Council President,<sup>(5)</sup> the Sudan requested the Council to meet to consider that aggression.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya denied the allegations in a letter of 19 March to the Secretary-General.<sup>(6)</sup> It said the Sudan had been experiencing continuous revolutions and disturbances for a number of years and it was trying to find external justifications through empty accusations against neighbouring States; furthermore, the Sudan's accusation was in preparation for military aggression against the Jamahiriya with the co-operation of imperialist Powers.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council considered the Sudan's complaint at two meetings on 27 March.

Meeting numbers. SC 2520, 2521.

At their request, Benin, Chad, Indonesia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria, Oman, the Sudan and Zaire were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Addressing the Council, the Sudan described the damage done by the 16 March bombing attack and said it was clear that the bomber took off from a military base at Kufra in the south-eastern part of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. The unprovoked act was not only a flagrant act of aggression against civilian targets in the most densely populated city in the Sudan, but was also another of a series of acts of aggression and interference in its internal affairs. Another such act was a speech by the head of State of the Jamahiriya on 2 March when he said that he supported the revolution in south Sudan to liberate the rest of the country. Over the past few years, the Sudan had been subjected to attacks by the Jamahiriya because of its wish to impose its hegemony on the Sudan. The Council should condemn the aggression, call on the Jamahiriya to desist from such acts and persuade it to respect the Sudan's territorial integrity.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said the matter was rooted in the Sudan's internal situation, which had experienced 18 or more attempted coups d'état since 1969. The current civil war was the result of violations of agreements on national conciliation in the south, and the political problems were reflected in the adverse economic situation resulting from mismanagement. Because of its indebtedness, the Sudan had become a protectorate of the United States and was making charges against the Jamahiriya to obtain American assistance. The President of the Sudan had also made public statements that he intended to get rid of the Jamahiriya's head of State. The Sudan had to justify United States intervention and the dispatch of that country's AWACS surveillance aircraft to the Sudan. Recent Western press reports raised the possibility that the Sudan had launched the raid on its own people in an attempt to obtain United States aid. Denying the Sudan's allegations and stating there was no evidence to support them, the Jamahiriya said the real culprit was the United States, against which it had brought a complaint before the Council on 22 March (see p. 253).

Benin, the USSR and the Upper Volta said there was a lack of evidence to support the Sudan's allegations. Benin, Nicaragua and the USSR believed that the real cause of the incident could be traced to international imperialism. According to Benin, everything seemed to indicate that the incident was a plot hatched by imperialism against the Jamahiriya, and an international campaign of defamation was being carried out against that country. Nicaragua said it knew from experience the capacity of imperialism to provoke conflicts in neighbouring countries whenever it considered its political or security interests threatened. The USSR stated that the forces of imperialism were ready to utilize any pretext in order to flex their military muscles and impose their will on young non-aligned States; it added that the United States had sent reconnaissance aircraft to the region for espionage operations against the Jamahiriya.

On the other hand, Chad, Egypt, the Netherlands, Oman and the United States said that the evidence supported the Sudan's claims or that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was responsible for the air raid. Indonesia and Oman expressed support for the Sudan. Chad and the United States said the attack was further evidence of the Jamahiriya's plans for regional expansion, and Chad added that the attack was an act of State terrorism. According to Chad, the Jamahiriya's head of State had made known his plans for expansion and hegemony against neighbouring countries; although he had failed in his attempts to merge his country with certain neighbouring States, including Chad, Egypt, the Sudan and Tunisia, that did not discourage him. The United States pointed out that the Jamahiriyan leader had affirmed that his Government was allied with the popular revolution in southern Sudan; he had threatened war on fronts all over the world and had used tactics of assassination and violence as well as subversion in Africa.

France, the United Kingdom and the Upper Volta condemned the act of violence without blaming any particular party. The Upper Volta felt more information was needed to clarify the situation, as did France, which added that such an act could affect peace and stability in a friendly country, which it hoped would be able to overcome its difficulties free from external interference. Similarly, Indonesia regretted that regional conflicts, such as those in north Africa, were increasingly being drawn into the cast of East-West rivalry, further complicating their solution.

The Netherlands defended the Sudan's right to self-defence when confronted with aggression. Egypt agreed and reaffirmed its support for the Sudan under their mutual defence pact, stressing that the stability and security of both States were intimately linked.

The USSR believed that the best approach to the current debate was through a regional mechanism; Nigeria urged the use of OAU.

Some countries called on the Council to take action, while others believed that it should refrain from premature judgements. Chad, Egypt and Oman called on the Council to take appropriate measures to uphold the principles of the United Nations and international law. Oman, for example, said the Council must act to put an end to intervention in the Sudan's internal affairs, since further acts would bring about a regional war. Chad, Egypt, the Netherlands, the United States and Zaire also said the Council should demand an end to such aggression and intervention. In addition, Zaire said that African Governments had the right and the duty to unite their forces to guarantee the security of the States of the region against such acts in violation of the OAU principles of the inviolability of the borders inherited from colonial times and non-interference in the internal affairs of other States.

Taking the opposite view, Nigeria, the United Kingdom and the Upper Volta urged the Council to refrain from a premature decision or called for quiet diplomacy as a means of conciliation. Appealing to the international community not to exacerbate tension by further magnifying the differences that had given rise to it, Nigeria said it was ready to be of any assistance in the search for a peaceful resolution of the current misunderstanding. Similarly, the United Kingdom said it had sought to encourage an exchange of views between the two countries through quiet diplomacy and through the offices of the Council President. In the circumstances, the Upper Volta said, the Council should refrain from any hasty decision and should denounce foreign intervention that might inflame passions; it appealed to the two parties involved not to insist on a Council decision but to allow the Council simply to consider the matter.

At the conclusion of the Council's meetings, the President announced that the next meeting to consider the complaint would be scheduled in consultation with the Council members; no further meetings on the item were held in 1984. On 30 March,<sup>(7)</sup> Egypt and the Sudan submitted a draft resolution by which the Council would have affirmed that the unprovoked air attack against the Sudan constituted a flagrant violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a Member State, and would have condemned the indiscriminate bombardment of civilian targets in Omdurman.

Ethiopia-Somalia dispute

In 1984, Ethiopia and Somalia addressed letters to the Secretary-General concerning actions by forces in Somali territory.

Somalia, by a letter of 5 January,<sup>(1)</sup> forwarded two resolutions adopted by the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 6-11 December 1983). The Conference, in a resolution on Ethiopia's occupation of two areas of Somalia's territory, condemned Ethiopian armed aggression against Somalia and called on Ethiopia to withdraw its forces from the two occupied areas. In a resolution on the problem of the Horn of Africa, the Conference reiterated its rejection of the presence of foreign forces in the region and called for their immediate withdrawal. The two resolutions were also submitted by Bangladesh on 15 March<sup>(2)</sup> along with all the other resolutions and a final communiqué adopted by the Conference.

Rejecting Somalia's allegations, Ethiopia, on 16 January,<sup>(3)</sup> said Somalia was attempting to cover up its internal unrest and added that the two areas under dispute were regions held by forces in Somalia opposed to the current Government there.

Referring to Ethiopia's letter, Somalia, on 30 January,<sup>(4)</sup> said that Ethiopia, by attempting to shift responsibility to phantom forces in Somalia, had implicitly admitted that two areas in Somali territory were currently under Ethiopian occupation; Somalia was willing to have the facts verified, provided that Ethiopia would permit an independent fact-finding mission to visit the occupied settlements.

On 24 January,<sup>(5)</sup> Somalia forwarded a resolution adopted by the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference (Casablanca, Morocco, 16-19 January) in which the Conference expressed concern over the continuing occupation by Ethiopia of two areas of Somali territory and called on Ethiopia to withdraw immediately and unconditionally. That text was also included in a document forwarded by Morocco on 13 March<sup>(6)</sup> containing the final communiqué and resolutions of the Conference.

Somalia, on 30 May,<sup>(7)</sup> complained of an Ethiopian air attack against densely populated civilian centres of Somalia on 24, 25 and 28 May, causing considerable loss of life and property damage. Referring to that complaint on 5 June,<sup>(8)</sup> Ethiopia transmitted a press statement issued by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, rejecting the allegations as unfounded and stating that they were calculated to help Somalia procure arms in pursuit of its expansionist policies.

Comorian island of Mayotte

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in November 1983,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in September 1984<sup>(2)</sup> on the question of the Comorian island of Mayotte, submitting the information received from the Comoros, France and OAU in response to his request for pertinent information.

The Comoros said there had been little change in the situation, despite many high-level contacts between the Comorian and French Governments. In spite of France's repeatedly proclaimed willingness to seek without delay a just solution to the problem within the framework of Franco-Comorian friendship, it had not put forward any specific proposals. The Comoros added that, on the contrary, owing to the lax administration maintained on Mayotte, there had been a deterioration of the situation, which, unless halted, was likely to place the solution of the problem in serious jeopardy. Stating its intention to pursue diplomatic efforts aimed at recovering the Comorian island of Mayotte, the Comoros said it would like the United Nations to give a new impetus to its legitimate demands by taking action along the lines of the resolutions which the Assembly had previously adopted on the subject.

France replied that the atmosphere of trust between it and the Comoros was conducive to the continuation of a constructive dialogue between them, with the aim of finding a solution to the Mayotte problem that was acceptable to all. France intended to continue to develop and increase economic, social and cultural contacts in order to foster closer relations between the islands of the archipelago.

According to OAU, there had been little change in the situation, despite the many high-level contacts between the two Governments and the direct talks that had been held between the heads of State of France and the Comoros. The Comorian Government was actively pursuing diplomatic steps to recover Mayotte, it added.

Communications. On 15 March,<sup>(3)</sup> Bangladesh transmitted to the Secretary-General resolutions adopted by the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, 6-11 December 1983). In a resolution on Mayotte, the Conference reaffirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros and its sovereignty over Mayotte, invited France to open negotiations with the Comoros to secure the rapid restoration of Mayotte to the Comoros, called on members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference to exert their influence on France to accelerate the negotiations, and invited the organization's Secretary-General to contact France to inform it of the organization's concern. By a letter of 13 March,<sup>(4)</sup> Morocco forwarded resolutions adopted by the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference (Casablanca, 16-19 January) including one on Mayotte, by which the Conference reaffirmed the stand taken by the Islamic Foreign Ministers.

On 8 October,<sup>(5)</sup> India forwarded the final communiqué of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly. The communiqué included a statement on Mayotte, in which the non-aligned countries reaffirmed that it was an integral part of the Comoros and called on France to end its occupation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/48 by recorded vote.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979, 35/43 of 28 November 1980, 36/105 of 10 December 1981, 37/65 of 3 December 1982 and 38/13 of 21 November 1983, in which it, inter alia, affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte, and Mohéli,

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements between the Comoros and France, signed on 15 June 1973, concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Convinced further that a speedy solution of the problem is essential for the preservation of the peace and security which prevail in the region,

Bearing in mind the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to that problem,

Taking note of the repeated wish of the Government of the Comoros to initiate as soon as possible a frank and serious dialogue with the French Government with a view to accelerating the return of the Comorian island of Mayotte to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the decisions of the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference concerning this question,

1. Reaffirms the sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte;
2. Invites the Government of France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the referendum on the self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago of 22 December 1974 concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros;

3. Calls for the translation into practice of the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to the question of Mayotte;

4. Urges the Government of France to open the negotiations with the Government of the Comoros with a view to ensuring the effective and prompt return of the island of Mayotte to the Comoros;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to follow developments concerning this question, in conjunction with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte".

The Comoros said Mayotte shared the same language, culture and religion as the other islands of the Comoros and should have been granted independence by France at the time the Comoros became independent in 1973. The solution to the problem was not to be found in the repeated referendums that had been declared illegal by the international community, but in sincere dialogue and agreement between France and the Comoros, in accordance with the resolutions of international organizations.

France regretted that the question of Mayotte was again before the Assembly. Although it opposed the resolution, particularly paragraph 1, it hoped that a solution could be found and believed that the text rightly recalled France's expression of will for a lasting solution. France would continue to develop all economic, social and cultural bonds between Mayotte and the Comoros in order to promote a rapprochement among the islands of the archipelago.

The Assembly took related action in resolution 39/17, in which it noted the contacts between the Comoros and France in the search for a solution to the problem of the integration of Mayotte in the Comoros, in accordance with OAU and United Nations resolutions. In resolution 39/193, the Assembly called for special economic assistance to the Comoros.

Malagasy islands question

For the fourth successive year, the General Assembly in 1984 did not debate the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India, but decided to include the item in its provisional agenda for the following year. This question, pertaining to islands north and west of Madagascar, had been on the Assembly's agenda each year since 1979, when the Assembly invited France to negotiate with Madagascar on the reintegration of the islands with Madagascar,<sup>(1)</sup> a position it reaffirmed in 1980.<sup>(2)</sup>

The Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the Assembly (New York, 1-5 October) adopted a final communiqué which included a statement on the islands. The communiqué was transmitted to the Secretary-General by India on 8 October.<sup>(3)</sup> Concerning the Malagasy islands in the Mozambique Channel and the Indian Ocean, the non-aligned countries called on the two parties to pursue their talks with a view to resolving the issue in conformity with the United Nations Charter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 December, the Chairman of the Special Political Committee informed that body that he had held consultations with interested delegations, particularly those of France and Madagascar. Since talks between the two authorities were in progress, and in order to take into account a meeting held in Paris on 13 and 14 September during which their senior officials had exchanged views, it had been requested that consideration of the question be postponed until the 1985 General Assembly session.

Acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the Assembly adopted decision 39/421 without vote.

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa granted scholarships to 896 persons in 1983/84. The Programme was financed from the Trust Fund made up of voluntary contributions by States, organizations and individuals; also offers of scholarships for training in their own countries were received from 23 States. The Secretary-General described the activities of the Programme in a report covering the period from 1 October 1983 to 30 September 1984.<sup>(1)</sup> During that period, 410 new awards were granted and 486 awards were extended. Of the total, 777 South Africans received grants (see p. 170), 70 scholarships were granted to Zimbabweans and 49 to Namibians (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III). The awards were granted for a wide variety of professional, commercial and technical training, in addition to university studies. Those receiving scholarships attended programmes in the following regions: Africa (446 students), North America (317), Asia (102), Europe (28) and Latin America and the Caribbean (3).

Noting inflation rates and rising scholarship costs, the Secretary-General said that the 1984 contributions and pledges totalling $3,303,064 as at 30 September 1984 represented, in real terms, a significant decrease in resources over the previous year. In view of the increasing demand for educational opportunities by the people of South Africa and Namibia and the rapidly increasing costs of higher education and training, the Secretary-General appealed for greater financial and other support to the Programme.

Financial contributions

In 1984, 34 States contributed $3,276,925 to the Programme (see table following), as compared to $3,791,427 in 1983.

Co-operation between OAU and the UN system

The United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) continued to co-operate in various political and economic areas during 1984, as the General Assembly had urged in 1983.<sup>(1)</sup> In a report of 12 September 1984 to the Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General gave details on co-operation between the two organizations.

The Secretary-General met with his OAU counterpart on several occasions to discuss matters of mutual concern. At the invitation of the respective States, the Secretary-General visited eight African countries of the Sahel region, which was severely affected by drought in January and February (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter III), to gain first-hand knowledge of the economic and social situation there. A message on the current economic crisis in Africa was delivered, on his behalf, to a meeting of the OAU Council of Ministers in February/March. Areas of co-operation between the two organizations had been agreed upon at an April 1983 meeting of the secretariats of OAU and United Nations organizations.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Secretary-General addressed the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Addis Ababa, November). Reviewing Africa's main problems including the emergency situation and the drought, he called on the international community to increase its assistance to the affected African countries. In regard to southern Africa, he emphasized that South Africa's apartheid policy was at the centre of the violence and conflicts in the region. Concerning Namibia, he said that South Africa's insistence on the linkage of the issue with the presence of Cuban troops in Angola still made it impossible to proceed with the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence<sup>(4)</sup> (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III). On the question of refugees in Africa, the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations organizations would continue to do all possible to help implement the Programme of Action adopted by the 1984 Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XXI).

The Secretary-General received several letters in 1984 by which countries forwarded statements or resolutions adopted by OAU. On 18 April,<sup>(5)</sup> the Upper Volta transmitted the resolutions adopted at the fortieth ordinary session of the OAU Council of Ministers. The resolutions dealt with such subjects as the critical economic situation in Africa, support for the victims of natural disasters in Mozambique and Swaziland, Namibia, the situation in southern Africa, refugees in Africa, and a programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (see relevant chapters). On behalf of the Chairman of OAU, the United Republic of Tanzania on 21 November<sup>(6)</sup> forwarded a report on Western Sahara adopted at the 1984 OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV). On 6 December,<sup>(7)</sup> the United Republic of Tanzania transmitted a letter of 28 November from its President, in his capacity as OAU Chairman, endorsing the Secretary-General's call for an international conference, to be held under United Nations auspices, to consider united action on the famine and hunger afflicting most of Africa. Those areas were affected by severe drought as well as economic regression caused by other factors (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter III).

In a letter to the Secretary-General on 25 May,<sup>(8)</sup> Egypt forwarded a message from its President on the occasion of Africa Day, stating that Egypt's participation in celebrating that Day, the anniversary of the signing of the OAU Charter, with the other OAU members emphasized its close relationship with African solidarity and its determination to preserve the cohesion and effectiveness of OAU through the principles laid down 21 years earlier.

Co-operation between the United Nations and OAU was dealt with in numerous other 1984 Assembly resolutions.

In resolution 39/40, the Assembly welcomed the OAU efforts to promote a solution to the question of Western Sahara in accordance with resolutions and decisions of OAU and the United Nations. Reaffirming the United Nations determination to co-operate with a view to implementing the OAU decisions, the Assembly invited the OAU Secretary-General to keep the United Nations Secretary-General informed of the progress achieved in implementing them.

The Assembly, in resolution 39/43, expressed its appreciation to those United Nations organizations which had co-operated with the United Nations and OAU in implementing the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>(9)</sup> and other relevant United Nations resolutions, and urged all United Nations bodies to accelerate implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions. The Assembly reiterated its recommendation that United Nations organizations should initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements directly or through OAU. It recommended that future high-level meetings between the secretariats of OAU, the United Nations and United Nations organizations should discuss assistance to national liberation movements recognized by OAU, with a view to ensuring the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories. The Assembly urged those organizations to formulate, with the co-operation of OAU where appropriate, proposals for implementing United Nations decisions on decolonization, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories and their national liberation movements.

In resolution 39/61 A, the Assembly reaffirmed that implementation of the 1964 OAU Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa<sup>(10)</sup> would be an important measure to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons, and it requested the Secretary-General to render assistance that OAU might seek to implement the Declaration.

In regard to the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, proclaimed in 1980,<sup>(11)</sup> the Assembly, in resolution 39/233, welcomed the efforts that UNIDO was deploying in order to assist African countries and intergovernmental organizations in defining national and subregional programmes for the Decade and in order to maintain co-ordination with OAU, the Economic Commission for Africa and other international organizations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In action similar to that of the Assembly on implementing the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries,<sup>(9)</sup> the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1984/55, expressed appreciation to those United Nations organizations which had co-operated with the United Nations and OAU in implementing the Declaration and relevant United Nations resolutions, and urged them to accelerate their implementation. Those organizations were requested to give increased assistance to the people of Namibia, in consultation with OAU and the United Nations Council for Namibia. The Council urged United Nations organizations to formulate, with the co-operation of OAU, proposals for implementing United Nations decisions.

Chapter VI

Americas

Both the Security Council and the General Assembly considered the situation in Central America during 1984. The Assembly looked at the question as a whole, while the Council addressed specific disputes between countries.

The Council met in February, March/April, September and November at Nicaragua's request regarding allegations of aggression against it. In April, a draft resolution on the mining of Nicaragua's ports was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member, the United States.

In October, the Assembly, by resolution 39/4, urged the five Central American Governments—Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua—to speed up their consultations with the Contadora Group—Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela—and to bring about the early signing of the Contadora Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America, a legal instrument designed to bring about a negotiated solution to the problems of the region. The Assembly also called on all States, especially those with ties to and interests in the region, to respect fully the Contadora Act and the commitments undertaken by them by acceding to its Additional Protocol. In his annual report to the Assembly on the work of the Organization (p. 3), the Secretary-General stressed the need for full co-operation with the Contadora Group to ensure the success of its efforts.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: nuclear-weapon-free zones—Latin America. Regional economic and social activities: Latin America. Human rights violations: Latin America. Refugees and displaced persons: Americas. Other colonial Territories: Falkland Islands (Malvinas) question. International Court of Justice: military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua.

Central America situation

Communications. The bulk of the 1984 communications addressed to the Secretary-General on the Central America situation concerned the Contadora Group's activities, either communiqués from that Group or comments on those commu-niqués and proposals by the Central American States. The meetings of the Contadora Group and those held jointly with the Central American countries were held at Panama City; the communications relating to such meetings were transmitted by Panama. Other 1984 communications dealt with disputes between Nicaragua and several States (see below, under the relevant subject heading).

On 9 January,<sup>(1)</sup> after a meeting of the Group's Foreign Ministers with their Central American counterparts on 7 and 8 January, a communiqué was forwarded pointing out that, in the one-year period that had elapsed since the Group initiated the regional peace-making process, it had met 12 times, including five times with the Central American Foreign Ministers. Appended to the communiqué was a joint declaration on measures to be taken immediately by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua relating to security questions, political matters, and economic and social co-operation. To prepare studies, legal drafts and recommendations on these questions, three working commissions were to be created, with each commission to present its findings to a joint meeting of Foreign Ministers by 30 April.

Honduras, on 23 January,<sup>(2)</sup> sent a letter containing the names of the members it had appointed to the working commissions, and pointed out that the commissions were the result of a September 1983 Honduran initiative.

Following the inauguration of the working commissions on 31 January in Panama, a press communiqué was transmitted on 2 February<sup>(3)</sup> listing the persons attending the inauguration ceremony. On 6 March,<sup>(4)</sup> Panama forwarded a communiqué issued at the conclusion of a meeting of the Contadora Group's Foreign Ministers on 27 and 28 February. That communiqué pointed out that a detailed report on the work of the commissions had been received. Meanwhile, on 9 February,<sup>(5)</sup> Costa Rica and Panama transmitted a 6 February joint communiqué issued on the occasion of a visit to Panama by the President of Costa Rica. The Presidents of the two countries agreed that the development of the frontier zone between them could be a model of friendly co-operation which would put into practice the objectives of harmonious development between Central American States, as proposed by the Contadora Group.

The Foreign Ministers met again in Panama on 8 April and, by a communiqué transmitted on 11

April,<sup>(6)</sup> they noted that the situation in the region was showing signs of serious deterioration—activities of irregular forces had been stepped up with assistance from the territories of neighbouring countries with the aim of destabilizing Governments in the area, operations such as the mining of ports were being carried out and foreign troops and advisers were increasingly present. They therefore considered it essential for countries with links in the region to demonstrate the support they had expressed for the Contadora Group. In assessing the progress made by the working commissions, they noted that obstacles remained, stemming in some cases from attitudes that were not always flexible and effectively geared to negotiation.

By a letter of 29 April,<sup>(7)</sup> Costa Rica, El Salvador and Honduras transmitted a 25 April joint declaration by their Foreign Ministers on the Central America situation, the Contadora process and the forthcoming joint Contadora/Central American ministerial meeting of 30 April (see below). They invited the Inter-American Commission of Human Rights to visit their countries before and during electoral periods, to report on freedom of information, propaganda, assembly, demonstration, movement and transit, and on the exercise of political rights. They called on Nicaragua to abandon its obstructive attitude to the Contadora Group's working commissions, stating that Nicaragua had, that day, again displayed such an attitude by asserting that it would continue to arm itself, maintaining that its problems were with the United States and not its neighbours. Moreover, the communiqué said, Nicaragua had rejected the document on principles and commitments to be accepted by the Central American States in the political sphere, thus thwarting one of the main political objectives—democratization.

After the sixth joint meeting between the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group and those of Central America on 30 April and 1 May, an information bulletin was issued<sup>(8)</sup> on the conclusions of the working commissions. In the Political Affairs Commission, agreement was reached on items relating to a policy of détente and there was consensus on establishing or improving institutions on which representative and pluralistic democracy was based. The Security Affairs Commission agreed on legal principles relating to security, on specific confidence-building measures, and on the prohibition of the installation of military bases and of any other form of foreign military intervention. There was consensus on preventing the use of territory by irregular forces for action against neighbouring countries and preventing destabilizing operations, sabotage and terrorism. There was broad agreement that foreign advisers should be withdrawn. Basic criteria were identified for determining levels of military development of the Central American countries. The Commission for Economic and Social Questions formulated recommendations covering integration, intra-zonal trade and technical co-operation, investment and finance, labour questions and health. Studies would continue to try to ensure joint handling of the refugee situation. The joint meeting warned that the progress achieved nevertheless contrasted with the increase in violence, military escalation, the arms buildup and the foreign military presence in the area. The Central American Ministers reaffirmed their belief that the negotiation process promoted by the Contadora Group represented the genuine regional alternative for the resolution of conflicts.

In a 21 June note<sup>(9)</sup> to the Security Council, the Secretary-General stated that on 15 June representatives of the Contadora Group had handed him a communication sent to the heads of State of the five Central American countries on 9 June, by which the Group had transmitted a draft comprehensive agreement known as the Contadora Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America; a copy of the communication was annexed to the note. The Secretary-General believed that the diplomatic process had entered a decisive phase in which the most determined support of the international community was more than ever necessary. He also considered that every encouragement should be given to the decision announced by Nicaragua and the United States to initiate a dialogue designed to reduce tension in the area (see p. 209). The draft Contadora Act contained legal commitments, general and specific recommendations, aspects relating to a verification and control commission, and formulae for settling disputes. An additional protocol would be open for signature by other States of the international community having interests in the region and through which they would undertake to respect the commitments made by the signatories to the Act.

In a letter of 25 June,<sup>(10)</sup> Honduras transmitted an official declaration of 22 June by which its Government accepted the Contadora Act as a basic text for the negotiation of a treaty to preserve peace and co-operation in Central America.

From 24 to 28 August the Deputy Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group and their counterparts and representatives of the Central American countries met at the Group's initiative to ascertain the views of the Central American Governments on the Act. In an information bulletin issued after the meeting,<sup>(11)</sup> the participants stated that the suggestions made would enable the Contadora Group to identify the next stages in their efforts.

A seventh joint meeting of the respective Foreign Ministers was held on 7 September and a communiqué was issued, together with a communication from the Contadora Group's Foreign Ministers to the heads of State of the five Central American countries concerning a new version of the draft Contadora Act.<sup>(12)</sup> The communication stated that the revised version again highlighted the principal role of the Central American Governments in the peaceful settlement of disputes and in overcoming regional problems. The signing of the Act should provide the basis for security and coexistence governed by mutual respect which was essential for guaranteeing the area's political and economic stability. In the light of the persistent threat to peace, the Governments of the region must expedite the process of assuming the legal commitments contained in the Act. Similarly, it was imperative for others with interests in the region to respect the right of self-determination of the Central American peoples and demonstrate unequivocal support for political negotiation in place of force.

A letter of 19 September<sup>(13)</sup> from Honduras contained an 18 September official declaration on its willingness to assume the responsibilities resulting from the negotiation process with a view to signing the revised draft Act.

Nicaragua's acceptance of the revised text was contained in a 21 September letter<sup>(14)</sup> from the Co-ordinator of its Governing Junta of National Reconstruction, who explained that Nicaragua was willing to accept the Act in its entirety because of the serious increase of military threats by the United States.

On 4 October,<sup>(15)</sup> Costa Rica transmitted a letter it had sent to the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group stating that it intended to sign the revised Act; none the less it felt that the proposed verification and control system should be improved and reiterated its view that the system should be mandatory and binding. Also, essential power for the Ad Hoc Committee (see p. 199) regarding the democratization process was not given for it to investigate in situ; the possibility of verification and control in loco should be accorded to political and refugee matters.

A letter of 8 October<sup>(16)</sup> transmitted a Honduran invitation to the Foreign Ministers of the Central American countries to attend a meeting of co-ordination on 19 October at Tegucigalpa, Honduras. On 12 October,<sup>(17)</sup> Honduras stated that it had, on 10 October, submitted its comments on the draft Act to the Contadora Group members and Central American countries.

Nicaragua, on 16 October,<sup>(18)</sup> transmitted a communication of the previous day to the Presidents of the Contadora Group countries reiterating that it accepted the revised Act entirely and was prepared to sign it immediately, without modification. Concern was expressed over the Honduran proposal to convene a meeting of Central American Foreign Ministers, since the Act should not be subject to further negotiations for substantive amendments or modifications and meetings without the Contadora Group would adversely affect the Group's peace efforts. Given the obstacles created by some Central American Governments to immediate signing of the revised Act, the Group should convene a high-level meeting of the Central American and Contadora countries to promote the willingness and the political decisions necessary for the unequivocal acceptance of the Act, which would pave the way for peace in Central America.

Honduras, on 22 October,<sup>(19)</sup> sent the joint communiqué of the discussions held on 19 and 20 October at Tegucigalpa between the Foreign Ministers of Costa Rica, El Salvador and Honduras and the Deputy Foreign Minister of Guatemala, who expressed their views on the revised Act, harmonized into a single text the observations made and expressed regret at Nicaragua's non-attendance. Honduras stated that it did not share Nicaragua's opinion that the meeting was intended to exclude the Contadora Group. By a letter of 30 October,<sup>(20)</sup> Costa Rica, El Salvador and Honduras forwarded their consolidated comments on the revised Act, covering such matters as implementation mechanisms, establishment of an interim ad hoc disarmament group between the date of the signing and the date of the entry into force of the Act, verification and control machinery for security matters, regulation of military manoeuvres, entry into force of obligations regarding foreign military bases, the fate of irregular forces, displaced persons, final provisions and the question of the Additional Protocol. Referring to the joint comments, Nicaragua, in a declaration transmitted on 1 November,<sup>(21)</sup> saw them as substantive changes seriously affecting the nature of the agreements reached by consensus after nearly two years of difficult negotiations. The attempt to reopen the debate was endangering the process of negotiation itself. The comments of the three Governments reflected the observations of the United States and formed part of its policy of changing the nature of the Act and of preventing its signature. On 15 November,<sup>(22)</sup> Nicaragua reiterated that the amendments reflected United States observations and attached an article from The Washington Post on how the United States reputedly blocked the Contadora Act.

On 6 November,<sup>(23)</sup> Costa Rica stated that Nicaragua was again trying to confuse public opinion by describing the position of the three States as obstructionist or linked to interests of another country. Costa Rica had no difficulty in accepting the letter and spirit of the revised Act, but found it difficult to subscribe to a document that was not verifiable. On 8 November,<sup>(24)</sup> El Salvador also rejected Nicaragua's views, stating that the proposals did not constitute substantive changes, nor did they destroy the consensus, and did not reopen debate on questions on which agreement existed; Nicaragua, claiming it favoured negotiations, was obstructing the remaining stage. Likewise Honduras, on 23 November,<sup>(25)</sup> felt Nicaragua was trying to justify its attempt to break up the Contadora negotiations; the comments of the three Governments were in line with the setting of 15 October as the deadline for views on the revised Act.

Communiqués from the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries relating wholly or in part to the situation in Central America were also sent to the Secretary-General during the year, as were communications from other intergovernmental bodies. On 15 March,<sup>(26)</sup> India forwarded a communiqué adopted by the Movement's Co-ordinating Bureau, commending the efforts of the Contadora Group and calling for an immediate end to all foreign military activities on Central American territories and coasts. Concern was also expressed over the new escalation of hostile acts against Nicaragua and the deterioration of the situation in El Salvador due to continuing foreign intervention.

On 29 March,<sup>(27)</sup> France on behalf of the 10 States members of the European Economic Community transmitted the declarations adopted by the Community Foreign Ministers on 27 March in which they expressed the hope that the Contadora Group's efforts could contribute to reducing tension and to progress towards peace, respect for independence, the establishment of pluralistic democracy and the solution of the economic and social problems of the countries concerned.

On 1 October,<sup>(28)</sup> Costa Rica transmitted the joint communiqué of a ministerial meeting (San José, Costa Rica, 28 and 29 September) attended by the Foreign Ministers of the European Community and its member States, Portugal and Spain, and the States of Central America and of the Contadora Group. A united view was expressed that regional problems could not be solved by armed force, but only by political solutions springing from the region itself. The revised draft Contadora Act was seen as fundamental to the negotiating process and they agreed on the necessity for a commitment to the implementation of any such agreement by all States in the region and all other countries which had interests there, and on the necessity for the verification and control of that implementation. The Ministers of the European Community and of Central America declared themselves ready to start discussions as soon as possible with a view to negotiating an interregional framework co-operation agreement.

On 16 October,<sup>(29)</sup> the Sudan circulated resolutions adopted by the Seventy-second Inter-Parliamentary Conference, held at Geneva on 29 September. A unanimously adopted resolution on the Central America crisis urged all Central American States to solve their problems themselves, free from any foreign interference, and expressed support for the Contadora Group's negotiations, particularly the Contadora peace treaty expected to be signed in October.

On 25 October,<sup>(30)</sup> Venezuela transmitted an agreement adopted by the Chamber of Deputies of the Venezuelan Congress on 17 October, welcoming the initiative taken by the President of El Salvador to establish a dialogue, begun two days earlier, with the representatives of the revolutionary fronts of that country.

A letter to the President of the General Assembly from Costa Rica of 3 October<sup>(31)</sup> referred to a 2 October statement to the Assembly by the Lao People's Democratic Republic. Costa Rica said it was surprised, since it had no army, that in that statement the speaker had urged the overthrow of Costa Rica's military dictatorship.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). Responding to 1983 requests by the Security Council<sup>(32)</sup> and the General Assembly,<sup>(33)</sup> the Secretary-General on 9 October 1984 submitted a report on the Central America situation.<sup>(34)</sup> Annexed to the report was the revised version of the proposed Contadora Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America. The Contadora Foreign Ministers had told the Secretary-General that they had delivered the document to their Central American counterparts on 7 September,<sup>(12)</sup> with 15 October fixed as a deadline for them to make their views known on the matter. He noted that to date Costa Rica,<sup>(15)</sup> Honduras<sup>(13)</sup> and Nicaragua<sup>(14)</sup> had transmitted their comments on the revised Act to the Council and/or the Assembly.

The Secretary-General expressed satisfaction with regard to the contribution made by the Contadora Group in giving momentum to the negotiations among the Central American countries and finding formulae which would enable the causes of regional tension to be eliminated. He said the Group's efforts were especially important in view of the persistent gravity of the situation.

He noted that the Security Council had met three times during the year to consider complaints by Nicaragua but had not adopted a resolution (see below). With regard to the southern area of Nicaragua bordering Costa Rica, he said it should be noted that a Commission for Supervision and Prevention had been set up under the auspices of the Contadora Group which appeared to have facilitated a reduction in the frontier incidents involving the two countries.

The Secretary-General recalled that the International Court of Justice had indicated certain provisional measures regarding the Nicaragua versus United States case (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I) and the Court's Order had been transmitted to the Council. He stated that as a result of a visit to Managua by the United States Secretary of State, a two-way dialogue had been initiated since the end of May between the two States with, to date, six meetings held under the auspices of Mexico. Both sides had welcomed the fact that the talks had entered their substantive stage.

The Secretary-General said he had followed attentively the electoral process which had taken place recently in El Salvador and the steps taken by its President with a view to the country's political stabilization. The fact that a political segment abstained from participating in the elections, as well as the continuation of armed conflict, made it difficult to bring about a broad, effective and lasting political reconciliation. To date, the efforts to bring about a dialogue between the Government and the Frente Democrático Revolucionario-Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FDR-FMLN), including those sponsored by foreign Governments, had not met with the success hoped for.

He found it encouraging that electoral processes were being conducted in Guatemala and Nicaragua. In the latter, negotiations had been proceeding in order to achieve the broadest possible participation in the election and he hoped the holding of the election would promote a genuine process of democratization.

The upheaval in Central America was still causing a flood of refugees, the Secretary-General observed. According to host-country figures, the number of refugees in the area was estimated at 350,000, of whom 104,900 as at the end of September were receiving assistance from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

The Secretary-General appealed to the countries of the region to pursue their efforts to negotiate a comprehensive solution to their problems under the auspices of the Contadora Group.

The revised version of the Contadora Act consisted of a preamble; general commitments and commitments with regard to political, security and economic and social matters; commitments on execution and follow-up; final provisions regarding the entry into force of the Act and dispute settlement procedures; an annex on agreed definitions of military terms; and an Additional Protocol open for other Governments to sign regarding co-operation and support for the Act. The general commitments section laid down principles by which the parties would abide, while the political matters section covered commitments regarding regional détente and confidence-building, national reconciliation, human rights, and electoral processes and parliamentary co-operation. The section on security matters encompassed commitments regarding military manoeuvres, armaments, foreign military bases, foreign military advisers, traffic in arms, prohibition of support for irregular forces, terrorism, subversion or sabotage, and direct communications systems. The commitments with regard to economic and social affairs covered those matters and refugees. Those on execution and follow-up dealt with Ad Hoc Committees for commitments concerning political and refugee matters and economic and social matters; and a Verification and Control Commission for Security Matters.

By a letter of 23 October,<sup>(35)</sup> the Contadora Group's representatives transmitted a joint communiqué issued after a meeting of the Group's Foreign Ministers at Madrid, Spain, on 17 October, underscoring the importance of the submission of the revised Act to the Security Council President and the Secretary-General and expressing their approval of the latter's positive report. The Ministers noted that the Governments of the region had expressed their readiness to sign the Act as soon as possible, and said their comments would be useful in concluding the current stage of the process; they agreed that it was appropriate to incorporate those comments in order to lend greater precision to the statements without modifying the balance achieved in the document.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October 1984, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/4 by consensus.

The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 530(1983) of 19 May 1983, in which the Council encouraged the efforts of the Contadora Group and appealed urgently to all interested States in and outside the region to co-operate fully with the Group, through a frank and constructive dialogue, so as to achieve solutions to the differences between them,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 38/10 of 11 November 1983, in which the Assembly, inter alia, expressed its firmest support for the Contadora Group and urged it to persevere in its efforts, which enjoy the effective support of the international community and the forthright co-operation of the countries in and outside the region,

Noting with satisfaction the results of the efforts made by the Contadora Group, in particular the Contadora Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America of 7 September 1984,

Considering that the Contadora Act is the result of an intense process of consultations and negotiations between the Governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, promoted by the Contadora Group,

Also considering that the Contadora Act is a major step in bringing to fruition the negotiation process in that it lays the foundations for détente, lasting peace and the promotion of economic and social development in the region,

Taking note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 38/10,

1. Urges each of the five Central American Governments to speed up its consultations with the Contadora Group with the aim of bringing to a conclusion the negotiation process with the early signing of the Contadora Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America, thereby facilitating full compliance with the commitments provided for in the Act and the entry into force of the various mechanisms for implementation and follow-up;

2. Also urges all States, in particular those with ties to and interests in the region, to respect fully the purposes and principles of the Contadora Act and the commitments undertaken by virtue of their accession to its Additional Protocol;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with Security Council resolution 530(1983), to report at regular intervals to the Council on developments in the situation and the implementation of that resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives".

General Assembly resolution 39/4

26 October 1984 Meeting 39 Adopted by consensus

4-nation draft (A/39/L.6); agenda item 25.

Sponsors: Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Venezuela.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: plenary 35-39.

As a result of consultations, Nicaragua did not press to a vote a draft<sup>(36)</sup> which would have had the Assembly reaffirm Nicaragua's right to sovereignty and independence—to be respected and not endangered by military or paramilitary activities—and call for the unconditional and immediate cessation of the threats and hostile acts against it.

On 18 December, the Assembly, by decision 39/456 on the suspension of its thirty-ninth (1984) session, decided to include the item on the Central America situation among the items to be considered at the resumed session at a date to be announced.

Report of the Secretary-General (December). On 15 December,<sup>(37)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a further report in accordance with Assembly resolution 39/4. He had written to each Foreign Minister of the Contadora Group requesting information on the negotiating process for transmission to the Assembly and had received a communication on 13 December reporting on the Group's peace efforts since 26 October. Annexed to the Secretary-General's report were: a report of 13 November from the Group's Ministers to the General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS), which met from 12 to 17 November; a resolution adopted by the OAS Assembly supporting the Contadora efforts; and a joint communiqué of 14 November issued by the Contadora Ministers at the OAS Assembly.

The communiqué said that the Contadora Ministers had met that day to consider the observations made at Tegucigalpa by Costa Rica, El Salvador and Honduras on the revised Act.<sup>(20)</sup> They had agreed that some contained useful ideas and were in keeping with the aim of improving the text but, in their current form, the observations could upset the balance achieved. There was, therefore, a need to intensify the negotiation process to produce the final text of an agreement preserving the spirit of the Act. The Contadora Ministers held consultations in Brazil (where the OAS Assembly was meeting) with each of the five Central American Governments individually and, in the light of these, indicated there was a possibility of incorporating some of the Tegucigalpa observations, it being understood that any such changes would not reopen discussion on commitments previously accepted by all the parties. The Contadora Foreign Ministers again underscored the importance of a clear expression of political will on the part of States directly involved in the search for viable agreements and also drew attention to the need for a constructive attitude on the part of Governments with links to the region so that negotiations could be speedily concluded. They expressed concern at the current situation in Central America and stated that a solution based on force was wrong.

In the report from the Group's Ministers to the OAS Assembly, it was pointed out that the consultations with the Central American Governments in Brazil reflected the possibility of leading negotiations towards a final agreement.

By its resolution, the OAS Assembly urged all the Central American Governments to manifest their will for peace and to intensify consultations among themselves and with the Contadora Group in order to conclude the negotiations by prompt signature of the Act. It exhorted all States, particularly those having interests in the region, to facilitate the Act's signature, to respect commitments that might be agreed on and to adhere to the Additional Protocol.

Nicaragua situation

Costa Rica-Nicaragua dispute and armed incidents

Costa Rica and Nicaragua continued to accuse each other of aggressive acts at various times throughout the year and a number of communications were addressed to the President of the Security Council regarding the situation between the two States. For the most part, the communications contained letters exchanged between the respective Foreign Ministers or Deputies.

Communications. On 19 March,<sup>(38)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a 16 March note from Nicaragua to the United States Secretary of State protesting that, on 14 March, a group of United States mercenaries had entered Nicaragua from Costa Rica initiating action leading to the death of an eight-year-old child and the wounding of others aged five and seven years, nine months and others not identified.

Nicaragua, on 3 May,<sup>(39)</sup> transmitted a Foreign Ministry communiqué of 25 April, and a letter dated 28 April and two of 30 April addressed to Costa Rica from Nicaragua. The communiqué concerned Nicaraguan efforts to repatriate Sandinist People's Army reservists said to have been abducted to Costa Rica by United States Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) mercenaries. It denounced Costa Rica's lack of co-operation and demanded the immediate return of those abducted. The 28 April letter referred to a mercenary invasion from Costa Rica, stating that its Deputy Minister of the Interior was collaborating with CIA-backed counter-revolutionary elements launching such attacks. It also named 15 Nicaraguans it said were remaining in Costa Rica as a result of threats. The 30 April letters concerned a reported concentration of mercenary forces in Costa Rican border territory, with incursions into Nicaragua and resulting casualties, said to coincide with CIA-directed attacks from Honduras.

By a letter of 4 May,<sup>(40)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a number of documents said to have been provided by concerned Costa Rican citizens regarding the use of that territory by the CIA and involvement of Costa Rican Government officials in such activities. Nicaragua said that the documents confirmed its assertions about the use of Costa Rican territory in carrying out the undeclared war which the United States was waging against Nicaragua through undercover operations. Costa Rica in the preceding few days had accused Nicaragua of attacks by its armed forces; those attacks were actually self-inflicted attacks and CIA provocations aimed at inducing Costa Rica to serve as a springboard for military aggression, a role Nicaragua had in the past attributed to Honduras. Costa Rica, on 9 May,<sup>(41)</sup> transmitted a note of 8 May sent to Nicaragua, protesting the contents of its letter of 4 May, which Costa Rica said echoed the campaign of disinformation waged by Nicaragua against Costa Rica and reflected an attitude of hostility.

A further letter of 4 May<sup>(42)</sup> from Nicaragua transmitted a protest it had sent to Costa Rica on 3 May, stating that the Costa Rican rural guard had that day staged an attack on itself in complicity with United States plans; that incident and others were aimed at a further deterioration in relations between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, and coincided with the United States Congress debate on continuing assistance to Somozan mercenaries. Responding on 10 May,<sup>(43)</sup> Costa Rica transmitted two notes of 9 May sent to Nicaragua. Costa Rica, protesting the act of aggression on its frontier post, said it had been established that the attack was carried out by members of the Sandinist People's Army.

Responding to Nicaragua's charges of 3 May<sup>(39)</sup> and 4 May,<sup>(40)</sup> Costa Rica, on 8 May,<sup>(44)</sup> said that they were untrue, since persecuted Nicaraguans of various ideological tendencies were seeking political asylum in Costa Rica. Annexed was a 30 April letter to Nicaragua stating that Costa Rica did not permit military activities to be conducted from its territory to the detriment of Nicaragua. Since Democratic Revolutionary Alliance forces, fighting against the Nicaraguan Government, controlled a broad area on the Nicaraguan bank of the San Juan River, it was unnecessary for them to use Costa Rican territory as a starting-point for their war movements. The charges against the Deputy Minister of the Interior and other officials were also rejected. Regarding the 15 Nicaraguans said to be in Costa Rican territory, whom Nicaragua had asked to be returned, with the exception of one who had requested political asylum and one handed over to the Nicaraguan Embassy on 29 April, they were not on Costa Rican territory.

On 4 May,<sup>(45)</sup> Costa Rica transmitted a 2 May note from Costa Rica to the Contadora Group alleging a new attack by the Sandinist Air Force on 29 April on Costa Rican territory, said to be the most serious incident of the past two years, confirming that Nicaragua had hardened its position towards Costa Rica. The Contadora Group was asked to dispatch an observer mission to investigate the attack.

On 8 May,<sup>(46)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note of 7 May sent to Costa Rica complaining that some 80 to 100 mercenaries had that day attacked a Nicaraguan frontier post and had murdered four civilians, including two children aged four and seven. At 500 metres from where the counter-revolutionaries penetrated was a post of the Costa Rican rural guard, giving further evidence of passivity towards acts of aggression committed from Costa Rica, since it was impossible for the mercenaries to pass through without being seen. Nicaragua urged Costa Rica to resume control over its frontier area and prevent such criminal acts.

On 21 May,<sup>(47)</sup> Costa Rica and Nicaragua submitted to the Secretary-General a joint declaration signed by their Foreign Ministers at Panama City on 15 May. In the covering letter, they stated that the agreement confirmed their desire for peace and was a worthy outcome of efforts being made by the Contadora Group. The declaration covered the creation of a Commission for Supervision and Prevention as part of the efforts to end tension and incidents in the frontier zone and to promote a climate of confidence between the two countries. The Commission was to consist of a high-level representative and an alternate from both States and a representative from each of the Contadora Group countries to be involved in mediation. Its principal function was to be on-site inspection and verification of facts that might give rise to tension or frontier incidents, with both States undertaking to correct situations giving rise to an investigation. The Commission was to be installed in the Peñas Blancas frontier post on 26 May.

On 3 October,<sup>(48)</sup> Costa Rica addressed a letter to the President of the General Assembly stating that the Nicaraguan head of State, in his 2 October statement to the Assembly, had questioned Costa Rica's desire not to become involved in military conflicts. Since the two States had promised that complaints about security matters would be brought before the Commission for Supervision and Prevention, it was surprising that he had chosen the forum of the Assembly to cast doubts on Costa Rica's commitment to remain neutral vis-à-vis armed conflicts in other countries. Costa Rica had been demilitarized since 1949, with no military bases, installations or operations on its territory, even for defence purposes.

Honduras-Nicaragua dispute and armed incidents

Letters were again received from both Honduras and Nicaragua, throughout 1984, on alleged armed incidents between them. The letters were addressed to either the Secretary-General or the Security Council President and generally contained communications which had been exchanged between the respective Foreign Ministers. In February, the Security Council met at Nicaragua's request.

Communications (5 January–3 February). On 5 January,<sup>(49)</sup> Nicaragua forwarded a note of the same day protesting what were said to be violations of Nicaraguan territorial waters and airspace on 3 January by boats and aircraft coming from Honduras, continuing a series of acts of provocation and open violation of Nicaraguan sovereignty and territorial integrity. Another communication of the same date contained a 2 January note<sup>(50)</sup> from Nicaragua protesting a stated air violation of 1 January and calling on Honduras to cease supporting and tolerating mercenary forces attacking Nicaragua from Honduras.

On 6 January,<sup>(51)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a communication of the same date protesting an alleged attack by two aircraft from Honduran territory on 5 January resulting in the death of one civilian and the wounding of four others. On 9

January,<sup>(52)</sup> Nicaragua forwarded a protest sent to Honduras on 7 January regarding what were described as boat and aircraft attacks from Honduras on 6 January.

On 11 January,<sup>(53)</sup> Nicaragua forwarded a note of the previous day, stating that on 8 January a group of Somozan mercenaries, in combination with Honduran troops, had attacked a Nicaraguan patrol in Nicaragua; participation of the Honduran army in provocative acts conformed with United States plans to cause a confrontation between the two States and thus make it possible for the United States to intervene in Central America.

On 13 January,<sup>(54)</sup> Honduras transmitted a 12 January communication, stating that on 11 January an unarmed United States army helicopter had been hit in Honduran territory by gun-fire from Nicaragua, killing a United States officer, thereby further reflecting Nicaragua's intention to undermine the Contadora Group's peace efforts.

Nicaragua, on 17 January,<sup>(55)</sup> transmitted a communication of the previous day, stating that on 12 January a Honduran army patrol had made an incursion into Nicaragua and a helicopter had violated its airspace. Another communication, of 23 January,<sup>(56)</sup> transmitted a Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry communiqué of 20 January, stating that Honduras had announced that a permanent joint Honduras-United States military base was to be built in the area of Puerto Castilla on the Atlantic coast of Honduras, at a cost of some $160 million. Nicaragua said this was in opposition to the Contadora Group's efforts, being part of aggressive United States plans.

Honduras, on 20 January,<sup>(57)</sup> transmitted notes of 16 and 19 January protesting acts of aggression said to have occurred on 7 and 8 January. The former note referred to the Nicaraguan army allegedly firing on a Honduran military post, and the latter to a mine said to have been planted in Honduras by the army and which had killed a peasant. Responding by a note of 23 January,<sup>(58)</sup> transmitted two days later, Nicaragua denied the allegations; if the incidents had occurred, they were more likely criminal acts of Honduran-based mercenary groups with the complicity of the Honduran army.

Also on 25 January,<sup>(59)</sup> Nicaragua circulated a note of 21 January protesting what was said to be the kidnapping of 30 Nicaraguan peasants on 16 January by Somozan mercenaries coming from Honduran territory and calling for the repatriation of the 29 remaining in the hands of the mercenaries.

A Nicaraguan communication of 26 January<sup>(60)</sup> transmitted a note of 24 January stating that the 1980 Nobel Peace Prize winner, Adolfo Pérez Esquivel, had charged that some 200 Nicaraguan citizens of Miskito origin had been murdered by a Honduran military patrol on 6 January as they were attempting to return to Nicaragua, and calling on Honduras to hold an urgent inquiry. Attached was a communiqué of the Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry stating that co-operation in elucidating the charge had been sought from a number of inter- and non-governmental organizations. Responding in a 25 January note forwarded two days later,<sup>(61)</sup> Honduras denied the accusation and stated that any impartial investigation would prove that it was in Nicaragua that Miskitos were being persecuted and exterminated; the Honduran Ambassador in Argentina had been asked to confer with Mr. Pérez Esquivel to ascertain if he had made such a charge.

A 25 January communiqué<sup>(62)</sup> of the Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry was forwarded on 26 January, stating that on 21 January two speedboats and an aircraft had fired on a Nicaraguan vessel and other actions had taken place in its territorial waters and airspace. Attention was drawn to the prolonged presence of United States warships off Nicaraguan shores, stated to support the assumption that those ships were being used to transport the speedboats which were constantly attacking Nicaragua. A further communication of 26 January<sup>(63)</sup> transmitted a 25 January note, protesting alleged violations of Nicaraguan airspace on 22 and 24 January and the abduction of 30 Nicaraguan farmers by Somozan mercenaries on the latter date to Honduran territory, and requesting their immediate release.

A further alleged kidnapping of six peasants, also on 24 January, by mercenaries was made by Nicaragua on 26 January and transmitted the next day.<sup>(64)</sup>

By a letter of 3 February,<sup>(65)</sup> Nicaragua circulated a note of 2 February, stating that on that day six military aircraft of the Honduran air force had attacked a military unit of the Sandinist People's Army and a civilian communications centre, killing three soldiers and wounding three others; a new dimension had been added to the existing conflict in Central America, responsibility for which rested with those financing, organizing and permitting provocative acts against Nicaragua.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (February)

In a further letter of 3 February,<sup>(66)</sup> Nicaragua requested the immediate convening of the Security Council to consider the situation created by what it termed the new escalation of acts of aggression to which it had been subjected by Somozan and mercenary counter-revolutionary forces trained and financed by the United States and in which foreign armies were increasingly involved.

The Security Council met later that day, with Honduras being invited, at its request, to participate without the right to vote.

Meeting number. SC 2513.

Nicaragua stressed it was again facing dangerous events, aimed at bringing about a war of destruction in Central America; qualitatively, they were the most serious events of the past two years and could be the precursors of a war between Honduras and Nicaragua provoked by the United States to justify intervention. Nicaragua gave further details of the previous day's alleged attack, stating there had been, in 1983, more than 620 violations of Nicaraguan airspace by United States surveillance aircraft, with over 400 helicopters and aircraft flying from Honduran soil, and on one mission an American pilot had been killed. There had also been 19 air attacks in the same year. Currently, for the first time, war-planes had been used against Nicaraguan military units deep inside its territory. It was not necessary to advance proof of CIA participation but it was clear that Nicaraguan defeats of counter-revolutionary forces coming from Honduras had led to new wide-scale aggression and war exercises against Nicaragua aimed apparently at being converted into a real war. The United States and its allies had been put into a difficult position within the Contadora Group because of the constructive attitude of Nicaragua and the sincere intentions of the Group itself, Nicaragua said.

Honduras said that Nicaragua had again tried to involve Honduras in the problems it was having with its own citizens and, by creating confrontations, was seeking to divert attention from those problems. The accusation made by Nicaragua in calling for the Security Council meeting was unfounded, since no military aircraft had left its base; Nicaragua made charges whenever peace initiatives of the Contadora Group were progressing, and it had stated that the Nobel peace laureate had accused Honduras of being implicated in genocide, but he had denied ever making such an accusation. Referring to charges of a foreign military base in Honduras, it pointed out that on earlier occasions it had stated that what was involved was a military training centre established by Honduras, directed by its officers, and intended to train Honduran troops and also those of friendly countries. It welcomed assistance from experts not only from the United States, but also from anywhere in Central or South America with which co-operation was maintained. Honduras registered its agreements relating to armed forces with the United Nations and wished Nicaragua would do likewise and make public the agreements under which it received foreign weapons and advisers, which promoted the arms race, the destabilization of democratically elected Governments and terrorism in Central America.

The United States said the Council's dignity was abused every several months by Nicaragua's allegations of aggression by the United States and neighbouring Governments in Central America. The United States had not engaged in aggression against Nicaragua and did not plan to. However, it intended to co-operate with its friends in Central America, as elsewhere, in defence of freedom, self-determination and the institutions of democratic pluralism of which the Sandinist régime had deprived its people. It was that betrayal of the principles of its own revolution which had caused substantial numbers of Nicaraguans to take up arms against that régime.

Communications (6 February–1 November). On 6 February,<sup>(67)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note dated 3 February, stating that that day four aircraft flying from Honduran territory attacked a Nicaraguan army unit, killing a militiaman. On 7 February,<sup>(68)</sup> Honduras transmitted notes dated 3 and 6 February, rejecting the accusations by Nicaragua of 2 February<sup>(65)</sup> and 3 February<sup>(67)</sup> of Honduran air attacks. In a letter to the Secretary-General also of 7 February,<sup>(69)</sup> Honduras transmitted a formal declaration of 6 February concerning the same charges, stating that they were made to justify Nicaragua's arms race, its policy of intervention and hostility towards other Central American countries and the maintenance of a state of emergency enabling it to continue denying Nicaraguans a democratic system of government.

On 14 February,<sup>(70)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note to Honduras of 13 February stating that on 7 February some 20 Somozan mercenaries coming from Honduran territory had entered Nicaragua and threatened and interrogated local inhabitants before withdrawing; it also alleged airspace violations of 8, 9 and 12 February and territorial water violations of 12 February. Honduras, on 22 February,<sup>(71)</sup> transmitted a 20 February note rejecting the allegations as unfounded.

On 5 March,<sup>(72)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note of 4 March, stating that since 1 March Somozan mercenaries, with the Honduran army's collaboration, had been launching mortar attacks on Nicaraguan frontier villages from positions they occupied in Honduran territory; on 3 March, a helicopter coming from Honduran territory was said to have launched a rocket attack, while 50 Honduran troops had harassed a Nicaraguan observation post. Replying on 5 March, by a note transmitted the next day,<sup>(73)</sup> Honduras stated that it was obvious that the internal struggle in Nicaragua was becoming general and was a pretext for initiating an international confrontation involving the entire Central American region.

A Nicaraguan note of 5 March, transmitted on 6 March,<sup>(74)</sup> alleged that on that day launches and aircraft had attacked three Nicaraguan coastguard vessels in the Gulf of Fonseca, killing three crew members and wounding three more. On 7 March,<sup>(75)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note of 6 March to Honduras, alleging further attacks by Somozan mercenaries on 4 and 6 March, accompanied on the latter date by Honduran soldiers; the incidents had led to the wounding of a Nicaraguan soldier and the killing of a one-year-old girl. On 8 March,<sup>(76)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a 7 March note, stating that the day before launches had attacked Nicaraguan military installations three times. Honduras rejected the allegations of 5, 6 and 7 March as being without foundation; if Nicaragua was subject to foreign aggression, Honduras was neither the source nor a participant, it said in an 8 March note, transmitted on 12 March.<sup>(77)</sup>

Nicaragua, on 13 March,<sup>(78)</sup> conveyed a note of 12 March, stating that two days earlier Honduran soldiers had attacked a Nicaraguan observation post while, in another incident, Somozan mercenaries in conjunction with the Honduran army had attacked a second post; and on 11 March, the mercenaries had conducted a further attack, also in conjunction with the Honduran army. A second Nicaraguan communication of 13 March,<sup>(79)</sup> forwarding a note of 12 March, said that on 11 March mercenaries coming from Honduras had tried to sabotage an electric power sub-station in Nicaragua, while on 12 March, others had destroyed pylons.

Honduras, on 20 March,<sup>(80)</sup> transmitted a 15 March note charging that Nicaragua had changed the location of boundary markers and proposing that a technical commission of engineers from both States visit the sector involved.

Nicaragua, on 26 March,<sup>(81)</sup> forwarded a 25 March note stating that a combined Honduran army/Somozan mercenary force had that day carried out an artillery attack on a Nicaraguan community. On 26 March,<sup>(82)</sup> Nicaragua said that, the previous day, Honduran military personnel had attacked Nicaraguan forces; such involvement by the Government of Honduras brought the risk of regional conflagration ever nearer.

Honduras, on 26 March,<sup>(83)</sup> transmitted a note of 23 March stating that on 22 March a group of 50 Nicaraguans had invaded Honduran territory seizing 539 cattle; the same group, or a similar one, had during the night of 21 March seized 250 cattle. A letter of 28 March<sup>(84)</sup> from Honduras transmitted a communication of 27 March, stating that the Nicaraguan Minister of Defence had announced the possibility of local guerrilla groups proceeding to mine the ports of other Central American countries, from Guatemala to Panama—a public admission that subversive groups were operating with the support of the Nicaraguan Government.

On 29 March,<sup>(85)</sup> Nicaragua forwarded a note of the same date, stating that on 27 March 30 Honduran soldiers had attacked a Nicaraguan patrol, while on the same day boats and aircraft from Honduras had been involved in an attack on a Nicaraguan coastguard vessel; on 28 March a boat coming from Honduras had attacked a Panamanian vessel in Nicaraguan waters. On 2 April,<sup>(86)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a 30 March note, stating that on 29 March Honduran army personnel had mounted an attack on Nicaraguan territory. Another communication, of 30 April, transmitted on 1 May,<sup>(87)</sup> said that, after a marked reduction in attacks and acts of provocation by Honduran army troops, there had been attacks on 23 April, an aircraft violation of Nicaraguan airspace on 29 April, and a commando group attack from Honduran territory on 30 April. On 7 May,<sup>(88)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note of 4 May, stating that the Honduran army had that day attacked a Nicaraguan frontier post. That attack, said Honduras in a 4 May note transmitted on 7 May,<sup>(89)</sup> had been carried out by the Nicaraguan army as part of a systematic repetition of aggressive acts coinciding with similar escalation of such acts against Costa Rica. On 8 May,<sup>(90)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted two 7 May protest notes rejecting Honduras's assertion and stating that the aggressor of 4 May was Honduras and that a further attack had been made on 6 May.

On 9 May,<sup>(91)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted an 8 May note, stating that on that day two military helicopters from Honduras had penetrated its airspace and one had been shot down, an investigation showing that it belonged to the United States armed forces; two Honduran air force identity cards were also found giving proof of Honduran direct participation in the covert war against Nicaragua, master-minded by the United States. On 9 May,<sup>(92)</sup> Honduras transmitted a note and a press communiqué of 8 May protesting against what it said was a brutal act of aggression by Nicaragua against an unarmed helicopter, carrying eight Hondurans who had perished; the helicopter was said to have deviated from its scheduled route because of bad weather and given no warning by Nicaragua before being shot down. On 10 May,<sup>(93)</sup> Honduras accused Nicaragua of making false accusations in trying to turn to its advantage the downing of the unarmed helicopter; contrary to the Nicaraguan assertion of two helicopters, only one was involved; Nicaragua's aggressive attitude contrasted with Honduran behaviour in similar cases when it had returned unharmed personnel violating its airspace. Another communication from Honduras of 11 May<sup>(94)</sup> stated that, because of the Nicaraguan attitude towards the incident, the Nicaraguan Ambassador in Honduras had been declared persona non grata.

Also on 11 May,<sup>(95)</sup> Nicaragua, in a letter to the President of the Security Council, said that the expulsion of its Ambassador aggravated the tense relations between the two countries. In communiqués of 8 and 11 May annexed to the letter, Nicaragua regretted the death of the Hondurans, victims of the United States policy in the region, and appealed to Honduras to end its irresponsible policy of risking Honduran lives by increasingly involving them in the CIA's aggression against Nicaragua; it was ready to let Honduras send a mission, accompanied by Contadora Group representatives, to the site where the military helicopter was downed.

A further Nicaraguan communication of 11 May<sup>(96)</sup> concerning the incident listed air and naval attacks said to have been launched from Honduran territory between April 1983 and March 1984 near the area where the helicopter was shot down. Regarding the assertion that the helicopter, which recent investigations showed to have belonged to the Honduran air force, had deviated because of bad weather, Nicaragua stated that meteorological reports from the area showed that at the time the wind was calm, visibility unlimited and temperatures normal.

Honduras, on 21 May,<sup>(97)</sup> transmitted a 16 May note stating that it was encouraging that Nicaragua had acknowledged that the helicopter belonged to the Honduran air force; regarding the weather conditions, it said Nicaragua had ignored meteorological reports of thick cloud and fog which were normal for the time of year. Also, if visibility was unlimited, then the assertion was self-incriminating since the Sandinist army, despite this, had fired on an unarmed, clearly marked helicopter.

On 22 May,<sup>(98)</sup> Nicaragua charged that on 21 May there had been a new violation of its territorial waters by fishing boats flying the Honduran flag.

On 22 June,<sup>(99)</sup> Honduras transmitted a letter of 21 June, stating that on 19 June some 100 members of the Sandinist army had entered Honduras and another contingent on the same day had tried to attack a military post in an engagement in which three Sandinist soldiers were killed and two taken prisoner; prompted by humanitarian philosophy, Honduras was prepared to return the bodies and prisoners. On 6 July,<sup>(100)</sup> Honduras transmitted a note of 5 July stating that three Nicaraguans apprehended by Honduras, stated by Nicaragua to be fishermen who had lost their way, were not so because they had been carrying weapons and had tried to hide in a suspicious manner. A further Honduran letter of 19 July<sup>(101)</sup> transmitted a 17 July note, stating that on 2 July a six-member Sandinist army patrol had crossed into Honduras and engaged in a firing incident with the Honduran army. On 11 October,<sup>(102)</sup> Honduras transmitted a 9 October note, stating that on 2 October a Honduran fishing vessel in Honduran waters had been fired on by a Nicaraguan patrol boat, killing a fisherman and wounding two others.

Nicaragua, on 12 October,<sup>(103)</sup> forwarded a letter stating that on 10 October approximately 25 mercenaries had entered from Honduras and, in an engagement supported by the Honduran army, two Nicaraguan militiamen had been killed and another wounded; conditions were being prepared for a major military offensive against Nicaragua based on the concentration in Honduras of mercenary forces in the service of the United States. On 1 November,<sup>(104)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a letter of 31 October stating that that day there had been new airspace violations by unidentified aircraft coming from Honduras, actions coinciding with increased occurrence of violations, including overflights by United States aircraft dropping unidentified objects in Nicaraguan waters; these incidents were in line with CIA plans to impede the Nicaraguan electoral process.

Nicaragua-United States dispute

Relations between Nicaragua and the United States deteriorated during 1984, a situation reflected by the exchange of communications between the countries and those addressed to the United Nations. Communications to the Secretary-General and/or the Security Council President mostly transmitted texts which had been exchanged between the Nicaraguan Foreign Minister and the United States Secretary of State. The Council met in March/April, September and November to consider Nicaragua's complaints of aggression against it. A draft resolution put forward in April was not adopted because of the negative vote of a permanent Council member, the United States.

Communications (9 January-29 March). On 9 January,<sup>(105)</sup> Nicaragua forwarded a 7 January note protesting that, the previous day, two Piraña-type speedboats and an unidentified aircraft had attacked a Nicaraguan sugar refinery and neighbouring residential areas; the continued presence of United States warships in Nicaraguan waters led it to assume that the boats came from United States vessels.

On 29 February,<sup>(106)</sup> Nicaragua forwarded a note of 28 February, stating that launches supplied by the CIA to counter-revolutionary forces operating from Honduras and Costa Rica had launched attacks against Nicaragua and laid mines in its waters, resulting in the sinking of a Nicaraguan motorized vessel and damage to two others, and wounding seven people and leaving two missing.

On 7 March,<sup>(107)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note of 2 March complaining of further mining and stating that United States plans to impose a military blockade on Nicaragua were revealed ever more clearly.

Another note from Nicaragua of 8 March, transmitted the same day,<sup>(108)</sup> complained of additional attacks by launches, mining and acts of sabotage, stating that these incidents were part of a new strategy aimed at spreading terror in Nicaragua.

On 13 March,<sup>(109)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a government statement of that date saying that the virtual occupation of Honduras had converted that country into a United States base ready to launch large-scale operations, with United States military personnel and equipment, against El Salvador and Nicaragua. Counter-revolutionaries had been installed in both Honduras and Costa Rica, and the United States was attempting a commercial blockade of Nicaragua.

On 15 March,<sup>(110)</sup> India forwarded a communiqué adopted by the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, expressing concern over the new escalation of hostile acts against Nicaragua and the reported mining of its seaports.

Nicaragua, on 21 March,<sup>(111)</sup> transmitted a Foreign Ministry communiqué of 20 March stating that a Soviet vessel carrying oil to Nicaragua had been damaged in its waters by a device placed there by mercenaries in the service of the United States, resulting in the wounding of five Soviet seamen.

On 27 March,<sup>(112)</sup> a Nicaraguan Government communiqué of the previous day was transmitted, stressing that there must be an end to the escalation of the stationing of troops in Central America by withdrawal of those sent in the past few weeks, together with espionage aircraft, aircraft-carriers and warships recently dispatched; by halting all military manoeuvres in the region; by ending attacks against Nicaragua and the mining of its harbours; and by withdrawal of a request before the United States Congress for funds to intensify terrorist activities against Nicaragua.

On 29 March,<sup>(113)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a 28 March Foreign Ministry communiqué stating that a Liberian vessel leaving Nicaragua had struck a mine in its waters and holding the United States responsible.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (March/April)

On 29 March,<sup>(114)</sup> Nicaragua requested that the Security Council meet to consider what it said was an escalation of acts of aggression against it.

The Council considered the situation at four meetings held between 30 March and 4 April.

Meeting numbers. SC 2525, 2527-2529.

At their request, Afghanistan, Algeria, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, El Salvador, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Seychelles, the Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia were invited to take part in the proceedings without the right to vote.

A draft resolution submitted by Nicaragua<sup>(115)</sup> to have the Council condemn and call for an immediate end to the mining of the main ports of Nicaragua, call on all States to refrain from any type of military action against any State of the region, and support the Contadora Group efforts was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

The vote was 13 to 1, with 1 abstention, as follows:

In favour: China, Egypt, France, India, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Peru, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Upper Volta, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: United Kingdom.

In statements after the vote and in explanation of vote Nicaragua and the United States explained their positions.

Nicaragua stated that it had earlier in the debate asked when the United States would hear the universal outcry and halt the undeclared war it was waging. The veto was a clear reply: it did not intend to halt its aggression or to stop mining Nicaragua's ports. For that reason Nicaragua was obliged to continue trying to acquire the appropriate technological and military means to defend itself.

The United States said that the draft resolution was seriously flawed since it expressed concern about only one kind of violence and against only one target, and expressed no concern for the many attacks on El Salvador or for the continued violation of its territorial integrity by Nicaragua's continuing arms shipments to Salvadorian guerrillas. Neither did it express concern for the repeated violations of the borders of Costa Rica or Honduras. The United States reaffirmed its commitment to peace in Central America, regional negotiations leading to settlements, demilitarization of the region, mutual respect for sovereignty and secure borders, the withdrawal of all foreign military personnel, respect for law and establishment of democratic institutions based on free elections.

The United Kingdom also felt the text lacked balance since the debate was on the problems of Central America and the positions of the United States and the other Central American countries were not to be found; nor was there a call for an immediate end to all threats, attacks and hostile acts against all States of Central America.

There was universal support for the Contadora process, while in general there was antipathy towards any attempt at an economic blockade of Nicaragua, and a large majority of the countries taking part in the debate expressed concern over the mining of Nicaraguan ports and called for an end to it. Countries advocating that course included: Afghanistan, Algeria, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Netherlands, Pakistan, Peru, Seychelles, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Upper Volta, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe.

France said the Central American countries must be permitted to solve their own problems and the Contadora process must aim at achieving a halt in demonstrations of strength and an end to violence and interference by countries outside the region. China urged the super-Powers to refrain from making Central America an arena for their rivalry. India said peace and progress could not be constructed by the exclusion of one State or another from the mainstream of regional development.

The Upper Volta said the real reasons for the problems arising in Central America were known to everybody, including the United States, which wanted to replace those problems with others to justify its hatred of the Sandinist revolutionary régime; the changes in Central America were not the result of an East-West ideological confrontation, as the United States claimed.

The Syrian Arab Republic accused the United States of rejecting progressive régimes, wherever they were. The Ukrainian SSR felt that because the current Government of Nicaragua was not to the liking of the United States it had decided on its overthrow. Speaking similarly, the Lao People's Democratic Republic said the United States was supporting Somozan mercenary forces which, according to CIA pronouncements, would soon amount to 18,000 armed men. Zimbabwe said that their objective was to bring down the legitimate Government of Nicaragua. The USSR added that the United States did not attempt to conceal the fact that its principal task was to force the Nicaraguan people to turn away from their path of independent development and to restore Central America to its own total control.

Czechoslovakia said the issue was the continuing and ever-escalating acts of aggression against Nicaragua involving unlawful, hostile acts organized and financed by, or even directly carried out by, the United States in its undeclared war against an independent Central American State. Guyana said it was puzzled at the attitude of States which piously called for respect for non-intervention and peaceful settlement of disputes in other areas while brazenly violating them in Central America. Cuba said that while the United States was advocating the peaceful solution negotiated by the Contadora Group, it was preparing to invade both El Salvador and Nicaragua.

Pakistan said it firmly supported Nicaragua in its endeavours to overcome the serious problems with which it was beset, while hoping that all States in the region would help the process of peace and coexistence, permitting them to build their respective societies in accordance with their aspirations and free from outside intervention. Yugoslavia felt it was indispensable to recognize that right. Egypt added that it saw the nature of the crisis besetting Central America as but one more facet of human suffering in the third world.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya noted it had pointed out that it would not be the last victim in the series of American acts of aggression and the current meeting affirmed the validity of that warning. Democratic Yemen said the United States was the main source of tension, instability and the undermining of peace in the world and the Council should support Nicaragua and the other peoples of Latin America.

Algeria said the military actions against Nicaragua had assumed the characteristics of a conventional war, albeit an undeclared one, with the target nothing less than destabilization of Nicaragua and indeed the whole region.

Seychelles said it depended on the sea for its livelihood and survival and so protested wherever there was mining; the perpetrators of terrorism on the international high seas should be caught and punished.

Ethiopia said Nicaragua internally was facing the destructive activities of counter-revolutionary bandits backed by the United States; externally, in addition to many economic and financial pressures, it was also confronted with the threat of invasion by the armed forces of the United States and Honduras, the latter being one vast military base, whose political objective was the forcible overthrow of the legitimate Government of Nicaragua.

Viet Nam said a new step had been taken by the United States imperialists in their military escalation, in an attempt to wage a large-scale war of aggression against Nicaragua and to oppose the national liberation movements in El Salvador and elsewhere in Central America and the Caribbean area.

The German Democratic Republic said there was a close connection between the mining of Nicaraguan ports, the increasing attacks against Nicaragua, the use of Honduran territory and the various manoeuvres by United States armed forces in the region, at a time when millions of dollars were being spent by the United States to suppress the Central American peoples' will to freedom and to undermine legitimate Governments in that region. Afghanistan noted that the already tense situation had taken an ominous turn, with the main cause being the stepped-up United States imperialist intervention in the internal affairs of the countries of the region, including in Nicaragua.

Costa Rica believed that the Council should appeal to the countries concerned to carry out their mission in keeping with the Contadora guidelines; again appeal to the international community not to divert the nine countries involved from their chosen path; call for strict respect of the principles of international law, in particular regarding freedom of navigation; and uphold the principle that attention must be paid not only to matters relating to the security of States, but also to progress in all fields, including those dealing with political, economic and social development. Peru said the violations of Nicaragua's security and stability were a crucial link in the broader problems confronting Latin America, with the realities in the area, characterized by current circumstances and a simplistic view of the Central American crisis, obstructing dialogue and negotiations.

Mexico said what was happening in Central America reflected the major choices facing the international community: on the one hand, the absurd attempt to achieve peace by waging war and, on the other, the negotiated and rational solution of existing conflicts; the arms race on the one hand and the quest for just settlements of contemporary problems on the other. A universal consensus had been confirmed with respect to the fact that the conflicts in Central America originated in economic and social conditions and not in terms of a mechanical reflex of East-West confrontations.

The Netherlands said the crisis was closely related to the processes of change in which the countries of the region were immersed and felt that the endemic social inequalities, injustice and economic underdevelopment were at the root of the crisis, no doubt aggravated by outside interference.

Honduras believed that Nicaragua was trying to blame others for its internal conflicts, while seeking to push into the background the problems of concern to other Central American countries, such as weapons trafficking, support for all kinds of sabotage, terrorism and destabilization against other Central American Governments, the Nicaraguan arms buildup, the large numbers of Nicaraguan troops and the growing presence in Nicaragua of Eastern bloc advisers.

El Salvador pointed out that it had only emerged victorious from tragic times because of the determined democratic will of the majority of its people and the assistance offered by friendly countries, in contrast to the open foreign intervention practised by Nicaragua in Salvadorian internal affairs, embodied by the support for armed groups in El Salvador attempting to overthrow by force a legitimately constituted Government based on the people's will.

Guatemala said it had remained outside the problem of the arms race and that of exportation of armed groups and intended to continue to do so; it appealed for reconciliation among Central Americans and for them not to allow hegemonistic and extracontinental conflicts, foreign to their interest, to sweep them up.

Malta noted that in the midst of disheartening news there remained some positive elements, including the continuing peaceful overtures of Nicaragua and the belated United States recognition of the Central America crisis, of compassion for its people and of hope for its future.

Communications (30 April-4 September). On 30 April,<sup>(116)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a government communiqué of 27 April stating that its fundamental principles and commitments were non-alignment, a mixed economy, political pluralism, and the defence of human rights and freedom of expression. It was essential to conclude treaties to guarantee the peace and security of all States in the region; delaying this until all countries could reach agreement on other regional commitments would highlight the lack of will to safeguard peace.

On 2 May,<sup>(117)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note of 1 May stating that launches coming from a United States ship had the previous day attacked a Nicaraguan army post. Also on 2 May,<sup>(118)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note of the same day stating that that day a mine had sunk a Nicaraguan fishing vessel, at a time when launches from United States ships were operating in Nicaraguan waters.

On 10 May,<sup>(119)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted excerpts from the provisional measures delivered that day by the International Court of Justice on the case Nicaragua had brought against the United States (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I). On 15 May,<sup>(120)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted the resolution on Nicaragua of the Third Conference of Ministers of Labour of Non-Aligned Countries and Other Developing Countries (Managua, 10-12 May), which, among other things, urged the United States to comply with the provisional measures adopted by the Court.

On 4 June,<sup>(121)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a 2 June government communiqué stating that it had received the United States Secretary of State in a meeting with the Co-ordinator of the Governing Junta. The atmosphere had been respectful and frank with the Co-ordinator stressing that: Nicaragua was at all times ready to embark on talks to normalize relations between the two countries; verbal willingness to negotiate must be supported by practical actions, such as cessation of military manoeuvres, air and naval attacks, mining of harbours, installation of military bases and covert war; and Nicaragua stood ready at any time to conclude an agreement to guarantee peace and security in the region. Nicaragua agreed to further talks and had designated its Deputy Foreign Minister for that purpose, while stressing the need for participation in the talks of a mutually acceptable third country. The Co-ordinator also expressed his willingness to go to the United States for a meeting with its President.

On 30 August,<sup>(122)</sup> Nicaragua conveyed a note of 29 August stating that on 27 August it had shot down an American-made aircraft over its territory, killing the eight persons on board. It said the plane was one of those supplied by the CIA to mercenary bands working for the United States, and had been shot down in the area of the frontier with Honduras. Such continuing interventions by the United States belied its willingness to initiate a serious dialogue with Nicaragua.

On 4 September,<sup>(123)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note of 2 September stating that on 1 September it had shot down a military helicopter participating in a raid on Nicaragua which had killed four children and an adult; to date the bodies of two members of the helicopter's crew had been found.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (September)

On 4 September,<sup>(124)</sup> Nicaragua requested an urgent Security Council meeting to examine the situation created by what it called the new escalation of aggression directed against it.

The Council met on 7 September.

Meeting number. SC 2557.

In the debate Nicaragua said that a few days after the United States had vetoed the text before the Council in April it had contradicted its statements by publicly acknowledging its participation in mining Nicaraguan ports. Nicaragua had then gone before the International Court of Justice, while the United States, which proclaimed itself the defender of international law, had affirmed its non-recognition of the Court's jurisdiction on the issue. Currently, there was increasing United States involvement in the no-longer-covert war against Nicaragua as evidenced by increasing air raids. In violation of United States legislation, mercenaries were being contracted, and its official policy of State terrorism was also manifested through the military presence off the coasts and on the territories of Central America, in the constant holding of joint military and naval manoeuvres and in the building of airports and other military installations in Central America. The CIA was engaging in new tactics by the presence of United States mercenaries and was trying to convert those forces into a mercenary army that could serve as a springboard during an invasion. Nicaragua invited the Council to visit it to see how well its Government was functioning and that it was not persecuting anyone; it was not and never would be a threat to the security of any Central American State, much less that of the United States.

The United States noted that this was not the first time Nicaragua had come to the Council just as the Contadora process was beginning to arrive at solutions which would cause Nicaragua to recommit itself to the democratic system it had once promised the world and its own people. Meetings that had taken place between the two States had underscored United States commitment to the Contadora negotiations as an avenue towards resolution of the Central America crisis. The baseless allegations of aggression by the United States and neighbouring Central American Governments was a tactic designed to deflect attention again from Nicaragua's reluctance to negotiate in good faith and settle its problems with its neighbours. The United States said it had not sent personnel to Nicaragua to destabilize its régime, but noted that numerous Cubans and Libyan military and security advisers were there. Together with Soviet, Palestine Liberation Organization, Basque and other foreign military personnel, they were of serious concern to the United States and Central American countries. From the nature of elections in Nicaragua, it was not surprising that many people in the world opposed them and some private American citizens had apparently become involved in that event. The guerrillas of El Salvador and the Nicaraguan Government had themselves appealed for private American aid, and some Americans also worked for the Sandinista Government. Relations had deteriorated because, instead of keeping promises about human rights and pluralistic democracy, the Sandinistas had developed increasingly close military ties to Cuba and the USSR, tightened internal repression, supported guerrilla insurgency in El Salvador and terrorism in Costa Rica and Honduras, and continued an extensive military buildup threatening regional security.

The USSR said the United States statement that it did not intend to overthrow the Nicaraguan Government was fallacious, since it openly continued to finance, arm and train mercenaries whom it had been sending to Nicaraguan territory. The issue lay elsewhere than the non-existent alleged USSR threat; the reason for United States acts of intervention against Latin American countries was its policy of not allowing the autonomous, economic, political and social development of the area and attempting to impose the kind of system it preferred. The United States had on 82 occasions used force against 11 Latin American countries.

Communications (11 September-8 November). On 11 September,<sup>(125)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a telegram of 6 September referring to the 1 September air attack on Nicaragua (see p. 209), and stated that on 5 September the United States press had reported that the two mercenaries involved were part of a group of six sent to Honduras to carry out paramilitary activities against Nicaragua; although this violated United States criminal laws, it was not taking proceedings against those involved. A further letter, of 12 September,<sup>(126)</sup> from Nicaragua on the helicopter incident contained details of alleged United States military presence in Nicaragua, maps illustrating air operations against it and military bases in Honduras, photographs of what were said to be parts of United States-made aircraft downed in Nicaragua, including the helicopter, and newspaper articles from the United States press—documentation further confirming the double standard of the United States which, while seemingly willing to negotiate, was openly waging aggression against Nicaragua.

Refuting these allegations on 2 October,<sup>(127)</sup> the United States said they were without foundation and the United States citizens who died were not government employees, nor were they connected with its officials or activities in the region; it added that, on the date in question, several Cuban military personnel were killed in a battle with Nicaraguan freedom fighters. It was duplicitous that Nicaragua which had welcomed some 10,000 Cubans and numerous other foreign advisers and military personnel should complain about a small number of foreign individuals fighting with Nicaraguans to deliver democracy to that country.

On 18 September,<sup>(128)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a government communiqué of the previous day stating that three frigates of the United States

Navy had repeatedly violated Nicaragua's territorial waters in acts said to be preliminary to new aggression, with likely greater involvement by the United States Army.

In the final communiqué adopted by the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth (1984) session of the General Assembly (New York, 1-5 October), the participants noted with grave concern that the situation in the region had been further aggravated by increased recourse to imperialist policies of interference through the utilization of neighbouring territories for aggression against other States, the installation of military bases and attempts at the destabilization of the Nicaraguan Government, such as the mining of its ports and harbours in violation of international law, as well as numerous acts of aggression, pressure and economic coercion exerted against the countries of the region. The communiqué was forwarded by India on 8 October.<sup>(129)</sup>

On 15 October,<sup>(130)</sup> Nicaragua circulated the address by the Co-ordinator of the Governing Junta at the May Conference of Ministers of Labour of non-aligned and other developing countries.

On 20 October,<sup>(131)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a document on psychological operations in guerrilla warfare said to have been prepared by the CIA for use by mercenary bands attempting to overthrow the Nicaraguan Government. The manual described how to carry out assassinations, kidnapping, assaults and other criminal activities said to contravene both international law and United States legislation. On 23 October,<sup>(132)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a letter regarding the manual, stating that the United States President had, during a 21 October election debate, acknowledged it had been sent to the CIA chief in Nicaragua.

On 8 November,<sup>(133)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note of the previous day alleging further United States provocations by its frigates and violations of Nicaraguan airspace. Another note of 8 November<sup>(134)</sup> complained of an additional airspace violation said to have been committed by the United States that day, alleged to be part of a prelude to direct military intervention in Nicaragua.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (November)

On 9 November,<sup>(135)</sup> Nicaragua asked the Security Council to meet to consider what it said was the serious situation created by the escalation of aggression, the repeated threats and new acts of provocation fostered by the United States.

The Council met that day.

Meeting number: SC 2562.

Nicaragua said that all the military actions, recent threatening statements by members of the United States Administration, including the President, and the daily acts of aggression which were being stepped up led it constantly to fear a military intervention. The threats against Nicaragua, including an announcement of bombing of its territory, were part of a United States policy of aggression. At the same time the United States was leaking information about ships allegedly taking USSR-made fighter planes on board and sailing for Nicaraguan ports, intensifying spy flights and preparing to put into action in Central America the airborne brigade that had invaded Grenada. Further significant measures of aggression were being prepared to discredit the successful development of the democratic process in Nicaragua, reflected by its 4 November elections which had broad and free popular participation. Nicaragua declared that no ship of any nationality was transporting fighter aircraft to Nicaraguan ports and no such aircraft had been unloaded. It denounced the United States manoeuvres and warned that Nicaraguans were prepared to respond to any call for mobilization to defend the country.

The United States felt that, since no emergency existed requiring immediate action, Nicaragua's insistence on an immediate meeting was a misuse of Council processes. The current meeting was a further occasion, resembling half a dozen others, on which the Council was convening to deal with an invented threat of invasion, alleged to emanate from the United States. Although Nicaragua's head of State had predicted an invasion by 15 October, the prediction had not come true and, with 15 November approaching, another prediction had been made, perhaps with the idea of having the issue considered at regular monthly intervals. What was true of the first alleged invasion threat was equally true of the current allegation; it was without foundation.

Communications (12-29 November). On 12 November,<sup>(136)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted notes of 10 and 11 November protesting airspace violations and naval manoeuvres and stating that such airspace violations were a daily occurrence. On 19 November,<sup>(137)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted a note of 16 November, stating that two days earlier a group of about 300 mercenaries in the service of the United States had attacked a co-operative in Nicaragua, killing 14 people, including two children; on 15 November the same bands had attacked an agricultural co-operative, killing four peasants.

Also on 19 November,<sup>(138)</sup> a further communiqué of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the non-aligned Movement, adopted that day, was transmitted by India. The Bureau reiterated that the developments, particularly intensified aerial and naval actions in Nicaraguan airspace and territorial waters, increased the dangers of regional war; it demanded the immediate cessation of all such actions.

In a note of 23 November, transmitted six days later,<sup>(139)</sup> the United States, referring to the Nicaraguan communications of 1, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 November, said that it was not engaging in provocative aggressive acts towards Nicaragua nor planning to invade it; Nicaragua was building up its military capability beyond any reasonable estimate of its defensive needs, thereby exacerbating tensions and helping to create a situation that had long been viewed as a serious threat by Nicaragua's neighbours.

Anniversary of the discovery of America

The General Assembly had decided in 1982 to consider in 1983 an item on the observance of the quincentenary of the discovery of America.<sup>(1)</sup> In 1983, it had decided to consider the item when it resumed its thirty-eighth (1983) session in 1984.<sup>(2)</sup>

On 17 September 1984, at its resumed session, the Assembly adopted decision 38/457 by which it decided to defer consideration of the item to its thirty-ninth (1984) session.

Observance of the quincentenary of the discovery of America

At its 106th plenary meeting, on 17 September 1984, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Observance of the quincentenary of the discovery of America".

General Assembly decision 38/457

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President: agenda item 40.

On 18 December, by decision 39/456 on the suspension of the thirty-ninth session, the Assembly decided to resume the session, at a date to be announced, to consider several agenda items, one of which was the observance of the quincentenary.

Chapter VII

Asia and the Pacific

Matters relating to Korea, the situations in Afghanistan and Kampuchea, and the Iran-Iraq war were prominent concerns in Asia brought before the United Nations in 1984.

The United Nations Command continued to monitor the 1953 Armistice Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea. Attention focused on an October 1983 attempt on the life of the President of the Republic of Korea.

In South-East Asia, the situation in Kampuchea and border incidents—affecting that country, China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam—occupied the attention of the United Nations, with the Security Council meeting in regard to disputes along the borders both of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand, and of China and Viet Nam. The Secretary-General's Special Representative visited the area in pursuit of a peaceful solution to the problems of the region, particularly those of Kampuchea. In October, the General Assembly again called for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Kampuchea and requested the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea to continue its work (resolution 39/5).

Armed incidents affecting Afghanistan and Pakistan continued to be reported, while the Secretary-General's Personal Representative maintained his contacts with the parties leading to a new format of separate, high-level "proximity" talks regarding a political settlement. The Assembly, in November, called on all parties concerned to work for the urgent achievement of a political solution and expressed its support for the Secretary-General's efforts to that end (resolution 39/13).

The Security Council met twice in connection with the Iran-Iraq conflict, once on allegations of chemical-weapons use and the other on firings on third-party ships in the Gulf. The Secretary-General, while continuing his efforts to end the war, took a number of initiatives on particular aspects of the conflict, among them, the dispatch, out of humanitarian concern, of a mission of specialists to investigate allegations of chemical-weapons use, and the placing of United Nations teams in the area to inspect, as requested, areas of alleged shellings of civilian population centres. Concern was also raised as regards treatment of prisoners of war.

East Asia*Korean question

During 1984, the President of the Security Council received and circulated to the Council the report of the United Nations Command (UNC) concerning the maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement, and letters from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea on the prevailing situation and related matters, including a bombing attack—in October 1983, at Rangoon, Burma—which had killed, among others, four cabinet ministers of the Republic of Korea.

Report of the United Nations Command. A report of UNC concerning the maintenance in 1983 of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement<sup>(1)</sup> was submitted by a letter of 11 June 1984 from the United States,<sup>(2)</sup> on behalf of the unified command established pursuant to a 1950 Security Council resolution.<sup>(3)</sup>

The report stated that, during the period, UNC charged the Korean People's Army/Chinese People's Volunteers with more than 4,070 Armistice Agreement violations. An appendix gave details of major incidents, including firing across the military demarcation line at a Command post in the demilitarized zone and repeated armed infiltration attempts into the Republic of Korea, and what UNC described as a terrorist bombing attack at Rangoon.

Regarding the last incident, the report stated that, on 9 October 1983, a special terrorist team from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea attempted to assassinate President Chun Du-Hwan of the Republic of Korea during his State visit to Burma by detonating an explosive device at the Martyrs' Mausoleum at Rangoon. Although the bomb blast missed its intended target, 17 citizens of the Republic of Korea, including four cabinet ministers, and four Burmese citizens were killed and scores more from both countries were injured. On 4 November, the Burmese Government announced its decision to sever diplomatic relations with the Democratic People's Republic, asserting that the latter's commandos had committed the bombing. On 22 November, the trial of two of the officers allegedly involved began at Rangoon.

Communications. In a letter of 17 September,<sup>(4)</sup> the Democratic People's Republic of Korea said the United Nations had nothing to do with the so-called United Nations forces in the Republic of Korea, where only the United States army was stationed. It stated further that annual reports of the Command, submitted by the United States to the United Nations, were propaganda documents replenished with distortions and fabrications to veil its colonial war policy; and that the Rangoon incident was a drama directed by Chun Du-Hwan to find a way out of political and economic crisis. Annexed to the letter was a December 1983 memorandum of the Foreign Ministry providing its analysis of the incident and claiming its innocence.

In pursuance of a December 1983 General Assembly resolution on protection of diplomats,<sup>(5)</sup> Burma submitted, on 10 September, a report on the findings by its Enquiry Committee on the Rangoon bomb incident,<sup>(6)</sup> which concluded that enough irrefutable evidence pointed to the culpability of three agents from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

By a letter of 30 October,<sup>(7)</sup> the Republic of Korea termed as groundless the Democratic People's Republic's allegation against the legality of UNC, noted the conclusions of investigation by Burma on the bombing incident, and attributed the tension on the Korean peninsula to the plans of the Democratic People's Republic to unify the country under its terms.

In October, the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly's 1984 session, in its final communiqué,<sup>(8)</sup> reaffirmed support for the Korean people's desire for peaceful reunification of their homeland, the fulfilment of which, they hoped, would be enhanced by withdrawal of all foreign troops from the area.

South-East Asia

Kampuchea situation

The situation in and around Kampuchea—particularly border incidents, allegations of chemical weapons use and Kampuchea's representation in the United Nations—continued to occupy the attention of the Organization in 1984.

The Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea dispatched missions to a number of countries for consultations, in its efforts to assist in seeking a settlement of the situation. In October, the General Assembly reiterated that a just and lasting solution required the withdrawal of all foreign forces; restoration and preservation of the country's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity; the people's right to determine its destiny; and a commitment by all States to non-interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs (resolution 39/5).

Communications. A number of letters received by the Secretary-General in 1984 related to incidents on the common borders of Democratic Kampuchea, Thailand and Viet Nam.

On 13 February,<sup>(1)</sup> Thailand transmitted a list of violations of its sovereignty and territorial integrity allegedly committed by Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea between September and December 1983. They included shellings, land and sea incursions, and laying of land-mines, resulting in the death of four Thais and several injuries. Viet Nam, in a letter of 22 February,<sup>(2)</sup> rejected the Thai allegation as a deliberate act on the part of Thailand to cover up its repeated violations of the sovereignty of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and its provision of sanctuaries and aid to what Viet Nam called the genocidal Pol Pot clique and other reactionary forces. The letter alleged air-space violations and shelling in 1983 by Thailand, resulting in heavy losses of lives.

By a letter of 29 March,<sup>(3)</sup> Thailand charged that, on 25 March, Vietnamese forces had crossed from Kampuchea into Thai territory but had been pushed back by Thai artillery and an airstrike; on the same day, Viet Nam had attacked a Kampuchean civilian encampment inside Kampuchea, forcing some 10,000 Kampucheans to cross the border and seek temporary shelter inside Thailand. Officials of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the United Nations Border Relief Operation (UNBRO) had been dispatched to help the displaced. Thailand expressed concern over what it saw as a dangerous situation prevailing in the Thai-Kampuchean border areas, precipitated by the continuing occupation of Kampuchea by a large number of Vietnamese troops. On 1 April,<sup>(4)</sup> Viet Nam rejected the allegations and transmitted a 31 March statement by its Foreign Ministry, asserting that, over the previous five years, the Thai authorities had let the Pol Pot remnants, China's instrument, use Thai territory as their sanctuary to oppose the Kampuchean people's revival; it charged further that, in the latter half of March, many units of Thai armed forces had directly supported sabotage activities by Pol Pot remnants, including air and sea violations, and shellings.

China transmitted a 2 April Foreign Ministry statement<sup>(5)</sup> referring to the Thai protest of 29

March (see above), condemning Viet Nam for its act of aggression and supporting the Thai Government's position.

Thailand wrote on 3 April<sup>(6)</sup> alleging further military operations launched by Vietnamese troops against Kampuchean civilian encampments built by UNBRO inside Kampuchea. The additional influx of Kampucheans into Thailand as a result meant that nearly 150,000 Indo-Chinese refugees and displaced persons were currently sheltered inside Thailand, while some 230,000 Kampucheans were congregated along the border; UNBRO, whose funds were scarce and dwindling, might need additional assistance for its humanitarian relief work as a result of the current Vietnamese military operations against Kampuchean civilians.

A 16 April letter from Thailand<sup>(7)</sup> stated that Vietnamese forces had shot down an air force observation plane the previous day, while it was on a routine flight over Thai territory adjacent to the Thai-Kampuchean border, killing one crew member; a helicopter sent to search for the wreckage was also fired on and badly damaged. Viet Nam transmitted on 18 April a Foreign Ministry statement of the same date,<sup>(8)</sup> asserting that the Thai allegations were designed to cover up Thailand's repeated violations of Kampuchea's sovereignty and territory in support of the Pol Pot clique. On 14 and 15 April, the statement said, Thai reconnaissance planes and bombers had engaged in activities up to 10 kilometres into Kampuchean territory.

Another letter from Thailand of 17 April<sup>(9)</sup> mentioned that intensive Vietnamese military attacks of 14 April and an operation between 14 and 16 April had led to another influx of about 32,000 Kampucheans, and evacuation of about 45,000 Kampucheans, respectively, into Thailand; the encampments attacked were said to be under UNBRO supervision and sheltering only Kampuchean civilians.

On 23 April,<sup>(10)</sup> Indonesia transmitted a 19 April statement by the Chairman of the Standing Committee of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) on behalf of the ASEAN Foreign Ministers, condemning the Vietnamese forces for their military attacks in Kampuchea and Thailand. The ASEAN countries urged the international community to render assistance for the care of the displaced Kampucheans in Thailand, and called on Viet Nam to desist from further recourse to force and to adhere to United Nations resolutions, which called for withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem and the free exercise by the Kampuchean people of their right to self-determination.

Viet Nam transmitted, on 23 April,<sup>(11)</sup> a 20 April statement by its Foreign Ministry, calling the ASEAN statement a mere repetition of the Thai and Chinese authorities' slanders, and asserting that the refugee camps along the Thai-Kampuchean border were but a screen hiding the Thai authorities' collusion with China and the United States in letting the Pol Pot gang and its accomplices use Thai territory as its commanding and training base from which to launch criminal attacks against the Kampuchean people.

By a letter of 1 May,<sup>(12)</sup> Thailand reported that, on 30 April, Vietnamese troops had shelled Thai territory about 10 kilometres from the border, killing one villager and injuring 50.

An 8 May statement of the ASEAN Foreign Ministers, transmitted by Indonesia on 10 May,<sup>(13)</sup> asserted that recent Vietnamese attacks on Kampuchean civilian encampments had driven more than 75,000 civilians into Thailand. The Foreign Ministers reaffirmed the essential elements for the survival of an independent and sovereign Kampuchea and their support for the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea under the presidency of Norodom Sihanouk, and considered it desirable to convene a senior-level working group to monitor developments in the search for a comprehensive political solution.

On 14 May,<sup>(14)</sup> Viet Nam transmitted an 11 May statement made by its Foreign Ministry in response to the ASEAN statement of 8 May. Holding China and Thailand responsible for the tense situation, Viet Nam declared that its volunteers would withdraw from Kampuchea after the Pol Pot remnants and their accomplices had been eliminated and the security of the People's Republic of Kampuchea had been guaranteed. If Thailand wanted peace and stability on the border, it should consider, together with the Indo-Chinese countries, proposals for moving the refugee camps out of the areas of hostility and organizing voluntary repatriation for Kampuchean refugees.

By a letter of 9 July,<sup>(15)</sup> Thailand alleged that a Thai air force observation plane, while on a routine flight over Thai territory adjacent to the Thai-Kampuchean border, had been shot down on 7 July by Vietnamese forces and the two crew members seriously injured. Viet Nam responded on 16 July, with a 12 July statement of the Viet Nam News Agency,<sup>(16)</sup> rejecting the Thai allegation as slander covering up Thai violations and bombardment of Kampuchean territory in support of sabotage activities by the Pol Pot remnants and their accomplices.

On 6 November,<sup>(17)</sup> Thailand reported that, as a result of a 5 November Vietnamese incursion into its territory and an attack on a border patrol police base in Surin province, two Thai border patrol policemen had been killed, 25 injured and five were missing. Thai troops had been dispatched to drive out the Vietnamese forces, which continued to occupy the base the day after. A Viet Nam News Agency statement of 8 November<sup>(18)</sup> rejected the Thai allegations as a fabrication aimed at covering up Thai violations of Kampuchean territory totalling, between 25 October and 1 November alone, 377 on land, in the air and at sea.

On 23 November,<sup>(19)</sup> Thailand reported that, on 18 November, Vietnamese troops attacked a Kampuchean civilian border encampment at Nong Chan, forcing some 20,000 civilians to seek refuge at safer areas along the Thai-Kampuchean border. UNBRO, the World Food Programme, ICRC and other voluntary agencies were providing emergency relief items and medical teams. Thailand, in co-operation with UNBRO, had prepared an emergency evacuation site further inside its territory for use should Vietnamese acts of aggression force the civilians to flee their homeland.

Democratic Kampuchea, by a letter dated 26 November,<sup>(20)</sup> transmitted its Foreign Ministry statement of 21 November charging that, since 18 November, the Vietnamese aggressors had been mobilizing thousands of their troops to attack refugee camps at Nong Chan, as a result of which a large number of refugees had been killed and more than 10,000 had fled for safety. Such acts of aggression further confirmed Viet Nam's aim to annex Kampuchea, the statement concluded.

Thailand alleged, in a letter of 27 November,<sup>(21)</sup> that armed aggression by Viet Nam in the Nong Chan area in November had resulted in some of its artillery shells landing inside Thailand and causing injuries and material damage; the attacks also caused a new influx of more than 20,000 Kampucheans into Thailand. In a clash of 26 November near Ban Non Mak Mun in Thai territory, one Thai soldier was killed and eight others were injured. On 13 December,<sup>(22)</sup> Thailand reported further incidents, on 6 and 8 December, involving shelling in Trat province and an incursion into Thai territory of some 500 Vietnamese soldiers, subsequently driven out by Thai troops.

Democratic Kampuchea charged, in 1984 as in previous years, that the Vietnamese forces continued to use chemical weapons against its civilians. A letter of 25 January<sup>(23)</sup> cited a number of incidents, mostly in December 1983, of alleged poisoning of water supplies, resulting in several deaths. In a 24 January communiqué, transmitted on 27 January,<sup>(24)</sup> the Council of Ministers of the Coalition Government condemned alleged use of chemical weapons, including new mycotoxin agents. On 14 February,<sup>(25)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea transmitted information on four cases, in January, of water-supply poisoning, as well as aerial spreading of toxic chemical substances and alleged poisoning of foodstuffs and medicines, killing 30 people in one incident in January. In a 22 February statement, transmitted on 2 March,<sup>(26)</sup> a cabinet minister of the Coalition Government charged that a Vietnamese aircraft had spread large amounts of toxic chemical products the day before in the Kampuchea-Thailand border region; that such products were also spread, in the 1983/84 dry season, by cannon- and mortar-firing and by chemical weapons experts; and that Viet Nam had caused 2.5 million deaths since its occupation of Kampuchea. The minister asserted that the Vietnamese forces had intensified chemical-weapon use to make up for the shortage of troops in Kampuchea. On 5 March,<sup>(27)</sup> and again on 5 April,<sup>(28)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea transmitted further allegations of poisoning incidents said to have occurred between January and March, causing deaths and serious illness.

The United States transmitted, on 21 February,<sup>(29)</sup> a document on the alleged use of chemical and toxic weapons in Asia; it said that, while there appeared to have been a decrease in the lethality of attacks in the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Kampuchea since it last reported in 1983, there was evidence of continuing use in those countries of an as yet unidentified, non-lethal agent or agents (see also p. 62).

In a joint communiqué of 10 July,<sup>(30)</sup> transmitted by Indonesia on 17 July to the President of the Economic and Social Council, the Foreign Ministers of ASEAN affirmed the validity of their 21 September 1983 appeal for Kampuchean independence,<sup>(31)</sup> asked the Secretary-General to continue monitoring the developments on the Thai-Kampuchean border, and again called on Viet Nam to consider a proposal for the stationing of a United Nations observer team on the Thai side of the border in conjunction with the establishment of safe areas under United Nations supervision in western Kampuchea for the displaced civilian Kampucheans encamped along the border and for those in Thailand who wished to repatriate. Noting with apprehension that there were reportedly some half a million Vietnamese settlers in Kampuchea, they reaffirmed support for the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea under the presidency of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk.

Viet Nam transmitted a 5 June governmental statement on its policy regarding the use of its airspace.<sup>(32)</sup>

On 7 February,<sup>(33)</sup> the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted a communiqué issued at the end of a conference held at Vientiane on 28 and 29 January with the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Viet Nam. It called for a comprehensive solution based on withdrawal of all foreign armed forces from South-East Asia, an end to external intervention, and establishment in the region of a zone of peace, friendship and cooperation. Partial settlement, it continued, could be found through: total withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea, paired with a termination of China's hostile policy and the use of Pol Pot remnant troops and other Khmer reactionaries against the people of Kampuchea; and respect for equal security for, and the setting up of a safety zone along, both sides of the Kampuchea-Thailand border. In the mean time, a framework agreement could be reached with the ASEAN countries with a view to preventing the current situation from escalating into a major conflict and to paving the way for gradual solution of points of disagreement.

On 6 February,<sup>(34)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea submitted a 31 January statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs rejecting the so-called Vientiane declaration and calling for implementation of the five United Nations resolutions on the situation in Kampuchea; the Coalition Government remained ready to sign a peace and non-aggression treaty with Viet Nam once its troops were withdrawn from Kampuchea. On 17 April,<sup>(35)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a document of 30 March prepared by the Ministry, on the situation of women and children in that country, with references to what it called mental and physical Vietnamization imposed on them.

In a 19 April document transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 24 April,<sup>(36)</sup> the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea charged Thailand with colluding with Pol Pot and his accomplices and assisting them in their intrusion into Kampuchea. While the Thai authorities charged the Vietnamese volunteer army with attacks on refugee camps, they diverted humanitarian aid and delivered, to Pol Pot remnants using the camps as their bases, weapons and munitions from China, under the guise of goods for refugees. The People's Republic of Kampuchea urged Thailand to negotiate for a mutually agreed humanitarian solution to the refugee problem.

On 9 July,<sup>(37)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a 6 July communiqué, issued in Beijing by its three leaders—President, Prime Minister and Vice-President in charge of Foreign Affairs—at the conclusion of their 3-6 July meeting, in which they reaffirmed the determination to achieve a political settlement based on the General Assembly resolutions. Expressing support for that communiqué, the ASEAN Foreign Ministers, in a 9 July joint statement transmitted by Malaysia,<sup>(38)</sup> again called for an early withdrawal of all Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea under international supervision. The text was submitted also to the Economic and Social Council by Indonesia.<sup>(39)</sup>

On 1 August,<sup>(40)</sup> the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted a document issued in April by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, in which China was charged as the mastermind behind the Pol Pot régime which had committed the genocide.

Democratic Kampuchea transmitted on 23 October<sup>(41)</sup> a Foreign Ministry statement of 14 October, stating that during the last rainy season, which began in May, Viet Nam had sent some 24,000 new reinforcements as well as new war materials to Kampuchea; alleged troop withdrawals were, in fact, the discharge of tired, wounded, disabled and sick soldiers for a rest in the eastern part of Kampuchea, not even in Viet Nam.

The Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly at its 1984 session, in a 5 October communiqué transmitted by India,<sup>(42)</sup> reaffirmed the urgent need for a comprehensive political solution and urged all States in the region to work towards resolving their differences, establishing durable peace and stability and eliminating involvement and threats of intervention by outside Powers; it noted with approval efforts towards early establishment of a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in the region.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1984, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1984/148 on the right of peoples to self-determination, endorsed a February resolution of the Commission on Human Rights and expressed concern at the activities of the foreign forces in Kampuchea, particularly the continuing attacks on Kampuchean civilian encampments along the Thai-Kampuchean border.

Activities of the Committee of the Conference on Kampuchea. The 10-member Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea<sup>(43)</sup> met in 1984 in pursuance of an October 1983 Assembly resolution,<sup>(44)</sup> and dispatched a mission to Lagos (Nigeria), Dakar (Senegal) and Belgrade (Yugoslavia) from 17 to 24 April and another to Wellington (New Zealand), Canberra (Australia), Bangkok (Thailand) and Jakarta (Indonesia) from 2 to 12 July.

The Committee's report on its 1983/84 activities noted that the missions, in their consultations with the Governments concerned, sought the widest possible support for efforts towards a comprehensive political solution to the conflict in Kampuchea, stressing that a just and lasting settlement must be based on two principles: withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea and the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny. They also reiterated that the settlement should take account of the legitimate security concerns of the States of the region, including a commitment by all States to non-interference and non-intervention in Kampuchea's internal affairs. In the discussions with the Governments, it was noted that the recent diplomatic exchanges on the topic had not produced decisive progress towards a solution and that further efforts were required to bring about a constructive dialogue between the parties concerned.

The President of the Conference, who was briefed at Brussels, Belgium, by the July mission, subsequently visited Malaysia, Indonesia, Thailand and Singapore from 2 to 9 September. He discussed with the respective Governments the consideration of the Kampuchean question at the 1984 Assembly session and, among other things, possible actions to be undertaken within the framework of the Conference and the desirability of initiating efforts to save the temple complex of Angkor from further decay and destruction.

Concluding its report, the Committee again appealed to those Member States which had not participated in the Conference to co-operate, and to all parties to pursue dialogue and refrain from action that would further complicate the situation.

The Conference President and officers of the Ad Hoc Committee had an exchange of views, in New York on 28 September during the 1984 Assembly session, with the Foreign Ministers of the States members of ASEAN: Brunei Darussalam, Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore and Thailand.

Report of the Secretary-General. In his October 1984 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(45)</sup> submitted pursuant to its October 1983 resolution on Kampuchea,<sup>(44)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that he had maintained close contact with representatives of the States most directly concerned and with other interested parties, in the exercise of his good offices. He had held extensive discussions with the Foreign Minister of Indonesia and the Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Thailand. His Special Representative, Rafeuddin Ahmed, visited South-East Asia from 7 to 21 May and held consultations with the Governments of Indonesia, Malaysia, Viet Nam and Thailand; he returned to the region in July and attended the seventeenth ASEAN Ministerial Meeting at Jakarta, on the Secretary-General's behalf, and met with the Foreign Ministers and other senior officials of the ASEAN countries. The Secretary-General thereafter held further discussions with the President of Democratic Kampuchea, the Prime Minister of Malaysia, the Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, and the Foreign Ministers of China, Indonesia, the Philippines, Thailand and Viet Nam, as well as with other interested Governments.

The Secretary-General reported that his hopes remained unfulfilled for a more constructive dialogue emerging from contacts and diplomatic exchanges of February and March, and subsequent armed incidents along the Thai-Kampuchean border contributed to a renewed climate of tension in the region. The consultations his Special Representative had held with the Governments in the region on resumption of the diplomatic process revealed that further efforts were necessary before a mutually acceptable agenda could be worked out, an impression confirmed by his subsequent discussions in New York.

The Secretary-General urged all parties concerned to renew their efforts towards the early initiation of the diplomatic process, while reiterating his own determination to continue exercising his good offices.

He also stated that he had continued to implement the programmes of humanitarian assistance to the Kampuchean people. Funded largely by voluntary contributions, they consisted mainly of operations within Kampuchea, at the border and within Thailand.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the situation in Kampuchea and the Secretary-General's report, the General Assembly, on 30 October 1984, adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/5.

The situation in Kampuchea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979, 35/6 of 22 October 1980, 36/5 of 21 October 1981, 37/6 of 28 October 1982 and 38/3 of 27 October 1983,

Recalling further the Declaration on Kampuchea and resolution 1(I) adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea,<sup>(46)</sup> which offer the negotiating framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 38/3,

Noting the continued effectiveness of the coalition with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as President of Democratic Kampuchea,

Deploring that foreign armed intervention and occupation continue and that foreign forces have not been withdrawn from Kampuchea, thus causing continuing hostilities in that country and seriously threatening international peace and security,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1984/148 of 24 May 1984 on the right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation,

Greatly disturbed that the continued fighting and instability in Kampuchea have forced an additional number of Kampucheans to flee to the Thai-Kampuchean border in search of food and safety,

Recognizing that the assistance extended by the international community has continued to reduce the food shortages and health problems of the Kampuchean people,

Emphasizing that it is the inalienable right of the Kampuchean people who have sought refuge in neighbouring countries to return safely to their homeland,

Emphasizing further that no effective solution to the humanitarian problems can be achieved without a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean conflict,

Seriously concerned about reported demographic changes being imposed in Kampuchea by foreign occupation forces,

Convinced that, to bring about durable peace in South-East Asia and reduce the threat to international peace and security, there is an urgent need for the international community to find a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean problem that will provide for the withdrawal of all foreign forces and ensure respect for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea, as well as the right of the Kampuchean people to self-determination free from outside interference,

Convinced further that, after the comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean question through peaceful means, the countries of the South-East Asian region can pursue efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia so as to lessen international tensions and to achieve lasting peace in the region,

Reaffirming the need for all States to adhere strictly to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which call for respect for the national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of States, non-recourse to the threat or use of force and peaceful settlement of disputes,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 34/22, 35/6, 36/5, 37/6 and 38/3 and calls for their full implementation;

2. Reiterates its conviction that the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, the restoration and preservation of its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny and the commitment by all States to non-interference and non-intervention in the internal affairs of Kampuchea are the principal components of any just and lasting resolution of the Kampuchean problem;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea and requests that the Committee continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference;

4. Authorizes the Ad Hoc Committee to convene when necessary and to carry out the tasks entrusted to it in its mandate;

5. Reaffirms its decision to reconvene the Conference at an appropriate time, in accordance with Conference resolution 1(I);

6. Renews its appeal to all States of South-East Asia and others concerned to attend future sessions of the Conference;

7. Requests the Conference to report to the General Assembly on its future sessions;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consult with and assist the Conference and the Ad Hoc Committee and to provide them on a regular basis with the necessary facilities to carry out their functions;

9. Expresses its appreciation once again to the Secretary-General for taking appropriate steps in following the situation closely and requests him to continue to do so and to exercise his good offices in order to contribute to a comprehensive political settlement;

10. Expresses its deep appreciation once again to donor countries, the United Nations and its agencies and other national and international humanitarian organizations that have rendered relief assistance to the Kampuchean people, and appeals to them to continue to provide emergency assistance to those Kampucheans who are still in need, especially along the Thai-Kampuchean border and in the holding centres in Thailand;

11. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in co-ordinating humanitarian relief assistance and in monitoring its distribution, and requests him to intensify such efforts as are necessary;

12. Urges the countries of South-East Asia, once a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean conflict is achieved, to exert renewed efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "The situation in Kampuchea".

In explanation of vote, Nicaragua reiterated the right of the people of Kampuchea to self-determination, rejected measures that supported the vestiges of a régime that had been abolished by the Kampuchean people, and recognized the Government of the People's Republic of Kampuchea as the sole legitimate representative of that people.

Vanuatu supported dialogue, negotiations and a comprehensive political settlement. Its support of the Secretary-General's efforts was shared by Sweden, which saw in the resolution a confirmation of principles necessary for a lasting settlement: rejection of armed intervention, respect for territorial integrity and the right to self-determination. Sweden added, however, that it did not support those elements in the text that were not, in its opinion, warranted by the facts or unlikely to facilitate a just and peaceful settlement. Ireland also supported the general thrust of the draft, adding that, as regards the fourth preambular paragraph, its position on Kampuchean representation had not changed from that of abstention on the Credentials Committee report. Ghana, Bolivia, Brazil and Burkina Faso, which also supported the thrust of the resolution, expressed reservations on that paragraph, with Burkina Faso expressing additional reservation as regards the eleventh preambular paragraph.

Participation and representation of Democratic Kampuchea in UN bodies

The question of Democratic Kampuchea's representation in United Nations bodies was again raised in 1984.

On 19 October, the Lao People's Democratic Republic conveyed a letter of 18 October<sup>(47)</sup> from Hun Sen, described as Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, stating that the Polpotists and the disguised Polpotists under the banner of Democratic Kampuchea were criminals condemned for genocide, had no right to represent the Kampuchean people and should be expelled from the United Nations; the United Nations debate on Kampuchea, in the absence of the People's Republic of Kampuchea as the only authentic and legitimate representative of the people, constituted a gross interference in the country's internal affairs.

The validity of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials to the 1984 General Assembly session was also questioned at an October meeting of the Credentials Committee.<sup>(48)</sup>

The USSR claimed that there was no such country and that only the State of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, formed on the basis of free elections, existed. Cuba also asserted that the People's Republic, as the sole representative chosen by the people, should represent Kampuchea at the United Nations. China, on the other hand, stated that the legitimacy of a State should never be challenged just because it had been subjected to foreign aggression. Italy, Paraguay and the United States also supported the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea. The Ivory Coast said that its acceptance of credentials did not imply a position with respect to any dispute currently taking place.

Democratic Kampuchea's credentials were approved by virtue of General Assembly resolution 39/3 A, approving the Credentials Committee report.

International security in South-East Asia

A number of letters received by the United Nations in 1984 dealt with the general aspects of relations among the countries of South-East Asia (see also p. 214).

In a 2 July communiqué—transmitted on 5 July to the Secretary-General by the Lao People's Democratic Republic<sup>(49)</sup> and to the President of the Economic and Social Council by Viet Nam<sup>(50)</sup>—the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of these countries and of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, meeting at Vientiane, called for an immediate dialogue between them and ASEAN countries on problems of mutual concern, taking into account the ASEAN proposal of 21 September 1983<sup>(51)</sup> and that of the three Indo-Chinese countries put forth in a 29 January 1984 communiqué<sup>(52)</sup> (see p. 216), along with all other proposals from both sides.

Responding to the communiqué, Democratic Kampuchea, in a letter of 18 July<sup>(53)</sup> to the President of the Economic and Social Council, asserted that the Vietnamese authorities were trying to divert public opinion from the cause of the problem, which was the occupation of Kampuchea by their armed forces of 250,000 men, a contingent of 50,000 civil administrators and some 600,000 Vietnamese settlers. It also stated that Viet Nam aimed at transforming its problem with Kampuchea into a problem between the so-called Indo-Chinese countries and the ASEAN members so as to put over the plan for an "Indo-Chinese Federation", which would be nothing other than a "Greater Viet Nam".

Meeting at Jakarta, the ASEAN Foreign Ministers, in a 9 July statement,<sup>(54)</sup> reaffirmed readiness to discuss with Viet Nam a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean situation. They also supported, in a 10 July communiqué,<sup>(55)</sup> the peaceful settlement of other problems in the region, including the Thai-Lao border incident (see p. 221) and Indo-Chinese refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On an oral proposal by its President, the General Assembly adopted without vote decision 39/406.

Question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia

At its 65th plenary meeting, on 16 November 1984, the General Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia".

China-Viet Nam dispute

Between March and June 1984, the Secretary-General received several communications from China and Viet Nam, each country charging the other with policies of annexation and aggressive acts along their common borders and elsewhere.

On 23 March, Viet Nam transmitted a 23 February communiqué<sup>(52)</sup> by its commission for investigation of what it called war crimes against it by the Chinese expansionists and hegemonists. It charged that, since March 1979, China had increased its collusion with the United States imperialists and drawn the ASEAN countries into a war of sabotage against Viet Nam, while continuing to prepare for a new war of aggression. In a series of Foreign Ministry statements—of 3,<sup>(53)</sup> 7<sup>(54)</sup> and 30 April<sup>(55)</sup> and 23 May<sup>(56)</sup>—Viet Nam alleged that China had violated its territorial integrity by resorting to artillery bombardments and intrusions into the northern provinces along the border. These allegations were repeated in a Ministry memorandum of 4 June,<sup>(57)</sup> stating that China had carried out since 2 April a campaign of large-scale shelling and armed attacks in the northern border area, as part of Beijing's scheme to conquer and annex Viet Nam.

China transmitted a Foreign Ministry statement of 26 May,<sup>(58)</sup> asserting that since early April its frontier troops had repulsed repeated attacks by intruding Vietnamese troops, destroyed some Vietnamese fortifications and positions and eliminated Vietnamese troops entrenched on China's territory.

An 8 June communiqué of Viet Nam's commission for investigation, submitted on 19 June,<sup>(59)</sup> stated that China had mobilized many divisions and army corps to reinforce the 15 divisions already stationed close to the Vietnamese border, conducted simulated attacks on Viet Nam, and launched a campaign of slander and disinformation against it.

Lao People's Democratic Republic-Thailand dispute

In 1984, the Security Council met in October to consider a border dispute between the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand, and the two countries transmitted to the Secretary-General a number of communications on the topic between June and December.

Communications (June-October). The Lao People's Democratic Republic, by a letter of 14 June,<sup>(60)</sup> transmitted a statement made the previous day by its Foreign Ministry alleging that Thai troops had attacked and occupied Lao territory in May and June. Among the incidents related was a 6 June alleged Thai occupation of what it claimed were three Lao villages in Sayaboury province on the right bank of the Mekong River, followed by removal of the boundary marker the following day and a further incursion, and the hoisting of the Thai flag in the occupied villages, on 8 June. It asserted that the Thai actions were part of that country's policy of allowing its territory to be used as a staging ground for Lao reactionaries in exile, and were closely connected with Thailand's assistance to the Pol Pot clique and China's attacks along the northern border of Viet Nam.

Viet Nam, in a Foreign Ministry statement of 14 June,<sup>(61)</sup> supported the Lao People's Democratic Republic and said the Thai attacks followed the visit of the Thai army's Commander-in-Chief to China and the United States to seek military aid and came at a time when China was carrying out military escalation against Viet Nam.

In a letter of 21 June,<sup>(62)</sup> Thailand said it had been constructing roads for two years to all remote areas, particularly those villages along the border, as part of a five-year development project. A survey of the area and the Thai-Lao boundary map clearly showed the three villages to be within Thai territory, but Lao troops, in March 1984, obstructed road construction at a point about 6 kilometres inside Thai territory, claiming that the Thais had entered Lao territory. In April, Lao troops along the border were strengthened and clashes occurred in April and May; on 6 and 7 June, Thai troops were dispatched to provide security to the area, while efforts were made for a peaceful settlement. As for Viet Nam's allegation of 14 June, Thailand regarded its border problems with the Lao People's Democratic Republic as bilateral issues in which Viet Nam should not interfere.

The President of Democratic Kampuchea, in a 1 July statement transmitted the following day,<sup>(63)</sup> said that the Vientiane régime, which he called a satellite of Viet Nam, had been trying to provoke incidents on the Lao-Thai frontier, going so far as to contest the nationality of certain Thai frontier villages; he condemned, as warmongering and expansionist, the policy pursued by the Vietnamese and Lao régimes against Thailand.

The text of a press interview given on 24 July at Bangkok by the Lao Deputy Foreign Minister and head of the delegation of the National Commission for the Lao-Thai Frontier was transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 30 July.<sup>(64)</sup> The Lao official stated that a peaceful solution called for Thai troop withdrawal from the three occupied Lao villages, repatriation of the inhabitants who had been forcibly taken to Thai territory, and the return of the situation existing before 6 June. Details were given of the Lao-Thai talks held at Bangkok on the matter, in which it was stated that the Thai position—that after its troop withdrawal, the Lao side should not send its own troops into the three villages—proved its desire for sovereignty over the villages, which had been Lao from time immemorial.

On 23 August,<sup>(65)</sup> Thailand reported that the July/August bilateral negotiations had not resulted in an agreement, and its proposal for a Thai-Lao joint team of technical personnel for an on-site survey of the boundary had been rejected. Thailand, therefore, had decided to dispatch unilaterally its technical personnel to survey and determine the boundary location, leaving open the possibility for an independent survey by impartial experts should there be any doubts as to the Thai findings.

On 27 August,<sup>(66)</sup> Thailand charged that Lao attacks on Thai positions on 18 and 26 August, resulting in the deaths and injuries of its soldiers, confirmed Lao unwillingness to settle the dispute peacefully. It urged the Lao side to refrain from further armed provocation in the area while it gathered technical data on the ground.

A memorandum and statement of 17 and 26 August, respectively, by the Lao Foreign Ministry regarding the three villages were transmitted.<sup>(67)</sup> The memorandum gave their history, details of border demarcation, allegations of premeditation in the Thai occupation and collusion with China against the three Indo-Chinese countries, preparations for further hostile action, and alleged crimes against the villagers. The statement said that Thailand had unilaterally broken off the bilateral negotiations on the matter, that the central issue was not the boundary delineation according to watershed but the Thai attack on and occupation of three Lao villages, and that the Lao side had rejected the proposal for a bipartite technical survey because the existing border was clearly defined and marked and there never had been any dispute. It also alleged that Thailand had reinforced its occupation troops.

On 5 September,<sup>(68)</sup> Thailand reported that Lao soldiers had fired on two Thai posts in Utaradit province on 1 September, killing two Thai border patrol policemen and injuring three others.

A 6 September statement by the Lao Foreign Ministry<sup>(69)</sup> placed on what it called the ultra-rightist reactionaries of the Thai army the responsibility for the deaths of Thai soldiers, reaffirmed its determination to safeguard its territorial integrity, and said it was ready to send a delegation to Bangkok again in order to negotiate on a peaceful settlement of the question.

On 18 September,<sup>(70)</sup> Thailand said that on 13 September a Thai highway official was killed and six others seriously injured in an alleged Lao ambush well inside Thai territory. A further Thai letter of 26 September<sup>(71)</sup> alleged two cases of Lao aggression on 24 September, killing a Thai soldier and a paramilitary and injuring several others.

A White Book published by the Lao Ministry of Foreign Affairs in September, entitled "The Truth about Thai-Lao Relations", was transmitted on 25 September.<sup>(72)</sup> It said Thailand was the only country in South-East Asia with expansionist and hegemonist ambitions, and presented its historical interpretation of Thai policy towards the Lao People's Democratic Republic from the thirteenth century onwards.

By a letter of 4 October,<sup>(73)</sup> Thailand drew attention to a 2 October statement by its Foreign Minister to the General Assembly, in which he asserted that the minor incidents near the Thai-Lao border, concerning only three small remote villages covering 19 square kilometres and a population of 1,100 people, had been complicated by military actions as well as by interference by a third country using the opportunity to divert world attention from its military occupation of Kampuchea. Thailand, he announced, had decided to remove its military presence from the three villages in order to defuse the situation and to bring about a peaceful solution to the problem.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

On 3 October,<sup>(74)</sup> the Lao People's Democratic Republic requested a Security Council meeting to consider the situation created in the Lao-Thai border region following what it charged was an attack on and occupation of three Lao villages by Thai troops on 6 June. Asserting that the situation in the area had recently turned tense again, it rejected as a propaganda ploy the 2 October statement by the Thai Foreign Minister to the Assembly on Thai troop withdrawal.

The Council met on 9 October and, at their request, invited the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Meeting number. SC 2558.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic said the question was not a frontier dispute but a clear-cut case of premeditated aggression. The Thai stragem was to force the Lao People's Democratic Republic to re-examine the frontier in the area of the three villages, thus creating a precedent for a wholesale revision of the common frontier; the Lao

People's Democratic Republic based its position on the principle of the inviolability of historical frontiers, as laid down in the Franco-Siamese Convention of 13 February 1904, the Franco-Siamese Treaty of 23 March 1907 and the map annexed thereto. The Thai claim of Viet Nam's intervention in the matter was only a manoeuvre designed to mislead people. The Thai side must totally and unconditionally withdraw forthwith its troops and administrative personnel from the three Lao villages, send home the villagers forcibly taken to Thailand, compensate the villagers for the loss of life and property and restore the normal situation that had prevailed in the region before 6 June. The Thai statement to the General Assembly was insincere in that it did not give a precise date for the total withdrawal, renounce the maintenance of its administration or personnel, mention Lao sovereignty over the three villages, or deal with the return home of the villagers or compensation.

Thailand recapitulated its position in detail and added that, after its 2 October announcement to the Assembly on removing its military presence from the villages, the crisis had become a non-crisis because, without military protection, it was no longer possible for Thai civilians to remain in the area due to possible harassment by Lao forces. The crux of the matter was basic disagreement over the exact location of the boundary line in a small, remote, mountainous and forested area; that technical problem necessitated a joint survey to determine the watershed location. Thailand remained ready to conduct a joint technical survey with the Lao side, or to request the Secretary-General to dispatch a fact-finding mission for an on-site survey with the assistance of both Lao and Thai technical experts; if the findings were not conclusive, Thailand was prepared to resort to an impartial, independent technical expert or group of experts acceptable to both sides. The Franco-Siamese Treaty, Thailand stated, imposed undue disadvantages on Thailand for the benefit of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, then under French rule, but the Siamese Government had been in no position at that time to resist certain encroachments by the then French colonial administration.

Further communications (October-December). A statement of 14 October by the Lao Foreign Ministry<sup>(75)</sup> alleged that tension had risen in recent days regarding the three villages, that the Thai occupation troops had been reinforced rather than withdrawn, and that nearly all the villagers had been forcibly removed to Thailand. Responding to the charges, Thailand, on 17 October,<sup>(76)</sup> declared that there was no longer any Thai military or administrative presence in the three villages, that the villagers themselves had voluntarily moved and were being resettled in a safe area nearby, and that the Lao allegations of deportation or abduction were unsubstantiated.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic, by a letter of 18 October,<sup>(77)</sup> alleged that what was actually taking place was a tactical redeployment of Thai forces, that nearly 900 Lao villagers had been deported to Thailand rather than voluntarily relocated, and that the boundary in the area followed the watershed line. By a further letter of 22 October,<sup>(78)</sup> it demanded an immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Thai forces, immediate return home of the Lao inhabitants and compensation for the loss of life and property, and resumption of negotiations which it claimed Thailand had unilaterally broken off in August. A 27 October Foreign Ministry statement, transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 29 October,<sup>(79)</sup> reported that Thai troops had been constrained to withdraw from the three villages and Lao local authorities were once more administering them, while some of the inhabitants who had fled were gradually returning home. The situation remained tense, however, with Thai troops still occupying a position in Lao territory and assisting Lao reactionaries in exile in sabotage activities inside Lao territory; Thailand had not renounced sovereignty over the three villages or its expansionist designs on the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

Thailand, by a letter of 31 October,<sup>(80)</sup> rejected the allegation that it was still holding a position in Lao territory and called on the Lao People's Democratic Republic not to make false charges which could only exacerbate tensions.

On 6 December,<sup>(81)</sup> the Lao People's Democratic Republic said that the inhabitants of the three villages deported by Thai troops were made to perform forced labour daily and suffered from hunger and prolonged malnutrition, and women had been raped systematically. It further alleged that Thai soldiers had murdered one resident in the zone still occupied.

Thailand, on 10 December,<sup>(82)</sup> said that, since the beginning of the Thai-Lao border incidents on 15 April, the Lao side had more than 60 times violated Thailand's territorial integrity in the area, killing nine officers and one civilian and injuring 56 officers and nine civilians. The people of the three villages, it added, had told ICRC representatives that they had fled voluntarily and were determined to stay in Thailand.

By a letter of 21 December,<sup>(83)</sup> the Lao People's Democratic Republic said Thailand still occupied nine hilltops in Lao territory around the three villages and was carrying out shellings against Lao localities almost every day. It repeated charges against Thai treatment of the villagers, and added that Thailand had rejected the Lao proposal for a resumption of talks on 10 December and threatened to restrict the activities of the Lao envoy in Bangkok.

Afghanistan situation and Afghanistan-Pakistan armed incidents

The General Assembly again took up in November 1984 the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security. By resolution 39/13, it again called for immediate foreign troop withdrawal, reaffirmed the Afghan people's right to determine their own form of government, renewed its appeal for relief assistance for the Afghan refugees, and requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts for a political solution.

The Foreign Ministers of Afghanistan and Pakistan held discussions at Geneva in August in a new format of "proximity" talks held separately with the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, agreeing to meet again in February 1985.

Communications. In 1984, the majority of the communications addressed to the Secretary-General relating to the situation in Afghanistan concerned allegations by both Pakistan and Afghanistan of violations of airspace and territory, shellings and other attacks by one against the other.

Two of the communications dealt with an 18 December 1983 incident in the border area of Torkham inside Afghanistan,<sup>(1)</sup> in which Afghanistan had accused Pakistan of complicity. Pakistan, in a 26 December 1983 statement, transmitted on 5 January 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> rejected the charge, stating that it was the Afghan people themselves that carried on an indigenous freedom struggle throughout Afghanistan. On 19 April,<sup>(3)</sup> Afghanistan alleged that, in the course of that 1983 incident, in which a custom-house was burned, armed bandits and foreign mercenaries, assisted by Pakistan, had kidnapped and surrendered to Pakistani militia forces 37 employees of Afghan civil institutions, who were subsequently tortured in an effort to make them stay in Pakistan. Afghanistan demanded the immediate release and return of the prisoners.

By a letter of 2 February,<sup>(4)</sup> Pakistan reported that two Afghan MIG aircraft violated Pakistan's airspace near Angur Adda on 27 January, killing 42 civilians and injuring 60 others. On 26 March,<sup>(5)</sup> it reported that an Afghan MIG had crashed on its territory the day before. Afghanistan stated on 2 April<sup>(6)</sup> that the plane, on a training flight, had lost direction due to bad weather and technical problems, and crashed when its fuel was finished.

Pakistan said in a letter of 18 June<sup>(7)</sup> that two Afghan military aircraft had bombed Pakistan territory on 16 June, killing six Afghan children and injuring a woman in what it claimed was the twenty-eighth violation of Pakistan airspace from the Afghan side in 1984. Afghanistan replied on 20 June<sup>(8)</sup> that no such airspace violation had occurred, adding that, whenever the dates approached of bilateral negotiations through the Secretary-General's representative or of the General Assembly sessions, Pakistan made baseless allegations to score propagandistic gains.

Pakistan alleged further bombing attacks by Afghan military aircraft on 13 and 14 August,<sup>(9)</sup> which it said had killed 14 people and injured 10 others. Afghanistan, by a letter of 17 August,<sup>(10)</sup> rejected the allegations, adding that such claims were made to coincide with top-level officials' visits or when negotiations or the Assembly session approached; it alleged that China and the United States were behind that manoeuvre, trying for their part to achieve their political objectives.

Three incidents of alleged shellings by the Afghan army across the Pakistan border at Teri Mangal on 18 and 19 August were reported by Pakistan in two letters dated 21 August: 27 Afghan refugees and nine Pakistanis were reportedly killed in two instances,<sup>(11)</sup> and two civilians were killed and four others injured in a third incident.<sup>(12)</sup> Pakistan reported that further Afghan shellings in the same area—on 21<sup>(13)</sup> and 23 August<sup>(14)</sup>—had resulted in six deaths and seven injuries.

In a 23 August letter, transmitted on 27 August,<sup>(15)</sup> Pakistan alleged that a series of violations of its territory by Afghan aircraft and artillery in August had resulted in 51 deaths. The Afghan authorities, having been frustrated in their efforts to contain the conflict raging inside that country, seemed to be seeking external diversion, Pakistan said, adding that the escalation of aggression on the eve of the Geneva talks raised doubts about Afghanistan's sincerity in searching for a just and comprehensive settlement. Pakistan hoped the Secretary-General would ask Afghanistan to desist from acts of aggression and provocation.

Afghanistan, in a note verbale to Pakistan of 22 August,<sup>(16)</sup> stated that no land or air attacks had been made against Pakistan. It asserted that Pakistan, in collusion with China and the United States, tried to block the progress of the Geneva talks and cover up the fact that its territory had been turned into a springboard of aggression and a training base for Afghan counter-revolutionary elements.

On 18 September,<sup>(17)</sup> Pakistan said another bombing of its territory by Afghan planes had taken place on 14 September. A further Afghan bombing reportedly took place on 27 September, killing 32 people in a populated commercial centre in Teri Mangal.<sup>(18)</sup> Afghanistan rejected the allegation in a note verbale to Pakistan of 1 October,<sup>(19)</sup> stating that imperialism, headed by the United States in pursuit of supremacy in the region, was behind Pakistan's anti-Afghan activities; if any explosions had occurred in the arms depots belonging to the Afghan counter-revolutionaries based in Teri Mangal, it was due to their internal conflicts and to Pakistan's policy of aiding those elements.

Afghanistan alleged on 8 October<sup>(20)</sup> that on 5 October Pakistani armed forces had fired on some Afghan helicopters inside its own territory in the Barikot area. Pakistan replied on 9 October<sup>(21)</sup> that the baseless charges were aimed at distracting international attention from the serious violations of its airspace and territory. Afghanistan<sup>(22)</sup> protested to Pakistan on 25 October that since 18 October the latter had daily conducted provocative operations inside Afghan territory, making use of mortars and other heavy weapons and killing a number of people; on 21 October, two Afghan helicopters in the Barikot area had been fired on from Pakistani territory. On 26 October,<sup>(23)</sup> Pakistan alleged that, on 21 October, a Pakistani civilian had been killed by bullets fired from the Afghanistan side and three Afghan jet aircraft violated Pakistan airspace and dropped a bomb. Afghanistan charged on 27 October<sup>(24)</sup> that heavy shelling on 24 October from Pakistan territory had resulted in several casualties. On 31 October,<sup>(25)</sup> Pakistan said four people had died in an Afghan bombing of 29 October, and denied, in a 29 October statement,<sup>(26)</sup> the Afghan allegation of a 24 October shelling. Afghanistan, on 3 November,<sup>(27)</sup> charged further firings on its helicopters in the Barikot area from Pakistan on 29 October. On 2 November,<sup>(28)</sup> Pakistan rejected as totally false various charges made against it in October.

Afghanistan reported that further shellings had killed a child on 11 November,<sup>(29)</sup> and caused material loss in Pishangro, Barikot and Jaji districts on 16, 17 and 18 November.<sup>(30)</sup> Rejecting those charges, Pakistan, by a letter of 27 November,<sup>(31)</sup> alleged that four Afghan aircraft had carried out a bombing raid on Pakistan territory on 26 November. Earlier, Pakistan<sup>(32)</sup> had charged that a civilian had been killed in firings from the Afghan side on 14 November, a charge rejected by Afghanistan on 26 November.<sup>(33)</sup> Afghanistan<sup>(34)</sup> alleged that two Pakistani helicopters had violated its territory on 25 November and the Pakistan military forces had fired at the Barikot contingent on 26 and 27 November.

By a letter of 4 December,<sup>(35)</sup> Pakistan alleged that six Afghan jet aircraft dropped bombs and three others also violated Pakistan's airspace on 1 December. An Afghanistan information agency dispatch of 4 December<sup>(36)</sup> reported that Pakistan had shelled Afghan territory in the Barikot and Jaji regions on 1, 2 and 3 December. The Pakistani allegations of 26 November and 1 December bombings were rejected by Afghanistan on 9 December.<sup>(37)</sup>

Pakistan reported five further incidents of airspace violations by Afghanistan on 25 and 28 November and 6 December,<sup>(38)</sup> it also rejected the Afghan charges of firing and shelling incidents of 25, 26 and 27 November and of 1, 2 and 3 December. Afghanistan alleged further shellings by Pakistan on 8 and 10 December.<sup>(39)</sup> Pakistan charged further Afghan bombings of its territory on 11 December, while rejecting allegations that it had fired on Afghanistan on 8 December.<sup>(40)</sup> Afghanistan rejected the Pakistani charges of airspace violations on 11 December;<sup>(41)</sup> and, by a Foreign Ministry statement of 22 December,<sup>(42)</sup> asserted that Pakistan's firings of 18 December at the Barikot contingent had killed one person and injured eight others; it also rejected Pakistan's charges of airspace violations on 25 and 28 November and 6 December. On 27 December,<sup>(43)</sup> Pakistan denied allegations on the 18 December incident and reported that Afghanistan had again violated its airspace on 22 and 25 December, the latter involving bombings and the killing of four civilians.

Afghanistan, in a Foreign Ministry statement of 27 December,<sup>(44)</sup> claimed that Pakistan had used long-range heavy weapons in firing at Afghanistan on 19 occasions in the preceding two months alone, while charging Afghanistan with alleged air raids over Pakistan territory. Pakistan's new series of aggressions, it asserted, were related directly to the new round of Geneva negotiations; Pakistan also wanted a pretext to acquire larger quantities of the most modern offensive and destructive weapons.

A number of other 1984 communications concerned the general situation.

On 13 March,<sup>(45)</sup> Morocco transmitted documents of the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference (Casablanca, 16-19 January), including a resolution in which the Conference reaffirmed its concern over the preparation of USSR military intervention in Afghanistan, and demanded the immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal of all foreign troops from Afghanistan. It also supported the diplomatic process initiated by the Secretary-General, and thanked Pakistan for having accepted and given protection to Afghan refugees.

On 15 March,<sup>(46)</sup> Bangladesh transmitted a resolution adopted at the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, 6-11 December 1983), by which the Ministers called for the immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal of all foreign troops from Afghanistan, and recommended that the Ministerial Committee—composed of the Conference Secretary-General and the Foreign Ministers of Guinea, Iran, Pakistan and Tunisia—continue exploring a political solution and co-operate with the United Nations Secretary-General in that regard.

The United States<sup>(47)</sup> transmitted a proclamation by its President, designating 21 March 1984 as Afghanistan Day, calling for the removal of the USSR troops from Afghanistan as a prerequisite for a negotiated political settlement based on the five resolutions adopted on the topic by the General Assembly. Afghanistan,<sup>(48)</sup> by a 22 March statement, called that gesture provocative and slanderous, and asserted that the United States was the organizer of the undeclared war against Afghanistan.

On 15 May,<sup>(49)</sup> France transmitted the text of a 14 May statement by the Foreign Ministers of the European Economic Community (EEC), in which they renewed their appeal to the USSR to contribute to the Secretary-General's efforts for a just and lasting settlement for all parties involved.

Afghanistan transmitted, on 10 August,<sup>(50)</sup> copies of documents said to reveal the nature of counter-revolutionary organizations established in Pakistan; the alleged communications written by such organizations to China, Egypt, France, Iran, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United States dealt with, among other things, military and other assistance.

The communiqué of the co-ordinating meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 4 October), transmitted by Bangladesh on 12 October,<sup>(51)</sup> noted that the number of Afghan refugees in Pakistan exceeded 3 million, and announced that the Islamic Group would submit to the General Assembly, at its 1984 session, a draft resolution originally prepared by Pakistan (see p. 227). A similar communiqué, adopted by the Foreign Ministers at the October 1983 meeting in New York, was transmitted by the Niger on 2 May 1984.<sup>(52)</sup>

The Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly at its 1984 session (New York, 1-5 October),<sup>(53)</sup> in its final communiqué, reiterated a call for a political settlement on the basis of foreign troop withdrawal; full respect for the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned status of Afghanistan; and strict observance of the principle of non-intervention and non-interference. It also reaffirmed the right of the Afghan refugees to return to their homes in safety and honour, and extended support to the efforts of the Secretary-General.

On 1 December,<sup>(54)</sup> Afghanistan's Bakhtar Information Agency said that, according to The New York Times of 28 November, the United States had decided to allocate $280 million in military aid to what Afghanistan called the Afghan counter-revolutionaries; that funding, the Agency said, was additional to the funds spent secretly by China, Israel, Saudi Arabia, the United States and others in equipping counter-revolutionary bands. The Agency further claimed that the news report also pointed to close co-operation between Pakistan and the United States in organizing, training and arming the Afghan counter-revolutionaries.

In a 21 February note verbale,<sup>(55)</sup> the United States said that chemical weapons attacks appeared to have diminished in Afghanistan during 1983; that it had not yet confirmed as valid several reports of Soviet chemical attacks in 1983; but that for 1982, on the other hand, it had strong evidence of several dozen chemical attacks in Afghanistan, resulting in over 300 chemical agent-related deaths (see also p. 62).

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a November 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(56)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly and the Security Council in September 1984 a report on activities he had undertaken regarding the Afghanistan situation.<sup>(57)</sup>

The Secretary-General stated that he had pursued his efforts towards the achievement of a political settlement, believing the principal aim of the United Nations in that context should be to end the suffering of the Afghan people. His Personal Representative, Diego Cordovez, had returned to the area from 3 to 15 April, meeting, separately in their capitals, with the Presidents of Pakistan and Afghanistan and the Foreign Minister of Iran. At Kabul and Islamabad, a number of specific steps—both substantive and procedural—were agreed upon in order to give impetus to the diplomatic process, while Iran reiterated its support for the interests of the Afghan people.

The Secretary-General said he had visited the USSR from 11 to 13 July, at which time he exchanged views on the situation with General Secretary Konstantin Chernenko and Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko; the USSR encouraged him to continue his efforts and reaffirmed its support for a negotiated political settlement.

A round of "proximity" talks, held separately through the intermediary of his Personal Representative, was convened at Geneva from 24 to 30 August, with the Foreign Ministers of Pakistan and Afghanistan attending; as in the past, Iran was kept informed.

The Secretary-General reported that a set of understandings worked out in April was aimed at solving, within the context of formulating the various instruments required for comprehensive settlement, some difficulties that had arisen the previous year; the procedure would allow all concerned more clearly to assess the nature, intent and interrelationships of the specific actions envisaged in the settlement. During the Geneva discussions, the interlocutors held a preliminary review of draft instruments and examined related questions, including form, legal status and formalities; they indicated their readiness for another round of talks in February 1985.

The Secretary-General, noting an increase in the number of allegations and counter-allegations between the parties about infiltration and other acts of interference, deplored those developments, particularly because they involved the loss of human lives.

In explanation of vote, Afghanistan, as in the past, objected to including the so-called question of Afghanistan in the Assembly's agenda, and called the draft resolution a gross violation of the Charter of the United Nations and flagrant interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs, with the sponsors advising the Afghan people, who had already chosen their path, as to the kind of social, economic and political systems it should adopt. The number of so-called refugees had been inflated for dramatic effect and for increased income, it said, adding that it had issued decrees on the general amnesty for all Afghans temporarily living abroad. It asserted that despite deliberate obstacles by Pakistan, such as preventing dissemination of those decrees and other declarations among the Afghans living in that country, many thousands of Afghans had already returned. The limited USSR contingents in Afghanistan were there at the request of the Government, solely to repel armed aggression from outside. The reason for which those contingents had been invited not only persisted but, as a result of the steady and rapid escalation of the undeclared war, lacked any realistic hope for reversal. The resolution, Afghanistan said, would in no way be binding on it, and the harmful exercise in the Assembly must be abandoned to ensure the success of direct negotiations such as it had proposed in May 1980<sup>(58)</sup> and August 1981.<sup>(59)</sup>

Cuba added that the concern expressed over Afghanistan reflected the United States desire to increase tension in the region, while distracting attention from aggressive acts of imperialism elsewhere.

Iran condemned as invalid an invitation extended, by what it called the surrogate régime in Afghanistan, to outside forces to intervene in its internal affairs, adding that those who could not rule a country without the presence of foreign troops could not have any claim to legitimacy. It asserted that problems such as the military occupation of a sovereign State, the displacement of more than 4 million people and the imposition of an unwanted Government could not be settled around negotiating tables without the presence of the true representatives of the people concerned.

Encouraged by an indication, in the Secretary-General's 1984 report, of a receptive attitude by the parties concerned for a negotiated solution, Malta said the resolution should be accepted as a spur to further efforts and an expression of the international concern. Malawi called for making the best use of the Secretary-General's good offices and promoting dialogue and diplomatic contacts. Also supporting the Secretary-General's efforts as the sole active negotiating machinery likely to lead to a political settlement, Bolivia stated that, as regards paragraph 2, it did not want to prejudice the legitimacy of the Afghan Government or question the latter's efforts to introduce social reforms and development programmes. Belgium said the international community could not remain indifferent to the sufferings of the Afghan people and it should keep up the pressure to bring about a political solution; the USSR must respond to the demand of the majority of the Member States. Mexico said a negotiated political settlement would be possible only through foreign troop withdrawal and complete cessation of all acts of foreign interference.

Other action. The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution of 29 February 1984 on the right of peoples to self-determination as it applied to Afghanistan, called for a political settlement of the Afghanistan situation, affirmed the Afghan refugees' right to return home and appealed for humanitarian relief assistance to be extended to them, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII, under "Self-determination of peoples").

On the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council, on 24 May, requested the Commission Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the human rights situation in Afghanistan, with a view to proposing measures for the protection of human rights of all residents of the country before, during and after the withdrawal of all foreign forces (resolution 1984/37).

Iran-Iraq armed conflict

In the continuing hostilities between Iran and Iraq, the Secretary-General proposed in February 1984 to send a mission to examine the damage allegedly inflicted on civilian targets, while also ascertaining the authoritative position of the parties on various issues involved in the conflict. Although both parties initially accepted the proposal, Iran cited new developments in late February and asked that political discussions be excluded from the mission's mandate. The mission did not materialize.

Moved by humanitarian concerns over the alleged use of chemical weapons in the conflict, the Secretary-General dispatched four specialists to Iran in March. Their report—and conclusion that certain such weapons had been used—was submitted both to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Attacks on merchant ships in the Gulf were brought to the attention of the Security Council, which, on 1 June, condemned such attacks and called on all States to respect the right of free navigation (resolution 552(1984)).

Later that month, the Secretary-General announced that Iran and Iraq had accepted his appeal to end military attacks on purely civilian population centres, and that two United Nations teams had been set up, at Baghdad and Teheran, for compliance verification.

In the General Assembly, a debate on a draft resolution proposed by Iran on preventing further use of chemical weapons was adjourned by a vote in the First Committee. The Assembly also deferred consideration of the conflict to its resumed session at a later date.

Communications (January-March). A number of communications in January and early February 1984 contained charges by both Iran and Iraq of attacks on civilian targets.

Iraq alleged such attacks by Iran between 20 December 1983 and 2 January 1984<sup>(1)</sup> and shelling of civilian targets between 4 and 22 January;<sup>(2)</sup> 30 photographs were submitted on 26 January,<sup>(3)</sup> allegedly depicting incidents of Iranian bombardment of various Iraqi civilian targets on 18 January. On 7 February,<sup>(4)</sup> Iraq submitted details of alleged Iranian attacks on civilian targets between 1 January and 6 February.

On 6 January,<sup>(5)</sup> and again on 4 February,<sup>(6)</sup> Iran invited the Secretary-General to send a fact-finding mission to both countries to update a similar mission's 1983 report<sup>(7)</sup> on the matter. In a statement transmitted on 4 February,<sup>(6)</sup> Iran asserted that the Secretary-General's 1983 report had confirmed that it had never attacked civilian targets. In a statement transmitted on 9 February,<sup>(8)</sup> Iran alleged that Iraqi attacks—involving aerial bombardments, long-range missiles and chemical weapons—on Iran's civilian and residential areas had killed some 4,600 civilians and wounded more than 22,000 in the past 40 months. Governors of three provinces in Iran, in a statement transmitted on 5 February,<sup>(9)</sup> said some 1,300 villages in those provinces had been totally destroyed by Iraq. Iran also submitted, by a note verbale of 10 January,<sup>(10)</sup> a telegram sent to the Red Crescent of Iran and the International Red Cross at Teheran by the Committee for Iraqi Refugees on alleged abuse committed by Iraq against its Kurdish population.

Iraq<sup>(11)</sup> stated on 2 February that it would strike, in self-defence against Iran's acts of aggression, selected targets in seven named towns in Iran after 6 February and called on Iranian citizens to keep away from those areas, adding on 4 February four others to be attacked after 8 February. Iran reported on those threats on 3<sup>(12)</sup> and 5 February;<sup>(13)</sup> its Foreign Minister, in a statement transmitted on 9 February,<sup>(8)</sup> said it would respond to the threats by retaliating against Iraqi industrial targets, and that the responsibility for the consequences rested with Iran and with international organizations if they failed to respond in time.

On 10 February, the Secretary-General addressed similar letters to Iran<sup>(14)</sup> and Iraq,<sup>(15)</sup> expressing concern over the grievous consequences of the conflict and a threat of escalation of the level of hostilities. In view, particularly, of the repeated allegations made by both sides of attacks on civilian targets, the Secretary-General proposed to send a mission to ascertain the facts, in order to update the previous report, and the authoritative positions of both Governments regarding other questions related to the conflict; once there was an understanding between the parties on the scope of its function, the mission could depart to the area on very short notice.

Iraq replied to the Secretary-General on 13 February,<sup>(16)</sup> reiterating support for a peaceful settlement of the conflict through implementation of Security Council resolutions, but doubting the usefulness of updating information when Iran persisted in denying—but continued almost daily—its attacks on civilian targets in Iraq and escalating the war. Iraq strongly encouraged, but could not deal with, the Secretary-General's initiative until serious assurances were given by Iran of its desire to discuss a seven-point paper covering elements of the conflict, which the Secretary-General had presented on 29 September 1983 to Iraq's Foreign Minister in the presence of Olof Palme, the Secretary-General's Special Representative on the question. Since June 1983, Iraq had proposed a special agreement, aimed at avoiding strikes against civilian targets, to be concluded with Iran under United Nations supervision; it hoped that international efforts, including those of the Secretary-General, would focus on implementing all the provisions of the October 1983 Security Council resolution.<sup>(17)</sup> Iraq also recalled its previous request that the Secretary-General dispatch a mission to investigate the treatment of prisoners of war (POWs), and added that it, as the victim of aggression, had to resort to all means to defend its security and interests.

Replying to the Secretary-General on 14 February,<sup>(18)</sup> Iran stated that the October 1983 Security Council resolution had encouraged Iraq to open new avenues of crime and to resort to chemical-weapons use; Iran accepted no imperialist-manipulated United Nations resolution and no concessionary mediations or negotiations. Iran welcomed the proposed fact-finding mission headed by a senior aide to the Secretary-General, provided the representative's mandate remained restricted to ascertaining the position of the Governments and looking into the remaining evidence of chemical weapons used by the Iraqi army.

On 16 February,<sup>(19)</sup> Iran stated that recent Iraqi attacks on innocent civilians and the callousness of the international body towards continued violation of international humanitarian law left Iran with no choice but to take appropriate action to protect its people from missile attacks and air bombardments. In view of those new developments, Iran requested that political discussion be excluded from the mandate of the Secretary-General's mission, adding that it would welcome a fact-finding mission for the specific purpose of updating a previous report and examining the chemical-weapons use by Iraq.

On 18 February,<sup>(20)</sup> Iraq informed the Secretary-General that it welcomed the dispatch of the proposed mission for the two purposes mentioned in a 17 February letter by the Secretary-General—to ascertain the position of the respective Governments on matters relating to the conflict, and to visit areas in the two countries subjected to military attacks, with a view to updating the report of the 1983 mission.<sup>(7)</sup> Iraq agreed to the Secretary-General's suggestions regarding the mission's composition and the course of its visit to Iraq, and renewed its proposal for another mission to investigate the treatment of POWs in both Iran and Iraq.

In the mean time, both sides continued to communicate allegations of attacks on civilian targets. Iraq charged such attacks had occurred from 7 to 11 February,<sup>(21)</sup> and on 12,<sup>(22)</sup> 13,<sup>(23)</sup> 13 and 14,<sup>(24)</sup> 15<sup>(25)</sup> and 17 February.<sup>(26)</sup> Iran charged such attacks on 11, 13 and 14 February,<sup>(27)</sup> claiming that the callousness of the Security Council had forced it to take retaliatory measures in order to protect its people.

On 21 February,<sup>(28)</sup> Iraq said it had declared, on 18 February, its willingness to avoid any shelling of towns, villages or civilians, provided such commitment was subject to effective international supervision. Alleging that Iran had hit civilian targets in Iraq for five days following Iraq's 14 February declaration on a week-long non-shelling of selected targets in certain Iranian towns, Iraq requested the Secretary-General to develop mechanisms of verification and international supervision, under either the United Nations, which Iraq preferred, or any other mutually acceptable body. In another letter dated 21 February,<sup>(29)</sup> Iraq reiterated its call for such international supervision, and also pointed out that Iran had announced on 18 February that it would stop attacking civilian targets.

Iraq alleged continued shelling of civilian targets by Iran and reported such attacks on 20<sup>(30)</sup> and 21 February.<sup>(31)</sup> It further reported on 23 February<sup>(32)</sup> that, despite its 14 and 18 February announcements (see above), Iran had shelled Iraqi towns from 14 to 18 and from 19 to 23 February, with the latter coinciding with a large-scale Iranian offensive of 22/23 February; those acts proved that Iran's declarations could not be trusted and that effective international supervision was needed to prevent attacks on civilian targets. That offensive was described in a 23 February letter from Iraq,<sup>(33)</sup> which also reported that large-scale battles remained in progress on its eastern borders.

On 22 February,<sup>(34)</sup> Iran rejected the previous day's allegations of attacks on civilian targets and said Iraq had announced retaliatory attacks on Iranian cities. Iran alleged that Iraqi missile attacks on three civilian targets on 24 February<sup>(35)</sup> had killed 95 persons and injured more than 900; it also alleged that Iraq's missile attacks and aerial bombardment of 13 cities since 25 February had killed 246 and injured more than 1,500.<sup>(36)</sup> Iraq said Iran had carried out air raids on civilian areas on 24, 25 and 26 February.<sup>(37)</sup> On 5 March,<sup>(38)</sup> Iraq charged further Iranian attacks on civilian targets from 26 February through 5 March, stating also that it was Iran which blocked the Secretary-General's effort to send a mission to the two countries. On 22 February,<sup>(39)</sup> Iraq submitted information regarding what was termed Iranian aggression within the Iraqi frontier in Penjween region on 19/20 October 1983, in which 26,014 Iranians reportedly had been killed.

A number of other communications alleged the use of chemical weapons. On 29 February,<sup>(40)</sup> Iran charged that Iraq had resorted again to the use of chemical bombs; it had forwarded the information to ICRC. It also alleged that Iraq's largest chemical bombardment to date in the conflict had taken place on 28 February,<sup>(41)</sup> with symptoms clearly indicating use of mustard nitrogen gas; over 700 Iranian combatants in the Khaybar operational theatre were reportedly injured. Other chemical bombings were said to have taken place in the Hur-al-Hoveizeh area in the previous two days, with casualties reported at 400. By a letter of 5 March,<sup>(42)</sup> Iraq said its position regarding false Iranian allegations had remained unchanged since its letter of 29 November 1983 on the question,<sup>(43)</sup> and drew attention to what it said was a 27 February press release by the Permanent Mission of Iran, stating, among other things, that the new massive offensive, code-named "Khaybar", had led the Iranian troops to penetrate 40 kilometres deep inside Iraqi territory.

Iran, on 8 March,<sup>(44)</sup> said it was incumbent on the Secretary-General to inform the United Nations of the developments, since Iran had repeatedly requested an investigation of Iraq's violations of international humanitarian laws, and particularly use of internationally prohibited chemical weapons. Iran made further charges of Iraqi use of chemical weapons on 9 March in the Hur-al-Hoveizeh region.<sup>(45)</sup> On 12 March,<sup>(46)</sup> Iraq responded to an ICRC press release—on its appeals over the wounded in the Iran-Iraq conflict—stating that it questioned the stand ICRC had taken on the issue, that those responsible in Iraq had confirmed the non-use of chemical weapons in the conflict, and that it was prepared to co-operate with any neutral authorities in investigating the allegation. Iran submitted on 13

March<sup>(47)</sup> a message from the head of its environmental protection organization, asserting that the United Nations Environment Programme, among others, should condemn Iraq's chemical-weapons use. It alleged that Iraq had used a nerve agent in three attacks against Iranian military personnel in the western Gofier region on 17 March.<sup>(48)</sup> Two victims of what was described as Iraqi chemical warfare were reported by Iran<sup>(49)</sup> to have died at Stockholm, Sweden, in early March.

Other communications during the period covered more general matters. On 29 February,<sup>(50)</sup> Iran said the United States was expanding its naval presence in the Persian Gulf and the Oman Sea, and had interfered with the movement of the Iranian air force and navy in Iranian territorial waters; charging that the activities of the United States were threatening the peace and security of the airspace and sea lanes of the region, Iran said it would exercise its rights to protect its national interests within its territorial waters. Afghanistan<sup>(51)</sup> transmitted a Foreign Ministry statement of 11 March, asserting that United States patrol operations in the Gulf had violated the norms of international law, harmed the interests of States using the air and shipping routes in that region, and served as a pretext for armed intervention in the Iran-Iraq war with a view to occupying oil resources there.

By a 9 March letter,<sup>(52)</sup> Iraq said that, in contrast to its readiness to comply with the United Nations resolutions and work towards a peaceful settlement of the conflict, Iran rejected them outright and continued the war of aggression; Iraq disapproved the United Nations silence in the face of established facts as not serving the Organization's effectiveness in advancing peace, and asked the Secretary-General to declare unequivocally his position on Iran's continued aggression and non-compliance with the United Nations resolutions, the Charter, and humanitarian laws concerning the treatment of POWs. A 24 February statement by the Iranian President, said to prove Iran's ambitions for Iraq's territory and resources, was also submitted.<sup>(53)</sup>

By a declaration of 28 February,<sup>(54)</sup> EEC appealed to Iran and Iraq to comply with Security Council resolutions and to observe international rules and conventions concerning the protection of the civilian population and the treatment of POWs; it also requested the Secretary-General to resume his mission in search of a peaceful, just and lasting solution to the conflict. On 9 March,<sup>(55)</sup> King Hassan II of Morocco, as President of the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference, appealed to the parties to the conflict to bring about an immediate end to all hostilities and resume talks in the framework of the Islamic Peace Committee, adding that Morocco would welcome them on its soil. Morocco transmitted, on 13 March,<sup>(56)</sup> a resolution adopted at the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference (Casablanca, 16-19 January), requesting the parties to the conflict to suspend all war operations immediately and negotiate for a peaceful settlement of the dispute. Iraq transmitted, on 14 March,<sup>(57)</sup> a resolution adopted that day by the Council of the League of Arab States, at a ministerial-level emergency session at Baghdad (13 and 14 March). By that resolution—to which Democratic Yemen expressed reservations in part, and Algeria, in its entirety—the Council condemned Iran for its continued aggression against Iraq and its non-responsiveness to peace initiatives, reaffirmed solidarity with Iraq in its legitimate defence, and established a committee, consisting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Morocco and Saudi Arabia and the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, to take actions and make international contacts aimed at ending the war and maintaining security in the region. A resolution of the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 6-11 December 1983), relating to POWs in the conflict and urging co-operation with ICRC on the matter, was transmitted by Bangladesh on 15 March.<sup>(58)</sup>

Specialists' report on alleged chemical-weapons use

In March 1984, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report<sup>(59)</sup> of specialists he had appointed to investigate, out of humanitarian concern, allegations made by Iran concerning the use of chemical weapons by Iraq against Iran. The report was subsequently circulated also in the General Assembly by an April note of the Secretary-General,<sup>(60)</sup> in accordance with Iran's request of 26 April.<sup>(61)</sup>

The four specialists—from Australia, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland—made a fact-finding visit to Iran from 13 to 19 March and submitted a joint report to the Secretary-General on 21 March. In carrying out their task, they adopted several approaches, including interviews with government officials, visits to the war zone to examine evidence and to collect samples for examination in specialized laboratories located in Europe, and clinical examinations of patients allegedly exposed to a toxic-agent attack. In their report, the specialists elaborated on the munitions, as well as chemical and medical aspects of the problem. The results of the laboratory analyses and clinical examinations were reported in a number of appendices.

The specialists unanimously concluded that chemical weapons in the form of aerial bombs had been used in the areas they inspected in Iran, and that the types of chemical agents used were bis-(2-chlorethyl)-sulfide, also known as mustard gas, and ethyl N, N-dimethylphosphoroamidocyanide, a nerve agent known as Tabun. They added that the extent to which those chemical agents had been used could not be determined within the time and resources available to them.

By a letter dated 27 March,<sup>(62)</sup> Iraq said that it had no comment on the report, that it had not used such weapons, and that the possibility could not be ruled out of Iran's fabricating circumstances aimed at diverting attention from the need to halt the war. The United Nations Secretariat, in complying for a second time with Iran's request on minor aspects of the conflict—the first being the investigation of bombing of civilian targets in 1983<sup>(7)</sup>—had disregarded Iraq's repeated request for a mission to investigate treatment of POWs in the two countries and allowed Iran to exploit the Secretary-General's role for propaganda purposes. Iraq hoped the United Nations and the Secretary-General would give priority to ending the conflict, and reiterated that it was Iran which had so far refused to co-operate in such efforts.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the 10 EEC States members, in a 27 March statement,<sup>(63)</sup> expressed distress at, and condemned, the alleged use of chemical weapons in the conflict, hoped that each of the parties would agree to comply with Security Council resolution 598, and expressed their readiness to support the Secretary-General in restoring peace.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (March)

The Security Council met on 30 March to consider the situation between Iran and Iraq, and the President, on behalf of Council members, made the statement below:<sup>(64)</sup>

Meeting number. SC 2524.

"The members of the Security Council, having considered again the question entitled 'The situation between Iran and Iraq', and greatly concerned about the conflict which endangers international peace and security in the region, have taken note of the report of the specialists<sup>(59)</sup> appointed by the Secretary-General to investigate allegations by the Islamic Republic of Iran concerning the use of chemical weapons.

"They note with particular concern the unanimous conclusions of the specialists that chemical weapons have been used. Furthermore, they express their grave concern about all reported violations in the conflict of the rules of international law and of the principles and rules of international conduct accepted by the world community to prevent or alleviate the human suffering of warfare and affirm strongly the conclusion of the Secretary-General that these humanitarian concerns can only be fully satisfied by putting an end to the tragic conflict that continues to deplete the precious human resources of Iran and Iraq.

"The members of the Council:

"—strongly condemn the use of chemical weapons reported by the mission of specialists;

"—reaffirm the need to abide strictly by the provisions of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 for the prohibition of the use in war of asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases and of bacteriological methods of warfare;

"—call on the States concerned scrupulously to adhere to the obligations flowing from their accession to the Geneva Protocol of 1925;

"—condemn all violations of international humanitarian law and urge both parties to observe the generally recognized principles and rules of international humanitarian law which are applicable to armed conflicts and their obligations under international conventions designed to prevent or alleviate the human suffering of warfare;

"—recall relevant resolutions of the Security Council, renew urgently their calls for the strict observance of a cease-fire and for a peaceful solution of the conflict and call upon all Governments concerned to cooperate fully with the Council in its efforts to bring about conditions leading to a peaceful settlement of the conflict in conformity with the principles of justice and international law;

"—appreciate the mediation efforts of the Secretary-General and request him to continue his efforts with the parties concerned, with a view to achieving a comprehensive, just and honourable settlement acceptable to both sides; and

"—decide to keep the situation between Iran and Iraq under close review."

Communications (April/May). Communications in April/May concerned the protection of victims in international armed conflicts, allegations of possible Israeli attacks against Iraq, further charges of attacks on civilian targets and of chemical-weapons use, allegations of killing of prisoners and security in the Gulf region.

On 2 April,<sup>(65)</sup> Iran quoted article 35 of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, relating, among other things, to the prohibition of the use of such methods or means of warfare intended or likely to cause severe damage to the natural environment. In December 1983, Iraq had challenged the existence of a convention on the safety of the environment.<sup>(66)</sup>

Iraq on 10 April<sup>(67)</sup> said there was an intensive campaign against Iraq in Western news media, similar to that preceding the 1981 Israeli aggression against Iraq's nuclear installations.<sup>(68)</sup> Asserting that Israel supplied the Iranian régime with its weapons and strove to prolong and exploit the war, it called on the Security Council to deter Israel from intensifying tension.

Iraq submitted details of alleged Iranian shelling of civilian areas inside Iraq's territory from 11 to 30 March,<sup>(69)</sup> 1 to 17 April,<sup>(70)</sup> 18 to 24 April<sup>(71)</sup> and 29 April to 15 May;<sup>(72)</sup> it reiterated its call for effective international supervision to protect the civilian areas from attack, adding that the United Nations was the only body capable of ensuring such arrangements. Iran charged Iraqi attacks on civilian targets on 24 and 25 April,<sup>(73)</sup> 7 May<sup>(74)</sup> and 15 May.<sup>(75)</sup>

A listing, accompanied by photographs and a map, relating to the alleged Iraqi use of chemical weapons against Iran between 1980 and 5 January 1984 was submitted by Iran,<sup>(76)</sup> which renewed charges of such use on four occasions in March.<sup>(77)</sup> By a letter of 10 May,<sup>(78)</sup> Iran transmitted a 30 April letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, thanking the Secretary-General for having dispatched a mission to investigate chemical-weapons use and asserting that the Security Council had not taken action to stop Iraq from further use of such weapons; it demanded that specific steps be taken to stop deliveries and sale of such weapons to Iraq.

On 24 May,<sup>(79)</sup> Iraq charged that Iran had executed, on 15 March, 50 Iraqi soldiers taken prisoner; the United Nations, it added, should compel the Iranian authorities to abide by international obligations and end its crimes against Iraqi POWs.

Iraq wrote on 11 May<sup>(80)</sup> that Iraq in recent months had resorted to attacking vessels belonging to other countries in order to internationalize the war, and that the United Nations should take immediate measures to contain that new development. On 25 May,<sup>(81)</sup> Iran said that, while it had allocated considerable resources and manpower to guarantee the freedom and security of navigation in the Persian Gulf and the flow of oil exports from the region, allegations of its having hit 2 or 3 vessels had brought criticism against it, when Iraq had hit 71. Some States in the area and beyond provided financial and material support and encouraged Iraq to threaten commercial shipping in the Gulf; Iran would not permit the Gulf to be closed to it and to be used by others against it. It warned the Security Council against becoming a party to the ongoing conspiracy.

Iraq replied on 27 May<sup>(82)</sup> that recent developments in the Arabian Gulf region were occasioned not by any new Iraqi movements but primarily by blatant and unjustified Iranian aggression against Kuwaiti and Saudi Arabian vessels far from the war-operations zone. While Iraq had declared a strictly delimited zone of military operations and had warned of the consequences of dispatching vessels there, Iran had decided to strike at random against vessels in neutral waters and neither approaching nor leaving Iraqi ports. Iraq struck against vessels entering or leaving Iranian ports and tightened its blockade of Iranian ports as a preventive and defensive measure, since Iran had prevented free navigation in Iraqi territorial waters and Iraqi ports.

Norway, on 22 May,<sup>(83)</sup> expressed regret that ships had been attacked in international waters outside the declared war zone, and stated that free and safe navigation should be secured in the area for international shipping. Democratic Yemen, in a 30 May statement,<sup>(84)</sup> expressed concern at the developments in the Gulf and accused the United States of using them as a pretext for adding a large number of warships and aircraft-carriers to its fleet with a view to military intervention aimed at destabilizing the countries of the Gulf region.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 21 May, Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates<sup>(85)</sup> requested that the Security Council meet urgently to consider what they called the Iranian aggressions on the freedom of navigation to and from the ports of their countries.

Accordingly, the Council convened on 25 May. Bahrain, Djibouti, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Liberia, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Panama, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen were invited, at their request, to participate without the right to vote. The Secretary-General of the League of Arab States was invited to participate, at Kuwait's request,<sup>(86)</sup> under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.<sup>a</sup>

On 1 June, following consideration of the matter at five meetings, the Council adopted resolution 552(1984).

Security Council resolution 552(1984)

1 June 1984 Meeting 2546 13-0-2

8-nation draft (S/16594).

Sponsors: Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates.

Meeting numbers: SC 2541-2543, 2545, 2546.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, Egypt, France, India, Malta, Netherlands, Pakistan, Peru, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Upper Volta.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Nicaragua, Zimbabwe.

Explaining its vote, India said the Council should focus on defusing tensions and preventing a widening of the conflict between Iran and Iraq and the possible intervention of outside Powers. It felt that the draft, while not explicit enough, amounted to an unequivocal and categorical affirmation of the principle of freedom of navigation. The language of paragraphs 3 and 4, India added, should not be interpreted as condoning other attacks against commercial shipping in the region; on the whole, the draft could have dealt also with other aspects aimed at ending the conflict. Malta and the Upper Volta said the issue of freedom of commercial navigation could be kept separate from the main collective efforts for an early cessation of hostilities under the Council's auspices with simultaneous mediation to secure a just and honourable peace; Malta added that the restrictive formulations in paragraphs 2 through 4 could not be interpreted to derogate from the universally accepted norms of international law. The Upper Volta said its positive vote should not be interpreted as indicating a stand on the conflict. China also stated it took a strictly neutral position with regard to the conflict, and its positive vote was consistent with the principle that the right to freedom of navigation on the high seas and in international sea lanes should be guaranteed, and that ships of non-belligerent parties must not come under attack. Egypt voted in favour in the hope that the resolution would contribute to ending the escalation of the conflict; it envisaged continuous efforts, both within and outside the United Nations, to create conditions conducive to a ceasefire in an impartial context. Pakistan supported as legitimate the concerns of the text's sponsors, and called also for a speedy negotiated settlement of the conflict. The Netherlands, while welcoming the text's call for respect for the territorial integrity of the littoral States not party to the conflict, felt the Council could have spoken more clearly on the need to end all hostilities in the Gulf; the right of free navigation, in paragraph 1, should not be interpreted selectively.

Zimbabwe said the Council should have appealed to both parties to end the war and to respect the right of free navigation and commerce in international waters; it abstained because it felt the text had failed to take an even-handed approach to the wider issue of the war. Nicaragua regretted that the Council had not fully reiterated the principles of free navigation and commerce and free transit and safety on the seas for all countries and in all situations; further the text should have reiterated the respect for the territorial integrity of all States, so as to prevent foreign Powers from intervening directly in Iran or Iraq.

In the Council debate, Kuwait said the question of Iran's attacks on its tankers had been taken to the Gulf Co-operation Council and to the League of Arab States, before being brought to the Security Council. Iran's aggressive behaviour, it said, was aimed, among other things, at inducing certain Powers with known objectives and interests to become parties to the dispute. The countries of the Gulf Co-operation Council, in bringing the case to the Security Council, were trying to avert complications that could lead to a direct confrontation between several Powers at the expense of the independence and the interests of the peoples in the Gulf region; unrest in the region, including a breach of the freedom of navigation, could have global implications. Similar remarks were made by Bahrain, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Saudi Arabia called the attacks calculated and intentional, and rejected what it said was Iran's policy to attack a third party as a retaliation for Iraq's attacks on Iranian targets.

The United States said the acceleration of attacks against shipping in the Gulf threatened not only the safety of the non-belligerent States in the region but the world economic situation as well. The Netherlands said the matter before the Council affected the vital interests not only of the Gulf littoral States but of the whole world; in the past three years more than 60 ships—two thirds of which were commercial vessels from nations not involved in the war—had been attacked in the Gulf.

France asserted that at issue were two different matters—the Iran-Iraq conflict and unwarranted violation of the legitimate rights and interests of third States. Pakistan said, as did many other speakers, that the most recent attacks on Kuwaiti and Saudi ships represented a new dimension in the escalating conflict, threatening to disrupt the global economy and bringing about direct super-Power involvement in a conflict hitherto confined to the region. Egypt also feared that the prolongation of the conflict could destabilize the region and invite foreign intervention. The USSR said the countries in the region were threatened by the United States attempt to exploit the situation in order to impose upon them diktat and hegemony in the guise of military co-operation; strict observance of the principle of freedom of navigation was in the interests of all States. The United Kingdom said the attacks complained of were in clear breach of international law, and added that the Gulf should be insulated from the Iran-Iraq conflict and that the principle of freedom of navigation should be reasserted.

Of non-Council members participating in the debate, Oman saw no justification for Iran's attacks on vessels proceeding to and from the ports of States not parties to the conflict, just because Iraq had blockaded Iranian ports and attacked vessels sailing to and from them. Yemen said the Iranian aggression against the tankers should be condemned; the war had extended beyond the borders of Iran and Iraq because the Council had failed to assume its responsibilities. Bahrain and Djibouti feared Iran's acts would lead to the internationalization of the conflict. Similar views were expressed by Tunisia, which stated that the Council should work for a solution assuring dignity and honour for both belligerents. Jordan said Iran's current military actions undermined the neutrality of the Gulf and appeared aimed at stifling the Gulf States economically with the ultimate end of destabilizing them. Senegal said the Council should uphold the freedom of navigation, call for the cessation of hostilities and the continuation of mediation efforts, and request the belligerents to respect the territorial integrity of the other coastal States. Ecuador spoke in similar vein. Morocco, the Sudan and Tunisia added that the unwarranted aggression destabilized the international economy and obstructed the efforts of the developing countries to achieve progress and development. Somalia said the widening of the conflict in a region of crucial importance for world peace and economic stability carried serious consequences such as the danger of great-Power confrontation and intervention. Mauritania also felt it was imperative to discourage the repetition of hostile acts in a region of vital strategic importance. The United Arab Emirates added that the Council should, therefore, act decisively to avoid further deterioration of the situation. Jordan, as well as the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, shared those views. Panama expressed indignation over the fact that ships flying its flag had been victims, since May 1981, of armed attacks in the Persian Gulf region, and appealed to the parties to the conflict to refrain from further such acts. Liberia expressed similar views. Japan stressed the importance of preventing the conflict from spreading to other parts of the region and beyond, and also appealed to both parties to respect the right of safe navigation in the Gulf, as did the Federal Republic of Germany and Turkey.

Communications (June-December). On 6 June,<sup>(87)</sup> Iran protested that Security Council resolution 552(1984) had given Iraq a licence for further aggression. It alleged that Iraq's 5 June bombing of civilian targets in Baneh had, as at the latest count, killed 400 civilians and injured over 200; in view of the magnitude of the crime, 6 June was declared a national day of mourning. Iran warned that the Council, if it failed to take immediate action, must again share responsibility for the crimes Iraq perpetrated under its patronage.

Iraq submitted on 6 June<sup>(88)</sup> details of alleged Iranian attacks on civilian targets between 16 and 30 May, again urging the Secretary-General to develop international supervision to protect civilian areas from shelling. Iraq reported on 7 June<sup>(89)</sup> that, in reply to an Iranian statement of 5 June threatening an air and ground attack against 11 named Iraqi towns, it had declared its intention to reciprocate against 15 named Iranian towns. Subsequently, Iraq<sup>(90)</sup> reported Iranian attacks on the named towns and on others, as did Iran<sup>(91)</sup> in regard to Iraqi attacks.

On 9 June,<sup>(92)</sup> the Secretary-General expressed to the Presidents of Iran and Iraq profound distress over the heavy civilian casualties caused by the 5 June aerial attack on Baneh, as had been confirmed by ICRC, and the subsequent retaliatory and counter-retaliatory attacks on towns in both countries. He called on both Governments to make a solemn commitment to him to end, and in the future refrain from initiating, deliberate military attacks on purely civilian population centres. He appealed for responses by 1200 hours GMT on 11 June, with the declarations to be made effective at 0001 hours GMT on 12 June; he added that, once such declarations were received, he was prepared, if necessary, to initiate steps to introduce verification measures.

Iran and Iraq responded on 10 June. Iran<sup>(93)</sup> said it had had to retaliate only as a last resort in the last few months; ICRC had confirmed that recent Iranian retaliatory attacks began only after the 5 June attack on Baneh. Similarly, the tension in the Persian Gulf was heightened when the international forums reacted irresponsibly to repeated Iraqi aggressions on neutral vessels. To show its good faith, Iran responded positively to the Secretary-General's proposal, conditional on the total ending of Iraqi bombardment of Iranian cities. The Secretary-General's proposal would be useful only when it was adequately sanctioned by measures to identify violations through immediate dispatch of missions.

Iraq<sup>(94)</sup> said Iran had persistently denied having bombed Iraq's frontier towns and other civilian targets, even after verification by a United Nations mission. Iraq on 5 June had bombed not the civilian targets in Baneh, but a camp where a large body of Iranian forces had been concentrated in preparation for further aggression. It accepted the Secretary-General's proposal, on condition that Iran was also committed, that effective arrangements would be made for supervising the implementation of the commitments, and that other measures would also be taken, such as agreements between the parties not to place military concentrations in or near towns so as to prevent intermingling during military operations.

The Secretary-General, in similar letters of 11 June to Iran<sup>(95)</sup> and Iraq,<sup>(96)</sup> acknowledged with appreciation acceptance of his proposal, and informed them that he had instructed Diego Cordovez, Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, to contact their Permanent Representatives regarding verification measures.

On 12<sup>(97)</sup> and 15 June,<sup>(98)</sup> Iraq alleged attacks by Iran on several Iraqi civilian centres on 10 and 11 June, while Iran<sup>(99)</sup> reported similar attacks by Iraq on 11 June. On 13 June,<sup>(100)</sup> Iraq charged that Iran was continuing to shell towns, and stated that it was important to take effective measures to monitor compliance with the undertaking proposed by the Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council on 14 June<sup>(101)</sup> that understandings had been reached with Iran and Iraq regarding compliance verification and that he intended, as an immediate step, to set up simultaneously, as at 15 June, two teams, each consisting of three military officers drawn from the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization and one senior Secretariat official. Each inspection team would be ready to proceed to the respective country as soon as so requested by its Government and report on compliance to the Secretary-General, who, in turn, would keep the Council informed of the findings as required and in a timely manner. The Council President informed the Secretary-General the following day<sup>(102)</sup> that the Council members, with whom he had discussed the matter, agreed to the proposed measures.

On 14 June,<sup>(103)</sup> Iran said that Iraq's making its commitment contingent on residential areas not being areas of military concentration was an excuse to renew attacks on Iranian civilian centres; it was, therefore, incumbent on the United Nations to commit Iraq to unconditional implementation of the Secretary-General's humanitarian appeal. His appeal would succeed provided reports on possible violations did not meet the same destiny as the two earlier reports on investigations of attacks on civilian areas and use of chemical weapons.

Iraq<sup>(104)</sup> alleged Iranian shelling of civilian centres on 16 June in violation of the agreement, requested speedy dispatch of the verification team and warned that continued Iranian violation would force it to respond in the same way. On 19 June,<sup>(105)</sup> Iran alleged Iraqi shellings of civilian targets on 14 and 17 June. Iraq alleged on 21 June<sup>(106)</sup> that Iran had violated the agreement three times in less than 10 days, with the latest attacks on civilian targets taking place on 20 June; it also reported that a United Nations observer team was already in Iraq, but that Iran had refused to receive such a team because it intended to use the frontier for launching attacks. On 27 June,<sup>(107)</sup> Iraq submitted details of what was said to be an assemblage of numerous military units in Iranian cities, reiterating that Iran used civilian population centres for military purposes. Iran submitted, on 28 June,<sup>(108)</sup> a list of 11 incidents, between 14 and 26 June, of alleged Iraqi attacks on civilian targets.

By a note verbale of 26 June,<sup>(109)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the States parties to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 of the commitments made by Iran and Iraq to end deliberate attacks on civilian areas. At the same time, he expressed his continuing concern that serious infringements of the terms of the Conventions could bring into discredit those rules of law and universal principles relating to the treatment of POWs, and urged the States parties to give serious attention to the call by ICRC to serve as Protecting Powers. He hoped Governments would renew their determination to ensure respect for the Conventions as indispensable instruments in mitigating the effects of war.

On 29 June,<sup>(110)</sup> the Secretary-General addressed a message to the Presidents of Iran and Iraq, expressing concern over allegations that civilian population centres were being used for concentration of military forces; such actions, if true, violated the spirit of his appeal and basic standards of warfare. Deploring the use of chemical weapons, as substantiated by the specialists' mission in March (see p. 232), and expressing concern over alarming indications of the recurrent use of such weapons, the Secretary-General called on both Governments, in order to alleviate the inhumanity of warfare, to declare to him within three days that each undertook a solemn commitment not to use chemical weapons.

Iran had, on 28 June,<sup>(111)</sup> presented a table containing information on 24 chemical attacks allegedly made by Iraq between March and May. Welcoming the Secretary-General's message of 29 June (see above), Iran stated on 2 July<sup>(112)</sup> that it had never retaliated, despite Iraq's resort to chemical weapons, and that it was fully committed not to use such weapons. In addition, Iran asserted that the Iraqi claim of concentration of military forces in civilian areas was merely an excuse to bombard those areas. It transmitted, by a letter of 5 July,<sup>(113)</sup> a 3 July news dispatch originating at Teheran, alleging that in January United States military forces had delivered 2 tons of solidified gas to Iraq. By a 16 July letter,<sup>(114)</sup> the United States rejected Iran's accusations as totally false and groundless and declared that it had never supplied Iraq with chemical-warfare agents or components. On 3 August,<sup>(115)</sup> Iran asked the Secretary-General whether Iraq had responded to his month-old appeal regarding non-use of chemical weapons.

On 16 July,<sup>(116)</sup> Iran made further allegations of Iraqi attacks on cities, between 27 June and 6 July; for its part, it had adhered to the pledge of 12 June.

Other communications during the period included a charge by Iran on 7 June that Saudi Arabian fighters had shot down an Iranian air force plane over international waters and had taken the pilot to Saudi Arabia;<sup>(117)</sup> a Kuwait charge that Iranian aircraft had attacked a Kuwaiti tanker on 10 June at the entrance to the Gulf;<sup>(118)</sup> a statement on the conflict by the London Economic Summit (7-9 June), submitted by the United Kingdom;<sup>(119)</sup> and a "Baghdad Call for Peace", adopted by the International Conference on the Impact of the Gulf War on World Peace and Security (Baghdad, 8-10 July) and submitted by Iraq.<sup>(120)</sup>

On 30 August,<sup>(121)</sup> Iraq transmitted a declaration made by its Revolutionary Command Council on the release of Iranian POWs without quid pro quo on the occasion of Id al-Adha; they would be given the choice of returning to Iran or seeking asylum in any State consenting to receive them. Iraq added that it had invited the families of young Iranian prisoners to visit them in Iraq or any other place agreed upon, under ICRC auspices, but Iran had rejected the initiative.

In a note issued on 19 September,<sup>(122)</sup> the Secretary-General said the United Nations compliance-verification teams had been in place at Baghdad and Teheran since 20 and 26 June, respectively. On 17 September, the team at Baghdad carried out an inspection in response to the first request from Iraq to verify an attack which had allegedly taken place in the village of Abu Mughira on 12 September, approximately 20 kilometres south-east of Basra and said to be about 15 kilometres south-west of the front line. The team reported that a rocket of unknown calibre had struck in the village from a north-easterly direction four to six days prior to inspection; it concluded that the damage was caused by a lone or stray projectile and was therefore unable to say that it was a deliberately targeted attack.

Iran expressed confidence, on 18 September,<sup>(123)</sup> that the United Nations investigation team would point to Iran's full observance of the 12 June agreement; on 29 October,<sup>(124)</sup> it declared that the report of the Baghdad team had shown the baselessness of the Iraqi allegations. On 19 September,<sup>(125)</sup> it submitted a listing of what it said were more than 70 Iraqi violations of the 12 June agreement between 14 June and 8 September; details of 33 further alleged Iraqi violations between 10 September and 19 October were reported on 31 October.<sup>(126)</sup> It also submitted, on 31 December,<sup>(127)</sup> the names of 18 civilians said to have been killed in Iraqi shellings of residential areas between 27 May and 22 September, as well as details on 82 civilians injured in Abadan and Khorramshahr by Iraq's long-range artillery.

Iraq submitted, on 22 October,<sup>(128)</sup> details of 39 alleged Iranian violations between 16 June and 13 October, and charged, in a 25 October letter,<sup>(129)</sup> that Iran had opened fire on 10 October on Iraqi captives held in an Iranian camp and requested the Secretary-General to send a mission to investigate. Iran, on 7 November,<sup>(130)</sup> submitted an ICRC report which it said showed the baselessness of the Iraqi allegations. According to the report, a dispute between two Iraqi POWs triggered a camp-wide uproar, with POWs subsequently storming the camp exit; after launching tear-gas bombs and shooting in the air, the guards began firing into the crowd. On 11 October, an ICRC delegate and a medical delegate were allowed to examine three corpses and 35 wounded POWs; the corpses showed wounds on the head, caused by blows. By a letter of 7 November,<sup>(131)</sup> Iran welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to send a mission to Iran and Iraq to inquire into the concerns of both Governments regarding the situation of POWs and civilian detainees; Iran would provide full co-operation with the mission as of 15 November.

Iraq<sup>(132)</sup> submitted a 23 November statement of the ICRC President addressed to all permanent representatives at Geneva, in which he stated that, in view of the repeated and systematic violations by Iran of the third Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, ICRC could not remain silent and jeopardize the physical and moral survival of thousands of men and future respect for humanitarian law. ICRC, which by itself had not been able in three years to obtain respect of humanitarian law in the Iraq-Iran conflict and especially to bring Iran to respect the third Geneva Convention, needed Governments' help regarding some 50,000 Iraqi POWs being held in Iran. When ICRC submitted a report on the 10 October incident to the authorities of Iraq and Iran, as was customary, Iran suspended all ICRC activities on its territory, denying for the third time in three years ICRC access to Iraqi prisoners, and undertook a slander campaign. The 10 October incident was not an isolated one, with other violent confrontations resulting in numerous deaths and injuries. ICRC's efforts to ensure protection of POWs in Iran would fail unless the Iranian authorities were brought to realize that it was the political will of the community of States to see humanitarian law observed, the statement concluded.

On 13 November,<sup>(133)</sup> Iran drew attention to a report in a Kuwaiti newspaper which was said to quote an Iraqi minister in September stating that Iraq would use chemical weapons if necessary.

Other communications relating to the conflict included: a communiqué of the co-ordinating meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 4 October),<sup>(134)</sup> reaffirming decisions adopted on the war by previous Islamic Conferences; a communiqué of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly at its 1984 session (New York, 1-5 October),<sup>(135)</sup> reiterating the need to implement the principles of non-alignment with regard to the conflict; and a communiqué of the Supreme Council of the Co-operation Council for the Arab States of the Gulf (fifth session, Kuwait, 27-29 November),<sup>(136)</sup> noting the threat which the conflict posed to the region and calling on Iran to join in devising a solution.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a report of 31 December,<sup>(137)</sup> prepared in pursuance of Security Council resolution 552(1984), the Secretary-General submitted details of incidents regarding shipping in the Gulf since 1630 hours GMT on 1 June, as reported in response to his request by Governments and the International Maritime Organization. Of the 13 States responding, 6 (Greece, Japan, Kuwait, Switzerland, Turkey, United Kingdom) provided information on specific incidents, 2 made observations on the resolution's objectives or other aspects of the conflict, and the remaining 5 replied that they had no incidents to report. The Secretary-General also reported that he had received a telegram in October from the General Secretary of the International Transport Workers' Federation stating that, as of 10 July, 112 vessels had been hit by missiles since the start of the conflict, resulting in the death of scores of seafarers and injury to many more. In a joint telegram on 15 November, the Chairman of the International Chamber of Shipping and the President of the International Shipping Federation reported on human and material losses suffered, and appealed for international efforts to end the attacks on merchant shipping.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

At its resumed thirty-eighth session in September 1984, the Assembly adopted decision 38/460 without vote, on an oral proposal by its President.

Consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq

At its 106th plenary meeting, on 17 September 1984, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq".

General Assembly decision 38/460

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 138.

By decision 39/456 of 18 December, the Assembly decided to consider the item, among others, at its resumed thirty-ninth session at a date to be announced.

In November, Iran submitted to the Assembly's First Committee a draft resolution entitled "Preventive measures against the further use of chemical weapons",<sup>(138)</sup> by which the Assembly would have strongly condemned the use of such weapons reported by the specialists and requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in preventing, investigating and reporting to the Assembly on their further use.

Iraq submitted amendments to the draft which, among other things, mentioned humanitarian concerns that could be satisfied only by putting an end to the conflict between Iran and Iraq.<sup>(139)</sup> By the amendments, the Assembly would also have expressed its appreciation of the Secretary-General's efforts to mediate that conflict, welcomed that one of the parties had already expressed its willingness to settle the conflict by peaceful means, and called on the other to do likewise.

Subsequently, Iran submitted a revised text and Iraq, further amendments, both seeking to underline their divergent positions on the subject. At a still later stage, Iran withdrew the revised version and requested that action be taken on the original draft; in view of that request, Iraq stated that it maintained the original amendments. Iraq then moved to adjourn the debate on the draft resolution and the amendments, and the First Committee approved that motion by a recorded vote of 34 to 2 (Iran, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya), with 68 abstentions.

Other action. The Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (Vienna, Austria, 2-19 August 1984) adopted, by 44 votes to 1, with 43 abstentions, a resolution calling for a cessation of the war in the Gulf.<sup>(140)</sup>

The Commission on Human Rights, by a 12 March resolution on exploitation of child labour, called on Iran to cease using children in its armed forces, especially in time of war. In related action, both the Economic and Social Council (decision 1984/138) and the Commission on Human Rights took action on the human rights situation in Iran (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

Chapter VIII

Mediterranean

Several political issues relating to the Mediterranean region were before the United Nations in 1984: the Cyprus question; the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya-United States dispute; and the strengthening of regional security and co-operation.

The Security Council twice extended the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), by resolutions 553(1984) and 559(1984). In a May decision on Cyprus (resolution 550(1984)), the Council condemned all secessionist actions, including the purported exchange of ambassadors between Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot leadership, declared them illegal and called for their immediate withdrawal, and also called for the transfer of Varosha (Famagusta) to United Nations administration. At the same time, the Council reaffirmed the good offices mandate of the Secretary-General, requested him to undertake new efforts to attain an overall solution to the Cyprus problem and called on all parties to co-operate.

In regard to his good offices mission, the Secretary-General held a number of meetings at various levels throughout the year followed by separate "proximity talks" with leaders of the two communities. In early December, he believed that a draft agreement was ready for submission to a joint high-level meeting at which an agreement could be concluded containing the necessary elements for a comprehensive solution aimed at establishing a Federal Republic of Cyprus. The Secretary-General stressed—in his annual report on the work of the Organization (p. 3)—that he remained essential to communication between the parties.

The Security Council met in March/April at the request of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to consider what it said was the deteriorating situation resulting from hostile American acts directed against the Jamahiriya.

Regarding the strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region, the General Assembly, by resolution 39/153 adopted in December, reaffirmed the need for further efforts to that end while encouraging the intensification of existing forms and the promotion of new forms of co-operation, particularly those aimed at reducing tension and strengthening confidence and security in the region.

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: questions involving the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. International Court of Justice: continental shelf delimitation (Tunisia/Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya/Malta).

Cyprus question

In January 1984, the Secretary-General met with Rauf R. Denktas, the leader of the Turkish Cypriot community, and President Kenan Evren of Turkey, and in February with President Spyros Kyprianou of Cyprus. In March, the Secretary-General gave Mr. Denktas a "scenario" designed to bring about a high-level meeting between the Secretary-General, President Kyprianou and Mr. Denktas.

Mr. Denktas, however, announced his intention to proceed to a "constitutional referendum" and "elections" in the north of the island in 1984, arranging also for the submission of "credentials" for the establishment of diplomatic relations with Turkey. The Secretary-General expressed regret over these developments, saying that they jeopardized his current efforts. The Security Council met in May and condemned all secessionist actions, including the purported exchange of ambassadors between Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot leadership, while requesting the Secretary-General to undertake new efforts to attain an overall solution.

In a new initiative, the Secretary-General met separately with representatives of the two sides at Vienna, Austria, in August and outlined a number of working points as a basis of high-level talks. In late August both sides responded favourably and their leaders were invited to meet with the Secretary-General separately in New York. The first round of these talks—known as "proximity talks"—was held in mid-September and addressed substantive elements with a view to elaborating the Vienna working points into a preliminary agenda and draft agreement to be submitted, as an integrated whole, to a joint high-level meeting. A second round of talks took place in mid-October.

After intensive consultations, the final round took place from late November to early December by which time the Secretary-General felt that the draft agreement was ready for submission to a joint high-level meeting that could conclude an agreement for a comprehensive solution aimed at establishing a Federal Republic of Cyprus.

In the mean time, the Security Council twice, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, in June and December, unanimously extended the mandate of UNFICYP for a further six months, requesting the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices and to keep the Council informed of progress.

The Council, in its May resolution condemning secessionist actions including the purported ambassadorial exchange, had also stated that it considered any attempt to interfere with UNFICYP's status or deployment as contrary to United Nations resolutions. The Council also called for the transfer of the Varosha (Famagusta) area to United Nations administration and stated that attempts to settle any part of that area by people other than its inhabitants were inadmissible.

In December, the General Assembly decided to consider the Cyprus question in 1985.

Throughout 1984, Cyprus and Turkey addressed a number of letters to the Secretary-General. Those from Turkey transmitted letters from the Turkish Cypriot community which were signed by Rauf R. Denktas as "President of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", by Necati Munir Ertekun as "Minister for Foreign Affairs and Defence" or by Nail Atalay as "representative" of that "Republic".

Communications (January-May). Communications from the parties between January and May concerned such subjects as proposals towards a settlement, incidents along the cease-fire lines, alleged airspace violations, alleged grant of "citizenship" to mainland Turks, Turkish military exercises, the economic embargo, and purported "exchange of ambassadors" between the north and Turkey.

In a 2 February letter,<sup>(1)</sup> Cyprus stated that Turkey's letter of 22 December 1983<sup>(2)</sup> contained numerous distortions of fact and out-of-context quotations, intended to persuade the international community that the Turkish invasion of Cyprus had been a so-called peace operation, using the coup d'état of 15 July 1974 in Cyprus as a pretext for that invasion.

On 2 January,<sup>(3)</sup> Mr. Denktas transmitted his proposals, made to the Greek Cypriot side, on the resettlement of Varosha, the opening of Nicosia international airport, missing persons, and a general framework of relations between the two sides for progress towards a final settlement of the Cyprus problem. On 11 January,<sup>(4)</sup> Cyprus transmitted the Government's official comments of 9 January on those proposals, also calling for the withdrawal of the "declaration of independence" in the north. Also on 11 January,<sup>(5)</sup> Cyprus drew attention to President Kyprianou's statement on his submission to the Secretary-General of a framework for a settlement of the Cyprus problem.

On 16 January,<sup>(6)</sup> Mr. Atalay alleged unbecoming behaviour of Greek Cypriot soldiers on the cease-fire lines; on 3 February,<sup>(7)</sup> Cyprus said those allegations were designed to pre-empt world condemnation of Turkey for the shooting of a Cyprus National Guardsman in December 1983. On 19 April,<sup>(8)</sup> Mr. Atalay stated that a film on the incidents he had previously mentioned was available and that the UNFICYP Commander had had to intervene to end them.

On 20 January,<sup>(9)</sup> Cyprus protested and drew attention to extensive military exercises by Turkey in the north, alleging repeated violations of Cyprus airspace. Mr. Atalay on 1 February<sup>(10)</sup> stated that the exercises had taken place within the boundaries of the northern "Republic" and added that prior written notification had been made to UNFICYP.

Another exchange of letters on 17 February<sup>(11)</sup> and 9 March<sup>(12)</sup> concerned allegations by Turkey that Cyprus had mistreated nine Turks evacuated to the island from Lebanon; Cyprus replied that it gave humanitarian assistance without discrimination to all refugees, including the nine.

On 21 February,<sup>(13)</sup> Cyprus drew attention to the alleged granting of "citizenship" to 7,000 of some 50,000 settlers in the north from Turkey and their organization into a single political party. Mr. Atalay on 15 March<sup>(14)</sup> refuted the allegations an audacious and contrived attempt to hatch up a case against the "Republic". Cyprus responded on 9 April<sup>(15)</sup> that Mr. Atalay had failed to reply to the particular charge. On 23 April,<sup>(16)</sup> Mr. Atalay repeated that the statements of the Greek Cypriot leadership on the subject contained the usual unfounded accusations.

On 12 March,<sup>(17)</sup> Cyprus accused the Turkish side anew of pursuing policies similar to South Africa's policy of bantustanization by its annexation, segregation and other neo-apartheid policies in Cyprus (see also p. 138). Refuting the accusations, Mr. Atalay, on 16 April,<sup>(18)</sup> quoted excerpts from various reports by the Secretary-General, and from British and Greek press reports speaking of the inhuman treatment inflicted on Turkish Cypriots and Turkish Cypriot refugees by Greek Cypriots from 1964 onwards.

On 5 April,<sup>(19)</sup> Cyprus protested against what it described as provocative military exercises in March by Turkish jet fighters within Cyprus airspace, while Mr. Atalay on 13 April<sup>(20)</sup> asserted that the exercises were routine, with prior notification to UNFICYP, and that the Cyprus communication was to justify its ongoing arms buildup.

On 17 April,<sup>(21)</sup> Mr. Atalay protested the Greek Cypriot economic embargo and the combined Greek and Greek Cypriot effort to strangle the Turkish Cypriot people by imposing a total ban on exports from the north to the European Economic Community (EEC). The next day,<sup>(22)</sup> he forwarded an extract from a speech attributed to the Ambassador of Greece to Cyprus which Mr. Atalay said was regarded by Turkish Cypriots as a call to continue the campaign for enosis (union with Greece).

On 19 April,<sup>(23)</sup> Cyprus drew attention to a 10 April decision in the north to hold a "referendum on a new constitution" in August and "general elections" in November. Cyprus said these were new illegal actions undermining the Secretary-General's efforts. On the same day,<sup>(24)</sup> Cyprus reported that, on 17 April, Turkey and the north had purportedly exchanged "ambassadors".

In view of what it said were grave developments, Cyprus, on 30 April,<sup>(25)</sup> called for an urgent meeting of the Security Council (see below). In a letter of 7 May,<sup>(26)</sup> Mr. Atalay said the exchange of "diplomatic representatives" resulting from "recognition of a new State" could not be a pretext for a Council meeting.

On 29 March,<sup>(27)</sup> France transmitted declarations adopted two days earlier by the EEC Ministers for Foreign Affairs, including one on Cyprus, reiterating support for the Council's November 1983 resolution<sup>(28)</sup> as the basis for restoring the territorial integrity and unity of the Republic of Cyprus, regretting Turkey's recognition of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", calling for withdrawal of that recognition, and pledging support for the Secretary-General's good offices mission.

Report of the Secretary-General (May). In his report of 1 May,<sup>(29)</sup> in pursuance of Security Council resolution 544(1983)<sup>(30)</sup> on continuance of his mission of good offices, the Secretary-General summarized his activities, between November 1983 and May 1984, in particular various communications exchanged with Mr. Denktas and the visit of his Special Representative, Hugo J. Gobbi, to Cyprus in April.

The Secretary-General recalled that Mr. Denktas had, on 2 January 1984, sent a letter regarding certain goodwill measures,<sup>(3)</sup> while on 9 January President Kyprianou had presented a paper commenting on those proposals,<sup>(4)</sup> followed by an 11 January paper giving a framework for a comprehensive settlement<sup>(5)</sup> (see also above).

The Secretary-General met Mr. Denktas on 16 January at Casablanca, Morocco (where the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference was meeting), and gave him a summary of the Greek Cypriot "framework"; the following day he met with President Evren of Turkey, who urged resumption of the intercommunal talks without pre-conditions.

Immediately after these meetings, several elements of a tentative scenario which the Secretary-

General was considering were further clarified with Turkish officials; these exchanges continued into March. The exchanges, the Secretary-General stated, gave him reason to feel confident that he could count on the understanding and assistance of the Turkish Government in moving forward.

Meanwhile, on 17 February, the Secretary-General met with President Kyprianou in New York, outlining in general terms his approach aimed at bringing about a high-level meeting leading to resumption of the intercommunal dialogue. President Kyprianou, the Secretary-General said, encouraged him to continue his efforts.

On 6 March, the Turkish Cypriot authorities announced their intention to adopt a flag of their own and the Secretary-General informed both Mr. Denktas and Turkey that such action was difficult to reconcile with his efforts.

The Secretary-General met Mr. Denktas in New York on 16 March and handed him a suggested scenario, aimed at opening the door to a high-level meeting and resumption of the intercommunal dialogue. To facilitate that, the parties would reach an understanding with the Secretary-General to the effect that while he was engaged in his current diplomatic effort: (a) there would be no further step to internationalize the Cyprus problem and initiatives under way would not be pursued; (b) there would be no follow-up to the 15 November 1983 declaration (of "independence") by the Turkish Cypriots and initiatives under way would not be pursued; (c) both sides would make reciprocal commitments to the Secretary-General not to increase qualitatively or quantitatively the military forces on the island, while agreeing to a system of UNFICYP verification inspections; (d) the Turkish Cypriot authorities would transfer the Varosha area (as delineated in their proposals of August 1981<sup>(31)</sup>) to the Secretary-General for placement under interim United Nations administration as part of the buffer zone controlled by UNFICYP, in a transfer phased over six to nine months; and (e) the parties would agree to hold a high-level meeting and to reopen the intercommunal dialogue. Regarding Varosha, the Secretary-General stated that since it would become part of the buffer zone, this implied that the process of settlement by the Greek Cypriots would be determined by the Secretary-General and that the area would not revert to the jurisdiction of the Greek Cypriots until a final settlement of the Cyprus problem was reached.

The general terms of the scenario were described to the Foreign Minister of Cyprus at a meeting in New York on 19 and 20 March.

Annexed to the report<sup>(29)</sup> were letters exchanged between the Secretary-General and Mr. Denktas.

On 30 March, Mr. Denktas gave what he described as an "interim reply" to the scenario and requested certain clarifications, to which the Secretary-General replied the next day.

On 10 April, Mr. Denktas announced that his community intended to conduct a "constitutional referendum" and "elections" in August and November, respectively. In that situation, the Secretary-General asked Mr. Gobbi to make an urgent visit to Cyprus and gave him instructions, including a letter to Mr. Denktas. In that letter, dated 14 April, the Secretary-General said he had been under the impression, after the earlier contacts, including those in Casablanca, that he could count on sympathetic consideration of the scenario by the Turkish Cypriot community. He added that the latest stated intentions of that community would tend to prejudice an essential part of the scenario but he preferred to assume that Mr. Denktas would modify those actions if agreement on the scenario were reached at that time.

On 17 April, ceremonies took place in Ankara and Nicosia, publicly described as being the submission of "credentials" for establishment of diplomatic relations, with the Turkish Cypriot leadership informing Mr. Gobbi that the ceremonies had been arranged long before. The Secretary-General stated that he deeply regretted the ceremonies and had instructed Mr. Gobbi to transmit immediately his great concern over the developments which have placed in jeopardy his current efforts.

On 18 April, Mr. Denktas replied to the 16 March scenario, saying, among other things, that if the Turkish Cypriot side was to refrain from proceeding with the implementation of the natural and legal consequences of its declaration of "independence", then it followed that the Greek Cypriot side should take corresponding action and refrain from falsely asserting that it was the Government of the whole of Cyprus and agree to refrain from all conduct appertaining to such an assumption. He said the principle of equality could be demonstrated either by the Turkish Cypriot side proceeding with the natural and legal consequences of statehood or by the Greek Cypriot side refraining from its assertion.

Regarding Varosha, Mr. Denktas stated that if the Cyprus question were raised in international forums where Turkish Cypriots were not represented or if the Greek Cypriot side did not end all restrictive measures on Turkish Cypriots in trade and other fields at the time of proposed resettlement, one year after United Nations interim administration, then Varosha would revert to Turkish Cypriot jurisdiction.

Mr. Denktas also proposed agreement in principle to reopening the Nicosia international airport for civilian traffic under an interim United Nations administration, with consultations on this matter beginning at the time of the commencement of negotiations for a comprehensive settlement.

On 18 April, Mr. Gobbi met with President Kyprianou, informing him of the situation. He left Nicosia the following day to report to the Secretary-General.

In concluding his report, the Secretary-General said that the developments spoke for themselves and that the Security Council members would wish to give careful thought to the next steps to prevent any further deterioration of the situation. He said that important requirements were maintenance of a continued process of communication and negotiation and continued deployment of UNFICYP. He was prepared to continue his mission of good offices as long as there was unambiguous support for it. The search for a peaceful settlement was vital to the interests of all the people of Cyprus, as well as to wider peace.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 30 April,<sup>(25)</sup> Cyprus requested that the Security Council meet to consider the grave situation in Cyprus caused by the actions of Turkey and take effective measures in accordance with relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the full implementation of Council resolutions regarding Cyprus.

Security Council resolution 550(1984)

11 May 1984 Meeting 2539 13-1-1

4-nation draft (S/16550).

Sponsors: India, Nicaragua, Upper Volta, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers: SC 2531-2539.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, Egypt, France, India, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Peru, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Upper Volta, Zimbabwe.

Against: Pakistan.

Abstaining: United States.

Pakistan, explaining its negative vote, said what was required was the giving of an open mandate to the Secretary-General to bring about conciliation of the two communities and to restart the intercommunal talks, the only credible process for a just settlement. The text made no mention of such resumption and was one-sided; it hoped that despite the flawed mandate, the Secretary-General would be able to renew his contacts.

The United States said that, while condemning the so-called exchange of ambassadors between Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot leadership and other announced actions, it abstained in order to avoid any possible exacerbation of the conflict but gave the strongest support to the Secretary-General's continuing good offices mission.

Turkey rejected the text as a whole because it was based on resolution 541(1983).<sup>(28)</sup> It also objected to a number of particular provisions, its position on which had been explained during the debate (see below), such as the references to secessionist actions. Turkey also could not understand the inclusion of: the mentioning of Varosha, since the Turkish Cypriot proposals were still under discussion; and paragraph 6, as Mr. Denktas had reiterated his position vis-à-vis UNFICYP (see below). Turkey also objected to paragraph 3, as an expression of ostracism against the Turkish Cypriot community; paragraph 10, which had no legal basis in the Charter; and paragraph 8, linking the Secretary-General's good offices mission to resolution 541(1983), with the Council thereby setting aside high-level agreements already concluded between the two communities. Further, Turkey stressed that its forces were not occupying Cyprus but were there on the basis of the 1960 Treaty of Guarantee.

Mr. Denktas expressed similar concerns on the text but said that, despite the fact that his people did not support it, if the Secretary-General could satisfy them as to the continuing basis of his good offices in terms of paragraph 6 of Council resolution 367(1975),<sup>(32)</sup> all would be done to help him.

During the debate, President Kyprianou said Turkey's plan was and continued to be one of partitioning Cyprus. Most recently Turkey had dismissed whatever the Council had to say through an exchange of ambassadors. Unless the Council acted, there would be an end to Cyprus as an independent State and the very raison d'être of the United Nations would be not only undermined but ultimately destroyed. Cyprus had accepted what was unthinkable in the past, namely federation as a solution to the internal structure of the problem. None of what was currently happening would ever have happened without the occupation of 37 per cent of Cyprus by Turkish troops, and any action by the Council should be in the light of that reality. While Cyprus had nothing against the Secretary-General's good offices, if there were no abandonment of the partitionist plan, there could be no peaceful solution. The sides were working at cross purposes, with his Government working for unity of the country in conformity with United Nations resolutions, and the other side working for the destruction of the Republic of Cyprus.

Mr. Denktas said the Cyprus problem did not begin in 1974. It began before that, when the Greek Cypriot leadership set out to destroy the binational character of the State, with a view to its annexation to Greece, which was fully behind that conspiracy. Today Mr. Kyprianou was seeking a mandate to continue doing what was tried between 1963 and 1974, namely to end the bicomunal partnership. Currently an independent Republic of Cyprus (in the north) had been established as equals with the Greek Cypriots since the sovereignty of Cyprus had been given to the island's two peoples. Destruction of bicommunality by the Greek Cypriots was liberty and freedom to them, while to the Turkish Cypriots it was colonization. There had been no deliberate partitionist policy. Partition was a defence and the only reasonable alternative to enosis. In February 1982, the Prime Minister of Greece, Andreas Papandreou, had gone to Cyprus to state that the island was part of the national territory of Greece. The Turkish Cypriots were pushed into declaring their statehood in order to tell Mr. Papandreou and Mr. Kyprianou that in Cyprus there existed a Turkish people that would never allow such a union. The Turkish Cypriots were, however, ready to re-establish the Federal Republic, through the intercommunal talks, as a binational State. There was no crisis in Cyprus. In the south, the Greek Cypriots were prospering, and in the north, the Turkish Cypriots lived in freedom, ruling themselves. Mr. Kyprianou was not the President of Cyprus because the 1960 Constitution was in the dustbin.

Turkey said that never in the history of Cyprus had the Greek community obtained de jure or de facto the position of ruling majority vis-à-vis the Turkish community. There had never been a majority or a minority in Cyprus. The situation was that two national and quite separate communities continued to coexist and what was required was establishment of a political equilibrium based on the idea of equality between two nations, Turkish and Greek. Ever since the 1963 coup d'état, the Turkish community had continued struggling to regain its status as an equal partner in the Cypriot State, thanks to the unwavering support of Turkey. Until such restoration, the proclamation of independence of the Turkish Cypriot community was perfectly justified on moral and juridical grounds, based on the right of self-determination already exercised on an equal footing with the Greek community, the principle of self-defence and the principle according to which anyone whose rights were trampled upon may, under international law, resort to retaliation. It was not an act of secession since it aimed only at reaffirming equal status. Unless there was a final agreement on a federal solution, the decision on independence was irrevocable, as was Turkey's decision to recognize the new State. Intercommunal negotiations should resume under the auspices of the Secretary-General.

Greece, fully endorsing the views of the President of Cyprus, said that Turkey planned to achieve the partitioning of Cyprus and co-ownership of the Republic on a 50-50 basis by the two communities, one representing 80 per cent and the other 18 per cent of the population. Ankara also wanted the whole arrangement guaranteed by Turkey, thus making the Republic of Cyprus for all practical purposes a protectorate of Turkey—a first step towards total Turkish subordination. It was inconceivable that minority communities were allowed to request foreign military intervention in order to acquire disproportionate status within a State. Such acceptance would mean most United Nations members could be dismembered. The Cyprus problem stemmed directly from Turkish expansionism in the eastern Mediterranean. Whatever happened in the occupied part of Cyprus was the sole responsibility of Turkey, since it totally controlled militarily that part of the Republic. Turkey bore responsibility for the unilateral declaration of independence of the Turkish Cypriot pseudo-State. Invoking the theme of enosis was like calling a shadow of the past into existence to justify the crimes of the present. The question of Cyprus was one of foreign occupation of an independent Member State.

In a subsequent intervention, the representative of Cyprus said his country was participating in the Council because it represented the sole, legitimate Government, recognized by all except Turkey. The unilateral declaration of independence, condemned by the whole world, made Turkey look ridiculous, since, when Turkey invaded Cyprus in 1974, it had said it was intervening to restore independence and territorial integrity. Today there was a secessionist and illegal entity set up through uprooting the indigenous people.

Mr. Denktas in a subsequent intervention said intercommunal talks were, as named, intercommunal and the concept of a legitimate Government within or over such talks could not be supported, having regard to the facts of Cyprus. He said the hands of the Secretary-General should be untied; otherwise, the concept of the Government of Cyprus as a starting-point hindered him from doing justice to the two sides. The Greek Cypriots occupying the rest of Cyprus were usurpers and part of a 100 per cent Greek Cypriot racist régime.

Antigua and Barbuda said a principal contributor to the failure of the intercommunal talks was the continued presence of Turkish forces on Cypriot soil. The Council should call for effective sanctions against the bogus northern "Republic" and against States seeking to give it comfort. India said the Turkish Cypriot community had taken further actions in direct contravention of resolution 541(1983)<sup>(28)</sup> and the Secretary-General's endeavours; while Mr. Denktas had said that he was not seeking partition, the course he had taken appeared to go in that direction.

Ecuador said there could be no free discussion on the destiny of a people, even when different communities were involved, as long as foreign troops were present on their territory. Egypt recalled its clear position on the declaration of the establishment of a "Republic" in the north as a grave development and took the same position regarding recent developments at variance with resolution 541(1983). Peru said neither isolated nor unrecognized unilateral acts would contribute to the common good of restoring harmony in the island. Speaking in like manner, Yugoslavia added that this was another link in the long chain of faits accomplis, delivering a heavy blow to efforts to resolve the problem through negotiations based on Charter principles. The Syrian Arab Republic said that negotiations on Cyprus should be based on equality, with respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and non-aligned status of Cyprus, as well as in keeping with relevant United Nations resolutions.

Sri Lanka felt that the Council should consider the most effective ways of implementing those resolutions, preferably within a given time-frame. Nicaragua saw the problem as one of foreign military intervention and what was at stake was the Council's ability to prevent such intervention and the use of force from prevailing over the norms of international relations, contrary to international law. Panama said the de facto situation in Cyprus had been brought about by occupation by foreign troops and had gradually been exacerbated by a unilateral attempt to split the territory and community of Cyprus in two.

Jamaica said it was inconceivable that the international community could be expected to accept the recent measures regarding the north and urged the initiators of the proposals to withdraw them. Algeria agreed and said that the Council must give a decisive impetus to the peaceful settlement process. Similarly, Malta said that no one community could prevail over the other, nor could any one neighbour impose its will on Cyprus or any part of the island if peace was really to be secured. Zimbabwe said the grave threat to the very existence of Cyprus was the work of external forces, those forces of disintegration being the same ones that prompted the illegal 1983 declaration of the "Republic". The Upper Volta appealed to the Turkish Cypriot leaders to heed Council resolution 541(1983) and thus enable the Secretary-General to exercise his functions. Afghanistan associated itself with the President of Cyprus in calling for appropriate measures to reverse all previous actions violating relevant United Nations resolutions. Costa Rica supported the President's proposal for complete demilitarization of the island. Guyana said Turkish Cypriots' intentions became manifest, in keeping with their partitionist policy, when they announced their intentions to hold a "referendum" and "general elections".

Viet Nam said the two communities had mingled for years without any problem before the foreign military occupation of its northern part, followed by attempts to change the demographic composition and social structure of the occupied areas; recent events were a direct consequence of plots hatched by imperialists because of the strategic significance of Cyprus. Cuba said that the rebellious attitude of the Turkish Cypriot leaders towards United Nations decisions deserved a vigorous protest and the Council should condemn their actions and discourage their continuation.

Mongolia felt that there were overt and covert attempts to turn the island into a military strategic springboard of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), aimed at maintaining the de facto partition of Cyprus. The Ukrainian SSR added that the United States and its NATO allies were intent upon converting the island into a military springboard, viewing it as an important stronghold on the way to the Middle East. Czechoslovakia stressed the importance of foreign troop withdrawal from Cyprus and the liquidation of military bases; it was necessary to create as soon as possible conditions for resumption of a constructive dialogue between representatives of both communities. Hungary added that the idea of holding an international conference on Cyprus should also be borne in mind. The USSR said recent steps by the Turkish community were a flagrant violation of Council decisions, an attempt to create new faits accomplis and designed to split Cyprus; it attached great importance to the Secretary-General's good offices. Bulgaria opposed any efforts that might lead to secession in Cyprus, as well as its transformation into a foreign military base. The German Democratic Republic said that United Nations decisions were ignored because imperialist quarters, above all the United States, declared the whole region of the Mediterranean and the Middle East a so-called zone of vital interest and were in no way interested in settling the Cyprus question through negotiations respecting the non-alignment of the island.

Saint Lucia said at the very heart of the problem was the fundamental concern of the security of small States; the status quo in Cyprus was the result of a fratricidal conflict often fuelled from external sources and an example of the unwillingness or inability of the international community to act decisively to assure the security of such States.

Malaysia said the Council must assist the Secretary-General by providing the right atmosphere and proper conditions in which the intercommunal talks could go forward.

Australia saw the recent exchange of ambassadors as unhelpful. The Netherlands also rejected that exchange and hoped Mr. Denktas's words regarding a united Cyprus, within a bicomunal, bizonal and federal framework, would be translated into fact. France, too, deplored the fact that despite resolution 541(1983), Turkey had decided to establish diplomatic relations with the so-called "Republic"; it particularly favoured transferring the Famagusta area to an interim United Nations administration.

The United Kingdom felt that all parties had acted in contravention of agreements, and the long-term fundamental problem required that they co-operate with the Secretary-General in the exercise of his good offices while refraining from any action which might exacerbate the situation. China said it steadfastly supported the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus, as well as its non-aligned status. It hoped the Cyprus problem would be solved through international negotiations and supported the good offices mission.

Pakistan said Cyprus was virtually divided into two separate entities; those who had allowed the distortion of the political processes in Cyprus 20 years earlier by neglecting the historical and cultural realities did not appear to have comprehended its implications or foreseen its culmination in the current impasse. The defiant course to which the Turkish Cypriot community had been obliged to resort was the product of its despair at the bleakness of efforts to ensure fulfilment of its aspirations, as guaranteed as a co-founder of the State of Cyprus under the 1960 Constitution. The one-sided nature of resolution 541(1983), from which Pakistan had dissociated itself, could not have been expected to facilitate the Secretary-General's good offices. Bangladesh spoke similarly, adding that although a sound basis existed for continuing the Secretary-General's good offices, this should not be impaired by another one-sided resolution.

Communications (May/June). Communications in May and June covered such topics as a framework for a comprehensive settlement as proposed by Cyprus and allegations of the colonization of Famagusta (Varosha).

On 9 May,<sup>(33)</sup> in a letter to the Security Council President, Vanuatu expressed its concern over the threats to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus and similarly situated small States, urging the Council, particularly its five permanent members, to set an example by discharging their responsibilities with respect to maintaining international law and order.

The "framework for a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem" was submitted to the Secretary-General by President Kyprianou during a meeting in New York on 11 January, but not made public until requested by Cyprus in a letter of 10 May.<sup>(34)</sup> It called for the withdrawal of all Turkish occupation troops together with the colonizers imported from Turkey, demilitarization of the island and creation of an international force under United Nations auspices stationed in Cyprus to secure its external defence and internal security. Effective international guarantees for the independence, territorial integrity, unity and non-alignment of the Republic of Cyprus should take the form of an international treaty from which interested Powers were to be excluded. Territorially, negotiations, notwithstanding the 18 per cent Turkish Cypriot population, would be on the basis of 23 per cent of Cyprus for the region or province to be under Turkish Cypriot administration in a federal State. If such previously heavily Greek Cypriot populated areas as Famagusta and Morphou came under Greek Cypriot administration, negotiations could be on the basis of 25 per cent of the territory to be under Turkish Cypriot administration. Constitutionally, the President would be a Greek Cypriot and the Vice-President a Turkish Cypriot, with a Federal Council of Ministers composed of 70 per cent Greek Cypriots and 30 per cent Turkish Cypriots.

On 11 May,<sup>(35)</sup> Cyprus drew attention to reports in the Turkish Cypriot press of what it said were further Turkish attempts at colonizing the town of Famagusta; Cyprus protested what it called these new aggressive actions of Turkey. On 8 June,<sup>(36)</sup> it drew urgent attention to the systematic process of colonization of Varosha which was being carried out by the Turkish occupation forces in furtherance of Ankara's objectives of partition and annexation, estimating that at least 20 houses had been settled by persons other than the rightful owners. A letter of 13 June<sup>(37)</sup> transmitted the text of an 8 June resolution unanimously adopted by the House of Representatives of the Republic of Cyprus, demanding immediate termination of the colonization of Famagusta.

Earlier, on 25 May,<sup>(38)</sup> Cyprus circulated the full text of its 30 September 1983 reply to and comments on the Secretary-General's soundings conveyed to the parties on 8 August 1983.<sup>(39)</sup>

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In his 1 June 1984 report to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering 1 December 1983 to 31 May 1984,<sup>(40)</sup> the Secretary-General updated UNFICYP activities and his good offices mission.

The Secretary-General reported that, since the adoption of resolution 550(1984) on 11 May, he had held meetings with President Kyprianou on 12 May and Mr. Denktas on 14 May. Regrettably, the period under review did not record any progress but, if his mandate were continued by the Council, he would again consult the parties. It would not seem unreasonable to ask them to avoid actions that prejudiced the agreed basis for a settlement and to proceed without further delay to seek a solution on that basis, aimed at establishment of a federal State.

He recalled that, in his report of 1 May,<sup>(29)</sup> he had indicated that the continued deployment and operation of UNFICYP was more than ever indispensable in preventing any further deterioration of the situation. During the past six months, UNFICYP had continued, with the co-operation and support of both parties, to discharge its functions of supervising the cease-fire, maintaining peaceful conditions and promoting a return to normality on the island. The Force had to rely on the co-operation of those concerned, especially in maintaining the status quo in such sensitive places as Varosha, the status of which was directly tied to commitments of the parties under the 10-point agreement of May 1979.<sup>(41)</sup> The Secretary-General was therefore disturbed by evidence that the status quo was being tampered with in the north-western part of Varosha. He had conveyed his concern about this development to the party concerned.

At the Secretary-General's request, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), as Co-ordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus, had continued to assist the displaced and needy in the island (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XXI). The report also described developments with regard to the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

Since UNFICYP remained indispensable, the Secretary-General recommended a further extension of its mandate for six months. The Governments of Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom concurred with this extension, while Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot community indicated that their stand would be expounded in the Security Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council met on 15 June to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation for extension of the mandate of UNFICYP. At their request, Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote; Necati Munir Ertekun was invited to participate in conformity with rule 39<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On that day, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 553(1984).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 1 June 1984,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council should extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1984,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 186(1964) and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period, ending on 15 December 1984;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1984;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 553(1984)

15 June 1984 Meeting 2547 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/16622).

In the debate, Cyprus stated that free unimpeded intermingling of the people had been replaced by forced segregation based on strict ethnic and racial criteria, reminiscent of apartheid. This policy was imposed to serve the political aims of partition and annexation of the occupied part of Cyprus to mainland Turkey. Those areas had been heavily colonized by importing thousands of aliens in furtherance of Ankara's plans to change Cyprus's demographic structure. Between 40,000 and 50,000 were already settled in the occupied areas. Further Turkish actions to colonize the Varosha area should be of special concern to the Council. Cyprus said the existence of two communities in no way pre-empted the existence of the Government of Cyprus, whose legality had been exclusively recognized by all international organizations and United Nations resolutions.

Greece said every effort was required to restore the exercise of the sovereign authority of the Government of the Republic of Cyprus over its entire territory and to safeguard its independence, unity and territorial integrity. This could be achieved through withdrawal of the Turkish forces of occupation and establishment of a democratic constitutional system providing for equal rights for all, while credibly guaranteeing the legitimate right of the Turkish Cypriot community which, with other minorities, constituted 20 per cent of the population. No just and viable solution could be reached if the demographic realities of the Republic were disregarded. Past experience demanded extreme caution. Commitments had been given to transfer Famagusta to UNFICYP while plans to start colonizing the city were already apparently final.

Mr. Ertekun said the Secretary-General's report was constructive in that it clearly stated that his current mission of good offices was entrusted to him by Security Council resolution 367(1975).<sup>(32)</sup> The Turkish Cypriot side would have agreed to extending the UNFICYP mandate provided it was done legally and constitutionally, and this required deleting the Council's reference to a Government of Cyprus. He said the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" was the sole competent authority to speak for the Turkish Cypriot partnership of the 1960 Republic of Cyprus and the northern part of the island. Nevertheless, the "Turkish Republic" was prepared to accept the presence of UNFICYP on its territory based on decisions taken solely by that Government. The "Turkish Republic" had no intention of altering the existing status quo of Varosha. Regarding an agreed settlement of the Cyprus question, he had that morning given the Secretary-General a comprehensive set of new proposals.

Turkey said that federation remained the ultimate goal of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" and the Secretary-General's good offices could only be based on paragraph 6 of Council resolution 367(1975). It fully supported the new proposals Mr. Ertekun had mentioned. The current resolution, however, mentioned provisions that the "Turkish Republic" and Turkey had never accepted, prolonged a mandate rendered archaic by radical changes, and was based on supposed authorization by a so-called governmental entity having no actual or juridical existence. Turkey rejected the resolution in toto but it would continue to accept the presence of UNFICYP and co-operate with it.

Communications (June-August). Communications from June to August included letters from Mr. Ertekun on various activities of the Greek Cypriots and letters from Cyprus concerning actions in the north.

On 19 June,<sup>(42)</sup> Mr. Ertekun said the Greek Cypriot side had, at the Third Conference of Labour Ministers of the Non-Aligned and Other Developing Countries (Managua, Nicaragua, 10-12 May), obtained a one-sided resolution on Cyprus by removing references to resumption of the intercommunal talks; he also protested economic embargo and blockade measures against Turkish Cypriots. The text of the Conference resolution was forwarded by Cyprus on 9 July.<sup>(43)</sup>

Mr. Ertekun, on 5 July,<sup>(44)</sup> cited what he said was a Greek Cypriot press campaign undermining the Turkish Cypriot initiative concerning resumed negotiations.

In a number of letters Cyprus drew attention to what it termed secessionist acts by the Turkish Cypriot leadership, including reported plans for a free trade zone in the north (4 July),<sup>(45)</sup> creation of a central bank (5 July),<sup>(46)</sup> issuance of passports in the name of that community (31 July),<sup>(47)</sup> military exercises and parades on the anniversary of the 1974 invasion (31 July),<sup>(48)</sup> and issuance of new currency (1 August).<sup>(49)</sup>

Report of the Secretary-General (December). A December 1984 report<sup>(50)</sup> by the Secretary-General covered developments between 1 June and 12 December.

To give new impetus to his good offices mission, the Secretary-General invited both sides to designate representatives to meet him separately at Vienna on 6 and 7 August. At those meetings, he outlined a number of working points with a view to ascertaining whether they might provide a basis for convening high-level proximity talks under his auspices. On 31 August, both sides responded favourably to the proposal.

The leaders of the communities met with the Secretary-General separately in a first round of high-level proximity talks (New York, 10-20 September), whose purpose was to address a number of substantive elements, with a view to elaborating the working points proposed at Vienna into a preliminary draft agreement for submission to a joint high-level meeting. Two further rounds of proximity talks took place (New York, 15-26 October and 26 November-12 December).

At the final round, the Secretary-General presented and discussed as an integrated whole a preliminary draft for a joint high-level agreement. The package contained elements taken from different positions he thought could help in bridging the still existing gap; the Turkish Cypriot side conveyed its favourable reaction to all those elements. After further discussions with both sides, the Secretary-General sought and received from the Turkish Cypriot delegation understandings that were helpful in further narrowing the gap. By 12 December, he assessed that the documentation for a draft agreement was ready for submission to a joint high-level meeting, at which he expected that the interlocutors would conclude an agreement containing the necessary elements for a comprehensive solution of the problem, aimed at establishing a Federal Republic of Cyprus. He announced that the parties had agreed to hold such a meeting under his auspices, at a place to be decided, beginning on 17 January 1985.

The report also gave information on further work by the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus.

In the light of political developments and the situation on the ground, the Secretary-General recommended a further six-month extension of the UNFICYP mandate. He subsequently informed the Council that Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom concurred with his recommendation; Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot community would expound their positions in the Security Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council met on 14 December to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation for extension of UNFICYP's mandate. At their request, Canada, Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote; Mr. Denktas was invited to participate in conformity with rule 39<sup>c</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On the same day, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 559(1984).

Security Council resolution 559(1984)

14 December 1984      Meeting 2565      Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/18862).

At the outset of the debate, the President, on behalf of the Council, expressing the hope that the forthcoming high-level meeting would be useful, stated that a crossroads had been reached in the development of the Cyprus question.

During the debate, Cyprus quoted President Kyprianou to the effect that cautious optimism was justified, perhaps for the first time since 1974. In view of bitter disappointments of the recent past, Cyprus stressed that there must be no lessening of the impetus and vigilance of the international community at a time which was ripe for representations by those who could and must act in order to facilitate an agreement.

Mr. Denktas said the summit meeting was not, as suggested, between himself and the President of the Republic of Cyprus, but between the leaders of the two communities. He did not accept the current resolution because it mentioned a non-existent Government. However, UNFICYP would be accommodated on the territory of the northern "Republic" as it had been since 1983. No modification could now be made to the text of the draft agreement for the summit meeting; it did not allow for reservations of any kind.

Turkey said it was Mr. Denktas alone who had essentially contributed to the outcome of the extremely laudable efforts of the Secretary-General. Now the Turkish people of Cyprus were awaiting the unequivocal acceptance by its opposite number of the draft agreement initiated at the high-level meeting. Turkey would give it its foremost support. Regarding the resolution, Turkey's fundamental objection remained the matter of the so-called Cyprus Government. Its contacts with UNFICYP would be on the basis of decisions by the "Republic of Northern Cyprus".

Greece felt it was strange to expect President Kyprianou to come to New York in January to be presented with a document on a take-it-or-leave-it basis and then be asked to sign it; the outcome of a dialogue must always be the product of mutual agreement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (September)

On 17 September 1984, at the closing meeting of its resumed thirty-eighth session, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/458 without vote.

Question of Cyprus

At its 106th plenary meeting, on 17 September 1984, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Question of Cyprus".

General Assembly decision 38/458

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 41.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 18 December, the Assembly, by decision 39/456 on the suspension of its thirty-ninth (1984) session, deferred consideration of the Cyprus question, among other agenda items, to its resumed session, at a date to be announced (see p. 374).

Other action. The Commission on Human Rights, by a decision of 14 March, postponed the debate on human rights in Cyprus to its 1985 session (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

Peace-keeping operations

Established by the Security Council in 1964,<sup>(51)</sup> UNFICYP continued throughout 1984 to monitor, patrol and supervise the cease-fire lines of the Cyprus National Guard and of the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces. It also provided security for civilians in the area between the lines; used its best efforts to discharge its functions with regard to the security, welfare and well-being of Greek Cypriots living in northern Cyprus; continued regular visits to Turkish Cypriots residing in the south; and supported United Nations relief operations.

UNFICYP kept the area between the cease-fire lines under constant surveillance through a system of 141 observation posts, 61 of which were permanently manned (as at 12 December). Frequency of shooting incidents had again diminished, but the record was marred by the fatal shooting on 18 December 1983 of a Cyprus National Guard soldier by a Turkish Cypriot soldier on the Green Line in Nicosia. The act did not appear to be premeditated and the restraint shown by both sides did much to reduce the tension that followed. There was also a significant reduction in the number of attempts by both sides to construct new fortifications forward of the cease-fire lines or to improve existing positions. UNFICYP was successful in restoring the status quo ante in all instances where activities were considered provocative.

There was a significant reduction in overflights at the beginning of the year owing to improved reporting and liaison procedures between the United Nations and the authorities of both sides.

In January 1984, work was resumed on houses in the north-western area of Varosha and some appeared to be inhabited. The matter was raised with the Turkish Cypriot authorities, who confirmed that repairs were in progress, assuring UNFICYP that there would be no change in the status quo in the area. As of 1 June, it appeared that some 10 to 20 houses in the area were inhabited. UNFICYP pursued the matter with the Turkish Cypriot authorities and the Secretary-General's Acting Special Representative conveyed representations to Mr. Denktas.

UNFICYP continued to discharge humanitarian functions for the Greek Cypriots remaining in the north, and temporary visits to the south for family or other reasons continued on an ad hoc basis, arranged directly or through the good offices of UNFICYP. During the 12 months ending 12 December 1984, 1,213 visits were made by Greek Cypriots to the south for family and medical reasons. During the same period, there were 67 permanent transfers of Greek Cypriots to the south and the number residing in the north fell to 788; two Turkish Cypriots transferred to the north in the same period. UNFICYP continued to verify that all transfers took place voluntarily.

Periodic visits by UNFICYP officials to Turkish Cypriots living in the south continued, and contacts were maintained with their relatives in the north. During the year, 159 reunions of separated Turkish Cypriot families were arranged under UNFICYP auspices.

UNFICYP distributed 938 tons of foodstuffs and other related items provided by the Cyprus Government and the Cyprus Red Cross to Greek Cypriots living in the north.

UNFICYP continued to provide emergency medical service for civilians of both communities. It escorted Turkish Cypriots to hospitals in the south for treatment and continued to deliver medicines to the Turkish Cypriot community on a regular basis. Emergency requests for medicines were met immediately.

In regard to the maintenance of law and order, newspaper reports of Armenian terrorist activities directed at Turkish Government officials and installations continued to be of concern. A programme of inspections was continued with the full co-operation of the Cyprus Government and, based on its investigations, UNFICYP found no evidence of organized Armenian terrorist activity in the south and the Turkish Government and Turkish Cypriot community were advised of these findings.

In the humanitarian assistance programme, the 1984 programme of UNHCR provided $7.5 million to finance 22 projects, involving participation in construction of a general hospital, overseas procurement of equipment and supplies for the health, education and agricultural sectors, and professional training. UNFICYP continued to support the Co-ordinator's assistance programme by delivering agricultural, educational and medical equipment, with a total of 112 tons of supplies delivered in the 12-month period.

While joint activities of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities in the framework of projects assisted by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) were temporarily frozen following the Turkish Cypriot "independence" declaration of 15 November 1983,<sup>(52)</sup> by the end of February 1984 normal work on those projects had resumed. The second phase of the joint Nicosia Master Plan project started in September 1984, with UNDP assistance comprising preparation of a short-term investment plan for the central area of the city, as well as a portfolio of specific investment projects based on detailed designs and feasibility studies. The World Food Programme, which provided food to schoolchildren of both communities, decided to extend the project for another three years (1985-1987).

Construction work under the second stage of the Nicosia sanitary sewerage system and domestic water supply project got under way in May. Financed by EEC and the European Investment Bank, the project involved both parts of Nicosia and laying pipes across the buffer zone. UNDP ensured proper co-ordination, with UNFICYP providing liaison and military escorts for work in the buffer zone.

The information on UNFICYP activities was provided in two reports by the Secretary-General, covering 1 December 1983 to 31 May 1984<sup>(40)</sup> and 1 June to 12 December 1984.<sup>(50)</sup> In both, he recommended extension of the Force's mandate and the Security Council twice did so for a six-month period: first until 15 December 1984 and then until 15 June 1985 (see pp. 248 and 250).

Composition of UNFICYP. As at 30 November 1984, UNFICYP had a strength of 2,347, including 36 civilian police, and was composed of contingents from eight States (see table below).

During the year ended 12 December 1984, six members of the Force died, bringing the total of fatal casualties to 133 since the inception of UNFICYP in 1964.

UNFICYP financing

UNFICYP continued to be financed by voluntary contributions and by troop-contributing Governments. Contributions received in 1984 from 25 Governments totalled $9,041,300 (see table below). Estimated costs totalled $28.1 million which included the direct cost to the United Nations of maintaining the Force, as well as reimbursement by the United Nations of some of the extra costs of Governments providing contingents. The full 12-month cost of the Force was estimated at approximately $100.5 million—excluding regular troops' pay and allowances and normal matériel costs—much of which was borne by the troop contributors.

As at 15 December 1984, the accumulated deficit from the operation's inception in 1964 stood at $123.1 million. Because of that deficit, payments to troop-contributing Governments (which had been absorbing costs in the order of $36.2 million every six-month period) had been made to meet claims only up to December 1977; the last such payment was made in January 1984.

On 27 June,<sup>(53)</sup> the Secretary-General wrote to all States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies, appealing further for voluntary contributions for the financing of UNFICYP.

He said that if his efforts to attain an overall solution of the Cyprus problem were to have a chance, it was essential to maintain peaceful conditions and the status quo in the island. In the light of the situation on the ground, the functions carried out by UNFICYP remained indispensable since the Force's presence and activities provided a measure of assurance that the current problems would not be allowed to affect the calm that continued to prevail in Cyprus.

He pointed out that the rate of accumulation of the deficit for UNFICYP was growing, since voluntary contributions in recent years ran at about $8.7 million each six-month period, while expenses had increased to between $14 million and $15 million each such period. Based on past practice, the troop-contributing countries would have to meet costs of $36.2 million in the current period. He therefore again urgently requested Governments to consider increasing their contributions or to begin making such contributions. He also hoped that the regular financial contributors to UNFICYP would at least maintain their contribution level.

The eight troop-contributing countries addressed two communications on the subject in 1984 to the Organization. By the first, dated 1 July to the President of the Security Council,<sup>(54)</sup> they pointed out that more than two thirds of the costs of the Force were met by those countries, while less than one third was financed voluntarily. Since claims, because of the deficit, had been met only through December 1977, they appealed for Governments to make or increase contributions, on a regular basis. In the second communication, dated 12 October to the Secretary-General,<sup>(55)</sup> the troop-contributing countries drew the attention of the General Assembly to their appeal.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya- United States dispute

In 1984, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in communications to the President of the Security Council or the Secretary-General, complained of various actions and threats by the United States. The Council met in March/April at the request of the Jamahiriya to consider the situation.

Communications (March). By a letter of 20 March,<sup>(1)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya drew the attention of the Security Council to what it termed the dangerousness of the situation currently prevailing on its eastern frontiers as a result of the aggressive practices of the United States which, it said, had exploited the deteriorating situation in the Sudan. On 18 March, the United States had sent two AWACS (Airborne Warning and Control System) espionage aircraft with a group of fighter aircraft to spy on Libyan territory and more were reportedly to be dispatched in the following few days.

On 22 March,<sup>(2)</sup> the Jamahiriya asked for an urgent meeting of the Council to consider what it described as the deteriorating situation resulting from hostile and provocative American acts directed against it.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (March/April)

Meeting at the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's request, the Security Council held three meetings, two on 28 March and one on 2 April.

Meeting numbers. SC 2522, 2523, 2526.

Invited to participate, at their request, without the right to vote were: Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Poland, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam. In accordance with rule 39<sup>d</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, also invited was the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, as requested by the Upper Volta on 28 March.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said the Council was considering a dangerous, explosive situation resulting from United States harassment, which could cause a deterioration in the region, threatening international peace and security. The reasons for the differences existing between the two countries were not new, but dated back to the first days of the Libyan revolution, prior to which it had been among the protectorates of the United States, with five military bases on Libyan territory and monopolistic exploitation of its oil. With the establishment of the Jamahiriya, the United States began an economic blockade and military harassment. Acts of aggression continued because of the Jamahiriya's stand on the Palestinian question. The United States hostile policy in the region, based on support for the Zionist entity and occupation, had most recently been manifested in the dispatch of AWACS aircraft and the United States shamelessly admitted that they were sent to spy on the Jamahiriya. There was no problem between the two countries as such; it was a problem between the Arab nations and the United States.

The United States said the AWACS were not aggressive weapons or instruments of violence but effective observers, and were dispatched at the request of the Sudan after it claimed that it had been attacked by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (see p. 185). United States actions were wholly consistent with international law and provisions of the Charter. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's neighbours had a right to defend themselves and their friends had a right to help as long as such actions were consistent with those instruments.

The Sudan said that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had launched an air raid against Omdurman (near the Sudanese capital), the facts of which had been presented to the Council on 27 March. The Libyan complaint had been lodged immediately after a Sudanese complaint to the Council in order to divert attention from the aggression against the Sudan, which had turned to friendly sister countries for the means to defend its territory, in exercise of its legitimate rights.

The majority of the other speakers supported the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Most saw the United States actions as part of a link in a chain representing an aggressive policy in other regions of the world. They saw a connection between the reasons for the Libyan complaint and the debate in the Council on the Sudanese complaint against Libya, with some suggesting that the charge had been trumped up to cover up the dispatch of United States military matériel. There were suggestions that the problems between the Sudan and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya should be resolved by resort to regional organizations and the use of their good offices.

The Syrian Arab Republic said it was concerned at threats represented in respect United States military movements and provocations designed to create a climate conducive to aggression against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which was but one more link in the global chain of aggressive acts by the United States against the peoples of Asia, Africa and Central America. Malta spoke similarly and added that the Mediterranean should be transformed into a zone of security and peace, free from outside interference, with the riparian countries assuming their rightful role as arbiters of their own destiny.

The USSR said that United States actions in the region could not be seen in isolation from the general policies of imperialist forces seeking hegemony in international affairs or from their world-wide intention to employ territorial and military methods. Likewise, Hungary said that the real aim of the United States in north Africa, as it was in many parts of the world, was to strengthen its position and to increase its military presence.

Viet Nam, referring to allegations of a Libyan bombing raid on the Sudan, felt it was a carefully contrived scenario to make it easier for the United States to put into effect its own belligerent decisions. Cuba agreed, adding that the United States had devised a fable to send in AWACS spy planes.

Poland felt that the United States was again arrogating to itself the right to judge the conduct of others; there was continuing escalation of military and political pressure aimed at the independent and anti-imperialist policy of a non-aligned State. The German Democratic Republic felt that the United States policies were also directed against socialist States to divert attention from dangers arising from the stationing of medium-range missiles in Western Europe, a few hundred miles from the Libyan coast—an action which Mongolia saw as an ominous sign. Ethiopia believed that the military preparations under way went beyond the defence needs of States in the region and, coupled with active military intervention by the United States, was of grave concern; the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Sudan should settle their differences bilaterally or through the regional organizations of which they were members without the intervention of extra-regional Powers.

The Ukrainian SSR noted that the United States rapid deployment force covered a considerable part of the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf and 19 States of the Near East and north Africa—a threat also directly affecting the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Iran said a general picture of the criminal record of the United States could be seen from the Council's records of the past two years; that country's foreign policy was behind every international problem in the Middle East.

Bulgaria said another attempt was being made by imperialist forces to destabilize the Arab world and exert pressure on those who opposed new colonialist machinations and Zionist acts of aggression; the current campaign was a link in the same chain as the United States shellings of Lebanon, United States marines in Lebanon and Grenada, and aggressive actions against Nicaragua, Cuba and in the Horn of Africa. The Lao People's Democratic Republic felt there was every reason to believe that the United States Administration was now eyeing the Libyan people as a target in its ambition for world hegemony.

Nicaragua said the United States did not wish to understand that such revolutions as those of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Nicaragua would not be defeated by force. Afghanistan believed that a false and fundamentally distorted image was being drawn of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and its foreign policy.

Czechoslovakia saw the problem as within the context of efforts by imperialist forces, headed by the United States, to regain supremacy over the nations of Africa, to limit their sovereignty and independence and to make them docile in keeping with neo-colonialist behaviour.

Further communications. On 2 May,<sup>(4)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya addressed a letter to the President of the Security Council, drawing attention to a 29 April United States statement which was said to reflect that country's efforts to pressure other nations to undertake aggressive actions against the Libyan people as well as being a prelude to United States aggression. In a 12 July letter to the President,<sup>(5)</sup> the Jamahiriya pointed to what it said were dangerous statements by the United States Secretary of State in which he threatened measures against what he called the terrorism league, which he said included the Jamahiriya.

In a letter to the Secretary-General of 30 July,<sup>(6)</sup> the Jamahiriya said a grave situation had been created by the violation of its airspace by 164 United States military aircraft of the Sixth Fleet on 26 July.

In a letter of 6 December to the Secretary-General,<sup>(7)</sup> the Jamahiriya said it had learned that the United States was preparing military aggression against it in the next few months, with a special unit of American marines being trained to occupy Tripoli; Newsweek magazine was also cited regarding certain possible actions against the Jamahiriya, which added that, on 5 and 7 November, the United States had conducted naval manoeuvres near Libyan frontiers.

Several other 1984 communications also dealt with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya-United States dispute (see below).

International security of the Mediterranean countries

In 1984, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly the views of Governments concerning the strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region. The Assembly reaffirmed that Mediterranean security was closely linked with European security and with international peace and security. It urged all States to co-operate with the Mediterranean States in further efforts to reduce tension and promote peace, security and co-operation in the region in accordance with the Charter and the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>(1)</sup>

By a letter of 24 January,<sup>(2)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya recalled that the United States had in December 1983 extended for a further year a ban on the use of its passports for travel to the Jamahiriya, alleging that there had been acts of intimidation against United States nationals and that the Jamahiriya was a zone hazardous to the general health of those travellers. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya rejected the allegations, stating that the World Health Organization had reported that the country was free from all contagious disease and in the forefront of States providing free health services.

On 21 September,<sup>(3)</sup> Malta circulated the Final Declaration adopted at the first meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the Mediterranean members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Valletta, 10 and 11 September), which stated that the meeting was a step of major political significance aimed at transforming the Mediterranean into a region of peace, security and co-operation. The Ministers noted with concern growing bloc confrontation; found the Middle East problem to be a major threat to regional and international peace and security; and expressed concern at United States provocations against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

Chapter IX

Middle East

The search for a peaceful settlement to the conflict in the Middle East and its key issue, the Palestine problem, continued in 1984. The General Assembly, the Security Council and several other United Nations bodies considered various aspects of the situation, including the Palestine question, incidents and disputes between individual Arab States and Israel, the situation in Lebanon and in the territories occupied by Israel, and Palestine refugees. The United Nations continued to maintain two major peace-keeping operations in the region, the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL).

By resolution 39/146 A, the Assembly dealt with a variety of issues related to the Middle East situation. It declared once more that peace in the region must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution under United Nations auspices, and reaffirmed that it could not be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO).

The question of Palestine continued to be a concern of the Assembly and its Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. Following consideration of the Committee's report, the Assembly, in December, adopted four resolutions on the question. It requested the Committee to keep that question under review as well as the implementation of the 1983 Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights (resolution 39/49 A); it invited co-operation with the United Nations Secretariat's Division for Palestinian Rights (39/49 B); it requested expansion of United Nations public information activities on the question (39/49 C); and it reaffirmed its endorsement of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East (39/49 D). The Secretary-General reported in March 1984 on consultations held on issues relating to the organization of such a conference, particularly the identification of participants. Member States expressed their views in a number of communications. The status of Jerusalem was the subject of Assembly resolution 39/146 C.

Assistance to Palestinians was rendered by the United Nations Development Programme and other organs. The United Nations Children's Fund supported programmes for Palestinian children and mothers in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, as well as in territories occupied by Israel. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1984/56, and the Assembly, in resolution 39/224, requested United Nations organizations to intensify such assistance and provide it in co-operation with PLO and with the consent of the Arab host countries. Both resolutions pointed out the need to ensure that aid to Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied territories was not used for the interests of the occupation authorities.

The 1981 bombing by Israeli aircraft of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad, Iraq, was again taken up by the Assembly in resolution 39/14, following consideration of a brief report by the Secretary-General.

The situation in Lebanon, particularly in Beirut, was taken up by the Security Council in February; because of the negative vote of a permanent Council member (USSR), it did not adopt a draft resolution by France to constitute a United Nations force in the Beirut area. The Council also met in May following reports of an Israeli search operation at the Ein El-Helweh Palestinian refugee camp near Sidon. After Lebanon came to the Council in August to complain about Israeli practices in southern Lebanon, the western Bekaa Valley and the Rashaya district, the Council again convened in August/September but, due to the negative vote of the United States—a permanent member—did not adopt a Lebanese draft calling on Israel to respect the rights of civilians in those areas and demanding that it lift its restrictions—which included the closing of roads and the imposing of curfews—so that normal life could be restored. Responding to the Council's request, the Secretary-General's continued consultations with Lebanon and others resulted in the beginning, in November, of military talks between Lebanon and Israel on the withdrawal of the latter's forces.

The mandate of UNIFIL was extended twice during the year, in April and October, by Security Council resolutions 549(1984) and 555(1984). Also renewed was the mandate of UNDOF, by Council resolutions 551(1984) and 557(1984), adopted in May and November. Appropriations for the operation of UNDOF from 1 June 1984 to 31 May 1985, totalling more than $35 million, were made by the Assembly in resolution 39/28 A. For the UNIFIL operation from 19 April 1984 to 18 April 1985, the Assembly appropriated $141 million, by resolution 39/71 A. In view of the difficult financial situation of UNIFIL caused by withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the Assembly, by resolution 39/71 B, authorized suspension of certain provisions of the United Nations Financial Regulations to enable the Force to retain a "surplus balance" of $6 million. A similar procedure was approved for UNDOF, regarding a "surplus" of nearly $5 million, by resolution 39/28 B.

As the last revision of standard rates of reimbursement to countries which contributed troops to both peace-keeping forces had taken place in 1980, the Assembly, by resolution 39/70, requested the Secretary-General to review the existing rates with a view to ensuring an equitable reimbursement.

The situation in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of earlier armed conflicts was again considered by the Assembly and its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories. In December, the Assembly adopted seven resolutions dealing with specific aspects of the Committee's report, including Israeli action against the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the Sharia Judge of Hebron (39/95 E), applicability of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (39/95 B), and the status and composition of Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 (39/95 C). The Assembly condemned Israeli policies and practices in the Golan Heights (39/95 F), those taken against Palestinian students and faculties of educational institutions (39/95 G), and a number of others, demanding that Israel desist from such practices (39/95 D). It also demanded information from Israel on the results of investigations of assassination attempts against three Palestinian mayors in 1980 (39/95 H).

Also under the agenda item on the Committee's report, the Assembly reiterated its demand for the release of the Palestinian Ziyad Abu Eain and other prisoners held in southern Lebanon (39/95 A).

Israeli occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, as well as its policies and practices there, was also condemned by the Assembly in resolution 39/146 A. The Security Council, expressing concern about legislation on settlement activities under consideration in the Israeli parliament, urged that no measures be taken to aggravate tensions in the area.

The refugee problem continued to dominate the activities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), which carried out both emergency relief measures and regular support operations. The Assembly addressed various aspects of the problem in 11 resolutions adopted in December. Resolution 39/99 A dealt with assistance to Palestine refugees and resolution 39/99 B with the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA. Related resolutions covered assistance to displaced persons (39/99 C), scholarships for higher education and vocational training (39/99 D), Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip (39/99 E), ration distribution to Palestine refugees (39/99 F), population displaced since 1967 (39/99 G), revenues from refugee properties (39/99 H), refugee protection (39/99 I), refugees in the West Bank (39/99 J) and a proposed University of Jerusalem for Palestine refugees (39/99 K).

Middle East situation

---

The Arab-Israeli conflict in the Middle East remained unresolved despite intensive efforts by the United Nations and individual Member States. In a 26 October 1984 report,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General noted that the continued stalemate in the region had also had adverse effects on the authority and status of the United Nations itself. The conflict, which involved complex interrelated issues, could ultimately be resolved only by a comprehensive settlement covering all its aspects. That fact, he stated, needed to be kept in mind by the parties concerned, since all the agreements reached in the past, whether within or outside the United Nations framework, were clearly intended as interim steps in the search for a comprehensive peace. A comprehensive settlement would have to meet the following conditions: the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from the occupied territories; respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries, free from threats or acts of force; and a just settlement of the Palestinian question based on recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including self-determination. In that context, the Jerusalem question also remained of primary importance. A comprehensive settlement would have to be reached through a process of negotiation in which all parties concerned participated; in addition, the support of the major Powers, especially the USSR and the United States, was essential. Those requirements could best be met, in the Secretary-General's view, if negotiations were undertaken under United Nations auspices.

The various responses to the proposal for a Middle East peace conference exemplified many of the basic problems that since 1948 had hampered all attempts to negotiate a just and lasting settlement, he said. There had always been the question of whether talks should be direct, or indirect through some intermediary; there was the question of whether negotiations should be between Israel and its Arab neighbours one on one, or conducted by all the parties concerned; there was the question of whether the negotiating process should be comprehensive or step by step; and there was the controversy over the manner in which the Palestinian people should be represented. In the light of consultations he had held, the Secretary-General stated, it was evident that the conditions required for convening the proposed conference with any chance of success had not yet been met (see also p. 263).

The United Nations had a special obligation to make another determined effort to move forward to a negotiated peace in the Middle East. What was needed was a framework for negotiations and an umbrella under which the necessary contacts could develop. It should be possible to devise a negotiating process acceptable to all the parties concerned on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967)<sup>(2)</sup> and 338(1973),<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General believed. During 1984, he had discussed with a number of Governments concerned the possibility of using the Security Council's machinery in a new way to work with the parties on various aspects of the Middle East problem and to distil from the various proposals and plans put forward in recent years the common elements that could help to work out the basis of a negotiating structure. In June, he had visited Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic to discuss with their leaders various aspects of the Middle East problem. In July, he had met with the Chairman of the PLO Executive Committee at Geneva.

In his 1984 report on the work of the Organization (p. 3), the Secretary-General stated that reactions to his ideas and suggestions with regard to the Middle East problem had been mixed. There was a tendency in the direction of bilateral or unilateral action, or no action at all; however, the conflict, like many other disputes around the globe, required the building of a wide consensus if solutions were to hold.

Communications. In connection with the Middle East situation, several communications were addressed during the year to the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council and to the Secretary-General. By a letter of 16 January,<sup>(4)</sup> Israel drew the Secretary-General's attention to what it called an upsurge of anti-Semitism in recent years at the United Nations, particularly evident, it said, in statements made in the Assembly by the Byelorussian SSR, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Syrian Arab Republic.

On 29 March,<sup>(5)</sup> France transmitted declarations adopted on 27 March by the 10 States members of the European Economic Community (EEC). The declaration on the Middle East called for negotiations towards a settlement guaranteeing peace among all the States of the region, stating the right to existence and security of all of them, including Israel, and taking into account the rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to self-determination. The declaration requested all parties to re-examine their positions with a view to reducing the gap between them, taking particularly into account elements in the 1982 plan proposed by the United States President<sup>(6)</sup> and in the Fez Declaration adopted the same year at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference.<sup>(7)</sup> The EEC members said they would support any constructive step and believed that the Security Council could play a significant role in the pursuit of a solution to the Middle East conflict.

By a letter of 30 July,<sup>(8)</sup> the USSR submitted proposals dated 29 July for a Middle East settlement based on the following principles: inadmissibility of the capture of foreign lands through aggression; guarantee of the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to establish their own independent State on the West Bank of the Jordan River and in the Gaza Strip; return of the Palestinian refugees to their homes or compensation for the property they left behind; return of East Jerusalem to the Arabs to become part of the Palestinian State, with freedom of access throughout Jerusalem ensured to the three religions; guarantee of the right of all States in the region to secure and independent existence and development; respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all parties, including Israel and the Palestinian State; and international guarantees, for example by the Security Council or its permanent members. In order to reach such a settlement, the USSR reiterated the proposal to convene an international conference with all the parties to the conflict participating (see p. 265).

On 2 May,<sup>(9)</sup> the Niger, as President of the Thirteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, transmitted to the Secretary-General a communiqué issued following a co-ordination meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 10 October 1983), which discussed various aspects of the Middle East situation and the Palestine question. On 12 October,<sup>(10)</sup> Bangladesh, serving in that capacity for the Fourteenth Conference, transmitted a communiqué of the co-ordination meeting held in New York on 4 October, listing Israel's rejection of all initiatives aimed at a Middle East settlement as one issue of their concern.

Different aspects of the Middle East situation and the Palestine question were dealt with in seven resolutions adopted by the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference (Casablanca, Morocco, 16-19 January). Those and other resolutions were transmitted to the Secretary-General by Morocco on 13 March.<sup>(11)</sup> The fifth session of the Supreme Council of the Co-operation Council for the Arab States of the Gulf (Kuwait, 27-29 November), in its final communiqué, also addressed various aspects of the Middle East situation. The communiqué was transmitted to the Secretary-General by Kuwait on 14 December.<sup>(12)</sup>

Report of the Secretary-General. On 2 October 1984,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on implementation of four resolutions<sup>(14)</sup> it had adopted in December 1983 under the agenda item on the Middle East situation. In reply to requests of 15 and 16 March 1984, he had received information from 13 Member States: Afghanistan, Botswana, Bulgaria, China, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Mozambique, Poland, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, Venezuela, Viet Nam. Israel's reply of 28 August addressed only the resolution<sup>(15)</sup> calling on Israel to make restitution of all cultural property, seized by Israeli forces, belonging to Palestinian institutions in Lebanon (see p. 304).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/146 A, under the agenda item on the situation in the Middle East.

The General Assembly,
Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 F of 20 December 1982 and 38/180 A to D of 19 December 1983,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, 497(1981) of 17 December 1981, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 512(1982) of 19 June 1982, 513(1982) of 4 July 1982, 515(1982) of 29 July 1982, 516(1982) of 1 August 1982, 517(1982) of 4 August 1982, 518(1982) of 12 August 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, 521(1982) of 19 September 1982 and 555(1984) of 12 October 1984,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 13 March 1984, 13 September 1984, 2 October 1984 and 26 October 1984,

Welcoming the world-wide support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation in order to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by previous resolutions of the General Assembly relating to the question of Palestine and to the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned that the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, still remain under Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations have not been implemented and that the Palestinian people is still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law, as reaffirmed by resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to all the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Reiterating all relevant United Nations resolutions which emphasize that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law and that Israel must withdraw unconditionally from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Reaffirming further the imperative necessity of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter and the principles of international law,

Gravely concerned also at the continuing Israeli actions involving the escalation and expansion of the conflict in the region, which further violate the principles of international law and endanger international peace and security,

Stressing the great importance of the time factor in the endeavours to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the question of Palestine is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories;

2. Reaffirms further that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people;

3. Declares once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem, under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of relevant resolutions of the United Nations, which ensures the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and which enables the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to exercise its inalienable rights, including the right to return and the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of its independent sovereign State in Palestine, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relevant to the question of Palestine, in particular General Assembly resolutions ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 36/120 A to F of 10 December 1981, 37/86 A to D of 10 December 1982, 37/86 E of 20 December 1982 and 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983;

4. Considers the Arab Peace Plan adopted unanimously at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, as an important contribution towards the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

5. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and demands the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the territories occupied since June 1967;

6. Rejects all agreements and arrangements which violate the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of a just and comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;

7. Deplores Israel's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980 and General Assembly resolutions 35/207 of 16 December 1980 and 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981, determines that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to declare it as its "capital" as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status are null and void and demands that they be rescinded immediately, and calls upon all Member States, the specialized agencies and all other international organizations to abide by the present resolution and all other relevant resolutions and decisions;

8. Condemns Israel's aggression, policies and practices against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories and outside these territories, particularly Palestinians in Lebanon, including the expropriation and annexation of territory, the establishment of settlements, assassination attempts and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures, which are in violation of the Charter and the principles of international law and the relevant international conventions;

9. Strongly condemns the imposition by Israel of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights, its annexationist policies and practices, the establishment of settlements, the confiscation of lands, the diversion of water resources and the imposition of Israeli citizenship on Syrian nationals, and declares that all these measures are null and void and constitute a violation of the rules and principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

10. Considers that the agreements on strategic cooperation between the United States of America and Israel signed on 30 November 1981, together with the recent accords concluded in this context, would encourage Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, would have adverse effects on efforts for the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and would threaten the security of the region;

11. Calls upon all States to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic and financial aid, as well as of human resources, aimed at encouraging it to pursue its aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people;

12. Strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration between Israel and the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, which constitutes a hostile act against the African and Arab States and enables Israel to enhance its nuclear capabilities, thus subjecting the States of the region to nuclear blackmail;

13. Reaffirms its call for the convening of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East—as specified in paragraph 5 of the Geneva Declaration on Palestine, adopted on 7 September 1983 by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine—under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a comprehensive report covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 69 to 39, with 26 abstentions, adopted paragraph 10. This followed rejection, by 69 votes to 28, with 23 abstentions, of a motion by the United States that the draft, as well as one on the Syrian Golan Heights (see p. 323), were "recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and secu-city", within the meaning of that phrase as it appeared in Article 18, paragraph 2, of the Charter.

Explaining the motion, the United States said that under Article 18 (2) there was no freedom for the Assembly to decide the matter one way or the other, since the Article required a two-thirds vote on certain issues, among them recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security. As the text to be adopted called for commencing a peace conference, and spoke of efforts to establish peace and of threats to international security, it clearly fell under the provisions of Article 18 (2).

Democratic Yemen called on the Assembly President to ask the United Nations Legal Counsel to clarify the matter.

In the view of the Legal Counsel, a decision on the text fell into the category of decisions mentioned in Article 18 (2) requiring a two-thirds majority for adoption.

Iran interpreted the meaning of the contested references in the text as general references to peace and not as decisions on peace or war. The Syrian Arab Republic charged that, through its motion, the United States wanted to abort the resolution to allow Israel to shirk its international responsibility. Jordan remarked that the 1947 resolution<sup>(16)</sup> by which the United Nations had established Israel had been adopted by only a simple majority.

Iraq considered that, if the motion was adopted, either past resolutions with language similar to the proposed draft were null and void or a practice would be instituted that ran counter to 39 years of Assembly procedure for adopting resolutions. In a similar vein, Saudi Arabia felt that a vote on the text as being in the category of an important resolution would set a very wrong precedent. Supporting Iraq's and Saudi Arabia's position, Oman called for a vote on the motion.

Also declaring its opposition to the United States motion, Austria expressed concern about the trend to change the established practice of decision-making to suit particular political interests, a tendency which, it believed, could undermine the Assembly's role and functioning. Australia, on the other hand, voted in favour of the motion on the basis of the opinion of the Legal Counsel and its own reading of Article 18 (2).

Israel remarked that, by rejecting the motion, the Assembly had said that the phrase "international peace and security" did not mean international peace and security, and had decreed that the Middle East situation, with all the attendant resolutions condemning Israel, was not an important issue. Israel rejected the draft that became resolution 39/146 A, saying its purpose was to impede a peaceful solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict; especially outrageous were paragraphs 10 and 11, which suggested that war could and should be waged against Israel through the use of United Nations machinery.

The United States opposed the text on the grounds that it was unfair, unbalanced, prejudicial, dysfunctional and made an unacceptable reference to the United States and the way it conducted its foreign policy, which was an unjustified interference in its internal affairs and decision-making. Paragraph 10 considered that the co-operative agreements between the United States and Israel would encourage the latter to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies—a false, offensive and misleading statement. The United States had asked for a separate recorded vote on that paragraph so that corrective action could be taken and derogatory references removed. The United States believed that the basis for peace between Israel and its neighbours existed in Security Council resolutions 242(1967)<sup>(2)</sup> and 338(1973),<sup>(3)</sup> which called for direct negotiations and secure borders for all States in the region. It reiterated its opposition to an international conference on the Middle East, saying that any possibility of such a conference was undermined by resolutions like the one under consideration; it was inconsistent and unproductive to accuse a State of being non-peace-loving and in the same breath urge it to attend a conference devoted to a search for peace.

Explaining the negative votes of the 10 member States of the European Community (EC), Ireland said they had serious reservations on aspects of the text, and had repeatedly stressed the need for resolutions to adopt a balanced approach. Australia said it could not support the text because it emphasized the rights of one party to the conflict to the detriment of the rights of another and failed to guarantee Israel's right to exist within secure and recognized boundaries; also, it should have reaffirmed resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) as essential elements for a settlement. Norway felt that the text did not reflect the mutual balance between the interests of the parties that was necessary to achieve a Middle East peace; the basic elements of a peaceful settlement were contained in the Council's resolutions of 1967 and 1973, and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace must take into account the legitimate national rights of the Palestinians, including their right to self-determination. New Zealand was disappointed that the text did not adequately reflect the balance of principles embodied in the 1967 resolution and felt that the text was not well calculated to contribute to a negotiated settlement.

Venezuela abstained; in its view, certain paragraphs did not contribute to the achievement of peace and could cause a delay in settling the Middle East problem. Portugal dissociated itself from any initiative having discriminatory or juridical implications that would make more difficult a dialogue on which a peaceful solution should be based. Austria could not support a number of provisions; in particular, it did not believe that breaking relations with Israel would bring a solution closer and it opposed singling out particular countries for criticism. Similarly, Honduras did not consider the singling out of countries a justifiable practice and could not support selective measures incompatible with diplomatic and consular relations it had with other States.

Malawi also abstained, convinced that there was still sufficient room for a just and amicable solution through negotiation. Spain supported the essential elements for a solution to the Middle East problem as set out in the text, but believed acceptance of the 1982 Fez plan<sup>(7)</sup> and the planned conference should not exclude other possible means of bringing about a peaceful solution; it could not support paragraphs 10, 11 and 12.

Reservations on certain formulations were voiced by the Philippines, which voted in favour but added that, for resolutions on the Middle East to contribute to peace efforts, they should be balanced and not prejudice the sovereign right of States to conduct their international affairs as they saw fit. With regard to a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement, the Philippines said it should be achieved on the basis of: Israeli withdrawal from occupied territories; recognition of the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and an independent homeland; and participation of the Palestinians, through PLO, in peace negotiations. The Philippines, as well as Bolivia, Brazil and Singapore, also considered that such a settlement must recognize the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized boundaries, free from threats or acts of force.

Ecuador did not agree with the wording of some paragraphs which, it felt, detracted from the principle of universality of the United Nations; also, it believed that decisions that were prerogatives of sovereign States should under no circumstances be subordinated to decisions or exhortations from third parties or international organizations. Togo said it did not defend agreements to which it was not a party, but did not wish to attack them either. Argentina had reservations on some paragraphs, in particular 6, 10 and 11 containing statements critical of efforts made to achieve peace in the region. Reservations on the same paragraphs were expressed by Peru, which believed that they did not fully recognize the importance of initiatives for peace in the region and that references to relations between States were strictly linked to the Palestine question as the central problem, to respect for Palestinian rights and to the need to reject and avoid policies or acts which would infringe the objective of bringing about a Middle East settlement. Peru also would have liked to see an explicit reference to resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973). Nepal considered those resolutions to be the only realistic basis for a settlement and reserved its position on paragraphs 10 and 11. Mexico said that, had there been a separate vote on paragraph 6, it would have abstained. Albania had reservations on some provisions, such as paragraph 13.

Greece declared that its positive vote was determined by its attachment to the Charter principle in Article 2, paragraph 4 (stating that Member States were to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State), as well as to principles of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed on 1 August 1975 at Helsinki, Finland.

Singapore said it could only add its voice to those calling for a halt to hostilities and for a renewed effort to seek a negotiated settlement.

Iran regarded paragraph 4 as unacceptable, saying it was a continuation or version of the Camp David conspiracy; in its view, there was no distinction between the territories occupied before and since 1967, and the solution to the problem of Palestine and the Middle East was simply the united Islamic front. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated its reservations about any reference that could be interpreted as its recognition of the Zionist entity or a legitimization of a fait accompli imposed by force.

Proposed peace conference

In 1984, the General Assembly reaffirmed its endorsement of the convening of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East, as called for by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine.<sup>(17)</sup> The Secretary-General, in March 1984, reported on consultations held on issues relevant to organizing and convening the proposed conference, including the question of identification of participants. Member States expressed their views on the convening of such a conference in a number of communications.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 13 March 1984,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on implementation of a December 1983 Assembly resolution<sup>(19)</sup> endorsing the call for the convening of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East. He stated that on 5 January, he had addressed a letter to the President of the Security Council suggesting that the following Governments and authorities could be invited to participate in the conference: the 15 Council members; non-members directly involved in the Arab-Israeli conflict, namely Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic; and PLO.

After stating in an interim reply of 30 January that further consultations were necessary, the Council President on 27 February had informed the Secretary-General that he had completed consultations with all the Council members. Their views, he said, reflected their varying positions on the proposed conference, without infringing on the Secretary-General's freedom to continue consultations in any manner he deemed appropriate. Letters to those the Secretary-General suggested could be invited would not constitute invitations; the identification of participants would be a subject for consultations.

Following his own consultations with the Council, the Secretary-General, on 9 March, had addressed letters to the 19 Governments and PLO which he felt could be invited, to ascertain their views on all issues relevant to organizing and convening the proposed conference, including the question of participants.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report was a letter of 13 January from the United States saying it had voted against the Assembly resolution endorsing the holding of a conference, as it had opposed the 1983 Conference on the Palestine question where the idea had originated. The only path to peace in the Middle East lay in negotiations among the parties based on Council resolutions 242(1967)<sup>(2)</sup> and 338(1973),<sup>(3)</sup> a process which the United States had sought consistently to encourage. An international conference as recommended by the Assembly would only hinder that process; the conference would predictably become a forum for propagandistic and extreme positions, and, in the context proposed by the Assembly and further articulated by the Secretary-General, it would very likely yield a one-sided outcome not acceptable to one or more of the parties and therefore inoperable. The United States had no intention of participating in such a conference or any preparatory activities for it.

In an addendum of 13 September,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that 18 Governments and PLO had sent replies to his letter of 9 March (see below). The United States had reaffirmed the position set forth in its letter of 13 January. From the replies received and the discussions held, it was evident that the convening of a conference would require, in the first place, the agreement in principle of the parties directly concerned to participate, as well as that of the two States specifically mentioned in the December 1983 resolution—the USSR and the United States. Once such agreement existed, further consideration could more constructively be given to finalizing other related issues, such as the full list of participants, the conference date and an agenda. From the replies of Israel and the United States it was clear that they were not prepared to participate. The Secretary-

General said he would continue to follow the question closely and keep Member States informed of any further developments.

In its reply of 27 April, annexed to the addendum, PLO agreed with the view that the Governments directly involved in the conflict were Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic and that PLO was also an "authority" directly involved; however, it was not its understanding that the provision for the agreement with the plan of action should be sought from the Council, as the Assembly's resolution only called for consultation with the Council so that the Secretary-General might undertake preparatory measures to convene the conference. PLO disagreed with the United States that the holding of a conference would only hinder the path to peace; it was clear that the United States planned to undermine and foreclose the option of a process within a United Nations framework. PLO trusted that the Secretary-General would maintain his contacts and endeavours with the aim that a peace conference be held within that framework; it suggested that he consider a visit to the area to make contacts with the parties involved in the conflict and to assess personally the gravity of the situation and the urgency of convening such a conference.

Communications. Several communications were received in reply to the Secretary-General's inquiries. In a letter of 19 April,<sup>(21)</sup> the United Kingdom expressed the belief that at the right time an international conference could make a major contribution to a negotiated solution, with possible Security Council involvement in providing guarantees for a peace settlement; however, the United Kingdom did not favour the convening of a conference currently, saying it must be for the principal interested parties themselves to agree on its timing and basis. The gap between them remained wide, not only on modalities but also on fundamental points of principle. It was necessary to establish further common ground between the parties before a conference was likely to be productive.

Similar views were expressed by France and the Netherlands. France, in a letter of 27 April,<sup>(22)</sup> said it considered that an international conference might have a reasonable chance of success and contribute to the search for a comprehensive settlement if elements of a settlement were first assembled through discussions among the parties concerned and if there was agreement among them on participation. The Netherlands, by a letter of 23 April,<sup>(23)</sup> said it would welcome further consultations by the Secretary-General with the principal parties, aimed at establishing common ground to enable them to enter into genuine negotiations. The principles for a Middle East settlement were not adequately reflected in the December 1983 Assembly resolution.<sup>(19)</sup> In order to be successful, the peace process should be in accordance with resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and with the principles of the right to existence and security of all States in the region, including Israel, and justice for all the peoples in the region, including recognition of the right of the Palestinians to self-determination.

By a letter of 24 April,<sup>(24)</sup> China stated its support for the convening of a conference, with the participation of PLO on an equal footing.

Israel, on 26 April,<sup>(25)</sup> reiterated its position that any serious attempt to advance the cause of peace in the Middle East must be initiated through direct negotiations based on resolution 242(1967), which had already proved effective in bringing about the 1978 Camp David accords (framework for peace in the Middle East and for the conclusion of a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel, agreed at Camp David, United States)<sup>(26)</sup> and the 1979 Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty;<sup>(27)</sup> the 1983 Assembly resolution was contrary to both the accords and the Council resolution.

On 27 April,<sup>(28)</sup> Egypt transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of 26 April from its Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, enclosing a reply to the Secretary-General's letter of 9 March. Egypt believed that the convening of a conference would constitute a major turning-point towards a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem and its core, the Palestine question, within the framework of observance of reciprocal rights and obligations under the Charter, United Nations resolutions, and international law and treaties. Egypt called on the Secretary-General to hold consultations and exert every effort to ensure participation of the parties to the conflict and suitable arrangements and conditions for constructive negotiations within the framework of the United Nations.

The Upper Volta, in a letter of 27 April,<sup>(29)</sup> reiterated its support for a conference and for the Secretary-General's proposals on participation, adding that the significance of the conference depended primarily on the effective participation of PLO and the great Powers; participation should be extended to include all countries of the Middle East, and they should be closely associated with efforts to seek a peaceful solution to the conflict.

By a letter of 28 April,<sup>(30)</sup> the USSR stated that the experience of many years had demonstrated that peace could be restored only through collective efforts by all the parties interested in reaching a settlement, including PLO. With the help of an international conference, the chain of dangerous crises and wars in the Middle East could be broken and the people guaranteed peace. The problems of participation should be considered later, when practical steps had been taken to convene the conference; the main task was to eliminate artificial barriers and to have everyone concerned agree in principle to its being convened. The United Nations and the Secretary-General could contribute effectively to achieving a general agreement on the need to arrive at a comprehensive solution through collective efforts.

On 30 July,<sup>(8)</sup> the USSR submitted proposals dated 29 July on a Middle East settlement. These included the convening of an international conference under United Nations auspices, the outcome of which should be the signing of a treaty embracing the following: withdrawal of Israeli troops from all Arab territories occupied since 1967; implementation of the national rights of the Arab people of Palestine, including its right to create its own State; and establishment of peace and ensuring security and independent development of all States parties to the conflict. Simultaneously, international guarantees for compliance with such a settlement should be adopted. Among those having the right to participate in the conference, the USSR named Israel and all the States having a common border with it, i.e. Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, as well as PLO, the USSR and the United States, and possibly others.

Fully supporting the preparatory measures undertaken by the Secretary-General, Pakistan, by a letter of 30 April,<sup>(31)</sup> expressed the view that an international conference should be held without loss of time, with the aim of achieving a comprehensive settlement of the Palestine question, the core of the Middle East problem. Pakistan favoured participation on an equal footing with equal rights for all parties to the conflict, including PLO, as well as the United States, the USSR, the other permanent members of the Security Council and other concerned parties.

By a letter of the same date,<sup>(32)</sup> the Ukrainian SSR stated that an international conference would open the true way to solving the complex problems created by the Middle East conflict; if the artificial obstacles were eliminated, the essential conditions would be created for the convening of a conference.

India, also on 30 April,<sup>(33)</sup> stated its broad agreement with the Secretary-General's plan of action for the conference; however, it suggested that flexibility be retained in selecting the participants, which should include States directly involved (Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, Syrian Arab Republic); PLO; and the United States, the USSR and other States influential in the Middle East conflict, including the States that were members of the Security Council at the time formal invitations were issued.

Support for the Secretary-General's efforts for convening a conference with the participation of all interested parties was expressed by Peru in a letter of the same date.<sup>(34)</sup>

By a letter of 2 May,<sup>(35)</sup> Malta stated that the central objective of the proposed conference should be directed towards a peaceful and fair solution to the unacceptable plight of the homeless Palestinians; participation should initially be limited to those directly concerned, including the Council's permanent members. The outcome of such a conference should be endorsed unanimously by the international community; its recommendations, based on internationally recognized principles that had already been identified to apply to the Palestinian dimension within the Middle East complex, would therefore more likely be honoured and prevail, backed if necessary by guarantees provided by the Security Council.

The Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, by a letter of 4 May,<sup>(36)</sup> expressed the Committee's belief that the conference would mark an important step forward, and urged the co-operation of all concerned to ensure a positive outcome.

On 9 May,<sup>(37)</sup> Zimbabwe expressed support for a conference, but stated that it was mindful of the need to consult further to clarify the question of the participants.

By a letter of the same date,<sup>(38)</sup> Jordan voiced the opinion that the convening of an international conference was worth pursuing; its terms of reference should stem from the principles of international law, such as the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force. With regard to participation, Jordan concurred with the Secretary-General's list.

By a letter of 14 May,<sup>(39)</sup> Nicaragua again declared itself fully in favour of a conference, on the basis of broad and effective participation of all parties directly involved, among whom PLO occupied a place of primary importance, as did the great Powers and other interested States.

On 24 May,<sup>(40)</sup> Lebanon transmitted a government reply to the Secretary-General's letter of 9 March by which it agreed to participate in the conference. Being host to a large number of Palestinian refugees who awaited a just solution to their problem in accordance with United Nations resolutions, Lebanon was concerned with any effort made to bring about a just and comprehensive solution to the conflict in the region. It considered that the 1949 Israel-Lebanon General Armistice Agreement<sup>(41)</sup> was the legal text governing Lebanese-Israeli relations, as was stressed in a number of Security Council resolutions.

By a letter of 20 August,<sup>(42)</sup> the Syrian Arab Republic expressed its support for a conference and reaffirmed its readiness to contribute to the achievement of a just and comprehensive peace, on the basis of complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from all Arab territories occupied in and since June 1967 and the safeguarding of the national rights of the Palestinians, in accordance with United Nations resolutions.

In its final communiqué,<sup>(43)</sup> the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1984 session of the General Assembly stressed that every support should be extended to the Secretary-General to pursue his consultations for the convening of a conference. The Meeting, held in New York from 1 to 5 October, took note with appreciation of the role of the Non-Aligned Committee of Eight on Palestine in that regard and expressed its desire that the Committee pursue its endeavours.

Before voting on the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted, by recorded votes, paragraph 2, by 120 to 4, with 22 abstentions, and paragraph 3, by 96 to 18, with 29 abstentions.

Albania did not participate in the vote on the text as a whole, saying the aim of the USSR proposal to convene a conference was to consolidate its position in the Middle East in rivalry with the American imperialists and to secure a greater involvement there.

Speaking before the vote, Israel said the draft was not the first attempt to set guidelines that would sabotage the carefully balanced intent of Security Council resolution 242(1967), which was not even mentioned in the text. The expression of regret at unwillingness to attend a conference was utterly superfluous. The extremist thrust of the proposed conference was well known and it was perfectly legitimate for Israel to keep away from it.

The United States regarded the idea of an international conference under prejudicial conditions, whose outcome was already provided, as fatally flawed; the conference called for in the text would be an exercise in ideology and propaganda and in war by other means against Israel.

Speaking on behalf of the 10 members of EC, Ireland did not believe that paragraph 3, which singled out for criticism two of the proposed participants, was helpful or productive. Serious reservations on that paragraph were also voiced by Norway.

Australia considered it essential that the conference framework should not prescribe the outcome of negotiations among the parties on the elements of a Middle East settlement; the 1983 Assembly resolution<sup>(19)</sup> endorsing the convening of a conference had sought to make such a prescription. Australia refused to recognize PLO as long as PLO maintained its denial of Israel's right to exist; its vote against paragraph 2 reflected its opposition to the reference to the status of PLO, although it acknowledged that PLO represented the opinion of a significant portion of the Palestinians and should be included in the process of seeking a settlement.

While supporting in principle the idea of a conference, New Zealand said that, until all parties concerned were prepared to participate with realistic expectations of contributing to a settlement, it remained cautious about committing United Nations resources to it.

Explaining its abstention, Malawi said it opted for a political solution of the dispute through negotiations without pre-conditions.

Sweden regretted that it had not been possible to arrive at a consensus among the proposed participants of the conference, which was a necessary prerequisite for its convening; it could not be the resolution's intent to attempt to force Governments to come to a conference or convene one without their agreement to participate. Sweden's support for the text in no way implied that it would question the sovereign right of the Governments concerned to decide for themselves on their participation.

Finland recalled reservations it had voiced on the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted at the 1983 Conference on Palestine.<sup>(17)</sup>

Uruguay stressed that its affirmative vote was consistent with its constant concern to bring about peaceful solutions and with its participation in the consensus at the 1983 Conference.

Portugal reserved its position on the text because of the wording of paragraph 3, but in the same spirit that had motivated it during the formulation of the consensus achieved at the 1983 Conference, particularly with regard to the role given to various bilateral contacts likely to promote submission of proposals and establishment of conditions aimed at ensuring the success of such a conference.

Spain believed it to be the duty of the international community to leave no path to peace unexplored, adding that the convening of a conference should not be taken to exclude other peace plans.

Austria felt that an international conference, held under the right conditions and with good preparation, could contribute to progress towards a just and lasting solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Singapore regarded the text as a positive contribution to the search for such a solution.

Iran said it cast a positive vote on the text because it was against the Zionist base and would support any resolution that Palestinians considered in their favour. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reaffirmed its position, one of the basic elements of which was reservation concerning any reference that could be interpreted as expressing recognition of the Zionist entity or as ascribing legality to it.

In resolution 39/146 A on the Middle East situation, the Assembly reaffirmed its call for an International Peace Conference on the Middle East under United Nations auspices and on the basis of relevant United Nations resolutions.

Military co-operation with Israel

By a letter of 22 June 1984,<sup>(44)</sup> the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on behalf of the Arab Group of Member States at the United Nations, expressed concern over the commencement of joint United States/Israel military manoeuvres which, it charged, would increase Israel's military capability and contribute to its aggressive policy against the Arab countries and the Palestinians.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/146 A on the Middle East situation, the General Assembly called on all States to put an end to the flow of military, economic and financial aid and human resources to Israel aimed at encouraging it in its aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinians. In the same resolution, the Assembly also strongly condemned the continuing and increasing collaboration between Israel and South Africa (see p. 150).

Israeli nuclear armament was the subject of Assembly resolution 39/147. By resolution 39/54, the Assembly urged all parties concerned to consider seriously taking steps for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

Credentials of Israel

By a letter of 16 October 1984 to the General Assembly President,<sup>(45)</sup> 52 States conveyed their reservations on the credentials of Israel, citing instances where, they charged, Israel was continuing its flagrant and persistent violation of the United Nations Charter and international law, and flouting with impunity United Nations resolutions on the Palestine question and the Middle East situation.

On 17 October,<sup>(46)</sup> Israel responded that the gratuitous and unfounded attack on its credentials was an attempt to abuse the credentials procedure by introducing matters completely irrelevant to it. Aspersions cast on credentials which were in due form and had been accepted as such by the Credentials Committee violated the Charter; the underlying approach of the 52-Power letter was incompatible with the duty of Member States to use the United Nations as a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations. The letter further displayed contempt for the Assembly's rules of procedure and harmed the ability of the United Nations to perform its primary function: the maintenance of international peace and security.

Before adopting resolution 39/3 A approving the report of the Credentials Committee on 17 October, the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 80 to 41, with 22 abstentions, decided not to act on an amendment by Iran<sup>(47)</sup> to reject the credentials of Israel (see p. 376).

Palestine question

The question of Palestine continued in 1984 to be a concern of the General Assembly and its Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian rights). The Assembly, in December, adopted four resolutions on the question. By the first (39/49 A), it requested the Committee to keep under review the Palestine question as well as the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine.<sup>(1)</sup> By the second resolution (39/49 B), the Assembly invited co-operation with the United Nations Secretariat's Division for Palestinian Rights. By the third (39/49 C), it requested expanded United Nations public information activities on the Palestine question, and by the fourth (39/49 D), it reaffirmed its endorsement of the call for convening an International Peace Conference on the Middle East (see p. 266).

The status of Jerusalem was again dealt with by the Assembly in resolution 39/146 C. In communications, Israel was accused of trying to destroy Islamic Holy Places there; Israel charged PLO with terrorist attacks in the city.

United Nations bodies also continued to examine the situation in the Israeli-occupied territories (see p. 315) and to provide and encourage assistance to Palestinians (see p. 335).

Communications. On 15 March 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> Bangladesh transmitted to the Secretary-General a number of resolutions pertaining to the Palestine question adopted by the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, 6-11 December 1983).

On 7 August 1984,<sup>(3)</sup> Yemen transmitted a letter of 6 August from PLO expressing the approval by its Executive Committee of the proposals announced on 29 July by the USSR (see pp. 259 and 265), in particular basic principles of a Middle East settlement: all lands occupied by Israel since 1967 must be returned and all settlements established by Israel in those territories eliminated; the Palestinians had the rights to return, to self-determination and to establish their independent State on Palestinian land liberated from Israeli occupation; those rights would be guaranteed to the Palestinians, represented by PLO as their sole legitimate representative; the Palestinian State could define, after its establishment, the nature of its relations with the neighbouring countries, including the possibility of establishing a confederation; and East Jerusalem was to be a basic part of the Palestinian State.

Activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on Palestinian rights continued in 1984 to follow developments in the Israeli-occupied territories and actions by Israel which the Committee regarded as violations of international law or of United Nations resolutions. The Committee brought such actions, including Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, exploitation by Israeli authorities of Arab-owned lands and other matters affecting the rights of the Palestinians (for details, see p. 320) to the attention of the General Assembly and the Security Council.

In its annual report to the Assembly,<sup>(4)</sup> the Committee expressed its conviction that positive action by the Security Council on the recommendations made by the Committee in 1976<sup>(5)</sup> would advance prospects for a just and lasting peace in the Middle East; it recalled that those recommendations were founded on fundamental and internationally recognized principles relating to the Palestine problem, the core of the Middle East conflict. The Committee reiterated the validity of its recommendations and recommended that the Assembly again urge the Security Council to take positive and overdue action on them. It also reaffirmed the validity of the recommendations adopted by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Committee believed that it should consolidate its efforts to increase awareness and understanding of its recommendations which, it asserted, were specifically designed to enable the Palestinians to attain their inalienable rights as well as to achieve peace in the Middle East, with due regard for the concerns of all the parties to the conflict. It felt encouraged by the better understanding of those recommendations in all regions. The Committee believed that a concentrated effort to find a just solution to the Palestine question and to end the unacceptable plight of the Palestinians was long overdue. Convinced that an international peace conference on the Middle East (see p. 263) would provide an opportunity for all parties concerned to participate in negotiations which should lead to a just solution, the Committee strongly recommended that international action should concentrate on the preparations for the convening of a conference and should contribute to its successful and peaceful outcome.

Annexed to the Committee's report were its 1976 recommendations, endorsed by the Assembly the same year,<sup>(6)</sup> as well as the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, both adopted by the 1983 Conference on the Palestine question.

With the Committee's participation, the ninth United Nations Seminar on the Question of Palestine, which had as its central theme the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, was held at Tunis, Tunisia, from 14 to 17 August 1984. Annexed to the Committee's report were the Seminar's comments on various aspects of the question, including the United Nations role in the search for peace in the Middle East, the proposed international peace conference, African and European cooperation in the restoration of Palestinian rights, PLO's role in the development of the Palestinian people and in attaining their objectives, and the status of Jerusalem.

Under the Committee's guidance, the Division for Palestinian Rights organized a North American non-governmental organization symposium on the question of Palestine (New York, 25-27 June) as the first in a series of non-governmental symposia and international meetings held in response to a December 1983 Assembly resolution.<sup>(7)</sup> More than 60 organizations and some 20 panellists participated in the symposium, which, in its "North American Declaration", urged Canada and the United States to work towards: recognizing and promoting the struggle of the Palestinians, assisting them and protecting their rights, reducing militarization and protecting the human rights of all persons in the region, halting expansion of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, facilitating and encouraging dialogue among groups and organizations, eliminating travel restrictions, and protecting freedom of association of non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The symposium urged the United Nations to assist the North American NGO community in establishing a clearing-house for information on the Palestine question, to produce a comprehensive directory of NGOs working on the issue, and to co-ordinate development of a communication network among NGOs.

An international meeting of NGOs on the question of Palestine was held at Geneva from 20 to 22 August, with the participation of 102 organizations and 26 panellists. The Committee noted with appreciation the resolution adopted at the meeting by which, among other things, it was decided to establish an interim Co-ordinating Committee on Palestine for NGOs to further liaison between NGOs and the Committee on Palestinian rights through the Division for Palestinian Rights, and to launch a campaign to collect signatures from the peoples of the world in support of an international peace conference on the Middle East.

The resolution, as well as the North American Declaration, were annexed to the Committee's report.

A symposium for NGOs on the question of Palestine (Geneva, 3 and 4 November), attended by 15 experts representing members of the NGO interim Co-ordinating Committee, discussed inter alia future co-operation between the Committee and NGOs, and NGO participation in observing the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People (29 November). In particular, the symposium elaborated an international petition in support of an international Middle East conference, which was subsequently launched by NGO representatives at United Nations observances of the International Day.

United Nations information centres helped organize the world-wide observance of the Day.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the Committee's report, the General Assembly, in December, adopted three resolutions on the question of Palestine, dealing with the Committee and its recommendations (39/49 A), the Division for Palestinian Rights (39/49 B) and public information activities (39/49 C) (see below). By a fourth resolution adopted under this agenda item (39/49 D), the Assembly reaffirmed its endorsement of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East (see p. 266).

Resolution 39/49 A was adopted on 11 December 1984 by recorded vote.

4. Authorizes the Committee to continue to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations, to send delegations or representatives to international conferences where such representation would be considered by it to be appropriate, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session and thereafter;

5. Requests the Committee to continue to extend its co-operation to non-governmental organizations in their contribution towards heightening international awareness of the facts relating to the question of Palestine;

6. Requests the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, established under General Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, as well as other United Nations bodies associated with the question of Palestine, to co-operate fully with the Committee and to make available to it, at its request, the relevant information and documentation which they have at their disposal;

7. Decides to circulate the report of the Committee to all the competent bodies of the United Nations and urges them to take the necessary action, as appropriate, in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Committee with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks.

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the continued co-operation of the Department of Public Information and other units of the Secretariat in enabling the Division for Palestinian Rights to perform its tasks and in covering adequately the various aspects of the question of Palestine;

5. Notes with appreciation the action taken by Member States to observe annually on 29 November the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People and the issuance by them of special postage stamps for the occasion.

Israel called the Division for Palestinian Rights a mouthpiece for Arab extremists and their backers which compromised the integrity of the Secretariat and drained the United Nations purse in providing a sinecure for the staff of a propaganda organ of a terrorist organization.

The United States found all three texts relating to the report of the Committee for Palestinian rights to be unbalanced, unfair and uncompromising and an unwarranted interference in its internal affairs. In New Zealand's opinion, the texts did not adequately reflect the balance of principles in Security Council resolution 242(1967)<sup>(8)</sup> or contribute realistically to the search for a settlement of the Palestinian problem.

Singapore, on the other hand, regarded the texts as positive contributions to the search for a solution to the Middle East problem, the core of which was the Palestine question. Spain considered the current situation, in which the rights of the Palestinians continued to be disregarded, as unacceptable. Portugal stated its continued support for all efforts likely to contribute to a solution to the Palestine problem. A similar position was held by Malawi, which opted for a political solution of the dispute.

Uruguay said the texts were essentially based on the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted at the 1983 Conference on the Palestine question;<sup>(1)</sup> its affirmative vote was consistent with its participation in the consensus at the Conference, though with reservations on those documents, and with its concern to bring about a peaceful solution. Peru also recalled its reservations on the Conference documents, particularly regarding the calls to refrain from providing assistance to Israel and to review bilateral relations with that country.

Despite reservations on the texts, Albania fully supported the cause of the Palestinians and voted in favour. Reservations were also voiced by Finland, which abstained, stating that the texts failed to represent a balance which was a prerequisite for a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reaffirmed its reservations on any reference that could be interpreted as expressing its readiness to recognize the Zionist entity or ascribe legality to it.

By resolution 39/146 A, the Assembly reaffirmed its conviction that the Palestine question was the core of the Middle East conflict and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region would be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinians of their rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories. It also reaffirmed that a Middle East settlement could not be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including PLO. It rejected all agreements and arrangements which violated Palestinian rights and contradicted the principles of a comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem and the establishment of a just peace.

By resolution 39/9, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation with the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States for the purpose of implementing United Nations resolutions relating to the Palestine question and the Middle East situation.

Jerusalem

Communications. The Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, by a letter of 6 February 1984,<sup>(9)</sup> drew the Secretary-General's attention to an attempt on 27 January to desecrate, if not destroy, the Dome of the Rock and the Al-Aqsa Mosque: two intruders with explosives, who had scaled the eastern wall of the Old City of Jerusalem, fled upon the arrival of police summoned by a Moslem guard. The Committee believed that the strictest respect for the relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions should be ensured.

On 28 March,<sup>(10)</sup> Egypt transmitted to the Security Council President a letter of the same date from PLO, stating that on 26 March the staircase leading to the entrance of the Higher Islamic Council near the Al-Aqsa Mosque crumbled, due to excavations by the Israeli Department of Archaeology. The letter stated that there had been several such attempts to destroy Islamic and Christian Holy Places in the Israeli-occupied territories in the preceding months.

By a letter of 1 June,<sup>(11)</sup> Jordan transmitted information on Israeli excavations near the Al-Aqsa Mosque and underneath religious buildings in Jerusalem which, it charged, had damaged buildings surrounding the Mosque, including the Islamic Council building, and were threatening the Mosque itself. Those excavations, Jordan stated, contravened United Nations resolutions and violated international law.

On 21 June,<sup>(12)</sup> Israel refuted Jordan's allegations as yet another anti-Israel propaganda attempt to revive a totally discredited canard about an "imminent" collapse of Temple Mount and to exploit the United Nations in a relentless vilification campaign. Israel said its record in safeguarding the holy shrines of all faiths not only found expression in its 1967 Protection of Holy Places law, to which it scrupulously adhered, but stood in stark contrast to Jordan's dismal record during its occupation of the Walled City of Jerusalem between 1948 and 1967.

By a letter of 9 August,<sup>(13)</sup> Jordan warned again of an Israeli plan to destroy ancient historic landmarks of Jerusalem—a plan that consisted essentially of excavation work underneath the western wall of Al-Haram Al-Sharif under the pretext of searching for the remains of the old Temple. In Jordan's view, the purpose of those excavations was to shake the subterranean foundations of the Islamic religious buildings and monuments in the Holy City until they collapsed. Annexed to the letter was information prepared by the Technical Section of the Jordanian Ministry of Islamic Affairs and Sacred Objects concerning damage being done to the historic Manjakiyah School near the Mosque.

By a letter of 29 February,<sup>(14)</sup> Israel drew the Security Council President's attention to what it called a terrorist outrage committed on 28 February against shoppers on Jerusalem's main thoroughfare. A hand-grenade package had been tossed into a store entrance, injuring 21 persons. Responsibility was claimed by two different extremist PLO groups.

By a letter of 2 April,<sup>(15)</sup> Israel reported another attack, committed on that date: three terrorists emerging from a clothing store in Jerusalem fired weapons and threw grenades, resulting in 48 civilians being wounded, among them eight foreign tourists; the terrorist faction, "Democratic Front", of PLO had claimed responsibility. On 3 April,<sup>(16)</sup> Israel stated that the number of casualties was 52 and that another terrorist group under Abu Nidal had claimed responsibility. On 10 April,<sup>(17)</sup> Israel drew the Secretary-General's attention to a radio statement made by the Chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, Yasser Arafat, endorsing the attack.

On 30 October,<sup>(18)</sup> Jordan transmitted a letter of 29 October from PLO charging Israel with perpetrating a rocket attack in Jerusalem on 28 October on a bus with Palestinian workers and shoppers; a 20-year-old Palestinian was killed and 10 others seriously wounded.

By a letter of 19 April,<sup>(19)</sup> the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights brought to the Secretary-General's attention reports of a transfer by El Salvador of its Embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem; in the opinion of the Committee members, such action was not only detrimental to a satisfactory solution to the question of the city's status, but also contrary to the spirit of United Nations resolutions on the subject. On 23 April,<sup>(20)</sup> Democratic Yemen, as President of the Council of the League of Arab States, transmitted a statement by 21 League members protesting that transfer and adding that it would have serious repercussions on Arab relations with El Salvador, as it indicated a position hostile to the Arab States and the Palestinians.

On 14 May,<sup>(21)</sup> Morocco transmitted the final communiqué of a special session of the Al-Quds (Jerusalem) Committee (Fez, Morocco, 19 and 20 April). The Committee said it had examined Israel's attempts to pressure different countries into transferring their embassies from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, as well as its stepped-up aggression against the city and the Islamic and Christian Holy Places there. It discussed in particular the transfer of the embassies of Costa Rica and El Salvador to Jerusalem, and took note of assurances by the United States Administration regarding its commitment to the official United States position on Jerusalem. The Committee recommended: further contacts with political leaders in the United States, with permanent members of the Security Council and with international groups to gain support for the Islamic point of view, and with the Holy See, with a view to urging it to adopt a clear position on Israeli measures in Jerusalem; entrusting the Organization of the Islamic Conference with examining ways to implement a 1980 Committee resolution which called on Arab and Islamic States to use all their potential in dealing with countries that supported Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem; and that any diplomatic representation at Jerusalem be regarded as an actual embassy transfer. The Committee reminded all countries of their obligations under international law to refrain from dealing with Israel in a way which might be interpreted as recognition of the city as the Israeli capital.

By a letter of 15 October,<sup>(22)</sup> Nicaragua transmitted to the Secretary-General, among other documents, a draft resolution on the status of Jerusalem, presented by the Group of Arab States to the Third Conference of Ministers of Labour of Non-Aligned Countries and Other Developing Countries (Managua, 10-12 May). The draft strongly denounced all Israeli measures to change the status of Jerusalem, declared that any action violating the sanctity of the Holy Places aggravated the situation, and denounced the moving of the embassies of El Salvador and Costa Rica to Jerusalem, as well as efforts in the United States to transfer its Embassy there.

In his 2 October 1984 report on the situation in the Middle East<sup>(23)</sup> (see p. 260), the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly also about implementation of its December 1983 resolution<sup>(24)</sup> deploring the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980)<sup>(25)</sup>—by which the Council had decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" on Jerusalem enacted by Israel—and calling on them to abide by the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the United Nations Charter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/146 C, on the situation in the Middle East, by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982 and 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which had altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States that had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 2 October 1984,

1. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once again upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israel said Jerusalem had always been the centre of the national and spiritual life of the Jewish people; reunited since 1967, it enjoyed unprecedented freedom and prosperity and the adherents of all faiths were guaranteed free access to their places of worship. Israel would steadfastly continue to advance the peace and well-being of its capital and its inhabitants, as well as preserve Jerusalem's unique place in the hearts of people of diverse faiths.

In Venezuela's view, the text contained paragraphs that did not contribute to the achievement of peace and included points that could cause a delay in settling the Middle East problem.

Greece, voting in favour, based its position on its attachment to the principles of Charter Article 2, paragraph 4, and the Helsinki Final Act. Australia did not accept the validity of measures which claimed to change the status of territories occupied since 1967, including East Jerusalem. New Zealand and Norway said they did not recognize Israel's annexation of Jerusalem and did not recognize Jerusalem as the capital of Israel; New Zealand added that it supported a special administrative régime for the city, safeguarding the right of access of all religions. Austria expressed whole-hearted support of the text.

Speaking for the EC members, Ireland recalled the importance they attached to Security Council resolution 478(1980). Mexico's vote in favour, it said, demonstrated again its commitment to United Nations resolutions; and Togo's, its concern over the situation in the Middle East and its wish for peace to be restored. Spain's support accorded with its position of the principle that a just and lasting peace should be based on Israel's withdrawal from all territories occupied since 1967, on respect for Palestinian rights, including the right to self-determination, and on the right of all States, including Israel, to live in peace within secure and recognized borders. Similar positions were held by Malawi, Portugal and Singapore. Ecuador rejected the occupation of territories by force and supported the search for a just and comprehensive solution.

Iran believed that what it termed the Zionist usurpers must withdraw from the whole of Palestine and not simply from the territories occupied since 1967.

By resolution 39/146 A, the Assembly deplored Israel's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 476(1980)<sup>(26)</sup> and 478(1980)<sup>(25)</sup> on Jerusalem and the 1980<sup>(27)</sup> and 1981<sup>(28)</sup> Assembly resolutions on the Middle East situation. It determined that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and declare it as its "capital" as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status were null and void, and demanded that they be rescinded immediately. It called on Member States and international organizations to abide by this and all other relevant resolutions and decisions.

Public information

The Committee on Palestinian rights, in its 1984 annual report,<sup>(29)</sup> also examined implementation of a December 1983 General Assembly resolution<sup>(30)</sup> requesting the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI), in co-operation with the Committee, to expand public information activities pertaining to the Palestine question. The Committee noted with appreciation that DPI continued to disseminate information on United Nations activities relating to the question through articles, press releases, newsletters, pamphlets, radio news programmes and special feature programmes, including coverage of the 1983 International Conference on Palestine.<sup>(1)</sup>

During 1984, DPI organized two regional journalists' encounters (Vienna, Austria, 4-7 June; Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 28-31 August), bringing high-level journalists together with experts on the Palestine question. A fact-finding news mission was also organized, during which 10 prominent journalists and media representatives from around the world visited Tunisia, Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic from 23 April to 11 May, to acquaint themselves first-hand with various aspects of the question.

A North American NGO symposium, organized in June 1984 by the Division for Palestinian Rights under the guidance of the Committee (see p. 269), adopted a Declaration urging the United Nations to assist the NGO community in Canada and the United States in establishing a clearing-house for information on the Palestine question, produce a comprehensive directory of all NGOs working on the issue, and facilitate and co-ordinate development of a communication network among NGOs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1984, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/49 C on the question of Palestine by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Noting, in particular, the information contained in paragraphs 133 to 142 of that report,

Recalling its resolution 38/58 E of 13 December 1983,

Convinced that the world-wide dissemination of accurate and comprehensive information and the role of non-governmental organizations and institutions remain of vital importance in heightening awareness of and support for the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent sovereign Palestinian State,

1. Notes with appreciation the action taken by the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in compliance with General Assembly resolution 38/58 E;

2. Requests that the Department of Public Information, in full co-operation and co-ordination with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, should:

(a) Continue the implementation of all parts of General Assembly resolution 38/58 E;

(b) Disseminate all information on the activities of the United Nations system relating to Palestine;

(c) Expand and update publications and audio-visual material on the facts and developments pertaining to the question of Palestine;

(d) Publish newsletters and articles in its relevant publications on Israeli violations of the human rights of the Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories;

(e) Organize fact-finding missions to the area for journalists;

(f) Organize regional and national encounters for journalists.

Against: Canada, Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Costa Rica, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, United Kingdom.

In Israel's view, the text meant another wasteful drain on United Nations funds and would continue the effect of providing a sounding-board for interests and forces extraneous to the United Nations, monopolizing time and funds of DPI to the detriment of its other, legitimate responsibilities.

In the opinion of the United States, paragraph 2 (d) in particular provided good evidence of the caricature of fairness in the text: where was the concern for the human rights of all the region's inhabitants, it asked.

Ireland, on behalf of the EC members, said they trusted that DPI would continue to be guided in its activities by impartiality and would maintain its normal decision-making process; given the difficult financial situation, every effort should be made to avoid unnecessary burdens on the budget.

Though voting in favour, Finland said it did so with reservations.

By resolution 39/49 B, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure the continued co-operation of DPI and other Secretariat units in enabling the Division for Palestinian Rights to perform its tasks and in covering adequately the various aspects of the Palestine question.

Assistance to Palestinians

Reports of the Secretary-General. On 21 May 1984,<sup>(31)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on economic and social assistance to the Palestinians provided or planned according to information received from seven United Nations organs and 11 specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

In another report, of 7 September,<sup>(32)</sup> the Secretary-General gave an overview of United Nations efforts to identify the social and economic needs of the Palestinians. As requested by the General Assembly in December 1983,<sup>(33)</sup> he had convened a meeting on economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people (Geneva, 5 and 6 July 1984), with relevant United Nations bodies and agencies participating. Represented also were PLO, Arab host countries, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. In preparation for the meeting, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation had requested United Nations bodies and organizations to submit proposals for future assistance projects. The meeting called for consultations with organizations and agencies to clarify some of the proposals, including financial resources available or needed, and to identify gaps and avoid duplication. It called for a revised paper on project proposals, taking into account additional ones made at the meeting, for inter-agency review.

Concluding his report, the Secretary-General stated that, subject to discussions in the Assembly, it was intended that a review and update of the proposals discussed at the meeting be prepared for consideration and further development within the existing machinery of the inter-agency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination.

UNIDO action. Following consideration of a February 1984 report by the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO),<sup>(34)</sup> the Industrial Development Board, on 19 May,<sup>(35)</sup> requested UNIDO to intensify its efforts, in co-operation with PLO, to provide technical assistance to the Palestinians. The Board called on the Israeli occupation authorities to give UNIDO staff and experts access to the occupied territories and affirmed that the restrictive policies of those authorities inhibited the development of the Palestinian industrial sector. These calls were echoed by the UNIDO Fourth General Conference in August (resolution 14).

As reported by the Executive Director,<sup>(36)</sup> among UNIDO's activities was a survey of the manufacturing industry in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, completed in mid-1984; it was part of a comprehensive survey by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development of the economy of the Palestinians in the occupied territories. At the request of PLO, the final report on the UNIDO survey<sup>(37)</sup> was circulated at the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO in August 1984 (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI), and an expert group meeting on the subject was held from 10 to 13 September at Vienna.

A project on assistance to the pharmaceutical industry was approved for financing from the United Nations Industrial Development Fund and completed in 1984, while a feasibility study for a West Bank cement plant was cancelled at the request of PLO. Qualified Palestinians were invited to participate in selected UNIDO group training programmes on industrial development.

UNDP action. In early 1984, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) initiated a programming exercise covering an extensive array of project concepts, tentatively identifying projects for Palestinians costing at least $45 million. A total of $7.5 million from Special Programme Resources had been expended for completed projects, committed for projects under way, or allocated for approved projects which were to become operational during 1984. This full utilization of all available UNDP funding, the Administrator of UNDP stated in a March report on the programme of assistance to the Palestinians,<sup>(38)</sup> meant that the size of any future activity would depend on voluntary contributions; project identification no longer was a problem, since four years of experience in the West Bank and Gaza had enabled UNDP to identify critically important sectors and areas of concentration which called for priority action. The tentative plan for future projects represented a programme oriented more fully towards basic development activities, covering, for example: assistance to farmers, citrus producers and fishermen; development of plum and grape processing and olive and olive oil production; roads, classrooms and water supply for rural villages; assistance in primary and secondary education and teacher training; improvement of sewage disposal; development of glass and ceramic engineering technology; agricultural and hydrological research; and strengthening health institutions.

The Administrator stated that the perceived development needs of the Palestinians were so extensive and substantial that the amount and nature of project execution should be dependent on the funding available and UNDP's delivery capabilities, rather than on arbitrarily designated spending levels. However, while a number of Governments and intergovernmental institutions had signified strong interest in supporting the programme with special contributions, only Tunisia had thus far made a definite pledge in response to appeals; he recommended that the UNDP Governing Council consider the future viability of the special programme in the light of the prevailing financial circumstances.

The Council, on 29 June,<sup>(39)</sup> expressed satisfaction with the Administrator's efforts to assist the Palestinians in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. It noted with regret that appeals for additional special contributions of at least $8 million in the 1982-1986 programming cycle had drawn a very modest response, and reconfirmed the need for special contributions. The Council noted that, unless additional contributions were received, it would not be possible to undertake basic development projects in timely and fully effective fashion, and requested the Administrator to make proposals concerning the amount which could be utilized from Special Programme Resources to support programmes of assistance to the Palestinians.

At the 1984 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (7 and 8 November) (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter II), the United States announced a pledge to the programme of up to $1 million. Shortly thereafter, the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations announced its intention to contribute $1 million.

UNICEF activities. The Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), at its April/May 1984 session,<sup>(40)</sup> approved commitments totalling $1.95 million and "noted" an amount of $3.2 million, subject to the availability of specific-purpose contributions, covering the period mid-1984 to mid-1987 to support new programmes of co-operation to assist Palestinian children and mothers in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the occupied territories. The programmes focused on priority areas of child survival and development, pre-school, promotion of income-generating activities for women, and water supply and sanitation. Specifically, the following amounts were approved for the programme: for Jordan, a commitment of $600,000 from general resources and $450,000 from supplementary funds, subject to availability; for Lebanon, the respective amounts of $800,000 and $600,000; for the Syrian Arab Republic, $550,000 and $450,000; and for the occupied territories, $1.7 million, pledged by the Federal Republic of Germany.

Other activities. During 1984, a study on food security issues in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip was completed; the study, undertaken jointly by the Economic Commission for Western Asia and the Arab Organization for Agricultural Development, resulted in recommendations on ways to promote food production and raise nutritional standards under prevailing conditions.

Assistance to the Palestinians continued to be provided by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in training, including specialized training in agricultural development. FAO was the executing agency of an agricultural training centre project, with $356,000 budgeted from UNDP, to assist Palestinian families in refugee camps in the Syrian Arab Republic to improve crop and livestock production and efficiency.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July 1984, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/56 by a roll-call vote.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 38/145 of 19 December 1983,

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/56

25 July 1984 Meeting 48 48-1 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/137) by vote (37-1), 13 July (meeting 6); draft by China and Mexico for Group of 77 (E/1984/C.3/L.4); agenda item 22.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Guyana, Indonesia, Japan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: United States.

Before voting on the text as a whole, the Council adopted paragraph 4 by a roll-call vote of 38 to 1, with 11 abstentions. The Committee had also voted separately on that paragraph, adopting it by 25 votes to 1, with 10 abstentions.

While reaffirming its determination to continue to assist the Palestinians, Japan said it had abstained in the vote on paragraph 4 because of an ambiguity in the final phrase.

After the vote, the United States said it was a measure of its concern for the plight of the Palestinians that it provided a major portion of the budgets for organizations such as (UNRWA) and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), which were involved in alleviating the conditions of the Palestinians. It firmly believed that such humanitarian assistance should be provided by the international community without regard to political considerations, a principle violated by the adopted text, which affirmed a role for PLO in receiving international economic and social assistance on behalf of the Palestinians. The United States did not believe that it was the Council's function to select a representative for the Palestinians or to prejudge the outcome of the eventual exercise of the Palestinians' right to select their own representatives.

Speaking for the EC members of the Council, Luxembourg pledged that they would continue to provide humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians through various channels, including food and emergency relief and the co-financing with NGOs of aid projects. Assistance would be furnished directly and through EC, as well as through the competent United Nations organizations.

Poland, for the Eastern European members of the Council, regretted that the resolution had not called for an end to the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory and the withdrawal of all Israeli troops.

On behalf of the Arab Group of Member States, Saudi Arabia said the wording of the resolution was intended to express a humanitarian, not a political, view; in any case, PLO did not need a Council resolution to confirm that it was the genuine representative of the Palestinians. The people suffering under Israeli occupation, however, needed support and there could be no legitimate objection to paragraph 4. The Council naturally wished to declare that the Israeli occupation should be brought to an end.

In a statement after the explanations of vote, Israel said it could not receive with acclamation a resolution granting status to a terrorist organization which had inscribed on its banner the destruction of Israel; however, it was pleased to see that, unlike the corresponding 1983 resolution,<sup>(41)</sup> the 1984 text did not deplore Israel's actions, the reason for that being that Israel had done all in its power to enable authorized organizations and those with a true mandate to extend humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians. It was to be expected that some attempt would be made in the Council to malign Israel, as had been done in paragraph 4. The needs of the Palestinians would not be met by further resolutions but by concrete assistance; the reason why such assistance had not been provided on the scale required was the absence of adequate funding. Tunisia was alone among the Arab countries in making a pledge of aid to the Palestinians in response to Council and Assembly appeals.

With regard to the claim that everything possible had been done to permit assistance to the Palestinians, PLO challenged Israel to deny that fewer than 6 of the 17 projects approved by UNDP for implementation in the occupied territories had been carried out; moreover, five of the projects rejected by the Israeli authorities had been the most important: a multidisciplinary research and training centre, the planning and development of higher education, cultural heritage, a faculty of agriculture, and a housing fund. While the Council was not the appropriate place to discuss the contributions of individual countries, it was well known that many Islamic countries, the Arab Group and the Eastern European States provided assistance to the Palestinians and co-operated with PLO. More to the point was the fact that Israel had cut off access by the Arab Support Fund to the occupied territories.

El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Introducing the draft on behalf of the sponsors, Democratic Yemen said the international community had come to recognize the need to help the Palestinians who were victims of injustices of all kinds and whose lands and natural resources were being plundered by the Israelis.

Speaking before the vote in the Committee, Israel said the text ignored, for political reasons, the fact that Israel was currently the only State engaged, directly and actively, in promoting the well-being, safety and socio-economic development of the Palestinian Arabs of Judaea, Samaria and Gaza. During the 18 years of Israeli administration, they had made spectacular progress and their situation was many times better than that of most neighbouring countries. The resolutions adopted each year on the subject presented Israel as systematically opposed to and as obstructing international aid to the Palestinians. Israel welcomed assistance through legitimate channels and would continue to co-operate with UNRWA and UNDP. The main purpose of the resolution was to emphasize the role of PLO and to attribute to it capabilities and influence it did not possess.

The United States felt that the text was contentious and not constructive; it would perpetuate unproductive, if not counter-productive, activities that would in no way resolve the serious problems in the Middle East or improve the well-being of the Palestinians. The United States continued to be actively involved in efforts to improve Palestinian life through bilateral and multilateral programmes; during the previous year, it had also inaugurated programmes to assist directly deserving Palestinian institutions in the West Bank and Gaza. Such programmes, however, were no substitute for a negotiated settlement.

Jordan expressed reservations on paragraphs 7 and 8; any assistance to Palestinian refugees in Jordan should be subject to consultations with and approval of the authorities there.

On behalf of the States members of EEC, Ireland said EEC had been increasing its assistance to improve the plight of Palestinians not only in the occupied territories but also in Lebanon and elsewhere in the region; its members continued to provide that assistance directly and through EEC and the United Nations system. Japan maintained its position concerning United Nations assistance to national liberation movements.

Gabon stressed that its vote by no means called its well-known views into question. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya declared that its affirmative vote in no way indicated that it accepted the presence of a Zionist entity; it had reservations on any paragraph that might imply such acceptance.

Palestinian detainees

In 1984, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights again took up the case of the Palestinian Ziyad Abu Eain, this time in connection with prisoners held in southern Lebanon. The Assembly and the Economic and Social Council had first considered Abu Eain's case in 1981.<sup>(42)</sup>

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution of 20 February 1984<sup>(43)</sup> on human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories, condemned Israel for its continued detention of Abu Eain and called on it to implement fully the agreement on the exchange of prisoners with PLO concluded in November 1983 with ICRC. The Commission called on Israel to release Abu Eain and others detained at Ansar (Insar) Camp, which it said must be closed under the agreement. It further called on Israel to release all Arabs detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and for the liberation of their territories, and demanded that Israel cease all acts of torture and ill-treatment of Arab detainees. By another resolution, of 6 March,<sup>(44)</sup> the Commission urged Israel to release immediately all civilians arbitrarily detained since the beginning of the war in Lebanon, as well as those it rearrested and detained again at Ansar Camp, in violation of the November 1983 agreement. The Commission also urged Israel to allow ICRC to visit all detainees in all the detention centres under its control and to ensure protection for Palestinian civilians, including released detainees, in the areas under its occupation. (For further details, see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII.)

Communication and report. On 3 October 1984,<sup>(45)</sup> Jordan transmitted a letter of the same date from PLO, containing an appeal by prisoners in the central prison of Nablus (West Bank) for support to Palestinian detainees in Israeli prisons and detention camps.

On 14 November,<sup>(46)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of the December 1983 Assembly resolution<sup>(47)</sup> demanding the immediate release of Abu Eain as well as other prisoners who had been registered to be freed from Insar Camp and other military command posts in southern Lebanon but had not been released, and whose transfer to Algiers was to be secured in conformity with a November 1983 agreement with ICRC.<sup>(48)</sup> Referring to Israel's statement on the resolution,<sup>(49)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that Israel had not communicated any further information in reply to his note verbale of 13 October 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, the General Assembly, on 14 December, adopted resolution 39/95 A by recorded vote. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 38/79 A of 15 December 1983,
Taking note of the report of the International Committee of the Red Cross of 13 December 1983,
Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 14 November 1984,

1. Deplores the fact that the Israeli authorities, at the last minute, took one prisoner, Ziyad Abu Eain, who had been registered before embarkation by delegates of the International Committee of the Red Cross at Tel Aviv airport;

2. Condemns Israel for its failure to comply with General Assembly resolution 38/79 A;

3. Demands again the immediate release of all prisoners, including Ziyad Abu Eain, who were duly registered to be freed from Insar Camp and other military command posts in southern Lebanon and Israel but have not, in fact, been released, and the securing of their transfer to Algiers in conformity with the agreement reached through the good offices of the International Committee of the Red Cross;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible and not later than the beginning of its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/95 A

14 December 1984 Meeting 100 120-2:15 (recorded vote)

Approved by SPC (A/39/712) by recorded vote (101-2-11), 29 November (meeting 43); 25-nation draft (ASPC/39/L.22/Rev.1); agenda item 71.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: SPC 31-39, 43; plenary 100.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Guatemala, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Liberia, Malawi, Nepal, Panama, Paraguay, Sri Lanka, Trinidad and Tobago, Zaire.

Israel said it was highly improper for the United Nations to interfere in judicial matters which fell within the jurisdiction of a sovereign State; Abu Eain was a convicted murderer serving his prison term and Israel regretted that the activities of ICRC were being exploited for political ends.

Australia noted with concern the report of ICRC that the prisoner exchange had not been carried out fully, but voiced doubts about the practice of focusing attention in Assembly resolutions on an individual case and pointed out that there were other individuals registered to be freed who remained in detention. In Sri Lanka's view, the subject dealt with was outside the Special Committee's mandate.

Canada would have preferred more constructive language, particularly in paragraph 2, but considered it important to encourage international support for humanitarian arrangements to mitigate the suffering resulting from conflicts.

Incidents and disputes between Arab countries and Israel

Iraq and Israel

Armed incident involving Iraqi nuclear facilities

Note and report of the Secretary-General. By a note of 6 February 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General brought to the attention of the Security Council a request made by the General Assembly in November 1983<sup>(2)</sup> that the Council consider measures to deter Israel from repeating an attack such as the 1981 bombing of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad.<sup>(3)</sup> He reported on 10 August 1984<sup>(4)</sup> that by a note of 15 March he had asked Israel to inform him of the action it had decided to take with regard to the Assembly's renewed demand that it withdraw its threat to attack and destroy nuclear facilities in Iraq and other countries. Israel replied on 12 July (see immediately below).

Communications. Referring to the Secretary-General's note, Israel, by a letter of 12 July,<sup>(5)</sup> recalled a statement made on 2 May by its Prime Minister that Israel supported international arrangements which ensured the status and inviolability of nuclear facilities dedicated to peaceful purposes, and that it viewed positively the activities of organizations and agencies established by the international community for those purposes. It also drew attention to a statement of 21 May by the Director-General of the Israel Atomic Energy Commission that Israel had no policy or intention of attacking nuclear facilities dedicated to peaceful purposes, and that it supported international efforts to arrive at an early arrangement regulating nuclear facilities as well as the mission of IAEA in ensuring that nuclear energy was a safe source of peaceful development. In its letter, Israel expressed regret at the Assembly's acquiescence in being used by Iraq year after year in attempts to vilify Israel.

By a letter of 15 August,<sup>(6)</sup> Iraq said that the statements quoted by Israel made no mention of the Assembly's November 1983 resolution demanding that it withdraw its threat to attack and destroy nuclear facilities in Iraq and other countries; also, the statements were not issued by the parties who originally had made those threats and they were confined to generalities, whereas the threats were directed specifically against Iraq. The thesis of the Director-General as reported by Israel was a piece of special pleading which could not deceive the international community; moreover, the statements referred to by Israel made no mention of the international safeguards system, leaving it to the goodwill of Israel, whose aggressive designs were well known, to decide which facilities were peaceful. Iraq quoted a statement made in August 1983 by the Israeli Minister of Scientific Research, and published in a United States magazine, Nucleonics Week, that, as long as there was no agreement turning the Middle East into a nuclear-free zone, Israel was compelled to disrupt any Arab project when it became clear beyond doubt that the intention was to produce nuclear weapons. From the statement, Iraq concluded, it was apparent that Israel persisted in its intention to attack nuclear reactors on the basis solely of its own decision as to the nature of those reactors; it was the United Nations duty to prevent Israel from implementing its policy, which was a threat to international peace and security.

By a letter of 20 November,<sup>(7)</sup> Iraq pointed out that there was more to the Israeli Prime Minister's statement quoted in Israel's letter of 12 July. As reported on 10 May in Nucleonics Week, he had added that, since some régimes violated agreements and rules of behaviour without fear of retribution, he advocated co-ordinated and unified action by democratic countries which were, in his words, capable of punishing the various international pirates. That statement, Iraq said, was not only a blatant affirmation of the aggressor's intention to repeat its acts of aggression, but also an open invitation to lawlessness.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/14 by recorded vote.

Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security",

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Viewing with deep concern Israel's refusal to comply with those resolutions, in particular Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981,

Noting that Israel's statements contained in its communication of 12 July 1984 continue to ignore the safeguards system of the International Atomic Energy Agency and do not specify the Iraqi nuclear installations which were the subject of the Israeli attack and subsequent threats,

Convinced that the Israeli threats to attack nuclear facilities in Iraq and in other countries will continue to endanger peace and security in the region,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of Israel's continuing refusal to implement Security Council resolution 487(1981), unanimously adopted by the Council on 19 June 1981;

2. Considers that Israel's statements contained in its communication of 12 July 1984 do not fulfil or, in the view of some, do not completely fulfil the provisions of General Assembly resolution 38/9 of 10 November 1983 which specifically demanded that Israel withdraw forthwith its threat to attack and destroy nuclear facilities in Iraq and in other countries;

3. Further considers that any threat to attack and destroy nuclear facilities in Iraq and in other countries constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Demands that Israel undertake forthwith not to carry out, in disregard of the safeguards system of the International Atomic Energy Agency, any attack on nuclear facilities in Iraq, or on similar facilities in other countries, devoted to peaceful purposes;

5. Requests the Security Council to consider the necessary measures to ensure Israel's compliance with Security Council resolution 487(1981) and to deter Israel from repeating its attack on nuclear facilities;

6. Reaffirms its call for the continuation of the consideration, at the international level, of legal measures to prohibit armed attacks against nuclear facilities, as a contribution to promoting and ensuring the safe development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the question of the implementation of Security Council resolution 487(1981) and on the consequences of Israel's non-compliance with that resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security".

In Israel's view, the text did not seek a solution to the complex problem of protecting nuclear facilities, but rather aimed at using the issue as a pretext for an annual anti-Israel spectacle. Israel's position on the inviolability of nuclear facilities dedicated to peaceful purposes had been stated clearly four times in the previous months, while Iraq's attitude was quite different.

In the opinion of the United States, the text served no useful purpose; to bring the matter up in the Assembly year after year was unproductive. The text unfairly condemned Israel, failed to give due credit to its repeated statements that it had no policy of attacking peaceful nuclear facilities, and gave a prejudicial characterization of Israeli policy. In addition, it did not serve the interests of any IAEA member State to perpetuate a divisive political debate in that Agency on this issue.

Canada could not support the text, saying it failed to take fully into account Israel's statements in compliance with the requests of the IAEA General Conference. International public opinion on the 1981 incident had been adequately registered; unless there was something further for the Secretary-General to report upon, Canada would not support either a request for a report or a decision to include the item in the agenda.

Ecuador rejected the use and threat of force in international relations and any concept of armed reprisals, particularly against any future danger perceived on the basis of subjective unilateral analyses that could serve to justify the unacceptable sophism of preventive war; it added, however, that the United Nations had repeatedly expressed its views on the matter, which could henceforth be dealt with in the First Committee.

Sweden did not object to the continued presence on the agenda of an item devoted to the follow-up of the 1981 Security Council resolution<sup>(8)</sup> condemning Israel's attack, as long as Israel failed fully to live up to the terms of that resolution; it was to be noted, however, that in comparison with earlier statements, a clearly more forthcoming attitude by Israel had been reflected in pronouncements to the Assembly and the IAEA General Conference. Against that backdrop, it did not appear appropriate for the Assembly to pronounce itself against the Israeli attitude in terms stronger than those applied in the previous year.

Belgium considered that, in view of the declarations made and the policies followed by Israel since that attack, there was no real danger of another similar occurrence and it was, accordingly, not correct to refer to threats that would continue to endanger peace and security in the region; also, making the subject a permanent item on the agenda did not appear to further prospects for a peaceful solution to the Middle East conflict.

The Federal Republic of Germany said the text did not reflect the assessment of Israel's statements as a step in the right direction; further consideration of the item and of those statements should be undertaken within IAEA, although repeated condemnations were not conducive to promoting practical work. Also, there seemed to be no evidence that the Israeli threats referred to in the sixth preambular paragraph continued to exist.

The USSR supported the resolution aimed at preventing armed aggression against nuclear installations or threats of such aggression; it fully agreed with the concern over what it called Israel's piratical act which, it said, had serious consequences for international peace and security and the right of States to use nuclear energy for economic and social development. It declared that it was against allowing Israel to repeat such attacks in violation of United Nations resolutions and the Charter.

The Syrian Arab Republic remarked that the wording of the revised text was not in keeping with the main goal of the original draft; the sponsors had suppressed some words and paragraphs reiterating condemnation of Israel's threats to repeat its attack on nuclear facilities in Iraq and other countries, and requesting IAEA to suspend all co-operation with Israel until it complied with the 1981 Council resolution and to report thereon. The text was not commensurate with the magnitude of Israel's criminal action or with the danger that such action might be repeated.

Introducing the revised draft on behalf of the sponsors, Iraq said that Israel, in its efforts to remove all strictures on it and allow it to pursue its aggression and threats with total impunity, had called on the Assembly to defeat the draft so that it would be let off the hook it had swallowed when it committed its unprecedented act of aggression.

Complaint by Iraq

Communications. On 16 October 1984,<sup>(9)</sup> Iraq transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of the same date from its Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs charging that, on 14 October, an Israeli patrol had intercepted and fired at an Iraqi ship, Babel, in Jordanian territorial waters en route to the Jordanian port of Aqaba.

Israel referred to those charges in a letter of 1 November,<sup>(10)</sup> saying that on 12 October the Iraqi ship Babylon had been sighted moving north in the Gulf of Eilat. The Israel Defence Forces had made no contact with it, and at no time had the ship been stopped, checked or fired upon.

Lebanon situation

In an October 1984 report<sup>(11)</sup> on the situation in the Middle East, the Secretary-General gave an overview of the situation in the Israel-Lebanon sector. In February, following heavy exchanges of fire in the Beirut area, the Security Council met and voted on a French draft resolution by which, had it been adopted, a United Nations force would have been constituted for the Beirut area as soon as all the elements of the four-nation multinational force (France, Italy, United Kingdom, United States) had withdrawn from Lebanese territory (see p. 284). In August and September, the Council met at Lebanon's request. By a Lebanese draft, also not adopted, the Council would have affirmed that the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War applied to the territories occupied by Israel in southern Lebanon, and would have demanded that Israel immediately lift all restrictions and obstacles to the restoration of normal conditions in the occupied areas (see p. 289).

In a report of 9 April<sup>(12)</sup> on UNIFIL (see p. 298), the Secretary-General stated that the Lebanese Government and the people of southern Lebanon clearly desired the restoration of Lebanese sovereignty and authority up to the internationally recognized border at the earliest possible date. Israel, while expressing its desire to withdraw its forces from Lebanon, was concerned over the security of its northern border after the withdrawal of those forces. The security of the Palestinian refugees, especially in the camps in the Sidon area, was a matter of grave concern and responsibility.

In his 9 October report on the Force,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General noted that developments in recent weeks seemed to have brought about more positive prospects for an Israeli withdrawal and the working out of arrangements to ensure that southern Lebanon would become a zone of peace under the sovereignty and authority of the Lebanese Government. As a follow-up to the Secretary-General's own visit to the area in June, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs visited Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and Israel to discuss the situation with their authorities; there seemed to be general agreement that an expanded mandate for UNIFIL and a widening of its area of operation would be key elements in such arrangements.

Following the Secretary-General's recommendation and at Lebanon's request, the Security Council extended UNIFIL's mandate twice during the year, for six months each time (see pp. 299 and 302).

As requested by the Security Council in its October resolution extending the mandate of UNIFIL, the Secretary-General continued consultations with the Lebanese Government and other parties directly involved. On 31 October, following consultations with Lebanon and Israel, he announced the convocation of a conference of military representatives from the two countries to discuss military aspects relating to the withdrawal of Israeli forces and security arrangements in southern Lebanon. The conference, which met intermittently from 8 November, took place at UNIFIL headquarters at Naqoura.<sup>(14)</sup>

The Council also met in May to consider events at the Ein El-Helweh refugee camp near Sidon in southern Lebanon (see p. 296).

UNRWA continued to assist Palestinian refugees in Lebanon. Protection of those refugees was the subject of General Assembly resolution 39/99 I, adopted following consideration of a report by the Secretary-General (see p. 343). By resolution 39/197, the Assembly called for intensified United Nations assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter III).

Communications (January). By a letter of 4 January 1984,<sup>(15)</sup> Lebanon complained of two Israeli air raids on 3 and 4 January. On 3 January, it charged, Israeli war-planes had attacked the village of Bhamdoun, destroying houses and wounding many civilians. On 4 January, fighter-bombers had attacked a Lebanese gendarmerie barracks at Baalbek in eastern Lebanon and Immam Mousa Sadr City, causing heavy damage, killing more than 100 persons and wounding 400 others, among them 150 school-children.

In its reply of 13 January,<sup>(16)</sup> Israel expressed the hope that the Lebanese Government would soon be able to restore its sovereignty throughout Lebanon, so that it could prevent the recurrence of the uncontrolled situation which had obliged Israel to act in self-defence against terrorist bases operating with the consent and encouragement of certain United Nations Member States. Its action was directed solely against terrorist installations, training bases and launching sites, which had served as bases for some of the most heinous acts, including suicide attacks, car bombings and the shelling of civilian residential areas. Israel deeply regretted any civilian loss of life; it stressed, however, that the terrorist groups deliberately located their installations and bases in populated areas, shielding themselves behind civilians and their dwellings. Concluding, Israel reiterated its support of the full restoration of Lebanon's sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence within its internationally recognized boundaries and of the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanese territory.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

Following a request by France on 14 February for an urgent meeting,<sup>(17)</sup> the Security Council considered the situation in Beirut at four meetings on 15, 16, 23 and 29 February. It invited Italy, Lebanon and Senegal, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Meeting numbers. SC 2514-2516, 2519.

On 29 February, the Council voted on a draft resolution by France.<sup>(18)</sup> The vote was 13 to 2, as follows:

In favour: China, Egypt, France, India, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Peru, United Kingdom, United States, Upper Volta, Zimbabwe.

Against: Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Owing to the negative vote of a permanent member, the draft was not adopted.

By the draft, which was revised twice during consultations, the Council would have again urgently appealed for an immediate cease-fire and cessation of all hostilities throughout Lebanon, to be strictly complied with; requested the Secretary-General to make without delay arrangements to enable the Observer Group Beirut to monitor compliance with the cease-fire in the Beirut area; and decided, in agreement with the Lebanese Government, to constitute immediately under the Council's authority a United Nations force composed of personnel furnished by Member States not permanent Council members and selected, if appropriate, from UNIFIL contingents. The force was to have taken up a position in the Beirut area, in co-ordination with the Lebanese authorities concerned, as soon as all elements of the multinational force had withdrawn from Lebanese territory and territorial waters. It would have had the mission of monitoring compliance with the cease-fire and helping protect civilians, including in the Palestinian refugee camps, and, without intervening in Lebanon's internal affairs for the benefit of any party, thereby assisting in re-establishing the peace necessary for restoring Lebanon's territorial integrity, unity, sovereignty and independence.

By other provisions, the Council would have requested Member States to refrain from intervening in Lebanon's internal affairs and from any action, in particular military action, that might jeopardize the re-establishment of peace and security in Lebanon, and to facilitate the task of the United Nations force. It would have invited the Secretary-General to report within 48 hours on the implementation of the resolution.

Introducing the revised text, France said the sufferings of civilians and the constant threat to peace in the region posed by the violence made it necessary for the international community to shoulder its responsibilities. The conditions that had prevailed when the multinational force was established had changed drastically and the situation in the Beirut area had further worsened; a United Nations presence should be substituted for that force. The draft took full account of the concerns expressed on all sides. France later added that, while the text was not intended to settle all the problems of peace in the region, it was a first step and a peace-making gesture intended to promote a climate of reconciliation.

The USSR considered the draft unacceptable, with, for example, ambiguous wording relating to the mandate of the United Nations force in Beirut. The text had been introduced without further consideration of the USSR's position, which favoured continuing consultations. A real settlement in Lebanon should be achieved not by separate deals and arm-twisting but on the basis of strict implementation of United Nations decisions. Among the conditions for the deployment of a United Nations force were, over and above the withdrawal of the multinational force, withdrawal of foreign warships and guarantees that there would be no resumption of artillery fire, air strikes or any other interference in Lebanon's internal affairs by the multinational force.

The Ukrainian SSR said the draft did not contain provisions which would achieve the goals the Council was pursuing, such as urgent, effective measures that would lead to peace and stability and eliminate everything hindering normalization of the situation in the country. In spite of repeated Council demands that Israel withdraw immediately, it continued to occupy one third of Lebanon's territory and was bombing other areas of the country. In May 1983,<sup>(19)</sup> Israel and the United States had imposed on Lebanon a servile agreement transforming it into an American-Israeli protectorate, which predetermined increased tension. New suffering for the Lebanese had resulted from the so-called multinational force. The Israeli occupiers and the United States fleet, participating in military actions against the patriotic forces of Lebanon, had carried out a broad campaign of threats and military provocations against the Syrian Arab Republic.

The normalization of the situation in Lebanon, the Ukrainian SSR continued, demanded a complete cessation of interference, unconditional and complete withdrawal of Israel's interventionist forces and the multinational force, the removal from Lebanon's shores of the force's warships, and an immediate end to air and artillery bombardments. Without fulfilling those conditions and protecting Lebanon's civilians, the question of United Nations assistance to Lebanon lost any real basis. The absence in the resolution of the relevant provisions and guarantees would make the mission of a United Nations force for all practical purposes unrealizable. In the light of all that, the Ukrainian SSR could not consider the draft as anything other than an attempt to justify interference in Lebanon's internal affairs in the name of the United Nations.

Addressing the vote on the text, the Netherlands regretted that the United Nations had been prevented from making even a modest contribution to the national reconciliation process in Lebanon. A United Nations force should be a peace-keeping force rather than one which would have to enforce peace, with the risks of getting itself involved in the fighting and thus intervening in Lebanon's internal affairs. A stable and effective cease-fire in the Beirut area would continue to be an essential prerequisite for such a force to carry out effectively its proposed mandate.

The United Kingdom was disappointed at the Council's inaction and could not understand that anything said during the debate justified a veto on the limited United Nations action requested by the Lebanese Government. The United Kingdom said no one had been more insistent on restricting the discussion on the draft to the smallest geographical area possible—to the city of Beirut only, not even the Beirut area—than the Council member which had explained its negative vote with statements relating to Lebanon as a whole or to parts of Lebanon other than Beirut. The United Kingdom hoped for a resumption of the dialogue on national reconciliation which, it trusted, would lead to a situation in which a new Lebanese Government, the former one having already resigned, would come into office with national acclaim and assert its authority through the Lebanese Army and security forces throughout the country. The United Kingdom was encouraged by the clear statements by all Governments which had forces in Lebanon that they did not intend to keep them there, despite difficulties that had to be taken into account, such as a deterioration in the internal security position in parts of the country; the United Nations, however, might be able to play a constructive part in resolving those difficulties. It was convinced that there should be an expanded United Nations role in Lebanon. The situation there was grave: the authority of the duly constituted Government was called into question, there was factional strife, and the security of ordinary people was in doubt.

In China's view, the Council should implement in earnest its resolutions on Lebanon and give consideration to other practical steps. Any Council action should be conducive to safeguarding Lebanon's territorial integrity, to eliminating foreign interference, and to promoting national reconciliation. China said its vote was based on those principles and took into consideration that the draft foresaw a clearly defined mandate—helping protect the civilians, including those in the Palestinian refugee camps, and doing so without intervening in Lebanon's internal affairs for the benefit of any party whatever. On the other hand, since the Beirut crisis was only part of the Lebanon crisis, whose root cause was Israel's invasion and occupation, the key was the withdrawal of Israeli troops. Foreign warships should not, under any pretext, carry out armed intervention in Lebanon's internal affairs.

The United States said that in voting for the draft—which was imperfect and in many ways unsatisfactory—it expressed its commitment to the view that peace in Lebanon should be brought about by the Lebanese, that all foreign forces should be withdrawn, and that the Lebanese population should be left to seek without outside interference an agreement that would respect the rights and preserve the freedom of all. Lebanon had exercised its right to self-defence and to request others to assist in reinforcing and maintaining its sovereignty; the United States had responded to that request, as had others in the multinational force. The United States vote was part of its long-standing effort to help re-establish and reinforce the peace necessary to restore Lebanon's territorial integrity and to contribute to ending the violence and protecting civilians. There had been a great deal more discussion in the Council about the internecine tribal conflicts and the presence of Israeli troops than about the more than 50,000 Syrian troops and Palestinian, Iranian and other associates in Lebanon. Much less was heard about the systematic use of violence, encouraged from outside.

Lebanon regretted that, for the second time in a few months, the Council had been unable to help in putting an end to a tragic situation. The international community, through the Council, had a great responsibility towards not only the Lebanese but the peoples of the world: to guarantee international peace and security. Lebanon appealed to the Council to reconsider the positions taken and to respond positively and quickly to any new initiative in keeping with the seriousness of the situation and by means of which the Council might be able to fulfil its tasks under the Charter.

In Malta's view, the draft attempted resolutely to address a tragic situation and would have been a step towards restoring the stability necessary to augment the prospects for a positive outcome of the national reconciliation dialogue. Malta appealed to all concerned to support the task being contemplated for United Nations personnel; that would be a move towards restoring broader peace in the Middle East after the legitimate rights of the Palestinians had finally been recognized by all.

Egypt would have preferred a clearer and stronger wording requesting unconditional and immediate Israeli withdrawal from all Lebanese territory; the situation in Lebanon, threatening the country's territorial integrity and peace in the region, was the strongest justification for a United Nations presence.

India would also have preferred a reiteration of the demand for unconditional and immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces. Further, ambiguities should be cleared up before the Council took action to deploy a United Nations force. The Upper Volta also would have liked such points as the withdrawal of all foreign troops and agreement by all parties concerned to be better spelt out. Nicaragua felt that the draft, though not perfect, could contribute to improving the situation in Lebanon.

Pakistan said the proposed Council action was not a remedy for all problems besetting Lebanon, but the presence of a United Nations force in Beirut could have become a prelude to a process which could eventually restore the country's unity and independence; only the United Nations had the capacity to meet the need for an impartial presence which could bring tranquillity to Beirut and provide a respite for Lebanese leaders to intensify their national reconciliation efforts.

Peru fully agreed with the need for effective and just United Nations action. However, the outcome of the vote was not the end of the Council's responsibilities; it should keep the matter under scrutiny and seek progress in the quest for peace in Lebanon.

The Secretary-General felt that disagreement among the Council members had prevented the United Nations from playing an expanded role in Lebanon. He appealed to the Council to continue to consider the situation there with a sense of urgency and with the intent that in the near future ways would be found for the United Nations to expand its role, not only for Lebanon's benefit, but also for the cause of international peace.

During the Council debate, France said the situation in Lebanon had become particularly serious as a result of recent events. The civilian population had been subjected to fighting and bombardment and was constantly exposed to the dangers of a resumption of violence and even military operations, further complicating the prospect for any political solution. France recalled that, in 1982, it had also suggested creating a United Nations force in Beirut,<sup>(20)</sup> but it was clear that lengthy negotiations would be required in order to reach agreement on its creation. Thus, France had responded positively to Lebanon's request for a multinational force which, for 16 months, had attempted to protect the Palestinian refugee camps of Sabra and Shatila and generally to contribute to restoring calm in Beirut and its immediate surroundings. Circumstances had changed, however, and the risks of confrontation were now such that the international community must urgently face its responsibilities. A United Nations force to replace the multinational one was necessary to ease tension; the most suitable way to provide it was to send certain detachments from UNIFIL.

Supporting France's request for a United Nations presence in and around Beirut, the United Kingdom said there was an immediate need to put an end to the fighting in Lebanon, promote national reconciliation and make possible the withdrawal of all foreign forces. The United Nations could take a number of limited steps without a new Council resolution, but they were not a substitute for more far-reaching proposals which must be considered. United Nations observers and its other representatives already in Beirut could undertake small confidence-building measures, and the Council should not stand in the way of a modest increase in the number of observers if the Secretary-General considered that helpful. Further, the United Kingdom suggested the active use by the Secretary-General of his good offices and the expansion of UNIFIL's role to facilitate Israeli withdrawal from southern Lebanon.

The United States shared France's view that the international community should assume greater responsibility for the Lebanese people and welcomed the United Kingdom's suggestions. A United Nations presence would be useful throughout Lebanon, particularly to protect Palestinian refugee camps and reinforce cease-fires. Among the available instruments in Lebanon which might be useful were: a 50-man observer group; the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), which could be doubled; and UNIFIL, which was deployed in some cases in areas where violence no longer threatened people. The United States was ready to enter into serious discussions, without pre-conditions, on the composition and deployment of United Nations forces, preferably throughout Lebanon, to achieve those goals.

What was at stake in Lebanon, said Italy, was not only such fundamental humanitarian objectives as protecting civilians and Palestinian refugees, but also the survival of a State. The political situation had deteriorated to the extent that urgent United Nations intervention was required. National reconciliation, begun in talks between Lebanon's multiple factions at Geneva in November 1983 under promising auspices, had not been continued, and the Lebanese Army seemed not to have succeeded in representing the national community. The modalities for placing a United Nations force in Beirut must be subject to the most careful evaluation, above all in connection with the replacing of the multinational force in such a way as to ensure that a dangerous vacuum was avoided; a United Nations presence must also be seen in relation to the problem of the full restoration of Lebanese sovereignty.

Lebanon approved in principle the dispatching of United Nations forces or observers to assist in restoring security and stability and enabling the legitimate authorities to exercise control over all its territory. The proposal to send international forces to the Beirut area was a positive move, which, however, remained partial and limited as long as large parts of Lebanon continued to be occupied; any international force must have the means to undertake its tasks in all of Lebanon. Setting up and dispatching United Nations forces, as well as timing their deployment and determining their tasks, must be decided in consultation with the Lebanese Government, which was ready to co-operate in drawing up and implementing any resolution that might contribute to halting the crisis.

The Netherlands called on all parties to refrain from the use of force in Lebanon and to agree to a prompt, effective cease-fire in the Beirut area, which it believed would be conducive to early renewal of the internal conciliation process in Lebanon. It urged the parties to resume that process without delay, aimed at establishing a Government which enjoyed the widest national support; such a Government would be in a better position to accomplish the complete withdrawal of all non-authorized non-Lebanese forces from Lebanese territory. The Netherlands firmly believed that all concerned should consider ways in which the United Nations could help bring about a more stable situation in the Beirut area; however, the experience of the multinational force served as an example that one should not embark too hastily on a United Nations peace-keeping mission. The most pressing problem which the Council should address was an effective cease-fire and, to that end, the Netherlands was prepared to support any constructive proposal under the following conditions: a United Nations peace-keeping force should be deployed with the permission of the host country and with the consent of all parties involved; and it should have a clearly defined mandate and the Council's full backing. As an interim measure, limited steps such as those suggested by the United Kingdom could be useful.

Senegal said it had welcomed the 1983 national reconciliation Geneva conference and the cease-fire that seemed to have been the result; however, the situation had considerably worsened following recent events. The matter had two aspects, humanitarian and political; the most urgent aspect concerned the cessation of hostilities and the protection of civilians, including Palestinian refugees. Beyond that, the Lebanese State had to be safeguarded. The Council must promote without further delay a climate of mutual confidence to enable all parties to commit themselves to the peace process and must consider the Palestine question as a whole, in particular measures for convening an International Peace Conference on the Middle East (see p. 263), which could benefit Lebanon. Senegal supported the proposal to replace the multinational force in Beirut with an international one, to avoid a dangerous vacuum. The mission and terms of a United Nations force would have to be carefully evaluated, in close consultation with all parties concerned.

The Upper Volta said the Beirut situation was but one component of the Middle East problem, the centre-piece of which remained the Palestine question. The difficulties in Lebanon stemmed also from outside interference and the will of outside Powers to control that country, it added. The presence of Israeli troops in the south and of the so-called multinational forces in Beirut and Lebanese waters was inadmissible; only their immediate withdrawal and strict respect for Lebanon's territorial integrity could create conditions favourable to a reconciliation of all its people. It was the Council's duty to hasten the restoration of peace and alleviate the suffering of the population, including the Palestinian refugees. The Upper Volta viewed favourably the proposal to send a United Nations force entrusted with maintaining peace.

India also felt that any solution to the Lebanon problem could not be divorced from the search for a comprehensive Middle East settlement, based on the exercise by the Palestinians of their national and human rights. The 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon<sup>(21)</sup> was part of a calculated policy to decimate the Palestinians and erode Lebanon's independence. In India's opinion, recent events demonstrated beyond any doubt that the position of the multinational force was untenable and that its continued presence could only further aggravate tension. It had become necessary for the Council to consider United Nations action to fill the vacuum that withdrawal of that force would create. The objective of a United Nations force should be clear and its mandate precisely defined before deployment. It was also essential to see some evidence of a genuine national reconciliation process so that the Lebanese people would have the opportunity to find peace and stability free from all foreign interference.

Pakistan said the deepening human tragedy in Lebanon was matched by growing political anarchy compounded by foreign intervention; the situation called for initiatives aimed at reconciliation among the Lebanese factions. The United Nations had an important role to play, supplementing efforts by responsible Governments in the region; France's initiative fit in that context. A United Nations force in the Beirut area could prove crucial in mitigating violence and ensuring a cease-fire, which would provide Lebanon with a breathing space in which national reconciliation efforts could be sustained.

Also supporting France's proposal, Egypt said the deteriorating situation in Lebanon demanded assistance in facilitating the withdrawal of the multinational force and in making possible the most rapid deployment of a United Nations force; Egypt was ready to contribute to any joint effort intended to create the atmosphere necessary to break the cycle of violence and promote a political settlement and national reconciliation and the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon.

Communications (March–August). On 2 March 1984,<sup>(22)</sup> France transmitted a declaration adopted on 28 February at a Ministerial Meeting on European Political Co-operation. The Ministers of the 10 EEC members thereby expressed concern at the recent renewal of armed confrontation in Lebanon and struggle between Lebanese political forces. They called on all the parties to reach a lasting and effective cease-fire agreement, and hoped that the international community would urgently fulfil its peace-keeping responsibilities, in particular by installing in the Beirut area, with the parties' agreement, a United Nations force which would take up position following the departure of the multinational force. The Ministers recalled that the re-establishment of Lebanese integrity and sovereignty required Lebanese reconciliation as a pre-condition and indicated their firm conviction that the process initiated during the 1983 Geneva conference should be resumed under conditions corresponding to the aspirations of all the political and religious interests.

In a declaration adopted on 27 March by the EEC Ministers for Foreign Affairs, transmitted to the Secretary-General by France on 29 March,<sup>(23)</sup> the Ministers expressed the hope that, following the current national reconciliation talks among leaders of Lebanon's major political and religious groups meeting at Lausanne, Switzerland, progress towards reconciliation in Lebanon would prove possible, and that the Lebanese Government and all political forces would continue their efforts to bring about national unity and a lasting peace by reaching a just solution to Lebanon's internal problems.

On 6 March,<sup>(24)</sup> Israel conveyed an announcement by its Prime Minister's spokesman with regard to a Lebanese Government decision unilaterally to abrogate its 17 May 1983 agreement with Israel—calling for Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon in return for political and security arrangements in southern Lebanon—which had been concluded after negotiations between the two States and with active United States participation. The main obstacle to Lebanon's independence and the main factor disturbing peace efforts in the Middle East was the Syrian Arab Republic, Israel said, which immediately after the signing of the agreement had begun to take violent action to achieve its abrogation. Israel strongly condemned the Syrian intervention and the abrogation of the agreement. In the light of the fact that Lebanon was incapable of fulfilling its international obligations or preventing southern Lebanon from being turned once again into a terrorist base, Israel itself would determine the best ways to ensure its security.

On 29 May,<sup>(25)</sup> Lebanon submitted information on Israeli practices in southern Lebanon, the western Bekaa Valley and Rashaya, alleging that ever since the area was occupied by Israel in June 1982, it had been constantly exposed to abusive and inhuman actions; not a day passed but that the occupation forces raided towns and homes, blocked roads and arrested civilians, obstructing daily life and economic activity and preventing officials and internal security forces from guaranteeing the security of the region. The international community, Lebanon added, could not allow Israel to continue to ignore international law. Annexed to the letter was a report on Israeli practices against the civilian population of southern Lebanon and the Bekaa between March and May 1984.

Israel, on 26 June,<sup>(26)</sup> rejected the Lebanese charges as unfounded, saying that Lebanon's letter must clearly be viewed as reflecting a domination of the policies of the Lebanese Government by the Syrian Arab Republic and as yet another expression of relentless efforts by Syria to exploit Lebanon for its own bellicose policies.

By a letter of 28 June,<sup>(27)</sup> Lebanon charged that Israel had committed further acts of aggression, such as air raids on the island of Aranib, 6 kilometres off Tripoli, killing 15 residents of a scout camp and wounding 30 others, and on the port of Tripoli in order to hinder rescue operations. Lebanon further charged that occupation forces had laid siege to the village of Bidyas, Tyre district, on 27 June, rounding up villagers and arresting 17, and had closed the ports of Sidon and Tyre to commercial traffic, causing substantial losses to nearly 500 fishermen.

Further charges against Israel were submitted by Lebanon on 6 July<sup>(28)</sup> alleging that Israeli warships on 29 June had seized a passenger boat bound from Cyprus to Lebanon, forcing it to Haifa where the passengers were interrogated and nine of them detained. On 3 July, after urgent representations by the Lebanese Government, in particular with ICRC, Israel had released five of those detained. In Lebanon's view, Israel's action was incompatible with international law and endangered maritime navigation to and from Lebanon.

Israel, replying on 13 July,<sup>(29)</sup> stated that it fully respected and observed the principle of freedom of navigation on the high seas. However, being exposed to an ongoing and serious terrorist threat to its maritime borders, it was fully justified in having exercised its right to self-defence in seizing the ship Elisor Blanco, as there had been strong indications that it carried persons closely connected with an imminent threat to Israel's security. Following a brief investigation, the ship, its crew and most of the passengers had been allowed to proceed. Two passengers strongly suspected of involvement in terrorist activity had been detained for further investigation.

On 30 July,<sup>(30)</sup> Lebanon informed the Secretary-General that Israeli forces had prevented pupils in southern Lebanon from presenting themselves for baccalaureate examinations held throughout the country; such conduct, Lebanon added, showed contempt for education and culture and violated the most elementary ethical and humanitarian principles.

Israel, on 7 August,<sup>(31)</sup> rejected Lebanon's allegations as groundless; it said it had no intention of interfering with or obstructing the matriculation examinations. The Israel Liaison Office in Dbeye had promoted co-operation between the Lebanese and Israeli authorities with a view to assisting the local population in the areas under Israeli control; by its recent unilateral decision to close that Office, Lebanon had taken on itself the responsibility for increasing the population's hardships and must be held fully accountable for the event recounted in Lebanon's letter.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (August/September)

Following a Lebanese request of 24 August,<sup>(32)</sup> the Security Council met from 29 to 31 August and on 4 and 6 September to consider Israeli practices in southern Lebanon, the western Bekaa and the Rashaya region. Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Iran, Israel, Kuwait, Lebanon, Qatar, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure<sup>a</sup> to the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, at his request, and, at the request of Yemen in a letter of 28 August,<sup>(33)</sup> to the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations.

Meeting numbers. SC 2552-2556.

On 6 September, the Council voted on a draft resolution sponsored by Lebanon.<sup>(34)</sup> The vote was 14 to 1, as follows:

In favour: Burkina Faso, China, Egypt, France, India, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Peru, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Zimbabwe.
Against: United States.

Owing to the negative vote of a permanent member, the draft was not adopted.

By the draft, the Council would have reiterated its call for strict respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity within its internationally recognized boundaries. It would have affirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (fourth Geneva Convention), applied to the territories occupied by Israel in southern Lebanon, the western Bekaa and the Rashaya district, and that the occupying Power was duty-bound to respect and uphold the provisions of that Convention and other norms of international law. The Council would have called on Israel to respect strictly the rights of the civilians in the areas under its occupation in southern Lebanon, the western Bekaa and the Rashaya district and to comply strictly with the fourth Geneva Convention, and would have urged all parties to the Convention to ensure respect for and compliance with it in those areas. It would have demanded that Israel immediately lift all restrictions and obstacles to restoring normal conditions in the areas under its occupation that violated the Convention, particularly concerning the closing of roads and crossings, the limitation of freedom of movement of individuals and the normal flow of persons and goods between those areas and the rest of Lebanon, and the obstruction to the normal conduct of Lebanese Government institutions and personnel.

<sup>a</sup>Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Referring to the vote on the text, the United States said that Israel, as the occupying Power, clearly had special rights and duties. The United States strongly supported full respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity within its internationally recognized boundaries—objectives hardly addressed in the draft resolution. An essential element in achieving those objectives was the evacuation from Lebanon of all foreign forces, also not specifically mentioned, nor was the discord in the country other than in its southern part. The draft was also silent about humanitarian concerns for the suffering elsewhere in Lebanon and there was no mention of a role in that regard for international organizations, such as ICRC. The United States said it could not be party to an unbalanced and selective resolution; it was unreasonable and unrealistic to address the question of foreign forces in southern Lebanon and humanitarian and security problems there without dealing with the same problems in all of the country.

In Israel's view, the Council's vote would not change anything in Lebanon, whose Government had sought to obtain a propaganda victory to patch up its public image. The country's main problems were not even touched upon; fires still burned in Tripoli, Beirut and its environs, car bombs were still being set off and large numbers of people were being killed as the Council concluded another series of meetings divorced from life's realities.

Lebanon regretted United States opposition to a resolution limited to humanitarian aspects. The events in some parts of Lebanon were the inescapable consequences of a 10-year crisis; it was neither correct nor fair to compare what was taking place there with what was happening in Israeli-occupied territory, or to use that as an excuse not to deal with the tragedy and its root causes. The Lebanese Government was working determinedly to spread the sovereignty of the State to all the territory of Lebanon. Adoption of the draft would have put an end to the tragedy by putting an end to arbitrary Israeli practices; it would also have supported the Lebanese Government in its efforts aimed at the ultimate liberation of the land and its unification under one legitimate authority and one national sovereignty. What must be stressed was the agreement by the Lebanese cabinet on 15 March on security arrangements with Israel, in order to ensure complete Israeli withdrawal from Lebanese territory.

The Syrian Arab Republic regretted that the Council had not been able to shoulder its responsibilities under the Charter, a stand that would lead to an escalation of terrorist activities by Israel in southern Lebanon. The United States veto amounted to permitting Israel to continue occupying southern Lebanon and engaging in practices against the Palestinians and the inhabitants there. The Syrian presence in Lebanon was based on a legitimate Lebanese request; there was a joint determination to throw out the invaders and end the Israeli occupation. The Syrian Arab Republic would continue to help Lebanon because of its traditional, historic relations with it.

The USSR pointed out that over the previous three and a half years, the United States had eight times used the veto against vital Arab interests; the latest one gave Israeli forces the go-ahead to continue outrages in a third of Lebanon's territory.

The Observer of the League of Arab States held a similar position. Moreover, whatever might have been the circumstances of the Syrian presence in Lebanon, Israel could not under any conditions equate its presence in southern Lebanon as a result of invasion with the presence of the Arab deterrent forces in the rest of the country by invitation.

Before the vote, Zimbabwe said the Council should insist on respect for Lebanon's legitimate right to territorial integrity and political sovereignty, as demanded by resolutions 508(1982)<sup>(35)</sup> and 509(1982)<sup>(36)</sup> and in accordance with the Charter. Israel had adduced its security interests as justification for its continued illegal military occupation of a third of Lebanon; the road it was following could only complicate further an already dangerous situation and risk an even bloodier conflict. It was the Council's duty to take all possible steps to avert such a prospect.

Peru would have preferred a more balanced text, including mention of other occupying forces which must also comply with the Geneva Convention. To achieve immediate restoration of Lebanon's right to independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and full exercise of its authority throughout the territory, and to produce true opportunities for the country's stabilization and pacification, it was essential that all foreign presence be removed.

The United Kingdom's vote registered the importance it attached to the scrupulous observance of the fourth Geneva Convention in occupied southern Lebanon. Israel's continued occupation was wrong and was leading to a worsening cycle of violence. The solution was clear: Israel should withdraw its forces. There was an urgent need for early talks on the subject, through intermediaries if necessary; those talks must recognize, however, that Israel had legitimate security needs, and security arrangements must ensure safety for citizens on both sides of the border. Security precautions instituted by the occupying Power must have the minimum effect on the lives of the local inhabitants and must not conflict with Israel's obligations under the Convention. The early withdrawal of all foreign forces ought to proceed hand in hand with national reconciliation. It should be the Council's objective to help promote a solution, the key to which was in constructive and actively but quietly pursued diplomacy. UNIFIL should be given a wider and more useful role in helping the Lebanese Government maintain security in southern Lebanon, particularly as Israel's withdrawal took place, in order to provide added protection for civilians.

The Netherlands agreed with the applicability to the situation in southern Lebanon of the fourth Geneva Convention and the Hague Convention of 1907; at the same time, it questioned if it was proper for the Council to single out the humanitarian situation in southern Lebanon only, without regard for other aspects of the crisis in the country which needed to be addressed as urgently. Whether the opportunity would present itself for the Council to consider making UNIFIL's mandate more effective in the context of an Israeli withdrawal would probably be known only after the formation of a new Government in Israel, where elections had been held recently. In the mean time, the Netherlands believed, the Council should avoid any actions that might be counter-productive.

Opening the debate, Lebanon said it had come before the Council on behalf of the people of Lebanon, especially those of the south, the western Bekaa and the Rashaya area where more than 800,000 inhabitants suffered from Israel's occupation and unjust arbitrary practices and lived in constant terror. Israeli weapons were always pointed at them, their normal life was interrupted, and towns and villages were stormed daily. Israeli forces laid siege to homes and institutions, detained and imprisoned an average of 368 individuals every month, closed roads and shops, imposed curfews, and destroyed crops and orchards. All those acts were prohibited by customary law and by international instruments. From time to time, Israel closed the only two harbours in the south, the ports of Sidon and Tyre. In addition, Lebanon feared a possible diversion of the water of the Litani and Wazzani rivers; the Lebanese Ministry of the Interior had information that the engineering branch of the Israeli Defence Ministry had been digging a 3-kilometre tunnel from the Lebanese-Israeli border to the township of Deir Mimas, near the Litani River, which could absorb all the river water. The occupying authorities were isolating the region from the rest of the country and subjecting it to Israeli rule despite the fourth Geneva Convention, to which both Lebanon and Israel had acceded unconditionally and which protected people and properties from the excesses of occupation.

Lebanon sought from the Council: implementation of Council resolutions calling for complete Israeli withdrawal; immediate cessation of Israeli practices against the inhabitants of the south, the western Bekaa and the Rashaya region; and respect for their legitimate right to live in peace, security and dignity. The Council should compel Israel immediately to lift its siege of the occupied territories, insist that it respect the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the norms of international law, the Geneva and Hague Conventions and other international instruments, and stress Lebanon's inalienable right to its waters.

For some time, Israel said, there had been a further deterioration of the situation in Lebanon arising out of ongoing internecine warfare, particularly in and around Beirut and in the north, whereas the situation in southern Lebanon, in human and political terms, was far less of a pressing problem. The Lebanese Government was totally under Syrian political and military domination; now it was turning to the Council to talk of the problems in the south, which for many years had been virtually under the rule of a terrorist organization that had reduced the life of the Lebanese to a nightmare. Shrugging off the mass killings elsewhere in the country, where foreign-backed factions were sowing disorder and destruction, the Government apparently preferred to indulge in an international diversionary exercise meant to conceal its sagging fortunes.

There could be no comparison between the frightful chaos north of the Awali River and the security situation south of it, Israel continued. The withdrawal of Israeli forces beyond the Awali in the summer of 1983 was matched by a corresponding Syrian advance into other areas of Lebanon, directly or through proxies. The area north of the Awali was racked by civil strife and bloodshed; for the umpteenth time, the cease-fire had been broken and severe fighting resumed. By contrast, to the south of the Awali, Israel had made great efforts to ease the normal life of the inhabitants in the area under its control, which until June 1982 had been a PLO state within a State. There could be no better evidence of the fact that the Lebanese civilians were aware of Israel's efforts than their massive return to the south in the recent wave of returnees had come as a result of the severe fighting to the south of Beirut in February 1984.

Israel's military presence in southern Lebanon was only provisional; that was the reason Israel left the day-to-day administration, wherever possible, to Lebanese civilian authorities, with whom it co-operated and whom it assisted. Israel's conduct in southern Lebanon met the requirements of the fourth Geneva Convention and of other rules of international law aimed at protecting the civilian population. To prevent the spreading of terror, it was necessary from time to time to detain terrorist suspects and/or proven criminals. ICRC was being kept informed of the identity of all detainees. Only sporadically and upon reliable information indicating planned terrorist activity did Israeli forces undertake searches and limited ad hoc security measures.

Regarding water diversion, a group of United Nations observers invited to the area by the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) saw for themselves that no work had been done in or near the springs of the Wazzani to divert it, and there was as much truth to the Lebanese calumny with regard to the Litani, Israel said.

On numerous occasions, Israel had reaffirmed that it wished to see Lebanon independent and exercising full sovereignty over all of its territory. It had no territorial ambitions in Lebanon and wanted to live in peace and maintain good-neighbourly relations with it. Israel would withdraw its forces from Lebanon as soon as adequate provisions were made for ensuring Lebanese sovereignty in the south and for the security of Israel's northern border from attack and harassment. Israel was prepared to negotiate with Lebanon to reach mutual security arrangements in the south; however, if Lebanon was either unable or unwilling to prevent its territory from being used as a base for terrorist activities against another State, it must be prepared to expect that State to take self-defence measures to protect itself and its citizens.

The USSR charged that Israel sowed undisguised terror and violence in Lebanon, seeking to perpetuate its occupation of part of yet another Arab country. For the population of southern Lebanon, Israeli occupation meant daily mass repression, shooting of unarmed inhabitants, systematic raids and arrests, overcrowded prisons and concentration camps. The occupying forces were also violating the area's economic links with the rest of the country, as well as virtually blockading the transport of local products through checkpoints and systematically destroying plantations and crops. Israel's practices demonstrated its desire to turn southern Lebanon into another field for creeping annexation, isolate it from the rest of the country and push further northwards the borders of its expansion. Such inadmissible practices must be terminated; it was the Council's duty to demand that Israel cease its policy of terror and rescind its discriminatory measures. Israel's attempts to dismember Lebanon, undermine the economic life of the occupied areas and exploit the natural resources must be rebuffed. Israel must end its illegal occupation and withdraw its troops, as called for in Council resolutions whose implementation was the key to eliminating the abnormal situation in Lebanon.

Without United States support, the entrenchment of Israeli forces in Lebanon would not have been possible. In May 1983, the United States had assisted Israel in imposing a lopsided and insidious treaty, solidifying the gains of Israel's aggression. The fact that the American troops had been compelled to leave Lebanon and the failure of the 1983 treaty showed that attempts to impose on Lebanon systems from outside were dangerous and fruitless. The way to achieve peace in the Middle East was by a comprehensive political settlement involving collective efforts under the United Nations aegis; the best machinery for this would be an international conference. A detailed programme set forth by the USSR on 29 July 1984 (see pp. 259 and 265) provided an alternative to the continuation of Israel's policies of aggression in the guise of protecting its interests.

Similar views were expressed by the Ukrainian SSR, which said that a Middle East peace could be secured only through collective international efforts in which all parties concerned participated, as advocated by the overwhelming United Nations majority. The USSR proposal of 29 July for a comprehensive settlement was such a constructive approach. With its recent measures further exacerbating its occupation, Israel was obviously seeking to fragment Lebanon, to isolate the seized areas from the rest of the country and to entrench itself there. The continuing occupation of southern Lebanon and the gross interference by Israel and the United States in Lebanon's affairs were the fundamental causes for the crisis in and around the country. The Ukrainian SSR regarded it as the Council's duty to call for unconditional withdrawal of the armed Israeli forces from Lebanon, on the basis of resolutions 508(1982)<sup>(35)</sup> and 509(1982).<sup>(36)</sup>

China also condemned Israel's forcible occupation and its atrocities, and declared its support of the struggle of the Lebanese people and the legitimate demands of the Lebanese Government. In China's view, Israel had all along harboured ambitious designs on Lebanon; the perverse acts of its troops had reduced Lebanon to a devastated land where people lived in dire misery. It was precisely the cruel oppression by the occupying authorities that had forced the Lebanese to rise in resistance and self-defence. The Council should play an active role and implement its resolutions in earnest; in the mean time, it should consider other practical measures to preserve Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity and to eliminate foreign aggression and interference. The key to a solution was the withdrawal of Israeli troops.

Virtually all speakers called on Israel to respect international law, especially the fourth Geneva Convention. Among them, France stressed that Israel must respect the conventions on humanitarian law applicable to armed conflicts. The Council could not accept Israel's putting up obstacles to the accomplishment of UNIFIL's mission, it said, especially now that the Lebanese Government was making every effort to move towards national reconciliation. Lebanon must be helped to regain its independence.

In Nicaragua's opinion, Israel had taken every measure to isolate southern Lebanon, the western Bekaa and the Rashaya area. The cruel and inhuman treatment of the inhabitants of southern Lebanon was typical of Israel's conduct in all occupied Arab territories; its occupation of Lebanon was an important link in its expansionist plans, with the ultimate goal of displacing and annihilating Arabs and Palestinians. Nicaragua considered it essential that the Council use every means to make Israel implement its resolutions, seven of which in 1982 had demanded Israel's withdrawal from Lebanon. The Council must continue to demand that Israel adhere to the Charter principles, international law and the fourth Geneva Convention requiring that the occupying Power respect the basic human rights of the inhabitants of the territories it occupied. The specific problem of Lebanon could at no time be separated from the overall Middle East situation and Nicaragua considered it essential that an International Peace Conference (see p. 263) be convened as soon as possible, with the participation of the main protagonists.

Malta said the incidence of conflict elsewhere did not justify Israel's occupation of the territory of another State, even less its causing havoc and confusion through harassing Lebanese citizens. There was a growing urgency for concerted political action in the search for an enduring and equitable solution; in response to that need, the non-aligned countries of the Mediterranean were to meet in the first week of September at Valletta, in a dedicated effort at the ministerial level to chart a new course designed to reduce tension and expand co-operation. In the mean time, Malta urged Israel to turn away from its militaristic policies, respect internationally recognized principles and Council decisions, and join others in a peace process which would restore full sovereignty to the people of Lebanon within its own internationally recognized boundaries and which would also do justice to the rights of the Palestinians.

After suffering destruction and dismemberment during the civil war, Lebanon was trying to reunify itself by drawing up a national security programme, Egypt stated; yet Israel had now directed its forces to carry out completely arbitrary actions in southern Lebanon and the western Bekaa, to perpetuate a divided Lebanon. Israeli occupation practices had become more diversified and covered every segment of social, cultural, economic and human life; no city, school or village had been spared Israeli violence, which naturally brought about fierce resistance. Egypt hoped that the Council would adopt steps to make it possible to meet the Lebanese demands: to compel Israel to abide by the fourth Geneva Convention and cease all its oppressive practices in the Lebanese territory under its control; to condemn the Israeli occupation; and to implement Council resolutions demanding Israel's unconditional withdrawal.

In Burkina Faso's view, the facts reported by Lebanon were proof that Israel's true intentions were far from guaranteeing the security of its northern frontier; its practices were designed to inflame tension artificially in order to justify the perpetuation of the military occupation which it advocated as the sole means of achieving a settlement. On the basis of its conviction that no reason and no principle of international law could justify interference in the internal affairs of another country, Burkina Faso joined other non-aligned countries in demanding the withdrawal of the multinational force from Lebanon. The same conviction led it to urge Israel strictly to comply with Council resolutions and withdraw from southern Lebanon unconditionally and without delay.

Torture, harassment, detentions, raids and other inhuman practices appeared to have become the order of the day in southern Lebanon, said India; responsibility for the hardships and inhuman treatment of civilians there rested squarely with the Israeli authorities. Serious economic dislocation added to the human misery. It was appropriate that the Council should seek ways to ameliorate the situation, which could have wider repercussions for peace and stability in the region. Israel's 1982 invasion was part of its calculated policy systematically to decimate the Palestinians and completely erode Lebanon's sovereignty, India continued; its stranglehold of Lebanese territory strengthened with each day. A solution could not be divorced from the search for a comprehensive and lasting Middle East settlement, based on the exercise by the Palestinians of their national and human rights. Like most other speakers, India fully supported Lebanon's demands for immediate implementation of Council resolutions 508(1982) and 509(1982), demanding Israel's complete withdrawal and the immediate cessation of military activities in Lebanon. The time had come for the Council to act decisively to halt Israeli aggression and intransigence; India hoped that the Council would discharge its responsibility to restore the rule of law and civilized conduct in Lebanon.

The occupying forces did not shrink from any measure to intimidate the population of southern Lebanon into total submission and acquiescence in Israeli expansionist aims, Pakistan charged. The 1982 invasion was a product of the continued denial of the legitimate right of the Palestinians to an independent homeland in Palestine. The Council must not be deterred by Israel's tactics from fulfilling its responsibility of providing redress to Lebanon; it was incumbent on the Council to call on Israel to cease its inhuman practices and adhere to the norms of international law and conduct.

The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights considered it the Council's duty to save Lebanon from imminent disintegration, at which Israel's practices seemed to be aimed. The framework for peace was defined by the General Assembly in a December 1983 resolution<sup>(37)</sup> which endorsed the convening of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East (see p. 263). There was an international consensus that there could be no peace there so long as the Palestine question was not settled. In the light of those considerations, the Council must discharge its mandate; it was time that the people of Lebanon, who had suffered so much, enjoyed justice, full sovereignty and integrity.

What was taking place in the occupied Lebanese territories demonstrated once again that the aim of Israel's attack on Lebanon was to create a Zionist expansionist State, the Syrian Arab Republic said. Israel's expansion northwards required expansion to the Litani River, if not beyond, plotting against Lebanon's independence and unity, and using conditions to create small states that would be satellites of Israel. Israel's practices in southern Lebanon were in line with its policy in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights, creating hardship for the inhabitants to the point where they were forced to emigrate and then preventing them from returning. All that was an attempt by Israel to lay its hand on the south, while the United States did complementary work to destroy the unity of Lebanon, trample on its sovereignty and deprive it of its national identity. Thanks to Lebanon's awareness and its heroic struggle against foreign occupation, the May 1983 agreement was aborted, leading to the withdrawal of United States Marines and aborting the international plot against Lebanon as a whole. The Syrian Arab Republic hoped that the Council would meet its responsibilities vis-à-vis Lebanon and its people, in particular with regard to resolution 509(1982) demanding Israel's immediate and unconditional withdrawal.

Cuba charged that the slogan "Peace for Galilee", under which the 1982 Israeli invasion had been carried out, was a futile attempt to divert attention from Israel's real objectives: to liquidate Palestinian resistance, deal blows to progressive Lebanese forces, create conditions that would allow setting up a government in Beirut subject to Tel Aviv's orders, help place United States troops in Lebanon, implement Israel's expansionist policy, lay the bases for further aggression against other Arab States, especially the Syrian Arab Republic, and consolidate Israeli presence in the other occupied territories. By intensifying its irrational policy, it seemed as though Israel was attempting to punish the Lebanese for the humiliating outcome of the multinational force and for the abrogation of the May 1983 treaty imposed with United States pressure. The international community could not go on accepting the fact that a United Nations Member continued to trample underfoot international law and Charter principles; Israel must stop its criminal actions in southern Lebanon and withdraw its invading forces.

Kuwait termed Israel's practices in southern Lebanon unspeakable crimes and obsolete colonial practices; what was happening there was proof that Israel did not intend to leave but to entrench itself and transform the country into a northern strip, adding it to the other occupied territories. If the international community did not take effective steps to restore the situation in Lebanon, it might find itself faced with another fait accompli imposed by Israel with full impunity.

Yemen saw Israel's actions as a link in an endless chain of unjust wars against the Arab people and attempts to annihilate the Palestinians. It called for measures to compel Israel to lift its siege of areas under its occupation and to respect Charter provisions and international law, as well as Lebanon's sovereignty over its natural resources and territory. It also called on the Council to affirm the necessity of protecting the safety and security of the Palestinians in their camps in southern Lebanon; the Palestinians must be granted their right to self-determination and statehood on their own soil.

Israel expected Lebanon to shelve the problems of Israeli occupation until annexation became a fact of life, as had been the case in the Golan Heights and Jerusalem, Democratic Yemen remarked. The misery of the Lebanese under Israeli occupation, the brutality of the invading army and Israel's designs on and plunder of Lebanon's natural resources were facts that Israel's denial could not cover up. The more barbaric the Israeli soldiers, however, the more a people dedicated to freeing its land resisted. Problems elsewhere in the country did not justify continued occupation of southern Lebanon; Israel was taking advantage of those problems, many of its own making.

In Qatar's opinion, the Israeli occupying forces had put themselves in a situation where they were subjected to natural reactions from a people whose territories had been violated and whose national sovereignty had been undermined; they had no right to invoke those reactions as a pretext to oppress civilians, deny their human rights and destroy their lives. The chain of violence would have no end unless the occupation forces withdrew. Qatar called on the Council to affirm the first part of resolution 509(1982), calling on Israel once more to withdraw all its military forces unconditionally to Lebanon's internationally recognized boundaries. The Council should affirm its resolutions 512(1982)<sup>(38)</sup> and 513(1982),<sup>(39)</sup> concerning respect for the rights of civilian populations, and put an end to the acts of violence against them. It must compel Israel to respect the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other relevant international instruments, and must reaffirm Lebanon's historic water rights.

According to the United Arab Emirates, it was clear that the continued Israeli occupation of southern Lebanon and the persistence of inhuman violations there were threatening international peace and security. Refusing to withdraw, Israel was consolidating its occupation. The Council had no choice but to make sure that resolutions 508(1982) and 509(1982) were implemented. If it failed to deal with the question in an integrated manner, Lebanon would time and again have to come to it to complain against Israel, and other Arab States would undoubtedly have to lodge similar complaints, all stemming from Israeli aggression and expansion and the denial of legitimate Palestinian rights.

Israel's aggression against southern Lebanon was motivated by nothing but its desire to expand, to occupy Arab territory and to plunder resources, the Sudan believed. Its practices there were an extension of its practices in the other occupied territories. The Council and the international community must protect Lebanon, and its Government must be assisted to achieve peace and unity. If the Council failed to shoulder its obligations, not only would the occupation and the suffering continue, but the aggressor would be rewarded, and the use of force encouraged and the principles that had made the Council the guardian of international peace and security undermined.

The re-establishment of Lebanese control over its territory was essential for successful national reconciliation and reconstruction, Turkey stated. A timely, judicious resolution would help Lebanon regain its sovereignty and achieve progress in that process, which was retarded by Israel's continued occupation. Israeli practices were a leading cause of tension and violence in the region and a main impediment to a Middle East settlement. In conditions acceptable to the Lebanese Government, all foreign forces in Lebanon must evacuate the country.

For 11 months prior to the June 1982 invasion of Lebanon, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States said, there had been no incident at the borders of southern Lebanon. Israel arrogated to itself the right to determine when and if its security was established, so the term "provisional" that Israel applied to its occupation had the seeds of permanency.

Expressing support for the struggle of the Moslem people of southern Lebanon to regain their freedom and dignity with the limited resources they had, Iran said the victims of Zionist aggression should not fall into the trap set by the American-Zionist alliance and wait passively for the Council to gain their rights for them.

Further communications (September-December). On 19 September 1984,<sup>(40)</sup> Democratic Yemen transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of the same date from the PLO Executive Committee Chairman expressing deep concern over intelligence reports that Israel was planning to withdraw from the areas of Sidon and Tyre and to deliver those areas to its agents, the so-called armed Lebanese forces. Recalling the September 1982 massacres at the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps,<sup>(41)</sup> PLO appealed to the Secretary-General to take all measures to ensure that such genocide did not recur and to provide guarantees for the safety and security of the Palestinians in southern Lebanon.

On 14 December,<sup>(42)</sup> Lebanon protested a large-scale military action during the night of 13 December by some 4,000 Israeli forces on eight southern villages located in the zone covered by UNIFIL, resulting in four dead, dozens wounded and hundreds of civilians arrested or detained. To justify its aggression, Lebanon said, Israel claimed that some of the inhabitants of the villages had been planning to attack the Israeli forces. UNIFIL had been unable to withstand the Israeli attack because of the heavy gunfire and aerial bombing. It had been prevented by the Israeli forces from inspecting the area afterwards and from taking the dead and wounded to hospital. Lebanon reserved the right to request a special Council meeting should it deem it necessary.

Israel, on 21 December,<sup>(43)</sup> replied that Lebanon's accusations were unfounded. Acting on reliable information that terrorists were basing themselves in several villages in southern Lebanon and preparing attacks from there, IDF had carried out an operation in four villages to prevent such attacks. Israeli units had uncovered several ammunition and weapons caches and found propaganda material inciting civil disruption. Twenty suspects were arrested; in Marakah, a wanted terrorist was shot by Israeli troops. Despite precautions to avoid unnecessary casualties, a woman was fatally wounded during an unprovoked attack against Israeli forces. Expressing its commitment to preserving peace and security in southern Lebanon, Israel stressed that it would not allow terrorists to use that area as a staging ground for terrorist activities against it.

Incident at Ein El-Helweh

Communications. By a letter of 16 May 1984,<sup>(44)</sup> the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights drew the Secretary-General's attention to reports that Israeli troops had surrounded and entered the Ein El-Helweh Palestinian refugee camp outside Sidon in occupied southern Lebanon on 15 May in a search operation. Military action against Palestinian civilians living there resulted in 60 persons being killed or wounded and some 30 houses destroyed; in addition, 150 people were arrested. It was not yet clear, the Acting Chairman said, if the action had been a collective punitive measure; in any case, such action was prohibited by the fourth Geneva Convention.

The incident was also reported to the Security Council President in a letter of 16 May from PLO, transmitted by Egypt the following day.<sup>(45)</sup> Israel's action could only be viewed as a further link in the chain of its campaign of genocide against the Palestinians, PLO said; it called for immediate measures to put an end to that policy and to guarantee the safety and security of all Palestinians living under Israeli military occupation.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

Following a request of 17 May by Kuwait as Chairman of the Arab Group,<sup>(46)</sup> the Security Council met on 21 May to consider the charge of Israeli aggression against the Ein El-Helweh refugee camp.

Meeting number. SC 2540.

The Council invited Israel, Kuwait and Lebanon, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. It also invited the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, at his request, to participate in the debate under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure.<sup>b</sup> An invitation under that rule was also extended to the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States, as requested by Kuwait in a letter of 21 May.<sup>(47)</sup>

At Egypt's request, in a letter of 17 May,<sup>(48)</sup> the Council decided, by 11 votes to 1 (United States), with 3 abstentions (France, Netherlands, United Kingdom), that an invitation to participate be accorded to PLO. The President stated that Egypt's proposal was not made pursuant to rule 37<sup>c</sup> or rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, but, if approved, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights as those conferred on Member States when invited to participate pursuant to rule 37.

Before the vote on that decision, the United States said the only legal basis on which the Council might grant a hearing to persons speaking on behalf of non-governmental entities was rule 39. It did not agree with the Council's recent practice which appeared selectively to try, through a departure from the rules of procedure, to enhance the prestige of those who wished to speak in the Council; that practice was without legal foundation and an abuse of the rules.

Stressing that it did not wish to convey the impression that PLO should not be heard by the Council, the Netherlands said its reservation related only to the procedure followed, which was designed to grant PLO a status similar to a Member State. It was a political gesture that did not reflect PLO's true relationship to the United Nations.

Lebanon said the events during the night of 15/16 May and on 17 May in the Ein El-Helweh camp south-east of Sidon deserved the Council's serious attention. IDF had launched a large-scale assault, attacking the camp with three contingents and then overrunning it, blowing up several houses, some with the occupants still inside. They killed or wounded many inhabitants and arrested approximately 150, who were transported to a concentration camp. Such an attack could not be justified; no attempt to distort the facts could absolve the occupying Power of its responsibility. Since its occupation of southern Lebanon, Israel had consistently launched oppressive military campaigns and carried out inhuman practices against Lebanese citizens and against Palestinians in their camps. Lebanon called on the Council to denounce, deplore and condemn those practices, which were in flagrant violation of the Charter and of human rights, to recognize the real situation in southern Lebanon, and to do its duty to preserve the safety of the population there and restore to Lebanon the usurped territory. It did not advocate the accumulation of resolutions that remained dead letters, it said, but would continue to call for implementation of earlier Council resolutions until that call was heeded. It was incumbent on the Council to put an end to the current state of affairs by prevailing on Israel to withdraw completely from southern Lebanon so that Lebanese sovereignty and authority could be regained and the south transformed into a zone of peace and security. If the Council did not take a position commensurate with the gravity of Israel's practices, it would pave the way for Israel to persist in its attempt to change the geographic and demographic character of southern Lebanon in order to further its own designs under the false pretext of protecting its own security.

<sup>c</sup>Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter."

Israel said IDF had had reliable information about large quantities of arms and ammunition at the camp, and, acting on that information, it had conducted extensive search activities on the night of 15/16 May. One house was entered, in which arms and ammunition were found. The searchers encountered some resistance, as a result of which a resident of the house was injured and transferred to a local hospital; another who tried to escape was also injured. Explosives and weapons were found in a courtyard. It was feared that they were booby-trapped; the only safe course was to supervise their immediate detonation, which caused some damage to adjacent houses. IDF had already confirmed that Israel would assist the owners of the damaged houses to make the necessary repairs. During the search, a considerable number of weapons and large quantities of magazines and ammunition were uncovered. On 16 and 17 May, demonstrations and disturbances were staged by and involved only local residents; they were a direct outcome of the ongoing conflict between the rival factions of the PLO terrorists, which were all represented at the camp. During the disturbances, there were two fatalities—not 60, as PLO had claimed. Israel held that the problems of the Middle East lay elsewhere: in the Persian Gulf, the Iran-Iraq war, the invasion of Afghanistan, the periodic massacres of tens of thousands of Syrians by their own Government, and the situation in Lebanon proper where hundreds, if not thousands, of casualties had occurred in recent months, primarily in Beirut.

Kuwait said the events of 15 May were only one more link in a chain of inhuman crimes which Israel continued to commit in its desperate attempts to strengthen its grasp over the occupied territories; the latest crime again showed that Israel was convinced that the Palestinian presence constituted a danger to its territorial dreams. In dealing with that presence, Israel had resorted to defaming the Palestinians, transforming them in the eyes of the world into nothing more than a group of terrorists. Israel had the mistaken illusion that the extermination of the Palestinians and the terror through which it was trying to stifle their movement could dissuade them from carrying on their national struggle. As occupying authority, Israel was fully responsible for what was occurring in the occupied territories; it must not only put an end to the massacres, dispersal, torture and imprisonment of civilians and the destruction of their houses, but protect the population and their goods. The Arab world appealed to the Council to fulfil its responsibilities as defined in the Charter and ensure implementation of all its resolutions.

The PLO representative called the incident at Ein El-Helweh a racist and genocidal crime. He understood that, according to a report, members of the so-called Palestinian National Guard—which he said was a unit of the Israeli occupation troops—had fired at boys burning tyres on 17 May; the boys were trying to prevent the advance of Israeli troops further inside the refugee camp. The population in southern Lebanon, be they Lebanese citizens or Palestinian refugees, were only exercising a legitimate right to resist foreign occupation. PLO trusted that the Council would take proper action, as outlined by Lebanon, to ensure Israel's compliance with Council resolutions and see to it that the safety and security of the civilians in the occupied territories were guaranteed. It was the Council's duty to insist that Israel respect the Charter and international conventions; PLO called on the Council to invoke the powers vested in it and impose mandatory sanctions on a Member that violated the Charter, committed crimes and failed to respect conventions.

The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights said the operation carried out at Ein El-Helweh represented a systematic denial of Palestinian rights and was a flagrant violation of human rights. Israel was trying to silence the Palestinians who were legitimately protesting the occupation of their territory and was pursuing illegal plans to annex the West Bank and Gaza. Its policies exacerbated tensions in the region and endangered international peace and security. More than ever it was necessary to consider the Palestine question in its entirety at an international conference on peace in the Middle East, from which Lebanon particularly would benefit. The constant outbreaks of violence often sprang from the Palestinian cause and the failure to settle the Middle East question. Without further delay, the Council must put an end to the tragic events and seek to promote a climate of mutual confidence which would allow the renewal of dialogue between all the parties concerned.

India regarded the tragic events at the camp as clear evidence of increasing Israeli brutality and repression in the occupied territories, where similar attacks had been reported and where raids, indiscriminate killing, torture, imprisonment and harassment of Palestinians had become daily occurrences. Relentlessly pursuing its policy of intimidating the population, Israel was consolidating its stranglehold on the territories. Responsibility for the atrocities at Ein El-Helweh rested squarely with the Israeli forces. The need of the hour was to put an immediate end to bloodshed and harassment and restore peace and order; Israel should be made to discharge its obligations under the international conventions that dictated civilized behaviour by occupying Powers towards the people of occupied territories. It must withdraw all its military forces unconditionally to the internationally recognized boundaries of Lebanon. At the same time, it was imperative that the international community seek a comprehensive, just and lasting Middle East peace, to the achievement of which the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries attached paramount importance.

The Israeli occupation authorities had created and trained a so-called Palestinian National Guard which frequently fired on the unarmed population, Egypt said; the mobilization of such agents was clearly aimed at sowing discord and dissent among the Palestinians. Collective punishment and the harassment and murder of Palestinian refugees should be vigorously denounced and condemned, and effective and immediate measures adopted to protect the civilians and refugees and guarantee their safety and security; the events at Ein El-Helweh proved the urgent need for such action. The United Nations must act decisively to ensure compliance with its decisions demanding complete Israeli withdrawal.

In Pakistan's opinion, the resort to reprisals such as the intrusion into the refugee camp clearly pointed to the difficulties Israel was facing in its continuing occupation of southern Lebanon; it had been able to overrun southern Lebanon in 1982, but had not been able to crush the spirit of the inhabitants. Israel's sinister scheme to divide the population and recruit a mercenary militia also had proved futile. In choosing refugee camps as the target of retaliatory measures, Israel had demonstrated once again its animosity and ruthlessness towards the Palestinians. Israel's steps towards consolidating its control and asserting its dominance in the region appeared to follow the pattern set earlier in the West Bank, Gaza and the Golan Heights. The Council's immediate task was to secure Israel's withdrawal from Lebanon, a first step towards solution of the Middle East problem, at the heart of which was the denial of Palestinian national rights.

The Observer of the League of Arab States reiterated that the central issue of the Middle East situation and the major source of tension and potential conflict remained Israel's usurpation of Palestinian rights, its annexation of Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, its establishment and proliferation of illegal settlements, its continued occupation of southern Lebanon, and its attempts to create quislings in the occupied territories. Israel, stating that the Council was not dealing with the central and more explosive issues, had introduced tangential issues in order to reduce the importance of the events at Ein El-Helweh and to cover up its annexationist policies. The Arab Group and the Arab League had come to the United Nations because they believed that, although there had not been enough evidence to that effect, it was possible through the Council to bring about a just and peaceful settlement.

Peace-keeping operation

UNIFIL activities

During 1984, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, in April and October—by resolutions 549(1984) and 555(1984), respectively—each time for a six-month period, as recommended by the Secretary-General. UNIFIL had been established by the Council in 1978,<sup>(49)</sup> following an Israeli invasion of Lebanon.<sup>(50)</sup> Its terms of reference were to confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces, to restore international peace and security and to assist the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area. A second Israeli invasion, launched in June 1982,<sup>(21)</sup> radically altered the situation in which UNIFIL had to function. Following the invasion, the Council instructed the Force, as interim tasks, to maintain its positions in its area of deployment and provide protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population.<sup>(51)</sup>

Communications. By letters of 9 April<sup>(52)</sup> and 8 October 1984,<sup>(53)</sup> Lebanon twice requested the Security Council to extend for another six months the mandate of UNIFIL, which was to expire on 19 April and 19 October. It stated that, despite the current circumstances in southern Lebanon, UNIFIL continued to be an important factor in providing stability; its presence represented the United Nations commitment to support Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. In its April letter, Lebanon also expressed the belief that the time had come for the Council to reassess UNIFIL's mission in the light of current developments, so that it could perform a more dynamic role.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In a report of 9 April,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General described the activities of UNIFIL since the previous extension of its mandate in October 1983.<sup>(54)</sup> While the situation in Lebanon had been cause for great concern during those six months, the situation in the UNIFIL area of deployment had remained relatively peaceful, he said. UNIFIL's presence was regarded as essential by the Lebanese Government and had been of benefit to the much-increased population in its area of deployment. As requested by Lebanon,<sup>(52)</sup> the Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend UNIFIL's mandate for another interim period.

None the less, the Secretary-General stated, the Force's current role did not measure up to its original mandate or to the intentions of later Council resolutions adopted in 1982,<sup>(55)</sup> under which the withdrawal of Israeli forces and the restoration of peace, normality and the authority and sovereignty of the Lebanese Government were main objectives.

In recent weeks, he added, he had been considering further means to achieve those objectives by focusing on the common interests which all concerned had in changing the situation in southern Lebanon. Positions varied less on the general objective than on the conditions in which it was to be achieved.

During the period under review, UNIFIL continued to operate check-points and conduct patrols in its area of deployment, with a view to contributing to the maintenance of order and ensuring the security of the local population. The situation in its area had remained relatively quiet, although there had been an increasing number of incidents involving the Israel Defence Forces and local militia groups armed and uniformed by them. There was a further influx of displaced persons from the north, particularly from the Beirut area, and many new houses were being built.

The presence of IDF within the UNIFIL area remained at approximately battalion strength. The Israeli forces normally limited their activities to patrolling main roads but, on occasion, for stated reasons of security, they erected road-blocks, cordoned off villages, searched houses and detained local inhabitants.

There was a growing resistance by the local population to the presence of IDF. Strikes, demonstrations and other forms of protest were held on several occasions in reaction to arrests of local inhabitants. A serious confrontation had occurred at Marakah on 24 February, in which one villager was killed, 10 wounded and 10 others arrested. Another incident, during which a villager was killed and two arrested, had taken place at Qana on 6 March, when the local population protested against earlier arrests of villagers and attempted to prevent IDF personnel from entering the village. UNIFIL also recorded some 22 incidents involving exploded or unexploded roadside bombs.

During the reporting period, IDF continued its efforts to recruit and arm selected villagers in the UNIFIL area, but a plan to establish "village committees" under Israeli guidance had met with little success. UNIFIL continued its efforts to contain the activities of the Lebanese irregulars armed and controlled by IDF. Most of the incidents involving those irregulars were related to firing at or near UNIFIL personnel and attempts at hijacking UNIFIL vehicles.

UNIFIL continued to co-operate with the Lebanese authorities as well as UNRWA, UNICEF and ICRC in assisting the local population. Approximately 9,000 Lebanese civilians were treated in UNIFIL medical centres. The medical personnel of the Force, in co-operation with UNICEF, assisted the Lebanese Government in carrying out vaccinations and water analysis. In addition, UNIFIL cleared mined land and provided equipment and engineering assistance for public works.

The Commander of the Force and his staff maintained contact with the Lebanese Government, its regional authorities and the Israeli authorities. In March and April, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs had held discussions with high officials of the Governments in the region.

The Lebanese internal security forces continued to co-operate with UNIFIL in maintaining order; they carried out independent patrols and assisted UNIFIL in special investigations. IDF continued to deny access to Tyre, Sidon and all areas adjacent to the coastal road. UNIFIL convoys to Beirut had to be suspended, and air and sea shipments diverted to Tel Aviv and Haifa. Flight clearance was on occasion denied by Israeli military authorities on the grounds that it would interfere with activities of the Israeli air force. Negotiations had been initiated with the Lebanese authorities to secure a suitable landing site, so that air communications between UNIFIL headquarters and logistics personnel in Beirut could be re-established.

In addition to its other tasks, UNIFIL continued to search for and defuse unexploded mines, shells and bombs.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Council consider a future course of action, to include the following elements, to make UNIFIL's mandate more effective, specifically in southern Lebanon, in the context of the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the area: temporary deployment of UNIFIL, with elements of the Lebanese Army and internal security forces, in areas vacated by Israeli forces; immediate deployment of UNIFIL elements in the Sidon area on Israeli withdrawal, to assure the safety and security of the population, including Palestinian refugees in the area's camps; and working out arrangements to ensure that southern Lebanon became a zone of peace under the sovereignty and authority of the Lebanese Government.

The Secretary-General again drew attention to the financial difficulties faced by the Force; as a result of the accumulated shortfall in the UNIFIL account, the Organization was falling far behind in reimbursing troop-contributing countries. He appealed for prompt payment of assessments and for voluntary contributions.

Security Council resolution 549(1984)

19 April 1984 Meeting 2530 13-0-2

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/16491).

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, Egypt, France, India, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Peru, United Kingdom, United States, Upper Volta, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Israel and Lebanon were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Following adoption of the resolution, the USSR said that discussion of the abnormal situation in Lebanon had been a permanent feature of Council activities for six years. The time had come for the Council to take another serious look at the root causes of the dangerous tension—Israeli aggression against Lebanon and its continued illegal occupation of more than a third of Lebanese territory, which had turned Lebanon into a constantly smouldering source of war. In the light of Lebanon's request and the Secretary-General's recommendations, the USSR had no particular objection to extending the mandate of UNIFIL. At the same time, it assumed that during the extension period the Council would take every step necessary to end the Israeli occupation. If Israel failed to withdraw its troops from Lebanon, the Council would have to carry out the task entrusted to it by the Charter and consider the adoption of practical steps. Confirming its position of principle, the USSR said the Force should not impinge on Lebanon's sovereign rights, it should not be entrusted with functions not in accordance with its duties, it should not intervene in Lebanon's affairs, and full account should be taken of Israel's responsibility for deeds it had perpetrated. All expenses related to dealing with the consequences of its armed aggression against Lebanon should be borne by Israel, as the aggressor; as in the past, the USSR would not participate in defraying expenses connected with UNIFIL's establishment and functioning.

The United States stressed that it was its understanding that the adopted text did not go beyond the October 1983 Council resolution on the Force's mandate,<sup>(54)</sup> but simply extended it.

Sharing the concern expressed in the Secretary-General's report, France said UNIFIL had not been able to live up completely to the hopes of the international community and the Lebanese people. It was to be hoped that the abnormal situation wherein Israeli forces continued to operate in the UNIFIL area of deployment would soon end. UNIFIL should contribute to re-establishing peace in southern Lebanon and ensure more effective security for the civilians there, under the authority of the Lebanese Government. France was prepared to consider an extension of UNIFIL's mandate and deployment area, especially if such a request were made by the Lebanese Government.

Reaffirming its view of the importance of UNIFIL's presence as an expression of the United Nations commitment to the Lebanese Government in regaining authority over the area, Egypt called for the complete withdrawal of all foreign forces, including Israel's, from Lebanese territory.

The Netherlands said its decision to retain a limited contingent in UNIFIL was based on its conviction that the Force could and should play a more meaningful role; a Council decision that would reactivate UNIFIL's role was long overdue. The Netherlands urged all parties to make use of the potential of the peace-keeping operations to restore international peace and security. It added that, although UNIFIL had been set up to facilitate the withdrawal of Israeli forces, it would be unfair and unrealistic to ignore other aspects of the crisis which also needed to be addressed urgently. In that context, the Netherlands called on all parties to agree to a cease-fire, and stressed the need for a resumption without delay of the process of conciliation and negotiation aimed at establishing a Government which enjoyed the widest possible national support and exercised its authority throughout Lebanon, whose territorial integrity and sovereignty required the withdrawal of all unauthorized foreign forces.

The United Kingdom considered it the Council's duty to help restore peace and stability and uphold Lebanon's territorial integrity. It agreed that the Council should reassess and expand UNIFIL's mission so that it could perform a more dynamic role, and it interpreted the resolution as endorsing further exploration of such possibilities by the Secretary-General.

In Lebanon's opinion also, it was time for the Council to reassess UNIFIL's mission. Lebanon strongly supported: the initiative called for by the Secretary-General to enable UNIFIL, in consultation with the Lebanese Government and the parties concerned, to achieve respect for Lebanon's territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence within its internationally recognized boundaries, as well as Israel's withdrawal; his proposal for temporary deployment of UNIFIL in vacated areas; and UNIFIL's expanded deployment to assist in restoring Lebanese authority, as well as in working out arrangements to ensure the speedy transformation of southern Lebanon into a zone of peace under government authority. Lebanon hoped that the main arterial roads in the south would soon be brought under United Nations supervision; it called for an opening of all crossing-points leading to the south and for an end to all activities against the population. It did not recognize any military formations that had not legitimately been established, including the so-called South Lebanese Army.

Israel reaffirmed its view that, in the circumstances surrounding the situation in Lebanon since June 1982, UNIFIL had outlived its usefulness in southern Lebanon; the growing recognition of that viewpoint had also been evidenced in recent months by the position of a number of troop-contributing countries which, seeing no effective mission for UNIFIL in its area of deployment, had reduced their contingents. The security of southern Lebanon should eventually be guaranteed by Lebanese forces; UNIFIL could perform a useful role by serving as a buffer separating the Israeli and the Syrian forces and could fulfil a useful function north of the IDF deployment area, where it could serve as a genuine peace-keeping force.

Israel had general reservations on much of the Secretary-General's report. It could not regard the 1978 resolutions on the establishment of UNIFIL<sup>(56)</sup> and three 1982 resolutions calling for withdrawal of Israeli forces<sup>(55)</sup> as the basis of the Council's consideration, as the situation clearly demonstrated that it was not Israel's military presence in southern Lebanon that was at the root of the country's instability. The USSR, through its stooges, Israel said, had been instrumental in destabilizing Lebanon for a decade and more, which was a root cause of the current situation in that country. Israel regretted that the report made no mention of the Syrian presence and terrorist forces in Lebanon, of their well-documented responsibility for destabilizing the country and of their role in depriving the Lebanese Government of its authority; consequently, it could not accept the approach suggested by the Secretary-General. It was equally regrettable that the report made no mention of resolutions which referred to the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanese territory, for example resolution 520(1982).<sup>(57)</sup> Israel also regarded the report as incomplete in its treatment of the numerous terrorist incidents whose perpetrators' identities were omitted.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). On 9 October 1984,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on the activities of the Force since 10 April. During that period, as in the previous period, UNIFIL had continued to operate check-points and conduct patrols in its area of deployment. Though relatively quiet, there again had been an increasing number of incidents in the area involving IDF and local militia groups, and population continued to flow from the north.

IDF remained at battalion strength and acts of resistance against it increased. UNIFIL recorded the arrest of 423 civilians in 75 separate incidents, most of them later released. There had been a number of incidents when IDF, entering villages to search and arrest, was violently resisted by local inhabitants; IDF had reacted at times by firing, which resulted in casualties. During confrontations at Marakah, on 12 May and 27 June, a girl was shot, four other local inhabitants were injured and 119 men were arrested. Similar incidents occurred in other villages. On 11 June, Israeli personnel in civilian clothes and cars entered Burj Rahal and opened fire when the villagers demonstrated against their presence; one man was killed and another wounded.

UNIFIL also recorded some 65 incidents involving roadside bombs; some exploded, causing casualties and damage, others were demolished. During a mine-clearing operation near Ett Taibe on 20 June, five soldiers were injured.

During the reporting period, IDF attempted to recruit soldiers from the local population to build up the so-called South Lebanese Army. UNIFIL continued its efforts to contain the activities of those and other Lebanese irregulars armed and controlled by IDF; incidents involving UNIFIL and such irregulars were related to firing at or near UNIFIL positions.

UNIFIL continued to co-operate with the Lebanese authorities, UNRWA, UNICEF and ICRC in assisting the local population. UNIFIL medical personnel at Naqoura performed 315 surgical operations and treated 487 in-patients; UNIFIL helped carry out vaccinations, water analysis programmes and public works projects.

After June 1984, UNIFIL sent light convoys to Beirut. However, because of the poor quality of the road, the nature of the terrain and the unstable security situation, it was not possible to set up a normal supply and provisioning system which would permit using the Beirut International Airport and seaport.

During the period, the Commander of UNIFIL and his staff maintained contact with the Lebanese Government and regional authorities; they also maintained contact with the Israeli authorities on matters pertaining to the functioning of the Force.

In June, the Secretary-General had travelled to the Middle East for discussions with high officials of the Lebanese Government and other Governments in the region; he also visited UNIFIL headquarters and some of its contingents. The Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs also had held discussions with government officials in Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and Israel in September. From those contacts, the Secretary-General derived the impression that there was general agreement on the objective of Israeli withdrawal from southern Lebanon and on the necessity of working out arrangements to ensure peace and security in the region and to restore Lebanese authority and sovereignty in the wake of Israel's withdrawal. There were a number of outstanding questions on the means by which the objectives could be achieved, and various alternatives had been discussed; it was generally agreed that an expanded mandate for UNIFIL and a widening of its area of operation would be key elements in such arrangements. The Secretary-General hoped that it would be possible in the near future to move to an agreement on the necessary practical arrangements.

With regard to the future role of UNIFIL, it was not possible to make a detailed forecast of its actual task or functions in an extended role or to estimate accurately what increase in strength would be necessary. The Secretary-General believed that it would be particularly important to provide UNIFIL with a mandate which it could successfully implement, which would command the necessary support and co-operation, and which would provide the necessary reassurances to all the parties concerned.

In the light of Lebanon's request, the Secretary-General recommended that UNIFIL's mandate be extended for another interim period of six months. Repeating his suggestions made in his April report (see p. 298) on action to make UNIFIL's mandate more effective in the context of a withdrawal of the Israeli forces, he stated that developments in recent weeks seemed to have brought about more positive prospects for the realization of those suggestions. He attached great importance to taking advantage of the current, relatively favourable situation with regard to an Israeli withdrawal.

UNIFIL's existence should not be taken for granted indefinitely, the Secretary-General stated. The Council and the troop-contributing countries had shown great patience and understanding during the previous two years when UNIFIL had been forced by circumstances to play a role not envisaged at its inception. If positive developments did not take place in a relatively short time, it would not be fair to count on the indefinite participation of the troop-contributing countries, all the more so in view of the financial liability it entailed. He reiterated his appeal for prompt payment of assessments and for voluntary contributions to reimburse troop contributors.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

By resolution 555(1984) of 12 October, the Security Council extended UNIFIL's mandate for another six months.

The Security Council,

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

Security Council resolution 555(1984)

12 October 1984 Meeting 2559 13-0-2

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/16779).

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Burkina Faso, China, Egypt, France, India, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Peru, United Kingdom, United States, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Speaking after the vote, Lebanon, which had been invited, at its request, to participate without the right to vote, associated itself with the Secretary-General's observations and suggestions; a complete Israeli withdrawal and proper security arrangements would make it necessary to revise the functions and task of UNIFIL and the number of its troops, extend its deployment area and increase its effectiveness. UNIFIL would then be in a position to contribute, together with the Lebanese Army and the internal security forces, to the extension of the authority of the State to the internationally recognized borders, so that the south might become an area of peace and security. That new contribution of UNIFIL would be a temporary necessity during the proposed Israeli withdrawal phase, until the legitimate Lebanese forces could assume full and definitive responsibility for security.

In view of Lebanon's request, the USSR did not object to an extension of the mandate; at the same time, it emphasized its growing concern at the abnormal situation in which the Council was obliged systematically to extend the Force's mandate while conditions existed that prevented it from performing its functions. The reason for that dangerous situation was the continued illegal occupation by Israel.

The United Kingdom again advocated an expanded United Nations presence in Lebanon; it agreed with the Secretary-General's suggestion that United Nations machinery be made available to the parties to facilitate the reaching of agreements and provide facilities for the necessary discussions. It interpreted the text as endorsing further action by the Secretary-General on those lines, agreeing with him that the current opportunity must not be missed.

The Netherlands considered it obvious in the circumstances that the Council should extend UNIFIL's mandate for a limited period, pending the outcome of negotiations on arrangements to realize the overall objectives of Israeli withdrawal, peace and security in the region, and restoration of Lebanese authority and sovereignty. UNIFIL's future would be jeopardized by a failure of the parties concerned to agree on the necessary arrangements, and the Netherlands called on them to resolve their outstanding differences.

In France's view, UNIFIL was essential for the return to normal conditions in southern Lebanon and it reiterated its readiness to consider the new tasks which the Council might decide to entrust to the Force. The United States said it hoped that the resolution extending UNIFIL's mandate would contribute to peace in the area.

Composition

As of October 1984, the composition of UNIFIL was as follows:

In addition, UNIFIL was assisted by 63 military observers of UNTSO, organized as Observer Group Lebanon. Those unarmed observers were under the operational control of the UNIFIL Commander. Another observer group in Lebanon, Observer Group Beirut, composed of 50 observers headed by an officer-in-charge under the overall command of the UNTSO Chief of Staff, was established pursuant to a 1982 Security Council resolution<sup>(58)</sup> and given the task of monitoring the situation in and around Beirut.

The military observers of UNTSO continued to man the five observation posts along the Lebanese side of the Israel-Lebanon armistice demarcation line and to maintain teams at Tyre, Metulla and Château de Beaufort; in addition, they operated four mobile teams.

The Lebanese internal security forces continued to co-operate with UNIFIL in maintaining order in its area of operation. They carried out independent patrols and assisted UNIFIL in special investigations of mutual concern. The Lebanese Army unit serving with UNIFIL maintained a strength of 150 all ranks, deployed in the UNIFIL area and attached to different battalions.

Between 13 October 1983 and 9 October 1984, six members of the Force died, two of them from the accidental discharge of a weapon, the others in traffic accidents. Since UNIFIL's establishment in 1978, 102 members of the Force had died, 41 of them as a result of firing and mine explosions, 48 in accidents and 13 from natural causes. Also, some 125 were wounded in armed clashes, shellings and mine explosions.

The French battalion, which had been temporarily reduced at France's request in September 1982, was brought back to full strength with the arrival of three companies on 5 February 1984. In accordance with a decision of Senegal, repatriation of the Senegalese battalion was completed on 1 November. On 15 November,<sup>(59)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that, with the departure of the Senegalese battalion, the number of troops had been reduced to approximately 5,200, well below its authorized strength of 7,000; subject to the usual consultations, the Secretary-General intended to accept Nepal's offer to provide a replacement battalion of about 650 men.

On 19 November,<sup>(60)</sup> the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members had that day considered the matter in informal consultations and agreed with the Secretary-General's proposals.

Palestinian cultural property

In a 2 October 1984 report on the situation in the Middle East (see p. 260), the Secretary-General dealt with implementation of a December 1983 General Assembly resolution<sup>(61)</sup> condemning the plunder of the Palestinian cultural heritage and calling on Israel to make restitution of all cultural property belonging to Palestinian institutions. The Secretary-General stated that Israel, in a reply to his request for information dated 28 August 1984, had recalled its statement before the Assembly in December 1983 that it had returned the files referred to in the resolution; also, he had been informed by ICRC that, in the context of the release by Israel of Palestinian prisoners, it had received from Israeli authorities several hundred boxes, containing books and files taken from the Palestine Research Centre, which had been flown to Algiers on 23/24 November 1983 and had been handed over to PLO representatives. In addition, the Secretary-General had been kept informed of efforts by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) since 1982 to assess the extent of the destruction of Palestinian educational and cultural institutions in Lebanon and to determine the priority needs of those institutions within UNESCO's areas of responsibility. The Director-General was pursuing his contacts with the Lebanese authorities and the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon in order to obtain the information required for that purpose.

Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic

In 1984, the General Assembly, as well as the Commission on Human Rights, dealt with the situation in the Syrian Golan Heights since Israel's December 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Israeli-occupied territory (see p. 322).

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, established in 1974<sup>(62)</sup> in accordance with the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic,<sup>(63)</sup> continued in 1984 to supervise the observance of the cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic in the Golan Heights area and to ensure, in accordance with its mandate, that there were no military forces in the area of separation. On the Secretary-General's recommendation, the Security Council extended UNDOF's mandate twice during the year, in May and November, by resolutions 551(1984) and 557(1984) (see p. 305).

Peace-keeping operation

UNDOF activities

Reports of the Secretary-General. Prior to the expiration of the six-month mandates of UNDOF on 31 May and 30 November 1984, the Secretary-General submitted reports on the activities of the Force for the periods from 22 November 1983 to 21 May 1984<sup>(64)</sup> and 22 May to 16 November 1984.<sup>(65)</sup>

In both reports, the Secretary-General stated that UNDOF had continued to fulfil its tasks, with the co-operation of the parties and facilitated by the close contact of the Force Commander and his staff with the military liaison staffs of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic. The cease-fire had been maintained and no complaints concerning the UNDOF area of operation had been lodged by either party.

In accordance with the terms of the Agreement on Disengagement, UNDOF continued to conduct fortnightly inspections of armament and forces in the area of limitation, carried out with the assistance of liaison officers from the parties. UNDOF had continued to receive the co-operation of both parties, although it continued to seek the lifting of restrictions on movement and inspection placed on its teams in certain areas by both sides.

Intensified patrolling on new mine-cleared paths and, from time to time, the establishment of standing patrols had helped prevent or reduce incidents involving Syrian shepherds, as had the grazing security fence in the southern part of the area of separation.

UNDOF was continuing its efforts to make the area of operation safe from mines. It also assisted ICRC with facilities for handing over mail and prisoners of war; for example, on 28 June, 297 prisoners, 16 civilians and the remains of 77 persons were exchanged between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Despite the current quiet in the sector, the Secretary-General stated, the Middle East situation as a whole continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so unless a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be reached. In the circumstances, he considered the continued presence of UNDOF to be essential and recommended, in each report, with the assent of the Syrian Arab Republic and the agreement of Israel, that the Council extend its mandate for a further period of six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May, without debate, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 551(1984), thereby extending UNDOF's mandate for six months, until 30 November.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force,
Decides:

- (a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973);
- (b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1984;
- (c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 551(1984)

30 May 1984 Meeting 2544 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/16592).

On 28 November, without debate, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 557(1984), extending UNDOF's mandate for a further six months, until 31 May 1985.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force,
Decides:

- (a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973);
- (b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1985;
- (c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 557(1984)

28 November 1984 Meeting 2563 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/16845).

Following adoption of each resolution, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:<sup>(66)</sup>

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 26: 'despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached'. That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Composition

As at 16 November 1984, the composition of UNDOF was as follows:

Financing of peace-keeping forces

United Nations peace-keeping operations in the Middle East comprised two peace-keeping forces—the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon—and one observer mission, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization.

The General Assembly, following the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, approved appropriations for UNDOF for operations from 1 June 1984 to 31 May 1985 totalling more than $35 million. For UNIFIL's operations from 19

April 1984 to 18 April 1985, the Assembly appropriated $141 million.

Contributions to UNDOF in 1984 totalled nearly $34 million, while assessments for the year were $35 million; contributions outstanding since UNDOF's inception in 1974 amounted to some $57 million. Of close to $140 million assessed for UNIFIL in 1984, only about $109 million was paid; contributions outstanding since the Force's inception in 1978 totalled nearly $267 million.

In view of the difficult financial situation of the two peace-keeping forces, the Assembly authorized suspension of certain provisions of the United Nations Financial Regulations to enable UNDOF and UNIFIL to retain a "surplus balance" of about $5 million and $6 million, respectively.

The last revision of standard rates of reimbursement to countries which contributed troops to the forces having taken place in 1980, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to review existing rates with a view to ensuring an equitable reimbursement.

UNDOF financing

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1984 report on the financing of UNDOF,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that as at 30 September, $620.5 million in contributions for UNDOF together with the second United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF II) had been received since the latter's inception in 1973 to 30 November 1984. The unpaid balance totalled $82.2 million, of which $28.8 million represented amounts apportioned among Member States which did not intend to pay, and $36 million assessed contributions due from China between 25 October 1971 and 31 December 1981 which had been transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 Assembly resolution.<sup>(2)</sup>

According to the Secretary-General, there was a shortfall of approximately $5.2 million in the UNDOF Special Account in respect of the periods between 25 October 1979 and 30 November 1984. The shortfall for periods before 24 October 1979, together with UNEF II until its liquidation in 1980, was estimated at $59.6 million. In the circumstances, troop contributors had not been reimbursed fully or on time; they had again conveyed to the Secretary-General their very serious concern over the situation.

For the operation of UNDOF beyond 30 November 1984, the Secretary-General estimated monthly costs of $2,976,333 gross ($2,932,917 net) from 1 December onwards, assuming an average strength of 1,320 troops. For the period 1 June to 30 November 1984, an appropriation of $17,489,496 gross ($17,280,000 net) would be required.

ACABQ recommendations. In a November 1984 report,<sup>(3)</sup> ACABQ noted that, of the outstanding contributions of $82.2 million, only $17.4 million was estimated to be collectible. It also noted that no voluntary contributions had been received in response to an Assembly appeal of December 1983.<sup>(4)</sup>

On a related matter, ACABQ had been informed that the audited accounts for 1982-1983 indicated, for the UNEF/UNDOF Special Account, a "surplus balance" of $4,824,613 as at 31 December 1983 representing excess of income over expenditure, due to interest and miscellaneous credits accrued. According to the Secretary-General, "income" included assessed contributions, irrespective of collectibility. However, because of States withholding contributions, the surplus balance had in effect been drawn upon to the full to supplement the income from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces. The $4,824,613 thus represented merely a theoretical surplus.

ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General's estimate for the cost of UNDOF in 1984-1985 be approved. Requirements for the 12 months from 1 December 1984 to 30 November 1985 should not exceed $35,705,000 gross ($35,184,000 net). ACABQ further recommended that the Secretary-General be permitted the usual flexibility to transfer credits between items of expenditure, should it be necessary in the interest of good management and efficiency. The total increase in 1984-1985 was $635,000 on a net basis, or 1.8 per cent; although most of that increase was attributable to inflation, part of it related to the Secretary-General's requests for 14 additional posts, bringing the total number of staff to 154. The Committee recommended acceptance of the staffing proposals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November 1984, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions—39/28 A and B—on the financing of UNDOF.

On 30 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/28 A by vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, 363(1974) of 29 November 1974, 369(1975) of 28 May 1975, 381(1975) of 30 November 1975, 390(1976) of 28 May 1976, 398(1976) of 30 November 1976, 408(1977) of 26 May 1977, 420(1977) of 30 November 1977, 429(1978) of 31 May 1978, 441(1978) of 30 November 1978, 449(1979) of 30 May 1979, 456(1979) of 30 November 1979, 470(1980) of 30 May 1980, 481(1980) of 26 November 1980, 485(1981) of 22 May 1981, 493(1981) of 23 November 1981, 506(1982) of 26 May 1982, 524(1982) of 29 November 1982, 531(1983) of 26 May 1983, 543(1983) of 29 November

1983, 551(1984) of 30 May 1984 and 557(1984) of 28 November 1984,

Recalling its resolutions 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3374 C (XXX) of 2 December 1975, 31/5 D of 22 December 1976, 32/4 C of 2 December 1977, 33/13 D of 8 December 1978, 34/7 C of 3 December 1979, 35/44 of 1 December 1980, 35/45 A of 1 December 1980, 36/66 A of 30 November 1981, 37/38 A of 30 November 1982 and 38/35 A of 1 December 1983,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $17,489,496 gross ($17,280,000 net) authorized and apportioned by section III of Assembly resolution 38/35 A for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1984, inclusive;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

V

1. Decides that Brunei Darussalam shall be included in the group of Member States mentioned in paragraph 2 (c) of General Assembly resolution 3101(XXVIII) and that its contribution to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution adopted by the Assembly at the current session regarding the scale of assessments;

General Assembly resolution 39/28 A

30 November 1984

Meeting 81

98-2-12

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/39/719) by vote (88-1-14), 29 November (meeting 37); 8-nation draft (A/C.5/39/L.11, part A); agenda item 119 (a).
Sponsors: Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden.

Speaking before the vote in the plenary Assembly, Albania said its objection to the financing of United Nations peace-keeping forces was based on ample evidence that those forces could not serve the defence of freedom and independence or of international peace and security; developments over the previous year had reinforced that impression.

Algeria, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Maldives and the Syrian Arab Republic declared that they would not participate in the vote on either text; the financing of UNDOF was the responsibility of the aggressor. Iraq and Yemen announced that they would abstain for the same reason.

In the opinion of the USSR, the Force constituted a significant step towards the liberation of the occupied Arab territories; the increase in appropriations was excessive, however, and placed too heavy a financial burden on Member States. Moreover, the increase in posts could be avoided if UNDOF's work were better organized.

The United States supported the recommendations for the financing of UNDOF. Israel said that in the current complex situation, UNDOF was the best of the possible solutions.

Introducing both drafts in the Committee, Canada stated that peace-keeping forces played an integral role in promoting global security and respect for the Charter. The withholding of contributions placed an unfair and increasingly disproportionate burden on troop-contributing countries, particularly the developing countries; the financial burden must be shared equitably.

Also on 30 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/28 B by vote.

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 5 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Forces on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recalling its resolutions 33/13 E of 14 December 1978, 34/7 D of 17 December 1979, 35/45 B of 1 December 1980, 36/66 B of 30 November 1981, 37/38 B of 30 November 1982 and 38/35 B of 1 December 1983,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Forces,

Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $4,824,613, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 33/13 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly.

UNIFIL financing

Report of the Secretary-General. In November 1984,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General reported that, as at 30 September, contributions totalling $717.2 million had been received for the operation of UNIFIL out of $945.3 million apportioned among Member States for the periods between the inception of the Force in 1978 and 18 October 1984. The balance due of $228.1 million included $179.4 million apportioned among Members which had stated that they did not intend to pay and $19.6 million of assessments due from China between 25 October 1971 and 31 December 1981, transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 Assembly resolution.<sup>(2)</sup> Accordingly, only $29.1 million of the unpaid balance might be considered collectible, leaving a shortfall of $199 million.

Commitments were entered into for UNIFIL in the amount of $70,446,000 gross ($69,486,000 net) for the six months from 19 April to 18 October. The costs for the period from 19 October 1984 to 18 April 1985 were estimated at the same gross amount ($69,446,000 net), based on an average Force strength of 5,550 troops. The Secretary-General requested ACABQ's concurrence for entering into UNIFIL commitments of $23,482,000 gross ($23,148,667 net) for the period from 19 October to 18 December 1984, that amount being a one-third share of the estimate for the six months from 19 October 1984 to 18 April 1985.

Should the Security Council renew the Force's mandate beyond that date, the Assembly was requested to authorize commitments for UNIFIL for the period to 18 December 1985 at a rate not to exceed $11,741,000 gross ($11,574,333 net) per month.

The shortfall in the account because of non-payment of contributions by some Members placed an increasingly heavy burden on the troop-contributing countries, the Secretary-General said, particularly the less wealthy, and, if not remedied, could jeopardize the functioning of the operation. He appealed to all Member States to pay their assessments without delay and to make voluntary contributions.

ACABQ recommendations. In a November 1984 report,<sup>(6)</sup> ACABQ recommended that the Assembly appropriate $70,446,000 gross ($69,486,000 net) for UNIFIL for the period from 19 April to 18 October 1984; for 19 October 1984 to 18 April 1985, it recommended an appropriation of the same gross amount ($69,446,000 net). Despite differences in troop strength used as the basis for cost estimates for the preceding period, the amount requested and authorized for the period ended 18 October was the same. Noting that current estimates, on a net basis, were less than the two previous mandate-period estimates, ACABQ was informed that gains on currency exchange were expected to more than offset the effects of inflation.

Concurring with the Secretary-General's estimates, ACABQ agreed to the request to enter into commitments for the period from 19 October to 18 December 1984 in the amount requested. As for the remaining four months of the mandate period (19 December 1984–18 April 1985), ACABQ had no objection to the overall estimate; it recommended that the Assembly appropriate $46,964,000 gross ($46,297,333 net), with the Secretary-General being given the usual flexibility to revise apportionments between objects of expenditure.

ACABQ recommended approval of the amounts that the Secretary-General asked that he be authorized to commit monthly between 19 April and 18 December 1985, if the Force's mandate was renewed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1984, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions—39/71 A and B—dealing with the financing of UNIFIL.

On 13 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/71 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 427(1978) of 3 May 1978, 434(1978) of 18 September 1978, 444(1979) of 19 January 1979, 450(1979) of 14 June 1979, 459(1979) of 19 December 1979, 474(1980) of 17 June 1980, 483(1980) of 17 December 1980, 488(1981) of 19 June 1981, 498(1981) of 18 December 1981, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 523(1982) of 18 October 1982, 529(1983) of 18 January 1983, 536(1983) of 18 July 1983, 538(1983) of 18 October 1983, 549(1984) of 19 April 1984 and 555(1984) of 12 October 1984,

Recalling its resolutions S-8/2 of 21 April 1978, 33/14 of 3 November 1978, 34/9 B of 17 December 1979, 35/44 of 1 December 1980, 35/115 A of 10 December 1980, 36/138 A of 16 December 1981, 36/138 C of 19 March 1982, 37/127 A of 17 December 1982 and 38/38 A of 5 December 1983,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of peace-keeping operations decided upon in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

I

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section I, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution S-8/2 an amount of $70,446,000 gross ($69,486,000 net), being the amount authorized with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and apportioned under the provisions of section VI of Assembly resolution 38/38 A for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon from 19 April to 18 October 1984, inclusive;

II

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of $23,482,000 gross ($23,148,667 net), being the amount authorized with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and apportioned under the provisions of section VI of General Assembly resolution 38/38 A for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon from 19 October to 18 December 1984, inclusive;

III

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of $46,964,000 for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for the period from 19 December 1984 to 18 April 1985, inclusive;

2. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of $46,964,000 among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in Assembly resolution 33/14 and the provisions of section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 34/9 B, section VI, paragraph 1, of resolution 35/115 A, section VI, paragraph 1, of resolution 36/138 A and section IX, paragraph 1, of resolution 37/127 A, in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1983, 1984 and 1985;

3. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the estimated income of $13,333 other than staff assessment income approved for the period from 19 December 1984 to 18 April 1985, inclusive;

4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of $653,834 approved for the period from 19 December 1984 to 18 April 1985, inclusive;

V

1. Renews its invitation to Member States to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

2. Invites Member States to make voluntary contributions in cash to the Suspense Account established in accordance with its resolution 34/9 D of 17 December 1979;

VI

Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon shall be administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

VII

1. Decides that Brunei Darussalam shall be included in the group of Member States mentioned in section I, paragraph 2 (c), of General Assembly resolution S-8/2 and that its contribution to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution adopted by the Assembly at the current session regarding the scale of assessments;

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 7 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recalling its resolutions 34/9 E of 17 December 1979, 35/115 B of 10 December 1980, 36/138 B of 16 December 1981, 37/127 B of 17 December 1982 and 38/38 B of 5 December 1983,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Force,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $6,035,305, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 34/9 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly.

General Assembly resolution 39/71 B

13 December 1984 Meeting 98 121-15-3 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/39/767) by recorded vote (88-12-3), 4 December (meeting 41); 13-nation draft (A/C.5/39/L.15, part B, approved together with part A (see above)); agenda item 119 (b).

Sponsors: Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Ghana, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Lebanon, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden.

Introducing the drafts on behalf of the sponsors, the Netherlands said that the great majority of Member States supported the concept of peace-keeping and accepted the notion that the costs of peace-keeping forces should be borne by Members according to their assessed contributions. It was most regrettable that the resulting financial obligations were not fulfilled; lack of financial resources not only threatened to undermine peace-keeping operations in general and UNIFIL's operations in particular, but also made it increasingly difficult to find States willing to take part in the operations. The situation would improve only if States withholding contributions discharged their financial responsibilities.

Holding a similar view, Ireland added that the withholding of contributions could jeopardize the efficient functioning of peace-keeping operations and hinder efforts to ensure a wide geographical representation in the composition of the forces, with unforeseeable consequences for the United Nations ability to fulfil its role in maintaining international peace and security.

Indonesia viewed the financial situation of peace-keeping operations in the Middle East as unsatisfactory and shared the Secretary-General's concern that delayed payments to contributing countries placed an additional burden on them.

Lebanon said the United Nations presence was an essential guarantee required to safeguard Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, which were indispensable pre-conditions for its progressive pacification; a withdrawal of that presence for financial reasons would have extremely serious repercussions, not only in Lebanon itself but also in the Middle East as a whole. The situation regarding the financing of UNIFIL could even jeopardize efforts being made to resolve the financial crisis of the United Nations as a whole. Maintaining UNIFIL for some time to come was indispensable; Lebanon urged Governments to adopt a more regular procedure for the payment of contributions and hoped that the Secretary-General's appeal for voluntary contributions would be favourably received.

Peace-keeping operations were by definition temporary and could be no substitute for a peaceful settlement, Israel said; yet peace-keeping forces in the Middle East were becoming a permanent feature because of the enmity towards Israel and Arab unwillingness to accept Israel's presence. If the Secretary-General was to implement the Security Council's decisions, he must be given the financial means.

The USSR said it would not share in the financing of UNIFIL; all costs incurred in eradicating the results of Israel's armed aggression should be borne by the aggressor. Similar positions were held by the German Democratic Republic, Iran, Iraq, Mongolia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam and Yemen. Poland believed that expenditures on peace-keeping operations did not come within the scope of either Article 17 or 19 of the Charter (stipulating, respectively, that the expenses of the Organization shall be borne by the Members as apportioned by the Assembly, and that a Member in arrears for more than two years shall have no vote in the Assembly). Iran and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya declared that, for positions of principle, they would not participate in the vote.

Albania explained that its negative vote was in conformity with its general position on the dispatching and financing of United Nations forces.

While southern Lebanon was the victim of Israeli aggression and atrocities, the United Arab Emirates said, UNIFIL's task was a humanitarian one and must be supported.

Review of reimbursement rates to troop-contributors

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/70 by recorded vote.

Review of the rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision of 29 November 1974, taken at its twenty-ninth session, by which it established, as from 25 October 1973, standard rates of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States for pay and allowances of their troops serving in the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and its decision 32/416 of 2 December 1977, by which it revised those rates of reimbursement as from 25 October 1977,

Recalling also its decision of 15 December 1975, taken at its thirtieth session, by which it approved the principle of reimbursing the troop-contributing States for the usage factor for personal clothing, gear and equipment, and the related report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its thirty-first session establishing the rates therefor as from 25 October 1973,

Recalling further its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978, by which it applied the same standard rates of reimbursement in effect for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force to those Governments of States contributing troops to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Recalling further its resolution 35/44 of 1 December 1980, by which these rates were once again revised as from 1 December 1980 in the case of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and as from 19 December 1980 in the case of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Taking note of the concerns that escalating troop costs have adversely affected in real terms the existing standard rates of reimbursement,

Requests the Secretary-General to review, in consultation with the States contributing troops to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and with other interested Member States, the existing standard rates of reimbursement, with a view to ensuring an equitable rate of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States, and to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/70

13 December 1984 Meeting 98 119-15-6 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/39/767) by recorded vote (89-11-5), 4 December (meeting 41); 18-nation draft (A/C.5/39/L.12), orally amended by United States; agenda item 119 (b).

Sponsors: Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Lebanon, Nepal, Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Sweden.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Benin, Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Maldives, Romania, Yemen.

Introducing the text on behalf of the sponsors, the Netherlands said that, since the last revision of the standard rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing States in 1980,<sup>(7)</sup> troop costs in the countries concerned had increased in some cases by more than 40 per cent and the existing rates should be reviewed as they might no longer be adequate.

In the view of the United States, consultations on reimbursement rates should not be limited to troop-contributing countries; since peace-keeping operations were funded from the regular budget, all Member States should be able to participate. The United States orally suggested in the Committee that the operative paragraph be amended to permit other interested Member States to participate in the consultations; this was accepted by the sponsors.

The USSR observed that reimbursements to troop contributors were the main items of expenditure for UNDOF and UNIFIL; it believed that the existing rates were already excessive. The noble cause of maintaining international peace must not give rise to inappropriate expenditures and become a source of income for some countries. The Secretary-General's 1985 report should also indicate all the criteria used to devise acceptable reimbursement rates.

Ireland said that since the latest review of reimbursement rates dated back almost five years, and in view of the significant increases in costs and inflation, a further review was needed in order to ensure that reimbursements were paid at equitable rates.

Indonesia stated that escalating costs had adversely affected the existing reimbursement and it was high time that the Assembly took steps to ensure more equitable rates.

Recalling their positions of principle on peace-keeping operations in the Middle East, Iran and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya did not participate in the vote.

Territories occupied by Israel

During 1984, the situation in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of previous armed conflicts in the Middle East was again considered by the General Assembly and its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices). The territories comprised the West Bank of the Jordan River (including East Jerusalem), the Golan Heights and the Gaza Strip.

The Assembly, in December, adopted eight resolutions (39/95 A-H) dealing with specific aspects of the report of the Committee. By resolution 39/95 A, it demanded the release of Ziyad Abu Eain and other prisoners (see p. 280). By resolution 39/95 E, it reiterated its demand that Israel rescind orders expelling and imprisoning the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and expelling the Islamic Judge of Hebron. The Assembly also demanded that Israel comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) (39/95 B) and desist from any action which would change the status and composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 (39/95 C). The Assembly condemned Israeli policies and practices in the Syrian Golan Heights (39/95 F) as well as those taken against Palestinian students and faculties of educational institutions (39/95 G) and in a number of other areas (39/95 D), demanding that Israel desist from those practices. The Assembly also demanded information from Israel on the results of the investigations of assassination attempts against three Palestinian mayors in 1980 (39/95 H).

By resolution 39/146 A, it declared that peace in the Middle East must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution which ensured the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem; condemned Israeli occupation of those territories and its policies and practices there; and considered that Israel would be encouraged in those policies by the 1981 strategic co-operation agreements between the United States and Israel.

Concern about legislation on settlement activities in the occupied territories, under consideration by the Israeli parliament, was expressed by the Security Council in January, which urged that no measures be taken to aggravate tensions in the area.

Communications. Israeli measures in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, continued to be at issue in a number of communications addressed during the year to the Secretary-General and to the President of the Security Council.

On 23 February<sup>(1)</sup> and 5 March,<sup>(2)</sup> Egypt transmitted letters of 22 February and 5 March, respectively, from the Permanent Observer of PLO to the United Nations detailing several hostile measures by Israelis against Palestinians, including acts of vandalism and usurping of land in a Palestinian village, a massive arrest campaign, and attacks against a refugee camp, a cemetery, and a bus carrying Palestinian workers.

On 24 February,<sup>(3)</sup> the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights protested what he called discriminatory action against a representative of an Israel-based non-governmental organization who had been banned from continuing his education at the Institute of Technology at Haifa. By a letter of 8 August,<sup>(4)</sup> the Chairman reiterated the Committee's serious concern about the situation of the Palestinian Arabs in the occupied territories and drew the Secretary-General's attention to reports prepared by ILO, WHO and UNESCO on the situation of workers, on health conditions and on educational and cultural institutions in the occupied territories; the reports were annexed to the letter. By a letter of 26 November,<sup>(5)</sup> the Chairman expressed grave concern at reports of renewed acts of repression against Palestinians by Israeli forces on 21 and 22 November, including the shooting and tear-gassing of unarmed demonstrators, resulting in the deaths of two students.

In April, Israel expressed concern about a PLO exhibit at the United Nations Information Centre at Harare, Zimbabwe (see p. 365).

By a letter of 13 April,<sup>(6)</sup> Israel recounted what it called an act of PLO gangsterism, which involved the hijacking of a bus with some 30 Israeli civilians en route from Tel Aviv to Ashkelon; in the course of the rescue operation, eight people were wounded, one of whom subsequently died, and four of the attackers were killed. The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a PLO group headquartered at Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, had claimed responsibility, Israel said. Referring to that communication in identical letters<sup>(7)</sup> of 1 May to the Security Council President and 23 July to the Secretary-General, the Syrian Arab Republic accused Israel of attempting to divert attention from the atrocities it had committed and continued to commit against the Arab people. Annexed to the letters were a list of what Syria called some of the most important terrorist acts committed by Zionist gangs from 1937 to the present, and an article and excerpts from four books on violence in the Middle East.

On 29 August,<sup>(8)</sup> Yemen transmitted a letter of the same date from PLO with regard to an attempted storming of the town of Um el Fahm that day by an armed group headed by a member of the Israeli Knesset (parliament); it had led to a violent confrontation with the Palestinian inhabitants, as a result of which six demonstrators were wounded.

By a letter of 8 October,<sup>(9)</sup> India transmitted the final communiqué adopted by the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 1-5 October). The communiqué rejected the Israeli practices and policies in the occupied territories, including alteration of their geographic features and demographic composition, and declared all Israeli-established settlements there illegal.

In addition, communications were received regarding incidents in Jerusalem (see p. 272).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. Violations of human rights in the occupied territories were the subject of four resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights on 20 February 1984. By the first,<sup>(10)</sup> it condemned a number of specific practices; by the second,<sup>(11)</sup> it condemned Israel's failure to acknowledge the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949; by the third,<sup>(12)</sup> it called on Israel to rescind decisions imposing its laws and administration on the Syrian Golan Heights; and, by the fourth,<sup>(13)</sup> it called for immediate Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Palestinian territories. By a resolution of 29 February<sup>(14)</sup> reaffirming the Palestinians' right to self-determination, the Commission condemned Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, its aggression and practices against the Palestinians in and outside those territories, and the September 1982 massacres in the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps,<sup>(15)</sup> and rejected agreements that encouraged Israel to persist in its policies. (See ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII.)

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its annual report, approved on 14 September 1984 and transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General,<sup>(16)</sup> the Committee on Israeli practices, established in 1968,<sup>(17)</sup> presented information on Israeli policy in the occupied territories and on various aspects of the situation there, as well as information on annexation and settlement, treatment of civilians and detainees, and judicial remedies sought by the civilian population. An annexed map showed Israeli settlements established, planned or under construction since 1967. As in previous years, the Committee worked without the co-operation of Israel.

During the reporting period (19 August 1983-31 August 1984), the Committee held three series of meetings. At the first, held at Geneva from 9 to 13 January 1984, it reviewed its mandate, examined information on the situation in the occupied territories, including communications on alleged human rights violations, and decided on the organization of its work for the year. At the second series of meetings, which took place at Geneva, Amman (Jordan) and Damascus (Syrian Arab Republic) from 25 May to 5 June, the Committee examined a number of communications pertaining to its mandate, heard testimony from persons living in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights, and discussed various aspects of its mandate with the Minister for Occupied Territories Affairs and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Jordan, and the Director-General of the International Organizations Department in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Syrian Arab Republic. The Committee convened again from 10 to 14 September to examine updated information and adopt its report.

In its conclusions, the Committee noted that Israeli statements made over the reporting period reflected an intention to annex the territories occupied in 1967 and thus were in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention. The Committee pointed out that the announced "new policy"—aimed, avowedly, at deterring Arab retaliation against Jews and Jewish vigilante action—had led to ever harsher sentences for Palestinian civilians, an increase in violent incidents and the emergence of large-scale organized groups of Israelis striving to expand and consolidate Israeli settlement and annexation of the occupied territories.

The Committee concluded that although the so-called "village leagues" were no longer imposed, Israeli presence in the occupied territories had been further consolidated through the Israeli municipal authorities of the principal West Bank and Gaza Strip towns who had been nominated by the military. The Committee drew special attention to collective punishment measures by the Israeli authorities, including demolition of houses. Measures of reprisal included sealing houses, closing down shops, restricting movement and destroying of crops and water resources. With regard to deportations, the Committee noted in particular the case of Abdel Aziz Shahin who, after serving a 15-year prison sentence, had been the subject of an expulsion order.

Noting that the lawless behaviour of Israeli settlers had drawn protests in some sectors of Israeli society, the Committee cited the example of a 1982 report commissioned by the Israeli Ministry of Justice, made public in February 1984, which found that Israeli settlers acted in many respects outside the law, virtually beyond control by any authority. In 1984, a series of so-called "Jewish underground" groups were discovered; several persons were charged with offences ranging from attempted assassination to planning the bombing of public transportation, but no serious measures had yet been taken to put an end to the phenomenon. The Committee reiterated that under the fourth Geneva Convention Israel remained fully responsible for the acts of the settlers.

The Committee reported that Palestinian civilian leaders had been the subject of arbitrary orders restricting their freedom of movement. Freedom of education was also affected (see p. 333).

In the Committee's view, an on going censorship of publications and other forms of expression had the sole aim of stifling any attempt at Palestinian patriotic expression and went beyond the scope of the fourth Geneva Convention. Information received indicated that in the reporting period Israel continued annexation and settlement practices in the occupied territories with renewed vigour, planning 27 settlements for an area north of Jerusalem by the year 2010 and expropriating property. As for treatment of detainees, the Committee detected an increase in the number of allegations of ill-treatment. It reported that prison conditions had led to hunger-strikes and other protests, and noted particularly the harsh conditions in the so-called "Fara'a detention centre", opened for youthful offenders awaiting trial on minor offences. In that context, the Committee stressed that existing judicial remedies were of a temporary nature, as the courts' authority was circumscribed by the discretionary powers vested in the military occupation authorities.

The Committee concluded that the reporting period had witnessed a deterioration of the human rights situation in the territories, while at the same time hundreds of thousands were denied the right to return there and their property was taken over for the establishment of Israeli settlements. The Committee reiterated the need for the international community to prevent further deterioration and protect the basic rights of the civilians in the occupied territories.

Pursuant to a 1983 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General, in November 1984,<sup>(19)</sup> reported on the facilities he had continued to provide to the Committee, including additional staff, circulation of its reports and coverage of its activities in press releases, publications and radio and television programmes.

Paragraph 6 was approved in the Committee by a recorded vote of 84 to 18, with 17 abstentions, and in the Assembly by a recorded vote of 99 to 18, with 25 abstentions.

Sweden said that, while supporting most of the text, in particular the condemnation in paragraph 7, it was not convinced that all the formulations in that paragraph were justified. It also believed that the text went beyond the competence of the Assembly. Austria agreed with the general thrust of the text, but also considered some of the formulations to be unacceptable. Argentina felt that some of the wording was not consistent with the Special Committee's findings. The United States reiterated its position expressed in 1983;<sup>(20)</sup> the texts pertaining to this agenda item contained inflammatory rhetoric and unjustified allegations, were counter-productive, one-sided and harmed the credibility of the United Nations.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that, while it supported the resolutions, it reaffirmed its position on the substance of the Palestine question and therefore expressed reservations about anything in them that might signify that it would recognize the Zionist entity or confer legitimacy on it.

The Fifth Committee on 5 December decided, by a recorded vote of 88 to 2, with 19 abstentions, that an additional appropriation of $237,300 would be required for 1984-1985 to implement the resolution.

In resolution 39/49 C of 11 December on dissemination of information relating to Palestine, the General Assembly requested the Secretariat's Department of Public Information to publish newsletters and articles on Israeli violations of the human rights of the Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories.

Settlements policy

Throughout 1984, various communications addressed to the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General continued to focus on Israel's policy of establishing settlements in the occupied territories. In January, the Council urged that no steps be taken to aggravate the situation. The question was also considered by the General Assembly, the Committee on Israeli practices, the Committee on Palestinian rights and the Commission on Human Settlements (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVII). The impact of Israeli settlements on the living conditions of Palestinians was examined in a report by the Secretary-General (see p. 327).

Communications (January-June). On 5 January,<sup>(21)</sup> Egypt transmitted a letter of 4 January to the Security Council President from PLO, charging that legislation seeking to extend the applicability of emergency regulations in the occupied territories, considered by the Israeli Knesset, violated international law and Security Council resolutions. Concern about the legislation was also expressed in a message from the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Egypt dated 5 January, transmitted by Egypt on 6 January to the Council President<sup>(22)</sup> and the Secretary-General,<sup>(23)</sup> and in a letter of 9 January<sup>(24)</sup> from the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights.

Israel stated, in identical letters of 11<sup>(25)</sup> and 13 January<sup>(26)</sup> to the Council President and the Secretary-General, that the most recent extension of the validity of emergency regulations, which were reviewed periodically, had been passed on 2 January 1984 in conformity with the recognized principle of international law that a State may apply its laws to its nationals in respect of acts committed by them beyond its territorial jurisdiction; the regulations did not affect the existing local legislation.

In a statement issued by the President of the Security Council on 26 January,<sup>(27)</sup> after consultations that day with the Council members concerning the above communications, the Council recalled its previous resolutions stressing the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention and urged that no steps be taken which could lead to further aggravation of tension in the area.

On 29 February,<sup>(28)</sup> Jordan transmitted information from its Minister for Occupied Territories Affairs on Israeli settlement activity between November 1983 and January 1984, which included land confiscations and decisions to establish new settlements in the West Bank. Information on Israeli settlement activity during March, April and May, which involved confiscation of land, establishment of and plans to establish new settlements and consolidation of settlement activity, was provided by Jordan in letters of 1 May,<sup>(29)</sup> 25 May<sup>(30)</sup> and 22 June,<sup>(31)</sup> respectively.

On 15 March,<sup>(32)</sup> Bangladesh transmitted resolutions adopted by the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, 6-11 December 1983), among them a resolution condemning Israel for its refusal to comply with the Security Council resolutions on Israeli settlements and for its plans to remove the Palestinian refugee camps in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

By a letter of 23 February,<sup>(33)</sup> the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights drew attention to what he called the intensification of Israel's activities against Palestinians, particularly with regard to the renewal of Jewish presence in Hebron and a planned new settlement between Ramallah and Nablus. The Acting Chairman of that Committee expressed concern, in a letter of 26 March,<sup>(34)</sup> over Israel's persistence in annexing the occupied territories, as exemplified by the establishment of another new settlement named Eruvin, north of Hebron, and the suggested expansion of Jerusalem's municipal limit to the north-east areas of the West Bank. On 25 June,<sup>(35)</sup> the Committee Chairman stated that Israel had reportedly approved the establishment of three new settlements—to be called Eli-Shemaa, Nirya and Yaarit—on the West Bank; the measure had been opposed by the Israeli Minister for Justice on the grounds that the land belonged to Palestinians.

Activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights. In 1984, the Committee on Palestinian rights continued to keep the situation in the occupied territories under close review. Reporting to the General Assembly on its activities during the year,<sup>(36)</sup> the Committee stated that in communications to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President it had expressed concern over Israeli policies of establishing illegal Jewish settlements in the occupied territories, the confiscation of Arab-owned land and widespread violation by Israel of the rights of the Palestinian people. The Israeli actions led the Committee to urge the Council to reactivate, as a matter of priority, its 1979 Commission set up to examine the situation relating to Israeli settlements.<sup>(37)</sup> The Committee pointed out that the Commission's latest report had not been considered by the Council since it was submitted in November 1980.<sup>(38)</sup>

Noting that Israel persisted with its settlement policy despite the illegality of such action, the censure of international opinion, United Nations decisions and domestic parliamentary questioning, the Committee suggested that Israel was aiming at a projected minimum of 100,000 Israeli settlers by 1987 and 190,000 by the year 2010. The Committee also pointed out that, according to Israeli and Jordanian sources, by the end of 1983 Israel had expropriated 47.4 per cent of the West Bank territory and assumed control of between 50 and 60 per cent of the land in the occupied territories.

Fourth Geneva Convention

In 1984, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights took up the question of whether the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (fourth Geneva Convention), was applicable to the Israeli-occupied territories. Both the Assembly (in resolutions 39/95 B and C) and the Commission reaffirmed the Convention's applicability, as did the Committee on Israeli practices (see p. 316).

In February 1984,<sup>(39)</sup> the Secretary-General drew the Security Council's attention to a December 1983 request of the Assembly<sup>(18)</sup> that the Council ensure Israel's respect for and compliance with the fourth Geneva Convention.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In one<sup>(11)</sup> of four resolutions on human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories adopted on 20 February 1984, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to all those territories, including Jerusalem. Condemning Israel's failure to acknowledge its applicability and expressing deep concern over the consequences of that position, the Commission called on Israel to abide by the obligations arising from the Convention and other international instruments, and urged all States parties to that Convention to ensure respect for and compliance with it in the occupied territories.

In the other three resolutions, the Commission reaffirmed that the Convention continued to apply to Syrian territory occupied by Israel<sup>(12)</sup> and that Israel's persistent colonization of those territories constituted grave violations of the Convention,<sup>(13)</sup> and confirmed its declaration that Israel's grave breaches were war crimes and an affront to humanity.<sup>(10)</sup> (See ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1984, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions (39/95 B and C) demanding that Israel comply with the Convention; both were discussed under the agenda item on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices. On 14 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/95 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3092 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3240 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 B (XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/106 B of 16 December 1976, 32/91 A of 13 December 1977, 33/113 A of 18 December 1978, 34/90 B of 12 December 1979, 35/122 A of 11 December 1980, 36/147 A of 16 December 1981, 37/88 A of 10 December 1982 and 38/79 B of 15 December 1983,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980 in which, inter alia, the Council affirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention,

Noting that Israel and those Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to that Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to the Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns once again the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to acknowledge the applicability of that Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

3. Strongly demands that Israel acknowledge and comply with the provisions of that Convention in the Palestinian and other Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Urgently calls upon all States parties to that Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.

Also on 14 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/95 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/5 of 28 October 1977, 33/113 B of 18 December 1978, 34/90 C of 12 December 1979, 35/122 B of 11 December 1980, 36/147 B of 16 December 1981, 37/88 B of 10 December 1982 and 38/79 C of 15 December 1983,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980,

Expressing grave anxiety and concern at the present serious situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories,

Confirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, are in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and constitute a serious obstruction to the efforts to achieve a just and lasting peace in the Middle East and therefore have no legal validity;

2. Strongly deplores the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem;

3. Demands that Israel comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands once more that Israel, the occupying Power, desist forthwith from taking any action which would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Geneva Convention to respect and to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.

Against: Israel.Abstaining: United States.

Israel said the texts reflected their sponsors' hostility and irresponsibility.

The question of the Convention's applicability was raised in other actions by the Assembly. By resolution 39/95 D, the Assembly condemned Israel's continued and persistent violation of the Convention, particularly the "grave breaches" declared as war crimes and an affront to humanity. Israel's systematic repression against Palestinian educational institutions in contravention of the Convention was condemned by resolution 39/95 G.

Golan Heights

In 1984, developments in the Golan Heights—a part of the Syrian Arab Republic occupied by Israel since 1967—brought action by the General Assembly (resolutions 39/95 F and 39/146 B) and the Commission on Human Rights.

Israel's refusal to abide by the relevant Assembly and Security Council resolutions was condemned by the Ministers and heads of delegation of non-aligned countries in the final communiqué adopted at their October 1984 meeting and transmitted by India on 8 October.<sup>(9)</sup>

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 20 February 1984,<sup>(12)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights declared once more that Israel's 14 December 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights<sup>(42)</sup> had no legal validity, called on Israel to rescind that decision, and emphasized the necessity of total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal. The Commission declared that Israeli practices and inhuman treatment of the Syrian Arab population constituted a grave violation of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,<sup>(43)</sup> the fourth Geneva Convention and United Nations resolutions. It reaffirmed that the Hague Convention of 1907 and the fourth Geneva Convention continued to apply to the occupied Syrian territory, and strongly condemned Israel for its attempts to impose Israeli citizenship and identity cards on Syrian citizens. (See ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII.)

Report of the Secretary-General. On 1 October 1984,<sup>(44)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of a December 1983 Assembly resolution<sup>(45)</sup> which condemned Israel for refusing to rescind its 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Golan Heights, and called on Member States not to recognize such measures. He reported that, in reply to a note verbale of 15 March 1984, Israel had stated on 28 August that its position had been set out fully in a letter of 29 December 1981.<sup>(46)</sup> The Secretary-General also stated that, in response to notes verbales of 15 March to all other Member States, he had received information on the implementation of the resolution from Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Kuwait, Lesotho, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone and Uganda, whose replies were annexed to his report. The reply of the German Democratic Republic on that subject was annexed to another October 1984 report by the Secretary-General (see p. 260).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1984, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions dealing with the situation in the Golan Heights. On 14 December, under the agenda item on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 39/95 F by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,
Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981 and General Assembly resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/88 E of 10 December 1982 and 38/79 F of 15 December 1983,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 1 October 1984,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975, 31/61 of 9 December 1976, 32/20 of 25 November 1977, 33/28 and 33/29 of 7 December 1978, 34/70 of 6 December 1979 and 35/122 E of 11 December 1980, in which it, inter alia, called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories and to withdraw from all those territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Golan Heights, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and that all territories thus occupied by Israel must be returned,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, particularly Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights was null and void and without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Condemns the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan Heights;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Golan Heights are null and void and constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Strongly condemns Israel for its attempts and measures to impose forcibly Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan Heights and calls upon it to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the Syrian Arab Golan Heights;

5. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Liberia, United States, Zaire.

The United States reiterated its position expressed in 1983<sup>(47)</sup> relating to its call on Israel to fulfil its obligations to the population in the Golan Heights, but considered that the text went beyond the Security Council's 1981 resolution<sup>(48)</sup> declaring Israel's decision null and void. Sweden pointed out that its support for the resolution did not alter its opposition<sup>(49)</sup> to a February 1982 Assembly resolution<sup>(50)</sup> mentioned in the text, on the situation in the occupied Arab territories.

On 14 December 1984, under the agenda item "The situation in the Middle East", the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/146 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 2 October 1984,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 A of 16 December 1982 and 38/180 A of 19 December 1983,

Recalling its resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, in which it defined an act of aggression, inter alia, as "the invasion or attack by the armed forces of a State of the territory of another State, or any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from such invasion or attack, or any annexation by the use of force of the territory of another State or part thereof" and provided that "no consideration of whatever nature, whether political, economic, military or otherwise, may serve as a justification for aggression",

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Noting that Israel's record, policies and actions establish conclusively that it is not a peace-loving Member State and that it has not carried out its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting further that Israel has refused, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter, to accept and carry out the numerous relevant decisions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 497(1981), thus failing to carry out its obligations under the Charter,

1. Strongly condemns Israel for its failure to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981) and General Assembly resolutions 36/226 B, ES-9/1, 37/123 A and 38/180 A;

2. Declares once more that Israel's continued occupation of the Golan Heights and its decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights constitute an act of aggression under the provisions of Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX);

3. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

4. Declares all Israeli policies and practices of, or aimed at, annexation of the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, to be illegal and in violation of international law and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Determines once more that all actions taken by Israel to give effect to its decision relating to the occupied Syrian Golan Heights are illegal and invalid and shall not be recognized;

6. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect of their obligations under these instruments in all circumstances;

7. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Golan Heights since 1967 and their annexation by Israel on 14 December 1981, following Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, constitute a continuing threat to international peace and security;

8. Strongly deplors the negative vote by a permanent member of the Security Council which prevented the Council from adopting against Israel, under Chapter VII of the Charter, the "appropriate measures" referred to in resolution 497(1981) unanimously adopted by the Council;

9. Further deplors any political, economic, financial, military and technological support to Israel that encourages Israel to commit acts of aggression and to consolidate and perpetuate its occupation and annexation of occupied Arab territories;

10. Firmly emphasizes once more its demand that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its illegal decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Golan Heights, which resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

11. Reaffirms once more the overriding necessity of the total and unconditional withdrawal by Israel from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, which is an essential prerequisite for the establishment of a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East;

12. Determines once more that Israel's record, policies and actions confirms that it is not a peace-loving Member State, that it has persistently violated the principles contained in the Charter and that it has carried out neither its obligations under the Charter nor its commitment under General Assembly resolution 273(III) of 11 May 1949;

13. Calls once more upon all Member States to apply the following measures:

(a) To refrain from supplying Israel with any weapons and related equipment and to suspend any military assistance that Israel receives from them;

(b) To refrain from acquiring any weapons or military equipment from Israel;

(c) To suspend economic, financial and technological assistance to and co-operation with Israel;

(d) To sever diplomatic, trade and cultural relations with Israel;

14. Reiterates its call to all Member States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with Israel in order totally to isolate it in all fields;

15. Urges non-member States to act in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

16. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other international organizations to conform their relations with Israel to the terms of the present resolution;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/146 B

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 88-22-32 (recorded vote)

32-nation draft (A/39/L.20 & Corr.1 & Add.1); agenda item 36.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Byelorussian SSR, Comoros, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Mongolia, Morocco, Nicaragua, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: plenary 72-77, 101.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Haiti, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Colombia, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, Guatemala, Honduras, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Malawi, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Singapore, Spain, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Before adopting the text, the Assembly rejected by 69 votes to 28, with 23 abstentions, a motion by the United States that this resolution, and another which became Assembly resolution 39/146 A, constituted "recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security" within the meaning of that phrase as it appears in Article 18, paragraph 2, of the Charter, and would therefore require a two-thirds majority vote for adoption (for details, see p. 261).

In Israel's view, the text was an attempt to harm and isolate it, as well as to legitimize Arab aggressions of the past and embolden such attacks in the future. Instead of condemning the Syrian Arab Republic, which had repeatedly launched attacks from the Golan Heights, the text castigated Israel; instead of calling for negotiations, it appealed to States to refrain from supplying Israel with means to defend itself.

The United States protested against the text's thrust and overall purpose, and objected to what it called the singularly offensive treatment it received in the resolution, particularly with regard to the practice of selective name-calling.

Australia found that a number of elements in the text were contrary to its policy and noted that they would only aggravate an already tense situation; specifically, a call for measures to isolate Israel discounted the need for all parties to seek negotiated solutions. Ireland, on behalf of the EC members, reiterated their call for a balanced approach, and stressed the unacceptability of formulations criticizing a permanent member of the Security Council for exercising its right under the Charter.

New Zealand was disappointed that the text did not adequately reflect the balance of principles in Council resolution 242(1967)<sup>(51)</sup> and thus could hardly contribute to a negotiated settlement.

Norway felt that some paragraphs, rather than promoting peace and understanding, were disruptive and could lead in the opposite direction. Its objections to paragraphs 12 to 16 related to their substance as well as to the fact that they could not be reconciled with the division of responsibilities between the Assembly and the Council envisaged by the Charter.

Portugal dissociated itself from any initiative that it felt could make negotiations more difficult, pointing out that the resolution's language had discriminatory or judicial implications detrimental to a dialogue towards a peaceful solution.

Austria said it was consistently opposed to the singling out for criticism of particular countries and did not believe that breaking relations with Israel could bring closer a solution of the Middle East problem. It was also against any formulation which could be interpreted as impinging on the principle of universality of United Nations membership, a view shared by Ecuador, which also said that decisions that were the prerogatives of sovereign States should not be subordinate to decisions or exhortations from third parties or international organizations.

Singapore felt that the draft was selective and unbalanced in its condemnation, and impinged on the sovereign rights of third countries having diplomatic relations with Israel.

Honduras also believed that its international, consular and diplomatic relations with other States were not given the necessary respect in the text, and that the singling out of countries with which it enjoyed such relations was unjustifiable; if this matter of principle was not taken into consideration, it could have a negative impact on the achievement of United Nations aims.

Brazil did not want to reduce the possibilities for the withdrawal of the occupation forces by the diplomatic isolation of a party to the conflict, even if its actions were incompatible with international law and United Nations resolutions.

Malawi's abstention was motivated by its conviction that there was still room for a just and amicable solution through negotiation.

The Philippines said that, to promote peace, resolutions should be balanced and should not prejudice the sovereign right of States to conduct their own international policy as they saw fit.

Bolivia said that the approach and treatment in some paragraphs precluded its support of the text, a view also held by Argentina, which believed, as did Venezuela, that certain judgements were not conducive to a solution.

Egypt remarked that it could not subscribe to certain aspects of the text, particularly parts of paragraph 13.

While endorsing the text's spirit, Spain stressed that it could not vote for it because of the legal problems and the political implications of the penultimate preambular paragraph, as well as paragraphs 8, 9 and 12 to 14. Nepal found the text's general thrust in keeping with its position; however, it reserved its position on the same operative paragraphs and on the fourth and eighth preambular paragraphs, which it said ran counter to its declared policies on the Middle East. It also believed that the initiation of measures called for in the operative paragraphs was the prerogative of the Security Council.

Greece said that, if separate votes had been taken, it would have abstained on paragraphs 8 and 13 (c) and (d), and would have voted against paragraph 14.

Mexico said its vote demonstrated commitment to United Nations resolutions, despite its reservations on paragraphs 12 to 14. Bhutan had reservations on the use of certain phrases and determinations in the eighth preambular paragraph and paragraph 12.

Iran's reservation concerned the fact that the text made no distinction between the territories occupied before 1967 and those occupied since.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reaffirmed its opposition to any reference that could be interpreted, directly or indirectly, as a recognition of what it called the Zionist entity or legitimization of a fait accompli imposed by force.

By resolution 39/146 A, the Assembly strongly condemned the imposition by Israel of its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the occupied Syrian Golan Heights.

West Bank officials

The issue of three West Bank officials deported by Israel in 1980<sup>(52)</sup> was again addressed by the General Assembly in 1984. The Assembly called on Israel to allow the return of the three Palestinian leaders, so that they could resume the functions for which they had been elected and appointed. The officials had been charged with inciting the local Arab population to acts of violence and subversion. The Assembly also considered again the 1980 assassination attempts against the Palestinian Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh.<sup>(53)</sup>

Expulsion of Hebron and Halhul Mayors and of the Islamic Judge of Hebron

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 27 September 1984 report<sup>(54)</sup> to the General Assembly on the implementation of its December 1983 resolution<sup>(55)</sup> regarding the illegal expulsion and imprisonment of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the expulsion of the Sharia (Islamic) Judge of Hebron, the Secretary-General said he had received no response from Israel in reply to a note verbale of 15 March 1984.

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Demands once more that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind the illegal measures taken by the Israeli military occupation authorities in expelling and imprisoning the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and in expelling the Sharia Judge of Hebron and that it facilitate the immediate return of the expelled Palestinian leaders so that they can resume the functions for which they were elected and appointed;

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: United States.

The United States reiterated its position<sup>(56)</sup> on the corresponding 1983 resolution<sup>(55)</sup> when it had acknowledged that deportation was contrary to the fourth Geneva Convention, but noted omission of factors contributing to that action.

Prosecution in assassination attempts

Report of the Secretary-General. On 9 July 1984,<sup>(57)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on implementation of its December 1983 resolution<sup>(58)</sup> concerning the 1980 assassination attempts against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh. The Secretary-General stated that, in reply to a note verbale of 15 March 1984, Israel had informed him, on 28 June, that a number of suspected perpetrators of those attacks had been apprehended by the Israeli authorities and indicted, and were currently standing trial in the Jerusalem District Court.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 471(1980) of 5 June 1980, in which the Council condemned the assassination attempts against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh and called for the immediate

Against: Israel, United States.

The United States expressed confidence in the ability of Israel's legal system to produce a fair result and therefore considered any interference by the United Nations unjustified.

Ireland, for the EC members, stated reservations about the appropriateness of the language in paragraph 1, since the Israeli authorities had already begun proceedings against the alleged perpetrators.

Economic and social conditions

Concerned about the deteriorating economic and social conditions in the occupied territories, the United Nations continued its efforts in 1984 to remedy the situation. A report of the Secretary-General focused on the living conditions of Palestinians in the occupied territories, a subject taken up in December by the General Assembly in resolution 39/169. Also in December, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/223 on economic development projects in those territories. Several economic and social assistance activities for Palestinians were undertaken by UNDP, UNIDO, UNICEF and other organizations (see p. 276).

Nicaragua, by a letter of 15 October,<sup>(59)</sup> transmitted to the Secretary-General, among other documents of the Third Conference of Ministers of Labour of Non-Aligned Countries and Other Developing Countries (Managua, 10-12 May), a resolution calling on ILO to increase technical assistance to the Palestinian workers in the occupied territories, and a draft resolution presented by the Group of Arab States condemning Israel for its continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories, and for establishing settlements, destroying housing and expelling the members of workers' unions.

Living conditions of Palestinians

Report of the Secretary-General. In May 1984, the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(60)</sup> on the living conditions of Palestinians in the occupied territories, pursuant to a December 1983 request of the Assembly.<sup>(61)</sup> The report was prepared with the help of three experts, although, as in the previous year, they had not been permitted by Israel to visit the territories and thus had to rely on secondary sources of information. From 22 January to 28 February, they had held discussions in Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic with government and United Nations officials. Meetings were also held with PLO officials in Damascus and Amman, as well as with the former Minister of Awqaf and Holy Places, the former Mayors of Jerusalem, Halhul and Hebron, former professors from the West Bank, and Palestinians who had recently returned from the territories. Some of the material for analysis had been gathered from United Nations bodies and organizations.

In contrast to previous years, when general conditions of occupation had been analysed, the 1984 report focused on the direct impact of Israeli settlements on the living conditions of the Palestinians in the territories. It provided an overview of Israeli settlement trends and plans, and assessed the effect of the continuing Israeli settlement practices and policies on the growth of Palestinian towns and villages, on water resources and housing, on the economy of the occupied territories, on the social life and religious practices of the Palestinians, and on the judicial and local government systems.

The experts concluded that the policies designed to promote, protect and develop the settlements diminished the amount of land and water resources available to Palestinians. According to some sources, Israel controlled between 50 and 60 per cent of the land in the occupied territories, and almost all of the Jordan Valley's potentially cultivable land had been expropriated for the Israeli settlements. Although water supplies in the West Bank were substantially better than in the critically dry Gaza, Israel had imposed restrictive measures on the indigenous population, while providing preferential water supply services to Israeli settlers.

The increasing control by the occupation authorities over agricultural and industrial production, marketing and building, as well as the absence of a financial system and the continuous devaluation of the Israeli shekel, had contributed to important structural changes in the economy of the territories, diminished the potential for development and led to the West Bank's and Gaza's total dependence on the occupying Power. The report noted that Israel continued to establish settlements in a manner that impaired the expansion of Palestinian towns and villages. The already serious housing situation, exacerbated by the continuing punitive demolition and sealing of houses, was expected to worsen due to the absence of construction to replace substandard units and restrictive policies on building permits and on the transfer of funds from abroad.

The experts pointed to widely disparate conditions under which Israelis and Palestinians lived. While the settlers enjoyed subsidies, assured markets, guaranteed prices and all the benefits of full citizenship, Palestinians were impeded by various restrictions, had no access to credit, were denied national insurance and home improvement opportunities and were discouraged from investing in industry. Their social life was adversely affected by the increasing number of new Israeli settlers who often interfered with Palestinians' farming, religious and educational activities. The settlers' status as a privileged class had given rise to increased confrontation between the two groups, often leading to violence. Another factor contributing to the deteriorating situation was the existence of two different judicial and local government systems. Justice was dispensed to the Israeli settlers through Israeli courts, whereas Palestinians were subject to the jurisdiction of military courts, the judgement of which could not be appealed.

The report also noted the inadequacy of health and education facilities available to Palestinians, in contrast to quality services that Israeli settlers had access to. In addition, Palestinians were restricted in their social and cultural activities by frequent curfews, whereas the Israeli settlers were free to pursue those interests within the territories.

By a letter of 10 October 1984,<sup>(62)</sup> Israel transmitted its comments on the Secretary-General's May report, as well as on a June report<sup>(63)</sup> on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied territories (see p. 334). Israel said the May report, merely summarizing the June report, did not add anything to the water resources issues.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1984, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/173 without vote.

Living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories

At its 49th plenary meeting, on 26 July 1984, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session for consideration.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/173

Adopted without vote

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Gabon, Ivory Coast.

Israel said the text exhibited no sound reasoning or political maturity, but reflected its sponsors' hypocrisy and intent to slander Israel rather than help Palestinians. It also failed to mention several documents submitted by Israel. With regard to paragraph 3, Israel said it was not possible for a handful of Israelis to change the demography of 1.9 million Arabs. It also described as absurd the reference to the alleged deterioration of the Palestinian Arabs' living conditions and stated that the outcome of the proposed seminar would doubtless be empty rhetoric.

The United States believed that the Secretary-General's report was biased and wilfully distorted, and the resolution itself was inaccurate; the seminar would incur expenditures which could be employed instead to benefit Palestinians. While sharing the international community's concerns about the quality of Palestinian life, the United States rejected the use of condemnatory language.

The German Democratic Republic, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said their vote was an expression of support for a just and comprehensive Middle East solution, but regretted that the text did not call for an end to the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory and the withdrawal of all Israeli troops.

Despite its affirmative vote, Australia said it was concerned about the financial implications of the seminar. Ireland, speaking for the EEC members, believed that considerable resources must be allocated to alleviate the problems of the region, but stressed that the seminar should be held within existing resources. Ireland and Japan observed that holding the seminar at Vienna rather than Nairobi, headquarters of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, contradicted the Assembly's 1976 decision<sup>(64)</sup> on holding meetings away from headquarters. Finland, on behalf of the Nordic countries, said their vote did not prejudice their position on how programme budget implications should be presented, and termed the relevant statement inadequate.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya pointed out that its vote should not be interpreted as a recognition of any fait accompli or of the entity in occupied Palestine. Iran stressed that its vote reflected its support of Palestinian rights; it was, however, opposed to the inclusion of any paragraph which accorded recognition to the régime occupying the Palestinian territories.

In Jerusalem and in the Gaza Strip, several Palestinian residential quarters had been destroyed by the occupation authorities to make way for colonial settlements, the PLO representative said, and in the West Bank Palestinian farmers had been forced to give up their land for "security" purposes so that settlements could be built. They were being established to facilitate annexation of the territories, isolate them from other Arab countries, destroy the Palestinian identity and prevent the achievement of a just peace in the region. In addition, Israel's current economic difficulties were also detrimental to the living conditions of Palestinians in the occupied territories, since those territories had been made economically dependent on the Israeli economy.

The Fifth Committee on 28 November decided, by recorded vote of 92 to 2, with 11 abstentions, that, should the Assembly adopt the text, an additional appropriation of $36,200 would be required for 1984-1985.

On 18 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/223 by recorded vote.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Canada, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Paraguay, Sweden.

Israel rejected the political connotations of the text, pointing out that products originating in the administered territories had free access to external markets, that development projects were considered solely on the basis of their economic merits, and that the ports of Ashdod and Haifa were at the disposal of the inhabitants of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza District.

Canada, as well as Sweden (speaking also for Finland, Iceland and Norway), agreed with the general thrust of the text, but cited as their reasons for abstaining the absence of documentation on the specific projects and lack of adequate justification for them. Australia had reservations about their cost, funding and feasibility.

Ireland, for the EC members, pointed out that their vote did not imply any commitment on their part and stressed the need for economic and technical viability of development projects. Austria withheld judgement on the economic, technical and financial aspects of specific projects for lack of adequate information. The position of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, as well as Iran, was the same as on other 1984 resolutions on the subject.

In December, the General Assembly also adopted, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decision 39/442 by recorded vote.

Israeli economic practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Economic and Social Council, the comparative study on the Israeli practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories and its obligations under international law, requested in Assembly resolution 38/144 of 19 December 1983 as adopted.

Against: Israel, United States.

Israel said the text had been derived from a December 1983 Assembly resolution<sup>(65)</sup> based on questionable premises which predetermined a one-sided outcome; the comparative study requested would be an elaboration of a 1983 report<sup>(66)</sup> rejected by Israel. The text disregarded the economic and social welfare of the inhabitants of the administered territories, and Israel's compliance with international law had already been repeatedly explained.

Ireland, for the EC members, said that, while the text requested a useful study, they reaffirmed their position of principle with regard to the 1983 resolution. Japan said it was sympathetic to the position of the Arab States on the problem of natural resources. Australia pointed out that its vote implied no commitment to support related future decisions.

Mediterranean-Dead Sea canal project

Israel's plan of March 1981<sup>(67)</sup> to build a 67-mile canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea for electric power generation was the subject of a General Assembly resolution (39/101) and a decision of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP). Following up on their 1983 study<sup>(68)</sup> of the effects of the planned conduit, which was to pass through the Israeli-occupied Gaza Strip, a team of United Nations experts provided updated information on the project's impact on agricultural development, mineral production, and recreation and tourism.
