Chapter XII

Science and technology

Responding to demands for a restructuring of international scientific and technological relations, the United Nations continued in 1984 its efforts to strengthen the related capacities of developing countries by mobilizing financial resources, upgrading institutional arrangements and balancing the international flows of technology within the framework provided by the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action. A major effort to review progress in implementing the Vienna Programme's operational plan and map out further measures needed to accelerate the process was undertaken in analytical reports by the Secretary-General and the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC). Several ad hoc panels and workshops met in 1984 to provide expert advice on such specific problems as long-term perspectives on science and technology, scientific and technological indicators for development, and integration of emerging and traditional technologies.

A central role in financing various activities was played by the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD). Although uncertainty about its long-term financial prospects had hindered the mobilization of resources through regular pledging procedures, UNFSSTD initiated a number of new projects and programming activities with funds provided directly from Governments and from such non-core mechanisms as cost-sharing and trust funds, which yielded $4.7 million in 1984. Long-term financial and institutional arrangements of UNFSSTD were considered by the General Assembly, which decided in December to establish an informal open-ended intergovernmental working group for a speedy conclusion of the arrangements, while urging all countries to contribute to the System's operation under existing procedures (decision 39/428).

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the main directing and policy-making body, held its sixth session in May/June 1984, focusing special attention on implementation of the Vienna Programme, on strengthening the role of the Committee and on improving the effectiveness of its work methods. The Assembly, in December, supported those initiatives, in particular the Committee's decision to select in advance the themes for its sessions (resolution 39/164). The Committee also considered activities of its Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, which met for its fourth session in February, and of the United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development. Charged with the task of providing substantive assistance to the Intergovernmental Committee and co-ordinating United Nations activities at the Secretariat level, the Centre proceeded with efforts to initiate the Advance Technology Alert System, continued its feasibility study of indicators for measuring the impact of science and technology on national development and prepared the first biennial review of United Nations implementation of the Vienna Programme. In the area of inter-agency co-operation, it provided assistance to the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, which held its fifth session in January, adopting recommendations on a variety of issues, including United Nations joint activities, criteria for building endogenous capacities of developing countries, and further actions by United Nations entities to strengthen their role in science and technology.

The problem of balancing flows of technology between industrialized and developing countries remained high on the agenda of United Nations bodies in 1984, particularly the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). UNCTAD's Committee on Transfer of Technology, at its first special session in February, took up the question of a strategy for the technological transformation of developing countries; at its fifth regular session in December, it considered a broad spectrum of economic, commercial, developmental, legal and organizational issues related to the international transfer of technology. The question of the reverse transfer of technology, or brain drain, was again a concern of the General Assembly which requested, in resolution 39/211, the organizing of further meetings of governmental experts and of the Inter-Agency Group on Reverse Transfer of Technology.

Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action

General aspects

Efforts to implement the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development<sup>(1)</sup> and improve the effectiveness of its 1981 operational plan<sup>(2)</sup> constituted a significant part of United Nations activities in science and technology throughout 1984. As requested by the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development in June 1983,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee's May/June 1984 session an analytical report<sup>(4)</sup> reviewing the progress made by the United Nations system in implementing the operational plan over the 1982-1983 budgetary cycle. The report appraised the principal activities of United Nations bodies under each of the plan's eight programme areas and assessed their overall impact, focusing primarily on the programmes which had received major resources. Aimed mainly at providing information and advisory services to science and technology institutions and personnel in developing countries, those activities proved to have direct impact in areas such as development of institutional and human infrastructure and resulted in valuable exchanges of views and knowledge in other fields. The report concluded that, despite positive developments, there continued to be substantial scope and potential for further improvement, in both the formulation and implementation of United Nations programmes.

Further measures to accelerate implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action were considered by the Secretary-General in another report to the Intergovernmental Committee.<sup>(5)</sup> Progress could be achieved, in his view, by improving co-ordination of the medium-term plans and programme budgets of the United Nations system, promoting action at the national level, and enhancing the role of funding institutions and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). With regard to evaluation and follow-up measures, the report pointed to the need to streamline the Committee's review process, establish country review mechanisms and develop indicators on science and technology for development. The question of upgrading United Nations joint activities was tackled by the DIEC Director-General in a March report<sup>(6)</sup> which reviewed financing and consultation processes and mapped out venues for additional joint ventures (see below, under "Institutional arrangements").

Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action was high on the agenda of the fifth session

(Rome, Italy, 17-19 January) of the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). Among key issues under consideration were the status of joint activities, criteria for building endogenous capacities in developing countries and further actions by United Nations entities to strengthen their role in science and technology. In a report on the session,<sup>(7)</sup> the Task Force noted that there had been serious efforts in formulating joint activities, but underscored the need for extrabudgetary resources and suggested methods of improving contacts with funding institutions and donor countries. The Task Force stressed that it was up to the countries and financing bodies to determine priorities and advised against a search for additional joint projects. With regard to building endogenous capacities in the developing countries, three ways of action were proposed: providing information to the Intergovernmental Committee on assessment studies by other United Nations organizations; contracting national institutions to study criteria for endogenous capacities; and launching joint inter-agency missions under the Task Force's authority to assist selected countries in capacity-building. In relation to further action to strengthen the role of the United Nations system in science and technology, the Task Force agreed that it would not currently be opportune to identify new areas for joint planning and that efforts should be made to implement fully existing activities.

Various other issues related to implementation of the Vienna Programme, including science and technology indicators, the Advance Technology Alert System and a global network of scientific and technological information, were considered by the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development in February (see below).

Intergovernmental Committee action. The Intergovernmental Committee, on 8 June,<sup>(8)</sup> noted the Secretary-General's biennial review of United Nations activities<sup>(4)</sup> and the DIEC Director-General's report on United Nations joint activities in implementation of the Vienna Programme.<sup>(6)</sup> The Committee emphasized the need for greater co-ordination of United Nations science and technology programmes. It invited the Economic and Social Council to request United Nations entities to consider ways of enhancing co-ordination and give special consideration to the Vienna Programme, its operational plan and the Intergovernmental Committee's resolutions. In another resolution of the same date,<sup>(9)</sup> the Committee recommended that the Vienna Programme be popularized in a small booklet and that the Advisory Committee review to what extent the scientific progress since 1979 had influenced its implementation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1984, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/168 without vote.

Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1984, the Council requested the organs and organizations of the United Nations system to consider ways and means of enhancing the co-ordination of their medium-term plans and programme budgets in the field of science and technology for development and to give special consideration to the guidelines of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and its operational plan and to the resolutions of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/168

Adopted without vote.

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/147) without vote, 20 July (meeting 14); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 16.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/164 of 17 December, the General Assembly took note of Council decision 1984/168.

NGO participation

In accordance with a June 1983 recommendation of the Intergovernmental Committee,<sup>(10)</sup> the Centre for Science and Technology for Development convened at Amsterdam, Netherlands, from 24 to 26 January 1984, the first meeting of the NGO Steering Committee, established in 1983. The meeting recommended a series of specific tasks for NGOs regarding implementation of the Vienna Programme.

Advisory Committee consideration. Reviewing the results of an April 1983 panel of experts on the role of regional associations<sup>(11)</sup> and endorsing its recommendations, the Advisory Committee, at its February 1984 session,<sup>(12)</sup> emphasized that NGOs could provide essential inputs to the development process. The Committee felt that NGOs could be particularly effective in defining research and development priorities, objectives and programmes, as well as in assisting countries that did not possess a critical mass of scientists and technologists and in developing working relationships with regional intergovernmental and international organizations. The Committee urged the popularization of science and technology, with due attention to aspirations of women and youth. Noting that one of the most serious obstacles to popularization efforts in developing countries was the lack of good science communicators, it recommended that NGOs enhance their role in that area.

Committee encouraged the Centre for science and technology to involve NGOs more in its activities. By a decision of the same date,<sup>(14)</sup> it took note of the oral report of the Chairman of the Steering Committee of the Centre's NGO Advisory Group on its January meeting at Amsterdam (see above) and encouraged NGOs to continue to co-operate with the Intergovernmental Committee in implementing the Vienna Programme.

Scientific and technological policies*Long-term perspectives

The adverse impact of the world economic recession on implementation of the Vienna Programme continued to be a cause of particular concern in 1984. Following up on its February 1983 proposal,<sup>(15)</sup> the Advisory Committee considered in February 1984<sup>(12)</sup> the scope of the topic for an ad hoc panel of specialists on long-term global perspectives of science and technology for development, to be held later in the year. The Committee outlined the main issues to be covered by the panel; it stressed that the interaction among the various changes and trends should also be examined in relation to such key issues as endogenous development, industrialization, productivity and international competitiveness.

After a preliminary informal meeting of a small group of experts at Laxenburg, Austria, from 1 to 3 August, the panel met at Mbabane, Swaziland, from 21 to 26 November.<sup>(16)</sup> It examined the economic and social turbulence and rapid advances in science and technology since 1979 which it said had created a critical situation for the developing countries. The slow-down in economic growth was leading to sharp decreases and fluctuations in the demand for scientific and technological activities and services. In short, the closer links between scientific capabilities, developments in technology and economic growth, the increasing cost of scientific research, the accelerating obsolescence of research capabilities, the emergence of new transdisciplinary fields and the growing complexity of the institutional setting for research were making it more difficult for most developing countries to take advantage of scientific and technological advances.

The panel identified four key dimensions involved in the design of new strategies for science and technology for development: the need to take into account the specific situation of a developing country and its international context; the importance of combining different types of technology, from traditional to advanced, in productive and service activities, the so-called "management of technological pluralism"; the need to enhance the innovative capabilities of society at all levels, from industrial firms to communities; and the necessity of combining defensive measures with the exploitation of opportunities in international markets and with the building of long-term capabilities.

The panel also emphasized a need to devise new sets of policy instruments and to promote international co-operation.

Science and technology indicators for development

Responding to the growing need for measuring ever more complicated scientific activities and their impact on development, the Advisory Committee, at its February 1984 session, decided to convene a panel of experts to give impetus to the construction of appropriate indicators.

The ad hoc panel of specialists on the measurement of the impact of science and technology on development objectives met at Graz, Austria, from 2 to 7 May. Reporting on the results of the meeting,<sup>(17)</sup> the panel described science and technology indicators as tools to be discussed in the context of improving policy management and assessment, and stressed the importance of developing skills to create adequate indicators and the need to demonstrate their utility and limitations to senior decision-makers. It suggested launching a number of pioneer projects to test new and old indicators in specific situations in developing countries and holding training courses on development and utilization of indicators. It stressed that the goal was not to create fixed indicators for universal application, but to evolve methodologies for devising indicators best suited to specific situations.

Advance Technology Alert System

As requested by the Intergovernmental Committee in June 1983,<sup>(11)</sup> a progress report on the launching of an Advance Technology Alert System (ATAS) was submitted to the Committee in March 1984.<sup>(18)</sup> Three major components had been proposed for ATAS: a semi-annual bulletin designed to inform policy-makers in developing countries about new and emerging technologies and their implications for the development process; advisory services to Governments and national and regional organizations on the implications of new technologies; and establishment of a network of research institutes, individuals, regional and international organizations and the scientific community to better the link between institutes for science and technology forecasting and assessment in developing countries with those in developed countries.

In an effort to promote the ATAS network, the Centre for Science and Technology for Development contacted over 100 potential contributors in order to prepare a review of some leading technology forecasting and assessment institutes around the world for inclusion in the first issue of the ATAS Bulletin. Assessing the progress in launching ATAS, the Advisory Committee, in February,<sup>(12)</sup> recommended that the Bulletin be geared to a diversified audience and urged the Centre to draw directly on the expertise of its members. In addition, it made a number of editorial suggestions.

The Intergovernmental Committee, in a resolution of 8 June,<sup>(13)</sup> noted the launching of ATAS and expressed its appreciation for the pre-publication version of the first issue of the Bulletin. The Committee requested that the publication continue to present information on new and emerging technologies and assess their impact on developing countries, taking into consideration relevant recommendations of the Advisory Committee. The first issue of the ATAS Bulletin was published in November, with 3,500 copies distributed to governmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as to scientists and technologists in both developed and developing countries.<sup>(19)</sup>

With regard to assistance to Member States, another ATAS objective, the Centre assisted the Organization of African Unity and the Economic Commission for Africa in the convening of an African expert group meeting to assess the implications of new technologies for implementation of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa<sup>(20)</sup> (see Chapter I of this section). The meeting (Mbabane, Swaziland, 22-26 October) was attended by more than 60 experts and representatives of Governments and organizations; it recognized the need for specific measures to examine on a continuous basis the implications of new technologies to the development of the region. The Centre also undertook a preliminary study of the implications of new technologies to the Caribbean regional development efforts, responding to a request by the Caribbean Council for Science and Technology.

Scientific research and development

Emerging and traditional technologies

As proposed by the Advisory Committee in February 1983,<sup>(11)</sup> an international workshop on pioneer projects on the integration of emerging and traditional technologies was held in April 1984 in Tokyo by the Centre for science and technology jointly with the Japanese Association for Promotion of International Co-operation. Also following an Advisory Committee request, the International Labour Organisation published a compilation of case-studies on the blending of new and traditional technologies, showing how micro-electronics, biotechnologies, satellite technology and photovoltaic power could be blended with traditional economic activities in various sectors.

On 8 June, the Intergovernmental Committee expressed its appreciation for the workshop and the compilation of case-studies.<sup>(9)</sup>

Research-production link

In considering, at its February 1984 session,<sup>(12)</sup> questions related to the linkages between research and development activities and the production system, the Advisory Committee had before it the results of an October 1983 panel of specialists at Lima, Peru.<sup>(21)</sup> The Committee emphasized that new conceptual approaches would be needed to stimulate research and development that met the needs of developing countries for advances in agricultural and industrial production. The aim of those efforts was to increase productivity by enhancing the effectiveness of technological choices and practices on the working environment. The Committee felt that improving the linkages between research and development and production would make it easier to integrate emerging and traditional technologies in agriculture, industry and services.

The Committee recommended that research and development institutions provide technical services on a continuously updated basis and correlated with production and service needs, including such services as the development of demonstration plants; assistance to end-users in implementation; trouble-shooting; industrial surveys; industrial staff training; process improvement; technical extension and liaison activities; and information collection and dissemination.

The Committee felt that research and development and production activities should be viewed in their relation to national development goals. It urged Governments to use a variety of policy and planning instruments to promote linkages and stressed that development banks could play an important role; it recommended that Governments direct their national development financial institutions to provide loans for the promotion and commercialization of research and development results. The Committee proposed that an independent expert team review the impact of loans by multilateral and bilateral funding agencies on the research and development sectors.

The Advisory Committee's views were noted with appreciation by the Intergovernmental Committee on 8 June.<sup>(9)</sup>

Scientific and technological information

The Vienna Programme placed considerable emphasis on the development of national systems of scientific and technological information and the linking of such systems with regional and international information networks. As requested by the Intergovernmental Committee in June 1983,<sup>(11)</sup> the Centre for science and technology submitted in March 1984 a progress report on the preparation of a study on the long-term plan of action for the establishment of a global scientific and technological information network.<sup>(22)</sup> The report stated that 16 Member States had expressed interest in all or some of the joint activities related to the global network. The report also noted the Centre's co-operation with the ACC Task Force and described its contacts with intergovernmental organizations within and outside the United Nations system, several of which declared their willingness to co-operate.

Following up on another June 1983 request of the Intergovernmental Committee,<sup>(11)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted also in March 1984 a note describing progress in establishing a data base on approved United Nations programmes and projects in the area of science and technology for development, geared towards endogenous capacity-building of developing countries.<sup>(23)</sup> The Secretary-General outlined criteria derived from the Vienna Programme for determining whether a particular activity could contribute towards endogenous capacity-building. He proposed input data elements and a possible output design. The data base was to be established in two phases, the first to cover all the regular United Nations work programmes and projects funded by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), and the second phase to cover the remaining agencies' activities financed through trust funds and other extrabudgetary resources.

Questions related to the establishment of a global scientific and technological information network were taken up by the Advisory Committee at its February session.<sup>(12)</sup> The Committee suggested a review of established and planned multi-country information systems both within and outside the United Nations system and an assessment of the needs of users in developing countries, including cost consideration. It also distinguished between two different uses of the term "network", one referring to physical communications facilities and the other describing an informal system of institutions responding to users' needs; the Committee stressed that an initial study should focus on the latter type. It believed that the development of networks of co-operating institutions could lead to immediate benefits to the users in developing countries.

The Intergovernmental Committee, in a resolution of 8 June,<sup>(9)</sup> noted the Advisory Committee's comments and suggested that in 1985 a panel of specialists be convened on the subject, taking into account the need to use existing information systems. It also took note of the Advisory Committee's views on the report of the panel on the role of regional organizations in popularizing science and technology<sup>(11)</sup> and recommended that panel and workshop reports be extensively disseminated.

UNCTAD activities. Pursuant to a 1982 request of the Committee on Transfer of Technology,<sup>(24)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the Committee's December 1984 session a report on the access of developing countries to technological information.<sup>(25)</sup> Examining the range of technologies available to developing countries and the role of small and medium-sized enterprises as technology sources (see below, under "Technology transfer"), the report also reviewed the main channels through which developing countries could gain access to information, including on-line data bases, information systems of government-sponsored organizations or non-profit groups, national and regional data bases in developing countries, and United Nations information systems. A number of measures to improve access to information were suggested, such as an increase in the use of small and medium-sized enterprises as suppliers of technology, greater utilization of government-sponsored information systems and improvement of the technological information base of developing countries.

With regard to possible future action, the report proposed that UNCTAD should develop better links with on-line data bases, establish a suitable referral base for expeditious provision of information to requesting countries, and set up a basic register of small and medium-sized technology suppliers in developed and developing countries. Further, UNCTAD could play an important role in improving developing countries' access to information technologies from non-enterprise, governmental sources, and, in the longer run, increase its assistance to help those countries build up their national technology information systems and develop their interlinkages with regional systems. The report also suggested that UNCTAD organize a meeting of specialists to work out methods for improving developing countries' access to information on technologies available from small and medium-sized enterprises and non-enterprise sources.

By a resolution of 20 December 1984,<sup>(26)</sup> the Committee on Transfer of Technology recognized that small and medium-sized enterprises were an important source of technological know-how and innovation, in many cases well adapted to the needs of developing countries. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to complete case-studies and to submit them to it in 1986.

Other activities. Among related activities, a technology information pilot system entered in 1984 its preparatory phase, jointly sponsored by UNFSSTD and Italy (see below). The main objective of the project was to establish a mechanism for information exchange on selected energy and industrial technologies, mainly among developing countries. Initially, it linked 10 developing countries through national bureaux established for that purpose; if proven viable, it was supposed to lead to the design of a wider, subscription-based, multi-sectoral information network.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/164 of 17 December, the General Assembly noted that information systems for science and technology for development had been selected as the theme for consideration at the seventh (1985) session of the Intergovernmental Committee.

Financing

UN Financing System

Operative since January 1982,<sup>(1)</sup> the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development continued throughout 1984 to help developing countries enhance their scientific and technological capacities as envisaged by the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action. A report on UNFSSTD's operations in 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> prepared by the Administrator of UNDP, in consultation with the DIEC Director-General, noted that uncertainty regarding long-term financial and institutional arrangements had hindered the mobilization of resources through normal pledging procedures, although a number of new projects and programming activities were initiated with funds provided directly by Governments and from other sources. Major emphasis was placed on project development activities, as UNFSSTD prepared itself for a potential decrease of traditional grant resources.

Operational activities

In the absence of a substantial inflow of new core resources through the traditional pledging conference, UNFSSTD succeeded in attracting over $20 billion for project funding through such noncore mechanisms as cost-sharing and trust funds. In addition, co-operative arrangements were set up with Governments and NGOs whereby non-financial resources were allocated to scientific and technological capacity-building in developing countries. By the end of 1984, despite a slow-down, the total number of official project requests from developing countries was more than 1,000. Intensified co-operation with UNDP and its field network allowed UNFSSTD in 1984 to bring to bear a broad range of technical expertise to its own project operations.

Following the primary component of its mandate to strengthen endogenous scientific and technological capacities, approximately 18 per cent of UNFSSTD expenditures was directly applied to training. Since 1982, nearly 1,800 fellows had been trained under UNFSSTD-financed projects, with 86 per cent of training fellowships in the developing countries themselves. A major emphasis was on project evaluation, with seven evaluations completed by the end of the year.

Among the main operational projects assisted by UNFSSTD in 1984, projects in Botswana, Burundi, Lesotho and Zimbabwe focused on the integration of science and technology policies and planning with overall economic and social development. In Fiji, the emphasis was on strengthening policy-making capabilities and employment opportunities. Other policy-making and planning efforts included a project in the Dominican Republic and the creation of a new Institute of Fundamental Studies in Sri Lanka. Working to strengthen scientific and technological infrastructure, UNFSSTD assisted in: establishing a Central Metallurgical Centre in Nigeria, a geo-technical section at the State Commissariat for National Resources in Guinea-Bissau and a Centre for Earth Sciences and Geological Cartography in Tunisia; improving the information and documentation capability of the Institute for Agriculture Research in Senegal; raising efficiency of the Centre for Oceanographic Research in Madagascar; and launching a two-phased undertaking to establish an Institute of Oceanography in Yemen. In the area of technology acquisition and transfer, UNFSSTD assisted projects in Burundi, Cape Verde, the Gambia, Indonesia, Maldives, Mauritius, Nepal and Seychelles. Assistance in developing technical manpower in Africa included projects in Ethiopia and Kenya and a joint venture with the Economic Commission for Western Asia. In Latin America and the Caribbean, training projects were completed in such fields as artisanal coastal fishery (Haiti); chemistry of natural products (Paraguay); mathematics, physics, chemistry, biology and engineering (Peru); and certification of non-destructive testing operators (regional).

Strengthening information networks was the subject of projects in Kenya and Senegal, while at the interregional level UNFSSTD assisted the members of the League of Arab States in establishing a computer-based information system and undertook a mid-term evaluation of the Andean Technological Information System. Various aspects of linking research and development activities to the productive sphere were tackled by projects in Bangladesh (herbal and plant-based drugs); Cape Verde, the Gambia, Lesotho, Mauritius and Seychelles (renewable energy technologies); Jordan (low-cost housing techniques); Malawi (tea research); Papua New Guinea (sago-starch village factories); and the Republic of Korea (petrochemical waste recycling). Four pilot projects in Latin America neared completion: Brazil and Honduras (carbon fibre production and replacement of fuel oil by charcoal); Jamaica (bauxite processing); and Uruguay (inactivation of the foot-and-mouth disease virus).

Owing to the fact that UNFSSTD core resources had not been substantially replenished, trust fund operations, originally conceived as one of several funding modes, became an important funding source. In 1984, five trust fund projects valued at $6.1 million were approved. They included a technological information pilot system for 10 countries in all regions ($1,472,600) (see above, under "Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action"); development of national scientific and technological capacity in natural resources remote sensing in Ethiopia ($118,650); application of technologies for rural areas in Indonesia ($2,190,000); strengthening of national capacity for mineral prospecting in Costa Rica ($658,000); and a regional non-destructive testing network in 13 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean ($1,711,450). Commitments were received for nine more, with an input of $12.5 million, which were expected to become operational in 1985.

Project development

In an effort to lay the groundwork for further operational activities, UNFSSTD pursued in 1984 a variety of measures to obtain alternative sources of project funding. In June, it entered the Project Annotated List, co-ordinated by UNDP and designed to match unmet assistance requirements of developing countries with the special resources available in developed countries and from multi-lateral financing institutions. It also launched a number of special initiatives to strengthen co-operation among developing countries. In November, it sponsored jointly with the African Regional Centre for Technology a meeting at Rome of high-level scientists and technologists from over 20 African and other developing countries, to discuss selected co-operative projects in food and energy.

In October/November, it co-sponsored with the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel an international seminar on research and dissemination strategies for the Sahelian region.

In addition to its monitoring and support of projects under implementation and the processing of new commitments, UNFSSTD worked out plans to hold several technical meetings during 1985-1986, at Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Seychelles, São Paulo (Brazil) and Beijing (China), to promote more effective utilization of project inputs among developing countries and explore possibilities for follow-up action. UNFSSTD also continued its co-operative arrangements with non-governmental and private organizations in order to focus the widest possible range of expertise and resources on the scientific and technological components of programmes within its purview.

Financial situation

By a resolution of 8 June 1984,<sup>(3)</sup> the Intergovernmental Committee expressed concern that it had not been possible to convene a pledging conference for UNFSSTD as decided by the General Assembly in December 1983.<sup>(4)</sup> Taking into account the fact that the available financial resources would not permit the System to continue beyond the end of 1984, the Committee invited the Secretary-General to convene such a conference as early as possible during the 1984 Assembly session and requested him to report to the Assembly after consulting with Governments and arranging a preparatory meeting to enable them to indicate their contributions.

The Secretary-General, in a note of 12 June<sup>(5)</sup> on programme, financial and administrative implications of the Committee resolution, estimated conference-servicing requirements on a full-cost basis at $32,500, while the estimated cost of a two-day preparatory meeting was $109,000. He also informed the Committee that the convening of a preparatory meeting would be a departure from the calendar of conferences and as such would be subject to the approval of the Committee on Conferences.

In another resolution of 8 June,<sup>(6)</sup> the Committee decided to consider mobilization of resources for science and technology for development as a possible theme for its 1986 session.

As requested by the Intergovernmental Committee, a preparatory meeting was convened on 30 and 31 October. Earlier, on 31 July, the Secretary-General had sent an appeal to Governments, calling for a successful conclusion of negotiations on UNFSSTD. The meeting had also been preceded by consultations with individual countries and major groups of countries, undertaken by the DIEC Director-General and the UNDP Administrator on behalf of the Secretary-General. Reporting to the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on the results of those consultations, the Director-General noted that the significance of science and technology for development had received full recognition and that interested Governments had stated their wish to continue mobilizing resources for the System.

At the meeting, 16 Governments and the interested member States of the European Economic Community (EEC) stated their readiness to contribute a total of about $10 million for the first year of the long-term Financing System (1985), with three of them indicating financial contributions for the succeeding two years. Twelve Governments withheld their intended contributions until a later time, several others noted they were not in the position to state their intentions at the meeting and still others expressed interest in providing substantial amounts of non-core resources. Since the amount of available resources was substantially below the envisaged target, an important requirement for launching the System on a long-term basis had not been met. The meeting reviewed the implications of the shortfall and suggested that an informal open-ended intergovernmental working group be constituted to continue negotiations on long-term arrangements and prepare recommendations for the Intergovernmental Committee's 1985 session.

Both the DIEC Director-General and the UNDP Administrator reiterated the Secretary-General's appeal for contributions to UNFSSTD at the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities on 7 and 8 November 1984 (see Chapter II of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1984, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 39/428 without vote.

Long-term financial and institutional arrangements for the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, recalling the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, containing, inter alia, the features of the long-term financial and institutional arrangements for the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development:

(a) Decided to establish an Informal Open-ended Intergovernmental Working Group on the Long-term Financial and Institutional Arrangements for the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development, which should meet to permit a broad exchange of views on ways and means to facilitate the bringing into effect of the arrangements;

(b) Recommended that the Working Group should begin its deliberations as soon as possible and meet as necessary, so as to complete its work before the seventh session of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development to be held from 28 May to 7 June 1985;

(c) Decided to continue the existing operating procedures of the Financing System and urged all countries to contribute to its operation.

General Assembly decision 39/428

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.5) without vote, 10 December (meeting 58); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.131), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.108); agenda item 80 (e). Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/39/829; S-G, A/C.2/39/L.120, A/C.5/39/95. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 56, 58; 5th Committee 49; plenary 103.

Contributions and expenditures

Continuing uncertainty over long-term measures to maintain the operational momentum of UNFSSD affected its resource prospects in 1984, when voluntary pledges amounted to under $250,000. Cost-sharing and trust funds established by the UNDP Administrator yielded $4.7 million, providing funds for several new projects and activities.

Institutional arrangements

National focal points

Further efforts were made in 1984 to encourage the establishment of national focal points—originally set up for the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development—and to integrate them into the national system for science and technology, as called for by the operational plan for the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action.

As requested by the Intergovernmental Committee in 1982,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General, on 1 March 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> presented a list of national focal points, updated as of 1 February 1984, and including information provided by Member States since March 1983, when the initial registry had been compiled.<sup>(3)</sup> The registry listed the 158 Member States of the United Nations and five non-member States maintaining permanent observer missions at United Nations Headquarters. In 17 cases, the designation of the national focal point had been made on a temporary basis, and in two cases the Centre for science and technology was awaiting the requisite information. In the mean time, the registry listed the respective Permanent Mission to the United Nations in New York or, in its absence, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Intergovernmental Committee

Review of work methods

As decided by the Intergovernmental Committee in June 1983,<sup>(4)</sup> the DIEC Director-General submitted to the Committee's May/June 1984 session a report on strengthening its role and effectiveness.<sup>(5)</sup> After reviewing the Committee's functions and activities, the Director-General made several proposals, largely based on formal and informal consultations with a wide range of interested parties. With regard to inter-agency co-operation, he recommended more specific requests for such co-operation in the Committee's decisions and resolutions, improved interaction between the Committee and other intergovernmental bodies, increased efforts to mobilize financial resources for joint activities, and greater involvement of the ACC Task Force in deliberations of the Committee. In his view, the Committee should also explore avenues of enhancing interaction with the regional commissions and NGOs in the implementation of the Vienna Programme and should better utilize the capabilities of the Advisory Committee through more direct requests for its technical advisory support and participation of the Advisory Committee Chairman in the relevant discussions.

Concerning organizational matters, the Director-General discussed the respective advantages and modalities of biennial or annual cycles of the Committee's meetings, noting that it might be advisable to keep to annual sessions for the time being and consider the matter at a later stage. The introduction of a biennial cycle of meetings had been suggested by the General Assembly in December 1983.<sup>(6)</sup> In order to improve the efficiency of its work, he proposed that the Committee reduce the number of reports and reviews, plan ahead the work of each session, and hold a short organizational Bureau meeting six weeks before the regular session. In relation to the methods of work, the Director-General proposed specific, in-depth, selective examination of substantive issues, with more extensive preparatory work to collect, process and analyse information on science and technology policies. By focusing on those matters, the Committee could provide opportunities for an exchange of views and experiences among Governments and for initiating or strengthening multi-lateral and bilateral co-operation. For the Committee to include in-depth consideration of such substantive issues in its deliberations, he proposed that it select a special theme or themes for its annual session, for the preparation and implementation of which he outlined a certain mechanism.

The financial and administrative implications of the Director-General's proposals were assessed by the Secretary-General in a note of 5 June,<sup>(7)</sup> in which he concluded that, should the Committee decide to recommend adoption of the proposals, the estimated financial requirements for participation of the Advisory Committee Chairman would be $5,600 for each session of the Intergovernmental Committee, and the convening of an intergovernmental ad hoc expert group or meeting to prepare work on the annual theme(s) would require an estimated $87,000. Conference-servicing requirements for 1984-1985 were estimated at $1,108,800 for annual sessions and $554,400 for a biennial session.

The Intergovernmental Committee, in a resolution of 8 June 1984,<sup>(8)</sup> decided to place on the agenda of each of its sessions one or two specific themes to be determined two years in advance. To this end, it invited: the Centre for science and technology to concentrate on inter-agency co-ordination and analytical preparation for the discussions; ACC to give special attention to the examination of national, regional or global needs in the areas corresponding to the selected themes; the Advisory Committee to give attention to an in-depth investigation of the selected themes; and the international community to assist the in-depth investigation of those themes. The Committee identified as possible themes for its 1986 session the mobilization of resources for science and technology for development, and technology applied to agricultural development. It invited Governments to send their comments on those themes to the Secretary-General before 1 October 1984 and requested the Committee Chairman to decide on the theme or themes and to inform the General Assembly at its 1984 session.

Other provisions included a request to the Centre to prepare a report on United Nations activities in science and technology for development; a second report on the biennial review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme; and a report on the issues left unresolved by the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development.<sup>(9)</sup>

Certain aspects of the Intergovernmental Committee's organization and methods of work were also discussed by the ACC Task Force at its January session (see below).

Report of the Committee

The report of the Intergovernmental Committee on its sixth (1984) session (New York, 29 May–8 June)<sup>(10)</sup> was submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its July session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Council adopted decision 1984/169 without vote.

Report of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1984, the Council took note of the report of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development on its sixth session and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session for consideration.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/169

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/147) without vote, 20 July (meeting 14); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 16.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By a telegram of 9 November,<sup>(11)</sup> the Chairman of the Intergovernmental Committee for 1984 informed the President of the General Assembly about the Committee's review of its methods of work. In response to the Committee's invitation, comments on the two proposed themes for the Committee's 1986 session had been received as at 1 November 1984 from 31 Governments, the majority of them endorsing the selection of both. On the basis of those replies, mobilization of resources and technology applied to agricultural development would be the themes for in-depth analysis at the 1986 Committee session.

On 17 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/164 without vote.

Report of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and General Assembly resolution 34/218 of 19 December 1979,

Noting the forthcoming mid-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action to be considered by the Intergovernmental Committee at its seventh session in the context of the review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

1. Takes note of the report of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development on its sixth session and of Economic and Social Council decisions 1984/168 and 1984/169 of 25 July 1984;

2. Supports the initiatives of the Intergovernmental Committee with a view to strengthening its role and effectiveness and, in particular, its decision to adopt a selective approach that will enable it, at each of its sessions, to conduct deliberations of greater depth by selecting in advance themes for consideration;

3. Notes, in this context, that information systems for science and technology for development have been selected as the theme for consideration at the seventh session of the Intergovernmental Committee in 1985 and that the two themes selected for the eighth session are mobilization of resources for science and technology for development for developing countries and technology applied to agricultural development and related development areas.

General Assembly resolution 39/164

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.5) without vote, 10 December (meeting 58); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.126), resulting from informal consultations; agenda item 80 (el.)

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 57, 58; plenary 103.

The draft resolution was originally sponsored by the German Democratic Republic. Following informal consultations, however, the Chairman informed the Second Committee that the text should be considered as a Vice-Chairman's text.

Advisory Committee

The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development held its fourth session in New York from 14 to 21 February 1984;<sup>(12)</sup> it reviewed follow-up measures to two 1982 panels and considered the reports of three 1983 panels on: the role of regional organizations in strengthening research and development (see above, under "NGO participation"); linkages between research and development and the production system (see above, under "Research-production link"); and science and technology and women.<sup>(13)</sup> Discussing further steps to implement the Vienna Programme of Action, the Committee dealt with perspectives of science and technology for development, the launching of ATAS and creation of a global network of scientific and technological information (see above, under "Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action"). The Advisory Committee recommended that one of its panels in 1985 should focus on the mobilization of resources and decided to postpone a final decision on the topic of a second 1985 panel until its February 1985 session.

By a resolution of 8 June 1984,<sup>(14)</sup> the Intergovernmental Committee took note of the Advisory Committee's report and expressed appreciation to Peru, Tunisia, the United States, Japan and Austria for their co-operation in holding the panels and workshops in 1983 and 1984. It recommended that the panel and workshop reports be disseminated.

nated extensively, the Vienna Programme be publicized in a small booklet, and the Advisory Committee continue emphasizing the practical problems confronting the developing countries and assess the influence of scientific progress on the implementation of the Programme. It requested the Advisory Committee to discuss in 1985 the possibility of involving members personally in implementing the Vienna Programme, noted that mobilization of resources for scientific and technological development was the subject for one of the 1985 panels and suggested that the topic for the other should be the global network of scientific and technological information.

Certain aspects of the Advisory Committee's work were also covered in other Committee resolutions of the same date (see above, under "Review of work methods", and immediately below).

Centre for science and technology

The United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development continued, throughout 1984, to assist the DIEC Director-General in implementing the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action, particularly in providing substantive support to the Intergovernmental Committee and its subsidiary bodies, and in promoting and co-ordinating United Nations scientific and technological activities at the Secretariat level.

In the area of policy analysis and research, the Centre continued to collect additional data to review the progress achieved in implementing the operational plan for implementing the Programme of Action. It proceeded with efforts to initiate ATAS and studied the feasibility of developing suitable indicators for measuring the impact of science and technology on national development (see above, under "Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action"). The Centre expanded its substantive secretariat services to the Advisory Committee, organizing the ad hoc panels of specialists (see above, under "Long-term perspectives" and "Science and technology indicators for development"). Continuing to maintain co-operation and consultation with relevant United Nations organizations, it prepared the first biennial review of United Nations activities to implement the Vienna Programme (see above, under "Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action"). The Centre also provided support to the ACC Task Force (see below), participated in discussions in science and technology committees of the five regional commissions, and co-ordinated the preparation of the main United Nations programme on science and technology of the medium-term plan for 1984-1989. A major part of its activities concerned financing for science and technology, including efforts to mobilize resources and to appraise projects in co-operation with UNFSTD. The Centre maintained regular interaction with national focal points, Governments and NGOs in support of activities related to the Vienna Programme. It continued to publish its newsletter UPDATE, which covered progress in implementing the Programme. In an effort to strengthen co-operation among developing and developed countries, the Centre co-sponsored an international workshop in April in Tokyo (see above, under "Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action").

The Intergovernmental Committee, on 8 June,<sup>(15)</sup> took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Centre's activities for the period March 1983-February 1984.<sup>(16)</sup> It noted the support provided by the Centre to the ACC Task Force and its various working groups, and encouraged the Centre to involve NGOs more closely in its activities. The Centre was requested to focus its attention on the themes selected by the Intergovernmental Committee for its future sessions, as well as on programmes emerging from the work of the Advisory Committee panels and on analytical preparation of documents aimed at promoting international co-operation. Reviewing its own work methods, the Intergovernmental Committee, in another resolution of the same date,<sup>(8)</sup> addressed several other aspects of the Centre's activities (see above).

Co-ordination in the system

The Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, established by ACC as a mechanism of inter-agency co-operation in implementing tasks assigned to the Intergovernmental Committee, held its fifth session at Rome from 17 to 19 January 1984.<sup>(17)</sup> Discussing the implementation of the Vienna Programme in the light of the June 1983 decisions of the Intergovernmental Committee,<sup>(18)</sup> the Task Force made recommendations on joint activities and their follow-up; criteria for building endogenous capacities in developing countries; assessment of current means of United Nations support to developing countries' science and technology programmes; and further actions to be taken by United Nations entities to enhance their role in science and technology (see above, under "Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action").

To allow United Nations organizations to become more involved in the ad hoc panels of the Advisory Committee, the Task Force agreed that close interaction be continued or established between its members and the panels, extending to identification and organization of future panels. With regard to the Intergovernmental Committee's effectiveness, the Task Force noted the need for a more coherent agenda, greater attention to substantive policy issues, and shortened and better-focused subjects.

Recalling an agreement reached in 1983, designating the Task Force as the lead agency for examining and following up proposals of the Organization of the Islamic Conference and United Nations bodies in science and technology, the Task Force stressed that the Centre should be kept fully informed about direct contacts of individual bodies with the Conference and that the co-operation of the Islamic Fund for Science and Technology for Development be sought to finance joint activities.

Progress in establishing a data base on the activities of United Nations organizations in science and technology was described by the Secretary-General in a March 1984 note<sup>(19)</sup> (see above, under "Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action").

By a resolution of 8 June,<sup>(20)</sup> the Intergovernmental Committee emphasized the need for greater co-ordination and harmonization of United Nations science and technology programmes. It took note of United Nations organizations' efforts to evolve joint activities, called for further efforts in that regard, and invited the Economic and Social Council to request United Nations entities to consider ways of enhancing co-ordination. By other resolutions of the same date, the Committee noted the support provided by the Centre to the ACC Task Force<sup>(15)</sup> and invited ACC, through its Task Force, to give special attention to the examination of national, regional and global needs in areas corresponding to the themes selected by the Committee and to inter-agency co-ordination on the same themes.<sup>(8)</sup>

Technology transfer

The problem of technological choice, acquisition and transfer—a critical aspect in achieving greater technological self-reliance in developing countries—was high on the agenda of several United Nations organizations throughout 1984, particularly UNCTAD and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). The trends of United Nations activities in this sphere—corresponding to programme area III of the Vienna Programme's operational plan—were appraised in the Secretary-General's biennial review of United Nations activities in science and technology for development,<sup>(1)</sup> which noted that programmes had generally taken the form of studies dealing with alternative technological choice or increasing national capability for exercising suitable choice and acquisition, including laws and regulations and institutional arrangements regarding foreign technology and indigenous technological development. The report stressed that United Nations activities had had a considerable impact on policies and measures related to technological choice and acquisition, prompting greater consideration of technological alternatives and improving awareness of the legal and regulatory measures suitable in different country situations. The Secretary-General concluded that there was a need for a continuing assessment of the latest trends in technology policies, co-ordination of institutional arrangements relating to technology acquisition, and integration of technology choice and acquisition measures into broader programmes of scientific and technological development. Greater emphasis was also necessary in the case of the least developed countries, as well as with regard to programmes for rural areas and communities in developing countries.

UNCTAD's Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology continued to provide technical and operational assistance. Questions of technology development and transfer in industry were covered in a report by UNIDO's Executive Director and in a conclusion of the Industrial Development Board (see Chapter VI of this section).

UNCTAD activities. The Committee on Transfer of Technology held its first special session at Geneva from 13 to 22 February 1984<sup>(2)</sup> to consider a 1982 report by the UNCTAD secretariat on a strategy for the technological transformation of developing countries,<sup>(3)</sup> transmitted to the Committee on a request by the Conference in July 1983.<sup>(4)</sup> After discussing the subject, the Committee adopted on 22 February a resolution on further elaboration and implementation of the strategy,<sup>(5)</sup> by which the Committee decided to continue work on the subject with a view to completing it at its fifth session (see below) and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General and the Committee Chairman to prepare the appropriate documentation. The Committee also decided to annex to its report two draft resolutions, by the Group of 77 developing countries and by Group B (developed market economies), and two documents outlining the strategy by the Group of 77 and by Group D (centrally planned economies).

The Committee held its fifth session at Geneva from 3 to 20 December.<sup>(6)</sup> On 20 December, it adopted a resolution<sup>(7)</sup> setting out a number of measures to accelerate the technological transformation of developing countries and topics related to technology transfer, including an international code of conduct (see below); national laws and regulations on technology transfer, acquisition and development (see below); implementation of UNCTAD resolutions 87(IV),<sup>(8)</sup> 112(V)<sup>(9)</sup> and 143(VI),<sup>(4)</sup> on strengthening the technological capacity of developing countries; economic, commercial and developmental aspects of new and emerging technologies; the commercialization of the results of United Nations-funded research and development; promotion and encouragement of technological innovation; the role of small and medium-sized enterprises in international technology transfer; economic, commercial and developmental aspects of the industrial property system (see below); and follow-up to the 1979 Conference on Science and Technology for Development.

Also on 20 December, the Committee decided to resume work at its 1986 session on the strategy for the technological transformation of developing countries, with a view to finalizing it;<sup>(10)</sup> to annex to its report three draft texts on the strategy submitted by the Group of 77, Group B and Group D;<sup>(11)</sup> and to transmit to the Trade and Development Board in 1985 two texts, submitted by the Group of 77 and Group B, on technical and operational assistance provided by the Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology.<sup>(12)</sup>

The Committee also considered a number of reports by the UNCTAD secretariat related to technology transfer and technological transformation.

Draft code of conduct

In March 1984,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Intergovernmental Committee on the state of negotiations on issues left unresolved by the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development.<sup>(14)</sup> He stated that the Committee on Transfer of Technology had made further progress in drafting an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology. Progress had also been made with regard to a draft code of conduct on transnational corporations, which contained a provision on transfer of technology.

Taking note of the report, the Intergovernmental Committee, on 8 June 1984,<sup>(15)</sup> regretted that work on both draft codes had not been completed and urged that they be finalized as early as possible. The Committee wished to be kept informed of relevant developments and decided to take up the unresolved issues at its next session.

In a resolution of 20 December,<sup>(7)</sup> the Committee on Transfer of Technology recognized that an international code of conduct would help promote the international transfer of technology under terms advantageous to all parties. It welcomed the decision to convene in 1985 the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology (initially convened in 1978 under UNCTAD auspices<sup>(16)</sup>), urging full participation by all Governments in order to complete the negotiations on the code. It invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to make all necessary arrangements, including informal consultations with regional groups and Governments, as mandated by the General Assembly in December 1983.<sup>(17)</sup>

Other aspects of technology transfer

Industrial property

In a resolution of 20 December 1984,<sup>(7)</sup> the Committee on Transfer of Technology invited the UNCTAD secretariat to continue its work on the industrial property system, and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in consultation with regional groups, to convene a meeting of the Group of Governmental Experts on the Economic, Commercial and Developmental Aspects of Industrial Property in the Transfer of Technology to Developing Countries.

In a progress report submitted to the Committee,<sup>(18)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat stated that it had not proved practicable to convene the Group of Experts before the Committee's December 1984 session; however, the Group would meet in time to report in 1986. The report suggested that the Group might want to give particular consideration to: effects of new patent policies in developing countries; trade marks and generic names of pharmaceuticals and consumer protection; and industrial property protection of new and emerging technologies. Annexed to the report was a summary of comments by 19 States and three intergovernmental organizations on a study on trade marks and generic names of pharmaceuticals and consumer protection, submitted to a 1982 meeting of the Group of Experts.<sup>(19)</sup>

Laws and regulations

As requested by the Committee on the Transfer of Technology in 1982,<sup>(20)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the Committee's December 1984 session three reports dealing with laws and regulations on the transfer and acquisition of technology. The first summarized the views of 12 Governments and two United Nations bodies on matters related to common approaches to such laws and regulations.<sup>(21)</sup> For further possible action by the Committee in that regard, the report suggested that it request the UNCTAD secretariat to expand its report and to convene groups of experts to consider ways of harmonizing laws and regulations. The second report analysed the experience of two countries—Nigeria and Portugal—in implementing laws on technology transfer, offering some preliminary conclusions.<sup>(22)</sup> Another report<sup>(23)</sup> contained the first periodic review of policies, laws and regulations conducive to technology development, transfer and acquisition, covering national, bilateral and multi-lateral developments during 1979-1983.

The Committee, in a resolution of 20 December 1984,<sup>(7)</sup> recognized the importance of a legal and institutional framework for technology transfer, acquisition and development for increasing the technological capacity of developing countries and the contribution of technology to overall social and economic development. The Committee invited Governments to continue to inform the UNCTAD Secretary-General of new laws and regulations and modifications of existing ones. It requested him to continue studies on the topic, taking into account government views on the documentation prepared so far. The Committee recommended that appropriate action be taken at its 1986 session.

Commercialization of results of UN-funded research

In August 1984, the UNCTAD secretariat reported to the Committee on Transfer of Technology on research and development activities applicable to the production process.<sup>(24)</sup> Those activities, comprising design/engineering of new products and processes as well as updating or upgrading of existing technologies, and carried out by public as well as private, national or international entities, were an important tool for the technological transformation and economic growth in particular of the developing countries, the report stated. The report, submitted in accordance with UNCTAD resolution 143(VI),<sup>(4)</sup> summarized information from several United Nations bodies on resources for, results of, and policies and practices relating to research and development.

In a resolution of 20 December,<sup>(7)</sup> the Committee on Transfer of Technology took note of the preliminary work undertaken by UNCTAD as the lead agency in issues relating to the commercialization of results of United Nations-funded research and development. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to continue work on the matter by preparing a study covering issues such as technologies and inventions emanating from such research; benefits from the commercialization of its results; and assertion of United Nations property rights. The Committee invited him to examine those issues in the context of inter-agency meetings and to report in 1986.

Promotion of technological innovation

As requested by the Committee on Transfer of Technology in 1982,<sup>(20)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat prepared a preliminary review of policies and instruments used by developed countries to promote and encourage technological innovation, especially in industry. The report,<sup>(25)</sup> meant to assist developing countries in formulating policies, was submitted to the Committee in December 1984.

In a resolution of 20 December,<sup>(7)</sup> the Committee requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue its studies in the field and to submit them to the Committee in 1986. The studies were to consider the influence of factors, such as risk-taking, incentives and linkages between research and production, on the creation of an innovative environment.

Brain drain

The negative economic, political and social effects of the reverse transfer of technology, also described as the brain drain of skilled personnel from developing to developed countries, was a major area of concern for UNCTAD and the General Assembly throughout 1984.

UNCTAD activities. In accordance with a December 1983 Assembly resolution,<sup>(1)</sup> the Second Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Reverse Transfer of Technology was held at Geneva from 27 August to 5 September 1984. The Meeting examined studies by the UNCTAD secretariat on: an integrated approach to international skill exchange, including proposals for policy and action on reverse transfer of technology; measures to mitigate the brain drain's adverse impact on developing countries; major components for an internationally agreed set of principles, definitions and standards on reverse transfer of technology; and improvement of the collection and dissemination of information on the brain drain.

The Meeting adopted several conclusions and recommendations, which were annexed to its report to the Trade and Development Board.<sup>(2)</sup> It emphasized the importance of efficient skill utilization for developing countries and adequate protection of the interests of all countries affected by brain drain, calling for a comprehensive and integrated approach to obviate its adverse effects. The Meeting recommended that all the developed countries should support measures encouraging greater use of skilled personnel within the developing countries. Developed countries which received skilled migrants should consider arrangements to allow the developing countries to share in the benefits and should assist in building up a better data base on skilled migration, while developing countries should monitor skilled outflows and take remedial measures. Regarding international action, the Meeting suggested that the UNCTAD Secretary-General convene a third and fourth meeting of governmental experts—the third meeting, scheduled for 1985, focusing on formulation of an integrated programme of action on reverse transfer of technology—and requested him to invite several other United Nations bodies to provide information on their activities in the field. It also invited the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and UNCTAD to consult with Governments and regional groups to obtain their full participation at the meetings, and recommended that the UNCTAD secretariat continue studying the problem.

The Trade and Development Board took note on 21 September of the Meeting's conclusions and recommendations and decided on 27 September to transmit them, together with the statements by delegations, to the Assembly.<sup>(3)</sup>

Development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology and the question of co-operative exchange of skills were the subject of another UNCTAD secretariat report to the Committee on Transfer of Technology.<sup>(4)</sup>

Inter-agency group meetings. As requested by the Assembly in December 1983,<sup>(1)</sup> two meetings of a newly established Inter-Agency Group on Reverse Transfer of Technology were held on 22 March and on 12 and 13 July 1984 under the chairmanship of UNCTAD. The report of the Group, annexed to a note of 6 September by the Secretary-General,<sup>(5)</sup> stressed that the main thrust of the discussions was on co-ordination of measures and, in particular, enhancement of United Nations effectiveness in responding to the needs of the countries concerned. Noting that all outflows of skilled manpower constituted not only a movement of people, but also a transfer of productive resources, the Group stressed that losses incurred by developing countries should be properly accounted for, and called for concerted United Nations efforts and concrete international measures to help solve the problem of the reverse transfer of technology. The Group held it necessary to elaborate internationally agreed norms and standards, formulate methodologies for measuring flows of human resources, move from recommendations to substantive conclusions, and enhance an orderly South-South migration of skilled manpower or co-operative exchange of skills. The Group pointed to the necessity of meeting on a regular basis and considered it useful to associate intergovernmental organizations outside the United Nations, as well as NGOs, with the work carried out by the United Nations in the area.

Speaking in the Second Committee for the EEC members, Ireland said the approach taken to the important question of the reverse transfer of technology was not right; it was necessary first to determine whether human resource flows and their consequences could be measured, a task not suited to the mandate of the Meeting of Governmental Experts. In the view of the United States, no progress was possible in the work of the United Nations in the current context; the problem of the outflow of trained personnel was a domestic one and its solution lay in creating incentives in the developing countries. Canada supported international efforts to formulate policies, but stressed that no account had been taken of the fact that the problem of human resource flows was of a universal nature with implications in the North-South and East-West contexts; it termed unfeasible UNC-TAD's suggestion that a value be set on emigrating human capital and that receiving countries should pay compensation, and pointed out that there was no framework allowing participation by all the groups concerned. Finland regretted that operative paragraph 3 linked the text to the December 1983 Assembly resolution on reverse technology transfer,<sup>(1)</sup> against which it had voted. The German Democratic Republic, on behalf of the Eastern European countries, explained that the outflow of professional personnel from the developing to some Western countries was a form of neo-colonialism and linked to the required democratic restructuring of international economic relations. States benefiting from the outflow of trained personnel should compensate the States affected; however, the measures provided for in the adopted resolution must be financed without any increase in the regular United Nations budget.

Introducing the draft on behalf of the Group of 77, Egypt said it was essentially procedural and sought to ensure continuation of relevant United Nations activities; the positive outcome of the Meeting of Governmental Experts should facilitate adoption of the text.

Chapter XIII

Social and cultural development

Available evidence on the social aspects of development suggested a mixed picture, with large groups in Asia improving their standards of living, poverty increasing dramatically in Africa, and both the poor and middle-income social groups in Latin America experiencing a deterioration in their living conditions.

Reviewing activities of the Joint Committee for the Promotion of Aid to Co-operatives (COPAC), a liaison body of the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation and four international non-governmental organizations, the Secretary-General recommended that the United Nations remain a member of COPAC and continue to contribute to it in 1985. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the General Assembly concurred with the Secretary-General's recommendation.

The United Nations Research Institute for Social Development continued in 1984 its research programme covering such issues as food systems and society, popular participation, improvement of development data and refugee settlements.

Preparations continued to be made during 1984 for the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. Interregional preparatory meetings were held on four of the five substantive items to be taken up by the Congress and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, acting as the preparatory body, met for its eighth session at Vienna, Austria, in March. Both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly took action on the preparations. The Council accepted an invitation from Italy to hold the Congress at Milan (decision 1984/154) and decided that it would be held from 26 August to 6 September 1985 with the general theme of "Crime prevention for freedom, justice, peace and development" (resolution 1984/45). The Assembly called for broad participation and welcomed the Council's recommendations to the Congress, particularly one on finalizing guidelines on crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development (resolution 39/112).

A draft declaration on the rights of victims of crimes or other illegal acts involving the abuse of power was discussed and finalized at an interregional preparatory meeting for the 1985 Congress. Draft minimum rules for the administration of juvenile justice were also recommended to the Congress for consideration. At another preparatory meeting, draft guidelines on the independence of the judiciary were revised, finalized and recommended to the Congress as a matter of highest priority.

Following the Committee's recommendations, the Council adopted several resolutions on other topics related to criminal justice: crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development (1984/48); fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system (1984/49); alternatives to imprisonment (1984/46); and technical co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice (1984/51). The Council also approved safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty (resolution 1984/50) and approved revised procedures for the effective implementation of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (1984/47).

The Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization proposed the proclamation of a World Decade for Cultural Development beginning in 1986.

Social aspects of development

The Secretary-General, in response to a May 1983 Economic and Social Council decision,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted in April 1984 a report on the social aspects of development<sup>(2)</sup> reviewing progress achieved since 1981 in realizing the social goals set forth in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see Chapter I of this section). Those goals included the elimination of poverty, the eradication of hunger and malnutrition, full and productive employment, longer life expectancy, and health, education, literacy and shelter for all. The Strategy also called for the participation by the entire population in development, including equal status for women and the integration into society of vulnerable groups, especially children, youth and disabled persons.

The time-frame set in the Strategy for achieving those objectives extended generally to the year 2000, the Secretary-General said. Only a broad assessment could be made of the extent to which social conditions had changed up to now. In some parts of the developing world, notably in Asia, large groups had improved their standards of living. Elsewhere, particularly in Africa, poverty had increased dramatically; in many countries of Latin America, both the poor and the middle-income groups had experienced a deterioration in their living conditions.

As the labour force continued to expand rapidly and recession or reduced economic growth prevailed, the goal of full employment appeared to be more and more out of reach, added the Secretary-General. Thus, the first prerequisite for the participation of people in the development process could not be met. On the other hand, there were signs of a greater involvement of women and of specific groups in social change. Many demands were voiced, sometimes by the poorest people themselves, for changes in social structures and social mores.

The Strategy outlined policy measures, both national and international, for achieving development goals. One condition was creation by the international community of an environment supportive of national and collective efforts. Such an environment was lacking in the first years of the Decade. Not only was the world economy unstable and in recession, but international co-operation was strained, political tensions had become more pronounced and conflicts persisted or erupted in various parts of the world. More efforts and resources were devoted to military purposes, and the conviction that development was a common cause appeared to falter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted decision 39/427 without vote.

Report of the Secretary-General on social aspects of development

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on social aspects of development.

General Assembly decision 39/427

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.1) without vote, 11 December (meeting 59); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 80 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 59; plenary 103.

Popular participation

Following adoption of a resolution on 6 March 1984 by the Commission on Human Rights,<sup>(3)</sup> the Economic and Social Council adopted on 24 May decision 1984/131 on popular participation as an important factor in development and in the realization of human rights (see Chapter XVIII of this section).

Co-operatives

In April, the Secretariat submitted a note to the Economic and Social Council on the financial arrangements between the United Nations and COPAC.<sup>(4)</sup> It stated that, in considering the proposed 1984-1985 programme budget, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) had recommended in 1983 that the financial arrangements between the United Nations and COPAC be reviewed by the Secretary-General. During consideration of the matter in November 1983 in the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, Sweden had proposed that the resources related to COPAC be approved only for 1984, pending the outcome of a review of the financial arrangements by ACABQ; the Fifth Committee had endorsed that proposal on the understanding that the review by the Secretary-General would be submitted to the Assembly in 1984, through the Council.

Established in 1970, COPAC was a liaison body composed of the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and four international non-governmental organizations. The United Nations share of COPAC's expenditures was $24,400 in 1984.

The Secretary-General submitted his review also in April.<sup>(5)</sup> Examining the arrangements against the background of an analysis of COPAC's activities and its contribution to United Nations development efforts, he said he believed that the United Nations should not terminate its financial support to COPAC; such a move could be interpreted as diminished commitment to the co-operative movement and could trigger similar action by other COPAC members. He recommended that the United Nations remain a member of COPAC and that provision be made for a financial contribution to it for 1985; the current level of the United Nations contribution, which was about 15 per cent of COPAC's regular budget, was reasonable and could be maintained, subject to a periodic review.

In an October 1984 report,<sup>(6)</sup> ACABQ concurred with the Secretary-General's recommendation regarding membership of COPAC and had no objection to the proposed financial arrangements, subject to the observation that, when the United Nations was a party to inter-agency arrangements involving financial commitments, the Secretary-General should make specific reference to those arrangements in future budget submissions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted decision 1984/155 without vote.

Financial arrangements between the United Nations and the Committee for the Promotion of Aid to Co-operatives

At its 21st plenary meeting, on 25 May 1984, the Council:

(a) Took note of the note by the Secretariat on financial arrangements between the United Nations and the Committee for the Promotion of Aid to Co-operatives and of the conclusions on the convergence of the specific objectives of the Committee and the activities of the United Nations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the question;

(b) Took note of the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the United Nations should remain a member of the Committee.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/155

Institutional machinery

UN Research Institute for Social Development

In 1984, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued its research programme<sup>(7)</sup> which covered issues such as food systems and society, popular participation, improvement of development data, and refugee settlements.

A study on the impact of social change on women in Burkina Faso, the Ivory Coast and Senegal was completed in 1984. The research was viewed as a first stage of work under way in West Africa on food systems and society; findings showed that, with the expansion of cash crops for export and the modernization of agriculture, some groups had prospered, while others were worse off. At the same time, studies on urban food security problems were conducted in Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso; Abidjan, Ivory Coast; and Dakar, Senegal.

Discussions with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), which had a large programme on child nutrition in China, led to an agreement under which UNRISD would make available to UNICEF research funds earmarked for China by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

Research continued to identify the determinants of food insecurity in eastern India, a food-deficit region. The work was being conducted in collaboration with the Centre for Regional Ecological and Science Studies in Development Alternatives. In 1984, approximately 2,400 householders in 10 village clusters were surveyed, and seasonal patterns of income, expenditure, food availability and consumption, and morbidity were recorded.

In 1984, UNRISD's income was over $1.6 million, including contributions of $935,822 from nine Governments, and its expenditures amounted to nearly $1.4 million.

Preparations for Seventh Congress (1985)

Preparations continued in 1984 for the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, with the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (Committee on crime) functioning as the preparatory committee.<sup>(1)</sup> Regional and inter-regional preparatory meetings as well as inter-agency consultations were held, experts assisted in preparing documentation for the Congress, and a public information programme was carried out.

Interregional meetings were also held on substantive items of the provisional agenda of the Congress, namely: topic 2, criminal justice processes and perspectives in a changing world (Budapest, Hungary, 4-8 June);<sup>(2)</sup> topic 3, victims of crime (Ottawa, Canada, 9-13 July);<sup>(3)</sup> topic 4, youth, crime and justice (Beijing, China, 14-18 May);<sup>(4)</sup> and topic 5, formulation and application of United Nations standards and norms in criminal justice (Varenna, Italy, 24-28 September).<sup>(5)</sup> Among other recommendations, the meeting in China approved standard minimum rules for the administration of juvenile justice, while the Canada meeting drafted a declaration on the rights of victims. At Varenna, draft guidelines on the independence of the judiciary were revised, finalized and recommended to the Congress for adoption as a matter of highest priority; the meeting also assessed the impact achieved as well as the difficulties encountered in applying the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners. The purpose of those and other interregional meetings was to provide a theoretical and technical framework for defining, at the 1985 Congress, new guiding principles for crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of overall development planning.

The Committee on crime also considered the preparations for the Congress.<sup>(6)</sup> The preparatory activities were outlined by the Executive Secretary of the Congress who described the co-operation provided by the regional commissions and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the assistance given by the United Nations regional crime institutes.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/45

41-1-5

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/S2) by recorded vote (39-1-4), 21 May (meeting 19); draft by Committee on Crime (E/1984/16); agenda item 11.

Financial implications. ACABQ, A/39/7/Add.6; S-G, A/C.5/39/25, E/1984/16/Add.1.

Mexico said that it supported the text but that it would make known its final position once it had fully studied the text. China, Pakistan, Romania and Saudi Arabia pointed out that they could not take part in consideration of the draft resolutions based on the report of the Committee on crime since the report had been distributed too late to be studied.

The United States, which requested the vote, voted against the text due to its financial implications. Canada supported the text because of its strong interest in the 1985 Congress, but said that it should be implemented within the resources allocated. Although voting in favour, the United Kingdom mentioned it would take up in the Fifth Committee the financial implications which seemed excessive.

In November, ACABQ said additional costs should be absorbed from within existing resources.

In resolution 1984/51, the Council took note of the recommendations contained in the resolutions adopted at the regional preparatory meetings for the 1985 Congress.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/112 without vote.

Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of the prevention of crime and criminal justice under General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950, in particular by convening the quinquennial congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

Recalling its resolution 36/21 of 9 November 1981, in which it requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures for the fullest implementation of the Caracas Declaration and for the appropriate preparation of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/29 of 4 May 1982, in which the Council approved the provisional agenda for the Seventh Congress, and 1984/45 of 25 May 1984 on the continuation of preparations for the Congress, as well as Council resolution 1984/51 of 25 May 1984 on technical co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1984/154 of 25 May 1984, in which it accepted the invitation of the Government of Italy to hold the Seventh Congress at Milan from 26 August to 6 September 1985,

Acknowledging that criminality, particularly violent and organized crime, constitutes a serious threat to the development and security of nations,

Recognizing that constraints of an economic and technical nature impede many countries in their fight against crime,

Reiterating the necessity for the international community to make concerted and systematic efforts to strengthen technical and scientific co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice and to formulate fair, humane and effective policies directed towards crime control in the context of different political and cultural systems, economic and social development and social values and changes,

Convinced of the important role played by the previous congresses in promoting understanding, awareness and co-operation and in achieving further progress in this field,

Stressing the need to improve further regional, inter-regional and international co-operation and co-ordination in order to intensify the struggle against crime,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Italy for its offer to act as host to the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

2. Reaffirms its hope that the Seventh Congress will make an important and useful contribution to the solution of problems related to crime prevention and criminal justice;

3. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/29 and 1984/45 and, in particular, the recommendation that the Seventh Congress finalize new guiding principles on crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development;

4. Welcomes also the recommendations made by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1984/51 on improved modalities of technical co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice;

5. Takes note of the preparatory work carried out by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, as the preparatory body for the Seventh Congress, at its eighth session and by the regional and interregional preparatory meetings convened in co-operation with the regional commissions, interregional and regional crime prevention institutes and interested Governments;

6. Calls upon Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate in the Seventh Congress and to intensify and expand their technical and scientific preparations for it;

7. Invites the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1985 to approve the provisional rules of procedure of the Seventh Congress;

8. Requests the Seventh Congress, under item 3 of its provisional agenda, to give urgent attention to the strengthening of technical co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice, in pursuance of the recommendations of the regional preparatory meetings and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

9. Invites the Seventh Congress to pay particular attention to the question of illicit drug trafficking;

10. Appeals to Member States to consider contributing to the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence, in order to enable the Fund to undertake activities of assistance to countries requesting it, and to allocate an appropriate portion of their resources to programmes for the reduction of crime and the improvement of criminal justice;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the substantive and organizational work of the Seventh Congress is fully adequate for its successful outcome;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, in accordance with past practice, a report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Sixth Congress, to be prepared for the Seventh Congress in pursuance of paragraph 4 of Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/29;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session his views and recommendations on the implementation of the conclusions of the Seventh Congress;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session an item entitled "Crime prevention and criminal justice: report of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders".

Committee on crime

The Committee on crime held its eighth session at Vienna, Austria, from 21 to 30 March 1984. In its report to the Council,<sup>(10)</sup> it recommended draft resolutions on: provisional rules of procedure for United Nations crime congresses; preparations for the 1985 Congress; alternatives to imprisonment; procedures for implementing the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners; crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development; fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system; safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty; and technical co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice.

The Committee recommended that the Council transmit to the 1985 Congress draft resolutions on guiding principles for crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development and a new international economic order,<sup>(11)</sup> and on a model agreement on the transfer of foreign prisoners.<sup>(12)</sup> It further recommended that the Council: endorse draft guidelines on the independence of the judiciary; invite the interregional preparatory meeting on United Nations standards and norms in criminal justice to finalize those draft guidelines in co-operation with all parties concerned; and request the Secretary-General to submit the finalized text to the 1985 Congress for adoption.<sup>(13)</sup> By a fourth decision,<sup>(14)</sup> the Committee recommended to the Council to forward draft rules on standard minimum rules for the administration of juvenile justice, proposed in a report of the Secretary-General, to the Congress through the interregional meeting on youth, crime and justice. Following consideration of another report of the Secretary-General on the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, the Committee, noting that more information would be required to assess the Code's implementation, recommended that the Council request the Secretary-General to invite Member States to provide the necessary information, so that a comprehensive report could be submitted to the 1985 Congress.<sup>(15)</sup> A resolution on victims of crimes and of abuses of power, adopted by the Committee on 29 March 1984,<sup>(16)</sup> was also brought to the Council's attention, as were two decisions by which the Committee took note of two reports of the Secretary-General: on procedures for the effective implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners,<sup>(17)</sup> and on United Nations activities in crime prevention and criminal justice.<sup>(18)</sup>

Questions related to criminal justice

Crime prevention and development

In January 1984, the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on crime two reports on crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development. In the first, on the relationship between crime and specific socio-economic issues,<sup>(19)</sup> prepared pursuant to a 1980 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(20)</sup> he considered demographic, economic, social and cultural factors that accompanied high and low crime rates, and found that some very tentative conclusions seemed justifiable. Phenomena such as misery or extreme poverty, despair and hopelessness, lack of opportunities, glaring social injustices, exploitation, maltreatment and humiliation of minorities and different kinds of discrimination and segregation appeared to contribute to social disorganization and thus to the probability of criminal behaviour. The family seemed to play a crucial role in generating law-abiding behaviour. In some circumstances, socio-economic development, rapid social change, demographic growth, urbanization, rural-urban migration, etc. might have a harmful influence on individuals, especially young people, and social structure and might lead to crime. However, socio-economic change was not necessarily criminogenic; only when carried out in an unplanned and socially disorganizing fashion did it become a source of anti-social behaviour.

It appeared particularly important to protect young people from the dysfunctional effects of social change. Policies aimed at providing them with educational and employment opportunities, as well as full participation in the development and political processes of their countries, could reduce youth crime rates, the Secretary-General continued. The mass media could be used more extensively in crime prevention, for example, by promoting social values. A dynamic perspective of interrelated activities and functions in legislation, law enforcement, the judicial process and the treatment of offenders might prove useful in ensuring coherence between national planning and crime prevention and criminal justice planning. There seemed to be an acute need for studies assessing current and future socio-economic issues of development and crime trends.

A second report, on crime trends and crime prevention strategies,<sup>(21)</sup> submitted in response to a May 1983 Economic and Social Council decision,<sup>(22)</sup> concerned the second United Nations survey of crime trends, operations of criminal justice systems and crime prevention strategies, based on a questionnaire sent to Member States of which 52 replied. The results of the questionnaire were analysed at a 1983 meeting.<sup>(23)</sup>

The preliminary results of the survey reinforced the concerns of the 1980 United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders which had noted a world-wide need to develop reliable statistical information about crime.<sup>(24)</sup> The results indicated that adequate comparable data were not available to provide the basis for a comprehensive analysis of crime trends. Therefore, preparation of a manual on the collection and analysis of crime data would be a major step towards improving the availability of comparable statistics for national and international use, the Secretary-General concluded.

On 30 March 1984, the Committee adopted a decision on guiding principles for crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development and a new international economic order.<sup>(1)</sup> The principles covered crime prevention and a new economic order, national development and the prevention of crime, the responsiveness of the criminal justice system to development and human rights, and international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice. The Committee recommended that the Economic and Social Council transmit the principles to the 1985 Congress.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May 1984, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/48 without vote.

Crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in respect of crime trends, operations of criminal justice systems and crime prevention strategies in the context of social and economic change, and with respect to the different facets of development,

Emphasizing the progress made towards the provision of assistance to Member States in improving national crime-related statistics, the establishment of a United Nations crime-related data base, and the long-term nature of such programmes of work,

1. Takes note, with appreciation, of the reports of the Secretary-General on the relationship between crime and specific socio-economic issues and on crime trends and crime prevention strategies;

2. Recommends the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to give detailed consideration both to the further development of such studies, including specific questions such as the relationship between criminality and particular socio-economic factors, for example, the transmission of social values and changes in family functions, and to concrete problems of crime and criminal justice data, in the light of the Second United Nations Survey of Crime Trends, Operations of Criminal Justice Systems and Crime Prevention Strategies, and the proposed manual on the collection and analysis of crime statistics;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on crime prevention and criminal justice in relation to socio-economic change and development to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its ninth session;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to maintain and develop the United Nations crime-related data base by continuing to conduct quinquennial surveys of crime trends, operations of criminal justice systems and crime prevention strategies, and to report periodically to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on the progress made;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to develop concrete projects of technical co-operation for assistance in the collection and analysis of criminal justice data to Member States requesting such assistance.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/48

25 May 1984 Meeting 21 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/92) without vote, 23 May (meeting 20); draft by Committee on crime (E/1984/16); agenda item 11.

In resolution 1984/51, the Council called on States, in considering crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development, to encourage the exchange of data, information and experiences, and other regional activities. It requested United Nations bodies to strengthen support for technical co-operation in crime prevention between developed and developing countries, and also among developing countries.

Prevention of abuses of power

The Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on crime in March 1984 three reports on: criminal abuses of power—their patterns, trends and impact; prevention and control; and guidelines for measures on behalf of victims.

The first report examined criminal acts involving abuses of power, as well as a typology of offenders and victims.<sup>(25)</sup> More knowledge was required about illegal acts involving abuses of power, the kinds of victimization they caused and the types of victims and victimizers if adequate policies for their prevention and control were to be instituted nationally and complementary international and regional action was to be taken for abuses that cut across national frontiers, the Secretary-General said, and in-depth investigations, including case-studies, should help to further explore the socio-economic and political context in which abuses of power occurred. The development of forecasting techniques and more effective evaluation methods could also assist in tracing trends of offences linked to abuses of power.

A second report on legislative provisions against abuses of power and measures used for their prevention and control,<sup>(26)</sup> submitted in response to a May 1983 Economic and Social Council decision,<sup>(22)</sup> was based on information supplied by 31 Member States. The vast majority of the replies described existing legislation to prevent or control illicit abuses of economic, public or political power. Some material was provided on proposed or envisaged draft legislation, and on the assessment of the effectiveness of existing provisions and practices. Generally, it was agreed that international co-operation to avoid and remedy abuses of economic and public or political power was necessary.

Guidelines for measures on behalf of victims of crime and abuses of power were considered in a third report,<sup>(27)</sup> following a recommendation of the 1980 Congress.<sup>(24)</sup> Among the issues to be covered by those guidelines were their purposes and principles, a definition of "victim", harms for which redress or sanction should be provided, procedures to determine violations and identify victims, indemnification and other forms of redress, services and support for victims, parties responsible for redress and/or subject to sanctions, and preventive and corrective strategies.

For problems such as those of victims of crime and abuses of power, the most wide-ranging, comprehensive and concerted strategies were called for, involving national, regional and international action and starting with action to meet the most urgent needs as well as providing medium- and long-term perspectives, the Secretary-General concluded. The formulation of guidelines was a prerequisite. A draft declaration on the rights of victims of crimes or other illegal acts involving the abuse of power was presented for discussion in an annex to the report. The draft declaration was considered at an interregional meeting held in July at Ottawa, Canada.

On 29 March, the Committee adopted a resolution on victims of crimes and abuses of power,<sup>(16)</sup> by which it took note of the Secretary-General's reports; welcomed efforts made as a valuable basis for future work; recommended that the interregional preparatory meeting for the 1985 Congress seek a comprehensive agreement on a draft declaration; and further recommended that continued priority be given to the question of victimization and the means of its containment and redress.

Treatment of prisoners

Minimum rules for treatment of prisoners

The Secretary-General, responding to a recommendation of the 1980 Congress,<sup>(24)</sup> submitted to the Committee on crime in January 1984 a report<sup>(28)</sup> on procedures for implementing the 1955 United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in 1957.<sup>(29)</sup> He pointed out that those Rules were never intended to describe in detail a model penal system, but attempted to set out principles and practice for the social rehabilitation of prisoners, having in mind the great variety of legal, social, economic and geographical conditions. A revised text of the procedures on the basis of discussions at the 1980 Congress and comments from Member States was appended to the report. On 30 March 1984,<sup>(17)</sup> the Committee took note of the report.

An interregional preparatory meeting (Varenna, Italy) for the 1985 Congress assessed the impact achieved as well as the difficulties encountered in applying the Standard Minimum Rules.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May 1984, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/47 without vote.

Procedures for the effective implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering the importance of the recommendations contained in the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners adopted by the First United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and approved by the Council in its resolution 663 C (XXIV) of 31 July 1957,

Noting with satisfaction the impact of the Rules on national laws and practices,

Concerned, however, that there still exist obstacles of various kinds to the full implementation of the Rules, as evidenced in the periodic United Nations reports on their implementation,

Recalling the recommendations of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and Council resolution 1993(LX) of 12 May 1976, in which the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control was requested at its fourth session to study the range of application of the Rules and to formulate a set of implementing procedures for the Rules,

Taking note with appreciation of the work accomplished in pursuance of that mandate by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its fourth session in 1976 and at its eighth session in pursuance of the recommendations of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, which invited the Committee to finalize the procedures in the light of its report,

1. Approves the procedures for the effective implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Invites Member States to take the procedures annexed hereto into consideration in the process of implementing the Rules and in their periodic reports to the United Nations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of the Governments of the Member States, and to assist them at their request in implementing the Rules in accordance with the procedures annexed hereto.

ANNEX

Procedures for the effective implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners

Procedure 1

All States whose standards for the protection of all persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment fall short of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners shall adopt the Rules.

Commentary

The General Assembly, in its resolution 2858(XXVI) of 20 December 1971, invited the attention of Member States to the Standard Minimum Rules and recommended that they should be effectively implemented in the administration of penal and correctional institutions and that favourable consideration should be given to their incorporation in national legislation. Some States may have standards that are more advanced than the Rules, and the adoption of the Rules is therefore not requested on the part of such States. Where States feel that the Rules need to be harmonized with their legal system and adapted to their culture, the emphasis is placed on the substance rather than the letter of the Rules.

Procedure 2

Subject, as necessary, to their adaptation to the existing laws and culture but without deviation from the spirit and purpose of the Rules, the Standard Minimum Rules shall be embodied in national legislation and other regulations.

Commentary

This procedure emphasizes that it is necessary to embody the Rules within national legislation and regulations, thus covering also some aspects of procedure 1.

Procedure 3

The Standard Minimum Rules shall be made available to all persons concerned, particularly to law enforcement officials and correctional personnel, for purposes of enabling their application and execution in the criminal justice system.

Commentary

This procedure stresses that the Rules, as well as national statutes and regulations implementing the Rules, should be made available to all persons concerned with their implementation, in particular law enforcement officials and correctional personnel. The effective implementation of the Rules might also involve the organization of training courses by the central administration in charge of correctional matters. The dissemination of procedures is discussed in procedures 7 to 9.

Procedure 4

The Standard Minimum Rules, as embodied in national legislation and other regulations, shall also be made available and understandable to all prisoners and all persons under detention, on their admission and during their confinement.

Commentary

To achieve the goal of the Standard Minimum Rules, it is necessary to make the Rules, as well as the implementing national statutes and regulations, available to prisoners and all persons under detention (rule 95), in order to further the awareness that the Rules represent the minimum conditions that are accepted as suitable by the United Nations. Thus, this procedure supplements the provisions contained in procedure 3.

A similar requirement, that the Rules be made available to the persons for whose protection they have been elaborated, has been already established in the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, of which articles 47 of the first Convention, 48 of the second, 127 of the third and 144 of the fourth state in common:

"The High Contracting Parties undertake, in time of peace as in time of war, to disseminate the text of the present Convention as widely as possible in their respective countries, and, in particular, to include the study thereof in their programmes of military and, if possible, civil instruction, so that the principles thereof may become known to the entire population, in particular to the armed fighting forces, the medical personnel and the chaplains."

Procedure 5

States shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations every five years of the extent of the implementation and the progress made with regard to the application of the Standard Minimum Rules, and of the factors and difficulties, if any, affecting their implementation, by responding to the Secretary-General's questionnaire. This questionnaire should, following a specified schedule, be selective and limited to specific questions in order to secure an in-depth review and study of the problems selected. Taking into account the reports of Governments as well as other relevant information available within the United Nations system, the Secretary-General shall prepare independent periodic reports on progress made with respect to the implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules. In the preparation of those reports the Secretary-General may also enlist the co-operation of specialized agencies and of the relevant intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. The Secretary-General shall submit the above-mentioned reports to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control for consideration and further action, as appropriate.

Commentary

It will be recalled that the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 663 C (XXIV) of 31 July 1957, recommended that the Secretary-General be informed every five years of the progress made with regard to the application of the Standard Minimum Rules and authorized the Secretary-General to make arrangements for the publication, as appropriate, of such information and to ask for supplementary information if necessary. Seeking the co-operation of specialized agencies and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations is a well-established United Nations practice. In the preparation of his independent report, on progress made with respect to the implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules, the Secretary-General will take into account, inter alia, information available in the human rights organs of the United Nations, including the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Human Rights Committee functioning under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. The implementation work under the future convention against torture could also be taken into account, as well as any information which might be gathered under the body of principles for the protection of prisoners and detainees currently under preparation in the General Assembly.

Procedure 6

As part of the information mentioned in procedure 5 above, States should provide the Secretary-General with:

- (a) Copies or abstracts of all laws, regulations and administrative measures concerning the application of the Standard Minimum Rules to persons under detention and to places and programmes of detention;
- (b) Any data and descriptive material on treatment programmes, personnel and the number of persons under any form of detention, and statistics, if available;
- (c) Any other relevant information on the implementation of the Rules, as well as information on the possible difficulties in their application.

Commentary

This requirement derives from both resolution 663 C (XXIV) of the Economic and Social Council and the recommendations of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders. Although the items of information suggested here are not specifically provided for, it seems feasible to collect such information in order to assist Member States in overcoming difficulties through an exchange of experience. Furthermore, the request for such information is analogous to the existing periodic reporting system on human rights originally established by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 624 B (XXII) of 1 August 1956.

Procedure 7

The Secretary-General shall disseminate the Standard Minimum Rules and the present implementing procedures, in as many languages as possible, and make them available to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in order to ensure the widest circulation of the Rules and the present implementing procedures.

Commentary

The need for the widest possible dissemination of the Standard Minimum Rules is self-evident. Close co-operation with all appropriate intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations is important to secure more effective dissemination and implementation of the Rules. Therefore, the Secretariat should maintain close contacts with such organizations and should make relevant information and data available to them. It should also encourage those organizations to disseminate information about the Standard Minimum Rules and the implementing procedures.

Procedure 8

The Secretary-General shall disseminate his reports on the implementation of the Rules, including analytical summaries of the periodic surveys, reports of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, reports prepared for the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders as well as the reports of the congresses, scientific publications and other relevant documentation as from time to time may be deemed necessary to further the implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules.

Commentary

This procedure reflects the present practice of disseminating such reports as part of the documentation for the United Nations bodies concerned, as United Nations publications or as articles in the Yearbook on Human Rights and the International Review of Criminal Policy, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Newsletter and any other relevant publications.

Procedure 9

The Secretary-General shall ensure the widest possible reference to and use of the text of the Standard Minimum Rules by the United Nations in all its relevant programmes, including technical co-operation activities.

Commentary

It should be ensured that all relevant United Nations bodies include or make reference to the Rules and the implementing procedures, thus contributing to wider dissemination and increasing the awareness of specialized agencies, governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental bodies and the general public of the Rules and of the commitment of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly to their implementation.

The extent to which the Rules have any practical effect on correctional administrations depends to a great extent on the measures through which they permeate local legislative and administrative practices. They should be known and understood by a wide range of professionals and non-professionals throughout the world. Therefore there is a great need for more publicity in any form, which could also be attained by frequent references to the Rules, accompanied by public information campaigns.

Procedure 10

As part of its technical co-operation and development programmes the United Nations shall:

- (a) Aid Governments, at their request, in setting up and strengthening comprehensive and humane correctional systems;
- (b) Make available to Governments requesting them the services of experts and regional and interregional advisers on crime prevention and criminal justice;
- (c) Promote national and regional seminars and other meetings at the professional and non-professional levels to further the dissemination of the Standard Minimum Rules and the present implementing procedures;
- (d) Strengthen substantive support to regional research and training institutes in crime prevention and criminal justice that are associated with the United Nations.

The United Nations regional research and training institutes in crime prevention and criminal justice, in co-operation with national institutions, shall develop curricula and training materials, based on the Standard Minimum Rules and the present implementing procedures, suitable for use in criminal justice educational programmes at all levels, as well as in specialized courses on human rights and other related subjects.

Commentary

The purpose of this procedure is to ensure that the United Nations technical assistance programmes and the training activities of the United Nations regional institutes are used as indirect instruments for the application of the Standard Minimum Rules and the present implementing procedures. Apart from regular training courses for correctional personnel, training manuals and the like, particularly at the policy and decision-making level, provision should be made for expert advice on the questions submitted by Member States, including an expert referral system to interested States. This expert referral system seems particularly necessary in order to implement the Rules according to their spirit and with a view to the socio-economic structure of the countries requesting such assistance.

Procedure 11

The United Nations Committee on Crime Prevention and Control shall:

- (a) Keep under review, from time to time, the Standard Minimum Rules, with a view to the elaboration of new rules, standards and procedures applicable to the treatment of persons deprived of liberty;
- (b) Follow up the present implementing procedures, including periodic reporting under procedure 5 above.

Commentary

As most of the information collected in the course of periodic inquiries as well as during technical assistance missions would be brought to the attention of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, ensuring the effectiveness of the Rules in improving correctional practices rests with the Committee, whose recommendations would determine the future course in the application of the Rules, together with the implementing procedures. The Committee should therefore clearly define existing shortcomings in or the reasons for the lack of implementation of the Rules, inter alia, through contacts with the judiciary and ministries of justice of the countries concerned, with the view to suggesting appropriate remedies.

Procedure 12

The Committee on Crime Prevention and Control shall assist the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and any other United Nations human rights bodies, as appropriate, with recommendations relating to reports of ad hoc inquiry commissions, with respect to matters pertaining to the application and implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules.

Commentary

As the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control is the relevant body to review the implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules, it should also assist the above-mentioned bodies.

Procedure 13

Nothing in the present implementing procedures should be construed as precluding resort to any other means or remedies available under international law or set forth by other United Nations bodies and agencies for the redress of violations of human rights, including the procedure on consistent patterns of gross violations of human rights under Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) of 27 May 1970, the communication procedure under the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the communication procedure under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

Commentary

Since the Standard Minimum Rules are only partly concerned with specific human rights issues, the present procedures should not exclude any avenue for redress of any violation of such rights, in accordance with existing international or regional standards and norms.

Minimum rules for administration of juvenile justice

Following a recommendation of the 1980 Congress on crime prevention,<sup>(24)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on crime in January 1984 a report on standard minimum rules for the administration of juvenile justice.<sup>(30)</sup> The draft rules, he said, were based on current legislation, procedures, practices and experiences of many countries in all regions and were the result of studies, research and meetings in which the impact of various institutions and forms had been taken into account. The proposed rules were included in the report with commentary.

On 30 March,<sup>(14)</sup> the Committee recommended that the Economic and Social Council forward the draft rules, after necessary modifications, to the 1985 Congress, through the interregional preparatory meeting on youth, crime and justice. The meeting, held in May at Beijing, China, approved the rules and recommended them to the Congress for consideration.

Treatment of women by criminal justice system

In January 1984, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Committee on crime on the fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system,<sup>(31)</sup> in response to a recommendation of the 1980 Congress.<sup>(24)</sup> The report gave an overview of preliminary findings of a global survey to which 48 countries had responded. It dealt with female administrators in the criminal justice system, female criminality and delinquency, differential treatment of female offenders, and female victimization.

The Secretary-General concluded that an initial step forward had been taken in collecting internationally comparable data. While in some parts of the world, female criminality did not seem to be a particular problem, in others it assumed serious proportions or characteristics. Such criminality required criminal justice systems to respond in an equitable and humane way, with consideration of the special needs and problems of females while in custody. Many respondents had emphasized that greater attention should be paid to the victimization of females, through sex offences, violence, abuse, abduction, slave-like practices and forced labour, and that greater regional and international co-operation was needed. The role of the United Nations was stressed, especially in disseminating the results of research and in providing technical advisory services and policy guidelines.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May 1984, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/49 without vote.

Fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system,

Taking into account resolution 9 of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, on the specific needs of women prisoners,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system;

2. Reaffirms resolution 9 of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in particular paragraph 4 thereof, in which the Congress requested that, at future Congresses and their preparatory meetings, as well as in the work of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, time should be allotted for the study of women as offenders and victims;

3. Decides that the question of the fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system and the question of the situation of women as victims of crime should be included in the provisional agenda for the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders under the items entitled "Criminal justice processes and perspectives in a changing world" and "Victims of crime", respectively;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit reports on the two above-mentioned questions to the Seventh Congress.

Safeguards protecting those facing death penalty

Pursuant to a May 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(32)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on crime in January 1984 a note on arbitrary and summary executions.<sup>(33)</sup> Following a summary of the relevant activities of the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (see Chapter XVIII of this section), he considered draft guidelines to guarantee a fair trial for those sentenced to death; international standards reaffirming the right to life; and relevant human rights provisions. The Secretary-General concluded that the prevalence of summary and arbitrary executions was such that the Committee might wish to take up in depth all related issues as a high priority matter, endorse the draft guidelines, and consider the social, economic and political conditions in which executions took place. In addition, he said, ways should be found to increase the awareness of those in power, of law enforcement officials and of the public of the incompatibility of the executions with a humane and fair system of justice.

On 30 March, the Committee on crime adopted a resolution on safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, which it recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/50 without vote.

Safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 36/22 of 9 November 1981, in which the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control should further study the problem with a view to making recommendations,

Recalling further Council resolution 1983/24 of 26 May 1983, in which it decided that the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control should further study the question of death penalties that did not meet the acknowledged minimum legal guarantees and safeguards, as contained in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other international instruments, and welcomed the intention of the Committee that the issue should be discussed at the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Acknowledging the work done by the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in the areas of summary or arbitrary executions, including the reports of the Special Rapporteur,

Considering the relevant views and comments of the Human Rights Committee established under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Expressing its concern at the tragic incidence of arbitrary or summary executions in the world,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General on arbitrary and summary executions,

Guided by the desire to continue to contribute to the strengthening of the international instruments relating to the prevention of arbitrary or summary executions,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General on arbitrary and summary executions;

2. Again strongly condemns and deplores the brutal practice of arbitrary or summary executions in various parts of the world;

3. Approves the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, recommended by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and annexed to the present resolution, on the understanding that they shall not be invoked to delay or to prevent the abolition of capital punishment;

4. Invites the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to consider the safeguards with a view to establishing an implementation mechanism, within the framework of the item of its provisional agenda entitled "Formulation and application of United Nations standards and norms in criminal justice".

ANNEX

Safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty

1. In countries which have not abolished the death penalty, capital punishment may be imposed only for the most serious crimes, it being understood that their scope should not go beyond intentional crimes with lethal or other extremely grave consequences.

2. Capital punishment may be imposed only for a crime for which the death penalty is prescribed by law at the time of its commission, it being understood that if, subsequent to the commission of the crime, provision is made by law for the imposition of a lighter penalty, the offender shall benefit thereby.

3. Persons below 18 years of age at the time of the commission of the crime shall not be sentenced to death, nor shall the death sentence be carried out on pregnant women, or on new mothers, or on persons who have become insane.

4. Capital punishment may be imposed only when the guilt of the person charged is based upon clear and convincing evidence leaving no room for an alternative explanation of the facts.

5. Capital punishment may only be carried out pursuant to a final judgement rendered by a competent court after legal process which gives all possible safeguards to ensure a fair trial, at least equal to those contained in article 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, including the right of anyone suspected of or charged with a crime for which capital punishment may be imposed to adequate legal assistance at all stages of the proceedings.

6. Anyone sentenced to death shall have the right to appeal to a court of higher jurisdiction, and steps should be taken to ensure that such appeals shall become mandatory.

7. Anyone sentenced to death shall have the right to seek pardon, or commutation of sentence; pardon or commutation of sentence may be granted in all cases of capital punishment.

8. Capital punishment shall not be carried out pending any appeal or other recourse procedure or other proceeding relating to pardon or commutation of the sentence.

9. Where capital punishment occurs, it shall be carried out so as to inflict the minimum possible suffering.

In the Second Committee, two 6-nation amendments were approved. In paragraph 3, the phrase "not be invoked to delay or to prevent the abolition of capital punishment" replaced "not be interpreted as affecting the consideration of the question of the abolition or retention of capital punishment"; the amendment was adopted by 29 votes to 1, with 17 abstentions. Also approved was the insertion of "In countries which have not abolished the death penalty," at the beginning of paragraph 1 of the annex. Following consultations, a further amendment by the same six nations to the annex, to add, at the end of paragraph 8, the phrase "and in any case not until a minimum period of three months has elapsed after judgement has become final", was withdrawn by the sponsors.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Council, by 23 votes to 6, with 16 abstentions, rejected an oral amendment by the United States calling for reinstatement of the original wording of paragraph 3. The United States felt that the text approving the safeguards should be kept separate from the debate on the retention or abolition of capital punishment and that neutral language with regard to its abolition or retention would better promote its underlying goal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/118, the General Assembly endorsed the Economic and Social Council recommendations on safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty and requested the Council to keep the matter under review. The Assembly called on States to ensure implementation of those recommendations, and requested the Secretary-General to employ his best endeavours in cases where the safeguards were violated.

The Assembly also dealt with summary or arbitrary executions in resolution 39/110, and adopted resolution 39/137 on the elaboration of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights aiming at the abolition of the death penalty (see Chapter XVIII of this section).

Implementation of the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials

A report on the United Nations Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, adopted in 1979,<sup>(34)</sup> was submitted by the Secretary-General to the Committee on crime in January 1984<sup>(35)</sup> in response to a 1982 Committee recommendation. The Secretary-General noted that, as of 30 September 1983, 29 countries had replied to a request

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50

25 May 1984 Meeting 21 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/92) without vote, 23 May (meeting 20); draft by Committee on crime (E/1984/16); amended by Austria, Costa Rica, Italy, Netherlands, Sweden, Uruguay (E/1984/C.2/L.8), orally revised; agenda item 11.

for information on implementation of the Code, and that nearly all had indicated that they had legal provisions reflecting its principles or going beyond it. Most said that they supported the Code and that law enforcement officials were required to observe its statutes.

On 30 March 1984,<sup>(15)</sup> the Committee noted that more information would be needed to determine the degree of implementation of the Code, and recommended that the Economic and Social Council request the Secretary-General to invite Member States to provide such information, so that he could submit a comprehensive report to the 1985 Congress.

An interregional preparatory meeting for the Congress, held at Varenna, Italy, in September 1984, unanimously adopted recommendations for more effective implementation of the Code of Conduct.

Alternatives to imprisonment

On a recommendation of the 1980 Congress on crime prevention,<sup>(24)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on crime in January 1984 a report on alternatives to imprisonment and measures for the social resettlement of prisoners.<sup>(36)</sup> He stated that, as at 15 September 1983, replies to a request for information had been received from 52 countries and the Holy See. Those replies showed that efforts in most countries were being directed towards a reduction in prison sentences, with priority given to re-socialization through community-based measures. The application of those alternatives did not lead to any substantial increase in crime, especially when they were properly planned and implemented, and received the full support of the community and public at large.

The Secretary-General stressed that the public must be informed and made aware of the importance of the new trends in crime prevention and treatment of offenders, whose final goals—reduction of criminality and recidivism—should be seen in the context of the whole socio-economic situation of each country as well as in a broader international perspective. For that reason, and to achieve positive results in crime prevention, increasing international co-operation and exchange of views seemed all the more necessary.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1984/46 without vote.

Alternatives to imprisonment

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling resolutions 8 and 10 of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Acknowledging the importance of further developing alternatives to the sanction of imprisonment,

Considering the noticeable progress made in various countries in intensifying contacts between sentenced persons and the community at large,

Aware that further progress is needed in order to reduce the social and psychological costs related to imprisonment,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on alternatives to imprisonment and measures for the social resettlement of offenders;

2. Encourages Member States to increase their efforts in order to further expand the use of such measures;

3. Calls the attention of Member States to the recommendation of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders that the principles on linking the rehabilitation of offenders to related social services should be taken into account when formulating strategies for deinstitutionalization within the overall framework of crime prevention;

4. Welcomes the recommendation of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control that these matters should be considered by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, under the item of the provisional agenda entitled "Formulation and application of United Nations standards and norms in criminal justice";

5. Requests the Secretary-General to update the report on alternatives to imprisonment, on the basis of information to be provided by Member States and other sources, including relevant non-governmental organizations and professional organizations, for submission to the Seventh Congress.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/46

25 May 1984 Meeting 21 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/52) without vote, 23 May (meeting 20); draft by Committee on crime (E/1984/16); agenda item 11.

UN activities in crime prevention

A progress report on United Nations activities in crime prevention and criminal justice covering the period from May 1980 to August 1983 was submitted by the Secretary-General to the Committee on crime in January 1984.<sup>(37)</sup> On 30 March,<sup>(18)</sup> the Committee took note of the report.

Technical co-operation in crime prevention

The Economic and Social Council in May 1984 adopted a resolution on technical co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice. By that resolution, it took note of recommendations made in 1983 at four regional preparatory meetings for the 1985 Congress.<sup>(38)</sup> The Council noted also that the African Regional Preparatory Meeting had viewed with great concern the delay in the establishment of an African regional institute on crime prevention, which it had requested in 1979.<sup>(39)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1984/51 without vote.

Technical co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 36/21 of 9 November 1981, in which the Assembly urged the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the United Nations Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme to increase their level of support to programmes of technical assistance in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, and to encourage technical co-operation among developing countries,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 35/171 of 15 December 1980, in which the Assembly endorsed the Caracas Declaration annexed thereto, wherein it was stressed that appropriate measures should be taken to strengthen, as necessary, the activities of the competent United Nations organs concerned with crime prevention and the treatment of offenders, especially activities at the regional and subregional levels,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/20 of 9 May 1979, in which the Council took note, inter alia, of the growing number of countries that expressed a need for interregional and technical advisory services capable of assisting Governments in planning and implementing their crime prevention policies, and Council resolution 1979/21 of 9 May 1979,

Convinced of the crucial importance of international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice, both among developing countries and between developed and developing countries,

Conscious of the financial and other difficulties encountered by many countries in their efforts to introduce efficient and humane crime prevention policies,

Recognizing the vital role performed by the United Nations regional training and research institutes in effectively supporting various forms and modalities of technical co-operation despite serious financial and budgetary constraints,

Recognizing also the important role of the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute in United Nations efforts to strengthen research in an interregional context,

Aware that the existing interregional and regional institutes are heavily dependent for financial support on the host countries,

Noting that the post of Interregional Adviser in the area of crime prevention and criminal justice was re-established in 1981,

Aware that, since the appointment of an Interregional Adviser in July 1982, Governments of developing countries have requested his advisory services on fifty-six occasions,

1. Takes note of the recommendations concerning regional and international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice contained in the resolutions adopted by the Asia and Pacific, Latin American, African and Western Asia Regional Preparatory Meetings for the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

2. Notes also that the African Regional Preparatory Meeting, in its resolution on subregional, regional and interregional co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice, viewed with great concern the delay in the establishment of an African regional institute on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders;

3. Emphasizes the usefulness of regional co-operation as fostered by the United Nations Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the United Nations Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations;

4. Urges the Secretary-General and all the organizations and agencies involved in the establishment of the institute for the African region to take steps to ensure its prompt creation, if possible before the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and also appeals to Governments in that region to co-operate fully and act expeditiously in this respect;

5. Recommends the regional commissions and the regional institutes to increase their co-operation in undertaking joint activities;

6. Requests the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations to strengthen appropriate arrangements for the support of technical co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice between developed and developing countries and also among developing countries, in the spirit of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and General Assembly resolutions 35/171 and 36/21 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1979/20 and 1979/21;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to ensure increased support for the critically needed interregional advisory services in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, and to provide additional interregional and regional advisers as quickly as budgetary resources will permit, especially to serve the needs of those regions without regional institutes;

8. Also urges the Secretary-General to find appropriate means to strengthen the financial capacity of the existing interregional and regional institutes;

9. Calls upon Member States in each region, in considering crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development, to encourage the exchange of data, information and experiences, to engage in joint activities for training and research, to assist in demonstration projects of a bilateral and multilateral nature, to enter into agreements on the provision of human, financial and material resources in support of regional and subregional seminars involving the various modalities of technical co-operation, and to encourage the involvement in such efforts of scientific and professional non-governmental organizations active in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice.

Cultural development

Proposed World Decade for Cultural Development

By a letter of 6 February 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) transmitted to the Secretary-General a proposal on the proclamation of a World Decade for Cultural Development. The Director-General suggested that the Decade be proclaimed in 1986, following approval by the General Assembly. Annexes to the letter contained a 1983 UNESCO General Conference resolution on the Decade and the Director-General's comments on the objectives of the Decade, with some proposals for action.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the letter in decision 1984/176.

Chapter XIV

Population

The major United Nations event in the area of population in 1984 was the International Conference on Population which culminated in the adoption of the Mexico City Declaration on Population and Development and 88 recommendations for the further implementation of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action. The Conference reaffirmed the validity of that Plan, which was aimed at improving standards of living and quality of life for all peoples in promotion of their common destiny in peace and security. In December, the General Assembly endorsed the report of the Conference and welcomed the Mexico City Declaration (resolution 39/228).

During the year, the United Nations system continued to support the population programmes of Member States through the United Nations Fund for Population Activities which spent 72.5 per cent of country programme resources on 53 priority countries, exceeding the goal of two thirds set by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme. In June, the Governing Council supported continued assistance to seven regional and interregional demographic training and research centres and approved assistance to large-scale programmes or projects for seven developing countries.

In addition to January and March meetings as the Preparatory Committee for the Population Conference, the Population Commission met in January to assess the progress of the Secretariat's work in population and to formulate its future work programme. In May, acting on the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council adopted the work programme (resolution 1984/4) and emphasized the importance of maintaining the effectiveness of the global and regional population programmes and of strengthening co-ordination among the departments and organizations of the United Nations system in planning and executing population programmes.

Topics related to this chapter. Regional economic and social activities—population: Africa; Asia and the Pacific; Latin America and the Caribbean; Western Asia. Statistics: population and housing censuses.

The 1984 Conference on Population

The International Conference on Population was held at Mexico City from 6 to 14 August 1984 to appraise the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action,<sup>(1)</sup> adopted in 1974 at Bucharest, Romania, by the World Population Conference. The 1984 Conference was preceded on 5 August by consultations on procedural and organizational matters, while activities in preparation for the Conference were organized during early 1984 throughout the United Nations system (see below).

The Conference was attended by 146 Member States, as well as by representatives of the Secretariat, regional commissions and other United Nations organizations and five specialized agencies. Also represented were 13 inter-governmental organizations, 154 non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and three national liberation movements: the African National Congress of South Africa, the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Pan-Africanist Congress of Azania. The United Nations Council for Namibia represented Namibia.

At its first meeting on 6 August, the Conference elected as its President Manuel Bartlett Diaz (Mexico); it also elected a Rapporteur-General and 28 Vice-Presidents. (For Conference participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

The Conference's inaugural ceremony heard a message from the United Nations Secretary-General, who addressed the Conference on 13 August. Statements were also made by the Secretary-General of the Conference and by Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado, President of Mexico, who reviewed the global situation and described measures adopted in Mexico to carry out the population policy elaborated in the preceding decade.

Speaking to the Conference, the United Nations Secretary-General said that the population problem was not merely a matter of statistics but concerned human beings whose well-being had to be based not only on adequate living conditions but also on respect for their human rights, including the right to decide the size of their families. He hoped that the Conference's results would guide and inspire efforts to deal with the challenge of an expanding population at the global level.

On 14 August,<sup>(2)</sup> the Conference adopted the Mexico City Declaration on Population and Development in which it reaffirmed the full validity of the principles and objectives of the 1974 Plan of Action and adopted by consensus<sup>a</sup> a set of recommendations for its further implementation. Those recommendations comprised a preamble, a short section on peace, security and population, 76 recommendations for action by Governments, and 12 recommendations for implementation.

In its Declaration, the Conference stated that, although the world had undergone far-reaching changes since 1974, population growth, high mortality and morbidity, and migration problems continued to be causes of great concern requiring immediate action. The Conference confirmed that the principal aim of social, economic and human development, of which population goals and policies were integral parts, was to improve people's living standards and quality of life. The Declaration constituted a solemn undertaking by the nations and international organizations gathered in Mexico City, to respect national sovereignty, combat all forms of racial discrimination, including apartheid, and promote social and economic development, human rights and individual freedom.

Regarding the global population growth rate, the Declaration noted that it had declined from 2.03 to 1.67 per cent per year in the previous decade, but would decline more slowly in the next. Moreover, the annual increase in numbers was expected to continue and could reach 90 million by the year 2000. Ninety per cent of the increase would occur in developing countries and 6.1 billion people were expected to inhabit the Earth. Demographic differences between developed and developing countries remained striking with an average life expectancy of 73 years in developed countries and only 57 years in developing countries. In addition, families in the latter tended to be much larger. This caused concern since social and population pressures could contribute to continuing the wide disparity in welfare and the quality of life between developing and developed countries.

Although progress had been made since 1974, millions still lacked access to safe, effective family planning methods. Major efforts were needed to ensure that all could exercise their basic human right to decide freely the number and spacing of their children and to have the information and means to do so.

Also emphasized in the Declaration were: the importance of recognizing the link between population and development; the positive influence of improving the status of women on family life and size; the need to increase funding to develop new contraceptive methods; the need for special attention to be given to maternal and child health services; and rapid urbanization and migratory movements.

The preamble to the recommendations for the further implementation of the Plan of Action stated that the Plan had served as a guide to action and that its principles and objectives remained valid.

Major challenges and problems of primary concern to the international community included: reducing poverty, expanding employment and encouraging economic growth; promoting the status of women; reducing population growth rates; changes in population structures; infant and maternal mortality; unmet family planning needs; internal and international migration and high urbanization rates; and the increasing number of persons lacking sufficient food, pure water, shelter, health care, education and other facilities.

The 88 recommendations for action to implement further the 1974 World Population Plan of Action dealt with socio-economic development, the environment and population (see p. 769); the role and the status of women; the development of population policies; population goals and policies; morbidity and mortality; reproduction and the family; population distribution and internal migration; international migration; population structure; promotion of knowledge and policy; the role of national Governments and international co-operation in implementing the Plan; and the monitoring, review and appraisal of the Plan's implementation.

The Conference stressed the need to take account of the interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development and recommended that Governments take population trends into account when formulating development plans and implement policies to redress imbalances in population growth and resources and environmental requirements.

In connection with the role and status of women, Governments were urged to integrate women into all phases of development and take measures with regard to their legal rights and status, education, training, employment and access to health care, while continuing to support their role as mothers. The age of entry into marriage should be raised to encourage delay in child-bearing, and Governments should promote men's active involvement in all areas of family responsibility, and ratify the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.<sup>(3)</sup>

Governments were urged to adopt mutually reinforcing population and social and economic policies and to provide resources and adopt innovative measures to implement population policy.

In recommendations on population goals and policies, the Conference invited countries which considered that their population growth rates hindered the attainment of national goals to consider relevant demographic policies which respected human rights, including the right of each individual and couple to determine the size of its own family. All Governments were urged to reduce morbidity and mortality levels and improve health among all population groups. Countries with higher mortality levels should aim for a life expectancy of at least 60 years and an infant mortality rate of fewer than 50 per 1,000 live births by the year 2000; those with intermediate mortality levels should aim for a life expectancy of at least 70 years and an infant mortality rate of fewer than 35 per 1,000 by that year. It was strongly urged that governmental action in mortality and health involve all sectors of national and community development.

Governments were urged to identify the underlying causes of infant and child morbidity and mortality and to attack those conditions. To reduce maternal morbidity and mortality by at least 50 per cent by the year 2000, Governments should provide prenatal and perinatal care, emphasize the nutritional needs of pregnant women and nursing mothers, help women avoid abortion, support family planning, and encourage community education to change attitudes which countenanced pregnancy and child-bearing at young ages. Action was urged to expand the use of techniques which could achieve a virtual revolution in child survival, including breastfeeding. In countries with many illiterate women, a supplementary effort should be made to extend mass education.

With regard to adult morbidity and mortality, Governments were urged to implement disease control programmes, provide potable water and sanitation facilities and implement other elements of primary health care. Provision of health care information and the taking of measures to eliminate occupational health hazards were urged.

In the area of reproduction and the family, the Conference recommended to Governments that they provide information and the means to assist people to achieve their desired number of children and that resources be allocated for family planning services, including the family-life and sex education of adolescents. The right to decide the number and spacing of children should be assured and legislation and policies in that regard should be neither coercive nor discriminatory. Policies should be sensitive to the need for financial and other support to families and development policies known to reduce fertility levels, such as improved health, education, integration of women and social equity, should be adopted.

With regard to internal migration, the Conference recommended that population distribution policies be consistent with international human rights instruments and that socio-economic policies to minimize adverse spatial consequences should be implemented through incentives. It also recommended other policies to assist internal migrants which should be integrated into the overall development planning process, including establishing labour exchanges to provide information on employment in receiving areas, directing rural development programmes towards increasing rural production and efficiency and adopting policies to assist women migrants and women, children and the elderly left behind in rural areas.

The Conference recommended that international migration policies should respect basic human rights and fundamental freedoms and that Governments of receiving countries should take into account the well-being of migrants and the demographic implications of migration. Governments of countries of origin concerned with the outflow of skilled workers and professionals should seek to retain them and encourage their return. It was also recommended that high priority be placed on rehabilitating expelled and homeless people displaced by natural and man-made catastrophes.

Recommendations on documented migrant workers urged the adoption of measures to promote normalization of their family life and the undertaking of information activities to increase migrants' awareness of their legal position and rights. Dissemination of information to promote public understanding of migrant workers was also urged. Recommendations were also made regarding the protection of the basic human rights of undocumented migrants.

The Conference recommended that States accede to international instruments on refugees while Governments and international agencies were urged to find durable solutions to problems related to refugees and their movements.

With regard to the question of population structure, the Conference called for Governments to give due attention to the needs of children and youth. It also called for further efforts in connection with the aging (see Chapter XX of this section).

The Conference's recommendations on the promotion of knowledge and policy urged Governments to develop capabilities in the collection and analysis of population statistics and to tabulate and publish such data while safeguarding individual privacy. Governments were also urged to increase resources for research in human reproduction and fertility regulation, and give priority to social research into the determinants and consequences of fertility.

Governments were urged to develop population programmes and increase their support to existing ones dealing with management, training, information, education and communications. They were invited to develop a trained corps to formulate and implement integrated population and development policies, plans and programmes at all levels.

The Conference's recommendations for implementation of the Plan of Action by national Governments dealt with management of population programmes, and utilization of technical co-operation among developing countries. With regard to international co-operation in the Plan's implementation, the Conference recommended the provision of substantial international support by developed countries, other donor countries and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. Areas identified as requiring particular emphasis by the international community included: research and action programmes; integration of population planning in the development process; improving the status of women; biomedical and social science research; collection and analysis of data; identification of successful programmes and dissemination of information on them; implementation of monitoring and evaluation systems; promotion of exchanges between countries with common experiences; and education and training. The Conference also urged Governments to increase assistance for population activities, urged further strengthening of UNFPA and invited national NGOs and other groups and individuals to assist in developing and implementing population policies and programmes.

Finally, the Conference stated that the monitoring of population trends and policies would continue to be undertaken by the Secretary-General and the next review and appraisal of progress made towards achieving the goals and recommendations of the Plan of Action would be in 1989.

Among documents before the Conference was a report of the Secretary-General<sup>(4)</sup> on the review and appraisal of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action. The report, revised in the light of the discussions of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference (see below), was organized in six chapters: socio-economic development and population; development of population policies; population trends, prospects, goals and policies; promotion of knowledge; role of national Governments and the international community; and monitoring, review and appraisal of the 1974 Plan.

A note by the Secretariat<sup>(5)</sup> transmitted those draft recommendations on which the Preparatory Committee had been able to reach agreement (see below) and a further report of the Secretary-General<sup>(6)</sup> transmitted the recommendations of the United Nations regional commissions for the further regional implementation of the 1974 Plan of Action.

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/789) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.106), based on informal consultations on 20-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.36); agenda item 12.

The 20-nation draft (mainly developing countries and 4 Western countries), which was withdrawn, did not include "and strongly supports" in paragraph 2, the references to racial discrimination, including apartheid, and social and economic development in paragraph 7, or the final phrase in paragraph 8 on the need to attend to problems of population structures. Paragraph 10 of the earlier draft had referred to the increasing commitment of developing countries rather than the increasing efforts being made by them. By paragraph 12, the Economic and Social Council would have been requested to keep under review, on a regular basis, the monitoring and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action.

Following approval of the draft in the Second Committee, two States explained their positions. Israel had not asked for a separate vote on paragraphs 1 and 7 in a spirit of co-operation, although it maintained its reservations regarding Conference recommendation 36—concerning population distribution being consistent with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War—which it felt had been introduced for political reasons. The United States said that it endorsed recommendations for the further implementation of the 1974 Plan of Action subject to its reservations expressed at the Conference regarding its positions on recommendation 3 on commodity agreements or future lending resources for international financial institutions; and recommendation 36 which it felt was politically divisive and extraneous.

Preparations for the Conference

To prepare for the Conference, the Population Commission, acting as the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population, met in New York from 23 to 27 January and in a resumed session authorized by the Economic and Social Council (see below) from 12 to 17 March; membership of the Committee was open to all States.

Its report<sup>(7)</sup> contained recommendations for the further implementation of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action. It also made recommendations to the Council regarding the Conference's provisional agenda, rules of procedure and other organizational matters.

Within the United Nations system, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) Task Force on the Conference met in New York on 30 and 31 January<sup>(8)</sup> and discussed the Committee's January meeting, arrangements for the Committee's report to be discussed by the regional commissions, arrangements for drafting proposals for further implementation of the 1974 Plan of Action at the regional level, and contributions for the report on the review and appraisal of that Plan. Task Force members were invited to submit to the Conference secretariat their written suggestions to improve a 1983 report of the Secretary-General<sup>(9)</sup> on the further implementation of the 1974 Plan.

At its April 1984 session,<sup>(10)</sup> the ACC Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC) heard oral reports on information activities being conducted by agencies in preparation for the Conference. JUNIC agreed to extend full co-operation in implementing the information programme for the Conference (see p. 366).

In other action leading up to the Conference, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) urged UNEP to participate fully (see also p. 769). At the regional level, two intergovernmental meetings were held in 1984: the Second African Population Conference (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 9-13 January) convened by the Economic Commission for Africa (see p. 616); and the Third Regional Population Conference in the Arab World (Amman, Jordan, 25-29 March) convened by the Economic Commission for Western Asia and the League of Arab States (see p. 642). Other regional meetings had been held in 1982<sup>(11)</sup> and 1983.<sup>(12)</sup>

A commemorative stamp on the Conference was issued in February (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In February, the Economic and Social Council, having considered a letter from the Chairman of the Conference Preparatory Committee,<sup>(13)</sup> adopted decision 1984/102 without vote.

Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population, 1984

At its 2nd plenary meeting, on 10 February 1984, the Council, having considered the letter from the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population, 1984 to the President of the Council, decided to authorize the Preparatory Committee to hold a resumed session at United Nations Headquarters from 12 to 16 March 1984, and to report to the Council at its first regular session of 1984.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/102

Adopted without vote

Draft by President, for Bureau (E/1984/L.14 and Corr.1); agenda item 2.

In May, following its consideration of the Preparatory Committee's report,<sup>(7)</sup> the Council adopted without vote decision 1984/118 by which it amended a recommendation on the organization of the Conference and one of the provisional rules of procedure.

Report of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population, 1984

At its 17th plenary meeting, on 22 May 1984, the Council:

(a) Decided to revise paragraph (e) of recommendation 5 of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population, 1984, to read as follows:

"(e) In view of the constraints of time, it is desirable that statements in the general debate on item 4 be limited to seven minutes for the representatives of each State and three minutes for other participants";

(b) Recommended the following text as rule 6 of the provisional rules of procedure for the International Conference on Population, 1984:

"The Conference shall elect the following officers: a President, two Vice-Presidents for co-ordination, twenty-six other Vice-Presidents, a Rapporteur-General and a Presiding Officer for the Main Committee established in accordance with rule 45";

(c) Took note of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population, 1984 and of the recommendations contained therein, as revised, and decided to transmit them to the Conference.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/118

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; draft recommended by Preparatory Committee (E/1984/28 & Add.1), amended by USSR (E/1984/L.27), orally amended by Mexico, based on informal consultations; agenda item 6. Meeting numbers. ESC 12-14, 17.

The paragraph concerning the Preparatory Committee's recommendation 5, amended by the USSR, had not included the words "it is desirable that". Rule 6, orally amended by Mexico, and on which the Preparatory Committee had not reached agreement, had stated that there should be only 24 other Vice-Presidents.

UN Fund for Population Activities

Activities

In 1984, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) concentrated its efforts on the International Conference on Population and also continued its work on involving women in population and development issues and on the priority programme areas outlined by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in 1981<sup>(1)</sup>: family planning, including training of personnel and research into contraceptive methods; population education and information dissemination; basic data collection; population dynamics on the effects of population trends; and population policy formulation, implementation and evaluation. Details of these activities and special programmes were described by the UNFPA Executive Director in his annual report for 1984.<sup>(2)</sup>

Total UNFPA income in 1984 was $138.4 million compared with $134.7 million in 1983. Project allocations, which totalled $139 million, are broken down in the tables below by major function and executing agency, and geographically. Expenditures were $137.9 million ($122.6 million in 1983), including $82.5 million for country programmes, $33 million for intercountry programmes, $4.7 million for the budgets of the UNFPA Deputy Representatives and Senior Advisers on Population, $5.9 million for overhead costs, and $11.8 million for administrative budgets.

At year's end, UNFPA was assisting 2,180 projects—1,682 country, 220 regional, 116 inter-regional and 162 global. New projects approved in 1984 numbered 453, amounting to $29.8 million, compared with 271 in 1983, amounting to $15.2 million. In 1984, 187 projects were completed, bringing the cumulative total to 2,193.

UNFPA assistance for family planning programmes came to $68 million, or 50.8 per cent of total allocations, and focused on projects to enhance delivery of family planning services and information, education and motivational programmes in support of such services. Particular assistance was given to strengthening distribution channels for services and supplies, such as health and community networks and private and public sector sources, and to projects directed towards hard-to-reach groups, such as rural populations, marginal groups in urban areas and adolescents. The Fund continued assistance in areas closely connected with the improvement of services: personnel training and logistic support including transport, medical equipment and contraceptive supplies. In its support for family planning research, it again contributed $2 million in 1984 to the WHO Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction. With respect to trends in family planning programmes supported by the Fund, the integration of family planning into maternal/child health-care and general health services was becoming the rule, with delivery systems becoming more community-oriented and the use of traditional midwives and village health volunteers more widespread.

Guidelines governing UNFPA assistance for family planning activities were revised to indicate that, since abortion was not a method of contraception, UNFPA did not extend assistance, and was particularly careful to assure that none of its assistance was used, for that purpose. The guidelines reiterated that every nation had the sovereign right to determine its population policies and programmes and all couples and individuals had the basic right to decide freely and responsibly the number and spacing of their children.

Support for population education and communication activities totalled $20 million, or 14.9 per cent of all allocations. An increased interest by many Governments in initiating these activities continued in 1984 and was partly met by combining bilateral funding with UNFPA support. Population education projects were conducted in school systems in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East, and also in some non-school settings where family-life education programmes were introduced. Communication strategies for creating demand for family planning services involved both channelling information to target audiences and obtaining feedback from them to best meet their needs.

Some $13.9 million, or 10.5 per cent of all allocations, was devoted to research on population dynamics. This included analysis of demographic and socio-economic data and their interrelationships and research into the social and economic consequences of population trends. Support for formulation and evaluation of population policies totalled $8.2 million or 6.2 per cent of total allocations. A major area of UNFPA support in this category continued to be for projects to promote awareness and understanding of interrelationships between population factors and development planning. UNFPA assistance to policy implementation in 1984 totalled $1.1 million or 0.8 per cent of total allocations.

Assistance for basic data collection was $11.7 million, or 8.8 per cent of all allocations. Although this was a smaller share than allocated for 1983 (10.7 per cent), the amount rose slightly from $10.8 million due to support for second-time population censuses. As in the past, censuses took the largest share of data collection resources followed by civil registration and vital statistics systems, and demographic surveys and related statistical activities.

UNFPA assistance to special programmes relating to women, population and development and to the issue of aging totalled $2.0 million, or 1.5 per cent of total allocations.

Of programmes and projects funded by UNFPA and executed by various United Nations bodies and NGOs, a major portion was executed by the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (see p. 728).

*Classified as a priority country for UNFPA assistance.

SOURCE: DP/1985/30 Parts I and II.

Country and intercountry programmes

In 1984, UNFPA continued to focus on the needs of the 53 countries given priority status in 1982,<sup>(3)</sup> of which 30 were in Africa, 16 in Asia and the Pacific, 2 in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 5 in the Middle East and the Mediterranean. Of the year's total amount of resources for country programmes and projects, $71.6 million or 72.5 per cent was allocated to those 53 countries.

Intercountry activities accounted for $35 million in allocations in 1984, comprising $16.1 million for regional projects, $14.2 for interregional projects and $4.6 million for global projects.

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council noted the increase in UNFPA assistance for the 53 priority countries, and reiterated the goal of devoting up to two thirds of country programme assistance to those countries. It requested the UNFPA Executive Director to strengthen his efforts to reduce the proportion of assistance from the Fund allocated to intercountry activities and to report to the Council's 1986 session, clarifying the definition of intercountry activities and reviewing the possibility of revising the definition and the 25 per cent target set for intercountry programme activities. The Council also approved Fund assistance to large-scale country programmes for the Central African Republic, China, Dominican Republic, Peru, Togo, Viet Nam and Zambia.

Further to a 1983 request,<sup>(5)</sup> the UNFPA Executive Director submitted to the Governing Council a 28 March report<sup>(6)</sup> on the programmes of the regional and interregional demographic training and research centres for which UNFPA assistance had been approved for the four-year cycle, 1984-1987. The seven centres, in Cameroon, Chile, Egypt, Ghana, India, Romania and the USSR, were to receive assistance up to a maximum of $3.5 million per year. UNFPA support was based on the concept of the attainment of self-reliance and gradual phasing out of international assistance. The centres, therefore, were required to adopt training strategies that were cost-effective, predominantly self-supporting and responsive to the needs of the countries and of the region. The UNFPA Executive Director reported that the centres were complying with the principles, which the Council had endorsed, to provide direction to the training programmes, and stated that he would report further in 1986.

In June 1984,<sup>(4)</sup> the Council supported continued assistance to the centres, taking into account the particular needs of those in Africa south of the Sahara, and requested the Executive Director to report to the Council's 1986 session on the extent to which all the centres had incorporated the agreed principles on funding and programming, including steps to achieve self-reliance. African Governments were urged to increase and provide prompt contributions to the institutes south of the Sahara.

Family planning research

In response to a 1983 decision of the UNDP Governing Council,<sup>(5)</sup> which stated that the level of UNFPA contributions to the WHO Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction would be reviewed annually by the Council, the UNFPA Executive Director submitted a March 1984 report on the UNFPA strategy for support of contraceptive research.<sup>(7)</sup> The report outlined principles for assistance and gave details of organizations engaged in contraceptive research and development: two to which UNFPA provided assistance (the WHO Special Programme and the Program for the Introduction and Adaptation of Contraceptive Technology, an NGO with headquarters in Seattle, United States); and several others, both NGOs and national institutions in developing countries considered to be appropriate entities to receive UNFPA funds for contraceptive research projects.

As its immediate strategy for funding such research, the report proposed that UNFPA consult with developing countries and NGOs active in the field to ascertain their needs, that it continue to make available country programme funds for developing countries to carry out their own biomedical contraceptive research, and that in addition to providing an annual $2 million contribution to the WHO Special Programme, UNFPA should, within funding limitations and availability, increase its assistance during 1985-1987.

On 29 June,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council approved the general principles outlined in the report,<sup>(7)</sup> decided that the Fund's contribution to the WHO Special Programme should be fixed at $2 million for 1985, approved the Executive Director's strategy for immediate funding, and requested him to report briefly to the Council in 1985 on the results of the recommendations of the Special Programme's Policy and Co-ordination Committee, and recommend UNFPA funding for 1986-1989.

Work programmes

The UNFPA work plan for 1985-1988 was prepared by its Executive Director,<sup>(8)</sup> based on expected income for 1984 of $142 million and projected income of $152 million for 1985, $165 million for 1986, $179 million for 1987 and $194.5 million for 1988. After deductions for operational costs and additions to the operational reserve, programmable resources were expected to total $547.2 million for the four years of the work plan: $121.5 million for 1985; $131.2 million for 1986; $142.0 million for 1987; and $152.5 million for 1988. Intercountry activities would account for 25 per cent of total programmable resources, and priority countries two thirds of new programmable resources for country projects. Other criteria for allocations, including the possibility of increased shares for family planning and population communication, would also be taken into account.

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council approved the 1985-1988 work plan on the understanding that the Executive Director would limit approval of projects to available resources, and gave approval authority for 100 per cent of the 1985 figures and smaller proportions (75, 50 and 25 per cent respectively) of total anticipated spending for the three following years. The net additional amounts approved were $48.4 million for 1985, $44.9 million for 1986, $41.5 million for 1987 and $38 million for 1988.

The Council also expressed appreciation for the Executive Director's report on the status of financial implementation of Council-approved UNFPA programmes and projects<sup>(9)</sup> and requested future similar reports to be annexed to the work plan.

Programme planning and evaluation

During 1984, eight independent, in-depth evaluations were undertaken of UNFPA-assisted programmes and projects in China, Democratic Yemen, the English-speaking Caribbean, Indonesia, Kenya/Sierra Leone, Malawi/Zambia, Mexico and Rwanda, the results of which were presented to the UNDP Governing Council in the report of the UNFPA Executive Director for 1984.<sup>(2)</sup>

He also submitted to the Council a March 1984 report<sup>(10)</sup> on UNFPA evaluation activities, describing in-depth evaluations conducted during 1982-1983, with emphasis on their results, discussing the utilization of such results and presenting UNFPA's plans for future evaluation activities. There was a need, said the report, to assess how evaluations were actually used for the projects evaluated, for similar projects elsewhere and for policy-making; this would require an analysis of the results by substantive sectors. Although progress had been made in developing built-in evaluation and making independent, in-depth evaluations more useful, additional improvements were needed, including training of personnel in formulating and implementing evaluation plans, and efforts were being made within the Fund to deal with those issues.

On 29 June,<sup>(4)</sup> the Governing Council endorsed that approach to future evaluation activities and noted that a report would be made to the Council at its 1986 session on the comparative results of past evaluations.

In a 12 April report<sup>(11)</sup> to the Governing Council, the Executive Director traced the evolution of UNFPA's programming system, described the programme development process, outlined the steps required to formulate, appraise, and approve projects, described the monitoring and evaluation system and summarized trends and improvements in the programming and monitoring process of UNFPA.

A 24 April report of the Executive Director on programme planning<sup>(12)</sup> described the UNFPA planning process, including resource distribution constraints and efforts being made towards full resource utilization.

On 29 June,<sup>(4)</sup> the Council expressed appreciation for the reports and requested him to further improve programme planning and procedures.

Financial and administrative questions

Budget for 1984-1985

On 1 January 1984, UNFPA's balance was $19,168,557. During the year the Fund received income of $138,568,989 and had expenditures of $137,127,662—an excess of income over expenditure of $1,331,327. The Fund's balance as at 31 December was $17,499,884; unspent allocations amounted to $19,292,199.

In June 1984,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council gave to the UNFPA Executive Director an approval authority for 1984 of $142 million (see above, under "Work programmes"). At year end, project allocations amounted to $139,184,707, including $16,852,461 in unspent allocations from 1983. Net appropriations for the 1984-1985 biennial budget totalled $24,577,523, as approved by the Council in 1983.<sup>(13)</sup>

Contributions

During 1984, 81 countries and territories paid a total of $122.5 million in voluntary contributions to UNFPA (see table below), compared with $130.3 million from 84 countries and territories in 1983.<sup>(14)</sup> This figure, together with additions and adjustments to pledges for prior years, exchange-rate and currency revaluation adjustments, interest, donations and other miscellaneous income, made up a total 1984 income of $138.6 million. Pledges for 1985 from 76 countries and territories totalled $109.8 million as at 31 December 1984 (see table below), compared with $69 million from 75 countries and territories at the end of the previous year.<sup>(14)</sup>

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council urged all countries that were able to do so to increase their contributions and urged that payments be made as early as possible.

Accounts for 1983

In 1984, following an audit of the UNFPA financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1983, the Board of Auditors made a series of observations and recommendations.<sup>(15)</sup>

With regard to project delivery, the Board found that in many projects, expenditures had exceeded allotments or were incurred without them, while in some projects allotments remained unutilized; it recommended strengthened control of project allotments and expenditures and strict adherence to new instructions for approval of project budgets. The Board's examination of consultant services revealed insufficient adherence to instructions on the use of former staff members as consultants and procedures for follow-up and evaluation of consultant services; it recommended compliance with the relevant instructions. Noting that UNFPA travel procedures were not fully cost-effective, the Board recommended that they be closely examined. The Board's examination of communications costs disclosed weaknesses in internal controls with regard to long distance and personal telephone calls; it advised that the control system be strengthened. The Board also noted with concern that the unexpended balance of trust funds increased in 1983 to $4,676,450; it was of the opinion that firm measures were required to initiate an adequate use of available funds.

In response, the UNFPA Executive Director indicated that attempts would be made to comply with the Board's recommendations. UNFPA travel procedures and arrangements would be examined in consultation with UNDP, which established such procedures.

By resolution 39/66 of 13 December 1984, the General Assembly accepted the UNFPA financial reports when it accepted various other 1983 financial reports and audited statements and the Auditors' opinions, concurred with ACABQ's observations on UNDP travel costs—including those of UNFPA (see p. 452), and requested the executive heads to take such remedial action as might be required.

Audited accounts, 1982

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(4)</sup> the Governing Council noted that the audited accounts of the participating and executing agencies of UNFPA for 1982<sup>(16)</sup> and prior years had not been accompanied by narrative audit reports. The Council emphasized the importance attached to such reports and requested the UNFPA Executive Director to bring the Council's decision and the views of the Budgetary and Finance Committee to the attention of the Panel of External Auditors and the administrations of the participating and executing agencies, and to report to the Council on their reaction. The Executive Director was further requested to provide an annual oral report to the Budgetary and Finance Committee regarding the annual audit submitted to the General Assembly and the Fund's response to such audit.

Financial regulations

In view of the UNDP Administrator's proposed amendments to UNDP financial regulations (see p. 452), the UNFPA Administrator proposed similar amendments to the UNFPA Financial Regulations,<sup>(17)</sup> as they were based on those of UNDP. Acceptance of the proposed changes was recommended by ACABQ.<sup>(18)</sup>

On 29 June,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council approved the proposed amendment to the Fund's Financial Regulations relating to the submission of annual accounts to the United Nations Board of Auditors. It noted amendments to the annex to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, made by the General Assembly in 1983,<sup>(19)</sup> and noted that they would be reflected in the information annex to the Fund's Financial Regulations.

Staffing

In response to a June 1983 request,<sup>(20)</sup> the Executive Director submitted to the UNDP Governing Council a report<sup>(21)</sup> on including UNFPA's Deputy Representatives and Senior Advisors on Population (DRSAPs) in the regular staffing table. The report reviewed the background to the practice of funding DRSAPs and auxiliary support staff in the field from projects funds and described the changed situation which was largely the result of the continued growth of the UNFPA programme. It was noted that, under current employment conditions, DRSAPs could only be offered successive two-year contracts with no opportunities for advancement except within the UNFPA field service. The resulting lack of opportunity for movement from field to headquarters and vice versa had created a sense of separation for field staff and impeded adequate career development.

It was recommended that the Council approve the incorporation into the regular staffing table of those DRSAP posts which qualified based on selected criteria, which would include programme needs, size and complexity of the programme, relative permanency, continuity, and degree of commitment to population programmes. Should the Council approve the transfer of DRSAP posts to the regular staffing table, the Executive Director would propose consideration of the related question of auxiliary support personnel in the field.

With regard to financial implications, the Executive Director stated that his proposals related exclusively to the transfer of posts and that, while the administrative and programme support budget would appear larger, no additional expenditure would be involved.

ACABQ was unable to recommend Council acceptance of the proposal.<sup>(18)</sup> While aware of the importance of career development and equitable treatment of staff, ACABQ pointed out that those issues had to be viewed in the context of the Fund's overall needs and financial position; it was concerned that the potential gain in flexibility in administering the staffing table could be at the expense of the necessary flexibility to respond to changes in UNFPA's situation, such as a decline in income.

Should the Council approve the proposal, however, ACABQ recommended that, in the implementation plan to be submitted by the Executive Director in 1984, careful attention should be paid to the criteria to be applied in determining which DRSAP posts should be included in the regular staffing table. Those criteria should relate to the nature of the functions performed and should also be applicable to auxiliary support staff in the field.

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(4)</sup> the Council requested the UNFPA Executive Director, in preparing the Fund's budget for 1986-1987, to include all international and local staff at headquarters and in field offices, without prejudice to the Council's final decision on the appropriate format which would be taken in 1985. When considering the 1986-1987 budget, the Council would also consider if and to what extent field posts should be established on a permanent or temporary basis and the criteria which should be applied in determining posts to be included in the regular staffing table, taking into account the ACABQ recommendation. The Council noted the Executive Director's intention to prepare a detailed implementation plan and revised staffing table to be included in his document on the Fund's basic manpower requirements to be considered by the Council in 1985.

Progress of work, 1981-1983

For its review of the United Nations Secretariat's work in population from 1981 to 1983, the Population Commission had before it reports of the Secretary-General on progress achieved by the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA) and by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD).<sup>(3)</sup>

The Secretary-General described DIESA's activities in world demographic analysis, demographic projections, population policy, population and development, monitoring of population trends and policies, factors affecting patterns of reproduction and dissemination of population information. It was noted that the latter part of the programme period had been affected by the additional responsibilities of providing substantive support to the International Conference on Population, 1984 (see above).

In his report on the activities of DTCD, the Secretary-General stated that the Department had continued to expand its programme of technical co-operation in population to countries requesting assistance. This was done mainly with the financial support of UNFPA and UNDP. DTCD had continued to give high priority to support for activities related to training national personnel in population, with the aim of strengthening national capabilities of self-sufficiency in that area. Support was also provided by DTCD for evaluation and analysis of basic population and demographic data and for population policy planning and development planning. In order to assist developing countries to evaluate and analyse demographic data and population projections to provide timely input into the development planning process, DTCD had also been involved in developing and increasing the availability of computer software programs for demographic analysis. The Department had also continued to work on a series of publications which provided Governments with information on new methodologies and innovative technical approaches in the design and delivery of technical co-operation services in population. Other activities included a significant contribution by DTCD to the International Conference and the preparations leading up to it.

1984 activities

In a report on the Secretariat's 1984 activities,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that DIESA's major focus of activity during the year was the Population Conference (see above), it being responsible for the substantive preparations and providing most of the substantive services. DIESA also continued to work on implementing the regular work programme on substantive, technical and information dissemination activities, which included preparation of an addendum to a report on monitoring of population trends and policies (see below), and continued work on an investigation of socio-economic correlates of child mortality, based on case studies in 15 developing countries, and on a comprehensive analysis of sex differentials in mortality in both developing and developed countries.

Reports were under preparation or issued on various subjects, including: determinants of mortality change and differentials in developing countries; consequences of mortality trends and differentials; data bases for mortality measurement; socio-economic development and fertility decline; population distribution and migration; updating of global demographic estimates and projects; population policies of five of the world's 20 largest cities; and the institutional framework for the formulation of population policies and goals.

to 56 the number of countries for which reports had been issued.

A major activity within the framework of the Population Information Network (POPIN) was the organization of a reference centre at the International Conference on Population consisting of a working library and computerized population information data bases. A report on developments related to population information since the 1974 World Population Conference was featured in a special issue of the POPIN Bulletin.

From July 1983 to June 1984 DTCD continued to provide technical co-operation concerning population to countries requesting assistance, mainly with financial support from UNFPA and UNDP. This required substantive, technical and managerial support and monitoring by Headquarters staff of approximately 100 projects in 65 countries dealing with demography training through country projects and through inter-regional centres and programmes, evaluation and analysis of basic population data, population policy planning and development planning, evaluation of technical co-operation activities in population and through activities related to the 1984 Population Conference.

DTCD's work in demography training included technical support for the Cairo Demographic Centre, which undertook a major curriculum revision by introducing population and development planning and population dynamics as core courses, technical support for the United Nations-Romania Demographic Centre, whose operations closed in June 1984, and for the United Nations/USSR Interregional Demographic Training and Research Programme in Population and Development Planning. A total of 67 new awards were provided for population study at institutions other than United Nations-sponsored training centres, with an increase in the number of awards to students from African countries but fewer to Asian students.

Regarding data analysis, DTCD provided major assistance in the evaluation of demographic and socio-economic data from censuses and surveys while DIESA took major responsibility for assisting in the collection of population data. DTCD also evaluated computer software for use by developing countries in population data analysis and helped establish national population units for the formulation of population objectives.

The Department continued to evaluate the technical co-operation aspects of teaching in population and development, preparing proposals for a curriculum for publication, and examined the impact of the population training fellowships provided by the United Nations. It also participated in the Population Conference.

Population trends and policies

In accordance with a recommendation of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Population Commission his biennial report monitoring population trends and policies;<sup>(5)</sup> subsequently, the Commission requested him to prepare an addendum to that report.<sup>(6)</sup>

The report said that the world population stood at 4.5 billion in 1980 and was projected to reach 6.1 billion in the year 2000. The rate of growth had declined from a peak of 2.1 per cent at the end of the 1960s to 1.7 per cent at the beginning of the 1980s. Two components of natural increase, mortality and natality, had changed markedly over the preceding 10 years. The expectation of life at birth increased by almost four years to 58.9 at the beginning of the 1980s although life expectancy in the developed regions was 16 years higher than in developing ones. The decline in fertility which began in the early 1960s had spread to many developing countries where the total fertility rate diminished by almost 26 per cent since the early 1970s to a little more than four births per woman in the early 1980s. Excluding China, however, where the decrease was reported to be 54 per cent, the decline in developing countries between 1970 and 1980 was no more than 15 per cent.

The report also gave trends in world and regional population growth, mortality, fertility, contraception, urbanization, international migration, age structure and interrelationships between population, resources, the environment and development and described Government perceptions and policies relating to population growth, mortality and morbidity, fertility, internal migration, and international migration. An annex showed changes in selected demographic indicators by level of development and region from 1970 to 2025 as assessed in 1982.

The addendum<sup>(6)</sup> updated demographic trends showing that analysis of the data from 35 recent censuses indicated that the gradual slow-down of global population growth was still holding—estimated at 1.65 per cent per year compared to 2.0 per cent during the 1960s.

A section of the report<sup>(5)</sup> was devoted to an appraisal of demographic perceptions and policies of Members of the United Nations system (168 countries as at 1 July 1983) based mainly on data from a fifth inquiry among Governments, to which 109 countries had responded by 15 September 1983. The report on that inquiry among Governments,<sup>(7)</sup> which was carried out as a contribution towards the continuous monitoring of population trends and policies as called for in the 1974 Plan of Action<sup>(2)</sup> and as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1981,<sup>(8)</sup> was also before the Commission.

In March 1984, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, a summary and conclusions<sup>(9)</sup> of the biennial report on the world population situation in 1984.<sup>(5)</sup>

UN Population Award

On 3 October 1984, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report by the UNFPA Executive Director describing activities related to the United Nations Population Award for 1984.<sup>(10)</sup>

The Committee for the Award had received 35 nominations, which was fewer than in 1983 because it had decided to limit each nominator to one nomination, instead of allowing multiple ones. It held four meetings in January and February 1984 and selected two laureates: Dr. Carmen A. Miro, a demographer from Panama who had helped to create and develop a variety of Latin American population institutions; and Dr. Sheldon J. Segal of the United States, a leader in contraceptive development and family planning promotion. The 1984 Award was presented to the laureates by the Secretary-General at a ceremony held at Mexico City on 13 August, in conjunction with the Population Conference.

The balance of the trust fund for the award stood at $412,266 at the beginning of 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 39/440.

Report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities on the United Nations Population Award and Trust Fund

Chapter XV

Health and human resources

Health conditions in 1984 continued to be very poor in large parts of the developing world. Malnutrition and improper sanitation and water supply accounted for high incidences of diseases and mortality rates, and much remained to be done to improve primary health care and availability of medication.

At least 350 million of some 500 million disabled persons throughout the world were reportedly living in areas where disability services were inadequate or unavailable. In November, the General Assembly called upon Member States and other donors to contribute to the United Nations trust fund for the disabled persons, and requested the Secretary-General to convene in 1987 a meeting of experts to evaluate the progress of the United Nations Decade for Disabled Persons (1983-1992) (resolution 39/26).

In December, the Assembly stressed the importance of training qualified national personnel for the social and economic development of developing countries (resolution 39/219). It welcomed the continuing emphasis of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) on economic and social training and research (39/178), and requested the preparation of a comprehensive study on UNITAR activities, funding and future role (39/177).

The Assembly noted the advance made by the United Nations University in its activities and emphasized the University's continuing need to strengthen the capacity of existing scholarly and scientific institutions in developing countries (39/179).

Topics related to this chapter. Operational activities for development: skilled workers. Food: food problems; food aid. Science and technology: brain drain. Environment: protection against harmful products. Human rights: human rights of disabled persons. Children: UNICEF programmes by sector.

In an April 1984 report on the social aspects of development (see Chapter XIII of this section),<sup>(1)</sup> submitted in response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that, despite improvement in the past decades, health conditions remained very poor in large parts of the developing world, with high disparities in health conditions among social groups even increasing in those countries affected by economic recession. In the mean time, international efforts, such as immunization campaigns or safe water supply, continued with the support of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the World Health Organization (WHO).

Current projections on mortality rates indicated that the target of a minimum life expectancy of 60 years by the year 2000 would not be achieved in 54 developing countries—a majority of them African. Infant mortality was expected to remain above 50 per 1,000 in 71 developing countries. The high mortality rates were associated with a high incidence of diseases endemic in areas affected by malnutrition and improper sanitation and water supply.

Six major communicable diseases—diphtheria, whooping cough, tetanus, poliomyelitis, measles and tuberculosis—caused the deaths of some 5 million children annually in the developing world (1 million in Africa), and crippled, blinded or caused mental damage to perhaps 5 million more. An expanded programme of immunization against the six major communicable diseases, launched by WHO in 1974 to reach all children by 1990, needed acceleration to achieve its goal.

In view of an alarming increase over the past decade in the incidence of malaria, trypanosomiasis and schistosomiasis, WHO had launched a Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases; research by the world scientific community and the pharmaceutical industry had been insufficient, and current control methods frequently were inadequate or too costly and cumbersome for widespread use.

In developing countries, diarrhoeal diseases—transmitted by faecal contamination of soil, food and water—were among the leading causes of death among children. Further mobilization of domestic and international resources was needed to provide an ample supply of potable water and adequate sanitation in order to control such diseases.

Severe mental illness was considered to affect some 40 million people in the world; at least twice that many were seriously disabled by drug dependence, alcohol-related problems, mental retardation and organic disorders of the nervous system.

While Governments of most developing countries had reviewed their development strategies to provide greater support for primary health care programmes, total public capital and operating expenditures per capita for health in such countries ranged around 2 or 3 per cent of their gross national product. A substantial proportion of those extremely limited resources was spent for curative rather than preventive health efforts, in fixed investments (hospitals, dispensaries), in maintaining routine services and paying salaries. The recent slow-down of overall external economic assistance had further impaired the capacity of many developing countries to implement their health programmes.

Efforts continued to be made for improving the availability and utilization of drugs, maximizing the use of limited manpower and financial resources, and promoting the production and distribution of effective drugs of acceptable quality at the least possible cost.

While a broad base of inexpensively trained, less skilled personnel at the community level was lacking, there had been excessive investment in training programmes for medical students and doctors who required sophisticated facilities and equipment. WHO, which estimated that there were 1,000 medical personnel per 100,000 inhabitants in the developed countries and 200 per 100,000 in developing countries, currently recommended a review of the functions of different types of health personnel in order to improve the accessibility of health services for the less privileged social groups.

Global strategy

By a June 1984 note<sup>(3)</sup> to the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General reported that the thirty-seventh World Health Assembly (Geneva, 7-17 May 1984) considered the report of the WHO Executive Board on progress made in implementing the Global Strategy for Health for All by the Year 2000,<sup>(4)</sup> and had adopted three resolutions relating to the Strategy—health for all, technical co-operation among developing countries in support of that goal and monitoring progress.

In decision 1984/176, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Disabled persons

Of an estimated 500 million physically, mentally or sensorially disabled persons in the world, at least 350 million were living in areas where services were insufficient or unavailable, in particular in the rural parts of developing countries and among the poorest social groups, the Secretary-General mentioned in his April 1984 report on social aspects of development.<sup>(1)</sup> An average of 20 to 25 per cent of the population of developing countries was estimated to be affected by disability (see Chapter XIII of this section).

While the situation of disabled persons in developing countries remained difficult and precarious, conditions for progress had improved with the visibility of the problem, the social awareness that disability did not necessarily mean marginalization, and the attitudes of the disabled themselves in promoting their rights. The 1981 International Year of Disabled Persons (IYDP)<sup>(5)</sup> had helped establish national committees, and many Governments had drawn up national plans or taken measures to facilitate the participation of disabled persons in life and society in accordance with the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons.<sup>(6)</sup> Further, there was a growing tendency to replace institutionalized treatment with programmes that helped families and communities to care for the disabled in their normal social environment.

Implementation of the Programme of Action

UN activities

The second inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992) (Vienna, Austria, 3 and 4 September 1984)<sup>(7)</sup>—convened following a 1983 proposal<sup>(8)</sup> of the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC)—recommended the adoption of a framework, proposed by the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, for monitoring the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons.<sup>(6)</sup> The framework dealt with: community-based rehabilitation, equalization of opportunities, government responsibility, socio-economic factors relating to disability, and international co-operation. The inter-agency meeting further agreed that interorganizational task forces should be established on public education, disability concepts, human resources development, technical aids and regional rehabilitation programmes, and that the Council of World Organizations Interested in the Handicapped as well as Disabled Peoples' International should be invited to participate in them.

Among other recommendations of the meeting were the strengthening of the United Nations Trust Fund, making the inter-agency meetings on disability as permanent arrangements, and holding a further session at Vienna in 1985 before that year's first regular session of the Economic and Social Council.

In response to a 1982 General Assembly request,<sup>(9)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly in October 1984<sup>(10)</sup> on the implementation by the United Nations system of the World Programme of Action. He noted, among other things, that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, which the Programme had designated as the focal point for co-ordinating and monitoring its implementation, was assisting requesting Governments in designing national disability policies and programmes and data-collection operations. The Centre also conducted studies on legislation aimed at equalizing opportunities for disabled persons, and on the causes and consequences of disability. Regional economic commissions as well as specialized agencies conducted programmes within their areas of competence to promote disability prevention and rehabilitation of the disabled.

In resolution 1984/26, the Economic and Social Council encouraged the Secretary-General to obtain the views of United Nations bodies and other organizations on ways to prevent human rights violations which might cause disabilities (see Chapter XVIII of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 39/26 without vote.

United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and 37/53 of 3 December 1982 by which, inter alia, it proclaimed the period 1983-1992 United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons as a long-term plan of action,

Recalling its resolution 38/28 of 22 November 1983, in which it recognized the desirability of the continuation of the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons throughout the Decade,

Noting Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/19 of 26 May 1983, in which the Secretary-General was requested to monitor and support the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons by enlisting extrabudgetary resources,

Noting with satisfaction Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/31 of 12 March 1984 and the draft resolution of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, concerning violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms and disability, and the appointment of a special rapporteur to study this issue in collaboration with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat,

Noting with great appreciation the generous voluntary contributions and pledges made by Governments and other donors to the Trust Fund, as well as other voluntary contributions to support activities concerning disabled persons,

Noting also with appreciation the results achieved so far through funding from the Trust Fund during the International Year of Disabled Persons and its follow-up activities, as well as through other voluntary contributions,

Desirous of ensuring effective implementation of the World Programme of Action, and aware that, if this is to be achieved, Member States, organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and organizations of disabled persons must be encouraged to continue the activities already undertaken and to initiate new programmes and activities,

Stressing that the primary responsibility for the realization of the objectives of the World Programme of Action rests with individual countries and that international action should be directed towards assisting and supporting national efforts in this regard,

Noting the emergence of organizations of disabled persons in all parts of the world and their importance to the implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Convinced that high priority must continue to be assigned to the planning, management and financing of the activities and programmes relating to the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Convinced that the Decade will give a meaningful and forceful impetus to the implementation of the World Programme of Action and to a broader understanding of its importance,

Concerned that developing countries are experiencing increasing difficulties in mobilizing adequate resources for meeting pressing needs in the field of disability prevention, rehabilitation and equalization of opportunities for the millions of persons with disabilities, particularly in the face of pressing demands from other high-priority sectors concerned with basic needs,

Recalling that in paragraph 157 of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons it is stated that the Trust Fund should be used to meet requests for assistance from developing countries and organizations of disabled persons and to further the implementation of the World Programme of Action and, in paragraph 158, it is indicated that there is a need to increase the flow of resources to developing countries to implement the objectives of the World Programme of Action, and that, therefore, the Secretary-General should explore new ways and means of raising funds and take the necessary follow-up measures for mobilizing resources, and that voluntary contributions from Governments and from private sources should be encouraged,

Stressing the importance of an effective system for collection and dissemination of technical information on disability,

Stressing further the importance of public information and education activities in the field of prevention, rehabilitation and equalization of opportunities,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,

1. Expresses its appreciation to all Member States which elaborated national policies and programmes for the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, and urges those which have not yet formulated such programmes to do so;

2. Notes with appreciation the activities relating to the implementation of the World Programme of Action undertaken by the United Nations system and by relevant non-governmental organizations;

4. Invites Member States as a matter of priority to reinforce or establish national committees or similar bodies for the Decade at the highest level with participation of organizations of disabled persons to plan, co-ordinate and encourage the execution of activities in support of the objectives of the Decade at the national and local levels;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to elaborate the guidelines for priority actions during the Decade based on his report to the current session and on the replies received from Member States and organizations including those of disabled persons;

6. Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General strengthen the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat through a reallocation of existing resources to enable the Centre to continue to serve as the focal point in the field of disability, particularly for purposes of paragraph 5 above;

7. Requests the Secretary-General and relevant organizations of the United Nations system to develop specific programmes to publicize the Decade and the goals of the World Programme of Action, and invites Member States and non-governmental organizations to assist in this undertaking;

8. Invites Member States, organizations of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations to make available resources in the form of funds and personnel for the purpose of planning, managing and financing the Decade at the national, regional and interregional levels;

9. Urges all organizations of the United Nations system to take into consideration the interests of disabled persons as well as the effective implementation of the World Programme of Action in the pursuance of their overall objectives in their respective areas of competence;

10. Decides that, pending completion of the elaboration and the adoption of the guidelines referred to in paragraph 5 above, the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons should continue to support activities in accordance with paragraph 157 of the World Programme of Action and paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 38/28;

11. Calls upon Member States and other donors to continue to contribute generously to the Trust Fund;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to promote the recruitment of more disabled persons within the United Nations system;

13. Again requests the Secretary-General to convene in 1987 a meeting of experts, consisting largely of disabled persons, to evaluate progress at the mid-point of the Decade and to prepare a report that would enable him to help the General Assembly at its forty-second session to evaluate the implementation of the World Programme of Action, as provided for in paragraph 3 of resolution 37/52;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution, including detailed information on the activities relating to the Trust Fund, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session and decides to include in the provisional agenda of that session an item entitled "Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons".

Employment of disabled persons by the UN

In 1984, the Secretary-General recommended that United Nations organizations encourage the employment of disabled persons system-wide and make their facilities totally barrier-free.<sup>(10)</sup> He also recommended that the ACC policy statement on the employment of disabled persons<sup>(11)</sup> be applied to all United Nations organizations as a guideline for recruitment and provision of services to the disabled.

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/26, requested the Secretary-General to promote the recruitment of more disabled persons within the United Nations system.

National action

Several Member States reported the adoption of national disability plans, and measures taken covered legislation, education, employment, rehabilitation, prevention, bilateral technical co-operation, housing and accessibility, recreation, and data collection aimed at the equalization of opportunities.<sup>(9)</sup> Following the proclamation of the 1981 IYDP, approximately 45 countries had collected benchmark data on the disabled; some 15 others planned similar action.

Most of the national committees set up during IYDP were reported to be still functioning. Governments had been encouraged to proclaim national days for the disabled, and Finland, Haiti and Japan stated that such days had been observed.

In response to a May 1983 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted, in November 1984, a progress report<sup>(13)</sup> on national experiences in implementing the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and on developing criteria for monitoring the Programme. He reported that inter-agency consultations (see above) had been held, and would continue, to develop the monitoring procedures.

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/26, urged Member States to reinforce or establish national committees for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons and requested the Secretary-General to elaborate the guidelines for priority actions during the Decade.

NGO activities

Several international non-governmental organizations (NGOs) of and for disabled persons reported on their activities.<sup>(10)</sup> Among them, Disabled Peoples' International—founded in 1981 with partial support from the United Nations Trust Fund for IYDP—provided expertise, resources and training to assist disabled persons in acquiring self-help skills. It also sponsored leadership training seminars at Dakar, Senegal; at Bangkok, Thailand; and in Barbados. The World Federation for Mental Health and the International League of Societies for Persons with Mental Handicaps expressed interest in implementing the goals of the World Programme of Action.

By resolution 39/26, the General Assembly noted with appreciation the activities undertaken by NGOs, and urged Member States to co-operate with them in attaining the World Programme's objectives.

Trust Fund for the Year

UN Trust Fund

In 1984, the United Nations Trust Fund for IYDP had a total income of $260,021 and expenditures of $321,584. Contributions to the Trust Fund were made by Austria ($7,203), France ($20,497), Greece ($5,000), Saudi Arabia ($45,200) and Senegal ($1,699).

Since its inception, the Trust Fund had provided financial support in areas such as advisory and consultative services, cultural activities and community programmes, and support services, including training courses, seminars and workshops.

The Secretary-General recommended in 1984<sup>(11)</sup> that the Trust Fund be renamed United Nations Fund for Disability, which would more accurately reflect the need to utilize its resources for activities under the World Programme of Action, particularly during the Decade, as recommended by the General Assembly in 1983.<sup>(14)</sup> The Trust Fund would be classified as a general-purpose trust fund in accordance with United Nations rules and procedures.

The second inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons<sup>(7)</sup> also took note of the suggestions made by the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs for a new name, new terms of reference and new institutional arrangements for the Trust Fund.

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/26, decided that, pending adoption of new guidelines, the Trust Fund should continue to support activities as previously agreed; it called on Member States and other donors to contribute generously to the Fund.

Trust Fund for Norway's contribution to the International Year

In 1984, the income of the Trust Fund for Norway's Contribution to the International Year of Disabled Persons totalled $97,822; expenditures totalled $98,103.

Nutrition

In its annual overview report for 1983/84, issued in May 1984,<sup>(15)</sup> ACC discussed the work of its Sub-Committee on Nutrition in carrying out the inter-agency work (see Chapter XXIV of this section).

Three priority areas for co-ordinated action—Africa's food and nutrition problems, a co-ordinated country-level approach to nutrition activities, and control of vitamin A and iodine deficiencies—were identified by the Sub-Committee and endorsed by the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) and ACC at its first regular session of 1984. The Sub-Committee's ongoing efforts included supporting the inclusion of nutritional considerations in the projects of regional development banks and international agricultural research centres; identifying research priorities; determining the most effective use of food aid for the greatest nutritional impact; linking at the country level of inputs from individual United Nations agencies; and examining primary health care systems as a vehicle for improving nutrition.

The Sub-Committee, at its tenth session (Rome, Italy, 5-9 March),<sup>(16)</sup> discussed its work programme and decided, among other things, that its Advisory Group on Nutrition would continue to support long-term research on nutrition activities within primary health care programmes; clarify problems associated with energy in nutrition; and assist in designing the country-level examination of problems, opportunities and co-ordinating mechanisms in nutrition.

The United Nations University<sup>(17)</sup> (see below) reported that it had conducted activities relating to: the food-energy nexus, focusing on the linkages between food and energy and their implications for policy options and integrated development planning, and food, nutrition, biotechnology and poverty, dealing with the social and economic effects of inadequate nutrition and the practical effects of existing health-care and agricultural policies on nutrition.

Human resources

Human resources development

The General Assembly, in a 1982 resolution on the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries,<sup>(1)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to prepare and distribute periodic and analytical surveys of national reports on experiences in human resources development and international co-operation in training, and to consult with Member States and the United Nations system on possible elements of general guidelines on principles, objectives and structures of education and training of such personnel.

In 1984, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), at its thirty-first session,<sup>(2)</sup> considered a May report by the UNDP Administrator,<sup>(3)</sup> in which he stated that UNDP would require additional resources of some $100,000 to comply with the request made by the Secretary-General under the 1982 Assembly resolution to collect information and consult on guidelines.

By a June note,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General drew the attention of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to the report of the UNDP Administrator.

On 29 June, the UNDP Governing Council requested the UNDP Administrator to inform the Secretary-General that UNDP could not implement the 1982 Assembly request from its available resources.<sup>(5)</sup>

Recommendations on co-operation regarding vocational training and human resources development were made by the Third Conference of Ministers of Labour of Non-Aligned Countries and Other Developing Countries (Managua, Nicaragua, 10-12 May 1984).<sup>(6)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 39/219 without vote.

Role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Referring to its resolutions 33/135 of 19 December 1978, 35/80 of 5 December 1980 and 37/228 of 20 December 1982 on the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries,

Referring also to its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Desiring to promote full implementation of the provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade concerning the important role of qualified national personnel in the achievement of the development goals of the developing countries,

Noting with regret that the report on the implementation of resolution 37/228, including possible elements of general guidelines on principles, objectives and structures of education and training of personnel of developing countries, has not yet been prepared,

1. Reaffirms the importance of implementing the provisions of its resolution 37/228;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in the implementation of that resolution, to consult as soon as possible with the Governments of Member States on their experience in establishing and developing their systems of training qualified national personnel, particularly on the principles, objectives and structures of those systems;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to compile and summarize the information provided by the Governments and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/219

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/791) without vote, 10 December (meeting 58); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.124), based on informal consultations on 18-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.85/Rev.1); agenda item 81.

UN Institute for Training and Research

Activities of UNITAR

The activities of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), an autonomous organization within the United Nations system, were described by its Executive Director in reports to the General Assembly for the periods 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984<sup>(7)</sup> and 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1986.<sup>(8)</sup>

In 1984, the UNITAR Board of Trustees (twenty-second session, New York, 19-23 March) approved the UNITAR draft work programme for 1984-1985, discussed long-term financing arrangements (see below) and adopted the budget for 1984.

Stressing that the UNITAR programme should deal with the issues of most concern to Member States, the Board suggested that: research projects could deal with the effectiveness of the United Nations in maintaining peace and security, and the information revolution and its impact on third world countries; training projects might include advising the organizations of the United Nations system on the quality of their training programmes, and studying the establishment by UNITAR of a development-oriented staff training institution for national and international organizations involved in development co-operation with third world countries; and a UNITAR documentation centre on world issues could be created.

The UNITAR Executive Director, in a November statement before the Assembly's Second Committee, said there was a general lack of awareness of the unique role of UNITAR in enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations through training and research.

Among the training courses conducted by UNITAR in 1984 were seminars for new members of permanent missions (New York, 24-27 January; Geneva, 12-16 November); a course on the drafting of treaties, resolutions and other international instruments (New York, 9-13 and 18 April); a seminar on trade and economic relations between countries having different economic and social systems (Geneva, 3 and 4 September); and a workshop on international negotiation (New York, 11-14 September). Training for other government officials included: a United Nations/UNITAR fellowship programme in international law (The Hague, Netherlands, 2 July-10 August) and a regional training and refresher course in international law for Africa (Yaoundé, Cameroon, 12-24 November).

In response to ad hoc requests, UNITAR provided: a training course on international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy for junior diplomats from French-speaking African countries (Paris/Geneva/Brussels/Berlin/Bonn, 16 April-15 June); training for conference officers from Kuwait (Geneva, 8-25 May); basic diplomatic training for government officials from Gabon (Libreville, 1 July-27 September) and from Namibia (Geneva/New York, 3 August-2 November); and briefing seminars on multilateral diplomacy through the United Nations for junior diplomats from Saudi Arabia (New York, 17-20 September).

With financial support from the Italian Government, UNITAR established in 1984 an International Centre for Small Energy Resources at Rome to conduct research on renewable as well as non-renewable energy resources.

Other research activities included: an evaluation of United Nations efforts to alleviate absolute poverty; a seminar on strategies for the future of Asia (Bangkok, Thailand, January); a workshop on population movements within the English-speaking Caribbean (Saint Vincent, February); a first international conference on the development of shallow oil and gas resources (Oklahoma, United States, 25 July-3 August); and a symposium on the urban population explosion (Geneva, November).

Among the publications issued by UNITAR during the year were African and Arab Co-operation for Development, Co-operation in the 1980s: Principles and Prospects, The Prevention of Nuclear War: A United States Approach, World Leadership and International Development, and Worlds Apart: Technology and North-South Relations in the Global Economy.

An analytical study, The Principle of Participatory Equality of Developing Countries in International Economic Relations, was also published. The Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly containing a summary and outline of the study.<sup>(9)</sup>

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/178 without vote.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/177 of 19 December 1983 on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,

Having considered the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, covering the period from 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984, and his introductory statement of 9 November 1984,

Recalling the important role assigned to the Institute for the purpose of enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in achieving its major objectives, in particular in the maintenance of peace and security and the promotion of economic and social development,

Recalling also the need for the Institute to continue to evolve clear, long-term priorities in the training and research programmes of the Institute that would emphasize its role in the promotion and strengthening of the development process,

Noting with satisfaction the emphasis being placed by the Institute on the revitalization of its programme, the dissemination of the results of its research and the improvement of its management, and on the mobilization of adequate resources to enable it to perform its functions satisfactorily,

Sharing the concern of the Executive Director that only a small number of States are contributing to the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, as well as his concern over the inadequacy of the resources available to the Institute for its work,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and of the measures taken in 1984 to improve the management and the budgeting process of the Institute;

2. Also takes note of the priorities and work programme for the biennium 1984-1985 approved by the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research;

3. Welcomes the continuing emphasis of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on economic and social training and research and the inclusion of specific projects on the problems that exist in the areas identified by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions, in the relevant decisions adopted at its twenty-ninth and subsequent sessions, and in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, taking into consideration the statements on the programme of work of the Institute made at the current session;

4. Takes note of the clarification provided by the Executive Director on the mandate and the future role of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research as they relate to the mandates and roles of other institutions active in the Institute's field of competence, and notes with satisfaction the efforts being made to strengthen co-operation with those institutions;

5. Calls upon all States that have not yet contributed to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to do so, and urges once again all donor countries, especially those that are not contributing at a level commensurate with their capacity, to increase their voluntary contributions in order to meet the urgent financial needs of the Institute during the biennium 1984-1985;

6. Again requests all States to continue to announce their contributions to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research early and, if possible, not later than the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, and to speed up the payment of their voluntary contributions to the Institute.

Finances of UNITAR

Income and expenditures in 1984

As at 31 December 1984,<sup>(10)</sup> UNITAR's General Fund income totalled $2,412,845 and expenditures $2,345,140. The income of the Special Purpose Grants Fund was $1,773,226, and expenditures $1,795,574.

In December, the General Assembly called on States that had not yet contributed to UNITAR to do so and urged donor countries to increase their contributions to meet the urgent financial needs during 1984-1985 (resolution 39/178).

Accounts for 1983

As at 31 December 1983,<sup>(11)</sup> the General Fund income was $2,051,137 and expenditures $3,016,108, a deficit of $964,971. The income of the Special Purpose Grants Fund totalled $920,147 and expenditures $2,071,486, a deficit of $1,151,339.

In December 1983, the General Assembly approved, exceptionally, an advance of $886,000 to cover the deficit in the Institute's 1983 budget.<sup>(12)</sup> The Board of Auditors—which, in 1984, examined UNITAR's financial report for 1983—noted the need for effective budgetary control, and recommended compliance with the financial rules for incurring expenditures, as well as more appropriate reviews of the status of allotments reports. It added that the Administration had agreed to take the necessary measures.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)<sup>(13)</sup> had no comments on the Board of Auditors' report on UNITAR's financial statement.

By resolution 39/66, the Assembly accepted the UNITAR financial report and audited financial statement for the period ended 31 December 1983.

Long-term financing

UNITAR Board of Trustees consideration. In an effort to avoid budget deficits, the UNITAR Executive Director submitted to the UNITAR Board of Trustees<sup>(7)</sup> a balanced budget for 1984, eliminating from the work programme financed by the General Fund most of the research activities and restricting other expenses. The Executive Director stressed the importance of an urgent decision by the Assembly that would place the Institute's long-term financing on a more predictable, assured and continuous basis, as called for in 1982.<sup>(13)</sup>

The Board of Trustees reaffirmed in 1984 that the minimum budgetary level required for a training and research programme for 1984-1985 was $3 million per year, and concluded that the existing pattern of annual contributions gave no promise of meeting minimal needs. It therefore approved three methods proposed by the Executive Director for long-term financing: setting up of a reserve fund of $15 million through grants and soft loans, adoption of a replenishment system under which a target amount would be subscribed to by a large group of contributors, and establishment of an endowment fund of at least $50 million. The Board indicated its preference for an endowment fund, and recommended that the Secretary-General take up personally with Governments his conviction as to the essential role of UNITAR and the necessity of ensuring its long-term financing.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1984 report on long-term financing arrangements for UNITAR,<sup>(14)</sup> submitted to the General Assembly in response to its 1982 request,<sup>(15)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that UNITAR's training and research activities helped improve the functioning of multilateral institutions and diplomacy, and that he remained convinced of the validity of the reasons which had led to the establishment of UNITAR in 1965.<sup>(16)</sup> He reported that the consultations he had held with Governments on the funding proposal by the UNITAR Board of Trustees indicated that they were not in a position to implement any of the three proposals. It was up to the Assembly, therefore, to decide on measures that would ensure the long-term financial viability of UNITAR; in the absence of agreement on such measures, it would be necessary to close down the Institute.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/177 by recorded vote.

Long-term financing and the future role of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 37/142 of 17 December 1982 and 38/177 of 19 December 1983, in which it called upon the Secretary-General to submit a report on long-term financing arrangements for the United Nations Institute for Training and Research which would place its financing on a more predictable, assured and continuous basis,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the statements made by the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on 9 and 14 November 1984 on the financial difficulties of the Institute,

Taking note of the priorities and work programme for the biennium 1984-1985 approved by the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,

Noting with concern that the 1984 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held on 7 and 8 November 1984, was unable to provide the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research during 1985 with the level of resources considered by the Board of Trustees of the Institute as the minimum required to maintain the Institute as a viable entity,

Acknowledging with regret that the system of voluntary contributions, instituted to provide resources for the operation of the Institute, has thus far failed fully to guarantee the minimum level of resources needed by the Institute for its General Fund,

Noting with regret that the three options for long-term financing arrangements for the Institute recommended by the Board of Trustees, namely, the setting up of a reserve fund, the adoption of a replenishment system and the establishment of an endowment fund, have not been found acceptable by the major contributors,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report;
2. Endorses the view of the Secretary-General about the continuing importance of the role of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive study on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, its activities in training and research, its funding and its future role, keeping in mind related activities within the United Nations system and the relevant provisions of the Statute of the Institute, in order to determine the most effective manner of discharging those functions;
4. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit his report, together with the comments of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research thereon, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;
5. Decides to grant the United Nations Institute for Training and Research up to $1.5 million, on an exceptional basis, to supplement the funds raised through voluntary contributions for the General Fund of the Institute, in order to enable the Institute to carry out a minimum training and research programme in 1985 at a level to be decided by the Board of Trustees of the Institute at its forthcoming special session, but not exceeding $3 million;
6. Requests that the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and, if it agrees, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, examine urgently the programme and budget proposals of the Institute for 1985, with a view to obtaining savings in its budget;

7. Decides to take a decision at its fortieth session on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General on the future, programmes and funding arrangements of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research.

General Assembly resolution 39/177

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 127-10-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/792) by recorded vote (101-10-12), 10 December (meeting 58); 4-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.66/Rev.1); agenda item 82 (a).
Sponsors: Bangladesh, Canada, Guinea-Bissau, Pakistan.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/39/828; S-G, A/C.2/39/L.105, A/C.5/39/96.
Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 38-41, 45, 47, 58; 5th Committee 49; plenary 103.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Colombia, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Japan, Luxembourg, Romania, United Kingdom.

As regards budgetary implications of the text, ACABQ noted that preparation of the envisaged study would require four work-months of a high-level consultant at a cost of $30,000 in fees and travel but, since that requirement would be covered under the provisions for consultants in the programme budget, no additional funds would be required.

Before taking action on the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraph 5 by a separate recorded vote of 103 to 15, with 25 abstentions; subsequently, the Lao People's Democratic Republic said it had intended to abstain. The Second Committee had approved the paragraph by a recorded vote of 83 to 15, with 23 abstentions.

In explanation of vote on the paragraph, Belgium, recalling that the Assembly had envisioned UNITAR to be financed by voluntary contributions, cautioned that adopting the text might lead to new mandatory contributions and reduce voluntary contributions. The United States declared that if the Assembly approved the text, it might reduce its voluntary contribution up to the amount of its share of the regular-budget cost of the proposed grant—a statement which it repeated in the Fifth Committee. Cameroon held that UNITAR was being punished for a crime it had not committed; if the statute under which UNITAR was to be financed by voluntary contributions had been complied with, there would have been no request for funds from the regular budget.

On the resolution as a whole, the Ukrainian SSR, speaking on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, expressed opposition to financial subsidies from the regular budget and any other proposals to change the voluntary financing of the Institute. Similarly, Australia, Japan and the United Kingdom voted against paragraph 5 and abstained on the draft as a whole because they believed that voluntarily funded institutions should not receive supplementary funding from the regular budget. Agreeing that UNITAR should continue to be financed voluntarily, France abstained in both votes.

While abstaining on paragraph 5, Argentina, Denmark, Italy and the Netherlands voted for the text because of their support for and interest in UNITAR. Norway also supported the resolution with the understanding that the Assembly would consider in 1985 all aspects of UNITAR's activities and its future.

In the Fifth Committee, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States reiterated their opposition concerning UNITAR's funding and felt that UNITAR's work programme should be kept within its resources.

The Fifth Committee adopted—by a recorded vote of 60 to 15, with 17 abstentions—a proposal by its Chairman informing the Assembly that, should it adopt the revised draft, an additional appropriation of $1.5 million would be required under the programme budget for 1984-1985. Sweden, while supporting that proposal, expressed concern over the fact that the Institute would receive a grant for the third time in four years.

UN University

Activities of the University

In 1984, the United Nations University (UNU), an autonomous academic institution within the United Nations framework, made progress in setting up its research and training centres, signing a formal Agreement with Finland on the World Institute for Development Economics Research (WIDER), and initialing a draft Memorandum of Understanding with the Ivory Coast on the Institute for Natural Resources in Africa.<sup>(17)</sup> A proposal to establish in Japan an institute of advanced studies was endorsed by the UNU Council.

Thirty-five projects and some 50 subprojects were in operation during the year under the five themes of UNU's medium-term perspective (1982-1987),<sup>(18)</sup> which dealt with: peace, security, conflict resolution and global transformation; the global economy; hunger, poverty, resources and the environment; human and social development and the coexistence of peoples, cultures and social systems; and science and technology and their social and ethical implications.

The University continued to expand its involvement in activities of international concern. It sponsored a symposium on conditions essential for maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes (The Hague, Netherlands, March) and a symposium on the science and praxis of complexity (Montpellier, France, May). Among the meetings it co-sponsored were: the North-South Roundtable of the Society for International Development (Santiago, Chile, February); the fourth annual lecture in a Global Lecture Series on peace and development (Tokyo, March); and a workshop on the integration of emerging and traditional technologies, organized by the Japanese Association for Promotion of International Co-operation (Tokyo, April). It participated, among others, in a joint meeting—at Rome, Italy, in January—of the Independent Commission on International Development Issues (Brandt Commission) and the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues (Palme Commission).

The core group of the Special Committee on Africa project held its first planning meeting at Nairobi, Kenya, in August; implementation of the project would begin with a series of three symposia, starting in 1985.

The University's new planning process was broadened in April, to include programme directors, project co-ordinators, University consultants and a former and a present Fellow; the responsibility for training was assigned to the Global Learning Division. In January 1984, the University welcomed its first Visiting Scholar, Kenneth Boulding.

Progress was made in preparatory work for the University's permanent headquarters, with the allocation of a budgetary provision for 1984-1985 for planning activities, including an overall study of architectural needs and the collection of information for basic design.

Institutions associated with UNU numbered 37. The University had over 100 research and training units carrying out its work in more than 60 countries. The number of University Fellows in training was about 70; as at November 1984, about 450 Fellows had completed training.

By a decision adopted on 18 October 1984, the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, among other things, urged UNU to secure greater diversity in the choice of co-operating institutions and countries.

Among the University's publications in 1984 were Development as Social Transformation: Reflections on the Global Problématique; Energy and Agriculture: Their Interacting Futures; Food as a Human Right; In Search of Peace in the Nuclear Age; Maintaining Outer Space for Peaceful Purposes; Social, Economic and Institutional Aspects of Agro-Forestry; The Transformation of the World Economy and Society (vol. 2); Transforming the World Economy: Nine Critical Essays on the New International Economic Order; and Visions of Desirable Societies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/179 without vote.

United Nations University

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2951(XXVII) of 11 December 1972, 3081(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3313(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, 3439(XXX) of 9 December 1975, 31/117 and 31/118 of 16 December 1976, 32/54 of 8 December 1977, 33/108 of 18 December 1978, 34/112 of 14 December 1979, 35/54 of 5 December 1980, 36/45 of 19 November 1981, 37/143 of 17 December 1982 and 38/178 of 19 December 1983,

Having considered the report of the Council of the United Nations University on the work of the University,

Noting with appreciation the continuing interest of the Government of Japan in, and its support for, the University in regard to the construction of a permanent headquarters building,

Noting decision 5.2.1 adopted on 18 October 1984 by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its one hundred and twentieth session,

1. Notes with satisfaction, as the United Nations University reaches the middle of its medium-term perspective (1982-1987), the progress achieved by the University in realizing the main objectives set forth in the perspective, namely, developing and implementing the University programme focused on five themes relevant to the pressing global problems of human survival, development and welfare that are also the concerns of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, and embarking on a new phase of institutional development, with emphasis on establishing the University's own research and training bases as called for in its Charter;

2. Welcomes the reports of external evaluation teams indicating the positive results of the United Nations University's research, institutional relations and post-graduate training, particularly the advanced training of University Fellows who have returned to their home institutions, in collaboration with the University's associated and co-operating institutions in both developing and industrialized countries;

3. Welcomes also the progress made in setting up the World Institute for Development Economics Research, the United Nations University's first research and training institution, at Helsinki, and expresses its appreciation for the leading role and invaluable support of the Government of Finland in establishing the Institute by providing financial and other forms of support;

4. Notes with satisfaction the advance made towards establishing the proposed Institute for Natural Resources in Africa and an international programme in biotechnology in Venezuela;

5. Emphasizes the continuing need of the United Nations University to strengthen the capacity of existing scholarly and scientific institutions in developing countries;

6. Notes the need to further continue, expand and intensify co-operative activities of the United Nations University with the United Nations, its bodies and the specialized agencies, on the one hand, and with the international academic and scientific community, on the other, which enhance the responsiveness of the University to global issues and problems and bring its work into closer relation with the concerns of the United Nations system and the world academic community in regard to global issues and problems;

General Assembly resolution 39/179

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/C.2/39/2) without vote, 30 November (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.87), based on informal consultations on 20-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.58); agenda item 82 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 38-39, 45, 55; plenary 103.

Activities of the Council

The UNU Council met twice during 1984, holding its twenty-third session<sup>(17)</sup> at Oxford, United Kingdom, from 1 to 6 July, and its twenty-fourth session<sup>(18)</sup> in Tokyo from 10 to 14 December.

In July, the Council, among other things, reviewed the programmes of the University for the first half of the medium-term perspective, and approved a proposal to establish a programme of research and training in biotechnology at Caracas, Venezuela, and a research and training centre in Japan. It designated the following as associated institutions of UNU: Institute of Nutrition and Food Science of the University of Dhaka (Bangladesh); University of Guelph (Canada); Universidad de los Andes (Colombia); Addis Ababa University (Ethiopia); Institute for World Economics of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (Hungary); and Korea Advanced Institute of Science and Technology (Republic of Korea).

In December, the Council adopted the supplemental programme and budget for 1984-1985, and took note of progress reports on the permanent headquarters of the University and the report of the University for Peace. The Council's fourth colloquium on distance learning systems was held during the session to allow Council members to be involved in greater depth in the University's work.

Finances of the University

As at December 1984, the total pledges to the UNU Endowment and Operating Funds were $176 million, of which $137 million had been received. Expenditures amounted to $10.4 million for the 12-month period ending 31 October 1984. Planned expenditures for 1985 were set at $18.4 million.

Recognizing that UNU needed to intensify its fund-raising efforts to build up its Endowment and Operating Funds, the General Assembly, in resolution 39/179, appealed to Member States to contribute to them.

Accounts for 1982-1983

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions<sup>(13)</sup> had no comments on the Board of Auditors' report on the financial statements of UNU for 1982-1983.

In resolution 39/66, the General Assembly accepted the financial statements and the Board's report.

Chapter XVI

Environment

The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) was able to make scant headway against the rising tide of environmental destruction in 1984, according to the UNEP Executive Director. It undertook a global campaign to engender a better understanding of the central role of environmental issues in the broader economic and social context.

The Governing Council of UNEP held its twelfth session in 1984. After reviewing implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification from 1978 to 1984, the Council noted with great concern that desertification was continuing to spread, particularly in Africa; it proposed further measures to ameliorate the problem. By resolution 39/208, the General Assembly called on the international community, particularly the developed countries, to assist countries stricken by desertification and drought. The Economic and Social Council (resolution 1984/65) and the Assembly (resolution 39/168 A) urged increased assistance to those countries. The Assembly also emphasized the need to redouble efforts to combat the problem in the Sudano-Sahelian region (resolution 39/168 B). To develop a joint policy for combating desertification, the 21 countries affected held a regional Ministerial Conference in Senegal in July.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1984/72, urged the Assembly to expand the scope of work of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) to assist additional States to tackle desertification.

The Global Environmental Monitoring System of Earthwatch, the assessment arm of UNEP, continued to monitor renewable resources, climate, health, pollutants and oceans. A Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer was drafted. The International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals continued to expand its global information network. Draft guidelines were being developed for the management of hazardous wastes. Other UNEP activities included world climate impact studies, management of tropical forests and world soil resources, wildlife conservation, protection of the marine environment, and linkages between environment and development, industry, population and human settlements.

By resolution 39/229, the Assembly decided that a list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or not approved by Governments should be issued annually. By resolution 39/167, it regretted that no concrete measures had been taken to solve the problem of material remnants of war and requested the Secretary-General to assist countries affected in their efforts to detect and clear them.

Forty-eight new projects were approved by the Environment Fund in 1984; 53 projects were concluded. The Fund disbursed $17 million for programme activities; government contributions totalled $29.5 million.

Programme and finances of UNEP

---

The twelfth session of the Governing Council of UNEP was held at UNEP headquarters, Nairobi, Kenya, from 16 to 29 May 1984. The Council adopted 26 decisions on environmental and administrative matters.

Programme policy

On 28 May,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNEP Council took note of the reports of the UNEP Executive Director on emerging environmental issues<sup>(2)</sup> and on environmental events in 1983<sup>(3)</sup> and requested him to update annually the list of emerging issues; it found that air pollution in cities of developing countries and biotechnology should be taken into account when preparing UNEP's biennial programme budgets.

The Council decided that a comprehensive report on the state of the environment should be prepared every 10 years, the next such report to be submitted in 1992. It further decided that population and the environment and environmental aspects of emerging agricultural technology should be examined in the Executive Director's 1985 report.<sup>(4)</sup> The Council also took note of his intention to produce a final version of the state-of-the-environment report for 1984.<sup>(5)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted decision 1984/179 without vote.

Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its twelfth session

At its 49th plenary meeting, on 26 July 1984, the Council took note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its twelfth session and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session for consideration.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/179

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/145) without vote, 20 July (meeting 14); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 14.

Two draft resolutions concerning international co-operation on the environment were introduced in the First Committee and later withdrawn. By the first,<sup>(6)</sup> introduced by Norway on behalf of 18 nations, the Council would have welcomed the establishment of a Special Commission on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond (see below), and would have noted with concern the meagre pledges made to the UNEP Fund. By the other draft,<sup>(7)</sup> submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on the first, the Council would have recalled in the preamble that in a 1983 Assembly resolution<sup>(8)</sup> it had been stated that the continuing increase in the production, stockpiling and risk of use of weapons of mass destruction not only posed a major threat to the environment and even to life on earth, but also competed for limited resources that could be better used.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted decision 39/429 without vote.

Environment

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee:

(a) Took note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its twelfth session;

(b) Took note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment.<sup>(9)</sup>

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.9) without vote, 14 December (meeting 60); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 80 (//).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 37, 50, 54, 58, 60; plenary 103.

In the Committee, Norway submitted and subsequently withdrew a draft resolution on international co-operation in the field of the environment on behalf of 20 nations.<sup>(10)</sup> It would have had the Assembly welcome the establishment of the Special Commission on the Environmental Perspective; note with concern the status of government pledges to the UNEP Fund; and endorse a series of Governing Council decisions.

The USSR proposed inserting a preambular paragraph referring to the threat posed by weapons of mass destruction to the environment and life on earth.<sup>(11)</sup> Pakistan orally proposed revising the amendment to state that the continuing arms accumulation in many regions and the risk of their use was a major danger for the environment and competed for limited resources. Iraq proposed revising Pakistan's text to refer to the stockpiling of weapons of mass destruction (see below, under "Arms race and the environment").

In response to a May 1983 UNEP Council decision,<sup>(12)</sup> the Executive Director submitted a report on the state of the environment in 1984.<sup>(13)</sup> The topic selected for consideration was environment in the dialogue between and among developed and developing countries. Among other things, the report discussed interdependence between economic and environmental issues, and environmental standards in relation to international investment and trade.

The report concluded that a broad understanding of the economic and social context, one in which the environment was seen to play an all-pervading role, was required. Environmental and resource management issues transcended international boundaries; solutions to those problems required extensive international co-operation and mutual assistance. The dialogue between developed and developing countries was crucial in that respect. Since many environmental problems tended to be technical and politically neutral, environmental agreements could have a unifying impact and help create a favourable climate for attacking more controversial problems.

Three addenda to the report concerned emerging environmental issues,<sup>(2)</sup> preparation and presentation of environmental data<sup>(14)</sup> and environmental events in 1983.<sup>(3)</sup>

By a decision of 28 May 1984,<sup>(5)</sup> the UNEP Council noted with appreciation the Executive Director's intention to produce a final version of the report, taking into account government views. It encouraged him to continue suggesting specific action, encouraged governmental bodies to continue their efforts for sustained global progress with special focus on developing countries' needs, and agreed to continued support by UNEP for the dialogue between developed and developing countries (see also below, under "Environmental aspects of political, economic and other issues"). As requested by the Council, the final report was to be transmitted to the General Assembly, its Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and other United Nations bodies.

In July, UNEP organized a workshop in London to discuss the publication of environmental indicators, requested in a UNEP Council decision of 28 May.<sup>(15)</sup> The workshop was attended by representatives of the International Institute for Environment and Development, the Monitoring and Assessment Research Centre of the University of London, and the World Resources Institute, which were to co-operate with UNEP in compiling the data. Publication was planned for 1986.

Environmental Perspective

In 1984, the UNEP Council again took up the question of preparing an Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, to be submitted in 1987. In March 1984, the Executive Director reported on the state of the preparations.<sup>(16)</sup> Pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(17)</sup> an Intergovernmental Inter-sessional Preparatory Committee was being set up to assist the Council in preparing the Perspective; a 22-member Special Commission, also known as the World Commission on Environment and Development, would develop proposals. An interim special account for voluntary contributions, from which disbursements were to be made for the Special Commission, was established in February 1984.

On 29 May,<sup>(18)</sup> the UNEP Council decided on the 30 members of the Committee. The Commission held at Geneva an organizational meeting in May and an inaugural meeting in October (see APPENDIX III).

Regional activities

Regional activities in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean were dealt with in UNEP Council decisions of 28 May.<sup>(19)</sup> The Council welcomed the outcome of a meeting of the African subregional environment groups (Lusaka, Zambia, 10-13 April), in particular its draft programme of action on the African environment, and requested the Executive Director to continue assisting in convening an African ministerial conference to approve a regional plan of action, to strengthen the Regional Office for Africa and to study the establishment of subregional offices, considering the offer of Morocco to host the subregional office for North Africa.

The Council also requested him to continue to accord high priority to the programmes of the Asia and Pacific region and to intensify his efforts to seek funds for them, while urging that he use his discretionary authority to increase funds for the high-priority regional seas programme.

The Council thanked Peru for convening the third (1984) Regional Intergovernmental Meeting on the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean, and the Executive Director for the Meeting of High-level Experts Designated by Governments to Review Regional Environmental Programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean (Lima, Peru, 8-12 April). It requested him to provide financial support for strengthening regional activities, to set in motion as soon as possible regional programmes of common interest, and to incorporate those in the 1986-1987 budget. It called his attention to the request by the Meeting of High-level Experts that he compile information on innovative means of financing, while Governments and international organizations were urged to intensify their support to the following programmes co-ordinated by UNEP: the Action Plan for the Caribbean Environment; the Environmental Training Network for Latin America and the Caribbean (see p. 771); and the Action Plan for the Protection of the Marine Environment and Coastal Areas of the South-East Pacific.

The Council, in another decision of 28 May,<sup>(20)</sup> urged States to support fully regional conventions and protocols for the protection and development of the marine environment and coastal areas (see "Regional seas programme" below).

Towards regional and technical co-operation, the Executive Director pointed out in his annual report,<sup>(21)</sup> UNEP continued to provide support to: staff of UNEP regional offices, including regional advisers; individual experts from developing countries wishing to participate in environment-related meetings, symposia, workshops and seminars; the environment co-ordinating units in the United Nations regional commissions; and a limited number of small technical co-operation projects. The importance of regional co-operation was also stressed in the area of education and training. A regional approach was also taken in combating desertification (see p. 756).

Co-ordination

United Nations co-ordination

In a report to the UNEP Governing Council at its 1984 session on co-ordination of environment activities,<sup>(22)</sup> the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) continued to keep under review preparation of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, reiterating that member organizations were ready to participate in the process. It decided to contribute to the ongoing review of the environment component of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see p. 391), and noted that a clearing-house facility established by UNEP to act as intermediary between donors and recipients in helping developing countries deal with environmental problems was becoming operational (see below).

Reviewing preparations to assess the progress in implementing the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, ACC noted with concern that, although there was growing consciousness of the need to combat the problem, particularly in the Sudano-Sahelian region, insufficient financing was seriously limiting United Nations efforts to implement the Plan (see p. 756).

In an addendum to the report, ACC reviewed, within the context of the International Development Strategy, the evolution of United Nations system-wide co-ordination on the environment (see p. 392).

On 28 May 1984,<sup>(23)</sup> the UNEP Council expressed appreciation for the report and noted the progress made by UNEP in its co-ordinating role.

On 23 October,<sup>(24)</sup> ACC approved its report to the 1985 UNEP Council session.

During 1984, 87 UNEP Fund projects were being implemented in co-operation with other United Nations agencies and organizations, including FAO (22 projects), UNESCO (17), WHO (13), WMO (8) and UNSO (6).

Co-operation with UNCHS

Noting the report of the Executive Director<sup>(25)</sup> on the sixth joint meeting of UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) in December 1983,<sup>(26)</sup> the UNEP Council, on 28 May 1984,<sup>(23)</sup> requested him to increase co-operation between both entities and reaffirmed that such meetings were no longer necessary.

In its report on co-ordination of environment activities (see above), ACC pointed out that UNEP and UNCHS had prepared guidelines for developing human settlements along environmentally sound lines. It was envisaged that technical and other assistance to developing countries in applying the guidelines would be increased. However, ACC noted that very little progress had been made in improving the environmental aspects of human settlements in those countries (see p. 768).

UNEP clearing-house mechanism

On 28 May 1984,<sup>(27)</sup> the UNEP Council decided to extend for three years the clearing-house mechanism for the mobilization of resources over and above regular contributions to meet serious environmental problems in developing countries. The clearing-house concept, which had emerged in 1982,<sup>(28)</sup> incorporated programming and technical assistance elements, with UNEP acting as a catalyst and co-ordinator, rather than as a financing agency. Also on 28 May, the Council requested the Executive Director to establish a Clearing-house Unit with no more than five Professional staff plus support services; to seek funding for long-term programmes; to initiate programmes for integrating environmental considerations into development planning processes; to consider other means of promoting the clearing-house concept; and to ensure that clearing-house projects were formulated in co-ordination with other United Nations organizations, bilateral donors and non-governmental organizations. The Council called on Governments for support in cash or in kind.

In extending the clearing-house experiment, the Council followed a suggestion by the Executive Director in a March progress report.<sup>(29)</sup> Describing different types of projects, the report concluded that the mechanism was not only successful in promoting environmental improvement but was also an innovative financial mechanism.

Several projects presented for financing in 1984 focused on specific environmental problems, improving national environmental legislation, training central government administrators, and organizing nation-wide discussions of environmental priorities. Early in 1984, long-term strategies for tackling serious environmental problems were completed in Botswana, Indonesia, Jordan and Peru. During the year, funds were committed or pledged to the clearing-house by Argentina, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations. Discussions continued with Argentina, which established a five-year line of credit for use by other developing countries in dealing with environmental problems. Malaysia offered facilities and staff for training technicians of other countries in environmental controls in the palm-oil and rubber industries.

Co-ordination with Intergovernmental organizations

The number of intergovernmental organizations participating in environmental activities continued to grow in 1984. Several worked closely with UNEP in such areas as regional seas, desertification, toxic and contaminated matter, and environmental education and training.

In Europe, the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) joined with the UNEP International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals and the ILO/WHO/UNEP International Programme on Chemical Safety in a training seminar (Moscow, 19-30 November) on the optimal use of health risk evaluations. UNEP took part in the twentieth session of the CMEA Board for Environmental Protection (Poznan, Poland, 25-28 April) and in the environmental activities of the Council of Europe and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), including the OECD International Conference on Environment and Economics (Paris, 18-21 June).

Outside the industrialized world, UNEP continued to act as a focal point for intergovernmental co-operation. It provided a secretariat for the third Regional Intergovernmental Meeting on the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean (Lima, April). In Asia and the Pacific, it collaborated with the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), giving technical assistance in nature conservation, environmental impact assessment, and education and training. UNEP regional seas specialists continued to assist the ASEAN countries with projects on oil pollution, chemical dispersants and ambient oceanographic and meteorological phenomena. In the South Pacific, UNEP worked with the South Pacific Commission, the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Co-operation and individual Governments in developing the South Pacific Regional Environment Programme and a regional seas plan of action. Moreover, it was involved in the South Asia Co-operative Environment Programme as well as the launching of the South Asian Seas programme.

In the Middle East, UNEP continued to collaborate with the League of Arab States, particularly the Conference on Environmental Pollution and Its Problems in Arab Countries (Amman, Jordan, July); the Conference proposed that a meeting of Arab ministers on the environment be organized in 1985. Long-standing ties with the Arab League Educational, Cultural and Scientific Organization (ALECSO) were formalized by UNEP in a memorandum of understanding in January; UNEP was also working with ALECSO in regional seas activities for the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden, environment projects in the Mediterranean, and green belt projects in North Africa and the Syrian desert.

In Africa, UNEP co-operated with the Organization of African Unity and various subregional governmental organizations.

Relations with NGOs

On 28 May,<sup>(23)</sup> the UNEP Council welcomed UNEP's increasing co-operation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and endorsed the efforts of the Executive Director to extend that co-operation.

UNEP continued in 1984 to provide financial assistance to the Nairobi-based Environment Liaison Centre (ELC), which maintained a network of more than 6,000 NGOs dealing with environment issues. A substantial part of that assistance was used for ELC's programme of collecting and disseminating information.

Preparatory work for a Global Meeting on Environment and Development for NGOs was supported financially by UNEP through ELC; the preparatory committee met at Nairobi (27-30 September).

UNEP gave priority to NGO activities in a number of ways. Several NGOs participated in about 20 projects on nature conservation and terrestrial ecosystems, information and publicity campaigns, and meteorological and oceanographic research. UNEP continued to support the World Resources Institute, particularly its data collection programmes, and maintained close co-operation with the Global Tomorrow Coalition, which brought together a large number of community groups and NGOs in the United States.

With financial support from UNEP and under the auspices of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, 98 delegates from 44 parliaments met at UNEP headquarters to exchange views on environmental management and legislation.

A World Industry Conference on Environmental Management (Versailles, France, 14-16 November) was jointly sponsored by UNEP, major industries and the International Chamber of Commerce (see below, under "Environmental activities").

UNEP Fund

During 1984, the Environment Fund disbursed $22,254,930 for programme activities—excluding $588,348 for activities under the programme reserve—in the following areas: environmental awareness, $3,709,109; Earthwatch, $3,088,379; oceans, $2,761,444; environment and development, $2,589,976; terrestrial ecosystems, $2,582,074; health and human settlements, $2,509,876; desertification, $2,314,359; regional and technical co-operation, $2,107,614; water, $477,098; and arms race and the environment, $115,000.

Forty-eight new projects were approved in 1984, compared with 44 in 1983; 53 projects were closed. At the end of 1984, 294 projects were still open. Geographical distribution of Fund commitments was as follows: global, $14,013,559 (61 per cent); regional, $6,596,354 (29 per cent); and inter-regional, $2,233,365 (10 per cent).

On 28 May,<sup>(30)</sup> the UNEP Council authorized the Executive Director to draw up a programme of Fund activities resulting in project expenditures of about $50 million in 1986-1987, and requested him to present the programme at the Council's 1985 session in such a way as to facilitate the consideration of programme priorities. Also on 28 May,<sup>(31)</sup> the Council approved his recommendation to set the financial reserve of the Fund at $6.86 million in 1984 and $7.35 million in 1985, and requested him to report in 1985 on the usefulness of an increased reserve in reducing undercommitment of funds. The Council confirmed the appropriation of $26,020,000 for programme and programme support costs for 1984-1985, and requested the Executive Director to continue to attempt to limit those costs to within 33 per cent of estimated contributions in 1984.

Contributions

On 28 May,<sup>(30)</sup> the UNEP Council requested the Executive Director to seek increased contributions to the Fund so that projects costing about $50 million in 1986-1987 could be implemented.

Accounts for 1982-1983

As at 31 December 1983, total income of the UNEP Fund for 1982-1983 amounted to $62,939,418, while expenditures totalled $65,886,931, leaving an excess of expenditure over income of $2,947,513.

Commenting on the audited accounts,<sup>(32)</sup> the Board of Auditors noted that some pledges for 1980-1981 remained unpaid and that in certain cases expenditure was incurred either in excess of or without allotments. There was a need to strengthen the periodic review and follow-up procedure for settling overdue accounts. Further, in one project substantial expenditure had been unnecessarily incurred owing to inadequacy in the project design; also, reporting on various projects was not timely, and inventory control and monitoring of project activities inadequate. In contravention of existing rules, internationally recruited General Service staff members were being paid 70 per cent of their salary in convertible currency.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a September 1984 report,<sup>(33)</sup> noted that the maximum proportion authorized by United Nations Headquarters for payment in convertible currency to such staff was 25 or 50 per cent, depending on dependency status. ACABQ had been informed that, so far as was known at Headquarters, the situation was restricted to some 30 UNEP staff; consul-

In resolution 39/66, accepting the 1983 financial reports of various United Nations funds and programmes, including the Environment Fund, the General Assembly concurred with ACABQ's observations and requested remedial action.

Other administrative questions

UNEP public information

Significant progress in reforming the UNEP information programme was achieved during 1984, the Executive Director reported.<sup>(21)</sup> Among the priorities was the development of a production schedule for the newsletter UNEP News, which was to be published every two months in English, French and Spanish beginning in January 1985, in accordance with a UNEP Council decision on the reform of the UNEP Information Service (see below). UNEP issued 20 publications during 1984.

Bilateral publications and information support programmes continued with China and the USSR. A publications support programme was initiated with France for the translation, editing, publishing and distribution of selected UNEP publications in French.

An audio-visual catalogue of all films, videotapes and slide shows available on loan from UNEP was produced. A colour transparency library of 10,000 photographs was catalogued. Arabic versions of the films The State of the Planet and Water: A Vital Resource were distributed.

The Desertification Information Campaign was a major UNEP activity. A total of 6,000 media packs, with a selection of articles on the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see p. 759), were distributed world-wide. A film on desertification, Seeds of Despair, made in Ethiopia, elicited widespread interest in Europe and contributed to a large-scale fund-raising effort in the United Kingdom for famine relief. In Japan, it helped to raise $5.2 million. The Campaign stimulated the creation of a Television Trust for the Environment, aimed at promoting public understanding of environmental issues, which was sponsored by UNEP and Central Independent Television of the United Kingdom. Representatives of the international media visited a drought-affected area in northern Kenya where desertification control methods were demonstrated (Marsabit, 16-18 March). To promote environmental awareness, UNEP worked with a number of press and media agencies.

Following recommendations of the first meeting of the Advisory Committee of the International Referral System for sources of environmental information (INFOTERRA) (Athens, Greece, October 1983), four special sectoral sources were established in 1984 on environmental legislation, water supply, sanitation and renewable energy, toxic chemicals, and the impact of industry on the environment.

An on-line INFOTERRA information search service was set up; a Thesaurus of Environmental Terms and a supplement to the International Directory of Sources on some 1,000 environmental topics were published.

During the year, INFOTERRA conducted six national seminars, three training courses, and a workshop on the role of environmental information in decision-making.

Reform of the Information Service

By a decision of 28 May,<sup>(34)</sup> the UNEP Council agreed with the Executive Director<sup>(35)</sup> that reform of the Information Service should be gradual. The priorities were: identification of information needs, in particular those of the developing countries; streamlining the publications programme; identification of non-traditional forms of information; intensification of UNEP use of United Nations information centres and services; co-operation with NGOs; and establishment of environmental information training fellowships. The Council considered that a regular flagship publication was currently not essential and therefore agreed to replace UNITERRA and Report to Governments with a newsletter; it also decided to discontinue at the end of 1984 support for Mazingira, a journal published every two months which provided news and comments on environment and development issues, and to apply the resources to regional information activities and non-traditional forms of information. The Council further decided that concise information on newly approved projects, evaluation of closed ones and in-depth evaluation of selected projects should be distributed to Governments twice a year.

UN accommodation at Nairobi

The UNEP Council, on 28 May,<sup>(36)</sup> welcomed the announcement by the President of Kenya, on 21 May, granting an additional 40 acres of land for United Nations accommodation at Nairobi, and recommended that the General Assembly accept the donation. It also welcomed Kenya's announcement that access roads would be improved, and commended the Executive Director for the completion of the accommodation on schedule and within the approved cost estimates.

(For further details on accommodation at Nairobi, see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

Smoking in meeting rooms

The UNEP Council decided on 28 May 1984 that a no-smoking rule would be observed in all its meeting rooms beginning with the 1985 session, and encouraged all meetings on environmental issues to observe the same restriction.<sup>(37)</sup>

Environmental activities

Environmental monitoring

Environmental assessment and monitoring continued to be one of the key tasks of UNEP in 1984. Its environment assessment programme, Earthwatch, was designed as a global system of national facilities and services to study the interaction between man and the environment, provide early warning of potential environmental hazards and determine the state of selected natural resources. The corner-stone of Earthwatch was the Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS), a collective international effort to acquire the data needed for rational management of the environment. The activities of GEMS, operational since 1975, were divided in 1984 into five major programmes: renewable resource monitoring, climate-related monitoring, health-related monitoring, long-range transport of pollutants monitoring, and ocean monitoring.

Among GEMS projects in 1984 was a pilot project conducted jointly with UNESCO and WMO on integrated monitoring in temperate forest biosphere reserves, focusing on the behaviour of pollutants in the various ecosystem "media": soil, air, water, plants and animals. The project involved data collection in the Torres del Paine Biosphere Reserve in Chile and the Olympic National Park in the United States as well as exchanges of information and specialists between the two countries.

Data on sulphates in precipitation were examined. A project was begun with the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) to assess the effects of acidifying deposition on forest resources in the ECE countries, and to recommend a unified methodology of assessing damage to forests from air pollution. Other ongoing activities included glacier observation and assessment of radioactivity in the South Pacific.

On 28 May,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNEP Governing Council invited the Executive Director to begin publication in 1985 of as many as possible of the environmental indicators listed in his report on the preparation and presentation of environmental data,<sup>(2)</sup> continuing with routine updates and presenting the indicators so as to highlight trends in the global environment. He was also invited to start compiling a list of selected environmental data sources; to continue the publication of assessments of important environmental problems; and to utilize the annual environmental indicators publications in preparing comprehensive reports on the state of the environment. The Council also dealt with other aspects of environmental monitoring, such as protection against harmful products (see below).

Also on 28 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Council addressed nine issues concerning environmental management: marine mammals, the World Soils Policy, tropical forest and woodlands, water, genetic resources, wildlife conservation and management, industry and environment, marine pollution and regional seas (see below).

Protection against harmful products

UNEP activities. Following a 1982 UNEP Council decision,<sup>(4)</sup> an Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts for the Exchange of Information on Potentially Harmful Chemicals (in Particular Pesticides) in International Trade was established and held its first session (Noordwijkerhout, Netherlands, 26-30 March 1984).<sup>(5)</sup> As global guidelines for such an information exchange, the Group recommended a provisional notification scheme for banned and severely restricted chemicals, which was adopted by the Council on 28 May.<sup>(6)</sup> It called on Governments and the Executive Director to bring the scheme into effect as soon as possible, and requested him to report in 1986 on Governments' experience in implementing it.

Among reports considered by the Working Group was one on the state of information on potentially harmful chemicals in international trade, which described the work of UNEP's International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals and its attempts to facilitate access to information on chemicals and promote international procedures for collection, validation, processing and exchange of data necessary for hazard assessment and control of chemicals in commerce.<sup>(7)</sup>

Another report summarized national legislation and regulatory programmes, as well as activities and programmes of international organizations and bodies, related to the exchange of information on potentially harmful chemicals.<sup>(8)</sup>

The use of pesticides in agriculture had been growing in both developed and developing countries, the Executive Director pointed out in his annual report.<sup>(9)</sup> That growth had led to an increase in the health problems of rural communities, particularly in countries with agriculture-based economies. The principal cause was misuse or abuse of pesticides by farm workers who were often unaware of their health hazards or the safety procedures to be observed during application. Many of those toxic chemicals, though freely sold in developing countries, were banned or tightly controlled in their countries of origin.

The situation had been aggravated by the development of resistant strains of pests and vectors, demanding increases in dosage as well as the introduction of new, usually more toxic, chemicals. As a result, NGOs, headed by the Pesticide Action Network, had demanded that industry make more information available to the public.

The FAO/UNEP Panel of Experts on Integrated Pest Control held its twelfth session (Rome, Italy, 22 and 23 October) and published guidelines on integrated control of cotton pests and on the economic aspects of integrated pest control research. The FAO Committee of Experts on Pest Control (third session, Rome, 24-26 October) guided activities under the Co-operative Action Programme on Plant Health (including UNEP-supported programmes on integrated pest control).

FAO, IAEA, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, UNEP, UNIDO and WHO held a thematic programming meeting on pesticides (Rome, 10 and 11 April), identifying activities for 1986-1987.

The UNEP Council, on 28 May 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> noted the report of the Executive Director on the list of environmentally dangerous chemical substances and processes of global significance.<sup>(10)</sup> It requested him to obtain comments on the report from Governments, international organizations, industry and NGOs and to submit an updated version in 1987, evaluating the extent to which developing and developed countries participated in the production, distribution and release of environmentally dangerous chemical substances.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a December 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(11)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in June 1984, to both the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly, a report on the exchange of information on banned hazardous chemicals and unsafe pharmaceutical products.<sup>(12)</sup> The report reviewed activities of United Nations bodies and other organizations, which could be grouped in three principal categories: the establishment of mechanisms for information exchange; the development of guiding instruments; and the preparation of technical information. Among recent developments of special interest were: the provisional notification scheme for banned and severely restricted chemicals (see above); draft guiding principles being developed in OECD on the exchange of information related to export of banned or severely restricted chemicals; the work of the Council of Europe with regard to the sale of European pharmaceutical products in developing countries; and the preparation by the Organization of American States of a list of substances prohibited or significantly restricted in the United States.

There was an increasing awareness by both importing and exporting countries of the need for information exchange on internal control measures taken by exporting countries, the report concluded. The principle of notifying importing countries of measures designed to ban or severely restrict specific products had gained wide acceptance, but further negotiations were needed. The provisional notification scheme was an important step towards harmonizing the different positions, while improved use of the WHO Certification Scheme on the Quality of Pharmaceutical Products Moving in International Commerce adopted in 1975 would enhance the quality and safety of imported pharmaceuticals. A code of conduct on the distribution and use of pesticides, drafted by FAO, was submitted to Governments for review.

Progress appeared to have been made with regard to the legislative and administrative capability of developing countries to control the manufacture, import, sale and use of chemical and pharmaceutical products. In addition to technical co-operation assistance by various organizations, developing countries could benefit from exchange of information on administrative and legislative models followed by other countries; in that context, the activities of FAO and WHO should be noted.

Also requested by the Assembly in December 1983<sup>(11)</sup> was a report on a consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or, in the case of pharmaceuticals, not approved by Governments. In the report, submitted in September 1984, the Secretary-General described the role and content of the list and steps taken in its preparation.<sup>(13)</sup>

The first issue of the list had been transmitted to Governments on 31 December 1983. A revised first issue contained information on regulatory decisions by 60 Governments relating to nearly 500 pharmaceutical products, agricultural and industrial chemicals, and consumer products. Also included was information provided by NGOs.

However, the report stated, the list still needed to be expanded, both in terms of the numbers of countries included and products reported. Further information was needed from Governments on legislative measures and the regulatory context in which, and the health or environmental reasons for which, those measures were taken, as well as on the nature of limitations imposed on the manufacture, import, sale and use of products.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In decision 1984/176 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the exchange of information on banned hazardous chemicals and transmitted it to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/229 by recorded vote.

Against: United States.

The text was based on a draft submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman following informal consultations on a text introduced by Venezuela on behalf of 24 nations. The Vice-Chairman's draft was withdrawn, but reintroduced by Sweden with several oral revisions. Those revisions included the addition, at the end of paragraph 4, of the words "particularly in the identification of potential sources of information among national Governments and in obtaining governmental information on relevant regulatory actions". From paragraph 5 (d), the words "and also give due consideration to the possible advantages and disadvantages of streamlining its content, so that users, when alerted to the potential hazards of a product, may be directed to sources of more complete information" were deleted. Paragraph 7 was replaced; by the Vice-Chairman's draft, the Assembly would have invited the specialized agencies to provide an evaluation of the information collection and dissemination procedures in operation, bearing in mind the need to increase their efforts to make available to Governments information on national regulatory action taken with regard to products within their respective spheres of responsibility, and would have requested a report in 1986 on the results of that evaluation.

Deleted from the Vice-Chairman's draft were five preambular paragraphs, referring to the need for access to information on products in international trade that had been banned or severely restricted; recognizing that several specialized agencies had programmes on the collection, evaluation and dissemination of information related to the hazards associated with products in international trade, and noting UNEP's provisional notification scheme for exchange of information on potentially harmful chemicals, in particular pesticides; noting that the May 1984 World Health Assembly had called for an expert meeting in 1985 on the rational use of drugs; noting that FAO was preparing a code of conduct on the distribution and use of pesticides; and seeking to gain full participation by Governments in response to a 1982 Assembly resolution on protection against harmful products<sup>(14)</sup> and to resolve outstanding issues.

Apart from those and other drafting changes, the adopted text differed from the original 24-nation draft in that it did not contain a paragraph requesting the Secretary-General to strengthen arrangements to provide for legal analysis, risk assessment, commercial marketing analysis, and liaison with Governments and organizations, and for the improvement in quality and quantity of international product safety information. Also, instead of a review of the consolidated list, as called for in paragraph 5 (d) of the adopted text, the original draft would have had the Assembly consider that the list be developed further, with particular emphasis on the legal, public health and commercial context of regulatory actions and with information on safe uses of products. In addition, the final version did not include preambular provisions by which the Assembly would have reiterated that products banned from domestic consumption and sale should be sold abroad only on request from an importing country, and that countries which had severely restricted or not approved domestic consumption and sale of specific products should make available full information on them, including clear labelling in a language acceptable to the importing country.

On 13 December, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee decided by a recorded vote of 91 to 4, with 2 abstentions, to inform the Assembly that, should it adopt the draft resolution, additional appropriations of $89,700 would be required under the 1984-1985 budget. In making that decision, the Committee followed the Secretary-General's estimates, as orally endorsed by ACABQ.

Before the vote in the Fifth Committee, the United States reiterated its objection to the request for additional funding. For the States members of the European Economic Community (EEC), Ireland stated that the financial implications had been incorrectly presented in the original statement to the Second Committee; it hoped that that would not be a precedent. Venezuela said the Secretariat had recognized that it had begun to implement the 1982 resolution on the subject<sup>(14)</sup> with insufficient resources. The USSR remarked that, as far as the draft's budgetary aspects were concerned, the Secretary-General's statement gave the impression that activities would be starting from scratch while, in fact, they were already in progress and could be pursued with existing resources and staff.

In the Second Committee, the United States agreed that Member States should have a reference source for identifying regulatory actions by other States, but warned that sketchy information, as contained in the current consolidated list, was inappropriate and dangerous. Inquiries should be directed to the sources of complete information both in the notifying countries and in the competent specialized agencies. The United States also objected to the financial implications of the text which, it said, endorsed an ongoing project already provided for in the 1984-1985 budget; a draft resolution should have financial implications only when it provided for substantial new activities.

Canada felt that the consolidated list should be continued, but considered it important to avoid duplication and unnecessary expansion. Ireland, on behalf of the EEC members, asserted that they had always been in favour of a consolidated list; at the same time, many issues relating to the list—including that of information duplication—remained to be resolved. Venezuela stated that the sponsors of the original 24-nation draft would have preferred an expansion of the consolidated list with respect to the legal, public health and commercial context of regulatory actions concerning the products on the list; nevertheless, they believed that the adopted text was a very important step forward.

The Ukrainian SSR, also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, declared that they attached great importance to providing developing countries with information on unsafe chemicals or harmful pharmaceutical products, banned in the West but marketed abroad by transnational corporations. Necessary resources for implementing the text should be found through savings and redeployment of existing resources, with no increase in the regular budget.

International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals

The International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC), established in 1976, continued in 1984 to expand the global information network on chemicals and their effects on health and the environment. New contacts were made with organizations, national institutions and industry.

During the year, IRPTC prepared an update of its loose-leaf manual on toxic chemicals, and continued to develop its computerized profiles of chemicals of international significance; 450 of those profiles were currently stored in its data bank.

The IRPTC Query-Response Service received more than 200 inquiries on chemicals, mostly agrochemicals, 36 per cent from developing countries. The Legal File, published in 1983 and containing data on regulatory measures and recommendations for hazard control on 400 chemicals covering 12 countries and six international organizations, was expanded to include all the chemicals for which regulatory information was available. Waste management data were collected for 500 chemicals on the IRPTC Working List of Selected Chemical Substances.

Two issues of the IRPTC Bulletin were published in English, French, Russian and Spanish and distributed to about 9,000 recipients; the Bulletin contained information on the activities of IRPTC and other organizations in relation to chemicals, the results of risk assessments of chemicals, and chemicals that were causing concern or were the subject of controls or bans. An IRPTC/INFOTERRA directory of information sources on chemical safety was published; it provided descriptions of more than 400 institutions, bibliographies on chemical safety and hazard control, lists of IRPTC national correspondents and INFOTERRA focal points. With ILO, IRPTC updated the ILO publication Occupational Exposure Limits for Airborne Toxic Substances, which contained data on more than 1,100 substances from 19 countries and one international organization. In co-operation with the USSR, IRPTC continued publishing the series Scientific Reviews of Soviet Literature on Toxicity and Hazards of Chemicals, which comprised 79 publications; an English version of a reference book, Problems of Industrial Toxicology, and a collection of lectures delivered during a 1983 training course in preventive toxicology were published in 1984 under this co-operative arrangement.

A training seminar was conducted by CMEA, the International Programme on Chemical Safety and IRPTC on the optimal use of international health risk evaluations (Moscow, 19-30 November). A three-week training course (Geneva, October/November) aimed at assisting developing countries to establish national information systems on chemicals.

In response to a 28 May UNEP Council decision,<sup>(1)</sup> IRPTC prepared a final report on the list of environmentally dangerous chemical substances and processes and submitted it to Governments and organizations. IRPTC also assisted in implementing the provisional notification scheme for chemicals (see above). By the end of the year, 40 Governments had designated national authorities for participation in implementing the scheme.

IRPTC also assisted in preparing the consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or, in the case of pharmaceuticals, not approved by Governments (see above). Jointly with the Directorate-General for Employment, Social Affairs and Education and the Environmental Chemicals Data and Information Network of the Commission of the European Communities, it undertook a study of substances to which workers were exposed at the workplace and which were easily absorbed through the skin.

Draft guidelines for management of hazardous wastes

In accordance with a 1982 UNEP Governing Council decision,<sup>(4)</sup> an Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on the Environmentally Sound Management of Hazardous Wastes met (first session, Munich, Federal Republic of Germany, 28 February–5 March 1984;<sup>(15)</sup> second session, Geneva, 3–7 December<sup>(16)</sup>) to develop guidelines for transfrontier movements, storage and disposal of hazardous wastes.

On 28 May,<sup>(6)</sup> the UNEP Council expressed satisfaction at the results of the session; requested the Executive Director to continue the work initiated by the Group and to continue collaborating with other United Nations bodies in elaborating the guidelines; and called on Governments to participate actively.

The draft guidelines<sup>(17)</sup> were to be further reviewed by the Group in 1985.

Health and environment

In 1984, UNEP promoted increased awareness of environmental health problems through publications, training and demonstration programmes.

The International Programme on Chemical Safety (IPCS), sponsored jointly by ILO, UNEP and WHO, provided evaluations of chemicals and their effects on human health and the environment. Fourteen reports in the series "Environmental Health Criteria" were published in 1984, bringing the total to 42. A food inspection manual was produced with FAO. A network of IPCS national focal points was being established to facilitate the dissemination of information.

At the fourth meeting of the IPCS Programme Advisory Committee (Nairobi, 1–5 October), a new memorandum of understanding between the three participating agencies was formulated, broadening IPCS activities to include the effect of chemicals on species other than man and on natural and man-made resources. The fourth meeting of the FAO/UNEP/WHO Panel of Experts on Environmental Management for Vector Control was held (Geneva, 1–5 October).

Further to a programme developed in 1983 by UNEP in co-operation with the Egyptian Academy for Scientific Research and Technology on the control of water-borne diseases in rural areas, a meeting of national institutions from Brazil, Egypt, Ethiopia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Kenya, the Sudan, the United Kingdom and the United States was held (Cairo, Egypt, 12–15 March 1984).

A training course on food contamination control, with emphasis on mycotoxins, was held for 16 participants from developing countries (Moscow and Tbilisi, USSR, 2 April–2 June).

In September, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on products harmful to health and the environment,<sup>(13)</sup> which described the role and content of a consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or, in the case of pharmaceuticals, not approved by Governments. In June,<sup>(12)</sup> he reported on the exchange of information on banned hazardous chemicals and unsafe pharmaceutical products (see above).

Atmosphere

Protection of the ozone layer

Preparations for a global convention for the protection of the ozone layer neared completion in 1984. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts for the Elaboration of a Global Framework Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer (Vienna, Austria, 16–20 January;<sup>(18)</sup> Geneva, 22–26 October<sup>(19)</sup>) continued elaborating a draft convention and a draft protocol on chlorofluorocarbons. A further meeting was to be held in January 1985.

UNEP supported the work on the draft convention with up-to-date assessments of ozone layer modification and its impacts. An assessment of ozone layer depletion, prepared by the UNEP Coordinating Committee on the Ozone Layer in April 1983,<sup>(20)</sup> was published in January 1984. Because, in the mean time, advances in understanding atmospheric chemistry had taken place, a new assessment was undertaken by the Committee at its seventh session (Geneva, 15–19 October).

The UNEP Council, on 28 May,<sup>(6)</sup> requested the Executive Director to convene in the first quarter of 1985 a diplomatic conference to finalize and adopt a global convention and consider a report concerning further work on a protocol. It called on Governments and organizations to participate and appealed to Governments to provide financial resources and facilities. It asked the Coordinating Committee to continue to provide evaluations and to examine, if possible within two years, the likely effects of the substances listed in an annex to the draft convention.

Climate impact studies

The World Climate Impact Studies Programme (WCIP) of UNEP concentrated in 1984 on three areas: improving methodologies to be applied in the studies; reducing the vulnerability of food systems to climate; and assessing the carbon dioxide/climate issue.

WCIP's Scientific Advisory Committee, which held its third meeting at Stockholm, Sweden, noted that reliable methodologies were the linchpins of successful climate impact study. A major volume on climate impact assessment, concerning the interaction of climate and society—a joint project of the Scientific Committee on Problems of the Environment and UNEP—was in the final stages of preparation.

Another project, developed jointly by the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis and UNEP, was concerned primarily with food production in different types of climate-sensitive regions.

The implementation plan for an international satellite land surface climatology project was completed. Project activities in 1984 included a series of workshops to develop a field experiment to validate ways of using satellite data for determining climate-related variables at the Earth's surface and a workshop on vegetation indices (Graz, Austria, 27 June), in conjunction with the Committee on Space Research Symposium on Space Observations for Climate Studies.

A number of WCIP projects were concerned primarily with agriculture. Under a study on the reduction of the vulnerability of food systems to climate in eastern India, jointly sponsored by the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development and UNEP, data on rainfall, temperature, floods, agricultural practices and food production were analysed. A new project, started in late 1984 by UNEP and the UNESCO/WMO/FAO Inter-Agency Group on Agricultural Biometeorology, sought to evaluate the impact of climate on socio-economic systems in the tropics of South America.

An inter-agency planning committee was established for a second assessment of the role of carbon dioxide in climate variations. At a Scientific Round Table on the Climatic Situation and Drought in Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 20-23 February), organized by UNEP, the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and other organizations, a Regional Plan of Action to Combat the Adverse Impacts of Drought in Africa was drafted, which was adopted by the ECA Conference of Ministers in May (see p. 508).

A second edition of the UNEP inventory of climate impact studies was circulated to the scientific community for updating before distribution to Governments.

In resolution 39/148 F on the climatic effects of nuclear war: nuclear winter, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to compile and distribute as a United Nations document excerpts of all national and international scientific studies on the climatic effects of nuclear war published up to 31 July 1985.

Desertification control

The 17-year-old Sudano-Sahelian drought intensified severely in 1984, causing famine in Chad, Ethiopia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger and the Sudan and severe food shortages in the other countries of the region.<sup>(21)</sup>

In a February report to the UNEP Governing Council assessing progress in implementing the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see below), the Executive Director confirmed the scale and urgency of the problem of desertification which continued to spread and intensify. The Council on 28 May also noted with great concern that desertification had continued to spread, particularly in Africa.<sup>(22)</sup>

Desertification control was part of the programme of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO), jointly sponsored by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and UNEP (see p. 509). With the inclusion of Ghana and Togo among those receiving assistance, UNSO's desertification mandate covered 21 countries. Parallel to emergency relief operations, UNSO helped carry out rehabilitation and medium- to long-term programmes aimed at mitigating the effects of drought and preventing future similar disasters; project commitments totalling $17.8 million were made in the form of cost-sharing and project-specific funds through the Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities. A mission was sent to Ghana in November to formulate a project for the development of agro-forestry. UNSO also took part in a UNDP mission to Ethiopia in December to design a programme for coping with future droughts; the programme was being financed with a contribution of $25 million to $27 million from Italy.

The UNDP Governing Council, in a 29 June decision<sup>(23)</sup> on implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the 1977 Plan of Action, urged all countries of the affected areas to intensify their co-ordination efforts in combating desertification.

On 24 August 1984,<sup>(24)</sup> Senegal transmitted to the Secretary-General a request from a Ministerial Conference on desertification (Dakar, Senegal, 18-27 July) that an item on countries stricken by desertification and drought be included in the agenda of the 1984 General Assembly session. By a memorandum transmitted on 20 September,<sup>(25)</sup> Senegal explained the history and causes of desertification and its effects. On 26 September,<sup>(26)</sup> it transmitted the final resolution adopted by the 21 nations attending the Conference (Algeria, Benin, Cape Verde, Chad, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Ivory Coast, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Togo, Tunisia, Upper Volta) on a joint policy to combat desertification.

Other action. Three resolutions on desertification control were adopted by ECA on 26 May (see p. 617). By the first,<sup>(27)</sup> ECA recommended that African Governments promote technical co-operation, information exchange, and expertise for combating desertification. By the second,<sup>(28)</sup> it adopted a Regional Plan of Action to combat drought (see above) and urged increased funds and assistance to the affected countries. By the third,<sup>(29)</sup> it urged member States to support the development of national meteorological services in order to help mitigate the effects of drought and other weather-related disasters in Africa.

The Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), on 21 September<sup>(30)</sup> requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to carry out a study, in collaboration with UNSO, on the impact of drought on the foreign trade of the affected countries (see p. 510).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/72 without vote.

Environment and development in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, containing the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, which, inter alia, calls for methods to be devised to assist interested developing countries in dealing more adequately with the environmental aspects of development activities, for the international community to increase substantially its financial and technical support to drought-stricken countries suffering from desertification, for consideration to be given by all countries to the environmental aspects of industrialization in the formulation and implementation of their industrial policies and plans and for the improvement of the quality of life and the environment through, inter alia, the strengthening, in the context of human settlements planning, of measures to improve housing conditions,

Taking note of decisions 10/4 and 10/6 of 31 May 1982 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, in which the Governing Council called for assistance to be provided to developing countries in addressing serious environmental problems related to poverty and underdevelopment,

Recalling also resolution 446(XVII), adopted on 30 April 1982 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, on the need to intensify regional co-operation for combating desertification in Africa, resolution 473(XVIII), adopted on 2 May 1983 by the Conference of Ministers, in which the Conference called for the organization of a scientific round-table on the climatic situation and drought in Africa, and resolution 474(XVIII), adopted on 2 May 1983 by the Conference of Ministers, in which the Conference called for the strengthening of African capabilities in environmental matters, especially the environmental co-ordination capabilities of the Commission, and for the encouragement of the development of environmental education and training programmes in member States,

Urges the General Assembly to consider seriously:

(a) The inclusion of reference to the United Republic of Tanzania in the terms of reference of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in order to enable that country to receive assistance in the implementation of programmes for combating desertification;

(b) The expansion of the scope of the work of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office so as to enable it to assist the States members of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference in implementing the recommendations of the United Nations Environment Programme on combating desertification and drought, in the same way as the Office is currently assisting the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/72

27 July 1984 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/142) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by ECA (E/1984/112 & Corr.1-3); agenda item 9.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/208 without vote.

Countries stricken by desertification and drought

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the tragic consequences of the acceleration of desertification, combined with a persistent drought—the most serious recorded this century—which have been reflected in a substantial drop in agricultural production in many developing countries and which, in particular, have contributed to the worsening of Africa's current economic crisis,

Noting with great anxiety that desertification continues to spread and intensify in developing countries, particularly in Africa,

Deeply alarmed by recent trends indicating that far-reaching climatic changes have taken place in Africa and are making the current situation extremely critical, as demonstrated, in particular, by the disturbing outlook noted by the Scientific Round Table on the Climatic Situation and Drought in Africa held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 23 February 1984,

Recalling its resolutions 32/172 of 19 December 1977, 35/73 of 5 December 1980, 38/163 and 38/164 of 19 December 1983 and 38/225 of 20 December 1983,

Aware that desertification and drought problems are increasingly assuming a structural and endemic character and that real and permanent solutions must be found in increased global efforts based on concerted action by the stricken countries and the international community,

Bearing in mind that the majority of the countries affected by desertification and drought are low-income countries and, for the most part, belong to the group of the least developed countries, particularly those in Africa,

Noting the efforts made by the affected countries themselves and by the international community, including the organizations of the United Nations system, to combat desertification and drought, particularly in Africa,

Bearing in mind the results of the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification in the countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Economic Community of West African States, in the Maghreb countries and in Egypt and the Sudan, held at Dakar from 18 to 27 July 1984,

Aware that the prime responsibility in the struggle against desertification and the effects of the drought rests with the countries concerned and that such action is an essential component of their development,

Considering the interdependence between developed countries and those affected by desertification and drought, and the negative impact of those phenomena on the economies of the countries concerned,

Noting the positive action taken by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office as part of a joint effort by the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Environment Programme to help twenty-one African countries, on behalf of the United Nations Environment Programme, in implementing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Welcoming the praiseworthy efforts of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel in fighting the drought in the Sahel region and its fruitful co-operation with Governments and with organizations and agencies of the United Nations system,

Taking note of the decision made by six East African countries—Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda—to set up an intergovernmental body in order to combat the effects of the drought in those countries,

Recognizing that, given the scope and intensity of desertification, the attainment of the objectives of programmes to fight it requires financial and human resources beyond the means of the affected countries,

1. Welcomes the results of the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification in the countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Economic Community of West African States, in the Maghreb countries and in Egypt and the Sudan, convened at Dakar on the initiative of the President of Senegal, and notes with satisfaction the final resolution adopted by the Conference;

2. Recommends that high priority should be given in the development plans and programmes of the affected countries themselves to the problem of desertification and to problems resulting from drought;

3. Recognizes that particular attention should be given to countries stricken by desertification and drought and that special efforts should be made by the international community, particularly the developed countries, in support of action taken individually or collectively by the affected countries;

4. Recommends that the international community, above all the developed countries, should continue to provide coherent short-term, medium-term and long-term assistance to the countries stricken by desertification and drought in order to support effectively the rehabilitation process—in particular through intensive reafforestation—and the renewal of growth of agricultural production in the affected countries, particularly in Africa;

5. Recommends that, within the framework of bilateral and multilateral aid programmes, the fight against desertification and drought should be granted priority in view of the extent of those problems;

6. Takes note of decision 12/10 of 28 May 1984 on desertification, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, calls for its full and speedy implementation, requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to have the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office establish specific biennial programmes for the ongoing implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, with the requirement that these programmes be submitted for the consideration and joint approval of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, and, lastly, emphasizes the urgent need for increased financial support by the international community for the activities of the Office and of the United Nations Environment Programme;

7. Emphasizes the fundamental importance of all forms of South-South co-operation in executing programmes to combat desertification and drought;

8. Appeals to all members of the international community, organs and agencies of the United Nations system, regional and subregional financial institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations, to continue to provide full support, in all forms—including financial, technical, or any other form of assistance—to the development efforts of countries stricken by desertification and drought;

9. Welcomes the decision of the Trade and Development Board to request the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to prepare a study on the impact of desertification and drought on the external trade of the countries affected;

10. Requests the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations to provide the Secretary-General with all relevant studies carried out in their respective spheres of competence, in particular with respect to food and agricultural production, development of water resources, industrialization and raw materials, for transmission to the stricken countries;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that in the activities of the organs and agencies of the United Nations, emphasis should also be placed on scientific knowledge of the causes and effects of the phenomena of desertification and drought and on the use of the most appropriate technology to overcome them;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to place greater emphasis on the situation and prospects of the countries stricken by desertification and drought in the World Economic Survey;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to ensure the implementation of the different activities mentioned above and to report to the General Assembly, at its fortieth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the evolution of the situation in these countries, and to formulate proposals for specific, co-ordinated action.

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/652) without vote, 2 November (meeting 33); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.26), based on informal consultations on 84-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.16 and Cor1); agenda item 141.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 24, 25, 27, 31, 33; plenary 103.

The adopted text differed from the original draft in that paragraph 6 was redrafted to specify the responsibilities of the competent United Nations bodies.

As urged by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1984/72 (see above), the Assembly in resolution 39/168 A requested the UNEP Council to examine in 1985 possible inclusion of the United Republic of Tanzania in the terms of reference of UNSO.

Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

A first general assessment of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification<sup>(31)</sup> was carried out by UNEP in 1984.<sup>(32)</sup> The Plan presented a detailed set of recommendations for sustaining co-operative efforts to reinforce and integrate national, regional and global actions against desertification, both inside and outside the United Nations system. The period 1978-1984 was chosen for implementation of the immediate action required, with a general assessment of progress at the end of those first seven years.

UNEP Council action. Two reports on implementation of the Plan of Action, and specifically on its implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region, were submitted by the UNEP Executive Director. The reports were transmitted to the General Assembly in September 1984.<sup>(33)</sup>

On 28 May,<sup>(22)</sup> the UNEP Council reconfirmed the validity of the Plan. It endorsed the Executive Director's view that implementation had to be more focused on the most affected countries and on action to arrest desertification, and authorized him to assist Governments in applying land-use policies. It urged Governments and international bodies to examine ongoing and planned projects to ensure maximum effectiveness in combating desertification, revising policies which impeded local control and establishing national monitoring mechanisms.

The Council reaffirmed UNEP's central role in co-ordinating and assessing implementation of the Plan. It invited the General Assembly to expand the role of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control and Governments to become more involved in the Group's work. It requested the Executive Director to examine the functions of the Inter-Agency Working Group on Desertification and to recommend in 1985 changes to ensure full co-operation between United Nations agencies. The Council decided that a further overall assessment of progress in implementing the Plan should be carried out in 1992. In the mean time, the Executive Director would report to the Council annually.

Following an invitation by the Assembly in December 1983,<sup>(34)</sup> the Council decided to include Ghana and Togo among those eligible to receive assistance through UNSO in implementing the Plan, bringing the number of countries covered by UNSO's desertification mandate to 21.

UNDP action. In April 1984, the UNDP Administrator submitted to the UNDP Council his annual report on UNSO assistance to the countries in the Sudano-Sahelian region in implementing the Plan of Action.<sup>(35)</sup> As called for in the Plan, UNSO also helped prepare an assessment of desertification in the region, scheduled for review by the UNEP Council together with a global assessment. The assessment showed that the most successful areas in which the Plan had been carried out had been in sensitizing Governments and population to the importance of anti-desertification measures and national planning, as well as institutional machinery, projects with a specific focus such as sand-dune fixation, and projects which allowed for involvement of the people affected.

The UNDP Governing Council, on 29 June,<sup>(23)</sup> endorsed the UNEP Council decision to include Ghana and Togo among those eligible for UNSO assistance and commended the UNDP Administrator on the progress achieved in assisting the countries of the region in implementing the Plan. Governments, United Nations bodies and organizations were urged to intensify their assistance, and the Administrator was requested to continue to report annually on implementation of the Plan.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 37, 50, 54; plenary 103.

By the original draft, the Assembly, in paragraph 3, would have endorsed the UNEP Council decision on desertification. In paragraph 8, it also would have urged Governments to accord priority to combating desertification in their development plans and in their requests for development assistance. In the original, subparagraph 9 (b) was not included.

Also on 17 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/168 B without vote.

Implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/190 of 17 December 1981, 37/216 of 20 December 1982 and 38/164 of 19 December 1983,

1. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

2. Notes with concern:

(a) That the persistent drought in the Sahel has intensified and spread into other parts of Africa, assuming the catastrophic proportions of a generalized drought;

General Assembly resolution 39/168 B

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.9) without vote (parts A and B together), 30 November (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.92, part B), based on informal consultations on draft by Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Chad, Egypt, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Mali, Niger, Senegal, Togo (A/C.2/39/L.23, orally revised); agenda item 80 (ii).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 37, 50, 54; plenary 103.

The original draft did not contain the last preambular paragraph or subparagraph 2 (c).

In the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, adopted by Assembly resolution 39/29, the United Nations Member States declared that urgent international action was needed to support regional and national efforts to implement the Plan of Action.

Financing of UNSO-UNDP/UNEP joint venture

Approved budgets for the UNSO-UNDP/UNEP joint venture for 1984-1985 amounted to $1,973,200 for institutional support and $2,000,000 for programme support. The UNDP Governing Council approved on 29 June 1984 revised appropriations of $2,190,100 gross ($986,600 net) for institutional support of the joint venture during the biennium.<sup>(36)</sup>

Ways of financing the joint venture beyond that time were examined in an April 1984 report of the UNDP Administrator.<sup>(37)</sup> He concluded that the current methods of financing the joint venture—involving the use of UNDP's administrative budget for institutional support and the Africa and Arab States' regional indicative planning figures (IPFs) for programme support, and the use of UNEP's Environment Fund for support to both budget components—remained the most practical for the time being.

By another decision of 29 June,<sup>(38)</sup> the UNDP Council noted with satisfaction the provisions made to ensure that the costs of UNDP's participation in the joint venture for 1984-1985 were fully secured despite the tight resource situation of the regional IPF. The Council endorsed the Administrator's recommendation that, pending availability of alternative funding sources, the joint venture should continue to be funded from regional IPFs and the UNDP administrative budget, and requested him to ensure that under the venture additional resources were made available to the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region in their efforts to combat desertification.

Management of tropical forests

World-wide concern about the rapid destruction of tropical forest ecosystems continued to increase in 1984. Consequently, UNEP gave high priority to assisting in environmentally sound management policies for tropical forest areas.

As a part of joint UNEP/UNESCO activities, pilot research and training projects were established in various tropical countries. A project in the Ivory Coast resulted in a comprehensive report on management of a humid tropical forest environment, which was expected to be useful in promoting conservation of the remaining West African forests.

A model for planning total resource utilization in tropical ecosystems was prepared for UNEP by Dartmouth College (Hanover, New Hampshire, United States). With UNEP support, the Kenya Wildlife Fund Trustees completed an ecological survey of the easternmost remnant of the African equatorial forests, and management guidelines for the area were formulated. UNEP also sponsored attendance by participants from Brazil, Malaysia and Senegal at an International Union of Forestry Research Organizations Symposium on Human Impacts on Forests (Strasbourg, France, September). FAO for its part published an updated report on national and international activities and co-operation in tropical forestry.

The UNEP Council, on 28 May,<sup>(3)</sup> welcomed the adoption of the International Tropical Timber Agreement in 1983<sup>(39)</sup> and urged Governments to sign and ratify it to enable it to enter into force on the appointed date of 1 October 1984. The Council authorized the Executive Director to co-operate with the International Tropical Timber Organization. Despite the Council's call, the number of signatures and ratifications remained insufficient for the Agreement to enter into force (see p. 539).

Soil management

Implementation of the World Soils Policy

Excessive loss of topsoil from croplands in the four major food-producing countries (China, India, USSR, United States) was roughly estimated at 13.2 billion tons per year. If the rates of soil erosion for the rest of the world were similar, the world was losing an estimated 25.4 billion tons of soil per year from croplands in excess of new soil formation, the UNEP Executive Director concluded in his annual report.<sup>(9)</sup> To meet these problems, the UNEP secretariat prepared a Plan of Action for the Implementation of the 1982 World Soils Policy.<sup>(40)</sup> The Plan was structured into five major programmes: to enhance international awareness of the importance of land degradation and conservation issues; to assist countries in formulating national soils policies; to provide assistance to countries through missions, field projects, training courses, seminars and technical publications; to develop the technical and scientific knowledge necessary to promote rational use of the world's soils; and to collect, compile and disseminate data on the world's soil resources, their use and management.

The UNEP Council endorsed the Plan on 28 May 1984.<sup>(3)</sup> It noted the efforts of the Executive Director to prepare a financial plan for its implementation; requested him to promote a broad response to the Plan of Action, to circulate fact sheets on projects to potential donors and to investigate the possibility of a regional approach to funding; and appealed to Governments and international organizations to make commitments.

Also on 28 May,<sup>(41)</sup> the Council decided that, in the Plan of Action, highest priority should be given to training national technical cadres for executing national plans on soils policy and that training and research programmes should be carried out in existing institutions. The Council called on the Executive Director to assess the feasibility of convening a world conference to achieve co-operation in implementing the World Soils Policy.

Other activities

A meeting on integrated land-soil management in mountain ecosystems was held in March 1984 at Sofia, Bulgaria, and a course to train specialists from developing countries in the subject was also given at Sofia from 22 September to 14 October. A workshop on the impact of agricultural management on the environment at the regional level was held in Georgia, USSR, in October. A joint UNEP/Zambia project on watershed management, with special reference to soil and water conservation, started in October.

In co-operation with FAO, UNEP published a Spanish version of the Guidelines for the Control of Soil Degradation. As a result of a project on the impact of agricultural management on the environment, jointly undertaken by UNEP and the USSR Commission for UNEP, the first of four volumes on The Natural Dimensions of Agriculture was prepared.

Wildlife conservation

Illegal trade, indiscriminate hunting, destruction of habitats, expansion of agriculture, continued overgrazing by domestic livestock and the presence of toxic chemicals in the environment continued to endanger the survival of many wild animal and plant species.

Exercising its co-ordinating role in the implementation of the 1980 World Conservation Strategy,<sup>(42)</sup> UNEP continued to provide secretariat services to the Ecosystem Conservation Group (ECG), consisting of FAO, UNESCO, UNEP and the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN). Expert missions were sent to a number of countries to help prepare national conservation strategies. A project on wildlands, protected areas and wildlife management in Latin America and the Caribbean was identified as a pilot activity of ECG.

UNEP also continued its support to the IUCN Species Survival Commission and its more than 60 specialist groups and to the Commission on National Parks and Protected Areas, in their roles as major sources of data for the UNEP-supported IUCN Conservation Monitoring Centre.

According to the Centre, there were nearly 3,000 protected areas in the world, which covered some 400 million hectares but fell far short of truly protecting biological diversity. A project was started in September 1984 to ensure that guidance was available to Governments on existing protected areas and their management in the Afro-tropical, Indo-Malayan and Oceanian/Antarctic realms. With UNEP support, action plans were prepared for groups of species, including Asian elephants and rhinoceroses, cats and polar bears.

A draft Action Plan for Biosphere Reserves was adopted by the International Co-ordinating Council of the UNESCO Man and the Biosphere (MAB) programme in December. The Council then requested the MAB secretariat to submit the Plan to the governing bodies of FAO, IUCN and UNEP for implementation during 1985-1989.

In co-operation with FAO, IUCN and UNESCO, UNEP continued to assist Governments in implementing international and regional measures for conservation of wild animals and plants and their habitats. Two regional training seminars on the implementation of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) were organized in 1984 (Brussels, Belgium, June; Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, October). The Standing Committee of the Conference of the Parties to CITES met from 2 to 6 July at Gland, Switzerland. Its Technical Committee met in July at Brussels to deal with several problems, particularly the ivory trade; a meeting of the regional co-ordinators of the Technical Committee was held in conjunction with the Kuala Lumpur seminar.

The UNEP Council, in a 28 May decision on environmental management,<sup>(3)</sup> took note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the contribution of the United Nations system to the conservation of the Latin American cultural and natural heritage and its progress report on regional programmes in the conservation of African wildlife, as well as the comments of the Executive Director on the two reports (see p. 617).

In another decision of the same date,<sup>(6)</sup> the Council welcomed the intention of the Federal Republic of Germany to host the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals in 1985 (see p. 770).

Genetic resources

The International Board for Plant Genetic Resources (IBPGR), supported by UNEP, continued in 1984 to co-ordinate the exploration, collection and conservation of crop plant genetic resources. Research centres in almost 100 countries were supporting that programme. The material collected was deposited in various gene banks, including those forming part of the network housing the World Base Collection; that network consisted of 38 centres in 29 countries, storing material from 30 crops or groups of crops that produced seeds. During the year, IBPGR began to designate centres to hold clonally propagated crops.

A network of centres to collect the seeds of multi-purpose arboreal species from arid and semi-arid zones was started by FAO, IBPGR and UNEP. Eight countries were co-operating in the network during 1984: Chile, Democratic Yemen, India, Mexico, Pakistan, Peru, Senegal and the Sudan. With UNEP support, FAO identified three countries—Cameroon, Malaysia and Peru—for pilot projects developing and testing methodologies for in situ conservation of forest genetic resources within existing protected areas.

Similarly, UNEP continued to support the conservation of animal genetic resources. In a joint FAO/UNEP project, the University of Khartoum (Sudan) was planning the creation of a nucleus herd of the Kenana cattle breed. The French Government's Laboratoire de Contrôle des Reproducteurs began collecting semen from the Gobra breed in Senegal for shipment to the first FAO/UNEP gene bank.

UNEP also continued its support to regional Microbiological Resource Centres in Brazil, Egypt, Guatemala, Kenya, Senegal and Thailand. The Centres organized training activities, provided research fellowships and grants, and produced several state-of-the-art reports. UNEP identified pilot projects to be carried out by the Centres for environmental application of microbial resources for soil fertility, pest and vector control, degradation of persistent environmental pollutants and organic residue utilization.

Significant developments took place in the application of biological nitrogen fixation for enhancing soil fertility and increasing legume production in small farms while moving away from the use of costly and potentially polluting nitrogenous fertilizers. Activities included the establishment of pilot plants for Rhizobium inoculant production; trials on legume inoculation; testing of peat resources as inoculant carriers; training of local biological nitrogen fixation professionals and technicians; and information dissemination.

The FAO/UNEP Advisory Panel on Biological Nitrogen Fixation held its first meeting at Nairobi in conjunction with the first conference of the African Association of Biological Nitrogen Fixation (23-27 July), which was co-sponsored by FAO, UNDP, UNEP and Nairobi University.

The World Data Centre for Micro-organisms at Brisbane, Australia—established to promote access to information about culture collections and to produce specialized inventories of microbial genetic resources of environmental and economic value—continued to receive support from UNEP. The first meeting of the Working Group on the International Microbial Strain Data Network (Bangkok, Thailand, 23-25 November) was organized by UNEP in conjunction with the Fifth Congress of Culture Collections.

On 28 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the UNEP Council welcomed the adoption by FAO in 1983 of the International Undertaking on Plant Genetic Resources,<sup>(43)</sup> urged Governments to support it and authorized the Executive Director to co-operate with the FAO Commission on Plant Genetic Resources in its implementation.

Freshwater ecosystems

The environmental aspects of water resources management and freshwater ecosystems were important areas of UNEP activities in 1984 (see p. 648).

Marine ecosystems

Protection of the marine environment

During 1984, UNEP continued to assess marine pollution problems; much of that work was carried out through the regional seas programme (see below).

The Joint Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution was the main inter-agency mechanism to review problems of marine pollution. Through it, hazard evaluations for cadmium, lead and tin were completed, and work was in progress on the evaluation of arsenic, carcinogens, major nutrients, mercury and organosilicons. The air/sea transport of pollutants in the Mediterranean region was reviewed; analyses of marine pollution implications of ocean energy development and of the effects of thermal discharges on the marine environment were completed; and an oceanographic model for the dispersion of waste disposal into the sea was prepared. A major review of the global flux of pollutants from land-based sources and of the feasibility of integrated global ocean monitoring was initiated. Guidelines for the environmental impact assessment of land-based sources of pollution were applied in two case-studies, in Chile and Thailand.

The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on the Protection of the Marine Environment against Pollution from Land-based Sources held its second session at Geneva in November to develop global guidelines to control marine pollution from sources such as rivers and coastal outfalls.<sup>(44)</sup> The UNEP Council, on 28 May 1984,<sup>(6)</sup> expressed satisfaction at the results of the Working Group's first session in November/December 1983<sup>(45)</sup> and welcomed Canada's offer to host a future session.

Work was undertaken with several agencies on the formulation and testing of reference methods for marine pollution studies. The work was conducted under the technical co-ordination of the IAEA International Laboratory of Marine Radioactivity, which served as the global quality control (intercalibration) centre for most of the pollutants monitored through UNEP-sponsored activities. Approximately 20 reference methods had been issued, and their application provided the basis for the global comparability of data collected through the regional seas programme.

UNEP reached an agreement with the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) of UNESCO, providing that IOC would co-sponsor the Group of Experts on Methods, Standards and Intercalibration. The aim of the agreement was to ensure the widest possible involvement of experts in the formulation, testing and application of reference methods.

A number of global, regional and specialized directories and bibliographies were published in co-operation with the FAO Aquatic Sciences and Fisheries Abstracts system.

The UNEP Council, on 28 May,<sup>(3)</sup> welcomed the increased co-operation between UNEP and IOC. It noted the progress made with regard to a review of environmental implications of the disposal of radioactive wastes at sea, as requested in 1983,<sup>(45)</sup> and urged the Executive Director to continue to co-operate with IAEA and other organizations in studying the impact of the disposal of radioactive wastes on the sea-bed as well as seabed mining.

Living marine resources

In 1984, UNEP efforts in regard to living marine resources focused on a Global Plan of Action for the Conservation, Management and Utilization of Marine Mammals prepared in co-operation with FAO (see p. 650).

Regional seas programme

Since May 1984, UNEP's Regional Seas Programme Activity Centre had been pursuing activities in 10 regions involving more than 120 coastal States, more than 30 global and regional organizations and a network of approximately 250 national institutions. By the end of 1984, action plans had been adopted in eight regions and regional conventions signed in six. Preparations for the adoption of one more action plan and two more conventions advanced significantly. UNEP continued to provide overall co-ordination for the regional seas programme and served as the secretariat for four action plans and three conventions.

Activities under the regional seas programme included:

Mediterranean. Assessments were published of microbial pollution of beaches and shellfish-growing areas and of pollution by mercury; control measures were imposed. The regional monitoring programme was strengthened through national monitoring agreements signed with six countries. The Mediterranean Trust Fund supported 116 projects.

Kuwait Action Plan region. UNEP continued to assist the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment to co-ordinate the implementation of four major projects in co-operation with IAEA, IOC, IUCN and UNESCO, and to prepare for negotiations on a protocol on the prevention of pollution from land-based sources. The Marine Emergency Mutual Aid Centre in Bahrain held several technical meetings to formulate surveillance programmes to determine the extent of pollution.

Caribbean. The first ratification of the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region and its Protocol concerning Co-operation in Combating Oil Spills, signed in 1983,<sup>(46)</sup> was received in 1984. A total of 10 projects were negotiated with 11 organizations or Governments for implementation in 1984 and 1985; they dealt with marine pollution monitoring and control, oil spill preparedness planning, environmental education and public awareness, tourism development and environmental management, environmental impact assessment of industrial projects, environmental training, protected natural areas and endangered wildlife species.

West and Central Africa. The Convention for Co-operation in the Protection and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the West and Central African Region and the Protocol concerning Co-operation in Combating Pollution in Cases of Emergency entered into force on 5 August 1984. Implementation of priority projects dealing with contingency planning for pollution emergencies, marine pollution research and coastal erosion control continued with the co-operation of FAO, IAEA, IMO, IOC, UNESCO and WHO.

East Africa. A second meeting of experts was convened (Nairobi, October) to complete negotiations on a regional convention for the protection, management and development of the marine and coastal environment, a protocol concerning protected areas and wild fauna and flora, and a protocol on co-operation in combating marine pollution in cases of emergency. The experts reached consensus on nearly all of the provisions of those instruments and recommended that a conference of plenipotentiaries be convened in 1985 for adoption of the final texts.

Red Sea and Gulf of Aden. The Regional Convention for the Conservation of the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden

Environment and the Protocol concerning Regional Co-operation in Combating Pollution by Oil and Other Harmful Substances in Cases of Emergency, adopted in 1982,<sup>(47)</sup> were ratified by the Sudan. UNEP continued its support to marine pollution research and monitoring activities through ALECSO.

South Pacific. Negotiations continued on a draft convention for the protection and development of the natural resources and environment of the region and on two protocols. A large number of projects on research, monitoring, environmental education, training and information were begun through two networks of national and regional institutions. Workshops were convened on trace metal analysis, coastal mapping, water resources of small islands, and marine pollution prevention, response and control, the last in co-operation with IMO and the United States Coast Guard.

South-east Pacific. A programme for research on and monitoring of marine pollution from domestic, agricultural, mining and industrial sources, involving 15 institutions from all five participating States, became operational. Global guidelines for environmental impact assessment were applied to a case-study in Chile in co-operation with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC).

East Asian seas. The Action Plan was built around five major projects co-ordinated by the national institutions of the participating States: assessment of levels of pollutants and their effects on the marine and coastal environment; study of coral resources and their protection from pollution; research on the toxicity of oil and oil dispersants; development of regional data exchange systems; and study of maritime meteorological phenomena influencing the environment of the region. The projects were financed by the East Asian Seas Trust Fund, with matching funds from the Environment Fund.

South Asian seas. A meeting of national focal points on the development of an action plan was convened by UNEP, in co-operation with the South Asia Co-operative Environment Programme, in March 1984. The meeting considered the geographical scope of the plan and its main objectives, identified priority areas, discussed financial arrangements, and agreed on the preparation of studies and reviews.

UNEP Council action. On 28 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the UNEP Council noted the progress made in implementing the regional seas programme. It urged States to support the adoption and ratification of regional conventions and protocols and invited them to pay their contributions to the trust funds for the regional action plans.

Environmental aspects of political, economic and other issues

Arms race and the environment

Following a 1981 UNEP Council request,<sup>(48)</sup> regular analysis of the impact of the arms race on nature was included in the 1984-1989 system-wide medium-term environment programme.

Work on an annotated bibliography on military activities and the human environment continued in 1984, as a joint project begun in 1983 of UNEP and the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute. Under the same project, two books were published in 1984: Environmental Warfare: A Technical, Legal and Political Appraisal, and Herbicides in War: The Long-term Ecological and Human Consequences. A book on mitigating the environmental effects of explosive remnants of war was completed.

A UNEP study on collateral damage likely from chemical warfare was expected to be completed in 1985. Another study examined the impact of the massive use of lethal anti-personnel nerve agents on crops, livestock, forest, grassland, wildlife, aquatic biota and soil biota.

Among other developments, Iran, by a letter of 13 March to the Secretary-General,<sup>(49)</sup> charged that Iraq's recent use of chemical weapons in its attacks on Iran (see p. 229) not only endangered human life and natural resources but also polluted the environment; Iran's Environmental Protection Organization expected all international organizations, particularly UNEP, to condemn such inhuman action.

Material remnants of war

Pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(50)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in October 1984 a report on the problem of remnants of war.<sup>(51)</sup> He stated that the Executive Director had sought the views of all States on the recommendations of a July 1983 high-level group of experts dealing with legal, informational, technical, institutional and other aspects of the problem.<sup>(52)</sup> By 28 August 1984, only 10 States had replied: Angola, Belgium, Burkina Faso, Liberia, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Senegal, Sweden, Uganda.

Of those, three said they had no comments. Two States reiterated their position that the question should be resolved bilaterally, that the subject had already been introduced into international law (Protocol II to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, adopted in 1980<sup>(53)</sup>) and that discussions on responsibility and compensation should be avoided. As for a United Nations conference or a meeting of government-nominated experts, two States considered that a meeting would be convenient while two others opposed the proposal. Two countries considered it convenient to consult the International Court of Justice, while one indicated its opposition to that procedure. Two States felt that the United Nations system had a role with regard to technical assistance. One State suggested that a tax on the military budgets of the super-Powers be considered.

The Secretary-General concluded that the limited responses had made it difficult to comply with the Assembly's request that he intensify his efforts to urge the States concerned to conduct bilateral consultations leading to agreements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/167 by recorded vote.

Remnants of war

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3435(XXX) of 9 December 1975, 35/71 of 5 December 1980, 36/188 of 17 December 1981, 37/215 of 20 December 1982 and 38/162 of 19 December 1983 concerning the problem of remnants of war,

Recalling also decisions 80(IV) of 9 April 1976, 101(V) of 25 May 1977, 9/5 of 25 May 1981 and 10/8 of 28 May 1982 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling further resolution 32 adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, and resolution 26/11-P adopted by the Eleventh Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Islamabad from 17 to 22 May 1980,

Convinced that the responsibility for the removal of the remnants of war should be borne by the countries that planted them,

Recognizing that the presence of the material remnants of war, including mines, in the territories of developing countries seriously impedes their development efforts and causes loss of life and property,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the problem of remnants of war;

2. Regrets that no concrete measures have been taken to solve the problem of remnants of war despite the various resolutions and decisions adopted thereon by the General Assembly and the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Reiterates its support of the just demands of the developing countries affected by the implantation of mines and the presence of other remnants of war in their territories for compensation and for complete removal of those obstacles by the States that implanted them;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme and other organizations of the United Nations system, within their mandates, to collect all information on expertise and available equipment, so as to evaluate, on request, the actual needs of the developing countries affected and to assist those countries in their efforts to detect and clear material remnants of war;

5. Calls upon all States to co-operate with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system in carrying out the task assigned to them in paragraph 4 above;

6. Also calls upon those developed countries directly responsible for the presence of remnants of war to intensify bilateral consultations with the aim of concluding ing, without undue delay, agreements for the solution of those problems;

7. Requests all States to inform the Secretary-General of actions they have taken in the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a detailed and comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/167

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 121-0-24 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790Add.9) by recorded vote (105-0-23), 30 November (meeting 54); 43-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.12/Rev.1); agenda item 80 (i).

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Senegal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Speaking also on behalf of Italy and the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany said the text raised issues that fell within bilateral relations; reference to the just demands of the developing countries for compensation was not acceptable as it prejudged the outcome of bilateral relations; also, the concept of responsibility of certain States did not have any foundation under international law. In Sweden's view, the possibility of practical results would be furthered if the question of international responsibility and compensation were left aside; instead of giving the Secretary-General tasks which could not be carried out, it would be more constructive to try to co-operate along lines envisaged in article 9 of Protocol II to the 1980 Convention on prohibiting the use of excessively injurious weapons. India pointed out that the text applied only to actions resulting from colonial and imperialist wars.

Introducing the draft, Malta said that unexploded war devices continued threatening life and property in many developing countries and jeopardizing their economic development; it was time for the countries which had been involved in the Second World War to join in clearing the war debris, for they alone had the necessary technology. Egypt, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, said the remnants constituted further aggression against the people of the countries where they had been planted.

Environmental aspects of apartheid

In response to a May 1983 UNEP Council decision,<sup>(54)</sup> the Executive Director submitted in January 1984 a report on the environmental impacts of apartheid, with specific reference to industry in urban townships and rural bantustans.<sup>(55)</sup> In particular, the report reviewed the impact of industrial relocation in black areas on the environment, and discussed the environmental problems related to black urban townships. According to available information, compliance with environmental standards required was often lax, but no hard evidence could be obtained on the extent of environmental damage caused by industry. However, considering that most of the industries in the so-called homelands were related to manufacturing, a wide spectrum of environmental pollution could be expected unless preventive measures were taken. The environment in which the black population of the urban townships lived reflected South Africa's racial laws; although the Government had drawn up plans for urban renewal and the provision of housing, the translation of those plans into action could not be taken for granted.

Taking note of the report, the UNEP Council, on 28 May,<sup>(56)</sup> noted with concern that serious environmental deterioration was continuing with the establishment of polluting industries. The Council reaffirmed its solidarity with the victims of apartheid and its condemnation of that system. It requested the Executive Director to continue monitoring the environmental impacts of apartheid, including the adverse conditions under which black people worked, especially in mines, and to respond, in conjunction with other United Nations agencies, to appeals from national liberation movements for assistance to the victims.

Mediterranean—Dead Sea canal project

On 28 May 1984,<sup>(57)</sup> the UNEP Council adopted a decision on Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX).

Environment and development

Guidance on the integration of environmental considerations into development decision-making was provided by UNEP throughout 1984. Among its activities was an analysis of Japanese experience in integrating physical and socio-economic planning with environmental considerations.

A survey of the methods utilized in centrally planned economies to analyse natural resources in relation to development goals was undertaken by UNEP, the CMEA International Institute of Economic Problems and the USSR Commission for UNEP.

Action aimed at demonstrating the feasibility of integrating nature conservation into major development projects was begun by UNEP and the IUCN Conservation for Development Centre. The Centre, with UNEP support, prepared a review of environmental impact assessment procedures used in developing countries. The review served as a background paper at an international seminar on the topic (Feldafing, Federal Republic of Germany, 9-12 April). A survey of the environmental aspects of the activities of transnational corporations was prepared by UNEP with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations.

The fifth meeting of the Committee of International Development Institutions on the Environment (Luxembourg, 13-15 June) reviewed progress made in implementing the Declaration of Environmental Policies and Procedures Relating to Economic Development; three workshops on the environmental dimension in development planning were held by UNEP in co-operation with ECLAC in May (Argentina, Chile, Colombia); a training course on the evaluation of development projects from the standpoint of environmental economics was co-sponsored by UNEP and the East-West Environment and Policy Institute of the University of Hawaii (Honolulu, United States, 4-15 June).

Regional meetings of employers' organizations on environment and development in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, 12-16 March) and in Africa (Nairobi, 15-19 October) were convened by ILO and UNEP; an expert group meeting on environmental accounting and its use in development policy and planning was held by UNEP and the World Bank (Washington, D.C., 5-9 November).

On 28 May,<sup>(58)</sup> the UNEP Council took note of the review of the implementation of the environmental aspects of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) in a report prepared under the aegis of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (see p. 392). The Council reiterated the importance it attached to environmental considerations for the success of the Strategy and authorized the Executive Director to transmit the report with the Council's comments to the Committee on review and appraisal of the Strategy.

The Council, in another decision of the same date,<sup>(59)</sup> encouraged governmental bodies engaged in environmental activities to continue their efforts for sustained global progress with special focus on the needs of developing countries, thus contributing to a continuing dialogue between and among developed and developing countries. It agreed to continued support by UNEP of that dialogue, with a view to facilitating agreements and elaborating actions for environmental undertakings.

The World Commission on Environment and Development, established to help prepare the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond (see p. 744), held an organizational meeting in May and an inaugural meeting in October (see APPENDIX III).

Environment and industry

As called for by the Executive Director in 1983,<sup>(60)</sup> a World Industry Conference on Environmental Management (Versailles, 14-16 November) was sponsored jointly by world industry and UNEP, in co-operation with the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC); more than 500 representatives from over 70 countries took part. Emerging from the Conference was that: environmental management should be an integral part of economic development; economic growth could be made compatible with environmental protection; cost-benefit analysis was an essential element of environmental decision-making and should be improved in an attempt to quantify the value of critical elements in our cultural heritage; the direct cost of environmental protection as well as the cost to society of environmental damage must be considered; and a preventive approach was preferable to correcting environmental problems after they had occurred.

In addition, the Conference agreed on 15 major recommendations. Of particular interest to UNEP was that ICC should convene a small group of chief executive officers representative of both geographical areas and industrial sectors to serve as advisers for industry, and case-studies on companies' experience in environmental management were to be prepared under the auspices of UNEP and industrial associations.

Following the Conference, UNEP co-ordinated work on a strategy for industrial and intersectoral environmental planning.

Population and environment

Environment received significant attention at the International Conference on Population (Mexico City, August 1984) (see p. 714). The Conference declared that priority should be given to the protection of the physical environment and the prevention of its further deterioration.

On 28 May,<sup>(61)</sup> the UNEP Council requested the Executive Director to give priority to the work towards harmonious interaction between population, resources, development and the environment, and to treat the issue of population and the environment in the state-of-the-environment report for 1985 in the light of the Conference's results.

Human settlements and environment

Faced with increasing environmental pressures on urban regions, UNEP continued to collaborate with other United Nations agencies, notably UNCHS (see p. 744), in combating deteriorating environmental standards. As part of its efforts for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987) (see p. 776), UNEP approved a pilot project on environmentally sound planning of human settlements in Democratic Yemen.

A joint UNEP/UNCHS project assisting the United Republic of Tanzania in planning its new capital of Dodoma was completed. Technical missions were undertaken by UNEP and UNCHS to upgrade slum and squatter settlements in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

An international conference on the ecological approach to urban planning was held by UNEP and UNESCO (Suzdal, USSR, 23-30 September).

A third volume of guidelines for environmental planning and management of human settlements was prepared; the guidelines were being tested in field projects before their scheduled publication in 1985.

Environmental law

Three working groups of experts had been established for the priority topics under the 1981 Montevideo Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law.<sup>(62)</sup> The groups dealt with: protection of the marine environment; management of hazardous wastes; and information on potentially harmful chemicals (see above).

The Working Group of Experts on Environmental Law met (Washington, D.C., 26-29 June 1984) to develop principles and goals for environmental impact assessment.

On 28 May,<sup>(6)</sup> the UNEP Council welcomed the financial support by the United States for the Working Group session and called on Governments to participate in the Group. The Council also expressed satisfaction at the results of the first sessions of the three working groups and requested the Executive Director to continue co-operation with other United Nations bodies in preparing international guidelines.

The legal status of non-obligatory guidelines and principles was one of the issues considered at an expert workshop on the future of international environmental law, convened in November by the United Nations University and the Hague

Academy of International Law with UNEP participation.

International instruments

Pursuant to a 1975 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(63)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted in September 1984 a report of the Executive Director on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment.<sup>(64)</sup> The report contained information on nine recent conventions and protocols and changes in the status of existing conventions. It recorded the conventions and protocols for which corrections had been introduced and other conventions pertaining to the environment.

The Register of international treaties and other agreements in the field of the environment was revised to reflect membership status as of 15 August; the revised Register listed 118 multilateral instruments relating to the environment.

By a 28 May decision,<sup>(6)</sup> the UNEP Council authorized the Executive Director to transmit his report and the Register to the Assembly, and requested him to continue collecting and disseminating information on international and national environmental law. In accordance with the same decision, the secretariat of the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals was established at Bonn in October under UNEP administration with support from the Federal Republic of Germany. The Council authorized the Executive Director to call the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention for 1985.

Preparations for a global convention for the protection of the ozone layer neared completion, and global guidelines for transfrontier movements, storage and disposal of hazardous wastes were being developed (see above).

Following a request by the States parties to the 1973 Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, the secretariat of the Convention (located at Lausanne, Switzerland) was administered from November 1984 by the UNEP Executive Director and fully financed from the trust fund established for that purpose.

In decision 39/429, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the Executive Director's report on conventions and protocols.

Environmental education and training

Many UNEP projects contained an education and training component. The UNEP/UNESCO International Programme in Environmental Education in its ninth year in 1984 promoted general environmental education through teacher training, studies, publications, dissemination of technical materials, workshops, and technical assistance to Governments. A review of the Programme found that priority should be placed on the implementation of activities rather than on further elaboration of a theoretical basis for them; that instructional and reference materials had to be adapted and augmented for local use; and that more attention should be devoted to incorporating environmental education into technical and vocational school curricula.

In addition to specialized environmental training, there was general training of groups whose decisions and activities had direct impact on the environment. During 1984, 200 officials and professionals received such general training in environmental management from UNEP. The seventh and eighth international graduate courses on resource management and environmental impact assessment in developing countries, organized by UNEP, UNESCO and the German Democratic Republic at the Technical University of Dresden, ended in July and began in October, respectively.

Under a joint ILO/UNEP project started in 1980, ILO continued to test training modules at five ILO-sponsored training institutions in Asia and the Pacific.

Co-operation between UNEP and the International Centre for Training in Environmental Sciences, which began in 1975, ended with the dissolution of the Centre in 1984. Subsequently, UNEP focused its support on training activities in the Network of Environmental Training Institutions in Latin America and the Caribbean. The Network concentrated on assisting Governments in preparing a regional environmental training programme.

Recommendations for a programme of action for environmental education and training in Africa, made at an April 1983 meeting of experts,<sup>(65)</sup> were submitted to the UNEP Council by the Executive Director in January 1984.<sup>(66)</sup> The recommendations dealt with assessing national needs, developing national plans, establishing national co-ordination machinery and steering committees, and promoting regional co-operation among national institutions.

The Council, on 28 May,<sup>(67)</sup> endorsed the recommendations. It requested the Executive Director to formulate a regional programme in co-operation with Governments and UNESCO, and to report in 1985 on progress achieved. The Council recommended that the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean agree soon on a general programme for the regional Environmental Training Network and that the environmental training activities of various agencies be co-ordinated. It requested the Executive Director to explore the possibilities of co-operation among the regions that were undertaking an effort similar to the Network and urged him to continue budgetary support to the Network. The Council recommended that the countries of the region study a co-ordination project with the aim of attaining the signature of an instrument that would guarantee financing for the Network up to 1987.

Chapter XVII

Human settlements

Progress in implementing the work programme of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS), also known as Habitat, continued to be made during 1984, with the completion of 16 technical co-operation projects and the beginning of 41 new ones.

The seventh session of the Commission on Human Settlements was held at Libreville, Gabon, from 30 April to 11 May 1984. Among the items on its agenda were the 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (IYSH), human settlements activities of the United Nations system, and systematic approaches to training and information for human settlements. The Commission adopted 15 resolutions and one decision; two of the resolutions, concerning IYSH and the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the Israeli-occupied territories (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX), required General Assembly action.

The Secretary-General presented a cross-organizational programme analysis of United Nations human settlements activities to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), which made several recommendations to improve their system-wide co-ordination.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1984/57 A, encouraged the Commission to continue helping developing countries to develop human settlements and urged it to support technical co-operation among those countries.

The Council, by resolution 1984/57 B, requested United Nations agencies and organizations to review their programmes with a view to incorporating in their activities the objectives of IYSH.

By resolution 39/170 A, the Assembly took note of the Commission's report on its 1984 session and made a renewed appeal to Governments to contribute to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. By resolution 39/170 B, the Assembly welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to review the arrangements regarding UNCHS participation in the work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). By resolution 39/171, the Assembly urged Governments to intensify their activities for IYSH and to assess prospects and resources regarding shelter and settlements, leading to the formulation of national shelter strategies applicable until the year 2000.

Topics related to this chapter. Middle East: territories occupied by Israel—living conditions of Palestinians; settlements policy. Regional economic and social activities.

Programme and finances of UNCHS*Programme policy

The report of the Commission on Human Settlements on its 1984 session<sup>(1)</sup> was considered by both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

The Council in July, by resolution 1984/57 A, encouraged the Commission to continue to contribute to the efforts of developing countries in developing human settlements, and urged it to provide adequate support for technical co-operation among developing countries in formulating and implementing their human settlements programmes. Further, the Council expressed support for the efforts of the Commission and UNCHS to achieve greater co-ordination of human settlements activities in the United Nations system.

The Assembly, by resolution 39/170 A of 17 December, expressed appreciation to those who had made voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation in support of the work of UNCHS, and renewed its appeal to Governments, especially those of developed countries, to begin making regular contributions.

Human settlements activities*Activities of UNCHS

The 1984 activities of UNCHS<sup>(1)</sup> were structured on the basis of eight subprogrammes, as approved by the Commission in 1981:<sup>(2)</sup> settlements policies and strategies; settlements planning; shelter and community services; development of the indigenous construction sector; low-cost infrastructure for human settlements; land; mobilization of finance for human settlements development; and human settlements institutions and management.

The year started with 120 technical co-operation projects; of those, 16 were completed, while 41 new projects were started during 1984. Consequently, at the end of the year, 145 projects were ongoing, a 20.8 per cent increase over 1983.

Work under the settlements policies and strategies subprogramme included the preparation of a theme paper on planning and management of settlements, with emphasis on small and intermediate towns and local growth points, for the Commission's 1985 session. A report was also prepared for the International Conference on Population, held in August at Mexico City (see Chapter XIV of this section), giving particular attention to national population redistribution policies. Another report, concerning human settlements policies and institutions: issues, options, trends and guidelines, contained case-studies on national policies in Brazil, Costa Rica, Hungary, Kenya, Mexico, the Philippines and Sri Lanka. Work continued throughout the year on the quinquennial Global Report on Human Settlements. Fifteen technical co-operation projects were in progress, of which two were completed, while two new projects were started.

Under the settlements planning subprogramme, two reports were completed for publication in 1985. They were on road networks and electricity reticulation networks, two volumes of the series providing guidelines for the planning of rural settlements and infrastructure. An interim report was prepared on the use of urban data management systems supported by microcomputers in developing countries, following a survey conducted through Habitat News. Integration of environmental policies into settlements planning was a continuing activity, and reports produced in co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) were reviewed. At the end of the year, 33 technical co-operation projects were in progress, of which 10 were new projects in 1984. Three projects were completed during the year.

Strategies and options available to Governments for the rehabilitation of inner-city slums were identified by UNCHS research under the shelter and community services subprogramme. The research was based on an appraisal of rehabilitation programmes in Lagos, Nigeria; Cairo, Egypt; Bangkok, Thailand; and Bombay, India. A project on training for community participation in low-income settlements improvement was approved by the Danish International Development Agency; agreements were reached with Sri Lanka and Zambia on training courses, and training materials were developed for road planning in squatter areas, community participation in sites-and-services projects and sanitation programmes, cost recovery and affordability, and project support communication. Research outlines were drawn up on the co-operative promotion of shelter programmes and the role of community services in the development of low-income communities. Thirty-two technical co-operation projects were in progress at the end of 1984, of which seven were started during the year; six projects were completed in 1984.

Under the subprogramme on the development of the indigenous construction sector, a report on small-scale building materials production in the context of the informal economy was published. In co-operation with the Economic Commission for Africa, work continued on reformulating building codes in African countries. Four case-studies on the use of indigenous building materials and technologies in Colombia, Ecuador, Honduras and Zambia were completed. A workshop and international colloquium on earth construction technologies appropriate to developing countries was held at Brussels, Belgium (10-12 December 1984). Seven technical co-operation projects continued throughout the year.

Under the low-cost infrastructure for human settlements subprogramme, discussions were held with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) on future co-operation related to new and renewable energy sources, and it was agreed to produce jointly a video film on solar energy utilization in developing countries. Two reports—on energy requirements and utilization in rural and urban low-income settlements and on the use of solar energy and natural cooling in the design of buildings in developing countries—were published. A series of technical memoranda on low-cost transport for developing countries was initiated in co-operation with the International Labour Organisation; the first memorandum, on animal-drawn carts, was prepared, as was a study on human settlements and transportation policies in the context of energy and national development goals. A review of technologies for the provision of basic infrastructure in low-income settlements was published. A demonstration project on low-cost sanitation technologies in rural settlements was begun, in co-operation with Jordan and the United Nations Children's Fund. Ten technical co-operation projects were in progress at the beginning of 1984; two were completed, and five were added, leaving 13 ongoing at the end of the year.

Research was carried out under the land subprogramme aimed at bringing about an effective public/private partnership in land development. At the end of 1984, three technical co-operation projects were ongoing, two of which started during the year. Among them, a research project, based on regional reports from Africa, Asia and Latin America, identified land-use planning and management problems with respect to data collection and administration.

Under the subprogramme on the mobilization of finance for human settlements development, research sought to identify effective structures and procedures for financing shelter, infrastructure and services in developing countries. Comparative analysis of case-studies was aimed at identifying innovative finance mechanisms. Technical reports on the promotion of non-conventional approaches to housing finance for low-income groups and community-based finance institutions were published. Research continued on a housing software package which could be tailored to the type of housing loan and the needs and repayment capacities of individual borrowers. Seven technical co-operation projects were in progress at the end of the year, two of which were added in 1984.

Work continued on the first of two case-studies on urban management in large and middle-sized cities under the human settlements institutions and management subprogramme. However, the main thrust of activity under that subprogramme was on training and improving the urban and rural habitat. A number of regional workshops, seminars and courses were held, among them: a workshop on housing in development, co-sponsored by UNCHS and the Catholic University of Leuven (Belgium) (Nairobi, Kenya, 16-27 January), with a follow-up course at Leuven (27 August-26 October); a course on planning, financing and managing city growth, co-sponsored by UNCHS and the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank (Bangkok, 29 June-11 August), including a high-level seminar on the same subject (5-10 August); and a seminar/workshop on the management of human settlements in hot and dry climates, sponsored by UNCHS in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Arab League Educational, Cultural and Scientific Organization (Khartoum, Sudan, 19-29 February). A trilingual thesaurus (English, French, Spanish) on human settlements was prepared with the Swedish Institute of Building Documentation. Three technical co-operation projects were completed during 1984, while 13 new projects were started, making 35 ongoing projects at the end of the year.

Member States expressed interest in innovative data management techniques for human settlements planning. A training package on data management, based on UNCHS workshops, was issued.

Short-term advisory services and preparatory assistance to field projects, with emphasis on supporting human settlements activities in the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, were provided by UNCHS. In 1984, 42 short-term missions were fielded.

Co-operation with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations

A report highlighting the co-operation between UNCHS, intergovernmental organizations outside the United Nations system, financial institutions (intergovernmental as well as private, foundations, etc.) and international and national non-governmental organizations (NGOs) was submitted by the Executive Director to the Commission in March 1984.<sup>(3)</sup>

UNCHS maintained regular contact with many organizations and took part in their meetings.

Other co-operative activities related to information and training. A number of films were produced with, among others, the National Film Board of Canada and the Asian Institute of Technology (Bangkok); most of the films were designed for training in upgrading slums and squatter settlements. UNCHS provided assistance to regional information systems, including the Latin American Information Network on Human Settlements (Bogotá, Colombia) and the Human Settlements Information Network/Africa (Nairobi). A basic list of documents for human settlements libraries in developing countries was being prepared with the Swedish Institute of Building Documentation. The International Development Research Centre (Ottawa, Canada) made a major contribution to human settlements information exchange by providing 10 sets of microfiche of some 2,000 previously unpublished technical reports.

Several universities and training institutes collaborated with UNCHS on courses, seminars, workshops and surveys. For example, the Housing Research and Development Unit of the University of Nairobi made available resource people and undertook field research in connection with UNCHS training courses. Similar collaboration existed with universities in other regions. Resource people from various universities served as consultants and experts to the UNCHS Training Unit (see below).

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987)

A report on the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987) was submitted by the UNCHS Executive Director to the Commission in February 1984.<sup>(4)</sup> The report pointed out that guidelines on the selection of IYSH projects had been distributed, also in February, to Governments, the United Nations and other international and non-governmental organizations. Also distributed was an IYSH brochure in several languages.

Pointing out that the Commission and the General Assembly had previously agreed that IYSH would not be an end in itself, the Executive Director said that 1987 was intended to be a transitional period between the demonstration and testing of practical action (1984-1986) and the application of new or revised national strategies, policies and programmes (1988-2000). Four major reporting goals needed to be achieved by the end of 1986 for the Year to be a significant transition period, he added. The reports would cover the results of IYSH projects around the world; shelter and settlement conditions and priorities in various countries; IYSH policy and technical options; and shelter in relation to national economic and social development.

The ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) considered IYSH at an October 1984 meeting. It was agreed that all United Nations agencies, including the regional commissions, would provide UNCHS with a copy of their current and 1986-1987 work programmes, annotated to indicate those elements that might be relevant to IYSH. It was also agreed that each agency would designate at least one project as an IYSH project.

Meetings were held with United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) resident co-ordinators who were active in promoting IYSH. In September 1984, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the United Nations University sponsored a Latin American mayors' conference that focused on low-cost shelter and infrastructure issues. The UNCHS Executive Director spoke on urban explosion and IYSH at a World Social Prospects Association meeting, sponsored by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research at Geneva in November.

On 10 May, the Commission on Human Settlements adopted two resolutions on IYSH. One recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly.<sup>(5)</sup> The Assembly would appeal to Governments that had not made a voluntary contribution to IYSH to do so and to international financial institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide support. The Commission's resolution included an annex on national action required, including the selection of projects, the distribution of guidelines, the establishment of procedures for reporting on the progress of projects, and the formulation of national shelter strategies to the year 2000. By the second resolution,<sup>(6)</sup> the Commission invited the developed countries, in co-operation with developing countries and international financial agencies, to consider increasing until 1987 the percentage of financing for shelter and allied services for the most disadvantaged.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1984/57 B without vote.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1981/69 B of 24 July 1981, in which it noted the recommendation of the Commission on Human Settlements and recommended to the General Assembly that it should proclaim the year 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 37/221 of 20 December 1982, in which the Assembly proclaimed the year 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Noting with great appreciation the strong support which the proclamation of an International Year of Shelter for the Homeless has received from Governments and from intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations throughout the world, as evidenced by the fact that more than one hundred countries have already designated national focal points for the Year,

Convinced that, in the implementation of strategies, programmes and projects for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, all possible means of co-operation—bilateral, multilateral and multi-bilateral—between and among international agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations should be utilized to the full,

Having considered the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission on Human Settlements contained in its resolution 7/1 of 10 May 1984,

1. Welcomes the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission on Human Settlements contained in its resolution 7/1;

2. Recommends the General Assembly to adopt, at its thirty-ninth session, the draft resolution recommended for adoption by the Assembly in Commission on Human Settlements resolution 7/1;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments and other institutions that have made pledges of voluntary contributions to the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, noting that more than 80 per cent of the amount of such pledges to date has come from developing countries;

4. Again urges those Governments that have not yet done so to announce their voluntary contributions as soon as possible and appeals to those that have already made pledges to consider increasing, if possible, the amount of such pledges;

5. Requests United Nations agencies and organizations, including the regional commissions, bilateral and multilateral financing institutions and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to review their policies and programmes with a view to incorporating in their activities the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/57 B

26 July 1984      Meeting 49      Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/146) without vote (parts A and B together), 18 July (meeting 12); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1984/C.1/L.12, part B), based on informal consultations on draft by Canada, Kenya, Netherlands, Sri Lanka and Uganda (E/1984/C.1/L.5, part B); agenda item 15.

By the original 5-nation draft, the Council would have endorsed, rather than welcomed, the 10 May Commission resolution on IYSH,<sup>(5)</sup> and would have strongly urged, rather than again urged, Governments to announce their contributions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/171 without vote.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/221 of 20 December 1982 and 38/168 of 19 December 1983 on the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980,

Noting with appreciation that over one hundred countries have established national focal points for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless and that national programmes and projects for the Year are already under way in many countries,

Noting also that most of the voluntary contributions pledged to date have been pledged by developing countries and that further voluntary contributions are needed in order to carry out effectively the overall plans endorsed by the General Assembly for the activities before and during the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Bearing in mind the need for Governments to integrate the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless into their current and future national development plans,

Having considered the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission on Human Settlements contained in its resolution 7/1 of 10 May 1984, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/57 B of 26 July 1984 on the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

1. Urges all Governments to intensify their activities related to the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless and in particular to undertake or designate as soon as possible suitable human settlements projects that can serve as demonstration projects in accordance with the guidelines established under the programme for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

2. Further urges all Governments to initiate a comprehensive assessment of prospects, priorities and resources regarding shelter and settlements, leading to the formulation of national shelter strategies applicable until the year 2000;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that have already made voluntary contributions and pledges to the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

4. Appeals to all Governments that have not yet announced voluntary contributions to do so, and to international financial institutions, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide adequate financial and other support for the programme for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

5. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, to review their policies and programmes with a view to incorporating and promoting therein activities which serve the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report on progress achieved in the implementation of the approved programme of measures and activities to be undertaken before and during the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "International Year of Shelter for the Homeless".

General Assembly resolution 39/171

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.10) without vote, 30 November (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.91), based on informal consultations on draft by Canada, Colombia, Ecuador, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Liberia, Netherlands, Philippines, Romania, Sri Lanka, Uganda and Zambia (A/C.2/39/L.22); agenda item 80 (j).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 33, 37, 40, 55; plenary 103.

The original 13-nation draft did not contain the provision that became paragraph 2 of the adopted text and, in the first preambular paragraph, did not refer to the 1980 Economic and Social Council resolution putting forward guidelines for international years.<sup>(7)</sup> By the original, the Assembly would have appealed for voluntary contributions from all Governments, especially those of developed countries and others in a position to do so, instead of merely appealing to all Governments that had not announced contributions. Also, instead of inviting United Nations agencies and organizations to review their policies and programmes, the Assembly would have requested them to do so.

National action for human settlements

In accordance with a 1979 General Assembly request,<sup>(8)</sup> the UNCHS Executive Director submitted in January 1984 to the Commission a progress report<sup>(9)</sup> on the implementation of the recommendations for national action adopted in 1976 by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.<sup>(10)</sup> Nineteen countries—Costa Rica, Egypt, Finland, France, Gabon, Greece, Hungary, Israel, Kenya, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, the Philippines, Solomon Islands, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates—had responded to a UNCHS request for information. The Executive Director stated that the information collected might have been more valid had the response rate been higher. He suggested that information provided in the future be based on a regular assessment by Governments of their human settlements strategies, policies and programmes. A synthesis of those national reports would undoubtedly be more productive than questionnaire responses.

By a resolution of 10 May,<sup>(11)</sup> the Commission invited all Member States to submit at its 1986 session a report on the implementation over the past decade, 1976-1985, of the Habitat recommendations.

Human settlements information

In response to a 1982 Commission resolution,<sup>(12)</sup> the UNCHS Executive Director submitted in January 1984 a report on a systematic and comprehensive approach to information for human settlements.<sup>(13)</sup> Four main areas of concern were identified—statistical data; scientific and technological knowledge; "popular", or indigenous, knowledge; and communication techniques. A number of measures at the national and international levels which might be undertaken to integrate information activities into a coherent system were recommended. Among them were making Governments aware of the need for more effective utilization of information; providing technical support for the establishment of information systems; developing compatible standards and common methods of information processing; encouraging municipal governments to concentrate on basic data collection, such as cadastral surveys; increasing dissemination of research and technical project results through publications and bibliographical data bases; and training staff for documentation and information services. A list of basic human settlements data requirements and a summary of UNCHS information activities were annexed to the report.

The Commission, by a resolution of 10 May,<sup>(14)</sup> endorsed the report. It urged Governments to formulate human settlements information and communication policies and requested the Executive Director to assist them in that regard. By another resolution of the same date,<sup>(15)</sup> it invited UNCHS, in co-operation with UNDP and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, to disseminate information on construction technologies among developing countries.

Human settlements training

The UNCHS Executive Director, responding to a 1982 Commission resolution,<sup>(12)</sup> submitted in January 1984 a report on human settlements training.<sup>(16)</sup> Reviewing training in human settlements for developing countries, the report stated that the overriding training issue was the need to evolve new forms of regional and subregional collaboration, and that current systems of national action and international support were failing to establish training institutions on a realistic scale. Collaborative approaches were required to produce locally based training materials, to train local trainers, and to maintain a flow of information to Governments, national training institutions, aid agencies, NGOs and community groups.

The report discussed multilateral and bilateral approaches to training, the dominant role of university training in developed countries, and the deficiencies of current training efforts, and made recommendations to developed and developing countries and to UNCHS, among them: Developing countries should encourage their training institutions to focus on practical problem-solving and to be interdisciplinary and innovative; accept primary responsibility for financing their own internal training programmes; and create a cadre of skilled trainers. Training as a development process required the active participation of bilateral and multilateral agencies in the developed countries. Bilateral agencies should ensure that there was a strong training component in every development project they supported; funding agencies should explore local and regional training capabilities before sending trainees to developed countries. UNCHS should sponsor collaboration with other United Nations organizations, funding agencies and international NGOs, in order to improve training activities. It should take a leading role in designing methods for analysing training needs and capabilities.

By a resolution of 10 May,<sup>(17)</sup> the Commission outlined a systematic approach to training for human settlements. It endorsed the report of the Executive Director and took note of the recommendations made in Sharing Responsibilities and Roles for Training in Planning and Development, a report prepared by a seminar of experts, organized by the Centre for Human Settlements, University of British Columbia (Vancouver, Canada). It urged Governments to expand their training programmes and requested the Executive Director to take specific steps to enhance manpower development. Among the steps recommended were the devising of criteria for assessing manpower and training needs, the preparation of manpower development strategies and the identification of training institutions that could facilitate collective self-reliance in manpower development.

Assistance to developing countries

A report on financial and other assistance to developing countries for human settlements was submitted by the UNCHS Executive Director to the Commission in February 1984,<sup>(18)</sup> pursuant to a 1979 General Assembly resolution.<sup>(19)</sup> The report focused on the distribution of aid for human settlements among developing countries according to regional distribution, distribution by level of income, and distribution among the 36 least developed and the other developing countries. It identified bilateral and multilateral donors and the recipients of such aid, as well as emerging trends and issues, and discussed the results of a questionnaire sent to Member States; it found that while responses were few, they expressed some useful viewpoints. For example, the United States Agency for International Development cited several problems associated with human settlements assistance, including absorptive capacity which limited where funds could be used, project delays, lack of co-ordination and subsidized interest rates. In conclusion, the report pointed out the low, and even declining, priority that the human settlements sector commanded in donor aid. It suggested that the question of targets in assistance levels be considered, a question never addressed in the human settlements field.

Rather than directing attention exclusively to increasing the flow of assistance to human settlements, it was important to find ways to make more effective the existing flow, the report concluded. Consideration should be given to broadening the channels through which assistance was provided; in that context, community organizations and church groups had a valuable role to play. A co-ordinating UNCHS information centre that could identify the various needs of developing countries for assistance in human settlements was needed. On a national level, focal points for human settlements could be established within national aid agencies, also to facilitate an exchange of views and experiences.

By a resolution of 10 May,<sup>(20)</sup> the Commission requested the Executive Director to improve information on financial and other assistance; it called on major donor and lending agencies to give him full support and on Governments to submit their views on the policies followed for such assistance. By another resolution of the same date,<sup>(6)</sup> the Commission invited developed countries, within a new approach to the financing of housing in the framework of IYSH (see above), to consider providing for or increasing financing for shelter and services for the most disadvantaged.

Proposed financial and advisory institution for Asia and the Pacific

In response to a May 1983 resolution of the Commission on Human Settlements,<sup>(21)</sup> a further step was taken in relation to the establishment of an Asian human settlements bank. The UNCHS Executive Director reported to the Commission in February 1984 that he had called a meeting of a small working group of governmental experts and others.<sup>(22)</sup> The group, composed of experts from India, the Philippines and ESCAP, an observer from the Asian Development Bank, an expert consultant and a UNCHS officer, met at Manila, Philippines, from 25 to 28 January 1984. The group recommended that the Executive Director initiate high-level consultations with countries of the region and the Asian Development Bank to explore the role the Bank might play in creating the proposed institution. It also recommended that a regional forum discuss the proposal and appoint a committee of prospective member countries which, in co-operation with UNCHS and other concerned parties, would finalize its charter.

Human settlements in territories occupied by Israel

At its 1984 session, the Commission on Human Settlements adopted two resolutions relating to Israel's policy of establishing settlements in the territories occupied by it as a result of previous armed conflict in the Middle East (see p. 316). By the first resolution, adopted on 9 May,<sup>(23)</sup> the Commission condemned Israel's settlement policies in the occupied Palestinian territories and rejected its actions to change their demographic composition. It reaffirmed the need for a comprehensive report on the impact of the Israeli settlements on the security and social, economic and cultural life of the Palestinians, and requested that a UNCHS senior representative accompany United Nations experts to the territories in order to prepare the report for the Commission's 1985 session. It also requested that the General Assembly take appropriate measures if Israel refused to co-operate in implementing the 1983 Assembly<sup>(24)</sup> and Commission resolutions.<sup>(21)</sup>

By the second resolution, of 10 May 1984,<sup>(25)</sup> the Commission recommended that the UNCHS Executive Director consider the possibility, in connection with IYSH, of carrying out a housing programme for the Palestinians in the occupied territories. It requested him to submit a study on the subject in 1985.

Assistance to Africa

In 1984, UNCHS co-operated with various institutions in Africa, including the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and Shelter-Afrique (see below). It also maintained regular contact with the Africa Union of Architects (AUA), a member of the International Union of Architects.

A financial contribution was made by UNCHS to a Seminar on Education of Architects, Planners and Designers of the Human Habitat (Yamoussoukro, Ivory Coast, January). AUA provided UNCHS, at its request, with a list of members who could assist in the training of skilled personnel for the construction industry in Africa. Representatives of UNCHS attended the first triennial World Congress of AUA (Yaoundé, Cameroon, May).

Assistance to victims of apartheid

By a resolution of 9 May 1984,<sup>(26)</sup> the Commission on Human Settlements strongly condemned South Africa's apartheid régime for its inhuman repression and its illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its acts of aggression against the front-line and other neighbouring States. It commended the UNCHS Executive Director for his efforts to aid the victims of apartheid, in implementation of its May 1983 resolution,<sup>(27)</sup> and further commended OAU member States and others for their support of efforts against apartheid. The Executive Director was requested to continue to provide additional assistance to those countries in which human settlements had been disrupted or overburdened by the South African régime, and to report in 1985 on progress made.

Co-operation with Shelter-Afrique

Having noted the various organizational steps taken to enable Shelter-Afrique (a specialized housing finance institution) to commence operations at its headquarters at Nairobi, the Commission on Human Settlements, by a resolution of 9 May 1984,<sup>(28)</sup> requested the UNCHS Executive Director to continue to provide assistance to Shelter-Afrique and to report in 1985 on the specific nature of that assistance and on the progress made in finalizing the draft memorandum of understanding, identifying specific areas and the forms of co-operation. The draft memorandum had been prepared by UNCHS.

Participation of youth in the solution of human settlements problems

By a resolution of 10 May 1984,<sup>(29)</sup> the Commission on Human Settlements acknowledged that the solution of housing problems was a long-term process, requiring the participation of all population groups, and that the participation of youth in the solution of those problems was feasible only under conditions of lasting peace and security. The Commission urged Governments to curb the arms race and focus their efforts on ensuring that the social and economic needs of youth for shelter, education and related infrastructure were met. It invited all countries to prepare information on their national experience with the participation of youth in solving housing problems, and requested the UNCHS Executive Director to report on that experience in 1986.

Organizational questions

Co-ordination in the UN system

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in October 1984 a report<sup>(2)</sup> on his efforts to arrange UNCHS participation in all aspects of the work of ACC in order to strengthen the co-ordination of human settlements programmes within the United Nations system. He said that UNCHS had been kept informed on matters under consideration in ACC and its subsidiary bodies, and had been invited to participate in those meetings in which it had a direct interest. He would review those arrangements in the near future, bearing in mind the UNCHS mandate and relevant Assembly resolutions. In that context, he noted the relevant comments of CPC at its 1984 session and Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/57 A concerning the need for greater co-ordination on human settlements (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/170 B without vote on 17 December 1984.

Co-ordination of human settlements programmes within the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 35/77 C of 5 December 1980, in which it invited the Secretary-General to arrange, in consultation with the members of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, for the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to participate in all aspects of the work of that Committee and its subsidiary machinery,

Recalling its resolution 37/223 C of 20 December 1982, in which it requested the Secretary-General to accelerate his efforts in arranging for such participation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session,

Recalling also its resolution 38/167 B of 19 December 1983 in which it took note of the report of the Secretary-General summarizing decision 1983/18 of 27 October 1983 of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, which decision it noted did not completely meet the requirement of its earlier resolutions 35/77 C and 37/223 C, and requested the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of its resolutions on the question,

Noting the views of the Economic and Social Council, contained in its resolution 1984/57 A of 26 July 1984, particularly paragraph 6 thereof,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General concerning the co-ordination of human settlements programmes within the United Nations system, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 38/167 B,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Takes note, in particular, of resolution 7/5 of 9 May 1984 of the Commission on Human Settlements, on the question of a biennial cycle of sessions for the Commission, and again requests the Commission, pursuant to General Assembly decision 38/429 of 19 December 1983 and Economic and Social Council decision 1984/104 of 10 February 1984, to consider adopting a biennial cycle of sessions;
3. Welcomes, in particular, the intention of the Secretary-General to review in the near future the existing arrangements regarding the participation of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in the work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in the light of the Centre's mandate and responsibilities and the relevant General Assembly resolutions;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of its resolutions on this question, taking into account the pertinent comments of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-fourth session.

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.10) without vote (parts A and B together), 30 November (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.90, part B), based on informal consultations on draft by Canada, Colombia, Ethiopia, Gabon, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Liberia, Netherlands, Philippines, Sri Lanka, Uganda and Zambia (A/C.2/39/L.21, part B); agenda item 80 (j).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 33, 37, 40, 55; plenary 103.

The adopted text did not contain a provision included in the original 13-nation draft. By that provision, the Assembly would have restated its conviction that full participation by UNCHS in all aspects of the work of ACC and its subsidiary machinery was necessary for the effective co-ordination of United Nations human settlements programmes. By the original draft, the Assembly also would have taken note of, rather than welcomed, the Secretary-General's intention to review arrangements of such participation.

Cross-organizational programme analysis

In response to a 1982 CPC decision,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General presented in April 1984 a cross-organizational programme analysis (COPA) of the human settlements activities of the United Nations system.<sup>(4)</sup> Two innovations were particularly important for that analysis: an initial review by the Commission on Human Settlements, at its 1983 session,<sup>(5)</sup> of the structure of activities in relation to national needs and the use of information on activities over three bienniums.

A number of conclusions could be drawn which suggested a need for remedial action, the analysis stated. The first was that a practical working definition of what constituted a human settlements activity did not exist; without such a definition, effective programming and co-ordination were extremely difficult.

None the less, it seemed that the United Nations human settlements activities responded to Governments' needs, but there were problems concerning priorities and emphasis. Total resources seemed to have increased since the 1976 Habitat Conference,<sup>(6)</sup> a growth accounted for almost entirely by the World Health Organization. Although UNCHS had also had some real growth, there had been no real growth in human settlements activities as a whole and their share of total programme resources had declined. Moreover, while inter-governmental bodies had emphasized a number of areas—shelter, public participation, regional planning and finance—there were few discrete programme activities in those areas, and there had been no real change in emphasis among programmes since the 1976 Conference, despite modifications in emphasis by the General Assembly in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and by the Commission on Human Settlements.

The analysis showed that the degree of cooperation among the organizations concerned with human settlements was not so high as in other activities which had been the subject of COPAs. The Commission had yet to play a decisive role in co-ordinating system-wide activities.

A number of possible recommendations flowed from the conclusions. First, there should be a thorough review of programme priorities. In addition, CPC might wish to recommend: that an urgent effort be made to elaborate a practical working definition of human settlements activities and to establish sub-categories for them; that a more deliberate effort be made to improve the flow of information about human settlements, with all organizations of the system adjusting their information systems under the guidance of the Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems; and that the Commission co-ordinate activities better, with UNCHS supporting the Commission's work more actively.

Over the longer term, a few areas should emerge with particularly high priority in which many organizations would be involved, the analysis stated. For those areas, CPC might wish to recommend that joint thematic reviews be carried out by specialist staff, patterned along the model of thematic programming used in the preparation of the system-wide medium-term environment programme.

Commenting on the analysis in May 1984,<sup>(7)</sup> CPC noted that human settlements conditions remained for developing countries, especially the least developed, a matter of grave concern. Certain groups were identified as requiring special attention, for example the elderly, the disabled, youth and women. CPC pointed out that although the Commission on Human Settlements had been consulted on the preliminary analysis, it had not been able to review the final version and therefore its substantive comments had not been available to CPC. CPC also noted that, while most relevant activities had been included, those of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees had not and full information on the rural settlements activities of the World Bank also had been omitted. It observed that the imperatives agreed upon by the 1976 Conference did not seem to have led to fundamental changes in the de facto orientation of United Nations human settlements activities.

CPC made several general recommendations. It affirmed its earlier recommendations that COPAs, together with CPC's conclusions and recommendations, be reviewed and followed up by the competent intergovernmental bodies, and in the case of the human settlements COPA, CPC recommended that it be placed before the Commission on Human Settlements in 1985 and that CPC deal with the question again in 1986. It further recommended that the analysis be the subject of a joint CPC/ACC meeting, should subsequent developments make that desirable. Specifically, CPC stated that a more precise definition of human settlements activities was necessary. It recommended that intergovernmental bodies, in particular the Commission on Human Settlements, review the question of programme priorities; that co-ordination be reinforced at both the inter-agency and intergovernmental levels; and that new efforts be undertaken to identify ways to optimize human settlements resources.

CPC further recommended that the Commission carry out its co-ordination function more vigorously and that UNCHS assist the Commission; for that purpose, the Centre should help organize a systematic exchange of information, promote programme cohesion through prior consultations on programme budgets, and determine possible revisions to the medium-term plan.

It also recommended that the tools for co-ordination of operational activities—the resident United Nations co-ordinators and assistance to Governments in country programming—be focused more effectively on human settlements, stressing in particular information exchange among concerned organizations.

In section VI of resolution 1984/61 A, the Economic and Social Council invited the Commission on Human Settlements to give due consideration to the analysis and the CPC recommendations and, with UNCHS, to exercise vigorously its co-ordination role.

In resolution 1984/57 A on the Commission's report (see above), the Council expressed support for the efforts of the Commission and UNCHS to achieve greater harmonization of United Nations human settlements activities and for CPC's recommendations.

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/238, approved the CPC recommendations (see Chapter XXIV of this section).

Joint meetings with UNEP

Noting the May 1983 decision of the UNEP Governing Council expressing the view that annual joint meetings with UNCHS would no longer be necessary after 1984 because of the expected proximity of the headquarters of both organizations at Nairobi,<sup>(8)</sup> the Commission on Human Settlements, by a resolution of 10 May 1984,<sup>(9)</sup> recognized that changes in the practice of holding those annual joint meetings had institutional implications. It requested the UNCHS Executive Director to assess the implications of the discontinuation and decided to take up the question in 1985.

Commission on Human Settlements

Biennial cycle of sessions

Following a decision (1984/104) by the Economic and Social Council to request its subsidiary bodies that currently met on an annual basis to consider on an experimental basis a biennial cycle of meetings (see Chapter XXIV of this section), the UNCHS secretariat expressed its views with regard to that request in a March note to the Commission on Human Settlements.<sup>(10)</sup> Should the Commission decide to adopt a biennial cycle of sessions, the note stated, the timing of the change-over was crucial. If the Commission were to go on a biennial cycle as of the conclusion of its 1985 session, for example, it would not meet again until 1987, the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless. As a matter of practical necessity and legislative injunction, it would appear that such a change-over should not take place before IYSH. Since there were numerous other implications, the note suggested that the Commission might wish to take up the issue again in 1985.

On 9 May 1984,<sup>(11)</sup> the Commission decided to consider the matter at its 1985 session on the basis of a report to be prepared by the UNCHS Executive Director.

Both the Council (resolution 1984/57 A) and the General Assembly (resolution 39/170 B) took note of the Commission's resolution and again requested it to consider adopting a biennial cycle of sessions.

1986 Commission session

Two possible themes—public participation, and building materials and technology—that might be discussed by the Commission in 1986 were put forward in February 1984.<sup>(12)</sup>

The Commission, by a resolution of 10 May,<sup>(13)</sup> decided that the theme at its 1986 session should be community participation in human settlement work, and invited the UNCHS Executive Director to submit an outline for the theme paper in 1985.

Chapter XVIII

Human rights

In 1984, the United Nations continued its efforts to foster human rights and fundamental freedoms world-wide and to curtail their violation. Through its Commission on Human Rights and Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, it responded to the challenges posed by discrimination in all its aspects and violations of the entire range of civil and political, as well as economic, social and cultural, rights. Engaging a large part of its attention were denial of the right to self-determination of peoples and gross human rights violations in various countries, primarily the system of apartheid, and violations of the human rights of the individual. The Secretary-General added his concern for individuals whose rights might have been violated and stated his commitment to seek to facilitate the release of those who might have been imprisoned for political reasons (p. 8).

In addition to its endeavours to define the rights to development, to food, and to education and employment, the United Nations broadened its activities in the area of scientific and technological progress in relation to human rights.

During the year, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment was adopted, marking an achievement in United Nations efforts towards eventual respect for all human rights through international human rights instruments. Adherence to these instruments continued to be encouraged, and elaboration of other international standards moved forward on behalf of the child, those detained due to mental ill-health, indigenous populations, migrant workers, minorities and non-citizens, on the rights to development and to promote human rights, and in respect of computerized files.

Actions on these and other human rights taken by the Commission, at its fortieth session held at Geneva from 6 February to 16 March 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> were embodied in 64 resolutions and 17 decisions; those taken by the Sub-Commission, at its thirty-seventh session, held also at Geneva, from 6 to 31 August,<sup>(2)</sup> in 37 resolutions and six decisions. Action taken on their recommendations by the Economic and Social Council was embodied in 22 resolutions and 25 decisions; those taken by the General Assembly, in 31 resolutions and two decisions.

Discrimination*Racial discrimination*Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993)Implementation of the Programme for the Decade*

In 1984, in keeping with a 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(3)</sup> the Programme for the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983)<sup>(4)</sup> continued to be applied and implemented, pending adoption of a plan of activities for 1985-1989 requested of the Secretary-General by the same resolution.

As called for in the Programme, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council in April 1984 two reports on activities relating to the Decade. His annual report on this topic, with later addenda,<sup>(5)</sup> summarized actions, suggestions and trends emerging from deliberations of United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and other international and regional organizations, and transmitted information on activities by non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The second report, also with later addenda,<sup>(6)</sup> summarized replies received from Governments on legislative, administrative and other measures they had taken to implement the Programme.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 28 February 1984,<sup>(7)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights took note of the 1983 Declaration and Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.<sup>(8)</sup> Stressing the need for vigorous action to implement United Nations resolutions on apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, the Commission endorsed the September 1983 decision of its Sub-Commission<sup>(9)</sup> to include in a study to be carried out by Asbjørn Eide (Norway) recommendations on ways of ensuring such implementation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Having considered the Secretary-General's reports on implementation of the Programme for the first Decade, the Economic and Social Council, in May 1984, adopted decision 1984/151 without vote.

Reports of the Secretary-General relating to the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council took note of the reports of the Secretary-General submitted in accordance with paragraphs 18 (e) and (f) of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983 on the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/151

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 3.

Plan of activities for 1985-1989

In line with the goals of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, a draft plan for 1985-1989, as well as a statement of programme budget implications for the activities recommended for 1985.<sup>(10)</sup>

The draft plan suggested specific activities, such as the preparation of model legislation; training courses for legislative draftsmen; a review of national legislation in conjunction with the Council's review of the Programme of Action for the Decade; and periodic examination of the functioning of the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid<sup>(11)</sup> and of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.<sup>(12)</sup> Priority could be assigned to completing the ongoing elaboration of a draft convention on the rights of migrant workers and their families, a draft declaration on the rights of minorities and draft standards on the human rights of indigenous populations (see below).

Teaching materials to promote educational activities against racism and racial discrimination, with particular emphasis at the primary and secondary levels of education, could be prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), and an information programme developed and carried out by the United Nations Department of Public Information. International and regional seminars could be organized on topics such as human rights of persons belonging to ethnic groups in countries of immigration, and equality of treatment for persons belonging to ethnic and racial minorities and disadvantaged groups.

Also suggested were an updating of a 1976 revised special study on racial discrimination in all spheres,<sup>(13)</sup> studies on racial discrimination and world peace and racial discrimination in immigration laws and practices, as well as publication of a manual of existing models of national institutions promoting tolerance and harmony and combating racism and racial discrimination.

The following activities were recommended for 1985: convening of an international seminar on community relations commissions and their functions, preparation and publication of a global compilation of national legislation against racial discrimination, a study on the role of private group action to combat racism and racial discrimination, and publication and dissemination of pamphlets on problems of racial discrimination.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1984, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/43 by recorded vote.

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the proclamation by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983 of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Bearing in mind the Programme of Action for the Second Decade approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/14,

Mindful of the responsibilities conferred upon it by the General Assembly of co-ordinating the implementation of the Programme of Action and of evaluating the activities to be undertaken during the Second Decade,

Recalling the guidance provided to the Secretary-General by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/14 for the preparation of the plan of activities for the period 1985-1989 for implementing the Programme of Action and achieving the objectives of the Second Decade,

Having considered the plan of activities for the period 1985-1989 proposed by the Secretary-General,

1. Welcomes the adoption by the General Assembly of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

2. Takes note of the plan of activities for the period 1985-1989 proposed by the Secretary-General;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a revised plan of activities for the period 1985-1989, taking into account the priorities reflected in the Programme of Action for the Second Decade and the relevant resolutions and recommendations, including the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the programme of activities to be undertaken during the second half of that Decade, as contained in General Assembly resolutions 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, particularly paragraphs 18 (b) and (e) thereof, and 34/24 of 15 November 1979;

4. Invites all Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate in the implementation of the plan of activities for the Second Decade by intensifying and expanding their efforts to ensure the rapid elimination of apartheid and all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

5. Decides to consider on an annual basis an item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/43

24 May 1984 Meeting 20 43-5-2 (recorded vote)

19-nation draft (E/1984/L.29); agenda item 2.

Sponsors: Algeria, Benin, Botswana, Congo, Djibouti, Egypt, Gambia, Liberia, Mali, Morocco, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Swaziland, Tunisia, Uganda, Zaire, Zambia.

Meeting numbers: ESC 17, 20.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Greece, Indonesia, Japan, Lebanon, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom.

Abstaining: France, New Zealand.

Before adoption of the draft resolution as a whole, a vote was taken on the second part of paragraph 3 at Finland's suggestion. The wording was retained by a recorded vote of 34 to 7, with 7 abstentions.

Among the States explaining their negative votes on the paragraph, Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany said it reintroduced elements that had broken the unity of the campaign against racism and racial discrimination during the first Decade, in particular the 1979 Assembly resolution on racial discrimination.<sup>(14)</sup> France pointed out that the 1979 resolution included passages it could not accept. Luxembourg also objected to the reference to that resolution. Canada, along with New Zealand, recalled that it had voted against that resolution because of its political aspects which were alien to the campaign. In the opinion of the Netherlands, paragraph 3 changed the mandate given to the Secretary-General by the Assembly in November 1983,<sup>(3)</sup> a change that Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Luxembourg and the United Kingdom claimed the Council did not have the right to make. France considered such a change irregular. Adoption of the text, the Netherlands added, might jeopardize its co-operation with respect to the Second Decade.

Of those abstaining on paragraph 3, Japan regretted the reference to the 1979 Assembly resolution and said that, in requesting the Secretary-General to submit a revised plan, the Council exceeded the powers conferred on it. Greece noted that the paragraph mentioned resolutions it did not support; similarly, Costa Rica said the paragraph referred to resolutions defining racism in a manner it rejected. Portugal felt it would have been preferable to defer consideration of substantive questions to the Assembly's 1984 session and to avoid reopening questions which made it impossible to maintain a consensus.

Finland gave as reason for its abstention on the paragraph that it contained elements which jeopardized the consensus without which it would be difficult to obtain the goals of the Decade. Austria said it might destroy consensus and did not contribute to the joint effort to eliminate racism. Sweden hoped that the African Group of Member States at the United Nations would try to restore the consensus reached at the previous Assembly session.

Argentina stressed that its positive vote on the text did not mean that it agreed with United Nations resolutions which were not consistent with its foreign policy. Though voting in favour of retaining the second part of paragraph 3, Mexico reiterated its reservations with regard to the programme of activities for the second half of the first Decade adopted in 1979.<sup>(15)</sup>

The USSR said it did not see what there was to arouse such strong objections among certain Western countries; the text did not directly condemn Israel's racist and genocidal policies nor did it advocate specific measures against the South African apartheid régime, and it did not even mention the deterioration of the situation concerning racial discrimination in the world. The resolutions referred to in paragraph 3 had been adopted by an absolute majority and the Council therefore must refer to them and observe their provisions; moreover, the draft plan of activities did not follow the Programme of Action adopted by the Assembly, hence the need to request the Secretary-General to submit a revised plan.

Algeria stated that, for a large number of countries, reaching a consensus meant negotiating a position of principle on Zionism or apartheid rather than agreeing on the specific means—such as boycotting the racist South African régime—in achieving a common objective.

The United States did not participate in the vote, saying it had decided to discontinue its participation in the activities of the Decade after adoption of the 1975 Assembly resolution calling Zionism a form of racism;<sup>(16)</sup> since that travesty of the notion of racism had been retained in the Programme of Action for the Second Decade, the United States had no choice but to abstain from all participation in the proposed activities.

The Observer for Israel noted that paragraph 3 of the adopted text referred to the 1979 Assembly resolution adopting the programme of activities for the second half of the first Decade;<sup>(14)</sup> Israel had rejected paragraphs 8 and 23 of that programme. In calling on United Nations organizations to continue investigating Israeli policies and practices based on various forms of racial discrimination, paragraph 8 made the implication, without any attempt to establish the facts, that such policies existed in Israel.

The Observer for Saudi Arabia expressed surprise that some countries were protesting against the reference to an Assembly resolution defining Zionism as a form of racial discrimination but not at the Israeli practices—genocide, torture and resettlement of the population—in the occupied territories.

CERD activities. In March and August 1984, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) (see below) considered the draft plan of activities for 1985-1989, among other documents, and examined ways to contribute to the realization of the objectives of the Second Decade. It concluded that the two studies on articles 4 (on promotion of ideas against racial discrimination) and 7 (calling for measures to combat prejudices leading to racial discrimination) of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,<sup>(12)</sup> which it had contributed to the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in August 1983,<sup>(17)</sup> would constitute useful tools for carrying out the activities for the Decade. Accordingly, CERD requested the General Assembly on 21 August 1984<sup>(18)</sup> to authorize publication of the studies so as to give them the widest possible dissemination.

Sub-Commission action. Noting the plan of activities proposed for 1985-1989, the Sub-Commission on 28 August 1984<sup>(19)</sup> recommended implementation of the proposed activities in education, information dissemination, research and advisory services. It emphasized that, in preparing teaching materials and aids, special attention should be paid to removing derogatory references to race and xenophobia from all educational literature. Drawing attention to the continued existence of organizations founded on racism and preaching violence, the Sub-Commission expressed the wish that legal measures be taken against them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As requested by the Council, the Secretary-General submitted in September 1984 for the General Assembly's consideration a report containing additions to the plan for 1985-1989.<sup>(20)</sup> These included specific action to combat apartheid, international and regional activities, and measures for programme co-ordination and reporting.

On 23 November 1984, acting on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/16 without vote.

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objective contained in the Charter of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism in all its forms, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, on the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, on the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Recalling further the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and 1983, respectively,

Taking note once again of the Report of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Convinced that the Second World Conference represented a positive contribution by the international community towards attaining the objectives of the Decade, through its adoption of a Declaration and an operational Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racial Discrimination,

Noting with concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination did not attain its principal objectives and that millions of human beings continue to this day to be the victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Emphasizing the necessity of attaining the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Convinced of the need to take more effective and sustained international measures for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination and the total eradication of apartheid in South Africa,

1. Resolves once again that all forms of racism and racial discrimination, particularly in their institutionalized form, such as apartheid, or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity, are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

2. Appeals to the international community, in general, and the United Nations, in particular, to continue to give the highest priority to programmes for combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and to intensify its own efforts, during the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to provide assistance and relief to the victims of racism and all forms of racial discrimination and apartheid, especially in South Africa and Namibia and in occupied territories and territories under alien domination;

3. Appeals to all Governments and to international and non-governmental organizations to increase and intensify their activities to combat racism, racial discrimination and apartheid and to provide relief and assistance to the victims of these evils;

4. Appeals to all Governments to review their laws and enact appropriate legislation with a view to ensuring that any victim of racism or racial discrimination has adequate protection, avenues of recourse and assistance;

5. Invites the concerned organs of the United Nations, in particular the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, as well as the relevant specialized agencies, to continue exercising vigilance in identifying actual or emergent situations of racism or racial discrimination, to draw attention to them where discovered and to suggest appropriate remedial measures;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to proceed immediately with the implementation of the activities outlined in his report on the plan of activities for the period 1985-1989;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to give the highest priority to actions to combat apartheid in the implementation of the plan of activities;

11. Requests the Economic and Social Council, during the period of the Decade, to submit an annual report to the General Assembly, containing, inter alia:

(a) An enumeration of the activities undertaken or contemplated to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade, including the activities of Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other international and regional organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations;

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/39/683; S-G, A/C.3/39/L.23, A/C.5/39/38. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 4-15, 30, 34; 5th Committee 32; plenary 71.

Following the request of CERD (see above), the Assembly, in resolution 39/21, requested the Secretary-General to explore the possibilities of issuing the two CERD studies on articles 4 and 7 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

Other measures to combat racism and racial discrimination

On 12 March 1984,<sup>(21)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States to encourage educational institutions to incorporate in their curricula the concept of the oneness of the human race and interdependence of all peoples, who shared the same basic needs and aspirations. It invited UNESCO and all other organizations concerned to continue to use every means at their disposal to emphasize the importance of education in combating all forms of prejudice.

Earlier, on 28 February,<sup>(22)</sup> the Commission recommended for adoption a draft text which served as the basis for the Economic and Social Council resolution below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1984/24 without vote.

Measures to combat racism and racial discrimination

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of resolution 1983/10 of 5 September 1983 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/9 of 28 February 1984 on measures to combat racism and racial discrimination,

1. Authorizes the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to entrust Mr. Asbjørn Eide with carrying out a study on the achievements made and obstacles encountered during the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, with special emphasis on the progress made in this field, if any, between the first<sup>(23)</sup> and second<sup>(17)</sup> world conferences to combat racism and racial discrimination, taking into account also any resolutions the General Assembly might adopt on the report of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the first stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade;

2. Recommends that the study should propose new or additional measures in this field which can be taken up for examination by the Sub-Commission;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to Mr. Asbjorn Eide in his work;

4. Requests that the study be presented to the Sub-Commission at its thirty-eighth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/24

24 May 1984 Meeting 20 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

The United States said it did not join in the consensus because it believed that the text was intrinsically linked to the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, in which it had ceased to participate since the Assembly's 1975 resolution equating zionism with racism.<sup>(16)</sup> The United States affirmed its full commitment to the elimination of racial discrimination but deeply regretted that United Nations activities in that field had been over-politicized.

Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1984, there were 124 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in 1965<sup>(12)</sup> and in force since 1969.<sup>(24)</sup> In 1984, two States—Maldives and Suriname—became parties; Peru made the declaration under article 14 of the Convention recognizing the competence of CERD to receive and consider communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming to be victims of violations of any of the rights under the Convention.

In the Secretary-General's annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Convention,<sup>(25)</sup> the same number of States were listed as having signed, ratified and acceded to the Convention as at 1 September 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/20 without vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly

Recalling its resolutions 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, 3135(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973,

3225(XXIX) of 6 November 1974, 3381(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/79 of 13 December 1976, 32/11 of 7 November 1977, 33/101 of 16 December 1978, 34/26 of 15 November 1979, 35/38 of 25 November 1980, 36/11 of 28 October 1981, 37/45 of 3 December 1982 and 38/18 of 22 November 1983,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the increase in the number of States that have ratified the Convention or acceded thereto;

3. Reaffirms once again its conviction that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and implementation of its provisions are necessary for the realization of the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

4. Requests those States that have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede thereto;

5. Calls upon States parties to the Convention to consider the possibility of making the declaration provided for in article 14 of the Convention;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to submit to the General Assembly annual reports concerning the status of the Convention, in accordance with Assembly resolution 2106 A (XX) of 21 December 1965.

General Assembly resolution 39/20

23 November 1984 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/658) without vote, 8 November (meeting 34); 29-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.8), amended by 12 nations (A/C.3/39/L.10); agenda item 88 (c).

Sponsors of draft: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, Denmark, Egypt, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Morocco, New Zealand, Pakistan, Portugal, Rwanda, Spain, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Sponsors of amendments: Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, France, Iceland, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Senegal, Somalia, Sweden, Uruguay.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 4-15, 27, 34; plenary 71.

Before approving the draft resolution as a whole, the Third Committee adopted, by 83 votes to none, with 40 abstentions, amendments sponsored by 12 nations. The amendments added the second preambular paragraph and paragraph 5.

Implementation of the Convention

Communication. By a letter of 16 January 1984,<sup>(26)</sup> Israel drew attention to what it called an ominous upsurge of anti-Semitism at the United Nations in recent years (for further details, see p. 259).

CERD activities. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up under article 8 of the Convention, held two sessions in 1984: the twenty-ninth, from 5 to 23 March, in New York; and the thirtieth, from 6 to 24 August, at Geneva.

Over two thirds of the sessions' meetings were devoted to an examination of reports and additional information submitted by 41 States and by Namibia through the United Nations Council for Namibia under article 9 of the Convention, on measures to give effect to the Convention's provisions. The CERD annual report to the General Assembly<sup>(27)</sup> summarized members' views on each country report and statements made by the States parties concerned, and reported on action taken to ensure submission of reports.

As authorized by article 15 of the Convention, also examined were copies of petitions, reports and other information relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted by the Trusteeship Council (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter II) and by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The reports related to African Territories, including Namibia; Pacific and Indian Ocean Territories; and Atlantic Ocean and Caribbean Territories, including Gibraltar. CERD observed that the continued existence of colonial régimes in the Territories was hampering full implementation of the Convention; and that the reports on the Pacific and Indian Ocean Territories, and on Anguilla and Bermuda, did not contain relevant information to enable it to fulfil its functions under article 15 in respect of those Territories.

As to the reporting obligations of States parties under article 9 of the Convention, which it had been invited to consider by a November 1983 Assembly resolution,<sup>(28)</sup> CERD on 22 March 1984<sup>(29)</sup> underlined the importance of strict compliance with reporting—one of the main mechanisms through which the Committee could promote elimination of racial discrimination. CERD was of the opinion that amending the Convention, either to extend the two-year period for submitting reports or to require a four-year substantive report and a two-year interim one, would weaken the obligations assumed by States parties under the Convention and have a negative impact on the struggle against racism and racial discrimination. CERD stated its readiness to assist States with reporting difficulties by providing training and advisory services. With the increase in the number of States parties, it would amend its rules of procedure to respond adequately to a corresponding increase in the number of reports.

Following examination of the initial report on Namibia, CERD on 20 August<sup>(30)</sup> expressed concern at the inability of the Council for Namibia to apply the provisions of the Convention in the Territory owing to South Africa's policy of apartheid. It strongly condemned that policy and decided to keep the situation in Namibia under constant review.

Also in August, CERD began to consider, in conformity with article 14 of the Convention, communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD competence to receive and consider such communications. Eleven of the 124 States parties—Costa Rica, Ecuador, France, Iceland, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Senegal, Sweden and Uruguay—had declared such recognition. By the end of the August session, work under the article had not reached the reporting stage.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 39/21 by recorded vote.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 38/21 of 22 November 1983 on the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and 39/20 of 23 November 1984 on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, as well as its other relevant resolutions on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on the work of its twenty-ninth and thirtieth sessions, submitted under article 9, paragraph 2, of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Emphasizing that it is important for the success of the struggle against all instances of racial discrimination, including vestiges and manifestations of racist ideologies wherever they exist, that all Member States be guided in their internal and foreign policies by the basic provisions of the Convention,

Bearing in mind the fact that the Convention is being implemented in different economic, social and cultural conditions prevailing in individual States parties,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on the work of its twenty-ninth and thirtieth sessions;

2. Strongly condemns the policy of apartheid in South Africa and Namibia as a crime against humanity and urges all Member States to adopt effective political, economic and other measures in conformity with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations bodies, in order to support the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia for their national liberation and human dignity, and to secure the elimination of the racist apartheid system;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report submitted to the Committee by the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence and encourages the Council in its determined endeavours towards the elimination of apartheid from the Territory and the attainment of independence of the people of Namibia;

4. Commends the Committee for its continuous endeavours towards the elimination of apartheid in South Africa and Namibia and of all forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin, wherever it exists;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the Committee's decision to participate actively in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to explore the possibilities of issuing as United Nations publications the two studies prepared by the Committee on articles 4 and 7 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

7. Welcomes the efforts of the Committee aimed at the elimination of all forms of discrimination against national or ethnic minorities, persons belonging to such minorities and indigenous populations, wherever such discrimination exists, and the attainment of the full enjoyment of their human rights through the implementation of the principles and provisions of the Convention;

8. Welcomes further the efforts of the Committee aimed at the elimination of all forms of discrimination against migrant workers and their families, the promotion of their rights on a non-discriminatory basis and the achievement of their full equality, including the freedom to maintain their cultural characteristics;

9. Calls upon all Member States to adopt effective legislative, socio-economic and other necessary measures in order to ensure the prevention or elimination of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin;

10. Further calls upon States parties to the Convention to protect fully, by the adoption of the relevant legislative and other measures, in conformity with the Convention, the rights of national or ethnic minorities and persons belonging to such minorities, as well as the rights of indigenous populations;

11. Commends States parties to the Convention on measures taken to ensure, within their jurisdiction, the availability of appropriate recourse procedures for the victims of racial discrimination;

12. Reiterates its invitation to the States parties to the Convention to provide the Committee, in accordance with its general guidelines, with information on the implementation of the provisions of the Convention, including information on the demographic composition of their population and on their relations with the racist régime of South Africa;

13. Calls upon the United Nations bodies concerned to ensure that the Committee is supplied with all relevant information on all the Territories to which General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 applies and urges again the administering Powers to co-operate with these bodies by providing all the necessary information in order to enable the Committee to discharge fully its responsibilities under article 15 of the Convention;

14. Appeals to the States parties to take fully into consideration their obligation under the Convention to submit their reports in due time;

15. Takes note of the decision of the Committee to hold its session in one of the African countries at the appropriate time and requests the Secretary-General to explore the possibilities and financial implications of holding that session within the context of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and to inform the General Assembly and the Committee on his findings;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to ensure wider publicity of the work of the Committee, which would facilitate its task to implement effectively its functions under the Convention.

General Assembly resolution 39/21

23 November 1984 Meeting 71 145-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/658) by recorded vote (137-1, 9 November (meeting 35); 16-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.9), orally revised; agenda item 88 (a).

Sponsors: Angola, Argentina, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Cape Verde, China, Cuba, Jordan, Madagascar, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 4-15, 27, 34, 35; plenary 71.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly voted separately on paragraphs 2, 3 and 12 (specifically the phrase "including information on the demographic composition of their population and on their relations with the racist régime of South Africa"). The paragraphs were retained by recorded votes of, respectively: 123 to 1, with 20 abstentions; 139 to none, with 6 abstentions; and 120 to none, with 22 abstentions.

The same paragraphs had also been voted on in the Third Committee and were retained by recorded votes of, respectively: 115 to 1, with 20 abstentions; 130 to none, with 6 abstentions; and 116 to none, with 20 abstentions.

Explaining its vote against paragraph 2 and the text as a whole, the United States said it regretted that the sponsors had withdrawn their revisions to paragraphs 2 and 4 (to replace "a crime against humanity" by "the most abhorrent form of racial discrimination" in the first paragraph and, in the second, to delete "in South Africa and Namibia" after the words "the elimination of apartheid". The legal definition of apartheid as a crime against humanity, to which the sponsors had reverted, was a definition adopted by the Assembly in the context of the 1973 Convention against apartheid<sup>(11)</sup> and had no place in a draft resolution dealing with the CERD report.

Australia, which abstained on paragraph 2, likewise voiced regret that the revision to that paragraph had been withdrawn, saying it would have been more judicious to draw attention to the definition elsewhere.

The Niger, which voted for the paragraph and the text as a whole, emphasized that apartheid was clearly a crime against humanity.

Ecuador regarded certain paragraphs as tendentious, biased and improperly worded. Ireland, speaking for the member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), stated reservations to paragraphs 2 and 12; in their view, it was not for the Third Committee to direct the work of CERD, which was an independent body established by an international convention and must not be induced to exceed its mandate by adopting positions or undertaking work not directly linked to the struggle to eliminate racial discrimination. Canada regretted that the attempts to achieve a compromise on paragraph 2 had failed; it also had strong reservations on paragraphs 3 and 12. Reservations to paragraphs 2 and 12 were expressed by Finland on behalf of the Nordic countries; in their view, neither the Assembly nor CERD could impose on Member States or States parties obligations clearly beyond the Convention's mandate. Austria held that paragraphs 2 and 12 went further than allowed for by the Convention and CERD's mandate. In Japan's opinion, paragraph 2 had no legal value.

Though voting in favour of paragraph 12, Algeria had reservations about the call on States parties to include information on the demographic composition of their population which, it felt, did not serve any practical purpose; such a request was not contained in the Convention and was merely a recommendation made by CERD in 1973. The Byelorussian SSR supported restoration of the original text; the vote had shown, it added, who were the real partisans of the right to self-determination and the struggle against apartheid and who were those content with verbal assurances. Expressing firm support for paragraphs 2 and 4 in their unrevised form, Mauritania regretted that certain countries which preached the defence of human rights had voted against the text. Chile reaffirmed its firm opposition to all forms of racial discrimination, in particular to South Africa's apartheid policy. The whole text was endorsed by Honduras.

Measures against nazism and fascism

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 12 March 1984,<sup>(31)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights again condemned all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist, based on racial exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror, or systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It urged States to draw attention to threats to democratic institutions by such ideologies and practices and called for intensified measures against them. The Commission called on States to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the conclusion of the Second World War, and recommended that, for the occasion, the Economic and Social Council should request the General Assembly to hold a special commemorative meeting in 1985, at which it would also discuss measures to counter the spread of totalitarian ideologies and practices.

Report of the Secretary-General and communications. Responding to an Assembly request of December 1983,<sup>(32)</sup> the Secretary-General in April 1984 submitted a report, with later addenda,<sup>(33)</sup> summarizing comments from 20 States, a specialized agency and 18 NGOs on ongoing and future measures to eradicate nazism, fascism and related ideologies and practices.

Additional comments were transmitted by the USSR on 4 December.<sup>(34)</sup> In this connection, Israel, on 13 December,<sup>(35)</sup> rejected what it called vilifications included in those comments, namely, that it had adopted the ideas of national and racial superiority that had been the foundations of Hitlerism. Israel said it could only assume that USSR efforts to malign Zionism, the national liberation movement of the Jewish people, were aimed at seeking justification for the brutal and racist oppression of Jews in the USSR.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, in May adopted decision 1984/149 without vote.

Report of the Secretary-General on measures to be taken against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and all other forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on measures to be taken against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and all other forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/149

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/S.I) without vote, 17 May (meeting 16); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 10.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/114 without vote.

Measures to be taken against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and all other forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the United Nations emerged from the struggle against nazism, fascism, aggression and foreign occupation, and that the peoples expressed their resolve in the Charter of the United Nations to save future generations from the scourge of war,

Bearing in mind the suffering, destruction and death of millions of victims of aggression, foreign occupation, nazism and fascism,

Recalling also the close relationship between all totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred and terror and the systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the fortieth anniversary of the victory over nazism and fascism in the Second World War will occur in 1985 and should serve to mobilize efforts of the world community in its struggle against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist and all other totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles laid down in the Charter, which are aimed at maintaining international peace and security, developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and the self-determination of peoples, and achieving international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Firmly convinced that the best bulwark against nazism and racial discrimination is the establishment and maintenance of democratic institutions, that the existence of genuine political, social and economic democracy is an effective vaccine and an equally effective antidote against the formation or development of Nazi movements and that a political system which is based on freedom and effective participation by the people in the conduct of public affairs, and under which economic and social conditions are such as to ensure a decent standard of living for the population, makes it impossible for fascism, nazism or other ideologies based on terror to succeed,

Emphasizing that all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist, based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror or systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, or which have such consequences, may jeopardize world peace and constitute obstacles to friendly relations between States and to the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Acknowledging with satisfaction the fact that many States have established systems based on the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all human beings, which are the basis of a democratic society and the best bulwark against totalitarian ideologies and practices,

Noting that, nevertheless, in the contemporary world there continue to exist various forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices which entail contempt for the individual or a denial of the intrinsic dignity and equality of all human beings, of equality of opportunity in civil, political, economic, social and cultural spheres, and of social justice,

Reaffirming that the prosecution and punishment of war crimes and crimes against peace and humanity, as laid down in General Assembly resolutions 3(I) of 13 February 1946 and 95(I) of 11 December 1946, constitute a universal commitment for all States,

Mindful of the principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, set forth in General Assembly resolution 3074(XXVIII) of 3 December 1973,

Recalling also its resolutions 2331(XXII) of 18 December 1967, 2438(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2545(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2713(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2839(XXVI) of 18 December 1971, 34/24 of 15 November 1979, 35/200 of 15 December 1980, 36/162 of 16 December 1981, 37/179 of 17 December 1982 and 38/99 of 16 December 1983,

Recalling further the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Underlining the importance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and other relevant international instruments,

Reaffirming that totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist, based on racial or ethnic or other exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror or systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, or which have such consequences, are incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the above-mentioned international instruments,

Conscious of the need to counter the spread of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on the systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, racial intolerance, hatred and terror,

Acknowledging the fact that a number of States have set up legal regulations which are suited to prevent the activities of Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist groups and organizations,

Noting again with deep concern that the proponents of Fascist ideologies have, in a number of countries, intensified their activities and are increasingly co-ordinating them on an international scale.

Expressing its concern that Fascist and Nazi and other totalitarian ideologies and practices are inherited, inter alia, by repressive racist régimes practising gross and flagrant violations of human rights and systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Indigenous populations

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. Having received information on the 1983 activities of the Sub-Commission's Working Group on Indigenous Populations,<sup>(42)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights on 12 March 1984<sup>(43)</sup> welcomed the Group's efforts with respect to the review of developments in the promotion and protection of the human rights of indigenous populations and to the evolution of international standards. It took note of the Group's discussion of a possible voluntary fund to facilitate participation by representatives of indigenous populations in the work of the Group and commended its efforts to establish a long-term programme of work. The Commission looked forward to receiving material for the formulation of draft international standards.

Working Group activities. In its review of developments in the promotion of the human rights of indigenous populations at its third session (Geneva, 30 July-2 August and 6 August 1984), the Working Group on Indigenous Populations focused on the right to land and to natural resources. With respect to international standards, the kind of instrument to be elaborated and the complex issue of a definition of indigenous populations were discussed. Consideration continued of the various proposals for the establishment and administration of a voluntary fund to encourage indigenous participation in the Group's work. An action plan for 1985 was adopted. These activities were described in the Group's report<sup>(44)</sup> to the Sub-Commission at its August 1984 session.

Study on discrimination against indigenous populations. The final report on a study of the problem of discrimination against indigenous populations<sup>(45)</sup> was presented to the Sub-Commission at its 1984 session. This final or third part of the study, completed by Special Rapporteur José R. Martínez Cobo (Ecuador) in 1983,<sup>(42)</sup> outlined his findings and a series of recommendations for action by the United Nations, the specialized agencies (specifically the International Labour Organisation (ILO), UNESCO, the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)), intergovernmental organizations (the Organization of American States and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights) and NGOs. Special areas for action included health, housing, education, language, culture, employment, land, political and religious rights, and equality in the administration of justice. Also outlined were concepts and criteria for the definition of indigenous populations, as well as principles that could form the basis for a declaration on the rights of indigenous populations.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August 1984, the Sub-Commission recommended a two-part draft resolution for adoption by the Commission on Human Rights.<sup>(46)</sup> By part A, the Commission would recommend that the Economic and Social Council authorize the Secretary-General to arrange for the publication and widest possible distribution of a condensed version of the study. By part B, the Commission would recommend adoption of a resolution by which the Council would establish a United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, with specifications as to its uses and administration.

On the same date,<sup>(47)</sup> the Sub-Commission authorized the Chairman of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), to attend the Conference of Indigenous Peoples, to be held in Panama from 23 to 30 September. The costs involved were to be borne by the United Nations Centre for Human Rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/21, the General Assembly welcomed CERD efforts aimed at eliminating all forms of discrimination against indigenous populations, among others. It called on States parties to the 1965 Convention against racial discrimination<sup>(12)</sup> to adopt legislative and other measures, in conformity with the Convention, in order to protect fully the rights of such populations.

Migrant workers

Draft convention

In March 1984, the Commission on Human Rights considered the progress made by the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, as described in the Group's reports on its May/June inter-sessional meeting and September/October session in 1983.<sup>(48)</sup> On 15 March 1984,<sup>(49)</sup> as in the previous year, the Commission invited Member States to continue to co-operate with the Group and reiterated its hope for an early completion of the convention's elaboration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/41 on 24 May 1984.

Measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and their families

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the need for international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, intellectual or humanitarian nature and in developing and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling in that regard the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and of the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Mindful of the contribution made by migrant workers to the economic growth and the social and cultural development of the host countries,

Noting, in particular, that the problems of migrant workers, which are becoming more serious in some regions for political and economic reasons and for social and cultural reasons, constitute a matter of grave concern and continue to be of the greatest importance to certain countries,

Mindful of the important contribution made by the International Labour Organisation in the protection of the rights of all migrant workers,

Appreciating also the efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in matters relating to migrant workers,

Deeply concerned at the fact that, despite the general effort made by Member States, regional intergovernmental organizations and various United Nations bodies, migrant workers are still unable fully to exercise their rights in the social field and in the labour field, as defined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Emphasizing, therefore, the efforts that must still be made effectively to protect the rights of all migrant workers and their living conditions,

Recalling its resolutions 1981/21 of 6 May 1981 and 1983/40 of 27 May 1983, and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/61 of 15 March 1984,

Recalling also its resolutions 1980/16 of 30 April 1980 and 1981/35 of 8 May 1981,

1. Welcomes the progress made by the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, established in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 34/172 of 17 December 1979;

2. Expresses again its conviction that the drafting of that convention will further facilitate the exchanges of views needed for protecting the human rights and improving the situation of migrant workers and their families;

3. Expresses the hope that substantial progress will be made by the Working Group during the two meetings to be held in 1984 in accordance with General Assembly resolution 38/86 of 16 December 1983, with a view to completing the drafting of the convention during the thirty-ninth session of the Assembly;

4. Decides to consider at its first regular session of 1985 the question of measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and to monitor the status of work done with a view to protecting the rights of all migrant workers and their families.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/41

24 May 1984 Meeting 20 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 16); 17-nation draft (E/1984/C.2/L.5); agenda item 10.

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, France, Greece, Italy, Mexico, Morocco, Pakistan, Portugal, Sweden, Yugoslavia.

Following adoption of the text, the Federal Republic of Germany said that, despite its reservations on the content and scope of the draft convention as envisaged, it had joined in the consensus on the resolution and would continue to participate in the Group's work.

Working Group activities. The open-ended Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, established by the General Assembly in 1979,<sup>(50)</sup> convened in New York in 1984 for its fourth inter-sessional meeting, between 29 May and 8 June,<sup>(51)</sup> and for its fifth session, from 25 September to 5 October.<sup>(52)</sup>

At the end of those meetings, the Group had concluded the first reading of the draft convention's provisions defining the term "migrant worker" and the categories of workers included and excluded under that term, the articles relating to the rights of documented and undocumented migrant workers and of project-tied migrant workers, and the articles on declarations of exclusions upon signature or ratification. Provisional agreement on those articles concluded the first reading of parts I on scope and definitions, II and III on fundamental and other rights of migrant workers, and VII and VIII on general and final provisions. The first reading was also concluded of parts IV on provisions applicable to particular categories of migrant workers and VI on the convention's application.

Thus completed, the stage had been set for a second reading of the consolidated text, which included the preamble and other parts previously agreed upon provisionally.<sup>(53)</sup>

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/30

24 May 1984 Meeting 20 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Protection of minorities

At its February/March 1984 session, the Commission on Human Rights continued to consider, through an informal working group open to its membership, a draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. A revised, consolidated draft text, prepared in 1980 and submitted to the Commission in 1981,<sup>(57)</sup> had formed the basis of discussions of each working group set up annually since then. The work accomplished by the 1984 working group, at meetings held between 27 February and 9 March at Geneva, consisted of preliminary agreement on the draft declaration's title and preamble, and a continuation of the first reading of article 1.

Taking note of the group's report,<sup>(58)</sup> the Commission on 15 March<sup>(59)</sup> decided to set up another working group in 1985 to continue elaboration of the draft declaration and requested its Sub-Commission to define the term "minority", taking account of related studies and government views.

A definition was accordingly proposed at the August 1984 session of the Sub-Commission. Following a brief discussion, the Sub-Commission, on 27 August,<sup>(60)</sup> postponed further consideration of the question to its 1985 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/21 on elimination of racial discrimination, the General Assembly welcomed CERD efforts to eliminate all forms of discrimination against national or ethnic minorities, among others. It called on States parties to the 1965 Convention against racial discrimination<sup>(12)</sup> to adopt legislative and other measures, in conformity with the Convention, so as to protect fully the rights of such minorities.

Draft declaration on the human rights of non-citizens

A Working Group, set up by the General Assembly in December 1983<sup>(61)</sup> and open to all United Nations Members, met in New York between 3 October and 20 November 1984 to continue drafting a declaration on the human rights of individuals not citizens of the country in which they lived. At those meetings, the Group adopted the following provisions in second reading: article 4 (paragraph 1 (d) on the right to marry and found a family, and paragraph 2 on additional fundamental rights); article 7 prohibiting expulsion of legal aliens and defining exceptions to it; article 8 defining economic and social rights; article 9 prohibiting arbitrary deprivation of lawfully acquired assets; and article 10 on freedom of communication. The agreed provisions were annexed to the Group's report.<sup>(62)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/103 on 14 December 1984.

Question of the international legal protection of the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live

The General Assembly,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/199 of 15 December 1980, 36/165 of 16 December 1981, 37/169 of 17 December 1982 and 38/87 of 16 December 1983, by which it decided to establish an open-ended working group for the purpose of concluding the elaboration of the draft declaration on the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live,

Having considered the report of the Working Group established for the purpose of concluding the elaboration of the draft declaration on the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live,

Civil and political rights

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocol

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1984, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966<sup>(1)</sup> and in force since 1976,<sup>(2)</sup> had been ratified or acceded to by 80 and 34 States, respectively. Cameroon, Togo and Zambia became parties to the Covenant in 1984. Cameroon, France and Zambia acceded to the Protocol. Two States—Ecuador and Peru—made the declaration under article 41 of the Covenant recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant.

In his report on international covenants on human rights to the Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General provided information on the status of the Covenant and the Protocol as at 1 September 1984.

Implementation of the Covenant and the Optional Protocol

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 6 March,<sup>(4)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights expressed appreciation that the Human Rights Committee continued to strive for uniform standards in implementing the Covenant and the Optional Protocol and invited States to become parties to them and to consider making the declaration under article 41. In emphasizing the importance of the strictest compliance with those instruments, the Commission stressed the obligation of a State party availing itself (in time of public emergency) of the right of derogation from the Covenant's provisions in accordance with article 4, paragraph 1, immediately to inform the other States parties, through the Secretary-General, of the provisions from which it had derogated and its reasons for doing so.

The Commission welcomed the measures taken by the Secretary-General to publish the Committee's documentation in annual bound volumes and requested him to make available the resources necessary to produce the remaining volumes. The Commission encouraged Governments to give the Covenant and the Protocol the widest possible publicity. It took note of a December 1983 General Assembly request<sup>(5)</sup> that the Secretary-General continue to ensure the ability of the United Nations Centre for Human Rights to assist the Committee in its functions under the Covenant.

Human Rights Committee activities. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 1984: the twenty-first in New York, from 26 March to 13 April; the twenty-second and twenty-third at Geneva, from 9 to 27 July, and from 22 October to 9 November.

The Committee considered reports and additional information submitted by 12 States (Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Egypt, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, India, Panama, Trinidad and Tobago, USSR, Venezuela) under article 40 of the Covenant. The Committee also concluded consideration of and adopted views on five communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated and that they had exhausted all available domestic remedies. The cases concerned Uruguay (4) and Zaire (1). The Committee decided that six other such communications—from five individuals and from a group of associations for the rights of the disabled and handicapped—were inadmissible.

As authorized by the Assembly in December 1983,<sup>(6)</sup> Arabic language services were provided as from the Committee's twenty-first session. On 27 July 1984, the Committee unanimously adopted its eighth annual report<sup>(7)</sup> to the Assembly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In decision 1984/101 of 10 February on its basic work programme for 1984, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to transmit the annual report of the Human Rights Committee, among others, directly to the Assembly for consideration, on the understanding that the Council would again consider the rescheduling of the Committee's meetings. The Council had invited the Committee to consider that possibility in 1983 so that, starting in 1984, it could submit its report to the Assembly through the Council at the latter's first regular session, during the second quarter of the year.

Drawing attention to that decision on 4 May 1984, the President informed the Council that the Committee wished to maintain its current schedule of meetings, contending that transmitting its report to the Assembly through the Council at the end of its yearly session in July, as currently practised, enabled the Assembly to consider the most up-to-date information on the Committee's work and other important human rights developments. The President had also been informed of the extreme difficulties a rescheduling of meetings would pose to Committee members, who served in their personal capacity as experts and as such had other commitments. In the circumstances, the Committee would find ways of accommodating the Council's requests for information. It could transmit its general comments based on reports received from States parties, as provided for by article 40, paragraph 4, of the Covenant.

Finland was of the view that article 45 of the Covenant—stipulating that the Committee report annually on its activities to the Assembly through the Council—did not limit the Council's role to a strictly procedural forwarding of the Committee's report to the Assembly; however, it recognized that there were substantive arguments against giving the report the same degree of consideration in the Council as in the Assembly's Third Committee. Consequently, Finland recommended that serious thought be given to defining an appropriate division of functions between the Council and the Assembly in this regard.

Austria said it was not aware that the Committee had ever transmitted general comments to the Council. Interpreting the term "specialized agencies" to include the Human Rights Committee, Austria pointed out that Article 64 of the Charter of the United Nations, entitling the Council to obtain regular reports from specialized agencies, also applied to the issue before the Council. Meticulous application of that Article and of article 40, paragraph 4, of the Covenant, could strengthen the role of the Council and contribute to its revitalization.

Following those statements, the Council adopted resolution 1984/2 without vote on 8 May 1984.

Scheduling of the sessions of the Human Rights Committee established under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling paragraph 5 (g) of its decision 1984/101 of 10 February 1984,

Having heard the statement made by the President of the Economic and Social Council on 4 May 1984 regard- ing the outcome of his consultations with the Chairman of the Human Rights Committee on the question of the scheduling of the sessions of that Committee, and the views expressed by delegations on the matter,

Decides to request the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue further his consultations with the Chairman of the Human Rights Committee and to report thereon to the Council at its organizational session for 1985.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/2

8 May 1984 Meeting 9 Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 5.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/136, the General Assembly took note of the Human Rights Committee report and expressed satisfaction with the serious and constructive manner in which the Committee was continuing to perform its functions. The Assembly urged States to become parties to the Covenant and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol. It invited States parties to make the declaration under article 41 of the Covenant and emphasized the importance of strictest compliance with their obligations under the Covenant and Optional Protocol. It urged those parties requested by the Committee to provide additional information to do so. It also urged the Secretary-General to take determined steps within existing resources to give publicity to the Committee's work and to continue to expedite publication of its official public records in bound volumes, starting with its first session. The Assembly further requested him to keep the Committee informed of the relevant activities of the Assembly, the Council and selected United Nations organs.

States of siege or emergency

On 6 March 1984,<sup>(8)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights stated that it looked forward to the first annual report on compliance with national and international rules governing the legality of the declaration of a state of siege or emergency, including a list of countries in which such a state had been declared or terminated. It decided to examine the report in 1985 as a matter of priority, to determine what further action should be taken on the question. The report was to be submitted by the Sub-Commission in connection with its September 1983 decision<sup>(9)</sup> to include in its agenda an item on implementation of the right of derogation provided for under article 4 of the Covenant.

Preparation of the report and list was among the topics discussed by the 1984 Working Group on Detention (see below, under "Rights of detained persons") in August. Agreeing that preparation of the list was premature, the Group suggested that the Sub-Commission invite one of its members to conduct a technical study on a method of work for drafting such a report and list.

Accordingly, the Sub-Commission on 30 August<sup>(10)</sup> requested from one of its members a paper on how best to accomplish the yearly preparation of such a report. It recommended to the Commission a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, which would authorize the Sub-Commission to appoint a special rapporteur to prepare the annual report. The rapporteur, who would be asked to submit the first report to the Sub-Commission in 1986, would be provided with the necessary assistance by the Secretary-General.

Also in March 1984, the Commission called on Chile to put an end to the régime of exception and to the practice of declaring states of emergency (see below, under "Human rights violations"); it invited Paraguay to do the same (see below).

Paraguay

Seriously concerned at the permanent application of the state of siege in Paraguay since 1954, the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 36 to 1, with 5 abstentions, taken on 13 March 1984,<sup>(11)</sup> invited the Government to consider ending the state of siege in order to encourage the promotion of and respect for human rights in the country.

By 19 votes to none, on 28 August,<sup>(12)</sup> the Sub-Commission, taking note of the statements of Paraguay before the Commission about an eventual project for the abrogation of the state of siege, requested the Commission to recommend to the Government to persevere in its aim to co-operate with the Commission towards that end and to consider enacting a measure of amnesty to allow popular participation in the country's public affairs. The Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to transmit information to it in 1985 on developments on the question of ending the state of siege.

Self-determination of peoples

In six resolutions adopted at its February/March 1984 session, the Commission on Human Rights dealt with the right of peoples to self-determination (see below). It reaffirmed that right for Palestinians,<sup>(13)</sup> South Africans as a whole and Namibians,<sup>(14)</sup> Kampuchians,<sup>(15)</sup> the people of Western Sahara,<sup>(16)</sup> Afghans,<sup>(17)</sup> and the people of Grenada.<sup>(18)</sup>

The Commission's actions and debate, and actions taken by the Economic and Social Council in 1984, were summarized by the Secretary-General in a report to the General Assembly on the universal realization of the right to self-determination.<sup>(19)</sup> Also summarized were responses to two November 1983 Assembly resolutions on the topic<sup>(20)</sup> from 16 Governments, three United Nations organs, six specialized agencies and four NGOs. An additional response, from the USSR, was transmitted on 10 November 1984.<sup>(21)</sup>

In 1984, as in the previous year, the Assembly adopted two resolutions on the right to self-determination (see below)—a right it repeatedly reaffirmed for individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV). The Assembly also urged States to respect that right, as well as peoples' right freely to choose their socio-political system and to pursue their political, economic, social and cultural development, in its resolution 39/159 on the inadmissibility of State terrorism in relation to the sovereignty and political independence of States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on 23 November 1984 concerning the right of peoples to self-determination. The first, resolution 39/17, was adopted by recorded vote.

General Assembly resolution 39/17

23 November 1984 Meeting 71 121-17-7 (recorded vote)

Abstaining: Austria, Greece, Ireland, Japan, Malawi, Portugal, Spain.

Speaking on behalf of the 10 European Community members, Ireland said they found the text—submitted without the usual wide consultations among all the groups—negative, unbalanced and unacceptable in several respects. These concerned southern Africa and the Middle East, the encouragement of armed action to solve international problems, wording to the effect that maintaining relations with a State was equivalent to approval or encouragement of its policies, and the references to violations of peoples' right to self-determination in certain situations but not to flagrant violations of it in Afghanistan and Kampuchea. In Canada's opinion, the text contained excessive and polemical language and presented a biased view of various international situations.

Portugal said certain provisions gave rise to reservations; in addition to the eighth, ninth and twenty-third preambular paragraphs and paragraphs 18 and 27, it could not agree with the endorsement of armed struggle in paragraph 2. It maintained its previously expressed reservations on the declarations and action programmes mentioned in paragraph 5. Its reservations on paragraphs 17 and 20 stemmed from references to conferences it had not attended. Finally, while it had affirmed its support for Namibia on numerous occasions, it did not believe that isolating South Africa was the best way to promote a solution to the Namibia problem.

Austria said it had to abstain because paragraph 2 legitimized "all means" of struggle for independence. Greece could not support the wording of paragraph 19, and Spain could not endorse either paragraph.

Burma recalled that it had consistently supported the right of peoples to self-determination and the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples; however, it voiced reservations on what it regarded as the excessive language of some provisions. Ecuador shared Portugal's reservations on references to conferences it had not attended and on the implementation called for in paragraph 5, which it felt was exclusively for a State to decide in the exercise of its sovereignty. Honduras remarked that the text, while not sufficiently emphasizing peaceful settlement of disputes, contained objectives compatible with those of Honduran foreign policy: the struggle against colonialism, apartheid and racism; non-use of force; and support for self-determination of peoples. In the Committee, where Honduras abstained, it noted that the text was too selective. Malta affirmed its support for resolutions expressing dissatisfaction with the apartheid policies of South Africa, but stated that such support did not imply full agreement with the provisions or language of the text under consideration.

Among others voicing some reservations were the Byelorussian SSR and the Dominican Republic. Argentina took issue with the wording of some paragraphs. With regard to paragraph 2, Peru stressed that only peaceful means of struggle in accordance with the United Nations Charter were legitimate. Uruguay regarded armed struggle as contrary to the Charter principles and purposes; it also objected to paragraph 18, terming it biased. Turkey regretted that Western countries were expressly condemned in paragraph 18. Chile also particularly objected to the inclusion of armed struggle as a means of struggling for independence, saying that on the other hand the text failed to mention well-known situations such as those in Afghanistan and Kampuchea. Brazil and Mexico had reservations especially on paragraph 17; concerning paragraph 5, Brazil pointed to its comments on certain parts of the documents mentioned.

For the USSR, the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, reaffirmed in paragraph 2, was beyond all doubt. Colombia supported the text because it believed that dialogue was a better means of resolving problems than physical or verbal violence.

The second resolution, 39/18, was adopted by the Assembly without vote.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their conditions,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth and fortieth sessions,

Reiterating its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982 and 38/16 of 22 November 1983,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of these acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted by the aforementioned acts and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this issue to the General Assembly at its fortieth session under the item entitled "Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights".

Afghanistan

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 29 February 1984,<sup>(17)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 8, with 4 abstentions, reaffirmed its profound concern that the people of Afghanistan continued to be denied their right to self-determination, to determine their own form of government, and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint. It called for a political settlement based on immediate foreign troop withdrawal from Afghanistan; full respect for that country's independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned status; and strict observance of the principle of non-interference. It urged a settlement that would also enable the Afghan refugees to return to their homes. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to continue to promote a political solution, urged all concerned to continue to co-operate with him, and appealed for humanitarian relief assistance to alleviate, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the hardship of Afghan refugees.

Concerned over the continued presence of foreign forces and reports of extensive human rights violations in Afghanistan, the Commission also recommended on 15 March,<sup>(22)</sup> by a roll-call vote of 27 to 8, with 6 abstentions, a text which served as the basis for the Economic and Social Council resolution below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee on 24 May 1984, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/37 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of resolution 1983/20 of 5 September 1983 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/55 of 15 March 1984,

1. Requests the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint an individual of recognized international standing as Special Rapporteur with the mandate to examine the human rights situation in Afghanistan, with a view to formulating proposals which could contribute to ensuring full protection of the human rights of all residents of the country, before, during and after the withdrawal of all foreign forces;

2. Authorizes the Special Rapporteur to seek relevant information from specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations;

3. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit a comprehensive report to the Commission at its forty-first session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/37

24 May 1984 Meeting 20 35-4-12 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) by vote (33-4-11), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Austria, Botswana, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Bulgaria, German Democratic Republic, Poland, USSR.

Abstaining: Algeria, Benin, Brazil, Congo, Ecuador, Finland, Mali, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, Uganda, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Before the Committee approved the draft resolution, it rejected, by a roll-call vote of 34 to 6, with 8 abstentions, a proposal by the German Democratic Republic that no decision should be taken on the draft.

In the Council, Afghanistan reiterated its objections to the text's adoption and said it did not consider itself bound by it. Commission and Council consideration of the so-called human rights situation in Afghanistan, it stressed, was a violation of the Charter and interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs. To consider that artificial issue in open meetings while it was under discussion in private by the Sub-Commission ran counter to the procedures set forth by the Council in 1970.<sup>(23)</sup> The sponsors of the text were politically motivated, Afghanistan asserted, since they chose to ignore the efforts of its Government to ensure full protection of human rights. Moreover, submitting the draft just when the indirect negotiations between Afghanistan and Pakistan had entered a delicate stage could torpedo those negotiations. Afghanistan also objected to what it called defamatory tactics through the irresponsible appointment of special rapporteurs.

The USSR—speaking also for Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Poland—said there was no reason for the resolution because it dealt with a non-existent problem. The USSR joined Afghanistan in labelling the text a gross interference in the affairs of a sovereign State, adding that it was not conducive to a settlement of the situation in the region.

Brazil had reservations on the appointment of a special rapporteur and expressed its desire to avoid any intervention which might hinder the Secretary-General's recent steps with regard to Afghanistan.

Tunisia called for urgent action by the international community to alleviate the suffering of the Afghans by seeking a political settlement which would ensure increased assistance to refugees, allow them to return to their country and guarantee respect for international law, which prohibited the use of force or threat of force and outside interference. The situation in Afghanistan merited particular attention if the Council wished to help the Afghans to recover their sovereignty and independence and to exercise their right to self-determination.

Sub-Commission action. By 13 votes to 4, with 2 abstentions, on 28 August 1984,<sup>(24)</sup> the Sub-Commission, gravely concerned by the continued, systematic bombardment of the civilian population in Afghanistan, requested the Commission urgently to call on the authorities in Afghanistan to end the bombardment and to ask its Special Rapporteur on Afghanistan to investigate the consequent human and material losses.

Central America

In 1984, the Commission on Human Rights followed up on a Sub-Commission resolution of August 1983,<sup>(25)</sup> calling for support of the Contadora Group's efforts towards peace in Central America so that Nicaragua's right to self-determination might be assured. On 12 March 1984,<sup>(26)</sup> the Commission expressed firmest support for the Group's efforts and noted other regional efforts to establish or improve democratic, representative and pluralistic systems. It reaffirmed the right of the region's countries to live in peace and to decide their own future, free from outside interference, and repudiated the acts of aggression against their sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity, which were causing loss of life and irreparable damage to their economies.

(For details on the situation in Central America and Nicaragua, see p. 195.)

East Timor

In a July 1984 report,<sup>(27)</sup> the Secretary-General summarized the consultations he had held with Indonesia and Portugal since he assumed office at the beginning of 1982, for the purpose of improving the humanitarian situation in East Timor and promoting efforts towards a comprehensive settlement of the problem there. He also outlined the results of those consultations up to the time of reporting (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV, under "East Timor question").

On 29 August 1984,<sup>(28)</sup> the Sub-Commission, by 8 votes to 1, with 11 abstentions, welcomed the report and requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to encourage all parties concerned, including the administering Power, to co-operate towards achieving a durable solution, taking the interests of the people of East Timor into full consideration. The Sub-Commission also requested the Indonesian authorities to facilitate without restrictions the activities of humanitarian organizations in East Timor, and recommended that the Commission study the evolution of the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms there.

Grenada

Recalling that the General Assembly had considered the question of Grenada at its 1983 session and reaffirmed the sovereign and inalienable right of that country to determine its own political, economic and social system,<sup>(29)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights on 12 March 1984<sup>(18)</sup> called on all States to show the strictest respect for Grenada's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and reaffirmed their obligation not to interfere or intervene in its internal affairs. The Commission reaffirmed the right of Grenadians to exercise fully their human rights and fundamental freedoms, decide their own future and hold free elections to choose their Government democratically without external interference or pressure.

Kampuchea

On 29 February 1984, the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 27 to 10, with 4 abstentions,<sup>(15)</sup> reiterated its condemnation of persistent human rights violations in Kampuchea. It reaffirmed that the continued occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived Kampuchean from exercising their right to self-determination, which currently constituted the primary violation of human rights in that country. The Commission emphasized that withdrawal of those foreign forces, restoration of Kampuchea's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, recognition of the Kampucheans' right to self-determination and a commitment by all States to non-interference were essential components for a solution to the Kampuchea problem. It reiterated its call for a cessation of hostilities and for an immediate withdrawal of foreign forces, to enable Kampucheans to exercise their human rights free from foreign interference and to determine their future through free and fair elections under United Nations supervision; to enable the United Nations to offer its services in the field of human rights; and to make possible efforts towards a political solution according to the 1981 Declaration on Kampuchea<sup>(30)</sup> and relevant United Nations resolutions, and also the return of all Kampuchean refugees.

The Commission requested the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea to continue its work pending a reconvening of the Conference and the Secretary-General to monitor the situation in Kampuchea and intensify his efforts towards a political settlement and restoration of human rights; and recommended that the Economic and Social Council continue to implement recommendations for the achievement by the Kampucheans of the full enjoyment of human rights and freedoms, in particular the right to self-determination.

Report of the Secretary-General. In keeping with a May 1983 decision of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(31)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a list and description of the responses received, as at 1 May 1984,<sup>(32)</sup> to his request for information on developments in Kampuchea, including violations of humanitarian principles perpetrated against Kampuchean refugees by occupation troops along the Kampuchea-Thailand border. The responses were from 12 Governments (two stating they had no information), four United Nations bodies (three had no information), three specialized agencies (two had no information), and two intergovernmental and two non-governmental organizations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/148 by recorded vote.

Right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council fully endorsed Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/12 of 29 February 1984, by which the Commission, inter alia, reaffirmed that the continuing occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived the people of Kampuchea of the exercise of their right to self-determination and constituted the primary violation of human rights in Kampuchea at present. The Council reaffirmed its decisions 1981/154 of 8 May 1981, 1982/143 of 7 May 1982 and 1983/155 of 27 May 1983 and reiterated its call for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea in order to allow the people of Kampuchea to exercise their fundamental freedoms and human rights, including the right to self-determination as contained in the Declaration on Kampuchea adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea on 17 July 1981 and in General Assembly resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979, 35/6 of 22 October 1980, 36/5 of 21 October 1981, 37/6 of 28 October 1982 and 38/3 of 27 October 1983.

The Council expressed its grave concern at the activities of the foreign forces in Kampuchea, particularly the continuing attacks on Kampuchean civilian encampments along the Thai-Kampuchean border, resulting in serious loss of life and property of Kampucheans and forcing even larger numbers of Kampuchean civilians to flee into Thailand.

The Council took note with appreciation of the note by the Secretary-General, prepared pursuant to its decision 1983/155, requested him to report to the Council any further violations of humanitarian principles perpetrated against Kampuchean civilian refugees by the foreign occupying troops along the border, and also requested him to continue to monitor closely the developments in Kampuchea and to intensify efforts, including the use of his good offices, to bring about a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem and the restoration of fundamental human rights in Kampuchea.

The Council noted with appreciation the ongoing efforts of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea and requested that the Committee continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/148

40-6-6 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/SI) by recorded vote (39-5-5), 17 May (meeting 16); 29-nation draft (E/1984/C.2/L.2); agenda item 10.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Fiji, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Thailand, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Zaire.

Financial implications: S-G, E/1984/C.2/L.7.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Austria, Botswana, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Indonesia, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: Benin, Bulgaria, Congo, German Democratic Republic, Poland, USSR.

Abstaining: Algeria, Finland, Lebanon, Mali, Mexico, Uganda.

Viet Nam stated that information relating to alleged violations of human rights in Kampuchea was at variance with reality and ambiguous with regard to attacks on so-called civilian encampments, since the refugees were being used as a buffer and the encampments as bases by Khmer reactionaries. The text represented interference in the internal affairs of an independent and sovereign State, and was an attempt to restore the régime that had brought calamity to the Kampuchean people and thereby impede Kampuchea's recovery.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic urged the international community to do its utmost to contribute to that recovery and encourage the parties—which the text would not—to restore peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia.

The Congo called the draft one-sided, for it failed to take a stand with respect to the Pol Pot régime and was clearly directed against Viet Nam, whose role in liberating Kampuchea from that régime it ignored; a presentation of the situation outside of its historical perspective distorted the problem, even before an attempt could be made to resolve it. The USSR, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Poland, shared the view—as did Benin—that the text was an interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs and violated the right of Kampuchians to self-determination. They opposed efforts being made to use the United Nations to help criminals and hoped that the political manoeuvres within the Council would soon end and common sense prevail.

Democratic Kampuchea said the adoption of the text proved that Viet Nam's lies and slanders had failed to cause anyone to forget that the solution of the problem of Kampuchea lay in stopping Viet Nam's war of aggression and USSR-supported expansionist policy which violated the Charter. The Kampuchians and their coalition Government were determined to pursue their struggle until all Vietnamese forces were withdrawn in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions.

Sweden pointed out that it did not subscribe to all provisions of the 1984 Commission on Human Rights resolution (see above) endorsed by the Council.

Palestinians

The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution adopted on 29 February 1984 by a roll-call vote of 28 to 7, with 8 abstentions,<sup>(13)</sup> condemned the continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories by Israel and demanded its immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal. The Commission reaffirmed the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination without external interference and to an independent and sovereign State of Palestine, and called for the return of Palestinians to their homes and property in exercise of that right. It recognized the right of Palestinians to regain their rights by all means in accordance with the Charter and reaffirmed that their future could be decided only with their participation in all efforts through their representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO).

The Commission rejected all partial agreements and separate treaties in so far as they violated the rights of Palestinians and contradicted the principles of just and comprehensive Middle East solutions, as well as the "autonomy" plan proposed in the 1978 "Camp David accords", declaring those accords to be without validity. States, United Nations bodies and other international organizations were urged to extend support to Palestinians, through PLO, in the struggle to restore their rights.

The Commission adopted several other resolutions dealing with human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories (see below, under "Human rights violations").

South Africa and Namibia

By a resolution of 29 February 1984, adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 5, with 7 abstentions,<sup>(14)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights called on States to take steps to enable the dependent people of South Africa and Namibia to exercise fully and without further delay their right to self-determination. It reaffirmed the right of Namibians to freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, as well as the legitimacy of their struggle and that of the oppressed people of South Africa by all means, including armed struggle. It urged States to provide them with moral and material assistance and called for immediate implementation of the 1983 Paris Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia.<sup>(33)</sup> It demanded not only full respect for the human rights of all people detained or imprisoned by South Africa because of their struggle for independence, but also their immediate release.

The Commission condemned South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, including attempts to dismember its territory. It condemned the so-called constitutional reforms and the policy of "bantustanization" as contrary to the principle of self-determination and inconsistent with genuine independence and national unity. It reaffirmed that continued colonialism in all forms—including racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, exploitation of economic and human resources by foreign and other interests, and colonial wars to suppress national liberation movements—was incompatible with the United Nations Charter, the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights<sup>(34)</sup> and the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>(35)</sup>

The Commission also condemned South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization against independent African States, in particular Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique and Zimbabwe, and demanded an immediate end to such acts and the withdrawal of South Africa's forces from Angola.

Reaffirming once again that the use of mercenaries against national liberation movements and sovereign States was a criminal act and that the mercenaries themselves were criminals, the Commission called on Governments: to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries, as well as transit of mercenaries through their territories, to be punishable offences and to prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries; and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General.

Pursuant to a similar provision of a February 1983 Commission resolution on self-determination as it applied to South Africa and Namibia,<sup>(36)</sup> 13 Governments provided the information requested, which the Secretary-General summarized in a report<sup>(37)</sup> submitted to the Commission at its 1984 session.

(For details on legislation against mercenaries, see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter II, under "Draft convention against mercenaries".)

In two related resolutions adopted on 28 February, the Commission reaffirmed<sup>(38)</sup> the inalienable right of the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia to self-determination and independence, and declared<sup>(39)</sup> that that right could be legally exercised by the Namibian people only in accordance with conditions determined by the Security Council in 1978.<sup>(40)</sup>

Western Sahara

On 29 February 1984,<sup>(16)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, having considered the question of Western Sahara, took note of a resolution on the topic, adopted unanimously by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in June 1983 and quoted in full in a December 1983 General Assembly resolution.<sup>(41)</sup> OAU had urged the parties to the conflict to negotiate for a cease-fire so as to create the condition necessary for a peaceful and fair referendum for self-determination of Western Sahara under OAU and United Nations auspices. The Commission decided to follow the development of the situation in Western Sahara and to consider the question in 1985 as a matter of priority. (See also TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV.)

Rights of detained persons

In 1984, an open-ended working group of the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee continued work on a draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment. In December, the Assembly decided to establish a similar working group in 1985 to expedite finalization of the draft.

The human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment were the subject of a report by the Secretary-General to the Sub-Commission. The Sub-Commission's sessional Working Group on Detention, meeting in August, considered a draft declaration against the unacknowledged detention of persons and the question of compliance with rules governing the declaration of a state of siege or emergency (see below).

In March, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution dealing with persons detained by Israel and another with persons detained solely for exercising the right to freedom of expression as laid down by the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (see below, under "Human rights violations").

In two related actions, the Economic and Social Council called for appropriate measures to eradicate physical violence against detained women that was specific to their sex (see p. 905) and approved a set of procedures for the effective implementation of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (see p. 701).

Treatment of prisoners and detainees

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with the Sub-Commission's annual review of developments in the administration of justice and human rights of detainees, the Secretary-General in May 1984 submitted a report, with later addenda,<sup>(42)</sup> summarizing reliably attested information on the subject from 26 Governments, four specialized agencies and a regional intergovernmental organization.

Activities of the Working Group on Detention. A five-member sessional Working Group on Detention, set up by the Sub-Commission on 7 August 1984, met between 13 and 21 August, with John Roche (United States) as Chairman/Rapporteur.<sup>(43)</sup>

The Group considered the first draft of a declaration aimed at eliminating unacknowledged detention and related practices (see below). It discussed ways of preparing the yearly report on compliance with rules guaranteeing the legality of a state of emergency and list of countries instituting or terminating such a state (see above). In addition, the Group began to conduct annual hearings and to receive information on torture (see below).

The Group postponed to 1985 examination of the proposals which the Sub-Commission had referred to it in September 1983,<sup>(44)</sup> on the period of detention after arrest, the right to a fair trial, abolition of capital punishment particularly in politically related cases, and the suspension of penal law permitting retroactive changes in jurisdiction or procedure in a state of emergency.

Draft principles for protection of detainees

In 1984, a Working Group open to all members of the General Assembly's Sixth Committee continued work on a draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment. The draft originated from a text adopted by the Sub-Commission in 1978,<sup>(45)</sup> which had since undergone revisions by a succession of working groups: of the Third Committee in 1980;<sup>(46)</sup> and of the Sixth Committee in 1981,<sup>(47)</sup> 1982<sup>(48)</sup> and 1983.<sup>(49)</sup>

Established pursuant to an Assembly decision of December 1983,<sup>(50)</sup> the 1984 Working Group met in New York between 26 September and 26 November, with Tullio Treves (Italy) as Chairman/Rapporteur. It resumed work on the draft at principle 19 and left off at principle 22, paragraph 1. These covered specific rights of persons detained or imprisoned, including, during their interrogation, prohibitions against self-incrimination or testimony against others, threats or violent methods of interrogation, and medical or scientific experimentation; and the right to recording and certification of their interrogation in all of its aspects and of access to such record, to free medical examination upon detention and thereafter as necessary, and to a second medical opinion. The approved provisional texts were annexed to the Group's report.<sup>(51)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly in December adopted decision 39/418.

Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment

At its 99th plenary meeting, on 13 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee:

(a) Took note with appreciation of the report of the Working Group on the Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, established in accordance with General Assembly decision 37/427 of 16 December 1982 to elaborate a final version of the draft Body of Principles, a task which it had not been able to conclude;

(b) Decided that an open-ended working group of the Sixth Committee would be established at its fortieth session with a view to expediting the finalization of the draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment;

(c) Decided to request the Secretary-General to circulate to Member States the report of the open-ended Working Group established at the thirty-ninth session;

(d) Decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment".

General Assembly decision 39/418

Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/39/784) without vote, 4 December (meeting 62); draft by Sweden (A/C.6/39/L.15); agenda item 136.
Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 6th Committee 3, 61, 62; plenary 99.

Torture and cruel treatment

In 1984, a working group of the Commission on Human Rights completed elaboration of a draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Work on the draft had begun in 1978 and had been carried out yearly since by a Commission working group set up by authority of the Economic and Social Council before each Commission session. The final text, submitted to the Commission by the 1984 working group, was transmitted to the General Assembly through the Council.

Contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture were once again called for by the Commission in March and by the Assembly in December.

The 1984 sessional Working Group on Detention (see above) began to conduct annual hearings and to receive information on torture and other cruel treatment, as called for by the Sub-Commission in 1982<sup>(52)</sup> and authorized by the Commission in 1983.<sup>(53)</sup> Information was provided by six NGOs, among them Amnesty International, which drew attention to a 12-point programme for the prevention of torture, which it launched with the publication of its report entitled "Torture in the 1980s".

Convention against torture

Working group activities. As authorized by the Economic and Social Council in May 1983,<sup>(54)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights set up an open-ended working group before its February/March 1984 session to complete work on a draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Elaboration of the convention, requested of the Commission by the General Assembly in 1977<sup>(55)</sup> and in progress since 1978,<sup>(56)</sup> had been pursued by a succession of similar working groups authorized yearly by the Council. The 1984 working group, meeting at Geneva between 30 January and 16 February, with Jan Herman Burgers (Netherlands) as Chairman/Rapporteur, considered the unresolved portions of the 1983 text.

The title and the preamble were left unchanged. Article 3, paragraph 2, was adopted following deletion of "a State policy of apartheid, racial discrimination or genocide, colonialism or neo-colonialism, the suppression of national liberation movements or the occupation of foreign territory" and insertion of "flagrant or mass". Articles 5, 6 and 7 remained unaltered and were adopted without prejudice to the reservations expressed. In article 16, a reference to article 14 was deleted.

As to the provisions on implementation, article 17 was amended to increase the number of experts to 10 and the term of office to four years. A new paragraph on meeting expenses was added to article 18. Since no agreement was reached on the proposal to replace "comments or suggestions" by "general comments" in article 19, or on the question of giving the proposed inquiry system an optional character in article 20, both articles could not be adopted. Articles 21 to 24 remained unchanged and were adopted.

As to the final clauses, articles 25 to 27 and 31 were adopted without change. Article 28 was amended by the insertion of "within four months from the date of such communication" in the third sentence. A new article on dispute settlement was added and numbered 29; former articles 29 to 31 were thus renumbered 30 to 32. A new paragraph was added to article 30 and the references in article 31 were changed due to the renumbering.

The draft convention as provisionally adopted was annexed to the group's report.<sup>(57)</sup>

Action by Commission on Human Rights. On 6 March 1984,<sup>(58)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, having examined the working group's report, decided to transmit it to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, together with the summary records of the Commission's debate on the item. The Commission recommended that the Assembly consider the draft convention with a view to its early adoption. It requested the Secretary-General to bring the documents mentioned to the attention of Governments and to obtain their comments, preferably before 1 September, for submission to the 1984 Assembly session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May adopted decision 1984/134.

Draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/21 of 6 March 1984, decided to transmit to the General Assembly the report of the working group established by the Commission to draw up a draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, as well as the summary records of the Commission's debate on the question during its fortieth session. The Council further noted the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to submit the comments received from Governments on the draft convention, in conformity with Commission resolution 1984/21, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, and the Commission's recommendation that the Assembly should consider, pursuant to its resolution 38/119 of 16 December 1983, the draft convention contained in the annex to the working group's report as a matter of priority, with a view to the early adoption of a convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/134

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Responding to the Commission's request of 6 March (see above), the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in October a report with later addenda,<sup>(59)</sup> summarizing the comments communicated by 31 Governments on the draft convention.

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/46 without vote on 10 December 1984.

bers of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Desiring to make more effective the struggle against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment throughout the world,

Have agreed as follows:

Part I

Article 1

1. For the purposes of this Convention, the term "torture" means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions.

2. This article is without prejudice to any international instrument or national legislation which does or may contain provisions of wider application.

Article 2

1. Each State Party shall take effective legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures to prevent acts of torture in any territory under its jurisdiction.

2. No exceptional circumstances whatsoever, whether a state of war or a threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency, may be invoked as a justification of torture.

3. An order from a superior officer or a public authority may not be invoked as a justification of torture.

Article 3

1. No State Party shall expel, return ("refouler") or extradite a person to another State where there are substantial grounds for believing that he would be in danger of being subjected to torture.

2. For the purpose of determining whether there are such grounds, the competent authorities shall take into account all relevant considerations including, where applicable, the existence in the State concerned of a consistent pattern of gross, flagrant or mass violations of human rights.

Article 4

1. Each State Party shall ensure that all acts of torture are offences under its criminal law. The same shall apply to an attempt to commit torture and to an act by any person which constitutes complicity or participation in torture.

2. Each State Party shall make these offences punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account their grave nature.

Article 5

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences referred to in article 4 in the following cases:

(a) When the offences are committed in any territory under its jurisdiction or on board a ship or aircraft registered in that State;

(b) When the alleged offender is a national of that State;

(c) When the victim is a national of that State if that State considers it appropriate.

2. Each State Party shall likewise take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over such offences in cases where the alleged offender is present in any territory under its jurisdiction and it does not extradite him pursuant to article 8 to any of the States mentioned in paragraph 1 of this article.

3. This Convention does not exclude any criminal jurisdiction exercised in accordance with internal law.

Article 6

1. Upon being satisfied, after an examination of information available to it, that the circumstances so warrant, any State Party in whose territory a person alleged to have committed any offence referred to in article 4 is present shall take him into custody or take other legal measures to ensure his presence. The custody and other legal measures shall be as provided in the law of that State but may be continued only for such time as is necessary to enable any criminal or extradition proceedings to be instituted.

2. Such State shall immediately make a preliminary inquiry into the facts.

3. Any person in custody pursuant to paragraph 1 of this article shall be assisted in communicating immediately with the nearest appropriate representative of the State of which he is a national, or, if he is a stateless person, with the representative of the State where he usually resides.

4. When a State, pursuant to this article, has taken a person into custody, it shall immediately notify the States referred to in article 5, paragraph 1, of the fact that such person is in custody and of the circumstances which warrant his detention. The State which makes the preliminary inquiry contemplated in paragraph 2 of this article shall promptly report its findings to the said States and shall indicate whether it intends to exercise jurisdiction.

Article 7

1. The State Party in the territory under whose jurisdiction a person alleged to have committed any offence referred to in article 4 is found shall in the cases contemplated in article 5, if it does not extradite him, submit the case to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution.

2. These authorities shall take their decision in the same manner as in the case of any ordinary offence of a serious nature under the law of that State. In the cases referred to in article 5, paragraph 2, the standards of evidence required for prosecution and conviction shall in no way be less stringent than those which apply in the cases referred to in article 5, paragraph 1.

3. Any person regarding whom proceedings are brought in connection with any of the offences referred to in article 4 shall be guaranteed fair treatment at all stages of the proceedings.

Article 8

1. The offences referred to in article 4 shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between States Parties. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.

2. If a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, it may consider this Convention as the legal basis for extradition in respect of such offences. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize such offences as extraditable offences between themselves subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

4. Such offences shall be treated, for the purpose of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in the territories of the States required to establish their jurisdiction in accordance with article 5, paragraph 1.

Article 9

1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with criminal proceedings brought in respect of any of the offences referred to in article 4, including the supply of all evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings.

2. States Parties shall carry out their obligations under paragraph 1 of this article in conformity with any treaties on mutual judicial assistance that may exist between them.

Article 10

1. Each State Party shall ensure that education and information regarding the prohibition against torture are fully included in the training of law enforcement personnel, civil or military, medical personnel, public officials and other persons who may be involved in the custody, interrogation or treatment of any individual subjected to any form of arrest, detention or imprisonment.

2. Each State Party shall include this prohibition in the rules or instructions issued in regard to the duties and functions of any such persons.

Article 11

Each State Party shall keep under systematic review interrogation rules, instructions, methods and practices as well as arrangements for the custody and treatment of persons subjected to any form of arrest, detention or imprisonment in any territory under its jurisdiction, with a view to preventing any cases of torture.

Article 12

Each State Party shall ensure that its competent authorities proceed to a prompt and impartial investigation, wherever there is reasonable ground to believe that an act of torture has been committed in any territory under its jurisdiction.

Article 13

Each State Party shall ensure that any individual who alleges he has been subjected to torture in any territory under its jurisdiction has the right to complain to, and to have his case promptly and impartially examined by, its competent authorities. Steps shall be taken to ensure that the complainant and witnesses are protected against all ill-treatment or intimidation as a consequence of his complaint or any evidence given.

Article 14

1. Each State Party shall ensure in its legal system that the victim of an act of torture obtains redress and has an enforceable right to fair and adequate compensation, including the means for as full rehabilitation as possible. In the event of the death of the victim as a result of an act of torture, his dependants shall be entitled to compensation.

2. Nothing in this article shall affect any right of the victim or other persons to compensation which may exist under national law.

Article 15

Each State Party shall ensure that any statement which is established to have been made as a result of torture shall not be invoked as evidence in any proceedings, except against a person accused of torture as evidence that the statement was made.

Article 16

1. Each State Party shall undertake to prevent in any territory under its jurisdiction other acts of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment which do not amount to torture as defined in article 1, when such acts are committed by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity. In particular, the obligations contained in articles 10, 11, 12 and 13 shall apply with the substitution for references to torture of references to other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

2. The provisions of this Convention are without prejudice to the provisions of any other international instrument or national law which prohibits cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment or which relates to extradition or expulsion.

Part II

Article 17

1. There shall be established a Committee against Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Committee) which shall carry out the functions hereinafter provided. The Committee shall consist of ten experts of high moral standing and recognized competence in the field of human rights, who shall serve in their personal capacity. The experts shall be elected by the States Parties, consideration being given to equitable geographical distribution and to the usefulness of the participation of some persons having legal experience.

2. The members of the Committee shall be elected by secret ballot from a list of persons nominated by States Parties. Each State Party may nominate one person from among its own nationals. States Parties shall bear in mind the usefulness of nominating persons who are also members of the Human Rights Committee established under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and who are willing to serve on the Committee against Torture.

3. Elections of the members of the Committee shall be held at biennial meetings of States Parties convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At those meetings, for which two thirds of the States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Committee shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of States Parties present and voting.

4. The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the date of the entry into force of this Convention. At least four months before the date of each election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a letter to the States Parties inviting them to submit their nominations within three months. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all persons thus nominated, indicating the States Parties which have nominated them, and shall submit it to the States Parties.

5. The members of the Committee shall be elected for a term of four years. They shall be eligible for re-election if renominated. However, the term of five of the members elected at the first election shall expire at the end of two years; immediately after the first election the names of these five members shall be chosen by lot by the chairman of the meeting referred to in paragraph 3 of this article.

6. If a member of the Committee dies or resigns or for any other cause can no longer perform his Committee duties, the State Party which nominated him shall appoint another expert from among its nationals to serve for the remainder of his term, subject to the approval of the majority of the States Parties. The approval shall be considered given unless half or more of the States Parties respond negatively within six weeks after having been informed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the proposed appointment.

7. States Parties shall be responsible for the expenses of the members of the Committee while they are in performance of Committee duties.

Article 18

1. The Committee shall elect its officers for a term of two years. They may be re-elected.

2. The Committee shall establish its own rules of procedure, but these rules shall provide, inter alia, that:

(a) Six members shall constitute a quorum;

(b) Decisions of the Committee shall be made by a majority vote of the members present.

3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee under this Convention.

4. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall convene the initial meeting of the Committee. After its initial meeting, the Committee shall meet at such times as shall be provided in its rules of procedure.

5. The States Parties shall be responsible for expenses incurred in connection with the holding of meetings of the States Parties and of the Committee, including reimbursement to the United Nations for any expenses, such as the cost of staff and facilities, incurred by the United Nations pursuant to paragraph 3 of this article.

Article 19

1. The States Parties shall submit to the Committee, through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, reports on the measures they have taken to give effect to their undertakings under this Convention, within one year after the entry into force of the Convention for the State Party concerned. Thereafter the States Parties shall submit supplementary reports every four years on any new measures taken and such other reports as the Committee may request.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit the reports to all States Parties.

3. Each report shall be considered by the Committee which may make such general comments on the report as it may consider appropriate and shall forward these to the State Party concerned. That State Party may respond with any observations it chooses to the Committee.

4. The Committee may, at its discretion, decide to include any comments made by it in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article, together with the observations thereon received from the State Party concerned, in its annual report made in accordance with article 24. If so requested by the State Party concerned, the Committee may also include a copy of the report submitted under paragraph 1 of this article.

Article 20

1. If the Committee receives reliable information which appears to it to contain well-founded indications that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of a State Party, the Committee shall invite that State Party to co-operate in the examination of the information and to this end to submit observations with regard to the information concerned.

2. Taking into account any observations which may have been submitted by the State Party concerned, as well as any other relevant information available to it, the Committee may, if it decides that this is warranted, designate one or more of its members to make a confidential inquiry and to report to the Committee urgently.

3. If an inquiry is made in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article, the Committee shall seek the co-operation of the State Party concerned. In agreement with that State Party, such an inquiry may include a visit to its territory.

4. After examining the findings of its member or members submitted in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article, the Committee shall transmit these findings to the State Party concerned together with any comments or suggestions which seem appropriate in view of the situation.

5. All the proceedings of the Committee referred to in paragraphs 1 to 4 of this article shall be confidential, and at all stages of the proceedings the co-operation of the State Party shall be sought. After such proceedings have been completed with regard to an inquiry made in accordance with paragraph 2, the Committee may, after consultations with the State Party concerned, decide to include a summary account of the results of the proceedings in its annual report made in accordance with article 24.

Article 21

1. A State Party to this Convention may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention. Such communications may be received and considered according to the procedures laid down in this article only if submitted by a State Party which has made a declaration recognizing in regard to itself the competence of the Committee. No communication shall be dealt with by the Committee under this article if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration. Communications received under this article shall be dealt with in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) If a State Party considers that another State Party is not giving effect to the provisions of this Convention, it may, by written communication, bring the matter to the attention of that State Party. Within three months after the receipt of the communication the receiving State shall afford the State which sent the communication an explanation or any other statement in writing clarifying the matter, which should include, to the extent possible and pertinent, reference to domestic procedures and remedies taken, pending or available in the matter;

(b) If the matter is not adjusted to the satisfaction of both States Parties concerned within six months after the receipt by the receiving State of the initial communication, either State shall have the right to refer the matter to the Committee, by notice given to the Committee and to the other State;

(c) The Committee shall deal with a matter referred to it under this article only after it has ascertained that all domestic remedies have been invoked and exhausted in the matter, in conformity with the generally recognized principles of international law. This shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention;

(d) The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under this article;

(e) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (c), the Committee shall make available its good offices to the States Parties concerned with a view to a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of respect for the obligations provided for in this Convention. For this purpose, the Committee may, when appropriate, set up an ad hoc conciliation commission;

(f) In any matter referred to it under this article, the Committee may call upon the States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), to supply any relevant information;

(g) The States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), shall have the right to be represented when the matter is being considered by the Committee and to make submissions orally and/or in writing;

(h) The Committee shall, within twelve months after the date of receipt of notice under subparagraph (b), submit a report:

(i) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (e) is reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached;

(ii) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (e) is not reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts; the written submissions and record of the oral submissions made by the States Parties concerned shall be attached to the report.

In every matter, the report shall be communicated to the States Parties concerned.

2. The provisions of this article shall come into force when five States Parties to this Convention have made declarations under paragraph 1 of this article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this article; no further communication by any State Party shall be received under this article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party concerned has made a new declaration.

Article 22

1. A State Party to this Convention may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration.

2. The Committee shall consider inadmissible any communication under this article which is anonymous or which it considers to be an abuse of the right of submission of such communications or to be incompatible with the provisions of this Convention.

3. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 2, the Committee shall bring any communications submitted to it under this article to the attention of the State Party to this Convention which has made a declaration under paragraph 1 and is alleged to be violating any provisions of the Convention. Within six months, the receiving State shall submit to the Committee written explanations or statements clarifying the matter and the remedy, if any, that may have been taken by that State.

4. The Committee shall consider communications received under this article in the light of all information made available to it by or on behalf of the individual and by the State Party concerned.

5. The Committee shall not consider any communications from an individual under this article unless it has ascertained that:

(a) The same matter has not been, and is not being, examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement;

(b) The individual has exhausted all available domestic remedies; this shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention.

6. The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under this article.

7. The Committee shall forward its views to the State Party concerned and to the individual.

8. The provisions of this article shall come into force when five States Parties to this Convention have made declarations under paragraph 1 of this article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this article; no further communication by or on behalf of an individual shall be received under this article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party has made a new declaration.

Article 23

The members of the Committee and of the ad hoc conciliation commissions which may be appointed under article 21, paragraph 1 (e), shall be entitled to the facilities, privileges and immunities of experts on mission for the United Nations as laid down in the relevant sections of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.

Article 24

The Committee shall submit an annual report on its activities under this Convention to the States Parties and to the General Assembly of the United Nations.

2. For each State ratifying this Convention or acceding to it after the deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 28

1. Each State may, at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in article 20.

2. Any State Party having made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article may, at any time, withdraw this reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 29

1. Any State Party to this Convention may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal. In the event that within four months from the date of such communication at least one third of the States Parties favours such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted by the Secretary-General to all the States Parties for acceptance.

2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article shall enter into force when two thirds of the States Parties to this Convention have notified the Secretary-General of the United Nations that they have accepted it in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

2. Each State may, at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of this article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 1 of this article with respect to any State Party having made such a reservation.

3. Any State Party having made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article may at any time withdraw this reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 31

1. A State Party may denounce this Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation becomes effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under this Convention in regard to any act or omission which occurs prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter which is already under consideration by the Committee prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective.

3. Following the date at which the denunciation of a State Party becomes effective, the Committee shall not commence consideration of any new matter regarding that State.

General Assembly resolution 39/46

10 December 1984 Meeting 93 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/708 and Corr.2) without vote, 5 December (meeting 60); 25-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.40), orally revised; amended by Byelorussian SSR (A/C.3/39/L.66) and further amended by 10 nations (A/C.3/39/L.49); agenda item 99.

Sponsors of draft: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Finland, France, Gambia, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Portugal, Samoa, Singapore, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Sponsors of amendment: Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session; 3rd Committee 44-52, 56, 57, 60; plenary 93.

During its consideration by the Third Committee, the draft convention underwent several modifications. In addition to oral revisions made to paragraphs 1 and 5 of article 20, the sponsors agreed to the 10-nation amendments, according to which, in paragraph 3 of article 19, the word "general" was inserted before "comments" and the phrase "or suggestions on the report" was deleted; also deleted were, in paragraph 4, the words "or suggestions". A new article 28 proposed by the Byelorussian SSR was accepted and the subsequent articles renumbered accordingly.

Also in Committee, Iran introduced, but did not press to a vote, a draft resolution<sup>(60)</sup> which would have had the Assembly condemn all acts of torture as contrary to human dignity and request States to prohibit trade in instruments of torture and to ban their development and production.

Fund for victims of torture

On 6 March 1984,<sup>(61)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights again called on Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981.<sup>(62)</sup> The Commission asked the Secretary-General to transmit its appeal to Governments for further contributions and to assist the Board of Trustees in efforts to give publicity to the Fund's humanitarian work. It also asked him to keep the Commission informed of the Fund's operations.

The Secretary-General stated in his annual report on the status of the Fund as at 31 October 1984<sup>(63)</sup> that the Board, which met in a third session at Geneva from 27 to 29 August, had recommended to him approval of grants for 18 projects, including follow-up grants for ongoing projects, totalling $518,700. The projects were to assist rehabilitation centres for torture victims at Copenhagen (Denmark) and Toronto (Canada), to finance training courses or seminars on treatment and rehabilitation, and to support other projects such as those providing medical and psychological aid to victims.

In 1984, the Fund recorded a total income of $646,793 and a total expenditure of $80,031.

Penalty of amputation

Noting the existence of legislation or practices in various countries providing for the penalty of amputation, the Sub-Commission, by a vote of 10 to 5, with 9 abstentions, taken on 29 August 1984,<sup>(64)</sup> recommended to the Commission on Human Rights that it urge Governments having such legislation or practices to take measures to provide for other punishment consonant with article 5 (providing that no one should be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>(34)</sup>

Principles of Medical Ethics

Pursuant to a General Assembly request of December 1983,<sup>(65)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1984 a report, with later addenda,<sup>(66)</sup> summarizing information communicated to him on steps taken to disseminate and implement the 1982 Principles of Medical Ethics<sup>(67)</sup> relevant to the role of health personnel in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel treatment. Information was received from 12 Governments, two specialized agencies, an intergovernmental organization outside the United Nations, and seven NGOs.

Detention on grounds of mental illness

In 1984, work remained to be completed on a draft body of principles, guidelines and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder. The draft text had been annexed to a final report on the subject, submitted to the Sub-Commission in 1983.<sup>(68)</sup>

Acting on the Sub-Commission's draft proposals of September 1983 calling for the report's publication and priority consideration of the draft body of principles,<sup>(69)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, on 13 March 1984, decided to recommend the following for Economic and Social Council action: a draft decision, which it recommended by 36 votes to none, with 6 abstentions,<sup>(70)</sup> and a draft resolution,<sup>(71)</sup> both of which served as the bases for the Council actions below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May adopted decision 1984/142.

Principles, guidelines and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights decision 1984/108 of 13 March 1984, decided that the report entitled "Principles, guidelines and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder" should be published, without annex III, and given the widest possible distribution in all the official languages of the United Nations.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/142

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Also on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1984/33 without vote on 24 May.

Principles, guidelines and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of resolution 1983/39 of 7 September 1983 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/47 of 13 March 1984,

1. Expresses its deep appreciation to the Special Rapporteur, Mrs. Erica-Irene A. Daes, for her work in preparing her report on principles, guidelines and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder;

2. Requests the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to establish a sessional working group and to allocate to it appropriate time and facilities for a further examination, as a matter of high priority, of the draft body of principles, guidelines and guarantees annexed to the report of the Special Rapporteur and to submit the draft body of principles, guidelines and guarantees to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-second session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/33

24 May 1984

Meeting 20

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Working group activities. In accordance with the Council's request, the Sub-Commission set up a sessional working group in August 1984 to examine further the draft body of principles, guidelines and guarantees. With Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece) as Chairman/Rapporteur, the group convened in five meetings between 9 and 23 August, during which it heard brief comments by five NGOs and completed a first reading of articles 25 to 40 and 45 to 47. The first reading of articles 1 to 7 had been completed in 1982 and of articles 8 to 24 in 1983.

As to articles 41 to 44, concerning minors and juvenile patients, it was agreed to postpone their consideration to the group's next session, owing to a lack of a comprehensive study on the terms and because the question of the aged, who were not necessarily affected by mental disorder, might be discussed under that part of the draft.

The full revised text of the draft body of principles was annexed to the group's report.<sup>(72)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee on 14 December 1984, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/132 without vote.

Implications of scientific and technological developments for human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/53 of 14 December 1978, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to urge the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to undertake, as a matter of priority, a study of the question of the protection of those detained on the grounds of mental ill-health, with a view to formulating guidelines,

Recalling also its resolution 38/111 of 16 December 1983, in which it urged the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission to expedite their consideration of this question, so that the Commission could submit its views and recommendations, including a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/33 and decision 1984/142 of 24 May 1984,

Noting that the Commission on Human Rights will not be in a position to submit its views and recommendations to the General Assembly at its fortieth session through the Economic and Social Council because the Sub-Commission has still not concluded its consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees,

Noting with satisfaction the progress made by the Sub-Commission on this question,

Reaffirming its conviction that detention of persons in mental institutions on account of their political views or on other non-medical grounds is a violation of their human rights,

Again urges the Commission on Human Rights and, through it, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to expedite their consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, so that the Commission can submit its views and recommendations, including a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council.

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/705) without vote, 3 December (meeting 57); 21-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.46); agenda item 96.

Sponsors: Bolivia, Botswana, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Fiji, Gambia, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sweden, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 44-52, 56, 57; plenary 101.

Draft declaration against unacknowledged detention

Consideration by Working Group on Detention. As requested by the Sub-Commission in September 1983,<sup>(73)</sup> the 1984 sessional Working Group on Detention (see above) began work in August on the first draft of a declaration aimed at eliminating unacknowledged detention and related practices. The declaration was to apply to detention not only by Governments, but also by so-called private armies, death squads or groups that appeared to be tolerated by authorities.

The initial text, submitted by the Group's Chairman/Rapporteur, consisted of a preamble, article I (prohibition of unacknowledged detention), article II (right of notification), article III (duty of record-keeping), article IV (non-secret places of detention), article V (remedies), article VI (definitions) and article VII (non-restriction of rights).

Sub-Commission action. On 29 August 1984,<sup>(74)</sup> the Sub-Commission thanked the Working Group for the work it had accomplished on the draft declaration and requested it to submit, for possible review in 1985, a revised text in the light of the comments expressed at the Group's August 1984 meetings. The Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide it and the Group with any available documentation for this purpose.

Capital punishment

On 14 February 1984,<sup>(75)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights decided to transmit a telegram to the President of Malawi to the effect that the Commission had learned that the Malawi National Traditional Court of Appeal had turned down the appeal of Orton Chirwa and his wife against the death sentence passed on them for treason.<sup>(76)</sup> Based on a purely humanitarian concern deriving from its recognition of the singular importance of the right to life, the Commission appealed most respectfully and strongly that clemency be granted to them.

Proposed second optional protocol to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

The idea of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aimed at the abolition of the death penalty, originated in the General Assembly in 1980.<sup>(77)</sup> Government views on it were reported to the Assembly in 1981<sup>(78)</sup> and again in 1982,<sup>(79)</sup> when the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to undertake the task of elaborating the protocol.<sup>(80)</sup>

Accordingly, the Commission on 6 March 1984<sup>(81)</sup> transmitted to its Sub-Commission the draft of a second optional protocol, together with the pertinent documents, and invited it to consider, at its 1984 session, elaborating the protocol and setting up a sessional working group for the purpose. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to inform the Assembly of these actions.

Taking note of the documents transmitted to it, the Sub-Commission on 28 August<sup>(82)</sup> recommended to the Commission a draft resolution by which the Economic and Social Council would authorize the Sub-Commission to entrust Marc Bosuyt (Belgium) with the preparation of an analysis concerning the proposal, taking into account the views expressed for and against it, and to present recommendations for Sub-Commission consideration in 1986. The Council would request the Secretary-General to provide the assistance necessary to complete that task.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/137 by recorded vote.

Elaboration of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 35/437 of 15 December 1980 and its resolution 36/59 of 25 November 1981 concerning the idea of elaborating a draft of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty,

Recalling also its resolution 37/192 of 18 December 1982, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to consider the idea of elaborating a draft of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/19 of 6 March 1984 and the action taken by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to implement that resolution,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Requests the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to consider further the idea of elaborating a draft of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty;

2. Invites Member States which are in a position to do so, specialized agencies and international organizations to assist the Commission and the Sub-Commission in the consideration of this question;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly at its forty-second session of the consideration given to this question by the Commission and the Sub-Commission;

4. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-second session, in the light of the action taken by the Commission and the Sub-Commission, under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights".

General Assembly resolution 39/137

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 64-19-55 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/707) by recorded vote (57-18-50), 5 December (meeting 60); 26-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.48/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 98 (c).

Sponsors: Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Cape Verde, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Honduras, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Portugal, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sweden, Uruguay.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 44-52, 56, 57, 60; plenary 101.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Burundi, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Portugal, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Spain, Sweden, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Against: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Maldives, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, China, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mongolia, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Paraguay, Poland, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

In the Committee, Saudi Arabia explained that it had called for a vote because abolition of the death penalty was incompatible with the Islamic principle that premeditated murder must be punished by the death penalty. The United Arab Emirates said that, since the text was procedural, it would have preferred its adoption without vote. Along with Yemen, it also said that the text was contrary to Islamic principles. Kuwait stated that it could not support any formulation that might be interpreted as consent to abolish capital punishment. Morocco did not participate in the vote but said it would be the first to vote against the abolition of capital punishment.

Referring to its position on the death penalty as the reason for its abstention, the Byelorussian SSR said that paragraph 2 should have been formulated differently because only Commission and Sub-Commission members could assist in the consideration of the elaboration of a second optional protocol.

A number of States—Burundi, Canada, Japan, Mali, Rwanda, the United Kingdom and the United States among them—said they had no problem supporting a text that was procedural; they variously explained, however, that their vote was not to be interpreted as in any way affecting their countries' position on the death penalty.

Introducing the revised draft on behalf of the sponsors, the Federal Republic of Germany said they felt that the purely procedural text did not run counter to the interests of any State; however, the question would require further thorough examination by the Commission and the Sub-Commission before the Assembly could take a decision on the substance of the proposal to abolish the death penalty.

Other action. In resolution 1984/50, the Economic and Social Council approved the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, recommended by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (see Chapter XIII of this section), on the understanding that they should not be invoked to delay or prevent the abolition of capital punishment.

Extra-legal executions

In conformity with an Economic and Social Council request of May 1983,<sup>(83)</sup> Special Rapporteur S. Amos Wako (Kenya) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights in February 1984 a second report<sup>(84)</sup> on summary or arbitrary executions. The report took account of observations made on the topic at the Commission's 1983 session and of new information received since then from 34 Governments, two United Nations bodies, six specialized agencies, a regional intergovernmental organization and 12 NGOs. This included information on national legislation of various countries analysed within the context of the relevant international instruments.

The report concluded that developments since the first report<sup>(85)</sup> continued to bear out the fact that summary or arbitrary executions remained widespread and that respect for the right to life was far from being a universal reality. In 1983, persons alleged to have been summarily or arbitrarily executed numbered in the thousands, even excluding those who had died from counter-insurgency or anti-guerrilla measures and thus not classified as having been executed under the terms of international conventions. National legislation in some cases was in conflict with those conventions in that it permitted situations where executions could take place; in others, they had taken place despite meticulously stipulated safeguards for the right to life. Situations under which executions occurred involved multiple factors, among them political upheavals, internal armed conflicts, suppression of opposition groups or individuals, abuse of power by the law enforcement sector, and campaigns against crime.

In addition to reiterating the recommendations of the first report—among them the setting up by the Commission of a mechanism to monitor practices or situations of summary or arbitrary executions and to keep them under continuous review—the second report suggested that, in an all-out international effort to bring such executions to a halt, the United Nations Department of Public Information could convene a high-level meeting of regional editors aimed at strengthening the role of the press and mass media; and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control could examine ways of effectively controlling law enforcement and security authorities to prevent excesses, with perhaps the co-operation of the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL). Periodic reporting by Governments on their efforts to give effective protection to the right to life could be given consideration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council on 24 May 1984 adopted resolution 1984/35. It was based on a text submitted for Council action by the Commission on Human Rights on 14 March,<sup>(86)</sup> following its examination of the Special Rapporteur's report.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which guarantees the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which states that every human being has the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/175 of 17 December 1979, in which the Assembly reaffirmed that mass and flagrant violations of human rights were of special concern to the United Nations and urged the Commission on Human Rights to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases of mass and flagrant violations of human rights,

Mindful of General Assembly resolutions 36/22 of 9 November 1981, 37/182 of 17 December 1982 and 38/96 of 16 December 1983,

Taking note of resolution 1982/13 of 7 September 1982 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission recommended that effective measures should be adopted to prevent the occurrence of summary and arbitrary executions, propriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the practice of summary or arbitrary executions.

General Assembly resolution 39/110

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/700) without vote, 6 December (meeting 84); 24-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.72); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, France, Gambia, Greece, Iceland, Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Morocco, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Zambia.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 61, 64; plenary 101.

In resolution 39/118, on human rights in the administration of justice, the Assembly reaffirmed the prohibition under international law of every form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and strongly condemned the practice of arbitrary and summary executions.

Amnesty

In 1984, a preliminary report on a study of amnesty laws and their role in safeguarding and promoting human rights, prepared by Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France),<sup>(87)</sup> was before the Sub-Commission, in keeping with its request of September 1983.<sup>(49)</sup> The study was intended to draw, from a comparative examination of State laws and practices, a set of common rules to serve as a framework for instituting amnesty, assessing the impact of amnesty laws, drafting legislation and promoting amnesties generally. Examined were texts of amnesty laws obtained from 76 States, and information from a United Nations information centre, four specialized agencies, a regional intergovernmental organization and five NGOs.

The report defined the scope of the study as being limited to amnesty in the following sense: whether or not a person amnestied had been tried or convicted, or served a sentence, his or her conduct was deemed not to have constituted an offence and the penalty never to have been enforced. The report concluded that amnesty dealt only with the effects of national dissension especially upon the institution of a state of emergency. The same held true when violations of the most rudimentary cultural, social or economic rights were at the root of civil dissension. Therefore, an amnesty process could be effective only if coupled with measures to eradicate the causes of dissension, including political (such as the repeal of emergency laws and the holding of genuine elections, as stipulated by article 21 of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights<sup>(34)</sup>), social and economic measures. The programmes for social and economic rehabilitation provided for by the 1982 amnesty decree of Colombia were cited as examples.

On 28 August 1984,<sup>(88)</sup> the Sub-Commission expressed appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for his preliminary report and requested him to continue work on the study for submission in 1985.

It asked the Secretary-General to remind States, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to transmit to the Special Rapporteur, if they had not already done so, their observations and documents on amnesty laws.

Taking into consideration the emphasis which the report placed on the positive nature of the amnesty process under way in Colombia, the Sub-Commission, on 29 August,<sup>(89)</sup> further requested the Special Rapporteur to include in his final report the evolution of that process and its effects on the safeguarding and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

In related actions, the Sub-Commission requested the Commission on Human Rights to recommend to Paraguay that it end its state of siege (in force since 1954) and consider enacting an amnesty measure (see above, under "States of siege or emergency"); and urged Uruguay to speed up the process of setting free persons detained and/or sentenced for alleged offences against State security and internal order (see below, under "Human rights violations").

Human rights in states of siege or emergency were also dealt with in connection with the rights of detained persons (see above).

Persons detained by Israel

Reaffirming that fundamental human rights established by international instruments were fully applicable in armed conflict, the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 41 to 1, with 1 abstention, taken on 6 March 1984,<sup>(90)</sup> urged Israel to recognize, in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, the status of prisoner of war for all combatants captured during the war in Lebanon and to treat them accordingly.

The Commission also urged Israel to release immediately all civilians arbitrarily detained since the beginning of that war, as well as those subsequently rearrested and detained again in Insar (Ansar) Camp in southern Lebanon in violation of a November 1983 agreement on prisoner exchange (see p. 279); to co-operate with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and allow it to visit all detainees in detention centres under its control; and to ensure protection for Palestinian civilians, including released detainees, in the areas under its occupation, in conformity with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and The Hague Convention of 1907. It called on all parties to the conflict to furnish ICRC with information concerning persons who were missing or who disappeared following the Israeli invasion of Lebanon.

By a 20 February resolution<sup>(91)</sup> on human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories

(see below, under "Human rights violations"), the Commission called on Israel to release all Arabs detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and demanded that Israel cease all acts of torture and ill-treatment of Arab detainees. It further called on Israel to release the Palestinian Ziyad Abu Eain and others from Insar Camp, which must be closed under the November 1983 agreement.

Disappearance of persons

Communication. On 17 January 1984,<sup>(92)</sup> the United States transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement issued the same day by the United States Department of State. According to the statement, the date marked the thirty-ninth anniversary of the disappearance of Raoul Wallenberg, a Swedish diplomat who had been escorted away by USSR authorities from Budapest, Hungary, never to return. The statement continued that, while the USSR had stated in 1957, in reply to repeated inquiries, that Mr. Wallenberg had perished in prison 10 years before, questions as to his whereabouts continued to persist; it therefore called on the USSR to provide a full account of his fate.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 6 March 1984,<sup>(93)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of the 1983 report of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances,<sup>(94)</sup> extended the Group's mandate for one year and requested that it submit in 1985 a report on its work, together with recommendations, including those for the effective fulfilment of its mandate. The Group was requested to discharge that mandate with discretion so as to protect persons providing information or to limit dissemination of information from Governments. The Commission renewed its request that the Secretary-General appeal for government co-operation and continue to provide the Group with assistance.

Noting that Viscount Colville of Culross (United Kingdom) was resigning from the chairmanship of the Group, which he had held since the Group's inception in 1980, the Commission, also on 6 March,<sup>(95)</sup> expressed appreciation to him for the skill and dedication with which he had carried out his tasks.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980,<sup>(96)</sup> held three sessions in 1984: the thirteenth from 4 to 8 June in New York; the fourteenth from 3 to 11 October at San José, Costa Rica; and the fifteenth from 5 to 14 December at Geneva.<sup>(97)</sup> disappearances, some 2,900 of which were received in 1984. It transmitted reports on some 2,000 newly reported cases of missing persons to the Governments concerned, with a request for information on the fate of those alleged to have disappeared. It retransmitted summaries of all cases unclarified since the Group's inception, with a request that the information be either confirmed or disproved. Reports not transmitted were being held for further information from the reports' sources or were found not to fall within the Group's mandate (assassinations, torture, arbitrary detentions, harassment).

The Group held 12 meetings with government representatives—from Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Peru and the Philippines; 5 with members of parliaments; and 26 with representatives of organizations, associations or witnesses directly concerned with reports of disappearances. The Group also discussed with Argentina, Bolivia, El Salvador, Guatemala, Peru and the Philippines its wish to visit those countries to enable it to fulfil its mandate more effectively.

The Group concluded that a major breakthrough in efforts to eradicate enforced disappearances could not be claimed. Its findings indicated no reversal of the trend where the practice had been rampant, and an alarming increase where it had been considered incipient. The Group recommended to the Commission that it appeal to the Governments concerned to set up national organs to investigate reports of missing persons and to respond to the Group's requests for information on steps they had taken to implement the 1978 General Assembly resolution on disappeared persons.<sup>(98)</sup> It also recommended that the Commission elaborate an international instrument against enforced or involuntary disappearances and renew the Group's mandate for a further two years.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May adopted decision 1984/135.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/23 of 6 March 1984, approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, as laid down in Commission resolution 20(XXXVI) of 29 February 1980. The Council endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary assistance, in particular the staff and resources it may require to perform its functions in an effective and expeditious manner and, if necessary, to make the appropriate arrangements to ensure the continuity of the Secretariat's work.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/135

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Sponsors: Argentina, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, France, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Italy, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Senegal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly on 14 December 1984 adopted resolution 39/111.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978, entitled "Disappeared persons", and its resolution 38/94 of 16 December 1983 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Deeply concerned about the persistence, in certain cases, of the practice of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Expressing its profound emotion at the anguish and sorrow of the families concerned, who should know the fate of their relatives,

Convinced of the importance of implementing the provisions of General Assembly resolution 33/173 and of the other United Nations resolutions on the question of enforced and involuntary disappearances, with a view to finding solutions for cases of disappearances and helping to eliminate such practices,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/23 of 6 March 1984, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the term of the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, and Economic and Social Council decision 1984/135 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council approved the Commission's decision,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for the humanitarian work it has done and to those Governments that have co-operated with it;

2. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend for one year the term of the mandate of the Working Group, as laid down in Commission resolution 1984/23;

3. Also welcomes the provisions made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1984/23 to enable the Working Group to fulfil its mandate with even greater efficiency;

4. Appeals to all Governments to provide the Working Group and the Commission on Human Rights with the full co-operation warranted by their strictly humanitarian objectives and their working methods based on discretion;

5. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any step it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group when it considers the report to be submitted by the Group at its forty-first session;

6. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary assistance.

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/700) without vote, 6 December (meeting 64); 15-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.73); agenda item 12.

Other aspects of civil and political rights*Slavery*Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

By a roll-call vote of 35 to none, with 8 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights on 12 March 1984<sup>(99)</sup> recognized apartheid as a slavery-like practice, endorsed the call for mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa and appealed for Security Council support for proposals to that effect. The Commission appealed to States to sign or ratify the relevant conventions—the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others,<sup>(100)</sup> and the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery<sup>(101)</sup>—or, if unable to do so, to explain why in writing.

The Secretary-General was requested to call on the States parties to those conventions to report regularly on the situation in their countries, and to call on other States, United Nations agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and INTERPOL to supply relevant information to the Working Group on Slavery; to transmit for comment to the Governments concerned the statements containing allegations of slavery-like practices given to the Group in 1981<sup>(102)</sup> by the Anti-Slavery Society for the Protection of Human Rights, the Minority Rights Group and the International Abolitionist Federation; and to submit to the Sub-Commission in August 1984 a report on how the work of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in certain countries could be adapted to contribute to the struggle against slavery.

The Commission asked the competent United Nations bodies to offer States co-ordinated legal, technical, administrative, educational, financial and other practical assistance to eliminate conditions conducive to slavery and slavery-like situations. ILO, FAO and UNESCO were invited to participate actively in the Group's work and to include in their technical assistance programmes activities designed to eliminate slavery-type problems. The Sub-Commission was invited to involve the persons whose names appeared in the list of slavery experts more closely in the Group's work.

On 13 March,<sup>(103)</sup> the Commission recommended a draft resolution on the question of slavery and the slave trade, which served as the basis for the Economic and Social Council action below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1984, acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/34.

Question of slavery and the slave trade in all their practices and manifestations

The Economic and Social Council

1. Requests the Secretary-General to entrust a working group composed of experts designated by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization with the task of conducting a comprehensive study on the phenomenon of traditional practices affecting the health of women and children;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the working group with all the assistance it may need to carry out the study;

3. Requests all interested non-governmental organizations to co-operate in the study;

4. Requests the working group to submit its report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-second session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/34

24 May 1984                      Meeting 20                      Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 16);
draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Mission to Mauritania. In keeping with arrangements made in 1983,<sup>(104)</sup> the Sub-Commission dispatched a mission to Mauritania, consisting of an expert, Marc Bossuyt (Belgium), accompanied by three officials of the United Nations Centre for Human Rights. The visit extended from 14 to 24 January 1984. The mission, essentially one of information and consultation carried out at the invitation of Mauritania, was to acquaint itself with the situation in the country following its abolition of slavery, as proclaimed on 5 July 1980 and confirmed by an ordinance of 9 November 1981, and to determine what international aid was needed to enable Mauritania to surmount the consequences of slavery.

Based on his findings, the expert addressed a series of recommendations to Mauritania. They included ratification of or accession to the international human rights instruments; promulgation of a three-year limit for the submission of compensation claims by former slave owners; establishment of a body to co-ordinate activities against slavery and its consequences; and involvement of former slaves in those activities and, through the civil status legislation in preparation, raising their consciousness to their legal personality as free men. A circular should be issued drawing to the attention of administrative authorities their obligation to report any breach of the abolition law. A media campaign should be undertaken, in all languages and with the aid of religious authorities, to familiarize the public with the importance of the abolition and with the criminal penalties applicable to those guilty of victimizing former slaves. Schools and small-scale enterprises in handicrafts and livestock farming for former slaves were also recommended.

The recommendations addressed to the Sub-Commission formed the basis for the Sub-Commission action (see below) on the mission's report.<sup>(105)</sup>

Activities of the Working Group on Slavery. The Sub-Commission's Working Group on Slavery held its tenth session at Geneva from 30 July to 3 August 1984.<sup>(106)</sup> As in 1983, it reviewed developments in slavery and the slave trade in all their practices, including violence and coercion against women; female circumcision; servitude of domestic servants; the sale of children and exploitation of child labour; debt bondage; traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others; and the slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism. Questions relating to the situation in Mauritania and other Sahelian countries were also discussed.

During the review, statements were made by a number of NGOs, among them the Anti-Slavery Society for the Protection of Human Rights, the International Abolitionist Federation, the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, the International Movement for Fraternal Union among Races and Peoples, and the Minority Rights Group, as well as by INTERPOL.

The Working Group put forward a series of recommendations, on which the Sub-Commission based a draft resolution on slavery for action by the Commission (see below).

Sub-Commission action. In addition to the reports of the mission to Mauritania and the Working Group on Slavery, the Sub-Commission had before it, in response to a Commission request (see above), a report by the Secretary-General<sup>(107)</sup> stating that there were no UNDP projects designed specifically to combat slavery practices, nor was UNDP in a position to create such projects, since development objectives for which UNDP resources were used were decided upon by the recipient Governments. However, UNDP would be pleased to support requests for assistance in that area within the overall UNDP-financed country or intercountry programmes.

On 30 August 1984,<sup>(108)</sup> the Sub-Commission, having considered the mission report, expressed appreciation to Mauritania for the facilities it had placed at the mission's disposal and to the expert for a valuable report, which he was asked to present to the Commission in 1985. The Sub-Commission recommended a draft resolution to the Commission, by which the Commission would transmit the report: to Mauritania, inviting it to inform the Sub-Commission of any action it felt able to take thereon; and to UNDP and its donor States, other relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, and regional and subregional organizations, inviting them to provide assistance to Mauritania for the purpose of eradicating the consequences of slavery. The Commission would ask the expert to prepare a follow-up report based on replies received and to submit to the Sub-Commission an interim report in 1985 and a final one in 1986. It would ask the Secretary-General to provide the expert with assistance for the follow-up report.

Taking note of the Working Group's report, the Sub-Commission, also on 30 August,<sup>(109)</sup> considered it useful for the Group to review at each session the developments in situations it had previously considered. It recommended wider use of mass media to inform peoples of the extent of the problems and develop their awareness of their rights and responsibilities in the struggle against slavery and slavery-like practices, and recommended expert seminars for the exchange of experiences.

The Sub-Commission further recommended to the Commission a draft resolution by which the Commission would invite States to sign or ratify the 1949 Convention on prostitution, and invite the Secretary-General to pursue the matter. The Commission would request him to invite States parties to that Convention and to the 1926 and 1956 slavery conventions to report regularly on their compliance with those instruments. It would invite States, the United Nations system, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and INTERPOL to continue to supply relevant information to the Group. The Commission would request the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments and United Nations bodies and agencies concerned the statements on specific allegations of slavery-like practices, submitted by NGOs to the Working Group in 1984. It would also request the Sub-Commission to undertake two studies, on alleged slavery-like practices against women and children, indicating ways to rehabilitate the victims, and on debt bondage.

By other provisions of the draft, the Commission would recommend: intensified struggle at the national level against procuring, and adoption of international measures to dismantle prostitution networks and to assist and repatriate their victims; adoption by States of social and legal measures to ensure the effective reintegration of victims of prostitution into society; wide use of the mass media to publicize the evils of slavery and slavery-like practices; and use by Governments of assistance under the programme of advisory services in human rights and other programmes for eliminating slavery, slavery-like practices and their sequels. Finally, the Commission would request UNICEF, ILO, FAO and UNESCO to give particular attention, in their technical assistance programmes, to situations where poverty led to or perpetuated slavery and slavery-like practices.

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/34, the Sub-Commission on 31 August<sup>(110)</sup> designated Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco) and Murlidhar C. Bhandare (India) as experts to serve on a Working Group on Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children.

Anniversary of the emancipation of slaves in the British Empire

An item entitled "Celebration of the one-hundred-and-fiftieth anniversary of the emancipation of slaves in the British Empire" was included in the 1984 agenda of the General Assembly and allocated to the plenary Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee. The item's inclusion was requested by Antigua and Barbuda in a letter of 24 August.<sup>(111)</sup>

In a memorandum annexed to the letter, it was proposed that the year beginning 1 August 1984 mark the anniversary, explaining that the Abolition of Slavery Act of 1 August 1834, which emancipated slaves in the British Empire, was an important advance in mankind's effort to achieve racial equality and social justice in the context of basic human rights.

A draft resolution, sponsored by Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Mauritius, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago, by which the Assembly would decide to commemorate the anniversary, was circulated on 21 November.<sup>(112)</sup>

In decision 39/456, on the suspension of its 1984 session, the Assembly decided to retain the item on the agenda and to include it among the items to be considered when the session resumed in 1985.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: General Committee 1, 2; plenary 70, 105.

Conscientious objectors

On 24 May 1984, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1984/27. It was based on a draft recommended by the Commission on Human Rights on 12 March,<sup>(113)</sup> following presentation to it of the 1983 report on the question of conscientious objection to military service.<sup>(114)</sup>

Conscientious objection to military service

The Economic and Social Council

1. Decides:

(a) That the report prepared by Mr. Eide and Mr. Mubanga-Chipoya on conscientious objection to military service should be printed and given the widest possible distribution;

(b) To transmit the report for comments and observations to Governments and relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-first session on those comments and observations and on other significant developments regarding the human rights of conscientious objectors;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to study the report on conscientious objection to military service, including the recommendations contained therein, as well as the report of the Secretary-General containing the comments and observations, under the item entitled "The role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights, including the question of conscientious objection to military service".

24 May 1984 Meeting 20 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to the Economic and Social Council's request (see above), the Secretary-General prepared a report<sup>(115)</sup> for the Commission that contained replies to his note verbale of 20 August, circulating the Special Rapporteurs' report on conscientious objection to military service with a request for comments. By the end of 1984, substantive replies had been received from five Governments, two United Nations bodies and nine NGOs.

Freedom of movement

On 24 May 1984, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1984/29. It was based on a text recommended by the Commission on Human Rights on 12 March, by a vote of 34 to none, with 8 abstentions.<sup>(116)</sup>

Study of discrimination in respect of the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Study of Discrimination in Respect of the Right of Everyone to Leave Any Country, Including His Own, and to Return to His Country, submitted to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its fifteenth session, in 1963, by the Special Rapporteur, Mr. José D. Inglés, and the draft principles respecting this right adopted by the Sub-Commission at the same session,

Also recalling Sub-Commission resolution 7(XXXIV) of 9 September 1981, by which the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to submit to it at its thirty-fifth session a concise note informing it of the consideration given by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council to the report on the aforementioned study,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to that resolution,

Noting also Sub-Commission resolutions 1982/23 of 8 September 1982 and 1983/5 of 31 August 1983 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/37 of 12 March 1984,

1. Endorses the appointment by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of Mr. Mubanga-Chipoya to prepare an analysis of current trends and developments in respect of the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country, and to have the possibility of entering other countries, without discrimination or hindrance, especially of the right to employment, taking into account the need to avoid the phenomenon of the brain drain from developing countries and the question of recompensing those countries for the loss incurred, and to study in particular the extent of restrictions permissible under article 12, paragraph 3, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

2. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit to the Sub-Commission at its thirty-seventh session for its consideration recommendations for promoting and encouraging respect for and observance of that right;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to give Mr. Mubanga-Chipoya all the assistance he may require in his work.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/29

24 May 1984 Meeting 20 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) by vote (43-0-7), 17 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Canada, which in the Committee had requested a vote on the text, agreed to the appointment of a special rapporteur to prepare a study of discriminatory practices affecting the right of everyone to leave any country, including one's own; it had, however, reservations on the rest of the paragraph which it termed vague and unrealistic, especially in view of the regulations enforced by most countries with regard to visas and work permits. The USSR did not object to adoption of the text without vote but said it would abstain in a vote; the subject of the proposed study was already covered by article 12 of the 1966 Covenant.

France and the Federal Republic of Germany voiced reservations particularly on the reference in paragraph 1 to the question of recompensing the developing countries for the loss incurred as a result of the brain drain; that question and the reference to the right to employment were outside the scope of the proposed study, the Federal Republic of Germany felt.

Sub-Commission action. A preliminary report on freedom of movement<sup>(117)</sup> by Special Rapporteur Chama L. C. Mubanga-Chipoya (Zambia) was before the Sub-Commission at its August 1984 session. The report contained a questionnaire to be used for collecting information for the analysis requested by the Council.

On 29 August,<sup>(118)</sup> the Sub-Commission expressed appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for his report and excellent introductory statement. It requested him to continue his work so as to present a progress report in 1985 and a final one, to include recommendations, in 1986. It also requested the Secretary-General to provide the assistance necessary to complete that task.

Freedom of speech

In 1984, the right to freedom of expression, as reaffirmed by article 19 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,<sup>(1)</sup> was considered by the Commission on Human Rights in view of its concern over the extensive detention in many parts of the world of persons solely for exercising that right. In that connection, it took note of a September 1983 Sub-Commission resolution that included an appeal for the release of all persons detained for their views who had neither used nor advocated violence and thus had not threatened peace and security.<sup>(119)</sup>

The Commission repeated that appeal to all States on 12 March 1984,<sup>(120)</sup> and called on them to allow full realization of that right. In an effort to promote respect for that right, it decided to review the matter in 1985.

Use of force by law enforcement officials

In response to a September 1983 Sub-Commission request,<sup>(49)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted an analysis of State policies and practices regarding restraints on the use of force by law enforcement officials and military personnel.<sup>(121)</sup> The analysis was based on information received, as at 8 June 1984, from 11 Governments, four specialized agencies, a regional intergovernmental organization, and two NGOs. The question of restraint was examined with respect to the use of firearms, arrest, detention and imprisonment, public gatherings, and states of siege or emergency. Three main directions in State policies and practices emerged from the findings: establishment of a legal framework for enforcement officials, including regulations for firearms use and guarantees against arbitrary arrest and detention; supervision of application of legislation through remedies to victims of abuse and imposition of sanctions (civil, penal and disciplinary) on persons responsible for such abuse; and education of law enforcement officials.

On 29 August,<sup>(122)</sup> the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to issue a reminder to all concerned to communicate, if they so wished, the information he had previously requested regarding restraints on the use of force against detainees. It also asked that, on the basis of such information, he prepare a further analysis of State policies and practices. The Sub-Commission requested the 1984 Working Group on Detention to review the further analysis, together with the one already submitted, and to present in 1985 conclusions and recommendations based on that review.

Independence of the judicial system

A final report on the question of the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers from Special Rapporteur L. M. Singhvi (India)<sup>(114)</sup> remained pending in 1984. Hence, the Sub-Commission on 29 August<sup>(123)</sup> requested that the report be submitted in 1985 when it would give it priority consideration with a view to elaborating a draft body of principles on the subject.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1984, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966<sup>(1)</sup> and in force since 1976,<sup>(2)</sup> had been ratified or acceded to by 83 States. Cameroon, Togo and Zambia became parties to it during 1984.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of ratifications of or accessions to the Covenant—as at 1 March, in a note to the Economic and Social Council;<sup>(3)</sup> and as at 1 September, in a report to the General Assembly.<sup>(4)</sup>

Implementation of the Covenant

The Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the Covenant met for its sixth session in New York from 16 April to 4 May 1984.<sup>(5)</sup> Composed of States parties to the Covenant (see APPENDIX III), the Group was set up by the Economic and Social Council in 1978<sup>(6)</sup> and restructured in 1982.<sup>(7)</sup> The Group examined 25 reports received in 1984 from 24 States parties on their implementation of specific provisions of the Covenant. On each report, the Group heard statements by, and put questions to, the respective State representative. Under a programme established by the Council in 1976,<sup>(8)</sup> reports required under the Covenant were to be submitted in three biennial cycles or stages, each stage covering a related group of articles of the Covenant.

For the first stage (due 1 September 1977), the Group examined reports from Japan, Peru, Rwanda and Venezuela,<sup>(9)</sup> concerning rights covered by articles 6 to 9 (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, the rights of trade unionists, the right to social security). At their request, consideration of the reports from Mexico and Iraq were deferred.<sup>(10)</sup> Second-stage reports (due 1 September 1983) examined came from the Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, Hungary, Mongolia, Norway, the Philippines, Spain, Sweden, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia.<sup>(11)</sup> Those from Bulgaria and Romania<sup>(12)</sup> were received later in the year and were thus marked for consideration in 1985. Consideration of the report of the German Democratic Republic<sup>(13)</sup> was deferred at its request. Expressing deep concern over the human rights situation in Chile, Group members asked that State party to provide information reflecting the actual situation on implementation of articles 6 to 9.

The Group examined initial reports (due 1 September 1979) on rights covered by articles 10 to 12 (protection of the family, mothers and children, an adequate living standard, and physical and mental health) from Canada, India, Italy and the Netherlands.<sup>(14)</sup> Consideration of the report from Portugal<sup>(15)</sup> was deferred at its request.

Also examined were initial reports (due 1 September 1981) on implementation of articles 13 to 15 (education, including compulsory education, and participation in cultural life) from Finland and Guyana.<sup>(16)</sup> Consideration of reports from Iraq and Portugal<sup>(17)</sup> was deferred.

In addition, the Group considered two notes by the Secretary-General: one on the status of submission of reports as at 1 March 1984 (see above);<sup>(3)</sup> and another transmitting an extract from an ILO report on implementation of articles 6 to 12.<sup>(18)</sup>

The Group's recommendations to the Council included reminding States parties to submit reports under article 16 of the Covenant and urging them to cover the entire cycle of initial reports before submitting second periodic reports; drawing their attention to their reporting obligations no later than January of the year in which the reports fell due; and reminding them to implement fully their obligations in all the territories under their jurisdiction. Reports scheduled for consideration should be presented at least six weeks before the Group's session. For its examination of second periodic reports, the Group asked that it be provided also with the initial reports and related summary records. Reports should be balanced and, to render them more comprehensible, should include the necessary demographic and macro-economic data, as well as a description of legislative and administrative acts. Descriptions of implementation should not be confined to references to annexes or to reports submitted to other United Nations bodies or specialized agencies.

The Group recommended press coverage of its proceedings, wide participation in them by the States parties, United Nations Members and specialized agencies, and attendance by NGOs and the public at large. It further recommended full composition of the Group and session attendance by all of its members, the better to accomplish its task and enhance the importance of its work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council acted on the recommendations of the Group of Experts by adopting resolution 1984/9 on 24 May 1984 without vote.

Recalling also that the meetings of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights are public, that States parties to the Covenant, States Members of the United Nations and representatives of the specialized agencies concerned may participate in its proceedings in accordance with Council decision 1978/10 of 3 May 1978, and that interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Council and the public at large may attend those meetings,

Noting the concern expressed by the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights about the lack of publicity given to its work at the present session of the Council,

5. Requests the specialized agencies, on the basis of experience gained in other bodies and of reports so far submitted and considered by the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to report on the progress made in achieving the observance of the provisions of the Covenant falling within the scope of their activities, in accordance with article 18 of the Covenant and paragraph 6 of Council resolution 1988(LX);

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate measures to ensure that the United Nations press service issues press releases on the proceedings of the next session of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

7. Requests the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to continue to consider including in its report to the Council brief summaries of the consideration of each country report;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the relevant suggestions and recommendations listed in section IV of the report of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to the attention of States parties to the Covenant so that States parties may take them into account in preparing and submitting their reports under the Covenant;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1985 a report on the composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other bodies established in accordance with existing international instruments in the field of human rights in order to facilitate the review which the Council will undertake in accordance with its resolution 1982/33;

10. Decides that the review shall be conducted at an early date during its first regular session of 1985 to allow enough time for a full discussion of this important matter, taking into account any recommendations which the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights may agree upon at its next session.

Bureau for 1985 of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

At its 19th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council decided that the Bureau for 1985 of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights should be constituted as follows:

Chairman: Eastern European States;

Vice-Chairmen: Asian States; Latin American States; Western European and other States;

Rapporteur: African States.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/122

Adopted without vote

Draft by Group of Experts on International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (E/1984/83); agenda item 3.

Meeting numbers. ESC 16, 17, 19.

Other action. The Commission on Human Rights, on 6 March, also dealt with the question of the realization of economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Covenant, particularly the right to development (see immediately below).

Right to development

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

By a roll-call vote of 39 to none, with 4 abstentions, taken on 6 March 1984,<sup>(19)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights expressed concern at the current situation adversely affecting the establishment of a new international economic order and the full achievement of the right to development. It reaffirmed the inalienable right of all nations to pursue freely their economic and social development and to exercise complete sovereignty over their natural resources subject to the principles referred to in article 1, paragraph 2, of the Covenant; and that foreign occupation, colonialism, apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, and the denial of the right to self-determination and of universally recognized human rights were serious impediments to economic and social progress.

Noting the progress made by the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development in the elaboration of a draft declaration on the subject, as reflected in its 1983 report,<sup>(20)</sup> the Commission decided to reconvene the Group, with a request that it hold two sessions at Geneva and submit its proposals in 1985. At that time, the need to continue the Group's activities would be reviewed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May adopted decision 1984/132 by recorded vote.

Question of the realization in all countries of the economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and study of special problems which the developing countries face in their efforts to achieve these human rights

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/16 of 6 March 1984, endorsed the Commission's decision to reconvene the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development with the same mandate as before in order to allow it to elaborate, on the basis of its report, and all the documents already submitted or to be submitted, a draft declaration on the right to development. The Council also endorsed the Commission's request to the Working Group to hold two sessions of two weeks each at Geneva.

52-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) by vote (48-0-2), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Indonesia, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Working Group activities. Responding to the Commission's request of 6 March, as endorsed by the Council (see above), the 15-member Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development met at Geneva in two sessions in 1984: the eighth from 24 September to 5 October; and the ninth from 3 to 14 December.

At those sessions, the Group considered in detail paragraphs 6, 9, 12, 15 and 16 of the preamble to the draft declaration on the basis of a technical consolidated text and of various drafts and proposals brought forward from 1983.<sup>(20)</sup> It also considered articles 1 to 4 of the operative section. Paragraph 16 of the preamble was discussed jointly with article 1 concerning the definition of the right to development, the central feature of the declaration. An extensive exchange of views was held on articles 2 to 4 concerning the responsibility for development in its individual and collective dimensions, and the elements involved in the effective realization of the right to development. No general agreement emerged from the proposals put forward.

In its report to the Commission,<sup>(21)</sup> the Group annexed a draft declaration by the non-aligned countries and another by two experts (France and the Netherlands); the 1983 technical consolidated text; USSR proposals for article 1 and other unnumbered articles; three sets of proposals submitted at the seventh (1983) session and at the 1984 sessions; and the texts of the preamble on which general agreement in principle had been reached at the seventh and ninth sessions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/145, the General Assembly reaffirmed that the right to development was an inalienable human right and that, for its full realization, international peace and security were essential. The Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to take measures to promote that right and welcomed the Commission's decision that the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development should continue elaborating a draft declaration. It requested the Secretary-General to transmit to it in 1985 a report on the Group's progress.

The new international economic order and human rights

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

Following its consideration of the study on the new international economic order and the promotion of human rights, completed by Special Rapporteur Raúl Ferrero (Peru) in 1983,<sup>(20)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights adopted a draft decision on 6 March 1984 by a roll-call vote of 39 to 1, with 3 abstentions,<sup>(22)</sup> which served as the basis for the Economic and Social Council decision below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May adopted decision 1984/133 by recorded vote.

The new international economic order and the promotion of human rights

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council noted Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/17 of 6 March 1984 and decided that the study on the new international economic order and the promotion of human rights should be published and given the widest possible distribution in all the official languages of the United Nations.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/133

49-1-3 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) by vote (47-1-3), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Greece, Indonesia, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Germany, Federal Republic of, Japan, United Kingdom.

Popular participation and human rights

In 1984, the Commission on Human Rights had before it a preliminary report by the Secretary-General<sup>(23)</sup> on an analytical study he was undertaking on the right to popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in the full realization of all human rights. Submitted in accordance with a May 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(24)</sup> the report summarized views and comments on popular participation, in theory and in practice, in relation to respect for human rights and as a human right in itself. Included were the views expressed on the topic in the General Assembly in 1982 and in the Commission in 1983; comments received, as at 17 January 1984, from five Governments; and an overview of related activities carried out by five United Nations organs, three specialized agencies and two intergovernmental regional organizations. The summary took account of the conclusions of the 1982 International Seminar on Popular Participation.<sup>(25)</sup>

Based on the foregoing information, the report described a three-part provisional outline of the final study, indicating the main issues to be addressed. Part I would define the multi-dimensional nature of the concept of popular participation and survey its major forms and place in development. Part II would focus on popular participation and its links with the rights to self-determination, development, the enjoyment of human rights by minority groups (women, indigenous and rural populations) and other human rights in various areas (information, association, employment and management, education, cultural life, etc.). Part III would examine whether popular participation might be considered a specific human right, and what its content and place in the existing system of human rights might be.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a roll-call vote of 41 to 1, taken on 6 March 1984,<sup>(26)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of the preliminary report of the Secretary-General, requested him to take account of the views expressed in the debate on popular participation at the current session and invited all concerned to transmit their comments to him as called for by the Economic and Social Council in 1983.<sup>(24)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May 1984 adopted decision 1984/131 by recorded vote.

Popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/15 of 6 March 1984, endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General, in preparing the final study on the right to popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights, to take into account the views expressed at the fortieth session of the Commission. The Council further endorsed the Commission's invitation to those Governments, United Nations organs and specialized agencies that have not yet done so to transmit their comments and views to the Secretary-General, as called for in Council resolution 1983/31 of 27 May 1983.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/131

51-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) by vote (47-1), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Indonesia, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.
Against: United States.

The United States, explaining its vote, observed that the financial implications involved raised serious questions of procedure and substance. Under the 1983 Council resolution,<sup>(24)</sup> the Secretariat had had a clear mandate to prepare not only the preliminary study but also the complete analytical study on popular participation. Thus the credits which had been approved had been intended to finance those two studies, not simply the preparation—by a consultant recruited at the P4 level for six months at a cost of $33,200—of a preliminary report that, with the exception of 26 paragraphs, had been prepared by other United Nations organs. The United States was therefore dismayed at the Secretariat's statement that it would again be necessary to engage a consultant under similar terms to complete the study, at an estimated cost of $34,300.

Right to education and employment

In resolution 39/23, on measures for securing the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and work, the General Assembly called on all States, governmental and non-governmental organizations and interested United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to pay continuous attention to implementation of measures aimed at promoting human rights and their enjoyment by youth, particularly the right to education, vocational training and work, with a view to resolving the problem of youth unemployment. The Assembly made a similar request to the Secretary-General in connection with his survey of the implementation of the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities for the International Youth Year (1985) (see p. 929). It invited national committees or organs co-ordinating activities for the Year to give priority to implementation and enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and work.

In resolution 39/145, the Assembly reaffirmed that, in order to facilitate full enjoyment of all rights and personal dignity, it was necessary to promote the rights to education and work, among others, through national measures, including those providing for workers' participation in management, and through international ones, including the establishment of a new international economic order.

Right to food

Pursuant to a May 1983 decision of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(27)</sup> Special Rapporteur Asbjørn Eide (Norway) submitted to the Sub-Commission in 1984 a progress report on a study on the right to adequate food as a human right.<sup>(28)</sup> The report consisted of a draft of the first five chapters of the final report and a summary of replies received in response to a request for comments or information relevant to the preparation of the study.

Chapter I examined the nature of economic, social and cultural rights—the broad international legal framework within which the right to adequate food as a human right had been proclaimed—and addressed certain objections to the juristic quality of those rights. Chapter II surveyed the existing formulations of the right to food in international law. Chapter III covered food problems and the concept of food entitlement (defined as the command a person or family could legitimately establish over food). Chapters IV and V dealt, respectively, with food systems within their broader social context at all levels and with international efforts to co-ordinate and facilitate realization of the right to food. The remaining chapters, VI to VIII, were to deal with the normative content of the right to food including the corresponding obligations, international supervision of implementation of those obligations, and conclusions and recommendations.

Sub-Commission action. Having examined the progress report, the Sub-Commission, on 29 August 1984,<sup>(29)</sup> requested the Special Rapporteur to submit a final report in 1985. It also requested the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance required to carry out that task.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/166, the General Assembly reaffirmed that the right to food was a universal human right which should be guaranteed to all people, and, in that context, believed in the general principle that food should not be used as an instrument of political pressure.

Advancement of human rights

In 1984, an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights continued an overall analysis of alternative ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as of other issues arising from the Commission's discussion of the further promotion and encouragement of human rights, including its programme and methods of work. The group, similar to the one established in 1983,<sup>(1)</sup> met at Geneva on 1, 7 and 12 March 1984.<sup>(2)</sup> In reviewing the work undertaken since 1978,<sup>(3)</sup> the group identified those areas on which deliberations had led to action, those concerning which it had acted merely in a "think-tank" capacity, and those considered but on which no agreement had been reached.

Actions taken included the expansion of the Commission from 32 to 43 members, extension of its sessions to six weeks with an additional week for its working groups, revision of its terms of reference to provide for Commission assistance to the Economic and Social Council in improving co-ordination of human rights activities, redesignation of the Division of Human Rights to the Centre for Human Rights, reclassification of the post of Director of the Centre to the level of Assistant Secretary-General, facilitating the Commission's conduct of its proceedings by setting a time-limit for statements, and streamlining its agenda.

Issues on which the group had played a "think-tank" role were the strengthening of the advisory services programme, public information initiatives, the Secretary-General's good-offices role, national institutions as well as regional arrangements for the promotion of human rights, and the role of the Sub-Commission in relation to the Commission.

Agreement remained to be reached on the following: inter-sessional role (organizational, substantive, emergency) of the Bureau of the Commission, rescheduling of the Commission's annual session, revision of its terms of reference for greater flexibility, a long-term work programme, creation of the post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, and a revision of the procedure for considering communications alleging denial or violation of human rights (see below, under "Human rights violations"). Some of the problems raised by these issues were also indicated. While some delegations felt that these issues could be the basis for future work, others felt that their continued discussion by the group would not be productive owing to the impasse it had reached on them.

On 15 March,<sup>(4)</sup> noting with appreciation the review by the working group, the Commission decided to consider—in the light of discussions to take place at the 1984 General Assembly session—setting up an open-ended working group in 1985 to continue the overall analysis.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/145 by recorded vote.

Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling also the purposes and principles of the Charter to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Emphasizing the significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to the future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution,

Recalling also its resolutions 34/46 of 23 November 1979, 35/174 of 15 December 1980, 36/133 of 14 December 1981 and 38/124 of 16 December 1983,

Recognizing that the human being is the main subject of development and that everyone has the right to participate in, as well as to benefit from, the development process,

Reiterating once again that the establishment of the new international economic order is an essential element for the effective promotion and the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reiterating also its profound conviction that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of both civil and political and economic, social and cultural rights,

Reaffirming the importance of furthering the activities of the existing organs of the United Nations in the field of human rights in conformity with the principles of the Charter,

Underlining the need for the creation of conditions at the national and international levels for the promotion and full protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples,

Emphasizing that Governments have the duty to ensure respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Taking note of the work done by the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, as reflected in its reports to the Commission on Human Rights,

Underlining that the right to development is an inalienable human right,

Recognizing that international peace and security are essential elements for the full realization of human rights, including the right to development,

Considering that the resources which would be released by disarmament could contribute significantly to the development of all States, in particular the developing countries,

Recognizing that co-operation among all nations on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of each people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, and to exercise full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources, subject to the principles referred to in article 1, paragraph 2, and article 25 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, is essential for the promotion of peace and development,

Convinced that the primary aim of such international co-operation must be the achievement by each human being of a life of freedom and dignity and freedom from want,

Acknowledging the progress so far achieved by the international community in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Concerned, however, at the occurrence of violations of human rights in the world,

Reaffirming that nothing in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or in the International Covenants on Human Rights may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person the right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth therein,

Affirming that the ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population, on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom,

1. Reiterates its request that the Commission on Human Rights continue its current work on the overall analysis with a view to further promoting and improving human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the Commission's programme and working methods, and on the overall analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in accordance with the provisions and concepts of General Assembly resolution 32/130 and other relevant texts;

2. Affirms that a primary aim of international co-operation in the field of human rights is a life of freedom, dignity and peace for all peoples and for each human being, that all human rights and fundamental freedoms

are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the others;

3. Affirms its profound conviction that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, protection and promotion of both civil and political and economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Reaffirms that it is of paramount importance for the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms that Member States should undertake specific obligations through accession to, or ratification of, international instruments in this field and, consequently, that the standard-setting work within the United Nations system in the field of human rights and the universal acceptance and implementation of the relevant international instruments should be encouraged;

5. Reiterates once again that the international community should accord, or continue to accord, priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those mentioned in paragraph 1 (e) of General Assembly resolution 32/130, paying due attention also to other situations of violations of human rights;

6. Reaffirms its responsibility for achieving international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and expresses its concern at serious violations of human rights, in particular mass and flagrant violations of these rights, wherever they occur;

7. Expresses concern at the present situation with regard to the achievement of the objectives and goals for establishing the new international economic order and its adverse effects on the full realization of human rights, in particular the right to development;

8. Reaffirms that the right to development is an inalienable human right;

9. Reaffirms also that international peace and security are essential elements in achieving the full realization of the right to development;

10. Recognizes that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent;

11. Considers it necessary that all Member States promote international co-operation on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of each people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, and to exercise full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources, subject to the principles referred to in article 1, paragraph 2, and article 25 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, with a view to resolving international problems of an economic, social and humanitarian character;

12. Expresses concern at the disparity existing between the established norms and principles and the actual situation of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in the world;

13. Urges all States to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

14. Reiterates the need to create, at the national and international levels, conditions for the full promotion and protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples;

15. Reaffirms once again that, in order to facilitate the full enjoyment of all rights and complete personal dignity, it is necessary to promote the rights to education, work, health and proper nourishment through the adoption of measures at the national level, including those that provide for workers' participation in management, as well as the adoption of measures at the international level, including the establishment of the new international economic order;

16. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to take the necessary measures to promote the right to development, taking into account the results achieved by the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, which is engaged in the study of the scope and content of the right to development, and welcomes the decision of the Commission in its resolution 1984/16 of 6 March 1984 that the Working Group should continue its work with the aim of submitting as soon as possible a draft declaration on the right to development;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report containing information on the progress made by the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development of the Commission on Human Rights in the drafting of a declaration on the right to development;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

During consideration of the draft text in the Third Committee, Italy proposed two amendments which it later withdrew:<sup>(6)</sup> one was to paragraph 6, which would have substituted the text after the word "all" by "and that massive and flagrant violations and all other violations of human rights, wherever they occur, are of concern to the United Nations"; the other was to paragraph 12 (originally paragraph 13), which would have substituted the text after the word "principles" by "and the massive and flagrant and all other violations of human rights which continue to take place in many parts of the world". The Ukrainian SSR also proposed and later withdrew an amendment<sup>(6)</sup> introducing a new paragraph by which the Assembly would have reaffirmed the duty of a State to refrain from exploiting and distorting human rights issues as a means of interfering in the internal affairs of other States or creating distrust and disorder among them. Following consultations on those proposals, the draft was orally revised by the sponsors.

It was contended by the majority of States explaining their votes in the Committee that, in the absence of a universally acceptable definition of the right to development and pending the outcome of the deliberations of the Working Group charged with drafting a declaration (see above), the formulation in paragraph 8 was either unacceptable or premature. Those States included Austria, Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden (for the Nordic countries) and the United States. The Federal Republic of Germany observed that the text, instead of reflecting the various proposals for strengthening or developing United Nations structures for a more effective protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, referred to a number of unclear concepts for the realization of human rights; such issues as international peace and security, disarmament and development should be dealt with in more competent forums.

The United States could not accept formulations such as those in paragraphs 7 and 16, which might imply that establishment of the so-called new international economic order (NIEO) was a prerequisite to the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Similar views were voiced by the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden and the Netherlands, which also said it was by no means clear what the content of NIEO would be.

Turkey and Ireland were of the opinion that the text did not reflect the basic concept that human rights were inherent in human nature and existed independently of all other factors. Nor did it reflect the necessary balance between civil and political rights, and economic, social and cultural rights, Turkey added. The Federal Republic of Germany and Sweden made a similar observation. Sweden further explained that the Nordic countries fully supported the approach taken by the Assembly in 1977<sup>(7)</sup> to the effect that all human rights and fundamental freedoms were indivisible and interdependent and that equal attention should be given to implementing and promoting them; Sweden thus found regrettable the tendency to stress States' rights rather than the individual's, and economic and social rights rather than civil and political.

The various international human rights instruments drawn up by the United Nations had made any human rights violations a legitimate concern of the United Nations, the Federal Republic of Germany asserted; it could therefore not support formulations restricting United Nations competence in respect of such violations. Ireland said such concern was not expressed with sufficient clarity by the text. There could be no doubt, the Netherlands observed, that protection of human rights implied active United Nations involvement—an involvement that should not be restricted to mass and flagrant human rights violations.

Through the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,<sup>(8)</sup> the United Nations and its Members had committed themselves to ensuring respect for the human rights of each member of the human community, Belgium said; it thus felt that violations of the individual's rights were as grave as violations of any other rights embodied in the Covenants. Australia said it failed to understand the trepidation with which some approached the idea that all human rights violations were of concern to the United Nations; it could, therefore, only with difficulty accept the qualified reference to violations in the terms in which it appeared in paragraph 6. France regretted that the text still contained unacceptable elements and it hoped that it would be possible to produce a really balanced text on the subject in 1985.

In the view of the USSR, the text neither placed undue emphasis on social and economic rights, as opposed to the civil and political, nor did it place States' rights in opposition to the individual's. To speak of the human rights of the individual was unrealistic, the USSR felt, unless the rights of the whole people were safeguarded. The text avoided the pitfall of making human rights violations the exclusive concern of the United Nations, which would absolve States of all responsibility with respect to human rights. The USSR also remarked that the importance of the right to development could not be appreciated by countries whose position in the world was founded on colonial exploitation, and that countries emerging from colonial status could not hope to implement the 1966 International Covenants (see below), unless their enjoyment of that right was ensured.

National institutions for human rights protection

As requested by the General Assembly in December 1983,<sup>(9)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(10)</sup> summarizing replies to his request for additional information on the various types of national and local institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights. As at 1 November 1984, replies were received from 12 Governments. The Secretary-General stated that the new information tended to reinforce the basic approach of his 1983 report.<sup>(11)</sup>

Commission on Human Rights

Organization of work for the 1984 session

On 7 February 1984,<sup>(12)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights set up informal open-ended working groups to consider the following agenda items: torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (see above, under "Civil and political rights"); further promotion and encouragement of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the programme and methods of work of the Commission (see above); the question of a convention on the rights of the child (see below, under "Other human rights questions"); and the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities (see above, under "Discrimination"). In keeping with its March 1983 decision arising from the recommendations of a 10-member working group on the rationalization of its 1984 agenda,<sup>(13)</sup> the Commission decided that the item on human rights and scientific and technological developments, to be considered every two years beginning in 1984, would be dealt with by the working group on the advancement of human rights.

The Commission invited special rapporteurs, experts, special representatives and other officials to participate in meetings on certain topics with which they were specifically concerned, including the Sub-Commission Chairman during consideration of the 1983 Sub-Commission report. A similar invitation was extended on 16 March 1984 in connection with the 1984 report.<sup>(14)</sup>

Also on 16 March,<sup>(15)</sup> the Commission—taking account of its heavy work schedule and that of its sessional working groups, and of the need to consider adequately all the items on its agenda—adopted a decision which served as a basis for the Economic and Social Council decision below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May adopted decision 1984/144.

Organization of the work of the Commission on Human Rights

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights decision 1984/113 of 16 March 1984, decided to authorize, if possible within the existing financial resources, twenty fully-serviced additional meetings, including summary records, for the Commission's forty-first session. The Council took note of the Commission's decision to request its Chairman at the forty-first session to make every effort to organize the work of the session within the normal allotted time, the additional meetings authorized by the Council to be utilized only if such meetings prove to be absolutely necessary.

On 16 March, the Commission adopted the draft report on the work of its fortieth (February/March 1984) session, as amended in the course of its consideration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May adopted decision 1984/147 without vote.

Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

Work organization and programme

As recommended by the Sub-Commission in September 1983,<sup>(17)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, by a vote of 34 to 1, with 4 abstentions, taken on 15 March 1984,<sup>(18)</sup> took note of a Sub-Commission decision to establish in 1984 a working group to study in depth the Sub-Commission's working methods and programme of work, including its relationship with the Commission and the United Nations Secretariat. The Commission invited an exchange of views between a spokesman of the group and the Commission in 1985, which would be reported on to the Sub-Commission later that year for its consideration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May 1984 adopted decision 1984/139.

Review of the work of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/60 of 15 March 1984, noted the decision of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to establish at its thirty-seventh session a working group to study in depth the working methods and the programme of work of the Sub-Commission, including its relationship with the Commission and the Secretariat, and endorsed the Commission's invitation for an exchange of views between a spokesman for that working group and the Commission or a working group of the Commission during the forty-first session of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/139

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) by vote (49-1), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on the Review of the Work of the Sub-Commission met at Geneva during the August 1984 session of the Sub-Commission, with Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt) as Chairman/Rapporteur. The Group considered a wide range of complex issues relating to the name and terms of reference of the Sub-Commission, its role and functions, its relationship with the Commission on Human Rights, the programming of its studies and other tasks, and the rationalization of its procedures and methods. Among the Group's conclusions and recommendations were a series of core items for the Sub-Commission's agenda and a five-year plan of studies, for 1985-1989, constituting annexes I and II, respectively, of the Group's report.<sup>(19)</sup> The Group also recommended a procedure for the preparation of the Sub-Commission's studies, additional meetings for its session, a strengthening of the Centre for Human Rights, and an extension of the Group's mandate—all of which were embodied in the Sub-Commission's resolution below.

The regular items recommended for inclusion in the Sub-Commission's agenda for 1985-1989 were:

a review of further developments in areas with which the Sub-Commission had been concerned; racial discrimination, including updating annual studies on its adverse consequences; communications concerning human rights violations (see below); administration of justice and human rights of detained persons, including an annual review of developments in those rights; discrimination against indigenous populations; slavery and slavery-like practices; encouragement of universal acceptance of human rights instruments; future work and draft provisional agenda; and the possibility of examining certain items once every two years.

Sub-Commission action. Having considered the Working Group's report, the Sub-Commission, by 10 votes to 3, with 6 abstentions, on 31 August,<sup>(20)</sup> expressed appreciation to the Group and its Chairman/Rapporteur and endorsed their recommendations, including the long-term plan of studies and the core items to be kept on the Sub-Commission's agenda for 1985-1989. It asked the Secretary-General to inform the Commission on Human Rights of the Group's activities and decided that the Group should continue its deliberations during the Sub-Commission's 1985 session.

Besides deciding to begin its future meetings on time, the Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission consider: renaming the Sub-Commission as the Sub-Commission of Experts of the Commission on Human Rights; electing the members for a four-year term, with half of them elected every two years; authorizing 10 additional meetings per session to allow the Sub-Commission properly to execute its increasing workload and the sessional working groups to meet concurrently; and strengthening the Centre for Human Rights to enable it to provide further services to the Sub-Commission and implement its five-year plan of work. The Sub-Commission also recommended that studies undertaken under its auspices be prepared within a three-year cycle, the first year to be devoted to a concise report outlining the proposed approach, the second to a concise progress report that would also raise special questions, and the third to the final report. It was to be understood that a study, once authorized by the Council, would proceed through each of these stages without further approval by the Council, Commission or Sub-Commission.

of 16 March 1984, endorsed the Commission's invitation to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to be present, through its Chairman or another member it may designate, at the consideration of its report during the forty-first session of the Commission.

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Calendar of meetings for 1985

On 31 August 1984,<sup>(21)</sup> the Sub-Commission adopted a schedule of meetings in 1985 for its working groups on communications, on slavery and on indigenous populations, as well as the dates for its own session. It determined the composition of those groups on the same date.<sup>(22)</sup>

Proposed UN High Commissioner for Human Rights

The question of the establishment of a post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, first proposed in 1965 by Costa Rica,<sup>(23)</sup> was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights in 1984. Two proposals on the subject were before it. One, sponsored by Colombia, Costa Rica and Peru, recommended establishment of the post and set forth its functions and responsibilities and administrative arrangements.<sup>(24)</sup> Amendments to the text were proposed by Cuba<sup>(25)</sup> and by the German Democratic Republic.<sup>(26)</sup> The other proposal, sponsored by Brazil, recommended establishment in 1985 of an open-ended working group of the Commission to continue to consider the question.<sup>(27)</sup>

Following a motion by Yugoslavia, the Commission on 15 March 1984<sup>(28)</sup> adjourned the debate on the draft resolutions until its 1985 session.

International human rights instruments

On 7 August 1984, the Sub-Commission, acting in pursuance of a 1979 resolution,<sup>(29)</sup> established a five-member sessional Working Group on the encouragement of universal acceptance of human rights instruments—such as the 1966 International Covenants on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and on Civil and Political Rights and the latter's Optional Protocol,<sup>(30)</sup> the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,<sup>(31)</sup> the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,<sup>(32)</sup> the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,<sup>(33)</sup> the 1926 Slavery Convention and the 1953 Protocol amending it,<sup>(34)</sup> the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery,<sup>(35)</sup> the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others,<sup>(36)</sup> and the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.<sup>(37)</sup>

Meeting at Geneva on 15, 22, 23 and 27 August 1984,<sup>(38)</sup> the Group conducted a country-by-country examination of information received from Belgium, Bolivia, Cyprus, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands; and additional information from Belgium, El Salvador and Guatemala, as summarized in two notes by the Secretary-General, both of 28 June.<sup>(39)</sup> In the course of its discussions, the Group heard statements by the observer from Senegal, and by representatives of ILO and seven NGOs.

Based on its findings, the Group made recommendations that served as the basis for the Sub-Commission action below.

Sub-Commission action. Taking note of the Working Group's report, the Sub-Commission, by 18 votes to 1, with 1 abstention, on 30 August 1984,<sup>(40)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to renew his invitation to Governments to adhere to international human rights instruments, to invite Guatemala to clarify the nature of the legal problems it had encountered with respect to the 1949 Convention on prostitution and supply information on steps taken to overcome them, to examine the idea of offering technical assistance in the drafting of legislation to enable States to ratify or accede to human rights instruments, to hold informal discussions on ratification prospects during such occasions as the General Assembly sessions, to examine the idea of designating regional advisers on international human rights standards who would also advise on acceptance and implementation of such instruments, and to prepare a table containing a country-by-country record of developments in connection with the ratification of, or accession to, the instruments.

The Sub-Commission decided to include the two Protocols additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions in the list of human rights instruments whose universal acceptance was to be encouraged. It suspended the work of the Working Group and requested the Sub-Commission Chairman to appoint one of its members to report to it in 1985 on information received under the present resolution.

International covenants on human rights

In January 1984, the Secretary-General reported<sup>(41)</sup> to the Commission on Human Rights on the status of the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights<sup>(30)</sup> and gave a synopsis of United Nations action taken in that context. Annexed to the report were lists of States which had signed, ratified or acceded to the Covenants, as well as to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/136 on 14 December 1984.

Reporting obligations of States parties

In September 1984, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a report of a meeting of the Chairmen of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Committee, the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination,<sup>(42)</sup> convened pursuant to a December 1983 Assembly request.<sup>(43)</sup> The meeting, which took place at Geneva on 16 and 17 August 1984, considered the 1983 report of the Secretary-General<sup>(44)</sup> on the reporting obligations of States parties to the 1965 Convention against racial discrimination<sup>(31)</sup> and the 1966 International Covenants.<sup>(30)</sup>

The Chairmen identified as the most serious problems in the functioning of the reporting procedures the failure of some States parties to submit reports at all, delays in submitting them, the varying quality of those submitted, the burden placed on States parties by several coexisting reporting systems, the lack of qualified staff to prepare reports, and the need to enhance implementation of the provisions of international conventions.

Reviewing suggestions put forward to resolve those problems, the Chairmen focused on such measures as the exchange of information among the various organs entrusted with considering reports, to enhance which they suggested consolidating in one reference document guidelines and rules of procedure and consolidating in another their observations and decisions, a table showing reports submitted and outstanding, and consolidated tables on the status of ratification of the instruments. Reporting guidelines, apart from being co-ordinated, should include a standard format for obtaining the profile (geographical and demographic characteristics, basic economic and social conditions, constitutional structure, basic legislation dealing with the rights under the 1966 Covenants) of a reporting State party. A programme of advisory services should be developed, to include regional courses, seminars and fellowships for the development of reporting skills, and regional experts who could be dispatched on short advisory missions as required.

The Chairmen were of the unanimous view that their meeting had proved valuable and felt that such a meeting should be held regularly, possibly annually or biennially and perhaps to include the Chairman of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. They also suggested that the Secretary-General could raise the question of ratifications when he met heads of State, Foreign Ministers or other high-level officials during Assembly sessions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/138 on 14 December 1984.

Reporting obligations of States parties to United Nations conventions on human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/44 of 3 December 1982 and 38/117 of 16 December 1983,

Considering that the General Assembly, as the principal organ of the United Nations entitled to adopt conventions on human rights, is in the position to take an overview of their implementation as an integrated system of substantive provisions and reporting obligations of States parties to the various conventions,

Conscious that the fulfilment of reporting obligations constitutes an essential element of co-operation by States parties in contributing to the assessment of their compliance with their obligations,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on the reporting obligations of States parties under various United Nations conventions on human rights,

Having considered the report of the meeting of the Chairmen of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Committee, the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination held at Geneva on 16 and 17 August 1984,

Concerned about the problems experienced by the above-mentioned bodies in the functioning of the reporting procedures, including the burden which several co-existing reporting systems place upon States parties to the conventions on human rights,

Convinced, therefore, of the need to improve the existing reporting systems in order to resolve the problems experienced both by the bodies entrusted with the consideration of the periodic reports of the States parties and by the States parties to the conventions on human rights,

1. Reiterates the importance it attaches to the obligations established under international conventions, including their respective reporting systems;

2. Takes note with interest of the report of the meeting of the Chairmen of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Committee, the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, which contains suggestions made by the Chairmen with regard to exchange of information among their respective bodies, co-ordination of guidelines for the submission of the reports of States parties, advisory services and assistance for States parties to the various conventions on human rights, and other matters;

3. Expresses the view that the presence at the above-mentioned meeting of the Chairmen of all bodies concerned with reporting obligations of States parties to United Nations conventions on human rights would have further contributed to the review of problems experienced in the functioning of reporting procedures;

4. Acknowledges that common problems have arisen in the functioning of the reporting procedures, thus indicating the necessity of considering them within the overall framework of reporting obligations of States parties under the various conventions on human rights;

5. Decides to keep under consideration the problems that have arisen from the coexistence of several different reporting systems, in particular the proliferation of reporting obligations under the various instruments, as well as the serious delays which have occurred in the submission of reports;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, to that effect, to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report containing:

(a) Updated information on the general situation of the submission of reports of States parties to all conventions which are already in force, thus enabling the General Assembly to take an overview of the fulfilment of all reporting obligations and to consider how to achieve an improvement, particularly in the interest of States parties with limited technical and administrative resources;

(b) A consolidated text of the guidelines of the various bodies entrusted with the consideration of the reports of States parties on the implementation of all United Nations conventions on human rights;

7. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to consider, in the context of its standing item concerning advisory services in the field of human rights, the suggestions made by the Chairmen;

8. Decides to consider the question of reporting obligations of States parties to United Nations conventions on human rights in the light of the report of the Secretary-General to be submitted in accordance with paragraph 6 above and to consider also the eventual convening of another meeting of the Chairmen of the bodies entrusted with the consideration of the reports of States parties;

9. Invites the bodies concerned to give particular attention to the present resolution when they next meet;

10. Decides to consider the question at its fortieth session, in the light of the report of the Secretary-General to be submitted in accordance with paragraph 6 above.

Other measures to advance human rights

Advisory services

In 1984, under the United Nations programme of advisory services in human rights, experts provided advisory services to Bolivia and Uganda (see below).

The Secretary-General reported<sup>(45)</sup> that, out of 73 governmental nominations received during the year, recommendations were made to award 30 individual human rights fellowships from 27 countries. He also reported that no training course was organized under the programme.

On 13 March 1984,<sup>(46)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, having considered the Secretary-General's report on the 1983 activities under the programme,<sup>(47)</sup> expressed appreciation for his efforts to provide advisory assistance to Governments requesting it, asked him to continue to do so and further asked that, in his next report, he outline suggestions for a long-term programme of advisory services.

Bolivia

In keeping with a March 1983 request of the Commission on Human Rights to provide advisory services and other forms of human rights assistance as might be requested by the constitutional Government of Bolivia, as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in May of that year,<sup>(48)</sup> the Secretary-General had invited Héctor Gros Espiell (Uruguay), the Special Envoy who had conducted a study of the human rights situation in Bolivia, to ascertain the assistance to be offered and that country's views on the matter. The Special Envoy did so by visiting Bolivia from 8 to 13 December 1983.

In his report to the Commission, transmitted by a January 1984 Secretariat note,<sup>(49)</sup> the Special Envoy recommended that the Secretary-General offer, through the United Nations Centre for Human Rights, assistance in the preparation of a programme of teaching human rights at the primary, secondary and higher levels of education. A seminar on the propagation and analysis of human rights in Bolivia was to form the starting point for the general reorganization of education in the country, for which the co-operation of UNESCO and of non-governmental academic or scientific institutions was to be sought. Other areas recommended for advisory and other assistance related to the country's economic and social conditions adversely affecting the effective enjoyment of human rights. Such areas included planning prison reform, presenting Bolivia's case for assistance to the international community in the best possible way, and assessing the extent of extreme poverty in the country and its implications for economic planning and social policies.

The report noted that efforts to obtain international assistance had been set in motion by two round-table meetings sponsored by Bolivia and the Secretary-General, one held at La Paz from 20 to 22 April 1983 and another on 2 April 1984.

On 13 March,<sup>(50)</sup> the Commission commended the Secretary-General for his initiative in studying an adequate way of providing United Nations assistance to Bolivia, expressed gratitude to the Special Envoy for effectively fulfilling his mandate and endorsed his recommendations for strengthening implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country. The Commission recommended a draft text which served as the basis for the Economic and Social Council resolution below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1984, the Economic and Social Council, acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1984/32.

Advisory services in the field of human rights: assistance to the Government of Bolivia

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/43 of 13 March 1984,

Bearing in mind the request by the Government of Bolivia for assistance in strengthening human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights and in consultation with the Government of Bolivia, to examine ways and means and possible resources for rapid implementation of the projects suggested by the Special Envoy of the Commission on Human Rights in his report on assistance to Bolivia, considered by the Commission on Human Rights at its fortieth session;

2. Invites all Member States, United Nations organizations and humanitarian and non-governmental organizations to provide support and assistance to the Government of Bolivia in its efforts to strengthen the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country;

4. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to consider this question at its forty-first session, in the light of the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Equatorial Guinea

In 1984, the United Nations reiterated its offer to assist Equatorial Guinea to restore human rights in the country, in accordance with a plan of action prepared by the Secretary-General in 1981 based on the recommendations of a United Nations expert.<sup>(51)</sup> As requested by the Economic and Social Council in May 1983,<sup>(52)</sup> the Secretary-General reported<sup>(53)</sup> to the February/March 1984 session of the Commission on Human Rights that he had received no response to his request for information from Equatorial Guinea on measures it envisaged and assistance it required from the United Nations for further implementation of the plan of action. In the circumstances, no further action had been taken.

Taking note of the Secretary-General's report on 14 March,<sup>(54)</sup> the Commission recommended a draft text which served as the basis for the Council resolution below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

A letter of 15 April 1984 from Equatorial Guinea<sup>(55)</sup> was among the documents considered by the Economic and Social Council in the context of the situation of human rights in that country. The letter requested the circulation of a note verbale of 28 February from the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation, expressing gratitude for United Nations efforts on behalf of Equatorial Guinea and outlining the steps taken to restore human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular the right of the population to participate in the management of the country's public affairs. These included approval of basic decree-laws for the country's judicial system and administration at the village, town and national levels, and elections and appointments to the corresponding administrative bodies. The Minister urged the international community to provide increased assistance, especially through the United Nations, to hasten the country's economic recovery and to support training programmes in education, health, public administration, international relations and communications.

On 24 May, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1984/36.

Situation of human rights in Equatorial Guinea

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/36 of 7 May 1982 and 1983/35 of 27 May 1983,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/51 of 14 March 1984,

Considering that there has been no major change in the situation of human rights in Equatorial Guinea since the events of 3 August 1979,

Noting that it has not been possible to implement all the recommendations contained in its resolution 1983/35,

1. Urges the Government of Equatorial Guinea to co-operate with the Secretary-General in order to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint an expert to visit Equatorial Guinea in order to study, in conjunction with the Government of that country, the best way of implementing the plan of action proposed by the United Nations;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to keep this matter under consideration at its forty-first session.

Meeting 20

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Other action. In accordance with the Council's May request (see above), the Secretary-General designated Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica), who went on a mission to Equatorial Guinea between 13 and 20 November, where he held consultations with government officials. His report was to be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights in 1985.

Uganda

Pursuant to a March 1983 request of the Commission on Human Rights,<sup>(56)</sup> the Secretary-General reported<sup>(57)</sup> to it in 1984 on his continuing negotiations with Uganda to ascertain the most appropriate methods of providing it with human rights assistance. He stated that he had advised Uganda of the positive response of UNDP and UNESCO to that country's interest in obtaining assistance to restore the law library for its High Court and Ministry of Justice, to secure the services of an expert to revise the country's laws and to train prison officers.

The Secretary-General also transmitted information received, as of 31 December 1983, in reply to his notes verbales inviting support for Uganda's efforts to continue guaranteeing the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The information came from eight Governments, five United Nations bodies, three specialized agencies and five NGOs.

On 13 March 1984,<sup>(58)</sup> the Commission, having considered the report of the Secretary-General, requested him to remain in contact with Uganda and, while providing it with all possible assistance within the framework of the advisory services programme, to identify and bring to its attention external sources from which it could draw assistance. The Commission invited States, United Nations bodies and agencies, as well as humanitarian and non-governmental organizations, to lend their support to Uganda, and commended those which had provided such support.

Technical assistance to strengthen legal institutions

On 29 August 1984,<sup>(59)</sup> the Sub-Commission, convinced that the strengthening of legal institutions was a prerequisite for promoting human rights, asked the Secretary-General to invite Governments receiving UNDP aid to indicate their needs with respect to: establishment or strengthening of law faculties, development of adequate law libraries, training of judges, drafting of legal texts in conformity with provisions of international instruments on human rights, publication of official law journals, and collection and classification of legal material, including legislation and digests of court decisions.

The information requested was to be followed up by UNDP resident representatives, each with the Government of his duty station. The Secretary-General was to request Governments, United Nations specialized agencies and regional organizations dispensing official development assistance to indicate the extent to which they were providing or were willing to provide assistance in the areas mentioned. He was also to submit to the Sub-Commission in 1985 a report based on the information received, with a copy to the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges, lawyers, jurors and assessors (see above, under "Civil and political rights").

Responsibility to promote and protect human rights

Draft declaration

On 16 March 1984,<sup>(60)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, recalling its decision of March 1983<sup>(56)</sup> to undertake work in 1985 on a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms, decided to establish an open-ended working group to draft such a declaration. The group would be allocated appropriate time to meet during the Commission's 1985 session.

Draft body of principles and guidelines

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1984, following approval of a Commission on Human Rights recommendation of 15 March<sup>(61)</sup> by the Second Committee of the Economic and Social Council, the Council adopted without vote resolution 1984/38.

Draft body of principles and guidelines on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/31 of 8 March 1983 and resolution 1982/24 of 8 September 1982 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, by which the Sub-Commission, inter alia, requested Mrs. Erica-Irene A. Daes to prepare draft principles on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Mindful of Sub-Commission resolution 1983/40 of 7 September 1983 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/56 of 15 March 1984,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Special Rapporteur, Mrs. Erica-Irene A. Daes, for the work she has thus far accomplished in connection with the important elaboration of a study on draft principles on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms,

1. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue her work on the above-mentioned study with a view to submitting, if possible, her final report to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its thirty-seventh session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the relevant questionnaire, which will be prepared by the Special Rapporteur on the basis of the above-mentioned resolutions, and the comments made by the members of the Sub-Commission to Governments, specialized agencies, regional organizations, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations for their comments and replies;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance she may require in her work.

Meeting 20

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Sub-Commission action. In response to the Council's request (see above) for a final report on the study to the Sub-Commission, possibly in 1984, Special Rapporteur Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece) submitted a preliminary report,<sup>(62)</sup> indicating that, as of 12 July, replies to the questionnaire on the study had been received from seven Governments, nine specialized agencies, three intergovernmental regional organizations and 20 NGOs. In view of the lack of a sufficient number of substantive replies from Governments, the Special Rapporteur considered it appropriate to postpone further elaboration of the study and body of principles until 1985; to finalize them, she indicated that she would also draw material from relevant studies, reports and resolutions of the United Nations system and consult other sources, including publications of recognized scholars and scientists.

On 28 August,<sup>(63)</sup> the Sub-Commission, expressing appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for the work she had so far accomplished, requested her to continue elaborating the study and draft body of principles. The Secretary-General was asked, in addition to giving her all the assistance required to carry out her work, to transmit a reminder to Governments and all others concerned to provide her with their views on the matter.

Regional arrangements

As requested by the General Assembly in December 1983,<sup>(64)</sup> the Secretary-General reported in October 1984<sup>(65)</sup> on replies to his invitation for comments concerning information exchanges between the United Nations and the regional organizations for the promotion and protection of human rights and on ways and means of furthering such exchanges. The report reproduced the replies received as at 13 September from three specialized agencies, two regional commissions and two regional intergovernmental organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/115 on 14 December 1984.

Regional arrangements for the protection of human rights

Public information activities

In a January 1984 report to the Commission on Human Rights,<sup>(69)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that public information activities in human rights, carried out by the United Nations system world-wide, included press, radio, television and photographic coverage of interviews, meetings and debates on human rights issues in various forums. Human rights topics were given extensive coverage in the Organization's major publications, and texts of international human rights instruments were disseminated in languages other than the official United Nations languages. Seminars, briefings and round-table conferences were held, and promotional brochures, pamphlets and posters distributed. The Secretary-General also outlined a series of future activities.

On 15 March,<sup>(70)</sup> the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report and proposals. It invited comments on those proposals and requested Governments to facilitate publicity of United Nations human rights activities. It requested the Secretary-General to take measures to enhance and further develop the promotional and public information activities of the Centre for Human Rights, and to continue to keep the Commission informed of United Nations promotional activities, including the programme for disseminating international human rights instruments.

On 9 August, the Sub-Commission set in motion a study on the implications for human rights of recent advances in computer and micro-computer technology, with particular attention to the potential use of such technology for disseminating international human rights instruments and other information (see below, under "Other human rights questions").

In resolution 39/98 B, the General Assembly underlined the importance of efforts made to implement the principles set forth in the 1978 UNESCO Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racism, Apartheid and Incitement to War.

Human rights violations

Situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined in 1984 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by special bodies and officials appointed to examine some of those situations.

In addition, situations of alleged human rights violations involving the self-determination of peoples (see above, under "Civil and political rights") were discussed with regard to Afghanistan, Grenada, Kampuchea, South Africa and Namibia, Western Sahara and the Palestinian people. The Commission also dealt with the human rights situation in Bolivia, Equatorial Guinea and Uganda, to which the United Nations provided advisory services (see above, under "Advancement of human rights").

Under a procedure established in 1970 by the Council to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights,<sup>(1)</sup> the Commission held closed meetings in 1984 to study confidential documents, observations thereon submitted by Governments concerned and a confidential report by a working group set up in 1983<sup>(2)</sup> to examine the material. As announced by its Chairman on 6 March 1984, the Commission had taken confidential action with regard to Albania, Argentina, Benin, Haiti, Indonesia (East Timor), Malaysia, Pakistan, Paraguay, the Philippines, Turkey and Uruguay. By a decision adopted at a closed meeting on 6 March, and agreed to be made public the same day,<sup>(3)</sup> the Commission set up a similar working group for 1985, subject to Council approval.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May 1984 adopted decision 1984/145.

General decision concerning the establishment of a working group of the Commission on Human Rights to examine situations referred to the Commission under Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) and those situations of which the Commission is seized

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council approved the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, in its decision 1984/114 of 6 March 1984, to set up a working group composed of five of its members to meet for one week prior to the forty-first session to examine such particular situations as might be referred to the Commission by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its thirty-seventh session under Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) and those situations of which the Commission is seized.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/145

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/145 on alternative approaches for improving the enjoyment of human rights, the General Assembly reiterated once again that the international community should continue to accord priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals, paying due attention also to other situations of human rights violations. It reaffirmed its responsibility for achieving international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and expressed its concern at serious and in particular mass and flagrant violations, wherever they occurred.

Africa

South Africa and Namibia

Working Group report. The six-member Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa, established in 1967 by the Commission on Human Rights,<sup>(4)</sup> met at Geneva from 3 to 13 January 1984 when it adopted a progress report on developments concerning policies and practices violating human rights in South Africa and Namibia.<sup>(5)</sup> The report was based on an analysis of published information, including relevant international instruments and United Nations resolutions, and of oral testimony and written communications provided by individuals and organizations during the Group's mission of inquiry to London from 23 to 27 May 1983.

The report noted that, in keeping with a February 1983 Commission request,<sup>(6)</sup> the United Nations Centre for Human Rights had addressed a letter to South Africa asking that the Group be allowed to conduct on-the-spot investigations of the living conditions and of the treatment of prisoners in South Africa and Namibia. South Africa had replied on 9 January 1984 that it was unable to extend such co-operation, in the light of what it called the Group's bias and of investigations frequently conducted by its own judicial and medical authorities and by ICRC.

The Group reported on a wide range of human rights violations resulting from apartheid and racial discrimination, including South Africa's "homelands" policy and forced removals of population; legislation providing for capital punishment, the killing of civilians by police "acting in the execution of their duties" and arbitrary searches, indefinite detention without trial and appeal, torture of detainees and political prisoners, and bannings; denial of the right to work and freedom of association; and infringements of trade union rights, the farm labour system and forced child labour. Legislation limiting the right to education and freedom of expression was described, as was opposition to such limitations by black students and white universities and by journalists. Instances of violations of the territorial integrity of States bordering South Africa by the South African armed forces were also reported.

The Group updated the list of persons deemed responsible for the crime of apartheid or for a serious human rights violation. It also summarized the substantive comments of States on the Group's 1981 study and draft statute of an international penal tribunal for the suppression and punishment of the crime of apartheid,<sup>(7)</sup> to be established under an additional protocol to the 1973 Convention against apartheid (see below).

The Group's conclusions and recommendations were to be submitted in a final report in 1985. That report would also contain an examination of the question of the criminal effects of apartheid amounting to a policy bordering on genocide.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

By a vote of 42 to none, with 1 abstention, taken on 28 February 1984,<sup>(8)</sup> the Commission expressed appreciation for the progress report of the Working Group. It also expressed abhorrence of the system of apartheid and indignation at the scale and variety of human rights violations in South Africa, in particular the increased number of sentences and executions, the torture of political activists during interrogation, the ill-treatment of captured freedom fighters and other detainees, the deaths of detainees under suspicious circumstances, forced population removals and the increase in prosecutions under the Bantu "homelands" policy laws. The Commission called for the release of all political prisoners and again requested South Africa to allow an on-the-spot investigation by the Group of the living conditions and treatment of prisoners in the country.

The Commission condemned South Africa for its military attacks on neighbouring States, demanding their immediate cessation, and reaffirmed the unacceptability of any constitutional arrangement serving to perpetuate apartheid. In addition to requesting the Secretary-General to renew his invitation for States' comments on the Group's interim study on a proposed international penal tribunal for the punishment of the crime of apartheid, the Commission asked the Group to continue its study and bring to the Commission's attention in 1985 human rights violations in South Africa and Namibia. It decided to transmit the Group's findings on the violation of trade union rights to the Economic and Social Council for action.

Deeply disturbed by the gross violations of human rights in Namibia as reported by the Group, the Commission, by a vote of 39 to none, with 4 abstentions, taken also on 28 February,<sup>(9)</sup> reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence and to the rights enshrined in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other relevant international instruments. It condemned South Africa for its increasing oppression of the Namibians, including torture and ill-treatment of detainees and captured freedom fighters, and the massive militarization of the Territory. The Commission requested the Group to continue inquiries concerning any person who might have committed the crime of apartheid or a serious violation of human rights in Namibia, and renewed its request to South Africa to allow an on-the-spot investigation of prison conditions and treatment of prisoners in Namibia.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/129 by recorded vote.

Violations of human rights in southern Africa: report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/5 of 28 February 1984, took note of the findings on the violation of trade union rights in South Africa contained in the progress report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, and endorsed the Commission's request to the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to continue its study and to bring to the attention of the Commission at its forty-first session violations of human rights in South Africa and Namibia.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/129

52-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/SI) by vote (49-0-1), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Indonesia, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

The United States explained that it fully shared the concerns that inspired the decision and that it abstained solely on the basis of financial considerations.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August 1984,<sup>(10)</sup> the Sub-Commission, by 16 votes to none, with 2 abstentions, reaffirmed that apartheid was an international crime and repudiated all efforts towards its perpetuation by the illegitimate South African régime, including the so-called new constitution and elections held in August. The Sub-Commission condemned the mass arrests of political activists, workers and students before and after those elections. It demanded the cessation of the campaign of mass terror in South Africa and Namibia against those trying to exercise their civil and political rights. It further demanded the release of all political prisoners, including all persons subjected to banning, house arrest and banishment, and of those recently arrested for their opposition to the so-called elections. The Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to give this resolution the widest possible dissemination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/21 on the CERD report, the General Assembly strongly condemned the policy of apartheid in South Africa and Namibia as a crime against humanity and urged all Member States to adopt effective political, economic and other measures in conformity with United Nations resolutions in order inter alia to secure the elimination of the racist apartheid system.

Other action. On 20 August 1984, CERD (see above, under "Discrimination") strongly condemned the policy of apartheid, racial discrimination and the continuous violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms inflicted by the South African Government on the people of Namibia.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1984, there were 79 parties to the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.<sup>(11)</sup> In 1984, Maldives and Togo acceded to the Convention.

In his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General annexed a list of States that had signed, ratified or acceded to it as at 1 September.

Activities of the Group of Three. The Group of Three—established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions, and in 1984 composed of Bulgaria, Mexico and the Syrian Arab Republic—held its seventh session at Geneva from 30 January to 3 February 1984.<sup>(13)</sup>

At that session, the Group examined initial reports from El Salvador, the Philippines and Rwanda; second reports from Cape Verde, Egypt, Mongolia and Tunisia; third reports from the Byelorussian SSR and Qatar; and a fourth report from Hungary. The examination took place in the presence of representatives of the reporting States, except Cape Verde, Qatar and Tunisia. Submitted in 1984 but scheduled for consideration the following year were reports from Algeria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Madagascar, the USSR and Yugoslavia.

Also examined was the question of whether actions of transnational corporations (TNCs) operating in South Africa came under the definition of the crime of apartheid and whether legal action could be taken under the Convention. It was the Group's opinion that international criminal responsibility could apply, as provided for under article III of the Convention. It felt, however, that further examination was needed, in connection with which States' views on the matter would be highly useful.

The Group expressed appreciation to the representatives of the reporting States for their participation in its work, a practice which it considered constructive and should be continued. It called on States parties to submit their periodic reports, to adhere to the reporting guidelines and to provide more information under article IV on measures to suppress apartheid and on the prosecution of persons responsible for acts of apartheid as defined in article II, including difficulties encountered in taking such measures, and on implementation of article XI on the extradition of such persons in accordance with legislation and treaties in force, as well as on measures taken in teaching and education for the fuller implementation of the Convention.

The Group recommended to the Commission on Human Rights that States be urged to ratify or accede to the Convention, and that the United Nations and other international organizations be asked to intensify dissemination of information on problems of racial discrimination in general and apartheid in particular. It further recommended that the States parties be invited to express their views on the extent to which TNCs were responsible for the continued existence of the system of apartheid in South Africa and be asked to strengthen their co-operation in implementing United Nations resolutions on apartheid. It drew their attention to the desirability of disseminating more information about the Convention and the Group's work.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a vote of 32 to 1, with 10 abstentions, taken on 28 February 1984,<sup>(14)</sup> the Commission took note of the Group of Three's report and its recommendations, including those pertaining to the reporting obligations of States parties to the Convention against apartheid. The Commission drew attention to the Group's opinion on the applicability of article III of the Convention to TNC actions in South Africa and asked the Group to continue examining the question. It reiterated its request to the Secretary-General to invite States parties' views on the 1981 interim study of international machinery for punishment of the crime of apartheid<sup>(15)</sup> by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa (see above). The Commission requested the Secretary-General to provide the Group, which would meet for not more than five days prior to the 1985 Commission session, with all the necessary assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November 1984, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/19 by recorded vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3068(XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, by which it adopted and opened for signature and ratification the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and its subsequent resolutions on the status of the Convention,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, a gross violation of human rights and a crime against humanity, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Convinced that the implementation of the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination proclaimed by its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983 and of the Programme of Action adopted by the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination will contribute to the final eradication of apartheid and all other forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Strongly condemning South Africa's continued policy of apartheid and its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its repeated acts of aggression against sovereign African States, which constitute a manifest breach of international peace and security,

Condemning the continued collaboration of certain States and transnational corporations with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, economic, military and other fields as an encouragement to the intensification of its odious policy of apartheid,

Underlining that the strengthening of the existing mandatory arms embargo and the application of comprehensive mandatory economic sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter are vital in order to compel the racist régime of South Africa to abandon its policy of apartheid,

Firmly convinced that the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa against apartheid, racism and colonialism and for the effective implementation of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence demands more than ever all necessary support by the international community and, in particular, further action by the Security Council,

Underlining that ratification of and accession to the Convention on a universal basis and the implementation of its provisions without any delay are necessary for its effectiveness and would be a useful contribution towards achieving the complete elimination of apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

2. Commends those States parties to the Convention that have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;

3. Appeals once again to those States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay, in particular those States which have jurisdiction over transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia;

4. Expresses its appreciation of the constructive role played by the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights, established in accordance with article IX of the Convention, in analysing the periodic reports of States and in publicizing the experience gained in the international struggle against the crime of apartheid;

5. Calls upon all States parties to the Convention to adopt legislative, judicial and administrative measures to prosecute, bring to trial and punish, in accordance with their jurisdiction, persons responsible for, or accused of, the acts enumerated in article II of the Convention;

6. Further calls upon States parties to the Convention to submit their opinions on the extent and the nature of the responsibility of transnational corporations for the continued existence of the system of apartheid in South Africa and on the application of article III of the Convention to the activities of those corporations;

7. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to intensify, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, its efforts to compile periodically the progressive list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the Convention, as well as those against whom or which legal proceedings have been undertaken;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to distribute the above-mentioned list among all States parties to the Convention and all Member States and to bring such facts to the attention of the public by all means of mass communication;

9. Appeals to all States, United Nations organs, specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities in enhancing public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the racist régime of South Africa;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

General Assembly resolution 39/19

23 November 1984 Meeting 71 121-1-23 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/658) by recorded vote (110-1-23), 8 November (meeting 34); 21-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.5); agenda item 88 (c).

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Bulgaria, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Nigeria, Rwanda, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Zambia.

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 4-15, 27, 34, 35; plenary 71.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Austria said it could not endorse measures prejudicial to the rights of the individual. Canada recalled that it had neither signed nor ratified the Convention. Ireland, speaking on behalf of the EEC members, referred to reservations they had expressed on the Convention, which they considered defective on a number of legal grounds; those reservations, however, related not to the Convention's objectives but only to the methods envisaged for achieving them. Ireland added that any step taken in pursuance of the Convention applied only to the States parties. Japan considered certain Convention provisions to be too ambiguous. Portugal explained that, while it supported the resolution's aim, its abstention stemmed from its inability to become party to the Convention because some of its provisions were at variance with Portugal's Constitution.

Uruguay said it supported the elimination of racial discrimination, but it had serious legal difficulties in ratifying the Convention. It also had reservations concerning: the jurisdiction of States parties in respect of acts committed outside their territories by persons not their nationals; the vagueness of the definition of the crime of apartheid; and the granting of powers, for the purpose of applying the Convention, to a United Nations body such as the Commission on Human Rights, many of whose members had not acceded to the Convention. Chile's and Turkey's vote was to demonstrate their opposition to apartheid; however, Turkey said it was unable to support the text without reservation because the Convention presented substantial legal difficulties.

Democratic Kampuchea said the text perfectly expressed its views, paragraph 4 in particular.

Introducing the draft resolution, the German Democratic Republic said a country's position on the Convention was a decisive indicator of its stand in the struggle for the elimination of apartheid. The strengthening of the Convention was an important step in increasing the effectiveness of measures designed to eliminate the illegal apartheid régime, which could survive only with the continued collaboration of certain States and TNCs; that collaboration was treated by the text as the key issue in the fight against apartheid.

Foreign support of South Africa

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. Having noted a July 1983 report of Special Rapporteur Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt),<sup>(15)</sup> containing an updated list of banks, TNCs and other organizations assisting South Africa, the Commission on 28 February 1984, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 7, with 5 abstentions,<sup>(16)</sup> welcomed the August 1983 decision of its Sub-Commission<sup>(15)</sup> to mandate the Special Rapporteur to continue to update the list, subject to annual review, for submission to the Commission through its Sub-Commission. It again called on Governments to take legislative, administrative or other measures so as to put a stop to the activities of their nationals and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction operating enterprises in South Africa and Namibia, and to end all technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies, in particular in the nuclear field. It asked the specialized agencies, particularly the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, to refrain from granting any type of loans to the South African régime.

The Commission called on the States parties to the Convention against apartheid to express their views on TNC responsibility for the continued existence of the system of apartheid in South Africa.

In other actions, the Commission, also on 28 February, requested the Group of Three (see above) to continue its examination of whether TNC actions in South Africa came under the definition of the crime of apartheid and whether legal action could be taken under the Convention. On 29 February, in reaffirming the right of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia to self-determination (see above, under "Civil and political rights"), the Commission condemned: all collaboration with South Africa, particularly nuclear, military and economic, and demanded the cessation of such collaboration; the policies of Western and other countries whose relations with South Africa encouraged its régime to persist in suppressing peoples' aspirations to self-determination and independence; and the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>(17)</sup> with respect to colonial Territories, particularly Namibia.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/130 by recorded vote.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/6 of 28 February 1984, endorsed the Commission's decision to welcome the decision of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to mandate the Special Rapporteur, Mr. Ahmed Khalifa, to continue to update the list of banks, transnational corporations and other organizations assisting the colonial and racist régime in South Africa, subject to annual review, and to submit the revised report to the Commission, through the Sub-Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/130

39-7-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/SI) by vote (36-6-7), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, German Democratic Republic, Indonesia, Lebanon, Liberia, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Finland, Greece, Japan, New Zealand, Portugal, Sweden.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In fulfilment of his mandate, the Special Rapporteur presented to the Sub-Commission a revised report<sup>(18)</sup> containing a comprehensive, updated list of banks, TNCs and other organizations assisting the South African régime. The report was based on material received before 30 June.

Sub-Commission action. By a vote of 19 to none, with 1 abstention, taken on 28 August,<sup>(19)</sup> the Sub-Commission, having noted the revised report, invited the Special Rapporteur to continue updating the list, using all available material and in co-operation with the United Nations Centre on TNCs and the Centre against Apartheid. It welcomed the Commission's call on Governments to put an end to the activities of enterprises owned and operated by their nationals or by bodies corporate under their jurisdiction in South Africa and Namibia.

The Sub-Commission recommended a draft resolution, by which the Commission would call on Governments to give the updated report the widest publicity; invite the Secretary-General to do likewise and to issue the report as a United Nations publication; and request him to give all the assistance required by the Special Rapporteur, including adequate travel funds, with a view to establishing direct contacts with the Centres mentioned, to expand annotation of selected cases and to continue the computerization of future lists.

Communication. On 4 October 1984,<sup>(20)</sup> Argentina transmitted a 21 September note to the United Nations Centre for Human Rights in connection with the inclusion of Compañía Aerolíneas Argentinas in the Special Rapporteur's 1984 updated list. The note pointed out that the company had stopped operating air services between Argentina and South Africa at the beginning of 1981 and that such information had been brought to the Sub-Commission's attention in 1983. The note therefore requested deletion of the company's name from the list.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/15 by recorded vote on 23 November 1984.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3382(XXX) and 3383(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 33/23 of 29 November 1978, 35/32 of 14 November 1980 and 37/39 of 3 December 1982,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Mindful of its resolution 3171(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 relating to permanent sovereignty over natural resources of both developing countries and territories under colonial and foreign domination or subjected to the apartheid régime,

Recalling its resolutions on military collaboration with South Africa, as well as Security Council resolutions 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 and 421(1977) of 9 December 1977,

Taking into account, in particular, the relevant decisions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its nineteenth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 6 to 12 June 1983, and by the Council of Ministers of that organization at its fortieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 27 February to 5 March 1984,

Taking note of the updated report prepared by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonial régime in southern Africa,

Reaffirming that any collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa constitutes a hostile act against the oppressed peoples of southern Africa in their struggle for freedom and independence and a contemptuous defiance of the United Nations and of the international community,

Considering that such collaboration enables South Africa to acquire the means necessary to carry out acts of aggression and blackmail against independent African States,

Deeply concerned that the major Western and other trading partners of South Africa continue to collaborate with that racist régime and that their collaboration constitutes the main obstacle to the liquidation of that racist régime and the elimination of the inhuman and criminal system of apartheid,

Alarmed at the continued collaboration of certain Western States and Israel with the racist régime of South Africa in the nuclear field,

Regretting that the Security Council has not been in a position to take binding decisions to prevent any collaboration in the nuclear field with South Africa,

Affirming that the highest priority must be accorded to international action to secure the full implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations for the eradication of apartheid and the liberation of the peoples of southern Africa,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination, independence and the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories;

2. Again reaffirms the right of those same peoples to dispose of those resources for their greater well-being and to obtain just reparation for the exploitation, depletion, loss or depreciation of those natural resources, including reparation for the exploitation and abuse of their human resources;

3. Vigorously condemns the collaboration of certain Western States, Israel and other States, as well as the transnational corporations and other organizations which maintain or continue to increase their collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the political, economic, military and nuclear fields, thus encouraging that régime to persist in its inhuman and criminal policy of brutal oppression of the peoples of southern Africa and denial of their human rights;

4. Reaffirms once again that States and organizations which give assistance to the racist régime of South Africa become accomplices in the inhuman practices of racial discrimination, colonialism and apartheid perpetrated by that régime, as well as in the acts of aggression against the liberation movements and neighbouring States;

5. Requests the Security Council urgently to consider complete and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations against the racist régime of South Africa, in particular:

(a) The prohibition of all technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies in South Africa;

(b) The cessation of all collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field;

(c) The prohibition of all loans to, and all investments in, South Africa and the cessation of any trade with South Africa;

(d) An embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic goods to South Africa;

6. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to extend all possible co-operation to the liberation movements of southern Africa recognized by the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities for his updated report;

8. Reaffirms that the updating of the report on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the colonial and racist régime in southern Africa is of the greatest importance to the cause of fighting apartheid and other violations of human rights in South Africa and Namibia;

9. Invites the Special Rapporteur:

(a) To continue to update, subject to annual review, the list of banks, transnational corporations and other organizations assisting the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa, giving such details regarding enterprises listed as the Rapporteur may consider necessary and appropriate, including explanations of responses, if any, and to submit the updated report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

(b) To use all available material from other United Nations organs, Member States, national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as other relevant sources, in order to indicate the volume, nature and adverse human consequences of the assistance given to the racist régime of South Africa;

(c) To initiate direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, with a view to consolidating mutual co-operation in updating his report;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance, including adequate travel funds, that he may require in the exercise of his mandate, with a view in particular to establishing direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre against Apartheid, to expanding his work on the annotation of certain selected cases as reflected in the list contained in his report and to continuing the computerization of future updated lists;

11. Calls upon the Governments of the countries where the banks, transnational corporations and other organizations named and listed in the updated report are based to take effective action to put a stop to their trading, manufacturing and investing activities in the territory of South Africa as well as in the Territory of Namibia illegally occupied by the racist Pretoria régime;

12. Urgently requests all specialized agencies, particularly the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, to refrain from granting loans or financial assistance of any type to the racist régime of South Africa;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the updated report to the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Council for Namibia, other bodies concerned within the United Nations system and regional international organizations;

14. Invites the Secretary-General to give the updated report the widest dissemination, to issue it as a United Nations publication and to make it available to learned societies, research centres, universities, political and humanitarian organizations and other interested groups;

15. Calls upon all States, specialized agencies and regional, intergovernmental and other organizations concerned to give wide publicity to the updated report;

16. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to give high priority at its forty-first session to the consideration of the updated report;

17. Decides to consider at its forty-first session, as a matter of high priority, the item entitled "Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa", in the light of any recommendations which the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee against Apartheid may wish to submit to it.

23 November 1984 Meeting 71 120-10-14 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/654) by recorded vote (104-9-17), 8 November (meeting 34); draft by Ethiopia, for African Group (A/C.3/39/L.7); agenda item 84. Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/39/681; S-G, A/C.3/39/L.16, A/C.5/39/37. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 4-15, 27, 34, 35; 5th Committee 32; plenary 71.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, Malawi, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

Canada said the Special Rapporteur's report covered only Western organizations, was often inaccurate or out of date and strayed too far from the topic with which it was supposed to deal. Israel declared it inadmissible for the Special Rapporteur to give vent to his personal feelings concerning Jews and to cite their sacred texts without understanding them; it therefore considered it equally inadmissible to authorize the continuation and financing of his work.

Australia regarded some paragraphs of the resolution as not conducive to more effective international co-operation in the struggle against apartheid. Portugal mentioned reservations on the Special Rapporteur's report and on paragraphs 3 to 5, 10 and 14. Though categorically rejecting racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, Spain did not see trade with South Africa as an obstacle to the liquidation of apartheid; with respect to paragraph 3, it felt that totally isolating a country was not the best way of inducing it to respect human rights, and the accuracy of the statement in paragraph 4 had never been demonstrated, it said. Speaking for the EEC members, Ireland said the text contained elements they found difficult to accept; the Special Rapporteur's report was not a useful basis for debating the issue at hand and the guidance outlined for him in paragraph 9 did not correspond to the title of the agenda item under consideration.

Japan, in addition to sharing doubts about the report's usefulness and the methods used in its preparation, expressed reservations on paragraphs 10 and 14. Honduras referred to the resolution's negative elements, such as its selectiveness in the choice of examples.

On behalf of the Nordic countries, Sweden said they agreed with the main thrust of the resolution but felt that it departed from its objectives in several respects. They could not accept those paragraphs containing unjustified accusations against selected countries, nor could they support recommendations that did not respect the division of competence among the different United Nations organs, as provided for in the Charter. They also noted with great regret the continued tendency to employ controversial formulations.

Voicing reservations on some paragraphs regarded as not likely to facilitate achievement of the resolution's objective were Burma and Chile. Reservations were also expressed by the Dominican Republic. Uruguay considered paragraph 3 to be biased and it interpreted paragraph 5 as by no means affecting the exclusive competence of the Security Council with respect to the application of measures under Chapter VII of the Charter. Concerning paragraph 12, it stressed that any politicization of economic agencies must be avoided. Brazil, citing paragraphs 7 and 11, said the Special Rapporteur's report, which should be improved in general, contained inaccuracies in respect of Brazil. If the information on assistance to South Africa were updated, the report would be more useful, the Bahamas felt. Singapore believed it would have been better to refrain from selectively condemning the countries named in paragraph 3—a sentiment shared by Turkey.

For the Byelorussian SSR, the text clearly indicated that any co-operation with South Africa was tantamount to being an accomplice in that country's racial discrimination policy. Similarly, the USSR said that States which gave assistance to the racist South African régime became its accomplices.

Trade union rights

In 1984, the Economic and Social Council had before it three letters relating to allegations of infringements of trade union rights in South Africa, brought to the Council's attention in 1983.<sup>(15)</sup> Those allegations—made by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU) of the arrest of six

South African women trade unionists, and by the World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU) of the dismissal of 2,000 workers at the Kloof mines following a strike for improved living conditions for black miners—were to be transmitted to the Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association of ILO, as decided by the Council in May 1983.<sup>(21)</sup>

Later that year, ICFTU and WFTU, by letters of 19 July and 5 August, respectively, expressed their reservations as to the usefulness of pursuing the matter, with ICFTU withdrawing its complaint. In the light of those reservations, the ILO Director-General, on 24 October, suggested to the Secretary-General that the matter as it had developed should again be referred to the Council. Accordingly, the Secretary-General transmitted these three letters to the Council by a note of 23 February 1984.<sup>(22)</sup>

Also before the Council were the findings of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa on violations of trade union rights in South Africa (see above), transmitted by a Secretariat note of 4 May.<sup>(23)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted a decision and resolution on the topic. Decision 1984/150 was adopted without vote.

Note by the Secretary-General on allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, having considered the note by the Secretary-General on allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights, decided that the matter referred to the Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association of the International Labour Organisation through the Governing Body of the International Labour Office by its decision 1983/156 of 27 May 1983 should not be pursued.

Iran

Reports by the Secretary-General. In 1984, the human rights situation in Iran was again the subject of two reports from the Secretary-General, dated 22<sup>(24)</sup> and 29 February,<sup>(25)</sup> submitted in response to a Commission on Human Rights request of March 1983.<sup>(26)</sup> The earlier report, reproducing the communications of August 1983 with Iran<sup>(26)</sup> concerning continuance of the Secretary-General's direct contacts with that country to discuss alleged human rights violations there through a representative, indicated that although efforts had been made to follow up on those communications, Iran's position remained unchanged. That position was one of scepticism about the constructive consequences of any sincere fact-finding mission.

The later report presented information, without comment as to its veracity, on alleged violations, specifically of those rights enshrined in the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights:<sup>(27)</sup> the rights to life, to physical integrity and freedom from torture, to fair trial, and to freedom of conscience and opinion. The information was based on communications received by the United Nations from a wide variety of sources, inside and outside Iran. In conclusion, the report observed that, in the four years since the Sub-Commission was first seized of the situation of the Baha'i religious community in Iran,<sup>(28)</sup> there had been no clear evidence of improvement, Iran's being a party to the Covenant notwithstanding. Continuing allegations of human rights violations and the position taken by Iran pointed to the need for an appropriate means of fact-finding and for full co-operation between that country and the Commission.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 14 March 1984, by a roll-call vote of 21 to 6, with 15 abstentions,<sup>(29)</sup> the Commission expressed deep concern at the continuing serious violations of human rights in Iran as reflected in the Secretary-General's report,<sup>(25)</sup> particularly at the evidence of summary and arbitrary executions, torture, detention without trial, religious intolerance and persecution, in particular of the Baha'is, and the lack of an independent judiciary and other recognized safeguards for a fair trial. It again urged Iran, as a State party to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to respect and ensure to all individuals under its jurisdiction the rights recognized in that Covenant. The Commission requested its Chairman to appoint a special representative to establish contacts with Iran and to make a thorough study of the human rights situation there. It also requested Iran to extend its co-operation to the special representative, and the Secretary-General to give him the necessary assistance.

Also in March, the Commission called on Iran to cease using children in its armed forces (see below, under "Other human rights questions").

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May adopted decision 1984/138 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/54 of 14 March 1984, endorsed the Commission's decision to request its Chairman to appoint, after consultation within the Bureau, a special representative of the Commission, whose mandate will be to establish contacts with the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran and to make a thorough study of the human rights situation in that country based on such information as he may deem relevant, including comments and materials provided by the Government, containing conclusions and appropriate suggestions, to be submitted to the Commission at its forty-first session. The Council further endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the special representative of the Commission.

NGO statement: E/1984/NGO/5.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Austria, Botswana, Bulgaria, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Zaire.

Against: Algeria, Pakistan.

Abstaining: Benin, Brazil, China, Congo, Ecuador, German Democratic Republic, Japan, Liberia, Malaysia, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Tunisia, Yugoslavia.

Sub-Commission action. On 29 August 1984, by 14 votes to 1, with 6 abstentions,<sup>(30)</sup> the Sub-Commission expressed alarm at reports of continuing gross violations of human rights in Iran, in particular of political, ethnic and national groups including the Kurds and the Baha'i religious community. It welcomed the Commission's decision to appoint a special representative to study the human rights situation in that country and requested the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the Commission and its special representative information on grave violations received by the Sub-Commission and action taken.

Sri Lanka

On 30 January 1984, Sri Lanka provided information on the communal disturbances in the country<sup>(31)</sup> that had given rise to a September 1983 Sub-Commission decision requesting such information.<sup>(26)</sup> Describing the situation as an aberration within a tradition of intercommunal and interreligious harmony among various groups (mainly Sinhalese and Sri Lankan and Indian Tamils), Sri Lanka pointed to what it called a small dissatisfied group of Tamils as the source of the disturbances. The group—claiming active discrimination of the Tamil community with respect to economic opportunities, employment, education, land settlement, religious freedom and language—was agitating for a separate State to be called Eelam. To that end, it had set in motion a campaign in the country and abroad to justify terrorist activities in the north and to seek international support for its separatist movement.

To refute the group's claim, Sri Lanka cited constitutional legislation designed to protect civil and political rights, to provide legal relief in the event of their infringement, and to provide for both Sinhala and Tamil as national languages and for education in either of those languages. Examples of the practical application of such legislation for the benefit of all, even non-nationals, were also cited. Sri Lanka said that, in the face of a persistent campaign of terrorism, however, it was constrained to enact the Prevention of Terrorism Act to preserve the country's unity and territorial integrity. A political process was under way to deal with the issues that had led to the events of July 1983, including a conference of all political parties in January 1984. A dialogue with those parties and other groups was being maintained.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 14 March 1984,<sup>(32)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of the information voluntarily submitted by Sri Lanka, appealed to the parties to continue taking measures to maintain peace and restore harmony among the people of the country. It welcomed all measures for rehabilitation and reconciliation, including the all-party conference, expressed hope for the parties' success in achieving a lasting solution, and decided that further consideration of the matter was not necessary.

Sub-Commission action. By 11 votes to 3, with 6 abstentions, taken on 30 August,<sup>(33)</sup> the Sub-Commission, concerned about the recurrence of violence in Sri Lanka which had resulted in heavy loss of life and property, and recognizing that ultimate responsibility for the protection of all sections of the community lay with the Government, expressed hope that that Government would submit information to the Commission in 1985 on the progress of its investigation of the incidents and on the recent efforts to promote communal harmony.

Europe and the Mediterranean area

Cyprus

On 14 March 1984,<sup>(34)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights postponed debate on the question of human rights in Cyprus to its 1985 session, on the understanding that action required by previous Commission resolutions on the subject remained operative, including the request to the Secretary-General to report on their implementation.

Poland

In March 1984, Patricio Ruedas, United Nations Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management, designated by the Secretary-General during the latter part of 1983 to update and complete on his behalf a study of the human rights situation in Poland, submitted a report<sup>(35)</sup> to the Commission on Human Rights in accordance with its resolution of March 1983.<sup>(36)</sup> The report was based on events in 1983 and on information gathered by Mr. Ruedas during two visits to Poland: once in 1983 and again in 1984, from 18 to 21 February. Mr. Ruedas interviewed representatives of the Government, Parliament, the Patriotic Movement for National Rebirth, the Roman Catholic Church, trade unions constituted under a law of 8 October 1982,<sup>(37)</sup> and individuals interned under martial law and later released.

The report reproduced a letter of 20 September 1983 from Hugo J. Gobbi, previously designated to follow the human rights situation in the country, requesting Poland for information relating to that situation,  as a detailed questionnaire enclosed for the purpose. No reply was ever received, although the Secretary-General was later advised unofficially that Poland considered the questionnaire as not lending itself to a reply. Mr. Gobbi shortly thereafter asked to be relieved of his responsibilities following his acceptance of a government post in Argentina. The Secretary-General was thus unable to give effect to the Commission resolution on the subject.<sup>(36)</sup>

The report noted a number of legislative developments brought about by the lifting of martial law on 22 July 1983. Chief among these were the enactment of an amnesty law in respect of a number of offences committed before that date; amendments to the Constitution; special temporary regulations designed to stabilize the economy; amendments to the penal laws; and a new press law. Specific human rights violations dealt with included allegations of deaths resulting from police reaction to demonstrations, severe conditions of detention for a number of prisoners and detainees, and arrests. Inquiry was also made into the question of freedom of association and trade union rights.

In his conclusions, Mr. Ruedas stated that the resources and stamina of the people and Government of Poland were being taxed to the utmost by the difficult economic and social situation prevailing in the country since 1981. Under martial law, numerous arrests had been made and deaths had resulted from clashes between demonstrators and police: at least two in 1981, one in 1982 and two in 1983. That the figures were in dispute was not so important as that the deaths had occurred, for one single death was one too much. The lifting of martial law, the enactment and implementation of clemency measures and the amnesty law all had created conditions favourable to a reconciliation between the different sectors of the society. Of significance was the reduced number of detainees: 281 as at 18 February 1984, compared with some 1,500 at 4 January 1983.

Nevertheless, the recent legislation, though temporary, gave rise to certain questions. Thus, for example, an amendment to the penal code seemed to perpetuate a similar provision of the defunct martial law. Also, the special regulations to overcome the socio-economic crisis conferred extensive powers on the authorities in several domains, including education. However, Mr. Ruedas noted that, as to the possible exercise of those powers, he was impressed by the spirit of moderation shown by the government officials he had met, an impression that had led the Secretary-General to state that what he had heard in Poland was very encouraging on all fronts. It also seemed clear that Poland had fulfilled its stated intention to terminate the restrictive measures on the exercise of human rights in one very important aspect—the review of prison sentences—through the clemency measures and amnesty law that it had enacted and was implementing.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In March, a draft resolution sponsored by France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the Netherlands<sup>(38)</sup> was before the Commission on Human Rights for consideration. By the draft, the Commission would once again call for measures to enable the people of Poland to exercise fully their human rights and fundamental freedoms. On 14 March,<sup>(39)</sup> the Commission decided, by a roll-call vote of 17 to 14, with 12 abstentions, to postpone action on the draft to its 1985 session.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Chile

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In February 1984, Special Rapporteur Rajsoomer Lallah (Mauritius) reported to the Commission on Human Rights on developments in the human rights situation in Chile during the last four months of 1983.<sup>(40)</sup> Prepared in accordance with a Commission request of March of that year,<sup>(41)</sup> the report supplemented his interim report to the General Assembly in October.<sup>(42)</sup> The Special Rapporteur noted that Chile's lack of co-operation had made his task more difficult, especially since it had not provided the Secretary-General with subsequent information or comment.

The report stated that the rules of the 1980 Constitution had yet to be amended to allow exercise of the right to participate in the country's political life. To vindicate that right, "days of national protest" and other popular demonstrations had continued, leaving a trail of victims, injured, tortured and arrested. Under the continuing "state of danger due to threats of internal peace", extended for a further six months on 7 September 1983, the right of assembly remained subject to restrictions, as did freedom of information in respect of new publications other than those emanating from universities. Procedural guarantees continued to be seriously curtailed by the substantial extension of the jurisdiction of military courts, and limitations to the remedy of amparo applicable to persons subjected to executive action remained in force. As to violations of the right to life, the Government appeared to have no intention of shedding light on deaths resulting from demonstrations and had not allowed a commission of inquiry to be set up.

Torture continued to be a habitual practice. Judicial protection of the right to physical and moral integrity remained inadequate; however, an ad hoc military prosecutor was appointed on 21 October 1983 to investigate a number of allegations of torture, and, for the first time, a civil judge visited a secret place of detention where 11 students had reportedly been tortured. Arbitrary detentions and arrests substantially increased, numbering 4,306 in 1983, compared with 976 in 1982 and 871 in 1981. However, most of the arrests were reportedly made to discourage protest. While the Executive continued to hold power to prohibit entry into and to expel from the national territory, the Government, on 28 October 1983, published a consolidated list of 3,421 persons authorized to return to Chile. Restrictions to freedom of movement had been extended to apply to trade union leaders and shanty-town dwellers. Freedom of opinion in political matters remained subject to the "political recess" provided for in the Constitution's transitional provisions.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that prospects for the protection of human rights and freedoms continued to be bleak—a situation provoking widespread protest, in turn giving rise to systematic government countermeasures with increased adverse consequences for human rights. It was his considered view that the basic problem lay in the continued denial of the right to participate in the country's political life. To enforce this denial, a system of legislative, executive and administrative measures was being used, together with a restriction of all the other rights and freedoms that would give effect to that central right. This tightening of measures to nullify the positive consequences of the lifting of one of two states of emergency and the untimely breakdown of the political talks had brought into question the Government's avowed commitment to re-establish a democratic order in the near future.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that Chile be urged to co-operate with him and the Commission, immediately end the current state of emergency, completely restore the jurisdiction and independence of the judiciary, and take measures to ensure respect for the rights to life, liberty and security and for the freedom of thought, opinion and expression. Other recommendations called for a thorough investigation of disappearances; prevention of arrests and detentions by elements outside the police force; the banning of torture, secret detention sites and internal banishment; restoration of the right to work and to appropriate conditions of work; education for all and restoration of the autonomy of universities; and implementation of the rights of the indigenous population.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a letter of 16 February 1984,<sup>(43)</sup> the Special Rapporteur advised the Commission of his inability to participate in the consideration of his report. Annexed to the letter was a summary of the 1983 human rights situation in Chile to assist in those deliberations.

On 15 March,<sup>(44)</sup> the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 5, with 6 abstentions, commended the Special Rapporteur for his report. It expressed distress at the persistence and increase of serious and systematic human rights violations in Chile, in particular the violent suppression of popular protests. It also expressed alarm that the repressive activities of the police and security agencies had gone unpunished. It reiterated its dismay at the disruption of the traditional democratic legal order and its institutions through the maintenance of emergency legislation, the institutionalization of states of emergency, the extension of military jurisdiction, and a Constitution that not only failed to guarantee but also suppressed human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Commission called on the Chilean authorities to restore and respect human rights in accordance with the obligations they had assumed under various international instruments; to clarify the fate of persons arrested for political reasons and who later disappeared, and to bring to trial those responsible for such disappearance; and to respect the right of Chilean nationals to live in, freely enter and leave the country without restrictions. The Commission renewed its appeal for the restoration of the full exercise of trade union rights, in particular the right to collective bargaining and to strike. It again urged restoration of economic, social and cultural rights, in particular those intended to preserve the cultural identity and improve the social status of indigenous populations.

The Commission exhorted the Chilean authorities to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur and to submit their comments on his report to the Commission. It extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year, with a request that he report to the General Assembly in 1984 and to the Commission in 1985.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May 1984 adopted decision 1984/140 by recorded vote.

Question of human rights in Chile

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/63 of 15 March 1984, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile for another year and to request him to report on the situation of human rights in that country to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session and to the Commission at its forty-first session. The Council requested the Secretary-General to make appropriate arrangements to ensure that the necessary financial resources and sufficient staff are provided to implement the resolution of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/140

35-3-12 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) by recorded vote (33-3-10), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Canada, Congo, Costa Rica, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Luxembourg, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Against: Brazil, Pakistan, United States.

Abstaining: China, Colombia, Ecuador, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Malaysia, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Thailand, Zaire.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August,<sup>(45)</sup> the Sub-Commission called on the Chilean authorities to end all repression and torture, to identify and punish those responsible for such acts and for disappearances, and to respect civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights including those of indigenous peoples. It recommended that the Commission on Human Rights address an appeal to the same authorities to respect and promote human rights in conformity with international instruments to which Chile was a party and to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur.

Further report. As requested by the Commission in March (see above), the Special Rapporteur prepared a report on developments in the human rights situation in Chile during the first half of 1984 (January to June), taking into account subsequent data wherever possible, which the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly in November.<sup>(46)</sup> The report indicated that Chile, replying to the Special Rapporteur's request for co-operation, had reiterated its decision not to collaborate based on a position of principle that it had stated on many occasions. In the circumstances, he resorted to the method of work used for previous reports: consulting official publications in Chile, including administrative and legislative provisions, 1984 court decisions of major significance, material supplied by national and international governmental and non-governmental organizations, and information supplied by individuals; sifting the data, rejecting those deemed subjective; and assessing the situation in terms of the international human rights instruments ratified by Chile and other applicable norms.

The report noted that, during the period under review, violations increased, notably of the rights to life, to physical and psychological integrity, and to liberty and security. New legislation was enacted extending application of the death penalty. Some 93 persons were reportedly injured by security agencies and another 90 subjected to acts of torture. Some 1,655 arrests were recorded, of whom 168 were put on trial and the rest released. In Santiago alone, 165 acts of persecution and intimidation occurred. Judicial supervision over arbitrary and illegal arrests was ineffective, as were proceedings for the compensation for such arrests.

Further restrictions on the freedom of expression and information were introduced by legislation. The exercise of the right of public assembly, subject to prior authorization, was continually obstructed by repeated refusals to grant authorization; those authorized were subjected to disruption. The right of association remained prohibited by "political recess" instituted by a transitional provision of the Constitution banning all political party activities until 1989 or pending promulgation of a constitutional organic law. Thus, current associations with some humanitarian, political or trade-union objectives existed outside the law.

The right to enter and leave the country remained seriously restricted due largely to the Government's interpretation of the term "national security". Recent court decisions (30 January, 9 July) confirmed that the courts were powerless to consider substantive issues raised by expulsion or prohibition of entry.

While some 5,000 persons had been allowed to return to the country (between 1983 and May 1984), the national airlines received (10 September) a list of 4,860 persons to whom tickets should not be sold without police clearance. Restrictions of movement within the country were imposed on 29 persons, a decline from 45 in 1983; also, exceptionally, a remedy of amparo was granted to two university students (10 May) who had been under an internal banishment order.

From his detailed examination of the status of those and other human rights, the Special Rapporteur concluded that the situation had continued to deteriorate in 1984. The central issue continued to be maintenance of the current system of government in the face of widespread popular aspirations for the protection of those rights and freedoms and for the restoration of democratic order.

The Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations, most of which were embodied in the Assembly's resolution below.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/121 by recorded vote on 14 December 1984.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile

The General Assembly,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and determined to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Stressing the obligation of Governments to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities they have undertaken by virtue of various international instruments,

Recalling its resolutions 3219(XXIX) of 6 November 1974, 3448(XXX) of 9 December 1975, 31/124 of 16 December 1976, 32/118 of 16 December 1977, 33/175 of 20 December 1978, 34/179 of 17 December 1979, 35/188 of 15 December 1980, 36/157 of 16 December 1981, 37/183 of 17 December 1982 and 38/102 of 16 December 1983, relating to the situation of human rights in Chile, as well as its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 on disappeared persons,

*Recalling also the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Chile, in particular resolution 1984/63 of 15 March 1984, in which the Commission decided, inter alia, to extend for a year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile,*

Deploing once again the fact that the repeated appeals of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and other international organs to re-establish human rights and fundamental freedoms have been ignored by the Chilean authorities, which continue to refuse to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur,

Once again expressing its grave concern at the persistence of the serious situation of human rights in Chile, which, as established by the Special Rapporteur, has continued to deteriorate, and at the fact that the Chilean authorities have not been responsive to the concerns of the international community, as expressed in resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Commission on Human Rights,

Observing that, according to the conclusions of the Special Rapporteur, the right to enter and leave one's country freely is seriously restricted for Chilean nationals and that this situation has been aggravated by the issuance of a list of the names of thousands of Chileans who are not allowed to enter their country without conditions,

Taking note with utmost concern of the re-establishment of the state of siege on 6 November 1984, which has aggravated the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile, particularly by the increase in the number of arbitrary mass arrests, of persons sent into internal exile and the practice of torture and other forms of inhuman and degrading treatment, as well as the additional restrictions on the freedom of expression and information, assembly and association,

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile for his report, prepared in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/63;

2. Expresses its indignation at the persistence of and increase in serious and systematic violations of human rights in Chile, as described in the report of the Special Rapporteur, and, in particular, at the violent repression of popular protest in the face of the refusal to restore the democratic order and human rights and fundamental freedoms on the part of the authorities, which have in fact committed further serious and flagrant violations of human rights, with mass arrests and numerous deaths;

3. Reiterates once again its dismay at the disruption in Chile of the traditional democratic legal order and its institutions, particularly through the maintenance of exceptional legislation, the institutionalization of states of emergency, the extension of military jurisdiction and the existence of a Constitution which does not reflect the will of the people freely expressed and the provisions of which not only fail to guarantee human rights and fundamental freedoms but suppress, suspend or restrict the enjoyment and exercise thereof;

4. Expresses its alarm at the fact that the repressive activities of the police and security agencies and, in particular, the National Information Agency continue to go unpunished, as pointed out in the report of the Special Rapporteur;

5. Once again views with concern the ineffectiveness of the remedies of habeas corpus or amparo and of protection, owing to the fact that the judiciary does not exercise fully its powers of investigation, monitoring and supervision in this respect and performs its functions under severe restrictions;

6. Once again requests the Chilean authorities to restore and respect human rights in accordance with the obligations they have assumed under various international instruments and, in particular, to put an end to the régime of exception and the practice of declaring states of emergency, under which serious and continuing violations of human rights are committed, with a view to restoring the principle of legality, democratic institutions and the effective enjoyment and exercise of civil and political rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Urges the Chilean authorities to terminate the state of siege decreed on 6 November 1984 and the consequences of that state of siege;

8. Once more urges the Chilean authorities to investigate and clarify the fate of persons who have disappeared, including those arrested for political reasons, and to inform their families of the results of such investigation and to bring to trial and punish those responsible for their disappearance;

9. Once again emphasizes to the Chilean authorities the need to put an end to intimidation and persecution, as well as arbitrary or illegal arrests and imprisonment in secret places, and to respect the right of persons to life and physical integrity by halting the practice of torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment which, in some cases, have resulted in unexplained deaths;

10. Again requests the Chilean authorities to respect, in accordance with article 12 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the right of Chilean nationals to live in and freely enter and leave their country, without restrictions or conditions of any kind, in particular to annul the list of names of Chileans whose right to enter the country has been restricted and recent measures affecting other individuals, and to cease the practice of "relegation" (assignment of forced residence) and forced exile;

11. Renews its appeal to the Chilean authorities to re-establish the full enjoyment and exercise of trade union rights, in particular the right to organize trade unions, the right to collective bargaining and the right to strike, and to put an end to the system of repressing the activities of trade union leaders and their organizations;

12. Once more urges the Chilean authorities to respect and, where necessary, restore economic, social and cultural rights and, in particular, the rights intended to preserve the cultural identity and improve the social situation of indigenous populations, recognizing especially their right to their land;

13. Concludes, on the basis of the report of the Special Rapporteur, that it is necessary to keep under consideration the situation of human rights in Chile;

14. Again requests the Chilean authorities to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur and to submit their comments on his report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-first session;

15. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to study in depth at its forty-first session the report of the Special Rapporteur and to take the most appropriate steps for the effective restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile, including the extension of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one more year, and requests the Commission to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/121

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 90-13-40 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/700) by recorded vote (83-15-32), 7 December (meeting 66); 15-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.79); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Algeria, Australia, Cuba, Denmark, France, Greece, Italy, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 54-56, 58, 59, 61-66; plenary 101.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania,

Against: Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Sweden, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bangladesh, Brazil, Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Indonesia, Lebanon, Morocco, Pakistan, Paraguay, United States, Uruguay.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Bhutan, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Democratic Kampuchea, Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, Gabon, Honduras, Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Somalia, Sudan, Suriname, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Yemen, Zaire.

Chile accused the Organization of politicizing the cause of human rights and rejected the charges against it as invalid. It called the text selective and irresponsible, and said it failed to recognize the institutional effort and democratic goal of Chile's policies.

Likewise criticizing the text as selective were Colombia, Ecuador, Guatemala, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay, all of which referred to a discriminatory attitude towards certain Latin American countries, including Chile. The Federal Republic of Germany echoed their sentiment that human rights violations were just as serious, if not more so, in other parts of the world and that such selectivity could only undermine United Nations credibility in its efforts to promote human rights. Indonesia declared itself fully committed to promoting human rights but not at the expense of the sovereign independence of the State; the principle of a State's national authority, as enshrined in the Charter, must not be called into question.

The United States said it felt obliged to express its concern over the set-back in the re-establishment of democracy in Chile. It deplored the restrictions to and violations of fundamental freedoms, the brutal repression and the imposition of the state of emergency. It had made its views known to the Chilean Government and had urged it to take immediate steps to rectify the situation, beginning by revoking the state of emergency. As to the text, the United States would again reproach the United Nations for its double standards, claiming that the text—a mixture of truths, falsehoods and statements that the United Nations was clearly not competent to make—would require Chile to respect criteria not universally applied.

The Philippines believed that unless adequate safeguards were instituted to preserve the principle of non-intervention in domestic affairs, appointing a special rapporteur to look into the human rights situation in any Member State might infringe that principle.

Bolivia asked that its non-participation in the vote for political reasons be duly recorded.

The United Kingdom expressed deep concern over the serious and deteriorating human rights situation in Chile, which it felt was satisfactorily reflected in the draft resolution. Canada, Finland and the Federal Republic of Germany had a similar view. Nevertheless, the United Kingdom felt that the text could have been improved by a reference to the increase in terrorist violence and by some positive language calling on both sides to resume dialogue. Also, paragraph 15 unduly prejudiced the decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate, which was for the Commission on Human Rights alone to make. Canada would have preferred a more balanced text attributing the increased violence not only to the Government but also to the opposition forces. The Federal Republic of Germany considered it unfortunate that the text did not refer to the complicated aspect of the situation, namely, that the legitimate democratic opposition found it difficult to define its position amid increasing violence and terrorism, which repression only served to intensify. Only by involving as many Chileans as possible in the country's redemocratization could the Government isolate the terrorist forces.

Uganda considered the text an important effort towards improving the human rights situation in Chile.

El Salvador

Report of the Special Representative. In January 1984, Special Representative José Antonio Pastor Ridruejo, in fulfilment of his mandate as extended by the Commission on Human Rights in March 1983,<sup>(47)</sup> submitted a final report on the human rights situation in El Salvador,<sup>(48)</sup> updating a November 1983 interim report to the General Assembly.<sup>(47)</sup>

The Special Representative's findings and recommendations were essentially the same as those outlined in his 1983 interim report. In reiterating his recommendations, he called for termination of the activities of "death squads" and implementation of agrarian reform.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a roll-call vote of 24 to 5, with 13 abstentions, taken on 14 March 1984,<sup>(49)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights commended the Special Representative for his report and expressed deep concern over the persistence of the gravest human rights violations in El Salvador. It regretted that its appeals and those of the General Assembly and the international community had gone unheeded and that the creation of a national human rights commission and promulgation of an amnesty law<sup>(47)</sup> had not altered the situation as a whole. The Commission recommended the adoption of measures to put an immediate end to attacks on human life and requested the Government to punish those responsible for the serious violations of the right to life perpetrated by the so-called death squads, among others. It expressed concern at the consequences of the attacks on the economic infrastructure, largely attributable to the opposition forces.

Deploping the interruption in the dialogue between the Government and the other political forces, the Commission urged the parties to create conditions necessary for the search for a negotiated solution. It appealed for government action to ensure respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms by all its agencies, including the security forces and other armed organizations under its authority. It urged adoption of measures to enable the judiciary to uphold the rule of law and to prosecute and punish those responsible for grave human rights violations. It recommended that the reforms necessary to solve the economic and social problems that were at the root of the conflict be implemented so as to allow the effective exercise of human rights.

The Commission again urged States not to intervene and to suspend all manner of military assistance. It appealed to the conflicting parties not to interfere with the activities of humanitarian organizations working among the civilian population, the wounded and the imprisoned.

The Commission decided to extend the mandate of the Special Representative for another year, with a request that he present a report on further developments to the Assembly in 1984 and to the Commission in 1985. It requested the Government and all other parties to extend to him their full co-operation. It also requested the Secretary-General to give him all the necessary assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May 1984 adopted decision 1984/136 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in El Salvador

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/52 of 14 March 1984, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Representative on the situation of human rights in El Salvador for another year and to request him to submit his report on further developments in the situation of human rights in that country to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session and to the Commission at its forty-first session. The Council further endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/136

33-3-14 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) by recorded vote (33-3-12), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Canada, Congo, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Japan, Luxembourg, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar,* Sierra Leone, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Against: Brazil, Saint Lucia, United States.

Abstaining: China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Lebanon, Liberia, Malaysia, Pakistan, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Zaire.

*Later advised that it had abstained, not voted in favour as incorrectly indicated.

The United States expressed disappointment that the Special Representative, whose mandate had just been extended, had not been able to observe at first hand the presidential elections held in El Salvador in March.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August 1984,<sup>(50)</sup> the Sub-Commission, by 14 votes to 1, with 7 abstentions, recommended that, despite the change of government in El Salvador (see below), the Commission on Human Rights should continue to examine the human rights situation there and compliance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions. It requested the Special Representative to pay special attention to persistent reports of the systematic bombing of the civilian population by government forces and suggested that the Commission reiterate its appeal to the conflicting parties to resume talks without delay. It urged States not to intervene and to suspend military assistance so that peace might be restored and a negotiating mechanism established for a comprehensive political solution. It requested the Secretary-General to report in 1985 on the Representative's work and on the deliberations of the Commission and the General Assembly.

Further report. In November 1984, the Special Representative reported further on developments in the human rights situation in El Salvador. Prepared pursuant to the Commission's March request (see above) and transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General, this interim report<sup>(51)</sup> contained 1984 information, gathered during the Special Representative's visit to El Salvador from 16 to 24 September and from interviews conducted thereafter at Geneva, San José (Costa Rica), Washington, DC., and New York with individuals and representatives of various organizations.

A notable development was the presidential election on 25 March, with over 300 outside observers present. Since none of the candidates had obtained more than 50 per cent of the votes, a second round of voting was held on 6 May, resulting in the assumption of José Napoleon Duarte (Christian Democratic Party) to the presidency on 1 June. With a new Government set up, President Duarte met with leaders of the opposition (Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario) on 15 October, at which he presented a proposal to end the violence in the country. The proposal would guarantee unconditional amnesty to all connected with the situation of political violence; freedom of movement to the rebels and their families who would be reintegrated in society; political participation for all sectors and groups; official documents for those wanting to leave the country and arrangements for their arrival in the country of emigration; safeguards for displaced persons returning to El Salvador, with a guarantee of the right to freedom of expression and to engage in political activity, including the right to register their political party and candidates; and special programmes for the wounded and disabled.

Other information included the status of economic, social and cultural rights and, in this connection, implementation of the country's agrarian reform programme; the status of civil and political rights with respect to political murders, abductions and disappearances, political prisoners, the status of the criminal justice system, and human rights violations attributed to the guerrilla forces; the situation of refugees and displaced persons; and human rights in armed conflicts.

The Special Representative stated that the new Government was actively pursuing a policy of improving the human rights situation in the country. For example, it had disbanded the intelligence section of the Treasury Police, dismissed up to 45 local commanders, restricted the activities of "death squads" and created a separate secretariat for public security in the Ministry of Defence, as well as a special commission to investigate political crimes having international relevance. An investigation, ordered by the Minister for Defence, of the alleged participation of an army unit in a massacre of 68 peasants in July was under way.

The Special Representative found that the situation with regard to economic, social and cultural rights had worsened, owing largely to the serious economic difficulties facing El Salvador that were exacerbated by the generalized violence in the country. Serious violations of civil and political rights attributable to the State apparatus and armed paramilitary organizations continued, although political murders of non-combatants had declined. The judicial system remained inadequate and its proceedings exceedingly slow: while a guilty verdict was handed down in the trial for the 1980 murder of four United States missionaries and another trial was concluded, most human rights violations had yet to be investigated. Civilian deaths continued to be reported in the wake of bombings and attacks by the armed forces and of guerrilla activities. However, the considerable gap previously reported between government intentions to improve the human rights situation and improvements achieved had narrowed during the year.

In addition, according to information received from UNHCR, of the Salvadorian refugees living abroad (244,000 as at 31 July 1983), only some 34,300 were receiving assistance; some 1,200 had returned to the country. Displaced persons, estimated at 500,000, lived in camps under harsh conditions.

The Special Representative urged immediate termination of attacks on non-combatants and establishment of civil peace as a prerequisite for the respect of human rights. He recommended repeal of all legislative and other measures incompatible with international human rights instruments; strengthening of government control over the armed forces, security bodies, and all armed individuals and organizations, including the so-called death squads; adoption of measures to prevent, investigate and punish human rights violations, and to include the dismissal of civilian officials, armed forces personnel and security agents guilty of such violations; intensification of mass campaigns to promote respect for human rights; and implementation of administrative and social reforms, especially agrarian reform as a foundation for the exercise of economic, social and cultural rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/119 by recorded vote on 14 December 1984.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and by the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocols I and II thereto,

Aware that the Governments of all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to carry out the responsibilities they have undertaken under various international human rights instruments,

Recalling that, in its resolutions 35/192 of 15 December 1980, 36/155 of 16 December 1981, 37/185 of 17 December 1982 and 38/101 of 16 December 1983, it expressed deep concern at the situation of human rights in El Salvador,

*Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 32(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, in which the Commission decided to appoint a Special Representative on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, 1982/28 of 11 March 1982, 1983/29 of 8 March 1983 and 1984/52 of 14 March 1984, whereby the Commission extended the mandate of the Special Representative for another year and requested him to report, inter alia, to the General Assembly,*

Noting that the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights points out in his report that, owing to the adoption of a new government policy, the number of human rights violations has markedly decreased, which is a welcome development, but that nevertheless a situation of war and generalized violence continues to exist in El Salvador, that there are still serious violations of human rights, that the number of attacks on life and the economic structure remains a cause for concern and that the capacity of the judicial system to investigate and punish human rights violations committed in the country continues to be patently unsatisfactory,

Considering that there is an armed conflict not of an international character in El Salvador in which the Government of that country and the opposition forces are obligated to apply the minimum standards of protection of human rights and of humane treatment set out in article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, as well as Additional Protocol II thereto,

Aware that a delicate process aiming at a political solution has been initiated in El Salvador, which could be hindered if arms or military contributions of any other kind, making it possible to prolong or intensify the war, are provided from outside,

Taking into account that on 8 October 1984 the President of El Salvador stated before the General Assembly that the main task of the mandate he was given by the elections of 6 May 1984 is to achieve social harmony and internal peace in El Salvador, and that the Special Representative notes with satisfaction the obvious desire of the new Government to establish a democracy governed by the rule of law and guaranteeing full respect for human rights,

Recognizing that dialogue is the only way, in a spirit of generosity and openness, to achieve a negotiated comprehensive political solution that will promote genuine national reconciliation, put an end to the suffering of the Salvadorian people and stem the growing tide of refugees and internally displaced persons,

1. Commends the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights for his report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador;

2. Expresses its deep concern at the fact that, as indicated in the report of the Special Representative, although the number of human rights violations has decreased, they are still serious and numerous, resulting in suffering for the Salvadorian people;

3. Recalls that the right to life and liberty is paramount and therefore notes with satisfaction the measures which, according to the report of the Special Representative, the Government of El Salvador has adopted to put an end to these serious violations of human rights;

4. Deeply regrets that the persistence of hostilities by the armed forces of the Government has resulted in many civilian victims and material damage, and also regrets that the hostilities of the guerrilla forces have on occasion caused civilian victims and material damage to the economic infrastructure of El Salvador;

5. Reaffirms once again the right of the Salvadorian people freely to determine their political, economic and social future without interference from outside, through a genuine democratic process, in an atmosphere free from intimidation and terror;

6. Requests all States to refrain from intervening in the internal situation in El Salvador and, instead of supplying arms or helping in any way to prolong and intensify the war, to encourage the continuation of the dialogue until a just and lasting peace is achieved;

7. Welcomes with satisfaction the fact that, in accordance with the appeal made by the President of El Salvador before the General Assembly and the Assembly's own repeated appeals, talks were resumed between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario, which confirmed its willingness in that respect;

8. Recognizes that this dialogue is an important step in the process of pacification and democratization of the country and therefore calls upon the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario to intensify their talks until they achieve a negotiated comprehensive political solution which will put an end to the armed conflict and establish a lasting peace based on the full exercise both of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights by all Salvadorians;

9. Welcomes the fact that the Government of El Salvador and the insurgent forces have agreed through indirect talks to exchange prisoners of war and allow the International Committee of the Red Cross to evacuate wounded combatants of the opposition in exchange for the release of government officials captured in combat, appeals to all States to do what they can to support operations of that kind, and urges the Government of El Salvador and the insurgent forces to continue those practices, which humanize the conflict, and to agree as early as possible to respect the medical personnel and all military hospitals, as required by the Geneva Conventions;

10. Again reiterates its appeal to the Government of El Salvador and to the opposition forces to co-operate fully and not to interfere with the activities of humanitarian organizations dedicated to alleviating the suffering of the civilian population, wherever these organizations operate in the country;

11. Recommends the continuation and broadening of the reforms necessary in El Salvador, including effective application of agrarian reform, for the solution of the economic and social problems which are the basic cause of the internal conflict in that country;

12. Deeply deplores the fact that the capacity of the judicial system in El Salvador to investigate, prosecute and punish violations of human rights continues to be patently unsatisfactory and therefore urges the competent authorities to continue and strengthen the process of reform of the Salvadorian penal judicial system, in order to punish speedily and effectively those responsible for the serious human rights violations which have been committed and are still being committed in that country;

13. Calls upon the competent authorities in El Salvador to introduce changes in the laws and other measures that are incompatible with the provisions contained in the international instruments binding on the Government of El Salvador in respect of human rights;

14. Renews its appeal to the Government of El Salvador, as well as to other parties concerned, to continue to co-operate with the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights;

15. Decides to keep under consideration, during its fortieth session, the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador, in order to examine this situation anew in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 39/119

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 93-11-40 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/700) by recorded vote (83-13-35), 7 December (meeting 66); 9-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.43/Rev.2), orally revised following consultations; agenda item 12.

Before approval of the revised draft resolution by the Committee, amendments sponsored by Costa Rica and Venezuela<sup>(52)</sup> had been introduced, by which they would have replaced: the words "provision of weapons and military assistance" by "foreign military intrusion" in the seventh preambular paragraph; the first full clause in paragraph 6 with "Requests all States to refrain from any military intrusion in El Salvador"; and the last phrase in paragraph 7 with the words "which expressed their willingness in that respect". The amendments were withdrawn following consultations that resulted in the oral revision of those paragraphs.

El Salvador felt that the text, despite its improvement by the oral revisions, remained tendentious: it engaged in subjective political considerations in violation of the principle of non-interference and played down the armed interventions of the left carried out under the protection of totalitarian régimes. El Salvador voiced disapproval of the way in which the text had been negotiated, for the reason that it had not been a party to those negotiations and the conclusions reached were inconsistent with those of the Special Representative. It also observed that Mexico, supposedly engaged in a good offices mission as a member of the Contadora Group, had assumed the indefensible position of making accusations against the Salvadorian Government, and that Cuba, as one of the main instigators of the disturbances in El Salvador, bore heavy responsibility for the bloodshed there.

Morocco regretted that the Salvadorian Government had not been consulted in the negotiations on the text, whereas the political opposition had been; hence, the oral amendments notwithstanding, Morocco could not accept the resulting compromise formula. Senegal likewise voiced regret at the lack of consultation. The United States felt that the text did not give enough recognition to the work accomplished by the new President or to the progress made in the country's democratization since he took office. Moreover, it tried to dictate internal policy to the Government, which was not within the competence of the United Nations to do. Indonesia said that human rights must not be promoted at the expense of a State's sovereignty and independence.

Chile, Guatemala, Honduras, Paraguay and Uruguay rejected what they called the selectivity of the text: singling out certain countries for human rights violations while maintaining silence with respect to others for the same violations. Guatemala said such a double standard weakened the credibility of human rights institutions and respect for the Charter, while Honduras pointed to such omissions as the failure to recognize the Government's efforts to improve the situation. Uruguay referred to elements that were extraneous to human rights and constituted interference in the internal affairs of El Salvador.

Sharing the views of the latter three countries were Ecuador and Peru; Peru saw the text as a result of systematic discrimination against Latin America, and Ecuador emphasized respect for the universal defence of human rights and stressed that it should be essentially Latin Americans who should busy themselves to solve the problems of the region.

Expressing support for the Latin American countries in their fight for effective enjoyment of their independence and for the efforts of the Contadora Group in that regard, China called for cessation of all foreign interference in those countries' affairs.

The Philippines was concerned that, unless adequate safeguards were instituted to preserve the principle of non-intervention in the domestic affairs of States, as stipulated by the Charter, to appoint a special representative to look into the human rights situation in any Member State might be an infringement of that principle. In the view of the Federal Republic of Germany, the text did not adequately reflect the Salvadorian Government's positive intentions, the recent free elections that had led to the installation of a legitimate and democratic Government, and the initiation of a dialogue among all of the country's political forces.

The United Kingdom, recognizing the difficulties in producing a text to reflect satisfactorily both the progress made in El Salvador and the seriousness of the continuing problems, said that, in its revised form, the text was considerably more balanced than the resolutions previously adopted on the subject. Nevertheless, the United Kingdom found unacceptable the implicit injunction against military assistance to a Government that had an inherent right to self-defence. It considered regrettable that paragraph 8 took insufficient account of the democratic processes already under way, as well as the lack of appreciation for the extensive co-operation provided by the Government to the Special Representative.

Referring to political reasons, Bolivia did not participate in the vote and requested that its position be duly recorded.

Mozambique would have liked the text to be more precise in certain points. Albania said its vote reflected support for the just struggle of peoples, its reservations on certain paragraphs notwithstanding. Argentina stressed that human rights constituted a legitimate interest of the United Nations, and the Assembly should concern itself with violations of those rights wherever they occurred. It wanted to point out, however, that 1984 had seen positive progress in the situation in El Salvador, as demonstrated by the elections and the dialogue initiated by its President with the opposition forces. Australia said the sponsors of the draft and especially the Contadora Group should be thanked for sparing no effort to produce a text that might contribute to solving the conflict in El Salvador.

Belgium took exception to the approach to certain aspects as defined in the text, saying such definition lay within the exclusive purview not of the Assembly but of the country concerned. Canada challenged the use of the expression "a negotiated comprehensive political solution" in paragraph 8, saying that wording gave the impression that the Government and the opposition forces, the latter not having participated in the electoral process, enjoyed the same constitutional legitimacy. Those opposition forces, Canada also felt, should not be specifically named as they were in paragraphs 7 and 8.

In Venezuela's opinion, the text acknowledged the legitimacy of established authority but made clear that, to be a true political system fully respecting human rights, that authority must negotiate with those who had taken up arms. It was a matter not of deciding in advance who would hold power, but of ensuring the emergence of a true democracy from a dialogue between the Government and the opposition. While recognizing that arms shipments constituted a severe threat to peace in the region, the text did not seek to dictate El Salvador's foreign policy. Finland said its vote was to encourage a country where the situation was improving to promote dialogue among all the parties.

Colombia said the sponsors understood that the Latin American countries could contribute to the search for solutions and, recognizing the role of the Salvadorian President in taking certain initiatives, had agreed substantially to change the content and language of the text. Its vote was in recognition of this political integrity, Colombia stressed. Uganda considered the draft an important effort towards achieving improvements in the human rights situation in El Salvador.

Upon Committee approval of the revised text, a draft resolution on the same topic, sponsored by Costa Rica, Singapore and Venezuela<sup>(53)</sup>—to which amendments were submitted by Cuba<sup>(54)</sup> and by Nicaragua<sup>(55)</sup>—was withdrawn.

By that draft, the Assembly would have expressed concern that a critical situation still existed in El Salvador which impeded the enjoyment of human rights, and at the effect which the hostilities and systematic attacks on the economic infrastructure had on economic, social and cultural rights. It would have deplored that the capacity of the judicial system to investigate human rights violations showed no perceptible improvement, and would again have urged the authorities to speed up the reform of the penal system to punish those responsible for such violations. It would have called on the armed forces and the guerrilla forces to protect the health personnel, medical units and hospitals, and would have called on the Government to continue its support for the activities of the Committee of the Red Cross and other humanitarian organizations. It would have reiterated its appeal to all Salvadorian parties to the conflict to co-operate with those organizations, and would have welcomed the Salvadorian President's appeal for dialogue and the favourable response by the opposition forces. The Assembly further would have called on government and opposition forces to ensure that the national reconciliation process advanced so that conditions for a lasting peace could be established, characterized by respect for economic, social and cultural, and civil and political rights. It would have renewed its request to the Government and the parties concerned to continue to extend their co-operation to the Special Representative.

Guatemala

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In February 1984, Special Rapporteur Viscount Colville of Culross (United Kingdom) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report on the human rights situation in Guatemala,<sup>(56)</sup> pursuant to a Commission request of March 1983.<sup>(57)</sup> This final report contained information gathered during the Special Rapporteur's visit to Guatemala from 24 to 29 November 1983, updating his interim report to the General Assembly earlier that month.<sup>(58)</sup>

Besides providing information on the international human rights instruments to which Guatemala was or was not a party and a historical perspective from which to evaluate the situation in the country, the Special Rapporteur gave an account of his investigations, including his observations with respect to: reforms introduced, such as democratic elections with a timetable for the return to democracy beginning with constitutional elections in March 1984 or earlier, the abolition of the Council of State, and social and economic reforms; unresolved indications of abuses, among them disappearances, killings and kidnappings, compulsory service in civil patrols, infringement of religious freedom and army harassment, abduction and killing of priests and catechists ostensibly for subversive activities; and general concerns about alleged human rights violations and the problems of verifying them, the so-called protected or model villages, freedom of speech, trade unions and freedom of association, and refugees in Mexico.

The Special Rapporteur stated that economic injustice and social and racial inequalities underlay the trouble in Guatemala. Thus, unless the economic, social and cultural problems were significantly ameliorated, much of the population had little opportunity for participating in many civil and political rights. The right to life could be infringed as much by poverty and lack of medical care as by slaughter. The revolutionary movements had declared themselves anxious to effect necessary reforms, and the initiatives taken by the Government since early 1982 demonstrated that it was seeking the same goals.

The Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations including: Commission support of government plans for rural development, to be accompanied by the granting of communal rights to land, infrastructural support in the form of access roads and water supply, advisory and educational services, and health care; electoral reform; assistance to refugees at home and abroad; a continuation of amnesties; establishment of an official system of inquiry for alleged abuses and human rights violations; a Supreme Court review of cases of persons convicted by special tribunals; and a guarantee of the freedom of speech, of the press and of association. The Special Rapporteur vigorously stressed the clearing up of disappearances, killings and kidnappings.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 14 March 1984,<sup>(59)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 28 to 3, with 11 abstentions, thanked the Special Rapporteur for his report and took note of his recommendations. It expressed profound concern at the continuing massive human rights violations in Guatemala, particularly the violence against non-combatants, widespread repression, massive displacement of rural and indigenous peoples, and disappearances and killings, recently reported to have increased. It urged the Government: to ensure full respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms by its authorities and agencies, including security forces; to enable persons convicted under the system of special tribunals to be retried and, if necessary, to enact new legislation for that purpose; and to establish conditions necessary for the judiciary to uphold the rule of law.

The Commission called on the Government to establish an impartial and authoritative body to investigate alleged violations, and to refrain from forcefully displacing rural and indigenous populations and from the practice of coercive participation in civilian patrols. It reiterated its appeal for the application of relevant norms of international humanitarian law for the protection of civilians in armed conflicts. It asked the Government to investigate and clarify the fate of disappeared persons and reiterated its appeal that international humanitarian organizations be allowed to assist in the investigations on behalf of relatives and to assist the civilian population in areas of conflict. Noting that constitutional elections had taken place in January 1984, the Commission urged Guatemala to adhere faithfully to the timetable for the return to democracy, which specified July 1984 for the election of a Constituent Assembly and July 1985 as the latest date for instituting a new constitutional Government, and to guarantee the free participation of all political forces.

The Commission called on Governments to refrain from giving military assistance to Guatemala as long as serious human rights violations there continued to be reported. It extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for another year, with a request that he submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1984 on subsequent developments, especially with regard to his recommendations, and a final report to the Commission in 1985. It invited the Government and all parties to extend to him their full co-operation and requested the Secretary-General to provide him with the necessary assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May adopted decision 1984/137 by vote.

Situation of human rights in Guatemala

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/53 of 14 March 1984, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Guatemala for another year and to request him to report on the subsequent development of the situation of human rights in that country, taking into account developments in regard to the recommendations in his reports as well as information from other reliable sources, and to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session and a final report to the Commission at its forty-first session. The Council further endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/137

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) by vote (30-1-13), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Sub-Commission action. Taking note of the elections for the Constituent Assembly held in Guatemala on 1 July 1984 and of the electoral schedule for the coming year, the Sub-Commission on 29 August<sup>(60)</sup> expressed deep concern over the increasing and systematic human rights violations in the country, in particular acts of violence against the civilian non-combatant population, including torture, forced disappearances and massive extra-judicial executions, as well as displacements of rural and indigenous populations, their confinement in militarized hamlets and incorporation into civilian patrols organized and controlled by the army. The Sub-Commission exhorted the Government to: ensure that all authorities and dependencies, including security forces, observed total respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; clarify the destiny of all disappeared persons; forbid clandestine prisons; sanction the authors of acts of torture; ensure enforcement of the right of habeas corpus; and free and provide care to imprisoned persons.

The Sub-Commission called on all parties to ensure observance of humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts such as were occurring in Guatemala, in particular the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the Protocols additional thereto. It urged the Government to abide by the electoral schedule and to improve guarantees of participation by all political forces in the presidential elections to be held in July 1985. It also urged Governments to abstain from giving military assistance to Guatemala as long as serious human rights violations continued. It invited the Special Rapporteur to take account of the situation of the indigenous population and of all reports submitted to the Sub-Commission, which would be forwarded to him.

Further report. In keeping with the Commission's March request (see above), the Special Rapporteur prepared an interim report on developments in the human rights situation in Guatemala, which the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly in November.<sup>(61)</sup> The report was confined to events in 1984 and included information gathered during the Special Rapporteur's visit to Guatemala from 12 to 18 August, with one morning spent in Honduras, and to Mexico and Belize until 24 August. The report noted that the Guatemalan Government had provided every facility and posed no obstacles to his travel and interviews. Belize, Honduras and Mexico likewise had co-operated in enabling him to visit refugees.

The report noted that the first phase of the electoral process took place on 1 July 1984 as scheduled. Parties of the centre and right participated and the Supreme Electoral Tribunal carried out its duties with skill and impartiality. Despite several incidents designed to disrupt the process and invalidate the results, a Constituent Assembly was installed on 1 August. There continued to be apparent numerous examples of violations of human rights of individuals, notably murders, disappearances and woundings; information was not available as to how many of these had been cleared up, but very many had not. The allegations indicated four groups as being responsible: security forces, guerrillas, common criminals and private organizations consisting of off-duty police and military and/or right-wing political groups. A Commission for Peace, set up earlier in the year to resolve allegations, had so far failed to function. Those convicted by special tribunals had been pardoned and freed.

Freedom of speech and publication did not seem to suffer from any appreciable infringement. Trade union activities appeared extremely limited and their existence precarious. Many refugees remained in Mexico; the smaller numbers in Belize and Honduras showed little inclination to return. Refugees who had returned from abroad and internal refugees who had come out of hiding were being resettled. Amnesties were continuing.

The Special Rapporteur recommended every support for the process towards a return to a democratically elected Government, with the terms of the new Constitution to be drawn up to guarantee the range of human rights contained in the 1966 International Covenants, to ensure that positions of power and responsibility at every level of central and local government were filled by civilians, and to establish independence for the judiciary. The Government should urgently seek to prevent disappearances and bring perpetrators to justice, making an inquiry into the 458 persons arrested under the system of special tribunals and another into the 117 persons who might have been detained improperly by police as test cases. There should be an improvement in the climate of violence if a wider range of political parties was to be persuaded to participate in the next elections.

Other recommendations called for continuance of distribution of land titles and technical assistance for rural development, improvement of living conditions of migrant workers, encouragement of trade union activities, strengthening of the Commission for Peace or its replacement with another system, and providing refugees, especially those in Mexico, with information to enable them to make decisions regarding their return to Guatemala.

Communication. On 16 August 1984,<sup>(62)</sup> Guatemala transmitted the text of Decree-Law No. 74-84 of 18 July, whereby complete pardon was granted to those sentenced without possibility of appeal under the abolished system of special tribunals; trials initiated under that system and later transferred to the courts were dismissed and the accused persons released.

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 85-11-47 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/700) by recorded vote (79-13-39), 7 December (meeting 66); 10-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.77); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Austria, Canada, Denmark, France, Greece, Ireland, Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden.

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 54-56, 58, 59, 61-66; plenary 101.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bangladesh, Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Indonesia, Morocco, Pakistan, Paraguay, United States, Uruguay.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Bhutan, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gabon, Guinea, Honduras, Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Romania, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire.

Guatemala expressed strong opposition to the text, saying it was partial, unbalanced and discriminatory and reflected the political prejudices of its sponsors. It cited references in the fourth and fifth preambular paragraphs as partial and rejected what it called the insinuation deriving from the word "unclear" in the seventh. It pointed to paragraph 2 as full of false accusations, particularly of "grave and widespread violations of human rights" and "widespread repression", and as unwarranted its references to "combatants" and "non-combatants", there being no civil war in the country but only secret terrorist groups. Guatemala objected to what it said was the intolerable presumption of the injunction in paragraph 11, underscoring its right to defend itself and to acquire the means to guarantee its security and independence and to maintain law and order. It urged that the draft not be approved for it contributed neither to peace in Guatemala nor to stability in Central America.

Uruguay and Peru echoed Guatemala's criticism of the text as discriminatory, and Paraguay as flawed by partiality and prejudice. Chile, Colombia and Ecuador referred to the selectivity of the text.

The United States said the conclusions reached in the annual report of its Department of State on the human rights situation in Guatemala were similar to those of the Special Rapporteur, namely, that problems continued but that there had been definite improvements, such as the July elections for the Constituent Assembly. Far from reflecting that progress, the draft made unfounded allegations; whence the negative vote of the United States, despite its strong wish to encourage the promotion of human rights in that country.

Morocco's position was that human rights could be defended only in an atmosphere devoid of emotionalism, political manoeuvring, geopolitics, and hegemonistic and ideological ambitions. For that reason it had never approached the subject on any but a humanitarian basis. Therefore, when a draft resolution raised doubt as to its true objective, Morocco would vote accordingly.

Indonesia declared itself committed to promoting human rights, but not at the expense of the most fundamental right: the sovereign independence of the State. It observed that, when an uprising threatened the State's integrity, external interference could only exacerbate the situation. The principle of the national authority of a State, enshrined in the Charter, should not be called into question, as it was by the draft. The concern of the Philippines was safeguarding the principle of non-intervention; it felt that mandating a special rapporteur to look into the human rights situation of a Member State might infringe that principle.

Bolivia said that, for political reasons, it was not participating in the vote and wanted this position recorded.

According to the Federal Republic of Germany, the Special Rapporteur's report gave clear evidence that, despite some encouraging developments in Guatemala, the human rights situation there continued to be quite serious; the text, however, reflected the Special Rapporteur's conclusions only partially and gave the impression that the Government alone was responsible for the violence in the country and not also the guerrilla forces. Such imprecision, exhibited also by paragraph 11, could have been avoided by a reference to both government and opposition forces. Also, the text should have been more prudent in its references to rural development centres and forced participation in civilian patrols.

In Finland's view, the Government of Guatemala, where the situation was improving, should be encouraged to promote dialogue among all interested parties.

Uganda said that, since 1979, it had consistently voted for similar resolutions on the human rights situation not only in Guatemala but also in Chile and El Salvador. It felt a need to point this out because it had inadvertently abstained on the resolutions on all three countries in the Committee.

Haiti

By a decision adopted at a closed meeting on 1 March 1984 and made public<sup>(63)</sup> in accordance with a procedure established in 1970 by the Economic and Social Council for dealing with communications alleging denial or violations of human rights,<sup>(1)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights took note of a report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to its confidential decision relating to Haiti, adopted at a closed meeting on 28 February 1983. The Commission recommended a draft text that served as the basis for the Council decision below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council in May 1984 adopted decision 1984/143 by recorded vote.

Study of situations which appear to reveal a consistent pattern of gross violations of human rights as provided in Commission on Human Rights resolution 8(XXIII) and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1235(XLII) and 1503(XLVIII)

At its 20th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights decision 1984/109 of 1 March 1984, decided to request the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with the Government of Haiti, as envisaged in his report to the Commission, with a view to further exploring ways and means of providing the Government of Haiti with assistance to facilitate the realization of full enjoyment of human rights for the people of Haiti, and to report to the Commission at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present decision.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/143

45-2-3 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) by vote (42-1-4), 17 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Against: Saint Lucia, United States.

Abstaining: Brazil, Malaysia, Zaire.

Brazil voiced strong reservations with respect to the decision's title.

Uruguay

By 17 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, on 30 August 1984,<sup>(64)</sup> the Sub-Commission—noting that Uruguay had taken measures to restore the democratic system and that national elections were scheduled for 25 November, but concerned nevertheless that measures remained in the way of the full exercise of political rights—expressed confidence that Uruguay would continue to make efforts to achieve full restoration of democratic institutions and to adopt measures to restore full exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Welcoming the process begun for the liberation of persons detained or sentenced for alleged offences against the security of the State and internal order, the Sub-Commission urged the Government to speed up that process and to lift restrictions on the political rights of citizens and political parties so that free and democratic elections might be held.

Concerned that Wilson Ferreira Aldunate, a presidential candidate of one of the country's most important political forces, continued to be deprived of his liberty, thereby preventing a considerable sector from exercising its political rights, and that charges against him were basically related to his human rights activities, the Sub-Commission likewise urged the Government to set him free and remove any restrictions on political rights affecting him. It recommended that the Commission urge the Secretary-General to use his good offices to verify the information that the charges against Mr. Ferreira Aldunate included his "having made requests before specialized agencies of the United Nations", and to inform the Commission Chairman of the results of this endeavour.

Middle East

Territories occupied by Israel

In 1984, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights. This was in addition to the consideration of political and other aspects by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and other bodies (see p. 315).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. Following consideration of a report by the Secretary-General<sup>(65)</sup> on measures taken to give the widest possible publicity to Commission on Human Rights resolutions of February 1983<sup>(66)</sup> on the question of human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine, the Commission on 20 February 1984 adopted four resolutions relating to those territories: two on the same subject, one on Israeli occupation of the Syrian Golan Heights, and another on Israeli withdrawal from those territories.

By the first of these resolutions,<sup>(67)</sup> the Commission, by 29 votes to 1, with 11 abstentions, reaffirmed that occupation itself was a fundamental violation of the human rights of the civilian population of the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories. It denounced Israel's continued refusal to allow the Special Committee on Israeli practices access to the occupied territories and reiterated the Committee's alarm that Israel's policy in them was based on the so-called Homeland doctrine envisaging a monoreligious (Jewish) State including the occupied territories, a policy that not only denied the right to self-determination of the population but also constituted the source of systematic human rights violations. It confirmed its declaration that Israel's continuous grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) and of the Additional Protocols were war crimes and an affront to humanity.

The Commission firmly rejected Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the territories and considered these measures and their consequences null and void. It strongly condemned Israel's attempts to subject the West Bank and the Gaza Strip to Israeli laws.

The Commission also condemned Israeli measures to promote and expand settler colonies in the territories, as well as the following practices: annexation of parts of the territories, including Jerusalem; establishment of new Israeli settlements on Arab lands; arming of settlers to commit acts of violence against Arab civilians; evacuation, expulsion and displacement of the territories' Arab inhabitants and denial of their right to return; confiscation and expropriation of Arab property; destruction and demolition of Arab houses; mass arrests, collective punishments, detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population; pillaging of archaeological and cultural property; interference with religious freedoms and family customs; systematic repression against cultural and educational institutions; illegal exploitation of the territories' natural resources; and dismantling of municipal services by dismissing elected mayors and municipal councils and forbidding Arab aid funds.

The Commission called on Israel to take immediate steps for the return of displaced Arabs to their homes and property; to implement Security Council resolutions on the return of the expelled Mayors of Hebron and Halhul; to release all Arabs detained for their struggle for self-determination; to cease all acts of torture of Arab prisoners; and to release the Palestinian Ziyad Abu Eain and others detained in Insar Camp, which must be closed in accordance with a 1983 agreement on prisoner exchange (see p. 279).

The Commission reiterated its call to all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the territories, including Jerusalem, and to avoid taking action or extending aid which Israel might use to pursue its annexation and colonization policies. It urged Israel to refrain from policies and practices violating human rights and to report to it, through the Secretary-General, in 1985. It requested the Assembly to recommend to the Security Council, through the Economic and Social Council, to take the measures referred to in Chapter VII of the Charter against Israel for its persistent human rights violations. It asked the Secretary-General to give this resolution the widest possible publicity.

By the second resolution,<sup>(68)</sup> adopted by 32 votes to 1, with 8 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and condemned Israel's failure to acknowledge such applicability. It called on Israel to abide by the obligations under the Charter, the Convention and other instruments of international law and again urged all States parties to the Convention to ensure Israel's compliance.

By the third resolution,<sup>(69)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 30 to 1, with 11 abstentions, the Commission condemned Israel for failure to comply with Security Council and Assembly resolutions demanding rescission of its 1981 decision to apply Israeli law to the occupied Golan Heights.<sup>(70)</sup> The Commission again declared that decision null and void, and Israeli practices and inhuman treatment of the Syrian Arab population a grave violation of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,<sup>(71)</sup> the fourth Geneva Convention and relevant United Nations resolutions, as well as a threat to international peace and security. It condemned Israel for attempting to impose Israeli citizenship and identity cards on Syrian citizens in the occupied Golan Heights. It deplored the negative vote and pro-Israeli position of a permanent Security Council member which prevented the Council from adopting measures under Chapter VII of the Charter against Israel. The Commission emphasized the necessity of total and unconditional withdrawal from all Palestinian and Syrian territories as an essential prerequisite for a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East.

By the fourth resolution,<sup>(72)</sup> adopted by 30 votes to 1, with 11 abstentions, the Commission, repeating its condemnation of continued Israeli occupation of the Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem, and persistence in colonizing them, called for immediate Israeli withdrawal from those territories so as to restore to the Palestinian people their inalienable national rights.

Also in February 1984, the Commission, in its resolution reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination (see above, under "Civil and political rights") and to a fully independent and sovereign State of Palestine, condemned Israel for its aggression and practices against Palestinians in and outside the occupied territories and for its responsibility for the 1982 large-scale massacre in the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps, which it determined constituted an act of genocide.<sup>(73)</sup>

In addition, the Commission in March 1984 urged Israel to recognize the status of prisoner of war for all combatants captured during the war in Lebanon (see above, under "Rights of detained persons").

Mass exoduses

Following its consideration of a 1983 report by the Secretary-General on human rights and mass exoduses,<sup>(74)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, on 14 March 1984,<sup>(75)</sup> welcomed his intention to utilize to the utmost the relevant United Nations machinery for the prompt analysis of information on situations that might cause mass exoduses. It noted that he had on many occasions designated special representatives on humanitarian issues on an ad hoc basis and noted his readiness to expand that practice.

The Commission invited Governments to intensify their co-operation and assistance in world-wide efforts to address the problem of mass exoduses in all its aspects. It appealed to them to make their views known on the subject and thus contribute to the discussion of how the international community could remove the root causes of mass exoduses and solve the problems resulting from them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/117 on 14 December 1984.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Mindful of its general humanitarian mandate under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing scale and magnitude of exoduses of refugees and displacements of population in many regions of the world and by the human suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons,

Conscious of the fact that human rights violations are among the multiple and complex factors causing mass exoduses of refugees, as indicated in the study of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on this subject,

Considering the efforts which have been made to address this subject within the United Nations, in particular by the Commission on Human Rights,

Deeply preoccupied by the increasingly heavy burden being imposed upon the international community as a whole, particularly upon developing countries with limited resources of their own, by these sudden mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Stressing the need for international co-operation aimed at the prevention of new massive flows of refugees along with the provision of adequate solutions to actual refugee situations,

Taking note again of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and mass exoduses,

Recalling its resolutions 35/196 of 15 December 1980, 37/186 of 17 December 1982 and 38/103 of 16 December 1983 and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 30(XXXVI) of 11 March 1980, 29(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, 1982/32 of 11 March 1982 and 1983/35 of 8 March 1983,

1. Welcomes the steps taken so far by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons in all its aspects, including its root causes;

2. Invites Governments to intensify their co-operation and assistance in world-wide efforts to address the serious problem of mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons;

3. Welcomes the special interest which the Secretary-General has taken in this question and reiterates its request to him to follow closely developments in the field of human rights and mass exoduses;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General in his efforts to enable the United Nations to anticipate and react more adequately and speedily to cases requiring humanitarian assistance, as mentioned in his report on the work of the Organization;

5. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to keep the question of human rights and mass exoduses under review with the objective of making appropriate recommendations concerning further measures to be taken in this field;

6. Decides to review the question of human rights and mass exoduses at its fortieth session.

Genocide

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July 1984, Special Rapporteur Benjamin Charles George Whitaker (United Kingdom) submitted a preliminary report<sup>(76)</sup> on the revision and updating of a 1978 study on the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide.<sup>(77)</sup> The report was prepared in accordance with the mandate entrusted to him by the Sub-Commission in August 1983.<sup>(78)</sup>

The report reproduced a questionnaire which the Special Rapporteur prepared and sent to Governments, specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies, regional organizations and NGOs in January 1984 for the purpose of obtaining information for the revision. As at 16 July 1984, replies had been received from 16 States, 4 specialized agencies and 12 NGOs. The Special Rapporteur proposed that he present the revised study in draft form to the Sub-Commission in 1985 and to the Commission on Human Rights in 1986, to enable him to take into consideration additional replies that might still be forthcoming. In the mean time, he invited the Sub-Commission members to provide him with their views on the issues set forth in the questionnaire, or on any other matter dealt with in the study.

Sub-Commission action. Having discussed the preliminary report of the Special Rapporteur, the Sub-Commission on 28 August 1984<sup>(79)</sup> requested him to continue his work and to submit a final report in 1985. It requested the Secretary-General to provide him with all possible assistance to facilitate his work.

Other human rights questions

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

A list of parties as at 24 August 1984 to the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims<sup>(1)</sup> was submitted by the Secretary-General in a report to the General Assembly.<sup>(2)</sup>

As at 31 December 1984, 47 States and the United Nations Council for Namibia had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts), as follows (those in italics acted in 1984):

Angola, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Belize, Bolivia, Botswana, Cameroon, Central African Republic, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Jordan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Niger, Norway, Oman, Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Seychelles, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire, United Nations Council for Namibia.

All of these parties had also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts), except Angola, Cuba, Cyprus, Mexico, Mozambique, the Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam and Zaire. France (acting in 1984) adhered only to Protocol II.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/77 on 13 December.

Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/44 of 8 December 1977, 34/51 of 23 November 1979 and 37/116 of 16 December 1982,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts,

Convinced of the continuing value of established humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts and the need to respect and ensure respect for these rules in all circumstances within the scope of the relevant international instruments pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts,

Mindful of the need for continued improvement of the implementation, and for further expansion, of the body of humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts,

Particularly mindful of the importance of the protection of the civilian population, especially women and children, against the effects of hostilities,

Noting the virtually universal acceptance of the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 concerning the protection of victims of armed conflicts, and their binding character for all parties,

Aware, however, of the fact that so far only a limited number of States have signed, ratified or acceded to the two Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions,

Noting at the same time with appreciation the continuing efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross to promote and to disseminate knowledge of the two additional Protocols,

1. Reiterates its call, contained in resolutions 34/51 and 37/116, to all States to consider at the earliest possible date the matter of ratifying or acceding to the two Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts;

2. Calls upon all States becoming parties to Protocol I to consider the matter of making the declaration provided for under article 90 of that Protocol;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report on the status of the Protocols based on information received from Member States;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts: report of the Secretary-General".

General Assembly resolution 39/77

13 December 1984 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/39/772) without vote, 5 December (meeting 63); 14-nation draft (A/C.6/39/L.6/Rev.1); agenda item 122.

Sponsors: Austria, Bangladesh, Costa Rica, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, Ghana, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Netherlands, Norway, Suriname, Sweden, Tunisia, Yugoslavia. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 6th Committee 7, 8, 63; plenary 99.

Israel stated that, while the draft resolution was by and large unobjectionable, it would have abstained had there been a vote. Despite its active role in the negotiations for the Protocols, the political terminology and transient considerations included in Protocol I prevented it from taking part in the consensus on the Protocol as a whole. The relative ease with which any group claiming to meet the political criteria of article 1, paragraph 4, could consider itself entitled to status under the Protocol served only to encourage and license terrorist activities just when the international community was trying to stamp out terrorism. Characterizing article 44 as diluting the requirements for prisoner-of-war status and for differentiating between combatants and civilians, Israel said this could increase invocation of the Protocol as a shelter for terrorist activity and the danger to the life and safety of innocent civilians.

The United States said it had taken part in the adoption of the text without prejudice to its position on the substance of the Protocols, which were under consideration by its Government.

Rights of the child

Draft convention

Working Group activities. As authorized by the Economic and Social Council in May 1983,<sup>(3)</sup> an open-ended Working Group, with Adam Lopatka (Poland) as Chairman/Rapporteur, met between 30 January and 3 February and on 2 March 1984 to continue work on a draft convention on the rights of the child.

The Group adopted articles 7 bis, 8 bis, 9 and 13. These concerned, respectively: the right of the child to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; protective measures against all forms of physical or mental injury or abuse, neglect or negligent treatment, maltreatment or exploitation including sexual abuse; access to information and material of social and cultural benefit, and protection from potentially injurious information; and the right to benefit from social security. The text of these articles, together with those previously adopted, were annexed to the Group's report.<sup>(4)</sup> Also annexed were proposed draft articles and amendments which the Group could not consider for lack of time.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 8 March,<sup>(5)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights decided to continue its work on the elaboration of the draft convention in 1985 as a matter of highest priority. It requested the Economic and Social Council to authorize a meeting of an open-ended working group for one week prior to the 1985 Commission session to speed up completion of the work. It recommended a draft text to that effect which served as the basis for the Council resolution below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/25 on 24 May 1984.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 38/114 of 16 December 1983, by which the General Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority at its fortieth session to the question of completing the draft convention on the rights of the child, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/39 of 27 May 1983, by which the Council authorized a meeting of an open-ended working group for a period of one week prior to the fortieth session of the Commission to facilitate and speed up the completion of the work on a draft convention on the rights of the child,

Considering that it was not found possible to complete the work on the draft convention during the fortieth session of the Commission,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/24 of 8 March 1984,

1. Authorizes a meeting of an open-ended working group for a period of one week prior to the forty-first session of the Commission on Human Rights to facilitate and speed up the completion of the work on a draft convention on the rights of the child;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit documents relating to the draft convention on the rights of the child to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-first session and to extend all facilities to the open-ended working group during the meeting to be held prior to the forty-first session of the Commission.

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 20(XXXIV) of 8 March 1978, 19(XXXV) of 14 March 1979, 36(XXXVI) of 12 March 1980, 26(XXXVII) of 10 March 1981, 1982/39 of 11 March 1982, 1983/52 of 10 March 1983 and 1984/24 of 8 March 1984, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1978/18 of 5 May 1978, 1978/40 of 1 August 1978, 1982/37 of 7 May 1982, 1983/39 of 27 May 1983 and 1984/25 of 24 May 1984 and Council decisions 1980/138 of 2 May 1980 and 1981/144 of 8 May 1981,

Reaffirming that children's rights are basic human rights and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Recalling that the year 1984 marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child which was proclaimed to the end that the child might have a happy childhood and enjoy for his own good and for the good of society the rights and freedoms set forth therein and be, in all circumstances, among the first to receive protection and relief,

Aware of the fact that, twenty-five years after the adoption of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, the situation of children in many parts of the world still continues to be far from satisfactory,

Stressing again the need to keep up the momentum of positive action for the sake of children, generated by the International Year of the Child,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations in promoting the well-being of children and their development,

Convinced of the significance of an international convention on the rights of the child as a standard-setting accomplishment of the United Nations, in the fields of social development and human rights, for protecting children's rights and ensuring their well-being,

Noting with satisfaction the widespread interest in the elaboration of an international convention on the rights of the child displayed by a great number of Member States, representing all geographical regions and socio-political systems, as well as by international organizations,

Noting with appreciation that further progress was made in the elaboration of a draft convention on the rights of the child during the fortieth session of the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Stresses the significance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child which has directly stimulated the idea of elaborating an international convention on the rights of the child;

2. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/25, in which the Council authorized a meeting of an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights for a period of one week prior to the forty-first session of the Commission to facilitate and speed up the completion of the work on a draft convention on the rights of the child;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority to this question and to make every effort at its forty-first session to complete the draft convention and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

4. Invites all Member States to offer their effective contribution to the completion of the draft convention on the rights of the child at the forty-first session of the Commission on Human Rights;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the working group to ensure its smooth and efficient work in the fulfilment of this important task;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Question of a convention on the rights of the child".

Child labour

On 12 March 1984, the Commission on Human Rights adopted two resolutions on child labour. By the first,<sup>(6)</sup> the Commission, noting the recommendation made by Special Rapporteur Abdelwahab Bouhdiba (Tunisia) that a seminar be held on the subject,<sup>(7)</sup> recommended a draft resolution which served as the basis for the Economic and Social Council action below.

By the second resolution,<sup>(8)</sup> the Commission called on Iran immediately to cease the use of children in the armed forces, especially in time of war. It invited the appropriate international organizations to offer all possible aid for the welfare of children currently held prisoners of war in Iraq, especially as regards their education and physical and mental health, or to assist those children desiring to settle in another Islamic country until their return to Iran became feasible.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/28 without vote on 24 May 1984.

Exploitation of child labour

The Economic and Social Council

Requests the Secretary-General to organize, in close cooperation with the International Labour Office, a seminar on ways and means of achieving the elimination of the exploitation of child labour in all parts of the world, within the framework of the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights.

In 1984, the youth-related issue of conscientious objection to military service was considered by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council (see above, under "Civil and political rights").

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/23, requested that the Secretary-General, in his report surveying implementation of the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Youth Year (1985) (see p. 929), pay adequate attention to the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work.

3. Invites Governments, in consultation with organizations of and for disabled persons, to inform the Secretary-General of their views and policies on these issues so that he can transmit them to the Sub-Commission, in accordance with its resolution 1982/1, for consideration at its thirty-seventh session;

4. Requests the Sub-Commission to appoint a special rapporteur to undertake a thorough study, in consultation with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat, of the causal connection between serious violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms and disability and of the progress made to alleviate problems, and to submit its views and recommendations, through the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Social Development, to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1986;

5. Decides exceptionally to include in the agenda of its first regular session of 1986 a special item on disabled persons to coincide with the approach, in 1987, of the mid-point of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, in order to allow for a full debate of the Special Rapporteur's report and the views and recommendations of the Sub-Commission, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Social Development on these and related issues.

draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.
NGO statement: E/1984/NGO/3.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Sub-Commission in 1982,<sup>(10)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report containing communications received in reply to his invitation for views on ways of promoting the human rights of disabled persons and for information on how the protection of such rights had been affected by reduced spending for social programmes. As at 4 July 1984, replies had been received from 11 States, 3 regional commissions, 2 United Nations bodies, 5 specialized agencies and 3 NGOs.<sup>(11)</sup>

Sub-Commission action. On 29 August 1984,<sup>(12)</sup> the Sub-Commission appointed Leandro Despouy (Argentina) as Special Rapporteur to undertake a study of human rights and disability, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in May (see above). The study was to include consideration of: human rights and humanitarian law violations resulting in disability or having an impact on disabled persons; apartheid in relation to disability; all forms of discrimination against the disabled; institutionalization and institutional abuse; and economic, social and cultural rights in relation to disability. It was also to include a preliminary outline of the topic of scientific experimentation in relation to disability.

The Sub-Commission requested the Special Rapporteur to take account of any relevant information received from Governments, specialized agencies, regional international organizations and NGOs, and to present the study to the Sub-Commission in 1985 for submission to the Commission in 1986. The Secretary-General was asked to provide all the assistance necessary to complete this task.

Human rights of the individual and international law

Work continued in 1984 on a study of the status of the individual and international law, mandated by the Commission on Human Rights in 1981 and authorized by the Economic and Social Council the same year.<sup>(13)</sup>

On 12 March 1984,<sup>(14)</sup> the Commission recommended for adoption a draft resolution that served as the basis for the Council action below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1984, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1984/31 without vote.

The status of the individual and contemporary international law

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of resolution 1983/17 of 5 September 1983 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/41 of 12 March 1984,

Recognizing the importance and usefulness of the study on the status of the individual and contemporary international law, in particular in the field of the protection of the human rights of the individual at regional and international levels,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Special Rapporteur, Mrs. Erica-Irene A. Daes, for her preliminary report and the excellent work she has so far accomplished in connection with the important study in progress on the status of the individual and contemporary international law,

1. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue her work on the above-mentioned study with a view to submitting her final report to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its thirty-seventh session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit, as soon as possible, a reminder, with the relevant questionnaire, to Governments, specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations which have not yet replied to that questionnaire to submit, if they so wish, their comments, views and information to the Special Rapporteur;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance she may require in her work.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/31

24 May 1984 Meeting 20 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/91) without vote, 17 May (meeting 15);
draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1984/14); agenda item 10.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In a progress report<sup>(15)</sup> to the Sub-Commission, Special Rapporteur Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece) stated that, in reply to the questionnaires circulated for the purpose of obtaining information for the proposed study, substantive comments had been received from 33 States, 5 specialized agencies, 2 regional organizations, 3 intergovernmental organizations, 24 NGOs and 2 liberation movements as at 10 February 1984.

The report set forth the basic purpose of the study and provided a provisional outline of its contents. It also reproduced the questionnaire addressed to Governments and that addressed to others.

Sub-Commission action. On 28 August 1984,<sup>(16)</sup> the Sub-Commission expressed appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for her progress report and requested her to continue work on the study and submit a final report in 1985. It asked the Secretary-General to give all the assistance needed for that task.

Human rights and science and technology

In 1984, human rights and scientific and technological progress was the subject of four resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, all adopted on 12 March. Two related to the use of such progress, as embodied in a 1975 declaration and for peace; a third, dealing with the topic in general, also touched on the question of computerized personal files (see below). By the fourth resolution,<sup>(17)</sup> the Commission, taking into account the recommendations of a group of eminent experts that had convened in 1975 to discuss the balance to be established between scientific and technological progress and the intellectual, spiritual, cultural and moral advancement of humanity, decided to consider in 1986 the implications of the topics indicated in the recommendations. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to invite the views of United Nations Members, organs and specialized agencies in this regard.

In addition to the question of computerized personal files, two other aspects were dealt with by the Sub-Commission: unlawful human experimentation and computer technology for dissemination of international human rights instruments. In adopting a resolution on each of these aspects on 29 August, the Sub-Commission was mindful of a Commission request of 12 March asking it to consider areas for study in connection with human rights and scientific and technological developments (see below).

By the first resolution,<sup>(18)</sup> the Sub-Commission submitted a draft resolution to the Commission for submission to the Economic and Social Council, by which the Council would authorize the Sub-Commission to entrust Driss Dahak (Morocco) with preparing a study on the current dimensions and problems arising from unlawful human experimentation, for submission in preliminary form in 1985.

In a related action,<sup>(12)</sup> authorizing a study on human rights and disability, the Sub-Commission asked that the study include, among other material, a preliminary outline of the topic of scientific experimentation and disability (see above).

By the second resolution,<sup>(19)</sup> the Sub-Commission also submitted a draft resolution by which the Commission in turn would recommend for Council action a draft authorizing the Sub-Commission to appoint a special rapporteur to undertake a study on the implications for human rights of recent advances in computer and micro-computer technology. The study would pay particular attention to the potential uses of such technology for the increased dissemination of international human rights instruments and of other human rights information.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a March 1983 request of the Commission on Human Rights,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to it in 1984 a report, with later addenda,<sup>(21)</sup> summarizing replies to his note verbale addressed in 1983 to all States and relevant international organizations and NGOs, inviting their views on the most effective ways of using the results of scientific and technological developments for the promotion and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

As at 30 November 1983, eight States, three United Nations bodies, five specialized agencies and five NGOs had replied. Two other States replied in January 1984. Additional replies were subsequently received.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 12 March 1984,<sup>(22)</sup> the Commission took note of the report of the Secretary-General and invited Member States and international organizations that had not done so to submit to him their views on the most effective ways of using scientific and technological developments to promote human rights. It requested from the Secretary-General an updated report in 1986 taking account of those views. It requested the Sub-Commission to consider areas for possible study on the subject, taking account also of those views and of existing studies.

Implementation of the 1975 Declaration on the use of scientific and technological progress

By 33 votes to none, with 10 abstentions, on 12 March 1984,<sup>(23)</sup> the Commission stressed the importance of States' implementation of the 1975 Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind,<sup>(24)</sup> in order to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms under conditions of scientific and technological progress. It called on States to use the achievements of such progress for peaceful economic, social and cultural development and to improve the well-being of peoples. It once again requested the Sub-Commission to undertake, as a matter of priority, a study on the use of those achievements to ensure the right to work and development.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly request<sup>(25)</sup> for information on measures taken to implement the 1975 Declaration, the Secretary-General submitted a report, with a later addendum,<sup>(26)</sup> containing substantive replies received, as at 10 August 1984, from two Governments, a regional commission and five specialized agencies. A third Government replied in September.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/133 on 14 December 1984, by recorded vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is one of the important factors in the development of human society,

Noting once again the great importance of the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3384(XXX) of 10 November 1975,

Considering that implementation of the said Declaration will contribute to the strengthening of international peace and the security of peoples and to their economic and social development, as well as to international co-operation in the field of human rights,

Seriously concerned that the results of scientific and technological progress could be used for the arms race to the detriment of international peace and security and social progress, human rights and fundamental freedoms and the dignity of the human person,

Recognizing that the establishment of the new international economic order calls in particular for an important contribution to be made by science and technology to economic and social progress,

Bearing in mind that the exchange and transfer of scientific and technological knowledge is one of the important ways to accelerate the social and economic development of the developing countries,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and scientific and technological developments,

1. Stresses the importance of the implementation by all States of the provisions and principles contained in the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind in order to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Calls upon all States to make every effort to use the achievements of science and technology in order to promote peaceful social, economic and cultural development and progress;

3. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take into account in their programmes and activities the provisions of the Declaration;

4. Invites those Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not yet done so to submit their information pursuant to General Assembly resolution 35/130 A of 11 December 1980;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give special attention, in its consideration of the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments", to the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration, taking into consideration the information submitted by Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/130 A;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

Human rights and peace

On 12 March 1984,<sup>(27)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 28 to 8, with 7 abstentions, reaffirmed the inherent right to life of all individuals, the safeguarding of which was an essential condition for the enjoyment of the entire range of economic, social and cultural, as well as civil and political, rights. It again stressed the need for the international community to make every effort to remove the growing threat of war, particularly nuclear war, to halt the arms race, to achieve general disarmament under effective international control and to prevent violations of the Charter principles, thus contributing to assuring the right to life. It also stressed the importance of such practical disarmament measures as releasing substantial resources that should be used for social and economic development.

The Commission appealed to States and all others concerned to take measures to ensure that the results of scientific and technological progress were used exclusively in the interests of international peace, for the benefit of mankind and for promoting universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. It called on all States to take measures to prohibit any propaganda for war, in particular that intended to legitimize the first use of nuclear weapons and in general to justify the admissibility of unleashing nuclear war.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a July 1984 report to the Sub-Commission,<sup>(28)</sup> the Secretary-General analysed the effects of gross violations of human rights on international peace and security. Prepared pursuant to a September 1983 Sub-Commission request,<sup>(29)</sup> the analysis was based on views and comments on the subject, transmitted to the Secretary-General in response to his request. As at 1 June, substantive information had been received from eight Governments, three specialized agencies, two regional organizations and nine NGOs.

The Secretary-General stated that the comments stressed the close interrelationship and interdependence of human rights and international peace and security. They noted in this regard the fundamental significance of the United Nations Charter, of specific provisions of many relevant United Nations instruments, declarations and resolutions, and of some non-United Nations instruments—all of them recognizing the manifold character of this relationship.

Certain human rights or groups of rights were identified, in respect of which the correlation between gross disregard for them and threats to peace and security were considered particularly close. Among these were the right to life, identified as a most fundamental right, and the act of preparing for war, in particular the arms race, as directly threatening that right. Similarly identified was the right to self-determination in all its dimensions, the violation of which seriously threatened international peace and security. Colonialist and neo-colonialist oppression, foreign occupation, racial discrimination, racism and apartheid, and persecution of minorities were cited as the main causes of a large number of ongoing armed struggles and escalation of conflict, as were denial of State sovereignty over its natural resources and denial to the masses of the most basic economic and social rights. Thus the World Council of Churches saw economic injustice, oppression and exploitation as the root causes of war.

As to civil and political rights, gross violations of the freedoms of opinion, expression and association, and information were regarded as detrimental to confidence-building and as sources of international tension. The need was recognized, however, for limitations to those freedoms if exercised for war propaganda and to promote hatred. Denial of the right to leave one's country was denounced as endangering friendly relations between States, and arbitrary arrests and detentions, and resulting mass exoduses, as compounding international tension.

Several methods were suggested for dealing with such gross violations bearing directly on international peace and security, notably: a preventive strategy calling for a network of research centres to conduct case-studies of successful solutions to human rights problems; a massive human rights education programme using such case-studies and enlisting mass media co-operation; promotion of popular participation in development, especially through trade union rights; and constant monitoring of the effects of gross violations by including the subject as a regular item in the Sub-Commission's agenda.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August 1984,<sup>(30)</sup> the Sub-Commission expressed appreciation to the Secretary-General for his comprehensive report. It stressed the threat that the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, posed for social and economic progress and the universal realization of all human rights. It requested the Secretary-General to prepare a guide to conventions and United Nations resolutions and reports relating to the adverse consequences of the arms race for the realization of human rights, to be submitted to it in 1985. The Sub-Commission also requested him to transmit a reminder to Governments and NGOs which had not done so to submit their views on the effects of gross human rights violations on international peace and security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/134 on 14 December 1984 by recorded vote.

Human rights and use of scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination of the peoples of the United Nations to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to reaffirm faith in the dignity and worth of the human person, to maintain international peace and security and to develop friendly relations among peoples and international co-operation in promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling also the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, and the Declaration on the Prevention of Nuclear Catastrophe, as well as General Assembly resolutions 36/92 I of 9 December 1981, on the non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war, and 37/100 C of 13 December 1982 and 38/73 G of 15 December 1983, on a convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 38/75 of 15 December 1983, the General Assembly resolutely, unconditionally and for all time condemned nuclear war as being contrary to human conscience and reason, as the most monstrous crime against peoples and as a violation of the foremost human right—the right to life,

Recalling its appeal for the conclusion of an international convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons with the participation of all the nuclear-weapon States,

Taking note with appreciation of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1982/7 of 19 February 1982, 1983/43 of 9 March 1983 and 1984/28 of 12 March 1984,

Reaffirming the inherent right to life,

Profoundly concerned that international peace and security continue to be threatened by the arms race in all its aspects, particularly the nuclear-arms race, as well as by violations of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and the self-determination of peoples,

Aware that all the horrors of past wars and all other calamities that have befallen people would pale in comparison with what is inherent in the use of nuclear weapons capable of destroying civilization on Earth,

Noting the pressing need for urgent measures towards general and complete disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, for the sake of life on Earth,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, any propaganda for war shall be prohibited by law,

Recalling the historic responsibility of the Governments of all countries of the world to remove the threat of war from the lives of people, to preserve civilization and to ensure that everyone enjoys his inherent right to life,

Convinced that for no people in the world today is there a more important question than that of the preservation of peace and of ensuring the cardinal right of every human being, namely, the right to life,

1. Reaffirms that all peoples and all individuals have an inherent right to life and that the safeguarding of this cardinal right is an essential condition for the enjoyment of the entire range of economic, social and cultural, as well as civil and political, rights;

2. Stresses once again the urgent need for the international community to make every effort to strengthen peace, remove the growing threat of war, particularly nuclear war, halt the arms race and achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control and prevent violations of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples, thus contributing to ensuring the right to life;

3. Stresses further the foremost importance of the implementation of practical measures of disarmament for releasing substantial additional resources, which should be utilized for social and economic development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries;

4. Calls upon all States, appropriate organs of the United Nations, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to take the necessary measures to ensure that the results of scientific and technological progress are used exclusively in the interests of international peace, for the benefit of mankind and for promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Angola, Benin, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, German Democratic Republic, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Poland, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 44-52, 56, 57, 60; plenary 101.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey.

France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United States said the text dealt with issues outside the Committee's competence, issues which the United States called highly contentious. A similar opinion was expressed by the United Kingdom, which said the text was more contentious than the resolutions of previous years. Likewise, the resolution adopted by the Commission on Human Rights in March had been considerably more contentious and had led to a narrowly defeated motion by a number of Western and developing countries to take no action on it because it was irrelevant to the Commission's work. Canada's vote stemmed from the references to previous resolutions it had rejected in the belief that, by doing so, it would advance the cause of peace.

Japan and the Netherlands felt that the focus of the text was not relevant to the agenda item. Belgium did not consider itself competent to take a decision on the material contained in the text. In the view of Finland, which spoke for the five

Nordic countries, the Committee was not the competent forum to discuss elimination of the arms race. They also had reservations on the fourth and fifth preambular paragraphs and on paragraph 5, based on their expressed reservation to article 20 (on the prohibition by law of war propaganda and advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred) of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.<sup>(31)</sup> Rwanda and Tunisia expressed reservations on certain formulations, primarily paragraph 5.

Introducing the draft, the USSR said it was based on the Charter and other basic documents and sought to preserve peace, the fundamental pre-condition for ensuring the right to life. Scientific and technological progress had great potential for solving the problems of hunger and illiteracy and ensuring social and economic progress, and United Nations bodies could contribute to that cause.

In China's view, nuclear disarmament was an important aspect of United Nations work and a common aspiration. It stressed, however, that it had abstained on the December 1983 resolution mentioned in the preamble by which the Assembly had condemned nuclear war<sup>(32)</sup> and that China's position in that regard had not changed.

In related actions, the Assembly, in resolution 39/11, approved a Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace. In resolution 39/155, on implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security (see p. 114), the Assembly considered that respect for and promotion of human rights in their civil, political, economic, social and cultural aspects, on the one hand, and the strengthening of international peace and security, on the other, reinforced each other.

Computerized personal files

In its resolution of 12 March 1984 dealing with human rights and scientific and technological developments generally,<sup>(22)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the 1983 final report on guidelines relating to computerized personal files,<sup>(20)</sup> presented to it by Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France).

On 29 August 1984,<sup>(33)</sup> the Sub-Commission, having endorsed in September 1983<sup>(20)</sup> the conclusions of the study, asked the Secretary-General to transmit to Member States and relevant international organizations the provisional draft guidelines with a request for their views thereon. Taking those views into account, the Special Rapporteur was to submit draft final guidelines to the Sub-Commission in 1985.

Chapter XIX

Women

Improvements in the status of women and reduction of discrimination had affected only a small minority and the condition of the majority of women in the developing world had changed at most marginally, the Secretary-General stated in an April 1984 report on social aspects of development.<sup>(1)</sup> The achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985) in helping women advance in the economic, social and political spheres were to be appraised by the 1985 World Conference to review the Decade.

In 1984, Governments and the United Nations system worked for the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women and continued with preparations for the 1985 Conference. The Commission on the Status of Women, meeting for its second session as the preparatory body for the Conference (Vienna, Austria, 27 February-7 March), made recommendations on the preparations which were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in May (decision 1984/125) and the General Assembly in December (resolution 39/129). Also in May, the Council considered that the objectives of the Decade had not been achieved and that activities towards equal treatment for women and their full integration in development should continue beyond 1985 (resolution 1984/16).

The Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women continued its work to augment the flow of resources to rural and poor urban women. By the end of the year, the Fund had approved over 400 projects valued at more than $24 million. In December, the Assembly decided on future arrangements for the Fund, establishing it under the name of United Nations Development Fund for Women as a separate entity in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) (resolution 39/125).

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirtieth session (Vienna, 15-25 February), recommended to the Economic and Social Council 11 draft resolutions for adoption. These resolutions dealt with a number of issues relating to the status of women, women in the United Nations system and items related to the Commission's work. In closed session, the Commission considered confidential and non-confidential communications on the status of women. The Commission also reviewed the status of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, to which 64 States had become parties at the end of 1984. Questions related to the Commission's work at its next (1986) session were dealt with by the Council in a resolution (1984/20) and a decision (1984/123) adopted in May.

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, at its third session (New York, 26 March-6 April), considered initial reports of six States parties on their implementation of the Convention. The Economic and Social Council, in May (resolution 1984/8), and the Assembly, in December (resolution 39/130), emphasized the importance of strictest compliance with the Convention and requested the parties to it to make all possible efforts to submit their implementation reports. The Council, also in May (resolution 1984/10), urged States to ratify or accede to the Convention in the light of the 1985 Conference.

In October, the Secretary-General reported on the world survey on the role of women in development. The Assembly, in December, recommended that the survey in its final form be considered in 1985 together with comments on it and related decisions by the World Conference (resolution 39/172). By resolution 39/124, it pledged to encourage the full participation of women in economic, social, cultural, civil and political affairs, and invited Governments to ensure implementation of the 1982 Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation.

The International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) continued work on studies relating to issues affecting women. Its Board of Trustees, at its fourth session (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, 23-28 January), approved a budget of $2.5 million for 1984-1985 and approved a draft statute for the Institute which was later endorsed by the Economic and Social Council (decision 1984/124). The Assembly, in December, took note of INSTRAW's activities as a valuable contribution to an increased role of women in development (resolution 39/122).

The Assembly, also in December, adopted resolutions on the role of women in society—as mothers and as participants in economic development and in public life (39/123); on the integration of women in all aspects of development (39/128); and on the improvement of the situation of women in rural areas (39/126).

Acting on recommendations of the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council adopted, in May, resolutions on women under apartheid (1984/17), Palestinian women (1984/18), violence in the family (1984/14) and violence against detained women (1984/19). It also made recommendations for the promotion of opportunities for young women (resolution 1984/15) and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the status and situation of elderly women (resolution 1984/13).

Topics related to this chapter. Middle East: territories occupied by Israel—Palestinian women. Operational activities for development: inter-agency co-operation. Industrial development: Fourth General Conference of UNIDO. Regional economic and social activities: Africa—women in development in Africa. Food: food problems. Social and cultural development: treatment of women by criminal justice system. United Nations officials: status of women in Secretariat.

Advancement of women

Decade for Women (1976-1985)

Implementation of the Programme for 1981-1985

In 1984, the United Nations continued to work with Governments and intergovernmental bodies to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women—adopted in 1980 by the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, and endorsed by the General Assembly later that year.<sup>(1)</sup> In December 1984, the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on the Status of Women, acting as the preparatory body for the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women on forward-looking strategies of implementation and on concrete measures to overcome obstacles to the achievement of the goals of the Decade.<sup>(2)</sup>

The report focused on the overall objectives of the Decade—equality, development and peace—discussing obstacles, strategies and measures for their implementation, and considered issues of special concern, such as the situation of poor women in rural and urban areas, women in areas of armed conflict, those who were elderly, young, abused, destitute or victims of prostitution, women who were deprived of their traditional means of livelihood or were the sole supporters of families, physically and mentally disabled women, and detained women. It also considered the problems of women living under apartheid, Palestinian women and those who were refugees or displaced, migrants, or in minority or indigenous groups.

The report also dealt with obstacles to and strategies for international and regional co-operation and measures for implementing those strategies, such as monitoring, technical co-operation, training and advisory services, institutional co-ordination, research and policy analysis, participation in decision-making, and information dissemination.

On 16 October,<sup>(3)</sup> the Sudan transmitted to the Secretary-General a resolution adopted by the Seventy-second Inter-Parliamentary Conference at Geneva on 29 September, on the need for parliamentary and other actions to formulate initiatives to achieve equal rights and responsibilities for men and women.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/16 without vote.

Implementation of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering General Assembly resolutions 3520(XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 35/136 of 11 December 1980,

Reaffirming the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Emphasizing the importance of undertaking, at the conclusion of the Decade, a critical review and appraisal of progress at the international, regional and national levels in the achievement of the goals of the Decade—equality, development and peace—and of the obstacles encountered in the implementation of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year and the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women, and also in developing a forward-looking perspective on the status of women,

Looking ahead to the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1985, at which the achievements of the Decade and the need to continue such achievements beyond the end of the Decade will be reviewed and appraised,

Conscious that further efforts are necessary to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women in every area of human activity,

Stressing that the objectives, strategies and measures to improve the socio-economic conditions of women should be an integral part of national development plans, as well as of international and development strategies, including the efforts for the establishment of the new international economic order,

Reaffirming the existence of the undeniable link between peace and development and the imperative need to halt the arms race, thereby releasing valuable additional resources that could be used for the development of the developing countries and could contribute to the well-being and prosperity of all,

Noting that, until genuine disarmament is achieved, women and men throughout the world must maintain their vigilance and do their utmost to achieve peace,

Taking into account the fact that millions of women are still experiencing untold sufferings and violations of human dignity resulting from different forms and manifestations of colonialism, foreign domination, apartheid and racial discrimination,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to fulfil the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and the socio-economic development objectives established by the international community, inter alia, the elimination of hunger and malnutrition, the achievement of full employment by the year 2000, health for all by the year 2000, appropriate population policies, the reduction of the infant mortality rate, the availability of safe water and adequate sanitary facilities by 1990, the attainment of a life expectancy of 60 years as a minimum by the year 2000, universal primary school enrolment by the year 2000, and the full participation of women as both agents and beneficiaries in all sectors and at all levels of the development process;

2. Emphasizes that foreign occupation, colonialism, apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, and the denial of the right of peoples to self-determination and of all universally recognized human rights, are serious impediments to peace and development;

3. Recommends that States, especially militarily significant States, in preparing their national programmes for social and economic development, should consider taking measures to convert some resources spent for military purposes to the promotion of social progress;

4. Considers that the objectives of the Decade—equality, development and peace—as reflected in the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year and in the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women have not yet been achieved;

5. Considers that the activities of the world community and of the United Nations should continue beyond the end of the United Nations Decade for Women and should be directed towards equal treatment for women and their full integration in development under conditions of peace.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/16

24 May 1984 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/93) without vote, 10 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1984/15), amended by Algeria, Mexico and Yugoslavia (E/1984/C.2/L.1); agenda item 12.

The sixth preambular paragraph was inserted by the three-nation amendment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/123, the General Assembly recommended that the 1985 World Conference take into account all aspects of the role of women in society in reviewing and appraising the achievements of the Decade and in formulating future policies.

In resolution 39/127, the Assembly stressed that the appointment of senior women's programme officers at the regional commissions represented a valuable contribution to the implementation of the goals of the Decade. It requested the Secretary-General to allocate sufficient resources in order to regularize all temporary and permanent senior women's programme officer posts at the commissions before the end of the Decade (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter III).

Preparations for the 1985 Conference

The Commission on the Status of Women met at Vienna from 27 February to 7 March 1984 for its second session as the preparatory body for the 1985 World Conference. In its report on the session,<sup>(4)</sup> it recommended that the Conference be held for 10 working days from 15 to 26 July 1985, plus two days of pre-Conference consultations.

Other draft decisions calling for action by the Economic and Social Council concerned preparatory work on basic Conference documentation, including that on women and children in the occupied Arab territories and other occupied territories, rural women, women under apartheid, refugee and displaced women, technology, illiteracy and the family; outstanding organizational aspects; and the Conference's provisional agenda. Decisions brought to the Council's attention were: that adoption of the Conference rules of procedure would be postponed until 1985 and that the Commission endorsed the practice of electing the head of the delegation of the host country as Conference President.

The Commission considered a number of notes and reports by the Secretary-General on different aspects of Conference preparations, among them a report on statistics on the situation of women and the status of a compilation of selected statistics and indicators for the Conference.<sup>(5)</sup> The report was part of a programme begun in 1983 to improve statistics on women.<sup>(6)</sup>

Recommendations on different aspects were made by an inter-agency meeting on preparations for the Conference (Vienna, 8 and 9 March 1984).<sup>(7)</sup> The meeting recommended to the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ(PROG)) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination that the final draft of the world survey of the role of women in development (see below, under "Women in society") be sent to lead agencies and organizations for comments. It also made recommendations concerning the format and deadline for contributions of agencies and organizations to the review and appraisal of the progress achieved and obstacles encountered at the national and international levels in attaining the goals and objectives of the Decade. It agreed that United Nations agencies and organizations would submit suggestions for strategies and concrete measures to overcome those obstacles, and that consultations of those bodies with the Conference secretariat would be ongoing. It further recommended that CCSQ(PROG) approve the convening of an inter-agency meeting immediately after the third session of the preparatory body to discuss, among other things, inter-agency mechanisms for Conference follow-up.

During the year, seven countries contributed $318,212 to the Trust Fund for the Preparatory Activities of the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women.

At an April meeting (see p. 366) of the Joint United Nations Information Committee in Paris, its Task Force on the 1985 World Conference heard reports of several organizations in order to identify a number of joint activities.<sup>(8)</sup> The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) drew attention to its Women and Development Kits, the World Bank stated that it was involved in issues on women and development, the United Nations Non-Governmental Liaison Service reported on its efforts to involve non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in the Conference, and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization reported on its programme on the status of women, which included support for NGO activities for the Conference and an evaluation of its work since 1975 to promote women's education and training.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1984, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1984/125.

Report of the Commission on the Status of Women acting as the Preparatory Body for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace on its second session

At its 19th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1984, the Council:

(a) Took note of the report of the Commission on the Status of Women acting as the Preparatory Body for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women on its second session;

(b) Approved the recommendations contained in that report and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/129

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/702) without vote, 28 November (meeting 53); draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.3/39/L.21); agenda item 93 (b). Financial implications. ACABQ, A/39/71 Add.11; 5th Committee, A/39/812; S-G, A/C.3/39/L.44, A/C.5/39/64.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 23-33, 42, 47, 50, 53; 5th Committee 45; plenary 101.

The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 11 December decided that, should the Assembly adopt the draft that was to become resolution 39/129, additional appropriations of $222,200 would be required for 1984-1985. That amount, recommended by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), was $51,600 less than the $273,800 estimated by the Secretary-General for non-conference-servicing requirements, additional to $1,958,200 for conference-servicing costs.

Voluntary Fund

Status of the Fund

In 1984, the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women continued to provide financial and technical assistance to promote economic growth, employment and social equity, with special attention to rural and poor urban women. Contributions to the Fund by Governments totalled $3.1 million, while expenditures were almost $3.8 million. By the end of the year, the Fund had approved over 400 projects valued at more than $24 million. The largest number of projects were for employment, followed by human resources development, planning, energy and information activities.

In 1984, the Fund's African Investment Plan moved into its operational phase, focusing on credit support for projects in such sectors as agriculture and energy. Its Food Cycle Technologies Project, carried out with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, UNDP and UNICEF, identified prototype food technologies of demonstrated value to women and promoted their wider use.<sup>(9)</sup>

The Fund's activities from October 1983 to September 1984, its financial situation and resources, and a summary of the Consultative Committee's recommendations at its fifteenth and sixteenth sessions were detailed in an October report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly.<sup>(10)</sup>

Following a December 1983 Assembly request,<sup>(11)</sup> the Secretary-General also included in his report extracts from the forward-looking assessment undertaken on the Fund's activities. In conclusion, he stated that the assessment showed that the objectives of Fund-supported projects were consonant with regional and national strategies for promoting development in different areas, helping combat poverty, illiteracy and unemployment and promoting agricultural production, self-reliance, employment, health, nutrition, education, training and institution-building.

To further its role as technical co-operation mechanism for women and development, two major implications for the Fund emerged from the assessment: on the one hand, it needed to concentrate on projects whose potential multiplier effects were greatest and thus might have the greatest impact on national development; on the other, closer co-operation with other United Nations and bilateral and multilateral organizations was desirable. In addition, the mobilization of resources implied for the Fund a higher level of visibility among the donor communities.

As at 31 December 1984, Government contributions and pledges to the Fund were as follows:

Recognizing that requests for funding far exceeded resources, the Consultative Committee identified two priority areas for the future: making technical assistance available to Governments to increase the involvement of women in mainstream development activities, and working with local and national women's groups to support programmes on women in development. Members of the Committee stressed the importance of preserving the Fund's unique identity and capacity to innovate while making even greater use of the existing development assistance agencies.

Future arrangements

In October 1984, the Secretary-General submitted two reports related to future arrangements for the Fund. By the first,<sup>(12)</sup> he presented the views of 24 Member States indicating wide agreement that the Fund should continue its activities as an autonomous unit within UNDP in order to be closely involved in its operational work.

In the second report,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General examined options for the administrative location of the Fund: under the auspices of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, at Vienna; under the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development in New York; or as a special fund in association with UNDP.

With regard to the last option, the Secretary-General stated that it would imply recognition of the key role already played by UNDP in the administration of more than 90 per cent of the Fund's resources; that it would provide a basis for further developing the Fund's role in promoting wider recognition of women's contribution to development, by giving it better access to follow-up and multiplier financing by other United Nations funds, and to UNDP's technical capacities, activities and other resources, including country programming and donor round-tables; that it would further the Fund's image as an integral part of United Nations development assistance; and that it would help maintain low overhead costs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/125 without vote.

Arrangements for the future management of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/133 of 16 December 1976, containing the criteria and arrangements for the management of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women,

Recalling also its resolution 36/129 of 14 December 1981, in which it decided that the Fund should continue its activities beyond the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Stressing the urgency of determining at its current session the most effective arrangements for continuing the activities of the Fund beyond the Decade in view of the need for ensuring the long-term stability of the Fund,

Recalling further its resolution 38/106 of 16 December 1983, in which, inter alia, it decided that, when considering the reports of the Secretary-General on the future of the Fund, all possible options would be reviewed in depth,

Reaffirming that the Fund has a unique contribution to make to the achievement of the goals of the Third United Nations Development Decade, and even beyond it,

Recognizing the important actual and potential contribution by women to development, as evidenced in the forward-looking assessment of the activities assisted by the Fund and the crucial role of the Fund as a specialized resource base for development co-operation, and the need for continued assistance to activities directly benefiting women,

Considering, accordingly, that it is of paramount importance to establish a future organizational framework that will secure the ability of the Fund to act as a catalytic agent on the main United Nations development co-operation system,

Considering also the innovative and experimental activities of the Fund directed to strengthening both governmental and non-governmental institutional capacities to ensure access for women to development co-operation resources and their full participation at all levels in the development process,

Stressing that general questions of development and access of women to development resources have, as a common objective, to create conditions which will improve the quality of life for all,

Welcoming the completion of the forward-looking assessment of the activities assisted by the Fund and the findings and conclusions with regard to women and development and their implications for technical co-operation agencies and organizations,

Conscious of the highly specialized professional competence of the Fund in the area of development activities for women and the need for strengthening that competence,

Aware of the broad range of linkages of the Fund with national Governments, national women's groups, non-governmental organizations and women's research institutes, besides its close co-operation with United Nations development agencies, including the regional commissions,

Taking into consideration the moderate size of the Fund and its continued need to draw on the operational capacity of other agencies and, in this regard, expressing its appreciation to the United Nations Development Programme for its continuing technical and resource assistance to the Fund,

Expressing appreciation to the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and its Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs for their contribution to the work of the Fund during its initial operational years,

Taking note of the reports of the Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women on its fifteenth and sixteenth sessions, referred to in the report of the Secretary-General prepared in accordance with General Assembly resolution 38/106,

Taking note also of the reports of the Secretary-General on the Fund,

1. Decides that the activities of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women shall be continued through establishment of a separate and identifiable entity in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme, which will play an innovative and catalytic role in relation to the United Nations overall system of development co-operation;

2. Endorses the modalities for the arrangements between the Fund and the United Nations Development Programme for the future management of the Fund, as contained in the annex to the present resolution, and decides that these arrangements shall enter into force at the latest on 1 January 1986;

3. Reaffirms the criteria laid down in its resolution 31/133 on the use of the resources of the Fund and the guidelines established on the advice of the Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, emphasizing the use of these resources for technical co-operation benefiting women;

4. Requests the Consultative Committee at its seventeenth session, to be held from 25 to 29 March 1985, to propose an appropriate future title for the Fund;

5. Stresses the need for close and continuous working relationships between the Fund and the bodies, organs and organizations of the United Nations system concerned with women's issues and development co-operation, in particular with the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and its Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs;

6. Expresses its appreciation for the contributions to the Fund made by Governments and non-governmental organizations, which have a vital role to play in maintaining and increasing the financial viability of the Fund and the effectiveness of its work;

7. Notes with concern that contributions to the Fund have not been sufficient to enable it to respond to all the deserving requests for technical assistance that it has received;

8. Urges, accordingly, Governments to continue and, where possible, to increase their contributions to the Fund, and calls upon those Governments that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Fund;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, after consultation with the Consultative Committee at its seventeenth session, to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the arrangements he has made with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for the future of the Fund;

10. Requests that the Consultative Committee monitor the process of implementing the arrangements for the management of the Fund contained in the annex to the present resolution and that the Committee's views on this matter be reflected fully in the annual report on the Fund to the General Assembly, particularly in its initial years.

ANNEX

Arrangements for the management of the United Nations Development Fund for Women

1. The United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), hereinafter referred to as "the Fund", is hereby established as a separate and identifiable entity in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme. The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, hereinafter referred to as "the Administrator", shall be accountable for all aspects of the management and operations of the Fund. There shall be a Consultative Committee to advise the Administrator on all policy matters relating to the activities of the Fund in accordance with paragraph 13 below. The following arrangements for the management of the Fund shall apply:

1. Transfer of existing resources, solicitation and acknowledgement of pledges and collection of contributions
2. The Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and its subsidiary Supplementary Trust Fund, which was established by a memorandum of understanding between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Administrator on 25 June 1980, are hereby liquidated and their assets transferred to the Fund.
3. Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other donors may contribute to the Fund.
4. The Fund shall be included among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities. The Administrator shall assist with the mobilization of financial resources for the Fund. The contributions to the Fund and the bank accounts into which they are deposited shall be in accordance with the applicable Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations Development Programme.

II. Operations and control

5. All operations of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women are hereby transferred to the Fund.
6. The Administrator, in consultation with the Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, shall appoint a Director of the Fund, hereinafter referred to as "the Director", bearing in mind the relevant qualifications and experience with technical co-operation, including those benefiting women. The Administrator shall appoint the staff of the Fund in consultation with the Director, pursuant to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations and the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations.
7. The Administrator shall delegate the management of the Fund and its administration, including responsibility for the mobilization of resources, to the Director, who shall have the authority to conduct all matters related to its mandate and who shall be accountable directly to the Administrator.
8. The operations of the Fund shall be conducted taking into account the innovative and catalytic nature of its development co-operation activities for women and its existing criteria and operational procedures. The present procedures of the Fund, including those governing the identification, formulation, approval, appraisal, execution and evaluation of projects established in accordance with the requirements set out in the criteria adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 31/133 and on the advice of the Consultative Committee, shall remain in force. Subject to the arrangements for the management of the Fund, the regulations, rules and directives of the United Nations Development Programme shall be applied to the operations of the Fund.
9. The resources of the Fund shall be used mainly within two priority areas: first, to serve as a catalyst, with the goal of ensuring the appropriate involvement of women in mainstream development activities, as often as possible at the pre-investment stages; secondly, to support innovative and experimental activities benefiting women in line with national and regional priorities. Fund resources should be a supplement to and not a substitute for the mandated responsibilities of other United Nations development co-operation organizations and agencies, including the United Nations Development Programme.

10. All the administrative and programme support costs of the Fund shall be met from its own resources.

11. The regional bureaux, other organizational units and field offices of the United Nations Development Programme shall continue to assist the operations of the Fund, inter alia, by joint programming missions to ensure the involvement of women in technical co-operation activities financed by the United Nations Development Programme and by supporting the project cycle activities of projects financed by the Fund. For its part, the Fund shall participate in existing machineries for co-ordination of technical co-operation at headquarters and field levels.

12. The proposed biennial budget for the administrative costs of the Fund shall be reviewed initially by the Consultative Committee prior to its submission by the Administrator for approval by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme.

III. The Consultative Committee and the relationship of the Fund to other organizations

13. The President of the General Assembly shall designate, with due regard for the financing of the Fund from voluntary contributions and to equitable geographical distribution, five Member States to serve on the Consultative Committee for a period of three years. Each State member of the Consultative Committee shall designate a person with relevant expertise and experience in development co-operation activities, including those benefiting women, to serve on the Committee. The Committee shall advise the Administrator on all matters of policy affecting the activities of the Fund, including the application of the criteria set forth by the General Assembly in respect of the use of the Fund.

14. The Fund shall establish and maintain close and continuous working relationships with other United Nations organs, in particular the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and its Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the regional commissions, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, as well as through the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination with the specialized agencies and other United Nations entities concerned, in particular the International Fund for Agricultural Development. Co-operation shall also be established for the sharing of information with the Commission on the Status of Women and other relevant global and regional intergovernmental bodies concerned with development and with women. As appropriate, the activities of the Fund may be drawn to the attention of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women.

IV. Reporting and auditing

15. The Director shall prepare substantive and financial progress reports on the use of the Fund for the Administrator to submit to the Consultative Committee.

16. Taking into account the advice of the Consultative Committee, the Administrator shall submit to the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme an annual report on the operations, management and budget of the Fund. He shall submit a similar report to the General Assembly, to be referred to the Second Committee for consideration of its technical co-operation aspects and also to the Third Committee.

17. The Commission on the Status of Women shall also be provided with the annual reports referred to in paragraph 16 above.

18. The Administrator shall be responsible for reporting all the financial transactions of the Fund and shall issue annual financial statements in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations Development Programme.

19. The Fund shall be subject to the internal and external auditing procedures provided for under the financial regulations, rules and directives of the United Nations Development Programme.

The Commission on the Status of Women held its thirtieth session at Vienna from 15 to 25 February 1984. In its report,<sup>(14)</sup> the Commission recommended 11 draft resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. These dealt with the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (see below), equal opportunity for women employed in the United Nations system and concerns of women within the United Nations (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter III), implementation of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women (see above), future work of the Commission (see below) and a number of issues relating to the status of women (see below). Also for action by the Council, the Commission recommended a draft decision on the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1986 session.

In accordance with a May 1983 Council resolution,<sup>(15)</sup> the Commission appointed at its February 1984 session a five-member Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women. The Group studied a list of 121 communications and the replies of some Governments, many of them concerning the separation of families and of persons wishing to marry. The Group considered those as not within its mandate but within that of the Commission on Human Rights, since they related equally to men and women. It identified only one trend which it wished to draw to the Commission's attention: the widespread physical violence against women in official custody. After having heard the Working Group's report in closed session on 23 February, the Commission decided to adopt it and incorporate it into its own report.

1979 Convention on discrimination against women

As at 31 December 1984, there were 64 States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted in 1979.<sup>(16)</sup> The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982 under the Convention,<sup>(17)</sup> held its third session in New York from 26 March to 6 April 1984 to consider reports of States parties submitted under article 18. The Economic and Social Council, in May, adopted two resolutions relating to the Convention's implementation and the Committee's work. The Assembly dealt with the subject in December.

Implementation of the Convention

Communication. On 16 October 1984, the Sudan transmitted to the Secretary-General a resolution adopted by the Seventy-second Inter-

Parliamentary Conference at Geneva on 29 September, urging all Governments which had not done so to become parties to the Convention.<sup>(3)</sup>

CEDAW action. At its third session,<sup>(18)</sup> CEDAW considered initial reports of six States parties on measures they had adopted to give effect to the Convention, out of 21 reports received since the Convention entered into force in 1981.<sup>(19)</sup>

Among other matters, the Committee decided that reservations and objections by States parties should be annexed to future country reports. It agreed to discuss in future how to interpret article 21 of the Convention, under which the Committee could make suggestions and general recommendations to the General Assembly, based on the examination of country reports. With regard to its contribution to the 1985 World Conference to review the Decade for Women (see above, requested by the Commission on the Status of Women as the preparatory body, the Committee agreed to recommend to the Economic and Social Council that the United Nations Secretariat prepare a report on achievements and obstacles experienced by States parties in implementing the Convention, to be discussed in draft form at the Committee's 1985 session.

The Committee adopted the report on its second session,<sup>(20)</sup> held in August 1983,<sup>(21)</sup> on 28 March 1984 and the report on its third session on 6 April.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Morocco.

In the Third Committee, the United States explained that it had requested a recorded vote because of the financial implications of having summary records for CEDAW; it was vital to control the volume of documentation. The USSR also objected to the financial implications of providing summary records which, it felt, would not promote the efficacy of the work of CEDAW. Japan hoped that maximum efforts would be made to reduce expenditures, and Brazil reserved its position on paragraph 9 which it thought should be taken up by the Fifth Committee. Norway urged for support of its position that CEDAW be accorded the same facilities as other bodies which monitored the implementation of human rights instruments. The United Kingdom stressed that, if CEDAW was provided with summary records, it should not include summaries of its debates in its report. Stating that certain provisions of the Convention conflicted with its national legislation, Morocco declared it would abstain for reasons which had nothing to do with financial implications.

Introducing the text on behalf of 37 nations, Sweden said CEDAW had so far been provided with summary records only on a provisional basis; the provision of summary records would place it on an equal footing with such bodies as the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

Ratifications, accessions and signatures

During 1984, 11 States (Bangladesh, Brazil, Democratic Yemen, Equatorial Guinea, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Liberia, Mauritius, Republic of Korea, Spain) ratified or acceded to the Convention, bringing to 64 the total number of States parties.<sup>(23)</sup> In a report to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General listed the States which had signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention as at 17 July 1984.<sup>(24)</sup> Annexed to the report were reservations made since 28 July 1983 by five States.

Research and Training

Institute for the Advancement of Women

In a March 1984 report to the Economic and Social Council<sup>(25)</sup> and an October note to the General Assembly's Third Committee,<sup>(26)</sup> the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) and the Secretary-General, respectively, provided information on INSTRAW activities. The Institute continued work on a series of studies on transfer and development of technology and on the choice of technology as it affected women, and it started similar work on trade, finance and monetary issues as they affected women. Other work focused on women and the self-reliance of developing countries, the role of women in food production, and the relationship of energy policies to women. In its subprogramme on the role of women in the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) (see Chapter IX of this section), the Institute convened an interregional seminar (Cairo, Egypt, 12-16 March)<sup>(27)</sup> and issued a pamphlet on women and water supply and sanitation.

A consultative meeting (Santo Domingo, 17-22 September) reviewed nine studies on the role of women in international economic relations, and a workshop (Vienna, 3-7 December) convened jointly with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) prepared modules for training women for managerial and entrepreneurial activities in industry. During the year, the Institute published a booklet on its training programme policy designed to overcome high costs and inadequate techniques of training.

The Board of Trustees of INSTRAW held its fourth session at the Institute's headquarters at Santo Domingo (23-28 January), reviewing the progress of work, the programme budget for 1984-1985 and the draft statute of the Institute.<sup>(25)</sup> The Board requested that the results of its 1982-1983 activities be published; that the Institute acquire basic equipment needed for its permanent headquarters; that particular attention be given to the role of women in international economic relations; and that the results of its activities concerning statistics on the situation of women, as well as the recommendations on the incorporation of women into development planning, be brought to the attention of relevant organizations. It also expressed satisfaction that the Steering Committee for Co-operative Action to support the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade had adopted its strategy for enhancing women's participation in these activities and would hold its next meeting at INSTRAW headquarters. It agreed that major efforts were needed in fund-raising.

The Board approved the proposed programme budget for 1984-1985, with the exception of an element on training modules, and approved the activities and posts proposed on the basis of allocations of $2.5 million for the two years. It recommended that funds be maintained for training programmes and fellowships; stressed the value of decentralized programme implementation in co-operation with the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations; and expressed the wish to consider a long-term plan outlining the priorities for the Institute's programme activities, indicating that each programme should have an evaluation component. The Board also adopted a draft statute for the Institute, which was later approved by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

The Board decided in principle to accept the invitation of Cuba to hold its fifth session at Havana, subject to the signing of an agreement between Cuba and the United Nations and on the understanding that all additional costs would be borne by Cuba.

The statute was transmitted to the Assembly by a 26 September 1984 note of the Secretary-General.<sup>(29)</sup> ACABQ, in a report of 17 October,<sup>(30)</sup> after clarifying the wording of several provisions, recommended that the Assembly endorse the statute. In addition, it proposed that the Secretary-General review the text to ensure that maximum clarity was obtained when similar provisions were used in future statutes of other United Nations organs.

The Assembly in 1984 did not act on a draft resolution recommended to it by the Fifth Committee,<sup>(31)</sup> by which the Assembly would have endorsed the statute and concurred with the observations of ACABQ regarding its administrative and financial aspects. The Fifth Committee approved the draft, orally proposed by its Chairman, without objection on 24 October. (The matter was subsequently taken up by the Assembly in 1985.)

tober,<sup>(26)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly's Third Committee that resources available to INSTRAW as of 30 June 1984 were $2.53 million and that 46 States had thus far contributed to its Trust Fund.

Contributions by Governments to the United Nations Trust Fund for INSTRAW in 1984 totalled $483,492, compared to $473,442 in 1983;<sup>(32)</sup> pledges for 1985 amounted to $459,289 (see table below).

In resolution 39/122, the General Assembly invited Governments and intergovernmental organizations to contribute to the Trust Fund.

Status of women

During the year, the United Nations addressed several issues relating to the status of women, including the specific situations of women under apartheid, Palestinian women, young women, elderly women, and the problems of violence that were specific to women in the family and within the criminal justice system (for details, see below).

The Economic and Social Council adopted two resolutions on women in the United Nations system (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter III). It requested the Secretary-General to promote the recruitment and hiring of women in Secretariat Professional posts at middle and high levels (1984/11) and to examine ways to integrate the needs and concerns of women into all planning and programme activities (1984/12).

The 1984 International Conference on Population also made a number of recommendations on the status of women (see Chapter XIV of this section). On 17 April,<sup>(1)</sup> Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a document on the situation of women and children in Democratic Kampuchea (see p. 217).

Women under apartheid

In January 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of women and children living under apartheid, in accordance with a 1982 Economic and Social Council decision.<sup>(3)</sup>

The report noted that political and legal restrictions and migrant labour policies meant that families very rarely lived together, since men worked as migrant labourers, leaving their families behind in impoverished bantustans, or women worked in white areas where other family members were not permitted to stay.

Apart from domestic service, where 38 per cent of all employed African women worked, employment opportunities for women were generally restricted to the two sectors with the lowest pay and the greatest exploitation—agriculture and border industries—where they were not protected by any legislation on working hours or wages. Although most African women were excluded from industrial employment, it was reported that those who did work in factories had the same conditions as men, but only half the wage. Urban domestic workers worked from 10 to 11 hours a day, and as farm labourers black women often worked 12 to 14 hours daily with no paid leave or overtime and the risk of losing their house if they lost their job.

In rural areas, only a few women had access to land and few were able to produce enough food for themselves and their children; they suffered from epidemics due to their living conditions and lack of medical services. Educational policies, which did not provide compulsory education for black children but turned hundreds away from school for lack of places, led to low attendance rates especially among girls and restricted black children to inferior education. The report also gave an overview of activities to promote awareness of the plight of women and children under apartheid, and of assistance to women and children in southern Africa.

In 1984, the Special Committee against Apartheid continued to pay special attention to the plight of women and children in South Africa (see p. 175).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1984, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1984/17.

Women under apartheid

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of women and children living under racist minority régimes and in the occupied Arab territories and other occupied territories,

Bearing in mind the conclusions of the International Conference on Women and Apartheid, held at Brussels from 17 to 19 May 1982, and of the Declaration adopted by the Conference,

Noting the wide observance of 9 August annually as the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 36/172 K of 17 December 1981,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Committee against Apartheid and its Task Force on Women and Children for giving special attention to the plight of women and children under apartheid, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 36/172 K;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the International Committee of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia for undertaking activities in support of women and children living under apartheid, and urges the Committee to exert greater efforts in support of women and children living under apartheid;

3. Urges all Governments, United Nations bodies, international, regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, women's and anti-apartheid groups and other concerned groups to give the highest priority to measures of assistance to women in South Africa and Namibia until the end of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and beyond;

4. Invites the Special Committee against Apartheid and its Task Force on Women and Children to continue their activities in promoting the widest possible dissemination of information concerning women and children living under apartheid;

5. Appeals to all Governments, United Nations bodies, international, regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, women's and anti-apartheid groups and other concerned groups to support the various projects of the national liberation movements and front-line States designed to assist refugee women and children from South Africa and Namibia;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-first session a preliminary report on measures of assistance provided to women inside South Africa and Namibia and to women from South Africa and Namibia who have become refugees as the result of the practice of apartheid;

7. Calls upon all women's organizations to support the women of Namibia in their efforts to attain independence, in accordance with Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/17

24 May 1984 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/93) without vote, 10 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1984/15); agenda item 12.

Palestinian women

Further to a 1982 decision of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General reported in January 1984 to the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of Palestinian women and children living in the occupied Arab territories,<sup>(2)</sup> where practices by the occupying authorities (see p. 315 and p. 810) seriously affected the economic status of women, their social position and psychological well-being, employment and working conditions. Since there were fewer Arab farms and villages for self-employment, more women and children worked in seasonal agriculture and in Israeli enterprises set up in the occupied territories where wages were up to 50 per cent less than for equivalent work in Israel. To work in Israel, Palestinian women and children were engaged on short-term work permits without job security or employment benefits. Palestinian women were thus drawn away from their traditional position in society without obtaining permanent jobs or prospects for advancement. This had adverse effects on family and community life, on the education of children and the preservation of traditions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1984, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1984/18.

Situation of Palestinian women within and outside the occupied Arab territories

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned about the prevailing living conditions of Palestinian women within and outside the occupied Arab territories,

Recognizing that the mass uprooting of Palestinian women from their homeland seriously affects their participation and integration in the development process,

Noting that no comprehensive study relating to the status of Palestinian women within and outside the occupied Arab territories has been conducted in the United Nations system since the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held at Copenhagen from 14 to 30 July 1980,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other appropriate United Nations organizations,

Taking note of chapter II of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of Palestinian women and children in the occupied Arab territories, submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirtieth session,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an updated version of that report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-first session;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report on the situation of Palestinian women living within and outside the occupied Arab territories and to submit it to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-second session;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit an interim report on the preparation of that study to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-first session;

4. Invites all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and United Nations bodies to extend all necessary assistance to the Secretary-General in this regard.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/18

24 May 1984 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/93) without vote, 10 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1984/15); agenda item 12.

Young women

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted without vote resolution 1984/15.

Promotion of opportunities for young women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing that 1985 is the culminating year of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Recognizing also that 1985 has been designated International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Recognizing further that 1985 presents an opportunity to focus on the roles of young women and their participation in all activities, such as festivals, meetings, and other international youth forums to mark the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Bearing in mind that young women were singled out for priority attention by the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, particularly in its resolution 27,

Affirming that youth is the period of growth, development and apprenticeship for the adult roles of work, citizenship and parenthood, from which all of society will benefit,

Affirming also that youth should be a period of discovery and joy in living,

Considering that young women who become mothers too early are not only deprived of their youth but are not prepared for the responsibilities of parenthood and are subject to a higher health risk,

Recognizing that, while girls and young women are found in societies at all levels of development, the world is in a period of technological revolution affecting all and women must therefore be equal partners with men in shaping and benefiting from that revolution,

Stressing that those young women who lack sufficient nutrition, education, appropriate training and health are ill-prepared for their adult roles in this changing world and are thus vulnerable to economic, social and sexual exploitation,

1. Recommends that Member States should take appropriate steps to ensure that girls and young women are motivated to choose, and sufficiently trained to be chosen for, work at all levels and all the functions of a developing economy and society;

2. Recommends also that Member States should assist families to give equal support, guidance and encouragement to young women and men;

3. Recommends further that Member States should direct special assistance to girls and young women who are socially and economically disadvantaged;

4. Recommends that specialized agencies should undertake projects to promote global, regional and local action to accelerate the improvement in the education and training, employment and health status of girls and young women in accordance with their needs and with global, regional and local conditions;

5. Recommends also that specialized agencies, Member States and non-governmental organizations should undertake projects to develop cultural and sports activities aimed at promoting better international understanding and the equal right of young women and young men to fitness;

6. Recommends that special attention should be paid, in multilateral and bilateral co-operation programmes and projects, to the training and development of young women as managers of projects and as participants in articulating the development needs of youth;

7. Recommends that the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year and the Secretary-General should, in all their reports, take special account of the needs of young women in rural and urban areas and of the problems they face.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1984/13 without vote.

Question of elderly women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the important conclusions and recommendations of the International Plan of Action on Aging adopted by the World Assembly on Aging, in particular paragraphs 11, 20 (b) and (c), 25 (m), 31 (g), 45, 66 (recommendations 25 and 26), 67 (recommendations 27, 28 and 29), 72 (recommendation 36 (c)) and 89, concerning elderly women,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 38/27 of 22 November 1983, in which the Assembly recognized that women had a longer life expectancy than men and that they would increasingly constitute a majority of the elderly population of the world,

Reaffirming resolution 4 of the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, in which the Conference emphasized that the increase in the life expectancy of women had not been dealt with comprehensively,

Appreciating that at the World Assembly on Aging special attention was given to the problems faced by some elderly women, namely, income security, education, employment, housing, health and community support services and absence of social contacts,

Believing that more data on the situation of the aging should be collected, specifically to determine the needs of elderly women and to formulate appropriate solutions,

Recalling the request made by the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace in its resolution 4 that such data should be submitted to Member States participating in the Conference and to the Commission on the Status of Women,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, within existing budgetary resources and in accordance with the established priorities of the work of the Commission on the Status of Women, an information report on the status and situation of elderly women in their societies, their social, health and economic needs, and their entitlements as compared to those of men, comparing single, divorced and married women and widows on the basis of reports, discussions and recommendations, in particular those of the World Assembly on Aging;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit that report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-first session with a view to recommending necessary action relating to the plight of elderly women throughout the world;

3. Decides to include the question of elderly women under the appropriate item of the agenda of the thirty-first session of the Commission on the Status of Women.

Violence against women

Based on recommendations of the Commission on the Status of Women at its February 1984 session, the Economic and Social Council, in May, adopted two resolutions on the subject of violence against women. By the first, on violence in the family, it urged Member States to effect a systematic information exchange, to draw attention to the negative consequences of such violence and to formulate national solutions, and requested the Secretary-General to convene a seminar on the topic. By the second resolution, the Council called for measures to eradicate violence against detained women.

*Violence in the familyECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1984/14 without vote.

Violence in the family

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, and the subtheme "Employment, Health and Education",

Recalling resolution 5 of the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace on battered women and violence in the family,

Recalling also Council resolution 1982/22 of 4 May 1982 on abuses against women and children,

Recognizing that violence within the family has serious negative consequences for all the individuals concerned and follows patterns of abuse that are frequently cyclical, presenting serious problems for society as a whole,

Further recognizing that violence within the family is found among various population groups,

Concerned that information on the nature of this problem and its causes is often concealed and thus is not widely available and that efforts to prevent violence in the family, to provide assistance to the victims and to prevent recurrences need greater public awareness and publicity,

Aware that many Governments and non-governmental organizations have conducted research into this issue and initiated programmes both to support victims and to treat abusers,

Recognizing that the problem of family violence is a long-standing and complex issue and needs serious and thoughtful attention,

Convinced that a more thorough exchange of information and experiences on this subject between States Members of the United Nations, organizations of the United Nations and non-governmental organizations could draw increasing attention to the problem and contribute to the development of international solutions,

1. Calls upon the Secretary-General to invite Member States, organizations of the United Nations and non-governmental organizations to provide the United Nations Secretariat with information on family violence and descriptions of successful programmes on the subject, or to supplement information already provided;

2. Urges Member States to take appropriate steps to effect a systematic exchange of information on this subject, to draw attention to the negative consequences of family violence for the men, women and children involved and for society as a whole, and to formulate solutions at the national level;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to convene a seminar of experts on family violence, with emphasis on its effects on women, within the resources for the biennium 1986-1987, taking into account what may emanate on this subject from the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held in 1985, with a view to making recommendations to combat this abuse;

4. Decides to include the subject of family violence under the appropriate item of the agenda of the thirty-first session of the Commission on the Status of Women on the basis of information to be supplied in response to paragraph 1 of the present resolution.

Violence against detained women

In January 1984,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on the fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system, providing an overview of preliminary findings of a global survey. On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/49 on the topic (see p. 708).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted without vote resolution 1984/19.

Physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting with grave concern that the Commission on the Status of Women, in the report on its thirtieth session under the question of communications concerning the status of women, drew attention to a pattern of physical violence against women while detained—cases of rape and other sexual abuse, including violence against pregnant women,

Considering that women are especially vulnerable to sexual violence,

Considering also that pregnant women require special protection and care by society,

Recalling its resolutions 76(V) of 5 August 1947 and 304 I (XI) of 14 and 17 July 1950,

Recalling also its resolutions 1980/39 of 2 May 1980 and 1983/27 of 26 May 1983, by which it reaffirmed the mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women to consider communications relating to the status of women, including the replies of Governments thereon, if any, and to draw to the attention of the Council emerging trends and patterns so that it may decide what action to take,

1. Calls upon the Member States concerned to take appropriate measures urgently to eradicate such violations;

2. Invites all Member States to submit their views on physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex to the Secretary-General to enable him to report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-first session under the appropriate item of the agenda;

3. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to provide, from within existing budgetary resources, the services and facilities necessary for the implementation of the present resolution.

Women in society

Considering the role of women in society—as mothers and as participants in economic development and public life—the United Nations addressed the question of the integration of women in development, including in rural areas, the role of women in science and technology, and the question of increasing the participation of women in promoting peace and co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/123.

The role of women in societyThe General Assembly,*

Reaffirming the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, as well as the importance of the Declaration of Mexico on the Equality of Women and their Contribution to Development and Peace, 1975, the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year and the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women,

Noting that just and lasting peace and social progress as well as the establishment of a new international economic order require the active participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation and in the process of development,

Bearing in mind that economic inequality, colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, acts of aggression and interference in the internal affairs of others and violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms constitute an impediment to the achievement of real and genuine equality and to the integration of women in society,

Convinced of the necessity to secure for all women full realization of the rights embodied in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in the International Covenants on Human Rights and in other relevant instruments in this field,

Recognizing that the achievement of equal and full participation of women in all spheres of activity constitutes an inseparable part of the political, economic, social and cultural development of all countries,

Aware that efforts to promote the status of women in all its aspects and their complete integration in society go beyond the problem of legal equality and that deeper structural transformations of society and changes in present-day economic relations, as well as elimination of traditional prejudices through education and dissemination of information, are required so as to create conditions for women to develop fully their intellectual and physical capacities and to participate actively in the decision-making process in political, economic, social and cultural development,

Mindful of the necessity to enlarge the possibilities for both men and women to combine parental duties and household work with paid employment and social activities,

Aware that child-bearing should not be the cause of inequality and discrimination against women, and that child-rearing demands shared responsibilities among women, men and society as a whole,

Deeply appreciating the increasing participation of women in political, economic, social and cultural life and their contribution thereto,

1. Appeals to all Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to recognize in their activities the importance of all interrelated aspects of the role of women in society—as mothers, as participants in economic development and as participants in public life—without underestimating any one of them;

2. Encourages such social and economic development that would secure the participation of women in all spheres of work, equal pay for work of equal value and equal opportunities for education and professional and vocational training, taking into consideration the necessity of combining all aspects of the role of women in society;

3. Appeals to Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to promote the creation of conditions that would enable women to participate as equal partners with men in public and political life, in the decision-making process at all levels and in the management of different spheres of life in society;

4. Appeals to Governments to recognize the special status and social importance of motherhood and to take, in the context of their special abilities and conditions, all necessary measures to promote the protection of motherhood, including maternity leave with pay, and to provide security for their jobs as long as necessary, so as to allow women, if they so wish, to fulfil their role as mothers without prejudice to their professional and public activities;

5. Also appeals to Governments to promote the establishment of appropriate facilities for child-care and education of children as a means of combining motherhood with economic, political, social, cultural and other activities of women and thus to provide assistance to women in integrating fully into their societies;

6. Recommends to the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, to be held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985, that it take duly into account, in reviewing and appraising the achievements of the Decade and in formulating future policies in this field, all aspects of the role of women in society.

Women in development

The need for full participation of women in development in developing countries, including in rural areas, was further recognized during the year by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. Programmes to increase participation constituted a major focus of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and INSTRAW (see above), with UNDP and UNIDO also giving attention to the subject.

The Secretary-General, in an October 1984 report<sup>(1)</sup> on the Voluntary Fund, affirmed that women did participate in the development process but under unequal conditions, due to lower levels of education and training than men in the same socio-economic group and to a major responsibility for the unremunerated work needed for family survival.

INSTRAW Board action. The Board of Trustees of INSTRAW, at its January 1984 session,<sup>(2)</sup> requested the INSTRAW Director to bring the recommendations of the December 1983 Seminar on the Incorporation of Women into Development Planning<sup>(3)</sup> to the attention of the relevant bodies and institutions and to disseminate widely its proceedings. The Board agreed that the results of the Seminar should be used as a basis for the development of training material on the subject.

UNDP action. During the year, projects carried out with UNDP assistance<sup>(4)</sup> relating to women in development included: a community-based production project in Honduras which assisted 350 women in three economically depressed areas to start non-traditional self-sustaining enterprises such as poultry and fishpond farming, sugar milling and leather processing; cottage industries in Indonesia creating new job opportunities for rural women (over 575 participants and a further 1,374 village workers on a part-time basis), using local raw materials for making woven silk, batiks, ready-made clothing, embroidered and bamboo-plaited products, roof tiles and palm sugar; a project in northern Swaziland that trained 1,173 women to produce school uniforms and shoes, as well as teaching them leather crafts, small-unit welding and cement block-making; a pilot wool processing and training centre in Kashmir; rural sanitation training for some 1,000 participants, mostly women, in Sierra Leone; a project in Yemen to demonstrate to predominantly female farm workers new practices for diversified cultivation; training for leaders of women's co-operatives in Mexico; self-help housing construction schemes in Zimbabwe; and a new research and development centre in China for improved vegetable production, with 32 women scientists among its research staff of 61.

In February, the UNDP Administrator submitted a progress report on an interorganizational evaluation study of women's participation in development.<sup>(5)</sup> Initiated in response to a 1982 UNDP Governing Council decision,<sup>(6)</sup> the study was being undertaken by 14 United Nations organizations that were significantly concerned with women's role in development, to evaluate their effectiveness and provide a basis for recommending improved strategies to ensure that technical co-operation activities enhanced women's participation in development and the benefits they derived therefrom. The study was to be presented to the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women.

On 18 June 1984,<sup>(7)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report.

UNIDO action. On 19 August 1984, the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO<sup>(8)</sup> called on States to promote the increased participation of women in industrial development and stressed the role UNIDO had to play in that regard. It welcomed the action of the secretariat to co-ordinate its own activities on the subject and to organize regional workshops on the integration of women in industrial planning and development, and urged the UNIDO Executive Director to take account of the integration of women in the design of technical co-operation and study activities.

On 19 May,<sup>(9)</sup> the Industrial Development Board reaffirmed the importance of involving women in the industrial sector at the national planning and management level, of training them for work in that sector and of recruiting more women to Professional posts in the UNIDO secretariat.

In his 1984 annual report,<sup>(10)</sup> the Executive Director listed three regional workshops on the integration of women in the industrial planning and development process: in Africa (Harare, Zimbabwe, 9-17 April), in the Caribbean (Georgetown, Guyana, 6-12 May) and in Asia (Bangkok, Thailand, 5-12 July).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In decision 1984/101 on its basic work programme, the Economic and Social Council decided to review the question of women and development during its first regular session of 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/128.

Integration of women in all aspects of development

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 37/57 of 3 December 1982, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/12 of 24 May 1984,

Recalling paragraphs 190 to 196 of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year, in which the relevant agencies of the United Nations and intergovernmental, interregional and regional bodies were called upon to scrutinize all existing plans and projects with a view to extending their sphere of activities to include women and to develop new and innovative projects to include women,

Bearing in mind that development is one of the themes of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Looking ahead to the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, to be held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985, and foreseeing the need to continue such achievements beyond the end of the Decade,

Deeply concerned that international efforts on behalf of women should keep pace with the increasing efforts towards establishing effective national machineries and mobilizing resources to ensure the integration of women into all stages of planning, monitoring and development activities,

Noting that the progress report of the Secretary-General requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/57 was submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirtieth session,

1. Urges the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other organs, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system which have not yet done so to develop and implement comprehensive policies regarding the concerns of women, both as agents and as beneficiaries, in technical co-operation and development activities and to establish effective review measures to ensure that women are an integral part of these policies and activities;

2. Requests the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other organs, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system to ensure continued co-operation and co-ordination with the Commission on the Status of Women beyond the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, in order fully to achieve the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace;

3. Endorses the request of the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1984/12 that the Secretary-General should report to the Commission on the Status of Women at each session on all significant developments pertaining to the advancement of women within the United Nations system that have occurred since the preceding session;

5. Reaffirms its resolution 36/127 of 14 December 1981, which provides for the consideration of issues relating to the integration of women in development in all the relevant organs of the General Assembly.

In resolution 39/166 on food and agricultural problems (see Chapter XI of this section), the Assembly called for more policy attention to the role of women in relation to food systems and stressed the need to involve women in formulating and implementing national food strategies and projects.

World survey

In October 1984,<sup>(11)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on the world survey on the role of women in development, providing a summary of preliminary conclusions on the role of women in industry, agriculture, science and technology, and money and finance.

The March 1984 inter-agency meeting on the preparations for the World Conference to Review and

Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see above, under "Decade for Women") agreed that the final draft of the world survey would be sent by the Conference secretariat to lead agencies and organizations for comments.<sup>(12)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/172.

World survey on the role of women in development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/78 of 5 December 1980 on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development, in which it, inter alia, called for the preparation of a comprehensive and detailed outline for an interdisciplinary and multisectoral world survey on the role of women in overall development,

Recalling also its resolution 36/74 of 4 December 1981, in which it requested the Secretary-General to prepare the survey in close collaboration with the appropriate United Nations organs, organizations and bodies, as well as the relevant national institutions, and to submit the survey in its final form to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the preparation of the survey submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session,

Noting that the survey in its final form will be one of the basic documents at the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, to be held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the preliminary results of the survey, including the emerging awareness of the important actual and potential contribution of women to economic development around the world,

Recognizing that further efforts will be required to collect adequate data on the participation of women in economic sectors and that further research is needed to determine the steps to be taken to ensure the effective mobilization and integration of women in development, especially in relation to the formulation and implementation of economic policies and to economic production and the use of resources,

Recommends that the survey in its final form should be considered by the General Assembly at its fortieth session under the item entitled "Effective mobilization and integration of women in development", together with any comments on the survey and related decisions taken at the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace.

It formulated recommendations on ways to improve the productivity and standard of living of rural women by increasing access to land, water, credit, technology and training, and outlined global policies that would support those recommendations.

The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, in February 1984 (see Chapter XII of this section), dealt with the issue of science and technology and women.<sup>16</sup> The Committee expressed concern that women were underrepresented in that field and were seldom in decision-making positions. It felt that research and development that served women's needs must be given higher priority. It recommended that Governments appoint women to national, regional and international bodies dealing with science and technology for development, and stressed the importance of science and technology education and training for women and the need for them to be better informed. Among other recommendations were that women scientists and engineers be given equal access to training and technological installations, and that potential users of technology participate in all stages of design and adaptation of alternative technologies. Also, the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development was urged to appoint more women to the Advisory Committee.

Chapter XX

Children, youth and aging persons

In 1984, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued its programmes for children in 117 countries—in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Mediterranean area—reaching a total population under 16 years of age of approximately 1.3 billion. Support was provided for water supply and sanitation, primary health care, education, food and nutrition, social services and emergency relief. UNICEF promoted effective, inexpensive methods to improve children's health and reduce child mortality and morbidity. The General Assembly once more reaffirmed the goal of children's immunization against major diseases by 1990 and again called for comments from States on a draft declaration relating to children's protection and welfare, especially foster placement and adoption.

Due to the burgeoning emergency situation in many African countries, which was claiming the lives of 12,000 children each day, UNICEF strengthened its efforts in the region through redeployment of resources. An international appeal was launched for 13 of the most seriously affected countries.

Activities concerning youth—persons 15 to 24 years old—focused during the year on preparations for International Youth Year (1985) (IYY). The Assembly decided to strengthen the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Africa to enable it to fulfil its youth mandate, and to continue promoting activities relating to intergenerational matters.

Follow-up actions to implement the 1982 Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging (people aged 60 and over) continued in 1984. The Assembly called on Governments to take into account the changing age structure of the population in their economic and social development plans and to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging. It further requested the Secretary-General to promote joint activities regarding aging and youth, especially during IYY.

Topics related to this chapter. Health and human resources. Human rights: rights of the child; youth and human rights; human rights of aging persons. Women: women and children under apartheid.

Children

In 1984, assistance for children in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Mediterranean area, provided by UNICEF with the assistance of other United Nations bodies, covered areas such as water supply and sanitation, primary health care, education, food and nutrition, social services and emergency relief. UNICEF continued to support a variety of low-cost programmes aimed at improving children's health and reducing child mortality and morbidity.

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/222, reaffirmed the goals of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s),<sup>(1)</sup> particularly those of ensuring children's immunization against major diseases by 1990 and of reducing the infant mortality rate to less than 50 per 1,000 live births in all countries by the year 2000. In resolution 39/89, the Assembly again requested the Secretary-General to report on States' comments on a draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally.

In August 1984, the International Conference on Population made recommendations aimed at reducing infant, child and maternal morbidity and mortality (see p. 714).

UN Children's Fund

In 1984, UNICEF provided assistance for children in 117 countries, with a total population under 16 years of age of approximately 1.3 billion. Total programme expenditure amounted to $345 million, an average expenditure per child of 26 cents (16 cents from general UNICEF resources and 10 cents from supplementary funds) for countries where UNICEF was co-operating in long-term programmes. Support was given to: basic maternal and child health services and nutrition in 109 countries; water supply, sanitation and social welfare services in 97; non-formal education in 96; formal education in 93; and emergency relief in 24. Of the total programme expenditure, 28 per cent was spent for water supply and sanitation, 26 per cent for basic child health, 13 per cent for planning and project support, 12 per cent for education, 8 per cent for nutrition, 7 per cent for emergency relief and 6 per cent for social services.

The UNICEF Executive Board held its regular 1984 session at Rome, Italy, from 24 April to 4 May 1984.<sup>(2)</sup> It also met in New York on 8 and 14 June to elect officers for the period 1 August 1984 to 31

July 1985. The Programme Committee met from 27 April to 2 May, and the Committee on Administration and Finance met on 2 and 3 May. In April, a session of UNICEF National Committees and the Executive Committee of the Society of the Union of the Red Cross and the Red Crescent of a number of Eastern European socialist countries met at Prague, Czechoslovakia, and adopted an appeal to UNICEF National Committees of all countries to improve the international climate, halt the arms race, strengthen peace and international security and establish equal international co-operation and mutual understanding among nations for the welfare of current and future generations.<sup>(3)</sup>

In his report covering 1984 activities,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNICEF Executive Director noted the continuing difficulties caused by the world economic situation, the organization's response to the emergency situation in many African countries and measures taken to strengthen UNICEF.

He pointed out that the economic recession of recent years had provoked major set-backs in child welfare. The combined effect of declining expenditure in the social sector and shortages of foreign exchange hampered health, potable water, sanitation, housing and other assistance, and the shortage of foreign exchange reduced the availability of imported goods. Food emergencies were declared in 22 African countries, and an increase in child and maternal malnutrition was registered in 1983 and 1984 in countries as diverse as Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Costa Rica, the Ivory Coast, Malawi, Peru and the Philippines.

In implementing priority child survival and development activities, progress was made during the year in immunization and oral rehydration therapy (ORT)—a method of preventing dehydration caused by diarrhoea, a major cause of child mortality; UNICEF supplied vaccines worth some $9 million, compared with $6 million in 1983, and assisted 80 countries with their immunization programmes. The Executive Director felt that the United Nations goal of universal access for children by 1990 to immunization against the six major communicable childhood diseases (diphtheria, pertussis, tetanus, measles, poliomyelitis and tuberculosis) could be achieved globally if Governments would mobilize intensive but relatively low-cost national programmes. In its efforts to promote ORT against diarrhoeal diseases and associated malnutrition, UNICEF provided over 65 million packets of "complete formula" oral rehydration salts (ORS) and assisted 20 countries in manufacturing ORS themselves. World-wide, such local production accounted for some 100 million packets annually, giving a global supply of nearly 200 million packets from all sources, compared with 1 million in 1975 when UNICEF first started to produce ORS and 20 million in 1980. UNICEF also called for breast-feeding and proper weaning practices to prevent malnutrition, and growth monitoring to detect malnutrition early in its development.

The crisis facing African children and their families continued to preoccupy UNICEF. Actions undertaken by it to increase financial commitments and resource allocations to affected countries included: releasing $2.8 million from the Emergency Reserve Fund; earmarking $7.2 million from the Infant Mortality Reduction Reserve for child survival and development activities; fund-raising for existing emergency rehabilitation and other projects; and identifying financial needs, which resulted in an appeal launched by the Executive Director in July 1984 to raise some $50 million for additional short-term projects for child survival and development activities in 13 seriously affected countries. That amount was increased to $67 million during the special meeting on Africa on 31 October (see p. 915). Measures were also taken during the year to strengthen UNICEF's capacity in Africa through redeployment of resources from headquarters and field offices in Asia.

Programme policy decisions

At its 1984 session,<sup>(2)</sup> the UNICEF Executive Board reviewed the organization's performance in 1983. With global economic depression continuing to threaten millions of children's lives, the Board's main concern was to translate the growing political support for the UNICEF child survival and development strategy into expanded country programmes, particularly in Africa.

The Board endorsed the child survival and development strategy goals, as well as programmes aimed at accelerating child survival and development activities. It reviewed UNICEF's existing emergency operations in Africa and recommended the strengthening of inter-agency co-operation in that area. The Executive Director was instructed to prepare a programme outlining short- and long-term measures for dealing with emergencies; to pursue other activities, mainly staff-related, designed to strengthen UNICEF; and, when preparing the 1986-1987 budget estimates, to take into account the need for improving UNICEF's capacity in Africa.

The Board also approved general resource commitments of some $105 million and "noted" projects of $59.5 million for financing through specific-purpose contributions. It agreed that UNICEF should co-operate with Governments and other organizations and agencies in researching, evaluating and publicizing ways to incorporate psycho-social factors in child development efforts.

In decision 1984/171 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the UNICEF Executive Board.<sup>(2)</sup>

Noting the recommendations of the International Conference on Population, 1984, and the Mexico Declaration on Population and Development, which stated, inter alia, that those developments have the potential to achieve a virtual revolution in child survival,

Acutely aware that the present global situation adversely affects vulnerable groups, such as children, and therefore makes the need for those efforts all the more critical,

1. Commends the policies and activities of the United Nations Children's Fund;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund on its 1984 session;

3. Urges the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund, within the context of the basic services and primary health care approach for children in the delivery of programmes, to continue and intensify his efforts on the basis of recent developments in the social and biological sciences that present a new opportunity to bring about a virtual revolution in child survival and child development, at a low cost and in a relatively short time, in accordance with the relevant decisions of the Executive Board of the Fund and in co-operation with other relevant bodies and organizations, in particular the World Health Organization;

4. Notes with satisfaction the important efforts made by the Executive Director of the Fund to respond to the present critical emergency situation of children and mothers in Africa and urges him to continue his efforts in this respect, as well as to continue to implement child survival and child development activities generally in Africa in accordance with the decisions of the Executive Board of the Fund;

5. Reaffirms the goals of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade with reference to children, in particular the goals of ensuring children's immunization against major diseases by 1990 and of reducing the infant mortality rate to less than 50 per 1,000 live births in all countries by the year 2000, and notes the crucial role of the child survival and child development revolution in meeting those goals;

6. Reaffirms the role of the Fund as the lead agency in the United Nations system responsible for co-ordinating the follow-up activities of the International Year of the Child related to the goals and objectives concerning children set forth in the International Development Strategy;

7. Commends the Executive Director of the Fund for his continuing efforts to enlarge the resources of the Fund so that it can respond effectively to the needs of the developing countries, in continued pursuance of its mandate;

8. Expresses its appreciation to Governments that have responded to the needs of the Fund and expresses the hope that more States will come forward with positive responses;

9. Appeals to all Governments to increase their contributions so that, in the light of the current economic situation, the Fund may be able to strengthen its co-operation with developing countries and respond to the urgent needs of children in those countries.

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/791) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.111), based on informal consultations on 44-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.96); agenda item 81 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 48-53, 55, 56; plenary 104.

The 44-nation draft—by developing and Western States—which was withdrawn in favour of the Vice-Chairman's text, was identical to that text except for drafting changes.

Medium-term plan for 1983-1987

At its 1984 session,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Board approved the programme objectives of the UNICEF medium-term plan for 1983-1987,<sup>(5)</sup> which aimed at accelerating child survival and development activities to reduce infant and early childhood mortality and improve child development. Priority areas to achieve that goal included primary health care, clean water, sanitation, limitation of malnutrition, universal primary education, abolition of widespread illiteracy and improvement of the situation of women. The Board approved the financial objectives of the plan, which projected that UNICEF income would increase from $350 million in 1984 to $485 million in 1987, while annual expenditure would increase from $363 million to $451 million.

Policy reviews

Policy reviews on early childhood development<sup>(6)</sup> and evaluative activities in UNICEF<sup>(7)</sup> were prepared following a request by the Executive Board in 1983. The objective of the first review was to assist UNICEF to implement its child development activities with awareness of the child's development needs, including psycho-social needs. The second policy review stressed the importance of improved regular progress reporting on project implementation, especially in the economic climate of constrained resources for social development. It examined the evolution of monitoring and evaluation policies and included specific recommendations to improve evaluative capacities. The recommendations contained in both reviews were endorsed by the Executive Board.<sup>(2)</sup>

Maurice Pate Memorial Award

In February, the Executive Director recommended that for 1984 the annual Maurice Pate Memorial Award, established to commemorate the first Executive Director of UNICEF, be awarded to the International Centre for Diarrhoeal Disease Research in Bangladesh.<sup>(8)</sup> The Centre, which conducted research and training and rendered services for treatment and control of such diseases, helped to revolutionize approaches to that health problem. The Centre planned to use the $25,000 award to support its work with poor urban mothers and to train local volunteers in the use of ORS for treating diarrhoea.

UNICEF programmes by region

Programme expenditures in 1984 increased by 11 per cent for Africa and 17 per cent for the Americas compared with 1983. Programme expenditures decreased by 4 per cent for East Asia and Pakistan, by 3.5 per cent for South Central Asia and by 32 per cent for the Middle East and North Africa. There were no expenditures for Europe. The table overleaf shows 1984 expenditures and new commitments approved by the Executive Board in 1984.<sup>(2)</sup>

Africa

The critical and worsening situation facing children and their families in Africa and the need to respond to their needs quickly and effectively became the focus of UNICEF emergency assistance in 1984. An international appeal for some $50 million was launched by UNICEF to assist 21 countries: 13 seriously affected (Angola, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Chad, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Niger, Senegal, Zimbabwe) and 8 others (Botswana, Djibouti, Guinea, Kenya, Lesotho, Sao Tome and Principe, Sudan, Uganda). At a subsequent meeting, the appeal was raised to $67 million. UNICEF endorsed accelerated programmes in the region, and allocated $2.8 million from the Emergency Reserve Fund for Africa during the first quarter of 1984. It also earmarked $7.2 million from the Infant Mortality Reduction Fund for child survival and development actions, and approved $23.6 million in new programmes from general resources and $15 million in new "noted" projects (projects awaiting funding) for 12 countries.

The situation of children in eastern Africa remained grim in 1984, with close to 2,000 infants dying each day from a combination of diseases, severe malnutrition, lack of shelter and clothing, and neglect.

In 1984, UNICEF continued its programmes in eastern Africa<sup>(9)</sup> and carried out major primary health care (PHC) reviews in 10 countries. In Malawi, a survey on the quality of maternal and child health (MCH) services revealed that 80 per cent of the population had access to some level of health care within 8 kilometres, some 55 per cent of the children were fully immunized, 70 per cent of mothers attended pre-natal clinics and 54 per cent had skilled assistance at delivery, and 64 per cent of the children had received growth charts and were attending clinics 6.3 times per year on the average. Despite these health services, the infant mortality rate (IMR) remained high (between 130 and 159 per 1,000 live births), suggesting that IMR was related to the high prevalence of malnutrition. In Zimbabwe, the effectiveness of community health workers was reviewed, as well as essential elements of PHC, including immunization, diarrhoeal disease control, MCH and nutrition.

Training of health staff and community-based health workers, such as traditional birth attendants, continued. Training in areas related to the essential drugs programme, the control of diarrhoeal diseases, oral rehydration, and management of immunization programmes were also given much attention.

Of the $7 million that UNICEF committed to nutrition projects in eastern Africa, 63 per cent was allocated to applied nutrition projects and the remainder to nutrition education. Ethiopia and the United Republic of Tanzania received two thirds of the nutrition commitments in the region. Other assistance during the year included an allocation of $20 million (or 10.7 per cent of total UNICEF commitments in the region) to the education sector and over $44 million (or 22.5 per cent) to water supply and sanitation projects. An additional $8 million in emergency funds was also allocated to countries affected by drought to provide food, water, medical supplies, seeds and logistical support to the most vulnerable groups.

In west and central Africa,<sup>(10)</sup> a region affected during the year by natural disasters, such as drought, and civil strife, the overall situation of children continued to deteriorate. In the light of the situation, an important feature of UNICEF activities was its defensive advocacy. Support was given to all elements concerned with child welfare (nutrition, health and education) and to efforts to bring child concerns to the attention of policy-makers and donors. Ongoing programmes were redesignated to strengthen child survival elements, and funds from the Infant Mortality Reduction Fund were used to promote child survival and development activities.

During 1984, large portions of the populations in the Sahelian region continued to suffer from famine, and UNICEF immediate emergency relief included the distribution of food supplements, improvement of water supplies, distribution of medicines and the extension of inoculations to protect the health of enfeebled children. For example, UNICEF diverted $1.2 million from its regular country programme to provide Mali with basic drugs, vaccines and food supplements, train health workers and help transform schools into training centres for coping with changes in the ecosystem. It provided funds to Mauritania for food distribution in the community feeding centres, logistical support for medical teams and material to help combat epidemics and diarrhoeal diseases. It also supplied Chad with seeds and agricultural inputs, provided paramedical and hygiene training, helped in digging wells, and distributed food, medical and other supplies. In war-torn Angola, where the situation of children worsened during 1984 (the IMR reached 500 per 1,000 live births in certain areas), UNICEF assistance helped alleviate serious shortages of medical supplies and treatment.

On 31 October, UNICEF held in New York a special meeting on the situation of African mothers and children resulting from drought and the global recession. The UNICEF Executive Director, who had invited representatives from Chad, Ethiopia and Mozambique to address the meeting and provide first-hand accounts of the situation and relief efforts in their countries, pointed out that the silent emergency in Africa was taking the lives of 4.5 million children a year (12,000 daily). The underlying causes were projected to continue throughout the 1980s. Of emergency needs totalling some $67 million in 13 African countries, UNICEF had already channelled over $21 million—including some $11 million from donor Governments—to help meet those needs. Most available resources were already committed and additional funds were urgently needed to carry forward planned commitments beyond 1984.

Americas

In 1984, UNICEF continued its basic services programmes in Latin American and Caribbean countries,<sup>(11)</sup> a region struggling against the consequences of one of the most severe economic crises—rising unemployment and a sharp fall in family income, deterioration of living conditions among poor people and their children, increasing malnutrition and disease, heightened social tensions, and growing political instability.

UNICEF assistance centred on: PHC programmes (in Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Dominica, Ecuador, Haiti, Jamaica, Peru, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines); child survival projects (immunization, control of diarrhoeal diseases through ORT, breast-feeding and appropriate weaning, monitoring child growth and development, control of acute respiratory infections and high-risk pregnancy, and perinatal problems) in Central America and Panama; immunization against five diseases (diphtheria, poliomyelitis, tetanus, pertussis and measles) in Belize, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama and Peru. It also supported national programmes for ORT in Brazil, Colombia, Haiti and Jamaica; breast-feeding in Bolivia, Brazil, Peru and Central America; growth monitoring and early childhood development in Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba and Peru; abandoned and street children in Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador and Mexico; economic activities for women in Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Mexico and Peru; and, through community involvement, urban basic services in low-income areas in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Haiti, Jamaica, Peru and Central America.

Asia

In East Asia, Pakistan and China,<sup>(12)</sup> UNICEF continued to concentrate its programmes on less privileged areas, through community involvement and participation by Governments and other agencies. Promotion of the child survival and development strategy resulted in increased interest and generated many innovative activities. Other developments were the expansion of area-based projects, increased emphasis on the need to reach the poor, more systematic implementation and improved monitoring and evaluation activities. Despite the growth of the region's economy, the food situation—and hence malnutrition, mainly among the poor—improved little because of the rapid regional population growth and a series of natural calamities.

Programmes on child survival and development and PHC were implemented in several countries: Burma, in 229 townships out of a total of 314; Indonesia, in the country's 67,000 villages; the Philippines, where health structure was reorganized to strengthen PHC at the national level; and Thailand, in 73 per cent of the villages and in the primary school curriculum. Growth monitoring in the countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations and the Republic of Korea increased during the year and, in Pakistan, it became part of the district-level programming. Bangladesh, Burma, Indonesia, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Thailand reported advances in nation-wide ORT programmes, but the need to promote the use of ORS still remained in many countries.

Implementation of national legislation based on the 1981 International Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes<sup>(13)</sup> was promising. In Bangladesh, Indonesia, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Thailand, informal national codes or guidelines incorporating some of the International Code's provisions were developed. In Viet Nam, the Government controlled the marketing and distribution of breast-milk substitutes. In Fiji and Pakistan, the International Code was recommended for adoption but was awaiting government decisions. In Singapore, a voluntary code was in effect, and in Malaysia, one was being prepared.

Other UNICEF programmes during the year dealt with family nutrition improvement, water supply and environmental sanitation, urban basic services, early childhood development and women's activities. Immunization programmes increased in Burma and Pakistan, and most countries reported high coverage rates.

China, which was going through a period of social and economic transition, made a policy commitment to child health and welfare, but large areas remained in great need: over 100 million people lagged far behind the level of social progress enjoyed by the majority, and socio-economic improvements and health and education services were limited among the 56 minority populations, numbering 70 million people. The China country programme, one of the five largest UNICEF programmes, counted major achievements in 1984 in spite of constraints: vaccine production increased by some 20 per cent and immunization reached a population of 150 million in five provinces; a network linking MCH activities with local public health and medical schools to meet child health needs was expanded to reach 30 counties inhabited by 25 million people; the Child Development Centre of China conducted 31 research projects and six training courses for 720 people, and produced booklets, slides and films on child nutrition, prevention of diseases and child psychology.

In South Central Asia,<sup>(14)</sup> although some 10,000 children continued to die each day, the quality of child life was progressing. UNICEF's role in the region had evolved from simply providing relief assistance to working in collaboration with those concerned with development issues. This shift was reflected in the form of increased UNICEF financial support for training, education and communication, which were designed to promote self-reliance and the use of appropriate technology.

The year marked a turning-point regarding UNICEF's role in the region. India and UNICEF collaborated in preparing a reshaped approach to child development in the country, to be reflected, if approved by the Executive Board in 1985, in the 1985-1989 programme. UNICEF initiated plans for a more effective development partnership with Nepal and, in Sri Lanka, a new country programme was introduced, marking the beginning of a national movement in favour of child development.

UNICEF co-operation in India aimed at helping it to achieve the objectives set for the decade, such as reducing infant, child and maternal mortality and morbidity; increasing literacy and non-formal learning for out-of-school disadvantaged children, especially girls; extending services for development of the young; and increasing the availability of basic services—health, nutrition, water supply and sanitation. Immunization was expanded in the region and, as a result, India was set for a massive country-wide immunization programme aiming at universal coverage by 1990.

In Sri Lanka, the immunization programme showed positive results. The incidence of polio and pertussis declined by two thirds between 1978 and 1983 and the reduction in diphtheria and neo-natal tetanus was even more marked. This trend continued in 1984 with the introduction of measles vaccine. National immunization coverage was planned for 1985.

Sectoral programmes, such as formal and non-formal education, health, nutrition, water supply, environmental sanitation, prevention of childhood disability and support for destitute children, were co-ordinated in the region. Although co-ordination between government ministries needed to be improved, there was a conscious effort in nearly all the countries to bring isolated resources to bear on child development. For example, the Children's Secretariat in Sri Lanka accelerated action on behalf of children. In India, the Ministry of Social Welfare played an important co-ordinating role in establishing the plan of operations for 1985-1989. Decentralization in Nepal, to be implemented in 1985, was aimed at combining services at the district and lower levels.

Middle East and North Africa

In 1984, political confrontations continued to dominate three major areas of the region (the Gulf, Lebanon and the western Sahara) and were increasing significantly in a fourth (south Sudan), affecting the lives of children and their families.<sup>(15)</sup> High levels of male migration from rural to urban areas and other countries in the region resulted in an increasing number of women becoming heads of household, a role for which they had not been trained. Urbanization also created new problems for women and children; the living conditions in peri-urban areas and shanty towns had a negative effect on the health of mothers and children. In addition, the downturn in the world economy, coupled with severe inflation and reduced expectations of oil revenue, affected the region since oil-rich States were no longer providing unlimited employment opportunities for workers from the poorer parts of the region and social services felt the effects of cut-backs.

In February, the UNICEF regional office was relocated provisionally from Beirut, Lebanon, to Amman, Jordan. The emergency nature of the move meant that the office had to function under very constrained circumstances, with limited staff and equipment. The Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations (AGFUND), established in April 1981 and consisting of seven States (Bahrain, Iraq, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates), remained in 1984 the best regional supporter of UNICEF. At its October meeting, AGFUND approved a contribution of $3 million for a number of UNICEF projects, and further allocations were expected during the remainder of the fiscal year.

A regional programme strategy meeting (Amman, September) identified issues to be given priority attention during the following months, including the predominance of Islam and the Arabic language in a regional approach to child survival and development actions; the decrease in national incomes; the decline in breast-feeding; the situation of girls and women; and the potential for social marketing through the region's media.

UNICEF assistance in basic health infrastructures, including the promotion of PHC, continued despite set-backs resulting from the global recession and other factors. Bahrain and Jordan reported the commissioning and staffing of new health centres; Egypt and the Sudan, improved services through staff training and/or material inputs; and Egypt, a breakthrough with national acceptance and legitimization of traditional birth attendants as a formal part of the rural health team. The organization also provided support for water and sanitation projects (in Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Morocco, the Sudan and Yemen, progress was made in extending water-supply infrastructure); education programmes in Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Morocco, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey; and improving the situation of girls and women in the region. A number of national women's organizations (Oman and the United Arab Emirates) and general unions of women (Democratic Yemen, Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic) adopted the child survival and development strategy and started programming activities to promote the services of health ministries.

Responding to emergencies caused by both man-made and natural disasters, UNICEF provided assistance to Lebanon, the Sudan, Yemen (see Chapter III of this section) and Turkey. In co-operation with other United Nations agencies, it assisted in restoring water operations in Beirut and distributed emergency medical kits. In Turkey, a donation from Japan was used for educational equipment and school furniture damaged in the Erzurum earthquake of October 1983. In Yemen, UNICEF continued its assistance to the population affected by the 1982 Dhamar earthquake. In the Sudan, where there were warning signals of its being affected by the drought, steps were taken, in conjunction with the Government and other agencies, to deal with the anticipated emergency.

UNICEF programmes by sector

As in the previous six years, child health, including nutrition, accounted for the largest portion of UNICEF's expenditures in 1984. Other major programmes dealt with water supply and sanitation, social welfare services and education. The table below gives UNICEF expenditures and commitments by sector.

Child welfare in urban areas

During 1984, UNICEF continued to support community-based activities in the slums and shanty towns of over 50 developing countries.<sup>(4)</sup> Birth-spacing methods by poor urban women became an urgent issue, not only on grounds of health and welfare, but because more than half the urban growth in developing countries was due to natural increase rather than rural-urban migration. Malnutrition remained one of the most serious problems among urban children; compared with the city average, food intake in slums and squatter settlements was only half to two thirds. There was a decline in breast-feeding since mothers often worked. The urban poor being directly involved in the cash economy, the global recession exacerbated their situation. For these reasons, child survival and development measures formed the core of most UNICEF-assisted PHC programmes during the year.

Asia and Latin America were the regions with the most UNICEF-assisted community-based urban services programmes. In India, UNICEF programmes reached over 20 cities and towns. In the Philippines, there were three urban projects on organizational development, leadership training and community participation; community-based health projects were being carried out in Manila, Quezon City and Davao City. In Pakistan, UNICEF helped construct 421 latrines in Karachi between 1979 and 1983; on a self-help basis and using a UNICEF design, individuals built another 1,346, including 500 during 1984.

In Latin America, UNICEF assistance in basic services included an urban community-based services programme in Haiti, which became fully operational during the year, including a water and sanitation component; the expansion of an urban PHC project in Guayaquil, Ecuador; and the launching in Kingston, Jamaica, of an urban basic services programme, funded by Canada.

In Africa, the urban PHC project in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, became a good example of community-based urban services. Under the leadership of the local government and with the participation of 284 community organizations, a programme was in progress to reduce child mortality in half by 1988. With UNICEF collaboration, 100,000 children were provided ORT and there were plans to extend coverage to an additional 200,000.

With rapid urbanization throughout the world, the number of abandoned and street children increased. The total number of such children was estimated to be in the tens of millions; the problem was particularly acute in Latin America and some Asian and African cities. To remedy the problem, UNICEF developed programme guidelines emphasizing community-level prevention and providing alternatives to placing children in institutions; it also supported specific programmes in Brazil, Colombia, Ethiopia, Mexico, the Philippines and Central America. Another issue of concern was the problem of children and work; while the International Labour Organisation promoted conventions controlling or eliminating child labour, UNICEF favoured providing basic services to working children while taking measures against their exploitation.

Education

UNICEF activities in formal and non-formal education in 1984—excluding education in health, nutrition, sanitation and other programmes—accounted for $30.5 million, or 12.5 per cent of total programme expenditure, compared with 16 per cent in 1983. During the year, UNICEF co-operated in education programmes in 105 countries; 43 in Africa, 29 in Asia, 22 in the Americas and 11 in the Middle East and North Africa.

While UNICEF support for basic and primary education continued to focus on disadvantaged children, it was recognized that many children and women in the developing world were still lacking a basic level of general education. It was felt that this problem deserved serious attention at the national and international levels in order to reduce inefficiency and wastage in primary education; improve the quality and relevance of basic education, including developing relevant and useful forms of basic education in sub-Saharan Africa in the context of its continuing emergency; and increase the participation of disadvantaged groups, including women, in basic education.

UNICEF assisted several countries in school-related problems through better preparation of teachers (Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Nepal); improving curricula and textbooks (Djibouti, Madagascar, Malawi); providing supplies or helping the country to produce them (China, Lao People's Democratic Republic); and offering training and transport for supervisors (Bangladesh, United Republic of Tanzania). Dealing with the socio-economic roots of school drop-out proved to be more difficult; UNICEF supported projects attempting to attune schools more closely to the student's out-of-school circumstances and to involve the community in school concerns. For example, in Burundi, Ethiopia and Indonesia, non-formal education programmes were developed as a route to higher primary school grades. Other similar projects were under way in Bangladesh, Nepal, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The continuing African crisis underscored the need to make basic education more relevant. In countries where large numbers of people were struggling for survival, UNICEF supported community-based educational programmes linked to the urgent tasks of food production, soil and water conservation, raising animals, and meeting the daily necessities of life which were likely to be more effective than conventional schools.

In Indonesia, assistance was provided for small business activities to groups participating in non-formal programmes. In Thailand, Tunisia and Turkey, UNICEF assisted in a work-oriented curriculum, and helped several countries to extend adult literacy and training programmes to older children who missed out on formal education opportunities. UNICEF supported the production of primary education and literacy materials introducing child survival and development, such as a nutrition guidebook for primary teachers in Burundi, Arabic and French materials on health and nutrition for primary schools in Mauritania, and a manual on water use and sanitation for Gambian schools. It also assisted several countries with family-life education projects for women in Egypt, Ethiopia, Haiti, Nepal and the Philippines.

At its 1984 session, the Executive Board endorsed a comprehensive approach to early childhood development, noting that the programme actions to promote the psycho-social development of the young child through early childhood care and education were indispensable for the total development of the child.

Nutrition

In 1984, UNICEF co-operated in nutrition programmes in 100 countries—38 in Africa, 32 in Asia, 21 in the Americas and 9 in the Middle East and North Africa—with a total expenditure of $20.1 million, an increase of $900,000 over 1983. Its activities included expanding nutrition programmes in 27,000 villages, equipping nutrition centres and demonstration areas, providing stipends to train nutrition workers, and delivering 35,000 metric tons of food.

UNICEF's main thrust for assistance during the year was the $85.3 million UNICEF/WHO joint nutrition support programme (JNSP) financed by Italy. By the end of 1984, the entire sum had been committed to support 16 projects in 18 countries and other global activities. Three of the projects were in Asia (Burma, Nepal, Pakistan), eight in Africa (Angola, Ethiopia, Mali, Mozambique, Niger, Somalia, Sudan, United Republic of Tanzania) and five in the Americas (Haiti, Nicaragua, Peru, Eastern Caribbean—involving Dominica and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, with the support of the Caribbean Food and Nutrition Institute), with one regional project to eradicate goitre and cretinism in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru. An important feature of JNSP was that it addressed the nutritional status of children and mothers rather than simply their feeding. This distinction encouraged the promotion of a broader range of activities, such as ORT, immunization and the empowering of women, with a positive effect on nutrition. For this reason, most country projects contained priority elements of the child survival strategy, together with food supplementation or family food production and some form of female education. In the United Republic of Tanzania, for example, a project launched in the Iringa region at the end of 1983, with an impressive campaign to create public awareness, was well established within a year in all 167 villages of the project area and involved two thirds of all households. A similar campaign was launched in Haiti to promote the production, distribution and use of ORS and, by the end of 1984, a fivefold increase in its use was recorded. Although JNSP's resources were not meant to provide relief, assistance was nevertheless extended to Mali and the Sudan affected by severe drought.

UNICEF's other assistance during the year included national nutritional surveillance programmes in Lesotho, Madagascar and Malawi; food production for family use in Papua New Guinea, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda and other countries; nutrition introduction into the primary education system of Kenya; training of volunteers in Zimbabwe food centres; training courses for health personnel in Iraq, Oman and the Syrian Arab Republic; and nutrition education promotion through the media in Turkey.

Infant feeding

In 1984, UNICEF and WHO continued to help promote breast-feeding. Although studies published during the year confirmed that bottle-feeding was still largely confined to urban areas, its spread was becoming alarming. In Mauritius, for example, 84 per cent of babies born in hospitals and clinics were bottle-fed, and in Pakistan 50 per cent of the infants surveyed were wholly or partially bottle-fed. Efforts were made to introduce appropriate weaning foods at the correct age to ensure the health and sound nutritional status of the young child. New medical research findings showed that breast-milk might contain antibodies against cholera, that it afforded greater protection against diarrhoeal diseases than other feeding modes, and that it included a substance that killed a variety of parasites responsible for intestinal disorders, including amoebic dysentery.

To provide the necessary data for national policies in infant and young child feeding, some 15 countries conducted national surveys on breast-feeding and participated in regional workshops sponsored by UNICEF/WHO. Fiji, Mauritius and Zambia, which had completed their surveys, were involved with proposals for action; Argentina and Bangladesh designated government bodies to monitor infant-feeding practices; in Egypt, encouraging breast-feeding was an integral part of the country's diarrhoeal disease control programme; and in Nicaragua, breast-feeding programmes aimed at educating mothers and training health workers. UNICEF also assisted countries in preparing promotional and educational materials on breast-feeding. Slide-sets, films and posters were made in Ethiopia, Haiti, Iraq, Mexico and Thailand, short television spots were aired in the Philippines and Turkey, and a film was produced in Ghana.

Efforts were continued to strengthen the application of the 1981 International Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes.<sup>(13)</sup> By mid-year, the Code was in force in six countries and in the final stages of legislation in 16 others; it had been adopted as a voluntary measure in 7 countries and partially implemented in 24, while 24 others had draft national codes under consideration.

At the request of the Nestlé Company and the International Nestlé Boycott Committee, UNICEF facilitated final negotiations between the two parties in early 1984, leading to an agreement by the Company to abide by the Code and to the consequent lifting of the seven-year boycott against Nestlé.

Primary health care

UNICEF continued in 1984 to promote primary health care, spending a total of $63.5 million in that sector. Its assistance reached 109 countries (43 in Africa, 32 in Asia, 23 in the Americas and 11 in the Middle East and North Africa) and included grants for training health workers, technical assistance and equipment for health centres, especially in rural areas, and medicines and vaccines against tuberculosis, diphtheria, tetanus, typhoid, measles, poliomyelitis and other diseases.

Malaria, acute respiratory infections (ARI) and high neonatal mortality (death during the first month of life) were three of the most serious problems confronting PHC workers. As a result, WHO, in collaboration with UNICEF, strengthened its support for better maternal care and delivery practices, and ARI management was included in the PHC programmes in China, Sri Lanka and Central America. Development in PHC was uneven from region to region. Progress was evident in South-East Asia and the western Pacific; elsewhere in Asia, tremendous resource needs were overcome through strengthening PHC commitment and programmes at the local level. In Latin America, where the recession worsened the plight of the poor, greater interest was stirred in PHC and related programmes. In the Middle East and North Africa, there was a lack of trained manpower. Africa, menaced simultaneously by economic recession, civil strife, drought and famine, was facing the gravest problems.

With child survival measures as the leading thrust, UNICEF continued to advocate PHC actively through international conferences, workshops, meetings and publications. Major meetings in 1984 included an international seminar on health for all in Sri Lanka, an inter-country workshop in Jamaica on joint support for PHC, and a conference at Bellagio, Italy, for expanding immunization efforts. Training programmes, which were an important element in UNICEF's contribution to the development of PHC, included: courses for traditional birth attendants and other village-level workers, the introduction of PHC concepts into regular courses at health schools, refresher courses for health and community development workers, and seminars to sensitize officials and community leaders to PHC concepts. In Pakistan, for example, 2,500 traditional birth attendants were trained under a programme supported by the Canadian Committee for UNICEF and Canadian bilateral aid. In countries where large numbers of village health workers were to be trained, UNICEF concentrated its assistance on the training of trainers and supervisors.

UNICEF/WHO co-operation on essential drugs was pursued in 1984. In the United Republic of Tanzania, for example, UNICEF, with the financial assistance of Denmark, supplied essential-drug kits monthly to some 2,500 rural health centres and trained 3,500 health workers to use them. In Ethiopia, support was provided for manufacturing essential drugs and ORS. In Nepal, Royal Drugs Ltd. expanded its capacity to meet 70 per cent of the country's requirements for essential drugs. Over the 1983-1984 period, international competitive bidding and consolidation of procurement orders reduced prices for such drugs by 50 per cent, and UNICEF worked on a project offering developing countries improved means of obtaining essential drugs through UNICEF's supply division at Copenhagen, Denmark.

UNICEF finances

The financial position of UNICEF remained sound in 1984, despite the continuing effects of global economic recession and the strong United States dollar.<sup>(2)</sup> Total income was $332 million (including $24 million for the African emergency), the same as 1983. A total of 79 per cent ($263 million) came from Governments and intergovernmental organizations; 14 per cent ($47 million) from private sources, greeting card income and individual donations; and the remaining 7 per cent ($22 million) from United Nations organizations and miscellaneous sources. General resources income was $234 million, a decrease of 5 per cent compared with 1983. It was estimated that the effects of the strengthening exchange rate for the United States dollar had reduced income by $11 million.

Total expenditure in 1984 was $345 million compared with $332 million in 1983, or an increase of 4 per cent. General resources expenditure totalled $153 million.

Financial plan for 1984-1987

The UNICEF financial plan for 1984-1987, set out in the medium-term work plan, projected a 1984 income of $350 million, compared to the actual income of $332 million. The annual income projections for the following three years were $425 million, $455 million and $485 million. Projection levels on expenditure were $363 million for 1984, compared to the actual expenditure of $345 million, $398 million for 1985, $424 million for 1986 and $451 million for 1987.

In May,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Board approved the medium-term plan as a framework of projections, including the preparation of up to $327 million in programme commitments from general resources to be submitted to the Board in 1985. That amount was subject to the condition that estimates of income and expenditure made in the plan continued to be valid. The Board considered that the income projections were realistic. In 1983, the Board had requested the Executive Director to submit a revised format for UNICEF budget estimates more in line with the secretariat's organizational structure.<sup>(16)</sup> A new format was submitted and approved, and it was agreed that it would be used for future budget estimates.

Contributions

Contributions to UNICEF received in or pledged for 1984 to the UNICEF general resources and supplementary funds totalled $295,018,008 after a deduction of $2,889,896 in adjustments to prior years' income (see table opposite).

Accounts

1982

In 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Board reviewed and noted the observations and comments of the Board of Auditors and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the 1982 UNICEF financial report.<sup>(17)</sup> It also noted the Executive Director's comments and action taken in response to those observations.

The Board acted on the recommendation of its Committee on Administration and Finance, which met at Rome on 2 and 3 May.<sup>(18)</sup>

1983

In June 1984, following an audit of UNICEF accounts, the United Nations Board of Auditors submitted to the General Assembly the 1983 financial statements of UNICEF, including the Greeting Card Operation (GCO).<sup>(19)</sup> The Board noted the speed with which the Administration had dealt with matters brought to its attention and the efforts it had made to improve financial management and control systems. Its review indicated that, in some cases, project implementation was not satisfactory, and the review, monitoring and evaluation of projects were inadequate. The Board also noted that delegation of authority to regional and field offices for local procurement was not adequate, deliveries of supplies to projects were sometimes delayed and relevant rules on bidding procedures were not strictly followed. It recommended that the field offices be given more authority for local procurement and that efforts be made to award contracts to the lowest acceptable bidder; in the case of non-acceptance of the lowest bids, sufficient justifications for the decision should be recorded. Pointing out that, in some field offices, substantial cash balances were maintained in non-interest-bearing bank accounts, the Board recommended that significant cash balances not be retained in such accounts.

Regarding GCO, the Board noticed that there were long-outstanding receivables; procurement procedures followed in certain cases were inconsistent with the United Nations Financial Rules; there was a substantial stock of unused paper and unsold cards at every year-end; and there was a lack of internal control in physical stock-taking of inventories. It recommended that prompt action be taken by the Administration to rectify the situation. In addition, in order to reduce the volume of unsold cards, printing should be undertaken based on adequate market surveys and the margin for excess of demands be reviewed.

In its September 1984 report on audited financial statements,<sup>(20)</sup> ACABQ said it shared the Board's concern over procurement matters and urged the UNICEF Administration to pay closer attention to that process, to ensure full compliance with the applicable rules and to achieve optimum use of resources. Referring to the Board's report on cash balances maintained in non-interest-bearing accounts, ACABQ recalled that the Board had made a similar comment the previous year. While the Administration had indicated that the amounts involved totalled less than two weeks of UNICEF cash expenditures, ACABQ felt that cash management at field offices could be improved to reduce further the level of non-interest-bearing accounts. Concerning physical inventories of UNICEF property, ACABQ shared the Board's views since it considered that the maintenance of adequate control was essential if losses were to be avoided.

In May, the UNICEF Committee on Administration and Finance<sup>(18)</sup> noted that the balance of unspent commitments at the end of 1983 was, at $959 million, too high. It was pointed out that the balance consisted of $220 million for 1984-1985 budget commitments, $200 million of supplementary funds commitments and $539 million of general resources programme commitments. The relationship of outstanding general resources commitments relative to income levels had, from 1979 to 1983, remained stable at the equivalent of 26 months of future resources income. Outstanding commitments and income had both grown but the ratio between them had been constant.

The UNICEF Executive Board, in May,<sup>(2)</sup> reviewed and noted the 1983 financial report and statements. On 13 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 39/66, accepted the report, concurred with the ACABQ comments and requested the UNICEF Executive Director to take the required remedial action.

Organizational questions

Greeting Card Operation

During the 1983 GCO season (1 May 1983-30 April 1984), 113 million cards, 436,000 calendars, 241,000 packs of stationery and other items were sold in 130 countries, compared with 115 million cards, 441,000 calendars and 314,000 packs in the previous season.<sup>(21)</sup> The sales generated $48.1 million in gross revenues, compared to $46.9 million the previous year, yielding a net operational income of $14.8 million to UNICEF general resources, $3.3 million (18 per cent) lower than the 1982 season. The high exchange value of the United States dollar and high inflation in some major markets had a considerable impact on GCO income in 1983.

The UNICEF Executive Board, in May,<sup>(22)</sup> approved the work plan for the 1984 GCO season (1 May 1984–30 April 1985), in which planned card production ranged from 120 million to 140 million, expenditure from $26.8 million to $28 million and corresponding revenue projections from $44.5 million to $52.3 million. The work plan for the 1984 season had been recommended by the UNICEF Executive Director.<sup>(22)</sup> It was concluded that GCO's organizational structure had to be changed from its traditional concentration on production to a progressive and dynamic marketing and sales organization.

Headquarters arrangements

On the recommendation of the UNICEF Executive Director, the Executive Board accepted an offer from the United Nations Development Corporation (UNDC) to lease space for UNICEF headquarters in the new UNDC-III building, to be available for occupancy in late 1986 or early 1987. The new building, on East 44th Street in New York City, would be built to UNICEF requirements and would be known as UNICEF House.<sup>(2)</sup>

NGO relations

Co-operation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) increased notably in 1984.<sup>(4)</sup> Several international NGOs working in developing countries initiated in their activities new child survival components and designed special programmes. The League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, for example, launched the "Child Alive" programme, which, in co-operation with UNICEF, aimed at reducing diarrhoea-related mortality and morbidity by extending the correct use of ORT and by promoting breast-feeding and nutritional awareness. "Child Alive" activities were under way in Colombia, Honduras and Swaziland. In their joint International Youth Year/development education programme, the World Organization of the Scout Movement and the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts included messages on nutritional surveillance and ORT. In some countries, Haiti for example, national scouts were being trained in ORT.

Paediatricians and midwives' organizations endorsed child survival actions and encouraged their members to promote these actions. In co-operation with UNICEF, the International Paediatric Association sponsored regional meetings on childhood mortality and morbidity, and the International Council of Nurses emphasized the importance of child survival measures in its PHC training programmes.

Church and religious leaders around the world promoted child survival measures. In Indonesia, Oman and the Philippines, advocacy with Muslim leaders and teachers led to support for child survival actions in their communities. Papal messages and initiatives by church leaders in Brazil, Colombia, Guatemala, India and the Philippines supported child survival and development actions. Co-operation increased between Rotary International and UNICEF to immunize all children against poliomyelitis. Rotary International announced that it would provide, for a five-year period, the polio vaccines needed for any approved city, state, country or regional immunization effort. In collaboration with UNICEF and WHO, vaccination campaigns began in Colombia, Haiti, India, Nigeria and the Sudan. Annual reports from UNICEF field offices showed an upsurge of activity with local and national NGOs and other groups, and efforts were under way to support community-based actions through bilateral funding.

Draft declaration on adoption and foster placement

In a September 1984 report with a later addendum,<sup>(23)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly replies he had received from eight Governments concerning the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally.

The draft Declaration had been prepared by a group of experts in response to a 1975 Economic and Social Council resolution<sup>(24)</sup> and was submitted to the Council in 1979.<sup>(25)</sup> In 1982<sup>(26)</sup> and in 1983,<sup>(27)</sup> the Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to circulate the draft text to Member States to obtain their views.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, adopted resolution 39/89 without vote.

Draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 36/167 of 16 December 1981, whereby it decided, inter alia, that appropriate measures should be taken to finalize the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and

Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally,

Noting, in this connection, that the work of the Commission on Human Rights on the draft Convention on the Rights of the Child is soon to be completed,

Bearing in mind the reports of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1980, 19 October 1982, 6 October 1983 and 10 September 1984, containing the views of Member States on the text of the draft Declaration,

Fully aware of the sovereign right of Governments to define their national and international policies in accordance with their legal systems as regards the protection and welfare of children, including foster placement, adoption and guardianship, as appropriate,

Bearing in mind the existence of different national legislation in the field of the protection and welfare of children,

Recognizing that it is the responsibility of Governments to determine the adequacy of their national services for children and to recognize those children whose needs are not being met by existing services,

Noting the usefulness of regional co-operation in matters regarding the well-being of children,

Recognizing that the best child welfare is good family welfare and that, when family care is unavailable or inappropriate, substitute family care should be considered, in conformity with national legislation,

Convinced that adoption of the draft Declaration will promote the well-being of children with special needs,

1. Appeals to Member States representing different legal systems to undertake consultations on the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally, with a view to finding out the extent to which they would join the common endeavour of completing the work thereon;

2. Also appeals to the Member States that will take part in the consultations to submit, before the forty-first session of the General Assembly, a paper containing their common conclusions on the matter, including, if appropriate, their suggestions as to the procedure and forum for future work;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate the paper referred to in paragraph 2 above to Member States with a view to obtaining their comments thereon, including their views as to the procedure and forum for future work, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

Youth

Activities during 1984 continued to focus on preparations for International Youth Year (1985) (IYY) and on co-ordinating and strengthening communication between youth and the United Nations. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1984/44, and the General Assembly, in resolution 39/24, called for further co-ordination in the field of youth as well as communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations.

The Council, in resolution 1984/71, requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) to enable it to fulfil its mandate concerning youth, including the implementation of a regional plan of action on youth, and to take specific measures to increase the dissemination of information on youth. By resolution 39/22, the Assembly invited the organizers of international youth conferences and festivals in 1985 to report the results of those activities. The Assembly also called, in resolution 39/23, for the implementation of its previous resolutions on human rights relating to youth, particularly the right to education and to work.

In November 1984, the United Nations Postal Administration issued commemorative stamps and a souvenir card on IYY (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

Integrating youth in development

In an April 1984 report on the social aspects of development (see Chapter XIII of this section), which reviewed progress since 1981 towards the social goals of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General recalled that the Strategy had recommended that all countries should give high priority to the mobilization and integration of youth in development.<sup>(2)</sup>

It was estimated that more than half of the population of developing countries was below 24 years of age. The number and proportion of young people continued to grow in the early 1980s and this trend would persist during the current decade. The youth group—persons 15 to 24 years old—increased on average at a rate of 2.8 per cent a year, and the recent decline of fertility in some developing regions would not affect their population structure during the 1980s. The Secretary-General noted that integrating youth in development involved government action and also a large number of private organizations, religious movements, clubs and associations, which had been particularly active in recent years in a number of developing countries.

Activities of the UN system

In accordance with a May 1983 resolution of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General issued a report in April 1984 on the action taken by the United Nations system and other organizations to facilitate co-ordination and information in the field of youth.<sup>(4)</sup> The report described the progress achieved at all levels to facilitate co-ordination of efforts and to implement the substantive decisions taken by the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year. It also provided examples of approaches and views of the United Nations system and of co-operative efforts between the United Nations and NGOs, as well as an overview of co-ordination and information initiatives emanating from regional meetings devoted to IYY. The report concluded that preparations for IYY had strengthened co-ordination of youth activities at all levels.

The Joint United Nations Information Committee, which was responsible for co-ordinating information activities in the United Nations system, approved at its April 1984 session the recommendations of its task force on IYY. Among the planned activities were: an IYY "action-pack", a feature exchange service and a United Nations bibliography, as well as information focal points within co-operating organizations.<sup>(5)</sup> The Department of Public Information (DPI) was requested to act as a clearing-house in inter-agency information activities for IYY.<sup>(6)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1984/44 without vote.

Strengthening channels of communication between youth and the United Nations

For many years, channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations had been under review by the General Assembly. In order to improve the 1977<sup>(7)</sup> and 1981<sup>(8)</sup> guidelines on channels of communication, the IYY secretariat, within the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, organized a meeting of an Expert Group (Vienna, Austria, 9-13 January 1984). The Group took into account the diversity of programmes and mechanisms within the United Nations system devoted to youth matters and the relationships between Governments and non-governmental youth organizations, and made two sets of recommendations, one short-term and the other long-term.<sup>(9)</sup>

Suggested short-term actions included selected areas of concern to youth (peace and international understanding, development, employment, environment, culture and leisure) with priority given to collective communication between the United Nations and groups of youth organizations, the exchange of information through United Nations publications, such as the quarterly Youth Information Bulletin, the use of mass media, and the expansion of youth representation and involvement in national delegations to the General Assembly and to other relevant United Nations meetings.

Long-term recommendations centred on strengthening channels of communication at all levels. Among the suggestions were: at the national level, that national co-ordinating committees should continue their work after IYY and that DPI should encourage national-level communication with young people; and, at the regional level, that the regional commissions should encourage and support co-ordination within the United Nations system. At the international level, the Group recommended, among other things: that DPI should publish a catalogue of films and media materials of interest to youth and invite young people with skills and an interest in the media to take part in DPI's activities; that the consultative status for youth organizations should be reviewed and strengthened, and they should be encouraged to take a more active role in the work of the United Nations system; and that United Nations agencies should, when preparing school textbooks and other materials, collaborate with teachers' organizations.

The Advisory Committee for IYY, pursuant to a November 1983 Assembly resolution<sup>(10)</sup> requesting it to monitor and evaluate measures with respect to the implementation of the guidelines on channels of communication and to make recommendations for their implementation and further elaboration as a part of IYY, met in April (see below). The Committee's report was forwarded to the Assembly by the Secretary-General in June.<sup>(11)</sup>

In its report, the Committee requested the Secretary-General to obtain from youth NGOs and the Geneva Informal Meeting of International Youth Non-Governmental Organizations (usually convened three times a year) suggestions for activities regarding proposals in the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities, and to report to the General Assembly in 1985. It also invited national IYY co-ordinating committees and other similar structures to assist national youth organizations in their role as channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 November, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 39/24 without vote.

Channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/135 of 16 December 1977 and 36/17 of 9 November 1981, in which it adopted guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, and also recalling its resolution 38/26 of 22 November 1983,

2. Calls upon Member States, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to implement fully the guidelines relating to the channels of communication not only in their general terms, but also in concrete projects dealing with issues of importance to young people;

tures to assist national youth organizations, upon their request, in carrying out their role as channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations;

Preparations for International Youth Year (1985)

In pursuance of a November 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly the report<sup>(11)</sup> of the IYY Advisory Committee on its third session (Vienna, 2-11 April 1984). The Committee had been requested to submit a report with practical proposals on specific ways and means for observance, in 1985, of IYY in an appropriate organizational framework within the United Nations.

In its report, the Committee requested the Assembly to approve, within existing resources, the convening in 1985 of its fourth session with a view to recommending to the Assembly guidelines for further planning and follow-up in the field of youth. The Committee called on the United Nations system and NGOs to co-ordinate their efforts in order to make adequate preparations for the Year. It recommended that the Assembly devote some plenary meetings in 1985—to be designated as the United Nations World Conference for IYY—to policies and programmes relating to youth, and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report surveying the implementation of specific proposals as contained in the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during IYY. The Committee also suggested that the United Nations system, within existing resources, assist Governments with international events on youth-related issues, and it invited Member States, governmental organizations and NGOs to do their utmost to implement programmes leading to improvement in the situation of young people according to the goals of IYY: "Participation, Development, Peace".

By its resolution 39/22 (see below), the Assembly endorsed the Advisory Committee's recommendations and requested the Secretary-General to ensure an appropriate observance of IYY within the United Nations system.

The Conference of Ministers of ECA (tenth meeting, Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 24-28 May) recommended to the Economic and Social Council a draft resolution (see below), requesting the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to strengthen the ECA secretariat to enable it to fulfil its mandate regarding youth, including the implementation of a regional plan of action (see also Chapter VIII of this section).

Aging persons

Activities during 1984 relating to aging persons—people aged 60 and over—centred on follow-up actions to implement the 1982 Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging. In resolution 39/25, the General Assembly called on Governments to consider the changing age structure of the population in their economic and social development plans and to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging. It also requested the Secretary-General to continue promoting joint activities on aging and youth, especially during IYY (see p. 929).

Implementation of the Plan of Action

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1984, the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(1)</sup> on the question of aging to the General Assembly, prepared in pursuance of its November request<sup>(2)</sup> that efforts be continued to implement the Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging adopted in 1982 by the World Assembly on Aging.<sup>(3)</sup>

During the year, the Secretary-General continued his assistance to national committees on aging, some of which had held national conferences to review the Plan of Action within the context of the economic, social and cultural circumstances of their country. Since the adoption of the Plan, the international network for information exchange on aging had been strengthened, enabling it to become a significant instrument for information exchange. Membership in the network expanded to over 60 organizations representing every region of the world. In addition, the United Nations strengthened its own information exchange activities: the periodical Bulletin on Aging was issued quarterly in English and French and its circulation increased, while The Aging Periodical (to be issued annually) was launched to provide scholarly information to policy-makers, planners, researchers, human service practitioners and researchers.

Co-operation within the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations also continued. The Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, identified as the focal point for the question of aging, undertook various activities, such as information exchange, the assessment review and appraisal of the Plan of Action and technical co-operation. Together with organizations responsible for international population assistance, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities continued its financial assistance to the Centre to carry out activities related to the aging of populations. The United Nations also co-operated with intergovernmental organizations in exchanging information, knowledge and experience.

The Secretary-General reported that NGOs were playing a major role in implementing the Plan and two NGO committees on aging (one in New York and the other in Vienna) had been particularly active. NGOs had also convened numerous conferences, symposia and meetings on specific aspects of the Plan at the national, regional and international levels. The question of aging was included in international events sponsored by the United Nations, such as the 1984 International Conference on Population (see p. 714), International Youth Year (1985) (see p. 929), the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (1985) (see p. 889) and the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (1985) (see p. 698).

On the question of elderly women, the Commission on the Status of Women, at its 1984 session, recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a draft, which the Council on 24 May adopted as resolution 1984/13. The Council requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the status and situation of elderly women in their societies, to be presented to the Commission in 1986 with a view to recommending necessary action relating to their plight throughout the world (see Chapter XIX of this section).

Regarding the question of youth, the Secretary-General transmitted to the IYY secretariat the Plan of Action on Aging, in order to bring the recommendations and conclusions of the World Assembly on Aging to the attention of national planning committees concerned with developing ideas for IYY.

As also requested by the Assembly in 1983,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General brought the question of the aging of populations to the attention of United Nations bodies responsible for the preparation of the International Conference on Population in order for this question to be considered by the Conference itself.

Action by the Conference on Population. The International Conference on Population<sup>(4)</sup> (Mexico City, 6-14 August) urged Governments to reaffirm their commitment to implementing the Vienna Plan of Action. It recommended that further efforts be made to analyse the issue of aging, particularly its implications for overall development, social services, medical care and other related fields. On the basis of such data, Governments were urged to secure the welfare and safety of older people, with particular attention to the situation and needs of older women. Governments and international agencies were requested to increase their efforts to improve care for the aged within the family unit, and to view the aging sector of the population not merely as a dependent group, but in terms of the active contribution that older persons had already made and could still make to the economic, social and cultural life of their families and community.

The Assembly, in resolution 39/228, endorsed the recommendations of the Conference.

UN Trust Fund

The first Conference for the Development of the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging met at Vienna on 9 March 1984 to establish an advisory group to support and strengthen the Fund. The group was to follow up Conference recommendations for stimulating interest in and support for the Fund and to assure a consistent flow of resources.

According to the Secretary-General's October report,<sup>(1)</sup> requests for assistance from the Fund—established in pursuance of a 1980 General Assembly resolution<sup>(5)</sup> to provide funds for the preparation of the 1982 World Assembly and then used to meet the increasing needs of the aging in developing countries—exceeded the $500,000 in programmable resources for 1984. Despite the Secretary-General's appeals and promotional activities, voluntary contributions to the Fund during the year were minimal. Contributions in 1984 amounted to $39,110 and during 1983 to $46,102. The balance of available resources as at 31 December 1984 was $493,051.

Chapter XXI

Refugees and displaced persons

During 1984, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) faced the challenge of attaining durable solutions to refugee problems in the midst of seriously deteriorating situations in some parts of the world and the onset of a major emergency in Africa. In November, the High Commissioner issued a special appeal in response to a refugee crisis in four drought-stricken countries—the Central African Republic, Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan.

The Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (ICARA II) (Geneva, 9-11 July) examined some 128 projects valued at $362 million designed to help African host countries. The Conference emphasized the complementarity between refugee aid and development assistance, urging that refugee projects be integrated into the development process. The first such conference had been held in 1981.

Major assistance programmes were maintained, notably in Pakistan, which had the largest refugee population in the world, and in South-East Asia, where Indo-Chinese refugees continued to arrive. Resettlement in third countries remained the primary solution for the latter, some 68,500 of whom were resettled in 1984. In Somalia and the Sudan, care and maintenance programmes were accompanied by local integration activities until late 1984, when attention had to be diverted to emergency relief. Local integration activities were also carried out in Central America, Mexico, Uganda and Zaire.

Assistance to Palestine refugees continued as in past years under the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) (see p. 335).

At the thirty-fifth session of the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme (Geneva, 8-18 October), the High Commissioner reported that 42 per cent of the 1985 UNHCR budget would be devoted to durable solutions through voluntary repatriation, local integration and resettlement, adding that UNHCR would like that percentage to be much higher.

Violations of the physical safety of refugees continued. The ninth meeting of the Sub-Committee of the Whole on International Protection (Geneva, 3, 4, 11 and 15 October) discussed military and armed attacks on refugee camps.

In December, the General Assembly urged States to ensure the safety of refugees and asylum-seekers and to support the High Commissioner in pursuing durable solutions to the refugee problem (resolution 39/140); emphasized the vital importance of the complementarity of refugee aid and development assistance (39/139); and called for emergency assistance to returnees and displaced persons in Chad (39/106) and Ethiopia (39/105), as well as refugees in Djibouti (39/107), Somalia (39/104) and the Sudan (39/108) and student refugees in southern Africa (39/109).

The Assembly called on the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees to work expeditiously to complete its review of the problem (39/100). It expressed the hope that the 1985 Assembly would adopt a declaration on the human rights of individuals who were not citizens of the country in which they lived (39/103).

The International Conference on Population (Mexico City, 6-14 August 1984) invited States that had not done so to accede to the international instruments concerning refugees and urged Governments and international agencies to find durable solutions to refugee problems and work towards their elimination (see p. 716).

The 1984 Nansen Medal—awarded in honour of Fridtjof Nansen, the first League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—went to Captain Lewis M. Hiller of the United States merchant ship Rose City and two of his crew members, Jeff Kass and Gregg Turay, for their rescue of 85 Indo-Chinese refugees adrift in a storm in the South China Sea.

In November 1984, the United Nations Postal Administration issued commemorative stamps on the theme "A Future for Refugees" (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

Programme policy

Executive Committee action. At its October 1984 session, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme<sup>(1)</sup> considered various aspects of the refugee problem, among them international protection and the role of UNHCR in promoting durable solutions, assistance to refugees and their development. The Committee expressed satisfaction at the absence of new large-scale outflows of refugees but noted the continuing severity of refugee problems in various parts of the world, particularly in Africa, Asia and Central America, and urged the international community to intensify its efforts to address the root causes of those problems in appropriate international forums. It also urged the High Commissioner to continue pursuing durable solutions, notably voluntary repatriation, while calling on the international community to ensure that the needs of refugees were met.

The Committee welcomed the continued strengthening of the legal framework for international protection; nevertheless, it expressed concern at a deterioration in the protection situation and serious violations of the physical safety of refugees, including armed attacks, piracy and failure to rescue asylum-seekers in distress at sea.

Noting that in different parts of the world the principle of non-refoulement—under which asylum-seekers were not forcibly returned to countries where they faced persecution or death—had been violated, the Committee regretted the adoption of less liberal asylum practices and falling standards in the treatment of asylum-seekers. It recommended that States ensure that refugees were provided with documents establishing their identity and refugee status, and that asylum applicants whose applications could not be decided without delay be provided with provisional documentation to ensure their protection against expulsion or refoulement.

The Committee recommended that Governments co-operate with UNHCR in establishing appropriate processing mechanisms for the resettlement of refugees, and welcomed continuing co-operation between Governments and UNHCR in operation of the Orderly Departure Programme from Viet Nam (see p. 952); it also welcomed UNHCR initiatives to arrange meetings and discussion forums on resettlement planning.

It stressed the importance of providing development-oriented assistance to refugees and returnees in developing countries, as the best means of helping them to support themselves. UNHCR, in implementing such assistance, continued to co-operate with other United Nations organizations (see p. 941).

UNHCR also continued its co-operation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Organization of American States, the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration, liberation movements, and some 300 non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The Executive Committee urged further strengthening of that co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the 1984 report of the High Commissioner,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted on 14 December resolution 39/140 without vote.

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office, as well as the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner on the work of its thirty-fifth session, and having heard the statement made by the High Commissioner on 12 November 1984,

Recalling its resolution 38/121 of 16 December 1983,

Reaffirming the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner,

Deeply concerned that refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner continue to face distressingly serious problems in all parts of the world,

Stressing the fundamental importance of the High Commissioner's international protection function and the need for States to co-operate with the High Commissioner in the exercise of this essential function, particularly in view of the continued and persistent violations of the basic rights of persons of concern to his Office,

Welcoming the additional accessions by States to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

Particularly concerned that in various regions the safety and welfare of refugees and asylum-seekers continue to be seriously jeopardized on account of military or armed attacks, acts of piracy and other forms of brutality,

Emphasizing that voluntary repatriation or return remains the most desirable solution to problems of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner,

Emphasizing also the importance for the international community to continue to provide assistance and resettlement opportunities for those refugees for whom no other durable solution may be in sight, particularly in regions where countries of first refuge continue generously to receive refugees arriving by land or by sea,

Noting with deep appreciation the valuable support extended by many Governments to the High Commissioner in carrying out his humanitarian task,

Noting with satisfaction the positive results achieved by the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984, as part of a continuing process of increasing international interest in the situation of refugees in Africa and support for those refugees,

Welcoming the progress made by the High Commissioner in improving the management of his Office and urging him to pursue his efforts in this direction in line with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and decisions of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner,

Taking note of the decision of the Executive Committee on the inclusion of Arabic, Chinese and Spanish among the official languages of the Executive Committee,

1. Commends the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his staff for the dedicated and efficient manner in which they continue to discharge their responsibilities;

2. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental nature of the High Commissioner's function to provide international protection and the need for Governments to continue to co-operate fully with his Office in order to facilitate the effective exercise of this function, in particular by acceding to and fully implementing the relevant international and regional refugee instruments and by scrupulously observing the principles of asylum and non-refoulement;

3. Condemns all violations of the rights and safety of refugees and asylum-seekers, in particular those perpetrated through military or armed attacks against refugee camps and settlements and other forms of brutality and by the failure to rescue asylum-seekers in distress at sea;

4. Urges all States, in co-operation with the Office of the High Commissioner and other competent international bodies, to take all measures necessary to ensure the safety of refugees and asylum-seekers;

5. Also urges all States to support the High Commissioner in discharging his responsibility to pursue durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons of concern to his Office, primarily through voluntary repatriation or return, including assistance to returnees, as appropriate, or, wherever appropriate, through integration in countries of asylum or resettlement in third countries;

6. Expresses deep appreciation for the valuable material and humanitarian response of many receiving countries, in particular those developing countries that, despite serious economic crises and limited resources, continue to admit, on a permanent or temporary basis, large numbers of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner, and, reaffirming the principle of international solidarity and burden-sharing, urges the international community to assist receiving countries in order to enable them to cope with the additional burden created by their presence;

7. Notes with satisfaction the initiatives taken by the High Commissioner in developing the concept of development-oriented assistance to refugees and returnees, wherever appropriate, and urges him to pursue those efforts in co-operation with interested Governments, as well as with the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme and other developmental organizations, including non-governmental organizations;

8. Commends all States that facilitate the attainment of durable solutions and contribute generously to the High Commissioner's programmes;

9. Notes with appreciation the support consistently given to the High Commissioner by agencies of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in carrying out his humanitarian task and requests the High Commissioner to continue to co-ordinate his efforts with those agencies and organizations;

10. Calls upon all States to promote durable solutions and to contribute generously to the High Commissioner's humanitarian programmes in order to assist persons of concern to the High Commissioner in a spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing.

Financial and administrative questions

In 1984, total UNHCR expenditure amounted to $444.8 million. Of that total, voluntary funds expenditure represented $444.1 million, including $346 million under General Programmes and $98.1 million under Special Programmes. Voluntary funds expenditure had increased by approximately 10 per cent over 1983, reflecting additional refugee assistance requirements, particularly in Africa and the Americas.

Total income for 1984 was $388.9 million.

Contributions

In 1984, contributions from government sources totalled some $292 million, while inter-governmental organizations provided an additional $26.7 million, mostly in food, and NGOs assisted in cash and kind valued at $5.5 million.

Appeals by the Commissioner for contributions to Special Programmes continued in response to specific needs,<sup>(3)</sup> those related, for example, to returnees to Ethiopia, Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Orderly Departure Programme from Viet Nam, the Refugee Education Account and the South-East Asia Anti-Piracy Programme.

The UNHCR Executive Committee<sup>(1)</sup> approved in October a target of $374,288,500 (not including the $10 million Emergency Fund) for 1985 General Programmes. Having noted a possible reduction in funding for those Programmes, the Committee asked that governmental and non-governmental agencies implement assistance projects in the most efficient way possible. It also took note of the considerable increase in resources devoted to durable solutions in Africa, commending the High Commissioner's efforts to promote voluntary repatriation.

The Committee reaffirmed the universal character of the refugee problem and the need for more widespread financial support for UNHCR programmes. It urged Governments to make increased contributions to the 1985 General Programmes and to make them as early as possible.

At a meeting on 16 November 1984 of the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to the 1985 Programme of UNHCR,<sup>(4)</sup> pledges totalling $126,653,763 were made.

Accounts of voluntary funds for 1983

The audited financial statements on the voluntary funds administered by UNHCR for the year ended 31 December 1983 showed a total expenditure of $398 million and total income of $377.8 million.

After examining the financial statements, the Board of Auditors, in its report<sup>(3)</sup> transmitted to the General Assembly in June 1984, recommended that efforts be intensified to collect long-outstanding pledges and that cash balances in the field offices be kept to the minimum possible level. Noting that in certain cases procurement was uneconomical, the Board recommended that contracts be awarded to the lowest acceptable bidders in accordance with United Nations practice. For proper monitoring of project activities, it recommended that periodic reports be obtained in time for review; financial closure of completed projects be expedited; and efforts be made to enforce the stipulations of agreements with executing agencies and operating partners and to ensure timely completion of project activities and evaluation reports.

Commenting on the Board's audit in a September report,<sup>(6)</sup> the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) urged that closer attention be paid to all aspects of the procurement process, both to ensure full compliance with the applicable rules and to achieve optimum use of resources.

In October,<sup>(1)</sup> the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme took note of the accounts and the reports of the Board of Auditors and ACABQ, and further noted with appreciation efforts to improve financial planning and control.

The General Assembly by resolution 39/66 accepted the financial report and the audit opinions of the Board, concurred with ACABQ's observations, and requested that the High Commissioner take remedial action as might be required by the Board.

Activities for refugees

Assistance

In 1984, UNHCR's primary objective remained the promotion of durable solutions for refugees, while continuing to respond to requests for emergency assistance and to pursue care and maintenance programmes (food, shelter, water, health services, education) for refugees for whom no immediate solution could be devised.<sup>(1)</sup> The High Commissioner could allocate up to $10 million annually from his Emergency Fund, providing that the amount made available for a single emergency did not exceed $4 million.

A total of $9,760,787 was obligated from the Emergency Fund during the year, with a significant part of those funds used in Africa. Some $2.4 million was used to finance assistance to Ethiopians arriving in eastern Sudan, and $3.1 million was allocated for refugees from Chad in the Central African Republic. Allocations also were made to Mozambican refugees in Swaziland ($100,000) and Zimbabwe ($954,103) and to Angolan refugees in Zaire ($1,334,810) and Zambia ($137,442). Elsewhere, $940,000 was allocated for refugees from Irian Jaya (Indonesia) in Papua New Guinea, with smaller amounts being allocated to assist displaced Lebanese in Cyprus ($64,957), Spain ($100,000) and the Syrian Arab Republic ($150,000) and within Lebanon itself ($500,000).

To facilitate planning and rapid action, UNHCR launched a series of profiles containing basic data on countries receiving large numbers of refugees. The UNHCR Handbook for Emergencies, published in English in 1982 and in French in 1983, was issued in Spanish. Demand for the English and French language editions remained high. A total of 119 UNHCR/WHO health kits, 30 field kits and 26 office kits were distributed, and a nutrition kit was added to the specialized emergency equipment for staff members and operational partners.

Care and maintenance programmes in 1984 amounted to approximately 59 per cent of total General Programmes expenditures, down from 65.3 per cent in 1983. The largest single programme of that type continued to be for Afghan refugees in Pakistan, for which $59.2 million was obligated. Some $48.3 million was obligated for Indo-Chinese refugees in East and South-East Asia, of which $24.3 million was for refugees in Thailand, pending a more durable solution, which in most cases was resettlement outside the region. A total of $22.7 million was allocated for Ethiopian refugees in Somalia and $20 million for activities in Central America, although significant progress towards more durable local settlement programmes was made in Costa Rica, Mexico and Nicaragua.

More than $103.4 million, or some 30 per cent of General Programmes funds, was used for voluntary repatriation, local integration in the country of first asylum or resettlement. In South-East Asia, following voluntary repatriation of 148 persons from Thailand to the Lao People's Democratic Republic early in 1984, the programme was temporarily suspended. Movements resumed in December and by the end of the year 204 persons had been repatriated, bringing to 2,603 the number voluntarily repatriated since the start of the programme in 1980. A special programme of assistance to Ethiopian returnees was almost fully implemented by the end of 1984, except for one agricultural project in Hararge Province which, due to severe drought, was in need of support for another planting season. The project had provided some $17.1 million in food and other aid to 120,000 returnees. The voluntary repatriation of Ethiopian refugees from Djibouti continued throughout 1984, except for the period between January and April when damage to the Djibouti-Dire Dawa railway caused a suspension. In Latin America, repatriations to Argentina and Chile continued.

Expenditure on local settlement activities in 1984 amounted to some $87 million, 25 per cent of General Programmes expenditures. Local settlement projects were carried out in the Central African Republic, Ethiopia, Mexico, Somalia, Uganda and Zaire.

Some $11.8 million was spent on resettling refugees during 1984. Approximately 68,500 Indo-Chinese refugees were resettled; of those, 33,000 were Vietnamese, 26,000 Kampuchean and 9,500 Lao. An additional 29,000 Vietnamese were reunited with family members abroad under the Orderly Departure Programme from Viet Nam. Many countries admitted Indo-Chinese rescued on the high seas by vessels flying their flags. A new scheme, Rescue at Sea Resettlement Offers, was elaborated in 1984 to share more equitably the burden of resettling persons rescued at sea; it was to become operational in 1985. Meanwhile, the Disembarkation Resettlement Offers scheme, which had been in operation for a number of years, continued to ensure the resettlement of persons rescued by vessels flying flags of convenience or of countries not able to accept refugees.

At its October 1984 session,<sup>(2)</sup> the UNHCR Executive Committee stressed the importance of development-oriented assistance to refugees and returnees in developing countries and of their integration into the development process; commended the High Commissioner and concerned Governments for action taken in that direction with UNDP, the World Bank and other organizations; recommended that Governments co-operate with UNHCR in establishing mechanisms for refugee resettlement, with full regard for international protection and material assistance; and called on States to facilitate admission, especially of disabled refugees and of those in emergency situations.

To meet the needs of refugees, UNHCR continued to co-operate with other United Nations organizations. For example, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) promoted small-scale enterprise development and income-generating activities in refugee settlements. In Zaire, under a joint ILO/UNHCR project, 40 self-sustaining refugee co-operatives were set up in the Bas-Fleuve region. Activities included fishing, pisciculture, baking, tailoring, carpentry, shoemaking, soap-making, handicrafts, blacksmithing and marketing of agricultural produce.

The United Nations Children's Fund provided support to programmes related to emergency rehabilitation, water supply and sanitation, health care and education for refugee children. Collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was strengthened by establishing joint guidelines for co-operation in situations requiring longer-term assistance to refugees.

A joint mission was organized by UNHCR and the World Bank in November 1984 to examine an income-generating project for refugee areas in Pakistan. The World Health Organization (WHO) continued to supply medicines to refugees in Africa; joint appointments of UNHCR-WHO health co-ordinators were made for refugee programmes in Pakistan and Somalia. The United Nations Fund for Population Activities co-operated with UNHCR in family planning programmes for Indo-Chinese families in Hong Kong.

The World Food Programme (WFP) continued to meet most of the basic food needs of refugees in many areas of the world.

Africa

There were about 4 million African refugees and returnees in several geographical areas. The largest concentration was in the Horn of Africa and the eastern and central parts of the Sudan, while other concentrations were to be found in central Africa (Rwanda, the southern part of the Sudan, Uganda and Zaire); in a region involving Burundi, Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire; and in southern Africa. The refugee and returnee problem in West Africa most often concerned individual cases of asylum and voluntary repatriation.

An overwhelming majority of refugees were from rural areas, though the proportion of those coming from or arriving in urban and semi-urban areas was increasing. Demographically, the two main groups within the African refugee population were women and children and young adult single males.

Direct international assistance to rural refugees was usually provided in organized settlements or camps in rural areas on land made available by host Governments. Through such programmes, the essential needs for shelter, health and sanitation services, water and transport were covered. In addition, several hundred thousand refugees had spontaneously settled in rural areas of host countries.

All of the African countries that hosted refugees and returnees were at a stage of development where they had great difficulty meeting the basic needs, including infrastructural services, of their nationals. Several were classified as least developed countries. Nevertheless, as a matter of both official government policy and traditional African hospitality, refugees and returnees were most often readily accepted. Local resources, however meagre, were shared with them, and usually UNHCR and other humanitarian agencies were called in to provide additional assistance.

In 1984, UNHCR voluntary fund expenditures in Africa amounted to some $178.2 million, of which $131.6 million was obligated under General Programmes and $46.6 million under Special Programmes.

Continuing drought, particularly in the Horn of Africa and the Sudan, affected UNHCR's efforts to achieve durable solutions for refugees. In late 1984, the High Commissioner launched a special appeal for emergency relief programmes to ensure the survival of refugees in the Central African Republic, Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan. More than $100 million was required.

The refugee situation in the Sudan changed dramatically during the latter part of 1984. In eastern Sudan, the harvest failed in the 20 Ethiopian refugee settlements where food self-sufficiency had been expected to be attained. With WFP, UNHCR had to revert to full food aid for the 130,000 refugees in the settlements. That was coupled at the end of the year with the arrival from Ethiopia of up to 3,000 persons a day in search of food, medical care and water as well as a haven from civil disorder. In western Sudan, there was an influx of 60,000 persons from Chad to whom emergency assistance was given.

Governments, WFP and UNHCR renewed their efforts to provide a regular food-supply flow into Somalia, which continued to host a large refugee population; emergency measures, including additional food, were provided to 50,000 new refugees in the north-west and Gedo regions. In the central, south-western and western regions of Uganda, a large number of Rwandese refugees were displaced by unrest and moved into settlements such as Nakivale, Oruchinga and Kyaka. A new settlement—Kyaka II—was established for some 17,000 refugees and 22,000 head of cattle.

South African refugees continued to be assisted by UNHCR (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter I). More than 27,500 of them continued to reside in Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, which, with Malawi, made up the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC). Assistance included subsistence allowances, scholarships and the promotion of self-sufficiency, either in rural settlements or through individual income-generating activities. The southern African liberation movements recognized by OAU received further support through provision of agricultural equipment for their farms in Angola and the United Republic of Tanzania. Some 70,000 Namibian refugees in Angola, Zambia and other countries also received UNHCR assistance.

A resolution on refugees in Africa was adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 27 February–5 March).<sup>(3)</sup> Reaffirming the need for the OAU Commission of Fifteen on Refugees to undertake missions to OAU member States overburdened by the refugee problem, and to mobilize international assistance to refugees and the host countries, the Council appealed to OAU members to enact amnesty laws ensuring the safety of those returning from exile, and decided to include an item on the root causes of refugees in Africa in the agenda of its next session. The Council called on SADCC to organize an international conference on the refugee problem in southern Africa.

At its October 1984 session,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme took note of the considerable increase in resources devoted by the High Commissioner to durable solutions in Africa, and in particular commended his efforts to promote voluntary repatriation.

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/8 on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, urged Member States and regional and international organizations to continue supporting African refugee programmes and to assist host countries. The Assembly also adopted resolutions on ICARA II; refugees in Djibouti, Somalia and the Sudan; displaced persons in Chad and Ethiopia; and South African student refugees (see below).

Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

Conference preparations. In the six months prior to ICARA II, preparations focused on completing the required documentation and mobilizing support for its objectives. Two principal documents—one providing a summary of needs,<sup>(4)</sup> the other giving background information on each affected country, a detailed description of needs and project outlines<sup>(5)</sup>—were prepared.

Responsible for the overall direction of the preparatory work was a Steering Committee composed of representatives of the Secretary-General, OAU, UNHCR and UNDP. The inclusion of UNDP underscored the special emphasis on the role of development in support of ongoing refugee programmes and in the search for longer-term solutions. The Committee was assisted by a technical team—personnel from OAU, the United Nations Secretariat, UNDP, UNHCR and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations—which visited host countries to consult with them on the nature and extent of assistance required to strengthen their capacity to cope with the refugee situation.

To mobilize support for ICARA II, the Steering Committee held several meetings with the regional groups, representatives of the United Nations system and NGOs. Committee members also visited traditional and potential donor countries.

Fourteen countries (Angola, Botswana, Burundi, Ethiopia, Kenya, Lesotho, Rwanda, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire, Zambia) indicated that they wished to present their needs to the Conference. The technical team identified 128 projects designed to strengthen and expand infrastructure to benefit refugees, returnees and the local population in the areas concerned.

More specifically, they would aim at developing human resources through basic education, skills training and provision of health and sanitation facilities; strengthening the agricultural base and increasing productivity; and improving transport. Their implementation would require $362.3 million over a three- to five-year period. Also submitted were proposals for additional assistance in the amount of $10.9 million to supplement the UNHCR regular programme for 1984; these proposals were made in response to the General Assembly's 1982 call for additional assistance for relief, rehabilitation and resettlement programmes.<sup>(6)</sup>

The Secretary-General, also in response to that 1982 resolution,<sup>(6)</sup> submitted in March 1984<sup>(5)</sup> a report containing a detailed description of needs, project outlines and background information on the refugee situation in Africa. Annexed was a comprehensive report by the Steering Committee, describing the refugee and returnee burden on host countries and the need for continuing and additional assistance to enable Governments to carry out relief, rehabilitation and resettlement programmes, as well as assistance required to strengthen the social and economic infrastructure of host countries. The Secretary-General observed that special emphasis was placed on the need to intensify efforts to achieve lasting solutions to existing refugee situations. Assistance programmes needed to be complemented by increased political and developmental efforts to achieve such solutions, he added. A report on the situation in each of the 14 countries seeking assistance was provided.

Six additional countries—Benin, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, Djibouti and Guinea—had signified their need for assistance; the last five were visited in September/October by the technical team which reported its findings in November.<sup>(7)</sup>

The OAU Council of Ministers, at its February/March session,<sup>(3)</sup> reaffirmed the urgent need for a concerted effort to pursue lasting solutions to the refugee problems in Africa, and urged all invited Governments to participate in ICARA II at the highest level. The Council stressed that, in order to facilitate lasting solutions, assistance for refugees must be development-oriented. It stressed the need for assistance to countries of asylum as well as to those of origin, and appealed for additional resources. It also appealed to UNDP and development agencies to incorporate assistance to refugees and returnees in their development programmes.

The UNDP Governing Council, in a decision of 29 June,<sup>(8)</sup> requested the UNDP Administrator to support the Conference and the follow-up to it (see p. 468). The Administrator established in 1984 two UNDP trust funds to assist refugees and to combat poverty and hunger in Africa.

Conference action. ICARA II was held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July,<sup>(9)</sup> attended by 107 participating States, as well as five States and some 145 governmental and non-governmental organizations in the capacity of observer (for participants and officers, see APPENDIX III). Several Governments announced support in cash, in kind or in principle towards the projects presented to the Conference. Contributions amounting to $18,531,828 were pledged to help cover the High Commissioner's programme for Africa, including relief, rehabilitation and resettlement programmes in response to the Assembly's 1982 call.<sup>(6)</sup> In addition, some $6,241,000 was committed without specification as to its allocation.

The Conference adopted a Declaration and Programme of Action by acclamation. In the Declaration, it recognized that caring for refugees was a global responsibility. It stated that, in dealing with the African refugee situation, special account must be taken of regionally relevant legal instruments, such as the Charter and resolutions of OAU and the 1969 OAU Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa.<sup>(10)</sup> The Conference stated that the recommendations of the 1979 Arusha Conference on the Situation of Refugees in Africa,<sup>(11)</sup> remained important for protecting and assisting African refugees and that the 92 recommendations adopted in March 1983 at a meeting between OAU and voluntary agencies constituted a realistic approach to the refugee problem in Africa. In the Conference's view, the entry into force of the 1981 OAU Charter of Human and People's Rights<sup>(12)</sup> would contribute to reducing the number of refugees. Everything possible must be done to prevent the causes of refugee flows and resolve the problem of African refugees, the Conference stated. International co-operation to that effect must be strengthened, and States must refrain from measures aggravating refugee problems. Essential conditions for repatriation, the best means of promoting permanent solutions, should be established, either through amnesty laws or respect for the principle of non-refoulement. Where voluntary return was not feasible, conditions should be created for temporary settlement or integration of refugees within the country of asylum. For solutions to last, assistance to refugees must aim at their participation, productivity and durable self-reliance; should be development-oriented; and in least developed countries should take into account the needs of local people as well.

The Programme of Action covered voluntary repatriation, local settlement, infrastructural assistance, the process and structures for providing assistance, and Conference follow-up. It pointed out that further fact-finding missions, accurate data collection and feasibility studies might be necessary. The Secretary-General, in co-operation with OAU, was requested to monitor follow-up, and Governments were requested to keep him informed of any action taken relating to Conference projects.

Reporting to the General Assembly on ICARA II results and follow-up in November/December 1984,<sup>(13)</sup> as requested in the Programme of Action, the Secretary-General stated that pledges or contributions in cash or kind had been received from 27 countries—Austria, Belgium, Canada, Chile, China, Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, Federal Republic of Germany, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Liechtenstein, Malaysia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/139.

Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 37/197 of 18 December 1982 and 38/120 of 16 December 1983,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984,

Welcoming the results obtained by the Conference, in particular the adoption of the Declaration and Programme of Action, which provide the international community with a collective strategy to achieve lasting solutions,

Gravely concerned at the persistent and serious problem of large numbers of refugees on the African continent,

Aware of the economic and social burden borne by African countries of asylum on account of the presence of these refugees and its consequences for their national development and of the heavy sacrifices made by them, despite their limited resources,

Recognizing the universal collective responsibility of sharing the urgent and overwhelming burden of the problem of African refugees through effective mobilization of resources to meet the urgent and long-term needs of the refugees and to strengthen the capacity of countries of asylum to provide adequately for the refugees while they remain in those countries, as well as to assist the countries of origin in the rehabilitation of voluntary returnees,

Emphasizing the vital importance of the complementarity between refugee aid and development assistance,

Noting with satisfaction the wide participation of Member States, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and the commitments and pledges made at the Conference,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for their commendable effort in organizing the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa;

2. Endorses the Declaration and Programme of Action of the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa;

3. Expresses its deep appreciation to African host countries, which are the biggest donors, for their generous contribution and continuous efforts to alleviate the plight of refugees in spite of their critical economic situation;

4. Expresses once again its appreciation to the international community and, in particular, to all donor countries, specialized agencies, regional organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their support and initial response to the projects submitted to the Conference;

5. Urges the international community to maintain the momentum created by the Conference and to translate into reality the projects submitted as well as the principles in the Declaration and Programme of Action agreed upon by the Conference;

6. Emphasizes the vital importance of the complementarity of refugee aid and development assistance and of achieving durable solutions to the problems of refugees in Africa through the voluntary repatriation or local integration of refugees and the necessity of providing assistance for the strengthening of the social and economic infrastructures of African countries receiving refugees and returnees;

7. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue to keep the situation of refugees in Africa under constant review with a view to providing adequate humanitarian assistance for relief and expanded durable solutions;

8. Calls upon all pertinent organizations of the United Nations system, as well as relevant regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to lend their support, within their respective spheres of competence, to the realization of the goals of the Conference;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the Declaration and Programme of Action, to monitor, in consultation and close co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and, in particular, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Development Programme, the follow-up to the Conference;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/139

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/709) without vote, 26 November (meeting 50); draft by Cameroon, for African Group (A/C.3/39/L.38); agenda item 100 (b).
Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 36, 38-41, 47, 50; plenary 101.

The United States and Israel declared that, while they had joined in the consensus on the text, they did not accept every provision contained in the various documents and instruments referred to in the Declaration endorsed by it. In particular, they disagreed with the 1981 OAU Charter of Human and People's Rights, which they felt was gravely flawed by its call for the elimination of Zionism.

In a related action, the Assembly, in resolution 39/8 on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, expressed appreciation to the United Nations Secretary-General, the OAU Secretary-General, the High Commissioner and the UNDP Administrator for organizing ICARA II, and invited Governments and organizations to implement the Declaration and Programme of Action.

Chad

On 9 October 1984, Chad reiterated before the General Assembly its appeal for international emergency aid to help it cope with the consequences of the exodus of population and livestock from the north, east and centre to other parts of the country, caused by civil strife and drought and deterioration of the environment.

Appeals for aid to Chad were also made by the Secretary-General, the latest on 1 November (see p. 467).

As follow-up to ICARA II (see p. 943), a technical team visited the country to help formulate infrastructural assistance programmes to cope with the refugee situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/106.

Emergency assistance to returnees and displaced persons in Chad

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned by the unprecedented drought which is wreaking havoc in Chad at the present time, compounding the already precarious food and health situation in that country,

Conscious that the large number of voluntary returnees and displaced persons as a result of the war and the drought in Chad poses a serious problem of integrating them into society,

Considering that, in addition to being a land-locked country and one of the least developed countries, Chad is placed in a particularly difficult situation by reason of the war and the drought,

Bearing in mind the many appeals made by the Government of Chad, in particular that made on 9 October 1984 to the General Assembly, and by humanitarian organizations regarding the gravity of the food and health situation in Chad,

Recalling the urgent appeal of the Secretary-General dated 1 November 1984 for international emergency assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad afflicted by natural disasters,

1. Endorses the appeals made by the Government of Chad and the Secretary-General concerning emergency assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

2. Invites all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support by generous contributions the efforts being made by the Government of Chad to assist and resettle the voluntary returnees and displaced persons;

3. Takes note with approval of the action undertaken by the various bodies of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies with a view to mobilizing emergency humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

4. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to mobilize, in accordance with their respective mandates, emergency humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/106

14 December 1984      Meeting 101      Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/700) without vote, 6 December (meeting 63); 37-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.41/Rev.1); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Egypt, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Mali, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Thailand, Togo, United States, Vanuatu, Zaire. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 63; plenary 27, 101.

In resolution 39/195, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to monitor, in close collaboration with the agencies concerned, the humanitarian needs, particularly in the area of food and health, of the people of Chad displaced by war and drought. It further requested him to mobilize special humanitarian assistance for persons who had suffered as a result of the war and drought and for the resettlement of displaced persons.

Djibouti

The High Commissioner, in a September 1984<sup>(14)</sup> report submitted to the General Assembly in accordance with its December 1983 request,<sup>(15)</sup> stated that in Djibouti the limited water supply, further diminished by the current drought, had hindered the local integration of rural refugees from Ethiopia and that voluntary repatriation had remained the most viable of the standard durable solutions. By the end of June, some 14,000 of an estimated 35,000 refugees had left Djibouti and returned to Ethiopia where they were registered in UNHCR reception centres. Meanwhile, efforts continued to improve conditions for refugees in camps in the Djibouti districts of Ali Sabieh and Dikhil. Assistance measures consisted of food distribution, construction of communal facilities, improvements in supply and storage of potable water and upgrading of sanitary conditions.

The Government, through its Office national d'assistance aux réfugiés et sinistrés (ONARS), continued to act as UNHCR's main implementing partner. Most basic food items were donated through WFP and the Catholic Relief Services. A number of voluntary agencies assisted UNHCR and ONARS with specific aspects of the assistance programme, including primary education, vocational training, language classes, adult education, building work, agricultural activities and medical care. In view of conditions in the country and the voluntary repatriation programme, it was not deemed feasible to present projects relating to local integration of refugees to ICARA II, the High Commissioner stated.

However, as follow-up to ICARA II (see p. 943), a technical team sent by the Secretary-General visited the country to help develop projects relating to the strengthening of infrastructure in areas with refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/107.

3. Requests the High Commissioner to mobilize the necessary resources to implement lasting solutions in respect of the refugees in Djibouti;

4. Urges the High Commissioner to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that adequate, appropriate and lasting solutions are implemented to assist the refugees in Djibouti, in co-operation with Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the voluntary agencies concerned, with a view to mobilizing the necessary assistance to enable the Government of Djibouti to cope effectively with the refugee problem, which has been particularly aggravated by the debilitating effects of the prolonged drought;

5. Appreciates the assistance provided thus far by Member States, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to the relief and rehabilitation programmes for the refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti;

6. Calls upon all Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to continue to support the efforts constantly being made by the Government of Djibouti to cope with the current needs of the refugees and the other victims of drought in that country;

By resolution 39/200, the Assembly appealed for financial, technical and material assistance for Djibouti.

Ethiopia

In response to a December 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(16)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in September 1984<sup>(17)</sup> on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia. He reported that the first voluntary repatriation of Ethiopian refugees in Djibouti, under the 1983 tripartite agreement between Djibouti, Ethiopia and UNHCR,<sup>(18)</sup> had occurred between September 1983 and September 1984. There had been some 14,340 registered repatriations, 6,497 persons having returned spontaneously and 7,846 under the organized repatriation programme. All registered repatriates were eligible to receive reintegration and rehabilitation assistance for one year from their date of arrival in Ethiopia. A total of $8.2 million had been budgeted for that special assistance programme, including $2.2 million for basic food provided through WFP. Fourteen focal points had been designated along the Dire Dawa-Dewele railway and at the time of their registration the returnees were able to choose their destination. A 1980 amnesty proclamation by Ethiopia had been extended until the end of 1984.

Since March 1983, a sizeable influx of people into the Ogaden had been reported, comprising a mix of returnees and refugees. Following a UNHCR fact-finding mission, the League of Red Cross Societies was completing their registration, and an emergency assistance programme had been developed. Since May 1983, there had been an influx into the Gambela/Itang area, estimated at 47,000 refugees. A $1.1-million emergency assistance programme was initiated there in November 1983 and renewed with an additional $2.8 million for the period from April to December 1984. The number of UNHCR staff in Ethiopia was increased from 15 to 38 between 1981 and 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/105.

Assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/91 of 5 December 1980, 36/161 of 16 December 1981, 37/175 of 17 December 1982 and 38/91 of 16 December 1983 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1980/54 of 24 July 1980 and 1982/2 of 27 April 1982,

Recalling also the report of the Secretary-General, prepared pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/8 of 28 April 1980,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,

Having heard the statement made on 12 November 1984 by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recognizing the increasing number of voluntary returnees and refugees in Ethiopia,

Deeply concerned at the plight of displaced persons and voluntary returnees in the country, which has been aggravated by the devastating effect of the prolonged drought,

Aware of the heavy burden placed on the Government of Ethiopia in caring for displaced persons and victims of natural disasters, as well as for returnees and refugees,

1. Commends the efforts made so far by various organs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in mobilizing humanitarian assistance to assist the efforts of the Government of Ethiopia;

2. Appeals to Member States and to international organizations and voluntary agencies to render maximum material, financial and technical assistance to the Government of Ethiopia in its efforts to provide relief and rehabilitation to displaced persons, voluntary returnees and refugees in Ethiopia;

3. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to intensify his efforts in mobilizing humanitarian assistance for the relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of voluntary returnees, refugees and displaced persons in Ethiopia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

According to amendments proposed by Somalia, later withdrawn,<sup>(19)</sup> the Assembly would have spoken of "genuine and voluntary returnees" and deleted references to "refugees".

In resolution 39/201, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing assistance for the victims of drought in Ethiopia who wished to resettle.

Somalia

In pursuance of a December 1983 Assembly resolution,<sup>(20)</sup> the High Commissioner prepared a review of the needs of refugees in Somalia. In his report, submitted to the Assembly in September 1984,<sup>(21)</sup> he stated that Somalia was attempting to cope with an estimated 700,000 refugees while facing critical economic and social problems arising from weak economic infrastructure, limited natural resources and a difficult international economic environment. The refugees were located in 36 widely scattered camps in four regions—Hiran, Gedo, the north-west and lower Shebelle. Approximately 60 per cent of the refugees were children under 15 years of age, 30 per cent women and 10 per cent men.

The search for durable solutions remained a top priority. Somalia had reaffirmed its position that voluntary repatriation remained the most appropriate long-term solution, but that in the mean time a programme of local settlement would be formulated through which the refugees would be able to attain a degree of self-sufficiency impossible in the camps. To implement the local settlement programme, a new organizational structure had been established comprising a steering committee, a technical unit and executing agencies. The steering committee was chaired by a representative of the Somali National Refugee Commission and composed of representatives of the Somali Ministry of Planning, UNDP and UNHCR. It would be supported by the technical unit consisting of a rural settlements specialist, an agronomist, a water development expert and a physical planner. The steering committee had met twice and examined two projects submitted by the Government: salt production in Tokoshi village, in the north-west, for 1,000 families, and agricultural land settlement in Furjano in the lower Shebelle region for 3,000 families. An estimated $128.3 million would be required for assistance in 1985, an increase of some $2.6 million over 1984.

In preparing for ICARA II (see p. 942), a technical team visited Somalia, as well as 13 other African countries, to help it identify projects for strengthening infrastructure in areas with refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/104.

Assistance to refugees in Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/180 of 15 December 1980, 36/153 of 16 December 1981, 37/174 of 17 December 1982 and 38/88 of 16 December 1983 on the question of assistance to refugees in Somalia,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on assistance to refugees in Somalia, in particular section IV of that report,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984,

Deeply concerned that the refugee problem in Somalia has not yet been resolved,

Aware of the additional burden imposed by the new influx of refugees and the consequent urgent need for further international assistance,

Aware of serious shortfalls in the provision of food assistance, which have resulted in critical ration restrictions and extreme hardship in refugee camps in Somalia,

Recognizing from the recommendations contained in the report of the High Commissioner that there remains an urgent need for increased assistance in the provision of food, water and medicine, the strengthening of health and educational facilities in the refugee camps and the expansion of the number of self-help schemes and small-scale farming and settlement projects necessary for the promotion of self-reliance among the refugees,

Aware of the continued consequences of the social and economic burden placed on the Government and people of Somalia as a result of the continued presence of refugees and the consequent impact on national development and the infrastructure of the country,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner for their continued efforts to mobilize international assistance on behalf of the refugees in Somalia;

3. Takes note with satisfaction of the assistance rendered to refugees in Somalia by various Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and other concerned intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

4. Appeals to Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to render maximum material, financial and technical assistance to the Government of Somalia in its efforts to provide all necessary assistance to the refugees, and to fulfil the pledges undertaken at or after the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa to support the developmental and other essential projects which were submitted by the Government of Somalia, as a matter of urgency;

5. Requests the High Commissioner, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the refugee situation in Somalia;

6. Also requests the High Commissioner, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/700) without vote, 6 December (meeting 63); 60-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.32); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Botswana, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Egypt, Gambia, Guinea, Guatemala, Guyana, Indonesia, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United States, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia.

By resolution 39/205, the Assembly called for assistance to Somalia, as one of the countries in East Africa stricken by drought.

Sudan

The High Commissioner, in response to a December 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(22)</sup> reported in September 1984<sup>(23)</sup> that refugees were continuing to seek asylum in the Sudan, and by the end of March had reached an estimated 699,700. Approximately 498,700 were from Ethiopia, 195,000 from Uganda, 5,000 from Zaire and 1,000 from Chad. The influx into eastern Sudan was continuing at the rate of 200 to 300 persons per day, and two new transit centres had been established for their reception and sustenance. Throughout the Sudan, more than 30 voluntary agencies were assisting refugees and in many cases complementing UNHCR resources.

The assistance programme continued to emphasize the creation of settlements in which agriculture was the main economic activity. There were 26 such settlements in eastern and 47 in southern Sudan. Progress was being made towards providing sufficient land and water for the settlements, particularly in the south. Plans were being completed by UNHCR together with ILO to implement a package of income-generating activities designed to reduce the dependence of refugees on agricultural production and the vagaries of related employment. Some 15 projects would benefit about 11,000 households and maximize the participation of female household heads. The Sudan was host to UNHCR's largest education programme for refugees; some 6,000 students were being assisted in academic, vocational and technical fields at the post-primary level. Assistance was being given to construct, upgrade or maintain eight new intermediate schools, and two refugee teacher-training programmes had been set up in the eastern region, one in English and one in Arabic.

In southern Sudan, UNHCR/UNDP co-operation aimed at integrated development for the benefit of both refugees and local inhabitants.

In addition to these assistance programmes, the Sudan presented 30 projects totalling $92.6 million to ICARA II.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly on 14 December adopted without vote resolution 39/108.

Situation of refugees in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/181 of 15 December 1980, 36/158 of 16 December 1981, 37/173 of 17 December 1982 and 38/90 of 16 December 1983 on the situation of refugees in the Sudan,

Having considered the reports of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the situation of refugees in the Sudan,

Taking note of the ever-increasing number of refugees arriving in the Sudan,

Appreciating the measures which the Government of the Sudan is taking in order to provide shelter, food, education, and health and other humanitarian services to the growing number of refugees in the Sudan,

Recognizing the heavy burden placed on the Government of the Sudan and the sacrifices it is making in caring for the refugees and the need for more international assistance to enable it to continue its efforts to provide assistance to the refugees,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Sudan by Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of the refugee programme,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations of the inter-agency technical follow-up missions, as well as in the implementation of resolution 38/90;

2. Commends the measures that the Government of the Sudan is taking to provide shelter, food, education, and health and other humanitarian services to the refugees, in spite of the drought and the serious economic situation it faces;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner, donor countries and voluntary agencies for their efforts to assist the refugees in the Sudan;

4. Recognizes the need for development-oriented projects that would generate work opportunities and long-term livelihood for refugees and local people in affected areas, and, in this context, commends the efforts of the High Commissioner and the International Labour Office to create income-generating activities for refugees in the Sudan;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the necessary financial and material assistance for the full implementation of the recommendations of the various inter-agency missions and of the projects submitted by the Government of the Sudan to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984;

6. Appeals to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations, other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial institutions to provide the Government of the Sudan with the necessary resources for the implementation of development assistance projects in regions affected by the presence of refugees, as envisaged in the reports of the various inter-agency missions, and to strengthen its social and economic infrastructure so that essential services and facilities for refugees can be strengthened and expanded;

7. Requests the High Commissioner to continue co-ordination with the appropriate specialized agencies in order to consolidate and ensure the continuation of essential services to the refugees in their settlements;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation and co-ordination with the High Commissioner and the United Nations Development Programme, to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive report on the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations of the inter-agency technical follow-up missions and of the projects submitted by the Government of the Sudan to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, as well as on the implementation of the present resolution.

Southern African student refugees

Pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(24)</sup> the High Commissioner submitted in September 1984 a report<sup>(25)</sup> on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa between 1 July 1983 and 30 June 1984—in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

An average of 20 refugee students were arriving monthly in Botswana from South Africa and Namibia; 25 South African and seven Namibian students were enrolled in institutions of higher education in Botswana, and 15 South African and 17 Namibian students were enrolled in secondary schools. Some 11,500 refugees, mainly South Africans, of school age were in Lesotho, about 1,300 of whom were registered with UNHCR, and received assistance. Among the 7,000 refugees in Swaziland, 210 South African students were attending educational institutions. In Zambia, 5,008 Namibians and 272 South Africans received educational assistance from UNHCR. Zimbabwe recorded the arrival of 152 South African student refugees (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter I).

The High Commissioner noted that all of the projects to alleviate the burden imposed on asylum countries by the presence of student refugees had been successfully completed. Projects being financed by UNHCR or in co-operation with UNHCR in the period under review totalled $4.2 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/109.

Assistance to student refugees in southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/95 of 16 December 1983, in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Having considered the report of the High Commissioner on the assistance programme to student refugees from South Africa and Namibia,

Noting with appreciation that some of the projects recommended in the report on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa have been successfully completed,

Noting with concern the continued influx into Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia of student refugees from South Africa, as well as from Namibia,

Convinced that the discriminatory policies and repressive measures being applied in South Africa and Namibia have led and continue to lead to a further exodus of student refugees from those countries,

Conscious of the burden placed on the limited financial, material and administrative resources of the host countries by the increasing number of student refugees,

Appreciating the efforts of the host countries to deal with their student refugee populations, with the assistance of the international community,

1. Endorses the assessments and recommendations contained in the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and commends him for his efforts to mobilize resources and organize the programme of assistance for student refugees in the host countries of southern Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for granting asylum and making educational and other facilities available to the student refugees, in spite of the pressure which the continuing influx of those refugees exerts on facilities in their countries;

3. Also expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for the co-operation which they have extended to the High Commissioner on matters concerning the welfare of these refugees;

4. Notes with appreciation the financial and material support provided for the student refugees by Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

6. Urges all Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue contributing generously to the assistance programme for student refugees, through financial support of the regular programmes of the High Commissioner and of the projects and programmes, including unfunded projects, which were submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984;

7. Also urges all Member States and all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist the countries of asylum materially and otherwise to enable them to continue to discharge their humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

8. Appeals to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as well as other international and non-governmental organizations, to continue providing humanitarian and development assistance to expedite the settlement of student refugees from South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

10. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to keep the matter under review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the current status of the programmes and to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

The Americas and Europe

UNHCR obligations in the Americas and Europe totalled $57.4 million in 1984, of which $54.9 million was under General Programmes and $2.5 million under Special Programmes.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Americas

The number of refugees in Central America and Mexico increased only slightly, from some 330,000 to 338,000, about 103,200 of whom were assisted by UNHCR. Efforts to integrate refugees in rural areas were pursued in Belize, Costa Rica, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua and Panama. Measures aimed at urban integration were undertaken in Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic and Panama.

In Honduras, some 19,500 Salvadorian and 500 Guatemalan refugees continued to receive assistance in camps near the western border, notably in Colomocagua, Mesa Grande and El Tesoro. Honduras reversed a decision to transfer those refugees from the border area to the northern part of the country, requiring that UNHCR care and maintenance assistance continue. Approximately 15,500 Nicaraguan refugees of Indian origin continued to receive local integration assistance. Some 3,700 other Nicaraguan refugees were benefiting from UNHCR care and maintenance assistance in two small villages in the area of Danli. It was expected that most of the refugees would become self-sufficient in regard to food requirements in 1985.

In Mexico, nearly 26,500 Guatemalan refugees continued to receive care and maintenance despite a difficult logistical situation. During the latter part of 1984, Mexico and UNHCR began to establish local settlements for some 16,500 Guatemalan refugees.

At its October 1984 session,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme noted the emergence of new prospects for durable solutions in Central America and Mexico through local settlement and voluntary repatriation and requested the High Commissioner and States concerned to continue exploring and promoting such solutions.

Europe

The flow of asylum-seekers into Western Europe continued to increase in 1984, particularly from developing countries and certain countries in Eastern Europe. The number of asylum-seekers totalled some 103,500, compared to about 100,000 the previous year. The countries receiving the most asylum-seekers continued to be the Federal Republic of Germany and France; the influx into the former almost doubled to 35,300 and that into the latter increased marginally to 15,900. Sweden was third, taking some 14,000 persons. In relation to its population, Switzerland again received the highest percentage of refugees in Europe.

An increasing reluctance on the part of many European Governments to accept refugees and persons in refugee-like situations was noted. Sometimes, restrictive measures were taken to curb the flow. To discourage economic migrants from utilizing the asylum procedure, Governments applied such deterrents as prohibition from working and reduction of social benefits while applications were being examined. Preoccupied with domestic economic difficulties and the increasing burden of asylum-seekers, certain Governments were unwilling to maintain their traditionally generous admission criteria. That trend coincided with a decrease in admission of refugees by the traditional resettlement countries. As a result, refugees awaiting resettlement became more apparent in first-asylum countries—Austria, Greece, Italy, Turkey and Yugoslavia.

A contact group of government, UNHCR and NGO representatives, established following the September 1983 seminar on the integration of refugees in Europe,<sup>(26)</sup> met twice in 1984 to follow up on the seminar's recommendations. The group made proposals for a legal and institutional framework for refugee integration, including mobilizing public opinion and promoting the employment and self-employment of refugees. It suggested that UNHCR prepare a note on significant developments in refugee integration in each country.

At its October 1984 session,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Committee noted with deep regret that restrictive practices were being followed with respect to the granting of asylum, the determination of refugee status and the treatment of asylum-seekers and refugees. It expressed satisfaction that despite those trends States were continuing to grant asylum to large numbers of refugees and to ensure that they were treated in accordance with international humanitarian standards.

East and South Asia and Oceania

By the end of 1984, the number of Indo-Chinese refugees in camps and centres in asylum countries in East and South Asia and Oceania stood at 160,217, of whom 36,117 were boat people. That represented the lowest number of registered refugees in the region since 1977. The largest refugee population was in Thailand, which hosted 82,094 Lao, 41,619 Kampucheans and 4,726 Vietnamese. Other countries and territories providing temporary asylum to significant numbers of refugees included Hong Kong, Indonesia, Japan, Macau, Malaysia, the Philippines and Singapore. In addition, two refugee processing centres, at Bataan in the Philippines and Galang in Indonesia, were providing temporary accommodation to nearly 16,000 Indo-Chinese who had been accepted for resettlement and were in transit. There were also some 276,000 Indo-Chinese refugees in China and an estimated 21,000 receiving UNHCR assistance in Viet Nam.

In China, the planned phasing-out of assistance to the 276,000 Indo-Chinese refugees settled on State farms in various provinces continued; at the end of 1984, only some 56,000 refugees were still receiving assistance. Some 1,200 Kampucheans, who were considered to be self-sufficient, chose to remain in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, following repatriation of the majority of Kampuchean refugees; some 21,000 UNHCR-assisted Kampuchean refugees in Viet Nam had not reached self-sufficiency.

Assistance to refugees in the East Malaysian State of Sabah aimed at socio-economic integration through the improvement of housing, construction of schools and further development of counselling services to deal with refugee needs. Following the arrival in Papua New Guinea of some 10,000 refugees from the province of Irian Jaya, Indonesia, UNHCR launched an emergency programme in camps along the border, providing food, water, shelter, medicines and domestic supplies.

During the year, $71.6 million was obligated for assistance to refugees in East and South Asia and Oceania under General Programmes and $10.2 million under Special Programmes. Of that, some $53.2 million was used for Indo-Chinese refugees.

In October,<sup>(2)</sup> the High Commissioner told the Executive Committee that there had been little progress in voluntary repatriation in South-East Asia. He had reached agreement with Thailand on the basic conditions for repatriation, but obstacles still existed to any major organized repatriation to Kampuchea and, although repatriation to the Lao People's Democratic Republic had been going on for some time, it had recently encountered obstacles. Viet Nam had informed him that its situation would not currently permit the return of significant numbers of refugees, but that individual applications would be considered on a case-by-case basis. He was encouraged by the success of the Orderly Departure Programme from Viet Nam and by the conclusion of a new arrangement with Thailand to extend the Anti-Piracy Programme for another year. He hoped that UNHCR appeals, made jointly with the International Maritime Organization to shipowners and masters not to turn a blind eye when they came across a refugee boat in distress, would continue to be heard.

The Executive Committee<sup>(2)</sup> welcomed the continuing co-operation between Governments and UNHCR concerning the operation of the Orderly Departure Programme.

In an October report on the situation in Kampuchea,<sup>(27)</sup> the Secretary-General said that during the past five years assistance programmes had channelled a substantial amount of aid to the Kampuchean people. The Kampucheans who had sought refuge along the Thai-Kampuchean border and those in the Khao-I-Dang UNHCR holding centre remained dependent on assistance. The year had again been one of much difficulty for the United Nations Border Relief Operation, mainly as a result of armed border incidents.

During the year, the Secretary-General received a number of communications related to incidents on the common borders of Democratic Kampuchea, Thailand and Viet Nam, which also dealt with the Indo-Chinese refugee problem (see p. 214).

Middle East and South-West Asia

In 1984, total voluntary funds expenditure in the Middle East and South-West Asia was $104.3 million, of which $68.7 million was obligated under General Programmes and $35.5 million under Special Programmes.

An estimated 2.3 million Afghans in Pakistan represented the largest concentration of refugees in the world. UNHCR shifted its emphasis in 1984 from care and maintenance assistance towards self-help and self-reliance, including projects to provide training and employment. Training projects were being funded by UNHCR and implemented by ILO and the Federal Republic of Germany in Baluchistan and the North-West Frontier province. A UNHCR-World Bank project to provide employment and income for refugees as well as the local population was also being implemented in those areas. Relocation by Pakistan of part of the refugee population from the North-West Frontier to the Punjab progressed slowly; by the end of 1984, approximately 90,000 refugees were registered at Kot Chandana in Mianwali district. A new site was developed in nearby Darratang, which was to accommodate an additional 15,000 refugees.

The number of Afghan refugees in Iran was estimated at 1.8 million, of whom more than 50 per cent were living in Khorasan and Sistan-Baluchistan provinces. In October, a UNHCR office was established at Teheran. During 1984, $7.5 million was obligated in support of programmes implemented by the Council for Afghan Refugees in the areas of health, nutrition, water and sanitation, infrastructure, household and personal equipment, transport, agriculture, training and self-help activities.

UNHCR continued to provide emergency assistance to some 100,000 families uprooted in Lebanon. During the first part of 1984, $500,000 was allocated for the purchase and transport of basic relief supplies. Despite precarious circumstances, the UNHCR regional office in Beirut continued to provide assistance to some 2,900 refugees.

In the Syrian Arab Republic, UNHCR provided relief items for Lebanese and Palestinians not registered with UNRWA who had taken refuge in that country and were residing in the Sitti Zeinab camp.

In Cyprus, UNHCR continued to co-ordinate aid to persons displaced as a result of the 1974 events<sup>(28)</sup> (see p. 251). It also assisted some 1,750 Ethiopian refugees of Eritrean origin residing in the Al Khaukha camp on the Red Sea coast of Yemen.

Refugee protection

During 1984, the exercise of the High Commissioner's international protection functions encountered serious difficulties in different areas of the world due to the absence of readily available and adequate durable solutions. Violations of the physical safety of refugees continued; refugees suffered injury and death through military or armed attacks on refugee camps, abduction and pirate attacks at sea.

Acts of piracy continued against asylum-seekers in the South China Sea, although there was an encouraging decline in the percentage of boats attacked. Of the boats arriving in Thailand and Malaysia, 34 per cent were attacked in 1984 compared with 43 per cent in 1983. However, the level of violence in such attacks remained high; during 1984, 130 abductions were reported, 110 women were known to have been sexually assaulted, and there were 59 known deaths. Under the Anti-Piracy Programme established by UNHCR and Thailand,<sup>(29)</sup> which was extended for a third year through the co-operation of a number of Governments, countermeasures included sea and air patrols, follow-up investigation and prosecution of suspects, and nation-wide registration of fishing boats.

A disquieting development was a tendency on the part of several States to refuse or withdraw asylum for some refugees in order to maintain good relations with their countries of origin which were seeking to have them returned or expelled. That occurred, for example, when refugees had to leave their countries of asylum, where some had lawfully resided for a number of years, due to the conclusion of security agreements between their country of origin and neighbouring countries. When expulsion measures were adopted in such cases, UNHCR was usually given a very short period within which to secure admission for those affected to another country.

Another emerging problem was the steady buildup in the number of persons in holding centres in several countries for whom no durable solution had been found. Some had been waiting in camps for several years. Unless appropriate solutions were found, there might be adverse consequences for asylum, not to mention the suffering of the persons concerned. Some countries had adopted or maintained a blanket detention policy under which all "illegal" or "excludable" entrants were automatically detained even if their identity and the bona fide character of their asylum claim had been established. A few countries kept asylum-seekers in detention to deter further arrivals. A major problem encountered by UNHCR in a number of countries was lack of access to asylum-seekers in detention, who in the main were not informed of UNHCR availability to help them.

At its October 1984 session,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme noted that the High Commissioner's protection function had become increasingly complex and difficult, that special problems had arisen due to the changing nature of refugee movements, that the principle of non-refoulement had been violated in various parts of the world, and that restrictive practices were being followed in regard to asylum, refugee status and refugee treatment. The Committee expressed satisfaction that despite those trends States continued to grant asylum to large numbers of refugees, and stressed the importance of UNHCR being granted access to asylum applicants and refugees. The Committee also took note of the discussions at the ninth meeting of the Sub-Committee of the Whole on International Protection (Geneva, 3, 4, 11 and 15 October)<sup>(30)</sup> concerning military and armed attacks on refugee camps, and requested the Chairman to continue consultations on prohibiting such attacks. The Sub-Committee considered draft conclusions on military attacks against refugee camps in southern Africa and elsewhere, but was not able to reach agreement on the text.

On the basis of conclusions of the Sub-Committee, the Executive Committee strongly recommended that the Rescue at Sea Resettlement Offers scheme proposed by the High Commissioner, in consultation with interested Governments, be implemented on a trial basis and that additional resettlement places be urgently provided, and recognized the need for continued support for the Disembarkation Resettlement Offers scheme, under which resettlement places were made available for asylum-seekers rescued by ships of open registry or of States which were unable to accept refugees for resettlement.

Also based on the Sub-Committee's conclusions, the Executive Committee recommended that asylum applicants whose applications could not be decided without delay be provided with provisional documentation sufficient to protect them against expulsion or refoulement until a decision was made; it also recommended that States which had not done so undertake registration and documentation programmes.

In resolution 39/140, the General Assembly strongly reaffirmed the fundamental nature of the High Commissioner's function to protect refugees and the need for Governments to continue to co-operate with his Office, in particular by scrupulously observing the principles of asylum and non-refoulement.

International instruments

As at 31 December 1984, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees<sup>(31)</sup> and the 1967 Protocol<sup>(32)</sup> had been ratified or acceded to by 95 and 94 States, respectively, as a result of the 1984 accession to them by Haiti.<sup>(33)</sup>

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/140, reaffirmed the need for Governments to accede to and implement fully international and regional refugee instruments.

International co-operation to avert new refugee flows

The Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, established by the General Assembly in 1981<sup>(1)</sup> to review the problem and develop recommendations, held its third and fourth sessions in 1984 (New York, 26 March–6 April and 11–22 June).<sup>(2)</sup> The Group considered the background and dimension of the problem and an analysis of its mandate, including questions relating to terms, and began examining the circumstances causing new massive flows of refugees. The Group requested a renewal of its mandate, adding that it would require two 2-week sessions in 1985. It reiterated the necessity of having all experts present at its future sessions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/100.

International co-operation to avert new flows of refugees

The General Assembly,
Reaffirming its resolutions 36/148 of 16 December 1981, 37/121 of 16 December 1982 and 38/84 of 15 December 1983 on international co-operation to avert new flows of refugees,

Having examined the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Considering the urgency, magnitude and complexity of the task before the Group of Governmental Experts,

Welcoming the fact that experts coming from least developed countries were enabled to participate in the 1984 sessions of the Group,

Recognizing the necessity of having all the experts participate in the future sessions of the Group,

General Assembly resolution 39/100

14 December 1984 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by SPC (A/39/621) without vote, 23 October (meeting 11); 38-nation draft (A/SPC/39/L.4), orally revised; agenda item 76.

Sponsors: Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Brunei Darussalam, Cameroon, Canada, Chad, Comoros, Costa Rica, Denmark, Djibouti, Egypt, Germany, Federal Republic of, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Lebanon, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Rwanda, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Thailand, Togo.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/39/664; S-G, A/C.5/39/31, A/SPC/39/L.6. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: SPC 8-11; 5th Committee 26; plenary 100.

The United States hoped that the Group would be able to formulate practical proposals to help avoid in future the suffering currently experienced by millions of refugees; it stated that, because of the urgency of the refugee problem, it had not opposed an increase in the assessed portion of the United Nations budget for that purpose.

In resolution 39/18 on the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, the Assembly deplored the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who had been uprooted by military intervention and acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, and reaffirmed their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour. In resolution 39/117 on human rights and mass exoduses, the Assembly invited Governments to intensify their co-operation in world-wide efforts to address the problem of mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons.

Chapter XXII

Drugs of abuse

During 1984, drug abuse continued to threaten a large segment of society and to undermine economic and social order in most parts of the world. The unprecedented dimensions of the danger to societies had led the Governments concerned to launch similarly unparalleled counter-offensives against traffickers.

The Secretary-General, in his 1984 report on the work of the Organization (p. 3), noted that the growing problem of narcotic drugs had become a major international anxiety, and that efforts were needed to arrest the traffic in and use of drugs, which had appalling effect on both individuals and societies. Steps had been taken to improve co-ordination within the United Nations system in that regard.

The General Assembly, in December, adopted a Declaration on the Control of Drug Trafficking and Drug Abuse, stating that the eradication of trafficking in narcotic drugs was the collective responsibility of all States and calling for efforts to combat the grave threat the drug abuse situation posed to societies (resolution 39/142). The Assembly also requested that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs begin preparing in 1985 a draft convention against such illicit traffic (39/141), and recommended preparation of specific technical and economic co-operation programmes for the countries most seriously affected (39/143).

Acting on the recommendations of the Commission (eighth special session, Vienna, Austria, 6-10 February), the Economic and Social Council, in May, recommended that all Governments combat cannabis abuse (resolution 1984/22), called for urgent regulation of the demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs (1984/21), and urged the World Health Organization (WHO) to review certain amphetamine-like drugs for international control (1984/23).

The International Narcotics Control Board—holding two sessions at Vienna (thirty-fifth session, 14-25 May; thirty-sixth session, 8-25 October)—discussed the international drug control system for narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursor materials; reported on the demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs; and analysed the world situation by region and country.

The Narcotics Laboratory Section of the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs continued to assist national narcotics laboratories and to collect and analyse drug samples, and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC) initiated a large coca control programme in South America and expanded its assistance to Asian countries.

International control

INCB report. The International Narcotics Control Board (INCB), in its 1984 annual report,<sup>(1)</sup> discussed the international control system involving the exchanges of import/export authorization documents and collection and analysis of data by the Board on the use and movement of narcotic drugs or psychotropic substances.

The Board reported that a large number of Governments had responded favourably to its March 1984 request for copies of the official forms used for exporting/importing narcotic drugs under international control, in an effort to counter the threat to the control system posed by forged or falsified import certificates.

The Board's annual technical reports—containing information submitted by Governments and INCB analyses of data—contributed to verifying whether Governments were adequately applying the provisions of the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs and its 1972 Protocol (see below). The reports provided estimated opium production and licit requirements of narcotic drugs;<sup>(2)</sup> statistics on narcotic drugs, accompanied by an analysis of the major trends in the licit movement of such drugs;<sup>(3)</sup> and a comparative statement of estimates and statistics.<sup>(4)</sup>

Information provided to INCB by both parties and non-parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances (see below), on assessments of legitimate needs and quarterly trade data for such substances under international control, helped bring to light cases of attempted diversions.

The Board also noted the need to monitor the movement of precursors, essential chemicals and other substances not falling under the 1961 and 1971 Conventions that could be used in the illicit manufacture of drugs, with a view to preventing their availability for illicit use.

JIU report. By a November note,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General forwarded to the General Assembly a report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on drug abuse control activities in the United Nations system. Noting that the Assembly's past appeals for greater activity in drug control had not been followed up adequately among the agencies and organizations in the system, JIU recommended that the specialized agencies develop specific drug control programmes for consideration by their member Governments, and suggested that drug abuse control projects in developing countries should have specific conditions which would require Governments to enforce the purpose and goal of the projects.

Implementation of the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy

Activities of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. In 1984, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs<sup>(6)</sup> met in pursuance of a December 1983 General Assembly request<sup>(7)</sup> as a task force to review, monitor and co-ordinate the implementation of the Assembly's 1981 International Drug Abuse Control Strategy<sup>(8)</sup> and the five-year programme of action (1982-1986). It considered two reports of the Secretary-General concerning activities for the second and the third years of the programme of action—one summarizing the 1983 activities<sup>(9)</sup> and the other proposing projects for 1984.<sup>(10)</sup>

The activities under the programme aimed, among other things, at: reducing excessive stocks of illicit opiate raw materials; developing and promoting effective drug law enforcement; promoting scientific research; promoting demand reduction measures; and processing relevant information.

On 9 February,<sup>(11)</sup> the Commission approved, in principle, the 1984 programme of action proposed by the Secretary-General, to be implemented to the extent possible within resources available under the United Nations regular budget, or from extrabudgetary voluntarily provided resources.

Report of the Secretary-General. In addition to an October note on action taken by the Commission on the 1984 programme of action,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly, in November, an annual report on international co-operation in drug abuse control,<sup>(13)</sup> describing the relevant 1984 activities of 12 agencies and units within the United Nations system. The Secretary-General reported that the seventh ad hoc inter-agency meeting on co-ordination in matters of international drug abuse control (Geneva, 3-5 September), convened by the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs, noted the designation of the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs as the focal point of the three Secretariat units primarily responsible for the drug control programme—the Division of Narcotic Drugs, INCB and UNFDAC.

Various seminars, expert meetings and training workshops were organized during the year, and meetings were held, as in previous years, of the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East, and the Operational Heads of National Narcotics Law Enforcement Agencies, Far East Region (HONLEA), as well as inter-agency meetings on co-ordination of drug abuse control.

Other units or agencies reporting their activities were: the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute, UNIDO, UNDP, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO and UPU.

UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control

During 1984, UNFDAC supported more than 50 projects, including 37 projects in 22 countries, initiating large-scale coca control programmes in Bolivia, Colombia and Peru and expanding its assistance to Asian countries.<sup>(14)</sup> Programme expenditures for 1984 were estimated at $9.9 million.

*In 1983, Italy pledged $40,880,530 to be used over a five-year period for agreed projects.

In 1984, 35 States and one Territory contributed some $6.5 million to UNFODAC and 26 countries pledged $2.9 million for 1985 (see table above).

In December, the General Assembly, by resolution 39/143 (see below), urged Member States to contribute to UNFODAC.

UN Narcotics Laboratory

The Narcotics Laboratory Section of the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs<sup>(15)</sup> continued to assist national narcotics laboratories by selecting/procuring basic equipment and reference books, and providing reference samples of drugs under international control. It continued to collect and analyse seized samples of traditional drugs such as heroin, cocaine and cannabis, while developing methods to identify and analyse substances newly brought under international control. The Section also produced and distributed some 450 low-cost, portable drug-identification kits to law enforcement authorities and to narcotics laboratories in 44 countries.

With financial support from UNFODAC, the Division began developing a microform/microfiche sub-collection in order to provide easier access to the ever-expanding reference collection, and the Section provided training in drug identification and analysis to 19 fellows from 13 countries.

Drug abuse

INCB, in its 1984 report,<sup>(1)</sup> observed that very few countries remained unaffected by drug abuse, which posed health hazards to individuals and threatened not only the economies and legal institutions but also the very security of some States. Authorities in many countries were placing new stress on measures to prevent abuse as well as to treat and rehabilitate abusers, and steps were being taken to advance epidemiological research to identify causes, patterns and extent of abuse. INCB cautioned against loosening legal and other restrictions in the case of so-called soft drugs, asserting that such action led to an escalation of drug abuse and of trafficking to meet the increased demand.

In a January background note<sup>(16)</sup> to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Secretary-General stated that multiple drug abuse, often with alcohol, was becoming predominant. Cannabis appeared to be the most widely abused drug worldwide, and a relatively new and dangerous combination of coca paste and cannabis had been identified. The continued spread of heroin abuse was a significant trend in Western Europe, the Near and Middle East, Asia and the Far East, North America and Oceania. Cocaine abuse continued to increase in the Americas and Europe, with smoking of cocaine base reported for the first time in the latter. Abuse of amphetamines and similar substances increased in all regions and, in some countries, abuse by injection reached serious proportions. The abuse of sedative hypnotics, barbiturates and benzodiazepines, often used with alcohol or opiates, contributed to an increase in drug-related emergencies and deaths.

Youth remained the predominantly affected age group; while the majority of drug abusers continued to be men, there was an increasing tendency for women to abuse drugs. Impairment of health, personal and social dysfunction, traffic and other accidents, violence and crime remained the most frequent problems reportedly associated with drug abuse.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1984/23 of 24 May on the scheduling of amphetamine-like drugs (see below), urged WHO to review those substances known for the most serious social and health consequences, and to submit its findings to the Commission in 1985.

Cannabis

INCB<sup>(1)</sup> again reaffirmed in 1984 that non-medical consumption of cannabis was illegal under the 1961 Convention.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/22 without vote.

The cannabis problem

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1933(LVIII) of 6 May 1975,

Bearing in mind that the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, requires, inter alia, that the use and possession of all the substances listed in Schedule I should be confined exclusively to medical and scientific purposes,

Bearing in mind also that the Convention recommends, for the substances listed in Schedule IV, including cannabis and cannabis resin, application of all the special control measures which the contracting parties have deemed necessary in the light of the particularly dangerous properties of those substances,

Recognizing that knowledge concerning the harm that the use of cannabis and cannabis resin can cause to the human organism, especially to the brain, the lungs and cell structures, is considerably greater today than it was a few years ago,

Noting with great concern that the International Narcotics Control Board, in its two most recent annual reports, has emphasized that the abuse, illicit cultivation and trafficking of cannabis and cannabis resin are increasing in a majority of regions of the world,

Aware that in many regions of the world cannabis and cannabis resin obviously play an important role in the spread of drug abuse and in the illicit drug traffic, particularly among young persons,

1. Recommends that all Governments should combat systematically the abuse of cannabis and cannabis resin and intensify national and international efforts to fight the illicit cultivation of, and traffic in, those narcotic drugs;

2. Recommends also that all Governments that have not yet done so should consider all appropriate measures needed to confine the cultivation and the licit use of cannabis products to medical and scientific research, in accordance with article 2, paragraph 5 (b), of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961;

3. Recommends further that scientific research, especially long-term investigations into the effects of cannabis abuse on the human organism, should be continued and accelerated;

4. Recommends, in addition, that all Governments should maintain or adopt appropriate preventive measures concerning the hazardous consequences of cannabis abuse;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to inform all Governments of the present resolution, and to invite them to take action with a view to its effective implementation, in accordance with the pertinent provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/22

24 May 1984 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/86) without vote, 3 May (meeting 3); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1984/13); agenda item 13.

Supply and demand

Narcotic raw materials for licit use

In 1984, INCB<sup>(1)</sup> reported that over the past decade global demand for opiates had stabilized and was likely to remain at the current level over the next four or five years. The production of raw materials (opium or poppy straw), which for many years had continued to exceed demand, had been reduced, especially in India and Turkey and also in Australia and France, and had, for the time being, been brought approximately in line with demand. However, the existence of substantial raw material stocks, mainly in India and Turkey, remained a serious problem.

In implementation of a 1984 Economic and Social Council request (resolution 1984/21, see below), INCB asked 34 of the countries most directly concerned to propose specific measures to bring about a balance and a reduction in stocks of licit opiate raw materials. Most of them considered that reducing cultivation was the most effective way to obtain a balance, and that improving techniques for assessing demand would help producing countries in decision-making. There was wide support for a suggestion that surplus stocks of raw materials should be converted into codeine preparations for developing countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council, on 24 May, adopted resolution 1984/21 without vote.

Demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982 and 1983/3 of 24 May 1983, as well as Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 1(XXIX) of 11 February 1981 entitled "Strategy and policies for drug control",

Having considered the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1983, on the demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs,

Noting with concern the apprehension of the International Narcotics Control Board that a return to over-production is likely and that the possibility of an increase in the already excessive stocks cannot be excluded,

Further noting with concern that the traditional supplier countries continue to hold large accumulated stocks of opiate raw materials which constitute heavy financial and other burdens for them,

Bearing in mind the urgent need to liquidate the accumulated stocks held by the traditional supplier countries with a view to achieving a lasting world-wide balance between demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific purposes,

Taking into account paragraph 55 of the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1983,

1. Urges the Governments of those countries that have not already done so to take urgent and effective steps to implement the above-mentioned resolutions;

2. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to devise and take, in accordance with the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, appropriate measures with a view to promoting and monitoring the urgent implementation of the above-mentioned resolutions;

3. Further requests the International Narcotics Control Board, in consultation with the producing and the consuming countries and the concerned United Nations bodies, to assist in the further development of effective ways of ensuring a balance in supply and demand and of reducing excessive stocks of licit opiate raw materials, included as activity A.1 to be undertaken by the Secretary-General, during the biennium 1984-1985, under the basic five-year programme of action of the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 36/168 of 16 December 1981;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for their consideration and implementation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/21

24 May 1984 Meeting 19 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/86) without vote, 3 May (meeting 3); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1984/13); agenda item 13.

Illicit traffic

By a letter dated 14 August 1984<sup>(17)</sup> addressed to the Secretary-General, Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru and Venezuela transmitted the text of the Quito Declaration against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs, signed by them at Quito, Ecuador, on 11 August. By the Declaration, they called on the competent international organizations to consider establishing an international or regional fund to assist developing countries affected by traffic in narcotic drugs—a crime against humanity—with a view to combating underlying causes and providing them with means to control such unlawful activities.

On 2 October,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General received from Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela the text of the New York Declaration against Drug Trafficking and the Illicit Use of Drugs, adopted by Foreign Ministers of those States on 1 October. They urged the United Nations to convene a special conference with a view to adopting an international plan of action against drug trafficking, declaring drug trafficking to be a crime against humanity, and considering the establishment of an international fund to assist less developed countries combat trafficking.

Bolivia also informed the Secretary-General by a letter of 15 August<sup>(19)</sup> that it had declared its Chapare tropical region in Cochabamba a military zone with a view to combating illicit cocaine production and traffic.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/142 without vote.

Declaration on the Control of Drug Trafficking and Drug Abuse

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/168 of 20 December 1978, 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982, 38/93, 38/98 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983 and other relevant provisions,

Adopts the Declaration set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Control of Drug Trafficking and Drug Abuse

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations reaffirm faith in the dignity and worth of the human person and promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and international co-operation in solving problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character,

Considering that Member States have undertaken in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to promote social progress and better standards of life for the peoples of the world,

Considering that the international community has expressed grave concern at the fact that trafficking in narcotics and drug abuse constitute an obstacle to the physical and moral well-being of peoples and of youth in particular,

Desiring to heighten the awareness of the international community of the urgency of preventing and punishing the illicit demand for, abuse of and illicit production of and traffic in drugs,

Considering that the Quito Declaration against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs of 11 August 1984 and the New York Declaration against Drug Trafficking and the Illicit Use of Drugs of 1 October 1984 recognize the international nature of this problem and emphasize that it should be solved with the firm support of the entire international community,

Considering that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the International Narcotics Control Board and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control have made valuable contributions to the control and elimination of drug trafficking and drug abuse,

Recognizing that existing international instruments, including the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971, have created a legal framework for combating trafficking in narcotic drugs and drug abuse in their specialized fields,

Declares that:

1. Drug trafficking and drug abuse are extremely serious problems which, owing to their magnitude, scope and widespread pernicious effects, have become an international criminal activity demanding urgent attention and maximum priority.
2. The illegal production of, illicit demand for, abuse of and illicit trafficking in drugs impede economic and social progress, constitute a grave threat to the security and development of many countries and peoples and should be combated by all moral, legal and institutional means, at the national, regional and international levels.
3. The eradication of trafficking in narcotic drugs is the collective responsibility of all States, especially those affected by problems relating to illicit production, trafficking or abuse.
4. States Members shall utilize the legal instruments against the illicit production of and demand for, abuse of and illicit traffic in drugs and adopt additional measures to counter new manifestations of this shameful and heinous crime.
5. States Members undertake to intensify efforts and to co-ordinate strategies aimed at the control and eradication of the complex problem of drug trafficking and drug abuse through programmes including economic, social and cultural alternatives.

Drug law enforcement

INCB report. INCB observed in its 1984 report<sup>(1)</sup> that the development of new and more comprehensive co-operation among countries—including new extradition agreements or tightening of legislation—had contributed to more rapid and comprehensive investigations, leading to larger numbers of arrests and to the detection and seizure of traffickers' immense financial and other assets. The Board agreed with Governments that drug trafficking could constitute a crime against mankind, and suggested that they adopt a universal declaration for intensified concerted action against illicit drug activities. The Board also noted that UNFDAC was expanding its resources and increasing support, in many developing countries, for measures to fight the illicit traffic.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a January 1984 background note<sup>(16)</sup> to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Secretary-General reported on recent trends in illicit traffic in psychotropic substances and narcotic drugs, including increased smuggling of wholesale quantities and changes in trafficking techniques. Based on information provided by Governments and other sources, and focusing on developments mainly in 1982, the note pointed out that traffickers were becoming better organized and more sophisticated in their smuggling and more devious in managing the profits and proceeds from the illicit activities. A growing number of States had increased the maximum penalties for serious drug-related offences, developed legislation for the forfeiture of profits and proceeds of drug crimes, and adopted other relevant measures.

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in October,<sup>(20)</sup> in response to its December 1983 request,<sup>(21)</sup> on activities carried out in the context of the international campaign against traffic in drugs. The report focused on co-ordination mechanisms for drug law enforcement, measures to alleviate the special problems of transit States and efforts to convene an interregional meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies.

The Secretary-General observed that two subsidiary bodies of the Commission—the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East, and the annual meetings of HONLEA—served as co-ordination mechanisms for drug law enforcement at the regional level. Other regional arrangements included the South American Agreement on Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, the Pan-Arab Bureau for Narcotic Affairs of the League of Arab States, and the Co-operation Group to Combat Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking in Drugs of the Council of Europe (Pompidou Group). In Africa, seminars were organized in 1984 for drug control and law enforcement professionals from French-speaking States (Ivory Coast, April) and English-speaking States (Egypt, December).

Efforts to alleviate the special problems of transit States included publication of quarterly summaries of reports on illicit transactions, and improving communications for drug-control law enforcement, especially in the Near and Middle East, Asia and the Pacific, and the Caribbean.

Consultations, which had begun in 1983,<sup>(22)</sup> continued during 1984 on plans to convene an interregional meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies in 1986.

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. At its 1984 special session, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, by a 9 February resolution on the international campaign against the traffic in drugs,<sup>(23)</sup> requested Member States to adopt legislative and administrative measures to enable drug law enforcement agencies to collect and exchange information on drug trafficking groups and operations, and to identify measures for the tracing and forfeiture of the profits of drug crimes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/143 without vote on 14 December.

International campaign against traffic in drugs

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, in which it adopted the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982, 38/98 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983 and other relevant general provisions,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/132 of 14 December 1981 and 38/93 of 16 December 1983, in which it specifically acknowledged the economic and technical constraints impeding many developing countries from combating the illegal production of and illicit traffic in drugs and drug abuse,

Noting the concern expressed by the Secretary-General in his report on the work of the Organization, in which he recognized the need for greater efforts to reduce the traffic in and illicit use of drugs,

Taking note of the Quito Declaration against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs of 11 August 1984 and the New York Declaration against Drug Trafficking and the Illicit Use of Drugs of 1 October 1984 signed by a number of Latin American countries, in which drug trafficking was considered to be a crime against humanity and integrated, effective and urgent regional and international action was demanded, to be supported by the resources necessary for successfully overcoming the problem,

Considering the activities of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the International Narcotics Control Board, Appreciating the action being taken by the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in providing financial resources and support for integrated development programmes, including the replacement of illicit crops in affected areas,

Reaffirming the need to improve and maintain regional and interregional co-operation and co-ordination, particularly in law enforcement, in order to eliminate drug trafficking and drug abuse, and noting the growing interest in regional and interregional co-ordination,

Concerned that, despite the significant national efforts deployed for this purpose, including those of a number of Latin American and Caribbean and Asian countries, the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances has increased noticeably,

Aware of the serious impact on the life and health of peoples and on the stability of democratic institutions resulting from the illicit production, marketing, distribution and use of drugs,

Recognizing that, to root out this evil, integrated action is required for simultaneously reducing and controlling illicit demand, production, distribution and marketing,

Aware that action to eliminate the illegal cultivation of and traffic in drugs must be accompanied by economic and social development programmes for the affected areas,

Bearing in mind the desirability of programming activities for replacing illegal crops in such a manner as to conserve the environment and improve the quality of life of the social sectors concerned,

Recognizing the dilemma of transit States which are seriously affected, both domestically and internationally, by drug trafficking, stimulated by demand for and production and use of illicit drugs and psychotropic substances in other countries,

Aware of the need to mobilize a co-ordinated strategy at the national, regional and international levels, which would cover countries with illegal users and producers and countries used for transit in the world-wide distribution and marketing circuit, in order to eliminate drug trafficking and drug abuse,

Recognizing the importance of ratifying and acceding to the international drug control treaties,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reiterates that urgent attention and highest priority should be given to the struggle against the illicit production of, demand for, use of and traffic in drugs;

3. Calls upon Member States that have not yet done so to ratify the international drug control treaties and, in the meantime, to make serious efforts to comply with the provisions thereof;

4. Reiterates the importance of integrated action, co-ordinated at the regional and international levels, and, for this purpose, requests the Secretary-General and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to step up efforts and initiatives designed to establish, on a continuing basis, co-ordinating machinery for law enforcement in regions where this does not yet exist;

5. Recommends that the highest priority be given to the preparation of specific technical and economic co-operation programmes for the countries most affected by the illicit production of and traffic in drugs and drug abuse;

6. Also recommends that appropriate priority be given to the adoption of measures designed to solve the specific problems of transit States through joint regional and interregional efforts;

7. Urges Member States with available resources and experience to increase their contributions for combating the illegal production of and illicit traffic in drugs and drug abuse, in particular in the countries most affected and where the problem is most serious;

8. Encourages Member States to contribute or to continue contributing to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control so as to enable it to increase its support of drug abuse control programmes;

9. Requests the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, to consider the legal, institutional and social elements relevant to all aspects of combating drug trafficking, including the possibility of convening a specialized conference;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that appropriate steps are taken to implement paragraph 5 (c) of resolution 37/198 and that a meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies is convened in 1986;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for holding, within the framework of advisory services, interregional seminars to study the experience gained by the United Nations system, in particular by the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, and by Member States in integrated rural development programmes for replacing illegal crops;

12. Calls upon the specialized agencies and all other relevant bodies of the United Nations system to participate actively in the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "International campaign against traffic in drugs".

Proposed draft convention against illicit drug traffic

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly, on 14 December, adopted resolution 39/141 without vote.

Draft Convention against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Related Activities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/168 of 20 December 1978, 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982, 38/93 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983 and other relevant provisions,

Aware of the dangers posed by the illegal production of drugs, illicit demand, illicit drug traffic and drug abuse and of the need to pay renewed attention to these problems and to their pernicious effects,

Concerned at the increasing damage which the illicit drug traffic causes to public health, the economic and social development of peoples, and young people in particular,

Bearing in mind the Quito Declaration against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs of 11 August 1984 and the New York Declaration against Drug Trafficking and the Illicit Use of Drugs of 1 October 1984, in which profound alarm was expressed at the seriousness of the problem,

Recognizing the valuable contribution made by existing international legal instruments in their specialized areas, including the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971,

Convinced that the wide scope of the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and its consequences make it necessary to prepare a convention which considers the various aspects of the problem as a whole and, in particular, those not envisaged in existing international instruments,

Commending the important work of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and the International Narcotics Control Board,

1. Reiterates that the struggle against the illegal production and demand and the illicit use and traffic in drugs deserves urgent treatment of the highest priority;

2. Requests the Economic and Social Council, taking into consideration Article 62, paragraph 3, and Article 66, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations and Council resolution 9(I) of 16 February 1946, to request the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to initiate at its thirty-first session, to be held in February 1985, as a matter of priority, the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs which considers the various aspects of the problem as a whole and, in particular, those not envisaged in existing international instruments, and, to that end, to transmit to it the draft Convention annexed to the present resolution as a working paper;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to propose to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs that it adjust the agenda of its thirty-first session, as approved by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1983/115 of 24 May 1983, to enable the Commission to initiate the preparation of the draft convention referred to in paragraph 2 above;

4. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to report to the Economic and Social Council, if possible at its first regular session of 1985, on the results achieved in this respect;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Draft Convention against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Related Activities

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Convention,

Concerned that illicit traffic in and use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances transcend the sphere of the physical and moral well-being of mankind and are detrimental to the identity and integration of peoples, since they constitute a factor of dependence and corruption which undermines their spiritual, cultural, social and economic values, and aware that such problems must be dealt with within the framework of international co-operation and global geopolitics, since drugs are goods used to weaken the legitimate economies of the countries and to undermine their sovereignty, and that such practices are impeding development, especially in the countries of the Andean region, agree to declare illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, the fundamental means of promoting illicit use of such substances, which use is inflicting serious harm on the youth of the world, to be a grave crime against humanity under international law, having regard to the following considerations:

1. Whereas illicit traffic in and use of such substances are detrimental to the integrity and identity of our peoples since they undermine their spiritual, historical and social values, and, as a result of technical advances in the communications media, unprecedented expansion in untoward cross-cultural influences, increase in organized crime and other factors, have reached proportions too great to be dealt with through the isolated demands and actions of States,

2. Whereas there is clear evidence that illicit trafficking is closely linked to the designs and actions of some aimed at subverting the legal order and social peace in our countries in pursuit of their despicable commercial aims, and that it constitutes a factor of dependence for developing peoples and impedes economic integration in keeping with their common interests,

3. Whereas it is clearly established that illicit trafficking operates by corrupting the political and administrative structures of producing and consuming countries and undermines the security and defence of peoples by sapping their military strength and affecting their sovereignty,

4. Whereas there is a need for international legislation that would provide a basis for effective action to combat illicit trafficking in and use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances beyond national boundaries, and for punishing those responsible wherever they may be,

5. Whereas the volume, magnitude and extent of illicit trafficking and use represent a challenge to society as a whole and constitute activities threatening the very existence and future development of human beings and especially affect youth, a key factor for the development of the peoples of the world,

6. Whereas drug addiction is detrimental to health, one of the basic assets and inalienable rights of every human being, and whereas without individual health there is no public health, a fact which in turn bears upon and determines the economic development of peoples,

7. Bearing in mind that the repeated use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances affects the individual and that, through its biological, psychological and social effects, damages the personality and creates problems for the family, society and the State,

8. Whereas the illicit use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances is taking a very serious and often irreversible toll on youth, which is the noblest part of the human resources of the world's peoples, and weakens their capacity for cultural and material progress,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1 Definitions

For the purposes of the present Convention:

(a) Trafficking shall mean the preparation, production, extraction, cultivation, preservation, acquisition, distribution, financing, organization and management, transport, supply and/or storing of any of the substances, or their raw materials, referred to in the present Convention, except those enumerated for medical or scientific use in the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and in the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;

(b) Narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances shall mean the substances, preparations and proprietary drugs listed in the schedules to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971, and such others as may, as determined by the World Health Organization, produce a state of dependence, stimulation or depression of the central nervous system, result in hallucinations or disturbances in motor function or thinking, behaviour, perception or mood, or the use of which may produce effects similar to those produced by any of the substances referred to above.

(a) Ensure that, at the national level, there is co-ordination of preventive and repressive action against illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. They may assign responsibility for such co-ordination to an appropriate agency;

(b) Provide mutual assistance in combating illicit trafficking and co-operate with each other in identifying, arresting and taking legal action against those suspected of engaging in such illicit activities and their accomplices or abettors and also in seizing and destroying such substances;

(c) Co-operate closely with each other and with competent international organizations of which they are members in a co-ordinated effort to combat illicit trafficking, particularly by collecting information and documents relevant to investigation with the aim of facilitating the prosecution of the persons referred to in the preceding paragraph, and exchange such information;

(d) See to it that international co-operation between the relevant agencies is expeditiously carried out;

(e) Ensure that writs for judicial action are transmitted between countries directly and expeditiously to the organs designated by the States Parties. This provision shall not prevent any State Party from exercising its right to require that such writs be transmitted to it through the diplomatic channel or from Government to Government;

(f) Provide information on illicit activities within their territories that involve narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including information on the cultivation, production and manufacture of, trafficking in and use of such substances;

(g) Refrain from enacting legislative provisions or taking measures of any other kind which might be prejudicial to the international obligations which they have assumed with respect to the identification, arrest, extradition and punishment of individuals guilty of the crimes enumerated in the present Convention.

3. Convictions obtained abroad in respect of such crimes shall be taken into account in determining whether the accused is a habitual offender.

4. Crimes committed by both nationals and aliens shall be tried by the State Party in whose territory the crime was committed, or by the State Party in whose territory the offender is present if extradition is not authorized under the law of the State Party to which a request for extradition is made and if the offender has not yet been tried and sentenced for one of the crimes enumerated in the present Convention.

B

1. Each of the crimes enumerated in article 3 and part A, paragraph 2, of the present article shall be deemed to be included among the extraditable offences covered by any extradition treaty which has been or may hereafter be concluded between the States Parties.

2. If a State Party which makes extradition contingent on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no treaty, it may, should it so choose, consider the present Convention as the necessary legal basis for extradition in respect of the crimes enumerated in article 3 and in part A, paragraph 2, of the present article. Extradition shall be subject to any other conditions laid down by the law of the State Party to which the application is made.

3. States Parties which do not make extradition contingent on the existence of a treaty shall recognize the crimes enumerated in article 3 and in part A, paragraph 2, of the present article as extraditable offences as between them, subject to any conditions laid down by the law of the State Party to which the application for extradition is made.

14 December 1984 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/39/710) without vote, 28 November (meeting 53); 24-nation draft (A/C.3/39/L.30/Rev.2); agenda item 101.

Sponsors: Argentina, Bahamas, Bolivia, Canada, Central African Republic, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Malaysia, Morocco, Panama, Peru, Philippines, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

 Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 3rd Committee 41-44, 47, 53; plenary 101.

Conventions

As at the end of 1984, 115 States were parties to the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, with Botswana acceding to it during the year; the number of parties to the Convention as amended by the 25 March 1972 Protocol rose to 78, with Belgium and Botswana adhering; and 78 States were parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, with Botswana and the Ivory Coast acceding in 1984.<sup>(24)</sup>

INCB, in its 1984 report,<sup>(1)</sup> called on parties to the 1961 and 1971 Conventions to review existing extradition agreements and the need for new arrangements, adding that the 1961 Convention as amended could, in certain circumstances, serve in lieu of an extradition treaty.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its 1984 special session, considered a note by the Secretary-General<sup>(25)</sup> on a review of the questionnaire completed by States parties when fulfilling the annual reports requirement of these Conventions. It concluded that it would be premature and counter-productive to review the questionnaire until the form of data that would be compatible with a computerized retrieval and dissemination system had been more clearly established.

On 14 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 39/143 (see above), called on Member States that had not done so to ratify the international drug control treaties and, until that time, to endeavour to abide by them.

1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs

In May 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, adopted resolution 1984/22 on the cannabis problem (see above), calling for measures to confine cannabis cultivation and use to medical and scientific purposes in accordance with the provisions of the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs.

The Commission decided by consensus on 6 February<sup>(26)</sup> to include alfentanil in Schedule I of the 1961 Convention, based on a recommendation by WHO,<sup>(27)</sup> which had examined a proposal to that effect by Belgium.

1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances

In its 1984 report,<sup>(1)</sup> INCB stated that data provided voluntarily by States—both parties to the 1971 Convention and non-parties—had enabled it to assist effectively in international control of psychotropic substances.

Scheduling of psychotropic substances

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in 1984, discussed the advisability, as recommended by WHO, of scheduling (listing) 33 benzodiazepines under Schedule IV—one of four categories of international control under the 1971 Convention. As a result of votes on each substance—including roll-call votes at the request of the United States on alprazolam and diazepam—all 33 substances were included in Schedule IV.<sup>(28)</sup>

The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council urge WHO to review for scheduling those amphetamine-like drugs for which data had been collected and which represented the most serious social and health consequences.

While deciding to include pentazocine in Schedule III of the 1971 Convention,<sup>(29)</sup> the Commission requested WHO to examine further the case for scheduling similar substances (opioid agonists and antagonists) under the 1961 Convention, taking into account the argument that they were more similar to those controlled under the latter Convention.<sup>(30)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/23 without vote.

Review for scheduling of the amphetamine-like drugs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 4(XXX) of 16 February 1983,

Noting with concern the serious health and social problems posed by amphetamine-like drugs in some countries,

Noting also with concern the growing traffic in and abuse of amphetamine-like drugs in some countries not currently subject to international control,

Aware that many of those substances have limited or no recognized therapeutic use,

Recognizing that the Secretary-General has recently obtained information from many States with respect to those substances, in response to his request,

1. Urges the World Health Organization to select any of those amphetamine-like drugs for which data have been collected and which represent the most serious social and health consequences, to review those substances immediately, in accordance with Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 2(S-VII) of 8 February 1982 and consistent with the principles governing the new review procedures of the World Health Organization, and to make its findings available to the Commission at its thirty-first session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to analyse the information recently obtained by him, in accordance with all relevant provisions of Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 2(S-VII), to prepare a report on the basis of that analysis, and to transmit that report, together with the report of the World Health Organization, to parties to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, and the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances and to members of the Commission not later than two months prior to the beginning of the thirty-first session of the Commission.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1984/86) without vote, 3 May (meeting 3); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1984/13); agenda item 13.

Guidelines for exemptions

On 9 February 1984,<sup>(31)</sup> the Commission approved guidelines for its use, as well as for use by national authorities and WHO, for exempting various types of preparations from certain control measures under the provisions of the 1971 Convention. The guidelines set out, among other things, that a preparation containing a psychotropic substance in association with another such substance, a narcotic drug or a psychoactive substance not under international control with known abuse potential should not be exempted, unless compounded in a way that presented a negligible risk of abuse. A preparation with a psychotropic substance in injectable dosage form was also excluded from exemption.

Organizational questions

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

Periodicity of Commission sessions

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its 1984 special session, examined how best to respond to certain treaty-based or annual functions in view of the 1983 Economic and Social Council recommendation<sup>(32)</sup> that the Commission should adhere to the established biennial cycle of meetings. The Commission, at its 1982 special session,<sup>(33)</sup> had requested authorization to meet annually in a regular session of no fewer than eight working days, asserting that it had found it necessary to meet annually in regular and special sessions since 1946 (except for 1967 and 1972).

The Commission had before it a January 1984 note by the Secretary-General,<sup>(34)</sup> outlining certain treaty-based or other functions that might require action by the Commission on an annual basis, along with alternative means of fulfilling such functions.

By a decision of 9 February,<sup>(35)</sup> the Commission decided to defer further discussion of the question until its 1985 regular session.

Chapter XXIII

Statistics

In 1984, the Statistical Office of the United Nations continued to collect and publish a wide range of statistical data, including those on international trade, industry, transport, energy, national accounts and population.

The office also continued its work on development of standards and methods for improving national statistics and statistical systems, and published a number of technical reports on methods in various fields of statistics. Substantive support for technical co-operation to developing countries was provided on behalf of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development for the improvement of national statistics and statistical data processing capability. The office continued to promote the co-ordination of international statistical activities among international organizations and provided statistical services to the United Nations Secretariat and intergovernmental expert bodies.

The Secretary-General issued a number of reports on statistical activities, for consideration by the Statistical Commission at its 1985 session. The Commission, which meets biennially, did not meet in 1984.

UN statistical bodiesACC Sub-Committee

The Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (eighteenth session, Rome, Italy, 30 April–4 May 1984)<sup>(1)</sup> analysed the relevant work carried out by organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and identified the need for reports or future approaches in such areas as energy, environment, price, service, tourism and migration, trade and transport, local area and social statistics. It also considered revision of the System of National Accounts, harmonization of economic classifications, the Living Standards Measurement Study, the National Household Survey Capability Programme and the Statistical Computing Project (see also below).

In reviewing the data dissemination policy within the United Nations system, the Sub-Committee agreed that the Statistical Office should clarify and extend, where necessary, the guidelines for data exchange and dissemination in machine-readable form.

It also recommended that its nineteenth session be held at Madrid, Spain, from 24 to 28 June 1985.

The Sub-Committee's Technical Working Group on Statistical Data Bases (Geneva, 13 April) discussed the experiences and possibilities for inter-agency connection over communication facilities, data catalogues, and the use of microcomputers to support data base management systems.

Statistical Commission1985 Agenda

Taking into account a view expressed at the 1983 session of the Statistical Commission, the Secretary-General, by a December 1984 note,<sup>(2)</sup> proposed inclusion in the Commission's 1985 agenda<sup>(3)</sup> of a sub-item entitled "System of Balances of the National Economy", under an item on national accounts and balances.

Economic statisticsEnergy and environment statistics

A September 1984 report of the Secretary-General on energy and environment statistics<sup>(4)</sup> outlined the current work programmes and future plans of the Statistical Office.

Among other things, the report stated that parts of the first phase of the three-phase work programme on new and renewable sources of energy—assessing current and planned statistical activities on the topic in countries, regional commissions, specialized agencies and other international organizations—had been completed. The Statistical Office continued its methodological work on guidelines for statistics concerning fresh water, human settlements and energy, focusing on delimitation of the environmental aspects of human settlements and energy and on the assessment of national and international statistical work in those areas.

In an October report on mineral resources statistics,<sup>(5)</sup> prepared in response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General reviewed the steps taken over the preceding 10 years in fostering international comparability of data on reserves, production and consumption of mineral resources, and discussed the 1983 recommendations of the group of experts on the standardization of definitions and terminology for statistics on mineral production and consumption and their implications for the work programme of the Statistical Office.

National accounts and balances

An October 1984 report of the Secretary-General on progress made in revising the System of National Accounts (SNA)<sup>(7)</sup> contained a summary of the SNA review since 1975, a schedule of meetings organized by the Intersecretariat Working Group on National Accounts and by the regional commissions, and a review of the consolidated work programme of the Intersecretariat Working Group members for the 1990 revision of SNA.

Progress made in establishing links between SNA and the System of Balances of the National Economy (MPS) was described in a September report of the Secretary-General.<sup>(8)</sup> It discussed, among other things, the results of experimental illustrative calculations of gross domestic product and net material product of selected centrally planned and market economies, as well as work by the Statistical Office in improving and elaborating the conceptual framework of SNA and MPS comparisons.

In addition, the Secretary-General transmitted, by a December note,<sup>(9)</sup> a report prepared by the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance, summarizing the main points in the draft basic methodological provisions for the compilation of MPS (see also under "1985 Agenda" above).

Price statistics

Phase IV of the International Comparison Project—involving comparisons in price statistics, used for assessing the relative economic development of countries—was completed in 1984, while planning for phase V for 1985 continued.

An October 1984 report on the topic<sup>(10)</sup> discussed, among other things, the procedures used and results obtained in phase IV, organization and implementation of phase V, development of the overall international price statistics programme, and relevant manuals and publications issued or under preparation.

International economic classifications

The Secretary-General submitted in October 1984 a progress report on harmonization of international economic classifications,<sup>(11)</sup> containing an outline of work on the Integrated System of Classifications of Activities and Products and information on the current situation and future plans with regard to the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System of the Customs Cooperation Council. The report also described drafts of: the part of the proposed revision of the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities covering activities producing transportable goods; the proposed combined trade/production goods classification; and the third revision of the Standard International Trade Classification.

Social and demographic statistics

Social indicators

In a November 1984 report on the future direction of work on social indicators,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General reviewed some implications for future work of selected major developments and trends in national and international work on relevant statistical issues. The report discussed the development and/or use of: integrated or co-ordinated basic statistics and related methodology; automated data bases and dissemination techniques; social indicators on special population groups; and social indicators as general measures of development and well-being.

Annexed to the report were the conclusions and recommendations of technical meetings concerned with social indicators. Among the meetings in 1984 were the Expert Consultation on a System of Socio-Economic Indicators for African Planners (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 23-27 January), convened by the Economic Commission for Africa; the Working Party on the Framework for the Integration of Social and Demographic Statistics of the Conference of European Statisticians (eighth session, Geneva, 30 January-3 February); and the Expert Group on Development of Statistics on Disabled Persons (Vienna, Austria, 2-6 April), convened by the Statistical Office and the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs.

More detailed information on current national and international work on social indicators and the integration of social, demographic and related statistics was provided in an October report of the Secretary-General.<sup>(13)</sup>

Population and housing censuses

Proposals concerning the 1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme, scheduled to be carried out during 1985-1994, were contained in a November 1984 report of the Secretary-General.<sup>(14)</sup>

The report included an overview of the 1980 Programme—implemented during 1975-1984 and covering over 95 per cent of the world's population in 191 countries or areas—as well as the emerging issues related to census-taking. It also discussed the implications for the 1990 Programme of two recent developments relating to the economic characteristics of the population: the new concepts and standards concerning statistics of the economically active population, employment, unemployment and underemployment, adopted by the International Labour Organisation in 1982; and the planned revisions pertaining to major standard classifications of industry, occupation and status in employment. Information was also provided on a range of proposed activities relevant to the 1990 Programme, related census work of the regional commissions and a tentative calendar of preparatory activities.

National Household Survey Capability Programme

An October 1984 report of the Secretary-General reviewed the prospects for, or progress made in, implementing the National Household Survey Capability Programme,<sup>(15)</sup> a technical co-operation project bringing together national donors and international agencies to assist developing countries in producing socio-economic and demographic statistics needed for their development plans.

Living Standards Measurement Study

The World Bank, in a July 1984 report,<sup>(16)</sup> updated information on progress and activities of its Living Standards Measurement Study (LSMS), aimed primarily at identifying ways to monitor changes in living standards. The report, among other things, pointed to recent trends towards a more explicit focus on operational considerations and a stronger emphasis on using LSMS data for behavioural analysis.

Other statistical activities

Technical co-operation

Information on the technical co-operation programmes in statistics during 1980-1984 of the United Nations system and of other bilateral or multilateral agencies, updating a 1983 report on the topic,<sup>(17)</sup> was summarized in a December 1984 report of the Secretary-General.<sup>(18)</sup> The estimated 1984 expenditure in that regard by the United Nations system stood at $35.9 million, as against $30.6 million in 1983; similar expenditure by other multilateral agencies totalled $2.7 million in 1984, and $3.5 million in 1983.

In addition to current training activities, the report dealt with emerging issues in statistical data processing, involving, among other things, the advent of microcomputer systems.

In a September report,<sup>(19)</sup> the Secretary-General discussed the problems faced by the statistically least developed countries, such as staff shortages and a lack of statistical planning and co-ordination, high costs of data collection, delays in data processing, and inadequacy of statistical training and of data analysis and utilization.

Publication policy

In a November 1984 report on publication policies of international statistical agencies,<sup>(20)</sup> prepared at the 1983 request of the Statistical Commission,<sup>(21)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that the Statistical Office currently produced 12 publications which were issued at least annually; eight recurrent publications which were issued every few years as directories, supplements or compendia; and other methodological studies and international standards as warranted by its work programme.

The report contained a summary of existing practices, a review of objectives and constraints and proposals for future developments.

In a related matter, the Secretary-General discussed, in a September report,<sup>(22)</sup> the dissemination of international statistics to users, and described proposals for improving user services and assessing the potential users.

Also in 1984, the Secretary-General submitted two reports on statistical activities of the United Nations system and other international organizations—an October report covering future plans,<sup>(23)</sup> and a December report containing an overall review for the period 1982 to mid-1984.<sup>(24)</sup>

Chapter XXIV

Institutional arrangements

Harmonization and co-ordination of programme activities of the United Nations system continued to be pursued in 1984 by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC). In its 1983/84 report, ACC noted that the executive heads of the system fully shared the Secretary-General's concern that the value of multilateral diplomacy was being questioned and that international institutions were all too often not being fully utilized. Recent developments, ACC observed, had indicated increasing scepticism and criticism of particular organizations and of the system as a whole. The executive heads were determined to meet this challenge constructively and remained committed to improving further the efficiency of their organizations, individually and collectively, so that the United Nations might continue to make an invaluable contribution to solving the problems confronting the world community.

During the year, in addition to a review of various aspects of the 1984-1989 medium-term plan, a cross-organizational programme analysis in human settlements was undertaken, as was an analysis of the mandates of the system and problems addressed in economic and technical co-operation among developing countries. Efforts were also made to co-ordinate relief activities for Africa.

The General Assembly reviewed progress made in restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, initiated in 1977. Restructuring activities in 1984 focused on the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council with respect to its calendar of meetings, reports submitted to it and meetings of its subsidiary bodies; and on the formulation of a biennial work programme for the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which the Assembly set forth in resolution 39/217. The functioning of the regional commissions and of the Office of Secretariat Services for Economic and Social Matters (OSSECS) was also analysed.

Topics related to this chapter. Regional economic and social activities; strengthening of regional commissions. United Nations programmes: programme planning; administrative and budgetary co-ordination.

Co-ordination in the UN system

ACC activities

In 1984, ACC discussed inter-agency collaboration and co-ordination in a number of areas, among them development and international economic co-operation (see p. 387), the review and appraisal of implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) (see p. 392), operational activities in support of the least developed countries (see p. 414), and efforts to alleviate the critical economic situation in Africa (see p. 467). ACC examined cross-organizational programmes (see below) and joint planning of complementary programmes, and reviewed progress in sectors previously selected for such planning—health care; aging; energy information systems; and research and training in energy assessment, planning and utilization.

Also discussed were integrated approaches in respect of interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development (see p. 406), rural development (see p. 410), nutrition, as it referred in particular to Africa (see p. 467), water resources development (see p. 648), implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy (see p. 659), environment (see p. 745), information systems (see p. 1182), and disarmament and development. Activities in support of international conferences (on population, crime prevention, women), years (of youth, peace, shelter for the homeless) and decades (of disabled persons) were also reviewed.

As to management and institutional policy issues, ACC considered such personnel and general administrative questions as remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories, and the pension and post adjustment systems. It also reviewed harmonization of budgetary presentations, including a system-wide classification of objects of expenditure and a recommended format, accounting and financial reporting, arrangements for payment of staff salaries and allowances, cash management and general financial systems (use of central files for administrative data, insurance and procurement arrangements, common positions on support costs for technical co-operation and other activities).

ACC continued to rationalize its work and to improve the efficiency of its machinery, keeping it to a minimum without impairing its function, and meeting specific requirements of intergovernmental bodies through such ad hoc arrangements as consultations and working group meetings. Economy measures had also been achieved in documentation. ACC expressed concern, however, over the increasing number both of decisions of intergovernmental bodies calling for inter-agency consultations or meetings, and of requests from bodies outside the system for meetings with United Nations organizations and for inputs into their work.

ACC described the foregoing activities in annual overview reports for 1983/84<sup>(1)</sup> and 1984/85.<sup>(2)</sup> It adopted 22 decisions in 1984—12 at its first regular session (London, 16-18 April), 1 at an extraordinary session (Geneva, 3 and 4 July) and 9 at its second regular session (New York, 22 and 23 October). (For details, refer to SUBJECT INDEX or the relevant chapter.)

ACC held an organizational session in New York (15-17 February). Its principal subsidiary bodies met during the year as follows:

Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) (Personnel and General Administrative Questions) (sixtieth session, Paris, 27 February-16 March; sixty-first session, New York, 25 June-13 July; special session, Geneva, 1-3 October); CCAQ (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (sixtieth session, Vienna, Austria, 12-16 March; sixty-first session, New York, 10-14 September); Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (CCSQ) (Operational Activities) (first regular session, Geneva, 20-23 March; second regular session, New York, 3-6 December); CCSQ (Programme Matters) (first regular session, Geneva, 26-30 March; second regular session, New York, 4-9 October); Organizational Committee (Geneva, 3-5 April; New York, 10-12 October).

ACC bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, fifth session, Rome, 17-19 January; Ad Hoc Task Force on the International Conference on Population, third meeting, New York, 30 and 31 January; ad hoc inter-agency meeting on the cross-organizational programme analysis on economic and technical co-operation for development, New York, 6 and 7 February, and on human settlements activities of the United Nations system, New York, 8-10 February; Panel on Monitoring and Evaluation of the Task Force on Rural Development, third session, Rome, 20 and 21 February; Task Force on Rural Development, twelfth meeting, Rome, 22-24 February; Sub-Committee on Nutrition and its Advisory Group, tenth session, Rome, 5-9 March; second inter-agency meeting on the preparations for the World Conference to Review and Ap-

Report for 1983/84

On 29 May, CPC<sup>(3)</sup> commended ACC on the quality of its 1983/84 annual overview report<sup>(1)</sup> and endorsed its conclusions. CPC recommended continued efforts in joint planning, and publication, in connection with the commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations (see p. 382), of the overview of the objectives and plans of the organizations of the United Nations system, to include a short introductory critique of the system's strengths and weaknesses. Further work on the abstract of the overview, which CPC had requested in 1983,<sup>(4)</sup> was not to be pursued; accordingly, the Secretary-General informed the Economic and Social Council, by a note of 14 June,<sup>(5)</sup> that an abstract was not being submitted.

CPC also recommended that documents forming part of ACC decisions but not appearing in the documents list annexed to the report should be made available to Member States. It requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to rationalize the work of ACC and to streamline its subsidiary machinery.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/176.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/176

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/150) without vote, 23 July (meeting 15); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 20.

CPC activities

In 1984, CPC met in New York for an organizational meeting on 22 March and for its twenty-fourth session from 23 April to 1 June.<sup>(3)</sup>

At that session, CPC discussed both the programme performance for the 1982-1983 biennium and proposed revisions to the 1984-1989 medium-term plan, to incorporate legislative mandates formulated since adoption of the plan in 1982<sup>(6)</sup> (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter II).

Aspects of the medium-term plan and programme budget considered by CPC included: the expeditious submission of documentation to CPC and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) during budget preparation (see p. 1142); a new system of priority-setting in the plan and programme budget proposals (see p. 1139); cross-sectional programme analysis of the 1984-1985 programme budget (see p. 1141); decentralization of activities to the regional commissions (see p. 602); the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) 1984-1985 work programme (see p. 564); progress in implementing the 1983 General Assembly resolutions on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa<sup>(7)</sup> and on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa<sup>(8)</sup> (see pp. 606 and 610); and institutional and financial arrangements for the Information Systems Unit of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA) (see p. 409).

In the area of programme evaluation, CPC considered several reports: by the Secretary-General on the 1983 evaluation of UNIDO-executed technical co-operation activities in manufactures funded by the United Nations Development Programme (see p. 570) and on the activities of JUNC; and by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the functioning of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (see p. 456). It reviewed a possible timetable for in-depth and triennial evaluation studies for 1986-1992 and examined the feasibility of linking the themes of such studies with those of cross-organizational programme analyses, as well as ways of improving the documents dissemination system (see p. 1177).

CPC examined cross-organizational analyses of two United Nations programmes, and, in addition to making recommendations concerning future analyses, decided on the programme to be analysed in 1986 (see below). As a follow-up to the 1983 analysis in marine affairs, CPC considered a preliminary report by the International Maritime Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on joint activities in maritime transport (see p. 650).

Finally, CPC considered the question of improved secretariat support services to it (see below).

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/61 A

26 July 1984 Meeting 49 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/150) without vote, 23 July (meeting 15); 4-nation draft (E/1984/C.3/L.6, part A), orally revised; agenda item 20.

Sponsors: Indonesia, Netherlands, Pakistan, Yugoslavia.

Also on 26 July, the Council, by resolution 1984/62, requested CPC to study in depth the JIU report on reporting to the Council, taking into account Member States' views and the Secretary-General's preliminary comments, and to submit proposals on the report to the Council in 1985 (see under "Economic and Social Council" below).

Report of the Secretary-General. In a November 1984 report on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system,<sup>(9)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that the experimental phase of programme planning and programme budgeting work, which had largely been concluded, indicated that these processes as day-to-day management tools needed to be strengthened. Several aspects of the interactions between CPC and sectoral and regional bodies needed to be further clarified and the evaluation function further strengthened.

The Secretary-General's report was taken note of by the General Assembly in decision 39/437.

Secretariat services

On 15 and 16 May, CPC considered a statement by the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management concerning measures taken to improve secretariat support for CPC, in which he informed the Committee that an inquiry was under way, with consultations scheduled for June. CPC recommended that proposals for integrating planning and budgeting functions, to make possible a more exhaustive analysis, should be considered at the consultations. The consultations should have the widest possible participation and should attach due importance to the Assembly's 1977 resolution on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system<sup>(10)</sup> and its 1983 resolution on programme planning.<sup>(11)</sup> Proposals by the Secretary-General should take account of the integrity of the programming and co-ordinating functions of CPC.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By section VII of resolution 1984/61 A, the Economic and Social Council regretted that no proposals to improve secretariat support services for CPC had been submitted. It reiterated the CPC recommendation that the June consultations be held with the widest possible participation of Member States and re-emphasized that the programme planning and evaluation functions of the Secretariat were an essential element of the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring.<sup>(10)</sup> The Council recommended that proposals should take account of the integrity of the programming and co-ordinating functions of CPC, as reflected in its mandate, and asked that the Secretary-General's report on the subject, to be submitted pursuant to the December 1983 Assembly resolution,<sup>(11)</sup> take account of the views expressed by Member States at the 1984 CPC and Council (July) sessions.

Organization of work

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/61 C on 26 July 1984.

Twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth sessions of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination
The Economic and Social Council

Recommends that the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth sessions of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should each be of five weeks' duration, on an experimental basis, in order to allow the Committee adequate time for the discussion, inter alia, of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/61 C
 26 July 1984 Meeting 49 Adopted without vote
 Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/150) without vote, 23 July (meeting 15); 4-nation draft (E/1984/C.3/L.6, part C); agenda item 20.
Sponsors: Indonesia, Netherlands, Pakistan, Yugoslavia.
Financial implications: S-G, E/1984/C.3/L.12.

Following adoption of the resolution, the United States stated its understanding that the financial implications of the resolution would be included in the consolidated statement of conference-servicing requirements to be presented to the General Assembly at its 1984 session.

Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC

As it had decided in July 1983,<sup>(12)</sup> the Economic and Social Council reviewed the functioning of the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC at its February 1984 organizational session. The Council had before it a Secretariat note<sup>(13)</sup> reproducing a 1983 ACC statement and CPC recommendations<sup>(14)</sup> on the topic, as well as the General Assembly's December request<sup>(15)</sup> regarding the application of its 1976 decision to pay out of United Nations funds the travel and subsistence expenses of one representative of each Member State represented on CPC.<sup>(16)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 10 February 1984, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/1 without vote.

Review of the functioning of the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1983/173 of 28 July 1983, by which it decided to review, at its organizational session for 1984, the functioning of the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,

Having considered the comments made in this regard by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,

Having considered also, in accordance with the request made by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/227 B of 20 December 1983, the question of and application of paragraph 12 of General Assembly resolution 31/93 of 14 December 1976,

1. Decides that the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination shall be held at Geneva on 2 and 3 July 1984;

2. Decides also to review at its organizational session for 1985 the functioning of the Joint Meetings;

3. Recommends the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to discuss at their next Joint Meetings the topic of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade with system-wide implications, and with special emphasis on Africa, by the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system;

4. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, as approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/227 B;

5. Decides to recommend to the General Assembly the continuation of the current application of paragraph 12 of Assembly resolution 31/93.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/1
 10 February 1984 Meeting 2 Adopted without vote
 Draft by President for Bureau (E/1984/L.14 & Corr.1), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 2.

Activities of the Joint Meetings. Pursuant to that decision, CPC and ACC held the nineteenth in their series of Joint Meetings at Geneva on 2 and 3 July 1984.<sup>(17)</sup> The topics discussed included implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, with special emphasis on Africa (see p. 394); economic and technical co-operation among developing countries (see p. 401); and the functioning of the Meetings, including the agenda for 1985.

The Joint Meetings noted that, as a follow-up to the previous year's discussion on their functioning, a number of procedural improvements were being implemented. There was general agreement that the improved quality of documentation had led to a more meaningful discussion at the current Meetings, notably the ACC report on system-wide support to economic and technical co-operation among developing countries. Nevertheless, considerable dissatisfaction remained with the Meetings' functioning. It was thus agreed that the format of the proceedings needed further improvement to allow for real dialogue instead of a series of prepared statements, and that discussion should focus on problems and action-oriented solutions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/61 B on 26 July 1984.

Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination
The Economic and Social Council

1. Takes note of the report of the Chairmen of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the nineteenth series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees, devoted to the implementation of the International Development

Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, with special emphasis on Africa, and to economic and technical co-operation among developing countries;

2. Notes the improvements made in the preparation of the Joint Meeting;

3. Welcomes the summing-up by the Secretary-General at the Joint Meeting;

4. Notes, however, that further progress could be made, particularly in achieving a real dialogue between the two bodies;

5. Stresses that the Joint Meetings should highlight the problems and difficulties faced by the specialized agencies;

6. Recommends in this context that:

(a) The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination should prepare for the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination a background paper on the subjects chosen for discussion at the twentieth series of Joint Meetings, that the background paper should be problem- and action-oriented, and that it should include problems faced by organizations in the field of interorganizational co-ordination;

(b) Interventions at the Joint Meetings should enable participants to focus on the problems and their solutions and to improve the dialogue between the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/61 B

26 July 1984 Meeting 49 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/150) without vote, 23 July (meeting 15); 4-nation draft (E/1984/C.3/L.6, part B); agenda item 20.

Sponsors: Indonesia, Netherlands, Pakistan, Yugoslavia.

Cross-organizational programme analyses

In its annual report for 1984/85,<sup>(2)</sup> ACC stated that, in 1984, two cross-organizational programme analyses were reviewed by CPC, as well as by ACC through CCSQ (Programme Matters). One was on United Nations activities in human settlements (see p. 782) and the other was undertaken in preparation for the 1985 review of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries in the medium-term plans of the United Nations system (see p. 400).

As to future cross-organizational programme analyses, CPC recommended that they should provide a basis for making specific recommendations to intergovernmental bodies and secretariats of the United Nations system, particularly on gaps in coverage, overlaps, priorities and co-ordination.

Following an ACC proposal for one of two activities—either economic and social policy research and analysis, or transport—as the subject of analysis in 1986,<sup>(18)</sup> CPC decided on the first, for which it requested the Secretariat to prepare a preliminary report on the scope and general approach to be followed; that report was discussed by ACC in October.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By section VI of resolution 1984/61 A, the Economic and Social Council welcomed the improvements in the recent cross-organizational programme analyses and invited all organizations, organs and bodies of the United Nations system carefully to review and follow up such analyses in their respective sectors. It requested the Secretary-General to ensure that future analyses provided a critical analysis of gaps in the coverage of mandated activities and of questions of priorities, as well as of overlaps and co-ordination.

Medium-term plans

In accordance with its 1983 decision to review on a biennial basis, starting in 1985, one or more major sectors in the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system,<sup>(19)</sup> the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1984/101 of 10 February, decided to review, on a cross-organizational basis, the question of women and development at its first regular session of 1985, and, at its second, the activities of the United Nations system in economic and technical co-operation among developing countries (see above).

In preparation for the review of women and development, a draft report was considered by the relevant machinery of ACC in October. Based on those discussions a second draft would be circulated to organizations early in 1985.

Economic and Social Council

Proposed organizational change

The President of the Economic and Social Council, in response to a 1983 Council request,<sup>(1)</sup> orally reported on 26 July 1984 on his consultations with delegations concerning revitalization of the Council. It had repeatedly been stressed at the consultations, the President stated, that true revitalization, leading to progress on substantive issues on the Council's agenda, required first and foremost political will on the part of Member States.

Proposals put forward included focusing the Council's work on a few major themes of interest to all regions and on problems of a cross-sectoral or interdisciplinary nature, and giving increased attention to the social dimension of development. To avoid overloading the agenda, procedures should be adopted to allow more time for policy discussion of central issues, to reduce routine activities and to avoid adoption of repetitive resolutions.

As to the Council's co-ordination function, the need for a more integrated approach to United Nations activities in economic and social co-operation had been emphasized. Despite general support for more dialogue between Council members and executive heads, it had been suggested that dialogue should be limited to points made by the executive heads and to co-ordination problems requiring Council attention.

Whereas the general debate was regarded by some as a basic function of the Council, others preferred that it be abolished and replaced by substantive discussion of major agenda items, and still others that it should concentrate on specific themes, with a time-limit prescribed for statements. Interest was expressed in more informal exchange of views and in the desirability of formulating appropriate conclusions on the debate.

A study had been proposed of alternative formats for Council meetings in conjunction with a discussion of convening subject-oriented or special sessions of the Council devoted to specific issues of special concern to the international community.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Following the President's report, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/177.

Revitalization of the Economic and Social Council

At its 49th plenary meeting, on 26 July 1984, the Council took note of the oral report made by the President on the consultations he had held with delegations, in pursuance of Council decision 1983/181 of 29 July 1983, on the question of the revitalization of the Council.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/177

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 5.

In connection with the President's oral report on the Council's revitalization, Mexico introduced a draft decision on alternative formats for Council meetings.<sup>(2)</sup> By the decision, the Council would bear in mind the President's statement that a renewed examination of alternatives had been recommended, as follows: the current format—an organizational session and two regular sessions, the first in New York in the spring and the second at Geneva in the summer; the same format, with the second session to take place also in New York; or one annual session of longer duration, to be convened either in New York or at Geneva, or to alternate between the two. The Council would request the Secretary-General to report on the practical implications of these alternatives for its consideration in 1985.

Pakistan said it did not see the usefulness of the proposed report because it would not come to grips with basic issues; the only way to achieve progress was to hold consultations leading to a consensus. It therefore moved that no decision be taken on the draft. The motion was adopted by a roll-call vote of 26 to 8, with 15 abstentions.

Explanations by Indonesia, Malaysia, Saint Lucia, Thailand and Yugoslavia of their affirmative votes, and by Algeria of its abstention, were to the effect that consultations on the draft had not been adequate.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a November 1984 report on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General described progress made by the Economic and Social Council in revitalizing its work for the effective discharge of its responsibilities. Following a 1982 resolution,<sup>(4)</sup> by which the Council had decided to identify items for priority consideration and to focus attention on selected major policy issues, items identified so far—operational activities (1983 and every three years thereafter), and the critical economic situation in Africa (1984)—were those allocated to its second regular session; it was therefore suggested that the practice be extended for items allocated to the first session. Efforts to enhance the usefulness of the general debate by formulating conclusions and recommendations had not been successful and should be pursued. Beyond the Council decision to convene, if necessary, special sessions to deal with specific issues, nothing further had resulted from Council or Assembly discussions on implementing the Assembly's recommendation that subject-oriented special sessions or periodic meetings of the Council, at the ministerial level, be convened.<sup>(5)</sup>

To carry out its co-ordination responsibilities, the Council decided in February to conduct a cross-organizational review in 1985 of two major sectors in the medium-term plans of the United Nations system (see above). At its second regular session of 1984, it introduced arrangements for an exchange of views between Council members and executive heads, following the latter's statements in plenary meeting. An additional step suggested to improve co-ordination was for the Council, at its annual organizational session, to identify for consideration a limited number of specific issues.

While no agreement had been reached on the question of the universal membership of the Council, its rules of procedure had permitted many States not Council members to co-sponsor draft proposals submitted to it. The format adopted for the Council's informal consultations for arriving at a consensus on draft proposals had encouraged active participation by States not Council members, a participation that had increased from 49 in 1982 to 67 in 1984.

As to the Assembly's recommendation that the Council assist in the preparation of the work of the Assembly, the Council, in decision 1984/182, suggested a biennial work programme for the Assembly's Second Committee, taking into account its own biennial work programme.

Reporting procedures

By a note of May 1984,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly and the Council a report prepared by JIU on the subject of reporting to the Council. The report sought to highlight the problem of relations between the Secretariat and intergovernmental organs and to suggest ways to reduce difficulties preventing effective co-operation between them. JIU examined documents distributed to the Council, selected for their importance with respect to three essential functions performed by the United Nations and to which the Council contributed significantly: defining policies, co-ordinating plans and programmes in terms of content and procedures; and planning and programming of economic, social and human rights programmes.

The selected documents examined were: an issue of the World Economic Survey, the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) report, and other reports on world economic problems submitted mainly by organizations within the system, but also from without, which formed the basis for the Council's general debate; and the annual reports of ACC, CPC, and the CPC/ACC Joint Meetings. JIU used the example of the Committee on Natural Resources (CNR) to illustrate difficulties encountered by the Council's subsidiary bodies in contributing to its planning and programming function due to inadequate documentation.

To assist the Council to define policies through the integration of economic and social data on the world economic situation discussed at the general debate and the resultant agreed conclusions, JIU recommended that: the list and content of dossiers on specific issues for debate be established in advance; documentation guidelines with regard to maximum length, summaries and recommendations be reissued; and the format of the general debate, including formulation of conclusions, be revised, as well as the role and conditions of operation of CDP to enable the Council to use its reports.

To enhance the Council's co-ordination function, intergovernmental bodies, through CPC, should use non-secretariat experts to examine problems of system-wide co-ordination of programmes, activities and cross-organizational programme analyses.

To improve planning and programming, JIU recommended that reports of the Council's subsidiary bodies should devote a section to examining the content of all United Nations programmes in the sector concerning them at least every two years; and, on a regular basis, a section to examining the programmes of all organizations in the system in the same sector, including examination of draft medium-term plans, draft programme budgets, and other reports and analyses. All documents for the planning, programming and evaluation cycle should be distributed promptly, and a calendar for such distribution should be drawn up. Other measures concerned the improvement and wider distribution of the relevant instruments and rules and regulations; recourse to outside expertise by CPC, the Council and the Assembly; and instructions for formulating recommendations and defining procedures concerning decision-making on recommendations.

JIU concluded that revising documentation submitted to the Council would improve dialogue between the Secretariat and intergovernmental organs and increase the system's effectiveness in the economic and social fields.

Commenting on the JIU report, the Secretary-General noted<sup>(7)</sup> that, while its wide-ranging recommendations needed further examination, he would take up several points to facilitate Council discussion of the report. Although he recognized the important contribution made by outside experts to the Organization and emphasized the complementarity of their role and the Secretariat's, he asserted that the Secretariat was fully capable of making critical assessments and action-oriented recommendations when called for by legislative mandates, and possessed the requisite objectivity and professional capacity to respond to the needs of intergovernmental bodies.

On the JIU perception of a crisis in the Council's functioning, the Secretary-General drew attention to the Council's continuous efforts since 1952 to improve its working methods. The situation could not be regarded as peculiar to the Council, for it was in part a reflection of problems confronting international economic relations and multilateral co-operation.

While stressing the difficulty in reaching agreed recommendations in the general debate, given the range and complexity of the issues addressed and the diversity of interests involved, the Secretary-General concurred with the desirability of such recommendations, which the Secretariat was prepared to present if so required. He agreed that many documents issued for the debate had no direct bearing on the world economic situation. He concurred that it was necessary to ensure timely availability of documentation and to improve the quality of the World Economic Survey, although not that it should be reduced to a set of policy recommendations with supporting commentary on arguments for and against alternative courses of action. He confirmed that cross-organizational programme analyses had so far resulted in few substantive recommendations and that the Joint Meetings had not served their intended purposes.

Referring to the organization and financing of outside expertise by transferring part of the credits for consultants currently assigned to the Secretariat, the Secretary-General stated that, as chief administrative officer of the United Nations, he was responsible for entering into contractual arrangements on behalf of the Organization. He would, of course, respond to Assembly or Council requests for specific consultants on a priority basis. As to deficiencies in programming and co-ordination, as illustrated by the CNR report, the Secretary-General commented that improving documentation might be a necessary but not a sufficient condition for more effective governmental decision-making: the committees themselves must be willing to exercise their mandates in that area.

Finally, the Secretary-General stated that recommendations relating to the improvement of various planning, programming and evaluation instruments, the formulation of recommendations, and a production and distribution calendar for documentation required careful consideration by the Secretariat units concerned, as well as by the Programming, Planning and Budgeting Board.

Co-operation with other organizations

Non-governmental organizations

The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs) met three times in 1984: in New York from 30 January to 3 February in special session,<sup>(8)</sup> and on 1 and 9 May;<sup>(9)</sup> and at Geneva on 6 July.<sup>(10)</sup>

At the special session, the Committee reviewed applications from NGOs for consultative status with the Council or for a reclassification of their status. One was recommended for category II consultative status, 13 for the Roster, one was reclassified from category II to category I and three from the Roster to category II. No decision was reached on 17 other applications. Another four were not considered, three of them on the applicant's request.

As stated in its report, the Committee also reviewed quadrennial reports submitted by 26 NGOs in categories I and II on their United Nations-related activities during 1978-1981. It took note of 23 of these and postponed consideration of the remaining three, pending, in one case, receipt of additional information, and, in another, clarification that the reporting NGO's activities were in line with relevant Council resolutions. Of the NGOs which failed to submit reports, the Committee was informed that two had been dissolved; four others were recommended to the Council for suspension and ultimately for the withdrawal of their consultative status if they failed to submit their reports in 1984.

In May and July, the Committee heard requests from NGOs with consultative status to address the Council or its committees in connection with items on the Council's agenda. Three organizations in category I were recommended to be heard at the Council's May session, and eight in the same category at its July session. The Council received statements from eight NGOs<sup>(11)</sup> concerning specific areas of its work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, acting on recommendations of the Committee on NGOs, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/113, section I by roll-call vote and sections II and III without vote.

Non-governmental organizations

I

Report of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations on its special session

At its 10th plenary meeting, on 9 May 1984, the Council decided:

(a) To take note of the report of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations on its 1984 special session, with the exception of the recommendation for the reclassification from the Roster to category II of the International Police Association;

(b) Taking into account the concern expressed by members of the Council on the link between the International Police Association and apartheid South Africa and having in mind its resolution 1982/16 of 4 May 1982, not to approve the reclassification to category II of the International Police Association;

(c) In accordance with the relevant provisions of resolution 1296(XLIV) of 23 May 1968, to invite the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations to reconsider the current status of the International Police Association, bearing in mind Council resolution 1982/16;

(d) To consider further the current status of the International Police Association with a view to taking a final decision at its first regular session of 1985.

II

III

Suspension of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Council

Also at the same meeting, the Council, regretting that four non-governmental organizations in category II consultative status, namely, the Federation of Arab Economists, the Inter-American Federation of Public Relations Associations, the International Federation of Landscape Architects and the World Council of Management, had failed to submit quadrennial reports pursuant to the provisions of Council resolution 1296(XLIV), decided to suspend those organizations, and also decided that, if the quadrennial reports were not received from them in 1984, it would withdraw their consultative status.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/113

Sec. I, 45-1-4 (roll-call vote); II & III, without vote

Section I—24-nation draft (E/1984/L.20), orally revised; sections II and III—drafts by Committee on NGOs (E/1984/29), section II orally amended by President; agenda item 7.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bolivia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Ecuador, Gambia, Guyana, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Saint Lucia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Thailand, Uganda, USSR, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Meeting numbers: ESC 5-7, 10, 11.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Greece, Indonesia, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Portugal, United Kingdom.

Before its adoption, the President amended paragraph (b) of section II of the draft to delete the International Police Association (IPA) from among the NGOs recommended for reclassification from the Roster to category II.

In explanation of vote on section I of the decision, the United States said it was unfortunate that the sponsors had preferred to sacrifice the moral authority of a consensus decision for the sake of slogans. If the Council meant to establish criteria based on human rights violations, as paragraph (b) seemed to suggest, a universal application of such criteria would be required, which could lead to a paralysing politicization of the Committee's work.

France regretted the failure to reach a compromise, since there was no disagreement on substance. The implied link between IPA and the apartheid régime did not reflect the true situation. Moreover, paragraph (b) went beyond the 1982 Council resolution on NGO activities,<sup>(12)</sup> making the granting of consultative status conditional on an NGO having no members in South Africa. Such a condition was contrary to the principle of universality of the United Nations.

Saying its abstention was due to the wording of paragraphs (b) to (d), the United Kingdom said it could not accept their implication that the application for reclassification of an NGO with members in South Africa would be turned down. Section I had set a precedent for the treatment of NGOs, which the Council might come to regret.

Canada hoped that procedures for dealing with NGOs with involvement in South Africa could be finalized so that the Committee could continue to work by consensus. While regretting the lack of consensus in this instance, Japan fully shared the feeling of Council members concerning the misleading information provided by IPA. Finland and Sweden supported further Committee consideration of IPA's application but felt that the decision went beyond what they would have liked to see in a procedural text. Given the substantial contribution made by NGOs to the work of the United Nations, the Netherlands felt it important that the forthcoming Committee deliberations should not be prejudiced.

The number of NGOs in consultative status with the Council rose to 712 during 1984.<sup>(13)</sup> They were divided into three groups: category I, organizations representative of major population segments in a large number of countries, involved with the economic and social life of the areas they represented; category II, international organizations having special competence in a few of the Council's areas of activity; and organizations on the Roster, considered able to make occasional and useful contributions to the Council's work. (For list of NGOs in consultative status as at 31 December 1983, see YUN 1983, p. 992.)

Intergovernmental organizations

Intergovernmental Bureau for Informatics

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/158 without vote.

Participation of the Intergovernmental Bureau for Informatics in the work of the Economic and Social Council

At its 30th plenary meeting, on 10 July 1984, the Council, having considered the application of the Intergovernmental Bureau for Informatics, decided, in accordance with rule 79 of the rules of procedure of the Council, that the Intergovernmental Bureau for Informatics might participate, on a continuing basis, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Council on questions within the scope of the activities of that organization.

Other organizational matters

Work programme for 1984-1985

At its 1984 organizational session, held in New York from 7 to 10 and 21 February and on 16 March, the Economic and Social Council considered the draft basic programme of work for 1984-1985, submitted by the Secretary-General. The Council also considered a draft decision on the provisional agenda of its first and second regular sessions, including questions for inclusion in its work programme for 1985.<sup>(15)</sup> Following consideration of both documents, the Council, on 10 February, adopted decision 1984/101 without vote.

By that decision, the Council approved the basic work programme and provisional agenda for the first and second regular sessions of 1984, and allocated items to its sessional committees and plenary meetings. It decided, among other things: to give priority consideration, at its second regular session, to the critical economic situation in Africa, and at its first regular session, to consider the question of the second priority issue; to have a sessional working group review, also at the first session, the draft guidelines on consumer protection; to consider progress in implementing its July 1983 resolution on the promotion of interregional economic and technical cooperation among developing countries;<sup>(16)</sup> to review recurrent and other documents requested under existing legislative authority to determine whether they should be issued at longer intervals or discontinued as redundant; and to transmit directly to the General Assembly the annual reports of the Council of the United Nations University, the Trade and Development Board and the Human Rights Committee, and to consider in 1984 rescheduling the Board and Committee meetings.

The Council took note of a list of questions for inclusion in its 1985 work programme and decided, in accordance with its resolutions of 1982<sup>(4)</sup> and 1983,<sup>(17)</sup> to review, on a cross-organizational basis, during its first 1985 regular session, the question of women and development, and, during the second, the activities of the United Nations system in economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

The Council held its first regular session in New York from 1 to 25 May, and its second regular session at Geneva from 4 to 27 July. The Second (Social) Committee met at the first session, and the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights met prior to and at that session. The First (Economic) Committee and the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee met at the second session.

Agenda of 1984 sessions

On 7 February 1984, the Economic and Social Council adopted the provisional agenda for its February/March organizational session, which contained six items together with background information on each.<sup>(18)</sup> The provisional annotated agenda for the first regular session listing 15 items<sup>(19)</sup>—approved on 10 February by decision 1984/101—together with the proposed schedule of work, as revised,<sup>(20)</sup> was adopted on 1 May.<sup>(21)</sup>

On 25 May, the Council had before it a provisional agenda for its second regular session, containing 24 items and a suggested organization of work,<sup>(22)</sup> which it approved after adding an item entitled "Elections and nominations" and orally revising the work organization (see below). The agenda was adopted at the opening of the session, on 4 July,<sup>(23)</sup> based on an annotated provisional agenda.<sup>(24)</sup> (For the agenda lists, see APPENDIX IV.)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1984/157.

Provisional agenda and organization of work for the second regular session of 1984 of the Council

At its 22nd plenary meeting, on 25 May 1984, the Council approved the draft provisional agenda for the second regular session of 1984, and the proposed organization of work for that session, as orally revised.

Meetings of subsidiary bodies

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In February, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1984/104.

Review of the cycle of meetings of subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council

At its 2nd plenary meeting, on 10 February 1984, the Council decided, pursuant to General Assembly decision 38/429 of 19 December 1983, and Council resolution 1768(LIV) of 18 May 1973, to request its subsidiary bodies that currently meet on an annual basis to consider adopting, on an experimental basis, a biennial cycle of meetings, and to report thereon to the Council in 1984.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/104

Adopted without vote

Draft by President, for Bureau (E/1984/L.14 & Corr.1); agenda item 2.

Following adoption of the decision, France—referring to existing authorization for CDP, the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission, and the regional commissions to meet in annual session—said it was the European Economic Community's understanding that the decision in no way prejudiced any decisions that might be taken by those bodies on the periodicity of their meetings. The United States associated itself with that remark. For Tunisia, the decision would lighten the work-load of the Council and the General Assembly by reducing the number of reports submitted to them for consideration.

Limitation of documentation

In 1984, the Secretariat reported in April<sup>(25)</sup> and June<sup>(26)</sup> on the state of preparedness of documentation for the Economic and Social Council's first and second regular sessions. The reports were submitted in keeping with 1979 Council resolutions<sup>(27)</sup> on the limitation of documents and their circulation in all working languages six weeks before the opening of the Council sessions and those of its subsidiary bodies.

The reports noted that, to allow time for clearances and editing, documentation should have been submitted for the first session by 21 February and circulated by 20 March, and, for the second, by 25 April and circulated by 23 May. A table on the status of documentation annexed to each report showed the documents that failed to make the circulation date; explanations for the delay were to be provided by the responsible offices.

Financial implications of resolutions and decisions

In a July 1984 report,<sup>(28)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a summary of estimates of programme budget implications of resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1984. The estimated costs for 1984-1985, excluding those for conference servicing ($3,608,500), totalled $1,321,500. This figure was subject to change in the light of a review by the General Assembly to determine how much of the costs might be absorbed within appropriations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, following consideration of the Secretary-General's report and acting without vote on an oral proposal by its President, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/189.

Summary of estimates of programme budget implications of resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council during its first and second regular sessions of 1984

At its 50th plenary meeting, on 27 July 1984, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General containing the summary of estimates of programme budget implications of resolutions and decisions adopted by the Council during its first and second regular sessions of 1984.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/189

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly approved a net addition of $794,000 to the 1984-1985 budget to cover a number of 1984 Economic and Social Council actions having financial implications. This amount—of which $517,000 related to 1984 and $277,000 to 1985—was approved by the Fifth Committee, on 27 November 1984, by 77 votes to 2, with 7 abstentions, based on a recommendation by ACABQ<sup>(29)</sup> reducing (by $101,600) the amount ($895,600) requested by the Secretary-General in a report revising his initial submission for the budget as a whole.<sup>(30)</sup>

Related conference-servicing requirements were dealt with separately (see p. 1175).

During consideration of the revised estimates and ACABQ recommendations, the United Kingdom questioned the need for what it regarded as still a considerable sum for the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. The United Kingdom questioned the increase in expert consultants invited to the Congress, from the original 5 provided for in the budget to 25, and the attendance of so many Department of Public Information staff at considerable financial cost. The United States, which had requested the vote, considered the additional appropriation excessive and could not support it.

Organizational structure

In addition to a review of the structure and functioning of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (see p. 456), and of the question of strengthening the regional commissions (see p. 602) and revitalizing the Economic and Social Council (see p. 976), other aspects of the ongoing process of restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, initiated with the adoption in 1977 of a General Assembly resolution on the subject,<sup>(1)</sup> were considered in 1984. These concerned the organization of work of the Assembly's Second Committee, as well as restructuring issues relating to DIESA and OSSECS (see below).

In his November 1984 report on restructuring,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General noted improvements in planning and programming; in the co-ordination of operational activities for development at the field level, and of certain secretariat support services at Headquarters and in the regions; and in the functioning of central intergovernmental bodies, particularly the Economic and Social Council, and of the intersecretariat co-ordination machinery. There was an urgent need, however, for Member Governments, with Secretariat assistance, to take such measures as were necessary for the Assembly to play the central role in the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system envisaged for it in the 1977 resolution.

In that context, the Secretary-General urged that special consideration be given to: the continued streamlining of the Economic and Social Council for a more effective functioning, particularly in co-ordination responsibilities; strengthening the role of other intergovernmental negotiating forums, including UNCTAD, ensuring their close interaction with the Council and the Assembly; increasing the efficiency of secretariat support services by enhanced complementarity of work of their constituent units; overcoming compartmentalization of research activities, on the one hand, and technical co-operation activities on the other, and improving their quality and relevance; strengthening regional structures; improving inter-agency co-ordination; and flexibility and adaptability of policies and procedures governing operational activities for development to take account of the changing requirements of developing countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, having considered several reports relating to the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/178 without vote.

Reports considered by the Economic and Social Council in connection with the question of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, including the revitalization of the Council

At its 49th plenary meeting, on 26 July 1984, the Council took note of the following reports:

(a) Report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development" and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon;

(b) Report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs" and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon;

(c) Report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "Office of Secretariat Services for Economic and Social Matters" and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon;

(d) Report of the Secretary-General on the further implementation of General Assembly resolution 37/214 of 20 December 1982.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/178

Adopted without vote

Draft orally proposed by President; agenda item 6.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with a 1982 decision,<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly had before it a note by the Secretariat<sup>(4)</sup> containing a draft resolution on implementation of section II of the annex to the 1977 Assembly resolution.<sup>(1)</sup> In December, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted decision 39/436.

Implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to refer to its forty-second session for consideration the draft resolution entitled "Implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system".

General Assembly decision 39/436

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.8) without vote, 14 December (meeting 61); oral proposal by Vice-Chairman; agenda item 80 (h).

General Assembly

In his November report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General summarized the progress made in strengthening the effectiveness of the General Assembly as the principal forum for policy-making and harmonizing international efforts to resolve economic, social and related problems.

One of the most comprehensive actions by the Assembly in that area was its adoption of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade<sup>(5)</sup> as the policy framework for formulating and implementing the work programmes and medium-term plans of the United Nations system. To allow the Assembly to monitor follow-up action to its policy recommendations, such mechanisms as the annual review and comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities for development were instituted.

The Assembly also adopted several major programmes of international action (in new and renewable sources of energy, and science and technology; for the least developed countries, the advancement of women, the aging and the disabled), established committees to assist it in guiding such activities, and acted on the outcome of major international conferences, such as the sixth session of UNCTAD (1983). It adopted resolutions covering a wide range of international issues and concerns, from food and agriculture to various aspects of the social situation.

A number of constraints continued to exist, however, including the failure to launch the global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development called for by the Assembly in 1979<sup>(6)</sup> (see also p. 390). Deliberations in the Committee of the Whole had highlighted the difficulty of reaching agreement on a proper balance between the central role of the Assembly and the sectoral role of other United Nations negotiating forums.

Second Committee

The Secretary-General observed in his November report on restructuring<sup>(2)</sup> that consideration of the biennial programme of work of the Second Committee at the 1984 General Assembly session could provide an opportunity to review the formulation and clustering of agenda items in the economic and social area. Referring to the further rationalization of the decision-making process in the Second and Third Committees, he suggested that the goal should be a more systematic effort to identify priority issues. The distribution of work between the two Committees should be given further attention, with the Second Committee concentrating on economic policy issues, and the Third, on social policy issues. Arrangements for consultations between the Bureaux of the two Committees could be usefully instituted to this end.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Pursuant to an Assembly request of December 1983,<sup>(7)</sup> the Economic and Social Council formulated recommendations for a biennial programme of work for the Assembly's Second Committee, which were annexed to decision 1984/182, adopted without vote in July.

Biennial programme of work for the Second Committee of the General Assembly

At its 50th plenary meeting, on 27 July 1984, the Council, pursuant to General Assembly decision 38/429 of 19 December 1983, decided:

- (a) To recommend to the General Assembly the consideration of the suggestions relating to the biennial programme of work for the Second Committee of the General Assembly as contained in the annex to the present decision;
- (b) To request the Secretary-General to prepare accordingly proposals for a draft biennial programme of work for the Second Committee of the General Assembly and to submit it to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

ANNEX

Suggestions relating to the biennial programme of work for the Second Committee of the General Assembly

1. The Second Committee of the General Assembly, in drawing up its biennial programmes of work, should endeavour to adopt, to the extent possible, a biennial cycle of consideration of reports submitted to it, with the exception of those reports which are specifically to be considered annually, once every three years or more, or on an ad hoc basis.

2. To this end, the Second Committee should consider all reports of standing intergovernmental bodies on a biennial basis, except the reports of the Economic and Social Council, the Trade and Development Board and the United Nations Development Programme. In alternate years, when those reports are not considered directly by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council should consider and take action on them and, where appropriate, submit its recommendations to the Second Committee. In respect of those reports, the General Assembly, in those years, will act only on the recommendations of the Council.

3. The Second Committee should also consider, in principle, all recurrent Secretariat reports on a biennial basis, except the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on operational activities for development and all those reports which are specifically to be considered once every three years or more. The cycle of submission of Secretariat reports should henceforth conform to the biennial programme of work of the Second Committee.

4. Future requests for Secretariat reports to be submitted to the Second Committee should be in conformity with the biennial programme of work.

5. Intergovernmental bodies reporting to the Second Committee are further requested to consider adopting a biennial cycle of meetings in conformity with the biennial programme of work of the Second Committee.

6. The Second Committee should accordingly draw up its biennial programme of work with the following proposed breakdown and should review it periodically thereafter:

- (a) Annual consideration:
  - (i) General debate;
  - (ii) Development and international economic co-operation;
  - (iii) Report of the Economic and Social Council;
  - (iv) Trade and development;
  - (v) Operational activities for development: report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation;
  - (vi) Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme;
- (b) Biennial consideration in odd years:
  - (i) Environment;
  - (ii) Human settlements;
  - (iii) Science and technology for development;
  - (iv) Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries;
  - (v) Implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;
  - (vi) Effective mobilization and integration of women in development;
  - (vii) United Nations Institute for Training and Research;
  - (viii) United Nations University;
  - (ix) Technical co-operation activities undertaken by the Secretary-General;

- (c) Biennial consideration in even years:
  - (i) Industrialization;
  - (ii) Food problems;
  - (iii) New and renewable sources of energy;
  - (iv) Development of the energy resources of developing countries;
  - (v) Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator;
  - (vi) World Food Programme;

- (vii) United Nations Capital Development Fund;
- (viii) United Nations Fund for Population Activities;
- (ix) United Nations Volunteers programme;
- (x) United Nations Children's Fund;
- (xi) Implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region;
- (xii) Special programmes of economic assistance (second cluster of countries to be identified later);
- (d) Consideration as required or at longer intervals:
  - (i) Review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;
  - (ii) Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States;
  - (iii) Immediate measures in favour of the developing countries;
  - (iv) Restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system*;
  - (v) United Nations Special Fund;
  - (vi) United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration;
  - (vii) United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries;
  - (viii) Unified approach to development analysis and planning;
  - (ix) Long-term trends in economic development;
  - (x) Role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries.

*The Second Committee should consider this item every three years, and the cycle of its consideration should correspond to that of the proposed medium-term plan by the General Assembly.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/182

Adopted without vote

Draft by President (E/1984/L.40), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 6.

Meeting numbers. ESC 49, 50.

Before adoption of the decision, Mexico stated that the Group of 77 developing countries felt that the question of the Second Committee's programme of work was a delicate matter, affecting the division of functions among main United Nations organs. The Group, therefore, supported the draft text on the understanding that the decision was a temporary one, to be superseded by a final decision that should be reached through detailed analysis and wide-ranging consultations, and reserved the right to propose amendments when the Assembly considered the Council recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/217 on 18 December 1984.

Biennial programme of work for the Second Committee

The General Assembly,
Recalling its decision 38/429 of 19 December 1983, in which it decided to adopt, beginning at its fortieth session, a biennial programme of work for the Second Committee, apart from its general debate,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1984/182 of 27 July 1984, in which it recommended to the General Assembly for its consideration a number of suggestions relating to the biennial programme of work for the Second Committee, contained in the annex to that decision,

1. Decides that the Second Committee, in drawing up its biennial programmes of work, should:

(a) Endeavour to adopt a biennial cycle of consideration of reports submitted to it, with the exception of those reports which are specifically mandated to be considered annually, once every three years or more, or on an ad hoc basis;

(b) Consider all reports of standing intergovernmental bodies on a biennial basis, except the reports of the Economic and Social Council, the Trade and Development Board and the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme;

(c) Consider, in principle, all recurrent Secretariat reports on a biennial basis, except the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on operational activities for development;

2. Decides to approve, in principle, annex I to the present resolution as the basis for the formulation of the biennial programme of work for the Second Committee and to review it periodically;

3. Decides that all requests for Secretariat reports to be submitted to the Second Committee should henceforth conform to the biennial programme of work, except where the urgency of the subject-matter requires otherwise;

4. Requests intergovernmental bodies reporting to the Second Committee to adjust their cycle of meetings to conform to the biennial programme of work;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Second Committee for consideration and approval each year a proposed biennial programme of work, taking into account relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly of that year;

6. Requests the Economic and Social Council, in discharging its responsibilities in preparing the work of the General Assembly in the economic, social and related fields, to take fully into account the approved programme of work for the Second Committee of the General Assembly in formulating its own biennial programme of work and in this context:

(a) To concentrate, in its consideration of reports of intergovernmental bodies submitted through it to the General Assembly, on the co-ordination aspect of the work of those bodies in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

(b) To consider undertaking an in-depth review of the reports of intergovernmental bodies which the General Assembly does not consider directly in a given year and to submit substantive recommendations thereon to the Assembly for consideration and action;

(c) To consider reviewing those reports of intergovernmental bodies which the General Assembly considers directly in a given year but not to consider draft proposals on them, except specific recommendations contained in the reports which require action by the Council and proposals that concern matters relating to the co-ordination aspect of the work of those bodies;

(d) To transmit in some cases, as it deems appropriate, certain reports directly to the General Assembly without debate;

7. Decides to approve the biennial programme of work for the Second Committee for 1985-1986 contained in annex II to the present resolution.

Report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region

*Upon a request of the General Assembly that a special programme of economic assistance be organized for a specific country, the Secretary-General arranges for a mission to that country and submits an individual report to the Assembly at its following session. Thereafter, the periodicity of review missions and individual reports is at the discretion of the country concerned. As a general rule, individual reports would be submitted every two years on the basis of a review mission. In alternate years, reporting to the Assembly is based on information provided by the Government concerned, which is included in a report covering a number of countries.

†The Second Committee should consider this item every three years, and the cycle of its consideration should correspond to that of the proposed medium-term plan by the General Assembly.

‡The Second Committee will, in accordance with established practice and in pursuance of General Assembly decision 38/429, hold a general debate each year at the beginning of its work.

§The list of questions and documentation under this item is only indicative of requests for reports from the General Assembly. The list will be finalized only after the Economic and Social Council completes its work each year.

||Under this item the Second Committee will also have before it the reports of the Industrial Development Board and the World Food Council. The Committee may wish to decide not to consider draft proposals on these reports, except specific proposals requiring action by the General Assembly contained in the reports of these bodies or in the report of the Economic and Social Council.

¶Sub-items 2 (m) and (n) and item 4 are included, as an exception, for 1985 in the light of requests contained in resolutions 39/173, 39/176 and 39/177 for reports of the Secretary-General.

**The programme of work and documentation list for 1986 will be updated in 1985, taking into account relevant decisions of the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

††Under this item the Second Committee will also have before it the reports of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development and the Commission on Human Settlements. The Second Committee may wish to decide not to consider draft proposals on these reports, except specific recommendations requiring action by the General Assembly contained in the reports of these bodies or in the report of the Economic and Social Council.

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.8) without vote, 14 December (meeting 61); draft by Vice-Chairman based on informal consultations (A/C.2/39/L.129/Rev.1), orally revised, and orally amended by Egypt for Group of 77; agenda item 80 (h).

Before the Second Committee approved the draft resolution, Egypt, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, orally amended section D of annex I to delete an item, namely,

"Immediate measures in favour of developing countries".

Secretariat*Department of International Economic and Social Affairs

In 1984, the Economic and Social Council had before it a JIU report on DIESA. Submitted in August 1983,<sup>(8)</sup> along with the Secretary-General's comments issued in November,<sup>(9)</sup> the report was prepared in connection with implementation of the 1977 General Assembly resolution on restructuring.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Council took note of the report and comments on 26 July 1984, in decision 1984/178.

Office of Secretariat Services for Economic and Social Matters

In April 1984, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly a report by JIU on OSSECS,<sup>(10)</sup> a separate organizational entity created to provide integrated technical secretariat services to CPC, the Council, the Assembly, ad hoc conferences and intersecretariat co-ordination machinery. One of a series of JIU reports prepared in connection with implementation of the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring,<sup>(1)</sup> the report sought to analyse the performance by OSSECS of its functions, its relationships with other organizations of the United Nations system and its contribution to the system's economic and social work.

JIU recommended that the Secretary-General consider extending OSSECS technical services to other Assembly Committees, in addition to the Second and Third, and to some special conferences outside the economic and social sectors. Before making final changes to draft papers, OSSECS should communicate to their authors all proposed modifications. The Secretariat's Administrative Management Service should examine the question of inter-departmental distribution of editorial responsibility and advise the Secretary-General accordingly. Terms of reference for OSSECS should be issued by the Secretary-General without delay. The responsibility of OSSECS and of the Department of Conference Services for servicing informal meetings, especially those related to the Council and the Second Committee, should be accepted as legitimate grounds for requests for budgetary resources.

Commenting on the report,<sup>(11)</sup> the Secretary-General noted that extending technical secretariat services to additional committees and special conferences implied substantial organizational changes within the Secretariat; nevertheless, consideration could be given to bodies within the purview of OSSECS. In the Secretary-General's opinion, the recommended review of the distribution of editorial services needed further consideration, since the current situation was satisfactory. He would take fully into account the Assembly's overall review of the implementation of its 1977 resolution in drawing up the OSSECS terms of reference. As to increased requirements for secretariat services for informal consultations, the Secretary-General pointed out that it was in keeping with a 1978 Assembly request.<sup>(12)</sup> He believed that informal consultations should be regarded as an integral part of the proceedings of intergovernmental bodies concerned with economic and social matters.

The JIU report and comments of the Secretary-General were taken note of by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1984/178.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 39/437 without vote.

Trusteeship and decolonization

Chapter I

General questions relating to colonial countries

During 1984, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) continued to address the implementation of the Assembly's 1960 Declaration. It considered the action of international organizations and action impeding implementation by foreign economic and military interests.

In addition to the general question of decolonization, the Committee examined situations in the following individual Territories: Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see next chapter); Namibia (see Chapter III of this section); Falkland Islands (Malvinas), East Timor, Western Sahara, American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, Gibraltar, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Tokelau, Turks and Caicos Islands, United States Virgin Islands (see Chapter IV of this section).

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/55, in which it reaffirmed the need for assistance by the United Nations system to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements and deplored the collaboration of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) with South Africa.

Acting on recommendations by the Committee on colonial countries, the General Assembly took action in December on several general aspects of the subject. By resolution 39/93 and decision 39/420, it endorsed a programme of activities for the twenty-fifth anniversary in 1985 of the 1960 Declaration and, by resolution 39/161 B, associated this event with the United Nations fortieth anniversary (1985). By resolution 39/91, the Assembly called for implementation of the Declaration and by resolution 39/43 for the assistance of the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. By resolution 39/42, it condemned activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the Declaration's implementation and by decision 39/412 condemned military activities in colonial Territories which denied peoples their right to self-determination and independence and which were detrimental to their interests.

By resolution 39/92 on the dissemination of information on decolonization, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to publicize the work of the United Nations on decolonization. Resolution 39/45 included an invitation to States to make offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs). In resolution 39/41, the Assembly requested the administering Powers to transmit information as prescribed in the United Nations Charter as well as information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned.

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: South Africa and apartheid. Namibia. Other colonial Territories.

The 1960 Declaration on colonial countries

Committee on colonial countries

During the year, the Committee on colonial countries considered various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>(1)</sup> Meeting in New York, the 25-member Committee held two sessions—from 13 February to 9 May and from 7 to 24 August—and also held an extra-session meeting on 25 October.<sup>(2)</sup> Recommendations for action by the Committee were made by its subsidiary bodies, the Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance and the Sub-Committee on Small Territories, which met between 8 March and 10 August and between 9 May and 22 August, respectively.

Action was taken by the Committee on the implementation of the Declaration by international organizations, on foreign interests and military bases impeding implementation of the Declaration in NSGTs, on dissemination of information on decolonization and of reports on the Territories supplied by their administering Powers and by visiting missions of the Committee, and on the twenty-fifth (1985) anniversary of the Declaration.

The President of the General Assembly received a letter dated 30 October<sup>(3)</sup> from Papua New Guinea asking to become a member of the Committee. After he informed the Assembly that he had received several communications from Member States expressing a similar desire, the Assembly agreed to the President's suggestion that he should hold further consultations with regional groups with a view to making an early appointment.

Twenty-fifth anniversary (1985)

Action by Committee on colonial countries. In preparation for the twenty-fifth anniversary in 1985 of the adoption of the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries, the Chairman of the Committee consulted with Ministers of Information of the non-aligned countries, with the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and with the United Nations Council for Namibia. A suggested programme of activities was then made available for comments to the Committee, the administering Powers and a number of inter-governmental bodies, including the Preparatory Committee for the Commemoration of the Fortieth Anniversary of the United Nations (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter XI). In August, the Committee on colonial countries decided that any further suggestions should be submitted by 30 October. It prepared a revised draft programme of activities, endorsed by a majority of Committee members, and submitted it to the Assembly for consideration.

Other views on the programme were expressed by several States. On 13 August, Sweden suggested that an extraordinary session of the Committee proposed for 1985 be held at Headquarters and that seminars should not be linked to the twenty-fifth anniversary but should be viewed as a follow-up of a seminar held with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) on dissemination of information on decolonization (Vienna, Austria, 21-23 February 1984).<sup>(4)</sup> In a letter of 5 September, the United Kingdom stressed that the decolonization process was almost at an end and that, although this deserved to be marked by the United Nations, resources should not be devoted to commemorating past events, however significant, but to solving problems. Australia, in a letter dated 10 September, stated that decolonization had been one of the most important achievements of the United Nations and that the twenty-fifth anniversary should be celebrated. It pointed out, however, that, except for Namibia, the list of remaining small Territories required less, not more, activity and intervention, and that the Committee should therefore hold a special meeting at Headquarters without an ambitious programme of meetings elsewhere. In a letter of 23 October, Venezuela suggested that a historical compendium be prepared to record the achievements of the United Nations concerning each Territory which had been considered by the Organization with regard to decolonization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/93 on the basis of a draft by the Committee on colonial countries.

Programme of Activities in Observance of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having considered the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

1. Approves the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and endorses the Programme of Activities in Observance of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples set out in the annex to the present resolution;

ANNEX
Programme of Activities in Observance of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence
to Colonial Countries and Peoples

1. The commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples would be an appropriate occasion to evaluate the progress achieved during the past twenty-five years in the implementation of the Declaration, as well as the role played by the United Nations and its system of organizations in that regard, and to formulate specific measures for the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations in various areas of the world. To that end, the following special programme of activities is envisaged.

A. Activities at the international level

Commemorative meeting of the General Assembly

2. The General Assembly shall hold a special commemorative meeting in observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration, it being understood that the specific modalities and procedures for the commemoration would be the subject of subsequent consultations between the President of the Assembly and the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

3. The meeting shall be held on Friday, 13 December 1985, or alternatively, in October 1985 in conjunction with ceremonies planned for the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations and the proclamation of 1986 as International Year of Peace, in the light of the presence at United Nations Headquarters of a number of heads of State or Government.

Extraordinary session of the Special Committee

4. The Special Committee shall organize an extraordinary session away from Headquarters in 1985, as appropriate.

Special declaration/final document to be adopted by the General Assembly

Seminars to be held by the Special Committee

6. The Special Committee shall hold in 1985 two regional seminars on the subject of decolonization.

7. The Special Committee shall organize, in close consultation with the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, a seminar on dissemination of information on decolonization and on the struggle of the peoples of southern Africa and their national liberation movements, to be held at United Nations Headquarters in close co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements, with the participation of press agencies, newspapers and other mass communication media.

Activities by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, other international organizations and the non-governmental organizations concerned

8. The organizations concerned are requested to undertake various activities in commemoration of the anniversary during 1985. These activities may include the preparation of special publications and studies and the holding of exhibits, seminars and symposia. An account of the activities undertaken should be given the widest possible publicity.

9. The organizations concerned are requested to draw up concrete programmes of assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories and the national liberation movements, as well as to the refugees from Territories under colonial domination. In particular, they are requested to launch new projects for assisting the Namibian people and seek additional funds in support of such projects.

Dissemination of information on decolonization

10. The Secretary-General is requested to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal to give widespread and intensified publicity to the situation in the Territories concerned and to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization. In particular, the Department of Public Information, the Department of Political Affairs, Trusteeship and Decolonization and the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia are requested, in consultation with the Special Committee:

Other activities

11. The motto "Decolonization, Freedom, Independence" shall mark the anniversary.

12. The Secretary-General is requested:

(a) To arrange for a special postal cancellation and the issuance of a special cachet, through the United Nations Postal Administration;

(b) To issue a commemorative medal marking the anniversary, to be conferred upon eminent personalities by the Special Committee;

(c) To publicize the foregoing through the appropriate media.

B. Activities at the regional level

13. Intergovernmental regional organizations are requested, in co-operation with the United Nations, to intensify their activities designed to help eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism and, to that end, to increase their collaboration with one another. They may also hold commemorative meetings and seminars, prepare special studies on various aspects of colonial questions and adopt measures to increase moral and material assistance to the peoples concerned.

C. Activities at the national level

14. Special messages may be issued on the occasion of the anniversary by heads of State or Government and other high-ranking officials, as well as by representatives of political movements, religious organizations, trade unions and other national organizations.

Governments are requested to establish, in co-operation with national United Nations associations, national committees for the commemoration of the anniversary to plan and co-ordinate various activities to be undertaken in 1985 within the context of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration and the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, such as publicizing the work of the United Nations on decolonization through, inter alia, publications, educational programmes in schools and universities, special studies, seminars and radio-television programmes, including the widest possible dissemination in their national languages of the Declaration and the various resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on decolonization; the conferring of national awards or special scholarships for outstanding studies or essays on colonial questions; and the issuance of a commemorative postage stamp and other activities. In particular, Governments are requested to prepare special educational materials on the subject of decolonization for dissemination through schools, universities and other educational institutions, including information on past achievements and the roles played by the national liberation movements, the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations.

16. In undertaking the above activities, particular attention shall be devoted to the various manifestations of colonialism, including racial discrimination and apartheid, activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration impeding the implementation of the Declaration.

General Assembly resolution 39/93

14 December 1984 Meeting 100 137-2-7 (recorded vote)

Draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/39/23); agenda item 18.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands.

A number of States explained their votes. The United Kingdom felt that expenditure for famine relief in Africa for colonial peoples would be better than the activities proposed.

Sweden, also speaking for Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway, had reservations regarding the additional expenditures that the proposed large meetings away from Headquarters would involve. Speaking similarly, Australia said the United Nations should consider how it might arrive at viable permanent solutions for the remaining small Territories, rather than seeking to develop ambitious plans for the continuation of the Special Committee's work. Canada also had reservations about the financial implications, while the Netherlands felt that the resources for the anniversary observance should be found within the regular budget.

Japan commended the authors on avoiding unnecessary elements in the resolution that it said had appeared in previous ones on decolonization, but could not support some activities in the annex; it was particularly concerned that organs of the Assembly should observe a 1976 resolution<sup>(5)</sup> stating that they might hold sessions away from Headquarters only when host Governments agreed to pay the additional costs.

The Assembly took two further actions concerning the twenty-fifth anniversary.

On 14 December, it adopted without vote decision 39/420 as orally proposed by its President.

Activities in observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 14 December 1984, the General Assembly adopted the recommendations contained in chapter II, paragraph 10, of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

General Assembly decision 39/420

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; recommendations by Committee on colonial countries (A/39/23); agenda item 18.

Chapter II, paragraph 10, of the Committee's report contained further specific recommendations for activities to be undertaken in observance of the anniversary.

Before the decision was adopted, the Chairman of the Committee pointed out that no Assembly action needed to be taken on the compendium suggested by Venezuela (see above), and referred to in the Committee's report, since the Committee had agreed that a study might be undertaken in the future in another context.

On 17 December, the Assembly, in preparing for the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations to be commemorated in 1985, adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/161 B also dealing with the anniversary of the 1960 Declaration.

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Fortieth Anniversary of the United Nations,<sup>(6)</sup> established in connection with the observance in 1985 of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations,

Noting that the year 1985 will also mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the historic Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and noting the important role that the United Nations plays in its implementation, Decides that the events commemorating the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations should reflect in an appropriate manner the observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary, also in 1985, of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples with a view to strengthening international commitment to the full achievement of decolonization.

General Assembly resolution 39/161 B

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 143-1-2 (recorded vote)

Draft by India (A/39/L.45); agenda item 40.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: France, United Kingdom.

The United States explained that, since the 1960 Declaration made no reference to the principle of self-determination, it had not supported its adoption; for that reason, it could not support the current resolution.

Implementation of the Declaration

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, the General Assembly again called for the implementation of its 1960

Declaration when it adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/91.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, and 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, in particular resolution 38/54 of 7 December 1983, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia, adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 25 May 1984 at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Bangkok,

Condemning the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans, particularly in Namibia, by the Government of South Africa through its persistent, illegal occupation of the international Territory and its intransigent attitude towards all efforts being made to bring about an internationally acceptable solution to the situation obtaining in the Territory,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need to take all necessary measures to eliminate forthwith the remaining vestiges of colonialism, particularly in respect of Namibia where desperate attempts by South Africa to perpetuate its illegal occupation have brought untold suffering and bloodshed to the people,

Strongly condemning the policies of those States which, in defiance of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, have continued to collaborate with the Government of South Africa in its domination of the people of Namibia,

Conscious that the success of the national liberation struggle and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the total elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations in Africa,

Welcoming the accession to independence by Brunei Darussalam on 1 January 1984 and its admission to membership in the United Nations on 21 September 1984,

Noting with satisfaction the work accomplished by the Special Committee with a view to securing the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting also with satisfaction the co-operation and active participation of the administering Powers concerned in the relevant work of the Special Committee, as well as the continued readiness of the Governments concerned to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Reiterating its conviction that the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories will be achieved most expeditiously by the faithful and complete implementation of the Declaration, particularly in Namibia, and by the speediest possible complete elimination of the presence of the illegal occupying régime therefrom,

Keenly aware of the pressing needs of the newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 1514(XV), 2621(XXV) and 38/54 and all other resolutions on decolonization and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations—including racism, apartheid, the exploitation by foreign and other interests of economic and human resources and the waging of colonial wars to suppress national liberation movements—is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and poses a serious threat to international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms its determination to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the guiding principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1984, including the programme of work envisaged for 1985;

Explaining its vote, the United Kingdom pointed out that the text was primarily concerned with apartheid and Namibia and said nothing about the situation in the remaining British dependent Territories although these made up about half of the Committee's agenda; scant account had been taken of the aspirations and interests of the Governments and peoples of those Territories.

Sweden, speaking on behalf of the five Nordic countries, said the text contained formulations which they did not support; paragraph 4 was contrary to the principle that the United Nations should always encourage only peaceful solutions and paragraph 10 was too categorical, a point shared by Turkey. Australia believed that the Organization should seek peaceful solutions, and—together with Canada—could not accept endorsement of armed struggle, nor did it feel that NSGTs posed a serious threat to international peace and security. Canada also did not agree with the unconditional call for the withdrawal of military bases from colonial Territories.

Japan had reservations regarding paragraphs 4, 5, 6 and 10, and interpreted paragraph 5 as condemning only those foreign economic activities which in fact were impeding self-determination.

The Netherlands had reservations on paragraphs 2, 4, 7, 8 and 10.

In resolution 39/155, the Assembly again urged States to speed the implementation of the 1960 Declaration.

Implementation by international organizations

In response to requests of the General Assembly for implementation of its 1960 Declaration, including a December 1983 resolution,<sup>(7)</sup> United Nations specialized agencies and other related bodies continued providing assistance to peoples of colonial countries and their national liberation movements. In accordance with the 1983 resolution, a 1984 report<sup>(8)</sup> by the Secretary-General summarized the replies of United Nations bodies on action taken. (See Chapter III of this section for action taken regarding Namibia.)

During 1984, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Conference Committee on Apartheid endorsed a proposed international conference on an oil embargo against South Africa. Its Committee on Discrimination reviewed its expanded technical co-operation programme and the actions taken against apartheid by Governments and by workers' and employers' organizations. In May, ILO organized a tripartite conference at Lusaka, Zambia, to review its experience on assistance programmes. Pilot vocational centres were established for South Africans and a further programme in vocational training was launched in co-operation with India. Other ILO programmes aimed at creating employment to help front-line and neighbouring States reduce their economic and social dependence on South Africa.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) undertook activities to enable refugee communities administered by national liberation movements to become self-sufficient in food and to develop agricultural skills and leadership.

During the year, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued to consult with national liberation movements to implement the 1960 Declaration, including projects to provide educational training. It supported a seminar held in November at the Education Centre of the Solomon Mahlangu Freedom College at Mazimbu, United Republic of Tanzania, served as executing agency for United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) projects giving school materials and laboratory and sports equipment to the educational centres of South African liberation movements and paid their support staff. It published the English edition of a book on human rights recourse procedures and an analysis of South African school history textbooks entitled History in

Black and White. UNESCO also took part in a meeting of experts in Beijing, China, from 15 to 25 November that chose the studies to be undertaken on the causes of racism and apartheid and organized a conference on tolerance in Paris on 21 March inaugurating public conferences to mark the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and focusing on popular culture as a factor of inter-cultural understanding using reggae music as an example.

The World Health Organization continued to provide medical supplies, drugs and fellowships to national liberation movements, to refugees in Africa and to Lesotho and Swaziland.

In 1984, the Universal Postal Union provided one fellowship to each of six Caribbean countries—Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Grenada, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines—and to one NSGT—Anguilla—for a subregional course for supervisors that it organized at Kingston, Jamaica, from 16 April to 15 June. Other activities in the Caribbean included a mission on postal management questions, which visited Saint Vincent and the Grenadines from 1 July to 3 August, and one fellowship for Grenada for a course in the Netherlands from 15 October to 16 December in the operation of postal services. Other activities for newly independent countries included two fellowships for a course on mail-routing at Ndola, Zambia, fellowships for participation in courses for postal instructors at Blantyre, Malawi, and at Nairobi, Kenya, in postal statistics at Nairobi, in postal management at Rugby, United Kingdom, and in post-office savings at Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania. Other such postal training fellowships were financed by UNDP during the year.

The International Maritime Organization (IMO) continued assistance to newly independent countries and to peoples fighting for their independence in Africa under its 1974 co-operation agreement with OAU, consulting on possible provision of maritime training to African refugees. It invited national liberation movements to attend IMO meetings and conferences as observers.

The World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) continued discussions with OAU on assistance to colonial peoples in Africa and their national liberation movements, and offered two fellowships for each movement. It also invited newly independent countries and emerging States to propose candidates for training in 1984; Angola, Vanuatu and Zimbabwe proposed 22 candidates and were awarded eight fellowships in industrial property and copyright. In September, WIPO organized and financed, jointly with Portugal, a seminar on industrial property systems for Portuguese-speaking African countries, attended by two officials from Angola, two from Guinea-Bissau, three from Mozambique and one from Sao Tome and Principe. During the year, fellowships in the WIPO training programme were awarded to top candidates from five front-line States: Angola, Mozambique, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) pointed out that it could assist only developing States that were members of IFAD; therefore, none had been assisted in relation to the implementation of the 1960 Declaration.

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) set up a special economic unit on assistance to the Palestinian people. In September 1984, the Trade and Development Board, in pursuance of UNCTAD resolution 147(VI),<sup>(9)</sup> urged the Administrator of UNDP to provide resources to the UNCTAD Secretary-General to enable him to carry out his mandate relating to the oppressed people of South Africa (see p. 168).

UNDP reported that its role was limited to providing development assistance to peoples living in asylum in neighbouring countries and geared to obtaining self-sufficiency and to training for future responsible participation when conditions were right for their return. This included support for educational projects executed by UNESCO and food production and training projects carried out by FAO (see above).

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued assisting South African refugees in health, education, local integration and resettlement. In Angola, $617,500 was committed to assist 9,000 South African refugees in the urban areas of Luanda and Benguele and in Malange province for a vocational training centre and to develop agricultural production at a farm run by ANC and to improve its transport capacity.

In Botswana, 212 registered South African refugees were assisted through various income-generating projects and 130 South Africans who arrived in late 1984 were given supplementary assistance while efforts were made to find durable solutions. A further 33 South Africans, who found employment in education, administration, catering, hairdressing, skilled trades, finance and law, were provided with work permits, and 24 South Africans, including nine dependants, were resettled in the United States.

In Lesotho, during the year, some 160 South Africans who had no other source of income were given assistance for their daily needs. An ILO project, to develop small enterprises for refugees, set up 18 businesses, creating jobs for 70 people based on loans of some $72,000, and another 21 South Africans were assisted with resettlement in other African countries, Australia, Canada and the United States.

At the end of December 1984, there were 419 South African refugees in Mozambique who were provided with supplementary aid, including food and medical treatment, and some 90 South Africans were also assisted with Portuguese language training. In Zimbabwe, where there were 440 South African refugees, some 90 received supplementary aid.

In 1984, $71,300 was allocated to equip a vocational training institute in the United Republic of Tanzania in the Dakawa Development Centre and farm run by ANC, some $80,000 was granted to PAC to clear a farm and procure farm equipment, and $97,000 was used for both organizations for transportation, tents, bedding and emergency food for about 200 South African refugees. In Zambia, UNHCR gave $140,000 to ANC for the purchase of farm equipment, livestock, animal feed and veterinary drugs for its farm near Lusaka.

UNHCR committed an additional $211,000 for educational assistance to 191 South African students in eight countries of asylum, and it continued its close co-operation with the liberation movements recognized by OAU and the United Nations whose representatives attended the October 1984 session of the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme as observers.

The World Food Programme reported that, as at 31 December 1984, it had committed for liberation movement refugees and displaced persons a total of $75.9 million for 27 projects, of which six were still current.

In accordance with a July 1983 request of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(10)</sup> its President and the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries continued consultations<sup>(11)</sup> on co-ordinating the activities of United Nations bodies in implementing the 1960 Declaration. The two presiding officers noted that many organizations had co-operated closely with front-line States and hoped that they would continue to intensify their efforts for the extension of assistance, adding that measures to withhold assistance from South Africa continued to be in force. They also drew attention to the forthcoming Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa which was to consider their relief and resettlement (see p. 942).

Further to the same Council request,<sup>(10)</sup> consultations were held between the Council's President and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid. Attention was paid to the aggression against the front-line States by the Pretoria régime, and its refusal to comply with United Nations decisions, with the Committee Chairman emphasizing that national liberation movements should be provided with sufficient assistance to isolate apartheid South Africa. The Chairman also drew attention to the application of the International Police Association (IPA) to the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations for reclassification of its consultative status from the Roster to category II; IPA had not, however, informed the Committee that it had accepted the South African Police Association as a member. The Chairman requested that the consultative status of IPA be suspended. The Council took note of the link between IPA and apartheid South Africa and decided not to approve its reclassification and to consider its status in 1985 (see p. 979).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted by roll-call vote resolution 1984/55 as recommended by its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council concerning the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,

Having heard the statements of the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the representative of the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions adopted by United Nations bodies on this subject, including in particular Assembly resolution 38/51 of 7 December 1983 and Council resolution 1983/42 of 25 July 1983,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies,

Noting with deep concern that the situation in southern Africa continues to present a serious threat to peace and security as a result of South Africa's intensified and ruthless repression, its policy and practice of apartheid and other gross violations of the human rights of the peoples in Namibia and South Africa and its armed aggression and military, political and economic destabilization directed against independent States in the region,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their struggle for liberation from the illegal occupation of their country by the racist minority régime in South Africa,

Deeply concerned that, while progress has been maintained through the continuing efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the extension of assistance to refugees from southern Africa, the action taken thus far by the organizations and agencies concerned in the provision of assistance generally to the people of Namibia is still far from adequate to meet their urgent and growing needs,

Gravely concerned at the continued collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the continuing efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to the national liberation movements concerned, and commending the initiative taken by that organization in establishing channels for closer, periodic contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and United Nations institutions and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements in the formulation of assistance programmes,

Noting further the communiqué issued by the Summit Meeting of the heads of State and Government of the Front-line States and leaders of liberation movements, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 29 April 1984,<sup>(12)</sup>

Bearing in mind the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its 424th meeting, held at Bangkok on 25 May 1984,

1. Takes note of the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council and endorses the observations and suggestions contained therein;

2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Namibia, to do everything possible as a matter of urgency to render increased assistance to the people of Namibia, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Council for Namibia, in particular in connection with the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;

5. Also requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue to take, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance to the Government of South Africa until that Government restores to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal occupation of Namibia by that régime;

6. Further requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council on the apartheid policy of the Government of South Africa, to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa and to take such measures as will totally isolate the apartheid régime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid;

7. Condemns the latest attempts being made by the Government of South Africa to circumvent the implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, approved by the Security Council in its resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978;

8. Deeply deplores the persistent collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of repeated General Assembly resolutions to the contrary, and urgently calls upon the Fund to put an end to such collaboration;

9. Recommends that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity should be included in the agenda of future high-level meetings of the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations within the United Nations system, with a view to strengthening further the existing measures for co-ordination of action to ensure the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories;

10. Notes with satisfaction the inclusion of Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, in the membership of various agencies and organizations within the United Nations system and urges those which have not yet granted full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia to do so without delay;

11. Notes with satisfaction also the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and United Nations institutions which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those international institutions which have not yet done so to follow that example and make the necessary arrangements without delay, including arrangements to defray the costs of the participation of those representatives;

12. Recommends that all States should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

13. Urges those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress made by those organizations in their implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

14. Also urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions;

15. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution and to the discussions on the subject at the second regular session of 1984 of the Economic and Social Council;

16. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue consultations on these matters with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid and to report thereon to the Council;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1985;

18. Decides to keep these questions under continuous review.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/55

25 July 1984 Meeting 48 36-1-11 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/137) by roll-call vote (24-1-11), 13 July (meeting 6); 15-nation draft (E/1984/C.3/L.3), orally revised; agenda item 22.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, China, Congo, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Saint Lucia, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, Yugoslavia.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Benin, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Indonesia, Lebanon, Malaysia, Mexico, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, United Kingdom.

Before the draft was approved by the Third Committee, separate votes were taken on the eighth preambular paragraph and on paragraph 8; both were approved by 21 to 3, with 11 abstentions, with the latter being a roll-call vote. Roll-call votes were also taken in the Council on the same paragraphs, both of which were adopted by 33 to 2, with 12 abstentions.

Explaining its vote, the United Kingdom said it abhorred the system of apartheid and, although it endorsed much of the text, there were parts concerning the standing of IMF in the contested paragraphs which it could not support. Portugal, stressing that it opposed apartheid and supported United Nations action to hasten the independence of the peoples of southern Africa, said it could not support the text's discriminatory references. Luxembourg, speaking for the member States of the European Community (EC), said they remained firmly against apartheid and for early implementation of the 1978 Security Council resolution on the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia;<sup>(13)</sup> they commended the specialized agencies for their assistance to refugees from South Africa and Namibia, but felt that the text, particularly the two paragraphs in question, was at variance with their views. Speaking in like manner, New Zealand was concerned over the wording concerning IMF which it said must be free to act according to its mandate. Austria saw the text as a challenge to the autonomy of IMF.

The United States believed that the criticism of IMF was symptomatic of attempts being encouraged by countries playing no constructive part in the specialized agencies to introduce extraneous political issues; although supporting UNHCR's programmes for Namibian and South African refugees, it could not accept the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) as exclusively representing the Namibian people or as specifically deserving agency support.

Poland, speaking also for Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, would have liked to have seen a condemnation of the western nations' continued assistance to South Africa, a call for them to desist and a denunciation of the plunder by Western transnational corporations of Namibia's wealth.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The Committee on colonial countries continued in August 1984 to consider the role of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies in implementing the 1960 Declaration, in accordance with the Assembly's 1983 request.<sup>(14)</sup> On 22 August, the Committee adopted a resolution<sup>(15)</sup> which became the basis for a draft recommended to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, acting on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/43 which was based on the text by the Committee on colonial countries.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations",

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980, as well as all other relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly on this subject, in particular resolutions 38/51 of 7 December 1983 on the item and 38/36 of 1 December 1983 on the question of Namibia,

Having examined the reports submitted on the item by the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia, adopted at the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, and of the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia, adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 25 May 1984 at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Bangkok,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Political Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, and other documents of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries,

Noting the Final Communiqué of the Summit Meeting of Front-line States, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 29 April 1984,<sup>(12)</sup>

Aware that the struggle of the people of Namibia for self-determination and independence is in its crucial stage and has sharply intensified as a consequence of the stepped-up aggression of the illegal colonialist régime of Pretoria against the people of the Territory and the increased general support rendered to that régime by certain Western countries, coupled with efforts to deprive the Namibian people of their hard-won victories in the liberation struggle, and that it is therefore incumbent upon the entire international community decisively to intensify concerted action in support of the people of Namibia and their sole and authentic representative, the South West Africa People's Organization, for the attainment of their goal,

Concerned that the policy of "constructive engagement" with the apartheid régime of South Africa, linked with the economic and military collaboration maintained by some Western States and Israel with Pretoria, has only encouraged and strengthened the racist régime in its continued illegal occupation and massive militarization

and exploitation of Namibia in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Gravely concerned at the continued imperialist and neo-colonialist attempts to delay the attainment of independence by Namibia, as well as South Africa's aggressive policy to destabilize independent States in southern Africa, in particular the front-line States,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the Namibian people and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, and of the peoples of other colonial Territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule and in their efforts to achieve and consolidate their national independence,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the necessary measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly those relating to the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements,

Deeply concerned that, although there has been progress in the extension of assistance to refugees from Namibia, the action taken hitherto by the organizations concerned in providing assistance to the people of the Territory through their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, still remains inadequate to meet the urgent and growing needs of the Namibian people,

Expressing its confident hope that closer contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movement concerned will help to overcome procedural and other difficulties which have impeded or delayed the implementation of some assistance programmes,

Recalling its resolution 38/36 C of 1 December 1983, requesting all specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to grant full membership to Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia,

Expressing its appreciation to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued co-operation and assistance extended by it to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in connection with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Expressing its appreciation also to the Governments of the front-line States for the steadfast support extended to the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, in their just and legitimate struggle for the attainment of freedom and independence, despite increased armed attacks by the forces of the racist régime of South Africa, and aware of the particular needs of those Governments for assistance in that connection,

Noting the continued efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to the national liberation movements and commending its initiative in establishing channels for closer periodic contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements in the formulation of assistance programmes,

Commending the continued substantial contribution of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the effective support it provides to the national liberation movements in educating the populations of colonial Territories concerning self-determination and independence,

Noting also the support given by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/9 A of 4 November 1977,

Deploping the continued links with and assistance rendered to South Africa by certain specialized agencies in the financial, economic, technical and other fields, in contravention of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Gravely concerned at the continued collaboration between the International Monetary Fund and the Government of South Africa in disregard of relevant General Assembly resolutions, in particular resolution 37/2 of 21 October 1982,

Bearing in mind the importance of the activities of non-governmental organizations aimed at putting an end to the assistance which is still being rendered to South Africa by some specialized agencies and taking into account the consultations held by the Special Committee with non-governmental organizations and the relevant conclusions and recommendations on the Seminar with Non-Governmental Organizations Based in Europe on Dissemination of Information on Decolonization, held at Vienna from 21 to 23 February 1984,

Mindful of the necessity of keeping under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question;

2. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute, within their spheres of competence, to the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reaffirms also that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and urges all specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

5. Expresses its concern that the assistance extended thus far by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, is far from adequate in relation to the actual needs of the peoples concerned;

6. Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to withhold from the racist régime of South Africa any form of co-operation and assistance in the financial, economic, technical and other fields and to discontinue all support to that régime until the people of Namibia have exercised fully their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia and until the inhuman system of apartheid has been totally eradicated;

7. Reiterates its conviction that the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of the domination of the Territory by the racist régime of South Africa;

8. Regrets that, notwithstanding the repeated assurances by the representative of the World Bank to the effect that the Bank has terminated business relations with the South African régime, the World Bank and also the International Monetary Fund continue to maintain links with the racist régime of Pretoria, as exemplified by the continued membership of South Africa in both agencies, and expresses the view that the two agencies should put an end to all links with the racist régime;

9. Strongly condemns the persistent collaboration between the International Monetary Fund and South Africa, in disregard of repeated resolutions to the contrary by the General Assembly, particularly the granting of a loan of $1.1 billion to South Africa in November 1982 in defiance of General Assembly resolution 37/2, and calls upon the International Monetary Fund to rescind the loan, to put an end to such collaboration and not to grant any new loans to the racist régime of South Africa;

10. Commends those non-governmental organizations which, by their activities, as exemplified by the co-operation between the Center for International Policy and the United Nations Council for Namibia, are helping to inform public opinion and mobilize it against the assistance rendered by the International Monetary Fund to South Africa, and calls upon all non-governmental organizations to redouble their efforts in this respect;

11. Once again urges the executive heads of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to draw the particular attention of their governing bodies to the present resolution, with a view to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial Territories, particularly Namibia;

12. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render or continue to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples struggling for liberation from colonial rule, bearing in mind that such assistance should not only meet their immediate needs but also create conditions for development after they have exercised their right to self-determination and independence;

13. Once again requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to provide all moral and material assistance to the newly independent and emerging States;

14. Reiterates its recommendation that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements directly or, where appropriate, through the Organization of African Unity, and review and introduce greater flexibility in their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes and projects so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay to help the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

15. Notes with satisfaction that the South West Africa People's Organization continues to be the beneficiary of a number of programmes established within the framework of the United Nations Institute for Namibia at Lusaka and that the United Nations Council for Namibia, in co-operation with the South West Africa People's Organization, continues to represent the people of Namibia at meetings of the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system, and urges those agencies and organizations to increase their assistance to the South West Africa People's Organization, as well as to the United Nations Institute for Namibia and the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;

16. Recommends that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity should be included in the agenda of future high-level meetings between the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to strengthening further the existing measures of co-ordination of action to ensure the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories;

17. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress they have made in the implementation of the Declaration and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

18. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those agencies and organizations that have not yet done so to follow this example and to make the necessary arrangements without delay;

19. Notes with satisfaction the inclusion of Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, in the membership of various specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, and urges those agencies and organizations that have not so far granted full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia to do so without delay;

20. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to extend, as a matter of priority, substantial material assistance to the Governments of the front-line States in order to enable them to support more effectively the struggle of the people of Namibia for freedom and independence and to resist the violation of their territorial integrity by the armed forces of the racist régime of South Africa directly or, as in Angola and Mozambique, through puppet traitor groups in the service of Pretoria;

21. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to assist in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of the small Territories, particularly in the development of their economies;

22. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connection, that they should accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

23. Reiterates its proposal, under article III of the Agreement between the United Nations and the International Monetary Fund, for the urgent inclusion in the agenda of the Board of Governors of the Fund of an item dealing with the relationship between the Fund and South Africa and further reiterates its proposal that, in pursuance of article II of the Agreement, the relevant organs of the United Nations should participate in any meeting of the Board of Governors called by the Fund for the purpose of discussing the item, and urges the Fund to discuss its relationship with South Africa at its annual meeting, in compliance with the above-mentioned Agreement;

24. Draws the attention of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/118, in particular to those provisions calling upon the agencies and organizations to render all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

25. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the provisions of paragraphs 14 and 24 above, to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity where appropriate, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and organizations, a report on the action taken in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution, since the circulation of his previous report;

27. Requests the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, appropriate measures for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

28. Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to mark, in their respective fields of operation, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to report to the Secretary-General on the measures taken;

29. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/43

5 December 1984 Meeting 87 119-3-22 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/39/690 & Corr.1) by recorded vote (116-3-23), 13 November (meeting 19); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/39/23); amended by Cameroon, for African Group (A/C.4/39/L.11) and by United States (A/C.4/39/L.8); agenda items 12 and 105.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 4th Committee 12-19; plenary 87.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

Before approving the draft as a whole, the Fourth Committee approved several amendments by recorded vote. The United States proposed deleting from the seventh preambular paragraph, after "certain Western countries", the phrase "especially the United States of America and Israel", and deleting from paragraph 10, after "public opinion", the phrase "in the United States of America and elsewhere". The first amendment was approved by 62 votes to 50, with 20 abstentions, and the second by 64 to 39, with 28 abstentions.

An amendment by Cameroon, on behalf of the Group of African States,<sup>(16)</sup> would have inserted a new eighth preambular paragraph to have the Assembly express concern that the policy of constructive engagement with the apartheid régime of South Africa adopted by a certain Member State had further encouraged and strengthened the racist régime in its continued illegal occupation and massive militarization and exploitation of Namibia. The amendment was subsequently withdrawn by the sponsors and a new one introduced to add the eighth preambular paragraph of the adopted text. That amendment was approved by 90 votes to 28, with 20 abstentions.

A number of States explained their positions. The United States said that specific mention of any country in connection with a recommendation to mobilize public opinion constituted direct interference in its internal affairs and that no delegation could seriously maintain that the United States was blocking a solution to the Namibian crisis since, at times, persuasion and patient diplomacy were the best ways to proceed. The United Kingdom opposed the amendment concerning constructive engagement which, it said, raised new hopes for the independence of Namibia; it also objected to selective references to specific States, as did Israel which pointed out that most if not all countries in the United Nations had dealings of some kind with South Africa. Other States which regretted the inclusion of selective references to particular Member States were: Argentina, Australia, Canada, Chile, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway on behalf of the five Nordic States, Togo, Turkey and Uruguay.

Canada said decisions of IMF and the World Bank had to be based on their mandates as autonomous institutions and not on political considerations, a view shared by the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany which regretted that the text questioned South Africa's right to membership in those bodies and did not give due consideration to their statutes. The Netherlands also felt that such criticism was not acceptable. Ireland took the same position while expressing agreement with the draft's general thrust. New Zealand spoke in similar vein, but also supported provisions for assistance to the people of NSGTs, which it encouraged in the case of Tokelau.

Japan agreed that international organizations should be encouraged to help colonial countries in accordance with their specific functions. Italy said the Assembly should not give the specialized agencies instructions, while France, stressing its support of the universality and independence of the specialized agencies, opposed criticisms of the World Bank and IMF. Norway, speaking for the five Nordic countries, supported increased assistance to peoples struggling for self-determination where, it said, the international agencies had an important role, and regretted that some paragraphs were irrelevant and others overlooked the statutes and universal character of the agencies. Australia also objected to questioning the independence of the agencies and to including paragraphs unrelated to the subject of the draft. Botswana had reservations on the paragraphs referring to IMF, while Chile and the Dominican Republic regretted the criticism levelled at the financial institutions.

France considered the issues raised by Cameroon on constructive engagement out of place in the text, while Colombia regretted their selective character.

Foreign interests impeding implementation of the Declaration

In 1984, the Committee on colonial countries and the General Assembly reaffirmed their concern that the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in the colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa, obstructed the political independence of the indigenous populations.

On 21 August, the Committee adopted a resolution<sup>(17)</sup> on the activities of foreign interests which became the basis of a draft resolution recommended to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, acting on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/42.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa",

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item,

Taking into consideration the relevant chapters of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, and 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the item,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia, adopted at the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence,

Reaffirming that any economic or other activity which impedes the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories is in direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of all Territories under colonial and racist domination are the heritage of the peoples of those Territories and that the exploitation and depletion of those resources by foreign economic interests, in particular in Namibia, in association with the occupying régime of South Africa, constitute a direct violation of the rights of the peoples and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Economic Declaration and other documents of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia, adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 25 May 1984 at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Bangkok, and the conclusions and recommendations of the Seminar on the Activities of Foreign Economic Interests in the Exploitation of Namibia's Natural and Human Resources, organized by the Council at Ljubljana, Yugoslavia, from 16 to 20 April 1984,

Noting with profound concern that the colonial Powers and certain States, through their activities in the colonial Territories, have continued to disregard United Nations decisions relating to the item and that they have failed to implement, in particular, the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 and 38/50 of 7 December 1983, by which the Assembly called upon the colonial Powers and those

Governments that had not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories,

Condemning the intensified activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories and to accumulate and repatriate huge profits to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants, particularly in the case of Namibia, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning the support which the racist minority régime of South Africa continues to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests which are collaborating with the régime in the exploitation of the natural and human resources of the international Territory of Namibia, in the further entrenchment of its illegal racist domination over the Territory and in the strengthening of its system of apartheid,

Strongly condemning the investment of foreign capital in the production of uranium and the collaboration by certain Western States and other States with the racist minority régime of South Africa in the nuclear field which, by providing that régime with nuclear equipment and technology, enable it to develop nuclear and military capabilities and to become a nuclear Power, thereby promoting South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of Namibia, including its marine resources, are the inviolable heritage of the Namibian people and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the illegal colonial administration, in violation of the Charter, of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, is illegal, contributes to the maintenance of the illegal occupation régime and is a grave threat to the integrity and prosperity of an independent Namibia,

Concerned about the conditions in other colonial Territories, including certain Territories in the Caribbean and the Pacific Ocean regions, where foreign economic, financial and other interests continue to deprive the indigenous populations of their rights over the wealth of their countries, and where the inhabitants of those Territories continue to suffer from a loss of land ownership as a result of the failure of the administering Powers concerned to restrict the sale of land to foreigners, despite the repeated appeals of the General Assembly,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of natural and human resources, which impedes the independence of colonial Territories and the elimination of racism, particularly in southern Africa,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

2. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power that deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the perpetuation of colonial domination and racial discrimination in the Territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in the colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa, constitute a major obstacle to political independence and racial equality, as well as to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

4. Condemns the activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial Territories impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

5. Condemns the policies of Governments that continue to support or collaborate with those foreign economic and other interests engaged in exploiting the natural and human resources of the Territories, including, in particular, illegally exploiting Namibia's marine resources, violating the political, economic and social rights and interests of the indigenous peoples and thus obstructing the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of those Territories;

6. Strongly condemns the collusion of the Governments of certain Western States and other States with the racist minority régime of South Africa in the nuclear field and calls upon those and all other Governments to refrain from supplying that régime, directly or indirectly, with installations that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

7. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to monitor closely the situation in the remaining colonial Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interests of the indigenous peoples and their speedy accession to independence and, in that connection, requests the administering Powers concerned to ensure that the peoples of the Territories under their administration are not exploited for political, military and other purposes detrimental to their interests;

8. Strongly condemns those Western States and all other States, as well as the transnational corporations, which continue their investments in, and supply of armaments and oil and nuclear technology to, the racist régime of South Africa, thus buttressing it and aggravating the threat to world peace;

9. Calls upon all States, in particular certain Western States, to take urgent, effective measures to terminate all collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military and nuclear fields and to refrain from entering into other relations with that régime in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and of the Organization of African Unity;

10. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

11. Calls upon all States to terminate, or cause to have terminated, any investments in Namibia or loans to the racist minority régime of South Africa and to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with that régime;

12. Requests all States that have not yet done so to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to the racist minority régime of South Africa, which uses such assistance to repress the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement;

13. Strongly condemns South Africa for its continued exploitation and plundering of the natural resources of Namibia, in complete disregard of the legitimate interests of the Namibian people, for the creation in the Territory of an economic structure dependent essentially upon its mineral resources and for its illegal extension of the territorial sea and its proclamation of an economic zone off the coast of Namibia;

14. Declares that all activities of foreign economic interests in Namibia are illegal under international law and that consequently South Africa and all the foreign economic interests operating in Namibia are liable to pay damages to the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia;

15. Calls upon those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that have not yet done so to take effective measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist régime of South Africa;

16. Reiterates that the exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of Namibia by South African and other foreign economic interests, including the activities of those transnational corporations which are engaged in the exploitation and export of the Territory's uranium ores and other resources, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, are illegal, contribute to the maintenance of the illegal occupation régime and are a grave threat to the integrity and prosperity of an independent Namibia;

17. Condemns the plunder of Namibian uranium and calls upon the Governments of all States, particularly those whose nationals and corporations are involved in the mining or enrichment of, or traffic in, Namibian uranium, to take all appropriate measures in compliance with the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, including the practice of requiring negative certificates of origin, to prohibit and prevent State-owned and other corporations, together with their subsidiaries, from dealing in Namibian uranium and from engaging in uranium prospecting activities in Namibia;

18. Requests all States to take legislative, administrative and other measures, as appropriate, in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981, 36/121 B of 10 December 1981, 37/233 A of 20 December 1982 and 38/36 A of 1 December 1983;

19. Calls once again upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial and trade relations with the racist minority régime of South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into any relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, which may lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that Territory;

20. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolution 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, to ensure, in particular, that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

21. Calls upon the administering Powers to abolish all discriminatory and unjust wage systems and working conditions prevailing in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, a sustained and broad campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and, in respect of Namibia, the support they render to the racist minority régime of South Africa;

23. Appeals to all non-governmental organizations to continue their campaign to mobilize international public opinion for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against the Pretoria régime;

24. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

In explanation of vote, a number of States said they could not accept the assumption that foreign economic interests always had detrimental effects on NSGTs. Ireland said that carefully promoted development was an important factor in preparing Territories for independence. Italy felt that the facts showed the useful role NSGTs could play in the right circumstances. The Federal Republic of Germany said that the draft failed to distinguish between harmful activities and those which might contribute to development. Japan spoke similarly and pointed out that Namibia, which had been under illegal occupation for many years, was a special case. France believed that there were situations where natural resources were exploited without regard for the people, due mainly to the unbalanced relations between developing and industrialized countries. Norway also noted that foreign activities could be essential to industrialization and employment, especially in smaller dependent Territories.

Sweden said that some paragraphs of the text caused the Nordic countries difficulties, specifically those concerning the division of competence between the main United Nations organs. Denmark spoke in like manner. Norway felt that some elements in the draft fell within the competence of the Security Council.

Sweden also said the Nordic countries could not accept the formulation in paragraph 14 on the idea that all foreign economic interests in Namibia were illegal under international law. Canada shared that view, as did the Netherlands which said that, having recognized the competence of the Council for Namibia to issue Decree No. 1 for the protection of Namibia's natural resources and favouring selective sanctions against South Africa, it rejected the termination of all ties and shared the view that all foreign economic interests in NSGTs were not predatory; it also regretted the accusations levelled at administering Powers by countries which did not distinguish between the situation in Namibia and in other Territories.

Chad, Malawi, the Netherlands, Senegal and Turkey objected to the continued selective criticism of Western countries.

Canada said it was time to re-examine assumptions and to focus on such basic issues as the impact of transnational corporations, which it believed could be beneficial for development and technology transfer; it felt the Fourth Committee might become irrelevant and even hinder decolonization if it condemned them categorically, and that ending all economic and diplomatic relations with South Africa was not a means of advancing the cause of Namibia's independence. Austria did not believe the resolution took sufficient account of the concerns of the smaller Territories.

Belgium, expressing support for efforts to end the illegal occupation of Namibia, had reservations on that part of the draft which applied to other NSGTs since it supported the view that foreign investment had contributed to their development. Australia agreed and noted a contradiction with calls made in other resolutions for their further economic development. New Zealand also shared these views and supported upholding the principle that foreign economic interests should not impede the political and economic development or self-determination of NSGTs. Fiji added that such interests could make a useful contribution with regard to technology, skills and job opportunities; it was for the inhabitants of the dependent Territories to decide whether such interests were impeding them. Chile spoke in like vein and noted that sometimes the people of the Territories themselves requested such help, as was the case in Anguilla.

Malawi opposed activities that deliberately blocked Namibian independence and the abolition of apartheid.

During its consideration of the topic, the Fourth Committee heard statements by J. A. González-González, a newspaperman, and Wilma E. Reverón of the Oficina de Información Internacional para la Independencia de Puerto Rico, whose requests for hearings<sup>(18)</sup> had been approved by the Committee.

Military bases in colonial countries

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. Further to a December 1983 request of the General Assembly,<sup>(19)</sup> the Committee on colonial countries continued to consider in 1984 military activities and bases in colonial Territories, approving a decision on the subject on 21 August.<sup>(20)</sup> The Committee recommended a draft decision based on that text to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

General Assembly decision 39/412, as recommended by the Fourth Committee, was adopted by the General Assembly by recorded vote in December.

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 5 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the Special Committee's agenda entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples', and recalling its decision 38/419 of 7 December 1983 on this subject, deplores the fact that the colonial Powers concerned have taken no steps to implement the requests repeatedly addressed to them by the Assembly, most recently in paragraph 10 of its resolution 38/54 of 7 December 1983, to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones.

"2. The General Assembly, in recalling its resolution 1514(XV) and all other relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions relating to military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of military bases and installations in the Territories concerned could constitute a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and that it is the responsibility of the administering Powers concerned in that regard to ensure that the existence of such bases and installations does not hinder the populations of the Territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations. Furthermore, aware of the presence of military bases and installations of the administering Powers concerned and of other countries in those Territories, the Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States and to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration.

"3. The General Assembly deplores the fact that South Africa and the colonial Powers continue to engage in activities and dispositions of a military character and to establish and maintain bases and other military installations in Namibia and other colonial Territories in violation of the purposes and principles of the Charter and of Assembly resolution 1514(XV).

"4. The General Assembly condemns all military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories which deny the peoples concerned their right to self-determination and independence.

"5. The General Assembly notes that, in southern Africa in general and in and around Namibia in particular, a critical situation continues to prevail as a result of South Africa's continued illegal occupation of the Territory. The illegal occupying régime has resorted to desperate measures in order to suppress by force the legitimate aspirations of the people and maintain its control over the Territory. In its escalating war against the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, struggling for freedom and independence, the régime has repeatedly committed acts of armed aggression against the neighbouring independent African countries, particularly Angola, which have caused extensive loss of human lives and destruction of the economic infrastructure.

"6. The General Assembly, noting that in Namibia, the South African Government has continued to expand its network of military bases and carried out a massive buildup of its military forces, condemns any continuing co-operation of certain Western States and other States with South Africa in supplying it with arms and military equipment as well as technology, including technology and equipment in the nuclear field capable of being utilized for military purposes. The Assembly condemns South Africa for its ever increasing and large-scale military buildup in Namibia, its introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians, its forced recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies and its recruitment of mercenaries and other foreign agents in order to carry out its policies of internal repression and its military attacks against independent African States. In this connection, the Assembly calls upon all States to co-operate in taking effective measures to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia. The Assembly is particularly mindful in that regard of the relevant resolutions of the Organization of African Unity, the Political Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, the Final Communiqué of the Summit Meeting of Front-line States, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 29 April 1984, the Final Communiqué of the Regional Symposium on South Africa's Illegal Occupation of Namibia: The Threat to International Peace and Security, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 2 to 5 April 1984, the relevant provisions of the Declaration adopted by the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel, held at Vienna from 11 to 13 July 1983, and the relevant decisions adopted by the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference, held at Casablanca (Morocco) from 16 to 19 January 1984.

"7. The General Assembly, accordingly, demands the immediate cessation of the war of oppression waged by the racist minority régime against the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, as well as the urgent dismantling of all military bases in the Territory. Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of Namibia to achieve their freedom and independence, the Assembly appeals to all States to render sustained and increased moral and political support, as well as financial, military and other material assistance, to the South West Africa People's Organization to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia.

"8. The General Assembly condemns any continued military collaboration and support which certain Western States and other States render to the Government of South Africa and calls upon all States to cease such collaboration and support to that Government, particularly the sale of weapons and other matériel, which increases its capacity to wage wars against neighbouring African States. In particular, the Assembly calls upon all Governments to comply strictly with the provisions of Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided to apply specific sanctions against South Africa. In this connection, the Assembly draws particular attention to the relevant provisions of its resolution 38/36 of 1 December 1983, the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia, and the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 25 May 1984 at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Bangkok.

"9. The General Assembly considers that the acquisition of nuclear weapons capability by the racist régime of South Africa, with its infamous record of violence and aggression, constitutes a further effort on its part to terrorize and intimidate independent States in the region into submission while also posing a threat to all mankind. The continuing assistance rendered to the South African régime by certain Western States and other States in the military and nuclear fields belies their stated opposition to the racist practice of the South African régime and makes them willing partners of its hegemonistic and criminal policies. The Assembly accordingly condemns the continued nuclear co-operation by certain Western States and other States with South Africa. It calls upon the States concerned to end all such co-operation and, in particular, to halt the supply to South Africa of equipment, technology, nuclear materials and related training, which increases its nuclear capability.

"10. The General Assembly, noting that the militarization of Namibia has led to the forced conscription of Namibians, to a greatly intensified flow of refugees and to a tragic disorganization of the family life of the Namibian people, strongly condemns the forcible and wholesale displacement of Namibians from their homes for military and political purposes and the introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians and declares that all measures by the illegal occupation régime to enforce military conscription in Namibia are null and void. In this connection, the Assembly urges all Governments, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of refugees who have been forced by the apartheid régime's oppressive policies in Namibia and South Africa to flee into the neighbouring front-line States.

"11. The General Assembly recalls its resolution ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981, by which it strongly urged States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with South Africa in order totally to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally.

"12. The General Assembly strongly deprecates the establishment and maintenance by colonial Powers and their allies of military bases and other installations in the colonial Territories under their administration which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and which are incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of Assembly resolution 1514(XV).

"13. The General Assembly reiterates its condemnation of all military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which are detrimental to the interests and rights of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the colonial Powers concerned to terminate such activities and eliminate such military bases in compliance with its relevant resolutions and in particular with paragraph 9 of the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980.

"14. The General Assembly deprecates the continued alienation of land in colonial Territories for military installations. While it has been argued that the servicing of such installations creates employment, nevertheless, the large-scale utilization of local economic and manpower resources for this purpose diverts resources which could be more beneficially utilized in promoting the economic development of the Territories concerned and is thus contrary to the interests of their populations.

"15. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, an intensified campaign of publicity with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV).

"16. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee to continue its consideration of the item and to report thereon to the Assembly at its fortieth session."

General Assembly decision 39/412

5 December 1984 Meeting 87 118-10-15 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/39/663) by recorded vote (115-11-15), 26 October (meeting 11); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/39/23), amended by United States (A/C.4/39/L.2); agenda item 104.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 4th Committee 211; plenary 87.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Malawi, Mozambique,* New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

*Later advised the Secretariat that it had intended to vote in favour.

Before action was taken on the draft decision as a whole in the Fourth Committee, the United States submitted amendments to delete from the first sentence of paragraph 8 and from the penultimate sentence of paragraph 9, after "and other States", the phrase "in particular the United States of America and Israel". Both amendments were approved by recorded vote: the first by 62 to 47, with 24 abstentions, and the second by 62 to 47, with 25 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of vote, a number of States expressed concern over voting on a draft dealing with a subject that was not among the items assigned to the Fourth Committee. These States included Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, and Ireland on behalf of the EC members. Australia and New Zealand also shared this view, with Australia saying that there were no military facilities nor plans for any in the Cocos (Keeling) Islands and New Zealand making the same point with regard to Tokelau.

Several States stressed their objections to selective references to specific States, among them Australia, Barbados, Ireland for the EC members, Israel, Jamaica, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Senegal and Zaire. The United States said that acceptance of its amendments marked a turning away from name-calling. Ireland, for the EC members, added that the draft contained misleading language. Israel agreed and pointed out that most if not all of the States represented in the Committee had dealings with South Africa. Malawi agreed and added that singling out two of them would create a credibility gap that would not expedite a satisfactory solution; it opposed military activities designed to intimidate, but was convinced that mere condemnation was not enough. Greece felt the decision was not worded in a balanced way, although it maintained its position on the negative impact that military activities could have on speedy independence.

Although against selective references, Zaire favoured naming those responsible for prolonging the illegal occupation of Namibia and the policy of apartheid and for making South Africa the dominant military power in Africa. Chad was also in favour of condemning the countries which maintained relations with South Africa. Oman said it abstained on the United States amendments because of its friendly relations with that country, but that did not change its position on Israel. The Sudan said there was close military collaboration between Israel and South Africa.

The Dominican Republic felt the references to specific countries were not sufficiently balanced. Turkey supported the principles in the draft, even though it believed paragraphs 2, 4, 12, 13 and 14 could have been more balanced, and despite its reservations about the references to a particular group of States. Uruguay doubted the relevance of the text to the item on the agenda.

Botswana said that, although it supported an arms embargo against South Africa and condemned nuclear collaboration and any military exchanges, it could not support or implement economic sanctions or an oil embargo against South Africa because the destabilization of the front-line States and the obstruction of Namibian independence by South Africa had left Botswana no trade routes which did not involve South Africa.

Viet Nam thought "could" should have been deleted from paragraph 2 since a number of reports of the Committee and the debate demonstrated that military activities constituted an obstacle to decolonization and a threat to international peace and security, and it felt "to continue" in the same paragraph was misleading and that the Assembly should urge the administering Powers concerned to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts.

In further action on 5 December, the Assembly, in resolutions 39/32 on Guam and 39/33 on Bermuda (see Chapter IV of this section), reaffirmed that the administering Powers must ensure that military bases and installations did not hinder the population of the Territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence. On 14 December, in resolution 39/91 (see above), the Assembly called on the colonial Powers to withdraw their military bases and installations from colonial Territories, to refrain from establishing new ones and not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States.

Information dissemination

The Committee on colonial countries considered dissemination of information on decolonization at four meetings between 26 April and 20 August, approving the recommendations put forward by its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance,<sup>(2)</sup> including recommendations concerning Namibia (see Chapter III of this section).

The Sub-Committee gave details of consultations with OAU and representatives of the national liberation movements concerning implementation of a 1980 Assembly resolution<sup>(21)</sup> to which was annexed a plan of action for implementing the 1960 Declaration. Progress made in carrying the plan into effect was also considered, with the Sub-Committee reiterating a recommendation that the Secretariat be requested to prepare a survey of activities taken for submission to the Sub-Committee in 1985. The Sub-Committee recommended intensified efforts by the United Nations Department of Political Affairs, Trusteeship and Decolonization and the Department of Public Information (DPI) to increase and widen dissemination of information on decolonization. Other recommendations included: denouncing attempts by the United States and certain Western countries, as well as South Africa and Israel, and their mass media to misrepresent national liberation movements as terrorists; preparation of studies on atrocities committed by the apartheid régime in occupied Namibia and subversion by South Africa against its neighbours, on Puerto Rico, on the importance of decolonization in promoting world peace, and on military bases in colonial countries; strengthening co-operation with the pool of non-aligned press agencies; providing press releases in both English and French; producing new visual material on the most vital problems of decolonization; providing feedback reports from United Nations information centres; and obtaining wider coverage by the mass media, particularly in Western Europe and the Americas, which received limited coverage. Both Departments were called on to increase their speaking engagements at North American universities on the subject of decolonization, with particular emphasis on Namibia.

The General Assembly, in decision 39/412 (see above), requested the Secretary-General to continue, through DPI, an intensified campaign to inform world public opinion of the facts concerning military activities in colonial Territories which were impeding the implementation of the 1960 Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/92 by recorded vote.
