On 15 March,<sup>(32)</sup> Bangladesh transmitted to the Secretary-General, among other documents of the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, 6-11 December 1983), a resolution strongly condemning the canal project as detrimental to the vital interests of the Palestinian people and Jordan, and calling on States and Governments not to contribute to its execution.

UNEP Council action. Recalling that the Assembly had demanded in December of 1982<sup>(69)</sup> and 1983<sup>(70)</sup> that Israel not construct the canal and cease all actions or plans towards implementing this project, the UNEP Governing Council, on 28 May 1984,<sup>(71)</sup> deplored Israel's non-compliance with the Assembly resolutions and its refusal to receive the United Nations team of experts. The UNEP Executive Director was asked to facilitate the Secretary-General's work in monitoring and assessing all aspects—especially ecological ones—of the adverse effects on Jordan and on the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, arising from the project, as well as in the preparation of the Secretary-General's 1984 report to the Assembly.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a December 1983 Assembly request,<sup>(70)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in August 1984 a report<sup>(72)</sup> on Israel's decision to build a canal. Bringing up to date the available information on the project, it contained the conclusions of a team of United Nations experts who assessed the effects of a canal on agricultural development, mineral production, recreation and tourism. As Israel had considered that no useful purpose would be served by a visit of the experts to Israel and the occupied territories—their mandate being, Israel said, not to study the project but to determine its harmful effects, without addressing themselves to its merits—the team based its report on the information provided by authorities during a visit to Jordan from 30 May to 7 June 1984.

The experts reported an advanced stage of planning for the project, with $4 million (out of $24 million allocated for preparatory work from 1983 to 1985) slated to be used for drilling an exploratory tunnel from the Dead Sea shore to the site of a planned underground power plant. In their view, inundation from the proposed canal could have a significant impact on existing or future agricultural development projects, particularly in the southern and northern regions of the Dead Sea, affecting the lands being developed through the Mujib and Southern Ghors Irrigation Project. Approximately 660 hectares of irrigable land would be inundated and lost to cultivation; other areas would be adversely affected by poor drainage, increased salinity and the possible uprooting of up to 3,000 people. Annual loss of agricultural production was estimated to be from $7.9 million to $15 million, based on the 2,500 hectares of land to be affected upon the completion of the canal in 1993.

The experts stressed that the raising of the Dead Sea would have especially serious consequences for Jordan's only known mineral resources, potassium and phosphate. Inflow of large quantities of Mediterranean sea water would decrease potash production, largely dependent on the density of Dead Sea brine, and require raising of dikes and additional pumping facilities, thus reducing profitability.

A change in the level of the Dead Sea would also affect a number of recreation, tourism and health care facilities; the three main recreation and tourist centres already developed or planned would be totally or mostly inundated. Concerns were also expressed about the potential flooding of health care facilities planned to take advantage of hot springs at various locations along the eastern shore of the Dead Sea.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/101 by recorded vote.

Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/150 of 16 December 1981, 37/122 of 16 December 1982 and 38/85 of 15 December 1983,

Recalling the rules and principles of international law relative to the fundamental rights and duties of States,

Bearing in mind the principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation of land, including the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and reaffirming their applicability to all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that the proposed canal, to be constructed partly through the Gaza Strip, a Palestinian territory occupied in 1967, would violate the principles of international law and affect the interests of the Palestinian people,

Confident that the canal linking the Mediterranean Sea with the Dead Sea, if constructed by Israel, will cause direct, serious and irreparable damage to Jordan's rights and legitimate and vital interests in the economic, agricultural, demographic and ecological fields,

Deeply concerned at the digging activities in the Dead Sea area at the envisaged site of that end of the canal,

Noting with regret the non-compliance by Israel with General Assembly resolution 36/150,

1. Deplores Israel's non-compliance with General Assembly resolutions 37/122 and 38/85 and its refusal to receive the team of experts;

2. Emphasizes that the canal linking the Mediterranean Sea with the Dead Sea, if constructed, is a violation of the rules and principles of international law, especially those relating to the fundamental rights and duties of States and to belligerent occupation of land;

3. Demands once again that Israel not construct this canal and cease forthwith all actions taken and/or digging plans made towards the execution of this project;

4. Calls upon all States, specialized agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations not to assist, directly or indirectly, in the preparation and execution of this project, and strongly urges national, international and multinational corporations to do likewise;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor and assess, on a continuing basis and through a competent expert organ, all aspects—juridical, political, economic, ecological and demographic—of the adverse effects on Jordan and on the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, arising from the implementation of the Israeli decision to construct this canal and to forward the findings of that organ on a regular basis to the General Assembly;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea".

On 11 December, the Fifth Committee Chairman proposed, on the basis of recommendations of ACABQ, that the Secretary-General be authorized to commit up to $54,000 to monitor and assess the canal project; no additional appropriations would be required under the 1984-1985 budget. The Committee approved the proposal by a recorded vote, requested by Israel, of 98 to 2, with 10 abstentions.

The United States said there was no point in passing a resolution on an abstract proposal, since according to some reports the canal was not going to be constructed.

Explaining its position in the Committee, Israel said that the experts' report was one-sided, focusing only on the purported negative effects of the canal project, while ignoring economic and ecological benefits, as well as specific problems concerning the Dead Sea and relevant studies on those problems, particularly one by the University of Jordan which warned against a further drop in the Dead Sea level and recommended a canal as a solution. In Israel's view, the project did not violate international law or the relevant Hague Regulations.

Jordan said that the project was part of Israel's effort to control all underground and surface water resources of the occupied territories in order to deprive Palestinians and force them to abandon their lands.

The Syrian Arab Republic stressed that the proposed canal violated international law, in particular of principles relating to the fundamental duties of States in respect of the occupation of territories by force.

Education

As requested by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General submitted on 18 September 1984 a report<sup>(73)</sup> on implementation of a December 1983 resolution<sup>(74)</sup> demanding that Israel rescind all measures against educational institutions in the occupied territories. Responding to a note verbale of 15 March 1984, Israel, in a reply of 28 August annexed to the report, rejected the accusations it said were levelled against it in that resolution. It pointed out that the school system in the areas in question was staffed by several thousand local Arab teachers and that since 1967 the total number of pupils in governmental, UNRWA and private schools had increased by 90.6 per cent and the number of classes by almost 90 per cent. In addition, Israel had enabled the establishment of a number of institutions of higher learning in Judaea and Samaria, including four universities. While not interfering in academic activity there, when security was endangered by hostile gatherings and exhibitions within the campus, as well as incidents such as stoning of vehicles on highways, authorities were obliged by international law to restore public order and safety; therefore it was unacceptable to interpret Israel's actions as a systematic campaign of repression against and closing of universities.

Information on measures affecting the right to freedom of education was also provided by the Committee on Israeli practices in the occupied territories in its 1984 report.<sup>(16)</sup> Those measures included a three-month closing by the West Bank military government of the Bir Zeit University's old campus in February, and its new campus for one month in April following student clashes with security forces and student demonstrations. In July, the Nablus Civil Administration ordered the closure of Al-Najah University for four months following the seizure of alleged pro-PLO propaganda at a student campus exhibition. The Committee noted that the occupation authorities had continued to subject the tenure of academic staff to the issuance of annual permits. Another serious problem was the continuing practice of mass transfers of teachers and students from one region of the occupied territories to another. The Committee emphasized that measures taken, especially in requiring signed undertakings of a political character, had introduced a political element into the aca-demical context, leading to confrontation between the military authorities and teachers and students.

On 3 February,<sup>(75)</sup> Egypt transmitted a letter of the same date from PLO, informing the Security Council President that, on 31 January, there had been a strike by students of Bir Zeit University protesting what PLO said was an attempt by Zionist settlers to blow up the Al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem, and that, on 2 February, the Israeli occupation authorities had closed down the University's old campus for three months, depriving 1,400 Palestinian students of schooling. The letter placed that move in the context of Israeli policy of direct interference in the academic affairs of educational institutions.

By a letter of 8 August,<sup>(4)</sup> the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights reiterated the Committee's concern about violations of academic freedom in the occupied territories. Annexed to the letter was a report detailing UNESCO's action on behalf of educational and cultural institutions in the territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, under the agenda item on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 39/95 G by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,
Bearing in mind the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply concerned at the continued harassment by Israel, the occupying Power, against educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories,

Recalling its resolution 38/79 G of 15 December 1983,
Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 18 September 1984,

2. Condemns Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculties in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, especially the policy of opening fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Condemns the systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities and other educational and vocational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, restricting and impeding the academic activities of Palestinian universities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and educational programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control and supervision of the military occupation authorities, in clear contravention of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with the provisions of that Convention, rescind all actions and measures against all educational institutions, ensure the freedom of those institutions and refrain forthwith from hindering the effective operation of the universities and other educational institutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible and not later than the beginning of its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

The United States reiterated its position expressed in 1983<sup>(66)</sup> on the parallel 1983 resolution;<sup>(74)</sup> while certain aspects of Israeli policies were open to criticism, it found the text's condemnatory language unacceptable.

Sweden said that because of recent events it voted in favour of the text, despite the somewhat categorical wording of paragraph 2.

Permanent sovereignty over resources

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a December 1983 Assembly resolution,<sup>(65)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in June 1984 a report<sup>(63)</sup> on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories. Annexed to it was a report by a team of experts engaged to collect information on the subject. Unable to carry out on-site inquiries in Israel and the occupied territories, the team based its findings on data gathered by individual members during discussions with local officials and PLO representatives in the Syrian Arab Republic and Jordan in February/March and during visits to a number of United Nations agencies in April/May. Under the circumstances, no new data on land, economy, and social, cultural and political institutions in the territories could be obtained, and the report was therefore limited to an examination of Israeli policies and practices relating to the exploitation of water resources. Lack of access to the relevant sites also precluded making a comparison between the practices of Israel and its obligations under international law.

The issues covered in the report included water policies and their impact; principles of water ownership; water allocation, control and administration systems; special zones or areas; protection of water rights; financial policies of water resources management; and the impact of occupation policies on water. The experts concluded that Israeli policies and practices had undergone a basic revision since 1967, with the major changes relating to water rights held by the water users, the pattern of administrative water management responsibilities and water allocation, and the fact that the system of water management operated by decision of Israeli authorities alone. Given the Israeli policies of preventing increases in the use of water in the West Bank and of supporting fully the water needs of Israeli settlements, it was difficult to see, in the experts' opinion, how the established water management system could operate without discrimination. They also believed that the extent to which the basic public water services in the occupied territories were dependent on Israeli water services would make it very difficult and costly to separate their respective water administrations.

The report also contained a list of Israeli military orders issued with regard to water resources in the territories in the period 1967-1982. In a letter of 15 May transmitting the list, Jordan stated that the orders were in contravention of the relevant principles of international law and had the aim of strangulating Arab farmers' activities in the West Bank and the other occupied Arab territories.

The negative impact of Israeli policies on the territories' resources, especially water, was underscored by the Committee on Palestinian rights, which noted in its 1984 report<sup>(36)</sup> the imposition of restrictive measures on water usage by the Palestinians, along with preferential treatment by the occupying authorities in supplying water to the Israeli settlers.

Communications. By a letter of 8 June 1984,<sup>(76)</sup> Israel transmitted a report entitled "Judaea-Samaria and the Gaza District—A sixteen-year survey", constituting a shortened version of a government report on the economic and social developments in those areas during 1967 to 1983. The content of the report was refuted by Jordan in a letter of 6 July;<sup>(77)</sup> Jordan's arguments were in turn rebutted by Israel on 20 July.<sup>(78)</sup>

By a letter dated 10 October,<sup>(62)</sup> Israel transmitted its comments on the Secretary-General's June report<sup>(63)</sup> on permanent sovereignty over national resources (see above), as well as his May report<sup>(60)</sup> on living conditions of the Palestinians in the occupied territories (see p. 327). The June report contained, in Israel's view, inaccuracies and misrepresentations. Israel's letter went on to summarize the principles guiding Israeli water resources administration in the territories and challenged statements in the report on, inter alia: the extension of Israeli legislation concerning water ownership, the availability of water, water transfers to Israel, integration of local water systems with Israeli systems and discrimination in water rates.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1984/181.

Permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

At its 49th plenary meeting, on 26 July 1984, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, prepared in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 38/144 of 19 December 1983, and decided to transmit it to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session for consideration.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/181

Palestine refugees

UN Agency for Palestine refugees

In 1984, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East continued to render assistance to Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Its operations were administered from its headquarters at Vienna and Amman, Jordan, five field offices and liaison offices in New York and Cairo, Egypt. Providing both emergency relief measures and regular support operations, the Agency maintained its own schools, training establishments, clinics and health centres, and procured and distributed food rations to needy refugees.

UNRWA activities and various aspects of the Palestine refugee problem were addressed by the General Assembly, which in December adopted 11 resolutions on: assistance to Palestine refugees (39/99 A); the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA (39/99 B); assistance to displaced persons (39/99 C); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (39/99 D); Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip (39/99 E); ration distribution to Palestine refugees (39/99 F); refugees displaced since 1967 (39/99 G); revenues from refugee properties (39/99 H); refugee protection (39/99 I); Palestine refugees in the West Bank (39/99 J); and a proposed University of Jerusalem for Palestine refugees (39/99 K).

UNRWA activities

Emergency operations launched in the aftermath of the June 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon<sup>(1)</sup> continued to dominate UNRWA's relief efforts for most of 1984. Again, UNRWA was providing emergency assistance to large numbers of refugees affected by the fighting that persisted almost without interruption throughout Lebanon, as well as by the Israeli occupation of the south. Emergency food rations, distributed to all displaced refugees through the winter, were phased out in March, except for the issues to approximately 24,000 destitute. The Agency proceeded with repairing and reconstructing its installations, despite interference from continuing clashes and turmoil.

UNRWA also maintained its regular programme, with particular emphasis on education (see p. 340).

Another area receiving high priority was health services provided by the Agency under the professional guidance of WHO to 1.7 million eligible Palestine refugees, the main focus being on preventive care and environmental sanitation in the refugee camps. Out-patient services were delivered through UNRWA's 98 health units and by special arrangement at one clinic run by a voluntary agency and 22 run by Governments. The Agency also operated 27 dental clinics, three central health laboratories and 24 clinical laboratories.

Expenditure on health and relief services in 1984 totalled almost $44 million and $23 million, respectively.

Report of the Commissioner-General. Describing UNRWA's activities over the period 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commissioner-General noted that the ongoing intra-Palestinian and intra-factional conflict in Lebanon had forced the Agency to change planned priorities for relief and reconstruction operations. UNRWA encountered the same difficulties in carrying out its emergency operations as in the previous period (July 1982-June 1983), but the situation was exacerbated by the duration of the crisis. The Commissioner-General reported that in January 1984 in Lebanon, an Israeli air raid on Baalbek had killed 15 refugees and wounded 125, destroyed the accommodations of seven refugee families and 52 individual shelters, and damaged an additional 66 shelters as well as Agency installations in the Wavell camp. After heavy fighting broke out in the Beirut area in February, the Lebanon Field Office premises had to be closed and non-essential international staff briefly evacuated. Disturbed by the situation, the Commissioner-General alerted Lebanon and Israel and other Governments considered to be influential, and drew public attention to the alarming state of affairs. Nevertheless, towards the end of the reporting period there continued to be serious threats to the security of Palestine refugees in the south. In June and early July 1984, the Shi'ite Amal militia several times attacked Shatila and Burj el-Barajneh camps in the Beirut area. Moreover, in July and August, factional fighting in the Tripoli area disrupted UNRWA operations in northern Lebanon (see also p. 343). The report noted that the discontinuation of the emergency rations had drawn protests from the refugees and prompted their refusal, in the Tyre area, to accept for a time any Agency services.

With regard to the financial situation, the Commissioner-General expressed grave concern about 1985 and the years beyond and appealed to the international community to ensure that UNRWA was supplied with the resources it needed to carry out the will of the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/99 A by recorded vote.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/83 A of 15 December 1983 and all previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East should be relocated to its former site within its area of operations as soon as practicable;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 September 1985;

5. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

6. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

7. Calls upon all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

Approved by SPC (A/39/715) by recorded vote (109-0-1), 12 November (meeting 29); draft by United States (A/SPC/39/L.7); agenda item 75.

Against: None.Abstaining: Israel.

Speaking before the Assembly vote on the 11 draft resolutions on UNRWA, Israel said that they all acquiesced in the artificial perpetuation of the refugee problem and lacked balance, fairness and historical accuracy. The resolution on assistance to refugees, for example, while regretting the non-implementation of paragraph 11 of Assembly resolution 194(III) of 1948<sup>(3)</sup> on the partition of Palestine, failed to manifest regret for the Arab rejection of all offers of negotiation and attempts to implement constructive United Nations projects. Israel was repeatedly censured in the 11 texts, but there was no condemnation of the Arab States.

In the Committee, Ireland, speaking on behalf of the 10 EC members, said they fully supported the resolution and believed that all Member States should contribute to the financing of UNRWA.

UNRWA financing and administration*Financing

Total income received by UNRWA for all funds in cash and in kind in 1984 was $181.2 million. This included a one-time receipt of $8.9 million transferred to the Agency's vocational and teacher-training programme after the closure of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund. Total expenditure was $191.3 million. The General Fund received $162.1 million of unrestricted income in cash and in kind; in addition, $8.4 million in contributions for special projects was received during 1984 prior to the adoption of full fund accounting and was credited to the General Fund. Regular programme expenditures totalled $177.5 million, with an additional $3.1 million allocated to special projects. During 1984, UNRWA had 15 projects funded by special contributions.

Working Group on financing UNRWA. On 12 October 1984, the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, established in 1970,<sup>(4)</sup> submitted a report<sup>(5)</sup> on its activities and on UNRWA's financial situation in 1984. On 3 October, the Commissioner-General had provided the Working Group with up-to-date information on the financial situation.

While pleased that no major reductions in UNRWA services were expected before the end of 1984, the Group expressed concern over the slow growth of income and the apparent trend towards lower contributions. It also noted that it would not be possible to avoid a financial crisis in 1985 if the existing trends in expenditure and income continued. Indicating that an estimated $225.3 million of net cash would be required in 1985 from voluntary contributions from Governments and intergovernmental agencies, the Group noted the difficulties in meeting that requirement as compared with 1984, when an $8.9 million one-time contribution was available and $17 million was drawn from the cash-balance reserve, which was expected to contain only $5 million at the beginning of 1985. The Group agreed that international financial support of UNRWA must be increased.

The Group noted that the willingness of some of the major contributors to convert their contributions in kind into cash had been a decisive factor in maintaining the educational programme at its current level, and expressed hope that they would continue to assist the Agency in that respect. Describing UNRWA's humanitarian services as indispensable, the Group urged non-contributing Governments to contribute, and those that had contributed before to strive for increasingly generous contributions and to pay as early as possible in the calendar year.

JIU recommendations. In September 1984,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report on the implementation of recommendations made in several reports by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), among them a report of August 1983<sup>(7)</sup> on UNRWA's programme and operations, management problems and institutional questions. He reported that, out of 15 JIU recommendations, those implemented dealt with encouraging refugee self-help projects, solicitation of books for UNRWA school libraries and re-orientation of the role of UNESCO to strengthen high priority education programmes; the recommendation on United Nations liability for separation benefits was addressed to the Assembly; others had been implemented in part or were in the process of implementation (for further details, see pp. 339, 340, and 343).

tary Contributions to UNRWA met at United Nations Headquarters on 19 November 1984. In his closing statement,<sup>(8)</sup> the Commissioner-General stressed that the contributions pledged, although most encouraging, would not assure the Agency sufficient income in 1985, since budget expenditures had risen to an estimated $258 million. He voiced deep concern about the financial prospects for 1985.

Accounts for 1983

For the year ended 31 December 1983, expenditure and commitments of UNRWA amounted to $210,918,091 under its General Fund.<sup>(9)</sup> The Board of Auditors noted that requests for carry-over of funds submitted to headquarters by the field offices did not provide sufficient information for a proper review by the Budget Division. Several provisions of the Manual of Supply Procedures on procurement of supplies and equipment had not been sufficiently adhered to, such as specifications of items for purchase, bidding procedures, the role of the Committee on Contracts and the timing of procurement, and the Board's 1982 recommendations on the establishment of a list of slow-moving stocks had not been implemented. The Board also commented on other budgetary and administrative matters, including several problems related to temporary assistance guidelines, travel authorizations and reimbursement claims, financial accounting of revenue-producing activities (greeting cards and calendars), assignment of internal auditors to field operations and reporting of ex gratia payments.

In a September report<sup>(10)</sup> on financial reports and audited financial statements and reports of the Board of Auditors, ACABQ shared the Board's concern and urged that the administration pay closer attention to all aspects of the procurement process, both to ensure full compliance with the applicable rules and to achieve optimum use of available resources.

The Assembly, by resolution 39/66, accepted the audited financial statements of UNRWA and requested remedial action as required by the Board's comments and observations.

Personnel questions

Reporting on the status of implementation of the 1983 JIU recommendations,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General noted that the recommendation on measures to be taken to improve the geographical distribution and academic qualifications and Arabic knowledge of international professional UNRWA staff had been implemented, subject to the Commissioner-General's reservation of November 1983 on academic qualification requirements.<sup>(11)</sup> The Secretary-General also reported that work was under way to define occupational groups, redefine job classifications, and develop training programmes in an effort to implement a recommendation on the area staff formulating a comprehensive career planning system. A review of UNRWA's computerized personnel record system was in progress, with a view to modernization.

Staff security

Report of the Commissioner-General. In his report for the year ended 30 June 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commissioner-General stated that the number of staff members arrested and detained by the local authorities, though smaller than in the previous year, was none the less a cause for concern, with a total of 40 persons arrested without charge, though later released. As of 30 June, three staff members were in detention, two of whom had been removed from Lebanon to Israel. On 29 March, the Syrian Arab Republic, without giving any reason, had required the Director of UNRWA Affairs in that country to leave within 48 hours. The Commissioner-General had protested that action and the Secretary-General had conveyed his deep concern and hope that the matter would receive serious consideration. The Agency continued to face problems in other areas: in Jordan, staff were called upon to perform military service; in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, Israeli-imposed restrictions on duty travel were not lifted; interrogation of staff by Israeli authorities persisted in the Gaza Strip; and in Lebanon UNRWA staff faced repeated threats to their lives.

Organizational structure

Reporting on the implementation of the 1983 JIU recommendations,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that the recommendation on the reorganization of the administrative structures of UNRWA had been implemented, subject to the Commissioner-General's reservation of November 1983 concerning integration of the Management and Budget Divisions.<sup>(12)</sup> With regard to the recommended transfer of some UNRWA headquarters functions from Vienna back to the region of operations, the Secretary-General reported that, although the situation was kept under review, no change in the location of headquarters units at Vienna had so far proved possible.

The Assembly, in resolution 39/99 A, reiterated its request that UNRWA headquarters be relocated to its former site within its area of operations as soon as practicable.

Other aspects

Assistance to displaced persons

In 1984, the General Assembly again endorsed UNRWA efforts to provide humanitarian assistance, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities in the Middle East.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/99 C without vote.

Assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/83 C of 15 December 1983 and all previous resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984,

Concerned about the continued human suffering resulting from the hostilities in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 38/83 C and all previous resolutions on the question;

2. Endorses, bearing in mind the objectives of those resolutions, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who are at present displaced and in a serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

3. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Education and training services

Schools and teacher-training centres

In 1984, UNRWA spent $121 million on education and training, which accounted for 63 per cent of its total expenditure on regular programmes.<sup>(13)</sup>

The general education programme strengthened its position as the largest single Agency activity. In October 1984, a total of 345,844 pupils were enrolled in the 640 Agency elementary and preparatory schools in all the five Field Office areas, served by 10,163 teachers. An additional 100,896 refugee pupils were known to be enrolled in government and private elementary and secondary schools, and about 52,400 non-eligible children were in Agency schools. Construction of five new school buildings in 1983/84 could not solve the classroom-deficit problem, as a result of which 489 schools (75 per cent of the total) were involved in double-shifting.

In 1983/84, 3,720 training places were available to Palestine refugees in vocational and technical courses at UNRWA training centres, and 43 refugees were trained in private institutions. Having taken part in the Agency's teacher-training programme, 201 trainees graduated in October from its basic two-year, specialized two-year preparatory, and professional one-year courses and were recognized by UNRWA as professionally qualified teachers. Pre-service teacher training continued to be provided at three Agency centres, with 663 teacher trainees graduating at the end of the 1983/84 training year.

Reporting on implementation of JIU's 1983 recommendations,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General said efforts were continuing to replace unsatisfactory rented schools, financed through a special capital provision. A study of inadequate heating of classrooms was in progress.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

As requested by the General Assembly in December 1983,<sup>(14)</sup> the Secretary-General reported in September 1984 on the latest efforts to establish a university for Palestine refugees at Jerusalem.<sup>(15)</sup> He had appointed a consultant to assist him in completing a technical feasibility study requested by the Assembly in 1981,<sup>(16)</sup> a task requiring the consultant to visit all the areas and campuses concerned and to meet with the competent authorities. In an exchange of correspondence with Israel, it had been stressed that it would be difficult for the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures for establishing the university without Israel's co-operation. Israel had replied that no action could be taken on the matter, since the points it had raised in 1981 had so far not been clarified; these touched on the eligibility of students for admission, the earmarking of significant amounts of limited United Nations resources for a specific group of refugees, the compatibility of such a separate institution with policies aimed at rehabilitating refugees through their integration into the general population, and how such a university could operate in the light of the principles of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as well as within the framework of local legislation relating to higher education. In a subsequent letter to Israel, it had been suggested that those points might best be considered during the consultant's visit. Israel had replied that, in the absence of the clarifications it had requested, its position remained unchanged. In the absence of a positive response from Israel, the Secretary-General considered that the technical feasibility study could not be completed.

Assessing the feasibility of creating a voluntary fund for an advanced fellowship programme, endorsed by the Assembly in 1982,<sup>(17)</sup> the Secretary-General concluded that replies received in response to his inquiry to United Nations Member and non-member States, as well as to Arab regional development banks and intergovernmental organizations, did not provide a sufficient basis for creating a trust fund.

The Secretary-General also noted that the Council of the United Nations University, at its July 1984 session,<sup>(18)</sup> had reiterated its support for the establishment of a university and agreed to keep itself informed about the prospects of its offer of assistance to conduct a feasibility study of the project.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/99 K by recorded vote.

University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Having also examined the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984,

1. Commends the constructive efforts made by the Secretary-General, the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the Council of the United Nations University and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which worked diligently towards the implementation of General Assembly resolution 38/83 D and other relevant resolutions;

2. Further commends the close co-operation of the competent educational authorities concerned;

3. Emphasizes the need for strengthening the educational system in the Arab territories occupied since 5 June 1967, including Jerusalem, and specifically the need for the establishment of the proposed university;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary measures for establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds", in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, giving due consideration to the recommendations consistent with the provisions of that resolution;

5. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to co-operate in the implementation of the present resolution and to remove the hindrances which it has put in the way of establishing the University of Jerusalem;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Israel, United States.

On 4 December, the Fifth Committee decided that, on the basis of ACABQ's recommendations, no additional appropriations would be required under the 1984-1985 budget to cover the remaining $22,700 estimated cost of consultant services in connection with the proposed university. The Committee approved the proposal by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 92 to 2, with 6 abstentions.

Israel described the call for a university as a move to institutionalize the refugee problem through the proliferation of new bodies, and characterized it as an absurdity in educational terms and as showing disregard for sound administration and restraint in the use of international funding.

Scholarships

During the academic year 1983/84, UNRWA<sup>(2)</sup> awarded 346 scholarships to Palestine refugees to study at Arab universities. The scholarships, partly funded from special contributions, were awarded for one year but were renewable subject to the end-of-year examinations.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a report submitted to the General Assembly in August 1984<sup>(19)</sup> in accordance with a December 1983 request,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General presented information on responses by Member States and United Nations agencies to the Assembly's numerous appeals for special allocations for grants and scholarships to Palestine refugees. He reported that one graduate from the Gaza Strip and one from the West Bank had begun courses in the Federal Republic of Germany, while negotiations continued on other scholarships offered by that country in 1983. The World Intellectual Property Organization had invited the UNRWA Commissioner-General to propose scholarship candidates for 1984 and had selected two of them by the date of the report. The Universal Postal Union had reiterated its willingness to continue considering applications for scholarships in the postal field. UNESCO had granted five fellowships to Palestine refugee education staff in UNRWA for special courses of training overseas, and FAO had reported on two programmes of training assistance and ILO on its preparation of projects for implementation by UNDP. UNRWA had declared its readiness to act as the recipient and trustee of special allocations and scholarships for Palestine refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/99 D by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 212(III) of 19 November 1948 on assistance to Palestine refugees,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers of grants and scholarships for higher education for Palestine refugees and on the scope of the implementation of resolution 38/83 D,

Having also examined the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984, dealing with this subject,

4. Invites the relevant specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue, within their respective spheres of competence, to extend assistance for higher education to Palestine refugee students;

5. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and the United Nations University to contribute generously to the Palestinian universities in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including, in due course, the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees;

6. Also appeals to all States, specialized agencies and other international bodies to contribute towards the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees;

7. Requests the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to act as the recipient and trustee for such special allocations and scholarships and to award them to qualified Palestine refugee candidates;

Food aid

Reporting on the status of implementation of JIU's 1983 recommendations,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General observed that, to the extent resources permitted, UNRWA had implemented the suggested approaches to the relief programme; these had included merging special hardship assistance and basic ration distribution into one aid programme to refugees in need, and establishing a priority assistance category; the gradual introduction of food coupons was to replace distribution in kind, the annual ceiling on ration-eligible refugees should be abolished, the shelter component of the relief programme should receive more of the available resources, and health and education field officers should maintain UNRWA premises.

Report of the Commissioner-General. In his report for the year ended 30 June 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commissioner-General stated that, given the efforts to implement the Assembly's March 1982 decision<sup>(21)</sup> on Agency financing and the lack of sufficient resources, UNRWA could not comply with the Assembly's December 1983 request<sup>(22)</sup> to resume the interrupted general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields. The Agency nevertheless continued to provide emergency food aid to some 158,750 registered and non-registered Palestine refugees in Lebanon and until March 1984 to registered refugees from Lebanon who were displaced in the Syrian Arab Republic. In addition, some 24,000 refugees in Lebanon were treated as hardship cases, receiving food aid throughout the reporting period. Food rations continued to be distributed to hardship cases, which included widows, orphans, the aged, the physically and mentally handicapped and the chronically ill. The Commissioner-General noted that UNRWA's ability to assist the destitute largely depended on the availability of additional resources. By the end of June, the programme of assistance to hardship cases was benefiting 97,213 destitute persons Agency-wide.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/99 F by recorded vote.

Resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 F of 16 December 1981, 37/120 F of 16 December 1982, 38/83 F of 15 December 1983 and all previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 302(IV) of 8 December 1949,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine

Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984,

Deeply concerned at the interruption by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, owing to financial difficulties, of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields,

1. Regrets that resolutions 37/120 F and 38/83 F have not been implemented;

2. Calls once again upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible and to offer the necessary resources to meet the needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the interruption by the Agency of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

3. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to resume on a continuing basis the interrupted general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Sweden said that without sufficient financial resources, resuming the general ration distribution would endanger UNRWA's vital educational, health and relief activities; the categorical way in which the text was formulated did not give the Commissioner-General any leeway to exercise discretion and maintain the necessary priorities.

Refugee protection

Describing Palestine refugees in Lebanon as the victims, and in many instances specific targets, of violence, the UNRWA Commissioner-General expressed, in his report for the year ended 30 June 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> especially grave concern about their safety in the south of the country. The Lebanon Field Office having reported 25 violent deaths, 13 kidnappings and numerous other serious incidents, the Commissioner-General had repeatedly drawn attention to the lack of security for Palestinians in the south and made representations to the occupying Power, pointing out that it had the responsibility for safeguarding the welfare of the civilian population. In response to an appeal to Israel made by the Commissioner-General on 15 February to stem the ongoing campaign of harassment and violence, Israel had given assurances that the Israel Defence Forces were doing everything possible to defend refugees in the area. In May, however, further serious incidents occurred in Ein El-Helweh camp, resulting in injury to several refugees and damage to a number of shelters. The deteriorating situation in the camp was the subject of a Security Council meeting on 21 May (see p. 296), and a strong protest had been addressed to Israel by UNRWA on 6 June.<sup>(23)</sup>

Report of the Secretary-General. Protection of Palestine refugees was the subject of a 2 October 1984 report<sup>(23)</sup> prepared by the Secretary-General in response to a December 1983 General Assembly resolution<sup>(24)</sup> calling on Israel to take a number of measures to improve the security and safety of Palestine refugees in the occupied territories. The Secretary-General reported that, on 22 March 1984, he had brought the resolution to Israel's attention, requesting information on its implementation.

Israel had responded on 29 June that its March 1983 description of the situation in southern Lebanon<sup>(25)</sup> remained valid; it drew attention to the Commissioner-General's reference at a press conference on 18 March 1984 to Israeli intervention, on at least one occasion, to prevent the massacre of Palestinian Arabs in Lebanon. The Secretary-General observed that the Commissioner-General's reference had been to an approach he had made to Israeli authorities in February 1983, following which attacks on Palestine refugees in southern Lebanon had decreased. The Secretary-General also pointed out that there was a continuing concern about maintaining security after Israeli withdrawal, recalling in this connection his 9 April 1984 report<sup>(26)</sup> to the Security Council on UNIFIL, in which he had suggested the immediate deployment of UNIFIL elements in areas vacated by Israeli forces (see p. 298).

The Secretary-General also outlined UNRWA activities in the West Bank (see p. 349) and the Gaza Strip (see p. 347) and the Agency's efforts to restore services to Palestine refugees in Lebanon (see p. 335).

Against: Israel, United States.

The Special Political Committee adopted paragraph 2 of the draft that became resolution 39/99 I by a recorded vote of 98 to 2, with 23 abstentions. In the Assembly, the sponsors orally modified the paragraph, changing the position of "the occupying Power" from holding "Israel, the occupying Power," to follow the call on Israel "to fulfil its obligations as the occupying Power".

Israel said that the incidents referred to in the sixth preambular paragraph had not occurred in southern Lebanon; it considered that the text was an instrument of political warfare, which ignored Syrian occupation and interference by the Syrian Arab Republic in the internal affairs of Lebanon as the root of the problem, and therefore should be rejected.

While stressing the need to protect effectively all Palestine refugees, the EC member States, on whose behalf Ireland spoke, had doubts about some of the wording, for example in paragraph 2. In relation to paragraph 1, they stressed the importance of Israel's fundamental responsibility as the occupying Power for the protection of the civilian population. Sweden and Finland said their vote demonstrated their deep concern for the security and rights of the Palestine refugees, but also felt that the Secretary-General should not be given responsibility for the safety of refugees, a task which, in Sweden's view, rested with the occupying Power. Uruguay held a similar view. Finland also had doubts about the effectiveness of paragraphs 1 and 8, while Sweden wished that paragraph 2 was less ambiguous about the legal obligation of the occupying Power to ensure the refugees' security.

Ecuador believed that paragraph 2 was not well balanced, and stressed that the principles of self-determination and non-interference in the internal affairs of States should be observed without any discrimination. New Zealand explained its vote as an expression of concern for the welfare of the Palestine refugees and support for UNRWA. However, it had reservations about paragraph 1, which did not take into account the Secretary-General's stated inability to protect the refugees, and felt that paragraph 5 should have called on Israel to allow the full resumption of the services mentioned.

Property rights

Report of the Secretary-General. On 6 September 1984, the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(27)</sup> on revenues derived from Palestine refugee properties, as the Assembly had requested in December 1983.<sup>(28)</sup> He reported that on 29 February and 22 March 1984, respectively, he had brought the Assembly's 1983 resolutions on UNRWA<sup>(29)</sup> to the attention of the Chairman of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine and to Israel's attention, requesting the latter to communicate to him information on their implementation. On 23 March and 9 July, he had also requested information from States on their implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions, including the call to Governments concerned, especially Israel, to assist him in implementing the resolution on revenues from Palestine refugee properties.

In a reply of 29 June, Israel had stated that its position regarding revenues from such properties had been set out fully in November 1981 before the Special Political Committee.<sup>(30)</sup> The Secretary-General said there were no replies from any other State; however, in an October 1984 addendum to his report, he informed the Assembly that he had received a reply from Cyprus dated 21 September, reiterating its support to Palestinian Arab refugees, who were entitled to property rights and to the income deriving from that property.

Report of the Conciliation Commission. In its report covering the period from 1 October 1983 to 30 September 1984,<sup>(31)</sup> the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine stated that the complex situation which had limited its possibilities of action with regard to compensation for Palestine refugee properties had remained essentially unchanged. In response to a formal request from PLO for permission to obtain a copy of the microfilm on property and land in Palestine in the Commission's custody, the relevant documents had been transmitted to the Office of the Permanent Observer of PLO to the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/99 H by recorded vote.

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of international law uphold the principle that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her private property,

Considering that the Palestine Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived from their property, in conformity with the principles of justice and equity,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestinian Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in its twenty-second progress report, of 11 May 1964, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom, Zaire.

In Israel's opinion, the text ran counter to the basic tenets of international law, since property rights and regulations within the borders of a sovereign State were exclusively subject to domestic law and United Nations interference with that was unthinkable. Ireland (on behalf of the 10 EC members), Sweden and the United States considered that the resolution concerned an issue which should be addressed in negotiations on a peace settlement.

Proposed repatriation

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(32)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted on 21 August 1984 a report<sup>(33)</sup> on population and refugees displaced since 1967. In response to his request of 22 March for information on Israeli steps to facilitate the return of displaced inhabitants, Israel had stated on 29 June that its position had been set out in successive annual replies, most recently on 26 August 1983.<sup>(34)</sup> It added that, since the submission of that reply and until the end of January 1984, another 2,735 persons had returned to Judaea and Samaria, bringing the total number of returnees since 1967 to 63,790.

The Secretary-General also reported that he had obtained information from the UNRWA Commissioner-General on the return of refugees registered with the Agency; those data were based on requests by returning registered refugees for transfer of their entitlements for services to the areas to which they had returned. Between 1 July 1983 and 30 June 1984, 230 refugees registered with UNRWA had returned to the West Bank and 125 to the Gaza Strip. This had brought the estimated total number of known displaced registered refugees who had returned to the occupied territories since June 1967 to 10,530.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/99 G by recorded vote.

Population and refugees displaced since 1967

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984, and the report of the Secretary-General of 21 August 1984,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967 and declares once more that any attempt to restrict, or to attach conditions to, the free exercise of the right of return by any displaced person is inconsistent with that inalienable right and inadmissible;

2. Considers any and all agreements embodying any restriction on or condition for the return of the displaced inhabitants as null and void;

3. Strongly deplors the continued refusal of the Israeli authorities to take steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants;

Sweden said that, while it upheld the right of displaced Palestinians to return to their homes, the formulation of the text seemed to rule out negotiations on the modalities of repatriation.

In another resolution of the same date—39/99 A on assistance to Palestine refugees—the Assembly noted with regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees had not been effected and that no substantial progress had been made in the reintegration of refugees by repatriation or resettlement. The Assembly requested the United Nations Conciliation Commission to exert continued efforts towards that goal and to report to it not later than 1 September 1985.

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1984,<sup>(35)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report on Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip, in accordance with a December 1983 General Assembly resolution<sup>(36)</sup> asking for a report on Israeli measures concerning resettlement of the refugees and on the destruction of their shelters. He reported that, on 22 March 1984, he had requested information from Israel relevant to that resolution. On 29 June, Israel had replied that its position had been set out in successive annual replies, the latest dated 26 August 1983.<sup>(37)</sup> As to the situation since then, Israel added that it had provided housing for more than 8,000 families within the refugee voluntary rehabilitation programme, with another 1,500 families to be housed under the same programme in 1984.

The Secretary-General also stated that, according to the UNRWA Commissioner-General's reports, no demolition of refugee shelters on punitive grounds had taken place during the year under review, but that the families affected by such measures in 1983<sup>(37)</sup> had not yet been provided with alternative shelters. On the question of rehousing refugees affected by demolitions in 1971,<sup>(38)</sup> the Agency was able to review, following its discussions with Israel, the status of the 88 families categorized previously as hardship cases, 41 of whom were still in hardship or inadequately housed. Regarding demolition in 1983 of refugee shelters that Israel considered built without proper authority on State land outside camp boundaries,<sup>(37)</sup> the Commissioner-General had received information that demolition in the Rafah camp had been stopped after the death of a child in an accident, and that an injunction by the High Court of Israel early in 1984 had stopped an Israeli-ordered removal of shelters in the Jabalia camp. In July, however, 10 shelter rooms belonging to 15 refugee families were demolished. The 35 families from the Beach camp shelters demolished in 1983 had not been rehoused.

In related developments, refugee shelters in the Khan Yunis camp had been surveyed by the Israeli authorities in January; in February/March, special forms were issued by the Israeli authorities to all Jabalia camp inhabitants to be filled out with their family particulars; and Israel informed UNRWA about its plans to construct a security road along the beach at Deir El Balah, which could entail demolition of some 400 shelter rooms.

According to information available to the Commissioner-General, 748 refugee families (4,594 persons) had moved to 550 plots of land in Israeli-sponsored housing projects during the reporting period. As a pre-condition, this had required the demolition of 579 Agency-built shelter rooms, 64 rooms built with Agency assistance and 420 rooms built without such assistance. By the reporting date, Israel had allocated 3,364 plots of land in the Gaza Strip for housing. Houses built by refugees on 1,873 plots and by non-refugees on 100 plots were occupied by 2,480 refugee families and 100 non-refugee families, comprising 15,241 refugees and 666 non-refugees; 384 plots were under construction and 1,007 stood vacant. In addition, 2,940 families (17,665 persons) and 14 non-refugee families (65 persons) had moved into completed houses. Construction in three new housing projects in Beit Lahiya and Nazleh (near Jabalia camp) and Tel-el-Sultan (near Rafah camp) was still under way.

Since the re-establishment of the border between Egypt and the Gaza Strip in 1982, 791 shelter rooms affecting 266 refugee families (1,669 persons) and 86 shelter rooms affecting 28 non-refugee families (203 persons) had been demolished at the instance of Israeli authorities to make way for a security zone and border fence. Compensation had been paid to the families concerned. However, 80 families in Rafah had obtained an injunction against the demolitions from the High Court of Israel.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/99 E by recorded vote.

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 2792 C (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 E of 23 November 1976, 32/90 C of 13 December 1977, 33/112 E of 18 December 1978, 34/52 F of 23 November 1979, 35/13 F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 A of 16 December 1981, 37/120 E of 16 December 1982 and 38/83 E of 15 December 1983,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984, and the report of the Secretary-General of 4 September 1984,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948 and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip away from the homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

Alarmed by the reports received from the Commissioner-General that the Israeli occupying authorities, in contravention of Israel's obligation under international law, persist in their policy of demolishing shelters occupied by refugee families,

1. Reiterates its demand that Israel desist from the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and from the destruction of their shelters;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its fortieth session, on Israel's compliance with paragraph 1 above.

Against: Israel, United States.

The United States said it opposed unrealistic and one-sided resolutions which singled out Israel while ignoring action taken against UNRWA and the refugees by other Governments and parties in the area. In its view, the text would oppose any effort by Israel to improve the fate of certain refugees. Ireland, expressing support for the text on behalf of the 10 EC member States, said that nothing should interfere with the refugees' freedom to choose where they wished to live.

Palestine refugees in the West Bank

Report of the Commissioner-General. In his report on UNRWA activities for the year ended 30 June 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commissioner-General stated that hardship had been caused to the refugee population in the West Bank, particularly the aged and the very young, by curfews imposed by the Israeli authorities and by the barricading of camp entrances. Entrances to the Arroub, Dheisheh and Kalandia camps were blocked with bricks and cement and some of the paths to the main streets in Jalazone and Askar camps were also blocked, leading to stone-throwing incidents. The costs of the barricades at Askar camp were imposed on the refugee families living nearby. Rooms in eight shelters in Aida and Jalazone camps and part of a shelter unit in the Balata camp were sealed as punitive measures against families for hostile acts said to have been committed by their members.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 8 August 1984, the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(39)</sup> on the resettlement of Palestine refugees in the West Bank and destruction of their camps, as requested in a December 1983 resolution,<sup>(40)</sup> by which the Assembly had called on Israel to abandon any such plans or actions. He reported that, in response to his request for all relevant information, Israel had stated on 29 June that its position on the matter had been set out in December 1983 before the General Assembly,<sup>(41)</sup> adding, however, that the proposal in question was still being looked into by the Israeli Government. The Secretary-General also pointed out that UNRWA, while not opposing measures voluntarily accepted by refugees to improve their living conditions, would strongly object to any attempt to force the refugees to comply with any particular scheme. The Agency expected to continue providing services to any relocated refugees, since their eligibility for UNRWA services would not be affected by the mere fact of such relocation. At the time of the report, of the 349,000 registered refugees in the West Bank, 260,000 lived outside the camps.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 39/99 J by recorded vote.

Palestine refugees in the West Bank

The General Assembly,
Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 38/83 J of 15 December 1983,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 August 1984,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984,

Alarmed by Israel's plans to remove and resettle the Palestine refugees of the West Bank and to destroy their camps,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948 and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the West Bank away from the homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

1. Calls upon Israel to abandon its plans and to refrain from the removal, and from any action that may lead to the removal and resettlement, of Palestine refugees in the West Bank and from the destruction of their camps;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to keep the matter under close supervision and to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its fortieth session, on any developments regarding this matter.

Against: Israel, United States.

Israel said the resolution defied logic by calling on it to abandon plans at bettering the housing conditions of the refugees and demanding that they remain in their camps presumably for ever. Ireland, on behalf of the 10 EC member States, considered that the fifth preambular paragraph and paragraph 1 perhaps did not accurately describe the status of the "plans" to which they referred. Sweden interpreted the wording of paragraph 1 as an affirmation of Israel's responsibility to refrain from resettling Palestine refugees against their will.

Chapter X

Other political questions

Under the broad scope of political issues falling within its competence, the General Assembly continued, in 1984, to consider questions related to information, atomic radiation and Antarctica.

After consideration by its Committee on Information of various aspects of information, the Assembly, in December, adopted resolutions on the work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) (39/98 B) and on United Nations public information programmes (39/98 A).

With regard to the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation, the Assembly commended the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for its activities and requested that it continue its work (resolution 39/94).

By resolution 39/152, the Assembly took note of a report by the Secretary-General on Antarctica.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: public information. Africa: South Africa and apartheid—public information. Middle East: Palestine question—public information. Communications: General questions relating to colonial countries: public information. Namibia: public information. Other administrative and management questions: UN communications satellite.

Information

Fostering public understanding and support of the United Nations and promoting balanced dissemination of information in the world were the two major areas of United Nations information activities in 1984. UNESCO and the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat (DPI) carried out most of the related substantive work, with the Committee on Information continuing to co-ordinate activities within the United Nations system and to report to the General Assembly.

The Assembly addressed a broad spectrum of issues related to the establishment of a new world information and communication order in resolution 39/98 B, adopted on 14 December. The main thrust of resolution 39/98 A, adopted the same day, was directed towards the role of DPI in disseminating objective information about the activities of the United Nations. Both texts were based largely on the recommendations of the Committee on Information, established by the Assembly in 1978<sup>(1)</sup> to examine United Nations public information policies and activities. After a one-day organizational session on 19 March, the Committee held its sixth substantive session in New York from 18 June to 6 July and on 6 September 1984. In its report to the Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee made 59 recommendations on promoting a new information order and enhancing United Nations public information activities—all later approved by the Assembly.

Mass communication

UNESCO activities. UNESCO concentrated its efforts in 1984 on the application of the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC)—a project aimed at helping developing countries to build communication infrastructure—the establishment of a new world information and communication order (see p. 355) and a study of how modern communication technologies affected societies. The organization's activities in those areas were highlighted in a report by the UNESCO Director-General, prepared in response to a December 1983 Assembly request<sup>(3)</sup> and transmitted by the Secretary-General in September.<sup>(4)</sup>

At its fifth session (Paris, 3-9 May 1984), the IPDC Intergovernmental Council approved for funding 32 projects (14 interregional and regional and 18 national). The 14 interregional and regional projects dealt with: equipment to expand exchanges benefiting the developing countries; computerization of the International Network of Documentation Centres on Communication Research and Policies; the mass media and public health (Asia); training in book publishing (Asia-Pacific); training in radio broadcasting (South Pacific Commission); Asia-Pacific Institute for Broadcasting Development; a Latin American centre to evaluate communication technologies; manuals on transmission and production of radio programmes (Latin America); international exchange of programmes by satellite (Africa); training for radio broadcasting in Africa; a co-ordinated exchange system in the Andean region; a training centre for graphic and pictorial arts for multimedia projects (Latin America and the Caribbean); radio programme production (Organization of African Unity); and a regional communications institute for the Great Lakes countries. The 18 national projects approved for funding were submitted by Angola, the Central African Republic, the Gambia, Ghana, Kenya, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, for Africa; Somalia and the Sudan, for the Arab States; Bangladesh, Indonesia, Kiribati, Maldives, Mongolia, Pakistan and Tuvalu, for Asia and the Pacific; and Bolivia and Guyana, for Latin America and the Caribbean.

The Council also approved by-phase funding for interregional and regional projects endorsed earlier, recommended a number of feasibility missions and approved without funding several projects submitted by international and regional organizations.

Field-based development projects, numbering over 100 in Africa, the Arab States, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean, continued to play a dominant role in UNESCO's regular and extrabudgetary communication programmes, accounting for more than $25 million in ongoing activities. Trust funds, the largest source of finance for the projects, received major contributions from the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations (comprising Bahrain, Iraq, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates), the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the Scandinavian countries. Despite a decrease in United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) resources, it still played an important role, contributing to projects in Bangladesh, Uganda, the Asia-Pacific region and the Caribbean. By 27 March 1984, contributions to the special account amounted to over $5.5 million. Training activities formed an estimated 70 per cent of communication development expenditure, with an increasing emphasis on the training of trainers. There was a greater emphasis on the development of endogenous human and physical resources, modern computer-based techniques and film and sound archives. (For other 1984 UNESCO activities related to communications, see PART TWO, Chapter IV.)

Recommendations of the Committee on Information. In its 1984 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee on Information recommended that the United Nations system and all others concerned should be urged to support UNESCO in its information and communication activities. It suggested that that system, particularly UNESCO, should provide all possible support to the developing countries to meet their needs in information. The Committee stressed the need to promote the access of the developing countries to various kinds of communication technology. It urged the United Nations and the developed countries to assist the developing countries in strengthening their information and communication infrastructures, pointing to IPDC as an important step in that direction. The Committee recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to submit to its 1985 session a study on co-ordination among UNDP, UNESCO, IPDC and the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) in support of those infrastructures.

The Committee also made recommendations with regard to the proposed new world information and communication order (see p. 355) and DPI activities to ensure better information coverage of the United Nations and its work (see p. 363).

General Assembly resolution 39/98 B

14 December 1984 Meeting 100 122-6-17 (recorded vote)

Approved by SPC (A/39/714) by recorded vote (98-6-17), 10 December (meeting 51); draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/SPC/39/L.21/Rev.1); agenda item 74. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: SPC 19-21, 23, 25-30, 50, 51; plenary 100.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Japan, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

Introducing the draft in the Committee, Egypt pointed out that the Group of 77, while not totally satisfied with the text, believed that it reflected the interests of many delegations; the Group, however, would not sacrifice its principles.

In explanation of vote, Australia, Austria, Canada, Finland for the Nordic countries, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States objected that there was no mention in the text of the consensus reached in 1983 at UNESCO, according to which the new world information order was seen as "an evolving and continuous process". The United Kingdom added that the phrase did not imply, as some had alleged, that a great deal of time would be necessary for such evolution to take place or that practical assistance for the process was not desirable; it also pointed out that, because of its intention of giving notice to withdraw from UNESCO, it had difficulty with the paragraph reaffirming blanket support for that organization. The Federal Republic of Germany stressed that it was not within the province of the Committee on Information or the General Assembly to modify concepts developed by UNESCO and added that it did not agree with all aspects of UNESCO's work—a fact not reflected in paragraph 12. The Netherlands felt that the text ignored UNESCO's central role in information. Japan objected in particular to paragraphs 13 to 15. Italy stressed that it could not support the definition of the order as set forth in the text. The United States added that there were numerous references to regional meetings and United Nations resolutions which the United States had not attended or supported.

Israel said information should be disseminated freely and not used as a weapon in the hands of a State; it specifically objected to the third preambular paragraph because of what it called its authoritarian implications.

Turkey described its vote as a token of hope for a more constructive attitude but regretted that the text, while reflecting certain essential facts, events and concerns, had omitted others equally important. Colombia, Ecuador and Malaysia expressed regret over absence of consensus.

Albania did not participate in the vote because of several reservations, including the mention in the text of the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, which it saw as a super-Power farce to reinforce spheres of influence.

Proposed new world information and communication order

The leading role in the United Nations effort to promote a new world information and communication order continued to be played by UNESCO and DPI in 1984.

UNESCO activities. Further exploration of the concept of a new world information and communication order remained a thrust of UNESCO's activities in 1984. Reporting on them in September,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNESCO Director-General said that a number of studies focused on such issues as democratization of communication, plurality of information, censorship, self-censorship and other obstacles to a better balanced dissemination of information, with special emphasis on the right to communicate, access to and participation in communication, and the contribution of the media to international understanding. As a follow-up to a September 1983 joint UNESCO/United Nations round table on a new order,<sup>(5)</sup> UNESCO contributed to a number of international meetings and seminars on related subjects held in 1984 by various non-governmental organizations and professional associations.

Another key element of UNESCO's work in regard to the new world order was investigation of information flow, particularly between the industrialized and the developing worlds. A study on the international flow of television materials was concluded in 1984, spanning almost 10 years and incorporating data from about 60 countries. A major report on the global flow of information, synthesizing the results of research around the world, was also completed.

With regard to reducing telecommunication tariffs, a goal actively pursued by UNESCO, the Director-General reported that a January 1984 Conference of information ministers of non-aligned countries (Jakarta, Indonesia) had decided to reduce such tariffs by at least 50 per cent in the 11 countries hosting the distribution centres of the Non-Aligned News Agencies Pool. UNESCO was also involved in preparing a May meeting of some of those ministers at Cairo, Egypt, held in pursuance of a Conference decision. In addition, questions concerning the reduction of telecommunications tariffs were considered by a UNESCO working group and in a joint study with ITU. IPDC provided assistance to regional broadcasting unions in Africa, the Arab States and Asia and the Pacific in setting up their own satellite television news-exchange system. UNESCO also assisted in holding a seminar at New Delhi, India, to examine measures for improving the services of the Non-Aligned News Agencies Pool. The impact of postal tariffs on the circulation of books and other educational, scientific and cultural material was the subject of a UNESCO memorandum to the June/July 1984 Congress of the Universal Postal Union (UPU), which outlined possible ways of facilitating the international exchange of various categories of printed matter.

Activities of the Committee on Information.

In its 1984 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee on Information presented a list of recommendations on promoting a new world information and communication order, which were subsequently approved by the Assembly when it adopted resolution 39/98 A. The Committee again recommended that all countries, the United Nations system and others concerned should collaborate in establishing a new order based on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing the diversity of sources of information and free access to it. The Committee noted, in particular, the urgent need to change the dependence of the developing countries in information and communication.

Following the Assembly's invitation and the Committee's recommendation,<sup>(6)</sup> the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations (UNCTC), in a memorandum of 16 May,<sup>(7)</sup> provided information on UNCTC documents pertinent to a new order. They included studies dealing with the political, legal, economic and social effects of transnational corporations, as well as the impact of their practices in transborder data flows and in specific industry sectors.

Communications. By a letter of 13 March,<sup>(8)</sup> Morocco transmitted documents of the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference (Casablanca, January), which adopted a resolution on information in which it stressed the need for continued close co-operation among States to contribute to the establishment of a new, more equitable and objective information order.

On 15 March,<sup>(9)</sup> Bangladesh transmitted the resolutions of the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, December). The Conference, conscious of the need for a new order, deemed it necessary to draw up an Islamic strategy for information in keeping with that order.

India, on 20 March,<sup>(10)</sup> transmitted a declaration of the Conference of the Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries (Jakarta, January) in which the Conference noted that the dominance of the transnational news agencies and corporate structures in the international mass media had given rise to imbalances in the flow of news to the disadvantage of the developing countries, making it essential to advance a new world information and communication order.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/98 B of 14 December, the Assembly reiterated its appeal to Member States and United Nations and other organizations in the communications field to make better known the issues underlying the demand for the development of communication capacities in developing countries as a step towards establishing a new world information and communication order. The Assembly reaffirmed its support for UNESCO's efforts to promote that order, considering IPDC a significant step in that direction. That support was also reaffirmed in resolution 39/98 A.

UN public information

Activities of the Committee on Information. The Committee on Information, in its 1984 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> made a number of recommendations on United Nations public information activities, including specific suggestions for the work of DPI, which were later approved by the Assembly when it adopted resolution 39/98 A. In connection with the fortieth (1985) anniversary of the United Nations (see p. 382), the Committee proposed that DPI support the Preparatory Committee in publicizing the goals and accomplishments of the United Nations. It urged DPI to co-operate closely with relevant international organizations and bodies, such as UNESCO, ITU, UNDP and the Non-Aligned News Agencies Pool. The Committee again took up the question of the United Nations acquiring a communications satellite (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV) and made specific proposals aimed at enhancing the activities of DPI radio, television and press and publications services, as well as improving the work of its information centres (for details, see below, under respective headings). It also emphasized DPI's role in the World Disarmament Campaign (see p. 86).

Recommendations of the Committee on Information

1. The recommendations of the Committee on Information approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/82 B of 15 December 1983, as well as all provisions of the resolution, should be reiterated, taking into account the views expressed by delegations at the 98th plenary meeting of the thirty-eighth session of the Assembly on 15 December 1983. Those recommendations should be implemented in full, and the Secretary-General should be requested to report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1985 on measures taken for the implementation of those recommendations and provisions pending implementation.

2. The mandate of the Committee on Information should be renewed as set forth in General Assembly resolution 34/182 of 18 December 1979 and reaffirmed in Assembly resolutions 35/201 of 16 December 1980, 36/149 of 16 December 1981, 37/94 B of 10 December 1982 and 38/82 B of 15 December 1983.

Promotion of the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order intended to strengthen peace and international understanding and based on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information

3. All countries, the United Nations system as a whole, and all others concerned, should collaborate in the establishment of a new world information and communication order based, inter alia, on the free circulation, and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing the diversity of sources of information and free access to information, and, in particular, the urgent need to change the dependent status of the developing countries in the field of information and communication, as the principle of sovereign equality among nations extends also to this field, and intended also to strengthen peace and international understanding, enabling all persons to participate effectively in political, economic, social and cultural life, and promoting understanding and friendship among all nations and human groups.

4. The United Nations system should reiterate its appeal to the international media and increase its efforts for action by the international community towards global development and, in particular, the efforts of the developing countries to achieve economic, social and cultural progress.

5. Under the current international climate of political conflicts and economic disorders, the Committee on Information, fully aware and cognizant of the important contribution that the mass media world-wide can make in enhancing and strengthening peace, deepening international understanding, promoting justice, equality, national independence, development, the exercise of human rights and the establishment of a new world information and communication order, recommends that the General Assembly appeal to the mass media to respond in a positive way to opportunities available to them in this field, in order to open new vistas of progress for the world community.

6. Aware of the existence of structural imbalances in the international distribution of news affecting the two-way flow of news, the Committee on Information recommends that urgent attention should be given to the elimination of existing inequalities and all other obstacles in the free flow and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, ideas and knowledge by, inter alia, diversifying the sources of information as a step towards free and more balanced information and the promotion of the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

7. The Committee on Information recommends that the need be stressed to ensure and promote the access of the developing countries to communication technology including communication satellites, modern electronic information systems, informatics and other advanced information and communication facilities with a view to improving their own information and communication systems corresponding to the specific conditions prevailing in each country.

8. The Committee on Information, expressing its satisfaction with the successful co-ordination and co-operation displayed by the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat with the Non-Aligned News Agencies Pool, as well as with news agencies of other developing and developed countries, and convinced that such efforts have contributed significantly to progress towards a new world information and communication order, recommends that the Department of Public Information strengthen its co-operation with the Pool and with the agencies of developing countries as this co-operation constitutes a concrete step towards a more just and equitable flow of information thus contributing to the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

9. The Committee on Information, while recognizing the importance of the co-ordination and co-operation between the Department of Public Information, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and its International Programme for the Development of Communication in the promotion of the establishment of a new world information and communication order, recommends that the Secretary-General should be requested to prepare a consolidated study, within existing resources, on the contributions, effects and levels of co-ordination between those organizations and the International Telecommunication Union in support of the development of information and communication infrastructure and systems in the developing countries for submission to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1985.

10. The United Nations system as a whole as well as the developed countries should be urged to co-operate in a concerted manner with the developing countries towards strengthening the information and communication infrastructures of the latter countries, in accordance with the priorities attached to such areas by the developing countries, with a view to enabling them to develop their own information and communication policies freely and independently and in the light of their history, social values and cultural traditions. In this regard, full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication, which constitutes an important step in the development of these infrastructures, should always be emphasized.

11. The United Nations system should co-operate in a concerted manner, through its information services, in promoting, as a matter of high priority, the development activities of the United Nations and, in particular, the improvement of the conditions of the lives of the people of developing countries.

12. The United Nations system should constantly promote the creation of a climate of confidence in relations among States, as a means of easing tension and facilitating the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

13. Reaffirming the primary role which the General Assembly is to play in elaborating, co-ordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information and recognizing the central and important role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the field of information and communication, the Committee on Information recommends that the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned should be urged to give that organization adequate support and assistance in the field of information and communication. The Department of Public Information in particular should co-operate more regularly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, especially at the working level, with a view to maximizing the contributions of the Department to the efforts of that organization in promoting the establishment of a new world information and communication order and to disseminating as widely as possible information on the activities of that organization in this respect.

14. The Secretary-General should be requested to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session information concerning the arrangements for the convening, jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, of a round table in 1985 on a new world information and communication order.

15. The Department of Public Information should be urged to monitor, as appropriate, important meetings of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as of regional intergovernmental organizations devoted to information and communication questions, within existing resources.

16. The United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, should aim at the provision of all possible support and assistance to the developing countries, within existing resources, with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to actions already adopted within the United Nations system, including, in particular:

(a) Assistance to developing countries in training journalists and technical personnel and in setting up appropriate educational institutions and research facilities;

(b) The granting of favourable conditions to provide access to developing countries to such communication technology as is requisite for the establishment of a national information and communication system and correspondent with the specific situation of the country concerned;

(c) The creation of conditions that will gradually enable the developing countries to produce the communication technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, specifically for radio and television broadcasting, by using their own resources;

(d) Assistance in establishing telecommunication links at subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries, free from conditions of any kind.

17. All the information activities of the Department of Public Information should be guided by, and carried out in conformity with, the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the aspiration for a new world information and communication order, as well as conform to the consensus reached among States in resolutions 4/19, 4/21 and 4/22 adopted on 27 October 1980 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-first session.

18. The role of the Department of Public Information as the focal point for the formulation and implementation of information activities of the United Nations should be re-emphasized, and in this regard the Committee on Information recommends that the proliferation of information units in the Secretariat independent of the Department should be discouraged.

19. The Secretary-General should be requested to ensure that the activities of the Department of Public Information, as the focal point of the public information tasks of the United Nations, should be strengthened, keeping in view the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and along the lines established in the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and the recommendations of the Committee on Information, to ensure a more coherent coverage of and a better knowledge about the United Nations and its work, especially in its priority areas, such as those stated in section III, paragraph 1, of Assembly resolution 35/201, including international peace and security, disarmament, peace-keeping and peace-making operations, decolonization, the promotion of human rights, the struggle against apartheid and racial discrimination, economic, social and development issues, the integration of women in the struggle for peace and development, the establishment of the new international economic order and of a new world information and communication order, the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia and programmes on women and youth.

20. The final documents of the Conference of the Ministers of Information of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 26 to 30 January 1984, should be noted.

21. The Department of Public Information should maintain editorial independence and accuracy in reporting for all material produced by the Department and should promote to the greatest possible extent an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations among the people of the world. It should take the necessary measures to ensure that its output contains objective and equitable information about issues before the Organization, reflecting divergent opinions where they occur.

22. The resolution adopted at the Conference of the Ministers of Information and Communication of the countries acting as centres of redistribution of the Non-Aligned News Agencies Pool, meeting in Cairo on 9 and 10 May 1984, on the establishment and consolidation of an information network for news and broadcasting agencies of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries should also be noted.

23. The relevant resolution on the question relating to information of the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference, held at Casablanca from 16 to 19 January 1984, should be noted.

Continuation of examination of United Nations public information policies and activities in the light of the evolution of international relations, particularly during the past two decades, and of the imperatives of the establishment of the new international economic order and of a new world information and communication order

24. In connection with the forthcoming celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the creation of the United Nations, the Department of Public Information should be urged to give appropriate support to the Preparatory Committee for the Fortieth Anniversary of the United Nations in promoting and publicizing the noble goals and accomplishments of the United Nations as a major forum for pooling efforts of States to contribute to the solution of vital world problems.

25. The Department of Public Information should continue to ensure that the daily dispatches of the Non-Aligned News Agencies Pool that it receives are appropriately utilized in the performance of the public information tasks of the United Nations:

(a) With a view to further promotion and development of a functional and mutually beneficial co-operation between the Department and the Pool, the existing arrangements in the Department for the conduct of this co-operation should be established on a more regular basis;

(b) In view of the successful joint coverage by the Pool of important conferences and other events within the United Nations system, this practice should be continued and further strengthened;

(c) The Department should consider the possibility of utilizing the dispatches received from the Pool to establish a data base on the information and communication facilities in the non-aligned countries.

26. In connection with its annual training programme for journalists and broadcasters from developing countries, the Department of Public Information should allocate the last week of the programme for a visit by them to one of the developing countries that expresses readiness to receive them for the purpose of acquainting themselves with the ways in which information on the United Nations is received and utilized.

27. The interim report of the International Telecommunication Union on the World Communications Year should be noted and the Secretary-General should be requested to make available to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1985 a comprehensive report on the outcome of the activities of the International Telecommunication Union with regard to the Year.

28. The exchange of information between the Committee on Information and the Commission on Transnational Corporations in matters pertaining to the mandate of the Committee should again be encouraged.

29. The report of the Secretary-General on the acquisition by the United Nations of its own communications satellite should be noted. The Secretary-General should be requested to submit to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1985 a complementary report on the acquisition of a United Nations communications satellite, in compliance with recommendation 36 made by the Committee to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session.

30. The attention of the pertinent organs of the General Assembly and of the United Nations system as a whole should be drawn to the findings of the International Telecommunication Union set forth in its interim report, especially as concerns the problem of the geostationary orbit reflected, inter alia, in paragraphs 33 and 49 of that report, taking into account the needs of the developing countries.

31. With regard to its co-operation with the Non-Aligned News Agencies Pool as well as with the regional news agencies in developing countries, the Department of Public Information should co-operate, as appropriate, with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in assisting that organization, within existing resources, in the following activities:

(a) In the preparation and implementation of a plan of integrated communication network and regional data and communication centres;

(b) In providing facilities for meetings on data and communication exchange of the public information bodies of the non-aligned countries;

(c) In the preparation for observance of 1985 as the Year of Communication for information bodies in the non-aligned countries.

32. The Department of Public Information should closely co-operate with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Non-Aligned News Agencies Pool to organize a workshop, within existing resources, in 1985 for familiarization of news agencies of developing countries with modern technology of relevance to news agencies, and for the standardization of teaching methods and syllabuses, and to produce training manuals in various languages for the training centres of the Pool.

33. The Secretary-General should be requested once again to maintain the functions of the Middle East/Arabic Unit as the producer of Arabic television and radio programmes, and to strengthen and expand this unit to enable it to function in an effective manner, and to report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1985 on the measures taken in implementation of this recommendation.

34. In view of the importance of United Nations broadcasting for the European region, steps should be taken to maintain and enhance the functions of the European Unit in the Radio Service through redeployment of existing resources.

35. The Department of Public Information should be requested to use the official General Assembly languages adequately in its documents and audio-visual documentation in order to inform the public better about the activities of the United Nations. It should also make available to the French Language Production Section of the Press and Publications Division of the Department, within existing resources, the means that will allow it to distribute consistent press releases in sufficient quantity to satisfy the needs of numerous delegations that use French as a working language.

36. Effective steps should be taken to ensure that the United Nations information centres give adequate services in local languages. Such steps are to be taken within existing resources. The Committee on Information should be informed about the implementation of this recommendation at its substantive session in 1985.

37. The Secretary-General may be requested to consider the proposals of the Governments of Benin and Poland on the opening of United Nations information centres in their respective countries in the light of criteria established in General Assembly resolution 38/82 B, through the redeployment of resources, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

38. United Nations information centres should continue to assist press and information media in their respective countries, and, inter alia, promote the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

39. While the co-operation between the Department of Public Information and the United Nations Development Programme in the field should be promoted to the maximum extent, it is also important to bear in mind the intrinsic functions of United Nations information centres as distinct from those of the United Nations development activities. The information centres should redouble their efforts to publicize the activities and achievements of operational activities for development, including those of the United Nations Development Programme, taking into account the priorities determined by the General Assembly.

40. The report of the Secretary-General concerning measures to improve the effectiveness of United Nations information centres should be noted and the Secretary-General should be encouraged to implement his proposals, within the existing resources allocated to the Department of Public Information.

41. The Department of Public Information should focus on and give wider coverage to the economic, social and development activities throughout the United Nations system aimed at achieving a more comprehensive image of the activities and potential of the United Nations system, taking into account the priorities set by the General Assembly, particularly in the light of the forthcoming fortieth anniversary of the United Nations.

42. The Department of Public Information should promote an informed understanding of the work of the United Nations in the area delineated in General Assembly resolutions 34/146 of 17 December 1979, 36/109 of 10 December 1981, 37/108 of 16 December 1982 and 38/130 and 38/136 of 19 December 1983.

43. Pending the possible acquisition by the United Nations of its own short-wave radio network and taking into account the study carried out by the Department of Public Information on this subject, the Secretary-General should be requested to report on the question raised in the study, and to inform the Committee on Information on the working of such a system and to submit an evaluation report on daily short-wave radio broadcasts from Headquarters.

44. The United Nations information centres should intensify direct and systematic communication exchange with local information and educational communities in a mutually beneficial way, especially in areas of particular interest to host countries.

45. The Secretary-General should continue his efforts to develop a system for monitoring and evaluating the effectiveness of the activities of the Department of Public Information, particularly in the priority areas determined by the General Assembly.

46. The Department of Public Information should improve, within existing resources, its data-collection procedures with regard to the actual use made by redis-seminators of materials distributed by the Department and its information centres and submit a report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1985 on progress made in this area.

47. Future reports of the Department of Public Information to the Committee on Information and to the General Assembly, in particular on new programmes or on the expansion of existing programmes, should contain:

(a) More adequate information on the output of the Department in respect of each topic included in its work programme, which forms the basis of its programme budget;

(b) The costs of the activities undertaken in respect of each topic;

(c) More adequate information on target audiences, end-use of the Department's products, and analysis of feedback data received by the Department;

(d) The Department's evaluation of the effectiveness of its different programmes and activities;

(e) A statement detailing the priority level that the Secretary-General has attached to current or future activities of the Department in documents dealing with such activities.

48. The Secretary-General should be requested to strengthen the Planning, Programming and Evaluation Unit of the Department of Public Information through the redeployment of existing resources.

49. The steps taken by the Department of Public Information in redressing the imbalance in its staff should be noted. The Department should continue to intensify its efforts to that end and the Secretary-General should be requested to take urgent steps to increase the representation of underrepresented developing countries, and of other underrepresented groups of countries, especially at the senior levels, in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, and to submit a report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1985.

50. Member States should be called upon once again to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Economic and Social Information.

51. Quality, usefulness and coverage of the daily press releases and the weekly news summary issued by the Department of Public Information in all working languages should be further enhanced and improved in view of the important public information tasks that they can perform. Services provided at the Press Section of the Department both for the media and the delegations should be further improved. The Department should continue to co-operate closely with and provide assistance to the United Nations Correspondents Association.

52. The Department of Public Information should review, and report thereon to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1985, the present system of charging the Member States and the media for video tapes, audio tapes and news photographs of important United Nations events such as General Assembly and Security Council debates with a view to reducing the present prohibitive costs of those materials so as to enable the media in the Member States, particularly in the developing countries, to give wider publicity to such events.

53. The interim report of the Secretary-General entitled "The Department of Public Information as the Focal Point for the Formulation and Implementation of Information Activities of the United Nations" should be noted and the Secretary-General should be requested to submit his final report on the subject to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

54. The operations of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services (Geneva and New York) as inter-agency projects on international development issues reaching specific target audiences in the industrialized countries should be continued on a stable financial basis through the United Nations participation in those services. The Secretary-General should be requested once again to urge all the specialized agencies to make long-term contributions to the financing of those services, thereby stressing their inter-agency character.

55. The Joint United Nations Information Committee, as the essential instrument for inter-agency co-ordination and co-operation in the field of public information, should be further strengthened and given more responsibility for the public information activities of the entire United Nations system.

56. Since Development Forum is the only inter-agency publication of the United Nations system that concentrates on development issues, the Secretary-General should, while continuing his efforts to secure a sound and independent financial basis for the periodical, make such arrangements through the regular budget as necessary to ensure its continued publication. All the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should be urged to contribute to the financing of this system-wide publication, thereby recognizing its inter-agency character.

57. The Secretary-General should continue to ensure that Development Forum retains its editorial policy of intellectual independence, thus enabling this publication to continue to serve as a world-wide forum in which diverse opinions on issues related to economic and social development can be freely expressed.

58. The Secretary-General should be encouraged to continue and intensify his efforts to explore all possibilities outside the regular budget of the United Nations of securing the adequate resources for the continuation of the World Newspaper Supplement project.

59. The World Disarmament Campaign should give full consideration to the role of mass media as the most effective way to promote in world public opinion a climate of understanding, confidence and co-operation conducive to peace and disarmament, the enhancement of human rights and development. Within the World Disarmament Campaign and Disarmament Week, the Department of Public Information should fulfil the role assigned to it by the General Assembly by utilizing its expertise and resources in public information to ensure its maximum effectiveness.

General Assembly resolution 39/98 A

14 December 1984 Meeting 100 132-6-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by SPC (A/39/714) by recorded vote (108-6-7), 10 December (meeting 51); draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/SPC/39/L.20/Rev.1); agenda item 74. Financial implications: 5th Committee, A/39/826; S-G, A/C.5/39/86, A/SPC/39/L.31 & Add.1.

Against: Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Japan, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Italy, Luxembourg, New Zealand.

Explaining their votes, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States pointed out that the text failed to mention a 1983 UNESCO resolution which characterized a new world information order as an evolving and continuous process. Italy could not support the text's definition of that order. In addition, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States found difficulty with paragraph 10 which they felt contradicted the programme budget implications; the latter three States and Japan also regretted the text's politicization. The Federal Republic of Germany felt that its disagreement with certain aspects of UNESCO's work was not adequately reflected in paragraph 1, and said paragraph 9 was unacceptable. Israel rejected that paragraph as having nothing to do with information and described the draft as parochial and unbalanced. The United Kingdom added that, because of its intention of giving notice to withdraw from UNESCO, it had difficulty with the paragraph reaffirming blanket support for that organization. The United States also felt that paragraphs dealing only with the question of Namibia and the needs of the Palestinian people, to the exclusion of other urgent international concerns, diverted attention from the text's proper subject. Australia expressed reservations about paragraphs 4 and 10.

Albania's non-participation in the vote was due to a number of reservations, including the text's mention of the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe which it said was a farce perpetrated by the super-Powers.

Barbados, while voting in favour, expressed concern about implementation of paragraph 1, hoping that the Assembly's affirmation therein of its 1983 resolution<sup>(6)</sup> would further strengthen the work of the Caribbean Unit of the Radio Service of DPI. Benin, Colombia, Ecuador and Malaysia regretted the absence of consensus. The USSR said it would take due account of the draft's financial implications. Finland, on behalf of the Nordic countries, Portugal and Turkey expressed reservations concerning certain aspects and omissions in the text.

In many other 1984 resolutions, the Assembly called for efforts by the United Nations and others to disseminate information on specific subjects, including disarmament, apartheid, Israeli-South African relations, Palestine, Namibia, cultural development, racial discrimination, human rights and decolonization (for details, see relevant chapters).

DPI activities

In 1984, DPI continued to act as a focal point for formulating and implementing United Nations information activities, enhancing the work of and co-ordinating the various media at its disposal, including radio, visual and publications services, and information centres (for details, see below under respective headings). The Department also played an active role in ensuring the effectiveness of the World Disarmament Campaign and Disarmament Week (see p. 90).

With regard to administrative questions, the Secretariat reported in May<sup>(11)</sup> on the progress made over the previous four years concerning the distribution of staff by nationality in posts subject to geographical distribution in DPI. Statistics breaking down the total staff into distribution by region showed that the greatest gain in overall percentage of staff and in staff at the Senior Officer level and above had been achieved by Africa.

Re-emphasizing the role of DPI as the focal point of United Nations information activities, the Committee on Information recommended<sup>(12)</sup> that they should be carried out in conformity with the United Nations Charter, the aspiration for a new world information and communication order and the consensus of relevant resolutions adopted at the 1980 session of the UNESCO General Conference. DPI should promote an informed understanding of the United Nations as delineated in the 1979 Assembly resolution on the International Convention against the Taking of Hostages,<sup>(12)</sup> 1981<sup>(13)</sup> and 1983<sup>(14)</sup> resolutions on measures to prevent international terrorism, and 1982<sup>(15)</sup> and 1983<sup>(16)</sup> resolutions on protecting diplomatic and consular missions and representatives. The Committee stressed the need for DPI to maintain its editorial independence and objectivity.

DPI was urged to support the Preparatory Committee for the Fortieth (1985) Anniversary of the United Nations, to monitor important meetings of the non-aligned countries and regional intergovernmental organizations on information questions, to utilize the daily dispatches of the Non-Aligned News Agencies Pool, and to assist it, in co-operation with UNESCO, in preparing an integrated communication network plan, meetings on data and communication exchange and for observance of 1985 as the Year of Communication. Other suggested co-operative efforts included a 1985 workshop on modern technology and a project to standardize teaching methods and produce manuals for the Pool's training centres.

DPI was also advised to allocate a week of its annual training programme for journalists from developing countries for on-the-spot acquaintance with utilization of information on the United Nations.

The Committee called for adequate use of official Assembly languages, wider coverage of United Nations economic, social and development activities, and improvement of DPI data-collection procedures, daily press releases and weekly news summaries; it also called for DPI to fulfil its role assigned by the Assembly concerning the use of the mass media to promote the World Disarmament Campaign and Disarmament Week. With regard to DPI staff, the Secretary-General was urged to increase representation of underrepresented countries and to report to the Committee at its 1985 session. (For Committee action on other matters, see below under the relevant subject headings.)

Radio and Visual Services Division

Various aspects of the work of DPI's Radio and Visual Services Division were the subject of two 1984 reports by the Secretary-General, submitted in response to December 1983 requests by the General Assembly.<sup>(6)</sup>

In May 1984, the Secretary-General presented to the Committee on Information a report<sup>(17)</sup> on the viability of a world-wide United Nations short-wave network. The report assessed possible transmission schedules and frequencies, outlined staffing, construction, equipment and operational cost requirements, and discussed alternative approaches. In its conclusions, the report noted that, while an attempt had been made to be as comprehensive as possible, gaps in information remained, particularly with regard to the potential audience. Serious doubts were also expressed regarding the viability of a United Nations world news service. Therefore, the report could not go beyond general statements emphasizing the growing popularity of short-wave broadcasting and the expansion by established broadcasters of their activities. Although those trends pointed to a significant potential for short-wave broadcasting by the United Nations, no empirical data were available to support such a conclusion. As a way of obtaining sufficient listener response data for judging the viability of a short-wave network, the Secretary-General suggested that current United Nations short-wave broadcasts be transmitted on a daily basis throughout the year over leased transmitters. That course of action, however, was not feasible within available resources.

The Committee on Information, in its annual report to the Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> recommended that, pending the possible acquisition by the United Nations of its own short-wave radio network, the Secretary-General should follow up on the question, inform the Committee on the working of such a system and present an evaluation report on daily short-wave radio broadcasts from Headquarters.

In a September report,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General addressed aspects of United Nations radio programming not considered by the Committee in 1984. With regard to Portuguese-language programming in the African Unit of the Radio Service, the Secretary-General reported that his 1983 proposals<sup>(19)</sup> had been fully implemented during 1984, with the recruitment of a radio producer and initiation of weekly news and feature programmes for the Portuguese-speaking regions of Africa. The Asian Unit had begun the production of a weekly programme in Bengali and a monthly programme in Indonesian, while seeking qualified candidates for two newly created producer posts. Concerning co-operation with the Union of National Radio and Television Organizations of Africa and its member radio stations, DPI continued to explore ways of expanding the use of United Nations radio programmes by national broadcasting organizations in five African countries.

The Committee on Information recommended<sup>(2)</sup> that the Secretary-General strengthen and expand the Middle East/Arabic Unit as the producer of Arabic television and radio programmes and report the results to the Committee's 1985 session. DPI was also requested to report at that session on the current system of charging Member States and the media for video and audio tapes and news photographs of important United Nations events, with a view to reducing costs of those materials so as to enable the media, particularly in developing countries, to give such events wider publicity.

The Committee's recommendations were approved by the Assembly in resolution 39/98 A.

UN information centres and services

Pursuant to the Secretary-General's 1983 suggestions on United Nations information centres and relevant recommendations of the Committee on Information,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretariat submitted to the Committee, in May 1984,<sup>(21)</sup> a note containing proposals aimed at increasing the centres' effectiveness within DPI's existing resources.

With regard to enhancing centres' discretionary authority in implementing their work programmes, the suggested measures included updating the Information Policy and Operations Manual; improving the centres' reports to Headquarters and co-ordination with substantive departments in the Secretariat; and better adaptation of information materials to regional needs. To improve the centres' flexibility in connection with special United Nations observances, it was proposed to convene a meeting of relevant departmental and unit representatives at the beginning of each year. Centre directors were also encouraged to co-operate at the local level with representatives of other United Nations agencies, while a DPI staff member was to ensure interdepartmental co-ordination at Headquarters. The problem of delays in getting information from Headquarters to centres, though not totally within DPI control, could be solved through improved co-ordination with the cable office and the pouch service and assignment of DPI staff to expedite action by substantive departments and respective divisions in DPI. The importance of closer co-operation at the interdepartmental and inter-agency levels was emphasized as a way of avoiding duplication in communication with the centres.

Regarding personnel matters, the Secretariat note pointed out that the level of centre directors was under constant review, and three P-5 and three P-4 posts were reclassified to D-1 and P-5 levels, respectively, in the proposed programme budget for 1984-1985. In an effort to improve the position of supporting staff, a national information officer category was established in 22 centres. With a view to increasing contacts between centre directors and DPI at Headquarters, senior DPI staff as well as centre directors were encouraged to visit the centres while on official business or home leave. The note stated that DPI maintained an appropriate level of mobility of the centres' Professional staff; in relation to the training of newly recruited reference and information assistants, a review of the training programmes was to be completed in 1984.

With regard to the centres' material and financial resources, the Secretariat reported, inter alia, that $100,000 had been provided for the installation of telex equipment at 10 additional centres; greater inter-agency sharing of office equipment in the field was encouraged; and several steps were planned to improve directors' capacity to travel, translate and produce information material and organize seminars and exhibits within available resources.

Responding to the Assembly's December 1983 recommendations,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General reported, in September,<sup>(18)</sup> that negotiations had been initiated with Indonesia on the reopening of the United Nations Information Centre at Jakarta—which had been closed since 1965<sup>(22)</sup>—and that the appointments of full-time directors for the centres at Yaoundé, Cameroon, and Bujumbura, Burundi, were under active consideration.

An activity at the United Nations Information Centre at Harare, Zimbabwe, was the subject of a 13 April letter by Israel.<sup>(23)</sup> Referring to an exhibition of the Palestine Liberation Organization held at the Centre in January, Israel protested at the staging of an exhibit on United Nations premises containing what it said was pictorial material which was offensive to Israel and those of the Jewish faith.

It noted, however, that the Centre had had no official involvement with the project.

In its recommendations to the Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee on Information stressed the need for centres to give adequate services in local languages, to assist local information media and to intensify communication exchange with education communities, particularly in promoting a new world information and communication order and in areas of interest to host countries. It also suggested that the Secretary-General be requested to consider proposals on the opening of centres in Benin and Poland. While recognizing the distinction between development activities and the centres' intrinsic functions, the Committee urged centres to give greater publicity to United Nations activities for development. The Committee also felt that the Secretary-General should be encouraged to implement proposals made by the Secretariat on the centres' effectiveness,<sup>(21)</sup> within existing DPI resources.

The Assembly, in resolution 39/98 A, approved the Committee's recommendations and requested the Secretary-General to consider the proposals of Benin and Poland on the opening of information centres there and to report to the Assembly in 1985.

Speaking in the Special Political Committee, Benin pointed out that it had made a request, rather than a proposal, for the opening of an information centre in the country.

Programme evaluation

Following a 1983 recommendation of the Committee on Information,<sup>(24)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted, in May 1984, a report<sup>(25)</sup> on the establishment of systematic procedures for monitoring and evaluation of DPI activities. He reported progress in simplifying data-collection forms and obtaining data for the monitoring system through improved co-operation with the Radio Service and major DPI publications and better response from information centres. Better logging systems had been devised and consultations were under way to computerize the growing data base. The data gathered through the monitoring system had greatly facilitated the preparation of the Programme Performance Report for the 1982-1983 biennium to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC).

As recommended in May 1983 by CPC,<sup>(24)</sup> DPI began examining the distribution of photo materials and radio tapes to determine and, ultimately, enhance their effectiveness. The results of the study, involving an inventory of all radio programmes and canvassing of DPI producers and radio stations utilizing United Nations tapes, were to be summarized in a final report. In an effort to ensure a better use of available resources by reviewing its current activities, DPI continued consultations with the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU).

The Committee on Information<sup>(2)</sup> stressed that the Secretary-General should continue efforts to develop a system for monitoring and evaluating DPI's effectiveness and to strengthen DPI's Planning, Programming and Evaluation Unit. DPI was requested to provide in its reports to the Committee and the Assembly more adequate information on the Department's output, as well as the costs, target audiences, effectiveness, and priorities of current and future activities.

The Committee's recommendations were approved by the Assembly in resolution 39/98 A.

Co-ordination in the UN system

JUNIC activities. Co-ordination of information activities in the United Nations system remained the responsibility of the inter-agency Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), which held its eleventh session in Paris from 3 to 6 April 1984.<sup>(26)</sup> At the session, JUNIC discussed the work of the Committee on Information in 1983 and considered subsequent developments in the Assembly on questions relating to information. It also reviewed a 1984 DPI report to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) on enhancement of United Nations public information activities. With regard to reportage missions, JUNIC requested its secretariat to provide information to all members on such joint projects and to establish a general roster of journalists who had taken part in media events organized by United Nations agencies. After considering a report of its task force on international expositions, JUNIC decided to inform the authorities of Expo '85 (Tsukuba, Japan) of its intention to participate in the event as a unified system, and also agreed to participate at Expo '86 (Vancouver, Canada) subject to satisfactory financial and other arrangements.

Regarding international conferences and years, JUNIC endorsed recommendations of its two task forces for International Youth Year (1985) (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XX) and the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XIX). The Committee agreed to co-operate actively with the August 1984 International Conference on Population (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XIV) and the July 1984 International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XXI), and considered reports relating to the activities of ITU, UNIDO and the World Food Council.

JUNIC renewed the call to United Nations entities to help finance Development Forum as the only United Nations inter-agency publication concentrating on development issues, and requested that a conceptual paper on the role, function and place of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services (NGLS) in New York and Geneva be submitted to its 1985 session. Regarding audio-visual matters, JUNIC noted that "The Message from the South" series, scheduled for completion in the third quarter of 1984, in addition to being broadcast on television, would be available to educational groups and non-governmental organizations and to all members of JUNIC through world-wide non-commercial distribution rights acquired by DPI. A series of 24 half-hour television programmes on the general theme of disarmament was planned for completion by the third quarter of 1985. JUNIC recommended the continued publishing of Playback, a DPI bulletin on audio-visual matters, welcomed the offer by the DPI Radio and Visual Services Division to compile a central registry of all United Nations film and videotape materials and requested another meeting of the Audio-Visual Working Group. With regard to a survey of JUNIC members' attitudes towards film and television, the Committee said the exercise had produced useful results. It also favoured co-production arrangements with outside producers, but considered undesirable a centralized JUNIC production service, consolidated JUNIC film missions and centralized placement of its visual products.

JUNIC also considered a report of its Working Group on Development Education, agreeing to have host organizations chair the Group on a rotating basis and to designate NGLS (Geneva) as its substantive secretariat. On other matters, JUNIC endorsed the introductory section of its plan of action for 1984-1985, authorizing the secretariat to finalize it on the basis of the session's results and future contributions from members. JUNIC also decided to continue to review the possibilities of assisting the World Newspaper Supplement project.

Following 1983 recommendations of the Committee on Information and CPC,<sup>(27)</sup> JUNIC submitted, in May 1984, for consideration by both Committees, a consolidated report<sup>(28)</sup> on its programme and activities. The report described the philosophy behind joint planning of public information activities within the United Nations system, highlighted the discussions at its April session, and outlined its plan of action for 1984-1985. Special emphasis was placed on assessing various aspects of the Development Forum project. With regard to a possible sales policy, JUNIC came to the following conclusions: a single-copy charge would not be financially beneficial; any charging policy would seriously reduce the effectiveness of the publication; charging for bulk supplies to certain categories of readers offered the best approach; and, on balance, the goal of reaching a reader of value to the United Nations was more important than obtaining payments.

Report of the Secretary-General. Responding to a 1983 request of the Committee on Information that he study the full implications of DPI's role as a focal point, the Secretary-General reported in May 1984<sup>(29)</sup> that the situation had remained substantially as described in his 1982 report to CPC.<sup>(30)</sup> The Secretary-General noted that, in the mean time, he was setting up a Secretariat-wide task force to propose appropriate steps and would present recommendations to the Committee on Information upon completing the review.

CPC consideration. After considering in May 1984<sup>(31)</sup> the report on JUNC's programme and activities,<sup>(28)</sup> CPC requested that future reports should contain more information on the orientation, mandates and degree of co-ordination among United Nations organizations. In its view, the report could have reflected more completely the activities contained in the JUNC plan of action for 1984-1985, and also could have highlighted all of the measures taken to ensure their effectiveness. CPC stressed a number of other specific points, including the relationship between disarmament and development, the campaign to improve awareness of development issues, the need for a continuing review of a Development Forum sales policy, and the problem of apartheid.

Action by the Committee on Information. The Committee on Information<sup>(2)</sup> recommended that JUNC should be further strengthened and given more responsibility for the public information activities of the entire United Nations system. Noting that Development Forum was the only system-wide publication concentrating on development issues, the Committee felt that the Secretary-General should provide for its continuing publication through the regular budget and ensure its editorial policy of intellectual independence. Other United Nations entities were urged to contribute to its financing. The Committee also recommended that the Secretary-General should actively explore possibilities outside the United Nations regular budget to secure resources for the continuation of the World Newspaper Supplement project.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/98 A, approved the Committee's recommendations, and, in resolution 39/98 B, noted with satisfaction the co-operation between the United Nations, UNESCO and all other organizations within the system, particularly ITU, FAO and UPU.

UN publications policy

With approximately 4,000 titles (including periodicals) produced each year, publications were an important programme activity of the United Nations system in 1984.

JIU report. At the request of several participating organizations, JIU prepared a report on United Nations publications policy and practice, transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in May 1984.<sup>(32)</sup> Based largely on responses to a questionnaire sent to all JIU participating organizations, United Nations regional commissions and a number of autonomous institutions, the report outlined the main features of United Nations publishing and publications policy and practice, examined specific issues related to sales and free distribution, the role of the director of publications, management information and quantity of published material, and discussed possibilities for inter-agency co-operation. In its recommendations, JIU stressed the importance of timeliness of publications and said that departments and units seeking permission to produce publications should be required to justify a production and distribution schedule. If a time-frame could not be met, services of a commercial publisher should be sought to have the publication appear on time. JIU also emphasized that each publication from the earliest stage should be directed to a specific and identifiable readership, which should be the guideline for the whole process of writing and production.

On the question of sales and free distribution, JIU recommended that approval of any publication should be based on proper information on the prospective readership, the marketing concept and sales plans; that governing bodies should, at intervals of two to three years, test the validity of the grounds for publication; and that no publication should serve merely as proof that an activity had taken place. With regard to quality control, it emphasized the role of directors of publications, whose professional talents should be encouraged, scope of action enlarged and status recognized. Noting that some United Nations organizations lacked adequate information on important aspects of publishing, JIU specifically stressed the need for appropriate accounting systems to enable them to distinguish between the direct costs of publications and those of documents. It also called for a redistribution of publications resources to allocate more money for marketing, promotion and distribution. Governing bodies should demand stricter controls on what was published and for whom and consider budgetary arrangements to redress the imbalance between production and diffusion. With regard to inter-agency co-operation, JIU recommended that ACC invite JUNC to advise on the public information aspects of publications and suggested that resources of DPI and its information centres could be used for promoting United Nations publications.

Commenting on the JIU report in August,<sup>(33)</sup> the Secretary-General pointed out a number of difficulties in implementing its recommendations, including: the United Nations had its own facilities for internal reproduction of publications at a reduced cost and therefore could not be compared to a small agency contracting out such services; publications in the United Nations system were accorded a relatively low priority in view of the more pressing need to produce documentation; and various categories of United Nations publications, because of their specific characteristics, did not lend themselves entirely to the approaches advocated in the report. In detailed comments on the specific recommendations of JIU, the Secretary-General demonstrated how those basic considerations affected United Nations publications policy and practice.

The usefulness of the JIU recommendations was stressed by ACC in its comments, transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General in October.<sup>(34)</sup> ACC based its observations on responses to the report from various United Nations organizations.

The JIU report, together with the comments of the Secretary-General and ACC, was also considered by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), which submitted its views to the Assembly in October.<sup>(35)</sup> ACABQ also stressed the generally positive reaction to JIU's recommendations, noting that a number of them were already being implemented. It suggested that the medium-term plan for 1984-1989<sup>(36)</sup> should serve as the background for their implementation and offered comments on selected issues raised by JIU.

With regard to sales and free distribution, ACABQ recommended that: the Secretary-General should periodically canvass recipients of free publications and submit the results to the relevant intergovernmental bodies; a sales staff increase should be considered through the ACC machinery; decisions on the appropriateness of recurrent publications should initially be taken by intergovernmental bodies during examination of their work programmes; marketing and sales considerations might not be the determining factor in approving a publication; governing bodies should periodically review the publications programme on the basis of readership and distribution data available; and the Secretary-General should review the pricing policy to enhance sales through a more realistic pricing formula. In relation to quality control, ACABQ concurred with the Secretary-General's suggestion to set up publications committees in main office locations and large author departments and his call for increased co-operation among bookstores of specialized agencies, regional commissions and information centres. It also agreed with JIU that statistical and other information on the costs of publications should be made available.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Assembly, in section II of resolution 39/242, concurred with ACABQ's recommendations and requested the Secretary-General to implement them.

Radiation effects

The study of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources continued in 1984 to be the main concern of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation. At its thirty-third session (Vienna, Austria, 25-29 June),<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee focused on such topics as radiation-induced cancer, developmental effects induced by irradiation in utero, early effects caused in man by high radiation doses, and hereditary effects of radiation in man and other mammalian species. Attention was also given to natural sources of radiation, exposures resulting from nuclear explosions and the associated production cycles, the radiological impact of the nuclear fuel cycle, and exposures due to medical uses of radiation and radioisotopes. It also held general discussions on evaluating, measuring and expressing the radiation-induced detriment to health. Stressing that the completeness of its conclusions rested on data produced by others, the Committee requested increased assistance from United Nations Member States, the specialized agencies, including WHO and IAEA, and other scientific organizations. The Committee also expressed appreciation to UNEP for its support, thereby enabling the Committee to carry out its mandate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 39/94 without vote.

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past twenty-nine years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

4. Endorses the Scientific Committee's intentions and plans for its future activities of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

5. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

Antarctica

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1984, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report<sup>(1)</sup> prepared in response to its December 1983 request<sup>(2)</sup> for a comprehensive and factual study of all aspects of Antarctica, taking fully into account the 1959 Antarctic Treaty system and other relevant factors. The study, examining physical, legal, political, economic and scientific aspects of Antarctica, was largely based on information provided by Member States, United Nations entities and other international organizations, following the Secretary-General's request for assistance. As of 29 October 1984, he had received replies from 54 States, whose views were presented in Part II of the report. The Secretary-General noted that most of those replies had been received during the final drafting of the analytical part of the report and some States had indicated that their replies were of an introductory or general nature. A number of important international organizations conducting research on the subject had requested more time to prepare substantive information. The Secretary-General suggested that such data could be used in future undertakings on Antarctica.

Communications. By a letter of 8 October,<sup>(3)</sup> India transmitted the text of the final communiqué adopted by an October 1984 Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the 1984 session of the General Assembly, by which it welcomed the December 1983 Assembly resolution on Antarctica<sup>(2)</sup> and expressed hope that the study and the discussions at the 1984 session would contribute to widening international co-operation on that continent. By a letter of 29 November,<sup>(4)</sup> France transmitted a communiqué of that date by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, reaffirming, on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Antarctic Treaty, France's intention to abide by that agreement. Communications in connection with the anniversary were also transmitted by Belgium, on 3 December,<sup>(5)</sup> and Norway, on 11 December.<sup>(6)</sup> In statements by their respective Foreign Ministries on 1 December, Belgium and Norway expressed support for the Treaty as a valuable instrument of international co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 39/152 without vote.

Bearing in mind the Antarctic Treaty and the significance of the system it has developed,

Taking into account the debate on this item at its thirty-ninth session,

Convinced of the advantages of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Affirming the conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue forever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

Recalling the relevant paragraphs of the Economic Declaration adopted at the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the study on the question of Antarctica;

Chapter XI

Institutional machinery

With the admission of Brunei Darussalam, United Nations membership rose to 159 in 1984.

The Security Council, in addition to its agenda, continued to examine ways of enhancing its role as an instrument for the maintenance of international peace and security, concentrating on those aspects of its work designed to promote agreement on practical measures to strengthen its effectiveness.

The General Assembly resumed and concluded its thirty-eighth session in 1984. It held the major part of its thirty-ninth session, considering 123 items of its 143-item agenda; the remainder were to be considered in 1985.

Missions of good offices and other diplomatic contacts were an important aspect of the Secretary-General's political activities during the year, with the focus on Afghanistan, Cyprus, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Iran-Iraq and Kampuchea. In his annual report to the Assembly on the Organization's work (p. 3), he emphasized the need to use international institutional machinery effectively.

Co-operation between the United Nations and intergovernmental organizations was the subject of five Assembly resolutions.

Preparations continued for the observance of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1985.

Security Council

The Security Council held 57 meetings in 1984 and adopted 14 resolutions.

Meeting numbers. SC: 2509-2565.

On 28 September, in accordance with a decision taken during consultations held on the same date, on the Secretary-General's 1982 report on the work of the Organization,<sup>(1)</sup> the Council President issued the following note:<sup>(2)</sup>

"1. The members of the Security Council, in the context of their constant endeavours to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council, and against the persistent background of a precarious international situation, continued their consideration of the role of the Council in the maintenance of international peace and security.

"2. Subject to other priorities demanding immediate attention, 10 meetings in informal consultations were devoted to this subject, in an effort carefully to analyse proposals and identify views enjoying general acceptance.

"3. In order again to structure the discussion, the members retained the five main aspects agreed to last year, as detailed in paragraph 2 of document S/15971, dated 12 September 1983, and initiated a new round of discussions on the basis of the 19 points contained in that document, to which this note is an addition.

"4. In these discussions, the members of the Council welcomed the additional relevant observations contained in the Secretary-General's report to the thirty-eighth session, as well as the considered views of members newly elected to the Council in 1984. An effort was also made to take into account all known contributions so far made by Member States on the work of the Council.

"5. Discussion this year tended to concentrate more specifically, and in detail, on particular aspects of the work of the Council, designed to promote agreement on concrete and practical measures to strengthen the effectiveness of the Security Council; conscious efforts were made to advance ideas which offered the best prospects of producing agreement.

"6. A consistent theme in the presentations was the importance of a renewed dedication by Member States for strict compliance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and the Charter itself, whose vitality and validity were strongly reaffirmed, as well as the consequent obligation of all members to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council.

"7. Due emphasis was given to the special responsibility of the Council, acting on behalf of the international community, in collective maintenance of peace and security. In this connection, members again stressed the need for prompt, relevant and current information on matters before the Council.

"8. The primary responsibility of the Council for the maintenance of international peace and security, as well as its responsibility for the prevention of international conflicts, and the Council's corresponding powers and functions under the Charter, were also emphasized. Ideas were advanced on ways and means of improving the use of procedures to enable the Security Council to contribute more effectively to the prevention of international conflicts and to the peaceful settlement of disputes.

"9. The necessity strictly to implement decisions of the Council in accordance with the Charter was also stressed, and consideration was given to ways and means to follow them up with appropriate support and action.

"10. It was again emphasized that the procedures of the Council were sufficiently flexible to adapt to conceivable requirements and that a collegial approach within the Council was desirable to facilitate considered and concerted action by the Council as the main instrument for international peace.

"11. The role of fact-finding missions undertaken by the Council was explored and modalities for their utilization suggested.

"12. The forthcoming fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations was identified as an occasion to which the Security Council could make an appropriate contribution.

"13. Members of the Council value the exchange of views they have held. They are determined to continue the exercise, which they have found of intrinsic importance, stimulating valuable contact, frank dialogue and concentrated analysis."

The foregoing issues were taken up by the General Assembly in a number of resolutions relating to the Security Council's work. By resolution 39/63 K on disarmament and international security, the Assembly called on the Council to hold a series of meetings to consider the escalating arms race—particularly the nuclear arms race—with a view to initiating procedures for bringing it to a halt. By resolutions dealing with implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Assembly recommended that the Council give priority consideration to strengthening the system of collective security provided for in the Charter (resolution 39/154), and emphasized the need for the Council to consider holding periodic meetings to review outstanding problems and also to ensure effective implementation of its decisions in compliance with relevant Charter provisions (resolution 39/155). By resolution 39/156 on strengthening of international security, the Assembly reaffirmed the obligation of States to accept and carry out the Council's decisions. Expressing awareness of the Council's functions and powers, the Assembly noted the concentration of discussion on specific aspects of the work of the Council, stressed its primary responsibility in the collective maintenance of peace and security, and encouraged it to intensify efforts in the prevention of international conflict and the peaceful settlement of disputes through systematic meetings under the five main aspects mentioned in the Council President's note of September 1983.<sup>(3)</sup> The Assembly also welcomed further periodic information from the Council on the progress achieved.

The role of the Council in maintaining international peace and security was also considered in 1984 by the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization.<sup>(4)</sup> Discussions focused on a working paper on prevention and removal of threats to peace and of situations leading to international friction, submitted by Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, New Zealand and Spain<sup>(5)</sup> (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

Agenda

Fifteen agenda items were considered by the Security Council during 1984—its thirty-ninth year. As in previous years, it adopted at each meeting the agenda for that meeting. (For list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.)

Eight of the items were included for the first time in the Council's agenda.<sup>(6)</sup> They concerned complaints lodged by Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates against Iran (one item); by the Lao People's Democratic Republic against Thailand (one item); by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya against the United States (one item); by Nicaragua against Honduras (one item) and against the United States (three items); and by the Sudan against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (one item).

In a 14 September note,<sup>(7)</sup> the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the United Nations Charter, of 13 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification.<sup>(8)</sup> The Secretary-General also listed 103 other matters not discussed by the Council during the period, but of which it remained seized.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on an oral proposal by its President, the General Assembly in November adopted decision 39/405 without vote.

Notification by the Secretary-General under Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations

At its 54th plenary meeting, on 8 November 1984, the General Assembly took note of the note by the Secretary-General dated 14 September 1984.

General Assembly decision 39/405

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 7.

In other actions related to the Security Council's responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and security, the Assembly urged the Council, by resolution 39/72 A, to consider totally excluding South Africa from the United Nations family and to give special attention to action against it under Chapter VII of the Charter. By resolution 39/72 G, the Assembly further urged the Council to take steps for the strict implementation of the 1977 mandatory arms embargo<sup>(9)</sup> and to secure an end to military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and to the import from it of military equipment supplies. With regard to Israeli practices in the occupied Arab territories, the Assembly requested the Council, in resolution 39/95 D, to ensure Israel's respect for and compliance with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, and to initiate measures to halt Israeli policies and practices in those territories.

Members

In 1984, as in the previous year, the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council was not considered.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, acting on an oral proposal by its President, who pointed out that there had been no request to consider the Council's membership at the current session, the General Assembly adopted decision 39/455 without vote.

Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council

At its 105th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council".

Burkina Faso

On 13 August 1984,<sup>(10)</sup> the President of the Security Council confirmed that following an official notification of 6 August that the name of Upper Volta had been changed to Burkina Faso, Council members decided,<sup>(6)</sup> in informal consultations held earlier on 13 August, that the current Council President (Burkina Faso) would continue in office during August and would also hold the presidency in October.

Report for 1983/1984

The Security Council report to the General Assembly for the period 16 June 1983 to 15 June 1984 was adopted by the Council in January 1985. In preparing the report, the Council shortened it by dropping summaries of official Council documents and by indicating only the subject-matter of those related to procedural matters.

Agenda

As it had decided in December 1983,<sup>(2)</sup> the General Assembly resumed its thirty-eighth session in 1984 to consider five items and one sub-item (on elections) remaining on that session's agenda. On 26 June, it elected a member of the Economic and Social Council (see APPENDIX III); and, by decision 38/448 B, decided to maintain the item on global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development on the session's agenda. On 17 September, that item and the remaining four—on the quincentenary of the discovery of America, Cyprus, implementation of United Nations resolutions, and the Iran-Iraq conflict—were deferred for inclusion in the thirty-ninth session's draft agenda by decisions 38/448 C and 38/457 to 38/460, respectively.

The thirty-ninth session had 143 items on its agenda, of which 141 were adopted by the Assembly on 21 September and two were added to the list on 9 October.<sup>(3)</sup> Inclusion of the items in the agenda, as well as their allocation to the Assembly's Main Committees or directly to plenary meetings, was recommended by the General Committee,<sup>(4)</sup> which acted on all items without vote. On 19 September, it approved a 141-item agenda on the basis of preliminary<sup>(5)</sup> and annotated<sup>(6)</sup> lists of items, a 139-item provisional agenda,<sup>(7)</sup> a one-item supplementary list,<sup>(8)</sup> and two requests for inclusion of additional items: on the anniversary of the emancipation of slaves in the British Empire<sup>(9)</sup> and on drought-stricken countries<sup>(10)</sup> (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapters XVIII and III, respectively). It also suggested deferring an item concerning East Timor (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV) to the fortieth (1985) session. On 9 October, the Committee recommended approval of two additional items proposed during the session, on the use of outer space for peaceful purposes<sup>(11)</sup> (see p. 75) and on the inadmissibility of state terrorism<sup>(12)</sup> (see p. 121).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In September and in October, after examining the recommendations of the General Committee, the Assembly adopted decision 39/402 without vote.

Adoption of the agenda and allocation of agenda items

At its 3rd and 27th plenary meetings, on 21 September and 9 October 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its first, second and third reports, adopted the agenda and the allocation of agenda items for the thirty-ninth session.

At its 3rd plenary meeting, on 21 September 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Question of East Timor".

General Assembly decision 39/402

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/39/250 & Add.1,2), 19 and 21 September and 9 October; agenda item 8.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: General Committee 1-4; plenary 3, 27, 32.

Organization of work

In its first report of 19 September 1984,<sup>(13)</sup> the General Committee made a number of recommendations concerning the organization of the thirty-ninth session, which were based on suggestions by the Secretary-General<sup>(14)</sup> and the Committee on Conferences.<sup>(15)</sup>

The recommendations provided for a schedule of daily meetings and set the duration of the general debate and 18 December as the session's closing date. Other organizational arrangements called for limits on explanations of vote and meeting records and for agreement among regional groups on the distribution of Main Committee chairmanships for the following sessions, set 1 December as the deadline for submitting draft resolutions with financial implications as well as deadlines for submitting subsidiary organ reports requiring consideration by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, and provided for a 48-hour interval between submission of and voting on proposals involving expenditure, to permit preparation of statements of administrative and financial implications. The Assembly was to urge all Member States to exercise maximum restraint in requesting circulation of material as official documents.

The General Committee also recommended authorization—subsequently granted by Assembly decision 39/403—for a number of subsidiary organs to meet during the session, and recalled a 1983 decision prohibiting smoking in small conference rooms and discouraging it in large ones.<sup>(16)</sup>

Acting on the General Committee's recommendations, the Assembly in September adopted decision 39/401 without vote.

Organization of the thirty-ninth session

At its 3rd plenary meeting, on 21 September 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its first report, adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the thirty-ninth session.

General Assembly decision 39/401

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/39/250 & Add.2) without vote, 19 September, 21 September and 9 October (meetings 1-4); agenda item 8.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: General Committee 1; plenary 3.

Representatives' credentials

At its first meeting on 11 October 1984, the Credentials Committee examined a memorandum of the previous day from the Secretary-General, reporting that 127 Member States had submitted formal credentials to the General Assembly's thirty-ninth session. The Legal Counsel indicated that the Secretary-General would report later on those Members participating in the session whose formal credentials had not been received. The Committee also heard several statements in connection with the credentials of Afghanistan, Chile and Democratic Kampuchea.

China and the United States, while not objecting to the credentials of Afghanistan, pointed out that their position should not be interpreted as acquiescence in the situation resulting from foreign aggression against that country; the USSR considered those pronouncements a distortion of facts and an interference in the internal affairs of a Member State. The USSR also reaffirmed its non-recognition of the credentials of Chile and reiterated its opposition to those of Democratic Kampuchea, an opposition shared by Cuba. On the other hand, China, Italy, Paraguay and the United States supported the validity of the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea, while the Ivory Coast noted that its acceptance of all the credentials under consideration in no way implied that it had taken a position on any ongoing international dispute. Paraguay and the United States also held that there was no basis for questioning Chile's credentials.

Acting on an oral proposal by its Chairman, the Committee adopted without vote a resolution by which it accepted the credentials received, taking into account the various reservations expressed. It also recommended for adoption a draft resolution by which the Assembly would approve the Committee's first report.<sup>(17)</sup>

On 13 December, the Committee examined a memorandum of the previous day by the Secretary-General indicating that, since the Committee's October meeting, additional formal credentials had been submitted by 29 Member States and that the appointment of the representatives of Angola and Vanuatu had been communicated to him.

Several statements were made concerning the credentials of Grenada. Expressing reservations on them, Cuba said that the current régime had been elected without the free expression of the people and therefore represented only the interests of the occupying forces. Supporting that view, the USSR stressed that acceptance of a puppet régime's credentials would be inconsistent with the United Nations Charter and the Assembly's November 1983 resolution on Grenada<sup>(18)</sup> and would harm the Organization's image. Noting that those comments raised matters that were not before the Committee, the United States said there was no basis for objecting to Grenada's credentials since they were in order.

The Committee, acting without vote, adopted a resolution orally proposed by its Chairman by which it accepted the credentials received and took into account the reservations expressed. It also submitted a draft resolution to the Assembly recommending approval of its second report.<sup>(19)</sup>

Acting on the recommendations of the Credentials Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on representatives' credentials.

On 17 October, it adopted resolution 39/3 A without vote.

The General Assembly

Approves the first report of the Credentials Committee.

General Assembly resolution 39/3 A

17 October 1984 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote
Approved by Credentials Committee (A/39/574) without vote, 11 October (meeting 1); draft orally proposed by Chairman; agenda item 3.

Before adopting the resolution, the Assembly decided, by a recorded vote of 80 to 41, with 22 abstentions, not to act on an amendment by Iran to reject the credentials of Israel. The Assembly acted on a motion by Denmark also on behalf of Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden. Reservations about Israel's credentials had been entered by 52 States (see p. 268).

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/3 B without vote.

The General Assembly

Approves the second report of the Credentials Committee.

General Assembly resolution 39/3 B

17 December 1984 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote
Approved by Credentials Committee (A/39/574/Add.1) without vote, 13 December (meeting 2); draft orally proposed by Chairman; agenda item 3.

Representation of Kampuchea in United Nations bodies was also the subject of several 1984 communications (see p. 220).

Rationalization of UN procedures

Pursuant to a December 1983 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(20)</sup> the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its April 1984 session,<sup>(21)</sup> (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV) resumed its consideration of States' proposals on rationalizing the existing procedures of the United Nations.

An open-ended Working Group of the Committee held eight meetings between 2 and 26 April, at which it resumed consideration of the proposals contained in a draft list prepared by the Philippines and Romania,<sup>(22)</sup> which included working papers submitted by a number of other States.

Based on the Group's work, the Special Committee adopted agreed conclusions, which were forwarded to the Assembly and annexed to its resolution below.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, acting on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/88 B without vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2837(XXVI) of 17 December 1971 on the rationalization of the procedures and organization of the General Assembly,

Having considered the conclusions of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization contained in paragraph 151 of its report on the work of the session it held in 1984,

Conscious of the need to discharge in the most efficient manner the functions incumbent upon it under the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the conclusions of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization as set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Decides that the conclusions referred to in paragraph 1 above shall be reproduced as an annex to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly.

ANNEX

Conclusions of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization concerning the rationalization of the procedures of the General Assembly

1. The agenda of the sessions of the General Assembly should be simplified as much as possible by grouping or merging related items, after consultation and with the agreement of the delegations concerned.*

2. Specific items should be referred, where relevant, to other United Nations organs or to specialized agencies. The right of States to request that specific items be discussed in the General Assembly should remain unimpaired.

3. The recommendation in paragraph 28 of annex V to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, according to which the Assembly should ensure, as far as possible, that the same questions, or the same aspects of a question, are not considered by more than one Main Committee, should be more fully implemented, except when it would be helpful for the Sixth Committee to be consulted on the legal aspects of questions under consideration by other Main Committees.

4. The General Committee should play more fully its role under rule 42 of the rules of procedure and paragraphs 1 and 2 of General Assembly decision 34/401, reviewing periodically the work of the Assembly and making the necessary recommendations.

5. The Chairmen of the Main Committees should take the initiative, in the light of past experience, to propose the grouping of similar or related items and the holding of a single general debate on them.

6. The Chairmen of the Main Committees should propose to the Committee the closing of the list of speakers on each item at a suitably early stage.

7. Agreed programmes of work should be respected. To this end, meetings should start at the scheduled time and the time allotted for meetings should be fully utilized.

8. The officers of each Main Committee should review periodically the progress of work. In case of need, they should propose appropriate measures to ensure that the work remains on schedule.

9. Negotiation procedures should be carefully selected to suit the particular subject-matter.

10. The Secretariat should facilitate informal consultations by providing adequate conference services.†

11. The mandate of subsidiary organs should be carefully defined in order to avoid overlapping and duplication of work. The General Assembly should also review periodically the usefulness of its subsidiary organs.

12. Resolutions should be as clear and succinct as possible.

*The view was expressed that the agreement of the delegations concerned was not an essential condition.

†The view was expressed that this recommendation was not intended to have any financial implications whatsoever and was approved subject to that condition.

Secretary-General

In his September 1984 annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (p. 3), the Secretary-General, voicing concern over the increasing questioning of the rules, instruments and modalities of multilateral co-operation, emphasized the need for the effective and correct use of international institutional machinery.

In December, the Assembly took note of the report by decision 39/413.

Good offices

During 1984, the Secretary-General pursued a number of missions of good offices entrusted to him by either the Security Council or the General Assembly. He also continued or initiated other diplomatic efforts aimed at promoting peaceful settlements of disputes. These contacts concerned Afghanistan, Cyprus, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Iran-Iraq and Kampuchea.

The Secretary-General's efforts towards a political settlement of the Afghanistan situation continued through a diplomatic process (see p. 227). His mission in Cyprus was aimed at promoting a just and lasting settlement of the conflict between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities (see p. 240). He pursued his exchanges with Argentina and the United Kingdom to try to assist them to resume negotiations to find a peaceful solution to their sovereignty dispute over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV). His mediation efforts in the Iran-Iraq conflict also continued, and in June both sides agreed to his appeal not to attack civilian population centres (see p. 229). The Kampuchea situation remained a priority matter for the Secretary-General, who maintained close contacts with representatives of the States most directly concerned and other interested parties within the framework of his good offices (see p. 218).

Co-operation with other intergovernmental organizations

Co-operation between the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations was the subject in 1984 of five General Assembly resolutions and an Economic and Social Council decision. Those organizations were: the League of Arab States, and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (see below); the Organization of African Unity (see p. 191); the Intergovernmental Bureau for Informatics, and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapters XXIV and VII, respectively); and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VII).

League of Arab States

As requested by the General Assembly in October 1983,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted on 4 September 1984 a progress report<sup>(2)</sup> on developing co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States. The report gave account of high-level consultations between the two organizations, described action taken on recommendations made at their 1983 meeting held at Tunis, Tunisia,<sup>(3)</sup> and provided information on preparations for a meeting on food and agriculture to be held in late September 1984 (see below) and a proposed meeting on social development.

Concerning implementation of the Tunis recommendations, the Secretary-General noted that, since most of the specific proposals were of a bilateral nature, follow-up action would be taken by the relevant organizations without reference to the League's General Secretariat or to the United Nations. At the multilateral level, where 37 proposals had to be dealt with, joint sectoral inter-agency working groups were to be set up after United Nations bodies and the League had completed identifying areas of direct interest to them. The Secretary-General also summarized reports received from United Nations bodies describing their action on the recommendations. The replies pertained to six main areas of co-operation: political matters; economic, financial and technical co-operation for development; food and agriculture; social development, labour, human resources and cultural affairs; refugees, disaster prevention and emergency relief, and human rights; and information and communication. While covering both bilateral and multilateral proposals, some replies contained information on action already taken; others reviewed areas of co-operation or made suggestions for further joint activities.

In an October addendum to his report,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the Assembly about a joint United Nations/League of Arab States meeting on food and agriculture in the Arab region, held at Rome, Italy, on 27 and 28 September. Upon reviewing the current situation, the League's General Secretariat and the United Nations, as well as a number of specialized agencies on each side which took part in the meeting, called for a substantial increase in capital investment and for agricultural development strategies aimed at increasing productivity. The meeting examined ways of enhancing co-operation by formal agreements and mechanisms and agreed to strengthen collaboration by joint regional studies in food security, agricultural development planning, agricultural integration and integrated rural development; co-sponsorship of regional seminars and other technical meetings; technical co-operation; joint efforts to increase investment flows; co-operation between the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and affiliated regional programmes and Arab organizations and centres; and promotion of information exchange.

During the year, the Secretary-General of the League and its Permanent Observer to the United Nations made statements at four Security Council meetings, to which they had been invited in accordance with rule 39<sup>a</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Those meetings dealt with the dispute between Iran and Iraq, and the situation in Lebanon and the Middle East.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/9 by recorded vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, in particular resolutions 36/24 of 9 November 1981, 37/17 of 16 November 1982 and 38/6 of 28 October 1983,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Having heard the statement of the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States and having noted the emphasis placed therein on follow-up projects, actions and procedures on the recommendations adopted at the meeting between representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, held at Tunis from 28 June to 1 July 1983, as well as on various sectoral activities related to development priorities in the Arab region,

Recalling the relevant Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional arrangements for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

<sup>a</sup>Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give it other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Noting with appreciation the desire of the League of Arab States to consolidate and develop the existing ties with the United Nations in all areas relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, and to co-operate in every possible way with the United Nations in the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East,

Aware of the vital importance for the countries members of the League of Arab States of achieving a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict,

Realizing that the strengthening of international peace and security is directly related, inter alia, to disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Convinced that the strengthening and furtherance of co-operation between the United Nations and the organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the work of the United Nations system and to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting that the Tunis meeting defined the framework of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States in certain priority sectors, without determining specific projects that could lend themselves to joint implementation,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in realizing the goals and objectives set forth in the Strategy for Joint Arab Economic Development adopted by the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference, held at Amman from 25 to 27 November 1980,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts towards the implementation of the recommendations of the meeting between representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system for their substantial contributions to that meeting;

3. Expresses its satisfaction at the results achieved at the meeting on food and agriculture in the Arab region, held in Rome on 27 and 28 September 1984, within the framework of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation with the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States for the purpose of implementing United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East in order to achieve a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict;

5. Requests the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, to intensify their co-operation towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and the organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

7. Takes note of the proposals and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and requests him to take the necessary steps to ensure their implementation, including the following measures:

(a) Setting up of joint sectoral inter-agency working groups for follow-up of multilateral projects;

(b) Promotion of contacts and consultations regarding projects of a multilateral nature between the counterpart agencies, programmes and bodies concerned;

(c) Follow-up of the implementation of the approved proposals mentioned in paragraph 8 of the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Calls upon the competent bodies of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system:

(a) To give urgent consideration to the various recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and to inform him not later than 15 May 1985, of the action taken on them;

(b) To promote contacts and consultations regarding projects of a bilateral nature between the counterpart agencies, programmes and bodies concerned;

9. Reaffirms its recommendation contained in resolution 38/6 that another sectoral meeting on social development be organized in April 1985, under the aegis of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, in a country member of that organization, to give careful consideration to projects prepared for joint implementation, in conformity with the priorities set forth in paragraphs 61 and 62 of the report of the Secretary-General, including joint sectoral meetings;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States concerning arrangements for the organization of the above-mentioned meeting and to provide all necessary assistance and facilities to ensure its success;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, to convene ad hoc meetings between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States for consultations on follow-up policies, projects, actions and procedures;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, at its fortieth session, a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States".

General Assembly resolution 39/9

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Ethiopia, Zaire.<sup>a</sup>

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly voted separately, at the request of the United States, on paragraph 4, retaining it by a recorded vote of 108 to 2, with 24 abstentions.

Israel said that it was voting against that paragraph and the text as a whole in view of the League's policies and activities, which contradicted the United Nations Charter and encouraged a radical approach to the Arab-Israeli conflict, as well as intransigence and terrorism against Israel.

Stressing that the paragraph referred to many resolutions repudiating fundamental United States policies for peace in the Middle East, thus compelling it to vote also against the text as a whole, the United States said it could not support resolutions requesting the Secretary-General to take actions it opposed, and had reservations about additional costs for conference servicing. Ireland, on behalf of the 10 members of the European Community, said they considered it best if resolutions of the kind just adopted, which depended on the unanimous support of the international community, addressed the question of co-operation without introducing divisive elements, and also without placing further burdens on the United Nations budget—a position shared by Japan. As to paragraph 4, the Ten drew particular attention to the fact that they had not supported all the resolutions mentioned and to the need to avoid prejudicing the Secretary-General's role.

Denmark, speaking also for five Nordic countries, said that they had abstained in the vote on paragraph 4 and voted in favour of the resolution on the understanding that the elements with political implications were not relevant and could not prejudice their positions on the substantive matter.

Ethiopia expressed its strong reservation on the text by its abstention, stating that its acceptance might be misconstrued as endorsement of the League's decisions, which Ethiopia had consistently rejected.

Organization of the Islamic Conference

In 1984, co-operation continued between the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference on a broad range of political, economic, social and cultural matters, which were highlighted by the Secretary-General in a September report<sup>(5)</sup> on implementing the General Assembly's October 1983 resolution on such co-operation.<sup>(6)</sup> The report noted that, within the framework of consultations between the two organizations, the Secretary-General addressed the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference (Casablanca, Morocco, 16-19 January), at which he also exchanged views with several heads of State or Government. The Conference adopted a series of resolutions on political, economic, social and information matters. The resolutions, reports and a final communiqué were transmitted to the Secretary-General by Morocco on 13 March.<sup>(7)</sup> Throughout the year, the two organizations continued to exchange views and information on such matters as international peace and security, decolonization and apartheid, outer space, and disarmament.

Pursuant to a decision of the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, the Executive Director of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development held consultations with the Islamic Foundation for Science and Technology for Development (Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 14 May). They agreed to confine co-operation initially to such questions as the impact of national budgets on scientific and technological capabilities. The consultations were a follow-up to the July 1983 joint meeting of the secretariats of the Islamic Conference and the United Nations system.<sup>(8)</sup> which designated lead agencies for five priority areas of co-operation. The need for a priority programme to complete various studies was emphasized by a joint working group on agricultural co-operation, which met at the headquarters of FAO (Rome, April), the lead agency for agricultural matters. The report also highlighted activities of United Nations bodies to promote economic, social and cultural co-operation with the Conference, as well as proposals for strengthening such co-operation.

At their annual co-ordinating meeting (New York, 4 October),<sup>(9)</sup> the Foreign Ministers of the Conference reviewed questions on the agenda of the Assembly's 1984 session of interest to Conference members. They adopted a communiqué, which Bangladesh transmitted to the Secretary-General on 12 October.<sup>(10)</sup> The communiqué adopted at a similar meeting in October 1983 had been transmitted earlier by Niger, on 2 May.<sup>(11)</sup> A message from the Secretary-General was delivered to the Fifteenth Islamic Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs (Sana'a, Yemen Arab Republic, 18-22 December). In its resolution on co-operation between the two organizations, the Conference called on its member States to give priority to the celebration in 1985 of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations (see below) and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter I). It also called for support of programmes drawn up by the 1984 Assembly session and for co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Disarmament. A package of documents adopted by the Fourteenth (1983) Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers had been transmitted to the Secretary-General by Bangladesh on 15 March.<sup>(12)</sup>

Regarding co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space, training courses on remote sensing applications in forestry and agriculture, co-sponsored, respectively, by the USSR and FAO in co-operation with Italy (see p. 100), were attended by participants from Conference member States.

Various United Nations entities explored further avenues of co-operation on economic, social and cultural matters. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization discussed principal areas of co-operation in promoting literacy with the Deputy Director-General for Education of the Islamic Education, Scientific and Cultural Organization (Paris, October). The United Nations Industrial Development Organization helped organize the Second Organization of the Islamic Conference Ministerial Consultation on Industrial Co-operation (Istanbul, Turkey, November 1984). The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development assisted the Permanent Committee of the Islamic Conference on Economic and Commercial Co-operation in preparing its first meeting (Istanbul, 12-16 November), and, jointly with the Islamic Centre for Development of Trade, held a seminar on the generalized system of trade preferences (Casablanca, Morocco, 26-29 November).

Other institutional questions

Fortieth anniversary of the United Nations (1985)

Pursuant to a December 1983 decision of the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Preparatory Committee for the Fortieth Anniversary of the United Nations began its work in 1984, holding five meetings in May, June, September and December. After extensive deliberations, the 98-member Committee (as at 14 December 1984) made recommendations on the observance of the fortieth anniversary, which formed the basis of a resolution and a decision adopted by the Assembly (see below). The Committee's report<sup>(2)</sup> described action initiated or envisaged by the United Nations system in connection with the anniversary. This included an Economic and Social Council decision to assess in 1985 the role of the United Nations in promoting international economic and social co-operation (see also below); and a resolution endorsing the 1984 conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination,<sup>(3)</sup> among them that an overview study of the objectives and plans of United Nations entities in the social, economic and humanitarian fields should be published by the Secretariat in connection with the anniversary (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XXIV).

Intergovernmental organizations also addressed the question of the anniversary observance at their 1984 forums. In October, the Meeting of Foreign Ministers and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly called on all members to play an active role in the preparation for and the conduct of commemorative activities and stressed the significance of the participation of their heads of State or Government at the 1985 Assembly session.<sup>(4)</sup> In September, a resolution on the anniversary was adopted by the Seventy-second Inter-Parliamentary Conference at Geneva, requesting a study of ways whereby the Inter-Parliamentary Union could be associated with the commemoration and make a contribution to it.<sup>(5)</sup>

1. Decides that, at the second regular session of 1985 of the Economic and Social Council, in the context of the general debate, special attention should be devoted to an assessment of the role of the United Nations in promoting international economic and social co-operation and to the consideration of ways of strengthening the role of the Organization and of further enhancing its effectiveness in this regard, and calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that appropriate preparations are made for these discussions;

2. Recommends that the regional commissions and other subsidiary bodies of the Council and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should take full cognizance of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations and participate actively in its observance;

3. Invites the competent intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Council to develop appropriate activities in support of the anniversary.

1. Decides that the theme of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations shall be "United Nations for a better world" and expresses the hope and desire that the year 1985 will mark the beginning of an era of durable and global peace and justice, social and economic development and progress and independence of all peoples;

2. Takes note of the programmes and activities, including those recommended by the Preparatory Committee for the Fortieth Anniversary of the United Nations, to be undertaken by the United Nations and its related organizations, as well as the programmes and activities suggested for the consideration of Governments of Member States and non-governmental organizations;

4. Decides that a commemorative session of the General Assembly shall be held for a short period, culminating on 24 October 1985 and coinciding with the proclamation of the International Year of Peace;

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic co-operation

The weak and uneven character of the world economic recovery and the poor prospects of the developing countries, particularly the least developed among them, were reviewed by numerous United Nations bodies throughout 1984. The need for urgent action regarding both the critical state of sub-Saharan Africa and the serious external debt situation of developing countries was stressed in several economic reports and during discussions on the world economic situation.

In his annual report on the work of the Organization (p. 3), the Secretary-General noted that criticism of United Nations economic institutions was easy since they often fell short of their high aims. However, only intensified multilateral co-operation could solve global economic problems in an increasingly economically interdependent world.

The Committee established to carry out the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade considered progress made towards achieving the Strategy's goals and the strengthening of its implementation. Despite the Committee's work and contributions from many United Nations sources, the exercise was not completed.

In December, the General Assembly commemorated the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and decided on a thorough review of its implementation in 1985.

Reiterating concern first expressed in 1983 about the impact of political tensions on international economic co-operation, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue consultations on the scope of possible confidence-building measures in international economic relations. The Assembly deplored the continued application of coercive economic measures against developing countries.

Discussions continued on the launching of global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development, originally scheduled to start in 1980; in December, in suspending its 1984 session, the Assembly decided to keep the item open and to reconvene to consider any agreements that might emerge from informal consultations. Discussions also continued on various aspects of the proposed new international economic order, including its legal aspects.

Economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC) continued to be discussed within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), while the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) decided to accord high priority in UNIDO's activities to industrial co-operation among those countries. The mandates of, and problems addressed by, the United Nations system in economic and technical co-operation among developing countries were discussed by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and the Economic and Social Council. The Assembly urged the United Nations system to intensify support for ECDC. Support by the system for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries was also discussed by the Organization's co-ordination bodies, while the Council considered promotion of such co-operation at the interregional level.

The World Economic Survey 1984, which gave an account of trends and policies in the world economy, was the background document for the annual discussion in the Council on international economic and social policy. UNCTAD published the fourth annual report on trade and development issues, the Trade and Development Report, 1984, which, in addition to analysing the world economic situation, focused on the international trade and payments system. A further assessment of the economic situation was carried out by the Committee for Development Planning (CDP), which identified priority areas for urgent international attention.

Broad areas of economic and social development were considered in several United Nations forums during the year. The improvement of various aspects of development planning, education, administration and information continued to be studied. The Seventh Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance took place and the programme of technical co-operation for public administration continued.

The work of the United Nations system in rural development was reviewed, with particular emphasis on alleviating the poverty of the poorest and drought-stricken countries.

Action on behalf of countries particularly affected by the world economic situation was again urged by the Assembly, which again called for immediate measures in favour of the developing countries. Preparations intensified throughout the system for the 1985 mid-term global review of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s (SNPA) for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs); to carry out the review, the Assembly decided to convene a high-level meeting of the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries. That review was discussed by UNCTAD's Trade and Development Board and the UNCTAD secretariat published The Least Developed Countries 1984 Report, the first such annual report. Country review meetings continued to be organized for individual LDCs by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which also administered the special fund for them. UNIDO's Fourth General Conference recommended that industrialization be taken fully into account in the mid-term review and requested UNIDO to strengthen its industrial development assistance to LDCs. In July, the Economic and Social Council requested CDP to consider adding Kiribati and Tuvalu to the list of the 36 LDCs and in December a request for consideration of Vanuatu was made by the General Assembly.

The particular problems of land-locked and island developing countries were kept under consideration by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board and by the Assembly which renewed calls for action on their behalf. The Assembly also renewed its appeal for contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries.

International economic relations

Development and economic co-operation

During 1984, aspects of development and economic co-operation were debated in several United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. In resolution 39/226, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue consulting Governments and United Nations organizations on confidence-building measures in international economic relations. In resolution 39/210, it deplored the continued, and in some cases increased, application of economic measures against developing countries as a means of coercion. ECDC was widely discussed, with the Assembly urging increased assistance in this area (39/216).

Substantive discussions took place on the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, both within the Committee established for that purpose and in various other United Nations bodies which contributed to its work. By resolution 39/162, the Assembly expressed disappointment that the Committee had been unable to complete its mandate successfully and requested the Secretary-General to suggest arrangements for a resumed session of the Committee in 1985. The Assembly also decided, in resolution 39/163, to review the implementation of the 1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States during 1985.

Proposals for global economic negotiations and a new international economic order continued to be considered in various United Nations forums throughout the year, with no agreement being reached.

Concern was expressed by most United Nations bodies over the economic situation in Africa, particularly in the sub-Sahara: such concerns included the fall in incomes, decreasing employment prospects and the debt-servicing problems of those countries.

CDP activities. At its May 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> CDP noted that while economic optimism had returned in some industrialized countries, many developing countries were struggling to contain social disintegration and potential political turmoil as living conditions deteriorated. It drew attention to three areas to which the international community should devote urgent attention: reform of the international monetary and financial system; the international debt situation (see also Chapter IV of this section); and development assistance on concessional terms to LDCs (see below under "Least developed countries"). The serious position of sub-Saharan Africa, where incomes in most countries had fallen steadily for a decade and in some had dropped below the levels of the mid-1960s, was also singled out by CDP as requiring special and immediate attention.

Measures proposed by CDP to assist the developing countries and safeguard the world economy included: substantial increases in the resources available to the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and in the annual lending programme of the World Bank; debt relief through capping interest payments, adding unpaid interest to principal or extending maturities; a new round of North-South trade negotiations to subject quotas and other non-tariff barriers to more effective international discipline; a substantial new allocation of IMF special drawing rights (SDRs) to restore the reserves of developing countries; the achievement of the targeted level of $12 billion for the seventh three-year replenishment of the International Development Association (IDA); and more abundant and flexible multilateral and official development assistance to sub-Saharan Africa.

Two CDP working groups met during the year: one on interdependence and multilateralism (Geneva, 12-14 October) and the other on domestic economic policies and surveillance (Geneva, 16 and 17 November).

ACC activities. At its first regular session of 1984 (London, 16-18 April), the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) discussed a paper prepared by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) on employment and development: problems and perspectives. The paper, annexed to the ACC annual report to the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(2)</sup> was designed to raise issues for discussion rather than present a comprehensive analysis or suggest solutions. Trends and prospects for world economic recovery and industrial development in the developing countries were described and it was noted that an adjustment process had to take place under three major constraints: inflation; the balance-of-payments disequilibrium; and mounting unemployment and underemployment. The paper suggested several guidelines to make adjustment measures more tolerable: slashing of unproductive spending, including armaments, and conspicuous luxury consumption; protection of the poorest and preservation of their productive capacity; concentration of resources on more economically productive and socially useful programmes and development of human skills; building up of physical infrastructure to absorb manpower while creating productive permanent assets; increasing labour mobility in occupational and geographic terms; and avoidance of protectionism, aiming instead at self-reliant development.

ACC members commented on various aspects of the paper from the perspective of their respective organizations. Some points made included: the need to create jobs and employment in all countries; the need for short-term adjustment programmes in developing countries to be supplemented by longer-term structural adjustment, for which large-scale development assistance was critical; the need for integrated rural development programmes to increase agricultural production and non-agricultural employment opportunities in rural areas where the majority of the population of developing countries lived; the need for development of the industrial sector in developing countries and for manpower training; and the need for basic adjustment in the agricultural policies of some developed countries with regard to subsidized production and trade.

ACC noted that United Nations organizations had made substantial contributions to the employment and development issue which was extremely complicated and not amenable to easy solution; there was, however, a need for greater sharing of views and experiences both bilaterally between organizations and system-wide. ACC adopted a decision<sup>(3)</sup> by which it decided that its Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives should carry out a follow-up study on employment and development and that the ILO background paper, as revised to reflect the ACC discussion, be brought to the attention of CDP.

The Task Force devoted its thirteenth session (Geneva, 28-30 November)<sup>(4)</sup> to the question of employment and development: medium- and long-term perspectives and problems. It noted a deterioration in the employment situation in many developing countries. In Latin America, reported unemployment had increased significantly since 1980 and informal sector activities had grown, reversing a long-term trend towards more regular full-time employment, at least in urban areas. The urban unemployment situation had also deteriorated in Africa where, for some countries, estimates suggested that it could be as high as 25 per cent of the labour force. Even in Asia, urban unemployment had increased in some countries. Youth unemployment was a particularly disturbing feature of the situation.

The prospects for obtaining employment in the developing world were alarming, the Task Force noted. Projections indicated that between 1980 and the turn of the century, the working-age population (between 15 and 64 years of age) would increase by 85 per cent in Africa, 66 per cent in Latin America, 64 per cent in South Asia and 44 per cent in East Asia. The 15- to 19-year-old age group—of special importance, since it constituted the new entrants to the working-age population—would increase by more than 60 per cent in the developing world as a whole. The Task Force noted some calculations which determined that a 7 per cent per annum rate of economic growth would be required to provide employment to the fast-growing labour force.

Changes in the external environment which the Task Force considered could contribute to increasing production and employment in developing countries included: more rapid economic growth in the industrialized countries which could generate policies more favourable to co-operation with the developing world; the adoption of appropriate employment policies in the developed countries to ease adjustment to the evolving international division of labour; reduction of protectionism and establishment of a more stable organization of trade relations; maintenance of financial flows to developing countries; and increased emphasis on technical assistance, especially human resource development.

The Task Force suggested possible internal policies for the developing countries to maximize chances for rapid economic growth and for greater absorption of the expanding labour force, including: employment promotion measures at all levels from central government to local communities, involving participation by workers' and employers' organizations, co-operatives and farmers' associations; employment concerns to be built into development plans; development of broad-based education and training systems for a flexible labour force; production of goods for domestic consumption to be carried out in small and medium-sized enterprises; and the establishment of price and income (especially wages) policies.

World Economic Survey 1984. During its annual discussion of international economic and social policy, which took place in July (see below), the Economic and Social Council had before it the World Economic Survey 1984,<sup>(3)</sup> prepared by the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA) and based on information available as at 31 March 1984.

Following its analysis of recent trends and prospects in the world economy (see below), the Survey concluded that there were a number of directions that current policy should take to improve the international economic environment and set the stage for sustained, non-inflationary growth: easing of import constraints and increased export capacities in developing countries and a progressive adjustment of productive structures in developed countries would improve growth prospects; lower interest rates would stimulate investment in developed and developing countries and ease the debt-service burden of many of the latter; relaxation of cautious fiscal policies in Japan and Western Europe could result in higher growth rates; redesigning the national and group-wide economic policies of the European centrally planned economies would achieve and sustain a higher pace of growth; halting and reversing protectionist measures would restore dynamism to international trade; an immediate issue of SDRs could alleviate the liquidity problems of many developing countries; revival of trade among developing countries would foster diversification and economic growth; increased food aid and improved food distribution would alleviate the critical situation in sub-Saharan Africa; greater flows of bilateral and multilateral official development assistance would facilitate structural adjustment and reactivate development in low-income countries; resumption of international lending to highly indebted countries would avoid further retrenchment as would conversion of medium- to long-term debt instruments; increased availability of long-term capital would help revive investment in developing countries; and programmes to correct balance-of-payments disequilibria of developing countries should combine demand-management policies and supply-side measures.

In the general discussion of international economic and social policy in the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(6)</sup> opinions differed on whether to characterize the world recovery as soundly based or as weak and fragile, but there was consensus on the need to avoid complacency since many developing countries, particularly in Africa and those caught in debt-servicing difficulties, continued to face critical situations. It was widely recognized that the social dimension should be more explicitly taken into account in programming adjustment.

Of particular concern was the question of how to improve upon the outlook for the remainder of the decade. Attention focused on more efficient use of resources, increasing employment, accelerating structural adjustment and fostering the development of human resources. Possibilities for reform and adaptation of international monetary, financial and trade relations were discussed, as were developments in sectoral and regional areas of co-operation and in the broad framework of international economic co-operation.

Report of the Secretary-General. In his September 1984 report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (p. 3), the Secretary-General stated that global economic relations had changed significantly since the post-war years when most international economic institutions began their work. Developing countries looked on these institutions as insufficiently responsive to their needs, a perception strengthened by recent serious economic difficulties. United Nations economic institutions often fell short of their aims; nevertheless, multilateral co-operation had achieved much and, despite the difficulties involved, it would be short-sighted to turn away from the concept and the institutions which embodied it.

In the domain of global issues, many United Nations contributions were in less tangible forms, such as raising global consciousness on key issues and shaping international debates on major problems. It was in no small measure due to the discussions on the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade<sup>(7)</sup> that the world community was giving priority to the cause of development.

Regarding politicization of economic issues in the United Nations, the Secretary-General pointed out that this reflected the frustrations which developing countries felt in their long attempt to reshape their economic destiny.

A new consensus on economic issues in the light of world economic and political realities had not yet emerged, said the Secretary-General, but its absence need not prevent progress in critical areas. In a world of growing economic interdependence, impoverished people faced perpetually with overwhelming economic and social crises constituted not only a challenge to international conscience but a threat to international stability.

Communications. Several communications dealing with general aspects of international economic relations were received by the Secretary-General in 1984.

On 9 February,<sup>(8)</sup> Ecuador transmitted the text of the Quito Declaration and Plan of Action, a Latin American and Caribbean response to the economic crisis affecting the region, agreed to at the Latin American Economic Conference (Quito, Ecuador, 9-13 January). The Declaration expressed anxiety over conditions prevailing in the world economy which seriously affected the region's development and stability (see Chapter VIII of this section).

In a communiqué transmitted by Morocco on 13 March,<sup>(9)</sup> the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference (Casablanca, Morocco, 16-19 January) indicated policies to be adopted by member Governments to strengthen economic co-operation among them and to consolidate the Islamic World Development Programme.

On 15 March,<sup>(10)</sup> Bangladesh transmitted the resolutions and final declaration adopted by the Fourteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 6-11 December 1983); a resolution on the world economy and the Islamic countries urged international co-operation to accelerate the development of the developing countries.

In a declaration of 19 May transmitted by Argentina, Brazil, Colombia and Mexico on 21 May,<sup>(11)</sup> their Presidents proposed that measures be adopted to transform international financial and trade policy (see also Chapter IV of this section).

On 12 June,<sup>(12)</sup> the United Kingdom transmitted the London Economic Declaration issued at the tenth Economic Summit (London, 7-9 June), attended by the heads of State or Government of seven major industrialized countries (Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, United States) and the President of the Commission of the European Communities. The Declaration outlined economic and financial policies which would spread the benefits of economic recovery within the industrialized countries and also to the developing countries. A letter to the participants in the London Summit from the President of Panama, transmitted by Panama on 11 June,<sup>(13)</sup> drew attention to the serious economic situation in Latin America and that of the developing countries in general and requested the participants to initiate a North-South dialogue to spur on global economic negotiations (see below). On 12 June,<sup>(14)</sup> Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru and Venezuela transmitted a letter from their Presidents to the Summit participants calling for the situation of the Latin American economies, particularly the issues of trade, financing and external debt, to be considered at the Summit and drawing attention to the Quito Declaration and Plan of Action.<sup>(8)</sup>

On 18 June,<sup>(15)</sup> Yugoslavia transmitted the text of the final statement adopted at the second session of the Interaction Council (Brioni, Yugoslavia, 24-26 May). The Council, comprising 26 former heads of State or Government, suggested policies to deal with the debt crisis, promote development, improve trade relations, co-ordinate policy and institutions, and reform international monetary arrangements.

The USSR, on 22 June,<sup>(16)</sup> transmitted a statement on further development and intensification of economic, scientific and technical co-operation among the member countries of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) which met in a high-level Economic Conference at Moscow (12-14 June). Also transmitted was the declaration of the CMEA members on maintenance of peace and international economic co-operation.

On 26 June,<sup>(17)</sup> Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela transmitted the text of the Cartagena Consensus on the economic, social and financial situation of Latin America, signed by their Ministers for Foreign Affairs and of Finance at Cartagena, Colombia, on 22 June (see also Chapter IV of this section). On 3 October,<sup>(18)</sup> the same countries forwarded the text of the Mar del Plata Communiqué, signed at Mar del Plata, Argentina, on 14 September, which supplemented and developed the Cartagena Consensus.

A Declaration adopted at the eighth annual meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 developing countries, held in New York (26-28 September) on the Group's twentieth anniversary, was transmitted by Mexico on 28 September.<sup>(19)</sup> The Declaration covered economic issues of multilateral co-operation for development as well as other issues of concern to the General Assembly.

A statement annexed to a letter of 4 October<sup>(20)</sup> from the German Democratic Republic described aid provided by that State to developing countries and national liberation movements in 1983. Information on Czechoslovakia's economic assistance to developing countries was transmitted on 6 December.<sup>(21)</sup>

In the final communiqué adopted by the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 1-5 October), transmitted by India on 8 October,<sup>(22)</sup> the participants expressed grave concern at the persistent world economic crisis and its impact on the developing countries.

The communiqué of the thirty-ninth session of CMEA<sup>(23)</sup> (Havana, Cuba, 29-31 October) was transmitted by Cuba on 5 November. The participants reaffirmed their determination to carry out the programme of action developed by the Economic Conference for improving international economic relations (see above).

On 15 November,<sup>(24)</sup> France transmitted the Lisbon Declaration on North-South: Europe's role, adopted by a Conference on the subject organized by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (Lisbon, Portugal, 9-11 April).

On 29 November,<sup>(25)</sup> Romania forwarded an extract from a report on recent and future activities of the Romanian Communist Party in economic and social development, as well as the direction of Romania's foreign policy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee devoted a major part of its 1984 session to development and international economic co-operation, making recommendations on a large number of specific topics (see APPENDIX IV, agenda item 80). A list of pertinent documents was included in part I of the Committee's report on this item.<sup>(26)</sup> The Assembly took note of part I in December when it adopted decision 39/426 as orally proposed by the President.

Development and international economic co-operation

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 17 December 1984, the General Assembly took note of part I of the report of the Second Committee.

General Assembly decision 39/426

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 80.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 16-23, 26-28, 31, 33, 35-37, 39-47, 50, 53-55; plenary 103.

In resolution 39/218 of 18 December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ascertain the views of Member States on expanding international co-operation in money, finance, debt and resource flows, including development assistance and trade, with special attention to the interests of developing countries and the effects of the economic crisis on their development, and to report to the Assembly in 1985.

Proposed global economic negotiations

Discussion on launching a round of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, originally scheduled to begin in 1980,<sup>(27)</sup> continued throughout 1984.

On 11 June,<sup>(13)</sup> Panama transmitted a letter from its President, who was also President of the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly, to the London Economic Summit of the seven major industrialized countries. He recalled that the General Assembly's 1979 decision to launch global negotiations<sup>(27)</sup> was a response to the concern of the international community, and particularly of the developing countries, regarding lack of tangible progress towards establishing a new international economic order. He drew attention to the economic crisis which had serious repercussions on the great majority of developing countries and requested the Summit participants to consider initiating a new high-level North-South dialogue in order to spur on the global negotiations.

Communications forwarded by Bangladesh,<sup>(10)</sup> India,<sup>(22)</sup> Mexico<sup>(19)</sup> and the USSR<sup>(16)</sup> also called for early launching of the negotiations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June, at the resumed thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly, the Assembly President gave an account of consultations which had been taking place since the beginning of the year and noted the successful conclusion in February of the exploratory process, begun during the Assembly's 1983 session. The Assembly, therefore, adopted decision 38/448 B without vote, on the President's oral proposal.

At its 105th plenary meeting, on 26 June 1984, the General Assembly decided that the item be maintained on the agenda of its thirty-eighth session and that contacts among delegations on this question be continued with a view to the convening of another round of informal meetings in the early part of September to consider appropriate action by the Assembly before the closure of the session.

General Assembly decision 38/448 B

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 38.

At the closing meeting of the resumed thirty-eighth session on 17 September, after the President again reported on the informal consultations and pointed out that it had not been possible to make further substantive progress, the Assembly adopted decision 38/448 C without vote.

At its 106th plenary meeting, on 17 September 1984, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development".

General Assembly decision 38/448 C

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 38.

When the Assembly again took up the matter, in December, the President reported that informal consultations had continued during the thirty-ninth session. He reminded Member States of the continuing validity of the concept of global negotiations, and appealed to them to renew their commitment to co-operate so as to launch the negotiations at the earliest practicable date.

On 18 December, the Assembly adopted decision 39/454 A without vote, as orally proposed by the President.

At its 105th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly decided to keep the item open in order to allow for the continuation of informal consultations after the suspension of the session and to reconvene on short notice to consider any decisions or agreements that might emerge from the negotiations.

General Assembly decision 39/454 A

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 38.

Also on 18 December, the Assembly decided by decision 39/456 to resume its thirty-ninth session, at a date to be announced, to consider several agenda items, one of which was on the launching of global negotiations.

International Development Strategy for the Third UN Development Decade

The year 1984 saw the beginning of the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s), as provided for in the Strategy adopted by the Assembly in 1980<sup>(7)</sup> and reaffirmed in 1982.<sup>(28)</sup> Guidelines for conducting the system-wide review and appraisal procedure were contained in a December 1983 Assembly resolution.<sup>(29)</sup>

UNCTAD action. In accordance with a 1983 UNCTAD Trade and Development Board decision,<sup>(30)</sup> a high-level intergovernmental group of officials met (Geneva, 30 January-10 February) to consider the review and appraisal of the Strategy's implementation. The group had before it two related 1983 reports by the UNCTAD secretariat.<sup>(31)</sup> The group decided to annex to its report to the Board<sup>(32)</sup> documents presented by the Group of 77, Group D (centrally planned economies) and Mongolia, and Group B (developed market economies), and texts resulting from informal discussions.

In introducing the report to the thirteenth special session of the Trade and Development Board (Geneva, 2-6 April), the Vice-Chairman of the high-level group pointed out that, while the texts resulting from informal discussions reflected a large measure of agreement, square brackets in the text indicated some phrases on which agreement had not been reached or which represented the individual positions of different groups. The group had agreed that negotiations would continue in order to improve on broad areas of consensus and had discussed the introduction to the text but not completed its consideration. The question of review and appraisal per se was not discussed and taken up by the Board. However, the views of regional groups were reflected in the documents annexed to the high-level group's report.

On 6 April, the Board decided<sup>(33)</sup> to transmit the text of the introduction, together with the texts resulting from the informal discussions of the high-level group and the report on its thirteenth special session, to the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see below). The Board noted that progress had been made during its twenty-eighth (March/April 1984) regular session on a programme of work on protectionism and structural adjustment and on a set of conclusions on the debt and development problems of developing countries (see Chapter IV of this section), matters which were of direct relevance to the Strategy's review and appraisal.

The text, which was annexed to the Board's decision, represented UNCTAD's contribution to the review and appraisal process. The introduction comprised a number of basic ideas regarding the context, scope and intent of the review and appraisal; as in the case of the composite text, it contained some paragraphs in square brackets on which regional groups had not been able to reach agreement. The composite text dealt with areas falling within UNCTAD's competence: commodities, international trade, financial and monetary issues for development, least developed countries, technology, shipping, land-locked developing countries, island developing countries, trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems, and ECDC.

UNIDO action. In a 19 May conclusion<sup>(34)</sup> on follow-up to the Third (1980) General Conference of UNIDO and the eleventh special session of the General Assembly,<sup>(35)</sup> held in 1980 to assess progress made by the United Nations system towards establishing a new international economic order, the UNIDO Industrial Development Board agreed that the conclusions of the review and appraisal of the Strategy's implementation could be taken into account for accelerating the industrialization process in developing countries.

ACC action. ACC, in its overview report for 1983/84,<sup>(2)</sup> stated that it attached the greatest importance to the review and appraisal of the Strategy's implementation and noted that United Nations organizations were contributing to the process. The results of sectoral reviews conducted in the governing and legislative organs of a number of organizations were being submitted to the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Strategy (see below), as was the report of the ACC Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives on the subject.<sup>(30)</sup>

ACC also carried out a system-wide review of the implementation of the Strategy concerning the environment which was included in its annual report to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) (see below).

UNEP action. At its twelfth session (Nairobi, Kenya, 16-29 May), the UNEP Governing Council had before it the annual report of ACC to the Council, with an addendum reviewing the Strategy's implementation as far as environment was concerned.<sup>(36)</sup> The review outlined progress made and ways of accelerating it. Progress in dealing with environment in the United Nations on a system-wide basis was assessed, as were overall indicators of progress. The review discussed environmental aspects of some development sectors such as food and agriculture, health, energy, industry, human settlements, and trade. Desertification control activities were also assessed.

The report concluded that progress made to give effect to environment-related directives had not been adequate to achieve environmental goals, although consciousness of environmental changes and appreciation of their bearing on social and economic well-being had grown in the developing countries. However, unless the environmental issue was integrated into decision-making on development, the Strategy's goal of sustainable development would remain elusive.

In a 28 May decision on co-ordination,<sup>(37)</sup> the UNEP Council took note of the ACC report, reiterated the importance of environmental considerations for the successful implementation of the Strategy and invited the Committee on the Review and Appraisal to stress those considerations.

Committee on the Strategy. The Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, established with universal membership by the General Assembly in 1982,<sup>(28)</sup> held its 1984 substantive session in New York from 7 to 25 May and from 10 to 18 September,<sup>(38)</sup> an organizational session having been held in December 1983.<sup>(39)</sup> In accordance with an Assembly resolution of the same month,<sup>(29)</sup> the Committee held informal consultations on 20 January to review the preparation of documentation and held substantive informal consultations from 23 April to 4 May. Informal consultations were also held at Geneva in July during the second regular session of the Economic and Social Council (see below). On 10 September, the Committee established an informal drafting group which considered an informal negotiating text prepared by the Chairman; the group was not able to complete its discussions on that text.

In its 1982 resolution,<sup>(28)</sup> the Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to submit to it, through the Committee and the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive report and other documentation on the subject, a request reiterated in 1983.<sup>(29)</sup>

The Secretary-General submitted such a report in March 1984<sup>(40)</sup> assessing progress made in the first years of the Decade towards the Strategy's goals and objectives and in implementing the policy measures recommended for realizing them. The report indicated reasons for shortfalls in performances, discussed changes in economic circumstances since the Strategy's adoption, and considered prospects for and measures needed over the balance of the Decade. It drew extensively on recent work by the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations on trends and policies and on review and appraisal of the Strategy itself. Particular use was made of papers submitted to and discussions within inter-agency meetings convened under the auspices of ACC.<sup>(30)</sup>

The report's introduction noted that the adoption of the Strategy in 1980, at a time when the economic situation was deteriorating, had reaffirmed the need for collective action to create an international environment more supportive of national development efforts. Few foresaw, however, that the recession would be so prolonged, would compel so many countries to retrench so deeply and would bring the system of international economic relations into such severe straits.

The actual economic performance of developing countries since 1980 was in stark contrast to the growth path traced in the Strategy: as a group, per capita output declined in each of the Decade's first three years; adverse trends in international trade and finance brought their external accounts under pressure and depressed domestic production and investment; export earnings, particularly from primary commodities, fell and the net inflow of financial resources contracted; and external payments difficulties were exacerbated by the debt-service burden which had been transformed by rising interest rates, shortened repayment periods and additional borrowing.

Looking at the balance of the Decade, the report discussed the likely evolution of the world economy and suggested some main issues confronting the international community in reaccelerating development. In the short term, the report noted two striking characteristics of the current evolution of the world economy: while recovery was taking place in the developed market economies, it did not follow that developing countries would be drawn into a similar upswing in activity; and economic events and policies within each group of countries were a major influence on performance of the others but not necessarily mutually reinforcing, and many of them were contradictory.

Addressing future prospects, the report projected an aggregate growth in the developing world between 1986 and 1990 in the range of 3.5 to 4.5 per cent per annum, yielding very modest increases in per capita output over the Decade as a whole, with the least developed and other low-income countries recording the slowest rates of economic expansion. The rate of growth of gross domestic product (GDP) in the developed market economies could be in the range of no more than 2.5 to 3 per cent per annum for the same period, due mainly to loss of dynamism of capital formation.

The third section of the report assessed trends and policies in individual sectors of both national economies and the international economy. It reviewed progress in implementing policy measures recommended in the Strategy and considered needed changes for the future in: international trade; industrialization; food and agriculture; financial resources for development; international monetary issues; technical co-operation; science and technology for development; energy; transport; economic and technical co-operation among developing countries; least developed, developing island and land-locked developing countries; environment; human settlements; disaster relief; and social development.

In comparing actual performance of developing countries with targets set in the Strategy for some of these areas, the report noted that for international trade, volumes of exports and imports of goods and services were to expand at annual rates of 7.5 and 8 per cent respectively, whereas in 1983 they had fallen to -0.5 and -7 per cent. Manufacturing production had grown by less than 2 per cent per annum during 1981-1982 against the target of 9 per cent. The growth target for agricultural production in developing countries was set at 4 per cent per annum, which was exceeded in 1981. However, there was a sharp slow-down in 1982 with particularly pronounced shortfalls in Africa. The target for gross domestic saving was to reach 24 per cent of GDP by 1990, with those countries having a ratio of less than 15 per cent to make efforts to raise it to 20 per cent as early as possible; estimates indicated that the saving rate had declined steadily from almost 25 per cent in 1980 and by 1983 might have been close to 20 per cent.

The Strategy set a target for official development assistance (ODA) by all developed countries to reach and possibly surpass 0.7 per cent of their gross national product (GNP) by 1985 and in any case not later than in the second half of the Decade, with a target of 1 per cent to be reached as soon as possible thereafter. The report stated that ODA from all sources declined in both 1981 and 1982. For the developed market economies, the share of ODA in GNP in 1982 was 0.38 per cent, little different from that recorded in 1980. Although members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) had a combined ODA/GNP ratio of about 1.2 per cent for 1982, assistance had declined since 1980 due to their worsening balance-of-payments position. Among centrally planned economies, the USSR reported an increase in net economic assistance to developing countries from 0.9 per cent of GNP in 1976 to 1.3 per cent in 1980 and 1981, Bulgaria reported 0.79 per cent of net national product over the period 1976 to 1981, Czechoslovakia reported 0.74 per cent of national income in 1982, and the German Democratic Republic reported 0.78 per cent of such income in 1981 and 0.79 per cent in 1982.

The report was complemented by a separate report on social aspects of development, requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1983 (see Chapter XIII of this section).

Among other documents submitted to the Committee's May session were a formal proposal by Mexico on behalf of the Group of 77 setting out policy measures for further implementation of the Strategy, and informal proposals by China, the European Economic Community (EEC), Japan, the Nordic countries and the United States, all of which were annexed to the Committee's report.<sup>(38)</sup>

Also brought to the attention of the Committee, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council was a letter of 26 April,<sup>(41)</sup> by which the Ukrainian SSR, also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, transmitted a joint statement on the review and appraisal of the Strategy's implementation. By a letter of 23 May,<sup>(42)</sup> the USSR transmitted a communication to the three bodies on its contribution to the Strategy's implementation.

CPC/ACC Joint Meetings. The implementation of the Strategy, with special emphasis on Africa, was discussed at Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC (Geneva, 2 and 3 July).<sup>(43)</sup> They concluded that overall progress in the Strategy's implementation had been disappointingly slow and limited. This was widely perceived as a symptom of the overall crisis of the international economy and of multilateral co-operation. Within the context of the Strategy, the crucial nature of the problems facing African countries was recognized. The Secretary-General's initiative in consulting his colleagues in the United Nations system with regard to the unprecedented economic and social crisis in Africa was welcomed and the importance of a coherent and co-ordinated approach to that question stressed. It was also recognized that attention should be paid to both the immediate needs and the medium- and longer-term developmental requirements in addressing the problems of Africa. The importance of taking into account the social dimension of development was emphasized and it was suggested that the 1985 Meetings could discuss the follow-up of the Strategy's implementation in the light of the outcome of the review and appraisal.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Committee on the Review and Appraisal held informal consultations during the July session of the Economic and Social Council and, on 20 July, the Committee Chairman informed the Council that although the Committee had reached wide agreement, there were several key issues (mobilization of financial resources for development, international monetary and financial questions, and industrialization) on which there had not been a sufficient meeting of minds. Therefore, he was to prepare a negotiating text for the Committee's September meetings (see above).

On the proposal of its President, the Council adopted decision 1984/159 without vote.

Review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 20 July 1984, the Council:

Decade on the work of the Committee and decided to endorse the arrangements outlined therein for the completion of the work of the Committee;

(b) Decided that the final report of the Committee should be submitted directly to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

(c) Decided to invite all Governments to make every effort to ensure the successful conclusion of the work of the Committee.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/159

Adopted without vote

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 20 July 1984, the Council took note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, prepared in pursuance of General Assembly resolutions 37/202 of 20 December 1982 and 38/152 of 19 December 1983, and on the social aspects of development, prepared in pursuance of Economic and Social Council decision 1983/123 of 26 May 1983, and decided to transmit those reports to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session for consideration.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/160

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 5.

In a 26 July resolution (1984/61 B), the Council took note of the report of the Chairmen of CPC and ACC on their Joint Meetings devoted to the implementation of the Strategy.

Recalling its resolution 38/152 of 19 December 1983, in which it reaffirmed that the process of review and appraisal of the implementation of the Strategy should consist of systematic scrutiny, within the context of an overall review of the international economic situation, of the progress made towards achieving the goals and objectives of the Strategy, and should ensure its effective implementation and strengthen it as an instrument of policy,

Taking note of the report on the work of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, as well as of the report of the Secretary-General,

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.1) without vote, 11 December (meeting 59); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.136), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.122); agenda item 80 (a). Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 56, 59; plenary 103.

The draft approved by the Second Committee differed from that put forward by the Group of 77 in that, in addition to drafting changes, the Group's text referred to a mid-term review and appraisal rather than the first. In paragraph 1, the Assembly would have deeply regretted that the Committee had been unable to carry out its mandate, and, in paragraph 3, would have reaffirmed further the urgent need to carry out the necessary adjustments, intensification or reformulation of the Strategy's policy measures.

Also on 17 December, by decision 39/427, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on social aspects of development. In resolution 39/222 of 18 December, on the United Nations Children's Fund, the Assembly reaffirmed the Strategy's goals with reference to children, in particular the goals of ensuring children's immunization against major diseases by 1990 and of reducing the infant mortality rate to fewer than 50 per 1,000 live births by the year 2000.

Proposed new international economic order

During 1984, aspects of a new international economic order, called for by the General Assembly in 1974,<sup>(44)</sup> continued to be discussed in several United Nations bodies.

In March, the Commission on Human Rights recommended that the Economic and Social Council should arrange for a study on the new order and the promotion of human rights, completed in 1983,<sup>(45)</sup> to be published and given wide distribution in all United Nations official languages. By decision 1984/133 of 24 May, the Council agreed to the Commission's recommendation (see Chapter XVIII of this section).

In October, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research submitted to the General Assembly the third and final phase of an analytical study on the progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order, plus a summary and outline of the study to facilitate debate. On 13 December, in resolution 39/75, the Assembly urged Member States to submit their comments on the study, including proposals for further action (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI).

At its June/July session, the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) had before it a report of its Working Group on the New International Economic Order concerning a draft legal guide on drawing up contracts for construction of industrial works. The Commission agreed that, in order to expedite the Group's work on the legal guide, it should hold two sessions prior to UNCITRAL's 1985 session. In September,<sup>(46)</sup> the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board took note of UNCITRAL's report. On 13 December, in resolution 39/82, the Assembly called on UNCITRAL to continue to take account of its 1974 and 1975 resolutions concerning the new international economic order and commended UNCITRAL for progress made towards preparing the legal guide (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI).

In other related action, the Assembly, by resolution 39/8 of 8 November, reaffirmed the determination of the United Nations to work closely with the Organization of African Unity towards the establishment of the new order. In resolution 39/162 of 17 December (see above), the Assembly reaffirmed the need to adjust, intensify or reformulate the International Development Strategy's policy measures in order for it to contribute effectively to the development of developing countries, with a view to establishing the new order.

Confidence-building measures

In response to a 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(47)</sup> the Secretary-General in June 1984 submitted to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council a report on confidence-building in international economic relations.<sup>(48)</sup> As requested by the Assembly, he had asked all States and United Nations bodies concerned for their views on confidence-building measures to promote and accelerate international economic co-operation.

The report comprised excerpts from replies received from 21 Member States which, in general, addressed three clusters of largely mutually supportive measures: reaffirmation of the basic principles and instruments of international economic co-operation; co-operative efforts to promote recovery, accelerate development and achieve progress in negotiations, including those dealing with reduction of military expenditures; and new measures to promote or reinforce confidence in co-operation, including methods for exchanging information and an international mechanism with consultative or conciliatory functions. The replies received from United Nations bodies were summarized.

In concluding remarks, the report stated that the measures proposed by those replying covered a wide range of issues and the general tone was that the United Nations had a major role to play in strengthening confidence in economic relations. However, the number of responses did not provide a sufficient basis for the Secretary-General to recommend a specific course of action. He had on several occasions drawn Member States' attention to the need for urgent action to improve the state of the global economy and especially to accelerate the development of developing countries. It was clear that the problems faced in improving international economic relations could not be separated from the parallel deterioration of the political climate in the international community and action on several fronts appeared to be required.

A working paper on confidence-building, transmitted to the Council<sup>(49)</sup> and the Assembly<sup>(50)</sup> by Poland, suggested that, in addition to disarmament, the United Nations might focus on confidence-building in finance, trade, science and technology, food and general guidelines of behaviour.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, on the proposal of its President, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1984/186.

Report of the Secretary-General on confidence-building in international economic relations

At its 50th plenary meeting, on 27 July 1984, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on confidence-building in international economic relations, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 38/196 of 20 December 1983.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/186

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 3.
Meeting numbers: ESC 47, 49, 50.

A draft resolution on the same topic, sponsored by Benin, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Poland and the Syrian Arab Republic,<sup>(51)</sup> was withdrawn after informal consultations. By this text, the Council would have invited States and United Nations bodies to continue exchanging views in order to identify measures to reinforce confidence in economic relations, requested CDP to consider such measures, requested the Secretary-General to prepare a study on the scope of possible confidence-building measures and the role of the United Nations in the exercise, and recommended that the Assembly consider the issue as one of the vital notions in commemorating the United Nations fortieth anniversary in 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/226.

Confidence-building in international economic relations

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in response to its resolution 38/196 of 20 December 1983 on confidence-building in international economic relations,

Recalling that the spirit of mutual confidence made possible the founding of the United Nations nearly forty years ago,

Convinced that the state of, and trends prevailing in, the world economy, as well as the deteriorating international climate, call for new efforts aimed at enhancing confidence in international economic relations,

Convinced also that there can be no sustained global development unless there is an improvement in the economic situation of the developing countries, which depends, inter alia, on structural adjustments in the international financial and trading system and on the reinforcement of confidence among all States in their economic relations,

Reiterating its concern over the impact of political tensions on international economic co-operation and over the increasing departure from the multilateral platform of economic exchanges and negotiations on key development issues,

1. Invites all States and the United Nations bodies and organizations concerned to continue the exchange of views on confidence-building in international economic relations and on ways and means of enhancing such confidence;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with Governments and the United Nations bodies and organizations concerned on the scope of possible confidence-building measures in international economic relations and on the role of the United Nations in that endeavour, and to present his analysis and conclusions thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/789) by recorded vote (93-18-10), 30 November (meeting 54); draft by Poland (A/C.2/39/L.30), orally corrected; agenda item 12. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 41, 54; plenary 104.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

The recorded vote in the Second Committee was requested by the United States. Explaining their votes, Egypt, India and Pakistan regretted that a draft on confidence-building had been put to a vote, while the Sudan gave that reason for its non-participation. The German Democratic Republic, speaking on behalf of the socialist States of Eastern Europe and Mongolia, said it was deplorable that some delegations had been unable to support the draft since it set forth a minimum of the mutual understanding and practical measures required to establish confidence in international economic relations. Saint Lucia, referring to paragraph 2, stated that the methodology to be used in no way bound its future position.

Coercive economic measures against developing countries

Pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(52)</sup> the Secretary-General in September 1984 submitted a report on the adoption and effects of economic measures taken by developed countries as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries.<sup>(53)</sup> The report was based on information provided by 24 States members of UNCTAD in response to a request for such information from the UNCTAD Secretary-General. The texts of the replies received were annexed to the report.

Summarizing the replies, the report stated that they reflected the view that the 1983 resolution<sup>(52)</sup> remained largely unimplemented and in that connection some Governments made suggestions for its full implementation, which could be studied during any further work. The majority felt that the United Nations should continue to play the major role in studying and compiling information provided by Governments and also had to keep its leading position in elaborating measures to eliminate any political and economic coercion from international economic relations in order to restore a climate of peaceful co-operation among States, as well as to accelerate development in the developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/210.

Economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolutions 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Reaffirming article 32 of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, which declares that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing international trade and trade policies for development contained in its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, resolution 152(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development entitled "Rejection of coercive economic measures", and the principles and rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and paragraph 7 (iii) of the Ministerial Declaration adopted on 29 November 1982 by the Contracting Parties of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade at their thirty-eighth session,

Reaffirming its resolution 38/197 of 20 December 1983,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the adoption and effects of economic measures taken by developed countries as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries,

Gravely concerned that the use of coercive measures adversely affects the economies and development efforts of developing countries and that, in some cases, those measures have worsened, creating a negative impact on international economic co-operation,

1. Deplores the fact that some developed countries continue to apply and, in some cases, have increased the scope of economic measures that have the purpose of exerting coercion on the sovereign decisions of developing countries subject to those measures;

2. Reaffirms that developed countries should refrain from threatening or applying trade restrictions, blockades, embargoes and other economic sanctions, incompatible with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and in violation of undertakings contracted multilaterally or bilaterally, against developing countries as a form of political and economic coercion which affects their economic, political and social development;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report on the economic measures mentioned in paragraph 2 above, taken by developed countries for coercive purposes, including their impact on international economic relations, with a view to assisting in concrete international actions against those measures, and to submit that report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the comprehensive report, to request further comments from Governments and to use inputs from competent organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions;

5. Appeals to Governments to provide the necessary information to the Secretary-General, as requested in paragraph 4 above.

General Assembly resolution 39/210

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 116-19-6 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.3) by recorded vote (102-19-6), 6 December (meeting 56); draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.75); agenda item 80 (c).

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 53, 56; plenary 104.

Abstaining: Austria, Finland, Greece, Ivory Coast, Spain, Sweden.

Almost all those who spoke in explanation of vote in the Second Committee said that they held the same position they had voiced at the adoption of the 1983 resolution on the subject.<sup>(54)</sup> Austria and Sweden said they had rejected coercive economic measures when not taken in the framework of a Security Council decision; the current text did not meet the criterion of universality. Similarly, Israel said the draft was restrictive. Ireland (on behalf of the EEC members) agreed, adding that, in general, they subscribed to the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,<sup>(55)</sup> under which no State might use or encourage coercive measures. Portugal believed the text was unilateral and of a political nature. Turkey felt the question was not within UNCTAD's competence.

Economic rights and duties of States

Pursuant to a 1982 General Assembly request,<sup>(56)</sup> by which it decided to conduct in 1984 a review of the implementation of its 1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,<sup>(57)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report on the subject in July, with a later addendum,<sup>(58)</sup> to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. In accordance with that request, the Secretary-General had invited Governments, intergovernmental organizations and United Nations bodies to communicate to him information on their application of the Charter's provisions. The report contained synoptic tables and summaries reflecting information provided by 25 Governments, one intergovernmental organization and nine United Nations bodies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted by a roll-call vote resolution 1984/64.

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, and Assembly resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, which laid down the foundations of the new international economic order,

Bearing in mind the adoption by the General Assembly, on 12 December 1974, of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/204 of 20 December 1982, in which the Assembly decided to carry out, at its thirty-ninth session, a comprehensive review of the implementation of the Charter, as provided for in article 34 thereof,

1. Recommends the General Assembly, at its thirty-ninth session, to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States in a suitable and appropriate manner at a plenary meeting on 12 December 1984;

2. Invites Governments and intergovernmental organizations which have not yet done so to submit to the Secretary-General their comments on the implementation of the Charter, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 37/204.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/64

26 July 1984 Meeting 49 39-1-8 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (E/1984/L.38); agenda item 3.

Meeting numbers. ESC 47, 49.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Greece, Guyana, Indonesia, Lebanon, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Suriname, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Somalia,<sup>a</sup> United Kingdom.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Poland said that, in the opinion of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, the Secretary-General's report was not an adequate or appropriate response to the Assembly's 1982 resolution; the Secretariat should ensure that a full review of activities in implementation of the Charter could be submitted to the Assembly later in 1984.

The United Kingdom said that a commemoration of the Charter's adoption, as proposed in the draft, would be a waste of time and money.

By decision 1984/187 of 27 July on reports considered in connection with its general discussion of international economic and social policy (see below, under "Economic surveys and trends"), the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with the Council's recommendation, a General Assembly plenary meeting was held on 12 December to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States.

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/163.

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States

The General Assembly

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic cooperation, which laid down the foundations of the new international economic order,

Bearing in mind article 34 of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and General Assembly resolution 3486(XXX) of 12 December 1975, relating to the review of the implementation of the Charter,

Recalling its resolution 37/204 of 20 December 1982, in which it decided to conduct at its thirty-ninth session, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, a comprehensive review of its implementation, as provided for in article 34 thereof,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 37/204,

Deeply concerned at the gravity of the world economic situation and its impact on the developing countries,

1. Decides to undertake a thorough and systematic review of the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, taking into account the evolution of all the economic, social, legal and other factors related to the principles upon which the Charter is based and to its purpose, in order to identify the most appropriate actions for the implementation of the Charter that would lead to lasting solutions to the grave economic problems of developing countries within the framework of the United Nations;

2. Decides also to establish an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole to Review the Implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, to be convened for three weeks in 1985, to carry out the review mentioned in paragraph 1 above, and requests the Committee to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, to be submitted to the Ad Hoc Committee in 1985.

Against: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Finland, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Second Committee, Portugal said it had always supported the Charter but did not agree with the review procedure provided for in the draft. The Netherlands said its position with respect to the Charter had not changed—some provisions were important but others gave rise to serious reservations; a review process was desirable, but the solution in the draft resolution was not the best one, particularly because of its financial implications; a meeting during the spring 1985 session of the Economic and Social Council would have been preferable. Sweden said it had supported the 1974 adoption of the Charter, despite some reservations; it had doubts about the usefulness of the procedure envisaged for improving the North-South dialogue. Speaking similarly, Finland added that the text would not promote rationalization of economic activities nor enhance the Organization's credibility. Australia said that it continued to support the Charter but did not find the proposed review mechanism justified. The resolution's sponsors had also failed to indicate why a three-week meeting should be organized or what its objectives, agenda and procedures would be. Austria was not convinced of a need to set up a Charter Committee which, it felt, might duplicate the Sixth (Legal) Committee's work on the new international economic order.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

During 1984, the United Nations continued to promote ECDC, mainly through UNCTAD. Technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) received the support of UNDP (see next chapter).

UNCTAD activities. At its March/April 1984 session,<sup>(59)</sup> the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board endorsed a 1983 report by its Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries.<sup>(60)</sup>

As recommended by the Committee in 1983, a 1984 meeting was held by the secretariats of economic co-operation and integration groupings of developing countries and multilateral development finance institutions to examine the problems of promoting and financing integration projects (Geneva, 4-8 June).<sup>(61)</sup> The meeting agreed to a series of recommendations for follow-up concerning pre-investment funds for and promotion of integration projects, financing of such projects and guarantee requirements.

UNIDO action. On 19 August, the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO (see Chapter VI of this section) adopted a resolution on strengthening ECDC<sup>(62)</sup> by which it recommended that the developing countries co-operate in sharing information and facilitating the flow of human, scientific, technological, energy and financial resources, as well as in increasing direct investment among themselves and collaboration, and in increasing South-South trade and other exchanges. The Conference invited the developed countries to support ECDC through increased voluntary contributions to UNDP and the United Nations Industrial Development Fund. It decided to give high priority to industrial co-operation among developing countries in UNIDO's activities, and requested that body to provide more active support for the implementation of such co-operation within the overall context of ECDC and TCDC and to assist subregional, regional and interregional co-operation efforts of developing countries in various areas of industrial development. UNIDO was also requested to strengthen its information, project development, industrial investment promotion and technical assistance activities in ECDC. The Conference also recommended that UNIDO co-ordinate more closely with various international organizations in ECDC to avoid duplication of effort and to ensure optimum use of resources.

Co-ordination in the UN system

ECOSOC activities. In accordance with a July 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution on Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC on ECDC and TCDC,<sup>(63)</sup> ACC considered its informal draft report on support by the United Nations system for such co-operation at its first regular session of 1984 (London, 16-18 April).<sup>(64)</sup> The draft outlined measures to be undertaken to respond to the concern of Governments as expressed in the 1983 Council resolution.

At its April session, ACC adopted a decision<sup>(64)</sup> by which it approved the draft report, the final version of which was to be submitted to CPC after the 1984 CPC/ACC Joint Meetings (see below).

CPC activities. In response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(63)</sup> a report by the Secretary-General analysing the mandates of, and problems addressed by, the United Nations system in ECDC and TCDC<sup>(65)</sup> was submitted to the General Assembly through CPC. The report was to be the basis for preparation of a cross-organizational programme analysis of ECDC and TCDC to be carried out by CPC in 1985. The Assembly, in December 1983,<sup>(66)</sup> had endorsed the Council resolution and requested it, as well as CPC, to consider the initial report.

The report first traced the origins of the concept of ECDC and TCDC and went on to describe the legislative mandates of the United Nations system directly referring to co-operation among developing countries going back to 1964, when the first United Nations Conference on Trade and Development was convened. The report stated that such mandates ranged from comprehensive policy statements to specific actions to be taken in narrowly defined fields. For the United Nations, a total of 405 global and regional mandates for action were identified. In addition, 40 resolutions adopted by the governing bodies of the specialized agencies related directly to ECDC and TCDC.

The report described major areas of activity of the United Nations system in ECDC and TCDC which included trade, monetary and financial co-operation, industrial development, transport and communications, science and technology, food and agriculture, natural resources and energy, development planning and administration, health, social development and other areas.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the report stated that operationally usable criteria had to be found for determining which United Nations system activities should be deemed to support ECDC and TCDC and thus be included in the cross-organizational programme analysis. A further task would be to see whether an analysis of activities in ECDC and TCDC could help to clarify the distinction between the two. In order to structure the disparate elements of the system's activities into a comprehensive whole for analysis, the report proposed that the content of each activity be classified using several different categories. The key elements of the proposed classification structure were the main and subsidiary areas of activity covered and the nature of United Nations system support for ECDC and TCDC. It was also proposed that information collected on each activity include estimated biennial cost for 1982-1983 and for 1984-1985, its source of funding and the nature of co-operation in its planning and execution with other organizations, both within and outside the system.

At its twenty-fourth session (New York, 23 April-1 June),<sup>(67)</sup> CPC endorsed the methodology proposed in the Secretary-General's report for the preparation of the cross-organizational programme analysis, especially the elements relating to collection of information on financial data, funding sources and co-operation with other organizations. It considered, however, that some aspects of the criteria proposed needed further refinement.

CPC felt that the report on the programme analysis should critically assess the United Nations system's role and the relationship between its activities and mandates, in order to permit CPC to make recommendations for improving the United Nations work in ECDC and TCDC.

Regarding the distinction between ECDC and TCDC, the programme analysis should consider whether problems existed in defining the relative competence of UNDP and UNCTAD or in co-ordinating their activities. It was also recommended that the relevant activities of the World Bank, IMF and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) be included in the analysis.

The Committee decided that the 1984 CPC/ACC Joint Meetings should consider an ACC report on a follow-up to the 1983 joint discussions.<sup>(68)</sup>

CPC/ACC Joint Meetings. A report on support by United Nations organizations for ECDC and TCDC<sup>(69)</sup> was submitted by ACC to its July 1984 Joint Meetings with CPC. Prepared as a follow-up to the 1983 discussions, the report examined policy issues related to United Nations support, described measures taken or proposed to enhance the effectiveness of United Nations activities in support of co-operation, and suggested areas in which such activities could be reoriented or strengthened.

Possible areas for enhanced United Nations support included: improved access to the flow of information from the system; support of South-South information activities; support of negotiations; new initiatives in operational activities; reorientation of research; and long-term programming.

It was generally agreed by the Joint Meetings<sup>(43)</sup> that the ACC report reflected a positive reaction by the system to the previous year's discussions, although more needed to be done. It was suggested that a new inter-agency mechanism might be required to promote better co-ordination of activities in the field and to serve as a link with the Group of 77 developing countries.

With respect to the cross-organizational programme analysis to be presented to CPC in 1985, it was pointed out that the interrelationship between ECDC and implementation of United Nations decisions on restructuring of international economic relations and on the establishment of a new international economic order should be taken into account.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In a 26 July resolution (1984/61 A, section VI) on the report of CPC, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to ensure that future cross-organizational programme analyses, particularly that of ECDC and TCDC, would provide a critical analysis of gaps in coverage of the activities mandated and of priorities, as well as of overlaps and co-ordination, taking into consideration problems in defining the relative competences of UNDP and UNCTAD or in co-ordinating their activities. The Secretary-General was also requested to refine further the criteria proposed in his report<sup>(65)</sup> for identifying activities to be included in the cross-organizational programme analysis of ECDC and TCDC. The Council recommended that the analysis should contain a critical analytical assessment of the role of the United Nations system and the relationship between its activities and mandates, including difficulties encountered.

In a decision of 26 July (1984/176) on reports considered by the Council in connection with the question of international co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report<sup>(65)</sup> and transmitted it to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly took action with regard to ECDC and TCDC.

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, it adopted resolution 39/216 without vote.

Activities of the United Nations system in support of economic co-operation among developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that economic co-operation among developing countries is an integral part of the efforts to establish the new international economic order, without being a substitute for or an alternative to co-operation between developed and developing countries, and that the Caracas Programme of Action adopted by the High-level Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Caracas from 13 to 19 May 1981, provides their basic framework for specific activities and arrangements in the field of economic co-operation among developing countries,

Mindful of the various resolutions adopted within the United Nations system in support of economic co-operation among developing countries and calling for appropriate action on them,

Looking forward to the cross-organizational programme analysis on economic co-operation among developing countries, to be considered by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-fifth session, and to the cross-organizational programme review of the activities of the United Nations system on the same subject, to be held at the second regular session of the Economic and Social Council in 1985,

1. Urges the organs and organizations of the United Nations system to provide and to intensify support and assistance, in accordance with their mandates, to economic co-operation among developing countries, giving due regard to the Caracas Programme of Action;

2. Urges the Secretary-General, giving due consideration to the conclusions emerging from the ongoing cross-organizational programme analysis, to pay careful attention to economic co-operation among developing countries in preparing his programme budget proposals for the biennium 1986-1987 and to include in his future performance reports on the programme budget specific information on the implementation of activities for economic co-operation among developing countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the executive heads of the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and of the specialized agencies, to keep the activities of the United Nations system in support of economic co-operation among developing countries under periodic review in the existing inter-agency machinery;

4. Recommends that the documentation being prepared for the cross-organizational programme review of medium-term plans in economic and technical co-operation among developing countries and for the cross-organizational programme analysis should be combined into one report so as to ensure an integrated approach to this area;

5. Requests the executive secretaries of the regional commissions to continue to intensify activities to support economic co-operation among developing countries at the subregional, regional and interregional levels and to include an assessment of progress made in their reports to the Economic and Social Council;

6. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in view of its key role in the area of economic co-operation among developing countries, to continue to intensify activities in this area, in accordance with its mandate;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/216

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.7) without vote, 14 December (meeting 60); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.137) — based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.48) — orally revised and further orally amended by Egypt, for Group of 77; agenda item 80 (g).
Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 44, 60; plenary 104.

The Vice-Chairman's draft was orally amended by Egypt on behalf of the Group of 77, to delete, in paragraph 7, after "Requests the Secretary-General", the phrase "giving due regard to the support of the United Nations system for the implementation, by the developing countries, of the Caracas Programme of Action".

The text approved by the Second Committee differed in a number of respects from the original draft by the Group of 77. That text did not include the third preambular paragraph or paragraphs 4 and 6. By the second preambular paragraph, the Assembly would have called for full implementation of, rather than appropriate action on, United Nations resolutions on ECDC.

By paragraph 1, the Assembly would have urged increased support and assistance to ECDC, in particular implementation of the 1981 Caracas Programme of Action.<sup>(70)</sup> Paragraph 2 would not have included the phrase "giving due consideration to the conclusions emerging from the ongoing cross-organizational programme analysis" and the Assembly would have urged increased rather than careful attention to ECDC.

The Group's text had included a request by the Assembly for the United Nations system to intensify efforts in support of ECDC by increasing utilization of technical and other capabilities of developing countries. In reporting on the resolution's implementation, the Secretary-General would have been requested to take account of the Caracas Programme of Action and the 1979 Arusha Programme for Collective Self-Reliance and Framework for Negotiations.<sup>(71)</sup>

As recommended by the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted decision 39/435 without vote.

Report of the Secretary-General on analysis of the mandates of, and problems addressed by, the United Nations system in economic and technical co-operation among developing countries

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on analysis of the mandates of, and problems addressed by, the United Nations system in economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

General Assembly decision 39/435

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.7) without vote, 14 December (meeting 60); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 80 (g).

Co-operation among regional commissions

Following up a July 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution on promoting interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries,<sup>(72)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Council in June 1984 a report on progress made in implementing that resolution.<sup>(73)</sup> The report stated that the executive secretaries of the regional commissions had consulted with concerned United Nations organizations and agencies on operational aspects for joint promotion and an initial review of the views of those bodies showed that there was a positive attitude towards the need for and the potential benefits from increased co-ordination. There was also a considerable degree of consensus on the need to translate ECDC and TCDC into concrete action.

Parallel to the consultation process, the regional commissions had taken action to continue promoting interregional ECDC and TCDC. It had been agreed that the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) would disseminate to the other regions technical information and expertise available within ECE in a number of sectors relevant to economic and social development, such as energy and transport. Some regional commissions were moving towards the operative stage, and the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Latin America had prepared a joint promotional project in mining and had exchanged draft proposals for a project on trade promotion between a selected group of countries from the two regions. Consultations had been held between the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and the Economic Commission for Western Asia on a transport and communications decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994) (see Chapter VIII of this section).

In its conclusions and recommendations, the report stated that it was of primary importance that the first periodic consultation between the regional commissions and United Nations organizations active at the regional and interregional levels be convened at an early date, possibly during the second 1984 session of ACC to be held on 22 and 23 October. Agenda items could be: the examination of answers received from United Nations organizations and agencies on operational modalities for setting up and executing joint projects to promote and support interregional ECDC and TCDC; the identification of project ideas in selected priority areas; possible co-ordinated actions in international financial co-operation; and activities that had been carried out or were being planned in specific aspects of interregional co-operation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the proposal of its President, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1984/185.

Promotion of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries

At its 50th plenary meeting, on 27 July 1984, the Council:

(a) Took note of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of Council resolution 1983/66 of 29 July 1983 on the promotion of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries;

(b) Decided to request the Secretary-General to continue to implement resolution 1983/66 and to report thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1985.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/185

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 9.

On 18 July, a draft resolution on promotion of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries<sup>(74)</sup> was introduced in the Council's First (Economic) Committee by Mexico on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries. By this text, which was subsequently withdrawn, the Council would have: called on Member States to support the regional commissions in promoting such co-operation; endorsed the conclusions and recommendations in the Secretary-General's report;<sup>(75)</sup> and decided that the first periodic consultation between the regional commissions and the United Nations organizations concerned should be convened during the October session of ACC. The Secretary-General would have been requested: to continue to ensure co-ordination and co-operation in preparing and implementing programmes and activities of the regional commissions; to assess the capacities and potentials of the specialized agencies and other

United Nations bodies to increase support for ECDC and TCDC, to suggest ways of strengthening activities in that area, and to report to the General Assembly in 1985 through the Council; and to take into account the need to intensify activities in ECDC and TCDC in preparing the 1986-1987 programme budget. The Council would also have recommended that the United Nations system maintain close contact with developing countries so as to improve the system's effectiveness and its responsiveness to their needs. It would have recommended that the Assembly continue to provide resources to the regional commissions to meet their responsibility with regard to ECDC and TCDC, and request the Secretary-General to inform the Assembly, through the Council, of progress in promoting subregional, regional and interregional co-operation.

Economic and social trends and policy

Economic reports prepared by the United Nations Secretariat in 1984 stressed the weak and uneven character of the world economic recovery which had begun in 1983. Two major reports, which were submitted as background documents for the annual discussion of international economic and social policy in the Economic and Social Council and the Trade and Development Board, expressed particular concern over the subdued rates of growth of international trade and the severe difficulties being faced by many countries in meeting their debt-servicing obligations (see Chapter IV of this section).

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic Survey 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> prepared by DIESA and issued in mid-1984, reported that, after the most protracted global recession since the 1930s, the prospects for sustained and broad-based growth were still not satisfactory.

The Survey, which was based on information available as at 31 March, stated that, while a reversal of recessionary trends began in 1983, recovery had not become general. North America and some developing countries of South and East Asia were experiencing quite a rapid advance in income, and output and economic growth in the centrally planned economies had accelerated. However, most developing countries were beset by problems which hindered their prospects, and recovery in Western Europe had been weak. Preliminary estimates indicated that world output had expanded at a rate of about 2 per cent in 1983, and could accelerate to between 3.5 and 4 per cent in 1984 and 1985. Those rates, while markedly higher than those attained in the first three years of the decade, were modest for a period of economic recovery.

In the developing countries, the Survey noted that, although per capita GDP, on average, declined for the third consecutive year, a weak recovery was gradually emerging. Revised estimates indicated that average growth rates of GDP fell from 0.5 per cent in 1982 to a preliminary estimate of virtual stagnation in 1983. However, it was projected that the annual growth rate of GDP was likely to increase to 3.5 per cent in developing countries as a whole in 1984-1985. There was also significant diversity of economic performance among regions. While most countries in South and East Asia were likely to achieve economic growth rates considerably higher than population growth, for a large number of developing countries in other regions per capita GDP would remain stagnant.

During 1983, the world economy was not conducive to reactivating growth in the developing countries for the following reasons: weak demand in industrial countries for developing countries' exports; a substantial fall in oil prices and a modest upswing in other commodity prices; and, among markets for exports of manufactures from developing countries, only North America exhibited strong expansion. The precarious liquidity positions and serious balance-of-payments problems of most developing countries were a constraint on economic growth throughout the early 1980s. However, from mid-1982, external debt and the associated debt-service burden considerably worsened the external payments situation, especially in Latin America.

Among the developed market economies, a normal cyclical upswing in the United States and continued growth in Japan were accompanied by a recovery in Western Europe which was limited to some countries and was cyclically weak. While an expansionary fiscal policy aided recovery in the United States, some Western European countries pursued relatively restrictive fiscal policies to reduce structural budget deficits and the size of the government sector. Lack of demand had restrained expansion of output in Western Europe; intra-European trade had been adversely affected by weak aggregate demand, and exports to developing countries had contracted in absolute terms. In those countries generally, a significant decline in inflation and a slow-down in wage increases had improved business confidence, and rates of investment were picking up. However, the average unemployment rate remained unusually high at about 9 per cent, although its increase rate had slowed significantly. Because of the strength of the recovery in the United States, the unemployment rate there decreased sharply. The average growth rate of GDP for the developed market economies for 1983 was estimated at 2 per cent, compared with a revised estimate for 1982 of -0.2 per cent, and a rate of 4 per cent was forecast by the Survey for 1984.

The pace of economic activity in the centrally planned economies rose from a revised estimate of 3.7 per cent in 1982 to an estimated 4.3 per cent in 1983. Nevertheless, that average masked a number of important differences in the performance of various countries: the Asian planned economies continued their strong performance, with aggregate output growing by about 6 per cent, with somewhat higher growth in China; the USSR attained several key plan targets with overall output growth at about 3.5 per cent, and industry and agriculture reaching 4 and 5 per cent growth, respectively; and the 3.4 per cent growth of Eastern Europe was in sharp contrast to the sluggish performance of the preceding four years. While the economic performance of the Eastern European centrally planned economies improved over 1982, it remained well below post-war trends. The continuation of austerity measures adopted in the early 1980s in several Eastern European countries made the short-term outlook for growth not too bright and it would be extremely difficult to achieve a number of key output growth targets of current (1981-1985) medium-term plans.

The Survey stated that prospects for a more sustained revival of investment and growth in the developed market economies were threatened by their policy stances which could either persist in leaning towards deflationary restraint or provoke a reversion to deflationary measures. Deflationary policies remained inescapable for much of the developing world as a consequence of the debt burden, high interest rates and the weak recovery in world trade. More important for the medium term was the fact that the functioning of the international trading and financial system had been seriously impaired by events of recent years. Restoration and improvement of that system were essential for the reactivation of development.

International trade and payments issues were also addressed in the Survey (see Chapter IV of this section) and an annex on selected sectoral trends dealt with the food crisis in Africa in the context of global production and trade, and the situation in world energy markets.

A Supplement to the Survey<sup>(2)</sup> contained articles on exchange rate volatility in an interdependent world economy, some changes in trade among developing countries between 1965 and 1980, and wage behaviour in the developed economies.

In its account of recent and prospective trends in the world economy, the Trade and Development Report, 1984<sup>(3)</sup> focused on their quantitative impact on trade and development.

The Report, based on information and data available in June 1984, indicated that the impact of the continuing economic decline experienced by most developing countries was increasingly being felt in the social as well as in the economic sphere. Unemployment, underemployment and poverty were on the rise, social infrastructures and public services were under severe pressure, and there was growing evidence of difficulty in insulating health and education from the effects of the crisis. Physical investment was also severely constrained in many countries, reflecting both a drying-up of private investment in the face of economic recession and the atrophy of public investment following pressures to reduce public expenditure. All these factors placed development in jeopardy.

Although causes for this set-back varied from country to country, severe strains in external payments were a common factor. The debt crises in Africa, Latin America and some Asian countries were characterized by a cut-back in new private financial flows, which was particularly severe in Latin America. The modest growth of world trade and hesitant rise of commodity prices failed to produce a decided recovery in export earnings. Also, adverse weather conditions affected agricultural output in a number of countries, particularly in Africa, thereby reducing exports and increasing the need for essential imports. Oil-exporting developing countries suffered a severe drop in export earnings, as energy conservation and the development of productive capacity outside the major developing oil exporters compounded the impact of the recession. For a number of developing countries in South and East Asia, growth was on the whole satisfactory: in East Asia, the major exporters of manufactures enjoyed a significant increase in export demand from the United States; in South Asia, the large size of some countries, their lesser degree of openness, the relatively low level of indebtedness and large dependence on concessional financial flows provided the region with some insulation from external shocks.

For the developed market-economy countries, increases in output during the latter half of 1983 and the opening months of 1984 indicated that, as a group, they were emerging from the recession. Moreover, the pace of inflation in most countries slowed appreciably and the expansion was proceeding without signs of re-emerging inflationary pressures. The experience of individual developed market-economy countries varied considerably, with the most remarkable turn-around being that of the United States, in which GDP rose by 3.4 per cent in 1983 after a decline of 1.9 per cent in 1982. However, the impact of increased United States imports on developing countries was marginal as it accounted for only about one fifth of their total exports. Thus, despite an increase of some $3.2 billion in exports to the United States, developing countries' total exports fell by some $35 billion in 1983 from the 1982 level. Recovery of the developing countries would be hampered by indebtedness and protectionism. The recent increase in interest rates was a strongly negative factor for most debtor developing countries, as imports would be constrained by the amount of debt service to be paid. Since developing countries accounted for about a quarter of total exports of developed market economies, this would influence world demand so as to reduce transmission of economic recovery among developed market-economy countries themselves.

There was evidence, said the Report, that a turn-around in economic activity had taken place during 1981-1982 in the socialist countries of Eastern Europe other than the USSR, while in the latter country growth continued moderately. For those countries as a whole, the salient feature of external trade in 1983 was the smaller increase in the value of exports from 6.9 per cent in 1982 to 4.9 per cent in 1983, and the faster rise in imports from 0.9 per cent to 3.4 per cent. The faster import growth was a result of a reactivation of trade among the countries of the region, including the socialist countries of Asia; imports from developed market-economy countries and from developing countries continued to decline. Although positive balances on current account in 1982 and 1983 significantly improved the international financial position of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, balance-of-payments constraints continued to play a key role in the external sector plans of most of them in 1984 and were likely to remain a major concern for 1985. In China, progress towards attaining the targets set by that country's 1981-1985 plan continued, with further strong economic growth predicted for 1984.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1984/187, adopted without vote on the proposal of its President, the Economic and Social Council took note of the World Economic Survey and other reports submitted in connection with its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States (see above, under "Economic rights and duties of States") and those prepared on current economic conditions in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and Western Asia (see Chapter VIII of this section).

Reports considered by the Economic and Social Council in connection with its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments

At its 50th plenary meeting, on 27 July 1984, the Council took note of the following documents:

Resources, environment, people and development

During 1984, the ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ(PROG)) continued to deal with inter-agency

co-ordination of the programme of work on inter-relationships between resources, environment, people and development, and to screen projects proposed for financing under the general trust fund for the programme, established in June 1981.<sup>(4)</sup>

At its first regular session (Geneva, 26-30 March),<sup>(5)</sup> CCSQ(PROG) was briefed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on a project on carrying capacity in Kenya, and by UNEP on a project on deforestation in the Himalayan foothills. A paper on tropical forestry ecology systems in West and Central Africa, based on requests for assistance submitted to the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development, was circulated to the Committee, which agreed that the United Nations would consult on it with the organizations concerned. It was also agreed that an attempt would be made to develop future project proposals for consideration by CCSQ(PROG).

At its second regular session (New York, 4-9 October),<sup>(6)</sup> CCSQ(PROG) was again briefed on the two projects and heard a report on the status of the trust fund. Of a total of some $300,000, $185,000 had been expended on the project in Kenya and $100,000 earmarked for that in the Himalayas.

It was agreed that further projects needed to be developed and it was noted that the Designated Officials for Environmental Matters had suggested proceeding with an interrelationships study in the Sudano-Sahelian region. CCSQ(PROG) decided to address that question in 1985 based on an updated note covering proposals for further action in the area.

In a 28 May decision on population and the environment, the Governing Council of UNEP requested the UNEP Executive Director to accord priority to the work towards harmonious interaction between population, resources, development and the environment (see Chapter XVI of this section).

Development planning, education, administration and information

During 1984, various aspects of development planning, education, administration and information were considered by United Nations bodies, including CDP which studied development issues against the background of the uneven world economic recovery.

The Seventh Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance met to review the needs of developing countries in that area and to review the United Nations work programme. The Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC) continued to co-ordinate preparation of United Nations educational materials.

Development planning

CDP activities. The Committee for Development Planning held its twentieth session in New York from 17 to 21 May 1984.<sup>(1)</sup> The dates of the session, originally planned for April, were changed by the Economic and Social Council in May (see below).

Composed of 24 experts appointed by the Council, CDP examined the state of the world economy, considered the outlook under existing policies and discussed needed changes in national and international policies (see above, under "Development and economic co-operation"). The debt crisis and development finance were considered (see Chapter IV of this section) as were the particular problems of the least developed and other low-income countries (see below, under "Least developed countries"). CDP had before it the 1983 reports by its working groups on development priorities and policies for the remainder of the 1980s,<sup>(2)</sup> and on the international monetary and financial system.<sup>(3)</sup>

In a statement at the conclusion of the session, which was incorporated in its report<sup>(1)</sup> to the Economic and Social Council, CDP drew the attention of the international community to three areas requiring urgent responses: reform of the international monetary and financial system, international debt, and the situation of the poorest countries. It believed that, without action in at least those key areas, the crisis would deepen and bring incalculable suffering in human and national terms.

Regarding arrangements for its future work, CDP proposed meeting twice a year for a total of six days instead of having one session of 10 days. The twenty-first session would be scheduled in the last quarter of 1984 and the first quarter of 1985. Following approval of this proposal by the Council (see below), CDP met at Geneva from 19 to 21 November for the first part of its twenty-first session.<sup>(4)</sup> The session was preceded by working group meetings at Geneva on interdependence and multilateralism (12-14 October) and on domestic economic policies and surveillance (16 and 17 November).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, following consideration of a note by the Secretariat,<sup>(5)</sup> which stated that newly appointed members of CDP were unable to attend the CDP session on its originally scheduled dates, the Council adopted decision 1984/110 without vote, as orally proposed by its President.

Change of date of the twentieth session of the Committee for Development Planning

At its 6th plenary meeting, on 2 May 1984, the Council, having considered a note by the Secretariat, decided that the twentieth session of the Committee for Development Planning would be held at United Nations Headquarters from 17 to 21 May 1984 instead of from 4 to 13 April 1984.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/110

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 1.

On 5 July, the Chairman of CDP introduced the Committee's report<sup>(1)</sup> to the Council, which on 27 July adopted resolution 1984/83 by roll-call vote.

Report of the Committee for Development Planning on its twentieth session

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Committee for Development Planning on its twentieth session and taking note of the statement made by the Committee at the conclusion of its work,

Taking note also of the statement made before the Council on 5 July 1984 by the Chairman of the Committee for Development Planning,

1. Decides to advance the session of the Committee for Development Planning scheduled for April 1985 to the last quarter of 1984, as proposed, and to hold that session at Geneva, and to consider the proposed schedule of meetings of the Committee at the organizational session for 1985 of the Council;

2. Expresses its appreciation of the programme of work of the Committee for Development Planning and invites the Committee to continue to present action-oriented recommendations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/83

27 July 1984 Meeting 50 32-111 (roll-call vote)

5-nation draft (E/1983/L.42), orally revised; further orally revised and sponsored by Mexico, for Group of 77, and orally amended by Greece; agenda item 3.

Sponsors: Argentina, India, Malaysia, Saint Lucia, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers: ESC 24, 49, 50.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Finland, Greece, Guyana, Indonesia, Lebanon, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Bulgaria, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, USSR, United Kingdom.

Before adoption of the text as a whole, Greece proposed that paragraph 1 of the original draft—by which the Council would have decided that CDP meetings be held at Geneva and in New York, in accordance with the schedule of meetings proposed by CDP—be amended to the subsequently adopted text except that the proposed schedule was to be considered at the General Assembly's 1984 session. After informal consultations, Greece orally reworded its amendment as adopted. The United States proposed an amended text by which the Council, in a single operative paragraph, would simply have considered, at its organizational session for 1985, the proposed schedule of meetings of CDP. That amendment was rejected by a roll-call vote of 24 to 10, with 7 abstentions. The Council then adopted paragraph 1, as proposed by Greece, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 2, with 11 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United States, stating that the resolution was designed to spend more money on the Council itself, hoped the Council would take its responsibility for ensuring fiscal integrity more seriously and see that most of the money distributed by multilateral organizations went where it was supposed to go.

Japan said it had voted against paragraph 1 and abstained on the resolution as a whole as it believed that the proposal, which affected the Council's 1985 work programme, should be decided at its 1985 organizational session. The USSR said it believed in ensuring maximum economy in the United Nations budget and the proposed change would have financial implications; CDP should hold only one session and that in New York. The United Kingdom agreed and said it would watch carefully for financial implications when the matter was addressed again.

Finland said it could find no substantive argument in favour of the steps suggested in paragraph 1 and was concerned that important resolutions were introduced at the end of the Council's session. Greece said it fully supported the work of CDP which knew best how to carry out its work and should determine its own work programme. At the end of two years, CDP and the Council could assess the new pattern of sessions and decide whether to continue it. Mexico said Council members should study the results produced by CDP, especially at its May 1984 session.

Development administration

In 1984, the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development carried out an $11.7-million programme of assistance to Governments in public administration and finance. The programme encompassed a wide range of activities in institution-building by reforming existing administrative structures and creating new ones, training and personnel management, and improvements in planning and implementing strategies for greater efficiency and effectiveness in managing the public sector. The main source of funds was UNDP, which provided $9.9 million.<sup>(6)</sup>

During the year, over 134 technical co-operation projects were executed in 63 developing countries, primarily in the areas of administrative reform, training and personnel administration, financial and public enterprise management, resource mobilization and management information systems.<sup>(7)</sup>

The Seventh Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance was held at Geneva from 17 to 26 October<sup>(8)</sup> to review public administration and finance in developing countries in the 1980s, analyse the needs of developing countries, particularly the least developed, especially in training and institution-building, review the United Nations work programme, recommend action at national and international levels, and increase the effectiveness of United Nations technical co-operation activities in this area. The Meeting, originally planned for May 1984, was rescheduled by a February decision of the Economic and Social Council (see below).

The Meeting agreed that developing countries should give precedence to improving the performance and productivity of existing institutions, personnel, policies and mechanisms over creating new institutions and further expanding the system. Identified as priorities were personnel policies, resource mobilization and management, decentralization and citizens' rights. The Meeting paid special attention to the crisis in sub-Saharan Africa and in that regard identified the following priority areas for which the international community should find ways to promote and undertake joint programmes: personnel management systems and management development institutions; financial management and fiscal administration; supplies, procurement and maintenance management; transport management; and modern management information systems.

Regarding the 1984-1985 United Nations programme in public administration and finance, the Meeting urged the Secretary-General to pursue vigorously his consultations with Governments on establishing an international centre for public accounting and auditing, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1982.<sup>(9)</sup> Among measures to improve the impact of the programme were: strengthening of information and dissemination activities; promoting exchange of comparative experience among countries; strengthening evaluation of activities; and ensuring that recommendations for administrative change in developing countries were realistic in the light of local conditions and needs. The Meeting took note of informal inter-agency consultations on public administration and finance (15 and 16 October), recognized the need for better co-ordination of activities and suggested that existing mechanisms for that purpose should be fully utilized. It was recommended that the next Meeting be held in 1987.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Having considered a note by the Secretary-General,<sup>(10)</sup> who proposed that the Seventh Meeting be rescheduled so that it could consider the outcome of several meetings on public administration and finance to be held in the first half of 1984, the Council, in February, adopted decision 1984/103 without vote.

Seventh Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance

At its 2nd plenary meeting, on 10 February 1984, the Council, having considered the note by the Secretary-General, decided that the Seventh Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance would be held at Geneva from 17 to 26 October 1984 instead of at United Nations Headquarters from 16 to 25 May 1984.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/103

Adopted without vote

Draft by President, for Bureau (E/1984/L.14 & Corr.1); agenda item 2.

Development education and information

Development education

At its April 1984 session,<sup>(11)</sup> JUNC (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter X) reviewed the work of its Working Group on Development Education, designated the chairmanship of that body to host organizations on a rotating basis and appointed the Group's substantive secretariat. During consideration of the work of its Ad Hoc Working Group on Development Support Communication, JUNC was briefed on the status of UNESCO's International Programme for Development of Communication. Its co-ordinators were negotiating $10 million of assistance and several countries had conveyed offers of training; 55 projects were receiving assistance from the Programme.

Information Systems Unit

In response to a 1983 request by CPC,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(13)</sup> on the location of the Information Systems Unit (ISU) within the Secretariat to CPC's April-June 1984 session. CPC had proposed that the possible integration of ISU, currently in DIESA, within the Dag Hammarskjöld Library be examined by the Secretary-General. A 1983 report by the Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems<sup>(12)</sup> had dealt with the institutional arrangements for ISU and recommended establishing it as a distinct unit within the Library. The Secretary-General stated that he was reviewing the institutional and financial arrangements for ISU to continue working at its current high level of effectiveness and intended to formulate relevant proposals under the proposed programme budget for 1986-1987.

In April,<sup>(14)</sup> CPC recommended that a final solution to ISU's institutional and financial base be provided by the Secretary-General in the 1986-1987 budget, and that it should continue its useful work as a distinct administrative unit.

Agrarian reform and rural development

During 1984, rural development activities being carried out throughout the United Nations system were reviewed by ACC, CPC and the Economic and Social Council. FAO, in a four-year review of agrarian reform and rural development, concluded that, without more equitable distribution of assets and income, economic growth alone would not alleviate the high level of rural poverty. In August, the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO recommended industrial policies to achieve rural development and self-sufficiency in food in developing countries.

Rural development

In accordance with a 1981 CPC request,<sup>(1)</sup> ACC in 1984 prepared a report on review and appraisal of the work of its Task Force on Rural Development since 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> which was considered by the Task Force itself, ACC, CCSQ(PROG) and CPC before being forwarded to the Economic and Social Council. The report noted that the momentum of reorientation of United Nations rural development activities towards alleviating the poverty of the world's poorest groups had been basically maintained from 1981 to 1983. The Task Force had contributed to that momentum by: receiving regular reports from its members on their rural development activities; promoting internal staff workshops, seminars and training sessions; and publishing (since 1983) a newsletter on the rural development activities and experiences of United Nations organizations.

Regarding joint action at the country and regional levels, the report stated that, since 1981, policy review missions organized by FAO as a follow-up to the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development (WCARRD)<sup>(3)</sup> had built up joint inter-agency participation and, by the end of 1983, 13 such missions had taken place. International assistance in key components of national rural development planning provided as follow-up to review missions totalled $50 million by the end of 1983. Regional action was promoted by the Task Force through annual or biennial inter-agency consultations in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Near East and it had also been involved with newly established intergovernmental regional rural development centres. A Task Force panel on people's participation had met three times in 1981-1983 and published studies of obstacles and approaches to people's participation as reference documents. It also prepared draft general guidelines on the monitoring and evaluation of people's participation in rural development and gave special attention to guidelines for promoting women's participation. The panel, at an inter-agency workshop in Bangladesh, promoted the exchange of experiences among developing countries, especially regarding group-based savings and credit schemes in Asian countries. Similar activities were planned in other regions. A panel on monitoring and evaluation had also met three times and produced a set of guiding principles for monitoring and evaluating rural development projects and programmes.

Regarding the main areas of the Task Force's future programme of work, it was proposed that they continue to be: monitoring reorientation of rural development activities of the United Nations system to benefit the rural poor; joint action at country and regional levels; promoting people's participation; and monitoring and evaluation. A new aspect was also proposed, namely the administrative and institutional infrastructure for rural development, the initial step of which would be to analyse difficulties experienced in establishing and operating national co-ordinating mechanisms and to identify additional assistance required from Task Force members.

Task Force members agreed to exchange information on the main components of future rural development programmes to identify areas for collaboration.

ACC action. The Task Force on Rural Development (Rome, Italy, 22-24 February)<sup>(4)</sup> reviewed work accomplished since its 1983 meeting<sup>(5)</sup> in its three priority areas: joint action at country and regional levels; people's participation in rural development; and monitoring and evaluation. It also discussed and approved the report on review and appraisal of its work since 1981<sup>(2)</sup> (see above) and discussed an FAO report on review and analysis of agrarian reform and rural development (see below). A 1984-1986 work programme, which included provision for country-level inter-agency missions and regional inter-agency meetings and round tables, was adopted.

The Task Force's report was considered in March by CCSQ(PROG),<sup>(6)</sup> which noted the Task Force's work since 1981 and agreed that it was working in the right direction towards the important objectives of its priority areas. It was noted, however, that much remained to be done and that the challenges were complex. The Committee stressed that, in preparing for and follow-up of country missions, there was need for fuller involvement of all agencies concerned and for wider multidisciplinary involvement of the country concerned.

A review of the work of the Task Force was included in the ACC annual overview report for 1983/84,<sup>(7)</sup> and, at its April session, ACC adopted a decision<sup>(8)</sup> by which it approved the report on review and appraisal of the work of the Task Force since 1981 for submission to the Economic and Social Council through CPC.

CPC action. In May 1984,<sup>(9)</sup> CPC took note of the ACC report on review and appraisal of the work of its Task Force since 1981,<sup>(2)</sup> approved the Task Force's future work programme and recommended that it be implemented flexibly and pragmatically, while taking into account the objectives of WCARRD.

By decision 1984/166 (see below), the Economic and Social Council took note of the ACC report, approved the Task Force's future work programme and endorsed the CPC recommendation that it should be implemented taking into account the objectives of WCARRD.

UNIDO action. On 19 August, the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO (see Chapter VI of this section) adopted a resolution on industrial policies and measures to achieve rural development and self-sufficiency in food supplies of developing countries.<sup>(10)</sup> It recommended that developing countries develop small enterprises in rural areas to attract private investment and entrepreneurship, as well as develop State and co-operative enterprises. All countries, especially the developed ones, were invited to provide technical and financial assistance to developing countries, particularly the drought-stricken, to implement rural industrialization programmes.

The Conference recommended that UNIDO, in co-operation with other organizations: assist in intensifying rural development in developing countries, especially the African and least developed; assist in implementing industrial components for rural development programmes; continue work on rural industrialization; study the possibility of projects in consultancy service centres and rural industrial workshops; strengthen activities in fertilizer and pesticide production, agricultural machinery and equipment, storage facilities and the rural artisan sector; and pay greater attention to small enterprises and to the informal sector in rural areas.

Agrarian reform

Pursuant to a 1981 Economic and Social Council decision,<sup>(11)</sup> the Secretary-General, in May 1984, transmitted to the Council a report, prepared by FAO in collaboration with other United Nations bodies, reviewing and analysing agrarian reform and rural development.<sup>(12)</sup> By its 1981 decision, the Council had agreed to FAO's suggestion that such reports be submitted every four years, beginning in 1984.

The report discussed rural population and economic growth trends, incidence of poverty, food supply and rural poverty, land availability, agricultural prices and terms of trade, export orientation, and public expenditure and inflow of external resources. It also reviewed and analysed government policies for agrarian reform and rural development in the major areas of the WCARRD Programme of Action: access to land, people's participation, integration of women in development, access to inputs and services, agricultural extension and training, and rural non-farm employment. Noting that special strategies, policies and programmes were needed to meet the basic needs of the poor, one section of the report was devoted to such needs (food, health services, education, housing) in the context of rural development.

In its conclusions, the report noted that a relatively high level of rural poverty existed across developing countries at all income levels, and across all regions, indicating that economic growth alone, without measures for more equitable distribution of assets and income, was not enough to alleviate rural poverty. The results of monitoring by countries under the WCARRD Programme of Action had shown weaknesses in data and monitoring capabilities in developing countries and showed the need to collect data separately for rural areas and for women and other disadvantaged groups, since policy and action implications could be quite different for them as opposed to urban areas and other groups.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted decision 1984/166 without vote.

Review and analysis of agrarian reform and rural development

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1984, the Council:

(a) Commended the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for its comprehensive and systematic review of the progress achieved in agrarian reform and rural development in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action as adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development and looked forward to a similar review in four years' time;

(b) Took note of the report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination concerning progress achieved by its Task Force on Rural Development;

(c) Approved the proposed future programme of work of the Task Force and endorsed the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination that the programme of work should be implemented taking into account the objectives of the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development.

Special economic areas

In 1984, the General Assembly, by resolution 39/175, again called for immediate measures in favour of developing countries and for action to deal with the specific problems of particular groups of developing countries. In resolution 39/174, the Assembly decided to convene in 1985 a high-level meeting of the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries to carry out the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries. In resolution 39/221, the Assembly renewed its appeal for resources for the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries and, in resolution 39/209, urged increased assistance to them. A call for intensified efforts to implement action in favour of island developing countries was made by the Assembly in resolution 39/212.

Developing countries

In 1984, the General Assembly again took up the question of immediate measures in favour of the developing countries, having, by a December 1983 resolution,<sup>(1)</sup> urged Governments to negotiate towards adopting concrete measures in specific areas. In response to that same resolution, the Secretary-General, in August 1984, submitted a report<sup>(2)</sup> on its implementation, stating that some measures had been taken in the five areas singled out for urgent action—food and agriculture, money and finance, trade and raw materials, energy resources, and LDCs—but they had been few in number and inadequate to cope with the seriousness of the situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/175.

Immediate measures in favour of the developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Reaffirming its resolution 38/200 of 20 December 1983,

Gravely concerned that the immediate measures referred to in resolution 38/200 are far from being implemented fully and that the critical problems facing developing countries in areas identified in that resolution still exist and in many cases have worsened further, particularly in Africa,

1. Calls upon all Governments, in particular those of developed countries, to adopt and intensify measures aimed at the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 38/200 and to fulfil, as a matter of urgency, the existing international commitments in the areas identified in that resolution;

2. Requests the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to intensify their efforts to develop specific proposals and expedite actions for the implementation of resolution 38/200;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the heads of organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to follow up on the actions taken by the agencies and to submit a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/175

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.15) without vote, 30 November (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.53), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.9); agenda item 80 (a). Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 28, 55; plenary 103.

In the original draft by the Group of 77, the Assembly, in the third preambular paragraph, would have expressed grave concern that the measures in its 1983 resolution<sup>(1)</sup> had not been implemented and that, as a result, the critical problems had worsened further, omitting the phrase "still exist and in many cases". By paragraph 1, the Assembly would have called only on Governments of developed countries and paragraph 2 would have referred to programmes rather than proposals.

Least developed countries

The special problems of the 36 officially designated LDCs were considered in several United Nations forums during 1983, including the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, the Governing Council of UNDP, the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO, ACC and the General Assembly. The Economic and Social Council requested CDP to consider including Kiribati and Tuvalu in the list of LDCs while the Assembly asked that similar consideration be given to Vanuatu. In a statement at the conclusion of its May 1984 session,<sup>(3)</sup> CDP cited the plight of the poorest countries as one of three areas to be urgently addressed by the international community. It said LDCs and other low-income countries were feeling the full brunt of the world economic downturn, often compounded by natural disaster. The lack of response to those countries' hardships had been distressing, as overall volumes of ODA had virtually stagnated while needs had increased and alternative sources diminished. With regard to the low-income countries of sub-Saharan Africa, CDP stressed the extreme urgency of their recovery and development needs for the balance of the 1980s.

Programme of Action for the 1980s

During 1984, the United Nations system continued to monitor the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, adopted in 1981 by the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries<sup>(4)</sup> and endorsed later that year by the General Assembly.<sup>(5)</sup>

In response to a December 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in October 1984 a report<sup>(7)</sup> on the implementation of that resolution, by which the Assembly had, inter alia, urged all countries and international institutions to implement their commitments under SNPA and again invited United Nations bodies to take measures for effective implementation and follow-up. The report, prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat, gave a brief account of the recent economic performance of the 36 LDCs,<sup>(8)</sup> noting that as a group they had recorded a growth rate of only 2 per cent in 1982. Since population was growing by as much as 2.6 per cent per year, per capita GDP declined in 1982 to a level of $210, less than a quarter of the level for developing countries as a group. Estimates of 1983 GDP growth indicated that it had regained its former low rate of 3 per cent, while for 1984 and 1985 UNCTAD forecast a slight improvement, to almost 4 per cent.

With regard to national action to implement SNPA, the report noted that, because of the increasingly harsh external environment, a number of Governments of LDCs had had to resort to shorter-term emergency measures, instead of pursuing longer-term development goals. Since the 1981 Conference, 24 countries had elaborated strategies, plans and programmes and discussed them with their development partners in order to obtain the support required.

The report noted that, although SNPA embodied aid targets for donor countries to provide 0.15 per cent of their GNP to LDCs, or to double their ODA to them by 1985 or as soon as possible thereafter, the transfer of external resources to LDCs had been disappointing. In 1981, ODA flows from all major groups had decreased and in 1982 the most noticeable improvement was among OPEC bilateral donors, with a real increase of almost 50 per cent over 1981. ODA from Development Assistance Committee (DAC) members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development remained at 0.08 per cent of GNP in 1981 and 1982, compared with 0.09 per cent in 1980. Among individual DAC members, Denmark, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden had exceeded the 0.15 per cent target before adoption of SNPA and had continued to do so. Belgium exceeded it for the first time in 1981 and attained the target again in 1982. In 1982, 12 of the 17 DAC member countries had not met either SNPA target.

The report also contained information on action taken by organizations of the United Nations system and on inter-agency consultations held in April 1984 (see below under relevant headings).

The report concluded that progress in implementing SNPA had been slow and that the economic situation of LDCs had deteriorated. Conditions in Africa had reached crisis proportions, which had further affected the 26 LDCs on that continent. Of the 34 drought-affected and food-aid-dependent countries, 20 were among the least developed. All donors, the report stated, should consider responding positively to requests from LDCs to alleviate their debt-service burden in respect of ODA loans. It was also essential to consider additional measures to alleviate their debt-service obligations to both public and private lenders.

Of the greatest importance was that all donor countries and institutions fulfil by 1985 the ODA targets called for in SNPA. It was also essential that the international community respond expeditiously to the urgent needs and requirements of LDCs, as called for in SNPA and in UNCTAD resolution 142(VI).<sup>(9)</sup>

The serious resource situation of most United Nations organizations which accorded high priority to LDCs had adversely affected the ability of a number of them to provide adequate assistance. There was urgent need for donor countries to provide substantially greater resources through IDA, UNDP and its Special Measures Fund for LDCs, the United Nations Capital Development Fund and IFAD.

As to the role of country review meetings in implementing SNPA, the report said that they provided the necessary forum for fruitful dialogue between LDCs and their development partners on plans, programmes and support, and enabled better programming by Governments of LDCs of resources likely to be obtained from external sources. Therefore, LDCs that had not yet held their first review meeting should consider doing so as soon as possible and preferably before the mid-term review of SNPA's implementation, scheduled for 1985.

UNCTAD action. In accordance with UNCTAD resolution 142(VI)<sup>(9)</sup> and the 1983 General Assembly resolution on LDCs,<sup>(6)</sup> the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board at its March/April 1984 session discussed the convening of a Third Meeting of Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of LDCs, as part of the preparation for the 1985 mid-term global review of the implementation of SNPA. Following a debate in a sessional committee, the Board on 6 April decided<sup>(10)</sup> to convene such a meeting to consider: areas for possible improvement of aid practices and management with respect to LDCs, particularly improved co-ordination of assistance programmes, measures already being taken by LDCs with the support of the international community and possible additional ones for accelerating progress of LDCs and implementing SNPA, and ways of better adapting implementation of assistance programmes to their specific needs, taking into account the 1982 agreed conclusions of the Second Meeting;<sup>(11)</sup> and organizational issues related to the mid-term review.

Also on 6 April, the Board adopted a decision on debt and development problems of poorer developing countries, in particular the least developed (see Chapter IV of this section).

In 1984, as a contribution to the global monitoring of SNPA implementation, the UNCTAD secretariat launched a series of annual reports on LDCs, each of which would contain a global review of recent socio-economic developments in LDCs and highlight recent developments in each of them. A theme of particular importance to SNPA's implementation would also be studied in each issue and that chosen for the first issue, The Least Developed Countries 1984 Report,<sup>(12)</sup> was the role of exports in their economic development. An annex to the report contained basic data on LDCs in tabular form.

ACC action. In accordance with a December 1983 General Assembly resolution<sup>(6)</sup> and a 1981 ACC decision,<sup>(13)</sup> a third inter-agency consultation on SNPA follow-up was held at Geneva on 9 and 10 April 1984.<sup>(14)</sup> The consultation reviewed experience gained from country review meetings and heard reports on action taken by individual United Nations organizations on their activities and work programmes relevant to LDCs. It discussed arrangements for the 1985 mid-term review to be carried out by a high-level meeting of the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries. It noted that two more inter-agency consultations might be held before the mid-term review, with the main objective of the first being to consider preparations for the review.

In its annual overview report,<sup>(15)</sup> ACC said it continued to attach priority to co-ordination of operational activities dealing with assistance to LDCs. The consultation process between them and their donor partners and ways of financing projects identified during that process were being strengthened, and inter-agency consultations were being held regularly.

UNDP action. Together with the World Bank, UNDP continued to serve as lead agency in organizing country review meetings, whose aim was to enable individual LDCs to consult with their aid partners on the recipient country's economic situation, on progress in SNPA implementation, on aid conditions and on needs for additional assistance. During 1984,<sup>(16)</sup> such round-table review meetings were held with UNDP assistance for Burundi, the Comoros, the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho and Malawi. Other countries elected to have the World Bank assist them with review meetings.

Funding for the round-table process and for other activities benefiting LDCs was provided by the UNDP Special Measures Fund for LDCs. Contributions to the Fund in 1984 totalled $13.6 million and nine countries pledged $5.3 million for 1985. Expenditures on round-table conferences from the Fund were limited to $100,000 for each LDC. Resources from a trust fund established in 1983<sup>(17)</sup> for a special contribution from the Netherlands for LDCs were used to prepare four round-table conferences. The trust fund was also used to finance follow-up activities to conferences held in recent years.

(For 1984 payments and 1985 pledges to the Special Measures Fund, see next chapter: table "Contributions to UNDP, 1984 and 1985".)

During 1984, UNDP continued to give highest priority to assisting the poorest countries (for UNDP indicative planning figures and project expenditures, see next chapter). In addition, by the end of the year the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) had approved capital assistance to LDCs in the amount of $38.3 million for projects to meet the basic needs and develop the productive capacity of the poorest segments of the population.<sup>(18)</sup>

On 29 June,<sup>(19)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council requested the UNDP Administrator to submit in 1985 an evaluation report on UNDP's role in implementing SNPA, focusing particularly on experiences gained through round-table conferences, with particular emphasis on: the dialogue between LDCs and the donor community; co-ordination and utilization of aid available to LDCs; management of aid by Governments of LDCs and social and economic policy measures undertaken by them; impact on the level and flow of aid in line with commitments undertaken in SNPA; and appropriate modalities for follow-up to the round-table conferences. The Council reiterated its appeal for increased aid to LDCs through voluntary contributions to UNCDF and the Special Measures Fund, and through other channels. The Administrator was requested to continue assistance to LDCs in the follow-up to round-table conferences, and the appointment of a co-ordinator of assistance to LDCs was welcomed.

UNIDO action. By a 19 August resolution on the implementation of SNPA,<sup>(20)</sup> the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO (see Chapter VI of this section) recommended that industrialization be taken fully into account during the 1985 mid-term review, and that co-operation between LDCs and other developing countries be promoted in order to accelerate industrial development in the former. All countries and international organizations were invited to continue assistance to LDCs in promoting domestic processing of raw materials, developing human resources, utilizing their industrial capacities and preparing surveys of resources. UNIDO was requested to strengthen its industrial development assistance to LDCs, and, within the framework of SNPA, to co-operate more closely with UNDP, the World Bank and other organizations in organizing round-table conferences, and to improve the efficiency of its solidarity meetings for LDCs and consider their expansion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly, on 17 December 1984, adopted resolution 39/174 without vote.

Implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, by the General Assembly in its resolution 36/194 of 17 December 1981,

Expressing serious concern at the continued deterioration of the economic and social situation of the least developed countries in spite of their national efforts at development, as well as efforts made by the international community, including donor countries, even three years after the adoption of the Substantial New Programme of Action, and stressing the immediate need for greatly expanded support measures, including a major increase in the transfer of additional resources for the realization of the objectives of the Programme,

Deeply concerned at the very slow pace at which the Substantial New Programme of Action is being implemented,

Recalling resolution 142(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on progress in the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Recognizing that the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action will provide an opportunity for the international community to consider ways and means of enhancing the implementation of the Programme during the rest of the 1980s and adjusting it, as appropriate, in the second half of the decade of the 1980s,

1. Emphasizes that, in view of their deteriorating socio-economic situation, the least developed countries need the urgent and special attention of the international community and its large-scale support on a continuous basis to enable them to progress towards self-reliant development, consistent with the plans and programmes of each least developed country;

4. Urges all countries as well as multilateral and bilateral financial and technical assistance institutions to take the necessary steps to ensure appropriate preparations for an in-depth review at the high-level meeting;

5. Stresses the importance of the timely preparation of all necessary documentation, as requested in the Programme, including specific recommendations for the full and expeditious implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action by the United Nations Confer-

(a) Areas for possible improvement of aid practices and management with respect to the least developed countries, taking into account the experience to be drawn from the national review meetings, and in particular:

- (i) Measures to improve the co-ordination of assistance programmes;
- (ii) Measures that the least developed countries are already taking with the support of the international community, as well as possible additional measures that could be undertaken for accelerated progress of the least developed countries and full and expeditious implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action, taking into account the economic situation of the least developed countries;
- (iii) Ways of better adapting the implementation of development assistance programmes to the specific needs of the least developed countries, taking into account the agreed conclusions of the Second Meeting of Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of the Least Developed Countries, held at Geneva from 11 to 20 October 1982;

(b) Organizational issues related to the 1985 mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action, including the state of preparation of documentation for that review, especially documents concerning the economic situation of the least developed countries;

7. Takes note of decision 289(XXVIII) of 6 April 1984 of the Trade and Development Board, in which the Board decided that the results of the comprehensive review, to be carried out at its thirtieth session in March 1985, of the implementation of section A of its resolution 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978, called for in paragraph 1 of United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolution 161(VI) of 2 July 1983, and of the implementation of resolution 165(S-IX) as stated in the Substantial New Programme of Action and in Conference resolution 142(VI), are to be taken into account during the preparatory process for the mid-term global review;

8. Emphasizes the need for the conclusion of the first round of remaining country review meetings for the least developed countries as soon as possible and, at the latest, before the mid-term global review;

9. Requests all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to submit reports containing a review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action within their fields of competence and proposals for further action as input into the preparation for the mid-term global review;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to obtain extrabudgetary resources to ensure effective participation of the representatives of the least developed countries, through provision of necessary resources to finance travel expenses of at least two representatives from each least developed country to attend the high-level Meeting on the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action and one representative from each least developed country to attend the meeting referred to in paragraph 6 above;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report on the high-level Meeting on the mid-term global review and on the implementation of the present resolution.

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.14) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.110), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.83); agenda item 80 (n). Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 53, 56; plenary 103.

In addition to drafting changes, the Group of 77 draft differed from the adopted text in that, by paragraph 11, the Assembly would simply have requested the Secretary-General to ensure participation of LDC representatives in the meetings referred to in the text.

The Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, adopted by the Assembly on 3 December (resolution 39/29), stated that full and speedy implementation of SNPA, particularly with regard to the ODA level, would greatly augment resource flows to many African countries. In a resolution of 17 December (39/166), the Assembly stressed that advances in food and agricultural research and technology needed to be sustained and made more widespread, and in that context the needs of African countries and LDCs should be given special attention. The need to increase food and agricultural production and to raise nutritional standards in the developing countries, particularly in Africa and LDCs, was also emphasized.

Identification of LDCs

During 1984, CDP was requested to consider the eligibility of three countries for inclusion in the list of LDCs. The consideration of Kiribati and Tuvalu was requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1984/58 (see below), while the consideration of Vanuatu was requested by the General Assembly in resolution 39/198 (see Chapter III of this section).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Council, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, adopted resolution 1984/58 without vote.

Inclusion of Kiribati and Tuvalu in the list of the least developed countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3421(XXX) of 8 December 1975 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which the Assembly urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976, 32/185 of 19 December 1977, 34/205 of 19 December 1979, 35/61 of 5 December 1980 and 37/206 of 20 December 1982, in which the Assembly urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of island developing countries, and in which it also called upon all organizations of the United Nations system to implement, within their respective spheres of competence, appropriate specific action in favour of island developing countries,

Recalling further resolutions 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, 111(V) of 3 June 1979 and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, concerning specific action related to the particular needs and problems of island developing countries,

Recognizing the special problems faced by island developing countries, because of their smallness, remoteness, constraints in transport and communications, distance from market centres, limited internal markets, lack of natural resources, dependence on a few commodities, natural disasters, shortage of administrative personnel and heavy financial burdens,

Taking into account the fact that Kiribati and Tuvalu are island developing countries and are small and archipelagic, which makes the provision of services difficult and causes disproportionately high costs because of inter-island distances and the distribution of the population in small isolated pockets,

Concerned at the cumulative effect of the severe constraints on the economic development of Kiribati and Tuvalu, particularly those resulting from their geographical isolation,

Concerned also at the continued structural imbalances in the economies of the two countries, particularly their unavoidable dependence on imports,

1. Calls the attention of the international community to the special problems confronting Kiribati and Tuvalu as island developing countries with small populations;

2. Appeals to Member States, regional and inter-regional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Kiribati and Tuvalu to enable them to establish the social and economic infrastructure that is essential for the well-being of their people;

3. Invites the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Telecommunication Union, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Maritime Organization, the International Monetary Fund and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Kiribati and Tuvalu;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular the developed countries and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to meeting the short-term and long-term development needs of Kiribati and Tuvalu;

5. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Kiribati and Tuvalu, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance, and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help those countries;

6. Requests the Committee for Development Planning, at its twenty-first session, as a matter of priority, to give due consideration to the question of the inclusion of Kiribati and Tuvalu in the list of the least developed countries and to submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1985;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare as soon as possible a mission which will assess the needs of, and prepare a programme of assistance for, Kiribati and Tuvalu and, if possible, to apprise the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session of the findings of the mission;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1985 on the priority needs of Kiribati and Tuvalu and the assistance required from the international community.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/58

26 July 1984 Meeting 49 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/48) without vote, 20 July (meeting 14); 17-nation draft (E/1984/C.3/L.5); agenda item 18.

Sponsors: Australia, Bangladesh, China, Costa Rica, Guyana, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Saint Lucia, Sierra Leone, Thailand, Tunisia, United Kingdom, United States.

Land-locked developing countries

During 1984, the special needs and problems of land-locked developing countries were considered by UNCTAD and the General Assembly. Matters relating to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries were taken up by the UNDP Governing Council and the Assembly.

UNCTAD action. In accordance with UNCTAD resolution 137(VI),<sup>(21)</sup> the UNCTAD Secretary-General appointed an Ad Hoc Group of Experts to Study Ways and Means of Improving Transit-transport Infrastructures and Services for Land-locked Developing Countries, which met at Geneva from 4 to 8 June 1984.<sup>(22)</sup>

In the area of transit facilities and co-operation, the Group recommended: that land-locked developing countries and transit countries establish joint obligations and responsibilities for financing, operating or managing transit facilities and organizations related to transit transport, and that they arrange for the land-locked developing countries to participate in major decisions affecting their transportation activities; that land-locked developing countries be permitted to establish, with transit countries' support, free-port areas at ocean ports and trans-shipment points; that third-party involvement in establishing transit facilities and procedures be accepted and that this involvement be addressed by donor agencies when providing concessionary or aid financing of transit facilities; that donor agencies provide for transit-transport projects within subregional or transit corridor development plans, and evaluate transit-transportation proposals from the perspective of an overall development strategy for land-locked developing countries, particularly in view of the importance of alternative transport routes to the long-run political survival of those nations; that organizations and countries involved in transit matters develop corridor transit plans establishing agreed project priorities, including trade-facilitation measures and other non-physical matters; and that provision be made for aid-supported investment in small projects aimed at improving the security of goods in transit and the efficiency of transit traffic.

Regarding technical and procedural matters involving transit, the Group recommended: that national trade facilitation programmes be introduced in all transit countries, that the creation of regional trade facilitation commissions be encouraged and that international agreements related to transit trade and inter-country transport be implemented by transit and land-locked countries; that donor agencies encourage adoption of international conventions when providing aid support for transit facilities; that the UNCTAD secretariat prepare a report on simplifying trade documentation and transit procedures and alleviating non-physical transit barriers; and that land-locked countries be encouraged to create agencies to monitor transit-transport problems, and that the UNCTAD secretariat advise and consult with those agencies.

With respect to general development of land-locked developing countries, the Group recommended: that donor countries, United Nations organizations and regional economic groupings encourage development programmes focusing on internal economic development; that special attention be paid to air-freight alternatives and telecommunication facilities both internally and internationally; that UNCTAD, UNDP and the regional commissions undertake studies on expanding the external trade sector of land-locked developing countries; and that regional and subregional economic groupings of developing countries also intensify their efforts in that regard.

As to action by international agencies the Group recommended: that an approach be formulated to remedy problems of manpower deficiencies in all areas of transit-transport, including trade facilitation; that UNCTAD accumulate and disseminate information on transit-transport matters; that UNCTAD, in co-operation with the regional commissions and specialized agencies, continue to study the relationship between the evolving trade structure of land-locked developing countries and existing transport facilities; and that technical assistance to land-locked and transit developing countries be expanded.

Also in accordance with UNCTAD resolution 137(VI),<sup>(21)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the September session of the Trade and Development Board a July progress report with a later addendum on implementing specific action for the land-locked developing countries.<sup>(23)</sup> The report was based on information supplied by Governments and organizations and on UNCTAD's own work on land-locked developing countries.

There was evidence, concluded the report, that the international community had maintained the momentum to help land-locked developing countries, but at an inadequate level. The main observation was that several major donors did not have particular development assistance policies in favour of those countries but recognized that they faced particular problems resulting from their geographical disadvantages. There was also a growing awareness that acute transport problems in such countries hampered efforts to accelerate development in other sectors of the economy. Major donors had given particular attention to developing and improving transport and communications infrastructures in southern Africa within the framework of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, of which six land-locked countries were members. There was an urgent need for greater political support for international conventions related to transit trade and transport; problems of implementation could be tackled subsequent to signing or ratification. Unless reservations, particularly by the transit countries, were reversed, valuable international instruments would be of little practical effect.

On 21 September, the Trade and Development Board adopted a decision<sup>(24)</sup> on transit-transport infrastructures and services for land-locked developing countries. It invited member States to provide to the UNCTAD Secretary-General their comments on the report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts,<sup>(22)</sup> and requested him to report on those comments to the Board in 1985. The decision consisted of the final three paragraphs of a draft resolution submitted by the Group of 77. The Board agreed that the remainder of that draft should be considered in 1985.

Also on 21 September, the Board decided to transmit the UNCTAD secretariat progress report<sup>(23)</sup> to the General Assembly, together with comments made thereon during the Board's session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

For its consideration of the question, the Assembly had before it a September note with a later addendum by the Secretary-General,<sup>(25)</sup> transmitting the UNCTAD secretariat progress report,<sup>(23)</sup> and a note by the Secretariat<sup>(26)</sup> containing a draft resolution referred for consideration by a 1983 Assembly decision.<sup>(27)</sup>

In December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took two actions on the needs of land-locked developing countries.

On 18 December, it adopted without vote resolution 39/209.

Specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reiterating the specific actions related to the particular needs of the land-locked developing countries stated in resolutions 63(III) of 19 May 1972, 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, 123(V) of 3 June 1979 and 137(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 31/157 of 21 December 1976, 32/191 of 19 December 1977, 33/150 of 20 December 1978, 34/198 of 19 December 1979, 35/58 of 5 December 1980 and 36/175 of 17 December 1981 and other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries,

Bearing in mind various other resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, its related organs and the specialized agencies, emphasizing special and urgent measures in favour of land-locked developing countries,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, adopted on 10 December 1982,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and the prohibitive transit, transport and transshipment costs impose serious constraints on the socio-economic development of land-locked developing countries,

Noting with concern that the measures taken so far in favour of land-locked developing countries and the assistance given fall far short of their needs,

1. Reaffirms the right of access of land-locked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit States by all means of transport, in accordance with article 125 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

2. Appeals to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries envisaged in resolutions 63(III), 98(IV), 123(V) and 137(VI) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries and in other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

3. Urges all concerned countries as well as international organizations to provide land-locked developing countries with the appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction and improvement of their transport and transit infrastructures and facilities;

4. Urges also the international community and multilateral and bilateral financial institutions to intensify efforts in raising the net flow of resources to all land-locked developing countries to help offset the adverse effects of their disadvantageous geographical situation on their economic development efforts, in keeping with the overall development needs of each land-locked developing country;

5. Invites transit countries and the land-locked developing countries to co-operate effectively in harmonizing transport planning and promoting other joint ventures in the field of transport at the regional, subregional and bilateral levels;

6. Further invites the international community to give financial, technical and other support to interested transit and land-locked developing countries in the construction of alternative routes to the sea;

7. Commends the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other United Nations agencies for their work and the assistance they have provided to the land-locked developing countries and invites them to continue to take appropriate and effective measures to respond to the specific needs of those countries;

8. Recommends continued and intensified activities relating to the conducting of necessary studies and the implementation of special actions and specific measures for the land-locked developing countries, including those in the area of economic co-operation among developing countries, as well as those that have been envisaged in the programme of work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the regional commissions and other programmes and activities at the regional and subregional levels;

9. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts to Study Ways and Means of Improving Transit-transport Infrastructures and Services for Land-locked Developing Countries;

10. Requests Member States to transmit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development their views and comments on the report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts;

11. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report on the geographical disadvantages of land-locked developing countries and their consequences for the development of those countries.

General Assembly resolution 39/209

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.3) without vote, 10 December (meeting 58); draft by Secretariat (A/C.2/39/L.3), amended by Nepal (A/C.2/39/L.134), orally revised; agenda item 80 (c).

The Nepalese amendments made drafting changes and added the references to the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea<sup>(28)</sup> and to UNCTAD resolution 137(VI).<sup>(21)</sup> The amendments also replaced two paragraphs, by which the Assembly would have recommended that UNCTAD VI (1983) take action on the question and requested the United Nations Secretary-General to report to the Assembly in 1983, by paragraphs 9 to 11 of the adopted text. Paragraph 1, as amended, was approved by a recorded vote, requested by Ireland, of 86 to none, with 29 abstentions; the other amendments were approved without vote.

In explanation of its abstention on paragraph 1, Senegal said it had reservations on its content. Liberia was convinced that right of access was a bilateral issue. Ghana, although abstaining, said it would continue to co-operate closely with its land-locked neighbours. Ireland, on behalf of the EEC members, said that matters of a State's sovereignty should be decided only by consensus. The Congo said it had abstained because of institutional arrangements between it and neighbouring land-locked countries, although its position did not detract from its willingness to co-operate with the countries concerned. Mauritania said its non-participation in the vote did not affect its readiness to co-operate with neighbouring land-locked countries.

Ecuador's vote in favour of paragraph 1 did not imply acceptance of the Convention on the Law of the Sea and was based on the understanding that the laws and rights of transit States would be respected. Finland's support for the paragraph did not imply acceptance of interference in the decision-making processes of multilateral financial institutions regarding allocation of their resources, to which paragraph 4 might be interpreted as referring. Brazil and India said their bilateral agreements with neighbouring countries using their territory for transit purposes would not be affected by the resolution's adoption. Algeria said that application of paragraph 1 remained subject to the principles which had been made explicit at the 1980 Assembly discussions on the subject.<sup>(29)</sup>

Turkey's joining in the consensus on the resolution as a whole did not imply that it accepted the Convention on the Law of the Sea. Liberia had not opposed the resolution because it understood the serious problems of land-locked developing countries. The United States said it did not find the category of land-locked countries meaningful and was opposed to special categories of developing countries other than the least developed. Djibouti had reservations regarding the operative part of the resolution. Peru said it had joined the consensus on the understanding that the rights of transit States and existing agreements would be respected. Canada supported the development of land-locked developing countries but did not consider them a separate category in its development assistance programme.

Also on 18 December, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 39/434, dealing with land-locked developing countries and the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities (see Chapter IV of this section).

Specific action related to the particular needs and problems of the land-locked developing countries; status of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the following documents:

(a) Note by the Secretary-General transmitting a progress report by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on progress in the implementation of specific action related to the particular needs and problems of the land-locked developing countries;

(b) Report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities.

General Assembly decision 39/434

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.3) without vote, 14 December (meeting 60); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 80 (c).

UN Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

The annual report of the UNDP Administrator for 1984<sup>(30)</sup> stated that contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries and resultant interest earnings had declined steadily in recent years. It was estimated that only $37,692 would be available in 1985, which meant that during the 1985-1986 biennium the Fund would approach a point when its income would fall below its administrative costs. In 1984, $116,738 was received from 10 States and 13 States pledged $37,692 for 1985 (see table below). Most of these States were themselves land-locked. During the year, expenditures from the Fund for projects in the Central African Republic, Malawi and Swaziland totalled some $111,000.<sup>(31)</sup>

EEC would channel aid to such countries through existing bilateral and multi-lateral institutions. The USSR said it understood the special needs of the land-locked developing countries and considered them in its trade relations, assisting them with special transport problems.

and stated that he was not submitting an appointment for the post of Executive Director.

Island developing countries

UNCTAD action. In accordance with UNCTAD resolution 138(VI) on UNCTAD activities concerning island developing countries (IDCs),<sup>(33)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a report<sup>(34)</sup> on the implementation of that resolution to the September 1984 session of the Trade and Development Board. The report also responded to a 1982 General Assembly resolution<sup>(35)</sup> by which the Secretary-General had been requested to report on measures taken by the international community to respond to the specific needs of those countries. The UNCTAD report described their particular problems and went on to review the implementation of action related to those problems; the latter part of the report was based on information supplied by Governments and international organizations in response to a request from the UNCTAD Secretary-General.

The report concluded that a number of the IDCs' constraints were due to smallness rather than insularity per se. Other characteristics were linked to insularity and remoteness but it appeared that, even in those cases, small islands faced more acute problems than large ones, combining smallness with insularity. Scepticism had been expressed by some States and institutions as to whether IDCs indeed had special needs and problems; this was possibly because problems of large developing islands were not unlike those of large developing mainland countries. The report suggested that consideration be given to defining the concept of small IDCs more precisely and to limiting specific action to them.

Many problems of IDCs, said the report, could be handled by the United Nations regional commissions and the regional development banks, with the commissions promoting co-operation among IDCs. In the Pacific and Caribbean subregions, there were fairly well-structured mechanisms for inter-island co-operation receiving considerable outside support which, the report recommended, should be continued.

At the interregional or global level, the future role of the UNCTAD secretariat should involve: defining the specific problems of IDCs, or small developing countries, and making operational recommendations based on those findings; providing for exchange of information and experience; and continuing or developing specific support measures to implement development strategies of IDCs.

Most areas of interest to IDCs were covered by UNCTAD and General Assembly resolutions and were not dealt with in the report. Examples of common subject-areas that merited continued attention were: national strategies and planning problems of small IDCs; transport and communications; natural disaster planning and prevention; environment; development of marine resources; market access and earnings stabilization; the role of invisibles and emigrants' remittances in foreign exchange earnings; and establishing an information exchange system for IDCs.

On 21 September, the Trade and Development Board decided to transmit the report to the General Assembly, together with comments made thereon during the Board's session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By a 28 September note,<sup>(36)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the UNCTAD secretariat report on island developing countries.

On 18 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/212, on the recommendation of the Second Committee.

Specific measures in favour of island developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution

3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, its resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976, 32/185 of 19 December 1977, 34/205 of 19 December 1979, 35/61 of 5 December 1980 and 37/206 of 20 December 1982, relating to the special needs and problems of island developing countries,

Reiterating the call for specific action in favour of island developing countries contained in resolutions 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, 111(V) of 3 June 1979 and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Recognizing the difficult problems faced by island developing countries, in particular those which suffer handicaps due especially to their smallness, remoteness, vulnerability to natural disasters, constraints in transport, great distances from market centres, a highly limited internal market, lack of natural resources, heavy dependence on a few commodities, shortage of administrative personnel and heavy financial burdens,

Mindful of the fact that timely additional efforts are needed to implement the specific measures required to assist island developing countries in offsetting the major handicaps which retard their development process,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 37/206 and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and calls for their immediate and effective implementation;

2. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General on measures taken by the international community and recommendations for future action in favour of island developing countries;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all States and organizations which have facilitated the implementation of resolutions in favour of island developing countries;

4. Notes with concern that the specific measures envisaged in the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, including Conference resolution 138(VI), have not yet been fully implemented and calls upon States and international organizations to respond positively in this regard;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in co-operation with Governments and regional and other competent institutions, to continue the programme of in-depth studies of the common problems of island economies and of the constraints inhibiting their economic growth and development carried out by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, with a view to proposing concrete specific actions, taking into account, inter alia, the geographical factors, traditional island life and institutions, the physical environment, development priorities and the problems of island developing countries in the international economy;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to seek the views of the representatives of island developing countries and other interested countries on the implementation of the specific measures in favour of island developing countries, taking into account studies undertaken thus far and the studies envisaged in paragraph 5 above;

7. Calls upon all States and international organizations and financial institutions to intensify efforts to implement specific actions in favour of island developing countries in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

8. Requests the competent organs and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the regional commissions, to take adequate measures to respond positively to the particular needs of island developing countries;

9. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to pursue further its role, not only as a focal point for specific action at the global level in favour of island developing countries but also, where necessary, as a catalyst in this regard, inter alia, by organizing and facilitating cross-regional interchange of information and experience in full co-operation with regional and subregional organizations;

10. Requests the competent organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Capital Development Fund, to take adequate measures in order to respond positively to the particular needs of island developing countries;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to explore the possibility of organizing a follow-up meeting to the interregional workshop held in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines in November 1983, with the participation of representatives of island developing countries and other interested countries;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the measures taken by the international community to respond to the specific needs of island developing countries, as called for in this and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, in order to permit the Assembly to undertake at that session a comprehensive review of the problems and needs of the island developing countries.

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.3) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.114), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.82); agenda item 80 (c). Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 53, 56; plenary 104.

The draft approved by the Second Committee differed in a number of ways from that put forward by the Group of 77. By the Group's text, the Assembly, in the third preambular paragraph, would have reiterated the programme of specific action envisaged in various UNCTAD resolutions. In the fifth preambular paragraph, it would have referred to urgent and additional efforts. In paragraph 4, the Assembly would have noted with concern that some States and international organizations had not responded positively to the action programme in favour of IDCs. Paragraphs 5 and 6 of the final text replaced a paragraph in the original draft, by which the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to seek the views of IDCs and other interested countries in order to review the implementation of the programme of specific action in favour of IDCs and to propose further action. In paragraph 9 of the final text, the phrases "where necessary" and "in full co-operation with regional and subregional organizations" were added. Paragraph 10 of the final text replaced one by which the Assembly would have invited UNDP to support UNCTAD, the regional commissions and other competent United Nations organizations in implementing relevant resolutions. By paragraph 11 of the Group's draft, the Assembly would have simply requested a follow-up meeting to the 1983 workshop, and in paragraph 12 would have requested the Secretary-General to recommend further action to permit the Assembly to undertake its review.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 1984, total official development assistance transferred through all the organizations of the United Nations system to developing countries amounted to $6.6 billion dollars. Total contributions for the system's development activities amounted to $5.7 billion, a decline compared with $6 billion in 1983. A number of countries increased the national currency value of their contributions, but, as several reports on operational activities indicated, part of the increase was lost due to the strength of the United States dollar.

In his annual report on the work of the Organization (p. 3), the Secretary-General said that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) with the specialized agencies, had come to represent a vital source of economic and technical assistance for developing countries. High priority was being given to the low-income countries and, in a period of restricted resources, efforts were continuing to ensure more effective operational co-operation within the system.

The three major issues which illustrated the new technical co-operation requirements claiming the attention of UNDP in 1984 were the debt problems of developing countries, their needs in shaping and implementing macroeconomic policies, and the crisis in Africa. Programme adjustments were initiated by UNDP to respond to the emergency in Africa, which was widely perceived to be a development issue. Field expenditures in the region, by and through UNDP, amounted to more than $300 million over the year.

The work of UNDP in technical co-operation among developing countries during the year included a major interregional project through which 133 activities were financed at a cost of $1.28 million.

The General Assembly, by resolution 39/220 of 18 December 1984, recognized the contributions of Governments to UNDP and called on the UNDP Governing Council, while considering the level of resources of the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), to take into account the increased needs of the developing countries in technical co-operation and the need for real growth in resources.

The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) delivered a technical co-operation programme of almost $111 million in 1984 which was almost comparable to that of 1983 despite a drop in the level of budgets.

In 1984, the United Nations Volunteers programme (UNV) attached the highest priority to assisting the most severely affected African countries to utilize emergency relief assistance more effectively. Twenty-seven countries were selected to receive such assistance, requests for which were predominantly in the areas of aid co-ordination, food distribution, and vehicle, water pump and borehole maintenance.

The United Nations Capital Development Fund approved $36.8 million for 17 new projects. In programming its assistance, the Fund gave priority to drought-affected areas of Africa and to projects related to food production and distribution, primary health care and water-related projects.

In his annual report on United Nations technical co-operation activities for 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General gave information on the activities of the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) and of other entities of the system responsible for technical co-operation. The steep decline in DTCD's field programme in 1982 and 1983 levelled off in 1984 when a programme of nearly $111 million was delivered. This was achieved as a result of DTCD's improved rate of delivery; although the Department's financial situation still gave rise to concern. Of the Department's total expenditures, $76.7 million was for UNDP-financed projects, $11.4 for UNFPA, $7 million under the United Nations Regular Programme of Technical Co-operation and $11.9 million under trust funds. Compared with 1983, the budget fell by $4.7 million, but expenditures remained practically the same. By geographic area, budgets for 1984 grew by 2 per cent in Africa, but decreased in all other regions. The distribution of expenditure, however, was little changed from 1983, with Africa remaining the most important programme accounting for nearly $43 million, or 38 per cent of the total, followed by Asia with over $29 million or 26 per cent. By sector, natural resources and energy continued to account for the largest share of the programme, representing $50 million in expenditures, or 45 per cent. Development planning was the second most important activity, although its share of delivery dropped from 22 per cent in 1983 to 19 per cent, and from $25 to $21 million in monetary terms.

In his annual report on operational activities of the United Nations system,<sup>(2)</sup> the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) stated that some $6,604 million in official development assistance (ODA) was transferred through all the organizations of the United Nations system to developing countries in 1984, amounting to about 15 per cent of net ODA received by those countries. Disbursements of both the International Development Association (IDA) and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) on a net transfer basis increased during the year to reach $2,515 million. Grant financed expenditures on field programmes amounted to $2,297 million, the fourth successive year for which there had been no increase in nominal dollar terms. Developing countries thus experienced a real decline in United Nations system assistance.

Other features of 1984 programme expenditures highlighted in the report included: the stagnation in expenditures reflected the contribution situation, although a stronger United States dollar which had a depressive effect on contributions had a beneficial effect on programme expenditures; the decline in expenditures financed by UNDP and from the regular budget of agencies were offset by increased expenditures by the World Food Programme (WFP) and by organizations from extrabudgetary resources; the agriculture, forestry and fisheries, health and natural resources sectors absorbed about 50 per cent of total technical co-operation expenditures, little change from 1983; expenditures in sub-Saharan Africa continued to grow: the allocation of expenditures continued to shift towards least developed countries (LDCs) and other low-income groups; and total UNDP activities financed 45 per cent of total system-wide technical co-operation of $1,374 million (excluding the World Bank), as in 1983. Expenditures of the organizations participating in the Joint Consultative Group on Policy (UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP) totalled $1,657 million, or about three quarters of system-wide expenditures.

Introducing to the General Assembly's Second Committee, his annual report for 1984,<sup>(3)</sup> which covered mainly 1983 activities,<sup>(4)</sup> the DIEC Director-General said developments over the preceding year had shown that the system had been adapting its programmes to meet the new requirements of the developing countries. Nevertheless, there was a need to modify some existing programmes and to consider social issues more explicitly in formulating adjustment and economic recovery programmes. Resource constraints had adversely affected the system's capacity to assist developing countries. However, in both 1983 and 1984, a number of countries, particularly developing ones, had increased their contributions in national currencies. A number of Member States had announced larger national currency contributions at the November 1984 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see below), but the overall situation gave no grounds for complacency.

A November 1984 report of the Secretary-General<sup>(5)</sup> on implementing a 1977 resolution on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system<sup>(6)</sup> contained a section on operational activities. It was noted that a practice had been established of triennial policy reviews of operational activities by the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, and annual reviews by the Assembly itself, based on reports submitted by the Director-General. Provisions of the 1977 resolution relating to the establishment of a single pledging conference, the designation of a single official at the country level, and the carrying out of comprehensive policy reviews, had been carried out, while those relating to the use of the UNDP country programming process as a frame of reference for operational activities had proceeded more slowly. No specific action had been taken by inter-governmental bodies to integrate existing United Nations programmes and funds for development financed from extrabudgetary resources; nor had a uniform pattern emerged with regard to resource mobilization.

ACC activities. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), through its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ(OPS)), also discussed operational activities.<sup>(7)</sup> The Committee met twice in 1984, in March and December. At its March session,<sup>(8)</sup> it discussed links between technical co-operation and investment and agreed on an agenda for an ad hoc meeting on investment promotion, and on items to be considered at a seminar, to be followed by an informal inter-agency consultation, on enhancing the role of United Nations agencies in implementing technical assistance financed by multilateral development banks, both to be held later in the year.

Also considered were: simplification and harmonization of aid modalities; strengthening of technical backstopping of operational activities; feasibility of in-depth reviews of selected multisectoral projects; and follow-up to a 1983 Assembly resolution on a comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development.<sup>(9)</sup>

At its December 1984 session,<sup>(10)</sup> CCSQ(OPS) discussed the conclusions and recommendations of the seminar and the ad hoc meeting (Washington, D.C. 14-15 May; Vienna, Austria, 11-12 October). It also continued its consideration of simplification and harmonization of aid modalities, based on a report on evaluation and project reporting prepared by UNDP and the World Health Organization (WHO). Other subjects discussed included: policy issues associated with tied aid procurement; influencing the direction and flow of bilateral aid by the United Nations system; administrative costs of fellowships; and the Committee's own 1985-1986 work programme.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1984/171.

Reports considered by the Economic and Social Council in connection with the question of operational activities for development

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1984, the Council took note of the following reports:

(a) Report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund;

(b) Extract from the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its organizational meeting for 1984 and its thirty-first session;

(c) Report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a technical unit for technical co-operation among developing countries in ground-water resources development within the Centre for Waters at Zagreb, Yugoslavia;

(d) Report of the Secretary-General on United Nations technical co-operation activities.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/171

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/149) without vote, 19 July (meeting 13); oral proposal by Chairman and in light of paragraph 5 (e) of Council decision 1984/101; agenda item 19.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/220, the General Assembly reaffirmed the central responsibility of developing countries in co-ordinating external assistance, including determining local co-ordination arrangements. The Secretary-General was requested to ensure that the United Nations system was responsive to developing countries<sup>(2)</sup> requests for assistance in strengthening their co-ordination capabilities. The DIEC Director-General was requested to provide data on issues identified in the 1983 Assembly resolution on the policy review of operational activities for development<sup>(9)</sup> and to report in 1985 on progress achieved. He was also requested to include in that report information on: steps being considered to improve the effectiveness of round-table meetings in the light of the experience gained in the 1985 mid-term review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (1981), (see p. 413) in close collaboration with the UNDP Administrator; the situation in the United Nations system regarding tied contributions and the outcome of discussions on the issue by ACC; data on procurement undertaken by United Nations organizations engaged in operational activities; data on and analysis of the relationship between programme delivery and administrative and support costs of those organizations; and information on action to help strengthen developing countries' co-ordination capabilities.

Financing of operational activities

In a report on United Nations system regular and extrabudgetary technical co-operation expenditures financed from sources other than UNDP,<sup>(11)</sup> the UNDP Administrator indicated that, in 1984, 27 organizations and five regional commissions (excluding Governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the development banks) reported expenditures of almost $841 million financed from services other than UNDP central funds. Although total expenditure was the same as that for 1983, regular technical co-operation expenditures went down by some 14 per cent and UNFPA-financed expenditures fell from $123 million in 1983 to $120 million in 1984. However, expenditures funded by sources other than UNDP, UNFPA and UNDP-administered funds rose to $420 million in 1984 from $397 million in 1983. Those financed by UNDP-administered funds rose sharply to $81 million as opposed to $64 million in 1983.

The DIEC Director-General stated that indications suggested that there had been a halt in the erosion of contributions during 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/220 without vote.

Financing of operational activities for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further its resolutions 2688(XXV) of 11 December 1970 on the capacity of the United Nations development system and 3405(XXX) of 28 November 1975 on new dimensions in technical co-operation,

Reiterating its resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977, 33/201 of 29 January 1979 and 35/81 of 5 December 1980 on a comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, 36/199 of 17 December 1981 and 37/226 of 20 December 1982 on operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the exclusive responsibility of the Government of the recipient country in formulating its national development plan, priorities and objectives, as set out in the consensus contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 2688(XXV), and emphasizing that the integration of the operational activities of the United Nations system with national programmes would enhance the impact and relevance of those activities,

Stressing the urgent need to strengthen multilateral co-operation for development, including increased voluntary contributions to operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Having considered the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 38/171 and 38/172 of 19 December 1983;

2. Notes the positive signs at the 1984 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, which nevertheless follow a stagnation in resources for operational activities for development in 1983 compared to 1982, bearing in mind that the continuing needs of developing countries require greater efforts to strengthen that positive trend to lead to a process of growth in resources by increasing significantly the level of contributions on a more equitable basis;

3. Stresses the need for the successful completion of the first replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and urges all countries concerned, bearing in mind the particular contribution of the developed countries, to reach agreement on a priority basis for the second replenishment, in order to enable the Fund to continue its effective contribution at an adequate level;

4. Urges developed countries to provide supplementary financing for the seventh replenishment of the International Development Association in order to cover the shortfall and enable the Association to increase its assistance to developing countries, particularly in the development of food and agriculture;

5. Reaffirms the unique and central role of the United Nations Development Programme in the field of technical co-operation for development;

6. Recognizes the contribution of Governments to the United Nations Development Programme, particularly those which have increased their contributions by 14 per cent, bearing in mind decision 80/30 of 26 June 1980 of the Governing Council of the Programme, reaffirms the imperativeness of providing the Programme with adequate resources, and calls upon the Governing Council, while considering the level of resources of the fourth programming cycle, to take fully into account, in accordance with the principles of the consensus of 1970, the increased needs of the developing countries in the area of technical co-operation and the need for achieving real growth in resources;

7. Reaffirms also the central responsibility of Governments of developing countries in the process of co-ordination of external assistance, including the determination of local co-ordination arrangements;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations system is responsive to assisting developing countries, at their request, in strengthening their capabilities in exercising co-ordination;

9. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, in his annual report for 1985, to continue to provide data on the various issues identified in General Assembly resolution 38/171, particularly in its paragraphs 15 and 24, and to report to the Assembly, at its fortieth session, on the progress achieved with regard to paragraphs 19, 23 and 27 of that resolution, and also requests the Director-General to include in his report information on the following:

(a) Steps being considered to improve the process and effectiveness of round-table meetings in the light of the experience gained in the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, in close collaboration with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme;

(b) The prevailing situation in various organizations and programmes of the United Nations system with regard to tied contributions in the light of paragraph 8 of resolution 38/171 and the outcome of discussions on this issue by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination;

(c) Data on procurement undertaken by organizations of the United Nations system engaged in operational activities;

(d) Further data on and analysis of the relationship between programme delivery and administrative and support costs of those organizations;

(e) Information on specific action taken in response to paragraph 8 of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/220

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/791) without vote, 14 December (meeting 61); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.138/Rev.1), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.96); agenda item 81 (a). Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 48-53, 55, 56, 58, 61; plenary 104.

Apart from drafting changes, the adopted text differed substantially from that submitted by the Group of 77. The second, third and fourth preambular paragraphs were added. In the provision that became the fifth preambular paragraph, the Assembly would have referred to a significant increase in ODA rather than increased voluntary contributions to the United Nations. Paragraph 2 of the final text comprised three paragraphs of the earlier draft by which the Assembly would have: stressed the importance of operational activities for the development process of developing countries, and emphasized that their deteriorating economic situation and the critical economic situation in Africa required an urgent increase in financial resources to strengthen multilateral co-operation; expressed deep concern at the decrease in resources for operational activities in 1983 compared with 1982, especially when the latter was considered a crisis year by the Assembly; and also expressed deep concern that, despite positive signs at the 1984 Pledging Conference for Development Activities, overall resource levels remained far below requirements. Omitted from the final text was a paragraph by which the Assembly would have strongly reiterated the need for an assured, substantial increase in resources, to enable the system to increase operational programmes, and called on Member States, particularly developed countries whose overall performance was not commensurate with their capacities, to increase their contributions to attain and, where possible, surpass planned funding levels of UNDP and its administered funds. Also deleted was a call to United Nations financial institutions to use DTCD's experience and operational capabilities fully, while paragraph 5 was added.

Other changes included the following: by the provision that became paragraph 3, the Assembly would have urged developed countries to fulfil their pledges under the IFAD first replenishment and to announce contributions for the second on a priority basis; by what became paragraph 4, it would have urged developed countries to agree on supplementary funding of IDA of not less than $3 billion; and by a provision corresponding to paragraph 6, it would have reaffirmed the 14 per cent annual growth rate for UNDP resources, and called on the UNDP Governing Council, in considering the fourth programming cycle, to take account of developing countries' increased technical co-operation needs and international targets warranting a steady increase of ODA over the decade.

Paragraphs 8 and 9 comprised four earlier provisions, by which, in addition to the requests contained in the final text, the Assembly would have requested the DIEC Director-General to provide in 1985 information on action taken to assist developing countries in strengthening co-ordination. Sub-paragraphs 9 (c), (d) and (e) were also added to the Group of 77's draft.

Expenditures

Total ODA transferred through all United Nations organizations to developing countries amounted to $6,604 million in 1984, or about 15 per cent of net ODA received. Excluding the concessional funds provided by IDA and IFAD, the share of developing countries net-ODA receipts channelled through the system was a little over 6 per cent, the level attained in earlier years. Disbursements of both IDA and IFAD on a net transfer basis increased to $2,515 million, a significant increase over 1983, largely due to rapid growth in

Grant financed expenditures on field programmes totalled $2,297 million, the fourth successive year for which there had been no increase in nominal dollar terms. Such stagnation reflected the overall contributions situation although the stronger United States dollar which had a depressive effect on contributions had a beneficial effect on expenditures. Expenditures in sub-Saharan Africa continued to grow, from $472 million in 1979 (30 per cent of total country and regional programmes) to $766 million in 1984 (41 per cent), a reflection of the importance attached by the international community to the region's severe economic problems. Allocation of expenditures continued to shift towards least developed countries (LDCs) and other low-income groups with LDCs receiving 41 per cent of the system's country and regional activities, compared with 33 per cent in 1979.

Expenditures on refugee, humanitarian, and disaster relief activities, amounted to $628 million in 1984, a slight increase over previous years' figures but still below the level attained in the earlier part of the decade. Those expenditures were likely to increase, particularly in view of the United Nations response to the crisis in Africa.

Total UNDP project expenditures decreased from $560 million in 1983 to $527 (not including $5.1 million in government cash counterpart expenditures) in 1984. Non-UNDP-financed technical co-operation expenditures, however, remained at the 1983 level amounting to $841 million. Nevertheless, the majority of executing bodies continued to have the larger part of their technical co-operation expenditures financed by UNDP, exceptions being IAEA, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, WIPO, ITC, ESCAP and the Centre on Transnational Corporations (see table above).

Contributions

Total contributions from Governments and other official and non-official sources to development activities of the United Nations system, amounted to $5.7 billion in 1984 (see table above) compared with $6 billion the previous year. Covered in the totals were all United Nations funds and programmes, the operational activities of the specialized agencies and WFP.

Aggregate contributions to United Nations funds and programmes amounted to $1,352 million, a slight increase over 1983. Contributions to UNDP-administered trust funds and to other United Nations funds and programmes amounted to $182 million. Contributions to the main programme resources of UNDP stagnated at less than $700 million for the fifth consecutive year. Despite a number of countries increasing their 1984 pledges to UNDP, the effect was lost as a result of the appreciation of the United States dollar against most other currencies.

Extrabudgetary contributions for the technical co-operation activities of the specialized agencies and IAEA increased in 1984 to $376 million, the same level attained in 1982, largely the result of an increase in contributions from developing countries. Cost-sharing and self-supporting contributions amounted to $205 million in 1984, an increase over 1982 and 1983.

Contributions to IDA and IFAD declined from the 1982 and 1983 levels, totalling $2,776 million in 1984; however, year-to-year changes reflected the bunching of IDA payments.

Contributions for humanitarian, refugee, disaster relief and special economic assistance programmes—not included in the above data—amounted to $556 million in 1984, an increase over 1983 but below the earlier years of the decade. In 1985, contributions were expected to show a more rapid increase, in view of the response to the critical situation in Africa.

Regarding the resource outlook for 1985 to 1988, UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP estimated that contributions to the four organizations would amount to $1,900 million in 1985 compared with about $1,750 million received in 1984. For 1986-1988, those organizations were planning for total contributions of $6,300 million compared with the $5,437 million collected and estimated for 1985 for the immediate preceding three years.

In response to a 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(9)</sup> the DIEC Director-General, in his report to the 1984 Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> included an examination of the extent and implications of the trend towards tying contributions for operational activities to the procurement of goods and services in the donor country. The report stated that the UNDP Governing Council, at its 1984 session, had discussed the issue in the context of earlier Council decisions to authorize the UNDP Administrator to accept trust funds conditioned on procurement from a donor country for three funds (see below under "Technical co-operation through UNDP"). Based on the Administrator's conclusion that acceptance of such trust funds had enabled those funds to provide significant additional assistance, the Council, while emphasizing the importance of preserving the principles of multilateralism, expressed concern for the needs of LDCs, particularly those afflicted by drought and desertification, which urgently needed additional resources, and decided to extend the period granted to the Administrator to accept trust funds conditioned on procurement in a donor country for the funds in question through April 1986.

The Director-General also reported that the Chairman of ACC CCSQ(OPS) was exploring with interested organizations issues associated with tied procurement. The purpose of the consultations was to ascertain whether organizations felt that tied procurement contributions were increasing, to consider the experience of organizations with such contributions and to assess the implications for multilateral development co-operation. Consideration would also be given to the need for action, including improving the transparency of information on tied procurement.

UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities. The 1984 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held at United Nations Headquarters on 7 and 8 November to receive government pledges for 1985 to United Nations funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance.

Contributions to the funds and programme participating in the Pledging Conference totalled $1,020

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/220, the General Assembly noted the positive signs at the 1984 Pledging Conference, which followed a stagnation in resources for operational activities in 1983, bearing in mind that the needs of developing countries required greater efforts to strengthen that positive trend in order to lead to a process of growth in resources by increasing contributions on a more equitable basis.

Inter-agency co-operation

ACC action

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), in its overview report for 1983/84,<sup>(7)</sup> stated that it was heartened by the somewhat higher pledges made at the 1983 Pledging Conference<sup>(12)</sup> but continued to view with concern the lack of certainty and inadequate level of resources being made available to assist developing countries.

During discussion of a 1983 General Assembly resolution on operational activities<sup>(9)</sup> ACC's CCSQ

(OPS), at its March 1984 session,<sup>(10)</sup> addressed the need for more concerted United Nations country-level action, the role of resident co-ordinators, the need to strengthen the evaluation capacity of developing countries and the issue of tied procurement. Special attention was given to efforts being made within the system to simplify and harmonize aid modalities. ACC felt that further harmonization of procedures should aim to make it easier for donor and recipient Governments to collaborate through the multilateral system. Since the bulk of aid inputs handled by United Nations organizations originated from a relatively limited number of central funds, it was important to bring those organizations together to simplify and harmonize their procedures.

Evaluation

In September 1984, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on implementing recommendations by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU),<sup>(13)</sup> including 1983 recommendations on United Nations system co-operation in developing evaluation by Governments.<sup>(14)</sup> The report stated that in October 1983, a Bureau for Programme Policy and Evaluation had been created in the UNDP Central Evaluation Office to assist the regional bureaux in UNDP and executing agencies in assisting developing countries to enhance their evaluation capacity. The new proposed guidelines on monitoring, evaluating and reporting on UNDP projects and programmes stressed the role of national and regional resources in UNDP's evaluation work and specifically required that evaluation be undertaken as a tripartite exercise with full participation of Government(s) concerned. Specific technical co-operation projects to strengthen government evaluation capacity were under discussion with Nepal and Yemen. UNDP also issued a directory of evaluation offices and institutions in developing countries to aid exchanges of ideas and experience among them. With regard to training, UNDP participated in two seminars for development planners in Africa (Botswana, April 1984).

Guidelines on evaluation were re-drafted and it was hoped to develop a common evaluation system covering all United Nations operational and trust-fund activities, which would simplify the task of recipient Governments.

In February, the UNDP Administrator submitted to the UNDP Governing Council a progress report on an interorganizational evaluation study of women's participation in development (see Chapter XIX of this section). (For other UNDP programme evaluation activities, see below.)

Technical co-operation through UNDP

In his annual report for 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNDP Administrator stated that the year had witnessed a progressive clarification of issues in the development dialogue as donors, recipients and development institutions focused on the orientation and enhancement of development assistance efforts. Three major issues, which illustrated the new technical co-operation requirements claiming UNDP's attention, had preoccupied the development community: the debt problems of developing countries; the needs of developing countries, particularly the least developed, in shaping and implementing macro-economic policies; and the crisis of drought and famine in Africa.

As an example of debt-related issues to which UNDP had already started to respond, the Administrator cited a project initiated in Costa Rica in 1982 through which UNDP provided consultancy services on a broad range of financial issues arising from the country's debt crisis. He also mentioned UNDP support for the African Centre for Monetary Studies (Dakar, Senegal), which provided advice on monetary and banking matters to Governments of the region; assistance to the Office of Debt Management in Zaïre, executed by the World Bank, which helped to marshal data on the country's debt sources in an integrated information system; and support services in Panama, linked to a World Bank adjustment loan.

Sub-Saharan Africa's worsening condition greatly occupied international policy attention in 1984, placing urgent demands on UNDP's resources and underscoring the need for renewed programming efforts throughout the United Nations system. UNDP offices in the region assisted immediate relief efforts, often acting as centres for logistical support and co-ordination as well as for important country information. Recognizing the close link between emergency assistance and medium- and longer-term development programmes, UNDP reorganized its field offices in affected countries to ensure that emergency work did not pre-empt continued development activities. Steps towards longer-term solutions were being taken through UNDP's existing and planned programmes for Africa. Core indicative planning figure (IPF) inputs to sub-Saharan Africa for 1982-1986 would total nearly $1 billion, of which $200 million was budgeted in 1984. UNDP had drawn up a threefold plan of action to be carried out in co-operation with its agency partners: the focusing of resources on projects in agricultural development, food production, processing and storage, forestry development, meteorology and drought management, and development planning and public administration; the redirection of inputs towards production-oriented activities involving grass-roots communities and aimed at stimulating their income-generating potential; and the reinforcement of macro-economic policy formulating capabilities, and strengthening of government planning mechanism.

A significant phenomenon in 1984, stated the Administrator, was the deepening resolve of major donors to support aid co-ordination mechanisms which led to improved strategies for national self-reliance. The 115 UNDP field offices' interaction with host Governments and activities such as emergency aid co-ordination, the provision of management and administrative services, trust fund management, and the preparation of cross-sectoral feasibility studies offered a useful basis for an expanded UNDP co-ordinating role. An evaluation of the round-table process had shown where there was scope for improvement in the format, venue and work methods of such consultations.

With regard to UNDP's efforts to improve the quality of technical assistance, the Administrator stated that updated financial management guidelines for field personnel were helping to expedite key decision-making, accounting and reporting functions, as were recently-introduced control systems for budget management and data processing. Measures were also continuing to rationalize the diverse efforts of funds administered by UNDP, to collaborate with agency partners in joint programming exercises and to harmonize UNDP's numerous special mandates with its central programmes. In addition, the recently-established Central Evaluation Office (CEO) was fulfilling its promise as an in-house analytical tool. As an example of enhanced technical assistance performance, the Administrator cited the transfer in December 1983 of funds from the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund to a UNDP trust fund for developing countries affected by drought and related catastrophes.<sup>(2)</sup> In little more than a year, 98 per cent of a total of $33.9 million had been committed to over 95 projects in affected countries, with about $26 million going to sub-Saharan Africa. The single most powerful means to improve effectiveness, said the Administrator, remained the country programme which was the result of collaborative effort between the Government, UNDP and the United Nations agencies and organizations.

Highlights of UNDP action following the June 1984 Governing Council session were: efforts at closer collaboration with organizations of the United Nations system and other institutions in assisting African countries affected by the economic and social crisis constituted a major thrust in UNDP programming in 1984, and UNDP channelled exceptional funding of $1.5 million, authorized by the Council from Special Programme Resources, to provide increased numbers of United Nations volunteers for emergency programmes in the region; field office capacities in Africa were surveyed to determine measures needed to ensure adequate country-level support; and consultations were held on preparations for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991).

At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities in November (see p. 432), nine of UNDP's 16 major donors maintained the real value of their contributions in national currencies and six of the nine substantially exceeded that minimum level. A total of 31 countries (27 of them developing countries) met or exceeded the 14 per cent growth rate set for the third programming cycle (1982-1986) in terms of their national currencies. Canada, Denmark, Italy and Sweden pledged a further $13.1 million in supplementary contributions for 1984. Nevertheless, the strength and volatility of the United States dollar maintained an adverse influence on the Programme's resource outlook. In current dollar terms, the value of pledges to UNDP remained static from 1981 onward at around $675 million.

Despite central resource constraints, a substantial increase in supplementary contributions enabled UNDP to maintain its services to developing countries. Sources of those funds included cost-sharing, trust funds, government cash counterpart contributions and contributions to the Special Measures Fund for LDCs. In 1984, those resources amounted to $148.4 million or 18 per cent of the Programme's resources, compared with $85.1 million or 11 per cent in 1981.

Reflecting the growth in supplementary resources, five new trust funds were established in 1984; income received for these funds amounted to the equivalent of $6.8 million. In addition, 14 sub-trust funds were established on behalf of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO), five on behalf of the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD) and one on behalf of the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF). Total 1984 income for those sub-trust funds amounted to the equivalent of $13.1 million. Voluntary pledges for the numerous special-purpose funds administered by UNDP declined slightly in 1984 to $38.6 million against $45.5 million for 1983. However, cost-sharing and sub-trust fund income received by those special funds increased from $17.7 million in 1983 to $25.8 in 1984.

Total contributions to central resources, special purpose funds and sub-trust fund and cost-sharing arrangements amounted to $834.5 million in 1984, a decline in United States dollar terms of almost 10 per cent compared with 1983. In that context, resource mobilization efforts by UNDP field offices and complementary financing attracted by UNDP-assisted projects took on renewed significance. Figures reported by 46 UNDP field offices indicated that an additional $145 million in third-party co-financing and parallel financing was directly generated by UNDP-assisted activities in 1984.

Total expenditures under UNDP in 1984 amounted to $717.7 million, of which $532.6 million (including $5.1 million in government cash counterpart expenditures) was for field programme activities, while the balance was for agency support costs, administrative and programme support, sectoral support and other field-level costs. In addition, 86 field offices reported assistance in implementing more than 1,600 non-UNDP-financed projects with total expenditures of approximately $243.2 million.

While the value of new projects approved in 1984 declined again from the previous year, their number increased from 945 to 1,074. New approvals by sector followed the pattern of the preceding year with one exception. In 1983, the three leading sectors, in order of their numerical share of new approvals, were: industry; agriculture, forestry and fisheries; and development policy and planning; in 1984, the order changed with development policy and planning taking second place to industry.

The Secretary-General's December 1984 decision to establish the United Nations Office for Emergency Operations in Africa (OEOA), under the Administrator's direction, underlined the major adjustment required of the Programme in 1984. Field expenditures in Africa by and through UNDP amounted to over $300 million, with UNDP core resources accounting for $255 million of that total (see p. 468).

Programmable resources for the Asia and Pacific region for 1982-1986 totalled $1,100 million, of which $875 million had been committed for financing 1,587 country and intercountry projects by the end of 1984. During the year, 28 of the region's 34 operational programmes were reviewed as part of the preparation for the fourth programming cycle, to assess their continuing validity and impact. The majority of those reviews demonstrated that, while the orientation and content of country programmes were still largely valid, progress in implementation was not as rapid as expected. The reviews also revealed trends reflecting some of the new technical co-operation modalities endorsed by the Governing Council in June, including: greater reliance on government execution; increasing use of national experts; and more effective aid co-ordination. At a major meeting organized by UNDP at Bangkok (Thailand) in May, government aid co-ordinators were consulted on how to improve the substance, co-ordination and operation of the intercountry programme. The meeting also provided a forum for clarifying technical co-operation procedures with senior government officials and afforded the seven LDCs in the region an opportunity to evaluate the results of the UNDP-assisted round-table process and discuss further improvements in such consultations. Statistical data on the regional programme revealed two trends: an increase in resources directed to the industrial sector and a decrease in funds spent on equipment. Expenditure patterns also confirmed the increasing importance of the human factor in development.

Through region-wide consultations in Latin America and the Caribbean, carried out by UNDP during 1984, three characteristics were noted as being of special concern: evident stagnation in many national economies; deteriorating social conditions; and acute vulnerability to external factors. Following UNDP consultations with Governments of the region, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), United Nations agencies and numerous regional and intergovernmental bodies, a meeting of the regional bureau attended by representatives of all parties to those consultations was held at Santo Domingo (Dominican Republic) in November. Areas envisaged for future multilateral technical assistance included: public policy formulation, implementation and management; alleviation of urban and rural poverty; and the transfer of high technology. Technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) continued to play an important part in the region with several new initiatives during the year. Brazil signed an agreement with UNDP under which it would make available 200 persons/months of consultancies, host 30 study tours, organize six international seminars and receive 12 in-service trainees in the field of energy. Those inputs were to be applied towards any United Nations-assisted technical co-operation projects in any developing country. Argentina signed agreements with Costa Rica, Nicaragua and Peru for the export of goods and services.

Between 1983 and 1984, 14 of the 20 country programmes in the Arab States were reviewed in the context of changing national policies in both oil-exporting and non-oil-exporting countries. In 1984, 22 in-depth project evaluations were also conducted. Adjustments in several country programmes reflected a shift from policies of economic expansion to those emphasizing consolidation and the optimal use of existing capacities. Declining oil revenues led a number of countries to cut back some important cost-sharing arrangements with UNDP resulting in revised priorities. In several countries, human resources development activities and management training were stepped up. Maintenance of existing investments and development of post-investment strategies were among new emphases while aid co-ordination received renewed attention, notably in the region's five LDCs, three of which—Djibouti, Somalia and the Sudan—were also affected by drought, necessitating special emergency relief and co-ordination measures and redirection of their country programmes.

Other UNDP activities in which there had been notable developments during 1984 were: TCDC; project evaluation; inter-agency relations; transfer of knowledge through expatriate nationals; the Projects Annotated Listing (PAL, i.e. project profiles aimed at bringing additional resource requirements to the attention of potential donors); staff development and training; and emergency activities in addition to those in Africa.

UNDP also administered the following Special Funds in 1984: UNCDF; the United Nations Volunteers Programme (UNV); the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration; the UNDP Energy Account; UNSO; UNFSSTD; the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women (VFDW); the Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People; the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples; and the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries.

In his 1983 annual report,<sup>(2)</sup> submitted to the June 1984 session of the UNDP Governing Council, the Administrator reported on measures taken to establish a more solid resource foundation for the Programme, on new activities for resource mobilization at the country level, and on steps taken to expand UNDP's service to the development community, while exploring new measures to meet the changing technical co-operation needs of the 1980s.

The Administrator submitted a separate note on measures to promote better understanding of UNDP's role and activities and of its resource needs (see below, under "UNDP financing").

UNDP Council action. The UNDP Governing Council held an organizational meeting in New York on 22 and 23 February, and its thirty-first session at Geneva from 4 to 30 June 1984.<sup>(3)</sup> The Council resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole,<sup>(4)</sup> which held meetings between 4 and 8 June to discuss country and intercountry programmes and projects and evaluation and made a number of recommendations taken into consideration by the Council in its decisions.

Financial, budgetary and administrative matters were considered by the Council's Budgetary and Finance Committee<sup>(5)</sup> between 4 and 29 June.

In February, the Council adopted two decisions, on its 1984 programme and organization of work<sup>(6)</sup> and on the joint United Nations/UNDP/United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) evaluation concerning manufactures (see p. 570).

The 46 decisions adopted by the Council in June dealt with assistance to the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) (see p. 168); assistance to the Palestinian people (see p. 276); implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCs (see p. 414); implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see Chapter XVI of this section) and of a medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme (see p. 509); alternative ways of financing the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office-UNDP/UNEP joint venture beyond 1984-1985; action taken following the liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund (see p. 522), and on the use of United Nations volunteers to assist the most severely affected African countries in implementing emergency assistance programmes (see p. 458); the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (see Chapter IX of this section); programmes in energy development (see Chapter X of this section); the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (see Chapter XIV of this section); the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries (see Chapter XV of this section); assistance to Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III); and other matters affecting UNDP's work (for details see below). Two decisions dealt with the agenda, and organization of work of the Council's 1984 session,<sup>(6)</sup> and by others the Council decided on the agenda and arrangements<sup>(7)</sup> for its meetings in 1985. By another decision,<sup>(8)</sup> the Council took note of various reports submitted to its 1984 session.

Having considered the Administrator's 1983 annual report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Council on 29 June<sup>(9)</sup> welcomed the steps he had taken to improve the UNDP's effectiveness, particularly the enhanced services extended by its field offices at the country level and the increased emphasis on evaluation, and noted with appreciation his vigorous implementation of a 1983 Council decision on measures to mobilize increased resources on a more predictable, continuous and assured basis.<sup>(10)</sup> The Council encouraged him to mobilize additional resources at the country level, requested him to survey Council members to ascertain the usefulness of documents issued for the 1984 session, the results of the survey to be discussed in 1985, and encouraged him to continue his efforts to ensure the timely preparation and distribution of documents for the Council's consideration.

Policy review

As background for the Governing Council's 1984 policy review of United Nations technical co-operation activities, the Administrator submitted in April a report on measures to be taken to meet the changing technical co-operation requirements of the developing countries.<sup>(11)</sup>

The report analysed achievements in technical co-operation over the preceding 35 years, contrasted them with a range of unsolved problems and examined the basic philosophy of technical co-operation in terms of the objective of self-reliance. The report then outlined some changing requirements in technical co-operation that were likely to gain prominence in future, and drew attention to the continuing needs of the poorer countries. It also discussed some essential functions of UNDP as measures of response to the changing requirements which had implications for the processes of programming, co-ordination, evaluation, resources mobilization and project planning and execution.

On 29 June,<sup>(12)</sup> the Governing Council noted the Administrator's findings and stressed the importance of maintaining a balanced approach in meeting technical co-operation needs and the necessity of enhanced effectiveness in programming and implementation. The Council affirmed the need to maintain UNDP's capacity to respond flexibly to changing needs in widely varying local conditions and to pursue "continuous programming" within the framework of country programmes as an effective response to a country's changing technical co-operation needs. The United Nations system was urged to co-operate with UNDP in using the country programming process as a frame of reference for technical co-operation. The Council considered that assessing and planning overall technical co-operation needs could provide a framework for co-ordinating technical assistance from external sources and that the process could be useful in that respect, and requested the Administrator to assist Governments in formulating country programmes. Governments were encouraged, when preparing programmes, to take account of the global themes and priorities expressed in intergovernmental resolutions as they related to their national plans and to consider bringing smaller projects into "umbrella projects" to reduce administrative workload and to gain in programming impact.

Executing agencies were invited to continue improving procedures to ensure that their technical knowledge was accessible to Governments, irrespective of project execution. The World Bank and regional development banks were urged to continue collaborating with UNDP.

The Council reaffirmed the importance of pre-investment and investment as an integral part of the UNDP technical co-operation programme and welcomed the field office network's expanded role in management and support services and in resource mobilization.

In high technology and other areas where changing economic and social circumstances made new demands, the Council endorsed the Administrator's view that the more advanced developing countries continued to require multilateral technical co-operation from UNDP and urged UNDP to ensure that the emerging needs of low-income developing countries also received adequate attention. It also urged UNDP to continue responding to the technical assistance needs of LDCs, particularly towards implementing the SNPA for the 1980s for the LDCs (see p. 413), expressed appreciation to the Administrator for assisting them in preparing round-table meetings and urged him to pay special attention to their follow-up.

The Council welcomed his emphasis on grass-roots approaches for development and his strengthening of UNDP assistance to Governments through collaboration with the private sector. It stressed the importance of covering both the short- and long-term needs of developing countries for skilled manpower and requested the Administrator to address those needs, including a proposal for a human resources facility, and to report thereon to the Council in 1985. The Administrator was also invited to consider how Governments could be assisted in strengthening their central planning and co-ordination capabilities. The Council recognized that UNDP could provide recipient Governments with complementary means to achieve more effective country-level co-ordination of external assistance and reaffirmed that the UNDP country programming process should be used as a frame of reference for co-ordinating United Nations operational activities at the country level, under the responsibility of the resident co-ordinator, in order to facilitate the host country's task in co-ordinating external assistance, achieving improved coherence of action, reducing administrative overhead costs and avoiding duplication.

The Council appealed to participating United Nations organizations to join with UNDP in the efforts of the host Government for more effective development country-level co-operation and requested the Administrator to strengthen the co-ordination capability of UNDP field offices and to report to the Council thereon in 1985.

UNDP operational activities

Country and intercountry programmes

In a report<sup>(13)</sup> to the UNDP 1984 Governing Council, the UNDP Administrator examined trends and problems evident in the seven country programmes (Afghanistan, Benin, Bolivia, El Salvador, Lebanon, Singapore and Swaziland) being submitted to the Council for approval. The report dealt with the timing of the programmes and related aspects, the nature of the preparatory work, financial aspects, major development objectives and orientation, allocation of resources, pre-investment and investment support activities and global priorities.

In a section of his annual report for 1984<sup>(1)</sup> on project results of the global/interregional programme and special funds, the Administrator stated that expanded demand from the programme in 1984 was met through concentrated efforts in areas of acknowledged developmental significance. Agriculture, water supply and sanitation, special public works, housing and health and energy assessment and management continued to receive sustained attention. Basic research, technology development and transfer, and management support constituted major programme thrusts while human resources development activities were intensified.

In another section, dealing with programme implementation, he described representative project achievements reported by field offices during the year.

Following a discussion of selected country and intercountry programmes, global and interregional projects, the Committee of the Whole made several recommendations on which the Council acted in June (see below). However, the Committee did not reach a consensus on a recommendation regarding the programme for Afghanistan.

UNDP Council action. In June,<sup>(14)</sup> the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's reports on: trends and problems in the country programmes proposed for approval; and on the implementation of selected country programmes in Africa,<sup>(15)</sup> the Arab States,<sup>(16)</sup> Asia and the Pacific,<sup>(17)</sup> Europe,<sup>(18)</sup> and Latin America and the Caribbean.<sup>(19)</sup> The Council approved country programmes for: Benin and Swaziland (Africa); Lebanon (Arab States); Singapore (Asia and the Pacific); and Bolivia and El Salvador (Latin America). It also decided to extend the country programme for Guatemala through 1984 and that for Suriname through 1984 and 1985. The Council authorized the Administrator to appraise and approve requests for assistance for projects falling within each country programme, in accordance with a 1981 decision that expenditures be kept in conformity with the relevant indicative planning figures, increased with government cost-sharing contributions.

The Council also approved follow-up assistance for the following global projects: international rice testing and improvement programme (phase II); international maize testing programme and training activities; maximizing crop production through biological nitrogen fixation; and survey and identification of world marine fish resources.

Indicative planning figures

In a report to the 1984 Governing Council on the mid-term review of the third programming cycle (1982-1986),<sup>(20)</sup> the Administrator also discussed specific issues such as indicative planning figures (IPFs). Unless substantial resources were made available, he stated, he was not in a position to make any recommendations with regard to adjustments of the illustrative IPFs. The amount of $99.5 million, set aside in 1980 as unallocated reserve for future participants and for revisions of IPFs, would have been available only if voluntary contributions had reached the target level. Given the current shortfall in resources, no such funds were available as all actual and projected resources had been allocated to maintain the current programming levels of approved IPFs. In those circumstances, neither a general review of the illustrative IPFs nor a specific review of those countries whose economic situation had deteriorated substantially appeared to be useful.

Based on these and other observations in the Administrator's report, the Governing Council on 29 June 1984<sup>(21)</sup> decided that no general revision of IPFs could be made in the prevailing resource situation, but that such a revision might be considered to the extent that improvement in the UNDP resource position would permit in the future, and to the extent that it would not result in reducing other programmes. The Council noted the Administrator's implementation of its 1983 decision<sup>(22)</sup> in respect of programme levels of countries with small IPFs, and further noted his actions to increase resource flows to, and improve the co-ordination of, activities for LDCs.

The Council decided that, for the purpose of determining the carry-forward to the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), the norm against which positive or negative carry-forwards would be calculated would be derived using 55 per cent of the illustrative IPF, except for the smaller IPFs covered by the 1983 decision.

The Council approved the following conditions for borrowing from fourth-cycle IPFs: borrowing would be authorized to the extent that it did not threaten the financial integrity of the Programme and that total expenditures were kept within available resources, only for countries in a region up to a maximum of expected under-expenditures in the 1982-1986 cycle in respect of other countries in the region, only for countries where the fourth-cycle IPF was expected to be larger than the 1982-1986 illustrative IPF, and only up to a maximum of 15 per cent of the 1982-1986 illustrative IPF for each country qualifying for borrowing; borrowing for intercountry programmes would be allowed up to the estimated extent of underspending in other intercountry programmes, not to exceed 15 per cent of each 1982-1986 illustrative IPF; for the purpose of borrowing from the fourth cycle, the global and interregional programmes could be counted together; the borrowed amount would constitute a first charge against the corresponding fourth-cycle IPF; and the Administrator would report to the Council on his use of selective borrowing from the fourth cycle.

The Council approved a pro-rated illustrative IPF for St. Helena of $330,000 for 1984-1986. It took note of: the continued lack of data to calculate illustrative IPFs for Democratic Kampuchea and Lebanon, for which provisional illustrative IPFs of $25.5 million and $10 million, respectively, would remain in effect until sufficient data were available; the fact that, while revised data were available for Hungary, its illustrative IPF remained unchanged at $3.5 million; and the independence of Brunei Darussalam and the consequent revision of its illustrative IPF to $730,000.

Pre-investment activities

In accordance with a 1982 decision,<sup>(23)</sup> the Administrator submitted to the June 1984 Governing Council a report<sup>(24)</sup> on progress achieved in strengthening UNDP's pre-investment role. The Administrator reported on the co-operative arrangement with FAO whereby the expertise of the FAO Investment Centre was used to enhance the investment potential of UNDP-assisted projects and to promote them with sources of finance. Similar co-operative arrangements with other executing agencies were being undertaken or were under consideration. The report covered the first year of operation of the investment feasibility study facility, under which special programme resources were used to finance on a reimbursable basis feasibility studies for investment projects. Measures for strengthening UNDP's pre-investment role which had continued to prove effective, as the Administrator stated in his report on 1984 activities,<sup>(1)</sup> included: co-operative arrangements with agencies; training courses in investment development for UNDP staff; strengthened relations with sources of finance through special interest arrangements; and the use of a facility for financing investment feasibility studies on a reimbursable basis.

Investment development training for UNDP staff continued to be provided through the World Bank Economic Development Institute. In addition, in conjunction with the Asian Development Bank, UNDP launched a new training course in investment project preparation and management for its staff and host government staff in the Asia and Pacific region. Under umbrella projects in Burma, China and Sri Lanka, supported by UNDP and executed by the World Bank, several smaller projects were packaged and approved at the same time to reserve funds for important activities while preserving the flexibility to substitute individual pre-investment studies within each package.

On 29 June,<sup>(25)</sup> the Governing Council noted progress made in financing feasibility studies from the special account of $1 million established in 1982,<sup>(23)</sup> from Special Programme Resources and endorsed the efforts of the Administrator and the agencies to increase pre-investment activities. The Council took note of the relationship established between UNDP and development finance sources to promote complementarity of programming and follow-up investment to Programme-assisted pre-investment activities, and requested the Administrator to continue such relationships and consider broadening their scope to include other sources of finance. The Council noted the progress made under pre-investment training programmes and requested the Administrator to continue such training.

Investment follow-up

In his report on 1984 activities,<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator noted that investment commitments related to UNDP-assisted projects totalled $10.2 billion compared with $9.6 billion in 1983. Investment commitments reported as follow-up to UNDP-supported projects rose steeply to $9.3 billion in 1984 as against $6.4 billion in 1983. Transport and communications continued to attract the largest amount of reported follow-up commitments ($3.07 billion), followed by natural resources ($2.3 billion), agriculture, forestry and fisheries ($1.54 billion), human settlements ($810 million), industry ($580 million), and education ($290 million). Developing countries provided the most substantial source of financing, accounting for $4.06 billion. The World Bank group contributed $1.92 billion, bilateral agencies $1.82 billion while the private sector in both developed and developing countries provided $640 million.

Results of UNDP's co-operative arrangements with agencies included: $422.1 million in follow-up investments for 16 projects prepared with FAO assistance; and $36.8 million for two projects prepared with ILO assistance.

UNDP programme planning and execution

Programme evaluation

The Administrator reported<sup>(1)</sup> that in 1984 UNDP moved further ahead in strengthening its procedures relating to project evaluation. The UNDP Central Evaluation Office (CEO) established in October 1983 completed and circulated to field offices draft revised procedures to be used for evaluation activities on a trial basis. In 1984, 239 evaluations were carried out. CEO, in consultation with Governments and United Nations agencies, prepared a schedule of thematic evaluations to be carried out in 1985 and 1986 covering projects related to aquaculture, the generalized system of preferences, small businesses and agrometeorology. Other activities pursued by CEO in 1984 included helping Governments to stress their own evaluation capacity, and extending evaluation practices and policies developed in the context of IPF-financed projects to those supported by the various special funds administered by UNDP.

In response to a 1983 Governing Council decision,<sup>(26)</sup> the Administrator in a report<sup>(27)</sup> to the Council's June 1984 session, described measures taken to improve evaluation policies and procedures. Approaches to strengthening the evaluation capacity of Governments were discussed and the results of a preliminary analysis of a sample of project evaluations were described. Summaries of thematic evaluations studies on national agricultural research and training of industrial manpower were annexed to the report. Separate reports were submitted to the Council on the joint United Nations/UNDP/UNIDO evaluation of UNDP-financed technical co-operation activities of UNIDO on manufactures (see p. 564), and on an interorganizational evaluation of women's participation in development (see Chapter XIX of this section).

On 29 June,<sup>(28)</sup> the Council, having considered a 1983 JIU report on the evaluation system of UNDP<sup>(29)</sup> and the Secretary-General's comments thereon,<sup>(30)</sup> accepted the JIU recommendations, noting that a central evaluation unit had been set up.

Preparations for 1987-1991 programming cycle

In May 1984, the Administrator transmitted to the Governing Council a report on preparations for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991).<sup>(31)</sup> The report raised issues on which the views of the Council would be needed to enable him to make proposals on the scope and magnitude of fourth-cycle programmes to the Council's June 1985 session. Those issues included: shortening or extending the cycle; the target magnitude of resources and principles to govern their indicative distribution and setting of IPFs; programming of assistance; methods of delivery of technical co-operation; and administrative costs and efficiency of operation.

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(32)</sup> the Governing Council, having considered the report, took note of the proposed timetable for Council action in preparing the fourth cycle, and decided to consider the subject at a special meeting in early 1985 with a view to finalizing a decision at its 1985 session. The Administrator was requested to submit alternative scenarios for the fourth cycle and to arrange informal consultations during the latter half of 1984 among all participating Governments on the size of resources to be taken into account for the next cycle, and to submit to the 1985 Council an elaboration of suggestions contained in his report regarding an increase in the Programme's Operational Reserve and an enlargement of its scope to overcome its current limitations as a liquidity reserve.

In his report for 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator stated that UNDP had organized informal consultations with all participating Governments. In an effort to establish clear parameters for identifying resource prospects, UNDP had described specific alternative scenarios based on different possible assumptions.

Through the consultations, some 13 options were reviewed leading to the clarification of four alternatives which could obtain in the next cycle, providing a basis for discussions at a special meeting to be held in 1985.

Projects execution

In his annual report,<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator stated that total project expenditures by the Office for Projects Execution (OPE) in 1984 amounted to $65.9 million, a slight increase over 1983. The total share of OPE in UNDP core expenditures fell to $35.7 million compared with $37.8 million in 1983. However, expenditures on behalf of other funding sources increased to $30.3 million from $27.3 million.

Non-IPF projects executed by OPE included: construction of rural feeder roads in West Africa on behalf of UNSO; technical support and equipment procurement for UNCDF; and loan administration on behalf of IFAD. OPE services were also sought in connection with the Ethiopian Rehabilitation Programme and the Development Training and Communications Programme at Bangkok (Thailand), which was incorporated as a new OPE service unit in 1984. OPE also executed two major projects to combat opium production in Pakistan and Thailand on behalf of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse and Control.

The majority of OPE project activities were concerned with limited services and with cases where recipient Governments were principally responsible for managing technical inputs. Projects tended to be specific in character, with clearly defined, often short-term objectives, such as resource surveys, installation of computer systems and feasibility studies. OPE had developed mechanisms for locating and mobilizing expertise from the public and private sector. Consulting groups and subcontracted services of private firms, public institutions, State corporations and non-governmental organizations played an important role in enabling OPE to meet the technical requirements of projects entrusted to it.

JIU report. In February, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a JIU report on OPE.<sup>(33)</sup> The Inspectors noted that, since direct execution of technical co-operation projects by UNDP began in 1973, OPE's operations had given rise to controversy between UNDP and the major technical United Nations agencies which considered that OPE's activities had outgrown their original purpose and encroached upon the agencies' sectors of technical competence.

After studying the various facets of UNDP execution and noting the main views expressed for and against it, the Inspectors concluded that the growth of OPE as an executing agency had had an adverse effect on UNDP's relationship with the agencies and that UNDP should bring the performance of the executing agencies to a more acceptable level where necessary. The Inspectors recommended: (1) that the UNDP Governing Council provide new terms of reference for UNDP direct execution, limiting it to projects requiring general management and direction and to those of a non-technical nature, reducing OPE staff and other resources correspondingly over a three-year transitional period; and (2) that ACC, assisted by the Inter-Agency Task Force at UNDP Headquarters, examine OPE procedures with a view to recommending for use by all organizations those that had proven their worth in technical co-operation delivery.

Commenting in April<sup>(34)</sup> on the JIU report, the Secretary-General addressed three issues: the purpose of technical co-operation; accountability of the UNDP Administrator; and OPE operations in relation to other organizations' activities. Regarding the first issue, he noted that responsiveness to developing countries' requirements should be the overriding consideration for determining the most suitable executing arrangements for UNDP-assisted projects, and that the main consideration in project execution should be provision by the United Nations to developing countries of sound and flexible mechanisms to ensure the quality and timeliness of project inputs and outputs.

Regarding the Administrator's accountability, the Secretary-General stated that it was the Administrator's responsibility to determine, after consulting agencies and governments, appropriate arrangements for executing UNDP-assisted projects. The Administrator had maintained the practice of giving first consideration to the United Nations and specialized agencies in selecting executing agents for UNDP assistance.

The Secretary-General said that a comparative analysis of efficiency in project execution by OPE and by other executing agencies and an assessment of cost-effectiveness of sub-contracting, not contained in the JIU report, would be required for a full discussion of OPE's activities.

In his comments on specific recommendations, the Secretary-General agreed that the UNDP Governing Council should be invited to provide a consolidated framework for OPE's future role but could not accept limiting OPE's operations and reducing its staff and other resources. He welcomed the JIU recommendation that ACC, assisted by the Inter-Agency Task Force, examine OPE procedures. The Secretary-General added that the UNDP guidelines for direct execution, which provided for consultation with agencies on the designation of UNDP as its own executing agent, needed to be rigorously observed and the consultations carried out prior to final decision-making by UNDP.

In his comments on the JIU report to the 1984 Governing Council,<sup>(35)</sup> the Administrator dealt in a general way with the main issues and in more detail with specific points raised by JIU. Regarding JIU's first recommendation, the Administrator felt that arguments adduced by JIU in its favour were based on premises which would undermine his responsibility to the Council for the Programme's good management and, if applied in a general way, would undermine the rationale for UNDP's existence. He welcomed the recommendation that ACC examine OPE working practices that had proven their worth with a view to proposing their use by other agencies.

The Administrator also submitted to the Council comments on the JIU report by United Nations organizations other than UNDP.<sup>(36)</sup> All organizations which had commented, with two exceptions, generally supported the first recommendation with varying degrees of emphasis. Almost all supported the second recommendation.

UNDP Council action. On 29 June,<sup>(28)</sup> the Governing Council—recalling a 1970 General Assembly resolution<sup>(37)</sup> concerning the Administrator's responsibility, in consultation with Governments, to select the agency by which Programme assistance would be implemented, and further recalling his full responsibility for all aspects of the Programme's implementation—did not accept JIU recommendation 1 but accepted recommendation 2. The Council welcomed the Administrator's statement of his adherence to the principle of partnership as set out in the 1970 consensus<sup>(38)</sup> regarding the designation of executing agencies, bearing in mind his obligation to provide the best possible services to developing countries. It reaffirmed that OPE was established with the Council's full approval in recognition of the Administrator's need for an instrument to provide direct project services to Governments, and approved the continued use of OPE as an agent for implementing projects where the Administrator decided in consultation with the Government and executing agencies concerned that the services required were such that delivery through OPE would best serve the interests of the country concerned. He was requested to pursue vigorously the goal of self-reliance, as expressed in a 1975 Council decision on new dimensions for technical co-operation, endorsed by the Assembly in the same year,<sup>(39)</sup> by promoting the modality of government execution and the innovative use of OPE as a co-operating organization.

By decision 39/439, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the JIU report and his comments.<sup>(34)</sup> total income amounted to $789.7 million ($85.7 million lower than forecast), while total expenditure was $717.7 million. As a result of surplus main programme income over expenditure, the UNDP revenue reserve increased from $57.9 million at the end of 1983 to $116.5 million at 31 December 1984. Income from voluntary contributions amounted to $651.1 million, which was lower than the forecast by $53.1 million, mainly because further strengthening of the United States dollar reduced the value of pledges and because a number of pledges were not paid before the end of the year, including an amount of $20 million from one donor.

Field programme expenditure in 1984 was $532.6 million, of which $436.6 million represented expenditure against IPFs, $73.5 million against cost-sharing and $22.5 million against supplementary programmes. The total expenditure represented a reduction of $27.5 million from 1983 or approximately 4.6 per cent. Although it had been intended during 1984 to reverse the trend towards a lower level of programming, IPF expenditures for 1984 amounted to only $436.6 million, a reduction of 6.4 per cent compared with 1983. Again, this was mainly due to the strength of the United States dollar vis-à-vis other currencies. However, caution on the part of UNDP resident representatives, executing agencies and recipient Governments in developing and approving projects in the face of continuing uncertainty over the availability of resources and unfavourable conditions in a number of countries resulting from natural disasters, civil disorders and other security related problems were additional factors. While recognizing the influence of those factors on programme delivery, the Administrator was concerned about reduction in programme expenditures, as well as about the ability of UNDP and the agencies to forecast expenditures accurately and plan utilization of resources. He had therefore initiated a joint study on improving programme delivery in 1985 and future years. Such measures would relate to improved project budgeting and monitoring to ensure that the strength of the United States dollar and decreasing inflationary rates in many countries were reflected in UNDP project budgets. In co-operation with Governments concerned, steps would also be taken to achieve a greater rate of project approvals and implementation.

In his report for 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator again referred to the trend towards lower programming levels arising from resource uncertainties which was reflected in declining overall expenditures. Field programme delivery, however, was not affected to the same extent. The static pattern of contributions, evident since 1982, prevailed again in 1984, despite efforts by major donors to increase pledges in national currency terms. Referring to the strength of the United States dollar, the Administrator stated that lower total recorded expenditure disguised the significant delivery purchased in certain components, as well as increased expenditure in particular areas such as training fellowships and equipment purchases. While central resources had been constrained in dollar terms for three years, in part through currency fluctuations beyond governmental control, increased supplementary contributions enabled UNDP to maintain its services to developing countries.

In aggregate, total contributions to central resources, special purpose funds under UNDP administration and all sub-trust fund and cost-sharing arrangements amounted to $834.5 million in 1984, a decline in United States dollar terms of almost 10 per cent compared with the 1983 total of $927 million. An additional amount of over $145 million in third-party co-financing and parallel financing was directly generated in the course of the year.

In his annual report to the 1984 UNDP Governing Council,<sup>(2)</sup> the Administrator noted that country-level resource mobilization had come to play an increasingly important role in UNDP financing.

The Council, on 29 June,<sup>(32)</sup> requested the Administrator to arrange informal consultations during the latter half of 1984 among all participating Governments to discuss the size of resources for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991).

Mid-term review of 1982-1986 programming cycle

In response to a 1980 UNDP Governing Council decision, which called for a mid-term review of the 1982-1986 programming cycle, the Administrator submitted to the June 1984 Council session a report<sup>(20)</sup> containing a review of voluntary contributions to UNDP from 1982 to 1984 and of his actions to control the Programme's financial integrity in the light of stagnating contributions. The report also discussed the resource outlook for 1984-1986 and gave updated information on the movement of countries to net contributor status. An addendum to the report dealt with the resource needs of the global programme.

The Administrator expressed confidence that growth in contributions would resume as economic recovery among donor countries progressed and exchange rates stabilized. Even so, significant increases would be needed to maintain the momentum of the 1982-1986 programming cycle. He recommended that no upward adjustments be made of any illustrative IPFs since they would have to be accompanied by corresponding downward adjustments in others. He proposed a flat across-the-board reduction in all illustrative IPFs to 55 per cent of their original levels, with the exception of countries with small IPFs covered by a 1983 Council decision on the subject.<sup>(22)</sup> The Administrator asked the Council to note his intention to authorize selective, limited borrowing from the 1987-1991 cycle and the proposed guidelines for such borrowing.

On 29 June,<sup>(21)</sup> the Governing Council noted both the Administrator's review of contributions—particularly that, over the preceding four years, they had increased by an average of 7.2 per cent annually in pledged currencies but declined by an average of 1.2 per cent annually expressed in United States dollars—and his projection of resumed growth in contributions for 1985 and 1986, although at a level below that envisaged for the cycle. The Council urged all countries in a position to do so to increase their contributions to achieve adequate real growth of the Programme's resources during the remaining years of the 1982-1986 cycle, and took note of the Administrator's actions to safeguard UNDP's financial and substantive integrity. The Council also took note of the information on movements towards net contributor status and urged countries which had not made progress towards the targets outlined in a 1980 Council decision<sup>(41)</sup> to increase their efforts to do so.

Review of financial situation in 1983

In a report<sup>(42)</sup> to the 1984 UNDP Governing Council, the Administrator provided a comprehensive financial review of UNDP-financed activities during 1983 and of the financial position at the end of that year. The report included estimates of resources and expenditures for 1984 and 1985, and provided information on cost-sharing activities; utilization of accumulated non-convertible currencies; collection of outstanding accounts receivable; placement of UNDP funds; the Operational Reserve; the status of Special Programme Resources and of the Special Measures Fund for LDCs and of the Reserve for Construction Loans to Governments. The Administrator also brought to the Council's attention a request from the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) for additional support cost reimbursement (see below).

Based on a recommendation contained in the Administrator's report, the Governing Council on 29 June adopted a decision<sup>(43)</sup> by which it took note of his steps to ensure that the level of programme delivery was consistent with resource availability and encouraged him to continue to make available for projects and programmes in developing countries the maximum possible level of resources in conformity with the financial liability of UNDP. The Council expressed satisfaction at the prompt payment of pledges by many donors and urged all Governments to continue making such payments as early in the year as possible. Governments were also urged to increase contributions to UNDP on a more predictable, continuous and assured basis. The Council requested the Administrator to investigate possible alternatives to utilize accumulated non-convertible roubles and to report thereon in 1985. The decision also dealt with support to executing agencies, including ITU (see below).

Promoting the resource needs and role of UNDP

In response to recommendations by the UNDP Inter-session Committee of the Whole and a 1983 Governing Council decision,<sup>(10)</sup> the Administrator submitted to the 1984 Council a note on measures taken to promote better understanding of the role and activities of UNDP and its resource needs.<sup>(44)</sup> He reported significant progress in implementing such measures despite severe limitations of authorized information resources; the UNDP Division of Information continued to operate under severe staff and other resource constraints. The chief feature of progress had been the bringing of information about UNDP closer to country levels with improved data on the impact of the Programme in the development efforts of developing countries. This had involved the combined efforts of the UNDP secretariat and other elements of the United Nations system, Governments, and non-governmental organizations.

On 29 June,<sup>(45)</sup> the Governing Council requested the Administrator to submit in 1985 specific proposals, together with budgetary implications, for strengthening the Division of Information and its activities.

Expenditures

In his annual report for 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator stated that total expenditures for the year under UNDP amounted to $717.7 million, of which $532.6 million were for field programme activities, $70.1 million for agency support costs, $114.7 million for UNDP administrative and programme support costs and $3.3 million for sectoral support and other field-level costs. A credit of $3 million against miscellaneous expenditures in previous years was also received in 1984.

Of field programme expenditures, $436.6 million was expended under IPF resources, $73.5 million under cost-sharing arrangements, $5.3 million under Special Programme Resources, $1.8 million under Special Industrial Services, $10.3 million under the Special Measures Fund for the LDCs and $5.1 million in government cash-counterpart funds. All these components declined below 1983 levels, apart from cost-sharing which advanced by $4.8 million over the preceding year and Special Programme Resources which increased by $1.3 million. In 1984, 86 field offices reported assistance in implementing more than 1,600 non-UNDP-financed projects with total expenditures of approximately $243.2 million. Of that amount, UNDP field offices provided major services and support for 1,062 projects with expenditures amounting to $225.4 million and a further 531 projects were assisted to a lesser degree.

Actual expenditures on the various components of Programme delivery financed from UNDP central resources in 1984 were: $279.6 million for project international personnel; $94.9 million for equipment; $68.8 million for subcontracts; $63.3 million for fellowships; and $21.2 million for miscellaneous expenditures. In addition, government cash counterpart expenditures were $5.1 million.

Budget for 1984-1985

On 29 June,<sup>(46)</sup> the Governing Council approved revised appropriations of $332,615,200 gross for 1984-1985 covering the administrative costs of the main Programme and of seven other activities managed by UNDP: UNV, UNCDF, UNRFRRE, the Information Referral System for TCDC (see below), the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research, UNSO, and the UNSO UNDP/UNEP joint venture (see Chapter XVI of this section). The Council resolved that income estimates of $70,296,900 be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $262,318,300.

The Council approved a contingency provision not to exceed 3 per cent of approved gross appropriations, with the authority for its use, which would be subject to the prior concurrence of ACABQ, to be limited to unforeseen requirements due to currency movements, inflation or General Assembly decisions affecting administrative costs in the biennial budget, and requested the Administrator to report on the use of that authority to the 1985 Governing Council. The Council took note of a carry-forward of $700,000 of 1982-1983 support cost earnings of the Office for Projects Execution for use in 1984-1985.

The figures approved by the Council were based on May 1984 recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).<sup>(47)</sup> In April,<sup>(48)</sup> the Administrator had proposed net appropriations of $262,318,300, or $17,212,800 less than the Council had approved in 1983.<sup>(49)</sup> The decrease resulted primarily from currency movements during 1983, revised inflation figures and other factors and was partially offset by increases for staff benefits, Governing Council documentation and lower income estimates. ACABQ had no objection to the estimates and recommended their approval.

Sectoral support

On June 1984,<sup>(50)</sup> the Governing Council approved $912,000 to 11 executing agencies for sectoral support activities in 1986—principally inter-regional advisers and short-term missions of experts—designed to complement similar activities by the agencies from their own resources. The Council approved in addition $2,031,000 for the largest programme of that type, the Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAs), managed by UNIDO (see p. 573).

These allocations were recommended by the Administrator in a February 1984 report.<sup>(51)</sup> In his report, the Administrator also proposed that sectoral support to a number of the smaller executing agencies be extended to the end of 1986.

The Council also requested the Administrator to report to it in 1985 on sectoral support development, taking into account the link between sectoral support and sectoral analysis, and to consult with executive heads of agencies to ensure that sectoral advisers were associated with the preparation of round-table meetings for LDCs.

Agency supports costs

As requested by the Governing Council in 1983,<sup>(49)</sup> the Administrator submitted his first ex post facto report on agency support costs to the June 1984 Council session.<sup>(52)</sup> The report covered expenditures relating to salaries, official travel and general operating expenses and other administrative costs incurred during 1982-1983 by agencies executing UNDP projects. On 29 June 1984, the Council requested the Administrator to continue submitting such reports biennially.<sup>(53)</sup>

In another report, reviewing UNDPs financial situation in 1983 (see above), the Administrator brought to the Council's attention a request from ITU for additional support cost reimbursement in connection with ITU's implementation of UNDP-financed projects. The Council, also on 29 June,<sup>(43)</sup> decided that support to executing agencies, including ITU, should be made in accordance with 1980<sup>(54)</sup> and 1981<sup>(55)</sup> Council decisions.

Contributions

At the 1984 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see p. 432), nine of UNDP's 16 major donors maintained the real value of their contributions in national currencies in accordance with Governing Council appeals. Six of the nine substantially exceeded that minimum level. A total of 31 countries (27 of them developing countries) met or exceeded the 14 per cent growth rate set for the 1982-1986 programming cycle in terms of their national currencies. Canada, Denmark, Italy and Sweden pledged a further $13.1 million in supplementary contributions for 1984. However, due to the strength and volatility of the United States dollar, the value of pledges in dollar terms had remained static since 1981 at around $675 million.

While central resources had been constrained, a substantial increase in supplementary contributions had enabled UNDP to maintain its services to developing countries. Sources included cost-sharing, trust funds, government cash counterpart contributions and contributions to the Special Measures Fund for LDCs. In 1984, those resources amounted to $148.4 million or 18 per cent of UNDP's resources compared with $85.1 million or 11 per cent in 1981.

Reflecting the growth in supplementary resources, five new trust funds were established during 1984, income for which amounted to the equivalent of $6.8 million. In addition, 14 sub-trust funds were established, for which income received during the year totalled the equivalent of $13.1 million (see below).

Pledges for the numerous special-purpose funds administered by UNDP declined from $45.5 million for 1983 to $38.6 million for 1984. However, cost-sharing and sub-trust fund income received by those funds increased from $17.7 million in 1983 to $25.8 million in 1984.

In the aggregate, contributions to UNDP amounted to $834.5 million, a decline in United States dollar terms of almost 10 per cent compared with the 1983 total of $927 million. Figures reported by 46 UNDP field offices in 1984 indicated an additional amount of over $145 million in third-party co-financing and parallel financing which was directly generated by UNDP-assisted activities during the year. That amount combined with the total contributions to UNDP and its special funds, brought some $980 million in development funding to the overall operations of UNDP in 1984.<sup>(2)</sup>

Government contributions to local office costs

In accordance with a 1982 Governing Council decision,<sup>(56)</sup> the Administrator submitted to the Council's June 1984 session a progress report on host government contributions to local office costs.<sup>(57)</sup> He stated that UNDP had negotiated with host Governments to agree on the level of their contributions to field offices from 1 January 1984. Regarding the authority to waive in part contributions, the following formula had been applied, based on 1978 per capita gross national product: over $3,000—no waiver; from $1,501 to $3,000—25 per cent waiver; from $500 to $1,500—50 per cent waiver; and less than $500—75 per cent waiver.

Noting that a significant number of negotiations were still in progress, the Administrator stated that results of those already concluded were: of 113 host Governments, 35 were either contributing towards local office costs in excess of the minimum required or had pledged to meet the 1984 target; 24 had agreed to provide some increase or maintain their level of contributions; 8 had requested special consideration due to conditions prevailing in their countries; and 46 were expected to provide official confirmation of anticipated contributions. The Administrator considered that additional negotiations would be helpful but recommended that effective 1 January 1985, an accounting linkage be established between Governments' contributions to local office costs and their contributions to UNDP general resources, and proposed a draft decision along those lines for adoption by the Council. In an addendum to his report, the Administrator informed the Council that during further discussions with several Governments, it had been suggested that shortfalls in contributions to local office costs should be met first by contributions to voluntary programme costs which were initially intended to meet the cost of support services in host countries to the UNDP-financed programme.

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(58)</sup> the Council called on Governments to increase their contributions at least to the level of their commitments. The Administrator was requested: to pursue negotiations with Governments and conclude them by the end of 1984; to ensure that resident representatives held consultations with host Governments before submitting their biennial budget requests; and to provide the Council with information on the net flow of contributions to and payments from UNDP in respect of each participating Government. The Administrator was authorized to establish from 1 January 1985 an accounting linkage of voluntary contributions, contributions to voluntary programme costs and contributions to local office costs, in such a manner that contributions were first accounted for against local office costs and to report in 1985 on progress achieved.

Recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) related to field offices were dealt with in another Council decision (see below).

In an April 1984 report to the Governing Council,<sup>(59)</sup> the Administrator reviewed the definition, origin and use of extrabudgetary resources. The report described the rationale of the concept of such resources, identified the four basic categories of support service to which they related and gave their historical development; its annex accounted in detail for the uses for which extrabudgetary resources were required.

Extrabudgetary resources shared three common elements; they were under the authority of the Administrator; UNDP provided them with central administrative services; and the Administrator was accountable to the Governing Council for their operations. With respect to UNDP core activities, extrabudgetary resources related to four basic categories of support service: Support services provided by UNDP core activities to UNDP non-core activities, other organizations and trust funds administered by UNDP; administrative support of activities by the Reserve for Construction Loans to Governments; programme support concerning energy; programme and administrative support related to field office activities.

On 29 June,<sup>(60)</sup> the Council requested the Administrator to submit to it in 1985 a comprehensive report on the structure, financing and interrelation of all funds administered by him.

Support costsReimbursement for field office services

The Administrator submitted to the June 1984 Governing Council a report<sup>(61)</sup> describing difficulties experienced by UNDP in implementing a 1982 Council decision<sup>(62)</sup> on reimbursement of services provided by UNDP field offices to executing agencies. He stated that in the majority of cases, UNDP and the agencies concerned had been able to implement the decision in a spirit of constructive dialogue and co-operation, and UNDP had been able to provide the required services within the approved resources. However, he had to seek the Council's guidance regarding a situation in one country where he had been seeking the resources necessary to finance services rendered to agencies to support their funds-in-trust activities. He suggested two options for the Council's consideration: that the agencies involved be requested to reimburse UNDP for services rendered in the country concerned; or that the Council authorize 13 new posts for the respective field office and appropriate $600,000 for 1984-1985.

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(63)</sup> the Council decided that UNDP should be reimbursed for services provided to trust-fund activities of other United Nations bodies, unless the trust-fund donor or the host Government directly reimbursed the Programme.

Trust funds

In 1984, the Administrator established 25 trust funds, 14 on behalf of UNSO, 5 each on behalf of UNDP and the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD), and 1 on behalf of the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF). In addition, further contributions were received to a USSR/UNDP Trust Fund established in 1982, to continue the funding of the training of specialists from developing countries in the USSR. Overall income for 1984 from these resources amounted to $19.9 million.<sup>(64)</sup>

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(65)</sup> the Governing Council requested that he provide each year detailed information on trust funds established by him, as well as on individual projects financed from them.

Trust funds conditioned on procurement from donor countries

As requested by the Governing Council in 1983,<sup>(66)</sup> the Administrator submitted to the Council's June 1984 session a comprehensive report<sup>(67)</sup> on trust funds conditioned on procurement from a donor country in respect of UNSO, UNCDF and UNFSSTD. The Administrator concluded that the authority to accept such trust funds granted under a 1982 Council decision<sup>(68)</sup> and extended in 1983,<sup>(66)</sup> had not distorted the basic principles of multilateralism of UNDP, but had enabled the three funds to provide additional assistance of significant importance. He proposed that the mandate to accept trust funds conditioned on procurement from a donor country be extended until 30 April 1986.

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(69)</sup> the Council decided: with regard to UNFSSTD to extend its 1983 decision until 30 April 1986; and to extend the experimental period with regard to UNCDF and UNSO to the same date by which time it would take a final decision on trust funds conditioned on procurement from a donor country.

With regard to UNCDF and UNSO, the Administrator could accept such trust funds provided that: the donor country had not decreased its contributions in national currency to UNDP general resources; that it was a contributor in the same year to the general resources of the United Nations Capital Development and UNSO, respectively; and that the contribution did not exceed 10 per cent in the case of UNCDF and 15 per cent in the case of UNSO, of the donor's contributions to the general resources of the Programme and the Fund or Office. All Governments were urged to increase their contributions to the Fund's or Office's general resources so that their activities could expand without recourse to contributions conditioned on procurement from a donor country.

The Council requested the Administrator to make a full report, with recommendations, to its 1986 session, including an evaluation of the sectoral and geographical distribution of the use of such funds and on procurement procedures utilized and the effects obtained.

Allocations from UN Emergency Operations Trust Fund

In accordance with a 1983 resolution by which the General Assembly liquidated the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund,<sup>(70)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a June 1984 progress report<sup>(71)</sup> on the implementation of that resolution. Of the $48,516,744 available when the Trust Fund was formally liquidated on 31 December 1983, $33,961,722 was transferred to a UNDP Special Account entitled Trust Fund for Countries Afflicted by Famine and Malnutrition, $5,822,008 was transferred to a UNDP Special Account entitled Trust Fund for Economic and Technical Co-operation between Developing Countries, and the balance was transferred to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (see p. 337).

At meetings held between the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation for Development and the Administrator on allocation and utilization of the funds channelled through UNDP, it was agreed that projects to be approved out of the Trust Fund for Countries Afflicted by Famine and Malnutrition would be primarily in the food and agricultural sectors and approximately 80 per cent of the funds should be earmarked for Africa. As of 30 April 1984, UNDP had approved out of that Trust Fund 76 projects in 43 countries, totalling $20,287,400. As at 31 March, there were no projects approved from the other trust fund.

In a report to the June Governing Council,<sup>(72)</sup> the Administrator presented updated information on those trust funds. Under the fund for countries afflicted by famine and malnutrition, as of 31 May, 81 projects in 48 countries had been approved or accepted, entailing total budgets in the amount of $24,955,400. With regard to the fund for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, consultations with developing countries were still continuing. It had been agreed that developing countries would initiate project proposals to be reviewed by the Administrator and, where appropriate, endorsed for implementation.

The Council, on 29 June,<sup>(73)</sup> expressed satisfaction at the speedy action taken by the Administrator in approving assistance to projects in countries afflicted by famine and malnutrition, took note of the arrangements for initiating project proposals concerning activities in economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, and requested him to report further in 1985.

Accounts and auditing

Accounts for 1983

The financial statements of UNDP for the year ended 31 December 1983, together with the report of the Board of Auditors, were submitted to the General Assembly in June 1984.<sup>(74)</sup> The statements also covered the trust funds for which the Administrator had been assigned responsibility.

In its report, the Board observed that owing to a slight increase in pledges collected and a sharp decrease in main programme expenditures, UNDP's financial situation as at 31 December 1983 appeared less critical than anticipated. Unpaid pledges amounted to $13.2 million at the end of 1983, which compared favourably with $39.6 million in 1982. Factors contributing to the decline of programme expenditures were the continued strengthening of the United States dollar, the progressively declining limitations on IPF expenditures, and cautious planning by many Governments and resident representatives resulting in major reductions in project approvals. Additional savings were realized from the cancelling of some obligations by executing agencies which had originally been established in 1982 and were subsequently found to be unnecessary. The Board recommended that the Administration continue to monitor closely the smooth transition to the lower level of programming decided on in 1982.

With regard to general programme matters, the Board recommended: more explicit guidelines for examining and assessing project financial statements to avoid unanticipated overruns and setting limits to extensions of experts' assignments; continuous updating of computerized information on long duration projects, reviews of which were seriously impeded by incompleteness of such information; special projects' implementation reviews by all regional bureaux; improvement of terminal assessment reports; and examination of the effectiveness of agency performance reviews.

In its review of projects, the Board mainly examined regional projects executed by UNDP/OPE and recommended that: measures be taken to streamline further communication, approval and monitoring procedures on budgetary and administrative matters related to those projects; any increase, redeployment or rephrasing of project budget components be reflected in substantive revisions; executing agencies provide explanations for budgetary changes and transfers; and that the usefulness of guidelines for preparing round-table projects be considered. Regarding the employment of experts and consultants, the Board recommended that procedures and internal controls on their recruitment be improved and that the authority of the Contracts Committee should be respected. It also recommended that informal procedures to evaluate experts be streamlined and adhered to. Further comments related to functioning of the UNDP liaison office at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, emergency payroll advances, travel and communications costs, and cases of fraud or presumptive fraud.

In response to the Board's observations and recommendations, the Administrator noted that although the reduced levels of expenditures in 1982 and 1983 made possible gradual increases in programme delivery during the final year of the third programming cycle (1982-1986), the build-up of programme budgets would continue to be carefully monitored to ensure that programme delivery was consistent with resource availability.

The Administrator also stated that action had been taken on several of the Board's other recommendations.

Commenting on the Board's findings, ACABQ, in a September 1984 report,<sup>(75)</sup> stated that, with regard to travel costs, a UNDP decision to apply the most economical full economy fare (business class) when a flight exceeded six hours was less economical than the standard applied in the United Nations. With regard to the employment of experts and consultants, ACABQ was of the view that the practice of signing contracts with consultants after their services had commenced should be discontinued, unless there was an overriding reason to the contrary.

Audit reports for 1982

The Governing Council, on 29 June 1984,<sup>(76)</sup> took note of the Administrator's note transmitting the audit reports of the participating and executing agencies for 1982 relating to funds allocated to them by UNDP,<sup>(77)</sup> as well as of his comments on the observations made by the external auditors and a description of action taken in response to the Council's June 1983 decision on audit reports.<sup>(66)</sup> The Council emphasized again the importance it attached to receiving long-form narrative audit reports covering areas identified in earlier Council decisions, including the audit of the effectiveness of financial management. The Administrator was requested to bring the Council's decision and the views of the Budgetary and Finance Committee on the matter to the attention of the Panel of External Auditors and of the executing agencies. He was further requested to convey the Council's views to the executive heads of the executing agencies for them to advise their legislative bodies for further action. The Council agreed with the proposal by the external auditors of the Asian Development Bank to carry out additional audit procedures and authorized the Administrator to reimburse the Bank for additional audit costs. The Administrator was requested to make available at future Council sessions copies of the latest annual audited financial statements of UNDP, the report of the United Nations Board of Auditors thereon and the Administrator's financial report for that year as well as copies of the General Assembly decision on the audit report, and to report orally to the Council on those matters.

Financial regulations

The Governing Council on 29 June 1984,<sup>(78)</sup> decided that, notwithstanding the absence of a consensus in respect of some of the financial regulations proposed in 1983 (dealing with the currencies of contributions),<sup>(79)</sup> all other regulations approved by the Council in 1981<sup>(80)</sup> were fully in effect and that with respect to those on which consensus had not been reached, existing regulations would apply until a decision was reached in 1985. The Council further decided that the Budgetary and Finance Committee would consider at its 1985 meetings the parts of the regulations and other questions on which consensus had not been achieved in 1984.

Annexes and amendments to financial regulations

In response to a 1981 Governing Council decision,<sup>(80)</sup> the Administrator proposed in a March 1984 note<sup>(81)</sup> two annexes to the UNDP Financial Regulations to meet the specific requirements of UNCDF and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE). In a May report,<sup>(82)</sup> ACABQ stated that it had no objection to the proposals regarding UNCDF and UNRFNRE apart from the deletion of a proposed regulation on reimbursement of co-operating agencies which was unnecessary in view of an existing regulation.

ACABQ suggested improvements in the presentation of both annexes and recommended acceptance of the Administrator's other proposals contained in his note, concerning a text change in the financial regulations concerning UNFPA (see Chapter XIV of this section); an amendment regarding the annual submission of UNDP accounts to the United Nations Board of Auditors, and a proposal to amend the Information annex to the UNDP Financial Regulations which contained additional terms of reference governing the audit of the accounts by the United Nations Board of Auditors.

On 29 June,<sup>(83)</sup> the Governing Council approved the additions and amendments and requested the Administrator to revise the UNDP Financial Regulations accordingly.

Guidelines for procurement

In response to a 1983 Governing Council request,<sup>(84)</sup> the Administrator in a March 1984 note,<sup>(85)</sup> summarized action taken by UNDP in co-operation with executing agencies to harmonize procurement procedures. In April, the Inter-Agency Procurement Working Group (IAPWG) considered responses received from 28 agencies to a comprehensive questionnaire on agency procurement practices. The Working Group agreed that unification of procurement procedures was necessary in order to facilitate increased transparency of the procurement process of the United Nations system, although some differences in individual agency rules and practices would continue to exist. IAPWG established a sub-group to prepare specific recommendations on unified procurement procedures based on replies to the questionnaire. The sub-group, which met in June, discussed inequality of access to procurement opportunities which adversely affected the underutilized major donor and developing countries.<sup>(86)</sup>

On 29 June,<sup>(87)</sup> the Council requested the Administrator to continue his efforts to harmonize procurement procedures to make available in 1985 the analysed results of the IAPWG study on agency practices and report on developments.

UNDP administration and staff

Field offices

Following consideration of a 1983 JIU report on UNDP field offices<sup>(79)</sup> and the Secretary-General's comments thereon,<sup>(84)</sup> the Governing Council, on 29 June 1984,<sup>(88)</sup> accepted the JIU recommendation on strengthening field offices, but took note of the Secretary-General's comment that a policy recommendation on general contributions to their costs should await a full examination of all field offices of all organizations of the system and that the resident co-ordinator's role should be taken into account. The Council also took note of the Administrator's intention to review the staffing and other needs of field offices, particularly in the least developed countries in Africa. It urged recipient Governments to make available on secondment to UNDP field offices in their countries qualified persons to serve as programme officers. The Council accepted several JIU recommendations on policy implementation, substantive programme functions and personnel questions but did not accept a recommendation regarding utilization of competitive examinations organized by the United Nations in the light of reservations expressed by the Administrator.

The Governing Council decision was summarized by the Secretary-General in a September report<sup>(89)</sup> to the General Assembly on implementation of JIU recommendations (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter II).

Other technical co-operation

UN programmes

In 1984, the United Nations, mainly through its Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), continued to provide technical assistance to developing countries in the economic and social sectors by supplying experts and advisory services, awarding fellowships and organizing workshops and study tours. The activities covered a broad range of subjects, including development planning and administration, rural and social development, international trade, industrial development, transnational corporations, mineral resources, energy, ocean economics, environment, science and technology, population, women, human rights and statistics.

In 1984, the United Nations delivered a technical co-operation programme of $254 million compared with $255 million in 1983, a 0.4 per cent decrease in project expenditures. The programme executed by DTCD amounted to $110.8 million compared with $112 million in 1983.

Technical co-operation activities were also carried out under the United Nations regular programme for technical co-operation. Funds from that programme, totalling some $15 million, financed activities by a number of United Nations entities, including DTCD, the Centre for Human Rights, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the regional commissions and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

In a report to the UNDP Governing Council on technical co-operation activities carried out by the United Nations in 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General identified major concerns of developing countries, including structural adjustment programmes and institution-building for recovery and development, and discussed the response and modalities required to provide assistance commensurate with the enormity of the problems faced by those countries.

DTCD made particular efforts during 1984 to expand its collaboration with its traditional funding partners and sought out new arrangements with organizations within the system as well as with Governments and other financial institutions. In August, for example, the joint DTCD/UNDP Task Force started to explore ways to promote closer collaboration between DTCD and UNDP's OPE in the use of their respective capabilities. A closer working relationship had evolved with the World Bank with frequent staff consultations taking place at all levels between the Bank and DTCD in a number of sectors including development planning, development administration, and mineral resources development. Similar linkages had been strengthened with the regional development banks. In view of the scarcity of funds available to developing countries under their IPF, a number of Governments had decided to provide resources to finance DTCD-executed projects in their countries. DTCD had also been involved in preparing technical specifications for procuring equipment which bilateral programmes made directly available to developing countries.

The report also singled out specific areas of concern to DTCD, among them: the application of new technologies; support to UNDP round-tables; LDCs; participation of women in development; and pre-investment and investment follow-up.

Measures to be taken to meet the changing technical co-operation requirements of the developing countries were analysed by the UNDP Administrator in an April 1984 report to the UNDP Governing Council (see p. 438).

In an April report<sup>(2)</sup> to the Governing Council, the Secretary-General provided an overview of the work during 1983 of all United Nations organizations with responsibility for technical co-operation and detailed information on the activities of DTCD. The Governing Council, on 29 June,<sup>(3)</sup> and the Economic and Social Council, in decision 1984/171, took note of that report.

DTCD activities

In a report to the UNDP Governing Council,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General described activities undertaken by DTCD during 1984 in its main substantive areas of development issues and policies, natural resources and energy, development administration and finance, statistics, rural development, ocean economics and technology and humanitarian affairs. The report also described the Department's work with regard to evaluation, technical assistance recruitment and project personnel administration and its work in conjunction with the World Food Programme (WFP) and the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women.

The Department's programme of technical co-operation projects at the end of 1984, amounted to $140 million in approved budgets, with expenditures totalling $110.8 million. Of those expenditures, $76.7 million was for UNDP-financed projects, $11.4 million for UNFPA, $7 million under the United Nations Regular Programme of Technical Co-operation and $11.9 million under trust funds. Budgets fell by $4.7 million compared with 1983, but the level of expenditures remained practically the same. Budgets grew by 2 per cent in Africa but decreased in all other regions. Expenditure, on the other hand, was little changed from 1983 with Africa remaining the most important programme, accounting for nearly $43 million, or 38 per cent of the total, followed by Asia with over $29 million or 26 per cent.

By sector, natural resources and energy continued to account for the largest share of the programme, representing $50 million in expenditures, or 45 per cent, an increase of $1.4 million in monetary terms. Development planning was the second most important activity although its share of delivery dropped from 22 per cent in 1983 to 19 per cent, and from $25 million to $21 million in monetary terms. Population and statistics remained essentially steady at $16 million and $12 million respectively, and public administration accounted for approximately 11 per cent of the programme, with expenditures of $11.7 million, up from $10.9 million in 1983. Social development projects increased from $3.1 million in 1983 to $3.8 million in 1984.

During the year, DTCD executed 210 field projects in 84 countries in economic and social development, including rural development. In addition, 165 weeks of project-related and direct advisory missions were undertaken by Headquarters staff. Important activities in integrated rural development included: multidisciplinary grass-roots development in the Central African Republic and Liberia; a community development project for the Bedouin population in Democratic Yemen; and assistance to a centre for applied research and training in community development in Saudi Arabia. DTCD continued to emphasize assistance to LDCs, including preparation for, participation in and follow-up activities to international donors' round-tables (see p. 414).

Activities in natural resources and energy included: 55 minerals projects covering mineral exploration, institution-building and strengthening, mine development and rehabilitation, training, planning, mining legislation and contract negotiation, equipment supply, and application of computer techniques; 88 energy projects in the three main areas of conventional energy, electric power and new and renewable resources; 90 water resources projects, half of which were directed towards alleviating arid conditions in Africa; and 20 cartography projects covering institution-building, transfer of technical expertise to national cartographic and hydrographic institutions, training and equipment. Public works activities focused on executing projects financed by UNDP and other sources.

In public administration and finance, DTCD backstopped over 134 projects in 63 developing countries, mostly in administrative reform, training and personnel administration, financial and public enterprise management, resource mobilization and management information systems. In the area of statistics, technical co-operation was provided in 151 country projects in such activities as statistical organization, national accounts, demographic and social statistics, industrial trade statistics and data processing. The Department executed 100 UNFPA-supported demographic projects in 1984, of which approximately 33 per cent were in demographic training, 47 per cent in analysis of census and survey data, and 20 per cent in population policy and development.

In social development and humanitarian affairs, activities relating to youth received priority attention with the approach of International Youth Year (1985). With regard to crime prevention and criminal justice, advisory services were provided to 13 countries in areas such as juvenile offenders, corrections, the judiciary, economic crimes, crime prevention, computerization of the judicial system, penitentiary systems and police departments.

Support services provided by DTCD included the selection and appointment of experts and consultants to advise Governments on various aspects of social and economic development. In 1984, 1,020 experts and consultants were appointed compared with 818 in 1983. A total of 3,820 fellowships were implemented of which 2,000 were in developing countries to further TCDC. The 1984 edition of the Directory of Training Courses and Programmes for Europe and Neighbouring Areas included information on more than 500 courses in all fields of DTCD competence.

Because of the critical situation in Africa and other parts of the developing world both WFP and DTCD gave priority attention to the low-income, food-deficit and most seriously affected countries. A high-level meeting was held between the two organizations to strengthen collaboration between them and to establish a framework for DTCD's involvement in implementing WFP's new project cycle.

The Department also continued to execute projects, funded by the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, to help to involve rural and poor urban women to achieve development goals. During 1984, DTCD expended $164,997 provided by the Fund.

UNDP Council action. The Governing Council, on 29 June 1984,<sup>(3)</sup> noted that DTCD had streamlined its organizational structure and reduced its administrative costs, and endorsed the Department's efforts to promote a more integrated approach to programme and project management and to improve its procedures with a view to achieving greater effectiveness in delivering its services to developing countries. The Council noted with concern the decline in resources necessary to maintain vital programmes and projects, reiterated its request for action to strengthen the Department's role as the main operational arm of the United Nations for technical co-operation activities, in pursuance of a 1977 Assembly resolution,<sup>(4)</sup> and invited financial and funding institutions to take account of the Department's special competence, experience and operational capability when designating an executing agency or advising Governments on sources of assistance for implementation of projects.

The Council reaffirmed its support of DTCD's work programme under the regular programme of technical co-operation and endorsed the more flexible use of the regular programme as seed money for innovative activities, including pilot projects, as well as for the Department's programme of interregional advisory services for the least developed, island developing, land-locked developing and other particularly disadvantaged countries. The Council endorsed the DTCD's efforts in support of the Secretary-General's initiative for Africa (see p. 465) and recommended that consideration be given to establishing within the Department a flexible procedure to cover the initial cost of project formulation and recruitment of experts, including the review of any financial implications.

JIU recommendations. At its 1984 session,<sup>(5)</sup> the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) considered a 1983 JIU report on DTCD<sup>(6)</sup> and the Secretary-General's comments thereon.<sup>(7)</sup> CPC recognized that DTCD's activities were of great importance to developing countries and warranted full support. Since there were competing claims for an organizational structure that emphasized substance over geography, the Department needed constantly to review its structure in order to function as effectively as possible. The Committee supported most of the JIU recommendations but recognized that lack of extrabudgetary resources would hamper DTCD's efforts to implement them fully. It acknowledged that the JIU recommendations on structure and operation were not yet fully implemented and requested that their implementation be reported on.

CPC recommended that: the Department be given a clear mandate involving clustering within it all technical co-operation functions in the Secretariat and co-ordination of guidelines and methods relating to those functions, including UNDP's OPE; in recognition of the need to strengthen co-ordination of DTCD's field activities, the machinery proposed by JIU could be resorted to; the Department's existing capabilities should be used to the full; and evaluation should be given continuous attention.

In a September 1984 report on implementation of JIU recommendations,<sup>(8)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that information relevant to the JIU report on DTCD would be included in his 1984 report to the Assembly on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system (see Chapter XXIV of this section). In that report,<sup>(9)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that the 1983 reorganization of DTCD into four Divisions (Policy, Programming and Development Planning; Natural Resources and Energy; Development Administration; and Programme Support), in line with JIU recommendations, was to promote a more integrated approach to programme management and to place the major emphasis and locus of responsibility on the substantive aspects of technical co-operation.

In the context of implementation of the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations,<sup>(4)</sup> and subsequent reports of the Secretary-General and JIU, the following issues needed further consideration: identification of further modalities for collaboration between DTCD and United Nations entities that had been designated executing agencies, especially the regional commissions and the avoidance of further proliferation of executing agencies; more effective harmonization of technical co-operation in statistics, with DTCD exercising more fully integrated management responsibility for operational activities in development planning, public administration and demography, falling within its purview; and greater use of the Department's technical and executing capabilities within existing funding mechanisms.

In follow-up to the Secretary-General's comments on the JIU report on UNDP's OPE (see p. 442), UNDP and DTCD established a task force to review ways of promoting closer collaboration which would match OPE's approach to project execution with DTCD's technical knowledge and services.

In decision 1984/178, the Economic and Social Council took note of the 1983 JIU report and of the Secretary-General's comments.

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/242, took note of the Secretary-General's report on implementing the JIU recommendations and renewed its invitation to United Nations organs to bear in mind the importance of specific, clear decisions on those recommendations.

United Nations Volunteers

In 1984, the guiding principle of the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme continued to be its marked recipient orientation, the objective of which was the harnessing of volunteers' dedication and technical competence for the fulfilment of the interests of the developing countries as defined by them. Another important characteristic was the programme's universality in terms both of the availability to all participating countries of a cost-effective alternative form of technical assistance and of the origin of the volunteers. At the end of the year, 942 volunteers from 78 countries were involved in field projects in 64 developing countries. In addition, 145 volunteers were en route to assignments and 519 were under recruitment, bringing established posts to 1,606, the highest since UNV's founding; 420 volunteers concluded assignments and 490 new volunteers were placed.

In his report on UNV activities in 1984,<sup>(10)</sup> the UNDP Administrator said the programme had demonstrated that, in addition to its regular functions, it could be particularly effective in dealing with both operational assistance and emergency operations and could also be instrumental in promoting participatory development activities. Over 45 per cent of volunteers in the field as of December 1984 were directly attached to government departments, mainly in operational assistance capacities in LDCs and UNV attached high priority to a project to provide emergency assistance to drought-affected countries in Sub-Saharan Africa (see below).

The second annual UNV Consultative Meeting was held in April 1984 at Geneva with representatives of Governments and co-sponsoring organizations from donor and developing countries to discuss ways of improving the selection, recruitment, utilization and backstopping of volunteers. Efforts were to continue to raise the level of participation of industrialized country nationals in the programme, which was below the optimum.

In the Asia and Pacific region, Bhutan hosted the largest programme with volunteers functioning within a multisectoral project covering key sectors of the economy. In the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, 31 UNV posts were established in skills ranging from small-scale industry development to medical services. In Western Samoa, a rural medical service was being developed and modernized through a number of medical officers to be recruited from Asian countries, in keeping with the policy of favouring a TCDC approach where possible. In the Cook Islands, a multisectoral project provided for 15 volunteers.

The Africa region, which absorbed close to 50 per cent of the volunteers, was to receive an even larger contingent as the emergency assistance project became fully operational (see below). Madagascar, Nigeria and Zaire requested volunteers for the first time and Angola received the first three of eight volunteers financed under its IPF. Botswana would soon host one of the largest contingents of UNVs on the continent and steady expansion was projected for Lesotho. Projects were also being developed or under way in Burundi, the Central African Republic, Gabon, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, Rwanda, Togo and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Eleven countries in Latin America and the Caribbean had UNVs assigned to their programmes with the largest presence in Jamaica where an additional 20 volunteers in the health field were to complement the 17 already in place. In Honduras, four volunteers were assigned near border areas for work related to asylum and resettlement. In Haiti, the second phase of an ILO project for artisanal development and employment promotion was being prepared involving a team of seven volunteers.

Requests for posts from Arab States registered a 46 per cent increase over 1983. Qatar, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates participated in the programme for the first time, with the establishment of posts in education, meteorology and vocational rehabilitation of the disabled. Programmes were also under way in Democratic Yemen, Somalia, and Yemen.

During 1984, 40 UNV posts were fully funded by the following donor Governments: Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Finland, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States.

The main thrust of the UNV youth and domestic development services (DDS) programme continued to be the regional IPF-funded activities in Asia and the Pacific. That regional project was extended to 1986, bringing the total allocation to $2 million with a total of 260 UNV/DDS volunteers assigned by the end of 1984. Geographically, the programme expanded to include an additional six countries—Bhutan, Fiji, India, Solomon Islands, Tonga and Vanuatu—bringing the number of participating countries to 16 together with Papua New Guinea, which endorsed the project in 1984. The UNV participatory development programme for Africa became fully operational with the fielding of the project manager and opening of the project office in Zambia in December 1984. The assignment of UNV specialists and the first group of DDS volunteers in Mali, Rwanda and Zambia was scheduled for early 1985.

Preparatory work of UNV at the local level in relation to International Youth Year (1985) also continued (see Chapter XX of this section).

Expenditures from the UNV Special Voluntary Fund during 1984 totalled some $2.03 million, approximately 94 per cent of which was utilized to meet the external costs of volunteers from developing countries for whom no other financing was available. Contributions received during 1984 totalled $724,807.

The UNDP Administrator submitted his annual report on UNV activities in 1983<sup>(11)</sup> to the June 1984 session of the UNDP Governing Council.

Use of UNV for African emergency programme

The Administrator submitted to the June 1984 session of the UNDP Governing Council of the same month a note,<sup>(12)</sup> on using United Nations volunteers to assist the most severely affected African countries in implementing the emergency assistance programmes. He stated that the UNV programme could secure at short notice the large numbers of experienced logistic and technical personnel necessary to ensure that emergency assistance had the maximum impact on the intended beneficiaries.

The Administrator estimated that some 200 volunteers would be required at the regional level and recommended to the Council that it approve an allocation from Special Programme Resources of $1.5 million to provide the services of approximately 100 volunteers to the most severely affected African countries with a minimum lead time. A regional project south of the Sahara would be designed for the smooth functioning of the scheme. Such an arrangement would also enable individual donor countries to participate by providing complementary contributions under the cost-sharing modality. The Administrator appealed to donor countries to consider such contributions favourably.

On 29 June,<sup>(13)</sup> the Governing Council approved, on the understanding that it would not be a precedent, the allocation of $1.5 million for the regional project and took note of the Administrator's assurance that fully structured assignments would be worked out with recipient Governments prior to sending the volunteers.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

In 1984, UNDP, with other United Nations organizations, continued to carry out its special responsibility for technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC)—a major effort by developing countries to promote their collective self-reliance. Those activities paralleled action in favour of economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC), taken by UNCTAD and others. Support by the United Nations system for ECDC and TCDC and the preparation of a cross-organizational programme analysis of ECDC and TCDC were discussed by several United Nations bodies during the year (see p. 400).

In his annual report for 1984,<sup>(14)</sup> the Administrator stated that action programmes recommended by the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries in 1983,<sup>(15)</sup> and financed under Special Programme Resources, had gathered momentum. Through a major interregional project, 133 TCDC activities costing some $1.28 million were financed from those resources: 57 in Latin America and the Caribbean; 34 in Africa; 15 in the Arab States; 11 in Asia and the Pacific; and 5 in Europe. Sectors covered by the project included agriculture, forestry and fisheries, general development issues, policy and planning, natural resources, transport and communications, and industry.

Progress continued in the expansion and use of the TCDC multi-sectoral Information Referral System (INRES), which launched its computerized inquiry service in the latter half of 1984. Its data bank contained information on some 2,300 institutions in 97 developing countries and comprised 50,000 line items with details on the facilities and capabilities of those institutions in such areas as education and training, research and technology development, expert services, and project-related experiences with multilateral and bilateral programmes. In its first few months INRES processed 170 queries from 45 developing countries.

In 1984, UNDP examined the use being made by recipient countries of their IPF allocations in support of TCDC. Despite the scaling down of IPFs in the 1982-1986 period, 17 developing countries were using those resources specifically for TCDC measures, an indication of the priority attached to those activities.

A significant trend was the growing preference of Governments for single "umbrella" projects covering all TCDC donor and/or recipient activities in their respective countries, underscoring their determination to make the most coherent use of scarce funds.

In May 1984,<sup>(16)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on the possibility of establishing a technical unit for TCDC in ground-water resources development within the Centre for Waters (Zagreb, Yugoslavia) (see Chapter IX of this section).

Allocation from Special Programme Resources

In a May 1984 report to the Governing Council,<sup>(17)</sup> the Administrator presented an accounting of the use of an allocation of $600,000 from Special Programme Resources, approved by the Council in 1983,<sup>(18)</sup> for specific promotional activities for TCDC during 1984-1985. The Administrator established an interregional project with an initial budget allocation of $400,000 for which the UNDP Office for Projects Execution was designated executing agency. The objectives of the project were: to provide intercountry level support by training and exchange of expertise and to promote the exchange of technical resources, skills and capacities; and to provide direct support to developing countries with a view to strengthening their TCDC capacities and potential.

As at 15 March 1984, 66 requests costing an estimated $778,400 had been received from 59 countries. The project's budget was therefore increased to $800,000 by adding the balance of the funds approved by the Council plus another $200,000 from savings from previous allocations. Since 15 March, other requests had been received on which action had been postponed because of paucity of funds.

The report gave a breakdown of the distribution of funds by region and component and noted that each request also involved major cost-sharing between donor and recipient countries. The experience gained suggested that the project was successfully strengthening TCDC at the regional, interregional and global levels. The Administrator recommended that the Council approve an additional $800,000 from Special Programme Resources for 1984-1986 to ensure continuation of promotional activities for TCDC.

On 29 June,<sup>(19)</sup> the Council approved that recommendation, requesting him to submit a detailed report in 1985 on the use of the funds.

Use of country IPFs for TCDC

Pursuant to a 1983 decision of the High-level Committee for the Review of TCDC,<sup>(15)</sup> the Administrator submitted to the Governing Council a February report on the possibility of introducing greater flexibility in the use of country IPFs for TCDC activities.<sup>(20)</sup> The report was to be considered at the Council's organizational meeting for 1985. The Governing Council had asked the Administrator to study the consequences of the following proposals made by the Committee: allowing country IPFs to cover fully the local currency expenditure on TCDC projects financed from IPF resources; permitting the reimbursement in convertible currency of the local currency expenditure on TCDC projects covered by country IPFs; and ensuring procurement, in TCDC projects, of equipment, service, experts, etc., from developing countries.

Following a brief review of the rationale underlying established policies governing the use of country IPFs for TCDC activities, the report discussed the consequences of each of the three proposals and advanced recommendations for further streamlining some of the relevant procedures.

The Administrator concluded that: to allow the use of country IPFs to fully finance TCDC projects would be inconsistent with the principle that TCDC activities should be primarily financed by developing countries themselves and that UNDP's role was only supportive and catalytic; reimbursement of local currency expenditures from the IPF should continue to be made in that currency when UNDP had accumulated holdings of it and, when holdings were insufficient, UNDP should continue to purchase the needed currency, resulting in convertible currency accruing to the country's banking system; and for procurement of equipment and supplies for TCDC projects, bids from developing countries should be given a 15 per cent cost preferential treatment over other bids but other regulations pertaining to the bidding procedures should be maintained.

Activities and staffing of Special Unit for TCDC

In accordance with a 1983 Governing Council decision,<sup>(18)</sup> the Administrator submitted to that body a report on the activities and staffing of the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC.<sup>(21)</sup> The report reviewed the background and mandate of the Unit and then described its functions as: programming of TCDC action-oriented promotional activities funded through the Special Programme Resources; developing new ideas, for promoting TCDC; reporting to and servicing the High-level Committee; programme support; maintaining liaison with TCDC focal points of Governments and assisting developing countries to strengthen their TCDC co-ordination mechanisms; collecting and disseminating information on potential sources for financing; organizing training programmes for government officials and United Nations personnel; expanding and maintaining the UNDP Information Referral System (INRES) and establishing links with national and regional information systems; and supporting public information programmes on TCDC.

With regard to staffing, the Administrator noted that, since 1982, the Unit had consisted of five Professional-level posts and six General Service posts and if all the functions proposed for the Unit by the Committee were to be meaningfully developed and implemented at the levels expected, additional staff would be required. However, those needs had to be weighed against other needs in the organization. If he was to contain the size of the administrative budget, the Administrator could not propose an increase in the Unit's staff, although he was fully cognizant of the importance of TCDC. Continued efforts would be made to further enhance TCDC within available budgetary resources.

On 29 June 1984,<sup>(22)</sup> the Governing Council, noting UNDP's financial constraints and the Administrator's conclusion that additional staff could not be recommended, requested him to keep the issue under review, particularly in preparing the 1986-1987 budget.

Information Referral System for TCDC

In response to a 1983 Governing Council decision,<sup>(23)</sup> the Administrator submitted a March 1984 progress report to the Council on the TCDC Information Referral System (INRES).<sup>(24)</sup> The report stated that INRES had reached the operational stage and arrangements had been made for technical support to be provided by the UNDP Division of Management Information Services. However, the Special Unit for TCDC (see above) continued to operate the information service including dispatch and receipt of questionnaires, data validation, coding and entry, operation of the enquiry service, monitoring of the use and general promotion of INRES among potential users.

As requested by the High-level Committee on TCDC in 1983,<sup>(25)</sup> the report also reviewed the activities of INRES in relation to the other multisectoral information systems in UNDP and the regional commissions. The Administrator stated that there was an overlap between INRES and the regional commissions in the collection, storage and dissemination of information on institutions and that he would consult further with them on modalities for ensuring better policy and operational co-ordination. He had also instructed the UNDP Central Evaluation Office to include in its work plan an evaluation of the global and regional information systems supported by UNDP. Better co-ordination of United Nations information systems would be further facilitated by the Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems established in 1983.<sup>(25)</sup>

The Administrator proposed to keep the situation under review and would report to both the High-level Committee on TCDC and the Governing Council in 1985.

Skilled workers

In his annual report to the Governing Council on 1984 UNDP activities,<sup>(14)</sup> the Administrator stated that the programme for the Transfer of Knowledge through Expatriate Nationals (TOKTEN) continued to attract increasing support from Governments which had found skilled expatriates from its growing roster to be invaluable short-term consultants. By the end of 1984, the TOKTEN scheme had delivered more than 1,000 consultancies in 15 participating countries, contributing to resolving some of the problems created by the brain drain from developing countries.

On 6 April,<sup>(26)</sup> the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board took note of consultations held between the UNCTAD Secretary-General and Governments, as requested by the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC in 1983.<sup>(23)</sup> The Board urged Governments to respond positively to the invitation addressed to the Board in 1983 by the High-level Committee, including the convening of a group of governmental experts on co-operative exchange of skills among developing countries, and to take a decision thereon at its September 1984 session.

On 21 September,<sup>(27)</sup> the Board requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene in 1985 a meeting of governmental experts to examine the modalities for co-operation analysed in a 1983 study on institutional and policy issues relating to the co-operative exchange of skills,<sup>(23)</sup> recommend ways of systematically promoting such an exchange among developing countries, and submit its findings to the Board for transmittal to the High-level Committee in 1985. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was further requested to attempt to obtain financial resources outside the UNCTAD regular budget in order to facilitate participation of experts from LDCs in the meeting.

UN Capital Development Fund

In his annual report on the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) for 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator described the Fund's programme activities, gave the conclusions of evaluation studies of a number of projects, and provided information on the Fund's financial status.

Programme operations. In 1984, UNCDF approved $36.8 million for 27 new projects plus $2.1 million for increases in existing project budgets, bringing outstanding commitments at year-end to $144 million. Of the total amount approved, $20.6 million was funded directly from UNCDF general resources while the balance was funded through cost-sharing and trust fund arrangements.

In programming its assistance during the year, UNCDF gave priority to drought-affected areas in Africa and to projects that would increase food production and facilitate its distribution, and improve primary health care services and community water-supply systems. Of the new projects and grant increases approved, 19 were for 12 LDCs in Africa.

UNCDF began 1984 with 194 ongoing projects with $143.7 million in outstanding commitments. The projects were located in 41 countries and were designed to be implemented primarily by government agencies. Some required specialized assistance which was provided by eight co-operating agencies of the United Nations system. Project expenditure amounted to some $30 million compared with $24.8 million for 1983. An additional $1 million was disbursed against trust fund and cost-sharing arrangements.

As authorized by the UNDP Governing Council in 1983,<sup>(2)</sup> UNCDF continued to accept trust funds conditioned on procurement in the donor country and in 1984 negotiated one new tied trust fund of $12.96 million from Italy for a project in Ethiopia.

In 1984, UNCDF and the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations concluded cost-sharing agreements, with the latter contributing $0.5 million for two projects, bringing its total cost-sharing contributions to $2.6 million for six projects.

UNCDF also obtained funding towards 13 of its new projects from two UNDP-administered trust funds. Twelve projects were to be funded in part by the UNDP Trust Fund for Developing Countries Afflicted by Drought, Famine and Malnutrition, which, as decided by the General Assembly in 1983,<sup>(3)</sup> financed urgently needed projects, primarily in the food and agricultural sectors in countries afflicted by famine and malnutrition resulting from severe or prolonged drought. UNCDF received $4.8 million in contributions from that trust fund, of which $4 million was allocated to nine projects in Africa. It also obtained $2.5 million from a special Netherlands trust fund for LDCs to fund a project in Haiti (see also p. 414).

During the year, six programming missions were fielded by the Fund to identify new projects and, as a follow-up to those and earlier project identifications, 26 formulations missions were dispatched to 14 countries, resulting in the approval of 15 projects.

UNCDF also participated in four round-table donor meetings for LDCs organized by Burundi, Comoros, Lesotho and Malawi, with UNDP assistance.

Programme resources. Voluntary contributions received by UNCDF in 1984 amounted to $21.2 million (down from $24.2 in 1983). In addition, UNCDF received $0.6 million in trust fund contributions and cost-sharing arrangements while additional joint financing modalities for $18.5 million were also concluded during the year. As at 31 December, pledges for 1985 amounted to $14.3 million (see table).

Of the 10 major donors contributing to UNCDF, eight made their contributions in national currencies which were converted to the United States dollar equivalent. The strength of the dollar had the effect of substantially reducing the dollar equivalent of both pledges and amounts paid in despite increased levels of national currency pledges from several countries.

At the beginning of the year, outstanding commitments funded from general resources totalled $143.7 million and the Fund approved $20.6 million in new project commitments. Project expenditures of $30 million and project savings and cancelled obligations of $13.8 million reduced the year-end commitments to $120.3 million. The difference between outstanding project commitments and available resources, exclusive of the

Expenditures in 1984 were $31.1 million—$28.8

Chapter III

Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief

Through a number of organizations, the United Nations continued in 1984 to provide special assistance to countries with serious economic difficulties. Those problems were frequently aggravated by natural or other disasters. Of particular concern was the critical economic situation in Africa which was compounded by a prolonged drought in certain regions. Both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly added an item to their agenda for the first time on that situation. In a December resolution (39/29), the Assembly adopted the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, expressing concern at the crisis which over the previous few years had assumed alarming proportions, seriously jeopardizing not only the development process, but also the very survival of millions of people. By the Declaration, the Assembly outlined the problems and proposed remedial measures.

In order to view firsthand the effects of widespread drought, food shortages, livestock epidemics and dwindling resources, the Secretary-General travelled to eight countries in West Africa from 17 January to 4 February. On his return, he remarked that the dimensions of the human tragedy became all the more poignant during his trip, and he called on the international community to respond urgently and adequately, as lives were threatened and the economic survival of many African countries was at stake. In addition to problems of food, health, water supply, refugees, transportation and communication, the international community needed to deal with the causes of the crisis, he said. In December, the Secretary-General established the United Nations Office for Emergency Operations in Africa; the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was appointed to direct the new Office. The most urgent problem was famine, which was complicated by problems of transport, storage and distribution of food.

With regard to countries suffering grave economic difficulties, the Economic and Social Council in July called for assistance to Guinea (resolution 1984/59), and in December the Assembly adopted a series of resolutions calling for economic assistance to Benin (39/185), Cape Verde (39/189), the Central African Republic (39/180), Chad (39/195), the Comoros (39/193), Democratic Yemen (39/184), Djibouti (39/200), Equatorial Guinea (39/181), the Gambia (39/203), Guinea (39/202), Guinea-Bissau (39/186), Haiti (39/196), Lesotho (39/183), Liberia (39/182), Mozambique (39/199), Nicaragua (39/204), Sao Tome

The United Nations system continued to respond to emergency situations arising from natural disasters, mainly through action co-ordinated by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO). The Assembly (in resolutions 39/190, 39/191, 39/194, 39/201, 39/205 and 39/206) and the Council (in resolutions 1984/3, 1984/5, 1984/6 and 1984/7 and decision 1984/106) dealt with assistance needs resulting from the continuing drought in certain areas in Africa, particularly the Sudano-Sahelian region and East Africa; cyclones and floods in Madagascar; a cyclone in Swaziland; and an earthquake in Yemen. Both the Assembly and the Council, in resolutions 39/207 and 1984/60 respectively, called for strengthening the United Nations capacity to respond to disasters.

In addition to special economic assistance and disaster relief, emergency humanitarian assistance was provided to Lebanon. Lebanon had been unable to carry out its reconstruction programme due to renewed fighting and disorder and the military situation in the south. The Assembly, in resolution 39/197, called for assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon, as did the Council in decision 1984/174.

Economic assistance

In response to requests by the General Assembly, the United Nations in 1984 continued to provide special assistance to a number of developing countries faced with particularly severe economic problems. A wide range of adverse economic conditions, often accompanied by damaging climatic events, had jeopardized the development of those countries.

The Secretary-General, by various 1982 and 1983 resolutions, had been requested to report to the Assembly in 1984 on the economic situation and on the progress made in organizing and implementing special programmes of economic assistance for a number of developing countries. Each of the countries concerned was asked whether it would prefer the report to be based on the findings of a visiting review mission or whether it would wish to provide the information to be used in a brief, interim report to the Assembly. Eleven of the countries concerned chose the latter form; accordingly, the Secretary-General, in September and October,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted summary reports for 11 countries for which special programmes of economic assistance were being implemented, based on information supplied by them. The summaries—for Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru; Chad; the Comoros; Djibouti; Equatorial Guinea; the Gambia; Sierra Leone; Tonga; and Uganda—addressed the main developments in the respective economies and the status of the special programme of economic assistance.

The Secretary-General also submitted individual reports on assistance rendered to Benin,<sup>(2)</sup> Cape Verde,<sup>(3)</sup> the Central African Republic,<sup>(4)</sup> Democratic Yemen,<sup>(5)</sup> Guinea,<sup>(6)</sup> Lesotho,<sup>(7)</sup> Mozambique,<sup>(8)</sup> Nicaragua,<sup>(9)</sup> Sao Tome and Principe<sup>(10)</sup> and Vanuatu.<sup>(11)</sup> In a further report to the Assembly,<sup>(12)</sup> he described assistance provided by the United Nations system to 20 countries: Benin, Bolivia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Djibouti, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Mozambique, Peru, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Tonga, Uganda, Vanuatu. The summaries of aid to those countries were based on information provided by specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies, programmes and organizations that had rendered technical and other forms of assistance within their various fields of competence: FAO, UNESCO, WHO, the World Bank and IDA, IMF, ICAO, UPU, ITU, WMO, IMO, WIPO, IFAD, UNDP, UNCTAD, UNICEF, UNIDO, UNCDF, UNCHS, WFP, WFC, UNFPA, UNDRP, DTC and UNHCR. (See below for details on individual countries.)

The Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on system-wide assistance when it adopted decision 39/431 on 17 December.

Speaking to the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 2 November, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, Abdulrahim Abby Farah, reported that nine additional countries (Bolivia, Ecuador, Guinea, Kiribati, Madagascar, Peru, Swaziland, Tuvalu and Vanuatu) had been added during the year to those for which special programmes of economic assistance had been established, bringing the total to 25. Reports on 20 of them were before the Committee; another, on Guinea, was under preparation. Of the 18 African States included, 14 had been classified by the United Nations as least developed countries (LDCs). The effects of the prolonged drought had compounded their situation.

Many of the countries concerned had heavy debt-servicing burdens which obliged them to request rescheduling of their external debts. Noting that a number of the countries had taken austerity measures, the Co-ordinator called on the international community to support those efforts by increasing the flow of financial and other assistance. A number of the countries had mobilized additional external resources by organizing donor conferences and round-tables which deserved the support of the international community. On behalf of the Secretary-General, he appealed to bilateral and multilateral donors to respond generously.

In an October report to the Assembly,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General described the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (SNPA), adopted by the 1981 United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries<sup>(14)</sup> and endorsed that year by the Assembly.<sup>(15)</sup> SNPA was aimed at helping LDCs achieve a self-sustained economy and enabling them to attain internationally accepted minimum standards of nutrition, health, housing and education. The report, prepared by the secretariat of UNCTAD, gave a brief account of the recent economic performance of LDCs (see p. 413).

Africa

Critical economic situation

According to several 1984 United Nations reports, the economic and social situation in Africa continued to deteriorate. The crisis reflected the cumulative impact of a variety of internal and external factors, such as natural disasters, inadequate resources, slow economic growth, structural weaknesses, global economic recession, strife and adverse climatic conditions.

For the first time, in 1984 the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly included in their agenda an item on the critical economic situation in Africa.

In an April report to the Council,<sup>(16)</sup> the Secretary-General described the nature and magnitude of the critical social and economic situation in Africa, identified the most pressing needs, and called for concerted and co-ordinated action from the international community. As a result of economic stagnation or decline combined with rapid population growth, average per capita income in many African countries was, in real terms, less than it had been 15 years earlier. Despite some gains in the quality of life in Africa over the previous two decades, social conditions were far from acceptable and were threatened with deterioration. In recent years, the number of people living at subsistence level had increased sharply and vulnerable groups (women, children, the disabled, rural communities) were especially endangered. The situation was manifested in lack of basic health care and safe drinking-water, high infant mortality rates, high unemployment and inadequate housing.

To some extent, the economic difficulties stemmed from the limited production base of African countries, usually restricted to a few primary commodities and mineral products, requiring reliance on industrialized countries, and from a lack of transport and communications infrastructure. Food production had failed to keep pace with population growth. The industrial sector remained small in most countries and heavily dependent on imported inputs and spare parts.

The impact of the recent global economic recession and of inflation on the already vulnerable economies of Africa had been devastating. It had led to a sharp drop in commodity prices, which in 1982, in real terms, had been at their lowest level in 40 years. Between 1981 and 1983 alone, the total value of African developing countries' exports fell by more than 15 per cent. As a result of declining commodity prices, the terms of trade of those countries declined by approximately 50 per cent between 1977 and 1981. To curb growing trade deficits, many countries had to reduce overall imports while accommodating a growing need for food imports. Many had no alternative but to request the rescheduling of their external debt, which provided only temporary relief. Faced with financial imbalances, a number of countries had undertaken adjustment programmes in association with IMF and/or the World Bank, usually calling for reduced government expenditures, such as the reduction of subsidies for basic consumer goods and for strategic production inputs such as fertilizer, as well as major currency devaluations. While the purpose of the programmes was to restore financial equilibrium, the immediate impact was often a further worsening of living conditions. The Secretary-General said that increased official development assistance (ODA) was vital during the adjustment period until better financial balance was restored.

The most pressing need was for food. Almost half of Africa's population was threatened by severe hunger and malnutrition and in some cases by starvation. There was little prospect that those needs could be met from domestic production in the near future due to the continuation of drought. FAO estimated that Africa would require 3.3 million tons of food aid during the 1983/84 season. In addition to food, assistance was needed to ensure its distribution and to rehabilitate agricultural production. Programmes to develop water supplies and basic health services were urgently needed. The development of human resources was a key priority.

Economic assistance was needed for balance-of-payments support to meet urgent import requirements and to achieve fuller utilization of existing industrial and agricultural capacity. In the Secretary-General's view, international action was required to help stabilize prices of African export commodities and reduce barriers to markets for African goods. In recent years, aid flows and private flows of equity capital to Africa had been declining. While bilateral aid would remain the major component in ODA, multilateral aid was also essential.

Within the United Nations, an effort was being made to achieve a better co-ordinated approach, beginning with asking the United Nations resident co-ordinators in African countries to consult with each Government, as well as with the local representatives of bilateral and multilateral agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), to identify specific country needs. Specific needs had also been identified by numerous United Nations organizations, many of which were active in 1984 in dealing with the African crisis.

In a July addendum<sup>(17)</sup> to the April report, the Secretary-General updated selected issues of the emergency situation in the most affected food-deficient countries. The report was prepared by his Special Representative for the African crisis on the basis of information from Governments supplied to the resident co-ordinators and to United Nations organizations and bodies participating in the activities of the Special Representative's office at Nairobi, Kenya. In addition to presenting the emergency needs of African countries and assessing domestic and international responses, the report dealt with strengthening the preparedness of the affected countries for future emergency situations. As at mid-1984, there remained a food-aid gap for 1983/84 in the range of 500,000 tons, and pledges were urgently needed to fill it. The estimated emergency requirements, amounting to about $225 million, related mainly to water, transport and distribution, health, nutrition, energy and the provision of emergency agricultural input for the next planting season.

Food production in 1983/84 in the 24 most affected countries, as identified by FAO, had declined by 10 per cent from the poor crop yields of 1982/83, and by 14 per cent from that of the last normal year, 1981. The shortfall in production had been severe in both West Africa, particularly in the Sahelian countries, and southern Africa, which had suffered from drought in 1982 and 1983. In East Africa, the drought had been very severe in some areas, and there had been widespread starvation. As at the end of May 1984, FAO and WFP estimated that 3 million tons of food aid had to be provided in 1983/84.

Other critical problems were: water shortages; lack of transportation for food, water and medicines to the affected populations; population displacement within and outside national boundaries; lack of adequate basic health services; livestock diseases; and insufficient energy supply.

Reviewing the preparedness of countries for coping with emergency situations, the Special Representative found that, in slightly more than half of the countries surveyed, a national emergency or reconstruction plan did not exist. One third had national plans to cope with the emergency/drought situation, but in only a few cases did such plans contain financial and sectoral details. In 13 of the 18 countries in which a national relief co-ordinating mechanism existed, the internal co-ordinating capacity could be rated from adequate to strong.

A global drought/food early warning system (EWS) had been set up by FAO, but it needed improvement, as did national and area EWS capabilities. Timely and reliable data and trained manpower were also needed. A major bottle-neck occurred in the scheduling of food-aid deliveries to the distribution sites. United Nations resident co-ordinators—who were the UNDP resident representatives in all African countries—acted as focal points for the United Nations system at the country level for matters concerning economic crises and the drought-induced emergency; in general they had many responsibilities and were understaffed.

While the international community had concentrated on the provision of food, it was also essential to provide the means to resume normal agricultural production, i.e. crop seeds and fertilizers, agricultural materials, equipment and spare parts, technical assistance and agricultural rehabilitation. Aid in the form of seeds, fertilizers, pesticides, insecticides, animal vaccines, animal feed, vehicles, and agricultural tools and equipment was provided through FAO and UNDP. FAO had drawn up plans for expanding food and seed reserves—an important element in preparing for emergency situations—while WHO had established health emergency stocks at six African locations.

The Special Representative had convened a special meeting of African intergovernmental organizations and financial institutions at Geneva on 20 July to explore their capacities in the solution of short-, medium- and long-term problems and how those capacities could be synchronized with donors' efforts.

In an October report to the Assembly,<sup>(18)</sup> also prepared by the Special Representative, the Secretary-General provided supplementary information, reviewing the emergency situations as at 31 August 1984 in 36 African countries, of which 27 were identified by an FAO/WFP special task force monitoring food-aid requirements, pledges and deliveries as countries facing abnormal food shortages, and nine were identified by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) (tenth meeting, Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 24-28 May 1984) as also being drought-affected. The critical areas were actual or impending shortages of food and water; serious losses of livestock; massive imports of food, placing severe strain on already weak transport, storage and distribution systems; increased malnutrition and health risks; and further displacement of drought-affected populations. Projections of food harvests and supply were constantly changing and were merely indicative of the magnitude of needs. The report also discussed briefly the longer-term aspects of structural adjustment, with particular emphasis on actions required from African Governments and from donors, multilateral aid institutions and NGOs.

The crisis was affecting the economies of the entire continent. Gross output of developing Africa declined by 0.1 per cent in 1983 and a marginal growth of 1.8 per cent was projected for 1984. As a result, per capita income had consistently declined since 1980 at an average annual rate of 4.1 per cent. While there were structural defects in the economies of many African countries, their current position was largely the result of an unfavourable international economic environment. The economies were also affected by the degradation and loss of agricultural soils, the destruction of vegetal cover, the desertification of pasture lands and the depletion of ground water. By September 1984, food-aid pledges from donors had reached 2.6 million metric tons (with an estimated value of over $500 million), comprising 88 per cent of requirements, for 24 countries identified as having high cereal-import requirements for 1983/84.

The Secretary-General concluded that the situation remained precarious and that greater efforts would be required in 1984/85 since drought was again affecting a number of countries. Moreover, several were unlikely to meet import targets through commercial purchases because of foreign exchange constraints; continuous assessment was recommended. Transport, storage and distribution of relief supplies continued to be a main bottle-neck, and donor support was essential in this sector. Addressing the longer-term structural requirements, the Secretary-General said that the primary responsibility rested with the African Governments themselves in such areas as formulation of national rehabilitation and development programmes, improved management of the economy, and development of entrepreneurship in all economic sectors. Such efforts should be complemented with international support in the interrelated areas of primary commodity export, external debt and financial flows. Compensatory mechanisms should be made as flexible as possible and bilateral creditors should make efforts to alleviate the debt burden through new rescheduling schemes and the waiving of debt-service payments over an agreed period of time.

The Secretary-General, in a note of 1 November,<sup>(19)</sup> stressed that, even though the dimensions of the drought and the imminence of mass starvation had abated somewhat over the previous year, a large number of Africans were still struggling to survive and many of the countries were still in a critical situation. A week earlier he had issued an urgent appeal for immediate assistance to Ethiopia, where almost a million people were facing the prospect of death from starvation. The situation was also ominous in Angola, Chad, Mali and the Niger.

The Secretary-General urged that the international community increase net financial flows to Africa, particularly concessional flows through bilateral channels and multilateral organizations such as the World Bank and the other United Nations funding institutions. In regard to the African countries' external debt, country-specific solutions were required, but as for public debt, the measures provided for in a 1978 UNCTAD resolution<sup>(20)</sup> on debt and development problems of developing countries should be implemented for the least developed and other poor countries of Africa. In order to improve those countries' commodity export earnings, the Secretary-General said steps must be taken to enable the Common Fund for Commodities, a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities and commodity development activities, to become operative as soon as possible (see Chapter IV of this section).

Progress was also needed in negotiating individual commodity agreements and in improving compensatory financing arrangements. Increasing agricultural production for domestic consumption and export was also a priority area.

United Nations action had included efforts to assist countries through specific programmes and the mobilization of concessional resources. The Secretary-General called for greater administrative flexibility as well as adequate financing, through the reallocation of existing resources, co-financing arrangements or from additional resources. Action was needed in three broad areas: first, strengthening support for national programmes for developing human resources, particularly in management and administration, including technical assistance in resources management and training programmes on skills needed in rural areas; second, protection of underprivileged groups, the most vulnerable of whom were women and children, including increasing child survival programmes and programmes to provide drinking-water and health education and medicine; and third, maintenance and repair of production, transport and communications infrastructures.

In a report issued in June with a later addendum,<sup>(21)</sup> the Secretary-General described special measures taken by the United Nations system, in accordance with a 1980 Assembly resolution,<sup>(22)</sup> for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s (see Chapter VIII of this section). The report focused on measures for implementing the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa,<sup>(23)</sup> adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) at Lagos, Nigeria, in 1980 as the major framework for the continent's development plans.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) reviewed the critical economic situation in Africa at its April<sup>(24)</sup> and October 1984<sup>(25)</sup> sessions. In April, it adopted a decision<sup>(26)</sup> endorsing three areas for immediate and high priority action by the United Nations system, as identified by its Sub-Committee on Nutrition at its tenth session (Rome, Italy, 5-9 March). Two of these concerned Africa: initiative Africa for the strengthening of institutions, specifically the FAO/WHO/OAU Regional Food and Nutrition Commission for Africa; and a co-ordinated country-level approach in food and nutrition—based on a Sub-Committee analysis of problems and opportunities of a selected African country. The third pertained to the control of vitamin A and iodine deficiency.

At the end of 1984, the Secretary-General took measures to strengthen the system's response to the emergency situation and provide a broad framework for international action, emphasizing the linkage between emergency relief, rehabilitation and long-term development.

In June,<sup>(27)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the Special Memorandum on Africa's Economic and Social Crisis, adopted by the ECA Conference of Ministers in May (see Chapter VIII of this section). The ministers responsible for economic development and planning addressed the current crisis and its causes, the emergency needs of the 24 most affected countries, the short- and medium-term measures needed to combat the crisis in those and 10 other drought-prone countries, and the long-term structural adjustment measures for the whole continent in accordance with the Lagos Plan of Action. In an addendum, the Secretary-General transmitted the Addis Ababa Declaration on Africa's External Indebtedness, adopted by the African Ministers of Finance at a regional meeting on the topic (Addis Ababa, 18-20 June).

The twentieth ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Addis Ababa, 12-15 November) adopted two declarations and a series of resolutions which were transmitted by Djibouti to the Secretary-General on 10 January 1985.<sup>(28)</sup> One of the declarations, on the critical economic situation in Africa, called for measures to be taken at the national, regional and international levels to alleviate emergency relief and rehabilitation problems and meet longer-term development requirements. It urged all donor countries to respond positively to the proposals put forward by the recent World Bank report entitled Towards Sustained Development of Sub-Saharan Africa: A Joint Programme of Action, which called for additional bilateral and multilateral disbursements of about $2 billion yearly for the region, and suggested that the Bank consider establishing special facilities for the realization of those objectives. By a resolution on the economic problems of Africa, the OAU Assembly endorsed the recommendations made by the ECA Conference of Ministers in its Special Memorandum, and requested its Secretary-General to submit the declaration and the Memorandum to the 1984 session of the General Assembly.

UNDP activities. The Administrator of UNDP, in his annual report for 1984,<sup>(29)</sup> described the programme adjustments made by UNDP during the year due to the crisis in Africa. Drought had advanced over large areas of sub-Saharan Africa that year, further harming fragile economies already sapped by the effects of collapses in commodity prices, static ODA in real terms, unprecedentedly heavy debt-service burdens and volatile currency exchange rates. In December 1984, the Secretary-General established the United Nations Office for Emergency Operations in Africa (OEOA) with the UNDP Administrator serving as its head. That decision underlined the major adjustment required of UNDP. The emergency in Africa was widely perceived to be foremost a development issue. As the central funding and co-ordinating body for United Nations technical co-operation, UNDP was called upon to respond to requests for medium- and long-term rehabilitation as the necessary corollary of emergency relief actions.

UNDP field offices, in partnership with United Nations agencies, notably UNDRO, FAO, UNHCR, UNICEF and WFP, acted jointly as on-the-spot centres for information and emergency aid co-ordination. Following an appraisal of UNDP staff capacities, a redeployment exercise was carried out aimed at strengthening field offices in the most seriously affected countries, and further staffing needs were identified. In addition, UNDP reviewed its assistance to over 20 countries, and programmes and projects were adjusted to complement new relief and rehabilitation efforts. The adjustments were similar to the recommendations adopted by the ECA Conference of Ministers in May and endorsed by the OAU Assembly. UNDP identified its priority areas as: food production; water supply sources and systems; communications infrastructures to alleviate difficulties affecting the transportation, storage and distribution of food and medical supplies; and co-ordination of rehabilitation programmes with the resettlement of displaced populations. Within available resources, UNDP also gave priority to health services in affected countries, livestock management projects, renewable energy development and drought management and control. It also helped national authorities to define policy to ensure the efficient use of available development funds.

Field expenditures in Africa by and through UNDP amounted to over $300 million over the year. UNDP core resources accounted for $255 million of the total. Resource mobilization efforts were increased by promoting third-party cost-sharing projects which became a significant source of additional financing in the region.

The Administrator established in November the UNDP Trust Fund to Combat Poverty and Hunger in Africa. The Fund was to be used for projects in the priority areas of food self-sufficiency, water, energy for household use, primary health care, rural roads and anti-desertification and reforestation. Its resources could also be used for emergency assistance to African countries when exceptional circumstances warranted such action.

By a decision of 29 June on the economic and social crisis in Africa,<sup>(30)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council reaffirmed the importance of the central co-ordinating role of UNDP in assisting African Governments to meet their urgent needs as well as their medium- and long-term technical co-operation requirements for development. The Administrator was invited to continue his efforts to collaborate with organizations of the United Nations development system in such areas as assistance flows, resource mobilization and development of priority activities to help meet immediate and long-term development needs in Africa. The Council expressed appreciation for UNDP assistance in organizing round-table conferences of donors, requested the Administrator to support future conferences, and urged donor countries to support African countries' efforts, through United Nations funds and programmes, to plan and implement development projects. The Council supported the Administrator's initiative to channel an increased number of United Nations volunteers and technical personnel to the most severely affected African countries, and endorsed his intention to review the capacity of African field offices to undertake the additional work-load. It noted his speedy action to implement the General Assembly's 1983 request<sup>(31)</sup> to liquidate the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund and allocate the remaining balance to existing funds, including 70 per cent to UNDP-administered funds to finance urgently needed projects, primarily for food in African countries afflicted by drought (see p. 451).

By another decision of the same date,<sup>(32)</sup> the Governing Council approved an allocation of $1.5 million for a regional project in sub-Saharan Africa to counter the effects of the prolonged drought there by providing United Nations volunteers (see p. 458).

The UNDP Administrator, in an April report to the Governing Council,<sup>(33)</sup> described special programmes of assistance for specific countries. The report was made in response to a number of 1983 General Assembly resolutions calling for expanded aid to several countries (Benin, Bolivia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Ecuador, Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Peru, Sierra Leone, Uganda, Vanuatu) and inviting UNDP and other United Nations organizations to consider their special needs.

Communications. Japan, in a letter of 5 September 1984,<sup>(34)</sup> referring to the Secretary-General's appeal of 16 February for assistance to countries affected by the crisis besetting Africa, described its response, including food assistance to Ethiopia, Ghana, Mozambique, Senegal and Somalia, aid for refugees in Burundi, Ethiopia, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda, Zaire and Zimbabwe and WFP-channelled food aid for refugees in Chad, Somalia and the Sudan. On 29 November,<sup>(35)</sup> Japan transmitted an appeal to the international community for assistance to Africa issued by its Foreign Minister after a trip that month to observe the effects of the drought. The Minister announced Japanese supplemental food and agricultural aid of $50 million, in addition to the food-related assistance of more than $115 million it had already approved for 1984.

On 6 December,<sup>(36)</sup> the United Republic of Tanzania transmitted a letter of 28 November to the Secretary-General from its President in his capacity as Chairman of OAU. The Chairman endorsed the Secretary-General's call, made when he attended the twentieth OAU summit session in November 1984, for an international conference under United Nations auspices to consider action on the famine and hunger which afflicted most of Africa. He drew attention to the summit's decision to establish an African Fund for Emergency Assistance for Drought and Famine Problems and to its endorsement of the World Bank's proposal for a special fund for sub-Saharan Africa to contribute to Africa's medium- and longer-term recovery and development needs.

On 14 December,<sup>(37)</sup> the United States transmitted a communiqué from the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), which met in Paris on 3 and 4 December to discuss means of strengthening ODA and international co-operation to meet the acute problems of developing countries, in particular to respond more effectively to the economic and social crisis in sub-Saharan Africa. The Committee members said they were committed to working with the Secretary-General to organize effective international emergency action and were providing food and other assistance either directly or through international institutions and NGOs. They welcomed the efforts by the World Bank to strengthen aid co-ordination and to promote local arrangements for co-ordination, and UNDP's related efforts to strengthen the co-ordination capability of round-tables for LDCs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/188 without vote.

Critical economic situation in Africa

At its 50th plenary meeting, on 27 July 1984, the Council decided:

(a) To request the General Assembly to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session an item entitled "Critical economic situation in Africa" so as to bring to a successful conclusion the initiatives taken by the Council at its second regular session of 1984;

(b) To transmit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session the documents relating to that question which were before the Council at its second regular session of 1984, together with the relevant summary records.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/188

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by Vice-President; agenda item 4.
Meeting numbers. ESC 34-41, 50.

Algeria, a Council Vice-President, expressed regret that an informal Council working group on Africa, which had met under his chairmanship, had been unable to produce a declaration on guidelines for concerted action for Africa acceptable to all interested parties. In lieu of a declaration, the group had proposed the draft decision. Algeria said that the failure might be attributed to differences of approach between developed and African countries on action to be taken on such matters as commodity price stability and compensatory financing, and to differences with regard to objectives. Some developed countries thought primarily in terms of emergency humanitarian aid, whereas African countries considered that the main objective should be to bring about the conditions necessary for recovery and the renewal of development.

Consideration by the Committee for Development Planning. The Committee for Development Planning (CDP), at the first part of its twenty-first session (Geneva, 19-21 November 1984), made recommendations on the critical economic situation in Africa.<sup>(38)</sup> In a statement issued on 21 November, it said that in 1984-1985, over 5 million tons of grain would be required to avert severe malnutrition and starvation in 27 countries. Tens of thousands were dying in the most severely affected countries, especially in Chad, Ethiopia and Mozambique. CDP observed, however, that emergency food aid could have little impact on the deeper sources of the current crisis: rapid population growth, civil strife, external destabilization, the state of the world economy and natural disasters.

The circumstances could be overcome, according to CDP, and one of the means involved relatively small external support—less than one tenth of 1 per cent of the gross national product (GNP) of the OECD countries. The World Bank, ECA, the African Development Bank and the overwhelming majority of African Governments agreed that sustained development could begin over the next three to five years through domestic policy reform and improved external support. Increased support for agriculture, through restructured institutions and incentives, was the crux of the required domestic policy change.

CDP recommended that the international community agree no later than at its resumed session, to be held in April 1985, on a joint financing plan for Africa along the lines recommended by the World Bank, requiring total new commitments of at least $6 billion per year over the next three years. That much was needed merely to maintain net flows at the levels of recent years. Of that amount, at least $2 billion should be channelled into a special financing facility to be administered by the World Bank and IDA for use in low-income countries in Africa. The Committee recommended that both bilateral aid and African Governments' economic policies be monitored. It also called for IMF, the World Bank and other sources of finance to review African access to international liquidity and bridging finance.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa

1. We the States Members of the United Nations express our deep concern at the profound economic and social crisis that Africa is experiencing. Over the last few years the situation has assumed alarming proportions, seriously jeopardizing not only the development process but, more ominously, the very survival of millions of people.

2. We are alarmed by the spectre of widespread famine hanging over many African countries. Over one hundred and fifty million people are facing hunger and malnutrition. Prolonged unprecedented drought, accelerating desertification and other natural disasters have compounded an already serious situation, dislocating normal life all over the continent. Alarming shortages in food and water supplies and the depletion of livestock have led to the displacement of millions of people within and across borders.

3. All these factors are further straining fragile economies crippled by deep-rooted structural deficiencies, that is to say, weak physical and social infrastructures, lack of trained human resources and dependence on the export of a few primary commodities.

4. Africa, despite its enormous potential, remains the least developed of all continents, lagging far behind by every economic indicator. Economic performance of many African countries is characterized by declining per capita incomes and stagnant or negative rates of growth. Furthermore, food production has not kept pace with population growth. According to all projections, prospects for recovery, growth and development remain very dim unless the efforts currently under way in African countries are fully supported by the international community.

5. Furthermore, the international economic environment continues to affect developing countries adversely and, particularly, it had a devastating impact on the already fragile African economies. This is manifested in deteriorating terms of trade, sharp declines in export earnings, the heavy burden of external debt and stagnating resource flows to African countries.

6. We are aware that African countries recognize they have the primary responsibility for their development and for addressing the present crisis. They have therefore undertaken and continue to undertake painful adjustment measures at very high social and political costs. While recognizing the determined efforts of African countries and the support provided by the international community, much more needs to be done as the situation remains very grave.

7. We recognize that, in dealing with the present crisis, African regional and subregional efforts towards economic co-operation and integration as well as enhanced economic and technical co-operation among developing countries play an important role in the achievement of national and collective self-reliance and sustained development in Africa.

8. We are aware that the maintenance of peace and security and the strengthening of international co-operation are important for meeting the challenge of development.

9. We fully recognize that emergency relief aid on a massive scale is urgently needed in the following areas: additional food aid and other emergency supplies, together with the technical and financial assistance necessary for their transportation, storage and distribution to the affected populations; improvement of water supplies; improvement of health and nutrition, particularly for vulnerable groups, including refugees and displaced persons; safeguarding national nuclei of herds of livestock; establishment of income-generating projects and promotion of new and renewable energy projects, particularly in rural areas. In addition to the assistance already provided by the international community, further urgent assistance from bilateral and multilateral donors and non-governmental organizations is required to meet the above and other identified emergency needs in a comprehensive manner, as well as to strengthen the emergency prevention and preparedness capacities of African countries.

10. Of particular importance is the need to undertake urgent action to speed up and support the recovery and rehabilitation process in African countries, especially of the agricultural and industrial sectors as well as for physical and social infrastructures. Assistance for increasing the import capacity for vital imports, through adequate balance-of-payments support and other relevant measures, would help to establish a sound basis for the resumption and acceleration of sustained economic and social development in Africa.

11. We agree that in confronting the challenge of development, national policies and measures, such as those outlined in the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Special Memorandum on Africa's Economic and Social Crisis adopted by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, provide a framework for national and subregional action and international support.

12. We recognize that, in view of the high priority attached by African countries to food and agriculture, the first urgent task is the early attainment of national and collective self-reliance in food production. In this connection, as highlighted in the Harare Declaration on the food crisis in Africa adopted on 25 July 1984 by the thirteenth FAO Regional Conference for Africa, national food strategies and integrated rural development plans play an important role, especially in the achievement of food security. Moreover, we recognize the important role of women in rural development, particularly in food production, a role for which greater support is needed. Also important are the provision of appropriate incentives, credit, improvement of storage and transport, reduction of food losses, in particular post-harvest losses, achievement of a better balance between agricultural export commodities and food production, diversification of agricultural production and utilization of irrigation potential, particularly in the drought-prone areas.

13. Urgent action is needed at the international level to support national and regional efforts to implement the Regional Plan of Action to Combat the Effects of Drought in Africa and the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.

14. Increased resources for rapid implementation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa and the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa are required. Furthermore, efforts at national, subregional and regional levels to develop the necessary and much needed skilled manpower, and to build technological capacities, require increased international support.

15. We fully acknowledge that, in the light of the worsening economic situation in Africa, the interrelationship between the debt problem, concessional flows and export earnings and their direct impact on recovery, growth and development assume even greater significance. It is vital, therefore, to take urgent and mutually reinforcing measures in those areas, taking into account the Special Memorandum on Africa's Economic and Social Crisis, the Addis Ababa Declaration on Africa's External Indebtedness adopted by the African Ministers of Finance and the World Bank Special Programme for Sub-Saharan Africa, in order to complement and support domestic adjustment efforts in African countries.

16. Africa is experiencing a very serious debt problem, repayment and servicing of which is taking a very high percentage of already reduced export earnings. The problem is further exacerbated by factors such as deteriorating terms of trade, decline in concessional flows in real terms and increased use of short-term commercial credit. Without an increase in net capital inflows and urgent debt relief measures, prospects for recovery and development in Africa will be undermined.

17. Bilateral and multilateral creditors should take concerted measures to ease the debt burden of African countries. For official and officially guaranteed debt, total or partial conversion of official development assistance debts into grants, longer maturities and grace periods, lower or concessional interest rates and extended multi-year rescheduling are among the measures to be dealt with urgently within the framework of close consultation with each of the debtor countries concerned, as well as any other measures to be agreed upon. It is essential to ensure the full and urgent implementation of Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978. Multilateral financial institutions should expedite resource disbursement. Reduction in international interest rates would further alleviate the debt burden. Moreover, the full co-operation of commercial banks is indispensable. The capacity of African countries to manage their debt should be improved through the provision of technical assistance, particularly by international agencies.

18. We recognize that African countries, in view of their heavy dependence on concessional financial flows and their limited access to alternative sources of external finance, require a substantial and sustained increase in the volume of these flows through bilateral donors and multilateral channels for development finance and technical co-operation. The international community, in particular the developed countries and the multilateral financial institutions, should endeavour to provide the additional financial resources to maintain and increase a net transfer of resources to African countries. The World Bank is strongly urged to explore with donors possible approaches, including a special facility, in mobilizing the resources required to implement the Bank's Special Programme for Sub-Saharan Africa.

19. The full and speedy implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, particularly with regard to the official development assistance level, would greatly augment resource flows to many African countries. Supplementary funding for the International Development Association and the early completion of the replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development would ensure at least the maintenance of the real value of resources channelled to Africa.

20. The heavy dependence of African countries on the export of a few primary commodities renders them particularly vulnerable to the sharp price fluctuations that result in drastic shortfalls in export earnings. Urgent action is therefore needed to stabilize commodity prices on long-term trends and to improve and increase the use of compensatory financing arrangements for export earnings shortfalls, such as the Compensatory Financing Facility of the International Monetary Fund. Improved market access for African primary and processed products, efforts of African countries to diversify production, and the early and effective operation of the Common Fund for Commodities require intensified international action.

21. The modalities and quality of official development assistance flows in terms of a greater grant element, untied resources and simplified procedures for aid delivery should be improved through, inter alia, speedier disbursements and greater reliance on more flexible forms of assistance, such as non-project programme and sector aid, including local and recurrent costs.

22. We acknowledge that there is room for further improvement in the co-ordination of assistance and the efficient and effective use of resources. Co-ordination of multilateral as well as bilateral assistance is primarily the responsibility of recipient Governments and, in this connection, effective national co-ordinating mechanisms can play an important role. The United Nations system should extend technical assistance in this field to Governments, upon request, and should pursue its own efforts to enhance co-ordination at the programme and operational levels, in conformity with relevant General Assembly resolutions.

23. We are convinced that in addressing the critical needs of African countries there are many areas where the United Nations could play an important role both in mobilizing the necessary resources and in carrying out specific activities. In this respect, existing resources allocated for programmes in Africa should, in consultation with African Governments, be refocused to address identified priority areas. There is need for further improvement in the efficiency and programme delivery of United Nations activities in Africa. Furthermore, additional voluntary contributions should be mobilized to ensure the implementation of projects and programmes in priority areas.

24. We urge all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to give greater attention to Africa and to continue to mobilize resources for assisting African countries in dealing with the current crisis and its longer-term ramifications.

25. We further urge bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as non-governmental organizations, to take all necessary measures to support the efforts of the African countries aimed at alleviating the critical economic situation in Africa.

26. We request the Secretary-General to continue his commendable efforts in alerting and sensitizing the international community to the plight of African countries, in mobilizing additional assistance to Africa, as well as in co-ordinating the activities of the United Nations system in Africa and in monitoring the situation, and to present periodic reports thereon.

27. We are convinced that unless urgent action is taken the rapidly deteriorating situation in Africa may well lead to disaster. We are therefore fully committed to supporting the efforts of African countries to meet the dual challenge of survival and development by taking concerted and urgent measures commensurate with the needs outlined in the present Declaration.

General Assembly resolution 39/29

3 December 1984 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Draft by Cameroon (A/39/L.22), orally amended by co-ordinator following consultations; agenda item 139.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: plenary 47-52, 83.

Japan, the co-ordinator of informal consultations on this agenda item, orally informed the Assembly of amendments agreed to in paragraph 17 following consultations: the measures listed to ease the debt burden of African countries became measures "to be dealt with urgently" rather than measures "which deserved urgent action", and the word "Furthermore" was removed from the beginning of the following sentence.

In a separate action, the Assembly, in resolution 39/239 A on the financial emergency of the United Nations, called for a special postage stamp issue to sensitize the international community to the social and economic crisis in Africa, half the revenues from which were to be earmarked to implement objectives of the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa.

By resolution 39/8 on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, the Assembly commended the Secretary-General for his updated report on the critical economic situation in Africa.<sup>(18)</sup> It expressed appreciation for his initiative in alerting the international community to the situation and for organizing special programmes of economic assistance for African States, and welcomed his steps to facilitate international co-operation to assist Africa. Appreciation was also expressed to the World Bank, UNDP and other international financial institutions for their response to the critical situation as well as their assistance in organizing round-table and donor conferences in favour of African LDCs and those requiring special economic assistance programmes. The Assembly called on Member States and organizations to participate in measures to deal with the economic crisis in Africa, and on the international community to provide long-term assistance to the affected African States, particularly those suffering from natural disasters; appreciation was expressed to UNDRO, WFP, FAO, WHO and UNICEF for their assistance in this regard. Member States and United Nations organizations were called on to increase assistance to the African States affected by serious economic problems, in particular problems of displaced persons, and the organizations' attention was drawn to the need to publicize the social and economic development of Africa, in particular the critical economic situation.

Resolution 39/165 dealt with a related problem—the critical food and agriculture situation in Africa.

Benin

As requested by the General Assembly in 1983,<sup>(39)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on special economic and disaster relief assistance to Benin, which was classified by the United Nations as an LDC. The September 1984 report<sup>(2)</sup> was based on the findings of a review mission sent to Benin from 18 to 22 June.

Benin had appealed to the international community on 26 January for assistance in dealing with urgent economic and social problems resulting from drought and abnormal rainfall which had caused food shortages, estimated by the Government to be 50,000 to 70,000 metric tons of cereals, rural water shortages and electrical power outages. UNDP and UNDRO had responded promptly. An ad hoc United Nations emergency committee was established, consisting of all relevant United Nations representatives and experts in the country. In co-operation with the Government, UNDRO formulated a plan of action, focusing on improving wells, water distribution, providing and transporting food, a vaccination campaign and livestock protection; its estimated cost was $1.7 million and, by April, the necessary funds had been provided, mainly by bilateral donors. The drought appeared to have ended in 1984, although water shortages continued in many parts of the country and total rainfall was still below normal. Long-term solutions to water availability and storage problems were needed, and a significant food gap remained.

Following the donors' round-table in March 1983,<sup>(40)</sup> Benin had revised many of the projects initially presented as its national development and investment programme for 1983-1987 and revised cost estimates.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/185 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Benin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/88 of 5 December 1980, 36/208 of 17 December 1981, 37/151 of 17 December 1982 and 38/210 of 20 December 1983, in which it appealed to the international community to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to Benin so as to help that country overcome its financial and economic difficulties,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, in which the Council appealed to all States and all appropriate international organizations, including the United Nations and its specialized agencies, to assist Benin,

Having heard the statement made by the representative of Benin on 5 November 1984, in which he described the serious economic and financial situation of his country and the action taken by his Government to tackle these difficulties,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Benin,

Noting from the report that, in spite of various unfavourable factors, Benin continues to achieve some positive results in its development efforts thanks to the action taken by the Government and the assistance provided by the international community,

Deeply concerned, nevertheless, by the fact that Benin continues to experience serious economic and financial difficulties, characterized by a marked balance-of-payments disequilibrium, heavy burdens of its external debt and a lack of resources to implement its planned economic and social development programme,

Noting also that the persisting unfavourable climatic conditions in the coastal and northern regions of Benin have led to losses in agricultural and livestock production,

Noting that a round-table conference of partners in the economic and social development of Benin was held at Cotonou in March 1983 and that the Government took steps to organize the follow-up of its results,

Taking into consideration the objectives of Benin's national development plan for 1983-1987,

Having noted the efforts made by the Government of Benin to mobilize international support for the country's development plan by organizing the round-table conference held at Cotonou in March 1983 with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme,

Considering that Benin is one of the least developed countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to organize and mobilize support for the international programme of economic assistance to Benin;

2. Takes note of the report of the review mission sent to Benin in June 1984;

3. Notes with satisfaction the interest and support which the participants in the round-table conference have shown for Benin's development plan;

4. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance already provided or pledged to Benin by Member States, United Nations bodies and regional, interregional and intergovernmental organizations;

5. Appeals to Member States, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to respond generously and urgently to the needs of Benin as set forth in that country's development plan for 1983-1987;

6. Requests the appropriate programmes and organizations of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the United Nations Children's Fund—to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Benin, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the measures they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

7. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Benin and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1985;

8. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for implementing the projects of the special programme of economic assistance to Benin;

(b) To render appropriate assistance to the Government of Benin for mobilizing the resources necessary for implementing its national development plan;

(c) To keep the situation in Benin under constant review and, in consultation with the Government of Benin, to report to the General Assembly as soon as necessary.

Cape Verde

Special economic assistance to Cape Verde was the subject of an August 1984 report<sup>(3)</sup> by the Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1983.<sup>(41)</sup> A United Nations mission which visited that country from 9 to 16 June 1984 noted that the Government was operating with a deficit forecast for 1984 of approximately $6.3 million and there was a continuing trade deficit. In 1984, the total external debt stood at $119.5 million, representing 150 per cent of the gross domestic product (GDP). Debt service for the year was estimated at $4.5 million.

The food situation was seriously affected by erratic rainfall—drought followed by torrential rains in September—and, taking into account existing stocks, estimated domestic production, commercial imports and food aid pledged, there remained an estimated food deficit of 36,871 tonnes for 1984. Under WFP, over 43,000 persons were receiving food aid. The Government had concluded long-term food aid agreements with France, Switzerland, the United States and the European Economic Community (EEC) and was seeking similar arrangements with other donors. The Government strengthened mechanisms for food aid distribution to vulnerable groups by mobilizing army and civil administration resources, but external assistance was needed to implement its water supply, job creation and livestock preservation programmes.

UNCTAD, in a January 1985 report on its assistance to Cape Verde, Uganda and Vanuatu,<sup>(42)</sup> said it had undertaken activities relating to trade and regional economic integration in Cape Verde, financed by UNDP. As an LDC, Cape Verde was eligible to benefit from measures provided for in SNPA, adopted in 1981,<sup>(43)</sup> and, as an island developing country, it was entitled to other benefits from UNCTAD. In a resolution of 6 April,<sup>(43)</sup> the Trade and Development Board requested that the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in co-operation with UNDP, identify Cape Verde's assistance needs within UNCTAD's competence and make efforts to meet those needs. Among the projects identified by the Secretary-General's mission to Cape Verde, there were two (institutional reinforcement of commerce, and a stabilization fund for food security) which were eligible for UNCTAD support.

UNDP continued implementing the Cape Verde country programme for 1983-1986, expending $1.2 million on priority projects in 1984, according to a March 1985 report of the Administrator.<sup>(44)</sup> Two projects approved for urgent implementation were a desalination plant, and procurement of spare parts for rural development activities for controlling desertification.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/219 without vote.

Assistance to Cape Verde

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on assistance to Cape Verde, in particular its resolution 38/219 of 20 December 1983, in which the international community was requested to provide an appropriate level of resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance to Cape Verde as envisaged in the reports of the Secretary-General,

Recalling resolutions 142(VI) and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the progress in the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, and on activities in the field of island developing countries,

Noting that Cape Verde is one of the least developed countries and a small archipelagic State, with a fragile and open economy, aggravated by endemic and severe drought,

Reiterating that increased substantial, continuous and predictable assistance from the international community is needed for the effective completion of the First National Development Plan (1982-1985),

Gravely concerned at the critical food situation in Cape Verde resulting from the failure of seasonal rains, the continuing recurrence of drought and the spreading desertification,

Recognizing the strenuous efforts deployed by the Government and people of Cape Verde in the process of the economic and social development of their country despite existing constraints,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, to which is annexed the report of the review mission sent to Cape Verde in response to General Assembly resolution 38/219;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts deployed in mobilizing resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance to Cape Verde;

3. Expresses its gratitude to States and to international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations for their contribution to the programme of assistance to Cape Verde;

4. Reaffirms the need for all Governments and international organizations to implement their commitments undertaken within the framework of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, particularly those undertaken at the round-table conference of Cape Verde's partners in development, held at Praia from 21 to 23 June 1982;

5. Urges Governments and international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations to extend and intensify substantially their assistance for the early implementation of the programme of assistance to Cape Verde;

6. Invites the international community, in particular donor countries, to take appropriate and urgent measures to support the effective completion of the First National Development Plan (1982-1985) of Cape Verde;

7. Requests the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue and increase their assistance to Cape Verde, to co-operate with the Secretary-General in his efforts to mobilize resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the measures they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

8. Calls upon the international community to continue to contribute generously to all appeals for food and fodder assistance made by the Government of Cape

Verde, or on its behalf by the specialized agencies and other competent organizations of the United Nations system, to help it cope with the critical situation in the country;

9. Once again draws the attention of the international community to the special account established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/99, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Cape Verde;

10. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to continue to consider, through their governing bodies, the special needs of Cape Verde and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1985;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for implementing the programme of development assistance to Cape Verde;

(b) To keep the situation in Cape Verde under constant review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation in Cape Verde and, in consultation with the Government of Cape Verde, to make a substantive report on the implementation of the programme of economic assistance for Cape Verde to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Central African Republic

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1983 request of the General Assembly,<sup>(45)</sup> arranged for a review mission to visit the Central African Republic from 9 to 16 June 1984 in order to report on the economic situation there and on implementing the special programme of economic assistance. According to the mission's report, annexed to the Secretary-General's August report,<sup>(4)</sup> the Central African Republic, a land-locked LDC, continued to suffer the effects of a November 1982-May 1983 drought, including bush fires, pests, loss of crops, electricity shortages, disease and interruption of transport. Accordingly, it had been included on the FAO/WFP list of countries in need of exceptional international assistance. The general slow-down in economic activity resulted in loss of revenues and worsening balance-of-payments deficits. Efforts were under way to implement a 1983-1985 national action plan, designed to improve agriculture, forestry, livestock, fisheries and rural infrastructure, in particular transport, sanitation, water supply, social services, education and health. The 1983/84 production of staple crops declined significantly, and the projected earnings for 1984 decreased by 40 per cent.

The country's GDP, of which agriculture accounted for one third, increased in 1984 by 9.2 per cent over 1983, and the economy grew at an estimated 6 per cent. At the end of 1984, external debt was $262 million, representing 44 per cent of GNP and 166.7 per cent of exports of goods and services. External debt-service payments represented 4.7 per cent of GDP. By June 1984, of the 17 projects in the special programme of economic assistance awaiting funding in 1982, six had been fully funded, five partially funded, two had good funding prospects, two had not received any financing, and two had been withdrawn by the Government.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted on 17 December resolution 39/180 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the Central African Republic

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/87 of 5 December 1980, in which it affirmed the urgent need for international action to assist the Government of the Central African Republic in its efforts for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the country and invited the international community to provide sufficient resources to carry out the programme of assistance to the Central African Republic,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/206 of 17 December 1981, 37/145 of 17 December 1982 and 38/211 of 20 December 1983, in which it noted with concern that the assistance provided had not been adequate to meet the urgent needs of the country,

Recalling further its resolution 38/195 of 20 December 1983 on the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Considering that the Central African Republic is landlocked and is classified as one of the least developed countries,

Taking note of the statement made by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Co-operation of the Central African Republic on 11 October 1984, in which he described the economic problems of concern to the Central African Republic and stated that, because of the lack of financial means, external aid continued to be essential to the country,

Also taking note of the statement made by the representative of the Central African Republic on 6 November 1984, according to which, despite an incipient economic recovery, his country continued to be faced by enormous difficulties in implementing its socio-economic development programmes,

Particularly concerned that the Government of the Central African Republic is unable to provide the population with adequate health, educational and other essential social and public services because of an acute shortage of financial and material resources,

Taking account of the losses suffered by the Central African economy following the great drought of 1982-1983,

Noting with satisfaction the considerable efforts exerted by the Government and people of the Central African Republic for national reconstruction, rehabilitation and development, despite the limitations confronting them,

Also noting the intention of the Central African Government to organize, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, a round-table conference of donors in 1985,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 38/211, to which was annexed the report of the review mission sent to the Central African Republic in June 1984,

Also taking note of table 7 of the annex to the report of the Secretary-General according to which substantial additional assistance for the special programme of economic assistance is needed to finance projects which have only been implemented in part and others for which finance has not yet been obtained, including new high-priority projects specified therein,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts he has made to mobilize resources for carrying out the programme of assistance to the Central African Republic;

2. Reiterates its appreciation to States, international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations for their contribution to the programme of assistance to the Central African Republic;

3. Notes with concern, however, that the assistance provided under this heading continues to fall far short of the country's urgent needs;

4. Urgently draws the attention of the international community to table 7 of the annex to the Secretary-General's report, which indicates the projects still in need of financing;

5. Reiterates its appeal to all States to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the Central African Republic;

6. Urges all States, organizations and financial institutions to participate in the round-table conference of donors scheduled for 1985 and to contribute to the financing of the projects to be submitted;

7. Requests the appropriate programmes and organizations of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization—to maintain their programmes of assistance to the Central African Republic, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in his efforts to organize an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

8. Invites regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to give urgent consideration to the establishment of a programme of assistance to the Central African Republic or, where one is already in existence, to the expansion and considerable strengthening of that programme with a view to its implementation as soon as possible;

9. Urges all States and relevant United Nations bodies—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization—to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of the Central African Republic to cope with the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide, as appropriate, food, medicines and essential equipment for schools and hospitals, as well as to meet the emergency needs of the population in the drought-stricken areas of the country;

10. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of the Central African Republic and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1985;

11. Again draws the attention of the international community to the special account opened by the Secretary-General at United Nations Headquarters, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/87, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to the Central African Republic;

12. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to organize a special emergency assistance programme with regard to food and health, especially medicaments, vaccines, hospital equipment, generating sets for field hospitals, water pumps and food products in order to help the vulnerable populations;

(b) To continue also his efforts to mobilize necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Central African Republic;

(c) To ensure that the necessary financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to the Central African Republic and the mobilization of that assistance;

(d) To keep the situation in the Central African Republic under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Central African Republic;

(e) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of the Central African Republic and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economics assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/180

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/793) without vote, 30 November (meeting 54); 39-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.38), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 83 (b).

Sponsors: Benin, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Japan, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Uganda, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 32-37, 45, 54; plenary 31, 103.

When the draft text was introduced in the Second Committee, Kuwait proposed an amendment<sup>(46)</sup> to paragraph 8 to delete mention of IFAD and specific non-United Nations regional, interregional and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in its invitation to such bodies to consider establishing a programme of assistance to the Central African Republic. The Secretary later informed the Committee that, during informal consultations, it had been agreed that the text should be revised by inserting UNFPA in paragraph 7 and by replacing paragraph 8 with the text subsequently adopted. Kuwait then withdrew its amendment.

Chad

Chad, an LDC, had experienced civil unrest since 1965, which continued to affect the economic situation, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in September 1984.<sup>(1)</sup> The very slight increase in GDP between 1980 and 1984 in nominal terms indicated that no real economic growth had taken place. As a result largely of an increased cotton harvest, which accounted for two thirds of export revenue, and a reduced import bill, Chad's trade balance moved from a deficit in 1983 to a small surplus in 1984. Food production generally fell in 1983/84, due in large part to the shortage of rain, but also to the displacement of people fleeing from combat zones. The food deficit for the 1983/84 season was estimated at 138,000 tonnes. In response to Chad's request to the international community for 57,000 tonnes of emergency assistance, 67,430 tonnes were pledged and, as at 31 May 1984, 16,208 tonnes had been received. The transport capacity for food was considered adequate, although there were operating problems for ferries on the Chari River and storage capacity needed to be expanded. Additional health supplies were also needed.

An emergency assistance programme for Chad consisting of 122 projects costing $341 million was drawn up. Of the total, 32 projects received funding, amounting to $107 million, 59 were considered as in the pipeline or as the subject of further negotiations with interested donors, and 31 were without response.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/195 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/214 of 20 December 1983 and its previous resolutions on assistance in the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Chad, emergency humanitarian assistance to Chad and special economic assistance to that country,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on special economic assistance to Chad, relating, inter alia, to the economic and financial situation of Chad, the status of assistance provided for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country and the progress made in organizing and executing the programme of assistance for that country,

Gravely concerned by the unprecedented drought which is wreaking havoc in Chad at the present time, compounding the already precarious food and health situation and thus compromising all the country's efforts at reconstruction,

Considering that the drought has occasioned a massive displacement of population,

Taking note of the appeal of the Secretary-General dated 1 November 1984 and the numerous appeals launched by the Government of Chad and governmental and non-governmental organizations regarding the gravity of the food and health situation in Chad,

Considering that Chad is one of the least developed countries and therefore entitled to the benefits provided for in the various relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Recognizing the need for emergency humanitarian assistance to Chad,

Also recognizing the need for assistance in the reconstruction and development of Chad,

Taking note of the intention of the Government of Chad to organize in 1985, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, a conference of donors and contributors of funds, as agreed at the International Conference on Assistance to Chad, held in November 1982,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and governmental and non-governmental organizations which responded and are continuing to respond generously to the appeals of the Government of Chad and of the Secretary-General by furnishing assistance to Chad;

2. Further expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties of Chad and to mobilize assistance for that country;

3. Appeals to the international community to provide the necessary emergency humanitarian assistance to the people of Chad who have suffered from the war and the drought;

4. Renews the request made to States, appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and international economic and financial institutions to contribute to the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Chad;

5. Again requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to give all the necessary assistance to Chad for the preparation and organization of the conference of donors and contributors of funds, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 38/214;

6. Invites States and governmental and non-governmental organizations to take part in the conference of donors and contributors of funds and to accord particular attention to the projects to be presented there with a view to financing them;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to organize the special programme of economic assistance for Chad;

(b) To monitor, in close collaboration with the humanitarian agencies concerned, the humanitarian needs, particularly in the areas of food and health, of the people displaced by the war and the drought;

(c) To mobilize special humanitarian assistance for persons who have suffered as a result of the war and the drought and for the resettlement of displaced persons;

(d) To keep the situation in Chad under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Comoros

The Comoros, an archipelago country poor in natural resources, was unable to produce adequate food for its population of about 400,000 and relied on imports of upwards of 20,000 tonnes of rice annually, according to a September 1984 report of the Secretary-General.<sup>(1)</sup> Rapid population growth (3.5 per cent per annum) and long periods of drought exacerbated the situation. Lack of trained human resources in all sectors of the economy and inadequate health conditions and care were also factors. The primary sector—agriculture, animal husbandry, fisheries and forestry—employed more than 80 per cent of the active population and accounted for almost all export earnings. Those earnings depended heavily on a few cash crops subject to strong price fluctuations over which the country had no control.

The Government presented an investment programme for a 1983-1986 development plan to a donors' round table—the first international solidarity conference for the development of the Comoros—held at Moroni from 2 to 4 July 1984. The programme of 19 priority projects, estimated to cost $89.7 million, stressed food self-sufficiency, improvement of inter-island communications, energy, water supply, health programmes and training.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/193 without vote.

Assistance to the Comoros

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/209 of 20 December 1983 and its previous resolutions on assistance to the Comoros, in which it appealed to the international community to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to the Comoros in order to help that country overcome its financial and economic difficulties,

Taking note of the special problems confronting the Comoros as an island developing country and as one of the least developed countries,

Noting that the Government of the Comoros has given priority to the questions of infrastructure, transport and telecommunications,

Noting also the economic difficulties arising from the country's scarcity of natural resources, compounded by the recent drought and cyclones,

Noting further the grave budgetary and balance-of-payments problems facing the Comoros,

Bearing in mind the holding at Moroni, from 2 to 4 July 1984, of the first international solidarity conference for the development of the Comoros,

Having examined the summary report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for the Comoros;

2. Notes with satisfaction the response by various Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other organizations to its appeals and those of the Secretary-General for assistance to the Comoros;

3. Notes with concern, however, that the assistance thus far provided continues to fall short of the country's urgent requirements and that assistance is still urgently required in order to implement the projects described in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Appeals to those States and organizations which participated in the first international solidarity conference for the development of the Comoros, to put into effect as soon as possible their declaration of intent;

5. Renews its appeal to Member States, the appropriate organs, programmes and organizations of the United Nations system, regional and international organizations and other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial institutions, to provide the Comoros with assistance to enable it to cope with its difficult economic situation and pursue its development goals;

6. Requests the appropriate programmes and organizations of the United Nations system to increase their current programmes of assistance to the Comoros, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Comoros;

(b) To keep the situation in the Comoros under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, the regional and other inter-governmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Comoros;

(c) To report on the evolution of the economic situation of the Comoros and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Djibouti

Djibouti, an LDC not endowed with many natural resources, continued in 1984 to suffer from a prolonged drought; in order to assess the situation, the Secretary-General sent a mission there as requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1984/6 (see p. 513). As it almost totally lacked an agricultural sector, Djibouti needed to import practically all its foodstuffs, according to a September report of the Secretary-General.<sup>(1)</sup> Other factors contributing to its fragile economic situation were a high population growth rate (3 per cent) and a continuing influx of refugees (approximately 15,000, or nearly 5 per cent of the Djibouti population), most of whom were drought victims from Ethiopia and Somalia. Nevertheless, by the end of 1984, the slowing down of the Djibouti economy appeared to have ceased.

The Government estimated the GDP growth rate for 1984 at 0.6 per cent. While the per capita GDP was estimated at $450 for the year, the expatriate community accounted for a sizeable share of GDP and, given the population growth, real per capita income declined. Djibouti's balance of payments continued to decline in 1984. Almost all exports and imports reflected activities of non-residents, since most products merely passed through Djibouti, thus making minimal contribution to the economy. Less than 50 per cent of the recorded imports were for the consumption of Djiboutians; most were sent to a French military base. The decline in export earnings was also due to budgetary constraints exercised by France with regard to its activities in Djibouti and to the appreciation of the Djibouti franc in relation to the French franc.

A special investment programme of 117 projects amounting to $570 million was drawn up at a round-table of development partners held in Djibouti in November 1983.<sup>(47)</sup> As of mid-1984, 93 had been funded; the remainder had either been partially funded or were under negotiation with potential donors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly on 17 December adopted resolution 39/200 without vote.

Assistance to Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/213 of 20 December 1983 and its previous resolutions on assistance to Djibouti, in which it drew the attention of the international community to the critical economic situation confronting Djibouti and to the country's urgent need for assistance,

Deeply concerned at the adverse effects of the prolonged drought on the economic and social development of Djibouti,

Recalling also its resolution 37/176 of 17 December 1982, in which it called upon the international community to continue to support the efforts made by the Government of Djibouti to cope with the needs of the refugee population,

Bearing in mind its resolution 37/133 of 17 December 1982, in which it decided to include Djibouti in the list of the least developed countries,

Having examined the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Noting the critical economic situation of Djibouti and the list of urgent and priority projects formulated by the Government that require international assistance,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to organize an international programme of economic assistance for Djibouti;

2. Notes with appreciation the assistance already provided or pledged to Djibouti by Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other organizations;

3. Draws the attention of the international community to the difficult economic situation confronting Djibouti and to the severe structural constraints to its development;

4. Renews its appeal to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and international organizations and other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial institutions, to provide assistance bilaterally and multilaterally, as appropriate, to Djibouti in order to enable it to cope with its difficult economic situation and to implement its development strategies, including the programme of assistance that was presented at the round-table of development partners convened by the Government of Djibouti in November 1983;

5. Appeals to the international community to provide financial, material and technical assistance, as a matter of urgency, to alleviate the sufferings of the population affected by drought and for the implementation of the drought-related projects and programmes;

6. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Djibouti, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

(b) To keep the situation in Djibouti under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Djibouti;

(c) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of Djibouti and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/793) without vote, 30 November (meeting 54); 31-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.65); agenda item 83 (b).

Sponsors: Algeria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Tunisia, Uganda, Yemen.

In a related text, the Assembly, in resolution 39/205, urged the establishment of an assistance programme for six drought-stricken countries of East Africa, including Djibouti.

Equatorial Guinea

Equatorial Guinea, an LDC with a climate and soil suited to food production, had communications and transportation problems due to its geographical situation and a literacy rate believed to be about 30 per cent, according to the Secretary-General's September 1984 report.<sup>(1)</sup>

Outstanding external public debt was estimated at $90 million, some 50 per cent more than estimated GDP. Total debt was about six times the value of exports. Main export crops were cocoa, timber and coffee.

The majority of projects in the country's 1982-1984 programme presented to a donors' conference in 1982<sup>(48)</sup> had been funded, although some sectors, particularly water and sanitation, had received practically no funding.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/181 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Equatorial Guinea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/105 of 5 December 1980,

36/204 of 17 December 1981 and 37/133 of 17 December 1982,

Recalling also its resolution 38/224 of 20 December 1983, in which it appealed to all Member States to respond generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the reconstruction and development needs of Equatorial Guinea as presented at the International Conference of Donors for the Economic Reactivation and Development of Equatorial Guinea, and called upon regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial and development institutions, to give urgent consideration to the establishment of a programme of assistance to Equatorial Guinea or, where one was already in existence, to its expansion in accordance with the programme established by the International Conference of Donors,

Recalling further that Equatorial Guinea is one of the least developed countries,

Having considered the summary report of the Secretary-General, submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 38/224,

Noting with concern that Equatorial Guinea continues to be beset by serious economic and financial difficulties, and continues to suffer from a food situation made precarious by the absence of large-scale food-crop production projects,

Recognizing once again the essential role of both short-term and long-term international assistance in support of the efforts of the Government of Equatorial Guinea in the difficult task of reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the country,

Bearing in mind the statement made by the Minister of State in charge of External Affairs and Co-operation of Equatorial Guinea, on 11 October 1984, on the progress achieved in the sphere of regional co-operation,

Recognizing the efforts made by the Government and people of Equatorial Guinea towards the internal economic recovery and the social development of the country,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 38/224 and other relevant resolutions and calls for their implementation;

2. Takes note of the summary report of the Secretary-General;

3. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General for his efforts to organize and mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of assistance to Equatorial Guinea;

4. Reiterates its appeal to all Member States to continue to respond generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, so as to meet, in full, the needs indicated in the 1982-1984 three-year programme presented in 1982 at the International Conference of Donors for the Economic Reactivation and Development of Equatorial Guinea;

5. Notes the entry of Equatorial Guinea into the Central African Customs and Economic Union and the Bank of Central African States;

6. Expresses its thanks to States and international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations for their assistance to Equatorial Guinea;

7. Earnestly calls upon all Member States and international and regional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as international financial and development institutions and appropriate programmes of the United Nations system, especially the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, to establish, maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Equatorial Guinea, particularly in the areas of public administration and public finance in which a general transformation is required as a result of Equatorial Guinea's entry into the Central African Customs and Economic Union and the Bank of Central African States;

General Assembly resolution 39/181

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/793) without vote, 30 November (meeting 54); 35-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.39), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 63 (b).

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Democratic Kampuchea, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Tunisia, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 32-37, 44, 54; plenary 31, 103.

After the draft resolution was presented, the Secretary informed the Second Committee that, during informal consultations, it had been agreed that paragraph 8 (c)—originally asking the Secretary-General to include in his 1985 report, in particular, the international community's response to the three-year programme presented at the 1982 donors' conference—would be divided into two paragraphs, 8 (c) and 9.

Gambia

The Gambia, an LDC, had an annual population growth rate of 3.5 per cent. Per capita GDP for 1983/84 was estimated at $280, a decline of 13 per cent from 1982/83. About 80 per cent of the population depended on agriculture for its livelihood. The 1983/84 fiscal year was the poorest agricultural season since 1978/79, although the impact of the drought varied greatly from crop to crop. Ground-nuts, the principal source of income (normally 85 to 90 per cent of export earnings), were subject to fluctuations in production and prices due to weather and world demand. The UNDP Administrator observed in a 1985 report<sup>(44)</sup> that the situation was exacerbated by an increase in imports which affected the country's balance of payments, and by reduced government revenue. Financing required to cover the deficit amounted to 15 per cent of GDP in 1983/84. Local food production normally covered about 70 per cent of the country's requirements; some 35,000 tonnes of cereals, mainly rice, were imported annually.

In 1983/84, drought was even more severe than in previous years, with rainfall at 50 per cent of the normal level, resulting in a loss of about half of the Gambia's cereal production. Following the Government's appeal in August 1983 for food assistance,<sup>(49)</sup> food pledges were made; however, as at May 1984, a deficit of 10,657 tonnes of cereals remained to be met.

In his September report on special programmes of economic assistance,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General mentioned that six projects worth $18.5 million, which had been recommended for aid in 1982,<sup>(50)</sup> had received no external funding.

A round-table donors' conference, held at Banjul in November 1984 with UNDP assistance, endorsed recommendations for follow-up activities and co-ordination. The donors expressed interest in specific projects, and/or made commitments to give support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly, on 17 December, adopted resolution 39/203 without vote.

Assistance to the Gambia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/212 of 20 December 1983, in which it, inter alia, noted that the Gambia is a least developed country with acute economic and social problems arising from its weak economic infrastructure and that it also suffers from many of the serious problems common to countries of the Sahelian region, notably drought and desertification,

Having considered the summary report of the Secretary-General, in which the recent economic situation in the Gambia is described,

Concerned that the Gambia continues to encounter serious balance-of-payments and budgetary problems and noting that the lack of domestic resources is the most important constraint on development, since the Government lacks the funds to meet the counterpart costs of donor-assisted projects,

Noting that external assistance is still required to enable the Government of the Gambia to implement the six projects recommended by the Secretary-General in his report,

Aware that a round-table conference of donors was held in the Gambia in November 1984, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, to discuss the country's development needs and to consider ways and means of helping the Government in its efforts to meet those needs,

1. Takes note of the summary report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for the Gambia;

3. Expresses its appreciation also to those States and organizations that have provided assistance to the Gambia;

4. Draws the attention of the international community to the need for assistance for the projects and programmes identified by the Secretary-General in his report;

5. Renews its urgent appeal to Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as international development and financial institutions, to give generous assistance to the Gambia, through bilateral or multilateral channels, and to provide financial, technical and material assistance for the implementation of the projects and programmes recommended by the Secretary-General in his report;

6. Urges donors, as appropriate, to provide financial assistance to the Gambia to help meet the local counterpart costs of externally assisted projects, bearing in mind that the Gambia is classified as a least developed drought-stricken country;

7. Urges Member States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and interregional bodies, financial and development institutions, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to respond generously to the needs of the Gambia at the round-table conference of donors held in November 1984;

8. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development—to increase their current and future programmes of assistance to the Gambia, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist that country;

9. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of the Gambia and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by the end of June 1985;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Gambia;

(b) To keep the situation in the Gambia under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Gambia;

(c) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of the Gambia and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/203

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/793) without vote, 30 November (meeting 54); 20-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.71), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 83 (b).

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Saint Lucia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, United Arab Emirates, United States.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 32-37, 47, 54, plenary 103.

Before approval of the resolution in the Second Committee, the Secretary informed the members that, during informal consultations, it had been agreed to add UNFPA in paragraph 8 and to invite organizations mentioned in paragraph 9 to report by the end of June 1985, rather than by 1985.

Ghana

In 1984, Ghana experienced its first solid economic gains since 1978. Normal weather ended three consecutive years of drought, and food production increased. Food prices declined and the high inflation rate of 1983 (over 174 per cent at one time) decreased to 23 per cent by August 1984. Hydroelectric power was restored, resulting in increased industrial production. After three years of decline, trade volume increased in 1984, even though it was still only slightly more than 50 per cent of that of 1980. Imports increased, but were insufficient to meet the need for raw materials, spare parts and equipment required for Ghana's economic recovery programme.

The Secretary-General reported<sup>(12)</sup> that special economic assistance provided to Ghana by the United Nations system was for mining, population statistics and development planning by DTCD; technologies for rural women by ILO; logistics arrangements at ports, distribution networks and storage facilities by UNDRO and ILO; agricultural development by IFAD; industrial planning and programming in the brick and tile industries by UNDP and UNIDO; water supply, planning and formal education by UNICEF; emergency food aid and development projects by WFP; forest energy resources and natural resources development, agricultural planification, forestry, crops, agricultural statistics and rural development by FAO; maritime training by IMO; postal services fellowships by UPU; civil aviation training and equipment by ICAO; financial data compilation and processing by IMF; and loans for oil refinery and export rehabilitation and oil palm projects by the World Bank.

UNDP helped co-ordinate aid with regard to Ghana's 1984-1986 emergency economic recovery programme, which focused on rebuilding infrastructure and mobilizing traditional exports: cocoa, timber and gold. Following a mid-term review in November 1984, it was agreed that the programme needed some reorientation, with the major focus of UNDP assistance shifting to rural development and planning. A consultative group meeting of the World Bank was held in Paris in December to mobilize resources for Ghana, and donors expressed support for its economic recovery programme, launched in April 1983.<sup>(51)</sup>

Guinea

Guinea, an LDC, grew at a relatively low rate of 2.3 per cent per annum since 1980, reflecting a deterioration in the health situation. As a direct consequence, there had been an increase in the infant mortality rate to almost 200 per 1,000 in 1983, the highest in the world. Per capita GDP was estimated at $270. The rural sector accounted for 37.9 per cent of GDP, but the agricultural output had not ensured food self-sufficiency. Apart from mining, Guinea's development had been based solely on the public sector. Public enterprises were producing at less than 15 per cent of capacity and registered heavy losses.

The Secretary-General, in a November 1984 report on assistance to Guinea,<sup>(6)</sup> said that Guinea, on 8 June, had requested emergency aid from the international community. In July, the Economic and Social Council had asked him, in consultation with Guinea, to organize an assistance mission.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/59 without vote. It acted on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

Critical situation in Guinea

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the statement made on 18 July 1984 before the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee of the Council by the Minister for Planning and Statistics of Guinea concerning the difficult situation of his country, characterized by a subsistence economy, a lack of infrastructure, a low per capita income, a chronic deficit in the State budget and a very heavy foreign debt,

Noting also the reference by the Minister to the letter dated 8 June 1984 from the Head of State of Guinea to the Secretary-General, describing the social and economic situation of his country and requesting emergency aid from the international community and the United Nations in the economic, social and humanitarian fields,

Confirming the urgent need for international action to assist the Government of Guinea in its national reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts, taking account of the fact that Guinea is classified as one of the least developed countries,

1. Appeals urgently to all Member States and to inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and international financial institutions to contribute generously to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Guinea;

2. Requests the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to expand their programmes of assistance to Guinea and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Government of Guinea, to organize a programme of social, economic and humanitarian assistance to support the actions of the Government with a view to discharging the urgent tasks of national reconstruction and rehabilitation;

4. Invites the Secretary-General, after consultation with the Government of Guinea, to report to the General Assembly, at its thirty-ninth session, the requisite information concerning the action to be taken or the proposals to be made with a view to providing the necessary aid to the Government of Guinea.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/59

26 July 1984

Meeting 49

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/148) without vote, 23 July (meeting 15); 5-nation draft (E/1984/C.3/L.8), orally corrected; agenda item 18.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, France, Pakistan, Senegal for African Group, United States.

Secretary-General's report. Pursuant to the Council's 26 July resolution, the Secretary-General sent a mission to Guinea from 19 to 24 August and submitted its report to the Assembly in November.<sup>(6)</sup> The mission, led by the Assistant Administrator of UNDP and Regional Director, Regional Bureau for Africa, surveyed the economic situation, described the country's economic policies and development strategies, and made recommendations for follow-up action. It concluded that Guinea, despite its diverse natural resources, had been suffering for many years from a decline in agricultural production, especially food; deterioration of social services, especially education and health care; losses in government revenues and foreign exchange; inefficient operation of many State enterprises; and inefficient administration. Causes included an unofficial market which provided 80 per cent of consumer goods, the world economic recession, the fall in prices of raw materials, an overly centralized government apparatus, drought, and the mass influx of Guinean refugees who were returning after liberalization measures were instituted in April 1984 by the new Government. In order to rehabilitate the economy, and with the help of the World Bank and IMF, the Government had introduced economic, monetary and social reforms.

The per capita GDP of Guinea was $270, one of the lowest in the world. Since 1980, the annual growth rate of per capita GDP had been declining, decreasing by 20 per cent in 1983.

The mission recommended a two-pronged approach by the international community to help Guinea: a 12-month emergency humanitarian assistance programme to provide food, veterinary products, pharmaceuticals, school supplies and laboratory equipment; and a 1985-1987 interim programme of economic rehabilitation to restore productive capacity, provide essential services, promote the private sector and improve government performance. The mission proposed that once the Government's request had been reviewed by the specialized agencies, the Secretary-General should appeal for donations to cover the emergency programme. The Government would also require technical assistance in economic and administrative planning. In addition, the mission recommended that a second mission, in which UNDP, DTCD and the World Bank were represented, visit Guinea to help it programme the external assistance requirements and prepare an interim programme of key technical assistance needs. A joint UNDP/World Bank mission to Guinea in October defined more precisely the Government's needs in technical assistance, equipment and logistic support for preparing the interim programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Addressing the General Assembly on 4 October, Guinea said the end of a 26-year régime on 3 April 1984 had left Guinea facing a disastrous economic situation, with the public treasury depleted and a people discouraged by the prospect of a future lacking food, hospitals, medicines, schools, decent housing, transport and good roads, a people whose needs were immense. He pointed out that, in the framework of open and mutually beneficial co-operation, a new investment code, which provided sufficient incentive, had recently been prepared and published.

The Assembly, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/202 on 17 December.

Economic and financial assistance to Guinea

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Guinea,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/59 of 26 July 1984, in which the Council confirmed the urgent need for international action to assist the Government of Guinea in its efforts to bring about national reconstruction, rehabilitation and development, described his country's serious socio-economic and financial problems,

Noting with concern the grave balance-of-payments problems facing Guinea,

Deeply concerned by the weakness and underdevelopment of Guinea's economic and social infrastructure, which constitutes a major obstacle to the country's economic development and to raising the living standard of its population,

Taking note, in this context, of the results of the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, in particular the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Recalling that Guinea is one of the least developed countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its gratitude for the support which Member States, specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies and regional organizations have provided to assist the people of Guinea in their reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts;

3. Appeals urgently to all Member States, specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies, as well as to international economic and financial institutions and other aid donors, to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Guinea;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts and to mobilize financial, technical and economic assistance from the international community for Guinea, so as to enable it to meet its short-term and long-term needs within the framework of its development programme;

5. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Food Programme to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for priority consideration, the special needs of Guinea, and to keep the Secretary-General informed of decisions taken in that regard;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, and the General Assembly, at its fortieth session, of the results achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Following informal consultations, the Secretary informed the Second Committee that it had been agreed to revise paragraph 6 by specifying the Council's second 1985 session. On 28 December, the Secretary-General appealed to Member States to contribute to an emergency humanitarian assistance programme for Guinea.

Guinea-Bissau

In May 1984, the first round-table donors' conference for assistance to Guinea-Bissau was organized at Lisbon, Portugal, for which UNDP, UNCTAD and DTCD helped in the preparations. Some $2.1 million of UNDP indicative planning figure resources were expended on projects for the country, a drought-stricken LDC. Other United Nations assistance was provided in several areas, including: dam building, electricity, public finance, development planning and training for civil servants by DTCD; water supply by UNICEF and UNCHS; medical and paramedical personnel training, family health, sex education, and maternal and child health statistics by UNFPA; food development projects and emergency operations by WFP; agricultural planning, seed improvement, fisheries, livestock, food security, and development of natural resources by FAO; funding for transportation by the World Bank and IDA; studies on manufacturing by UNIDO; training in civil aviation, airport improvement and supply of equipment by ICAO; vocational training by ILO; rice development by IFAD; banking expertise by IMF; and navigation and ship maintenance by IMO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/186 without vote.

Noting with concern that Guinea-Bissau continues to experience serious economic and financial difficulties,

Lesotho

The Secretary-General arranged for a mission to Lesotho from 14 to 20 May 1984, led by the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, in response to the Assembly's 1983 request<sup>(52)</sup> that he consult the Government on the question of migrant workers returning from South Africa, continue to mobilize resources for assistance, and report on the economic situation of Lesotho and on the special programme of economic assistance. The mission's report was submitted by the Secretary-General to the Assembly in September 1984.<sup>(7)</sup>

The mission noted that, with a per capita income of less than $300 per year, Lesotho was regarded by the United Nations as an LDC. Lesotho's size, geographical position and limited natural resources resulted in heavy dependence on South Africa, a country with whose social and political policies it was in basic disagreement. Lesotho bought capital and consumer goods, including much of its grain supply, from South Africa. Income earned by migrant miners and other workers in South Africa was equal to or greater than the income generated within the country. The two major goals of Lesotho's development policy were to reduce its dependence on South Africa and to improve the well-being of its people. The 1980-1985 development programme focused on promoting high-value crops, improving livestock, expanding irrigation, broadening the export base, import substitution, and diversifying markets, credit facilities and marketing channels. The most serious constraints on development remained Lesotho's geopolitical situation and the need for financial assistance, in particular grants and concessional aid.

Lesotho's balance of payments was characterized by large trade deficits financed mainly by remittances from migrant workers and transfers. It was estimated that exports covered less than 15 per cent of import costs. Agriculture remained the most important sector, accounting for about 70 per cent of total domestic employment and providing subsistence for about 50 per cent of the rural population. However, only 13 per cent of the land was suitable for farming. Prolonged drought had a serious impact on agriculture and, on 4 April, the Prime Minister had declared a state of national food emergency for the second year in succession. Under normal circumstances, Lesotho needed to import approximately 150,000 tonnes of grain, but requirements for 1984 were estimated to be double that amount.

Industrial development remained at a small scale, and manufacturing, including handicrafts, contributed only 4 to 5 per cent of GDP. The major factors inhibiting manufacturing included the small domestic market, competition from South Africa, and the shortage of skilled manpower.

The mission reported on progress in implementing the 10 specific projects identified by the Secretary-General's mission in 1983<sup>(53)</sup> in response to a 1982 request by the Security Council.<sup>(54)</sup>

Lesotho, with UNDP support, convened a donors' round-table conference at Maseru from 14 to 17 May, at which it presented 38 projects valued at $67 million, as well as the proposed highlands water project (see p. 184), which in 1980 had been estimated to cost $1.4 billion. The projects fell under the sectoral headings of administration; rural development and co-operatives; agriculture; industry, trade and tourism; water, mineral resources and power; roads, transportation and communication; education; health; and urban development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/183 without vote.

Assistance to Lesotho

The General Assembly,
Recalling Security Council resolution 402(1976) of 22 December 1976, in which the Council, inter alia, expressed concern at the serious situation created by South Africa's closure of certain border posts between South Africa and Lesotho aimed at coercing Lesotho into according recognition to the bantustan of the Transkei,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 535(1983) of 29 June 1983, in which the Council endorsed the report of the mission dispatched to Lesotho in response to resolution 527(1982) of 15 December 1982,

Also commending the Government of Lesotho for its steadfast opposition to apartheid and its generosity to the South African refugees,

Fully aware that the decision of the Government of Lesotho not to recognize the Transkei and its acceptance of refugees from South Africa have imposed special economic burdens upon its people,

Liberia

In 1984, Liberia continued to face serious economic and financial problems. The situation was the result of such external factors as the global economic recession which yielded reduced earnings from Liberia's primary commodity exports, the strength of the United States dollar (the legal tender in Liberia) and high overseas interest rates. Domestic problems included a large external debt, a prolonged outflow of capital and an increase in recurrent public expenditure. With an estimated population growth of 3.3 per cent, real per capita income in Liberia deteriorated between 1980 and 1984 by 25 per cent. The balance of payments continued to show a deficit in 1983/84 estimated at $87 million, or 8 per cent of GDP, due mainly to the decline in export earnings and the increasing interest payments on public debt ($52 million in 1983/84) and private transfers abroad ($36 million).

The United Nations provided assistance within the framework of the special programme of eco-conomic assistance and followed up on implementation of projects identified by a donors' round-table conference in October 1983.<sup>(55)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/182 on 17 December without vote.

Special economic assistance to Liberia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/207 of 17 December 1981 and 37/149 of 17 December 1982, in which it appealed to all Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and international development and financial institutions to provide all possible assistance for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Liberia,

Recalling also the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Noting from the report that, despite a variety of adverse factors, Liberia continues to make some progress in its development efforts as a result of the measures adopted by the Government,

Having noted the efforts of the Government of Liberia to mobilize international support for the country's development plan through the organization of a round-table conference of donors, held at Berne in October 1983 with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme,

Deeply concerned that Liberia continues to experience serious economic and financial difficulties, characterized by a severe balance-of-payments problem, heavy burden of external debt and shortfall in export earnings, which have contributed to the lack of resources to implement its planned economic and social development programmes,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he has taken to organize and mobilize support for the international economic assistance programme for Liberia;

2. Notes with satisfaction the interest in the development plan of Liberia expressed by participants in the round-table conference of donors;

3. Appeals to all States, international financial institutions and organizations of the United Nations system to respond generously and urgently to the needs of Liberia as set forth in that country's development plan, taking into account its current critical economic situation;

4. Takes note of the measures being taken by the Government of Liberia to strengthen the economy of the country through institutional and economic policy reforms;

5. Reiterates once again its appeal to all States, international financial institutions and organizations of the United Nations system to provide substantial and appropriate assistance, through bilateral and multilateral channels, preferably in the form of grants-in-aid or loans granted on concessionary terms, in order to enable Liberia to carry out fully the recommended economic assistance programme;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Liberia;

(b) To keep the situation regarding assistance to Liberia under constant review, to maintain close contact with

Member States, specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for Liberia;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation in Liberia and the status of the special programme of economic assistance and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Mozambique

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1983 General Assembly request<sup>(56)</sup> that he consult with Mozambique on its special assistance needs, arranged for a mission to go there from 5 to 12 May 1984, led by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions. The mission's report, issued in August,<sup>(8)</sup> described the economic and financial situation of the country and made recommendations for priority development projects. Noting that Mozambique's situation was extremely serious and that it urgently needed food, petroleum and agricultural inputs, the Secretary-General, in transmitting the mission's report to the Assembly, stated his intention to consult with the Government with a view to formulating a new special programme of economic assistance based on current conditions and on the new development principles which the Government was in the process of defining. Meanwhile, during this interim period the country urgently needed assistance. There was a critical problem of starvation and malnutrition, and vital inputs were required to permit the economy to function. Some initial priority programmes were needed to establish a basis for future development.

The economic situation had deteriorated mainly as a result of natural disasters and destabilization. With a per capita income of about $125 in 1983, Mozambique was an LDC, and a further decline was foreseen for 1984. Government revenues decreased by 5 per cent in 1984 while expenditures increased by 10 per cent. The infant mortality rate in 1983 was estimated at 240 per 1,000, the literacy rate at 10 per cent and life expectancy was 46 years. Health and education services were unavailable to a large part of the population. During the first half of 1984, starvation and malnutrition were prevalent in many areas where relief supplies could not be transported.

The majority of the population was engaged in subsistence agriculture, with over 80 per cent residing in rural and often remote areas. Agriculture was oriented towards export crops such as cotton, sugar, tea and cashews. The country had promising agricultural, fishery and forestry potential, though most of those resources had not been developed. Energy resources included hydroelectricity and coal, which were normally exported, but due to instability which prevented transport to ports, coal had not been exported for a year.

By the end of 1984, the outstanding external debt totalled $2.4 billion. Mozambique had often had a trade deficit, with the value of exports covering only about one third of the cost of imports. That had been partly compensated by remittances from migrant miners working in South Africa, but a decrease in their employment from about 120,000 in 1978 to 40,000 in recent years had aggravated the balance-of-payments situation. A second major source of foreign exchange, the international transit of goods through Mozambique's ports and railways, had suffered drastic reductions due to instability in the region. Cargo tonnage declined from 17.5 million tonnes in 1978 to 3.3 million in 1983. The country faced a serious foreign exchange shortage that had restricted its ability to import the raw materials and other inputs necessary. The drop in export revenues had prohibited Mozambique from meeting its debt-service obligations, expected to exceed export earnings by far. Mozambique had requested debt rescheduling, but until such an agreement was reached, external borrowing to withstand its economic crisis would generally be unavailable.

Further complicating the economic situation, externally supported armed elements had disrupted transportation and energy lines and forced substantial expenditures for defence. Mozambique also suffered from a prolonged drought in the south and central regions, and a cyclone in January 1984 hit the one region in the central-southern part of the country that had not been devastated by the drought. Cyclone damage was estimated at $75 million, with heavy losses in the communications and transportation and water supply systems, and to agriculture and livestock.

Although the agricultural sector accounted for approximately 41 per cent of the gross social product and 85 per cent of employment, Mozambique was never self-sufficient in food.

The Government informed the mission of its immediate needs, emphasizing petroleum products, and basic inputs and consumer goods for the agricultural sector. Minimum requirements for 1984 were an estimated 600,000 tonnes of crude oil and 190,000 tonnes of other fuel; as at May 1984, arrangements had been made for 260,000 tonnes of crude oil. In addition, some 700,000 tonnes of food imports were required.

The mission made recommendations for 11 specific projects as the most urgent, with values of $26.7 million for agriculture (food security reserves, seeds, water supply and irrigation), $4 million for transportation (repairs to the railway line to Swaziland), $3.8 million for industrial development (raw materials essential for domestic industries), $1.3 million for health (medical supplies and equipment), $5 million for water supply (borehole drilling), and education, for which an estimate was not available.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/199 without vote.

Assistance to Mozambique

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976, in which the Council appealed to all States to provide, and requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize, with immediate effect, financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to carry out its economic development programme,

Recalling further its resolution 38/208 of 20 December 1983 and its earlier resolutions, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously with assistance to Mozambique,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General submitted in response to its resolution 38/208, to which is annexed the report of the mission to Mozambique,

Deeply concerned at the loss of life and the destruction of essential infrastructures such as roads, railways, bridges, petroleum facilities, electricity supply, schools and hospitals, as identified in the reports of the Secretary-General,

Noting with deep concern that Mozambique has continued to suffer from a prolonged drought causing heavy losses in food production and livestock and resulting in displacement of its people,

Also noting with deep concern the extensive damage caused by the cyclone "Dermoina" at the end of January 1984,

Noting that Mozambique faces an emergency food situation of an exceptional scale and needs imports of 700,000 tonnes of cereals in 1984/1985 to meet its food requirements,

Recognizing that substantial international assistance is required for the implementation of a number of reconstruction and development projects,

1. Strongly endorses the appeals made by the Security Council and the Secretary-General for international assistance to Mozambique;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he has taken to organize an international economic assistance programme for Mozambique;

3. Also expresses its appreciation for the assistance provided to Mozambique by various States and regional and international organizations and humanitarian institutions;

4. Regrets, however, that the total assistance provided to date falls far short of Mozambique's pressing needs;

5. Appeals to the international community to provide adequate food aid to Mozambique to prevent further starvation and malnutrition;

6. Draws the attention of the international community to the two areas for immediate action—the supply of crude oil and petroleum products and the supply of basic inputs and consumer goods for the agricultural sector—that are critical for the functioning of the economy;

7. Also draws the attention of the international community to the additional financial, economic and material assistance identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General as urgently required by Mozambique;

8. Calls upon Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Mozambique, wherever possible in the form of grants, and urges them to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Mozambique in their programmes of development assistance, if it is not already included;

9. Urges Member States and organizations that are already implementing or negotiating assistance programmes for Mozambique to strengthen them, wherever possible;

10. Also appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account for Mozambique established by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Mozambique;

11. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities—to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Mozambique, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

12. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique;

(b) To keep the situation in Mozambique under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, international financial institutions and other bodies concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Mozambique;

(c) To prepare, on the basis of sustained consultations with the Government of Mozambique, a report on the development of the economic situation and the implementation of the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Sao Tome and Principe

In response to the General Assembly's 1982 request<sup>(57)</sup> that he report on the economic situation and the special programme of economic assistance for Sao Tome and Principe, the Secretary-General arranged for a mission to go there from 5 to 9 June 1984 and issued its report in September.<sup>(10)</sup> The Government had informed the mission that the major constraints to economic development were geographic isolation, dependence on a single export crop (cocoa provided almost 80 per cent of export earnings), and lack of trained manpower and of suitable machinery for efficient government administration. The Government had attempted to reduce the dependence on cocoa for foreign exchange, particularly as the amount produced and the price on the world market had declined. The drought that affected some parts of the country in 1982 and 1983, combined with erratic rainfall in other areas, had had a negative effect on the already fragile situation. The limited production of staple foods declined, and cocoa production was reduced by almost two thirds.

Sao Tome and Principe, an archipelagic LDC, had an annual population growth rate of 2.8 to 3 per cent.

Economic growth had fluctuated radically over the previous few years, the mission reported, with GDP dropping 1.9 per cent in 1983. In real terms, GDP had declined steadily since 1980 and in 1984 was less than 70 per cent of the 1980 level. Per capita GDP had declined to $330 in 1984 from $486 in 1980. The balance of payments was characterized by a persistent trade deficit. There was a significant improvement in the trade balance in 1983 and 1984, but it was achieved through drastic measures to reduce imports, which had serious implications for the economy, given the country's reliance on imports not only for food but also for inputs, particularly oil, necessary to development. The country relied on short-term loans to finance the deficit, resulting in heavy debt-service obligations.

The agricultural sector dominated the economy, accounting for 41 per cent of GDP. Government efforts to rehabilitate agricultural production had been hampered by the 1982-1983 drought. Export crops took up about 90 per cent of the cultivable land; efforts were being made to expand livestock production and fishing. Lack of energy sources and transportation remained serious problems limiting international trade.

Of the 18 projects for special economic assistance identified by a 1982 mission,<sup>(58)</sup> at a value of $50 million, eight had received total or partial financing, and negotiations were in progress with regard to two major projects—establishment of vegetable-oil plants and construction of a hydroelectric plant. No financing had been obtained for the remaining eight projects. The Government had proposed to the 1984 mission 15 others in such areas as agricultural inputs and equipment, increasing production of staple food crops, studies on orchards and flowers, use of forest resources, a building-construction organization, increasing electricity, road maintenance, public transportation, medical supplies and housing. The total cost was estimated at $43 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly, on 17 December, adopted resolution 39/187 without vote.

Assistance to Sao Tome and Principe

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/96 of 13 December 1977, 33/125 of 19 December 1978, 34/131 of 14 December 1979, 35/93 of 5 December 1980, 36/209 of 17 December 1981 and 37/146 of 17 December 1982, in which it reiterated its appeal to the international community to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Sao Tome and Principe to enable it to establish the necessary social and economic infrastructure for development,

Aware that the economic and social development of Sao Tome and Principe has been seriously hindered by fragile infrastructure, inadequate health, educational and housing facilities and by insufficient external assistance, and that urgent improvement in these sectors is a prerequisite for the country's future progress,

Aware also that, at independence, the country inherited a plantation economy that made it dependent on imports to meet its national food requirements,

Noting with appreciation the concerted efforts undertaken by the Government of Sao Tome and Principe to increase national food production and to decrease dependence on food imports,

Concerned that the severe drought in 1982-1983 followed by abnormally heavy rains and floods in 1984 have seriously affected agricultural production, increased the national food deficit and reduced the ability of the country to pay for food imports,

Taking into account the decision of the Government of Sao Tome and Principe to convene, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, a round-table conference of donors in September-October 1985 at Sao Tome, preparatory to the launching of a national development plan for 1986-1990,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General, to which is annexed the report of the review mission sent to Sao Tome and Principe,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance to Sao Tome and Principe;

2. Endorses fully the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Member States, international organizations, and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations which have provided assistance to Sao Tome and Principe;

4. Renews its appeal to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial institutions, to provide financial, technical and material assistance to Sao Tome and Principe through bilateral and multilateral channels, as appropriate, to enable it to strengthen its social and economic infrastructure and to implement the special programme of economic assistance;

5. Urges Member States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and interregional bodies, financial and development institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to participate in the round-table conference of donors to be held in 1985 and to provide all possible assistance for the implementation of the national development plan of Sao Tome and Principe;

6. Calls upon the international community to continue its food assistance programmes for Sao Tome and Principe in order to help it cope with the critical food situation in the country and to provide all possible assistance to enable the country to produce more food and reduce its dependence on food imports;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To keep the situation in Sao Tome and Principe under constant review and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Sao Tome and Principe;

(b) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of Sao Tome and Principe and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Sierra Leone

Sierra Leone, favourably endowed with agricultural, mineral and water resources, had the potential to achieve self-sustaining growth, but it had experienced serious economic difficulties, due partly to the slow-down in global economic activity and partly to structural imbalances in its economy, according to a September 1984 report by the Secretary-General.<sup>(1)</sup> The economy was being undermined by severe scarcities of imported raw materials and spare parts for industry, fewer trade and commercial credits, large arrears in commercial payments and strains on government finances. Commercial activity and employment had fallen. The Government had adopted a strategy which emphasized expanding domestic productive activities, but Sierra Leone, an LDC, required substantial external assistance to ameliorate its financial situation, permit project implementation and enable it to realize its economic potential. An understanding had been reached with IMF on a policy to restore long-term growth and stability by restrictive fiscal and monetary policies aimed at improving the balance of payments.

Agriculture, which contributed 30 per cent or more of GDP, was the principal source of livelihood for about 70 per cent of the population and the largest sector in the economy. Mining, trade, transport, communications and public services were the other sectors contributing 10 per cent or more; manufacturing and handicrafts together contributed less than 5 per cent. GDP was estimated to have increased by barely 1 per cent per annum in real terms from 1978/79 to 1983/84, while the population was increasing at more than 2 per cent per year; this represented a deterioration of the trend of the 1970s when GDP growth kept pace with population increases. The overall deficit in 1983/84 was 8 per cent of GDP as compared to 11 to 13 per cent during the years 1978/79 to 1982/83.

Of the 71 priority projects identified in 1983 for an assistance programme costing $275 million, 27 projects, costing $124 million, were considered especially urgent.<sup>(59)</sup> As at mid-1984, less than 3 per cent of the resources required to implement the priority projects had been mobilized, excluding $12 million allocated by the World Bank for renovating power systems, to be applied when co-financing could be arranged.

Recalling its resolutions 37/158 of 17 December 1982 and 38/205 of 20 December 1983, in which it appealed to all States, the specialized agencies and international development and financial institutions to provide all possible assistance for the development of Sierra Leone,

Further recalling its resolution 37/133 of 17 December 1982, in which it decided to include Sierra Leone in the list of the least developed countries,

Having considered the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with concern that the economy of Sierra Leone is being undermined by severe scarcities of imported raw materials and spare parts for industry, a drying-up of trade and commercial credits, large commercial payment arrears and unmitigated strains on government finances,

Concerned that unusually low rainfall in 1984 has seriously affected the food production of the country and considerably worsened its balance-of-payments position,

Noting that the Government of Sierra Leone, in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme, has initiated preparatory activities for a round-table of partners in development of Sierra Leone, to be organized with the assistance of the Programme early in 1985,

Reiterating the need for effective mobilization of international assistance, in order to implement fully the programme of development outlined in the report of the multi-agency mission,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Sierra Leone;

2. Urgently reiterates its appeal to the international community, including the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the economic and social development of Sierra Leone;

3. Urges all States and relevant United Nations bodies—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities—to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of Sierra Leone meet the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide, as appropriate, food, medicines and essential equipment for hospitals and schools;

4. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Sierra Leone and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1985;

5. Appeals to all States and international organizations to participate at a high level in the round-table of partners in development of Sierra Leone to be held early in 1985, and to contribute generously to the programme of action that will be presented by the Government of Sierra Leone;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Sierra Leone;

(b) To apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the assistance granted to Sierra Leone;

(c) To keep the situation regarding assistance to Sierra Leone under review and to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Uganda

Uganda, a land-locked country, was classified by the United Nations as an LDC. Its serious socio-economic situation, according to a September 1984 summary report by the Secretary-General,<sup>(1)</sup> had been caused or aggravated by the economic and social policies in effect from 1972 to 1980, the liberation war of 1979, and drought and famine in 1979 and 1981, compounded by the widespread drought of 1983 and 1984 that affected southern Uganda and neighbouring countries. A recovery programme for 1982-1984, drawn up by the Government, was revised in November 1983 to cover the period 1983-1985, and, in January 1984, it was endorsed by a Consultative Group on Uganda at a meeting in Paris organized by the World Bank. The revised programme, while continuing to emphasize short-term revival of the production sector, reallocated resources from mining, energy and transport to industry and infrastructure, partly to reflect donors' preferences. During 1984, problems of internal security and inadequate skilled human resources and infrastructure continued to be major constraints in programme implementation.

Uganda's economy was reversed in 1981 from a declining trend towards positive growth. Since then, GDP had risen every year, and in 1983 real GDP rose by 7.3 per cent. New government policies put into effect in 1981 provided incentives to farmers that elicited a substantial increase in production, nearly doubling coffee, cotton, tea and tobacco crop yields by 1983/84. Uganda's trade deficit declined from $122.5 million in 1982 to an estimated $51.6 million in 1983 and was expected to be reduced to $25.5 million in 1984. The estimated costs of imports for 1984 was less than one half that for 1982. However, the Government's budget remained in deficit despite the rise in revenue. With the mediation of the World Bank, Uganda, Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania had signed in December 1983 the Arusha Accord which addressed the division of the assets and liabilities of the former East African Community. The Accord provided for reimbursements to Uganda of $145 million by Kenya and $46 million by the United Republic of Tanzania and provided guidelines for future co-operation.

UNCTAD reported<sup>(2)</sup> that it had helped formulate import and export, exchange rate and pricing policies, improve managerial capabilities, and develop transit transport services. In a resolution of 6 April,<sup>(3)</sup> the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board took note of UNCTAD's assistance, with UNDP support, to Uganda and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to contribute to the implementation of the revised recovery programme and to report to the Board in 1985.

The UNDP Administrator reported<sup>(4)</sup> that an overall review was carried out by the UNDP field office with the Government between February and June 1984, which resulted in the termination of selected projects as well as the revision of others. The new programme consisted of some 30 projects in agriculture, transport, communications, industry, public administration, planning, banking and finance.

Other regions

Democratic Yemen

The Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1983,<sup>(60)</sup> reported in October 1984<sup>(61)</sup> on international assistance to Democratic Yemen, which had suffered heavy damage, estimated at $950 million, as a result of nation-wide flooding in March 1982.<sup>(61)</sup> Aid for relief operations to the LDC was provided by UNDRO (beds, blankets), UNICEF (tents, blankets), UNDP (mattresses, blankets, stoves), WFP (flour, fat, dates) and WHO (medicines). Long-term rehabilitation assistance was provided by UNDP (technical assistance for flood control and roads), UNCDF (crops), WFP (rehabilitation of flood damaged areas), FAO (irrigation and flood control), UNESCO (rehabilitation works) and IDA (roads and erosion control). Fifteen countries gave assistance on a bilateral basis; 17 Red Cross/Red Crescent national or regional organizations and three other organizations provided relief aid and long-term rehabilitation assistance.

Haiti

Haiti was the only country in the western hemisphere in 1984 to be classified as an LDC by the United Nations. Per capita GDP in 1983 was estimated at $320. Malnutrition was widespread, especially in the rural areas, and infant mortality was high—120 per 1,000 births—largely the result of malnutrition. Life expectancy was 53 years. Estimates indicated that in 1984 real GDP increased by 3 per cent after remaining stagnant for the previous two years. The balance of payments was characterized by a persistent surplus of imports over exports. External debt grew to $493.9 million in 1984 from $449.9 million in 1983. Since most external borrowing was on concessional terms, the debt-service ratio remained low, approximately 5.5 per cent of the value of exports of goods and services in 1984, but that figure did not include short-term borrowing or the use of IMF resources.

Despite its economic situation, Haiti had considerable potential. It could be self-sufficient in food and enjoyed an advantage in some export crops (bananas, coffee, rice, sugar). Proximity to North American markets and the possibilities for increasing tourism were other advantages.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly on 17 December adopted resolution 39/196 without vote.

Economic assistance to Haiti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 36/194 of 17 December 1981, in which it endorsed the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Recalling that Haiti is one of the least developed countries and is therefore entitled to the assistance provided for in the relevant General Assembly resolutions for the more intensive development of those countries,

Noting with concern that Haiti continues to face serious economic and financial difficulties owing to the severe constraints on the economy consequent upon the decline in gross national product in real terms, the balance-of-payments deficit, the external debt and the budgetary deficit,

Deeply concerned at the complete collapse of the tourist industry and the termination of bauxite mining consequent upon the exhaustion of reserves, two of the country's principal sources of foreign exchange,

Gravely concerned at the impoverishment of the rural population resulting from the total elimination of the pig population as a result of swine fever,

Bearing in mind the damage caused by cyclone "Allen" in 1981 to a substantial area of Haiti's coffee plantations,

Taking into account that the Government of Haiti, in view of the serious economic situation, has implemented, with the assistance of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, an intensive economic and financial stabilization programme,

1. Expresses its gratitude to Member States and to international, regional and interregional organizations for their assistance to Haiti;

2. Renews its urgent appeal to all Governments and international organizations which, at the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, assumed commitments under the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries to honour their pledges generously;

3. Urges Governments of Member States and international, regional, interregional and intergovernmental organizations to increase and intensify their assistance to Haiti substantially to help it cope with its economic and financial difficulties and implement successfully its development plan for the biennium 1985-1986;

4. Invites all organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, as well as the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat, to take account of Haiti's specific needs and to apprise the Secretary-General of their decisions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To send a mission to Haiti to assess the priority needs of the country, to prepare a programme for assisting the country in coping with the present economic crisis and to pursue its efforts to obtain supplementary international assistance;

(b) To apprise the Economic and Social Council of the mission at its second regular session of 1985 and to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/196

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/793) without vote, 30 November (meeting 54); 35-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.61), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 83 (b).

Sponsors: Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Belize, Botswana, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Comoros, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Ivory Coast, Liberia, Madagascar, Nepal, Pakistan, Panama, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Vanuatu.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 32-37, 45, 54; plenary 103.

Following informal consultations, the Secretary informed the Second Committee that it had been agreed to add UNFPA to the bodies mentioned in paragraph 4.

Nicaragua

In August 1984,<sup>(9)</sup> the Secretary-General, in response to a 1983 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(62)</sup> reported on assistance to Nicaragua, based on information from Member States and United Nations bodies and organizations. In 1983, Nicaragua had been pledged $65.6 million from multilateral agencies and $350 million from bilateral sources. For the first quarter of 1984, bilateral sources pledged $58.9 million in aid. Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, the German Democratic Republic, Norway and Sweden had submitted information on their assistance to Nicaragua. United Nations assistance during the period 19 July 1979 to 1 April 1984 amounted to $258.5 million, of which $149.6 million was in financial assistance and $108.9 million in technical assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/204 without vote. It acted on the recommendation of the Second Committee.

Assistance to Nicaragua

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 34/8 of 25 October 1979, 35/84 of 5 December 1980, 36/213 of 17 December 1981, 37/157 of 17 December 1982 and 38/223 of 20 December 1983 concerning assistance for the reconstruction of Nicaragua,
Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1982/168 of 29 July 1982,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Nicaragua,

Noting with satisfaction the support that Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system have given to the efforts of the Government of Nicaragua for the reconstruction of the country,

Bearing in mind that, in the past few years, the Nicaraguan economy has been negatively affected by various events, among them natural disasters such as the floods and drought of 1982,

Considering that, despite the efforts of the Government and people of Nicaragua, the economic situation has not returned to normal and continues to worsen,

Deeply concerned that Nicaragua is experiencing serious economic difficulties directly affecting its development efforts,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts regarding assistance to Nicaragua;

2. Expresses its appreciation also to the States and organizations that have provided assistance to Nicaragua;

3. Urges all Governments to continue contributing to the reconstruction and development of Nicaragua;

4. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system to continue and to increase their assistance in this endeavour;

5. Recommends that Nicaragua should continue to receive treatment appropriate to the special needs of the country until the economic situation returns to normal;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 39/204

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/793) without vote, 30 November (meeting 54); 74-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.72); agenda item 83 (b).

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Canada, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, France, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Romania, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 32-37, 48, 54; plenary 103.

In decision 39/431, the Assembly took note of an oral report made in the Second Committee on 5 November by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator on implementation of a 1983 Assembly resolution<sup>(63)</sup> on special assistance to Nicaragua following floods in May 1982 and subsequent natural disasters<sup>(64)</sup> (see p. 504).

Tonga

In October 1984, the Secretary-General issued a summary report on the special programme of economic assistance to Tonga,<sup>(65)</sup> as requested by the General Assembly in 1982.<sup>(66)</sup> The report was based on information provided by Tonga from the mid-term review of its fourth development plan, 1980-1985. A major constraint in Tonga's planning was the lack of comprehensive, accurate and timely data.

The effects of a 1982 cyclone and subsequent drought which lasted most of 1983 continued to affect the economy in 1984; a large proportion of available aid resources had to be diverted from development priorities to rehabilitation and reconstruction. To overcome the economic slow-down that occurred after those natural disasters, the Government had proposed measures to stimulate economic activity, such as: liberalizing wage, price and export controls; promoting the leasing of agricultural land; amending tax laws to increase disposable income; revising import duties to encourage tourism; providing incentives for new industries; raising local revenues for development purposes; and tightening government expenditures.

In the period 1980/81 to 1982/83, total GDP increased by 6.9 per cent in real terms, and the net per capita increase in GDP in that period was 5.2 per cent. The trade figures showed a widening gap: between 1978 and 1982, imports doubled, while export revenues had been decreasing since 1980. Tonga had presented to a 1982 inter-agency mission 48 projects for which assistance was needed at a cost of $58.1 million,<sup>(67)</sup> oriented to short- and medium-term development needs. The 1984 report described the status of those projects as at 30 September 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 39/431, the General Assembly on 17 December took note of two summary reports of the Secretary-General, including the one on Tonga.

Vanuatu

An inter-agency mission led by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Coordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes visited Vanuatu from 18 to 24 June 1984 to consult with the Government and to report on the country's urgent development needs. Its report, issued in August 1984<sup>(1)</sup>—in response to the General Assembly's 1983 request<sup>(68)</sup> that the Secretary-General mobilize assistance for Vanuatu—provided information on the economic, financial and social conditions, described requirements for Vanuatu's development and proposed projects for international assistance, giving estimated costs.

Vanuatu, an archipelago with a relatively high population growth rate of 3 per cent, had significant fishery resources but only a small fishing industry. About 41 per cent of the land was considered arable and 17 per cent was under cultivation. Explorations were under way to determine possible mineral deposits. Under its first national development plan for 1982-1986, Vanuatu had set out development objectives with emphasis on transport and communications, utilization of the country's agricultural and human resources, encouragement of national entrepreneurship, preservation of its cultural and environmental heritage, and the long-term goal of national reliance.

The mission stated that the economy, having gradually recovered from a set-back following pre-independence disturbances, had expanded steadily since 1981. GDP growth in real terms was estimated to have accelerated from about 2 per cent that year to about 4 per cent in 1983, and there were indications of good economic performance in 1984. Real incomes for 1984 were estimated to have grown by 4 to 5 per cent over 1983. Construction, tourism and investment had increased since independence in 1980. Agriculture accounted for about one fifth of GDP, despite the fact that 85 per cent of the workforce was engaged in agriculture, and for over 80 per cent of the country's total exports. Vanuatu's export base was dominated by copra, which brought in over 70 per cent of export earnings. In 1984, copra exports increased nearly 20 per cent, doubling copra export earnings. The Government introduced in 1982 a copra price stabilization scheme, and stabilization schemes for cocoa and other primary commodities were under consideration.

Vanuatu's trade deficit was $2.2 million in 1983; earnings from tourism more than made up for the outflow of money. With international assistance, Vanuatu had attained a favourable balance of payments. Import duties were the largest revenue source.

Four road projects had been identified for priority implementation, subject to availability of funding. Inter-island shipping services, air transport facilities and telecommunications also needed improvement. The country was dependent on imported petroleum for commercial energy requirements, although three quarters of its energy consumption was in the form of local biomass. Only 8 per cent of the population had electricity, almost entirely restricted to two urban centres. Other areas of concern were education, health, water supply and sewerage, and natural disaster preparedness.

The mission reviewed the development projects proposed by the Government for financing by the international community in the agriculture, transport, telecommunications, energy, social services, local government and natural disaster preparedness sectors, and recommended them for favourable action. It divided the 35 proposed projects, worth some $74.6 million, into an order of priorities.

In a resolution of 6 April,<sup>(43)</sup> the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in co-operation with UNDP, to identify, respond to and report on Vanuatu's assistance needs within UNCTAD's competence. UNCTAD had participated in the June mission to Vanuatu, with special reference to transport problems. According to an UNCTAD secretariat report,<sup>(42)</sup> by the end of 1984 no requests for assistance for projects within UNCTAD's competence had been received.

The UNDP Administrator reported<sup>(44)</sup> that, during 1984, the UNDP field office at Suva, Fiji, which covered Vanuatu, sent three missions there to monitor and review ongoing UNDP country and regional projects and to co-ordinate third-party cost-sharing and other multi- and bilateral arrangements with donors. Assistance to Vanuatu in 1984 was facilitated by the move of the United Nations Development Advisory Team from Fiji to Vanuatu, where it was combined with the Pacific Office of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) to form the new ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre at Vila, the capital of Vanuatu.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/198 without vote.

Economic assistance to Vanuatu

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 38/218 of 20 December 1983, in which it requested the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular the developed countries and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to meeting the development needs of Vanuatu,

Recalling also its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976, 32/185 of 19 December 1977, 34/205 of 19 December 1979, 35/61 of 5 December 1980 and 37/206 of 20 December 1982, in which it urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of island developing countries, and in which it also called upon all organizations of the United Nations system to implement, within their respective spheres of competence, appropriate specific actions in favour of island developing countries,

Noting the difficult problems faced by island developing countries, owing mainly to their smallness, remoteness, constraints in transport, great distances from market centres, highly limited internal markets, lack of natural resources, heavy dependence on a few commodities, shortage of administrative personnel and heavy financial burdens,

Taking into account the fact that Vanuatu is an island developing country, that it is a geographically remote archipelago with a small population, that it has demographic disadvantages, that its dependence on imports is overwhelming and that it has a scarcity of adequate transportation and communications links, all of which pose special development problems, making the provision of services difficult and entailing very high overhead costs,

1. Calls the attention of the international community to the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Vanuatu;

2. Endorses the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Vanuatu;

4. Also expresses its appreciation to those States and organizations which have provided assistance to that country;

5. Further calls the attention of the international community to the special problems confronting Vanuatu as an island developing country with a small but rapidly growing and unevenly distributed population, a severe shortage of development capital and declining budgetary support from present donors;

6. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to maintain and expand their current and future programmes of assistance to Vanuatu, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

7. Invites the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International

Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Telecommunication Union, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Maritime Organization and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Vanuatu and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1985;

8. Requests the Committee for Development Planning at its twenty-first session, as a matter of priority, to give due consideration to the question of the inclusion of Vanuatu in the list of the least developed countries and to submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1985;

9. Calls upon Member States, pending consideration by the Committee for Development Planning at its twenty-first session of the report submitted to it and in view of the critical economic situation of Vanuatu, to accord Vanuatu special measures and, as a matter of priority, to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Vanuatu in their programmes of development assistance;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Vanuatu;

(b) To keep the situation in Vanuatu under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Vanuatu;

(c) To report on the progress made in the economic situation in Vanuatu and in organizing international assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Disasters

During 1984, UNDRO continued its work in co-ordinating the relief activities of the United Nations system in response to natural disasters such as drought, floods, storms and earthquakes. Besides responding to disasters, UNDRO continued its work in promoting preparedness for such events.

Both the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council called for assistance to deal with special needs resulting from the continuing drought in certain areas in Africa, particularly the Sudano-Saharan region (Assembly resolution 39/206) and East Africa (Council resolutions 1984/5, 1984/6 and 1984/7, and Assembly resolutions 39/201 and 39/205); cyclones and floods in Madagascar (Council resolution 1984/3 and Assembly resolution 39/191); a cyclone in Swaziland (Council decision 1984/106 and Assembly resolution 39/194); and an earthquake in Yemen (Assembly resolution 39/190). In addition, the Assembly and the Council (resolutions 39/207 and 1984/60 respectively) recommended measures for strengthening the United Nations capacity to respond to disasters, stressed the importance of UNDRO activities and appealed to the international community to contribute to the UNDRO Trust Fund.

Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

UNDRO activities

In 1984, UNDRO continued to provide assistance at the request of Governments to reduce the economic and social impact of disasters on developing countries. Its activities were dominated by the emergency situation in Africa (see p. 465), involving some 18 countries and an estimated 30 million people out of a total population of 161 million. That situation was caused by a combination of drought and, in some cases, civil strife, coupled with administrative and logistical difficulties and underdevelopment problems. UNDRO continued its functions of assessing relief needs, monitoring and co-ordinating donor response, and providing information on requirements in individual countries and the evolution of the emergency situation there. In addition to on-site assessment of damage and needs once a disaster struck and provision of emergency relief, UNDRO activities included the interrelated areas of disaster preparedness and prevention (see p. 520) and dissemination of information throughout the world. UNDRO's activities between 1 April 1983 and 31 March 1985 were described in reports of the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council and/or the General Assembly issued in June 1984<sup>(1)</sup> and May 1985.<sup>(2)</sup> The first of two addenda to the 1984 report dealt with strengthening the United Nations capacity to respond to natural disasters and other disaster situations; the second contained the text of a proposed draft convention on expediting the delivery of emergency assistance (see p. 504).

Maintaining close working relationships with Governments—both donors to relief efforts and those suffering disasters—was an important element of UNDRO's work. High-level missions visited a number of countries in both categories. In August and November, after consultations with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), a mission visited the headquarters of the Latin American Economic System (known by its Spanish acronym, SELA) at Caracas, Venezuela, to develop co-operation between the two organizations. (SELA translated and relayed UNDRO situation reports on disasters in the region to member States.) Questionnaires developed for joint preparedness and prevention activities aimed at assessing the current state of disaster management capability in Latin American countries. In that connection, UNDRO undertook assessment missions to Colombia, Ecuador, Panama, Paraguay and Peru, while SELA sent a consultant to Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay for that purpose. UNDRO continued consultations with intergovernmental and non-governmental humanitarian organizations to share information. To that end, the second international meeting of mobile disaster units (groups organized for relief activities at disaster sites outside their own countries) (Geneva, 22-24 May) made recommendations on logistics and stockpiles of relief goods covering pre-disaster planning, assessment and intervention.

Activities in public information were expanded, with the crisis in Africa adding urgency to the need to acquire and disseminate up-to-date information on disaster prevention technology, pre-disaster planning, public education, assessment of relief needs and other aspects of disaster management. The bi-monthly UNDRO News contained the latest technical information on disasters and on UNDRO emergency-related activities, including a table on the latest situation in the African countries affected by drought and other disasters. New publications included the latest volume of the UNDRO/UNEP Compendium on Disaster Prevention and Mitigation—Preparedness Aspects; the final report on the meeting on mobile disaster units, and the proceedings of the 1983 Balkan Regional Seminar on Earthquake Preparedness.<sup>(3)</sup> A brochure was published describing the functions, purposes and uses of the Trust Fund of UNDRO. UNDRO also co-operated in making two documentary films, one on relief activities following a typhoon in the Philippines and disaster prevention and preparedness work in the Caribbean, and the other on the causes and effects of the drought in Africa. The press was informed of UNDRO activities through periodic press releases, briefings on emergency operations and topical articles.

New components were introduced into the computerized Disaster Information System and UNDRO's telecommunications system. Implementation of the computerized Disaster Information Data Base system continued. A new component, the Bibliographic Data Base, was completed. The UNDRO Data Bank, a collection of disaster-related material, was expanded, with particular attention to training, education and audio-visual material, as well as to the map library. UNDRO also provided systems and services for use by other organizations, including UNHCR and UNICEF, which were provided direct access to the Disaster Information Data Base, and UNHCR was given the use of the UNDRO computerized telex transmission system. Portable mini-computers, capable of computer-to-computer interchange of information with UNDRO headquarters at Geneva, were introduced in disaster-stricken countries to record contributions and assist in managing the logistics of receipt and distribution of relief goods.

During 1984, the United Nations concluded an agreement with the International Telecommunications Satellite Corporation (INTELSAT), permitting the free use of INTELSAT satellites for peace-keeping and disaster relief operations. Field tests were carried out using portable satellite transmitters for emergency communications from the field to UNDRO headquarters.

In addition to examining a number of disaster situations concerning which the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council took action to provide relief assistance (see below, under "Disaster relief"), UNDRO took note of numerous other disasters, such as those listed below, often launching international appeals at the request of the Governments concerned, providing technical assistance, issuing situation reports or providing cash grants.

—Afghanistan. An earthquake struck a region bordering Pakistan on 31 December 1983, destroying 1,316 houses and forcing 6,580 persons to evacuate their homes. UNDRO issued an international appeal on 30 January 1984 and provided a cash grant of $20,000 for construction material.

—Benin. After deficient rainfall throughout 1983 which led to crop failures and a significant lowering of water-tables, UNDRO sent an inter-agency mission to Benin from 11 to 25 February 1984. At the request of the Government, the mission formulated a six-month, $1-million relief programme to provide drinking-water, emergency food aid and medical supplies. A multisectoral drought-relief programme planned by UNDRO was completed on 30 September, which involved drilling of boreholes and repair of wells, provision of food aid and agricultural and medical supplies, and reconstruction of villages.

—Botswana. Rainfall continued to be insufficient in 1984, resulting in lack of drinking-water and malnutrition. At the request of the Government, UNDRO appealed for international assistance.

—Burma. A serious fire on 24 March at Mandalay destroyed 2,700 houses and rendered 23,250 persons homeless. Loss of property was estimated at $33 million. An appeal was launched on 13 April for assistance to the homeless. UNDRO provided an emergency grant for fire equipment. Contributions as at 8 November amounted to $377,236.

—Chad. In November, the Government appealed for relief assistance to the drought-affected population. UNDRO sent a representative there to help assess relief needs.

—Colombia. Flooding and landslides in October affected 194,000 persons. The Government appealed for international assistance on 13 November. UNDRO released an emergency grant and sent a representative to assist in assessing damage and relief needs.

—Mali. Following a poor 1982/83 growing season, Mali appealed for international assistance and UNDRO sent an evaluation mission there in May 1984 to establish a list of emergency relief needs. A cholera outbreak in July 1984 lasted through the rainy season. A UNDRO/WFP/FAO mission in October/November evaluated stock-breeding, agricultural production and emergency relief and determined a need for 202,000 metric tons of food.

—Mauritania. In response to a 14 December 1983 request from the Government, UNDRO organized an inter-agency mission from 14 to 21 February 1984 to review the implementation of the emergency action plan for combating the effects of the drought and to strengthen the relief effort. The mission called for additional food aid, trucks and contributions towards transport costs, assistance in nutritional monitoring and strengthening of medical facilities, as well as short-term measures in agriculture, cattle raising, hydrology and utilization of labour.

—Mozambique. In addition to suffering a prolonged drought, Mozambique was hit by a cyclone in late January, which caused 109 deaths and affected 300,000 persons. Agricultural land, irrigation systems and water supply for Maputo were severely damaged. UNDRO led a multi-agency mission to assess the emergency needs and identify relief distribution problems. Following an international appeal, UNDRO reported over $87 million in contributions as at 24 February.

—Niger. UNDRO launched an international appeal for assistance, as requested by the Niger on 19 December as a result of the drought. UNDRO was also asked to provide logistics support and to obtain the necessary funding.

—Philippines. Three strong typhoons hit the Philippines between August and November, causing flooding which destroyed crops and livestock and damaged roads, bridges and buildings. More than 3.2 million people were affected and damage was estimated at $337 million. UNDRO provided an emergency grant to cover immediate relief needs. Air transport was arranged for much of the relief distribution.

—Viet Nam. A typhoon struck coastal provinces in November, followed by heavy rains which extended to other parts of the country. About 650,000 people were seriously affected and considerable damage was caused to crops and housing. Responding to an appeal for emergency assistance, the international donor community provided cash to purchase medicines and food, and contributions in kind.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/60 without vote. The draft was recommended by the Third Committee.

Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, by which the Assembly established the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, 36/225 of 17 December 1981, by which it reaffirmed the mandate and strengthened the capacity of the Office, and 38/202 of 20 December 1983, in which it, inter alia, noted with interest the steps taken to strengthen the capacity of the Office, and of the United Nations system as a whole, to respond to disasters, and called for a further report on the matter to be submitted to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984,

Noting with appreciation the effective responses of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, and of the international community, to recent major and continuing disaster situations,

Recognizing that shortage of resources continues to hamper the full achievement of the aim of rapid and effective response to the needs of countries affected by disasters and that, if this shortage is to be overcome, further efforts will be required by the international community to provide both funds and assistance in kind,

Considering that all possible new and innovative approaches should be examined with a view to improving further the rapid delivery of emergency relief,

Noting the wealth of expertise and training facilities that exists and that could be drawn upon by disaster-prone developing countries,

Recalling the importance attached in the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries to the reduction of losses caused by disasters of all kinds and the creation of infrastructures which would be beneficial in this regard,

Convinced of the absolute necessity of maintaining a sound financial basis, in accordance with repeated requests by the General Assembly, to ensure the continuation of the work of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator at its present level as a minimum,

Appreciating the contributions made by donors in supporting international relief operations, including those made to the Trust Fund of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

1. Takes note with profound satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and of the statement made by the Co-ordinator before the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee of the Council on 17 July 1984, as well as of the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural disasters and other disaster situations, called for in paragraph 12 of General Assembly resolution 38/202;

2. Recognizes that information is one of the essential elements for the fulfilment of the mandate of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator as the focal point of the United Nations system for disaster relief co-ordination, and emphasizes the importance of improving the flow and quality of information during disaster relief operations so that a more complete picture of relief channels and activities, assistance received and unmet requirements may be available to all concerned;

3. Stresses, in this regard, the primary importance of inter-agency assessment missions organized by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator with the participation of the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system and other relief bodies in order to ensure the effective co-ordination of disaster relief activities, assistance and requirements;

4. Recognizes the value of united appeals, launched after the joint development with the agencies concerned of concerted relief programmes based upon the findings of inter-agency assessment missions, to be sent at the invitation of the Government concerned, as a most effective tool for co-ordination, and urges Governments to continue to respond to such appeals accordingly;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to adapt procedures for the procurement of supplies by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in order to permit a timely response to the special and immediate requirements of countries exposed to disasters or facing an emergency situation;

6. Calls upon those contributing assistance in kind to provide, when appropriate, special grants to cover the costs of transport and distribution of the assistance to and within the affected country;

7. Requests the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to study, in co-operation with the parties concerned, the most appropriate steps to ensure the ready availability of relief supplies and transport equipment;

8. Urges Governments to increase their efforts to reduce delays in the provision of food assistance in response to natural disasters and other disaster situations;

9. Recommends that, as the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator phases out his emergency co-ordination responsibility in a given country, he should contribute to ensuring the necessary transition to the rehabilitation and reconstruction phase by passing on relevant data to competent organs and agencies of the United Nations system;

10. Calls upon Governments and international relief organizations to put at the disposal of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator the names and specializations of qualified disaster personnel available, in case of need, for inter-agency assessment missions, the execution of relief programmes or other disaster mitigation activities, and to inform him of existing disaster management training capabilities and opportunities for such training which could be offered to officials from developing countries;

11. Encourages the Co-ordinator to review, if necessary with the assistance of specialists made available by appropriate international bodies, the internal evaluation system of the Office;

12. Recognizes the importance of disaster prevention and preparedness at the regional and national levels in mitigating the effects of disasters, appreciates the work which the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator has performed in this area as far as the resources available in its Trust Fund have allowed, and encourages Governments to continue to draw upon the services available from the Office and other organizations concerned and to provide the necessary resources for this aspect of technical co-operation;

13. Emphasizes the essential need for the work of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to be placed and kept on a sound financial basis, and appeals to the international community to make contributions to the Trust Fund for General Disaster Relief or to the Trust Fund of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator for the purposes set out in the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Office.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/60

26 July 1984 Meeting 49 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/148) without vote, 23 July (meeting 15); 11-nation draft (E/1984/C.3/L.9), orally revised; agenda item 18.

Sponsors: Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Kuwait, Lebanon, Pakistan, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Senegal for African Group, Turkey.

Following the sponsors' oral proposal to add the last preambular paragraph, Canada withdrew an oral amendment it had made to add a final operative paragraph to the same effect. Japan also orally proposed, but later withdrew, an amendment to add a preambular paragraph recognizing that primary responsibility for administration of relief operations and disaster preparedness lay with the affected countries and that the major part of the material assistance and human effort in disaster relief came from those countries' Governments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Addressing the Second Committee on 5 November 1984, the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator stressed the considerable needs of the countries affected by the drought in Africa. A common feature of the relief programmes recently prepared for those countries had been the emphasis on the need for support for the transport and distribution of relief supplies.

With regard to disaster preparedness and prevention, increasing use was being made of modern techniques in monitoring situations which might develop into emergencies. UNDRO had significantly strengthened its information service, an essential instrument for liaison and co-operation with other organizations.

The Assembly adopted resolution 39/207, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, without vote on 17 December.

9. Recommends that as the Co-ordinator phases out his emergency co-ordination responsibility in a given country, he should contribute to ensuring the necessary transition to the rehabilitation and reconstruction phase by passing on relevant data to competent organs and agencies of the United Nations system;

10. Calls upon Governments and international relief organizations to put at the disposal of the Co-ordinator the names and specializations of qualified disaster personnel available, in case of need, for inter-agency assessment missions, the execution of relief programmes or other disaster mitigation activities, and to inform him of existing disaster management training capabilities and opportunities for such training which could be offered to officials from developing countries;

11. Requests the Co-ordinator to review and improve, if necessary with the assistance of specialists made available by appropriate international bodies, the internal evaluation system of the Office of the Co-ordinator in order to ensure that experience obtained from disaster relief operations is fully taken into account in the future work of the Office;

12. Recognizes the importance of disaster prevention and preparedness at the regional and national levels in mitigating the effects of disasters, appreciates the work which the Office of the Co-ordinator has performed in this area as far as the resources available in the Trust Fund of the Office have allowed, and encourages Governments to continue to draw upon the services available from the Office and other organizations concerned and to provide the necessary resources for this aspect of technical co-operation;

13. Requests the Office of the Co-ordinator to increase its fund-raising efforts through the means available to it;

14. Emphasizes the essential need for the work of the Office of the Co-ordinator to be placed and kept on a sound financial basis and requests the Secretary-General to assign a higher priority to this;

15. Reiterates in particular its appeals to the international community in resolutions 35/107 of 5 December 1980, 36/225 of 17 December 1981, 37/144 of 17 December 1982 and 38/202 of 20 December 1983 for urgent increased contributions to the Trust Fund established pursuant to its resolution 3243(XXIX) of 29 November 1974 for the purposes set out in the reports of the Secretary-General concerning the activities of the Office of the Co-ordinator.

General Assembly resolution 39/207

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/793/Add.1) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.103), based on informal consultations on 28-nation draft (A/C.2/39/L.70); agenda item 83 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 32-37, 47, 56; plenary 103.

In his oral report to the Second Committee on 5 November, the Co-ordinator reported on steps taken to implement a 1983 Assembly resolution<sup>(4)</sup> on special assistance to alleviate the economic and social problems faced in regions of Honduras and Nicaragua as a result of the May 1982 floods and other subsequent natural disasters. Nicaragua had requested technical assistance for earthquake and volcanic prediction; UNDRO, through the UNDP representatives, had offered technical assistance services of experts in pre-disaster planning. Honduras had also defined the specific areas where assistance was needed, and a technical mission was currently being organized.

The Assembly, by decision 39/431, took note of the oral report.

Draft convention on expediting aid delivery

In an addendum<sup>(5)</sup> to his June 1984 report on UNDRO activities,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted UNDRO's proposed draft convention on expediting the delivery of emergency assistance following disasters. The text dealt with measures to facilitate the receipt of aid, such as transit rights, visas and the necessary privileges, immunities and security for relief units, to facilitate export and import of relief goods, to ensure access to telecommunications for relief purposes, to provide transportation of relief consignments, and to assign liability in connection with assistance provided by States and organizations to affected States. Comments of the United Nations Legal Counsel and of the International Red Cross had been taken into consideration and some modifications made. The text was submitted so that the Economic and Social Council could decide on a further review by a group of governmental experts.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Council adopted decision 1984/175, without vote, on the recommendation of its Third Committee.

Reports of the Secretary-General relating to special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance

At its 49th plenary meeting, on 26 July 1984, the Council:

(a) Took note of the reports of the Secretary-General on a proposed draft convention on expediting the delivery of emergency relief and on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region and decided to transmit those reports to the General Assembly;

(b) Took note of the summary report of the Secretary-General on the special economic assistance programme for Swaziland.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/175

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1984/148) without vote, 23 July (meeting 15); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 18.

UNDRO financing

The activities of UNDRO were financed mainly from the United Nations regular budget and voluntary contributions to the UNDRO Trust Fund. In addition, the Trust Fund for General Disaster Relief was used as a reserve and a revolving fund to guarantee and, if necessary, advance sums pledged by donors for particular relief operations, bridging the gap between the date of the pledge and actual receipt of the donation. For the 1984-1985 biennium, the General Assembly had appropriated $5,236,400 in December 1983,<sup>(6)</sup> which was revised to $4,794,000 in December 1984 by resolution 39/237 A. In 1984, contributions from Governments to the UNDRO Trust Fund totalled $7,783,779. Expenses for the Office amounted to $2,496,757, most of which was spent on salaries and common staff costs.

Expenditures under the Trust Funds during 1984 were $7,073,936, including $5,022,385 to 33 individual countries and the Caribbean. The UNDRO Trust Fund had sub-accounts for strengthening UNDRO, for emergency relief assistance (un-earmarked, to supplement regular budget grants, and earmarked, for particular countries) and for technical assistance in disaster prevention and pre-disaster planning. Contributions from 19 Governments and EEC paid to the Funds in 1984 totalled $7,783,779 (see tables below).

In his June report on UNDRO,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General emphasized that, to maintain the current level of activity, there was need for resources and the reversal of the unsatisfactory trend in voluntary contributions, which paid for one third of UNDRO's work, over the previous two years. In 1984, steps had to be taken to restrict the length of staff contracts to the funds known to be available and UNDRO had been compelled to draw upon the very limited reserves brought forward from previous years in order to continue its work. However, the Co-ordinator reported orally on 5 November to the Assembly's Second Committee that there had been a reversal of the downward trend in voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund.

In resolution 1984/60, the Economic and Social Council emphasized the need for UNDR0's work to be on a sound financial basis and appealed to the international community to contribute to the Trust Funds set up to support that work.

The General Assembly, in resolution 39/207, requested UNDR0 to increase its fund-raising efforts and also emphasized the need for UNDR0's work to be on a sound financial basis; the Secretary-General was asked to assign a higher priority to that goal. The Assembly reiterated its appeals to the international community for urgent increased contributions to the UNDR0 Trust Fund.

Co-ordination in the UN system

The Secretary-General, in an addendum<sup>(7)</sup> to his June report on UNDR0,<sup>(1)</sup> made proposals for strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural and other disaster situations, as requested by the General Assembly in 1983.<sup>(8)</sup> The report was a follow-up to recommendations in a 1983 report on the same subject.<sup>(9)</sup>

The Secretary-General recommended that, once a feasibility study had been done, UNDR0 should conduct, on an experimental basis, its headquarters' consultations with agencies through a teleconferencing system.

The Secretary-General proposed that Member States recognize the value of united appeals—launched for an affected country, particularly in the case of major compound disasters, after the joint development of relief programmes with the agencies concerned—as a most effective tool for co-ordination and that they continue to respond to those appeals. UNDR0, in co-operation with the agencies concerned, monitored and reported on contributions and needs as they became known or changed.

Addressing the difficulties in delivering relief supplies, he recommended that, in special cases, contributions in kind be accompanied by a provision for cash grants to cover the transport of relief goods to reach those in need, with donors acting in consultation with UNDRO. A study should be undertaken to determine with potential donors ways to ensure the availability of relief supplies and to mobilize transport equipment promptly in disaster cases, and to explore ways of concluding agreements with major manufacturers and suppliers so as to ensure their immediate availability. As a start, the Co-ordinator would contact emergency units in donor countries to study the feasibility of such a proposal. Member States were urged to reduce the delays in providing emergency food aid through WFP. This could be done, the Secretary-General said, by making physically available at the beginning of each fiscal year at least part of the pledged contributions to the International Emergency Food Reserve.

Another recommendation called for Governments and international relief organizations to transmit to UNDRO the names and specializations of qualified disaster experts who could be sent on assessment missions. States were also urged to inform UNDRO of existing disaster-management training capabilities in disaster-prone countries, with an indication of possible funding and scholarships.

Drawing attention to the uses for unearmarked emergency relief funds available through the Trust Fund for General Disaster Relief, the Secretary-General proposed that an appeal be made to all States to help in increasing the Fund's financial resources from its current level of approximately $800,000. States were also urged to contribute to the technical co-operation sub-account of the UNDRO Trust Fund, used for preparedness and prevention in disaster-prone countries by early warnings and information. He suggested that UNDRO's systematic internal evaluation be reviewed, if necessary with the assistance of specialists.

The Secretary-General, in following up 1982 and 1983 resolutions by which the General Assembly had called for special assistance to 20 countries, requested United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies to submit information on such assistance. The information—on aid, provided by UNDRO, DTCD, WFC, WFP, UNICEF, UNHCR, UNCTAD, UNFPA, UNDP, UNIDO, UNCHS, UNCDF, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, the World Bank and IDA, IMF, ICAO, UPU, ITU, WMO, IMO, WIPO and IFAD—was communicated to the Assembly in a report on special assistance provided by the United Nations system<sup>(10)</sup> (see p. 464).

UNDRO continued to serve as the focal point for co-ordinating United Nations assistance in cases of disaster. The June report on UNDRO activities from 1 April 1983 to 31 March 1984<sup>(11)</sup> said that a total of 442 alerts were recorded by its global monitoring system and had been brought to the attention of the international community when warranted; in 43 cases, such alerts had involved UNDRO assistance, following a request from the stricken country, as against 35 such cases the preceding 12 months. During the reporting year, 23 relief assessment missions were undertaken either by UNDRO or jointly with other agencies, sometimes covering more than one country. Co-ordination of the activities was improved through meetings at headquarters, field missions and meetings in the affected countries. Meetings at the country level were usually organized under the chairmanship of the UNDP resident representative/resident co-ordinator. Contacts were maintained with international airlines to secure free transportation for both freight and passenger travel. In addition to working with United Nations bodies, UNDRO co-ordinated relief from other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in particular EEC, the League of Arab States and OAU. A growing number of NGOs were associated with relief programmes and some were sub-contracted to execute UNDRO-financed relief operations, for example, the Red Cross of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Middle East Council of Churches, OXFAM and World Vision International.

Disaster relief

Drought-stricken areas of Africa

According to the Secretary-General's report on UNDRO activities from 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985,<sup>(12)</sup> perhaps the chief factor that distinguished that period from earlier years was the emergency situation in Africa, which was caused by drought and resulted in famine. Failure, either partial or complete, of seasonal rainfall resulted in crop losses. The land had lost much of its fertility through years of over-grazing, and insufficient capital was available for fertilizers, reforestation and soil conservation projects. Consequent problems included malnutrition, disease, loss of human lives, sharp depletion of animal stocks, increased poverty—particularly among disadvantaged groups—desiccation of water resources, and increased migration especially to urban areas.

The Scientific Round-Table on the Climatic Situation and Drought in Africa (Addis Ababa, 20-23 February 1984) was organized by ECA in co-sponsorship with five other United Nations bodies—UNEP, UNSO, FAO, UNESCO and WMO—and OAU. The ECA Executive Secretary's report on its outcome was transmitted to the Economic and Social Council in June.<sup>(13)</sup> The meeting was attended by experts on climate, land, water and soil resources, ecology and the environment from 26 ECA member countries, observers from 11 other countries, and representatives from three intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations as well as 11 United Nations organs and specialized agencies. The meeting reviewed the situation, assessed the impact of drought on the socio-economic systems, as well as human responses to drought, and adopted a Regional Plan of Action, detailing measures for the short, medium and long terms at the national, regional and international levels to combat the impact of drought in Africa, which had begun in 1968 and had not yet ended, despite a brief lull during which near normal rainfalls had been experienced in the Sahel region in 1974 and 1975. The severity of the food shortages could be seen from the fact that the 1983 cereal production in 24 drought-affected countries registered a shortfall of 3.3 million tons as compared to 1981.

The meeting suggested that an inter-agency regional working group on drought in Africa, with a secretariat at ECA, be established to monitor the Plan of Action and to strengthen inter-agency collaboration. African countries were urged to encourage inter-State exchange of information on the impact of the drought, to consider establishing subregional drought control organizations similar to the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel (CILSS), and to encourage training and research activities. Members of the international community were called on to increase assistance to affected countries, and the United Nations and other organizations should help train manpower in areas related to drought, strengthen institutional capabilities of meteorological and hydrological services, ensure that data necessary for detecting and for warning of drought were available, and establish subregional climatic data banks. Drought-stricken and disaster-prone countries should adopt long-term measures for 1990 and beyond with a view to devising strategies to make national economies more versatile and less vulnerable to climatic variability and minimize the impact of drought.

The Plan of Action was approved by the ECA Conference of Ministers on 26 May 1984 (see Chapter VIII of this section). The Conference urged ECA members to implement the Plan and called on the international community and United Nations organizations to assist the drought-stricken African countries to combat the impact of drought, rehabilitate their economies and implement the Plan.

Drought and desertification issues were also considered by the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification in the member States of CILSS and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), as well as the Maghreb countries, Egypt and the Sudan (Dakar, Senegal, 18-27 July 1984). The final resolution of the Conference, transmitted to the Secretary-General by Senegal on 26 September,<sup>(12)</sup> contained recommendations for States on combating desertification at the national, regional and international levels, involving political commitment, strategies and planning, and operational and financial co-operation. In addition to Egypt and the Sudan, the participating countries were Cape Verde, Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta (CILSS); Benin, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, the Ivory Coast, Liberia, Nigeria, Sierra Leone and Togo (ECOWAS); Algeria, Morocco and Tunisia (the Maghreb countries).

The Assembly, in resolution 39/208, welcomed the results of the Conference. It recommended that the international community, above all the developed countries, should continue to provide short-, medium- and long-term assistance to the countries stricken by desertification and drought in order to support the rehabilitation process—in particular through reafforestation—and the renewal of agricultural production in the affected countries, particularly in Africa.

UNDRO, as a member of the Secretary-General's Advisory Group and Task Force for Africa, had been associated from the outset with this initiative. In his June report on UNDRO activities,<sup>(11)</sup> the Secretary-General observed that the Group had held an information meeting for representatives of the donor community on 2 February to inform them of the critical situation in Africa and actions envisaged by UNDRO to step up relief assistance. As at 31 March, the total donations for the six countries involved (Benin, Chad, Ethiopia, Mauritania, Mozambique, Somalia), not counting contributions of food and in kind, amounted to $124 million, including $4 million through UNDRO. In another June report,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General described and provided data on the food and agriculture situation in Africa (see Chapter VIII of this section).

The food and agriculture situation was also of concern to UNDP. The Administrator issued in May a report<sup>(14)</sup> on activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) (see below) and assistance to other drought-stricken countries in Africa during 1983, covering the eight CILSS members and other African countries particularly affected by drought. He emphasized that the problems related to the drought, which was becoming increasingly structural and endemic, could be solved in a lasting manner only through an increased global effort, based on ongoing discussions between the countries concerned and the international community as a whole. Medium- and long-range plans for integrated economic and social development were needed, encompassing water control, food production and human and livestock health, with a view to food self-sufficiency, rehabilitation and protection of the environment. The resources devoted thus far to development assistance for the African countries fell far short of the needs.

In a 29 June decision,<sup>(15)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council expressed satisfaction at the action taken by the Administrator, in pursuance of a 1983 General Assembly resolution on the liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund and allocation of the balance,<sup>(16)</sup> in approving assistance to urgently needed projects, primarily in the food and agricultural sectors in countries afflicted by famine and malnutrition, with special emphasis on drought-stricken African countries.

By resolution 39/165, the General Assembly took action on the critical problems of food and agriculture in Africa, calling on the international community to support African countries in their efforts to increase food production.

The UNEP Governing Council, after reviewing the implementation of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,<sup>(17)</sup> adopted on 28 May a decision<sup>(18)</sup> noting that desertification had continued to spread in developing countries, particularly in Africa, and proposing measures to ameliorate the problem. It endorsed the UNEP Executive Director's view that implementation should focus on the most affected countries, with priority to areas offering the best chances for rehabilitation. The Council decided that a further overall assessment of progress in implementation of the Plan of Action should be carried out in 1992.

In resolution 39/208, the Assembly took note of the UNEP Governing Council's decision and called for its implementation. By resolution 39/168 A, the Assembly endorsed UNEP's decision on a 1992 assessment of progress.

Sudano-Sahelian region

UNSO, under the authority and supervision of UNDP, continued in 1984 to carry out its mandate in support of drought-related medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programmes in the eight countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region which were members of CILSS, assisting those countries in dealing with the impact of drought, which began in 1968 and created a severe emergency in 1984. The activities carried out in 1983 with UNSO financing were described by the Secretary-General in an April 1984 report, with a later addendum,<sup>(19)</sup> and updated through 1984 in a 1985 report.<sup>(20)</sup> In addition, UNSO, which co-operated closely with CILSS, continued its programme to combat desertification (see Chapter XVI of this section).

In 1984, project commitments to the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities (see p. 512) in the form of cost-sharing and specific trust funds for drought-related recovery and rehabilitation projects of the CILSS Governments amounted to over $7.5 million. In addition, UNSO mobilized almost $6 million for desertification-control projects in the CILSS countries, making a total of about $13.5 million.

A number of regional projects were continued in 1984. Among them was the construction and maintenance of a region-wide system of all-weather secondary roads in the Sahel, with the aim of guaranteeing the transport of emergency food to remote areas. The secondary road programme, executed by UNDP, was an important element of the overall development process in the Sahel. As at the end of 1984, almost 2,040 of the 3,000 kilometres of roads for which there was financing were completed. The plan for the entire system was to construct 5,000 kilometres, carried out for the most part by national public works departments. Under the project for the ecological rehabilitation of the Fouta-Djallon massif in Guinea, the watershed area for the main rivers of West Africa, a plan was drawn up for socio-economic and hydrological studies to be carried out in 1985 by consultants. As part of an ongoing programme for developing and producing fuel-efficient cooking stoves to reduce demand for ligneous materials for domestic energy, national stoves projects were begun in Burkina Faso and the Gambia. The Institute of the Sahel, a specialized agency of CILSS, continued to benefit from UNSO assistance in carrying out some of its activities, including training in management and conservation of pasture lands.

According to the UNDP Administrator,<sup>(21)</sup> UNSO had since its inception, together with UNDP and UNEP, supported wide-ranging desertification control programmes such as those currently under way in 21 affected countries in East and West Africa (two more than in 1983), including the Sudano-Sahelian countries, through measures such as stabilizing and fixing sand dunes.

The Administrator also reported in April 1984<sup>(22)</sup> on ways of financing, beyond the 1984-1985 biennium, the UNDP/UNEP joint venture which assisted in carrying out UNSO's desertification control mandate. UNSO's administrative and programme expenditures were financed entirely from extrabudgetary sources, and the contributions of UNDP and UNEP to the joint venture constituted only a part of UNSO's operating costs. Those contributions were used mainly as "seed" money for project identification, formulation and development, and resource mobilization. The Administrator concluded that most of the financial sources within UNDP, UNEP and the United Nations did not present means of financing the venture beyond 1985. He believed that the current ways of financing it should be maintained—by the UNDP administrative budget, the African and the Arab States' regional indicative planning figures, and the UNEP Fund for the Environment.

In addition to desertification-control projects, UNSO-supported national projects included: livestock management in Burkina Faso; rehabilitation of an airport, exploration and utilization of water resources, soil and water conservation, and a desalination and power plant in Cape Verde; a campaign against rinderpest, re-establishment of a tree nursery, and training in agriculture and livestock projects in Chad; well maintenance, ground-water and natural resource management, and bush-fire control in the Gambia; a tree plantation, agrosylvo-pastoral development of the Niger River flood plain, and installation of hand pumps on existing boreholes in Mali; agricultural statistics, training in forestry, development of deep-bore wells, and dam construction in Mauritania; establishment of green belts around towns, manufacture of agricultural tools and equipment, gum arabic production, and planning for dam construction in the Niger; and reafforestation studies, and development of energy sources and energy conservation in Senegal. Road-construction projects continued in all those countries except Chad.

UNSO, besides co-operating closely with a number of United Nations bodies, also worked with the West African Economic Community on the joint programming and financing of activities. A joint programme for food storage, harvesting cereal and transport was under way.

In 1983,<sup>(23)</sup> the General Assembly had invited the Governing Council of UNEP to examine the possibility of including Ghana and Togo in the list of countries which received assistance through UNSO in implementing in the Sudano-Sahelian region the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.<sup>(17)</sup> The UNEP Council on 28 May 1984,<sup>(18)</sup> supported by the UNDP Governing Council on 29 June,<sup>(24)</sup> decided that those countries would be included.

The UNDP Council, in a 29 June decision<sup>(25)</sup> on implementation of the recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the subject,<sup>(19)</sup> and commended the Administrator for his priority attention to the needs of the region's drought-affected countries and for the results achieved by UNSO. It appealed for increased support for UNSO and requested UNSO to continue to co-operate with CILSS.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1984/175, also took note of the Secretary-General's report and transmitted it to the General Assembly.

UNCTAD also contributed to the implementation of the region's recovery and rehabilitation programme, as its secretariat reported in June.<sup>(26)</sup> As part of its mandate to assist LDCs and land-locked and island developing countries, UNCTAD provided assistance to Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Gambia, Mali, the Niger and Senegal. Such support was provided for projects in the areas of trade analysis, advisory services for trade policy, price controls and tariffs, trade statistics, transit transport for land-locked countries, road construction, training activities related to preferences and the transfer of technology, trade facilitation, shipping and debt management. On 21 September,<sup>(27)</sup> the Trade and Development Board transmitted the secretariat's note to the General Assembly, invited the Assembly to consider intensifying United Nations activities on behalf of the region, through UNSO, and to entrust UNCTAD to carry out a study, in co-operation with UNSO and other bodies concerned, on the impact of the drought on the foreign trade of the CILSS member States as well as on the role of foreign trade for the development of those countries. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was invited to intensify the technical assistance activities for the countries in the programme.

In September,<sup>(28)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on non-implementation of recommendations made by the Joint Inspection Unit, including those in a 1983 report on UNSO activities.<sup>(29)</sup> The recommendation that had not been implemented was the proposal that UNSO should encourage the formulation of a global strategy for combating African drought and desertification by co-ordinating the activities of an inter-agency group which would draw up a document for consideration by a regional seminar that it would organize, bringing together national technical services, regional organizations, relevant United Nations bodies and donors. While UNSO had not established the proposed group, it had helped organize national and regional seminars and workshops on desertification, assisted CILSS in preparing an inventory of priority needs, and contributed to the funding of and participated in the July 1984 Ministerial Conference convened by Senegal (see p. 508).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/206, as recommended by the Second Committee.

Implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned by the tragic consequences of a disastrous and persistent drought involving a substantial decrease in food and agricultural production in the Sudano-Sahelian countries,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts made by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in helping to combat the effects of drought and to implement the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme adopted by the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, as well as in mobilizing the necessary resources for financing priority projects,

Welcoming the inclusion in the agenda of its thirty-ninth session of the items entitled "Countries stricken by desertification and drought" and "Critical economic situation in Africa",

Bearing in mind the statements made by many delegations during the current session of the General Assembly in which they emphasized the continuing and increasing seriousness of the drought and desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian countries and in other regions of Africa and their devastating impact on the economic and social situation,

Considering that, owing to the nature and magnitude of the needs of the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, the solidarity action taken by the international community to support the recovery and economic development efforts of those countries should be continued and intensified,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Governments, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that have contributed to the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region;

3. Requests all Governments to increase the resources of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office by making voluntary contributions on the occasion of the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, as well as through other, in particular bilateral, channels so as to enable it to respond more fully to the priority requirements of the Governments of States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel;

4. Requests the international community to support the implementation of the Second-Generation Programme of the States members of the Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, inter alia, by providing more assistance in all its forms for carrying out the following activities:

(a) Development projects already formulated and approved by the Governments;

(b) Regional projects to combat desertification;

(c) Surveys needed for establishing development potentials at national and regional levels;

(d) Strengthening and/or establishing national and subregional research and training institutes designed to find solutions to the problems confronting the Sahelian countries;

5. Requests all Governments and all organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to give special attention to the increasingly critical food situation in the countries of the Sahel;

6. Welcomes the results achieved by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, through the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, in assisting the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel to implement their medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme;

7. Reaffirms the role of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in co-ordinating United Nations efforts to help the countries of the Sahel to implement their recovery and rehabilitation programme;

8. Invites the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to continue to strengthen its co-operation with the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and with the Committee itself, with a view to expediting implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region, and in particular to help those countries to formulate and implement national medium-term and long-term plans to combat desertification and drought, with a view to achieving food self-sufficiency;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to the General Assembly, through the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region.

East Africa

In October 1984, the Secretary-General issued a note<sup>(30)</sup> on assistance to drought-stricken areas in East Africa—Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda—as requested by the General Assembly in December 1983.<sup>(31)</sup> During 1983 and 1984, most parts of the East African countries again experienced severe drought. While arrangements had not been finalized between the Governments concerned for an intergovernmental body to combat the effects of drought, as proposed by the Assembly, the Secretary-General had taken measures to increase the effectiveness of existing channels in dealing with the situation. To facilitate contacts with Governments and to resolve urgent problems expeditiously, he appointed Adebayo Adedeji, Executive Secretary of ECA, as his Special Representative on the African crisis. In addition, a temporary office was set up in Nairobi to provide the Special Representative with the necessary support.

Plans for establishing the intergovernmental body were discussed at a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the six countries in New York on 4 October 1984. Sudan informed the Secretary-General on 8 October<sup>(32)</sup> of the results of that meeting; the Ministers had affirmed their decision to meet on 15 January 1985 in Djibouti to finalize the necessary arrangements.

Djibouti, Ethiopia and Somalia, in notes verbales to the President of the Economic and Social Council, requested him to include in the agenda of the first regular 1984 session of the Council an item on emergency assistance to victims of the drought in their countries.

On 24 April,<sup>(33)</sup> Ethiopia said that its emergency situation had affected the entire country. Hundreds of thousands of people had been forced to flee to relief camps and cities in search of food; 5.2 million people were in a virtually helpless situation. The available food supply was barely sufficient for two months, even at a rate significantly below the starvation ration (400 grams). Starvation currently afflicted about 20 per cent of the Ethiopian population.

Djibouti informed the President on 10 May<sup>(34)</sup> of its emergency situation that had arisen because of the two-year drought, affecting 80,000 people. The situation had led to food shortages, endemic diseases and increased malnutrition, particularly among children. The nomadic people had lost 70 per cent of their livestock, which constituted their means of living. Despite the Government's emergency measures, Djibouti lacked adequate food, medical and logistic resources to meet the growing needs.

On 11 May,<sup>(35)</sup> Somalia said that, as a result of adverse climatic conditions, it was experiencing serious deficiencies in food needed to sustain the massive refugee population which Somalia had taken in. In addition to the drought, other factors over which Somalia had no control had aggravated the situation. For the previous two years, Somalis in certain parts of the country had received much less food than the agreed minimum.

On 14 February, after a Government-requested mission had visited Somalia from 6 to 13 February, UNDRO launched an appeal requesting relief assistance for the affected areas in north-west Somalia until the rainy season of April 1984. Similarly, UNDRO launched an appeal on 3 April to deal with the drought emergency in Ethiopia, immediately after the Government alerted the international donor community to the rapidly deteriorating situation. UNDRO representatives, permanently in the country since August 1983, continued to assess needs and transmit data to possible donors. In November, the Secretary-General appointed Kurt Jansson as Assistant Secretary-General for Emergency Operations in Ethiopia. UNDR0 implemented and/or financed a number of relief programmes with cash contributions totalling $3.5 million for internal transport and distribution of relief supplies, bagging of food for air-dropping, and procurement of fuel, spare parts and equipment, seeds and blankets. The drought situation in the Sudan, aggravated by a renewed influx of people, was taken under review by UNDR0 in October.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council on 17 May 1984 adopted without vote resolutions 1984/5, 1984/6 and 1984/7 on emergency assistance to Ethiopia, Djibouti and Somalia, respectively.

Emergency assistance to the drought victims in Ethiopia

The Economic and Social Council,

Having heard the statement made by the Commissioner for Relief and Rehabilitation of Ethiopia concerning the critical food situation in the drought-affected regions of Ethiopia,

Deeply disturbed at the gravity of the food situation and the prospect of mass starvation as a result of the drought that has affected the entire country recently,

Aware that a lasting solution to the problem of drought and environmental degradation can best be reached through regional and subregional co-operation as envisaged for the East African subregion in General Assembly resolution 35/90 of 5 December 1980 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/46 of 28 July 1983,

Recognizing, however, that, as a result of the unprecedented drought affecting the entire country, an emergency situation has arisen which requires prompt attention,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts made by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme and other organs and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as the invaluable support of non-governmental organizations,

Noting further that, despite the generous assistance offered to the Government of Ethiopia by Member States, organs and organizations of the United Nations system and voluntary agencies, enormous difficulties of relief and rehabilitation still persist,

1. Takes note of the statement made by the Commissioner for Relief and Rehabilitation of Ethiopia on the extremely critical food situation in the drought-affected regions of Ethiopia;

2. Expresses its concern at the difficulties that confront the Government of Ethiopia as a result of the unprecedented drought;

3. Notes with appreciation the response made thus far by the international community, organs and organizations of the United Nations system and voluntary agencies to assist the victims of the drought in Ethiopia;

4. Appeals to Governments of Member States, organs and organizations of the United Nations system, governmental and non-governmental organizations and all voluntary agencies to intensify and increase urgently their assistance to the Government of Ethiopia for emergency relief and rehabilitation for the victims of the drought, as well as for the recovery of the drought-affected areas of Ethiopia;

5. Decides to keep the matter under review.

Emergency assistance to the drought victims in Djibouti

The Economic and Social Council,

Having heard the statement made by the representative of Djibouti on the distressing situation of the victims of the prolonged drought in that country,

Deeply concerned at the distressing emergency situation of the victims of the drought in Djibouti,

Aware of the adverse effects of the prolonged drought on the economic and social development of Djibouti,

Aware also of the regional character of the drought currently prevailing in the countries of East Africa,

Appreciating the unremitting efforts being made by the Government of Djibouti to meet the growing needs of the victims of the drought, in spite of the slenderness of its economic resources,

Floods and storms

Floods in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru

In February 1984,<sup>(36)</sup> UNDR0 reported on emergency assistance provided to Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru, which had been struck by heavy flooding in late 1982 and 1983 as a result of a widespread climatic change associated with disturbances in the ocean current known as "El Niño".<sup>(37)</sup> According to UNDR0, as at 31 January 1984, the international community had contributed more than $87 million following the Secretary-General's appeal on 10 August 1983 for assistance to those countries.

In his September 1984 report<sup>(38)</sup> on special economic and disaster relief assistance to 10 countries (see p. 464), the Secretary-General described the nature and extent of damage resulting from the flooding in the three countries, as reported by a 1983 inter-agency mission sent there,<sup>(39)</sup> and on drought in the Bolivian-Peruvian plateau. Losses to Bolivia were estimated at $836.5 million. The mission, in consultation with the Government, identified projects amounting to $129.4 million for which external funding was sought. As of June 1984, approximately $50 million and some equipment had been provided, while a number of projects were under discussion with bilateral donors. Damages to Ecuador were estimated at $640.6 million. Of the $97 million sought for recommended projects, $33.35 million was received as of 1 July. Peru suffered $2,001.8 million in damage. Projects identified by the mission for international funding amounted to $180.8 million, of which $68.6 million was donated.

The Secretary-General, in his annual report on UNDRO issued in June,<sup>(1)</sup> stated that the international response to UNDRO's appeal for aid for Bolivia had resulted in assistance valued at $2 million. He noted in his September report on assistance provided by the United Nations system<sup>(10)</sup> that UNDRO had dispatched a field delegate to Bolivia from October 1983 to April 1984 to assist the resident co-ordinator and the national body responsible for the distribution of emergency relief.

By decision 39/431, the General Assembly took note of the summary reports of the Secretary-General on Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru.<sup>(38)</sup>

Cyclones and floods in Madagascar

Madagascar, by a letter of 20 April to the Secretary-General,<sup>(40)</sup> requested that the Economic and Social Council include in the agenda of its first regular 1984 session an item on measures to be taken following the cyclones and floods in Madagascar (1983-1984). It explained that between December 1983 and April 1984, Madagascar had been hit by four cyclones. The most destructive one, in April, killed at least 68 people. In the stricken areas, there was an urgent need for food, medical care, shelter and clothing. Damage was estimated to exceed $600 million. Reconstruction was needed for port and airport facilities, roads, bridges and dikes. Damage to merchant and fishing vessels, plants, irrigation channels, crops and livestock was extensive.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/3 by consensus.

Measures to be taken following the cyclones and floods in Madagascar

The Economic and Social Council,

Having heard the statements made by the observer for Madagascar and the representative of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator concerning the four tropical cyclones and the floods which severely affected all parts of Madagascar in December 1983 and January and April 1984,

Taking into account the fact that those sectors are of fundamental importance to the economy of the country,

Recalling the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on assistance in cases of natural disaster, in which appeals have been made to the international community to give special attention to these phenomena,

Taking into account the fact that the provision of assistance to countries stricken by natural disasters is an expression of the international solidarity proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting the efforts made by the Government of Madagascar to relieve the suffering of the victims of the cyclones and floods,

Noting with satisfaction the emergency assistance provided by a number of States, international and regional organizations, specialized agencies and voluntary agencies,

1. Expresses its profound sympathy with the people and Government of Madagascar for the loss of life and the serious damage which the recent cyclones and floods have inflicted on the economy of the country;

2. Urges all States to participate or to continue to participate in relief operations and in the implementation of programmes for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the areas affected by the cyclones and floods;

3. Requests international and regional organizations, specialized agencies and voluntary agencies, particularly those most directly concerned, to lend their support, within the framework of their respective programmes, to the efforts of the Secretary-General and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to mobilize relief and assistance, and also to consider urgently the requests for assistance made by the Government of Madagascar during the phase of rehabilitation and reconstruction;

4. Expresses the hope that the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and all other international and regional financial institutions concerned will give sympathetic and urgent consideration to requests for assistance which the Government of Madagascar may submit under its rehabilitation, reconstruction and development programmes and with a view to improving the existing disaster warning and protection systems;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To send an inter-agency mission to Madagascar with a view to evaluating the damage, the priority needs of the country following the cyclones and floods and the medium-term and long-term impact of those disasters on the national economy, and to compiling the data relevant to the promotion of concerted international assistance;

(b) To transmit the report of the mission to the international community;

(c) To take the necessary action to help the Government prepare a reconstruction and recovery programme for the regions and sectors affected;

Report of the inter-agency mission. As requested by the Council in resolution 1984/3, the Secretary-General sent an inter-agency mission to Madagascar from 24 May to 5 June. Its report was transmitted to the General Assembly in August.<sup>(41)</sup> An oral report had been made to the Council at its second regular session of 1984.

The report surveyed the general economic situation of the country, which suffered problems of many other developing countries—the effects of the international economic recession, whether in terms of decreased demand for exports, fluctuations in the prices of raw materials, deteriorating terms of trade, exchange rate fluctuations or increases in interest rates. Agriculture constituted the backbone of the economy, contributing close to 40 per cent of GNP and over 80 per cent of export earnings. In recent years, agricultural production had been stagnant, due in large part to the inadequate transportation system. The Government drew up measures in 1983 for short-term economic recovery, as well as a long-term development strategy, complementing the main targets of its second national development plan, 1982-1987, aimed at achieving self-sufficiency in foodstuffs and energy, increasing exports, promoting industrial development, and improving training and health. The Government's plans included such steps as ensuring adequate price incentives in the agricultural sector, improving irrigation and transport systems, diversifying crops, supporting private enterprises, facilitating the growth of the private sector and reducing public expenditures.

Damage caused by the cyclones of late 1983 and early 1984 was estimated at $36.12 million to agriculture and at $4.9 million to related infrastructure (agro-industrial plants, access roads, irrigation systems). Reconstruction costs for the transport sector were estimated at $13.69 million, and for the industrial sector, $11.79 million. Housing and other buildings, and power plants and lines were also damaged. UNDR0 played the leading role in coordinating the responses to Madagascar's appeal.

The mission outlined a special economic assistance programme to assist Madagascar. Although the main goal of the programme was reconstruction and rehabilitation, the projects were consistent with the objectives and strategy of its current national development plan. Thirty-nine projects were proposed in agriculture, transportation (including roads, ports and airports), industry, public buildings, energy and disaster preparedness, at a total cost of $39,181,000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/191 without vote.

Assistance to Madagascar

The General Assembly,

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To take the necessary steps, in collaboration with the programmes and organizations of the United Nations system, to mobilize the resources needed for implementing the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development programmes of Madagascar;

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/106

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 2.

Report of the inter-agency mission. As the Council had requested, the Secretary-General arranged for an inter-agency mission, led by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, to visit Swaziland from 30 April to 5 May. As the mission's report was not available in time for consideration at the Council's first regular 1984 session, as envisaged in decision 1984/106, the Council, on an oral proposal of its President, decided on 1 May, without adopting a formal decision, to consider the report at its July 1984 session. A preliminary summary report, outlining specific requirements as a basis for immediate action, was submitted by the Secretary-General to the Council on 13 July;<sup>(43)</sup> the Council took note of it on 26 July, when it adopted decision 1984/175. The complete report, describing the economic situation, damage, emergency response, and outstanding requirements for assistance, was submitted in August to the Council<sup>(44)</sup> and in October to the General Assembly.<sup>(45)</sup>

The mission noted that Swaziland had a per capita income of approximately $880 at the 1982 exchange rate. Agriculture played a vital role in the economy, generating approximately 25 per cent of GDP, 71 per cent of export earnings and employment for 75 per cent of the labour force (6 per cent worked in the mines of South Africa). Recession in the economy of its main trading partner, South Africa, during the previous two years had had an adverse effect on the Swazi economy: real GDP declined in 1982 and 1983.

The total cyclone damage was estimated at $65.4 million, most of which was the result of flooding. The total losses to the economy represented an amount equivalent to 45 per cent of the Government's total annual expenditures, or 12 per cent of its GDP. Confirmed deaths numbered 53, but the actual total was probably higher. Immediately following the cyclone, the Government appealed for assistance directly to donors and through the Secretary-General. Relief co-ordination meetings of United Nations organizations, donors and NGOs were organized by the resident co-ordinator. From the launching of UNDRO's emergency appeal on 2 February to the end of the initial emergency period at mid-year, more than $2.5 million of assistance had been made available. There remained a need for international assistance, in particular concessional assistance, if Swaziland was to succeed in its reconstruction and rehabilitation and achieve economic development.

The mission presented an outline of a special economic assistance programme at a total cost of $44 million. Twenty-three projects were proposed for bridge and road repair, agriculture, power,

Cyclone in Swaziland

In a letter of 9 February to the President of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(42)</sup> Swaziland said it had been hit by a cyclone between 28 and 30 January, which caused about 100 deaths and severe damage to property. The cyclone "Domoina" and subsequent floods damaged approximately 80 per cent of the roads and railways. The exact extent of the disaster was still unknown, since several areas were inaccessible. As a land-locked country whose economy was almost totally export-oriented, the lines of communication to seaports were essential, and for that reason Swaziland appealed for economic and technical assistance. It hoped that the Council would recommend a special economic assistance programme and that the Secretary-General would send an inter-agency mission to Swaziland to help it assess priority needs and the medium- and long-term implications of the floods on the economy.

The Secretary-General reported in June<sup>(41)</sup> that, at the request of the Government, UNDRO launched an appeal on 2 February and allocated a cash grant of $20,000 for air drops of relief supplies. Total contributions reported in cash and in kind as at 29 February amounted to $862,320.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/106 without vote.

Special economic assistance programme for Swaziland

At its 2nd plenary meeting, on 10 February 1984, the Council, having considered the letter dated 9 February 1984 from the Permanent Representative of Swaziland to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Council, decided to request the Secretary-General to send, as soon as possible and within existing resources, an inter-agency mission to Swaziland to assess that country's priority needs in the light of the cyclone of January 1984 and its medium-term and long-term implications for the economy, and to consider the matter at its first regular session of 1984, under the item entitled "Adoption of the agenda and other organizational matters", should the report of the mission be available at that time.

water supply and public facilities. The proposals did not include approximately $8.4 million for rehabilitation of the railways, since repairs had to be undertaken immediately and were financed by the Government.

Earthquake in Yemen

As requested by the General Assembly in 1983,<sup>(46)</sup> the Secretary-General, in October 1984,<sup>(47)</sup> reported on assistance for the reconstruction programme of Yemen needed after an earthquake in December 1982.<sup>(48)</sup> Approximately 1,500 people had been killed, over 265,000 were affected, 42,000 residential buildings were damaged, and loss was estimated at $2 billion. Immediately following the earthquake, the resident co-ordinator acted as co-ordinator for relief assistance. An ad hoc committee of Yemen-based government officials and representatives of United Nations bodies and bilateral and non-governmental organizations was established; the office of the UNDP Resident Representative in Sana'a acted as its secretariat. The committee helped with the acquisition and supply of relief items. An international joint mission of representatives of the Economic Commission for Western Asia, the World Bank, the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development, the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development and the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries visited Yemen and drew up reconstruction programmes, which included construction of earthquake-resistant dwellings in safe sites.

The Government had undertaken a three-phase reconstruction programme, at a total cost of $620 million: relief, reconstruction and assistance to rural development. The relief phase was completed in 1983. Reconstruction would involve the repair of 17,000 houses and construction of 25,000. Assistance for rural development in the earthquake-affected areas was to be organized once the reconstruction was completed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/190, on the recommendation of the Second Committee.

Assistance to Yemen

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/166 of 17 December 1982 and 38/204 of 20 December 1983 and resolution 150(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Fully aware of the grave devastation and substantial loss of life and property caused by the earthquake that struck large areas of Yemen on 12 December 1982,

Concerned about the damage caused to infrastructure, which has a far-reaching effect on the implementation of the national development plan in that country,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, which outlines the reconstruction programme of the Government of Yemen, the cost of which is estimated at $620 million,

Taking into account that the various phases of reconstruction have placed a strain on the Government of Yemen, largely exhausted the resources available and hindered development plans,

Recognizing that Yemen, as one of the least developed countries, is unable to bear the mounting burden of the relief efforts and the reconstruction of the affected areas,

1. Appeals to all countries, especially the developed countries, to continue to contribute generously to the relief efforts and the reconstruction of the affected areas through financial contributions and the provision of the construction materials and equipment necessary to restore infrastructure and basic services in the affected areas;

2. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Yemen;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the States, the international and regional organizations and the non-governmental organizations that have participated in the ongoing efforts undertaken for the reconstruction of the affected areas in Yemen;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, and the General Assembly, at its fortieth session, of the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Disaster preparedness and prevention

ties in pre-disaster planning.<sup>(1)</sup> UNDRO's concept of disaster preparedness was the integration of human and material resources into a national system of readiness in order to minimize the loss of lives and damage when a disaster struck. Its technical assistance programmes were aimed at establishing national structures capable of immediate action. It also sought to improve communication channels between central and local preparedness units, as well as damage-reporting systems to determine relief assistance. Early-warning systems and public education to cope with natural and other hazards were other components of disaster preparedness. During the year, the number of requests for UNDRO assistance in disaster preparedness planning had increased, whereas contributions to the sub-account for technical assistance of the UNDRO Trust Fund had decreased. It had become necessary for UNDRO to identify donors prepared to finance individual projects before it could respond to such requests.

An example of projects in this area was the Co-ordination and Information Centre for Emergencies, at N'djamena, Chad, set up by UNDRO with assistance from the Swiss Disaster Relief Unit. The Centre, which became operational in 1983, gathered information on the arrival and movement of relief goods, published a monthly statement of stocks and distribution, and processed and disseminated information on disaster needs. After an inter-agency mission was sent to Vanuatu in June, UNDRO agreed to that Government's request to provide the services of an expert in disaster management.<sup>(2)</sup> Preparedness projects were also planned or under way in Indonesia, Madagascar, Nicaragua, the Sudan and the United Republic of Tanzania.

At the international level, the Typhoon Committee, an intergovernmental organization established in 1968 to reduce the effects of typhoons through improved forecasting, completed its four-year Typhoon Operational Experiment with a final evaluation meeting at Tokyo in March. UNDRO and the League of Red Cross Societies, joint co-ordinators for the Warning Dissemination and Information Exchange component, presented to the meeting an evaluation report with follow-up proposals. The WMO/ESCAP Panel on Tropical Cyclones helped organize a Regional Seminar on Disaster Preparedness (Male, Maldives, 28 February-3 March), at which disaster managers from Bangladesh, India, Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Thailand adopted recommendations on actions to be taken by national, regional and international bodies.

As requested by the Tropical Cyclone Committee for the South-West Indian Ocean, a regional body of eight countries created by WMO to enhance national capabilities and regional co-operation in forecasting and warning of tropical cyclones, UNDRO, jointly with the League of Red Cross Societies, organized a training seminar in disaster prevention and preparedness for disaster management personnel from the member countries (Mauritius, 21-25 May). Another regional project was UNDRO's financing of the participation of relief officials from five countries—Bangladesh, Burma, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Thailand—in a training programme in India in disaster management. A Regional Meeting on Disaster Prevention and Preparedness in Africa (Addis Ababa, 24 and 25 February) was organized jointly with ECA and OAU. Representatives from 21 African countries, United Nations agencies and NGOs assessed the situation with regard to natural disasters other than drought and considered measures to mitigate their harmful impact. The meeting adopted a strategy and recommendations put forward in an UNDRO/ECA paper on the subject. A project in the Balkan region was completed in April 1984 followed by the establishment of a permanent International Governmental Committee for Earthquake Risk Reduction.

UNDRO provided expert services for two workshops in Titograd, Yugoslavia, on vulnerability and seismic-risk analysis, and continued technical advisory services to Yugoslavia throughout the year; a study was made on earthquake vulnerability. Assistance was provided to Egypt for flood-risk analysis and flood-prevention techniques, and to Mozambique for strengthening national disaster prevention and counter-disaster operations. A disaster plan for a province in Papua New Guinea, drawn up in 1983, was applied in early 1984 when typical precursors to volcanic eruptions occurred.

In July 1984 an earthquake engineer and seismologist visited Cyprus to advise both the Greek and Turkish communities on earthquake risk reduction methods for the Nicosia Master Plan, a UNCHS project.

Preparedness for industrial accidents was another area of UNDRO activity, including participation with the International Atomic Energy Agency in such projects as the preparation of a "Handbook for assessing off-site consequences of accidents in nuclear power plants" and the compilation of "Guidelines for mutual emergency assistance arrangements in connection with a nuclear accident or radiation emergency"; as well as a joint UNIDO/UNDRO/WHO/UNEP project for the institution and co-ordination of national contingency plans for emergencies associated with industrial installations in the West and Central African region. A regional workshop related to the latter project was held at Dakar in February, at which 15 Governments were represented. The final report contained recommendations for action.

The Pan-Caribbean Disaster Preparedness and Prevention Project, a multi-agency project begun in 1981 and covering 28 Caribbean countries and territories, involved UNDRO's technical supervision of prevention and preparedness activities, including the provision of two full-time experts and an emergency telecommunications programme. Activities in 1984 included regional seminars or workshops in Antigua, Barbados, Cuba, Puerto Rico, and Saint Christopher and Nevis, on such subjects as search and rescue, oil spill, hurricane preparedness, emergency shelter and other aspects of disaster management. An air crash simulation exercise was held in Antigua. Technical assistance missions developed national disaster plans and training programmes in the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, Montserrat, Saint Christopher and Nevis, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines.

Prevention activities included studies on vulnerability of buildings and infrastructure to hurricanes in Dominica and Saint Lucia, and workshops and manuals to illustrate techniques to minimize hurricane and earthquake damage. Emergency communications equipment between national emergency offices was in operation and a procedures manual was prepared. The Pan-Caribbean project stimulated the creation of national emergency offices and, by the end of 1984, 23 of the 28 member countries had programmes in disaster preparedness and prevention.

In April, UNDRO, ECLAC and the Pan American Health Organization/WHO sponsored a seminar at Mexico City to develop a methodology to assess relief needs following sudden natural disasters. As a follow-up, in August 1984 an UNDRO representative visited ECLAC headquarters to discuss plans for future action in pre-disaster planning in Latin America.

Reporting on some of its emergency operations in 1984,<sup>(49)</sup> UNICEF said it had circulated the second draft of its emergency manual to most field offices in Africa and a number of selected offices in other regions. The manual provided guidelines on policies, procedures and possible programme interventions in emergency situations. It was also sent for comment to emergency units of United Nations organizations and others with particular expertise in emergency aid. The Eastern and Southern Africa Regional Office in Nairobi organized a workshop in June to train staff in responding to emergency situations.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1984/60, and the General Assembly, in resolution 39/207, expressed recognition of the importance of disaster prevention and preparedness at the regional and national levels in mitigating the effects of disasters, and appreciation of UNDRO's work in that area as far as resources allowed. It encouraged Governments to continue to draw upon the services available from UNDRO and other organizations and to provide the necessary resources for that aspect of technical co-operation.

Emergency relief and assistance

Lebanon

As a result of the renewed fighting and disorder in late 1983 and early 1984 in Lebanon (see p. 283), the country's economy declined and its reconstruction programme was set back. The United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon, reporting orally to the Economic and Social Council on 17 July, noted that despite many difficulties work on reconstruction projects had continued wherever conditions allowed.

The Secretary-General, in a September 1984 report<sup>(1)</sup> to the General Assembly, requested in December 1983,<sup>(2)</sup> described the general situation in Lebanon and summarized developments there since his 1983 report<sup>(3)</sup> on assistance for Lebanon's reconstruction and development. He said tension remained at a high level and heavy fighting had taken place in late 1983 between Palestinian and other groups in the Bekaa Valley and around Tripoli. In December 1983, a truce was arranged and a large contingent of Palestine Liberation Organization fighters left Tripoli in ships flying the United Nations flag. While sporadic fighting was going on in the Shouf mountains in February 1984, hostilities broke out in West Beirut, again splitting the city along the so-called "Green Line". A new Government was formed in May and Parliament gave it special powers to legislate by decree. Under those powers, the Government adopted a security plan by which it reopened the Beirut port, airport and traffic passageways between the eastern and western parts of the city.

The worsening security problem eroded the ability of the Lebanese economy to function. The recession had deepened throughout 1983 and continued during the first half of 1984. An estimated 30 per cent of the active labour force was unemployed. Economic disruptions were aggravated by restrictions imposed by Israeli forces on movements of goods and people to and from southern Lebanon. Government expenditures increased due to the security situation, contributing to a deficit in the balance of payments of around $900 million. The economy still had characteristics that would enable it to recover, but some of this potential, both human and financial, was being drained away by migration. According to the Secretary-General, the consolidation of security on a stable basis would be the most important single factor in facilitating economic recovery.

The situation in the south (including western Bekaa) posed especially difficult problems for reconstruction. Two thirds of the industrial plants there were closed and agricultural production was 40 per cent below normal. Schools, medical facilities and essential services were not functioning properly. The war damage of 1982 remained largely unrepaired, and the latest Shouf and Beirut outbreaks brought an influx of displaced persons (approximately 20,000 families), straining local resources. Continued Israeli occupation of the region isolated it from the rest of the country and disrupted normal life and economic activity. The Government accorded high priority to basic relief needs and rehabilitation projects in housing, education, road reconstruction, drinking-water and waste management, electricity and health.

The United Nations continued to have a substantial and active presence in Lebanon. Many specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations maintained regional offices in Beirut, namely UNICEF, UNHCR, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, UNDP, WFP and UNRWA. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon had been stationed in southern Lebanon since 1978 and, in addition to peace-keeping operations, it conducted humanitarian activities (see p. 298). Closure of the airport and insecurity had obliged ILO and UNICEF to move their regional offices temporarily out of Lebanon to Geneva and Amman, respectively, and UNDP was obliged to reduce its operations in Lebanon. The principal focus of United Nations activities was emergency relief assistance to victims of the fighting.

Under a 1980 arrangement between the Government and UNICEF, a rehabilitation programme comprising education, health, water and self-help projects continued. In addition to the initial reconstruction of the south project ($26.5 million), UNICEF funded and organized a $44-million programme aimed at repairing the damage caused during the 1982 Israeli invasion. On behalf of the Government and with Arab aid funds, UNICEF was executing a $100-million programme of rebuilding hospitals, schools and water-supply systems. Reporting on its emergency operations in 1984 (excluding Africa),<sup>(4)</sup> UNICEF said that, following civil violence in February which disrupted the water supply in the southern suburbs of Beirut and in the Shouf mountains, it helped supply power generators and repair damaged pipes, rehabilitated damaged wells and sanitation facilities and trucked water to 37 centres for displaced families.

The second country programme for Lebanon<sup>(5)</sup> was submitted in March to the UNDP Governing Council for consideration and approval. It was based on a request by Lebanon for UNDP assistance for 1984-1986 and drawn up in collaboration with the UNDP resident representative. The Government's primary concern was the reconstruction of basic facilities as elaborated in its reconstruction project. That project, which called for expenditures in the order of $15 billion over 10 years, provided the overall framework for public sector actions and policies, beginning with the rehabilitation of physical and social infrastructures. The World Bank, at the Government's request, finalized in early 1983 a reconstruction assessment report which foresaw an initial investment of $230 million for education, housing, urban development, water supply, telecommunications, port facilities and highway maintenance.

Other assistance by the United Nations was provided by DTCD, UNCTAD, UNIDO, UNFPA, the Division of Narcotic Drugs, WFP, UNHCR, IAEA, FAO, UNESCO, WHO and ITU.

Speaking to the General Assembly's Second Committee on 6 November, the Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon said that Lebanon's reconstruction programme had been interrupted by renewed fighting in the mountains in September 1983 and in the Beirut suburbs in February 1984, affecting some 500,000 persons on each occasion; nevertheless, Lebanon had been able to implement about 27 per cent of the programme. At the request of Lebanon, the Secretary-General had issued appeals both times for international emergency relief. It was estimated on each occasion that $10 million was needed. Tens of thousands would remain in need of assistance for some time to come. The Lebanese Government was currently working on a new programme for 1985 and onwards which would have to take into account the damage caused by fighting and disorder over the previous 12 to 15 months.

The Fourth General Conference of UNIDO (see Chapter VI of this section, under "Programme and finances of UNIDO"), in a resolution of 19 August,<sup>(6)</sup> requested UNIDO to provide Lebanon with immediate, medium- and long-term assistance so as to enable it to reconstruct its industrial sector. It called on member States to assist UNIDO in its reindustrialization efforts for Lebanon.

Chapter IV

International trade and finance

In 1984, the year in which the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) commemorated its twentieth anniversary, debate in the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board centred on the debt problems of developing countries and the need to deal simultaneously with the interdependent problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system. At its two 1984 regular sessions, the Board also considered matters arising from recommendations of the sixth session of the Conference (UNCTAD VI) held in 1983; a special session (the Board's thirteenth) was devoted to the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

In his annual report on the work of the Organization (p. 3), the Secretary-General stated that there was a high degree of frustration in United Nations activities at the global level in trade, money and finance, where the Organization's achievements could not be simply in terms of the number of treaties and agreements negotiated and signed. Many of the Organization's contributions were in much less tangible forms, such as shaping the framework of international debates on major problems. For example, he had consistently stressed the importance of finding solutions to the acute debt problems, solutions going beyond the short term and taking into account the need to ensure growth in the export earnings of developing countries.

In a December resolution (39/214), the General Assembly addressed several specific areas of UNCTAD's work programme and called on countries to strengthen international economic co-operation by revitalizing the development process and dealing with structural problems in the global economy.

Following its third annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment, the Trade and Development Board adopted a programme with respect to its continuing work on the issue, full implementation of which was called for by the Assembly in December.

The International Trade Centre continued to assist developing countries in promoting their exports and facilitating movement of goods in international commerce and took steps to strengthen its export market development activities in commodities, in line with an UNCTAD VI recommendation.

Although additional States adhered during 1984 to the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities, by year's end it had not entered into force. With regard to individual commodities, the International Sugar Conference culminated in July with the adoption of the International Sugar Agreement, 1984. Progress was made at two sessions of the United Nations Cocoa Conference towards completing negotiations on a successor agreement to the 1980 International Cocoa Agreement and it was decided to reconvene the Conference. Although neither the International Tropical Timber Agreement, 1983, nor the International Agreement on Jute and Jute Products, 1982, received sufficient ratifications to enter into force, the latter Agreement entered into force provisionally by a decision of the Governments which had signed or ratified it, or had given notice that they would apply it provisionally. Meetings were held during the year to review the market situation of iron ore and tungsten.

A set of draft guidelines on consumer protection was discussed by the Economic and Social Council and forwarded to the General Assembly (resolution 1984/63), which in December decided to consider adopting them in 1985 (decision 39/444).

Concerning international financial relations, the debt problems of developing countries were considered to require urgent international action, as was the need for reform of the international monetary and financial system. Those issues were taken up in United Nations bodies and the Organization's major economic reports, which all stressed the close link between international monetary and financial matters and international trade issues. In December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ascertain the views of Governments and United Nations bodies on expanding international co-operation in money, finance, debt and resource flows, including development assistance and trade (resolution 39/218). In April, the Trade and Development Board adopted agreed conclusions on the debt problems of developing countries. In December, the Assembly called on the international community to address those problems taking into account the Board's action.

In the area of trade-related finance, an expert group on the compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls held three sessions in 1984 and made recommendations regarding a proposed complementary facility to finance commodity-related shortfalls.

Topics related to this chapter. Development policy and international economic co-operation. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief: Africa—critical economic situation. Transport. Industrial development. Regional economic and social activities: international trade and finance—Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America, Western Asia. ## UNCTAD VI follow-up

During 1984, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board discussed matters arising from the decisions of the sixth (1983) session of the Conference (UNCTAD VI).<sup>(1)</sup> As mandated by the Conference, the Board, at its twenty-eighth session (Geneva, 26 March–6 April),<sup>(2)</sup> adopted a resolution on the work programme on protectionism and structural adjustment and decisions on the debt-servicing and debt and development problems of poorer developing countries (see under relevant subject headings below). At its twenty-ninth session (Geneva, 10–27 September),<sup>(3)</sup> the Board adopted a resolution on the UNCTAD technical co-operation programme on the generalized system of preferences, and decisions on trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems and on the International Trade Centre (see under relevant subject headings below). Action was also taken on organizational matters at both Board sessions (see below, under “Organizational questions”).

Other matters dealt with by the Board in accordance with UNCTAD VI action included: implementation of the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region (see p. 509); technical co-operation among developing countries—co-operative exchange of skills among developing countries (see p. 480); assistance to the peoples of Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III) and those of South Africa (see p. 168); land-locked developing countries (see p. 417); and island developing countries (see p. 422).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

After considering the Trade and Development Board's 1984 work, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the Board's activities, taking a number of decisions in specific areas (see under related subject headings in this chapter). On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/214 without vote.

General Assembly resolution 39/214

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.3) without vote, 14 December (meeting 61); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.141), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.109); agenda item 80 (c).
Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 53, 56, 58, 60, 61; plenary 104.

In addition to drafting and other changes, the adopted text differed in a number of major respects from that put forward by the Group of 77 and subsequently withdrawn. The Group's draft included five additional operative paragraphs by which the Assembly would have: urged developed countries to eliminate restrictive measures incompatible with their international commitments and draw up a programme to eliminate protectionist measures which adversely affected the trade of developing countries; reaffirmed the need for stability in the generalized system of preferences, and called on preference-giving countries to ensure continuity, improvement and broadening of their schemes and avoid the introduction into the system of discriminatory measures; affirmed the importance for the development of developing countries of their attaining self-reliance in services and called on UNCTAD to assist them; emphasized the need to accelerate the flow of financial resources to developing countries; and emphasized that the developed countries should facilitate structural adjustment, taking into account an equitable international division of labour.

International trade

During 1984, international trade issues were considered by various United Nations bodies, with the close link between trade issues and international monetary and financial matters being stressed by both the Trade and Development Board and the Committee for Development Planning (CDP). An UNCTAD secretariat report prepared for the Board's annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment noted continued protectionist pressures and stated that some actions by developed countries were in breach of a commitment undertaken at UNCTAD VI to halt protectionism. In April, the Board adopted a work programme on protectionism and structural adjustment, implementation of which was called for by the Assembly in December.

UNCTAD continued its work on trade preferences, which included a new UNCTAD technical assistance project on the generalized system of preferences following the conclusion of a joint UNCTAD/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) project. Meetings also continued on establishing a global system of trade preferences among developing countries.

A 19-member group of experts met to consider ways to expand trade and economic relations between countries having different economic and social systems and suggested ways in which the Trade and Development Board could act more effectively to facilitate such trade.

The International Trade Centre, operated jointly by UNCTAD and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), continued to serve as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes, and steps were taken to strengthen its support of the UNCTAD Integrated Programme for Commodities. The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices held its third session in 1984.

Widely fluctuating commodity prices continued to cause concern during the year and several meetings on individual commodities were held within UNCTAD. By 31 December, the Agreement establishing the Common Fund for Commodities had still not been ratified by a sufficient number of countries for it to enter into force.

A set of draft guidelines on consumer protection was considered by the Economic and Social Council and by the General Assembly, which decided to consider adopting them at a resumed session in 1985.

Trade policy

For the developing countries, the modest growth of world trade and hesitant rise of commodity prices during 1983 failed to produce a decided recovery of export earnings, said the UNCTAD Trade and Development Report, 1984.<sup>(1)</sup> In addition, adverse weather conditions affected agricultural output in a number of countries, particularly in Africa, thereby reducing exports and increasing the need for essential imports. The developed market-economy countries, on the other hand, were emerging from the most protracted recession of the post-war period, with Canada and the United States experiencing the most remarkable turnaround.

In 1983, the terms of trade of developing countries as a whole fell slightly due to contradictory movements in terms of trade of oil- and of non-oil-exporting developing countries. Growth of import volume for developing countries as a whole was about 1.1 per cent. The increase was largely accounted for by major exporters of manufactures, with an increase of 5.1 per cent, and was confined essentially to the Asian countries. The least developed countries (LDCs), a large number of which were in sub-Saharan Africa, were forced to cut imports by about 3 per cent for the second consecutive year. Developing countries' export volumes increased by 1.1 per cent in 1983, but remained far below 1980 levels. Exports from major oil exporters continued to decrease, but much more slowly than in the two previous years. Export growth in net oil-importing countries fell to 2.8 per cent in 1983, from 4 per cent in 1982; were it not for the major exporters of manufactures, whose export volumes rose by 10.1 per cent, there would have been an absolute decline. In China, after three years of import restraints, import volumes increased by 29.4 per cent in 1983; export volumes increased by 10.5 per cent. In spite of the slower growth of exports relative to imports, the trade balance on a customs basis registered a surplus of $800 million.

Among the developed market-economy countries in 1983, there was considerable diversity of economic experience resulting from differences in fiscal stance. There was a large deterioration in the current account of the United States, which was largely offset by a widening Japanese surplus and reductions in the deficits of France, Italy and the smaller developed market-economy countries. Thus, while lower exports had a negative influence on overall domestic activity, the deterioration in the trade account of the United States imparted, albeit unevenly, an impetus to activity elsewhere, most markedly in Japan, Canada and some smaller European economies. Signs of improvement in the export sector became evident in other Western European countries by mid-1983.

Although the terms of trade of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe deteriorated slightly in 1983, the trade surplus increased. The salient feature of their external trade was the smaller increase in the value of exports from 6.9 per cent in 1982 to 4.9 per cent in 1983, and the faster rise in imports from 0.9 per cent to 3.4 per cent. However, the faster import growth resulted from reactivation of trade among the countries of the region (including the socialist countries of Asia). Imports from developed market-economy and developing countries continued to decline, by 4 per cent and 0.9 per cent respectively.

In order to explore the changing role of the international trade and payments system, the Report devoted a section to following the main lines of evolution which the international monetary, financial and trading systems had undergone in the post-war period. A further section discussed possible reform of the trade and payments system. The Report noted that both the trade and payments system and national economies had been left in a weakened condition by the recent crisis and their capacity to bear additional strain was therefore limited. Prudent policy planning called for urgent examination of how the trade and payments system could be restructured to promote better economic performance of national economies. A viable system needed to reaffirm the emphasis on employment and growth that underlay the design of the post-war systems and also to establish mechanisms to ensure adequate growth opportunities for all the system's members. Under the existing arrangements, decisions on the international monetary and financial system, although having a deep impact on both developed and developing countries, were circumscribed by narrow monetary and financial considerations. Also, developing countries were not represented in international monetary negotiations.

An alternative approach, suggested the Report, would be to reform the system on the basis of the interdependence of trade and payments and the mutual dependence of employment and development. The Report listed several fundamental questions which needed to be addressed by Governments, but stated that the most urgent issue was that of debt (see below, under "Debt problems of developing countries").

The international trade and payments situation was also discussed in a chapter of the World Economic Survey 1984.<sup>(2)</sup> Developments since early 1983, said the Survey, had illustrated the crucial interaction between the evolution of international economic and financial variables and the strength and spread of world economic recovery. Although the economic upswing in some developed market economies had given some impetus to world trade, external financial constraints had caused a broad decline in the imports of developing countries, and that had dampened the growth of exports and output in developed and developing countries alike. Unless their export earnings grew sufficiently, developing countries would not contribute significantly to the expansion of world trade, since their imports were constrained by a scarcity of foreign exchange. Their exports would be further affected if recent protectionist threats were acted upon.

Those subdued prospects for export earnings were of particular concern to countries in debt-servicing difficulties, said the Survey. The drying up of capital inflows from international capital markets, large amortization payments coming due and high interest rates forced many developing countries into unprecedented reductions in imports in 1983. In spite of severe adjustment, several countries were unable to service their external debt normally. Inadequate international liquidity was an even more widespread problem among developing countries than external debt. Also cited as important problems clouding the international trade and payments picture were rising protectionist pressures and actions and exchange rate fluctuations.

At its May 1984 session,<sup>(3)</sup> CDP expressed concern about the separation of the issues of trade on the one hand and international monetary and financial matters on the other. It was necessary, CDP stated, to harmonize the sprawling process of re-examining the international economic system, bearing in mind the interrelated areas of money, finance and trade. Most pressing was the need to begin an effective dialogue and prepare the way for negotiation and action.

CDP also called for efforts to reverse the inroads made by protectionism on international markets and drew particular attention to the proliferation of non-tariff barriers.

International trading system

Having considered the matter informally at its March/April session, the Trade and Development Board in September discussed the organization of a review and in-depth study of the international trading system in line with UNCTAD resolution 159(VI).<sup>(4)</sup> The Board had before it a report<sup>(5)</sup> prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat which pointed out that the Conference's resolution had evolved from a 1979 Conference decision (132(V))<sup>(6)</sup> which had requested the Board to undertake a global evaluation of the Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations (MTNs) conducted by GATT (see also PART TWO, Chapter XVII). At a 1981 Board session,<sup>(7)</sup> Gabon had submitted a draft resolution on behalf of the Group of 77, calling for an annual review by the Board of developments in the international trading system, covering, in particular, the rules and principles governing its functioning. There was no agreement on that draft which was subsequently remitted to each of the Board's 1982, 1983 and 1984 sessions; finally, it was withdrawn by the sponsors in September 1984.

The UNCTAD report identified the following features of what it described as the post-MTN system: the fact that tariffs were no longer relied upon as the principal means of protection; the introduction of flexible or contingent measures of protection, such as subsidies or dumping; the trend towards "managed" trade occurring outside the framework of GATT; and the fact that the unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment principle had ceased to be the guiding principle of international trade relations.

With regard to the review called for in Conference resolution 159(VI), the report said that the formulation of recommendations would require an international consensus: first, as to what was wrong with the current system and, second, as to the fundamental concepts upon which a strengthened and improved system should be based.

On 21 September, the Board took note of the positions of the various groups and decided to annex to its report draft conclusions on the international trading system submitted by Argentina on behalf of the Group of 77.

By the draft conclusions, the Board would have noted that recent developments had further accentuated the need for action to improve and strengthen the international trading system. While recognizing that the review and in-depth study was a continuing activity, the Board would have agreed that the process be accelerated and intensified to permit it at its thirty-first session (September 1985) to make recommendations and proposals. The UNCTAD Secretary-General would have been invited to prepare studies on: the state of implementation of commitments in favour of developing countries; developments in international trade in textiles and clothing; the adverse impact of tariff and non-tariff measures on trade in commodities; and the special problems of LDCs. The Board would also have invited Governments to contribute to accelerating the fulfilment of the mandate in Conference resolution 159(VI).

Protectionism and structural adjustment

Trade and Development Board activities. The Trade and Development Board at its March/April session undertook its annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment in conjunction with monitoring the implementation of part I of UNCTAD resolution 159(VI) dealing with ways to combat protectionism and facilitate structural adjustment.<sup>(8)</sup> In accordance with Conference decision 160(VI) and a follow-up 1983 Board decision,<sup>(9)</sup> the question of establishing a work programme on protectionism and structural adjustment was also discussed.

The sessional committee established to deal with the issue had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on protectionism and structural adjustment in the world economy, Part I<sup>(10)</sup> of which analysed major policy issues and requirements and, in addition, summarized information received from 36 UNCTAD States members and the European Economic Community (EEC) on changes in tariffs, quantitative restrictions and measures of equivalent effect, anti-dumping and countervailing duties, and differential and more favourable treatment for developing countries. The report stated that 1983 had witnessed continued protectionist pressures and that a number of actions by developed countries—most of which involved manufactured and semi-manufactured products—were in breach of the commitment undertaken in Conference resolution 159(VI) to halt protectionism.

In developing countries, balance-of-payments difficulties were the main cause of import restrictions and balance-of-payments considerations also justified import barriers in a few developed countries. However, the majority of actions taken were to protect domestic, import-competing industries. Textiles, steel, footwear and ceramic products, together with various electronic goods, remained major targets for protective actions, and controls were further tightened in those sectors. Exporters affected continued to be low-cost producers of textiles and the fast-growing exporters of manufactures in all groups of countries.

The report underlined a number of developments in 1983, the most disturbing of which was the number of actions taken after UNCTAD VI when the developed countries had committed themselves to halting protectionism. On the positive side, it was noted that some concrete actions had been taken to liberalize trade.

The report drew the attention of the Board to two matters in particular: the increasingly ominous implications of international debt problems for both creditor and debtor countries and the contribution that appropriate trade policy initiatives could make in alleviating those problems; and the future work of the UNCTAD secretariat on trade, protectionism and structural adjustment.

Part II of the report<sup>(11)</sup> discussed developments during the first three years of the 1980s in world production and trade in agriculture, manufactures and services.

Other UNCTAD secretariat reports prepared for the Board's review of protectionism and structural adjustment dealt with an improved and more efficient safeguard system<sup>(12)</sup> and anti-dumping and countervailing duty practices.<sup>(13)</sup>

On 6 April, following its discussion of the item, the Board adopted a resolution on its work programme on protectionism and structural adjustment,<sup>(14)</sup> by which it decided that, in the context of its annual review of the topics, the Board should: monitor implementation of Conference resolution 159(VI) and, where necessary, make recommendations on general problems of protectionism and continue the work on non-tariff barriers in pursuance of that resolution and of Conference resolution 131(V);<sup>(15)</sup> and exchange information, discuss members' experience and review progress regarding structural adjustment, and review and monitor developments in trade. The Board also decided that, in carrying out the reviews, attention should be given to: all sectors, including agriculture, manufactures and services, and all countries; all factors relevant to the issues, including the links between international trade and balance-of-payments problems and the link between the evolution of work trade and the structure of industries; fostering greater transparency concerning policies and practices in this area; policies to facilitate structural adjustment; strengthening participation of developing countries in agro-industrial production and trade; industrial collaboration arrangements; identifying trends important to the structural adjustment process and to production; with regard to the work on non-tariff barriers, the questions relating to definitions and to dissemination of the results of the inventory; and the special problems and needs of LDCs. The Board instructed the sessional committee to consider other measures to assist developing countries to promote and diversify their exports.

States members of UNCTAD were invited to: provide information on actions relevant to agreements and commitments in Conference resolution 159(VI), to assist the Board in monitoring its implementation; continue to provide information on their experience with regard to structural adjustment; and continue to supply information for UNCTAD secretariat studies. The Board decided to follow closely progress in GATT on a more efficient safeguard system and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General and the GATT Director-General to hold consultations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/214 on the Trade and Development Board's report (see above), the Assembly called for early and full implementation of the work programme on protectionism and structural adjustment adopted by the Board in April.

When it was considering the Board's report, the Second Committee also had before it a draft resolution contained in a note by the Secretariat.<sup>(16)</sup> The draft, originally submitted in 1980 on behalf of the Group of 77<sup>(17)</sup> and revised by the sponsors in 1981,<sup>(18)</sup> was considered in 1982<sup>(19)</sup> and in 1983 when it was referred to the Assembly's 1984 session.<sup>(20)</sup>

By the draft the Assembly would have urged the developed countries to limit protectionist policies and facilitate measures to increase the share of developing countries in international trade. A table containing suggestions by some developed countries for changes in the draft was annexed to it.

In December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted decision 39/432 without vote.

Protectionism and structural adjustment

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to refer to its fortieth session for consideration the draft resolution entitled "Protectionism and structural adjustment".

General Assembly decision 39/432

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.3) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); oral proposal by Vice-Chairman; agenda item 80 (c).

Services

In accordance with part IV of Conference resolution 159(VI),<sup>(9)</sup> the Trade and Development Board at its September 1984 session considered the subject of trade in services. The Board had before it an UNCTAD secretariat study on services and the development process and a summary of that report.<sup>(21)</sup> The report noted that recent technological developments had given rise to new services and to new interlinkages among services and between goods and services, and that services in a development context had not so far been addressed. The report concentrated on two main issues: the role of services in the growth and development of the domestic economy, with special emphasis on the developing countries, particularly the least developed; and services in the international context which might be relevant to the development process. The report also examined the rationale behind regulations on services at the national and international levels and summarized the current international debate on services in governmental and non-governmental circles.

Among other documents before the Board for its discussion of this issue were: an UNCTAD secretariat report<sup>(22)</sup> containing replies from international organizations on relevant activities, including technical assistance; background reports on technology<sup>(23)</sup> and insurance;<sup>(24)</sup> and a contribution by the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations on transborder data flows in the context of services and the development process.<sup>(25)</sup>

On 21 September, the Board took note of the positions of the various groups and decided to annex to its report a draft decision on services submitted on behalf of the Group of 77. By this draft, the Board would have recognized that an improved knowledge of services in the development process was fundamental and that future UNCTAD work in the sector should safeguard and promote a self-reliant and accelerated process of development by: considering the definitional aspects of services; strengthening and refining the data base at the national, regional and international levels; carrying out further in-depth studies of the role of services in development; and providing technical assistance to member States. The UNCTAD Secretary-General would have been requested to invite UNDP and other sources to provide financial assistance for technical assistance on services.

Trade preferences

During 1984, the joint UNCTAD/UNDP technical assistance project on the generalized system of preferences came to an end and a new UNCTAD technical assistance project was launched. Discussions continued on a proposed global system of trade preferences among developing countries.

Generalized system of preferences

The Trade and Development Board's Special Committee on Preferences held its twelfth session at Geneva from 24 April to 4 May 1984<sup>(26)</sup> and had before it the UNCTAD secretariat's eighth general report on implementing the generalized system of preferences (GSP).<sup>(27)</sup> The report described changes and improvements in the system since the previous review in 1982.<sup>(28)</sup>

The report noted that total most-favoured-nation dutiable imports by preference-giving countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) amounted to $132.1 billion in 1982, of which $62.2 billion (or 47 per cent) were covered by GSP. Imports which actually received preferential treatment amounted to $27.8 billion. The addition of preferential imports into Hungary for 1980 and the USSR for 1981 would bring total preferential imports under GSP to $31.1 billion.

With regard to special tariff treatment by preference-giving countries to LDCs, the report noted that total imports of 10 OECD preference-giving countries from LDC beneficiaries amounted to an annual figure of $1,270 million in 1981-1982. However, only one third of that fell within the purview of GSP. Imports which actually received preferential treatment were valued at $115.5 million. The addition of imports from LDCs into Hungary for 1980 and the USSR for 1981 would bring total preferential imports from such countries under GSP to $291.6 million. The report observed that only a fraction of exports from LDCs were eligible under GSP, either because of narrow product coverage of agricultural products under the schemes or because officials of those countries did not have the skills and experience to deal with the complexities of the schemes and their rules of origin.

Following the general review of GSP, the Special Committee on 4 May decided to annex to its report a draft resolution submitted at its 1982 session on behalf of the Group of 77.<sup>(29)</sup>

At its April/May 1984 session, the Special Committee also considered a report<sup>(30)</sup> on technical co-operation activities in connection with GSP during 1982 and 1983.<sup>(31)</sup> The report noted that the UNCTAD/UNDP project of assistance to developing countries for the fuller utilization of GSP had expired on 31 December 1983, following a UNDP decision not to continue its funding. It would, however, continue with minimum activities until 30 June 1984, pending the launching of a new two-year technical assistance programme under a trust fund or GSP account which was to begin on 1 July (see below). The new programme would be in line with Conference resolution 159(VI).<sup>(31)</sup>

In other action, the Special Committee held consultations on harmonizing and improving the rules of origin, used to ensure that preferential tariff treatment under GSP was given only to goods originating in preference-receiving countries, and decided to recommend that the Working Group on Rules of Origin be reconvened in 1985.

Technical co-operation

During 1984, technical assistance to developing countries on utilizing GSP continued with limited funding from UNDP until 30 June, during which time the UNCTAD secretariat attempted to mobilize support for future GSP technical assistance activities. In addition to cash contributions to a newly established trust fund, assistance was provided by several States in the form of experts, seminar financing, hosting of seminar/workshop activities and certificates of origin. On 1 September, a new scaled-down UNCTAD GSP project was initiated for a period of one year.

Regional or national seminars under the aegis of the UNCTAD/UNDP project and the new UNCTAD project were held in Honduras, the Ivory Coast, Nepal, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Thailand. These seminars trained some 414 developing-country government officials who administered GSP and representatives of the private sector from 29 countries.

Trade and Development Board action. On 21 September, the Trade and Development Board took note of the report of the Special Committee on Preferences,<sup>(26)</sup> and adopted a resolution<sup>(32)</sup> in which it reiterated its invitations to UNDP to renew its financial support for the UNCTAD technical co-operation programme on GSP and invited member States to provide extrabudgetary contributions to the UNCTAD trust fund.

Global system of trade preferences among developing countries

In accordance with a 1983 Trade and Development Board resolution,<sup>(33)</sup> a meeting enabling the developing countries participating in the negotiations on a global system of trade preferences among developing countries to continue the necessary work towards the establishment of the system was held at Geneva from 14 to 25 May 1984.<sup>(34)</sup> Following an informal exchange of views on five working papers prepared by a technical group within the Group of 77, it was decided to hold a further meeting in 1984. The second meeting was held at Geneva from 8 to 19 October and a report<sup>(35)</sup> to the 1985 session of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, comprising an account of its proceedings, was adopted.

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

In accordance with a 1983 Trade and Development Board decision,<sup>(36)</sup> an ad hoc group of experts was convened at Geneva from 28 May to 1 June 1984 to consider ways of expanding trade and economic relations between countries having different economic and social systems. The group's mandate included studying the outstanding issues referred to in Conference decision 145(VI).<sup>(33)</sup>

The group had before it: a study by the UNCTAD secretariat on ways of expanding such trade and economic relations,<sup>(37)</sup> and a study on new forms of trade and economic co-operation between developing countries and the USSR,<sup>(38)</sup> prepared by an UNCTAD consultant.

In its report,<sup>(39)</sup> the 19-member group stated that, while trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems had expanded, it was not commensurate with the economic potential of the different groups of countries. UNCTAD, said the group, should study the various problems and constraints in trade and economic co-operation between the different groups and ensure implementation of its decisions aimed at expanding trade flows. A principal target would be to ensure observance of generally accepted norms of international trade as embodied in international agreements, including the United Nations Charter and GATT. Given UNCTAD's experience in assisting States to develop trade and economic relations among countries with different economic and social systems, the group considered that UNCTAD's work needed to be reinforced by concrete activities, including studies of a practical nature, giving due regard to the developments of the previous two decades in the world economy and in international economic relations.

The group also recommended: strengthening co-operation between UNCTAD and the United Nations regional commissions; additional efforts by partners in East-West trade to restore confidence in their relations; further expansion of trade and economic relations between socialist and developing countries; attention to the special problems of LDCs; improved information on foreign trade policies of trading partners and identification of unexploited trade opportunities; and intensification of UNCTAD's technical assistance activities.

The group suggested several actions by which the Trade and Development Board could act more effectively to facilitate trade and economic relations among the different groups of countries: continue efforts to finalize the informal text annexed to Conference decision 145(VI)<sup>(33)</sup> and to resolve outstanding issues in that text; continue studying ways of expanding and diversifying trade and economic co-operation among those countries; consider convening meetings of groups of experts to discuss those or similar issues; request member countries to provide more information on trade flows, commodity composition and various instruments of expansion of trade and co-operation; organize meetings among developing countries to share experience of trade promotion with socialist countries; and consider measures for better use of consultative machinery within UNCTAD.

Trade and Development Board action. In addition to the report of the ad hoc group of experts,<sup>(39)</sup> the Trade and Development Board, at its September session, had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report<sup>(40)</sup> which analysed developments in trade between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and other groups of countries. The report's annex contained statistics in tabular form. A further UNCTAD secretariat report<sup>(41)</sup> on recent developments in East-West co-operation in third countries and in tripartite co-operation evaluated the impact and benefits of that kind of co-operation for developing countries.

On 21 September,<sup>(42)</sup> the Board decided to remit to its thirty-first (1985) session the informal text annexed to Conference decision 145(VI).<sup>(33)</sup> The Board requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare studies contributing to the promotion of economic co-operation between countries having different economic and social systems, paying particular attention to trade interests of developing countries, including case-studies on the co-operation of LDCs with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and on the establishment of joint ventures and mixed companies with the participation of the enterprises of those socialist countries, in order to explore forms of and experiences in economic co-operation with the participation of countries having different systems.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was also requested to prepare an evaluation report on the UNCTAD consultative machinery and to submit it, together with proposals for improving the machinery, to the Board's thirty-first session. He was further requested to ensure adequate support for UNCTAD technical assistance projects and programmes in the area of trade of developing countries, particularly the least developed, with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, with a view to strengthening developing countries' participation in trade and economic negotiations. UNDP was invited to contribute to their financing and voluntary contributions were also invited.

In resolution 39/214 of 18 December, the General Assembly took note of the Board's decision.

Technical co-operation

During 1984, under a special arrangement set up in 1983<sup>(36)</sup> under the USSR/UNDP Trust Fund for Training in the USSR of Specialists from Developing Countries, a regional seminar was organized in Moscow and Tashkent (USSR) and Sofia (Bulgaria) in co-operation with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific. The seminar, the aim of which was to explore the potential for expanding trade between the countries of the Asia and Pacific region and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, was attended by officials from foreign trade ministries and the private business sector. A subregional seminar for senior officials from eastern and southern Africa was held at Nairobi (Kenya), Moscow and Berlin, in co-operation with the Economic Commission for Africa. The Nairobi segment was organized with the Eastern and Southern Africa Trade Promotion and Training Centre. Foreign trade policies and practices of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe were studied as were possibilities for expanding trade and economic co-operation between the two groups of countries. An expert group meeting was held in Moscow to evaluate the results of a 1983 regional seminar for Arab countries; five experts from Arab countries and six from socialist countries participated.

A UNDP-funded regional project on economic relations between Latin American countries and countries members of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance was completed in 1984. A seminar was held at Buenos Aires (Argentina) to review the project and to explore the possibilities of strengthening economic relations between the two groups of countries.

Trade promotion and facilitation

During 1984, United Nations bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and to facilitate the movement of goods in international commerce by harmonizing procedures, standardizing documents and developing new data processing and communication methods for exports, imports and transit. The main originator of technical co-operation projects in this area was the International Trade Centre (ITC). An UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts met to consider ways of eliminating restrictive business practices as barriers to trade flows.

International Trade Centre

During 1984, the International Trade Centre, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and GATT, continued its technical co-operation activities, serving as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes.<sup>(43)</sup>

ITC reported that expenditure on project implementation in 1984 remained at approximately the same level as in 1983. However, since expenditure was recorded in United States dollars, which appreciated considerably during the year, ITC activities in fact expanded. The value of UNDP-financed activities executed by ITC continued to rise, reflecting the importance attached by developing countries to improving their trade performance. The percentage share of UNDP financing in the total value of ITC activities increased, as it had in 1983.

In Africa, national projects increased from 19 to 20 in 1984 and regional projects from 9 to 13; 12 of these projects were in African LDCs. In Asia and the Pacific, country projects increased to 32 from 28, while regional projects remained at 7. In Latin America, there were 21 country projects, compared with 16 in 1983, and 10 regional projects compared with 12 the previous year. In Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East, ITC activities were again affected by limited financial resources and delays in approving new project proposals.

ITC activities regarding institutional infrastructure for trade promotion at the national level in 1984 included a comparative study of export promotion systems in selected Latin American and Caribbean countries. In addition to the study itself, guidelines were prepared on export development programmes, medium-term export strategies and the formulation of work programmes for export promotion organizations, and case-studies were prepared on export promotion systems used in the selected countries. This material was distributed to all Spanish-speaking Latin American countries.

In accordance with Conference resolution 158(VI),<sup>(44)</sup> in 1984 ITC strengthened export market development activities in the area of commodities and in support of UNCTAD's Integrated Programme for Commodities (IPC). Comprehensive, long-term research, development and training programmes, including technical co-operation project proposals, were prepared for cocoa, coconut products, coffee, jute, meat, rubber, tropical timber and vegetable oils. Through its trade information supply services, ITC's Import-Export

Contact Programme dealt with some 1,400 requests in 1984, an 8 per cent increase over 1983. ITC continued to collect and disseminate company profiles on exporters in developing countries and importers in developed and developing countries. By the end of the year, profiles in the computerized data base reached 21,000, an increase of more than 60 per cent over 1983. Fifty issues of "Trade Contacts"—studies containing both contact data on exporters/importers and selection data, such as type of activity, year of establishment, number of employees and description of products handled—were published in 1984, compared with only 13 in 1983. The UNDP-financed Market News Service consolidated its world-wide operations during 1984, with some 93 receiving centres in exporting developing countries participating. It provided numerous consulting services, mainly in Africa, to assist exporting developing countries in interpreting, analysing and locally disseminating information.

In the area of specialized national trade promotion services, a training course for packaging designers from Cuba was held at Havana, a seminar on food packaging was arranged at Karachi, Pakistan, and an export packaging symposium was held at Cairo, Egypt. Shorter presentations on packaging were given in various countries. Substantive support was also provided to a UNDP-financed export packaging development project for the 12 member countries of the Asian Packaging Federation.

With regard to multinational trade promotion, ITC continued market promotion projects for jute and jute products in Western Europe and the United States. The projects, started by ITC in 1981, were extended to cover 1984 with multi-bilateral and UNDP support. ITC continued to provide support to IPC and FAO in identifying and formulating market promotion programmes for hard fibres.

ITC's special programme of technical co-operation with LDCs focused on assisting those countries to widen their limited export product base through better use of domestic resources.

Trade promotion activities oriented to rural development included technical assistance to Bangladesh, Malawi, Senegal, Swaziland and a number of Sahelian countries.

Total ITC expenditure in 1984 was $25.4 million. Of this amount, technical co-operation activities accounted for $15 million, compared with $14.9 million in 1983. Trust fund contributions furnished $8.4 million of the 1984 amount for technical co-operation; the remainder was provided by UNDP. The Centre's 1984 regular budget of $8 million, covering operations at its Geneva headquarters, was contributed in equal parts by the United Nations and GATT. As at 31 December, ITC had a headquarters-based staff of 75 Professionals and 129 in the General Service category. It had 65 experts assigned to projects during the year.

JAG action. The Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on ITC, at its seventeenth session (Geneva, 9-16 April),<sup>(45)</sup> urged the Centre to continue efforts to increase trust fund contributions and diversify its sources of financing to ensure an expanded technical co-operation programme. Among other recommendations were: that continued attention be given to identifying products with export potential and to developing products for export; that market development publications be issued in English, French and Spanish, preferably simultaneously; that ITC implement project proposals on marketing and distribution of commodities, in accordance with Conference resolution 158(VI);<sup>(44)</sup> and that it take measures to expand direct training opportunities for developing countries. Recommended areas of emphasis for ITC activities were: promotion of trade among developing countries; integration of market and product development; and increased participation in training programmes in the socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

The Group endorsed the future orientation of ITC's global technical co-operation activities in Africa, south of the Sahara, and recommended that priority be given to its implementation.

Trade and Development Board action. On 13 September, the Trade and Development Board took note of the JAG report. By a decision of 21 September<sup>(46)</sup> on voluntary contributions to ITC, the Board welcomed the response by Governments of some donor countries to an appeal for increased resources in Conference resolution 158(VI),<sup>(44)</sup> and invited Governments to announce voluntary contributions to ITC for its activities in 1985 and 1986.

Accounts for 1982-1983

Reporting in 1984 on its audit of ITC for the biennium 1982-1983,<sup>(47)</sup> the Board of Auditors found that salaries of some staff members in 1982 had been charged to the regular budget instead of to the Programme Support Costs Fund, that the terms of reference of the Centre's Contracts Review Committee were not clearly defined, and that procurement and travel procedures were not being fully complied with.

Commenting on the Board's report, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)<sup>(48)</sup> noted that a consultant had been retained to review distribution of posts between the regular budget and the support costs budget and establish a rationale for such distribution. ACABQ recommended that the study's results be reflected in the proposed 1986-1987 programme budget. With regard to procurement practices, ACABQ urged the ITC administration to pay closer attention to all aspects of the procurement process to ensure compliance with the rules and achieve optimum use of resources.

On 13 December, by resolution 39/66, the General Assembly accepted the financial reports and accounts reviewed by the Board of Auditors of various United Nations programmes, including that of ITC, concurred with the ACABQ comments and requested the ITC Executive Director to take remedial action as required by the Board.

Trade facilitation

During 1984, the UNCTAD Special Programme on Trade Facilitation (FALPRO) continued to provide the focal point in an international network of national trade facilitation bodies and interested international organizations. Technical co-operation activities during the year included two interregional projects: a trade facilitation field programme financed by UNDP and advisory and training services in trade facilitation financed by the Swedish International Development Authority. Advisory missions were carried out in Bolivia, Colombia, Djibouti, Haiti, Paraguay and the United Republic of Tanzania. A trade facilitation symposium, attended by officials and private sector representatives from all six members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, was organized in December at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia.

Various manuals, directories and code systems in trade facilitation, established jointly by UNCTAD and the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), were maintained and updated during the year. Four issues of Trade Facilitation News were published by ECE and FALPRO in 1984.

Restrictive business practices

The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices, established as a forum for consultation on matters related to the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices, adopted in 1980,<sup>(49)</sup> held its third session at Geneva from 7 to 16 November 1984.<sup>(50)</sup>

The Group had before it revised versions of a study on collusive tendering<sup>(51)</sup> and of elements for provisions of a model law on restrictive business practices,<sup>(52)</sup> prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat. The original versions of these documents had been considered at the Group's 1983 session.<sup>(53)</sup> Other documentation prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for the Group's discussions included a study on tied purchasing,<sup>(54)</sup> a note on restrictive business practices in the services sector by consulting firms and other enterprises in relation to the design and manufacture of plant and equipment,<sup>(55)</sup> a note giving views by States and suggestions concerning the improvement and further development of the Principles and Rules,<sup>(56)</sup> a review of the implementation of technical assistance, advisory and training programmes on restrictive business practices,<sup>(57)</sup> and a note giving replies by States and regional groupings on steps taken to meet their commitments to the Principles and Rules.<sup>(58)</sup>

On 16 November, the Group adopted a resolution<sup>(59)</sup> by which it expressed concern about the resort to restrictive business practices, underlined the importance of adequate implementation of the Principles and Rules and called on States to implement them. The Group regretted that no action had been taken to implement the technical assistance, advisory and training programmes on restrictive business practices as agreed in the Principles and Rules and invited States to consider taking the issue up at the ongoing General Assembly session. International organizations and financing programmes, particularly UNDP, were urged to provide resources to finance those programmes, and all countries, particularly developed ones, were invited to make voluntary financial and other contributions. The Group requested the UNCTAD secretariat to proceed as early as possible with preparing a handbook on restrictive business practices legislation and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to arrange for publication of the revised study on collusive tendering,<sup>(51)</sup> together with the comments made during the session by regional group spokesmen. The Group noted that no information was supplied by States for the study on the use of restrictive business practices in the services sector,<sup>(55)</sup> reiterated its request to States to provide information on the issue, and requested the UNCTAD secretariat to develop the study in the light of new information provided. The secretariat was also requested to develop further the study on tied purchasing<sup>(54)</sup> in the light both of additional information to be supplied by Governments and of comments expressed at the session. The Group noted the revised draft of the model law or laws on restrictive business practices<sup>(52)</sup> and the comments made thereon during the session, and requested the secretariat to continue work on the model law taking into account the comments made and the importance which the Group attached to the handbook's preparation. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to prepare documents for the 1985 United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices and to present outlines of possible future studies.

Also on 16 November, the Group decided to annex to its report a draft resolution submitted on behalf of the Group of 77. By this draft, the Group of Experts would have agreed to make the following proposals to the 1985 Conference: to consider that the Principles and Rules be made legally binding; to recommend to the Assembly the creation of a special committee to monitor their application and implementation and devise ways to facilitate multilateral co-operation to exchange information and experience in controlling restrictive business practices; to recommend to the Assembly the convening of a conference in 1990 to review all aspects of the revised Principles and Rules; and to request the Assembly to allocate resources to carry out technical assistance activities, as decided on in the Principles and Rules.

Commodities

During 1984, several meetings were held within UNCTAD to discuss individual commodities. By resolutions 155(VI) and 156(VI),<sup>(60)</sup> UNCTAD VI had requested the convening of a special session of the Committee on Commodities to examine the role of international commodity agreements negotiated within UNCTAD and to elaborate frameworks for international co-operation in processing, marketing and distribution of commodities of export interest to developing countries, a report on which was to be submitted to the Trade and Development Board not later than 31 December 1984. In adopting a 21 September decision on the calendar of meetings,<sup>(61)</sup> the Board postponed the dates of the second special session of the Committee and the fourth session of the Permanent Sub-Committee on Commodities from their original dates of October and September 1984, respectively, to January 1985.

In a chapter on international trade and payments, the World Economic Survey 1984<sup>(2)</sup> noted that during 1983 prices for internationally traded non-fuel primary commodities had begun to recover from the sharp slide of the preceding two years. Little progress had been made to improve international institutions to stabilize prices of primary commodities, the Survey noted. In particular, the Common Fund for Commodities had not been ratified by a sufficient number of countries (see below). It was unlikely that commodity prices would experience a generalized decline in the next two years but, if international price stabilizing mechanisms were not improved during that period, commodity prices and the export earnings of developing countries could continue to exhibit wide fluctuations.

The Trade and Development Report, 1984<sup>(1)</sup> noted that prices of non-oil commodities exported by developing countries were likely to maintain an upward trend in 1984 and 1985. With the deceleration of growth foreseen in the United States for 1984-1985 and a moderate pace of recovery in the rest of the industrial world, the non-oil commodity price index was expected to rise less in those two years than in 1983. For the first and second quarters of 1984, the UNCTAD price indices of non-oil primary commodities exported by developing countries were 14.7 and 7.3 per cent higher, respectively, than during the corresponding quarters of 1983. Those increases, reflecting strengthening of tropical beverages and vegetable oil prices, and continuing depressed levels of mineral and metal prices, seemed to indicate a deceleration in the overall rise of prices.

Common Fund for Commodities

Preparations continued in 1984 on arrangements for the Common Fund for Commodities, a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing. Although additional States adhered to the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities,<sup>(62)</sup> by the end of the year it had not been ratified, accepted or approved by the required minimum of 90 States necessary for its entry into force.

Signatures and ratifications

As at 31 December 1984, the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities had been signed by 112 States and EEC, and 82 States had formally adhered by ratifying, accepting or approving it.<sup>(63)</sup> Of these, 2 States signed the Agreement and 14 adhered during 1984.

The States which adhered in 1984 were: Afghanistan, Bhutan, Brazil, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros, Greece, Italy, Nepal, Nicaragua, Samoa, Somalia, Spain, Togo. Those which signed were: Djibouti, Saint Lucia.

Report of the Secretary-General. For the General Assembly's review of the implementation of its December 1983 resolution on signature and ratification of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund,<sup>(64)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in October 1984 a report<sup>(65)</sup> on the status of that Agreement. The report recalled that the Agreement was to enter into force after: (i) it had been ratified, accepted or approved by a minimum of 90 States, accounting for at least two thirds of the Fund's directly contributed capital of $470 million; and (ii) at least 50 per cent of the $280 million target for pledges of voluntary contributions to the Second Account had been met. While the latter requirement had been met by 31 March 1982, the initial deadline for entry into force, the former requirement had not. In June 1982,<sup>(66)</sup> the deadline had been extended until 30 September 1983. As of 11 October 1984, the Agreement had been signed by 114 States and ratified, accepted or approved by 81 States, accounting for 47.3 per cent of the Fund's capital. Therefore, conditions for entry into force had not been fulfilled and it was not possible for the Fund to begin operations by 1 January 1984, as called for in UNCTAD resolution 153(VI).<sup>(67)</sup>

The report noted that, since the States that had adhered to the Agreement were empowered to decide on a new period for fulfilment of requirements for its entry into force, the UNCTAD Secretary-General would be consulting the States concerned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following discussions in the Second Committee, the Assembly, on that Committee's recommendation, adopted decision 39/434 by which it took note of the Secretary-General's report.<sup>(65)</sup>

In resolution 39/214 on the report of the Trade and Development Board, the Assembly reaffirmed the importance of the Common Fund for Commodities and urged all States to sign and ratify the Agreement establishing the Fund without delay so that the Fund would become operational.

In its Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, annexed to resolution 39/29, the Assembly noted that the heavy dependence of African countries on the export of a few primary commodities rendered them vulnerable to sharp price fluctuations resulting in drastic shortfalls in export earnings. In that regard, early and effective operation of the Common Fund required intensified international action.

Individual commodities

During 1984, the UNCTAD secretariat issued the revised versions of commodity-by-commodity processing and marketing studies, as originally called for by UNCTAD resolution 124(V).<sup>(68)</sup> The published versions included written comments on the studies by Governments and other bodies, together with comments made in the Permanent Sub-Committee on Commodities at its 1982<sup>(69)</sup> and 1983<sup>(70)</sup> sessions. Studies were issued for the following commodities: bauxite/alumina/aluminium;<sup>(71)</sup> cocoa;<sup>(72)</sup> coffee;<sup>(73)</sup> copper;<sup>(74)</sup> hard fibres (sisal and henequen);<sup>(75)</sup> jute and jute products;<sup>(76)</sup> manganese;<sup>(77)</sup> phosphates;<sup>(78)</sup> sugar;<sup>(79)</sup> and tea.<sup>(80)</sup> UNCTAD secretariat reports were also prepared on the marketing, distribution and transportation of iron ore,<sup>(81)</sup> on the processing of tin,<sup>(82)</sup> and on the marketing and distribution of tin.<sup>(83)</sup>

The studies and reports examined obstacles to increased participation by developing countries in processing, marketing and distributing the particular commodities, starting from the premise that appropriate international action in that area concerned policies to ensure that the international economic environment supported efforts to promote development. Among issues identified as seeming amenable to intergovernmental negotiation were:

control of restrictive business practices; transfer of technology and dissemination of information on techniques and suppliers; market transparency in terms of market functioning, outlets and other commercial information; investment financing; technical assistance for processing and marketing in developing countries; and reduction of tariff and non-tariff barriers facing exports of developing countries.

Agricultural commodities

Cocoa. In 1984, a United Nations Cocoa Conference was held in two parts at Geneva (7-25 May and 8 October-2 November) under the auspices of UNCTAD to negotiate a successor agreement to the 1980 International Cocoa Agreement.<sup>(84)</sup> In a note dealing with some policy issues,<sup>(85)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat stated that the effectiveness of the 1980 Agreement had been seriously weakened by the International Cocoa Council's incapacity to deal with surplus production during the Agreement's first two years, and by inadequate finance for buffer stocking. Non-membership of the leading exporter (Ivory Coast) and the leading importer (United States) constituted an additional handicap. Among the principal issues expected to arise in relation to the economic provisions of a new agreement were: the price objective; economic mechanisms; size, financing and operating arrangements of the buffer stock; and export quotas. Also before the Conference was a paper by the secretariat of the International Cocoa Organization which was adopted by the International Cocoa Council as a working document for the Conference.

At the conclusion of the first part of the Conference (May), a resolution<sup>(86)</sup> was adopted, by which the Conference, noting significant progress made in preparing a successor agreement, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to reconvene the Conference for three weeks in October, with a possible extension until 2 November, and requested the Conference President to undertake consultations to facilitate its work.

The second part of the Conference (October/November) adopted a resolution<sup>(87)</sup> by which, noting further progress in preparing a successor agreement, it reaffirmed the readiness of producing and consuming countries to complete the negotiations on a new agreement. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to maintain contacts with producing and consuming countries to assist the Conference in achieving a successful conclusion, and to reconvene the Conference for a period of three weeks, as soon as possible after mid-February 1985.

Hides and skins. In the light of UNCTAD resolution 155(VI),<sup>(60)</sup> in which the Committee on Commodities was requested to provide a forum for interested Governments to consider project proposals or other arrangements on hides and skins within the context of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, the UNCTAD secretariat in October 1984 prepared for the Committee's 1985 session a report<sup>(88)</sup> on hides and skins in raw and processed forms: features of the market and elements of a programme of developmental measures.

The report described changes in the volume, structure and pattern of international trade in hides, skins and leather over the previous two decades and compared the sector in developed and developing countries, illustrating the disparity in efficiency in the two groups of countries. Problems of the hides and skins sector in developing countries were discussed and elements of a development programme for the sector outlined. Priority areas to be covered in such a programme were: research, development and training to increase the availability and improve the quality of hides, skins and leather; improving statistical information; and improving marketing, particularly through better market intelligence and strengthening promotion activities for exports from developing countries. In implementing such a programme, the objective would be to extend and complement multilateral and bilateral technical assistance already being provided and to avoid duplication. The programme would need to differentiate between short-term projects and activities in the longer term.

The report noted that the Committee on Commodities might wish to recommend convening an ad hoc intergovernmental meeting on hides and skins to consider whether a development programme, eligible for financing from the Second Account of the Common Fund, should be instituted and what elements it should contain. Such a specialized meeting would need to make recommendations on: preparation of research and development projects; the extent to which those projects could form part of a special section of the programme on meat; and institutional arrangements for co-ordinating implementation of a programme on hides and skins.

Jute. The International Agreement on Jute and Jute Products, 1982,<sup>(89)</sup> which was negotiated and concluded in the framework of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, entered into force provisionally on 9 January 1984. Although requirements for entry into force of the Agreement on the part of exporting countries were fulfilled in 1983,<sup>(90)</sup> on the importers' side fewer than the required number of 20 countries—representing 65 per cent of net world imports—had definitively signed, ratified, accepted, approved or acceded to it.

Under the terms of the Agreement, the United Nations Secretary-General convened a meeting of Governments which had signed or ratified it, or had notified the depositary that they would apply it provisionally. The meeting (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 9 January) decided<sup>(91)</sup> to put the Agreement as a whole into effect immediately on a provisional basis, and further decided that it would enter into force definitively when its requirements had been met, without necessitating a further meeting of Governments concerned. The meeting was followed immediately by the first session of the International Jute Council, the main organ of the International Jute Organization which was established by the Agreement.

By 31 December 1984,<sup>(63)</sup> 14 importing countries had definitively signed, ratified, accepted, approved or acceded to the Agreement, while a further 8 importing countries, plus EEC, had provisionally applied it.

Sugar. At its third session (Geneva, 12 June–5 July 1984), the United Nations Sugar Conference, 1983, which had met twice that year,<sup>(90)</sup> established the text of the International Sugar Agreement, 1984.<sup>(92)</sup> On 5 July, the Conference adopted a resolution<sup>(93)</sup> by which it requested the United Nations Secretary-General to arrange for the Agreement to be open for signature at United Nations Headquarters, and invited States and intergovernmental organizations to become parties to it.

Like the International Sugar Agreement, 1973,<sup>(94)</sup> the 1984 Agreement was administrative in nature without economic provisions because of unresolved issues in connection with a regulatory mechanism to keep world sugar prices within an agreed zone. The Agreement's objectives were to further international co-operation in sugar matters and to provide a framework for the possible renegotiation of a new international sugar agreement with economic provisions.

The target date for entry into force was 1 January 1985, immediately upon expiration of the 1977 International Sugar Agreement.<sup>(95)</sup> The Agreement was opened for signature from 1 September to 31 December 1984 and was to enter into force when ratified, accepted, approved or acceded to by Governments holding 50 per cent of the votes of exporting countries and by those holding 50 per cent of the votes of importing countries. Should requirements for entry into force not be met by 1 January 1985, the Agreement was to enter into force provisionally if notifications of provisional application were deposited by Governments satisfying the above percentage requirements. Once in force, either definitively or provisionally, it would remain in force until 31 December 1986, unless terminated or extended by the International Sugar Council of the International Sugar Organization.

Tropical timber. Following the adoption of the International Tropical Timber Agreement in 1983,<sup>(90)</sup> and in accordance with a resolution adopted by the 1983 United Nations Conference on Tropical Timber,<sup>(96)</sup> the UNCTAD Secretary-General convened a meeting of the Preparatory Committee for the International Tropical Timber Council at Geneva from 2 to 6 July 1984.<sup>(97)</sup> The Preparatory Committee considered preparations for the establishment of the Council and of the International Tropical Timber Organization, envisaged under the 1983 Agreement. No consensus was reached on the location of a headquarters site for the organization and no recommendation was made regarding its Executive Director as no candidates had been put forward.

The Committee endorsed a request of the 1983 Conference for the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene the first session of the Council as soon as possible after the entry into force of the Agreement. In view of the number and importance of issues on which the Council would have to decide, the Committee recommended that the first session should be for two weeks.

On 6 July, the Preparatory Committee adopted a resolution by which it welcomed action taken by 17 Governments regarding signature and/or ratification of the 1983 Agreement and strongly urged Governments which had not done so to sign and ratify it to enable it to enter into force on 1 October 1984. Earlier, in May, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme had also urged Governments to sign and ratify it (see Chapter XVI of this section).

The Agreement was opened for signature from 2 January and was to enter into force on 1 October or any date thereafter, if 12 Governments of producing countries holding at least 55 per cent of the total votes and 16 Governments of consuming countries holding at least 70 per cent of the total votes had signed the Agreement definitively or had ratified, accepted, approved or acceded to it. As at 31 December, eight States (Denmark, Japan, Indonesia, Ireland, Malaysia, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom) had ratified or accepted the Agreement.<sup>(63)</sup> Therefore, there was insufficient adherence for the Agreement to enter into force.

Minerals and metals

Iron ore. The Third Preparatory Meeting on Iron Ore was held at Geneva from 9 to 13 April 1984<sup>(98)</sup> to review the iron ore market situation and short-term outlook, consider international measures and recommend follow-up action.

Because of the time lapse since the second preparatory meeting in 1978,<sup>(99)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat prepared a note<sup>(100)</sup> summarizing that meeting's conclusions regarding both the establishment of an annual statistical programme on iron ore and the preparation of an outline of a study of problems of the iron ore industry and the steps taken in pursuance of them. Other material prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat included a description of developments in the world iron ore market and the short-term outlook<sup>(101)</sup> and updated statistical information.<sup>(102)</sup>

In its adopted conclusions, the Meeting requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare a report indicating possible gaps in iron ore statistics and to suggest improvements in their quality and coverage; invited Governments to make proposals regarding studies to be undertaken on technological and economic factors relating to the iron ore sector; requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare a report on alternative forms of co-operation and dialogue between exporting and importing countries; and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene a fourth preparatory meeting not later than the end of 1985.

Tungsten. At its sixteenth session (Geneva, 10-14 December 1984),<sup>(103)</sup> the UNCTAD Committee on Tungsten established a sessional working group on the tungsten market situation. As requested by the Committee in 1983,<sup>(96)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat prepared a note on the establishment of such a group,<sup>(104)</sup> which examined procedural and substantive aspects and contained draft terms of reference and operating procedures, which were amended and adopted by the Committee.

Also pursuant to a 1983 request,<sup>(96)</sup> the Committee had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note<sup>(105)</sup> which reviewed developments in tungsten price indicators, structural and technological change within the industry and the demand for tungsten in key sectors. The note also reported on ways to further the Committee's work.

In order to facilitate the Committee's examination of the current tungsten market situation and outlook, the UNCTAD secretariat provided a note<sup>(106)</sup> covering developments in 1983 and part of 1984. In response to suggestions made in 1983<sup>(96)</sup> on improving the quality and timeliness of the quarterly bulletin Tungsten Statistics, the secretariat also prepared a note on that subject<sup>(107)</sup> for the Committee's consideration.

Manufactures

In response to a 1980 request of the Committee on Manufactures,<sup>(108)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat issued in 1984 a report on international trade in textiles, with special reference to the problems faced by developing countries.<sup>(109)</sup> After examining the pattern of world trade in textiles and clothing during the 1970s and restrictions on such trade, the report suggested elements to be taken into account in arresting the trend towards greater protection and discrimination and towards erosion of multilateral disciplines in the sector. It was essential for the future of the international trading system, concluded the report, that bilateralism and unilateralism be replaced by a multilateral approach based on equity and the common good.

Also at the Committee's request, the UNCTAD secretariat issued in 1984 a report on international trade in the fertilizer sector.<sup>(110)</sup> The report analysed problems related to the access to developed-country markets for exports of fertilizer products from developing countries, concentrating on tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade and on preferential treatment.

Consumer protection

During 1984, a set of draft guidelines on consumer protection, which had been considered by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in 1983,<sup>(111)</sup> was taken up again by those bodies. In accordance with a December 1983 Assembly resolution,<sup>(112)</sup> the Council, in decision 1984/101 of 10 February (see Chapter XXIV of this section), decided that an informal sessional working group of the whole should review the draft guidelines during the Council's May session and report thereon to its July session, with a view to the Assembly's adopting them in 1984.

Reporting to the July session,<sup>(113)</sup> a Council Vice-President stated that the working group, which had met from 7 to 10 May, had completed the first reading of the draft guidelines and agreed that delegations' comments made during the discussions should be made available to the Council in July. Also before the Council was an April note with a later addendum by the Secretary-General,<sup>(114)</sup> containing a synopsis of comments from 20 Governments, which were in addition to those submitted to the Assembly in 1983.<sup>(115)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1984/63, as recommended by its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

Consumer protection

Recalling further its decision 1983/174 of 28 July 1983 and General Assembly resolution 38/147 of 19 December 1983,

Finance

The debt difficulties of developing countries received particular attention during 1984 in the various United Nations bodies which considered international financial and monetary issues. At its March/April session, the Trade and Development Board reviewed the implementation of agreed features to deal with the debt problems of developing countries, and considered the debt issue again at its September session.

The interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system was another major item on the Board's agenda at both its 1984 sessions, while in December the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to carry out consultations and prepare a report for 1985 on international co-operation in money, finance, debt and resource flows, including development assistance and trade.

In May, the Economic and Social Council approved the future work programme of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters.

Financial policy

The Committee for Development Planning (CDP), meeting in May,<sup>(1)</sup> called attention to the urgent need for international action regarding reform of the international monetary and financial system, noting that there was disorder verging on chaos in several areas critical to the economic life of all nations: in currency and capital markets, in international debt and international trade, in the funding of international institutions, and in international financial flows. In particular, the debt situation, which threatened the world economy at a level of gravity not experienced since the 1930s, demanded immediate attention.

CDP drew attention to the close link between trade issues and international monetary and financial matters and noted that there was a need to consider those interrelated areas simultaneously. The need to reform the trade and payments system on the basis of the interdependence of the problems in those areas was also stressed in both the Trade and Development Report, 1984<sup>(2)</sup> and the World Economic Survey 1984<sup>(3)</sup> (see p. 528).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 39/218.

Development and international economic co-operation

The General Assembly,

Emphasizing the vital importance of issues related to money, finance, debt, resource flows and trade for development, prosperity and good relations among peoples and the urgency of measures to promote wider co-operation among nations on these issues,

Emphasizing also the need for consistency between the international trade, monetary and financing systems and policies,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to consult Governments of States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies and to ascertain their specific views on expanding international co-operation in the fields of money, finance, debt and resource flows, including development assistance and trade, with special attention to the interests of the developing countries, taking into account the effects of the economic crisis on their economic and social development;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, as well as the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, on enhancing their effectiveness to support in every respect the actions taken by States to strengthen international co-operation in these areas;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report based on the outcome of the consultations in relation to the issues referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 above to be circulated to Governments not later than the first quarter of 1985 and to be updated subsequently, as appropriate, for submission to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/218

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 123-14-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.17) by recorded vote (102-14-7), 14 December (meeting 60); draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.128); agenda item 80.

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 56, 57, 60; plenary 104.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Abstaining: Austria, Finland, Iceland, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

A draft resolution submitted by Mexico<sup>(4)</sup> on the same subject was withdrawn. By that text, the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General: to consult Governments on ways to expand international co-operation in money, finance, debt and trade, with special attention to the developing countries; to seek the opinion of the United Nations system on those subjects; and to report to the Assembly not later than at its 1985 session. He would also have been requested to prepare a report, in consultation with relevant bodies of the system, on the economic problems of developing countries, to be submitted to Governments by March 1985, and to undertake a study of proposals and reports on international monetary, financial, debt and trade problems for the 1985 Assembly. The Assembly would have decided to include an item on money, finance, debt and trade for development in its 1985 agenda.

In the Second Committee, before the vote on the Group of 77's draft, the United States proposed a draft decision by which the Assembly would have referred the Group's draft to its 1985 session. The Committee rejected the draft decision by a recorded vote of 97 to 22, with 1 abstention. Explaining its position before the vote, the USSR said that the request made to the Secretary-General in paragraph 3 of the draft resolution precluded the adoption of the measure proposed by the United States.

Explaining their votes on the approved text in the Committee, Austria, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States stated that more appropriate forums existed to discuss questions of money, finance and trade, and drew particular attention to the special sessions of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) Interim Committee and the World Bank/IMF Development Committee which were scheduled for April 1985 to consider those issues.

Finland said that a report on money, finance, debt, resource flows and trade for development should be prepared particularly carefully, a requirement not taken into account in paragraph 3 of the resolution.

Debt problems of developing countries

The international debt situation was one of three issues identified by CDP<sup>(1)</sup> as requiring the urgent attention of the international community, and recent debt crises were too numerous to be dismissed as isolated incidents. In 1983, some $70 billion of debt service was rescheduled, 10 times as much as in 1981 and 1982 combined. Of the 22 largest developing-country debtors, 10 were Latin American, 7 African and 5 Asian.

An important part of the solution to the problem, stated CDP, lay in a new and significant increase in IMF quotas to restore the Fund's resources in relation to world trade to the level of the 1960s. There was also need for a substantial increase in the World Bank's annual lending programme and hence in its net transfer.

The Trade and Development Board Report, 1984<sup>(2)</sup> stated that many proposals had been put forward regarding the way in which debt problems of developing countries might be alleviated. However, one of the more important issues was how resolving current debt difficulties could be made compatible with high and rising financial flows to debtor countries in future years. The debt problem was also closely related to the monetary policies of developed market-economy countries, the growth of activity in those economies and the access of developing countries to foreign markets. Thus the debt question could only be resolved in the context of reform of the international trade and payments system, while the system itself would inevitably be affected, and its long-term evolution influenced, by decisions regarding debt.

Trade and Development Board action. By a 6 April decision,<sup>(5)</sup> the Trade and Development Board adopted agreed conclusions on the review of the implementation of the agreed features to deal with the debt problems of developing countries contained in a 1980 Board resolution<sup>(6)</sup> and in pursuance of UNCTAD resolution 161(VI) on external debt.<sup>(7)</sup>

The agreed conclusions, annexed to the decision, stated that the review had taken place at the Board's March/April 1984 session when broader aspects of the indebtedness of developing countries were also discussed, recognizing the importance of the following: analysing those countries' difficulties in order to find solutions to them; expanding the exports of indebted countries; and enhancing international co-operation in support of policies of debtor countries which aimed to maintain or restore their creditworthiness. In order to improve implementation of the agreed features, particular attention was to be given by Governments to the following agreed points: debt rescheduling operations should be undertaken within the context of a thorough analysis; international action on debt difficulties of developing countries should be conducted flexibly to improve efficiency and timeliness; special attention should be given to rescheduling the debts of the poorer developing countries, particularly the least developed; bilateral negotiations following multilateral agreement reached in official creditor groups should be accelerated; and Governments should maintain efforts to improve implementation of the agreed features and to solve the debt problems of developing countries. The conclusions also stated that the World Bank's important role in helping developing countries formulate medium-term investment programmes and in supporting such programmes financially should be underlined and that the Board should review implementation of the guidelines, taking into account the above conclusions, in 1987.

In undertaking its review, the Board had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report<sup>(8)</sup> on the review of the implementation of the Board's 1980 resolution<sup>(6)</sup> and a note<sup>(9)</sup> giving conclusions drawn by the secretariat following consultations in pursuance of Conference resolution 161(VI).<sup>(7)</sup>

With regard to the debt and development problems of poorer developing countries, particularly the least developed, on 6 April the Board decided<sup>(10)</sup> to carry out in 1985 a review of the implementation of a 1978 Board resolution on the subject,<sup>(11)</sup> with the results of that review being taken into account during preparations for the 1985 mid-term review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (see p. 413).

Communications. Several communications dealing with the debt problems of developing countries were received by the Secretary-General in 1984. On 21 May,<sup>(12)</sup> Argentina, Brazil, Colombia and Mexico transmitted a 19 May declaration by their Presidents, proposing the adoption of measures to transform international financial and trade policy, the effect of which would include relieving the burden of indebtedness, and stressing that it was particularly necessary to establish adequate amortization and grace periods and to reduce interest rates, margins, commissions and other financial charges. A letter of 12 June<sup>(13)</sup> from Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru and Venezuela transmitted the text of a communication from their Presidents to the London Economic Summit of major industrialized countries (see p. 389). The Presidents urged that the situation and prospects of the economies of Latin America, particularly issues of trade, financing and external debt, be considered at the London talks; they stressed that the need for concerted action was particularly obvious in the case of indebtedness and that constructive dialogue between creditor and debtor countries to identify measures to relieve the external debt burden was necessary.

On 18 June,<sup>(14)</sup> Yugoslavia transmitted the text of the final statement adopted by the second session of the Interaction Council at Brioni (see also p. 389) which contained a section on the debt crisis and debt management. Measures suggested by the Council to contain annual debt repayments where they became excessive were: restriction of annual debt-service payments to an agreed maximum; consolidation of short-term debts to medium-term fixed interest bonds; multiyear rescheduling instead of shortest-term practice; capitalization of interest; and special measures as required for developing countries on a case-by-case basis.

On 26 June,<sup>(15)</sup> Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela transmitted the text of the Cartagena Consensus on the economic and financial situation of Latin America, signed by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and of Finance of those countries at Cartagena, Colombia, on 22 June. The Ministers stressed that the Latin American economic crisis was largely due to external factors, particularly the repeated increases in interest rates, which had brought about the region's grave external-debt situation. They proposed a series of measures to alleviate the debt problem, including a drastic reduction of nominal and real interest rates on international markets.

On 3 October,<sup>(16)</sup> the same countries forwarded the text of the Mar del Plata Communiqué, signed by their Foreign and Finance Ministers at Mar del Plata, Argentina, on 14 September, which supplemented the Cartagena Consensus. The Ministers noted with concern the loss of a sense of urgency in industrialized countries with respect to solving the external-debt crisis and that in recent debt-restructuring negotiations some principles stated in the Consensus regarding terms, costs and conditions had been adopted. However, it was important to seek lasting solutions to all external-debt problems so that Governments of creditor countries, multilateral financial agencies and the banking community would make contributions comparable to efforts exerted by debtor countries in their adjustment process. They felt it was essential to invite Governments of industrialized countries to participate in a direct political dialogue, to be held preferably in the first half of 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/214, the General Assembly called on the international community to continue to address the debt problems of developing countries, taking into account the agreed conclusions adopted by the Trade and Development Board on 6 April.

In its Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, annexed to resolution 39/29, the Assembly stated that Africa was experiencing a serious debt problem, repayment and servicing of which was taking a high percentage of already reduced export earnings. The Assembly indicated measures to be taken by bilateral and multilateral creditors to ease the debt burden of African countries.

Development finance

The World Economic Survey 1984<sup>(3)</sup> noted that official development assistance (ODA) had been behaving erratically during the early 1980s. In real terms, ODA receipts of developing countries were practically unchanged in 1981 and dropped sharply in 1982. There were no indications that those flows had increased in 1983. Regarding multilateral development co-operation, trends were disquieting; following a decade of rapid expansion averaging 22.5 per cent per annum, net multilateral disbursements in the 1980s were going through a phase of slow growth and, in some cases, absolute stagnation. Major donors had agreed that the delayed seventh replenishment of the International Development Association (IDA) should be at a level of $9 billion for three years, in contrast to the initially agreed $12 billion under the sixth replenishment. The tentative agreement on the second replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) reached in March 1984 indicated that contributions for 1985-1987 would not exceed those originally pledged for 1981-1983. As at the end of March 1984, pledges to the World Food Programme for 1985-1986 were less than 50 per cent of its target of $1.35 billion.

Certain efforts had been made, especially in 1983, to increase some categories of official resource transfers. The World Bank and regional development banks increased their share of total project financing and accelerated disbursement of funds. The Bank also sought to expand its structural adjustment lending and programme lending in support of sectoral adjustment. On the other hand, those departures from past practice had to be financed from regular resources, implying the need to restrict other lending programmes or acquire new capital resources.

In the report on its May 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> CDP pointed out that development assistance on concessional terms to the least developed and other low-income countries from all groups of donors had virtually stagnated, while needs had increased and alternative sources diminished. The situation of IDA was particularly alarming. The under-funding of IDA and other multilateral institutions for development finance and technical co-operation was reflected in an overall reduction in the multilateral share of total ODA flows. Analyses of the effectiveness of bilateral and multilateral ODA provided no justification for a trend towards bilateralization. Multilateral assistance, not least from the multilateral development banks, had a particularly impressive record in the poorer countries in such key areas as agriculture.

A comparison of ODA flows for 1980 to 1982 with targets set in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)<sup>(17)</sup> was contained in a report of the Secretary-General on the Strategy's review and appraisal<sup>(18)</sup> (see p. 392).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, a draft decision<sup>(19)</sup> was submitted to the General Assembly's Second Committee by Egypt on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries. By the draft, the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General urgently to consult with Governments on an international conference on money and finance for development and to report to the Assembly not later than at its fortieth (1985) session.

On 18 December, on the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted decision 39/438 without vote.

International conference on money and finance for development

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to refer to its fortieth session for consideration the draft decision entitled "International conference on money and finance for development".

General Assembly decision 39/438

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.17) without vote, 14 December (meeting 60); oral proposal by Vice-Chairman; agenda item 80.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 57, 60; plenary 104.

In its Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, annexed to resolution 39/29, the Assembly recognized that African countries required a substantial increase in concessional financial flows through bilateral donors and multilateral channels for development finance and technical co-operation. The World Bank was urged to explore possible approaches, including a special facility, in mobilizing the resources required to implement its Special Programme for Sub-Saharan Africa. Implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (see p. 413), particularly with regard to ODA, would greatly augment resource flows to many African countries, and supplementary funding of IDA and the early completion of the replenishment of IFAD would ensure maintenance of the real value of resources channelled to Africa. The modalities and quality of ODA flows in terms of a greater grant element, untied resources and simplified procedures for aid delivery should be improved through speedier disbursements and greater reliance on more flexible assistance, such as non-project programme and sector aid.

Trade-related finance

Export earnings

Pursuant to UNCTAD resolution 157(VI),<sup>(20)</sup> the UNCTAD Secretary-General convened in 1984 an expert group on the compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls. The group met at Geneva in three sessions (9-13 April, 30 July-3 August, 1 and 2 November)<sup>(21)</sup> and considered: the nature, causes and effects of export earnings instability; export earnings stabilization options; existing programmes and their limitations in dealing with commodity sector stabilization; and the need for and nature of a complementary facility for compensatory financing shortfalls.

The group stated that existing international programmes did not adequately address the causes of commodity supply instability and agreed that the reduction of such instability was desirable for the developing countries, given the importance of commodity earnings to their economies, the instability in those earnings and the deleterious impact of such instability on the economic welfare of those countries. The group also agreed that measures addressing the causes of supply instability had advantages over measures that dealt with its effects and that, while efforts by individual developing countries to deal with instability were necessary, they were likely to be of limited success without international support. A new programme should have an explicit policy objective, identified resources and built-in evaluation procedures and should be consistent with international commodity objectives and arrangements.

In considering whether a complementary compensatory financing facility could address effectively the causes of supply instability, the group emphasized two points: that its definition of compensatory finance which included supply adjustment measures was different from that used in the IMF compensatory financing facility; and that the group's focus on a facility to deal with supply instability did not mean that there could not be other useful measures to address that problem.

The group considered the following to be essential characteristics of a prototype commodity-specific facility: the principal objective would be to reduce supply instability in specific commodity sectors consonant with national and international policies and arrangements; membership would be open to all States; all primary commodities would be eligible, except for fuels, gold, diamonds and precious stones; governmental contributions along the lines of the Common Fund for Commodities would be appropriate, with voluntary contributions to cover concessionality; the facility would operate on self-financing and commercial principles; access would be limited to developing countries suffering a shortfall in earnings from a specific commodity accounting for a certain share of the country's export earnings; loans would be provided after an agreement was signed between the facility and the applicant on a programme to address the causes of the instability; and repayment would occur over a fixed maximum period.

The group thought that such a facility should not be established as an independent institution. A suitable location would be as a third account with the Common Fund for Commodities when it became operational. Should the Fund not become operational within a reasonable period, a separate window within the World Bank would be a possible arrangement.

Taxation

Following the completion in December 1983, by the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters, of a set of guidelines on international co-operation to combat international tax evasion and avoidance,<sup>(22)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council's May 1984 session a report on the work of the Ad Hoc Group.<sup>(23)</sup> The report stated that, having completed the guidelines, the Group proposed, within its terms of reference as defined in a 1982 Council resolution,<sup>(24)</sup> to: continue examining the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries, adopted by a predecessor group in 1979, and consider the experiences of countries in bilateral applications of that Model Convention; and study the possibilities of reducing potential conflicts among tax laws of various countries and of enhancing the efficiency of tax administrations and formulate suggestions regarding policy and methodology.

The Secretary-General endorsed the wish of the Group that the Council should appeal to Member States to provide information about their experiences in applying the Model Convention by replying to a Secretariat questionnaire, and in replying that they be urged to indicate which issues they would like to be studied, with a view to reducing possible incompatibilities among tax systems. He hoped that, in accordance with the Group's wish, voluntary contributions would be forthcoming to finance regional seminars on the Model Convention, to be organized by the regional commissions in co-operation with the Secretariat.

General and specific comments on the guidelines were submitted to the Council's May session by the International Chamber of Commerce,<sup>(25)</sup> a non-governmental organization.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 May 1984, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1984/114, on an oral proposal of its President.

International co-operation in tax matters

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 16 May 1984, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters and approved the recommendations contained therein.

Programme and finances of UNCTAD

The February/March 1984 session of the UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget considered the UNCTAD sections of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989, revisions to which were required due to the adoption by UNCTAD VI (1983) of resolutions affecting UNCTAD's work programme. The revisions were approved by the Economic and Social Council.

UNCTAD's technical assistance programme was also reviewed by the Working Party in 1984.

UNCTAD programme

The Trade and Development Board—the executive body of UNCTAD—held three sessions in 1984, all at Geneva. Its twenty-eighth session was held from 26 March to 6 April; its thirteenth special session from 2 to 6 April, in conjunction with the Board's twenty-eighth session, in order to consider UNCTAD's contribution to the review and appraisal by the General Assembly of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see p. 391); and its twenty-ninth session from 10 to 27 September.

The Board adopted eight resolutions and 23 decisions during 1984. The four resolutions adopted in April dealt with the UNCTAD work programme on protectionism and structural adjustment (see p. 529), assistance to Cape Verde, Uganda and Vanuatu (see pp. 474, 494, 498), timely issuance of UNCTAD documentation and the scheduling of the Board's second regular session (see below). The four resolutions adopted in September dealt with implementation of the recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region (see p. 509), financial support for the UNCTAD technical co-operation programme on the generalized system of preferences (see p. 531), technical co-operation among developing countries: co-operative exchange of skills among developing countries (see p. 460), and assistance to the peoples of Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III) and South Africa (see p. 168).

The Board's report for 1984<sup>(1)</sup> was considered by the General Assembly, which took note of it in resolution 39/214 and which on 17 and 18 December adopted seven other resolutions on various aspects of the UNCTAD programme. In these resolutions, the Assembly dealt with: the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries<sup>(2)</sup> (resolution 39/174); specific action related to the needs and problems of land-locked developing countries (39/209); development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology (39/211); specific measures in favour of island developing countries (39/212); the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships (39/213 A and B); and activities of the United Nations system in support of economic co-operation among developing countries (39/216).

Programme policy decisions

The eighth session of the Trade and Development Board's Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (Geneva, 27 February–9 March and 19 March 1984)<sup>(3)</sup> was devoted mainly to updating the UNCTAD sections of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984–1989<sup>(4)</sup> and reviewing UNCTAD technical assistance activities. Programme evaluation was also discussed.

On 19 March, the Working Party adopted agreed conclusions in which it: considered that the UNCTAD chapters of the revised medium-term plan should reflect the mandates contained in the decisions of the General Assembly and of intergovernmental bodies and conferences of UNCTAD, particularly UNCTAD VI; recommended to the Trade and Development Board that it request the UNCTAD Secretary-General to submit to the Working Party at its tenth (October 1985) session a report on implementing the medium-term plan and the programme budget for 1984–1985, containing resources committed, studies undertaken and accomplishments of the objectives of the secretariat for each subprogramme, and that it further request him to submit to the Working Party's ninth (April 1985) session a document on options for the 1986–1987 programme budget relating to redistribution of resources and to priorities; requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General, for the Working Party's 1986 review of UNCTAD technical assistance activities for 1984, to submit an updated and expanded report; and invited him to elaborate further his proposals for an effective programme evaluation system within UNCTAD for presentation to the Working Party's ninth session.

Also annexed to the Working Party's report were position papers on the updating of the medium-term plan submitted by the Group of 77 developing countries and by Group D (centrally planned economies), comments on a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on the updating of the plan<sup>(5)</sup> submitted by Group B (developed market economies) and by China, and a note by the UNCTAD secretariat on requests for documentation made in the Working Party's agreed conclusions.

On 6 April, the Trade and Development Board decided to transmit the Working Party's report, together with comments made at the Board's session, to the appropriate United Nations bodies.

Other related action. At its twenty-fourth session (New York, 23 April–1 June 1984),<sup>(6)</sup> the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) recommended that the Assembly should adopt, with a number of modifications, proposed revisions to the 1984–1989 medium-term plan<sup>(7)</sup> dealing with international trade and development finance. References to UNCTAD VI and Trade and Development Board resolutions were included in the revisions.

In resolution 1984/61 A of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the CPC conclusions and recommendations on the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan to incorporate the programme implications of resolutions and decisions adopted by intergovernmental organs or international conferences.

By resolution 39/238 of 18 December, the Assembly adopted the revisions as modified by CPC and approved by the Council.

Technical co-operation

Total project expenditure incurred by UNCTAD in 1984 for technical co-operation activities amounted to some $9.3 million. Allocations from UNDP totalling $7.2 million were the main source of funds.

The main sectors in which UNCTAD provided assistance were: maritime and multimodal transport; economic co-operation among developing countries; assistance to least developed, land-locked and island developing countries; money, finance and development; manufactures and semi-manufactures; trade in commodities; transfer of technology; insurance and reinsurance; trade among countries having different economic and social systems; and trade facilitation.

In addition to these activities, ITC continued to provide technical assistance for trade promotion (see p. 533).

The fourth annual report<sup>(8)</sup> on UNCTAD technical co-operation activities, prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for the tenth (1985) session of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget, reviewed UNCTAD's activities and their financing in detail and included a comprehensive chapter on evaluation of technical co-operation activities. The report noted two general trends in 1984: an increase in requests for assistance from developing countries for debt registration and monitoring; and an increased number of multidisciplinary projects, showing an integrated approach by Governments to national economic development.

Organizational questions

Conferences and meetings

Calendar of UNCTAD meetings

By a 6 April decision,<sup>(9)</sup> the Trade and Development Board approved a calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1984 and a tentative schedule for 1985. On 21 September,<sup>(10)</sup> following a further review, the Board approved the 1984 and 1985 calendars and the tentative schedules for 1986 and 1987.

Pursuant to 1983 discussions on holding a ministerial session during 1985,<sup>(11)</sup> the Board decided on 6 April<sup>(12)</sup> to establish an ad hoc consultative committee to consider the subject. In the light of the 19-member committee's report, the Board, at its September 1984 session, was to decide on the exact dates and the agenda for the ministerial session and the establishment of a preparatory committee.

The Ad Hoc Consultative Committee met in September.<sup>(13)</sup> It agreed that a two- to three-day ministerial meeting should be held as part of a regular Board session, preferably in autumn 1985, and that the two-item agenda would be a guideline for ministers, who would be free to discuss issues of particular concern to them. The items, which could be considered together, were: the world economic situation in the context of the interrelationship of issues and interdependence of national economies, with particular reference to development problems; and substantive issues in the areas of competence of UNCTAD.

On 21 September,<sup>(14)</sup> the Board noted the agreed conclusions of the Ad Hoc Consultative Committee and decided to establish an interim committee under the chairmanship of the Board's President and to entrust it with the mandate to seek agreement on issues where full consensus had not emerged. The Board further decided that the interim committee would comprise 19 members and would report to the Board in 1985 with a view to its deciding to hold the session in the autumn of that year and to initiating the preparatory process, and that the UNCTAD Secretary-General would be associated with all stages of that process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/214, the General Assembly welcomed the Trade and Development Board's decision and invited all Governments to exert efforts to ensure the successful outcome of the consultations.

Scheduling of Trade and Development Board meetings

On 6 April,<sup>(15)</sup> the Trade and Development Board, following consideration of a July 1983 Economic and Social Council decision<sup>(16)</sup> in which the Board was invited to consider rescheduling its meetings, and a similar request contained in a December 1983 General Assembly decision,<sup>(17)</sup> regretted that it was unable to respond positively to the Council's invitation. The Board reaffirmed that its second regular session would continue to be held in the autumn of each year, but in sufficient time for its report to be available to the Assembly in all its working languages in accordance with the Assembly's request. The matter of scheduling the Board's sessions would be reviewed subsequently in the light of the results of rationalization exercises under way in those parts of the United Nations system concerned with economic and development matters, particularly the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Following consideration of a 17 April letter<sup>(18)</sup> from the President of the Trade and Development Board informing the Economic and Social Council President of the Board's decision, the Council in July adopted decision 1984/161 without vote.

Scheduling of the sessions of the Trade and Development Board

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1984, the Council decided to authorize the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue his consultations with the President of the Trade and Development Board on the question of the scheduling of the sessions of the Board and to report thereon to the Council at its organizational session for 1985.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/161

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 23.

Appointment of UNCTAD Secretary-General

In an 18 December 1984 note<sup>(19)</sup> to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General stated that, despite consultations with the regional groups, he was not in a position to present a name for the post of Secretary-General of UNCTAD to succeed the incumbent whose term would end on 31 December. He would continue his consultations in the hope that he could present a name in early 1985. In the interim, he would appoint a senior Deputy Secretary-General of UNCTAD to act as officer-in-charge.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 39/324 without vote.

Confirmation of the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

At its 105th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly took note of the information contained in the note by the Secretary-General.

General Assembly decision 39/324

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 17 (i).

Documentation

The timely issuance of UNCTAD documentation in all official languages was taken up by the Trade and Development Board in March/April 1984. It considered a report<sup>(20)</sup> by its Ad Hoc Working Group on Documentation, established by the Board in 1983.<sup>(21)</sup>

On 4 April, the Board adopted a resolution<sup>(22)</sup> based on a draft suggested by the Working Group. By the resolution, the Board decided, with respect to Board members: that requests for documentation should be kept to a minimum; that States members should, when directing that documents be prepared, request the UNCTAD Secretary-

General to give them a time-frame in the light of the existing document work-load; that the Board should review the implementation of its 1982 decision<sup>(23)</sup> on the length of its annual report to the General Assembly, and also review the length of reports of its own subsidiary bodies; and that the Board should establish a 32-page limit for reports of its expert groups. With respect to the UNCTAD secretariat, the Board requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General: to issue, in advance of his consultations on the calendar of meetings, a status report on preparation of documents for meetings during the following six months, in order for the secretariat to co-ordinate with the United Nations Office at Geneva so that decisions regarding rescheduling of meetings could be taken in due time; and to improve arrangements within the secretariat for co-ordinating and organizing document preparation to ensure timely submission to that Office. With respect to that Office, the Board decided that UNCTAD documents should be distributed simultaneously in the official languages of UNCTAD.

The Board recognized the importance of official language versions of in-session documents being available expeditiously and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consider the issue in informal consultations and to report to the Board at its September 1984 session.

In a decision of 21 September<sup>(24)</sup> on control and limitation of documentation, the Board: decided to continue preparing an annual report to the Assembly and a fuller account of its proceedings; adopted revised guidelines, annexed to the decision, for preparing such reports, to take effect from its first session of 1985; requested the Rapporteurs of the Board and of its sessional bodies to produce succinct reports; urged representatives to be brief in their statement summaries; decided to dispense with summary records for its plenary meetings; and instructed its main Committees and other subsidiary bodies to ensure that their reports were concise and did not exceed 32 pages.

Chapter V

Transport and communications

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and its subsidiary bodies, particularly the Committee on Shipping (eleventh session, Geneva, 19-30 November) of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, continued in 1984 to deal with problems of transport.

The United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships (Geneva, 16 July-3 August) made progress in, but did not complete, preparing an international agreement, and the General Assembly, in December, agreed that the Conference meet in resumed session in 1985 (resolution 39/213 A).

In July, the Economic and Social Council called for the promotion of a system of customs transit for goods applicable world-wide (resolution 1984/79).

The outcome of World Communications Year (1983) was considered by the Committee on Information at its June/July session.

Topics related to this chapter. Development policy and economic co-operation: land-locked countries. Regional economic and social activities: Africa—Transport and Communications Decade in Africa; Asia—Transport and Communications Decade in Asia and the Pacific; Europe—Europe-Africa link through the Strait of Gibraltar.

Transport

Maritime transport

The UNCTAD secretariat, in its annual Review of Maritime Transport, 1984<sup>(1)</sup> prepared in accordance with the work programme of the Committee on Shipping,<sup>(2)</sup> stated that in 1984, for the first time in five years, the total volume of international seaborne trade increased and reached 3.3 billion tons—a 6.7 per cent rise over 1983. At the same time, the size of the world fleet declined from 686 million deadweight tons (dwt) in mid-1983 to 674.5 million dwt by mid-1984, with the fleets of developed market-economy countries undergoing the largest decrease. The low participation of developing countries in the world merchant fleet (15.9 per cent of dwt) continued to be disproportionate to their share of international seaborne trade (37 per cent); developed market-economy countries owned 75 per cent of world tonnage while generating 56 per cent of world trade.

Among other developments: the surplus of tonnage and laid-up dwt decreased from the previous year; except for liner freight and dry cargo tramp trip charter indices, freight rate indices experienced a minimal change over the 12-month period; and the proportion of freight charges to 1983 cost, insurance, freight (c.i.f.) import values for developing countries continued to be twice as high as that of developed market-economy countries (10.8 per cent and 5.4 per cent, respectively). Two liner companies introduced round-the-world container services during the last quarter of 1984.

Data on the true management and beneficial ownership of open-registry fleets between 1 July 1983 and 1 July 1984, also prepared for the Committee on Shipping by the UNCTAD secretariat<sup>(3)</sup> and covering 98.6 per cent of the dwt registered under five open-registry flags (Cyprus, the Bahamas, Bermuda, Liberia and Panama), pointed out that the total dwt registered under such arrangements increased from 202 million to 202.5 million, while the number of ships increased from 6,403 to 6,615. Tanker tonnage under flags of convenience continued to decline, from 100.9 million to 97 million dwt, while that of dry bulk and combined carriers increased from 67.6 million to 68.6 million dwt. Other ships showed a significant increase in dwt from 33.5 million to 37 million.

As in past years, three countries and one territory (Greece, Japan, the United States, Hong Kong) were true managers of 66.4 per cent and beneficial owners of 72.3 per cent of the world dwt of the open-registry fleet.

In another report,<sup>(4)</sup> prepared in response to a 1983 UNCTAD request<sup>(5)</sup> and submitted to the Committee on Shipping, the secretariat presented a draft programme of action for co-operation among developing countries in shipping, ports and multimodal transport. The report observed that the resources and capacity—in matters of finance, manpower and market access—were not equally distributed among developing countries, and that those countries, by pooling resources and entering into joint ventures and other co-operative arrangements among themselves, would be able to increase their ownership in the world tonnage and their participation in the carriage of their seaborne trade. Noting the role of shipping in the socio-economic development of developing countries, the draft programme identified, as major areas of possible co-operation, the protection of shippers' interests, provision of shipping services, development of trans-shipment ports, harmonization of port statistics and port tariffs, joint dredging and marine salvage operations, technical expertise exchange, training, harmonization of regulatory policies and administrative procedures, multi-lateral action relating to infrastructure, and establishment of multimodal transport operators (MTOs) and of regional organizations of MTOs.

Annexed to the report were the relevant recommendations, adopted at a meeting of Experts on Services Related to Trade, of the Group of 77 developing countries (Guatemala City, Guatemala, 23-27 January 1984), held in accordance with the 1981 Caracas Programme of Action.<sup>(6)</sup>

A Directory of Services for Technical Assistance in Shipping, Ports and Multimodal Transport to Developing Countries, issued in November by the UNCTAD secretariat,<sup>(7)</sup> listed bilateral and multilateral sources of such assistance.

Shipping

Committee on Shipping consideration. At the 1984 session of the Committee on Shipping, the UNCTAD Secretary-General observed that the problems in the world shipping industry—persistent overtonnaging, structural imbalances and increased protectionism—remained serious and formed part of the overall problems facing the world economy, and that there was a need to analyse the issues affecting international co-operation in shipping.

The Deputy Director of the secretariat's Shipping Division stated that, in view of the heavy workload against the increasing budgetary constraints, agreement had been reached with the International Maritime Organization secretariat on the division of work on maritime liens and mortgages and with the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law secretariat in regard to the work on rights and duties of terminal operators.

The Committee on Shipping, by a 30 November resolution<sup>(8)</sup> on co-operation among developing countries in shipping, ports and multimodal transport, decided to consider further the draft programme of action proposed by the UNCTAD secretariat (see above) and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene in 1986 an ad hoc intergovernmental group of senior officials to develop relevant proposals. It also requested the secretariat to compile an inventory of existing co-operation agreements; urged developing countries to create and strengthen regional institutional mechanisms of shippers, shipowners, port and maritime authorities for co-operation and harmonization of policies and practices; and invited UNCTAD members and international institutions to provide technical assistance and financial support for implementing co-operation programmes and projects among developing countries.

Report by the UNCTAD secretariat. The UNCTAD secretariat, in a November report to the Trade and Development Board on shipping in the context of services and the development process,<sup>(9)</sup> reviewed UNCTAD's evolving role in shipping services, discussed the role of shipping in the economy, the problems pertaining to shipping services and policy measures to alleviate them, as well as future challenges and strategies. It stated that transport and communication were a vital prerequisite for any form of economic and political integration of States, and that development in shipping contributed decisively to integrating developing countries into the world economy. It listed instability, restrictive practices, structural overtonnaging in the shipping industry and barriers to the entry of developing countries to shipping as some of the immediate problems facing Governments and the industry. According to the report, self-regulation through market forces had not proved effective because of the existing market structures and the traditional concentration of ownership of shipping; structurally built-in inertia had inhibited normal transfer of operations to shipowners from developing countries and that, coupled with the flags of convenience phenomenon, was aggravating an overtonnaging situation and structural disequilibria. It also pointed out that the universal problems facing the shipping industry had to be addressed so that developing countries could have a fair opportunity to develop their fleets.

UN conference on registration of ships

The United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships met at Geneva from 16 July to 3 August 1984<sup>(10)</sup> in pursuance of a 1982 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(11)</sup> to consider an international agreement concerning the conditions under which vessels should be accepted on national shipping registers.

A draft composite text of such an agreement—containing alternative phrasings on key issues such as manning of ships, the role of flag countries in managing shipowning companies and vessels, and equity participation in capital—had been prepared in 1983 by an Intergovernmental Preparatory Group for the Conference. The text was annexed, along with other proposals, to the report of the Preparatory Committee.<sup>(12)</sup>

Ninety-two States were represented at the Conference, and two other States participated as observers. In addition, a number of specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations were present.

Summing up the work of the Conference, its President, Lamine Fadika, Minister of Marine Affairs of the Ivory Coast, said the Conference did not complete its work as an agreement was yet to be reached on the scope of application of the future international instrument. However, consensus had emerged that the future agreement should, among other things, define certain major elements linking the vessel and the flag State, confirm that the flag State must have an adequate maritime administration and ensure under its laws and regulations access to information on those owning ships which fly its flag, and possibly contain provisions to safeguard the interests of labour-supplying countries. A composite text of the proposed agreement was annexed to the report of the Conference.<sup>(10)</sup>

The Conference, by a resolution of 3 August on its future work, agreed to hold a resumed session at Geneva from 28 January to 15 February 1985 and recommended that its President continue consultations with Governments. In December, the President submitted a report on inter-sessional consultations he had held, and proposals derived from them, for consideration by the Conference.<sup>(13)</sup> The UNCTAD secretariat estimated the cost of the resumed session at $412,000.

In an October note to the General Assembly,<sup>(14)</sup> the United Nations Secretary-General transmitted the resolution adopted by the Conference and estimated the costs of a resumed session at $448,600.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1984, under the agenda item on trade and development, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 39/213 A.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/209 of 20 December 1982, by which it decided to convene the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General on the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships,

Noting that the Conference adopted on 3 August 1984 a resolution, by which it took note of the significant progress achieved towards the preparation and adoption of an international agreement on conditions for registration of ships and recognized that there is a need for a resumed session of three weeks' duration in order to complete its work,

1. Endorses the resolution adopted on 3 August 1984 by the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships, and decides to convene a resumed session of the Conference to be held at Geneva from 28 January to 15 February 1985;

2. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to make all the necessary arrangements for holding the resumed session of the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships.

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.3) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.84); agenda item 80 (c). Financial implications. S-G, A/C.2/39/L.100, A/C.5/39/65.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 53, 56; plenary 104.

In explanation of position on the programme budget implications of the text, the United States expressed hope that the Secretary-General, when later submitting a consolidated statement of Conference-servicing requirements, would take into account the necessary appropriations for those requirements, calculated on a full-cost basis.

Convention on code of conduct for liner conferences

The Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences,<sup>(15)</sup> which entered into force in 1983,<sup>(12)</sup> had 59 States parties as at 31 December 1984.<sup>(16)</sup>

In a September note,<sup>(17)</sup> prepared for the Committee on Shipping, the UNCTAD secretariat reported on the status of the Convention as at 31 August 1984 and noted that eight countries, which had signed the Convention in 1974 and 1975, had not yet deposited with the Secretary-General an instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval. The secretariat, which was preparing a comprehensive report on national measures taken by the contracting States to implement the Code, reported that a number of them had expressed their concern about the tardiness in follow-up by many of the countries which had declared their intention to implement it.

Another secretariat report, also submitted to the Committee in May, dealt with the formulae and methods used for calculating and applying liner conferences surcharges.<sup>(18)</sup> The report highlighted problem areas, suggested elements which could be used to establish policy guidelines, and proposed, among other things, that shippers' organizations should co-operate at subregional and regional levels in order to strengthen their consultations with conferences and shipowners on surcharges and freight rates.

On 30 November,<sup>(19)</sup> the Committee on Shipping invited States members of UNCTAD which had not yet become contracting parties to the Convention to consider ratifying or acceding to it; called upon States members of UNCTAD which were contracting parties to the Convention to enter into multilateral or bilateral consultations to implement it; and requested the UNCTAD secretariat to report to the Committee in 1986 on the implementation of the Convention.

Bulk cargoes

In a September 1984 report on the participation by developing countries in the maritime transportation of dry bulk cargoes,<sup>(20)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat observed that there were indications that access to cargoes was the most important factor affecting their participation in dry bulk shipping.

The report pointed out that the dry bulk carrier fleet of developing countries increased from 3.8 million to 33.1 million dwt between 1970 and 1983, while their percentage participation in the world dry bulk fleet increased from 5.3 to 15.4 per cent. Although their participation had improved, it was still limited to a small number of countries, and the lack of participation by developing countries in Africa was particularly noticeable since many in that region had substantial dry bulk cargo export and/or import flows. A comprehensive report on that matter would be submitted to the Committee at its 1986 session.

In March, a Group of Experts on International Sea Transport of Liquid Hydrocarbons in Bulk (second session, Geneva, 30 January–3 February)<sup>(21)</sup> also submitted to the Committee a report based on information supplied by 312 companies in the hydrocarbon trade in 37 countries (of which 200 companies were importers, exporters or traders, and the others providers of shipping services) which had responded to the Group's questionnaire.

The Group unanimously agreed on recommendations for consideration by the Committee, covering: maritime legislation, administration and training; dissemination of information; clauses for sales/purchase contracts; terms of shipment; ship-broking centres; regional co-operation; ship financing; restrictive port regulations; joint ventures; and international consultations on the supply/demand situation in the tanker market.

The Committee on Shipping, on 30 November,<sup>(22)</sup> asked that States members of UNCTAD urge commercial parties involved in the sea transport of liquid hydrocarbons in bulk to implement the Group's recommendations on dissemination of information, clauses for sales/purchase contracts and terms of shipment. In addition, the Committee requested developing States members to encourage their shipping companies to develop joint ventures, and it requested the UNCTAD secretariat to report on: trends in the supply-and-demand imbalance in world shipping; progress by developing countries in the carriage of crude oil and petroleum products; ways and means of establishing on a regional basis ship-broking centres in developing countries; and recent developments in the global pattern of container shipping services. It further called on the secretariat to bring the Group of Experts' recommendation on restrictive port regulations to the attention of the International Maritime Organization (IMO); to take into account the Group's recommendations on maritime legislation, administration and training and joint ventures when updating its report on ship and port financing for developing countries; and to provide technical assistance to developing countries seeking to enact codes of maritime legislation and to set up ship registers and maritime administrations.

International shipping legislation

In 1984, the Working Group on International Shipping Legislation (tenth session, Geneva, 24 September–5 October)<sup>(23)</sup> continued its consideration of marine insurance and adopted a set of standard clauses as a non-mandatory international model for hull and cargo policies. A new item on maritime liens and mortgages was taken up by its Subgroup which urged a study of economic aspects of the question.

An Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group to Consider Means of Combating All Aspects of Maritime Fraud, Including Piracy, met at Geneva from 6 to 17 February 1984 (see below, under "Maritime fraud").

The UNCTAD secretariat submitted, in October, a report to the Committee on Shipping on the treatment of merchant vessels in ports at the regional level<sup>(24)</sup>—a topic which was last considered in depth in 1977. Of the 36 States members of UNCTAD supplying information upon request, 14 reported that such regional arrangements were in force in their national ports and two others said that the measures were in force in foreign ports. The replies indicated that the only existing arrangements were those covered by a Paris memorandum of understanding on port State control, signed in 1982 with a view to ensuring harmonized and effective implementation of relevant conventions by the maritime authorities of 14 Western European countries.

On 30 November,<sup>(25)</sup> the Committee called on States members of UNCTAD to inform the IMO and UNCTAD secretariats of actual commercial and economic consequences they had noted for their merchant ships due to port State control at the regional level; recognized the competence of UNCTAD in the area of maritime liens and mortgages; and asked the Rapporteur of the Working Group on International Shipping Legislation to submit to the Trade and Development Board in 1985 his final report on standard marine hull and cargo insurance clauses.

Ports

In October 1984, the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a progress report<sup>(26)</sup> in which it examined the principles that should underlie the measurement of port congestion and determination of such surcharges. It noted that while neither shippers nor ship operators were motivated to seek rationalization of surcharge procedures because basic freight rates were already conditioned by fluctuating market pressures, the trading community as a whole, and thus world-wide economic development, would benefit from fair surcharges and elimination of congestion. A set of principles for the levy of surcharges was suggested with comments on each principle.

Among other documents issued by the secretariat in October were: a pilot study on container terminals data,<sup>(27)</sup> as part of a possible port data bank; measures for improving port performance;<sup>(28)</sup> and outlines of the studies<sup>(29)</sup> on port financing, bulk terminals and trans-shipment.

At its 1984 session, the Committee on Shipping, by decision 54(XI) of 30 November on development and improvement of ports, requested the secretariat to complete studies on port financing, bulk terminals and trans-shipment ports and to prepare a report describing ongoing port-related training activities; invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene, not later than 1986, an ad hoc intergovernmental group of port experts to review the practical problems relevant to the development, improvement and operation of ports; and recommended the continuation and possible expansion of the UNCTAD interregional advisory service on ports.

Technical assistance and training

During 1984, the UNCTAD secretariat executed 44 technical assistance projects, financed mainly by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), as compared with 36 in 1983.<sup>(30)</sup> Those projects included advisory or sectoral support services, training, technical studies, publications, and the SHIPASSIST Directory of technical assistance available to developing countries. Eleven projects were initiated and 10 were completed. The total project budget was $2.2 million.

Seminars held during the year dealt with: port operations (Leningrad, USSR), container terminal management (Antwerp, Belgium), port statistics (Marseilles, France) and port finances (Le Havre, France). With funds contributed by the Swedish International Development Authority, training materials on port performance improvement were prepared for use by ports and port training institutes in developing countries. Seminars designed to train instructors to teach management of general cargo operations were given at Mombasa, Kenya, and Sharjah, United Arab Emirates. Under the TRAINMAR interregional training programme,<sup>(31)</sup> courses were prepared on: multimodal transport, general cargo operations and port administration, port financial management, management of container terminal operations, and cargo storage and warehousing.

By a September note,<sup>(32)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat reported on the effect of the UNDP financial crisis on UNCTAD technical assistance and training activities in shipping, ports and multimodal transport. It pointed out that fund-raising efforts had failed in setting up an advisory service and, therefore, the future financing of the central support element of TRAINMAR was at stake.

The Committee on Shipping, on 30 November,<sup>(33)</sup> requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to allocate, as a priority, the funds to carry out existing technical assistance programmes, and asked UNDP to continue financing such assistance and training projects. It also invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to communicate to UNDP the Committee's concern over the future financing of TRAINMAR.

Maritime fraud

An Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group to Consider Means of Combating All Aspects of Maritime Fraud, Including Piracy, held its first session in 1984 (Geneva, 6-17 February) and submitted a report<sup>(34)</sup> in April to the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board. It was noted at the session that an alarming increase in the number of reported cases of maritime fraud and related acts had been estimated by the shipping community to have involved $1 billion a year.

By a 17 February resolution, annexed to its report, the Group recommended that the Trade and Development Board invite States to consider adoption of suggestions by UNCTAD and others involving improved transportation, handling, storage and document procedures. It requested the Board to: recommend that States deal with acts of piracy, reconvene the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group in 1985 to finalize its work, instruct the UNCTAD secretariat to study such matters as international co-operation and the feasibility of a banking super-service scheme, and invite international and commercial organizations to study measures for combating maritime fraud and piracy.

Transport of dangerous goods

The problem of the transport of dangerous goods continued to be dealt with in 1984 by the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (thirteenth session, Geneva, 3-12 December)<sup>(35)</sup> which considered the following: amendments to, and new texts for, the United Nations Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods; activities of international organizations concerned with regulations or recommendations on the topic; and recommendations made by its Group of Rapporteurs. The Committee also considered a draft manual of tests and criteria for the classification of explosive substances and articles which had been completed by its Group of Experts on Explosives (twenty-fourth session, Geneva, 6-10 August).<sup>(36)</sup>

Multimodal and container transport

In September 1984, the UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the Committee on Shipping a report on national policy measures concerning multimodal transport operations and containerization,<sup>(37)</sup> based on information submitted by 49 mostly developing countries responding to the secretariat questionnaire. The report found that many developing countries needed assistance in preparing guidelines governing the qualifications and practices of MTOs and national regulations on multimodal transport. It urged those countries which had not yet done so to consider becoming contracting parties to the United Nations Convention on International Multimodal Transport of Goods,<sup>(38)</sup> and suggested that the Committee might consider establishing a group of governmental experts to recommend a set of related principles.

Another secretariat report to the Committee concerned adaptation to multimodal transport and containerization in developing countries.<sup>(39)</sup> In addition, it submitted notes on the use of computer software programmes in shipping companies and MTOs;<sup>(40)</sup> elaboration of a standard form and model provisions for multimodal transport documents;<sup>(41)</sup> and review of developments in the standardization of containers and related activities.<sup>(42)</sup>

A Group of Experts on Model Rules for Multimodal Container Tariffs held two sessions at Geneva (16-20 January, 7-11 May 1984) and recommended principles for developing rules for possible use by commercial parties in establishing the terms and conditions of carriage.<sup>(43)</sup> Its report with recommended principles was subsequently transmitted to the Committee on Shipping by the UNCTAD Secretary-General. The secretariat provided, in an April report,<sup>(44)</sup> examples of how the principles agreed upon by the Group at its January session appeared against the background of an existing tariff.

On 30 November,<sup>(45)</sup> the Committee on Shipping requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene a meeting of experts in 1986 to propose model rules for multimodal container tariffs consistent with the principles recommended by the Group (see above). It also requested the secretariat to: submit to the Committee at its 1986 session a final draft of a standard form and model provisions for multimodal transport documents and to prepare a report containing guidelines concerning the establishment of MTOs in developing countries; prepare a study on the economic and commercial implications of the United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea, 1978 (Hamburg Rules),<sup>(46)</sup> and the Convention on International Multimodal Transport of Goods;<sup>(38)</sup> and examine technological developments in data processing, with a view to suggesting how developing countries might introduce data processing to enhance the competitive position of their multimodal transport services.

Customs transit for goods

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

A system of customs transit for goods applicable world-wide under cover of transport international routier (TIR) carnets, which concerns the transport of merchandise by road vehicles between customs ports without inspection by customs agents, was considered by the Economic and Social Council.

On 27 July 1984, the Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1984/79.

Promotion of a system of customs transit for goods applicable world-wide

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into account the need to facilitate the international exchange of goods,

Aware of the role played by transport in the international exchange of goods,

Taking into account also the economic requirements for the facilitation of transport and, to that end, the need for a system of customs transit applicable world-wide,

Convinced that it is possible to make significant progress in this direction by the adoption of a system of customs transit to be used in all regions of the world,

Noting from the experience gained in the application of the Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets, concluded under the auspices of the United Nations at Geneva on 14 November 1975, that the TIR system can meet the criteria of world-wide application and the requirements connected with the technical possibilities of implementation,

Convinced also that the world-wide application of the TIR system could contribute to the facilitation not only of customs transit as such, but also of transport as a whole, by reducing transport costs and bringing a number of additional technical and economic advantages in the international exchange of goods,

1. Recommends that Governments which have not yet done so should consider the possibility of accepting the Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets of 14 November 1975<sup>(47)</sup> and should consequently introduce the TIR system in their national legislation and regulations;

2. Recommends also that the international, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations directly or indirectly concerned, particularly the regional commissions of the United Nations, should be encouraged to undertake the promotion of the TIR system and should endeavour to include this matter, wherever possible, in their own work programmes;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to reallocate available resources in order to make possible appropriate action with a view to promoting the world-wide application of the Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets of 14 November 1975.

ITU, the lead agency for WCY, reported that 78 countries had set up national committees to promote appreciation of communications for development and to establish priorities on investment needs. A number of seminars and meetings were held at regional and national levels, and several broadcasting organizations promoted the objectives of the Year. The WCY secretariat provided basic documentation for the national committees and made available audio-visual materials.

The Committee on Information, at its 1984 session,<sup>(4)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to make available to its 1985 session a comprehensive report on ITU activities in relation to the Year.

In resolution 39/98 A of 14 December 1984, the General Assembly approved the recommendations of the Committee including that on ITU.

Chapter VI

Industrial development

Difficult conditions of world trade were exerting unfavourable effects on the industrialization of developing countries, concluded the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) in 1984. The Conference recognized that protectionism in many countries was harmful to trade and industrial development, and agreed that it should be resisted and reversed. Furthermore, the Conference found that the broad objectives contained in the 1975 Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation<sup>(1)</sup> and the 1980 New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrialization of Developing Countries and International Co-operation for their Industrial Development<sup>(2)</sup> were far from attainment. UNIDO's goal was to assist developing countries to increase their share of world industrial production to 25 per cent in 2000; since 1975, their share had risen from 10 to 11.9 per cent.

In December 1984, the General Assembly expressed concern that the Conference had not yielded results commensurate with the problems (resolution 39/232), took note of the Conference's report (decision 39/448), and urged developed countries to pursue policies that would facilitate world industrial restructuring (resolution 39/235). It referred a draft resolution on mobilizing financial resources for industrial development to its 1985 session (decision 39/447).

The Assembly also requested that the Secretary-General continue his efforts to convert UNIDO into a United Nations specialized agency (resolution 39/231), and confirmed the appointment of the UNIDO Executive Director for an additional two years (decision 39/315).

The Executive Director stated that UNIDO's annual expenditures of between $120 million and $130 million were glaringly inadequate. Funds had to be spread thin because all countries had an equal right to request assistance from UNIDO; thus, it was currently active in 136 countries, carrying out 1,503 projects of varying complexity.

The Industrial Development Board, the principal UNIDO body, held its eighteenth session (Vienna, Austria, 2-19 May) and expressed concern at the lack of progress during the preceding four years in increasing the developing countries' share of world industrial production. The Board adopted 16 conclusions on various programme, industrial and organizational matters. They included technical assistance to Namibians (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III) and Palestinians (see p. 276), and integration of women in development (see Chapter XIX of this section). In addition, it adopted a resolution on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) (see Chapter VIII of this section). The Board's Permanent Committee held its twenty-first session (Vienna, 19-23 November).

By decision 1984/167, the Economic and Social Council in July transmitted the report of the UNIDO Board on its session as well as a report on IDDA to the General Assembly.

As a result of the admission of Brunei Darussalam to the United Nations, the Assembly added it to the list of States eligible for UNIDO Board membership (resolution 39/234).

Programme policy

During 1984, UNIDO maintained its role as the central co-ordinating organ of the United Nations system for promoting and accelerating the industrial development of developing countries. It contributed to co-operation between industrialized and developing countries, provided a forum for negotiations, encouraged investment and facilitated the transfer of technology. On the basis of studies and surveys, UNIDO helped to formulate industrial development plans in the public, co-operative and private sectors. It organized technical assistance, including training programmes and advisory services, and published industrial statistics. It carried out its activities during the year taking into account the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)<sup>(3)</sup> and related Assembly decisions and recommendations.

At the eighteenth (May 1984) session of the Industrial Development Board, the UNIDO Executive Director submitted a report<sup>(4)</sup> on progress in 1983/84 in follow-up action to the 1980 decisions of the Third General Conference and of the eleventh special session of the General Assembly on development and international economic co-operation. Because follow-up action in a number of priority areas was the subject of separate reports, the Executive Director's report contained mainly references to documents covering industrial technology, energy-related technology, development of human resources, industrial production, special measures for the least developed countries, the System of Consultations, industrial restructuring, social aspects of industrialization, industrial financing, the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, and monitoring.

The Board, on 19 May,<sup>(5)</sup> expressed concern at the lack of progress over the preceding four years in increasing the share of the developing countries in world industrial production. It recognized the importance, particularly in the current international economic situation, of financial flows to industrial development in developing countries, and requested the Executive Director to continue improving UNIDO's capacity to assist developing countries in designing industrial projects. It was unable to agree on his proposals for setting up an international bank for industrial development, and asked him to submit a report on the question in 1985.

Fourth General Conference of UNIDO

The Fourth General Conference of UNIDO was held at Vienna from 2 to 19 August 1984.<sup>(6)</sup> Representatives of 139 countries and 34 United Nations bodies, Secretariat units and specialized and other agencies attended, as well as observers from 29 intergovernmental and 33 international non-governmental organizations and four liberation movements—the African National Congress of South Africa, the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Pan-Africanist Congress of Azania and the South West Africa People's Organization. Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, also took part as a full member. (For participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

The Conference reviewed the progress and considered the prospects of industrial development vis-à-vis the Lima and New Delhi Declarations, examined national and international action in nine areas of industrial development for the period 1985-2000 identified as critical, looked at activities for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (the 1980s), proclaimed in 1980,<sup>(7)</sup> and discussed UNIDO's co-ordinating role in the United Nations system. It adopted 12 resolutions by consensus; the preamble to the report, with conclusions and recommendations, and three resolutions were adopted by vote. The Conference referred two draft resolutions to the General Assembly (see below, under "Redeployment of industrial production to developing countries" and "Industrial financing").

Preparations for the Conference

Among the 1984 regional preparatory meetings for the Conference, at which positions were discussed and formulated on the main issues of the Conference, were: the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) Preparatory Meeting of Ministers of Industry (Bangkok, Thailand, 15 and 16 March); the Seventh Conference of African Ministers of Industry, organized jointly by the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and UNIDO (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 26-28 March); a Latin American intergovernmental technical meeting (Santiago, Chile, 7-10 May); a high-level Latin American co-ordination meeting organized by the Latin American Economic System (Havana, Cuba, 22-25 May); the Sixth Conference on Industrial Development for Arab States, organized by the Arab Industrial Development Organization (AIDO) in co-operation with UNIDO (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, May); and an AIDO-organized meeting of Under-Secretaries of Ministries of Industry of Arab States (Tunis, Tunisia, 4-6 July).

In addition, the open-ended working group of the Industrial Development Board, established in 1982<sup>(8)</sup> to meet periodically and with the UNIDO secretariat to exchange information and views on Conference preparations, met on 19 January, and the Group of 77 developing countries held an interregional preparatory meeting at Vienna on 31 July and 1 August. A non-governmental organizations (NGOs) forum was held at Vienna on 6 and 7 February to elicit involvement of NGOs in the Conference. A regional workshop for African countries on the integration of women in the industrial planning and development process (Harare, Zimbabwe, 9-17 April) was the first of three such workshops to bring Conference issues to the participants and their views to the Conference; the others were for Caribbean countries (Georgetown, Guyana, 6-12 May) and Asian countries (Bangkok, 5-12 July) (see Chapter VIII of this section).

At its May 1984 session, the Industrial Development Board, which functioned as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, reviewed Conference preparations. On 19 May,<sup>(9)</sup> it took note of the preparatory arrangements and appealed to member States and international organizations for voluntary contributions to make possible the participation in the Conference of the least developed countries. Noting progress in informal consultations, held on 29 February, 28 March and 18 and 25 April under the chairmanship of the Board President, on Conference-related issues to identify areas of potential agreement on or convergence around agenda items, the Board endorsed the President's report on the consultations, to which were annexed the areas of agreement, and reconfirmed his mandate to continue consultations on procedural and substantive issues. It asked him to submit to the Conference President recommendations on outstanding procedural and organizational issues and to inform him of the outcome of consultations on substantive issues.

Work of the Conference

The Conference, following the proposal of the Industrial Development Board as Preparatory Committee, assigned various agenda items to two main committees for consideration and for preparation of draft resolutions and other decisions to be adopted by the Conference. In addition, a Drafting Committee prepared the preamble, containing the conclusions and recommendations of the Conference. The plenary Conference held a general debate jointly with its consideration of the Lima and New Delhi Declarations and Plans of Action: retrospective and perspective.

Committee I. Committee I held 15 meetings at which it considered action concerning four of the nine critical areas of industrial development for 1985-2000: the mobilization of financial resources for industrial development; world industrial restructuring and redeployment; implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs), adopted in 1981 by the United Nations Conference on LDCs;<sup>(10)</sup> and strengthening economic co-operation among developing countries. In addition, the Committee reviewed progress and proposals on how to achieve the objectives of IDDA.

On the question of mobilizing financial resources, it was agreed that access to resources was essential for existing industries, new industries and structural adjustment in developing countries. The current economic situation made it more difficult for developing countries to secure financing.

Many delegations spoke of the obstacles to industrialization arising from high debt-servicing requirements; some supported a proposal that a debt-servicing ratio of 25 per cent of total export earnings be viewed as an upper limit for developing countries. Many delegations called for increased official development assistance (ODA), with priority given to LDCs; others pointed out the complementarity of external and domestic financing, many considering that a major objective should be to increase domestic resources, particularly long-term capital, through savings incentives and appropriate taxation policies. However, many stated that domestic financing systems alone could not generate sufficient resources. Industrialized countries were urged to provide more financing on better terms and in more appropriate forms; UNIDO was urged to continue examining mechanisms for increasing the transfer of external resources to industry in a stable manner. Many supported the establishment of a bank for industrial development, but others opposed the proposal.

Industrial restructuring and redeployment were said to be issues of greater concern than ever owing to the unfavourable economic situation. Several delegations emphasized the importance of government intervention, the State's regulatory role, the benefits of State enterprises, and the advantages of long- and medium-term planning. Others stressed that the restructuring process resulted primarily from market forces and private enterprise, and Governments' role should be limited to facilitating adjustment to that process. Many referred to the negative impact of protectionism, transnational corporations and the debt burden on the restructuring process in the developing countries. Others drew attention to the need to learn from the successful domestic policies followed by certain newly industrializing countries.

General concern was expressed at the deteriorating situation confronting the least developed countries when measured against the economic growth and industrial output targets set in SNPA. Many delegations emphasized the impact of rapid population growth, natural disasters, adverse terms of trade, low rates of investment, poor agricultural performance and the failure of the manufacturing sector to contribute significantly to the economy. Several delegations mentioned the expenditure for arms of resources that could otherwise be used for industrial development. A group of countries called for extensive international supportive measures, including a doubling of ODA by 1985, the conversion of outstanding ODA loans into grants, the facilitation of technology transfer, simplification of preferential schemes, and co-operation between developing countries.

It was agreed that economic and technical co-operation for industrialization should be strengthened among developing countries; many delegations recognized that, while financial and technical support from developed countries and international organizations remained necessary, such co-operation was primarily the responsibility of developing countries themselves. South-South co-operation, many delegations emphasized, was not a substitute for North-South co-operation; the two were complementary. A number of delegations requested UNIDO to accord high priority to industrial co-operation and to play a promotional and catalytic role in that regard. Many attached particular importance to solidarity meetings, joint programmes in specific sectors, the development of standards institutes, expansion of information exchange systems, and strengthening of centres for research and training.

A review of the progress of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa highlighted concern about the crisis facing many African countries, whose economic difficulties were compounded by drought and desertification (see Chapter XVI of this section). The economic difficulties, in the view of many delegations, were due to the region's dependence on the export of a few primary commodities. World market prices for those commodities had declined, while prices for imported manufactures continued to rise; the lack of trained manpower, low productivity, underutilization of installed capacity and inadequate integration of industry with other sectors, primarily agriculture, were cited as other causes. Implementation of OAU's 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa<sup>(1)</sup> was supported by many as a means of providing a lasting solution.

Committee II. Committee II held 16 meetings at which it considered international action and national policies relating to five of the nine critical areas of industrial development for the period 1985-2000: accelerated development of human resources for industrial development; strengthening of scientific and technological capacities for industrial development; energy and industrialization; policies for domestic industrial processing of raw materials; and policies for rural development and self-sufficiency in food supplies. The Committee also discussed UNIDO's co-ordinating role within the United Nations system in industrial development. An informal drafting group formulated resolutions on the various topics.

The role of human resources in the development process was considered central by all delegations. Many spoke of the numerous difficulties in developing those resources, of the current imbalance between supply and demand of skills in developing countries, and of the "brain drain" phenomenon. It was a key responsibility of each State, according to some, to adapt training policies to its own level of industrialization, specific conditions and development policy; human resources development should be carried out as a part of broad social and economic changes. Staff retraining, the integration of women and youth in the development process, the training of trainers and the development of local entrepreneurship were recognized by some as priorities. Many called for UNIDO to expand its activities in human resources development; several supported a proposal by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) for the convening of a world conference on training.

The importance of science and technology for accelerating industrialization was emphasized by a number of delegations. While many described the useful role that private foreign investment could play in the transfer of technology to developing countries, others stressed that the public sector could strengthen those countries' technological development, in accordance with their national interests. The transfer of technology should not be used, several delegations asserted, to exert economic and political pressure or hinder international co-operation. One group of countries pointed out that the growing technology gap between developed and developing countries was bound to aggravate the imbalance in international economic relations. Many delegations referred to the implications of technological advances, such as micro-electronics, genetic engineering, biotechnology and new materials, and stressed the need for developing countries to be able to work in those areas. The value of technological information exchange systems and the need for co-ordination among United Nations bodies undertaking similar work were commented upon.

It was generally recognized that energy was a high priority in the industrialization of developing countries. Most delegations welcomed the attention given by UNIDO to energy-related activities; many underscored the importance of integrating energy plans into overall industrial, social, environmental and economic policies. The benefits of energy conservation programmes as a low-cost option producing immediate results were widely recognized. Proposals for North-South co-operation included technology transfer for the manufacture of energy equipment and for energy conservation, energy development, technical assistance and training; suggestions for South-South co-operation included the setting up of regional centres to design energy plans and conduct research on energy conservation and development of new and renewable sources of energy, the exchange of experience on technology, and joint manufacturing and marketing ventures.

There was a consensus that domestic industrial processing of raw materials would enable developing countries to improve their balance of payments, make better use of their natural resources, provide new job opportunities and contribute to overall economic development of certain areas or countries. The colonialist attitude of some countries was referred to by some delegations as the cause of the current situation, and the need for sovereignty over natural resources was pointed out. Some delegations emphasized the importance of small-scale and co-operative industries in processing domestic raw materials. Several stressed the need to process raw materials locally to facilitate the vertical integration of industries, while many said that, although they supported domestic processing in principle, it might not always be justified; only a detailed study could determine its viability.

It was generally agreed that industrial development was crucial for rural development and self-sufficiency in food supplies. Many delegations stressed the need for an integrated systems approach to tackle simultaneously problems at the multisectoral level. The social aspects of rural development and the importance of social overhead investments which, in the long run, produced economic returns were emphasized. The Committee recognized that industrialization in rural development involved both forward and backward linkages with agriculture. The interdependent nature of industrial and agricultural development was emphasized by many delegations, a number of which urged the creation of agro-industrial complexes, village industrial clusters and settlements. Great importance was attached by the Committee to the attainment of food self-sufficiency by developing countries. A group of countries emphasized the need for regional food security plans.

Committee II reaffirmed the central co-ordinating role of UNIDO in the United Nations system for activities related to industrialization, a role which many delegations felt should be strengthened. It was agreed that duplication and overlap of activities with other agencies should be avoided as much as possible. Many delegations called on member States to provide United Nations organizations with the legislative authority, through decisions of their governing bodies, to help avoid duplication of mandates and activities.

Preamble and resolutions

The preamble to the report of the Fourth General Conference contained its conclusions and recommendations. The Conference adopted the preamble on 19 August by 79 votes to 1, with 12 abstentions, as submitted by the Drafting Committee.

Reaffirming the importance of industrialization as a major factor in the development of the developing countries and in the promotion of a dynamic world economy, the Conference found that the objectives contained in the Lima and New Delhi Declarations and Plans were far from attainment. It reaffirmed the international community's commitment to SNPA and IDDA.

Since the Second General Conference in Lima in 1975,<sup>(1)</sup> the developing countries' share in world manufacturing value added had risen from 10 to 11.9 per cent. The period since the Third General Conference in New Delhi in 1980<sup>(2)</sup> had been characterized by widespread economic stagnation and crisis, which had had a particularly severe impact on developing countries. A recovery had begun in some industrialized nations, but developing countries continued to face critical situations that were adversely affecting their industrial development prospects, and industrial growth had been unevenly spread.

Rapid developments in technology, an important element in industrialization strategies, had not been fully available to developing countries; the Conference recognized the importance of facilitating the transfer of technology.

A constrictive international economic environment (recession, slack demand for exports, protectionist pressures) and difficult conditions of trade on the world market were exerting unfavourable effects on the industrialization of developing countries. Protectionism in many countries was hindering the attainment of a more just and effective international division of labour. The Conference recognized that protectionism was harmful to trade and industrial development and agreed that it should be reversed. Developed countries agreed to work towards reducing and eliminating quantitative restrictions and similar measures.

The development of developing countries, particularly in industrialization, depended on external financing; however, the current world economic situation had seen net financial outflows from a number of developing countries to developed countries. It was also necessary to reverse that situation.

Further efforts were needed to improve the functioning of the international monetary and financial systems. Donor countries should increase, if possible, their ODA, especially for LDCs and sub-Saharan countries, which were those most affected by the current economic situation.

The increasing debt-servicing burden, aggravated by high interest rates, was one of the major constraints to development. The Conference invited the international community and financial institutions to give due attention to the need for increased flows of concessional as well as non-concessional industrial finances to developing countries.

The Conference agreed on special and immediate action by the international community, and particularly the developed countries and UNIDO, to support efforts by the least developed and African countries, and to implement SNPA and IDDA more rapidly; it asked UNIDO to increase its aid to the drought-stricken areas.

Developing countries' strategies should aim at structural changes to enlarge the economic and social roles of industry and guarantee people's participation, should take cognizance of past experiences, should take into account the options and priorities they themselves had defined, should include sound domestic economic policies, and should encourage the mobilization and optimal use of human and material resources, promote internal structural change, adopt positive adjustment policies, strengthen links with other sectors of the economy, particularly agriculture, and broaden links between the public and private sectors and between small, medium-scale and large-scale industries.

The international economic system should be reformed to provide a more equitable framework for developing countries to pursue their industrialization policies, in accordance with their socio-economic structure and development level and recognizing their sovereign right to choose their policies free from external coercion. There was also a need to enhance co-operation between developing countries, and UNIDO should strengthen its role in promoting and facilitating such co-operation.

The Conference reaffirmed UNIDO's mandate to provide sustained co-operation to developing countries in their industrialization efforts. It requested UNIDO to complement the activities of regional organizations and promote joint action to maximize the effectiveness of available funds. It recognized the important function of other United Nations agencies—the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank—and regional development banks in regard to the financing of technical assistance and project preparation and implementation. It affirmed the importance of UNIDO's technical assistance activities and called for increased contributions to the Industrial Development Fund to the agreed desirable level of $50 million per annum. It also welcomed the outcome of consultations on the conversion of UNIDO into a specialized agency.

The 15 resolutions adopted by the Conference concerned the following: accelerated development of human resources for industrial development; strengthening of scientific and technological capacities for industrial development in developing countries; energy and industrialization, with special emphasis on development of energy resources and manufacture of equipment (see Chapter X of this section); domestic industrial processing of raw materials in developing countries; rural development and self-sufficiency in food supplies (see Chapter XI of this section); implementation of SNPA (see p. 415); strengthening economic co-operation among developing countries (see p. 400); IDDA (see Chapter VIII of this section); integration of women in industrial development (see Chapter XIX of this section); the Industrial Development Fund; UNIDO's co-ordinating role in the United Nations system on industrial development; immediate assistance to Lebanon for the reconstruction of its industrial sector (see p. 522); cessation of the war in the Gulf (see p. 239); technical assistance to the Palestinian people (see p. 276); and technical assistance to the southern African national liberation movements recognized by OAU (see p. 168).

Two draft resolutions, on the mobilization of financial resources for industrial development and world industrial restructuring and redeployment, were forwarded to the General Assembly for consideration.

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.4) by recorded vote (92-2-28), 10 December (meeting 58); draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.34); agenda item 80 (d).

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom.

Separate recorded votes were taken in both the Second Committee and the Assembly on section II, paragraph 2, before approval of the text as a whole. The Committee adopted the paragraph by 91 votes to 14, with 17 abstentions, and the Assembly by 117 votes to 16, with 15 abstentions.

The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 15 December, by a recorded vote of 71 to 17, with 11 abstentions, decided to inform the Assembly that an additional $1,135,000 appropriation would be required in 1985 to finance nine Senior Industrial Development Field Adviser (SIDFA) posts.

Explaining its negative vote in the Second Committee, the United States said the draft resolution was faulty because it spoke of the continuing negative impact of the world economic crisis instead of noting the positive trends in the world economy. It did not mention the domestic policy decisions that were needed for industrial development in the third world, focusing only on the developed countries' policies, it gave too negative a view of the results of the Fourth General Conference, and it allocated more than $1 million to the SIDFA Programme (see below, under "Industrial development activities"). Israel said it supported UNIDO aims but had voted against the text because section I, paragraph 3, endorsed some resolutions which it had opposed.

Japan, noting that it had abstained on the draft as a whole, explained that it voted against section II, paragraph 2, because the decision taken in 1983<sup>(12)</sup> authorizing an allocation from the United Nations regular budget for the SIDFA Programme had been in response to exceptional circumstances which no longer prevailed.

The United Kingdom also objected to financing the SIDFA Programme from the regular budget and felt that the text did not reflect a balanced assessment of the results of the Fourth General Conference.

The Ukrainian SSR, on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, said they fully supported the position of principle regarding the need to hold down budgetary growth, and had therefore been forced to vote against section II, paragraph 2, and abstain in the vote as a whole, although that did not reflect any change in their support for the national economic development plans of the developing countries.

Denmark had serious concern regarding the principles involved in, and the significant financial implications of, the text. The vote had disregarded the Committee's efforts to adopt resolutions having financial implications by consensus. The Federal Republic of Germany also said it could not go along with the financial implications.

On the same date, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 39/448.

Report of the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

General Assembly decision 39/448

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.4) without vote, 14 December (meeting 60); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 80 (d).

Work programme for 1984-1985

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) at its 1984 session (New York, 23 April-1 June)<sup>(13)</sup> reviewed the implementation of its recommendations<sup>(14)</sup> on UNIDO's 1984-1985 work programme that the Economic and Social Council had endorsed in 1983,<sup>(15)</sup> mainly those concerning proposed changes in the System of Consultations (see below, under "Industrial co-operation"). It also heard a statement by the secretariat on issues related to avoiding duplication and organizing UNIDO's work programme more rationally.

Proposed work programme for 1986-1987

The UNIDO Executive Director submitted a proposed work programme for the biennium 1986-1987<sup>(16)</sup> to the November 1984 session of the Industrial Development Board's Permanent Committee. The programme of activities focused on policy co-ordination, industrial research and research, and industrial operations, and reflected resolutions adopted at the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO. Following consideration of the proposed programme, the Permanent Committee<sup>(17)</sup> requested the Executive Director to reflect the views expressed during the session in a revised programme and to convey it to the Secretary-General.

Evaluation

A UNIDO secretariat report<sup>(18)</sup> to the Permanent Committee described the changes made in UNIDO's self-evaluation system for field projects resulting from an assessment of the system's first year of operation which began in May 1982. It also introduced a new system for evaluating group training projects. The report was updated to mid-December 1984 in the UNIDO Executive Director's annual report for 1984.<sup>(19)</sup>

From May to December 1982, 52 project evaluation reports (PERs) were prepared; in 1983, the total was 88, and in 1984, 104. In addition, 15 terminal PERs were prepared in 1982, 19 in 1983 and 18 in 1984. A gradual increase in compliance indicated that the system was becoming well established, accompanied not only by a significant improvement in the quality of information received from the field but also by an improvement in the speed and quality of headquarters feedback.

On 19 May 1984,<sup>(20)</sup> the Industrial Development Board decided that the item "Evaluation", covering all aspects, was to be included in the provisional agenda of the 1984 session of the Permanent Committee and would be discussed only once every year.

On 23 November,<sup>(17)</sup> the Permanent Committee noted with appreciation the application of the system, encouraged the secretariat to continue to improve it, including field staff training programmes and in-depth evaluation, and re-emphasized the important role of participating States in the evaluation process.

A report<sup>(21)</sup> by the Secretary-General evaluating UNIDO's technical co-operation activities in manufactures was submitted to CPC's 1984 session; a secretariat note<sup>(22)</sup> on the matter was presented to the Permanent Committee (see below, under "Industrial development activities").

Institutional machinery

Proposed organizational change

As at 31 December 1984, 138 States had signed the Constitution adopted by a United Nations conference in 1979<sup>(23)</sup> to establish UNIDO as a specialized agency; 118 had ratified, accepted or approved it.

The States that had adhered to the Constitution (the five in italics acted during 1984) were:

Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Twenty States had signed but not formally adhered to the Constitution as at 31 December (the one in italics acted during 1984):

In accordance with its article 25, the Constitution was to enter into force when at least 80 States that had deposited instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval notified the depositary (the Secretary-General) that they had agreed, after consultations among themselves, that the Constitution would enter into force. The Secretary-General said in a report to the General Assembly in August 1984<sup>(24)</sup> that consultations requested by the Assembly in December 1983<sup>(25)</sup> took place in April and May 1984 at Vienna. He said there was a consensus on the desirability of establishing the new agency on a universal basis and that an equitable geographical representation should be maintained at all secretariat levels; in addition, the agency's competent organs were expected, after it came into being, to review the totality of its operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/231.

General Assembly resolution 39/234

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.4) without vote, 10 December (meeting 58); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.130), based on informal consultations; agenda item 80 (d).

Co-ordination in the UN system

During 1984, UNIDO continued its efforts to enhance the cost-effectiveness of its co-ordination activities in the use of the United Nations system's resources for industrial development co-operation. Co-ordination activities were carried out at the policy-making, intersecretariat and country levels. UNIDO accepted 164 invitations to participate in meetings of policy-making bodies, or technical meetings, organized by other United Nations organizations; it declined 257 others because of budgetary constraints. It also took part in eight inter-secretariat co-ordinating bodies and joint technical working group meetings.

On the country level, co-ordination was pursued through the offices of United Nations resident co-ordinators, UNDP resident representatives and SIDFAS.

On 19 August 1984,<sup>(27)</sup> the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO adopted a resolution on UNIDO's co-ordinating role. It recommended that UNIDO strengthen its co-ordination with work-related United Nations, governmental, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations; strengthen promotion and facilitation of industrial co-operation between developing countries in the context of economic and technical co-operation among those countries; analyse its co-ordination activities, including objectives, costs, benefits and problems; make optimal use of existing co-ordination mechanisms; and strengthen field co-ordination in co-operation with UNDP. It also welcomed the efforts of the General Assembly to achieve more effective system-wide co-ordination through harmonization of inter-agency programmes.

An October report<sup>(28)</sup> of the secretariat to the November session of the Permanent Committee of the Industrial Development Board described industrial development co-ordination activities of UNIDO between November 1983 and October 1984. It covered co-ordination objectives, costs, benefits and problems, and noted UNIDO activities in the field of economic co-operation among developing countries. The report pointed out three basic co-ordination problems: parallel mandates of various United Nations organizations; the inadequacy of resources for carrying out through UNIDO both an industrial development technical co-operation programme and co-ordination activities; and institutional weaknesses in co-ordination machinery.

On 23 November,<sup>(17)</sup> the Permanent Committee requested the secretariat to strengthen its co-ordination role in respect of economic co-operation among developing countries in accordance with the Fourth General Conference's resolution. The Committee called on the secretariat to continue efforts to harmonize the planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation of UNIDO co-ordination activities, with a view to drawing up a co-ordination programme, and requested it to provide at its 1985 session a cost breakdown of those activities.

CPC, at its April-June 1984 session, recommended that a report on questions raised in a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(15)</sup> notably the problem of co-ordination and rationalization of UNIDO's activities, be submitted to it in 1985.

Documents control

The secretariat, in a September 1984 covering note<sup>(29)</sup> to the Permanent Committee, recalled that the General Assembly on numerous occasions had appealed to United Nations bodies to consider ways to reduce documentation; to facilitate discussion, it transmitted a note<sup>(30)</sup> by the Secretary-General containing the Assembly's decisions and recommendations on control and limitation of documentation.

On 23 November,<sup>(17)</sup> the Permanent Committee suggested that the Executive Director's annual report should serve as a reference document to avoid unnecessary reproduction, and asked him to report to its 1986 session on action taken to limit documentation.

Financial questions

UN Industrial Development Fund

In 1984, the secretariat continued to programme United Nations Industrial Development Fund (UNIDF) resources according to nine priority areas endorsed by the Industrial Development Board, which included energy-related and other industrial technology, industrial production, human resources development, special measures for LDCs, the System of Consultations, restructuring world industrial production, industrial financing, IDDA and monitoring.

Total pledges for UNIDF reached $15.7 million, an increase of about 13 per cent over 1983 pledges.

The increase related entirely to special-purpose contributions; general-purpose convertible contributions decreased by approximately 10 per cent.

Projects amounting to $11.16 million were approved, as follows: Africa, including African Arab States, $2.23 million (20 per cent); Americas, $710,000 (6.4 per cent); Arab States, excluding African Arab States, $50,000 (0.4 per cent); Asia and the Pacific, $1.49 million (13.4 per cent); Europe, $280,000 (2.5 per cent); and global and interregional, $6.4 million (57.3 per cent). A number of innovative projects were conducted. For example, in Pakistan, assistance was given in developing through genetic manipulation and genetic engineering a new species of yeast which was particularly efficient in breaking down cellulosic material, of importance in connection with the utilization of biomass.

A Symposium on Lactic Acid Fermentation in Food Industry (Mexico City, 27-29 November) considered state-of-the-art application of genetic engineering and biotechnology to fermented foods.

An Interregional Seminar on Energy Saving in the Cement Industry (Paris, 11-29 June) aimed at providing information to developing countries on energy management and conservation in that industry.

On 19 May,<sup>(31)</sup> the Industrial Development Board approved the UNIDO Executive Director's programme for UNIDF for 1985 and plan for 1985-1986,<sup>(32)</sup> and agreed to continue to delegate authority to him to approve projects for UNIDF financing in 1985 and 1986. It expressed concern about UNDP's continuing financial difficulties, which had affected UNIDO as an executing agency. Noting that contributions to the Fund had increased in 1984, but that its value had declined since its establishment, the Board urged countries to raise their contributions, with maximum flexibility, so that the Fund might achieve the desirable annual funding level of $50 million. It urged the secretariat to continue activities in the nine priority areas, particularly in projects concerning LDCs, to minimize delays in implementation and to try for greater balance between allocated and actual share of Fund-financed priority-area activities. It asked the Executive Director for annual progress reports as well as terminal reports on projects, within six months of completion, to donor and recipient States.

On 19 August,<sup>(33)</sup> the Fourth General Conference pointed out that Fund contributions remained far below the desirable target and called particularly on the developed countries to increase their contributions.

The General Assembly on 18 December, in resolution 39/232, also called for increased contributions to the Fund.

Budgetary resources

The General Assembly decided on 18 December, in resolution 39/232, that adequate resources should be provided in the UNIDO budget to implement all its mandates, particularly priority-area activities, and authorized the Secretary-General to take action towards that end.

Also on 18 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/237 A, increasing the UNIDO budget by $2,173,800 for the biennium 1984-1985, from $72,149,500 to $74,323,300.

Industrial development activities

Technical co-operation

The UNIDO technical co-operation programme amounted to $87.2 million in 1984, compared to $78 million in 1983, according to a report of the Secretary-General<sup>(1)</sup> to the UNDP Governing Council; 1,503 projects were conducted in 136 countries. Activities were funded from UNDP main programmes (64.9 per cent) and UNDP-administered trust funds (4.2 per cent), from UNIDF and other trust funds (25.9 per cent) and from the regular programme (4.2 per cent).

Approved were 633 new projects totalling $73.5 million, compared to 509 valued at $70.5 million in 1983. The total value of new project approvals for LDCs exceeded $20 million, compared to $11.1 million the previous year.

The main areas of implementation, according to the Executive Director,<sup>(2)</sup> were the chemical, engineering and agricultural industries. The main thrust of the programme continued to be on industrial planning and programming (including the preparation of feasibility studies), industrial manpower development, industrial infrastructure, agro-based industries, and promotion of small- and medium-scale industries as well as rural industries based on local resource use.

Asia and the Pacific accounted for 35.8 per cent of project delivery; Africa, including African Arab States, 34.5 per cent; Arab States, excluding African Arab States, 4.7 per cent; the Americas, 10.3 per cent; Europe, 4.2 per cent; and global and interregional projects, 10.5 per cent. Of 1,132 newly appointed experts, 258 or 22.8 per cent came from developing countries.

Chemical industries accounted for $22.1 million of technical co-operation activities; engineering industries, $13.9 million; institutional infrastructure, $10.4 million; agro-industries, $9.7 million; metallurgical industries, $6.3 million; industrial planning, $5.8 million; training, $5.7 million; feasibility studies, $4.3 million; and factory establishment, $2.9 million. About $6.1 million was allotted to related activities.

By project component, personnel accounted for $42.5 million (48.7 per cent); sub-contracts, $12.2 million (14 per cent); fellowships and training, $11.7 million (13.4 per cent); equipment, $18.6 million (21.4 per cent); and miscellaneous, $2.2 million (2.5 per cent).

In Africa, UNIDO paid increasing attention to the need of countries to reorient their industrial policies and maximize use of domestic resources; emphasis was also placed on the production of key mass-consumption goods, including pharmaceuticals, low-cost building materials and agricultural implements, processing of agricultural products, promotion of small-scale industries, use of renewable energy resources, and manpower training. In the Americas, the development of capital goods industries continued to be emphasized in a number of countries; others aimed at satisfying basic food and health care needs, optimal use of local natural resources and aid to agro-based industries. Projects in the Arab States centred on provision of industrial advisory services, improvement of the capacity utilization of industries, processing of locally available raw materials and strengthening of industrial infrastructure. In Asia and the Pacific, assistance focused on the support of strategies adopted by Governments to strengthen their economies, with continued emphasis on metallurgical, engineering and textile industries. European requests for assistance were connected mainly with the strengthening of research institutions, acquisition of sophisticated technologies and training of national staff abroad.

Under the regular programme, UNIDO's activities amounted to $3.7 million. The regular programme was used essentially for the training of personnel from developing countries, particularly LDCs, in various industries. Group training was provided in the iron and steel industry and industrial information in the USSR, in the textile industry in Belgium, in management of industrial public enterprises in Madagascar, in energy efficiency for LDCs in the Philippines, in industrial utilization of medicinal herbs in Romania and in the expansion of small industrial enterprises in the United Republic of Tanzania. UNIDO received in 1984 an additional $1 million allocation from the regular budget for IDDA and for assistance to African countries and intergovernmental organizations in the formulation and implementation of programmes for the Decade.

A revision<sup>(3)</sup> of the tentative allocations of the reduced appropriation for the UNIDO regular programme of technical co-operation (allocations based on a requested $6,823,500 were revised downward to $6,610,600) for 1984-1985 was submitted by the Executive Director to the Industrial Development Board's 1984 session. On 19 May,<sup>(4)</sup> noting with concern that the real value of the resources for the UNIDO regular programme had been declining steadily since 1980 and stressing again the programme's importance, the Board recommended to the General Assembly that its real value be maintained and approved the revised tentative allocations.

Evaluation study

The Secretary-General submitted to the 1984 session of CPC a comprehensive evaluation<sup>(5)</sup> of the UNDP-financed technical co-operation activities of UNIDO in the field of manufactures. Requested by CPC in 1980, the evaluation was based on a full staff evaluation report of 1 February 1983 prepared by three independent evaluation coordinators representing the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, UNDP and UNIDO. The Secretary-General's study reviewed the recommendations contained in the staff report in terms of their acceptability to the bodies concerned and the extent to which they were being implemented.

Fifty-nine individual proposals were put forward under seven broad recommendations: redefining the roles, responsibilities, accountability and authority of the parties of the tripartite system (Governments, UNDP and the executing agency—in this case UNIDO); expansion of the country programme concept to include problem-solving at the sectoral and subsectoral levels; measures to improve essential elements in the project cycle (problem identification, formulation and approval, implementation, completion and follow-up); improvements in recruitment, staff training and staff redeployment; measures to improve UNIDO's functioning and effectiveness; redefining UNDP staff responsibilities, and changes in project design concepts and evaluation methodology; and follow-up action.

Neither of the intergovernmental bodies concerned—UNDP's Governing Council and UNIDO's Permanent Committee—was able to arrive at a consensus on any recommendation, but expressed their views on each proposal, for or against or with reservations. The Secretary-General recommended the continued assessment of the recommendations already being implemented, proposed follow-up action on recommendations considered feasible, and suggested approaches to recommendations which required further consideration or which appeared to be currently impracticable.

CPC's discussion, at its April-June session, focused on general comments on the evaluation and the methodology employed.<sup>(6)</sup> It was generally agreed that it would not deal with the substance of specific recommendations, but would concern itself with the modalities proposed by the Secretary-General for follow-up and monitoring of UNDP's and UNIDO's responses. It felt that in some cases technical clarifications were needed regarding the classification of certain of those responses. It asked that care be taken to ensure that resources devoted to evaluation did not adversely affect programme delivery.

A report<sup>(7)</sup> by the UNDP Administrator on which of the recommendations UNDP might accept was submitted to the 1984 organizational meeting of the UNDP Governing Council; on 23 February,<sup>(8)</sup> the Council noted that many of the recommendations had already been implemented, transmitted the report to CPC, and requested the Administrator to report on further action taken or on his recommendations for action. The Administrator reported<sup>(9)</sup> to the Council's June session on 28 recommendations directed to UNDP, including proposed follow-up actions; among the actions envisaged were studies to correct problem analysis and baseline data to clarify project design standards, and the modification of project formulation guidelines and of training for programming. On 18 June,<sup>(10)</sup> the Council endorsed the Administrator's proposed course of action.

A note by the secretariat,<sup>(11)</sup> reviewing the developments that followed discussions of the staff evaluation report by the UNIDO Permanent Committee at its 1983 session,<sup>(12)</sup> was submitted to the Committee at its November 1984 session. It included comments and observations on the Economic and Social Council's 26 July resolution (see immediately below) inviting the Industrial Development Board to take action on the recommendations in the staff report, and gave information on planned and carried-out activities by the secretariat regarding those recommendations. On 23 November,<sup>(13)</sup> the Committee requested the secretariat to report to it on future developments in order to assist the Board to keep implementation of the recommendations under review.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, in considering the CPC report on its 1984 session, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/61 A on programme planning and co-ordination, section V of which dealt with the evaluation of the UNDP-financed technical co-operation activities of UNIDO in the field of manufactures.

The Council invited the governing bodies of UNIDO and UNDP: to ensure that the recommendations reported as implemented under existing procedures and policies prior to the staff report would continue to be implemented systematically and followed up; to adopt and implement the recommendations reported as feasible but for which resources were not sufficient; and to give careful consideration to recommendations reported as requiring the attention of governing bodies and member States, to those reported by secretariats as being doubtful or unacceptable, and to others inviting the keeping under review of the recommendations on redefining the roles within the tripartite system and calling attention to recommendations to which there was no response. Secretariats were to report further on the last-mentioned recommendations as well as on those reported as requiring their further attention, and Member States were invited to give careful consideration to those reported as being implemented and as requiring their attention.

Training of personnel

Expenditures for fellowships and training components in technical co-operation projects implemented by UNIDO in 1984 amounted to $11.7 million, compared to $11.4 million in 1983. Of that total, $6.3 million was spent for fellowships and study tours and $5.4 million for group training activities and meetings. A total of 196 projects were completed or being implemented.

The number of individual training programmes (fellowships) initiated in 1984 was 4.8 per cent higher than in 1983 (1,278 compared to 1,220), while the number of placement arrangements by host countries was higher by 11.1 per cent (2,166 compared to 1,949). Of those placements, 448 or 20.7 per cent were arranged in developing countries; 167 (13.1 per cent) of the trainees came from LDCs and 141 (11 per cent) were female.

Under a programme to build up institutions in developing countries to serve as training centres, training in production management techniques was transferred during 1984 from the University of Louvain in Belgium to the University of Douala in Cameroon; training activities related to institution building, the training of trainers, industry/university linkage and repair and maintenance. Cameroon agreed to share its training capacities with other French-speaking African countries as well as Lebanon to stimulate those countries to set up their own training programmes.

Special emphasis was given to the training of trainers in in-plant programmes on grain milling and storage in the USSR and on maintenance and repair of diesel engines in Czechoslovakia.

In Gabon, a multisectoral Institute of Applied Technology, Planning and Project Evaluation was established to train government officials and personnel of the Central African Customs and Economic Union. In the Ivory Coast, the Government contributed 70 per cent of the cost of strengthening the Centre ivoirien de gestion des entreprises, which offered courses and consultancy services in industrial management. In Nigeria, the Centre for Industrial Research and Development was assisted in organizing courses on the development of small-scale industry.

The Governing Council of the Association of African Development Finance Institutions approved, at Tunis in May, a five-year training programme for such institutions, aimed at fostering co-operation among them on institution building and the training of trainers from the national to the interregional level.

Industrial training activities involved the design of large-scale projects for which countries had been able to secure loans from the World Bank, including a rehabilitation programme for the sugar industry in the Sudan and extension of an industrial training and development centre in Turkey. UNIDO also co-operated with Turkey in assessing training and manpower needs with the objective of establishing a technological and manpower development centre for the iron and steel industry. In co-operation with the International Centre for Public Enterprises in Developing Countries, a group training programme was organized at Ljubljana, Yugoslavia, for manpower planning managers. A mission to selected Latin American countries identified training needs in repair and maintenance.

Within the framework of IDDA, a regional project of assistance to African countries and institutions in the development of manpower training was implemented. Egypt and Nigeria were selected on a pilot basis to host training programmes in 1985 for some 25 African managers in the foundry, sheet-metalworking and leather industries. A special training programme was developed for managers of management training institutions in African LDCs.

To enhance the role of women in the industrialization process, a workshop for the training of women industrial managers was organized (Vienna, 3-7 December) by UNIDO and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women. The establishment of a training centre for women entrepreneurs at Indor, India, was being considered by India and UNDP.

On 19 August,<sup>(14)</sup> the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO invited developing countries to make their education systems more responsive to changing industrial manpower needs and to consider establishing high-level co-ordinating bodies for human resources development programmes. They were invited to give special attention to the training of trainers and of women, youth and the disabled. It recommended that measures be taken against the brain drain and to promote the repatriation of skilled workers and professionals. It also recommended that UNIDO, with ILO, UNESCO and other United Nations agencies, help developing countries determine requirements and work out plans of action; organize training programmes for contract negotiators, energy management and the training of trainers; publish manuals, guidelines and check-lists on industrial plant maintenance; seek more expert assistance from developing countries; establish information channels between developing countries; continue efforts towards setting up international training in technology; and accord priority to African countries. It urged that developed countries increase their contributions to UNIDF for human resource development programmes for industrialization, particularly regional and subregional training centres. In addition, co-operation with development finance institutions should be strengthened, industrial projects should, where appropriate, include training as part of their costs, bilateral assistance should increasingly incorporate training programmes, assistance for travel of trainees should be provided, and contracts for the transfer of technology should include provisions for the necessary training.

Strengthening the SIDFA Programme

In 1984, the General Assembly, the Permanent Committee of the UNIDO Industrial Development Board and the UNDP Governing Council devoted considerable attention to the Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFA) Programme and its financing. SIDFAs assisted in programming and implementing technical co-operation projects.

A February 1984 report by the UNDP Administrator<sup>(15)</sup> concluded that, while SIDFAs served a vital function and enjoyed broad support in developing countries, the Programme's financial foundation remained shaky; the Administrator proposed that UNDP continue to provide financial support to the SIDFA Programme to the end of 1986. On 29 June,<sup>(16)</sup> the Governing Council approved an allocation of $2,031,000, subject to resource availability, for SIDFAs in 1986, together with any savings from previous years. It also authorized the Administrator to finance the maximum number of advisers possible; urged continued consultations with UNIDO and recipient countries on cost-sharing; urged continued close collaboration of SIDFAs with other United Nations agency field representatives; reaffirmed that priority be given in the provision of SIDFA services to those countries which had shared in their cost; appealed for voluntary contributions to increase SIDFAs; and asked the Administrator to report in 1985 on the current and future development of sectoral support, and to ensure that sectoral advisers were associated with the preparation of round-table meetings for LDCs.

On 19 May,<sup>(17)</sup> the Industrial Development Board decided that the SIDFA Programme would be discussed by the Permanent Committee at its November session. A September report<sup>(18)</sup> by the Executive Director on the UNIDO network of SIDFAs included a statistical breakdown of SIDFAs contracted by region since 1967, and information on the Programme's financial situation and perspectives for 1985 and 1986. The Permanent Committee noted on 23 November<sup>(19)</sup> that the available resources might decline, invited the UNDP Council to explore ways of locating additional resources, renewed an appeal to all member States, particularly developed countries, to make contributions, and requested the Executive Director to seek additional resources. The Committee stressed that the Programme should be maintained in 1985 at 30 posts and recommended that the General Assembly consider the question. The Executive Director was to report on progress to the Board in 1985.

In December, the Assembly, in section II of resolution 39/232, appealed to developed countries to provide maximum contributions for the SIDFA Programme, and decided that in 1985 provision would be made in the regular budget for maintaining the existing number of SIDFA posts. Paragraph 2 of section II, deciding on the 1985 budget provision, was adopted by recorded vote in the Second Committee and the Assembly (for votes and explanations of vote see above, under "Programme and finances of UNIDO"). Subsequently, the Assembly granted UNIDO an additional $1,135,000 from the regular budget for 1985 to finance nine SIDFA posts.

Contributions to SIDFA had been received in the past from Austria, Finland and Japan. Italy announced a contribution in 1984, the details of which were to be negotiated. Some developing countries had also contributed to UNDP for the local cost of SIDFA offices; others were indirectly contributing to the SIDFA Programme by sharing the cost of UNDP offices.

At the end of 1984, 29 SIDFAs and one project manager acting as a SIDFA were in place. A second regional SIDFA meeting for Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico City, 10-15 December) analysed UNIDO activities in the region and identified ways SIDFAs might strengthen them.

Despite budgetary constraints, the Junior Professional Officer (JPO) programme, which supported UNIDO technical co-operation projects, was expanded in 1984; 22 new JPOs were recruited, and the number of JPOs was increased to 65, from 55 in 1983. A training course in project design, formulation and evaluation, attended by 13 JPOs and representatives of several donor countries, was held in November. At the end of the year, the programme was receiving support from Belgium, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland.

Special Industrial Services

The Special Industrial Services (SIS) programme enabled UNIDO to meet urgent requests for assistance from developing countries by providing them with high-level advisory missions.

During 1984, 86 new projects were approved and 25 projects were extended at a cost of $2.7 million. Assistance was provided mainly to the metallurgical and chemical industries, agro-industries, engineering industries and factory establishment and management.

In Ethiopia, SIS drew up a rehabilitation and development plan for a fibreboard plant. In the Cook Islands, it studied the possibilities of creating a cottage industry for salt production. In Mongolia, it repaired and calibrated tensile testing machinery at a leather research centre at Ulan Bator. In Bolivia, technical problems at a glass factory were diagnosed and a plan for improvements formulated. In the Dominican Republic, recommendations were made in connection with the introduction of new technology at a sugar plant. In Sierra Leone, the operations of a garment manufacturing plant were brought up to date.

Industrial co-operation

System of Consultations

The Industrial Development Board began an appraisal of the System of Consultations, a mechanism for identifying possible areas for technical co-operation, at its May 1984 session and decided to continue the appraisal in 1985. The secretariat undertook to examine the implementation of recommendations made by the consultation meetings, to discover areas of strength and weakness, and to consider possible corrective measures. Problems in co-ordination had come to light and possibilities had been identified for greater interaction between member States and the secretariat.

Three sectoral consultations were held in 1984: on the fertilizer industry (the fourth on this topic), on the leather and leather products industry (third) and on the food-processing industry with special emphasis on vegetable oils and fats (second), bringing to 24 the number of consultation meetings since 1977.

On 19 May 1984,<sup>(19)</sup> the Board took note of the UNIDO Executive Director's report on the 1983 consultations.<sup>(20)</sup> Responding to a July 1983 request by the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(21)</sup> the Board decided that work on wood and the wood products industry and on industrial financing should continue and that the question of including pesticides within the System of Consultations was to be taken up in 1985. The Board endorsed a proposed co-sponsorship with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements of the first consultation on the building materials industry. To obtain a better appraisal of the System, it requested the UNIDO Executive Director to provide, each biennium, detailed information on expenditure for its activities, and invited member States to transmit to him their views on possible improvements; the Board President was asked to organize informal open-ended meetings with member States to exchange views on the States' suggestions. To ensure greater participation by LDCs in consultation meetings, the General Assembly should determine the sources from which to pay the costs for 50 representatives from those countries in 1984-1985.

On 23 May,<sup>(22)</sup> CPC took note of the Board's decision when it considered the UNIDO work programme for 1984-1985. Following a statement by the secretariat on implementation of its 1983 suggestions<sup>(20)</sup> on revising or merging various programme elements of the System of Consultations, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(21)</sup> CPC said it regretted it had not been provided with the requested report on that programme. CPC agreed that the financial aspects should be considered by ACABQ, and recommended that UNIDO continue to see to the improvement of the System, taking into account the views of the developing countries concerned.

On 18 December, in adopting resolution 39/235 on world industrial restructuring and redeployment, the General Assembly recommended that the System of Consultations should cover industrial sectors of particular interest to developing countries, hold more regional consultation meetings, in particular in relation to IDDA, seek to identify specific areas and forms of co-operation, and explore ways to promote industrial co-operation at subregional, regional and international levels.

Co-operation among developing countries

UNIDO activities to promote economic and technical co-operation among developing countries during 1984 again focused on: organizing solidarity ministerial meetings in LDCs and round-table ministerial meetings, to bring together developing countries for the promotion of industrial development; following up decisions made at such meetings; developing joint programmes for specific industrial subsectors; implementing recommendations reached through the System of Consultations (see above); and developing a work programme based on the recommendations adopted by the 1981 High Level Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries.<sup>(23)</sup> Particular emphasis was placed on activities in support of IDDA.

Solidarity meetings were organized in Yemen (25-30 March) and Rwanda (5-8 June) in 1984. Offers of assistance to Yemen included grants from Oman and Algeria for specific projects; training from India; expert services in cotton ginning and shelling from China; and a feasibility study of the tannery industry from Yugoslavia. Offers of assistance to Rwanda were received for pre-investment and feasibility studies, training and provision of equipment, such as an offer by China to carry out a study on the production of cement bags and an offer by Yugoslavia to assist in the establishment of industrial estates.

In co-operation with ESCAP, a seminar for promoting co-operation in manufacturing and popularization of agricultural machinery, tools and equipment was held in China from 8 to 25 May. A joint UNIDO/Yugoslavia programme at the fifty-first International Agricultural Fair (Novi Sad, 14-17 May) promoted co-operation in the development of agro-industries with emphasis on food processing. Regional workshops on the integration of women in the industrial planning and development process (Harare, 9-17 April; Georgetown, 6-12 May; Bangkok, 5-12 July) considered joint activities, an improved information flow, and possible joint information networks. Orientation visits and exchanges of experience continued to form part of the co-operation programme of UNIDO.

A new approach to co-operation between two or more countries in programmes financed under trust-fund arrangements was studied. An agreement was concluded between China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in December, under which Chinese manufacturing enterprises would provide directly, or through UNIDO, plant operational personnel in the iron and steel and petrochemical industries.

On 19 August,<sup>(24)</sup> the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO adopted a resolution recommending that the developing countries co-operate in sharing information and facilitating the flow of human, scientific, energy and financial resources as well as increasing direct investment among themselves and increasing South-South trade. It invited the developed countries to support economic co-operation among developing countries through increased contributions to UNDP and UNIDF. It requested UNIDO to accord high priority to and support more actively industrial co-operation among developing countries and assist their efforts undertaken for such purposes as planning industrial development and carrying out studies on industrial technology, coordinating industrialization policies and carrying out consultations, exchanging information, studying and adopting industrial agreements, establishing joint ventures, promoting investments, increasing capital investment flow and establishing regional consultancy networks. It also requested UNIDO to improve its programme of solidarity ministerial meetings for LDCs, strengthen its technological information exchange mechanisms and project development services, and arrange joint industrial investment promotion ventures. (See also p. 400.)

International trade aspects

Work on trade and trade-related aspects of industrial collaboration was conducted during 1984 as a complement to activities carried out in implementing the recommendations of sectoral consultations. Activities relating to contractual arrangements between enterprises included the preparation of check-lists, guidelines and model forms of agreements for the fertilizer, petrochemical, pharmaceutical, agricultural machinery, leather and leather products and food-processing industries as well as training. An exchange of information took place with other international institutions whose work touched on similarly relevant areas.

A report<sup>(25)</sup> on industrial collaboration at the enterprise level reviewed its main characteristics and the factors conducive to its further development.

On 19 May,<sup>(19)</sup> following its consideration of the System of Consultations (see above), the Industrial Development Board reconfirmed a 1982 Board decision<sup>(26)</sup> to examine further joint UNC-TAD/UNIDO work on trade and trade-related aspects of industrial collaboration arrangements, and asked the Executive Director to report to it in 1985.

Industrial co-operation contracts

UNCITRAL activities. The Working Group on the New International Economic Order of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL), at its fifth session (New York, 23 January-3 February 1984),<sup>(27)</sup> considered draft chapters of the legal guide on drawing up international contracts for the supply and construction of industrial works. The chapters dealt with variation clauses, assignment, suspension of construction, termination, inspection and tests, failure to perform and damages. The guide's format also was discussed. There was general agreement that work on the guide should proceed as quickly as possible and that whenever feasible the Working Group should hold two sessions every year.

At its sixth session (Vienna, 10-20 September),<sup>(28)</sup> the Working Group took up additional chapters of the guide. These covered the scope and quality of works, completion, acceptance and take-over, allocation of risk of loss or damage, liquidated damages and penalty clauses, insurance, sub-contracting, and security for performance. The UNCITRAL Secretary stated that the secretariat would submit to the Group's seventh session in 1985 a revised draft outline of the guide's structure that would reflect the Group's deliberations and contain some rearrangement and amalgamation of certain chapters.

At its June/July session,<sup>(29)</sup> UNCITRAL expressed satisfaction with the work on the guide thus far, and agreed that two sessions of the Working Group should be held before the Commission's 1985 session. (See also LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI.)

Industrial development of LDCs

UNIDO continued its efforts in 1984 to assist LDCs, with the main thrust of technical co-operation programmes focusing on industrial planning and programming (including the preparation of pre-feasibility and feasibility studies), industrial manpower development, industrial infrastructure, agro-based industries, and promotion of small- and medium-scale as well as rural industries based on the utilization of local resources.

Despite financial constraints, new project approvals increased significantly in 1984 compared to 1983, although some of the UNDP-financed projects had been developed in 1983 or earlier but constraints had deferred their approval.

UNIDO continued to try to mobilize additional resources through contacts with such agencies as the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), the World Bank and regional financial institutions. Co-operation with UNCDF led to the development of additional projects to be carried out by UNIDO and funded jointly by UNCDF and UNDP, two of which were approved in 1984. A number of projects developed in co-operation with the World Bank were being implemented.

Financial support was provided to enable the representatives of LDCs to participate at consultation meetings on fertilizers, leather and leather products and food processing (see above). UNIDO fielded seven programme review and six project formulation missions in a number of LDCs.

As part of UNIDO's advisory services, an investment promotion meeting was held at Kathmandu, Nepal (4-7 June); a portfolio of projects was distributed to financial institutions and private investors attending the meeting. Within its energy programme, UNIDO provided technical assistance to the Niger in developing improved cooking stoves, and conducted studies on the establishment of a mini-hydroelectric plant and a unit for the promotion of solar equipment in Mali. Preparatory work also was initiated to develop mini-hydroelectric plants for rural areas in selected LDCs in Africa. In manpower development, UNIDO accorded high priority to group training programmes and seminars designed for LDCs, covering small-scale foundry operations, energy conservation, medicinal plants, project preparation and evaluation, and management of small-scale industries. Projects in water management, agricultural implement production and energy were begun in the Sudano-Sahelian zone and two projects in building materials were initiated in Chad. UNIDO completed three studies on resource-based industries, bringing the total to 11, and also completed two country industrial development reviews.

On 19 May,<sup>(30)</sup> the Industrial Development Board expressed concern about the continued limitation of resources for the UNIDO programme of technical co-operation for LDCs, and reiterated its call on the industrialized countries in particular to increase their contributions to UNIDF, with flexibility of use, and to raise special-purpose contributions for the Fund component on special measures for industrial development of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries. It requested the secretariat to contribute to and participate in the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs,<sup>(31)</sup> scheduled for 1985.

Serious concern was expressed at the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO about the continuing deterioration of the economic and social situation of LDCs, the low level of industrialization and the slow growth in manufacturing value added in those countries.

On 19 August,<sup>(32)</sup> the Conference reaffirmed the commitment of the international community to SNPA, called on countries to facilitate the transfer of technology and provide assistance to LDCs, and recommended the promotion of co-operation between LDCs and other developing countries. It requested UNIDO to strengthen further its programme for LDCs and its capacity to assist them in formulating industrial policies, to assist in the establishment of pilot plants and other instruments to promote technology suited to their needs and in studying LDC potential in raw materials processing, to co-operate more closely with UNDP and other organizations in organizing round-table conferences of consultative groups, and to improve the efficiency of and expand its solidarity meetings for LDCs. (See also p. 415.)

Redeployment of industrial production to developing countries

In a February 1984 report<sup>(33)</sup> to the Industrial Development Board, the Executive Director gave a global overview of the findings of UNIDO studies in 1983 on industrial redeployment and restructuring. He stated that the pace and scope of structural adjustment were being constrained by worldwide low economic growth, structural rigidities and social considerations in developed countries and inefficiencies in resource allocations and other constraints in developing countries. Development in third world countries was being hampered by prevailing uncertainties, trade and industrial policies, and the large gaps between existing and optimum industrial structures and between available and required resources. Both export-oriented industrial development and endeavours to upgrade production structures were being restrained by falling export earnings in developing countries and protectionism in developed countries.

He concluded that it would seem crucial to support national restructuring efforts, to formulate international and regional approaches, to identify new modes of co-operation reflecting the need for technological upgrading and rehabilitation of industry in developing countries and the need for market access in developed countries, and to establish schemes for South-South co-operation.

On 19 May,<sup>(34)</sup> the Board reaffirmed the continuing need for UNIDO to study the process of restructuring world industrial production, urged member States to facilitate restructuring through international co-operation, and requested the Executive Director to report in 1985 on how UNIDO could strengthen its role.

In a letter of 17 September,<sup>(35)</sup> the President of the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO transmitted to the Secretary-General for consideration by the General Assembly a draft resolution on world industrial restructuring and redeployment which had been considered by the Conference; in spite of several efforts, Conference Committee I had been unable to produce a text acceptable for adoption by the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Second Committee was informed on 14 December that a consensus had been reached, following informal consultations, on the text of the draft resolution on world industrial restructuring which had been referred to the Assembly by the Fourth General Conference.

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted the consensus text without vote as resolution 39/235.

World industrial restructuring and redeployment

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation, in which were laid down the main measures and principles for industrial development and co-operation within the framework of the establishment of the new international economic order, and the New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrialization of Developing Countries and International Co-operation for their Industrial Development, in which a strategy was spelt out for the further industrialization of developing countries,

Recalling that the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation elaborated a framework for global industrial restructuring and redeployment and established a target for the developing countries' share of world industrial production,

Reaffirming that the attainment of the targets contained in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, aimed at, inter alia, raising the share of the developing countries in world industrial production in accordance with the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action, calls for far-reaching changes in the structure of world production,

Further reaffirming that policies that maintain internationally less competitive industries through subsidies and other protective measures should be avoided, thus facilitating redeployment of such industries from developed to developing countries,

Bearing in mind that new technological advances and the current global economic situation require innovative approaches to world industrial restructuring,

Stressing the importance of redeployment of industry from industrialized to developing countries on the principle of dynamic comparative advantage, in conjunction with structural adjustment, and reaffirming that restructuring and redeployment should be carried out in accordance with the national policies and priorities of Member States, in particular of the developing countries,

Affirming that industrial restructuring as a long-term process should encompass not only the establishment of manufacturing capacities in the developing countries but also the capacity to manage, expand, adapt and direct industrial development as part of their national development process,

Recalling resolution 159(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in which it stressed the importance of access to international markets for products of developing countries,

Bearing in mind the importance of economic and social effects of restructuring and redeployment,

Recalling that the System of Consultations, as an important and established activity of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, is, inter alia, a valuable framework for identifying problems associated with the industrialization of developing countries, for considering ways and means at the national, regional and international levels to accelerate their industrialization and for fostering closer industrial co-operation among member countries, in accordance with the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action, as well as other relevant conclusions, decisions and resolutions agreed upon in the past by the United Nations,

Convinced that industrial financing is a key factor in this context in each case,

Stressing that the appraisal of the System of Consultations initiated by the Industrial Development Board at its eighteenth session should result in the improving of the System and in making it more result-oriented in order to achieve its fundamental objectives as laid down in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action, and in the principles, objectives and characteristics of the System of Consultations,

Affirming that the System of Consultations should provide avenues for the exchange of information and views and therefrom, inter alia, to the identification of specific areas and forms of co-operation, and would also permit negotiations among interested parties, at their request, at the same time as or after the Consultations,

Recognizing the increasing interdependence of all countries of the world as a base of international economic co-operation,

1. Invites developing countries to co-ordinate their efforts and policies in order to facilitate world industrial restructuring and redeployment;

2. Calls upon developing countries to promote their own regional multinational enterprises for the implementation of industrial projects of common interest;

3. Urges developed countries to pursue appropriate positive adjustment policies and measures that facilitate world industrial restructuring with minimal disruptions, which policies should seek to avoid negative effects on the industrial development of developing countries;

4. Invites the developed countries to fulfil their commitments to halt protectionism by fully implementing and strictly adhering to the stand-still provisions they have accepted, in particular concerning imports from developing countries, and to work systematically towards reducing and eliminating quantitative restrictions and measures having similar effect and to support efforts by developing countries to attain full utilization of industrial capacity, with importance being attached by interested countries to the promotion of foreign and domestic investment through an adequate and mutually beneficial framework for investment;

5. Requests the United Nations Industrial Development Organization:

(a) To strengthen its activities in the fields of technical assistance, feasibility studies, advisory services, analysis of opportunities, assistance in the formulation of national development programmes and investment promotion in sectors in which industrial restructuring is taking place, in order to facilitate industrial restructuring and redeployment;

(b) To improve its ability to respond adequately and promptly to requests from Member States for information relating to industrial restructuring and related policies and, for this purpose, to maintain close collaboration with the relevant United Nations bodies and organizations working in this field, as well as with relevant economic research institutes;

(c) To continue, in accordance with its mandate, to work in close co-operation and collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and relevant international organizations in industrial restructuring and redeployment;

(d) To continue to prepare case studies on social and economic implications of industrial restructuring and redeployment in developing countries;

6. Recommends that the System of Consultations should:

(a) Cover industrial sectors of particular interest to developing countries;

(b) Hold more regional consultation meetings, in particular in relation to the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, within the agreed framework for the System;

(c) Seek to identify specific areas and forms of co-operation;

(d) Explore means and practical measures for the promotion of industrial co-operation at subregional, regional and international levels;

7. Recommends strengthening the Investment Promotion Services of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization by continuing, where appropriate, to build a network of national promotion centres in developed and developing countries; that these services should actively mobilize outside resources for identified investment projects, especially those related to the implementation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, maintain close co-ordination with developing countries' industrial development programmes and promote projects falling within the national objectives and priorities of developing countries.

General Assembly resolution 39/235

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.4) without vote, 14 December (meeting 60); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.140), based on informal consultations on draft referred by Fourth General Conference of UNIDO (ID/CONF.5/C.1/L.13); agenda item 80 (d).

The Ukrainian SSR, on behalf of the Eastern European States, pointed out that, although they had not opposed the adoption of the draft, those States believed that proposals to intensify investment activities should be considered solely in the context of assistance to developing countries; the vain attempts by certain Western countries during the informal consultations on the draft to convince other delegations of the "great importance" of foreign investments were inadmissible. Neither the System of Consultations nor any other UNIDO activity should be used as a means for private foreign capital to penetrate developing countries' economies.

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 39/446.

World industrial restructuring and redeployment

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, requested the Secretary-General to issue the text of resolution 39/235 as an addendum to the report of the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

General Assembly decision 39/446

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.4) without vote, 14 December (meeting 60); oral proposal by Vice-Chairman; agenda item 80 (d).

Industrial financing

On 19 May,<sup>(19)</sup> the Industrial Development Board decided, with respect to the work programme of the System of Consultations (see above), that work on industrial financing should be pursued with regard to each sector on which consultations had been scheduled.

The President of the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO in September forwarded to the Secretary-General<sup>(35)</sup> a draft resolution on mobilization of financial resources for industrial development on which no consensus agreement had been reached, with a request that the General Assembly consider it at its 1984 session. By the draft, the Conference, in agreed provisions, would have: recommended that consideration be given to providing adequate financial support for the developing countries to meet their industrialization needs and that developed countries promote increased investment in the developing countries; invited member States to consider promoting agreements on co-production, joint ventures, export-oriented manufacturing and the incorporation of technology through licensing and engineering contracts; and urged developed countries to implement their commitments on aid volume as set out in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade<sup>(36)</sup> and SNPA.<sup>(31)</sup> It would have urged the international community to intensify financial and technical co-operation with African countries and regional and subregional industrial development organizations. It also would have requested UNIDO: to co-operate increasingly with regional organizations and international financial institutions, particularly the World Bank; to prepare projects for consideration by multilateral development institutions; to continue its studies of the industrial investment requirements of selected developing countries and assist them, especially LDCs, to design industrial projects that would attract domestic and foreign resources; and to study mechanisms used by developed and developing countries for mobilizing savings and utilizing financial resources effectively.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote decision 39/447.

Mobilization of financial resources for industrial development

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to refer to its fortieth session for consideration the draft resolution entitled "Mobilization of financial resources for industrial development", annexed to the letter dated 17 September 1984 from the President of the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to the Secretary-General.

General Assembly decision 39/447

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.4) without vote, 14 December (meeting 60); oral proposal by Vice-Chairman; agenda item 80 (d).

Proposed international bank for industrial development

At its May 1984 session, the Industrial Development Board again considered a 1981 proposal<sup>(37)</sup> by the UNIDO Executive Director for the establishment of an international bank for industrial development. The Board was unable to come to an agreement, and requested<sup>(38)</sup> the Executive Director to submit a report on the question in 1985 in the light of deliberations at the Fourth General Conference.

Investment promotion

The network of UNIDO Investment Promotion Services, almost exclusively supported by host country contributions, made it possible for developing countries to have direct access to technological, managerial and financial sources in industrialized countries. Currently, UNIDO had Services in Cologne, New York, Paris, Tokyo, Vienna, Warsaw and Zurich. The Brussels Service was phased out at the end of October. Negotiations were under way for a Service to be opened in Milan, Italy, in 1985, as well as in Seoul, Republic of Korea, and discussions were under way with Brazil, India, Mexico and countries of the Gulf region. The Tokyo Service was again extended, to 30 June 1986.

During the year, the Services launched 47 industrial projects in 26 developing countries with a known total investment value of about $165 million. Sixteen country presentation meetings were organized for Cameroon, the Caribbean countries, Chile, China, Nepal, Senegal, Sri Lanka, the South Pacific countries and Uruguay; representatives of developing countries met with industrialists, financiers and members of professional and government institutions and informed them about their countries' material and human resources, investment laws and potential investment sectors and projects.

Five national and regional investment promotion meetings (investors' forums) were held for Nepal (Kathmandu, 4-7 June), Colombia (Bogotá, 2-5 July), Caribbean countries (Bridgetown, Barbados, 22-25 October), the South Pacific (Suva, Fiji, 26-30 November) and west Africa (Dakar, Senegal, 3-6 December). At the Kathmandu meeting, 51 industrial investment projects were discussed, resulting in the signing of 16 letters of intent. The investors' forum at Bogotá considered 97 projects. The Caribbean meeting discussed 177 proposals and concluded with the signing of at least 15 letters of intent, while the South Pacific meeting took up 109 proposals and some 30 letters of intent were signed. At the west Africa forum, 155 projects were presented and promoted.

In adopting resolution 39/235 on 18 December, concerning world industrial restructuring and redeployment, the Assembly recommended that UNIDO's Investment Promotion Services continue building a network of national promotion centres in developed and developing countries, and that they actively mobilize outside resources for identified investment projects, maintain close co-ordination with developing countries' industrial development programmes and promote projects within national objectives and priorities.

Industrial processing of raw materials

On 19 August,<sup>(39)</sup> the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO recommended that developing countries adopt policies for the domestic processing of raw materials in order to achieve their optimal utilization, and that UNIDO promote such processing, especially in LDCs and African countries, prepare specific case-studies on the subject, identify training opportunities, examine approaches, existing standards and new product standards, and intensify its technical co-operation programmes. It invited countries to facilitate finance flow and the development of technology, capital and human resources for domestic industrial processing, and invited developed countries to halt protectionism by adhering to accepted standstill provisions.

Rural areas

To cope with problems such as rural unemployment and economic stagnation, UNIDO rural industrialization activities concentrated in 1984 on creating development poles around which industries could be interlinked. Projects were developed to offer special facilities, including training and production centres, pilot and demonstration plants and mobile facilities for on-the-spot technical assistance. Mobile facilities were put into operation in Zaire and Zambia, providing repair and maintenance service for industrial machinery in isolated areas.

The Fourth General Conference of UNIDO stressed the importance of rural development, of which rural industrialization was the prime catalyst. There was a trend in developing countries towards more intensive valorization of locally available raw materials in rural areas to reduce imports.

On 19 August,<sup>(40)</sup> the Conference called for co-operation in agro-industrial development. It recommended the establishment of national industrial development centres, programmes to develop small rural enterprises to attract private investment as well as State and co-operative enterprises, and programmes to minimize the effects of natural calamities. It recommended that UNIDO: assist in developing policies for integrated rural development and in implementing industrial components for rural development programmes; continue its studies relating to rural industrialization; examine the possibility of projects relating to consultancy service centres and rural industrial workshops; strengthen its activities in fertilizer and pesticide production, agricultural machinery, storage facilities and the rural artisan sector; and pay greater attention to the small enterprises of different social and organizational structures. It invited all countries to provide technical, financial and other assistance to developing countries and invited the developed countries to fulfil commitments to halt protectionism concerning imports from developing countries.

Industrial management

During 1984, industrial management assistance continued for the improvement of production capacity in sectors ranging from shipbuilding to fruit processing and textile production. Solutions included the introduction of micro-computers with appropriate software. UNIDO expenditures for factory establishment and management amounted to $2.9 million, with some 90 per cent supplied by UNDP; 50 projects were implemented.

Overall trends continued to indicate the need of developing countries for self-reliance in management, business development, production and plant organization. In view of limited funds for large-scale factory construction projects, a different approach to technical co-operation was being adopted, whereby seminars would tackle specific management problems, particularly in Africa.

Management problems, involving organization, production processes, equipment and plant maintenance, materials handling, inventory control, financial management, marketing and distribution, had proved most intractable in Africa. They had been aggravated by the adverse world economic situation, the shortage of foreign exchange for spare parts and raw materials, and environmental difficulties such as drought.

In Somalia and Malawi, assistance continued on improving the performance of industrial enterprises. Sectoral approaches to management problems showed positive results in the Sudan. A project to improve the financial management of enterprises in Zaire continued, with the Government requesting 14 additional experts and UNDP increasing its funding. In Mauritania, assistance provided by UNIDF enabled the setting up of a programme for industrial promotion, which included entrepreneurship development and management assistance to enterprises.

Two projects in energy management were initiated in Sri Lanka: the first provided energy measuring equipment for principal industrial sub-sectors as well as training programmes and consultancy services; the second concerned the establishment of an industrial energy management unit. In the Philippines, energy audits identified potential savings of $5 million in 30 facilities through more efficient use of fuel. Energy management proposals were prepared for the African region in connection with IDDA and energy-related activities were also being pursued in Thailand, Turkey and Viet Nam.

Efforts were also made to assist developing countries in the use of computers and in designing software. A computer-based management information system was designed for a Barbados development corporation. A workshop on dynamic simulation and operational gaming as teaching and research tools was held at Balaton Fured, Hungary, from 2 to 7 September. Other computer-related projects were designed for Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Fiji, Mexico, the Philippines, Somalia, the Sudan and Zaire.

A substantial number of countries, particularly in Africa, expressed interest in obtaining UNIDO assistance in the rehabilitation of industries. In Senegal, changes undertaken in management/marketing and the technical organization of shipyards at Dakar resulted in increased productivity as well as better use of machinery and infrastructure. A project in Somalia brought about improvements in the only textile factory in the country, where UNIDO was currently arranging training programmes for technical and management staff. In Sierra Leone, a fruit-processing factory producing jams and jellies received rehabilitation assistance.

A number of requests for industrial consultancy were met, as efforts to develop local consultancy capacities continued. In Egypt, short-term consultancy services were provided in numerous fields, while experts strengthened functions at the Ministry of Industry, eliminated obstacles at plant level, developed products for export, and advised on marketing. Experts provided by Spain through UNIDO developed local consultancy services in Uruguay. In the Syrian Arab Republic, in co-operation with the University of Aleppo, assistance was provided in developing a consultancy programme for the establishment and management of factories.

Industrial planning

Expenditures on industrial planning in 1984 totalled $5.8 million, with 80 per cent coming from UNDP. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 41 per cent; the Americas, 17 per cent; Arab States, 4 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 36 per cent; and Europe and interregional/global, 1 per cent each. A total of 67 projects were implemented or being implemented.

Planning activities included: an assessment of industrial development at sectoral and subsectoral levels; the identification of subsectors with development potential and comparative advantage; formulation of medium- and long-range master plans; preparation of subsectoral plans, particularly for the capital goods industry; restructuring; formulation of policies and policy measures; strengthening of technical and institutional capabilities; and promotion of multinational and regional co-operation.

The number of requests for UNIDO assistance in preparing medium-term industrial master plans with long-term perspectives increased during 1984. A study was completed of 14 industrial subsectors under the industrial master plan project in Malaysia. Similar assistance was provided by UNIDO in the Ivory Coast and Mali, and a plan for the manufacturing sector was prepared for Kenya. In Cameroon, the second phase of preparing a master plan began, under which sectoral studies were to cover the key subsectors of iron and steel, aluminium, petrochemicals and wood and agro-industries; market analysis and projections for selected industrial products would be made to the year 2000.

Many developing countries sought UNIDO assistance in reorienting their industrial structures. In Thailand, UNIDO helped to examine the structure and performance of the automotive, mechanical, iron and steel, petrochemicals and textile subsectors; a number of seminars were organized on industrial restructuring. Similar assistance was provided in Guinea and the Ivory Coast.

Consultancy services to Qatar focused on the diversification of its oil-based economic structure. Pakistan was assisted in establishing a computerized data bank for formulating and monitoring industrial plans and policies.

In Latin America, emphasis continued to be placed on programmed development of capital goods industries. A large-scale development programme in Mexico focused on the reorientation of its capital goods programme in the light of the financial crisis; an analysis was made of steel fabrication plants, with recommendations for production streamlining, technological improvements and financial requirements. A project in Venezuela concentrated on strategies for the development of the capital goods sector, production in the petroleum and electric sectors, a programme for manufacturers of equipment for the foundry, forging and steel industries, and development of a technological information centre.

Industrial planning in many developing countries suffered from insufficient co-ordination between the ministry of industry and other ministries and institutions. In 1984, UNIDO assisted several countries, among them Mali and Guinea, with those matters.

Within the framework of IDDA, assistance was given to African countries in putting together integrated subregional industrial promotion programmes and to regional organizations in identifying projects for key industrial subsectors and strengthening subregional co-operation. The West African Economic Community was assisted in sectoral studies in the glass container, fertilizer and iron and steel industries, with a view to creating viable subregional industrial units; market studies were conducted and projections prepared for periods of 10 to 15 years.

An expert group meeting on industrial planning (Kiev, Ukrainian SSR, 21-25 May) was held for senior planners and economists from countries around the world. Another (Vienna, 10-13 September) followed up on a survey by UNIDO consultants of the manufacturing industry in the West Bank and Gaza Strip; ways of improving current economic conditions in the occupied territories were considered.

Industrial studies

Through its industrial studies and research programme, whose activities were closely interrelated at the global, regional, country and sectoral levels, UNIDO aimed at a balance between examining in detail the whole range of problems related to accelerating industrialization and providing conceptual, empirical and statistical background for use by decision makers and in technical co-operation programmes.

During 1984, UNIDO studied the impact of world economic developments on industrialization in developing countries. A preliminary assessment of the impact of the protectionist policies of the European Economic Community was made, and an empirical study of the foreign exchange benefits and costs of exporting manufactures was initiated. Up-to-date estimates and short-term forecasts of the growth of economic and industrial output were prepared on a country, regional and global basis. Other studies included assessments of the effect on developing countries of recent changes in the automotive industry; the implications for developing countries of structural changes taking place in member countries of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance; and industrial policies in developing countries brought about by the uncertain external environment. Global models continued to be applied in analysing the international industrial restructuring process; a new simulation model—Trade Impact Analysis Model—was developed to measure the interrelated impact of various export growth scenarios on income, production and imports in 12 regions of the world. An analysis was made of the role of the energy sector in alternative industrialization scenarios for the year 2000. Three surveys on conceptual topics were published, on the use of capital in developing countries, industrial and manufacturing activities in the informal sector, and the Lima target and South-South co-operation.

Studies at the regional and subregional levels focused on potentialities for industrial co-operation, underscoring factors of particular significance to country groupings such as linkages between large- and small-scale industries. A series of country industrial development reviews covered Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Malaysia, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Thailand, the United Republic of Tanzania and Uruguay; each provided an overview of the industrial sector, including industrial training and financial requirements.

A three-stage approach continued to characterize sectoral studies—analytical appraisal of current and future trends, elaboration of alternative strategies, and practical application of research findings. Work was started on a regional survey of the fisheries industry, the effects of ocean shipping costs on the location of wood-processing facilities, the production of pesticides, a study of the lime industry, and the emerging role of new developing-country producers in the petrochemical industry. Work continued on updating the 1990 regional and global scenarios for the iron and steel industry, on preparing guidelines for capital cost control in fertilizer plants and on monitoring the current restructuring of the agricultural machinery industry in industrialized countries. A study of the building materials industry and a techno-economic appraisal of the manufacture of chloroquine phosphate and its chemical intermediates were completed.

Statistical research included efforts to standardize the valuation concepts used by different countries in reporting their industrial statistics and to enhance the scope of the UNIDO industrial data base with particular attention to small-scale establishments.

Industrial technology

The work of the technology programme in 1984 continued to be directed towards two interrelated goals: to encourage appropriate policy responses by developing countries to the changing technological scene as well as strengthening their technological capabilities; and to help developing countries in the selection, acquisition and development of technology.

For example, UNIDO initiated studies on micro-electronics in developing countries to identify their needs and the most suitable forms of technical co-operation. Efforts to promote a regional micro-electronics network in Latin America continued. Emphasis was given in 1984 to the concept of software as an industry. State-of-the-art reports in micro-electronics were prepared for Bangladesh, India, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea and Venezuela. Studies were completed on optical fibre technology and its implications for developing countries and on the telecommunications industry in Brazil. Other areas receiving attention were genetic engineering and biotechnology and new materials (ceramics, non-metallic, mineral-based) as well as technological co-operation in small-scale industries.

In a March report<sup>(41)</sup> to the Industrial Development Board, the UNIDO Executive Director analysed the activities undertaken by the secretariat during 1983 in the field of development and transfer of technology (including the role of the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB) (see below)) against the general background of industrial technology for the 1980s, highlighting considerations relating to integration of technological advances with ongoing industrial and technology development efforts of developing countries.

On 19 May,<sup>(42)</sup> the Board took note of the Executive Director's report; reiterated the high priority it attached to the transfer of technology to developing countries, stressing UNIDO's role in this area; and requested early action on previous decisions calling for strengthening institutional arrangements for the programme within the UNIDO secretariat. It requested the Executive Director to submit in 1985 a report on UNIDO's work in the development and transfer of technology, including INTIB.

On 19 August,<sup>(43)</sup> the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO adopted a resolution on the strengthening of scientific and technological capacities for industrial development in developing countries. It recommended that those countries: allocate more funds to developing such capacities; establish the means to forecast, monitor and assess technological trends and their implications; and consider formulating national technology policies. It recommended promotion of the exchange of scientists, education and training programmes, links between universities and intergovernmental agreements on co-operation, and studies on more efficient linkages and co-operation between centres for selected technologies.

It recommended that UNIDO: assist in promoting national research and development capacities in developing countries, in establishing national development policies and in building up technological capabilities; promote technological co-operation between small- and medium-sized enterprises of developing and developed countries; identify energy-related technologies and equipment; help developing countries, particularly through INTIB, to process technological information; provide special assistance to African countries for development of technological capacities; promote an international referral system to identify scientists and technologists; pursue new technological co-operation initiatives; use the capabilities of developing countries more; continue aid for sectoral technological centres and information systems; help improve capabilities for identifying and preparing projects in new technological opportunities; adopt an integrated approach linking technology with other relevant factors; and cooperate with other organizations in developing, promoting and transferring technology. It urged that technology be transferred to developing countries on just and equitable terms, encouraged fair, just and equitable contracts and called for increased ODA earmarked for industrial technical assistance.

(For further information on technology transfer, see Chapter XII of this section.)

Industrial and Technological Information Bank

During 1984, the Industrial and Technological Information Bank strengthened contacts with sources of information and users and continued to process and disseminate industrial and technological information. INTIB linkages with a number of industrial and technological information data bases in developed countries were improved. Malaysia was assisted in the establishment and improvement of industrial information organizations.

About 1,300 inquiries were received by INTIB's Industrial Inquiry Service from industrial enterprises, information centres, United Nations organizations, research institutions, engineering and consulting firms, government officials, universities, professional organizations and development banks. They dealt with chemicals and pharmaceuticals, agro-industries, food processing, capital goods, fabricated metal products, non-metallic minerals, basic metal industries, textiles and leather goods, pulp and paper, and wood and wood processing.

Work continued on a consolidated edition of the Industrial Development Abstracts data base, which contained 14,000 entries. Work also proceeded on the revision and expansion of sources of industrial information within the On-Line-Information Key data base. A directory of institutions engaged in solar research was issued. The UNIDO Newsletter continued to be published monthly in five languages (Chinese, English, French, Russian, Spanish).

On 19 May,<sup>(44)</sup> the Industrial Development Board stressed the usefulness of INTIB to developing countries, in particular its regional linkages and its programmes assisting small- and medium-scale industries, and the importance of co-operation among relevant United Nations bodies in that field.

Development of specific industries

During 1984, many of UNIDO's technical co-operation activities related to specific industrial sectors or industries. The major sectors were agro-industries, and chemical, engineering, and metallurgical and mineral industries.

Agro-industries

Technical co-operation activities under the heading agro-industries amounted to $9.7 million in 1984, with some 70 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of the total, Africa accounted for 17 per cent; the Americas, 19; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 3; Asia and the Pacific, 52; Europe, 2; and interregional/global, 7. A total of 158 projects were implemented or being implemented, 13 of them greater than $1 million in value, 53 greater than $150,000 and 92 below $150,000.

Projects covered the following light industries: wood products and processing, including timber engineering; textile production and garment making; food-processing and agro-industrial complexes; leather and leather products; and rubber products and packaging.

Clothing and textile industry

The majority of projects in the textile and garment-making sector were large-scale projects. In 1984, 10 such projects, all financed by UNDP, were under implementation in Bangladesh, Egypt, India, Sri Lanka, the United Republic of Tanzania and Viet Nam. Nine concerned the establishment or strengthening of institutions to serve the industry, following a trend towards indirect assistance; all other projects related to direct assistance. In Bangladesh, for example, a project to provide central testing laboratories for jute goods neared completion, while in Sri Lanka a textile training and service centre was established and in Viet Nam aid was given to textile factories in the south to improve maintenance and production management.

A diagnostic study on the restructuring needs of the Argentine textile industry was completed. A seminar organized by UNIDO and the International Institute for Cotton at Manchester, United Kingdom, in April demonstrated the application of computer programs in establishing knitting parameters; to share the new technique, regional workshops were conducted at Coimbatore, India, and Mexico City, funded by the United Kingdom. In Sierra Leone, UNIDO provided expertise in technical and managerial activities, including staff training, enabling a garment manufacturing company to operate as an independent and viable enterprise.

Fisheries industry

Case-studies were undertaken in Chile and Peru so as to understand better the problems faced by developing countries in the fisheries sector. A group of experts, meeting at Vienna in February, identified priority areas for international co-operation, including harvesting techniques and equipment manufacture, shipbuilding, technology, training, market research, research in packaging, freezing, processing, storage and transport. Co-ordination was maintained with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), with the participation of UNIDO in meetings in preparation for the 1984 FAO World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

Food industry

In view of the food crisis in Africa, UNIDO gave priority during 1984 to activities in the food-processing industries that would encourage self-sufficiency. Assistance in rehabilitation, modernization and expansion was provided to plants in Angola, Guinea, Mozambique, Rwanda and Sierra Leone. Attention was given to the utilization of agro-based raw materials such as meat, sugar, bakery products, passion-fruit and cassava.

A research project on the use of the fruit of Balanites aegyptiaca was completed in the Sahelian region for commercial production of edible oil and animal feed. A study was completed on establishing a plant in a west African country to produce cereal products with composite flour from local and other cereals by extrusion.

Technical assistance continued in Argentina, El Salvador and Ecuador to food-processing research, development and quality control. The grape-processing industry of Bolivia was the recipient of assistance. A project was initiated in Peru, in co-operation with the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, to eradicate drug crops and develop the food industry.

The Second Consultation on the Food-Processing Industry with Special Emphasis on Vegetable Oils and Fats was held at Copenhagen, Denmark, from 15 to 19 October,<sup>(1)</sup> attended by 143 participants from 58 countries and observers from 10 international organizations. Preparations in 1984 included an expert group meeting (Vienna, 6-8 February) on downstream processing; it completed issue, background and study papers, and considered constraints to the diversification of processing activities in developing countries. Although the emphasis of the Consultation was on vegetable oils and fats, the interlinkages of that sector with animal feed, meat processing and dairy products also received consideration. Within that framework, the Consultation discussed an integrated approach to food processing and the role of co-operatives and small- and medium-scale enterprises.

On an integrated approach to food processing, the Consultation agreed that such an approach could often be the most appropriate strategy for development of the food-processing industry in developing countries; that both Governments and industries should interact to utilize installed capacity fully, embracing inputs of raw materials, technology, upgrading, marketing and planning; and that regional consultations should be organized. It recommended that UNIDO undertake a technical assistance project, upon request, in a developing country to illustrate the application of the integrated approach to the oil-seed-protein subsystem, including meat and dairy industries; consider organizing regional consultations in the sector to examine regional collaboration arrangements for the manufacture of components and spare parts and instruments; arrange for periodic review by independent advisers of developments in the vegetable oils and fats processing industry; promote the increasing production of edible oils and fats in developing countries; and strengthen training activities for personnel in processing, maintenance of equipment, quality control, management and marketing.

On the role of co-operatives and small- and medium-scale enterprises, the Consultation concluded that in co-operation arrangements a clear distinction must be made between aid and commercial relations and that the nature of the latter must reflect the level of industrialization in the partner country. It further concluded that increased involvement of co-operatives as well as small- and medium-scale enterprises in international co-operation for the food-processing industry would be highly beneficial to production, processing and marketing operations; that Governments should create favourable conditions for co-operatives; that international, governmental and non-governmental organizations had an important task in supporting an increase in the involvement of co-operatives; and that UNIDO's role was of special importance. The Consultation recommended that UNIDO prepare case-studies on specific projects and measures to stimulate co-operation, promote an increased flow of information, and contribute to improved co-ordination of activities.

Leather industry

Technical assistance activities in the leather and leather products sector were directed in 1984 towards an integrated programme approach to maximize the industry's potential in developing countries, as recommended by the Third Consultation on the Leather and Leather Products Industry (Innsbruck, Austria, 16-19 April).<sup>(2)</sup> The Consultation was attended by 108 participants from 46 countries and 11 observers from nine international organizations.

In order to maximize the industry's potential, the Consultation concluded that an integrated programme approach at the national level could provide a relevant framework for international co-operation; it recommended that UNIDO examine practical ways of establishing regional training centres, and that particular attention should be given to working conditions, safety and health. It also recommended that UNIDO assess and evaluate the potential of the industry in individual developing countries; advise on practical ways of securing the necessary sectoral programme financing; and assist in the provision of technical services, management and marketing know-how.

On the issue of measures to facilitate the production and acquisition of tanning chemicals and footwear auxiliaries in developing countries, the Consultation concluded that procurement of tanning chemicals was a significant constraint in many developing countries, and recognized that the manufacture of those chemicals required substantial economies of scale to be viable. It recommended that UNIDO undertake technical and economic studies of the raw-material base and other necessary facilities existing in developing countries that could lead to the production of tanning chemicals.

In Africa, UNIDO activities aimed at increasing the utilization of domestic resources. Under a World Bank-financed project, UNIDO provided aid to the United Republic of Tanzania in setting up an infrastructure for its leather, footwear and leather products sector. Another project expedited the start-up of a tannery in Burundi. One phase of a multi-stage project in leather products development was completed in Ethiopia. Assistance was also given to Kenya, Lesotho, Madagascar and the Sudan.

In China, the Philippines and Sri Lanka, large-scale projects of assistance to leather centres reached their final stages, while new projects were started in Burma and Mongolia to solve technological problems.

Packaging industry

Under a project to establish a national food-packaging centre at Campinas, Brazil, fellowships and study tours were arranged and experts' services and equipment delivered. Projects in Jamaica and Turkey involved strengthening research and development centres. Specialists in the economics, industrial production and standardization of paper, board, plastics, metals and glass packaging were analysing the packaging industry in Mexico. A project in Mali introduced a less expensive packaging system for locally produced fruit juices. A regional packaging centre became operational in Morocco. Other projects were implemented in Cuba, Guinea-Bissau and the Republic of Korea.

Wood-using industry

Small wood and wood product industry projects in 1984 were designed to provide highly specific technical assistance, funded mainly through the SIS programme or UNIDF. Further assistance was given to African countries within the framework of the ECA/FAO/UNIDO Forest Industries Advisory Group for Africa.

A furniture factory in Guinea received production assistance; a match factory in the Congo was being rehabilitated. Other projects included assistance to the production of wood-based panels and school furniture in Rwanda and the manufacture of bentwood chairs in the Sudan. In Asia and the Pacific, demonstrations were offered of the structural use of coconut wood and rubber wood; model houses were built in the Philippines using coconut wood. New projects were undertaken in Nicaragua and Peru utilizing the UNIDO low-cost modular prefabricated wooden bridge system, and a survey of the furniture industry was initiated in Guyana. Training courses, workshops or seminars were held in Costa Rica, Honduras, Italy, Mauritius and New Zealand.

On 19 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Industrial Development Board took note of the recommendations of the First Consultation on the Wood and Wood Products Industry, held in 1983,<sup>(4)</sup> and decided that work on the industry should continue.

Chemical industries

In 1984, technical co-operation expenditures for chemical industries amounted to $22.1 million, with some 45 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 47 per cent; the Americas, 5; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 3; Asia and the Pacific, 30; Europe, 6; and interregional/global, 9. A total of 311 projects were implemented or under implementation, 33 of them greater than $1 million in value, 99 less than that but greater than $150,000, and 179 less than $150,000.

Activities concentrated on five broad subsectors: basic chemicals, environment and pulp and paper; building materials and construction industries; fertilizers, pesticides and organic chemicals industries;

petrochemical industries; and pharmaceutical industries. UNIDO experts were assigned to paper mills in Bolivia, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Turkey and Viet Nam. To make optimum use of existing plant capacities for the pulp and paper industry in developing countries, assistance was provided to the industries which produced essential basic chemicals: salt, caustic soda and chlorine. Salt production projects were assisted in Benin and the Niger. Since 60 per cent of pulp and paper production in developing countries was based on non-wood fibres, UNIDO continued to aid non-wood fibre-pulping and paper-making research. Projects for utilizing bamboo were under way in Burma and China. In addition, activities to control industrial pollution were expanded. Several projects were implemented on air pollution monitoring and control, marine pollution control, waste treatment and utilization, development of non-waste technologies for chemical processes, advisory services for environmental protection, training in industrial pollution control, and recycling and conservation of environmental resources (see Chapter XVI of this section).

Building materials industry

Activities related to the building materials and construction industries focused on fuller use of local, non-metallic raw materials, developing innovative methods of construction and introducing new materials. Large-scale projects were implemented on constructing low-cost housing, earthquake-resistant technologies and base isolation techniques. UNIDO projects included work on rubber-steel mounts for base isolation of buildings in earthquake-prone areas, a technique which was applied in the construction of the City Hall of San Bernardino, California, United States. In Africa, a mobile mechanized brickmaking plant was introduced, to be based in the United Republic of Tanzania. UNIDO advised a brickmaking company in the Niger on utilizing an old production line for the manufacture of unfired bricks with or without lime stabilization. Brick-plant production was also assisted in Cameroon and the Gambia. A project continued in Ethiopia to rehabilitate the marble and stone industries and develop low-cost building materials based on volcanic tuff. A ceramic research and development laboratory was opened in Sri Lanka. A manual was published on the manufacture of rice husk ash cement to promote it as a high-quality building material. The cement industry was also aided in Botswana, China, Egypt and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. A global preparatory meeting was held (Vienna, 24-28 September) for the first consultation on the building materials industry, to be convened in 1985.

Fertilizer industry

Much of UNIDO's work in the chemical sector dealt with projects for the fertilizer and pesticides industries.

A survey of ways to promote co-operation in the production of phosphate fertilizer was begun in member countries of the Common African and Mauritian Organization. The survey included an evaluation of the technical, natural and economic conditions of each country producing fertilizer.

Two projects were completed in India on the use of low-grade raw materials for fertilizer production, involving the production of sulphur and sulphuric acid from low-grade pyrites and the processing of low-grade phosphate rock into fertilizers.

The Fourth Consultation on the Fertilizer Industry (New Delhi, India, 23-27 January)<sup>(5)</sup> was attended by 134 participants from 52 countries and 21 observers from 13 international organizations. It recommended that two model forms of contract presented by the secretariat for the construction of a fertilizer plant—the semi-turnkey and the licensing and engineering services agreement—should be finalized by two international expert groups. (The groups agreed on the final drafts of the model contracts at meetings in July at Vienna.) The Consultation also formulated specific recommendations aimed at enhancing co-operation among developing countries, for example through training programmes and the study of joint-venture arrangements. It requested UNIDO to prepare a pre-contracting manual for the fertilizer industry as well as guidelines for project management and capital cost control; to continue promoting co-operation on mini fertilizer plants between potential contractors and engineering companies and buyers from developing countries; and to undertake work in co-operation with other organizations on new technologies and environmental pollution. It referred the issue of pesticides to the Industrial Development Board.

On 19 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Board took note of the conclusions and recommendations of the Fourth Consultation.

Petrochemical industry

In the petrochemical subsector, UNIDO activities were concentrated during 1984 on the development of polymer industries—plastics, rubbers, synthetic fibres—in developing countries as well as on the manufacture of basic petrochemicals essential to processing industries.

The Indian Petrochemical Corporation was provided with simulator training facilities and software for various technological processes. Petrochemical research and development programmes were started in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Yugoslavia. A regional project to establish a petroleum training centre in Angola was approved and a mission undertaken to countries of the region to select trainees. Workshops were organized on petroleum processing, production planning, energy management and maintenance, and plant inspection.

In Saudi Arabia, a symposium on the petrochemical industry was held in three cities—Riyadh, Dammam and Jeddah—to encourage entrepreneurs to set up downstream processing industries for plastics, rubbers and synthetic fibres. Recommendations for North-South co-operation were formulated by the first Expert Group Meeting on International Co-operation on Petrochemicals, while a meeting of the Advisory Panel on Petrochemicals helped to prepare a programme for South-South co-operation; both meetings were held at Vienna in September.

The secretariat established a data base for 25 petrochemicals to determine world supply and demand.

Pesticides industry

Pesticide research and development were given particular emphasis in developing countries during 1984. The first phase of a UNDP/UNIDF project to modernize the toxicological department of a research institute in China was completed, and a similar project in the Republic of Korea was begun. Assistance in the development of pesticides continued to be given to a laboratory and institute in India and Hungary.

A regional network in the Philippines for the production, marketing and control of pesticides in Asia and the Pacific organized expert group meetings on quality control of pesticides (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 13-17 May) and on trade and tariff considerations (Colombo, Sri Lanka, 13-17 August). The network also encouraged an exchange of expertise and arranged study tours.

Pharmaceutical industry

Among the UNIDO activities in 1984 to increase pharmaceutical production in developing countries were the use of indigenous medicinal plants and petrochemical by-products, the adaptation of technology for local production, the promotion of biologicals to enhance preventive measures, and the strengthening of national research and development capabilities.

The utilization of medicinal and aromatic plants received particular attention in projects in Afghanistan, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Mali, Nepal, Rwanda, Thailand, Turkey and the United Republic of Tanzania. Exploratory projects were initiated in Burundi, Guatemala and Madagascar. Plants for the bulk production of essential synthetic drugs were nearing completion in Cuba and under construction in Brazil and Iran. Expansion of facilities for manufacturing the anti-malarial drug chloroquine diphosphate in India was completed. In Guinea, a project for the formulation and packaging of pharmaceuticals was also completed, and, in Zambia, a project for local production of oral rehydration salts was begun.

An advisory panel on preventive medicine, composed of representatives from industry, government and United Nations bodies such as WHO and UNICEF, was set up to guide a new UNIDO programme on the industrial production of biologicals. The panel met twice: at Vienna on 27 and 28 February, and at Bogotá on 22 and 23 November. A directory to sources of supply for 26 essential bulk drugs, their chemical intermediates and some raw materials was revised during 1984 for distribution in 1985. Programmes for vaccine production were prepared with assistance from Hungary and the Netherlands.

On 19 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Industrial Development Board took note of the conclusions and recommendations of the Second Consultation on the Pharmaceutical Industry, held in 1983.<sup>(6)</sup>

Engineering industries

In 1984, technical co-operation expenditures under the heading engineering industries amounted to $13.9 million, about 90 per cent of which was financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 19 per cent; the Americas, 9; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 5; Asia and the Pacific, 60; Europe, 6; and inter-regional/global, 1. A total of 170 projects were completed or being implemented, of which 27 were greater than $1 million in value, 66 greater than $150,000, and 77 less than $150,000.

Activities aimed at the creation of new or improvement of existing production capacities and diversification of products. The main subsectors receiving assistance were: agricultural machinery and implements; electronic and electrical machinery and products; computer and computer-related equipment; metal-working and machine tools; land-based or water-borne transport equipment; and energy-related equipment. The first three categories accounted for the majority of requests.

Genetic engineering

A reconvened Plenipotentiary Meeting on the Establishment of the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology (Vienna, 3 and 4 April 1984), which had first met in 1983,<sup>(6)</sup> decided to locate the Centre in two components at Trieste and New Delhi. The Italian component would be concerned with energy, industrial microbiology and protein engineering; the Indian component would work on agriculture, human and animal health and productivity. Activities were expected to begin in 1985.

The Preparatory Committee on the establishment of the Centre held three sessions in 1984, all at Vienna (24-27 January, 2 and 3 April and 17-19 September). At its September session, a panel of scientific advisers was constituted to advise on preparations. Financing for the preparatory activities had been pledged by Italy under a technical co-operation trust-fund agreement.

Also, by the end of 1984, 36 countries had signed the statutes establishing the Centre. The statutes would enter into force when at least 24 States, including the host States, had deposited instruments of ratification and had ascertained that sufficient financial resources were ensured.

Programmes in genetic engineering and biotechnology included symposia on biotechnology (New Delhi, 19-25 February) and on lactic acid fermentation (Mexico City, 27-29 November), and joint research and pilot studies by universities and institutes on the cloning of cellulosic genes (Brazil/Federal Republic of Germany) and on high-cellulose-producing yeast species (Ireland/Pakistan). A Latin American biotechnology network was initiated through joint UNIDO/UNDP/UNESCO efforts, and a project was approved to establish a regional research and development centre in Mexico.

Agricultural machinery

Following up a recommendation of the Second Consultation on the Agricultural Machinery Industry held in 1983,<sup>(6)</sup> an expert group meeting was convened (Guangzhou, China, 15-18 November 1984) to promote the manufacture of agricultural machinery and rural and food-related equipment at multi-purpose plants in developing countries. Work was begun by the secretariat to investigate factors relevant to the elaboration of a framework for industrial co-operation in this sector.

Assistance in the manufacture of agricultural tools and machinery was provided to Burkina Faso, Lesotho, Somalia, Togo and Uganda. A regional programme for 12 Latin American and Caribbean countries on the repair, maintenance and reconditioning of sugar industry equipment was undertaken. A joint UNIDO/FAO mission was fielded in January to finalize a 10-year mechanization plan for Cameroon.

On 19 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Industrial Development Board took note of the conclusions and recommendations of the Second Consultation on the Agricultural Machinery Industry.

Metallurgical and mineral industries

In 1984, technical co-operation expenditures under the heading metallurgical industries amounted to $6.3 million, with about 85 per cent financed by UNDP. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 32 per cent; the Americas, 12; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 4; Asia and the Pacific, 42; and Europe, 10. A total of 136 projects were completed or under way, 13 of them greater than $1 million in value, 46 less than that but greater than $150,000, and 77 less than $150,000.

Activities accelerated in extractive and physical metallurgy, covering light and heavy non-ferrous metals (aluminium, titanium, copper, lead, zinc), the iron and steel industry, ferrous and non-ferrous foundries and other metal transformation and forming processes (rolling, forging, heat treatment, extruding, welding), and about 15 projects dealt with establishing or strengthening centres for metallurgical research. About 25 projects involved the planning, establishment, expansion and operation of metallurgical plants. Other assistance was provided to the establishment of pilot plants, particularly for foundry industry development.

Emphasis was given to projects assisting developing countries in the evaluation, concentration and beneficiation of ores and minerals, and promoting the integrated development of the mineral dressing and processing sector. Projects were under way in China, Cuba, Greece, India, Iran, Mauritania, Mongolia, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam.

The transfer of technology was promoted through a number of projects, including the production of silicon for the electrical and semi-conductor industry in Pakistan, the electro-refining of copper in Peru, the manufacture of magnetic materials for use in electronic engineering in Viet Nam, the elaboration of a new process (combismelt) for the processing of iron ore to steel in Mexico, and the utilization of low-grade ores and low calorific coals in Hungary.

In Paraguay, processes were introduced on a pilot scale for the production of metallurgical charcoal for use in blast furnaces. A project in Chile dealt with the handling and recovery of ore residues from effluents and slurries of mining and metallurgical operations.

UNIDO continued to provide advisory services to Egypt in computerized maintenance and completed the installation of a computer system for process control. A regional demonstration workshop on maintenance in the metallurgical and foundry industries for African countries was held at Cairo (17 November–7 December). A technical consultancy and training centre opened in Czechoslovakia, providing services to local industry as well as developing countries; also established in Czechoslovakia was a computerized management information system for small piece and batch manufacturing.

In co-operation with the African Regional Centre for Engineering Design and Manufacturing, a study tour and workshop in core metallurgical and engineering industries was conducted in Hungary (8–25 October) for 20 participants from 10 African countries, including six LDCs.

Aluminium industry

In Yugoslavia, work progressed in 1984 on the establishment of an aluminium institute at Titograd. Equipment was supplied and a research programme was elaborated.

A demonstration unit for an alumina calciner designed to reduce fuel-oil consumption was being established at Korba, India. Under another project, sub-contracting was arranged for a conceptual design study on the production of super-pure aluminium at the same company and UNIDO was also requested to assist in a study of the production of special aluminas and the optimization of rolling mill operations. De-ironed refractory-grade bauxite production was the subject of a project in Greece.

A training course in alumina production and aluminium electrolysis was organized in China, within the framework of the Joint UNIDO/Hungary Aluminium Industry Programme; seven Hungarian experts lectured to 32 Chinese nationals. Hungarian experts prepared and UNIDO published in 1984 a design study for aluminium extrusion and anodizing plants.

Foundries

Projects related to the development of the foundry and metal transformation sector were being implemented in 1984 in Afghanistan, Angola, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Malta, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, the Niger, the Republic of Korea, Somalia, the United Republic of Tanzania and Viet Nam.

In Angola, a master plan was elaborated for the modernization and development of the foundry industry sector; 15 Angolans were sent for a year's training in Brazil. Assistance was also provided to Morocco through the establishment of a foundry laboratory designed to act as a quality testing centre. A pilot and demonstration foundry was opened in Kathmandu in March; it produced spare parts worth about $2 million for a wide range of industries. Study tours to the foundry were organized for specialists from Afghanistan and Ethiopia. Two seminars to improve the quality of castings were organized at the foundry in March and July for technicians from various enterprises in Nepal.

UNIDO participated in the International Foundry Fair (Düsseldorf, Federal Republic of Germany, June), during which it responded to some 600 requests for information, held 60 consultations, and organized a foundry seminar and a study tour to foundry and metallurgical plants in the vicinity.

Iron and steel industry

The crisis in the iron and steel industry and its implications for developing countries were analysed during 1984. The connection between the iron and steel and capital goods sectors, as well as the possibilities of financing infrastructure and training in iron and steel projects, were also examined. At the same time, work began on a methodology for training and on defining the degrees of technological complexity and the skills required to master it.

An international iron and steel seminar (Karachi, Pakistan, 19-29 May) discussed an integrated approach to the iron and steel, capital goods, construction and other sectors, considered mini steel plants as a route for developing countries, and identified new perspectives for the financing of projects. A study was begun on integrated planning for the iron and steel industry and other industrial sectors.

Technical assistance continued to be given to foundry and steel-rolling operations in Mozambique, including on-the-job training in Bulgaria. In Angola, a centre to collect and process scrap for the country's only steel plant was being built. Maintenance assistance was provided to Zimbabwe, which in turn lent assistance to steel industries in Ethiopia, Mozambique and Uganda. The possibility of establishing a steel industry in the United Republic of Tanzania was studied; tests of Tanzanian chromium, titanium and vanadium were carried out. A concurrent top and bottom blown converter for steelmaking was installed at the Research and Development Centre of the Steel Authority of India. An interregional workshop on welding technology was held in co-operation with the National Welding Research Institute of India (Tiruchirapalli, 30 January-4 February). Advice was provided to Bolivia, Gabon and Guinea on the exploitation of their iron ores, natural gas and other raw materials.

Non-ferrous metals

In preparation for a forthcoming first consultation on the non-ferrous metals industry, activities in this sector focused on an analysis of information and trends in each component of the industry (aluminium, zinc, copper, nickel, lead, tin).

Other activities during 1984 included an analysis of energy requirements and their impact on the increase in industrial processing of non-ferrous metals in developing countries; a joint United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations/UNIDO programme to analyse the strategies of Governments and transnational corporations in the industry; and the completion of the first part of a three-part study of its development and restructuring.

Preparatory work was started on a typology of countries as well as a set of scenarios and medium- and long-term forecasting to determine broad strategies for processing non-ferrous metals in developing countries.

UNIDO provided assistance to Chile in assessing a research and development programme on an innovative bacterial leaching process for treating copper ores. Expert services were provided in Peru on advanced technologies for copper production and advice was given on establishing a pilot operation for electro-refining of copper.

Other industrial categories

Export-oriented industries

In co-operation with members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations—traditionally commodity exporters—UNIDO launched in 1984 a group training programme on export industry development to upgrade the skills of government and industry policy-makers in applying modern management techniques to the production of high-quality products for the international market.

A project in Sri Lanka involved building the investment promotion capabilities of the Greater Colombo Economic Commission; it was expected that, through better feasibility studies, improved administrative services and the use of wide international contacts, including UNIDO's Investment Promotion Services, the flow of capital to Sri Lanka would increase. A project in Burma aimed at preparing feasibility studies on the establishment of industrial plants outside a metropolis, which would alleviate rural unemployment. ESCAP and UNIDO implemented a project in Fiji to review industrial development strategy for an isolated island nation.

Small-scale industry

Technical assistance in the development of small- and medium-scale industries covered a broad spectrum of activities in 1984, ranging from institution-building to direct assistance to enterprises. There was a noticeable trend towards the upgrading of raw materials available in rural areas. Efforts focused on the creation of development poles in rural areas around which industries could be interlinked. Mobile facilities were put into operation which provided repair and maintenance services for industrial machinery in isolated areas.

Assistance continued to the Société nationale d'études et promotion industrielles in Senegal, the Office de promotion de l'entreprise nigérienne in the Niger, the Small Industry Development Organization in Zambia, the Ethiopian Handicraft and Small Industries Development Agency, and the Kenya Industrial Estate. Small-scale industrial development was promoted in provincial, semi-urban and rural areas of Burundi, the Comoros, Madagascar and Rwanda.

Chapter VII

Transnational corporations

The impact of the activities of transnational corporations (TNCs) on the changing world economy continued to be a major concern of the international community in 1984. The positive contribution of TNCs to development, especially to that of low-income and least developed countries, was overshadowed by the consequences of the world economic recession.

The draft code of conduct on TNCs continued to be discussed at a special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations, reconvened in January and June 1984. As certain outstanding issues—which included a definition of TNCs and the scope of the code's application, international obligations vis-à-vis national legislation, settlement of disputes, and non-collaboration with racist minority régimes in southern Africa—could not be resolved during discussions, the negotiations on the draft code reached an impasse. The General Assembly, in December (decision 39/443), requested the Chairman of the Commission to initiate consultations aimed at overcoming that impasse and decided to reconvene the special session in 1985.

International standards of accounting and reporting—a question related to the world-wide growth of TNCs—were examined by an inter-governmental group. In addition to assisting in the work on the draft code and preparing studies for the intergovernmental group, the United Nations Centre on TNCs continued to develop a comprehensive information system, carried out research, and conducted and supervised technical co-operation activities. An important element in the Centre's work continued to be research on TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia. The Centre also participated in the work of an Ad Hoc Committee on preparations for public hearings on those activities (see p. 149). These aspects of the Centre's work and other matters related to TNC activities were considered by the Commission on TNCs at its tenth regular session (New York, 17-27 April).

Draft code of conduct

Special session of the Commission (January). Pursuant to a December 1983 General Assembly decision,<sup>(1)</sup> a special session of the Commission on TNCs, open to the participation of all States, was reconvened (New York, 9-13 January 1984) to continue—at six formal and a number of informal meetings—discussion of a draft code of conduct on TNCs.<sup>(2)</sup> Not being able to solve the key outstanding issues, the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council again reconvene the special session to complete work on the code.

At its tenth session in April,<sup>(3)</sup> the Commission urged that every effort be made to conclude negotiations on the code.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In February, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/109 without vote.

Reconvened special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations

At its 3rd plenary meeting, on 21 February 1984, the Council, having assessed the work undertaken by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its reconvened special session on the draft code of conduct on transnational corporations and of the divergencies still to be overcome in that regard, decided:

(a) To reconvene further the special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations from 11 to 29 June 1984, with a view to completing the work on the formulation of the draft code of conduct on transnational corporations for submission to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984;

(b) That the question of the participation of expert advisers in the reconvened special session should be considered by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its tenth session, taking into account the proposal made by the delegation of Mexico, on behalf of the States Members which are members of the Group of 77, during the organizational session for 1984 of the Council; and that the recommendations of the Commission would be considered, for appropriate action, by the Council at its first regular session of 1984.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/109

Adopted without vote

Draft by President, for Bureau (E/1984/L.15), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 4.

Financial implications. S-G, E/1984/9Add.1.
Meeting numbers. ESC 2, 3.

During informal consultations in the Council on the draft submitted by the President, two proposals were made concerning the question of the participation of expert advisers in the reconvened special session; the first would have the Council refer consideration of the matter back to the Commission, while the second would have the Council recommend that the Commission consider the question at its regular session in April, taking into account the proposals by the Group of 77. Following further consultations, an agreement was reached to add the second paragraph to the draft decision.

In a February statement on the financial implications of reconvening the Commission's special session, the Secretary-General estimated conference servicing requirements at $309,400, on the assumption that the session would last for three weeks, be serviced in six languages and require two meetings a day and 160 pages of documentation. It was possible, however, that four meetings per day might be required; should the Council approve that arrangement, additional costs would total $207,600. Should the Council decide that expert advisers should participate, $94,800 would be needed for travel and per diem expenses for 16 advisers.

In May, the Council adopted decision 1984/120 without vote.

Question of the participation of expert advisers in the reconvened special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations

At its 11th plenary meeting, on 11 May 1984, the Council, having considered the note by the Secretary-General,<sup>(4)</sup> decided to invite expert advisers to participate in the work of the reconvened special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations, to be held from 11 to 29 June 1984, during the last three days of the second week of the session, within existing resources.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/120

Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1984/18); agenda item 1.

In an April note to the Council,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that, should the Council decide to approve the Commission's recommendation with regard to the participation of 16 expert advisers in its reconvened special session, programme budget implications would arise in respect of the travel and per diem expenses. Additional resources ($34,000) would be required only for travel costs; per diem costs ($12,400) would be absorbed within existing resources of the 1984-1985 programme budget.

Speaking before the Council, the Director of the Centre on TNCs said the Secretariat had given further consideration to the financial implications set forth in the Secretary-General's note and expected to be able to absorb all the costs indicated within existing resources.

Reconvened special session (June). In accordance with Council decision 1984/109, the Commission reconvened its special session (New York, 11-29 June),<sup>(5)</sup> focusing again on the draft code's key outstanding issues. In both formal and informal meetings, it considered definitions and scope of application; respect for national sovereignty and observance of domestic laws, regulations and administrative practices; treatment of TNCs by the countries in which they operated; nationalization and settlement of disputes; conflicts of jurisdiction; non-interference in internal affairs; the free transfer by TNCs of payments relating to their investments; and non-collaboration by TNCs with racist minority régimes in southern Africa.

Most delegations stated that they could accept as a compromise the 1983 proposals by the Chairman and the Rapporteur on the outstanding issues,<sup>(6)</sup> provided that all other delegations would accept them; however, they would also consider other proposals. Such proposals made by delegations at the reconvened special session were presented in an October report of the Centre on TNCs.<sup>(7)</sup>

Expert advisers from 15 countries—Argentina, Brazil, Canada, China, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Netherlands, Philippines, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay—took part in the discussions.

At the end of the session, the Commission discussed future work on the draft code and stressed the importance of completing and adopting it.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/163 without vote.

Report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on its reconvened special session

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1984, the Council took note of the report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on its reconvened special session, held from 11 to 29 June 1984, and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session for consideration.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/163

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/141) without vote, 17 July (meeting 10); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 10.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 39/443 without vote.

Reconvened special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee:

(a) Took note of the report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on its reconvened special session, held from 11 to 29 June 1984;

(b) Decided to request the Chairman, together with the other officers of the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its reconvened special session, and with the assistance of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, to initiate consultations aimed at overcoming the current impasse regarding the negotiations on the draft code of conduct on transnational corporations, bearing in mind, inter alia, the proposals of the Chairman and the Rapporteur and the progress achieved thus far during the special session;

(c) Decided to request the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations to prepare a study on the outstanding issues in the draft code of conduct, including, inter alia, the questions of international law and international obligations vis-à-vis national legislation, to be circulated to Governments prior to the reconvened special session;

(d) Decided to reconvene the special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations for one week in June 1985 for the Commission to examine the study requested in subparagraph (c) above and, in the light of that examination and the results of the consultations mentioned in subparagraph (b) above, to prepare a report, including suggestions regarding the most appropriate steps to be taken to complete the code of conduct, to be submitted, for consideration, to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1985 and to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly decision 39/443

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/789/Add.1) without vote, 10 December (meeting 58); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.132), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.107); agenda item 12. Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/39/831; S-G, A/C.2/39/L.117, A/C.5/39/90. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 28-32, 56, 58; 5th Committee 49; plenary 104.

The United Kingdom hoped the date for the reconvened special session would be chosen with the aim of minimizing conference servicing costs. The United States explained that its support of the text was predicated both on substantive grounds and on the expectation that the Secretary-General would absorb those costs. The Ukrainian SSR, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, stated that negotiations on the draft code, already in progress for eight years, had reached an impasse because of the negative position of certain Western countries which were blocking the "package proposal" of the special session's Chairman, which the socialist countries continued to view as a sensible compromise.

Introducing the original draft, Egypt expressed the concern of the Group of 77 that the code was not finished or adopted.

The adopted text differed from the original draft in that it requested the Commission Chairman to initiate consultations with the additional assistance of the Centre.

Definition of TNC

The question of the definition of TNCs had been considered by the Commission since its first session in 1975. Background information on the question was provided in a February 1984 report by the Centre's secretariat.<sup>(8)</sup> The question had generally been deferred pending the outcome of negotiations on a draft code of conduct (see above), in which definition was a major issue.

An important point of disagreement about the definition of TNCs related to the nature of the ownership of the enterprise; opinions differed as to whether the code was applicable to State-owned or public enterprises as well as those of private or mixed ownership. Also, a major point of divergence was whether the definition should underline the comprehensive character of its ambit by including the words "whether of public, private or mixed ownership" or whether a definition which made no explicit reference to the nature of ownership would be sufficient.

At its reconvened special session in January,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission did not examine specific proposals; however, the Chairman mentioned a number of possible solutions to the question of definitions and scope of application.

During its regular session in April,<sup>(3)</sup> the Commission again took up the question. Some delegations emphasized the importance for the definition of TNCs to be all-inclusive, covering all types of enterprises operating in two or more countries, including those State-owned. Others stated that an emphasis on State-owned enterprises was a diversion and that they were quite different from TNCs.

At its reconvened special session in June,<sup>(5)</sup> the Commission examined a variety of texts put forward by delegations, but reached no agreement.

Bilateral, regional and international arrangements relating to TNCs

In 1984, the Centre on TNCs intensified its work on the collection and analysis of international, regional and bilateral arrangements relating to TNCs, taking steps to develop methods for storing, updating and retrieving relevant material, so as to respond better to the growing number of requests for information in that area. Bilateral investment treaties remained the most frequently concluded among the international instruments. The Centre initiated a number of studies on the subject.

In accordance with a June 1983 Commission decision to include in its agenda a sub-item on those arrangements, approved by the Economic and Social Council in July of that year,<sup>(9)</sup> the Centre on TNCs submitted a report as a basis for discussion of the matter at the Commission's April 1984 session.<sup>(10)</sup> The report reviewed the principal inter-governmental arrangements and discussed bilateral arrangements dealing with investment protection and promotion as well as taxation. It examined regional arrangements, including instruments adopted by regional economic integration groupings, and international arrangements dealing with specific economic, social and political issues, in addition to the draft code on TNCs. The report concluded that all instruments relating to TNCs adopted so far were limited in terms of substantive or geographic coverage; none addressed the full range of international concerns that had to be dealt with. They were no substitute for a comprehensive, effective and universally applicable code of conduct.

The Commission took note of the report and requested the Centre to update it for the Commission's 1986 session.<sup>(3)</sup>

Standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, established by the Economic and Social Council in 1982,<sup>(1)</sup> held its second session in New York from 12 to 23 March 1984.<sup>(2)</sup> Before it were three studies prepared by the Centre on TNCs on the following topics: the work of standard-setting bodies in home and host countries;<sup>(3)</sup> TNC accounting and reporting policies;<sup>(4)</sup> and issues identified during the development of an information system on TNC activities (see below).<sup>(5)</sup> In addition, a working paper was submitted by Egypt for the members of the Group of 77 which were Working Group members, on harmonization of corporate accounting and reporting.

The Executive Director of the Centre on TNCs pointed out that divergent accounting and reporting practices continued to cause concern about the comparability of information in financial statements in different countries. The Chairman observed that many issues reflected different schools of thought about corporate accounting and reporting, issues related to the world-wide growth of TNCs, the diversity of their operations, their impact on the countries in which they operated, and their role in the utilization of capital, technology and human resources. The Group recognized that there was concern in three main areas—information disclosure, divergent accounting practices, and accounting education, training and research—and agreed on the need for harmonizing accounting and reporting practices.

The Group considered issues of accounting and reporting arising from the comprehensive information system developed and maintained by the Centre on TNCs (see below), and outstanding issues identified by the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting in 1982.<sup>(6)</sup> Those outstanding issues included: movements in certain assets, among them land and buildings, equipment, long-term investments, patents and trade marks, and long-term deferred charges; government subsidies to business enterprises; and value added as a result of operations of business enterprises. The Group agreed that there was a need for disclosure of information in those areas. In dealing with transfer pricing, another outstanding issue, the Group agreed that policies followed in determining the prices for transactions among associated and similar enterprises should be disclosed, as should the volume of such transactions.

All delegations that spoke at the April session of the Commission on TNCs on the question of international standards of accounting and reporting agreed that the Group had made progress in fulfilling its mandate. One delegation, also speaking on behalf of several others, stressed that the Group's purpose was not to set accounting standards. Some delegations considered that the Group's list of accounting and reporting issues, annexed to its report, was too ambitious.

On 24 April, the Commission took note of the Group's report and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1985 session.<sup>(7)</sup>

VISION TECHNOLOGIES

Centre on TNCs

During 1984, the United Nations Centre on TNCs, the principal Secretariat unit for TNC-related matters, assisted in formulating a code of conduct, prepared studies for the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, and continued to survey international, regional and bilateral arrangements on TNCs (see p. 593). It undertook economic and legal research, and research on the political, social and cultural effects of TNCs. It expanded its information system on TNC activities and trends and provided advisory and information services to Governments (see below). It co-operated in updating a consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or, in the case of pharmaceuticals, not approved by Governments (see Chapter XVI of this section).

Research on TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia continued to be an important element of the Centre's work. As requested by the Economic and Social Council in July (resolution 1984/53), the Centre assisted in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the preparations for the public hearings on TNC activities at its two series of meetings in 1984 (July and September) (see p. 149). For those meetings, the Centre prepared a list of studies and reports issued by the United Nations on TNCs in South Africa and Namibia. For the 1984 session of the Commission on TNCs, the Centre prepared a report dealing with measures adopted by home countries with respect to TNCs operating there in violation of United Nations resolutions and decisions.

The Commission considered the activities of the Centre at its April session, taking note of the Secretary-General's report on its activities since mid-1983,<sup>(1)</sup> and requesting the Centre to report in 1986 on its utilization of resources during 1984-1985.<sup>(2)</sup>

Information system

In 1984, the Centre on TNCs continued to develop its comprehensive information system.<sup>(3)</sup> The system focused on six areas in which information was collected, processed and analysed: trends in TNC activities; studies on TNC activities in specific sectors; individual corporations; policies, laws and regulations relating to TNCs; contracts and agreements between TNCs and government agencies and local enterprises; and information sources.

To discern trends in TNC activities, the system collected macro-economic data, including information on flows and stocks of foreign investment, investment income payments from developing countries, and payments to TNCs for technology and services. During 1984, all statistics were updated and refinements were made both in the data collected and in the processing of data. The categories in which data were collected and analysed and the coding systems for those categories were made to conform to evolving United Nations classification standards.

Studies were made on TNCs in specific industry sectors such as construction and engineering; computers and data processing; computer services; banking; biotechnology; synthetic fibres, textiles and clothing; pharmaceuticals; armaments; non-fuel minerals; trade in data and data services; telecommunications; plastics; agricultural trade; pesticides; primary commodities; and semiconductors.

The fifth report on national legislation and regulations relating to TNCs was completed. The Centre also collected a significant number of bilateral and multilateral investment treaties and related agreements. Its collection of contracts and agreements between TNCs and host government organizations was greatly enlarged by the acquisition of 350 petroleum contracts covering the regions of Asia and Australasia, South America and southern and central Africa.

On 24 April 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission on TNCs took note of the February progress report on the Centre's information system<sup>(4)</sup> and requested another report in 1985. The Commission approved the recommendations of the Centre for the modification of its corporate information system. The modifications dealt mainly with increased selectivity in collecting corporate information, increased co-ordination between the analysis of corporate information and the Centre's advisory services and sectoral studies, and the redesign of corporate profiles to make them more uniform and more useful to Governments. The Centre expanded its collection of information on the largest industrial companies from 382 to 700 such companies; the data items collected included total and foreign components of sales, net assets, earnings, research and development expenditure, capital expenditure, and wages and salaries.

The Centre responded to 498 requests for information from Governments and intergovernmental organizations, about half of the requests coming from developing countries. A total of 521 requests were received from non-governmental organizations, including trade unions, business organizations, academic institutions, public interest organizations and the media.

In response to the concern expressed by several delegations at the Commission's April session that the Centre's work might not be reaching the government organizations that most needed them, a note verbale was sent to United Nations missions requesting the names of government and other organizations that should receive Centre publications. Approximately 30 Governments responded, nearly doubling the Centre's mailing list to some 650 organizations, most of them in developing countries.

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, in March 1984 (see above), considered issues of accounting and reporting arising from the Centre's information system. The Group noted that, in collecting data on TNC activities from various sources, the Centre had identified two key issues—the availability and the comparability of data—which concerned the disclosure of financial and non-financial information items, segmentation of aggregate figures, units of measurement, methods of accounting and formats of presentation. The Group agreed that the Centre, in developing its information system, should take into account the agreed lists of minimum items for general purpose reporting, identified by the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group in 1982.<sup>(5)</sup>

The Centre also co-operated in preparing the first revised issue of a list of chemical products deemed toxic or hazardous. In resolution 39/229, the Assembly urged the Centre to continue co-operating fully in updating the list. It further urged countries to avail themselves of the Centre's information facilities.

Joint units with regional commissions

Joint units established between the Centre on TNCs and the United Nations regional commissions in developing areas continued to operate in 1984 in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and Western Asia. Designed for the region's specific needs and to complement the work of the Centre, each unit engaged in research on the economic, social and institutional issues of TNCs, information dissemination, and training and advisory services.

Two Secretariat reports described the work of the units during the year; one covering May 1983 to March 1984,<sup>(6)</sup> submitted to the Commission on TNCs at its April 1984 session, and the other covering April 1984 to March 1985,<sup>(7)</sup> prepared for its 1985 session.

In 1984, the joint unit of the Centre and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) concentrated on research. A study on the role of transnational banks and financial institutions in Africa's development process was completed, as were two case-studies on Liberia and Nigeria. Studies were also finalized on TNCs in the non-food agricultural industry and in agricultural food processing. Another study dealt with the structures, policies and operations of TNCs in the mining industry in Africa. The role of TNCs in the African mining industry was also the subject of a regional workshop (Manzini, Swaziland) for English-speaking African countries. A report was prepared on Morocco's experience in relation to the establishment of African multinational enterprises. Collection and dissemination of information was intensified and requests for information on TNCs were sent to all ECA member States.

The activities of the unit established between the Centre and the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) were mainly focused on in-house research. A comprehensive survey on the extent, dimensions and structure of foreign direct investments in developed countries was completed, while work began on a project on TNCs in the economic integration of the economies of the countries of the ECE region. The unit also aided the Centre in its technical assistance and advisory projects related to specific industries.

In Latin America, case-studies of Bolivia and Peru with respect to transnational banks and external financing were completed as part of an ongoing research project, as was a report on the role of TNCs in the foreign commercial flows of the region. Two studies in the area of commodities were finished, dealing with a global approach for strengthening the bargaining power of countries and with the role of the public sector and TNCs in the development of the mining sector in Latin America. A survey was made of 30 major TNCs in Colombia, and case-studies of Argentina and Colombia were started as part of an ongoing series of reports on the importance of TNCs in various countries. The joint unit also provided advisory services to several countries and co-operated in training activities of the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean.

Among the activities of the joint unit with the Economic Commission for Western Asia were preparations for a report on the status of the draft code of conduct on TNCs, with special reference to Arab countries. Negotiations were started with the Arab Industrial Development Organization for a joint study on the role of TNCs in the transfer of technology in the region.

The joint unit with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) completed a project on transnational trading corporations in selected countries (Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka, Thailand) and a survey of TNCs based in developing countries of the region. A revised version of a study on the taxation of mining projects in the region was issued, as was a study on costs and conditions of technology transfer. A preliminary overview of TNC involvement and foreign investment in Nepal was also completed. The unit provided administrative and technical support to several national and regional workshops organized by the Centre and continued to establish focal points in several ESCAP member countries so as to respond efficiently to their information needs on TNC-related matters.

Research

Centre research activities fell into five broad categories: studies related to a code of conduct and other international arrangements and agreements relating to TNCs, including international standards of accounting and reporting (see p. 594); analyses of general trends in TNC operations; examination of measures strengthening the negotiating capacity of Governments in their relations with TNCs; analysis of the political, social and cultural impact of TNCs on host developing countries; and studies of TNCs in specific areas and selected sectors.<sup>(8)</sup>

An important element in the Centre's work continued to be research on TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia (see p. 146). The role of TNCs was examined in relation to various other selected areas, including international trade and banking, industry, employment and technology transfer.

The Centre continued to follow closely developments relating to environmental aspects of TNC activities. It was involved in a research programme, carried out jointly with the United Nations Environment Programme, intended to increase the understanding of the role of TNCs in relation to sustained development, national environment policies, location of pollution-intensive industries, environmental management practices and international environmental co-operation.

The Centre published a study on TNCs in the pharmaceutical industry of developing countries and completed drafts of studies on TNCs in the international semiconductor, construction and engineering, and man-made fibre, textile and clothing industries.

Recommendations for the Centre's research and advisory programmes were made by the Secretary-General in a report to the Commission's April 1984 session,<sup>(9)</sup> based on suggestions made at an August/September 1983 interregional seminar on TNCs in primary commodity exports. Most of the proposals fell within the Centre's existing mandate, the Secretary-General noted, and could be initiated within the programme elements and resources allocated for 1984-1985. He suggested that further research could be undertaken on TNCs in agricultural trade and in non-fuel minerals, and on TNCs and taxation, in co-ordination with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and the Division of Natural Resources and Energy of the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development.

During the discussion at the Commission's April session,<sup>(2)</sup> some delegations stressed the need to avoid duplication of the work of other organizations both inside and outside the United Nations system. Others felt that insufficient attention had been devoted to the negative implications of TNC activities. Several delegations suggested that the Centre should continue its research on the role of TNCs in the least developed countries; others stressed the importance of further research on conflicting jurisdictions on TNCs in a manner that would mitigate such conflicts. Among other research topics suggested were: technology transfer and reverse transfer of technology; export processing zones; finance and international indebtedness; trade and the balance of payments; interference in the internal affairs of States; political and social impact of TNCs; capital flows and outflows; and armaments and the transfer of military technology. One delegation indicated opposition to research on the last subject, noting the predominant role of Governments in that area and the difficulty in obtaining information.

The Commission requested the Centre, in implementing its research programme, to take into account the delegations' views.

TNCs and development

A major focus of the Centre's research activities was the role of TNCs in world development. Submitted to the Commission at its April 1984 session were: a report on TNCs in world development,<sup>(10)</sup> updating a survey completed in 1983;<sup>(11)</sup> and a report on their role in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.<sup>(12)</sup>

The first report contained a review of developments in three areas in which international co-operation, including the involvement of TNCs, could be beneficial: finance and trade, where major adjustments were needed to compensate for the decline in lending to developing countries by transnational banks; the role of TNCs in employment; and their role in low-income countries. The report concluded that new and more imaginative forms of co-operation between essential public flows of capital and certain types of foreign private flows were needed.

The second report concluded that the contribution of TNCs to achieving the Strategy's objectives was overshadowed by the consequences of the world economic recession. Foreign direct investment, international lending, the growth of manufactured exports from developing countries and industrialization for the domestic market were adversely affected by the impact of that recession on international trade and payments, trade policies and policies for domestic stabilization. Especially for the majority of the low-income countries and the least developed areas, TNCs might not be able to make a substantial contribution to achieving the objectives of the Strategy that related to resource flows, redeployment and industrialization. The liberalization of restrictions on foreign direct investment had also been a feature of structural adjustment programmes undertaken as a condition for restoring access to international credits, a trend that could reduce developing countries' ability to regulate the activities of TNCs; there remained a need for national and international action to strengthen the negotiating position of developing countries.

In that connection, the report stressed the need for early adoption of a code of conduct (see p. 592) as an instrument for orienting the international environment towards encouraging a positive contribution of TNCs to achieving the objectives of the Strategy. Consideration could also be given to careful scrutiny of foreign investment policies to ensure that a liberalization of restrictions did not erode the real gains made by developing countries in channelling TNC activities towards their national development objectives; further refinement of the policies of host countries towards TNCs and co-operation among developing countries could improve their bargaining power, help reduce the negative effects of TNCs and promote a positive contribution on their part towards achieving the Strategy's objectives.

The Commission on TNCs, at its April 1984 session,<sup>(2)</sup> decided to transmit the second report in 1985 to the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade. It requested the Centre to prepare for 1988 a fourth survey on TNCs in development. The Commission postponed consideration of a five-nation (Canada, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Sweden) draft resolution, requesting the Centre to prepare a study on the activities of State-owned enterprises, in particular in developing countries.

Transborder data flows

In view of the growing importance of transborder data flows for all countries, especially developing ones, it was stressed at the Commission's April 1984 session that further work on the subject was required.<sup>(2)</sup> Corporate transborder data flows, in particular, were becoming increasingly important for the conduct of international business.

National and international policies in that area still being rudimentary or non-existent, a Centre report to the Commission<sup>(13)</sup> proposed that the Centre focus on research on the subject, preparing country case-studies and selected industry studies, and highlighting the impact of new information technologies on the structure and decision-making of TNCs and the role of TNCs in international data and data-services trade.

During the Commission's discussion of the report, it was suggested that a forum be created, in the form of an ad hoc working group of experts, in which the implications and impact of transborder data flows on the development process of developing countries could be discussed. Some delegations felt, however, that such a group was not currently needed and that the Centre should proceed along the path taken so far, which included informal seminars. A draft decision submitted by Mexico, for the members of the Group of 77 which were Commission members, on the establishment of such a working group was withdrawn by the sponsors.

The Commission reaffirmed the importance it attached to the Centre's work on the subject and took note of the Centre's intention to concentrate in the following year on one project area. It requested the Centre's Executive Director to include in the 1985 report on the role of TNCs in transborder data flows suggestions for the future course of action of the Commission on the question, taking into account also consultations with international bodies and other organizations.

Information on studies dealing with the impact of TNCs on transborder data flows and documents on other aspects of TNCs in the context of a new world information and communication order (see p. 354) was submitted in a May 1984 note by the Centre on TNCs to the Committee on Information.

Technical co-operation

The programme of technical co-operation in advisory, information and training services of the Centre on TNCs continued in 1984 to respond to a wide variety of requests from developing countries in numerous sectors and areas.<sup>(14)</sup> During the year, the Centre completed or initiated 90 advisory and information projects in 33 countries and organized 13 training workshops for some 500 participants. Of those projects, 50 were carried out in low-income countries in response to a growing interest in institution-building. Forty-six were undertaken in 17 African countries or areas, 37 in 11 Asian and Pacific countries or areas, 5 in 3 Latin American countries, and one each in a Western Asian and a European country.

Governments were provided with assistance in formulating new or revising existing policies, institutional arrangements, laws, regulations and model contracts on TNC participation in the economy generally, relating to foreign investment and technology policies and legislation, or in specific sectors, such as petroleum, mining, forestry, pharmaceuticals and electronics. Forty-six projects of that type were conducted, several resulting in legislation approved by Cabinet or enacted by Parliament.

Other services related to the negotiation of specific contractual arrangements and a whole range of issues involving TNCs, with regard to wholly-owned direct investment, joint venture, technology, management, turnkey, financing and other contracts in the context of specific domestic projects. Forty-four projects of that kind were conducted in 1984, approximately one half in the natural resource sectors (petroleum, mining, agriculture, forestry and fisheries) and the remaining half in manufacturing and service industries (fertilizer, pesticide, soda ash, cement, airline, hotel, international loan).

The Centre, partly through its comprehensive information system (see p. 595), delivered basically two types of information: on the organizational structure, experience and financial position of specific TNCs; and on policies, laws and contractual arrangements with TNCs in developing countries.

Training services provided by the Centre comprised workshops, study tours and support to institutions of higher learning and of management and public administration in developing countries. Of the 13 training workshops conducted in 1984, 3 were general, dealing with cross-sectoral issues between TNCs and host Governments, and 10 were specialized programmes on petroleum, mining, loan negotiations, acquisition of technology and, for the first time, international accounting and reporting and international leasing. Nine of the workshops were given in Asia, two in Africa and one each in Western Asia and Latin America.

Study tours were organized for senior officials of the Government of Pakistan to visit foreign investment and technology screening bodies in Malaysia, the Republic of Korea and the Philippines, and for senior officials from Ghana to study, in New York and Washington, D.C., tax and accounting issues related to TNC transactions.

The Centre completed preparation of detailed curricula, related bibliographies and case material for graduate courses on TNCs and economic development, business policy and law, and a non-degree course for practitioners. The curricula were reviewed by scholars in the participating countries (Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Thailand) and subsequently finalized by the Centre and distributed to participating institutions.

Other training services initiated in 1984 included a programme of assistance to national and regional institutes of management and public administration in Africa; the programme called for assistance in developing institutes' course curricula, the training of lecturers, preparation of teaching manuals and organization of workshops on TNC-related matters.

Among other technical co-operation activities was continued support to intergovernmental organizations that dealt with TNC-related matters. Assistance was provided to a subregional organization in Africa in drafting a charter on multinational industrial enterprises and in analysing fiscal incentives and investment régimes in member countries. The Centre also initiated a project with the secretariat of the Andean Pact to assist member States in adopting uniform requirements for the registration of foreign investment.

In carrying out its technical co-operation programmes, the Centre co-operated with a variety of organizations within and outside the United Nations system.

The Commission on TNCs, in April,<sup>(2)</sup> reaffirmed the importance it attached to the Centre's technical co-operation programme.

Financing

The Centre implemented technical co-operation activities substantially through the use of extrabudgetary resources, comprised primarily of voluntary contributions by Governments to the Trust Fund for the Centre and resources made available by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) for project execution. Total income in 1984 was $2,608,331. That amount included contributions of $764,206 by eight Governments (Finland, $26,474; Netherlands, $125,944; Norway, $190,223; Republic of Korea, $8,558; Sweden, $175,131; Switzerland, $233,645; Zaire, $500; Zambia, $3,731), interest and miscellaneous income of and $193,590 and $1,061,635 from UNDP. Expenditures during the year came to $1,601,635, of which the UNDP share was 66.3 per cent, up from 60.4 per cent in 1983.<sup>(15)</sup>

Chapter VIII

Regional economic and social activities

In 1984, the five regional commissions held their regular intergovernmental sessions: the Economic Commission for Latin America (changing its nomenclature to the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC)), at Lima, Peru (29 March–6 April); the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) at Geneva (3–14 April); the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) in Tokyo (17–27 April); the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) at Baghdad, Iraq (22–26 April); and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and its Conference of Ministers at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia (24–28 May).

Among issues of concern to the regional commissions considered by the General Assembly in 1984 were: the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (resolution 39/230), the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (39/233), the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (39/227) and co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (39/215). The Assembly endorsed, in principle, the proposed construction projects at both ECA and ESCAP headquarters (sections III and XI of resolution 39/236) to expand their conference facilities. It authorized the Secretary-General to take measures to enable ECWA to meet its personnel requirements (resolution 39/243).

The Economic and Social Council, in July, took action on: the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (resolution 1984/68), development of a remote-sensing programme in Africa (1984/69), the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1984/70), water resources development in Africa (1984/73), the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar (1984/75), ECA's women's programme (1984/77) and the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1984/78). Other Council actions dealt with strengthening the ECA role as an executing agency (1984/74), matters arising from ECA Executive Secretary's 1982-1983 report (1984/76), policy-making structure (1984/80) and staff and administrative questions of ECWA (1984/81), and the terms of reference of ECLAC and ESCAP (1984/67 and 1984/66).

Summaries of the annual survey of current economic conditions in each region, prepared by commission secretariats, were taken note of by the Council in July during its discussion of the world economic situation (see p. 406).

Regional co-operation

The Secretary-General reported to the Economic and Social Council, in a June 1984 report on regional co-operation,<sup>(1)</sup> on the work of the regional commissions and on issues calling for Council action or attention. As part of their ongoing contacts, the executive secretaries of the five regional commissions met at Geneva on 9 July, under the chairmanship of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, and reviewed a wide range of issues, including the economic situation and the promotion of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries (see p. 403).<sup>(2)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted decision 1984/184 without vote. The documents taken note of in the decision are discussed later in this chapter.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/184

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/142/Add.1) without vote, 24 July (meeting 17); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 9.

Strengthening of regional commissions

The Secretary-General reported in April 1984<sup>(3)</sup> that efforts to achieve decentralization and restructuring, in accordance with a 1982 General Assembly resolution on the topic,<sup>(4)</sup> should not lead to fragmentation of Secretariat activities, but promote mutually reinforcing activities and contribute to the cohesiveness of the work of the United Nations. The consultations held on the question had confirmed a definite need to encourage genuine co-operation and closer and continuing interaction between units of regional commissions and Headquarters on programme matters and to pursue decentralization with flexibility, taking into account the requirements of each commission. The Secretary-General believed that the overwhelming proportion of the work involved would be undertaken at the regional level, while Headquarters would retain responsibility for global synthesis and analysis and for presenting outputs to central legislative bodies. A number of joint activities, with Headquarters having the main responsibility but with greater involvement by the commissions, were suggested in programmes relating to population, social development, science and technology, and development issues and policies and public administration.

In a November report,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General noted that advances had been made with regard to delegation of authority and decentralization. In the administrative area, clear-cut policies had gradually emerged, leading to a considerable delegation of personnel and financial authority to the regional commissions; in relation to substantive programmes, it had generally proved more difficult to develop and apply uniform approaches and criteria. Arrangements were being made to promote a more systematic involvement of the executive secretaries at all stages of programme planning and budgeting, and a new practice had been initiated involving the holding of intersecretariat meetings following sessions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to determine the most effective distribution of responsibilities for implementing their resolutions. Collaboration continued to be strengthened between the regional commissions on the one hand and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) on the other. The promotion of subregional and regional co-operation, the main raison d'être of the commissions, was acquiring important new dimensions with the increasing emphasis being placed by developing countries on the concept of self-reliance and economic and technical co-operation among them.

On interregional co-operation among developing countries, the Secretary-General, in a June report<sup>(6)</sup> on progress made in implementing a 1983 Council resolution,<sup>(7)</sup> emphasized the need for an intersecretariat meeting to examine operational modalities for setting up and executing joint projects for promoting such co-operation, the application of an operational framework to priority areas for joint action, possible co-ordinated activities in the high-priority sphere of international financial co-operation, and activities in certain specific aspects of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries (see p. 403).

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC),<sup>(8)</sup> having studied the Secretary-General's April report, concluded that several fundamental questions of decentralization—such as measures to avoid compartmentalization or duplication of activities—had yet to be analysed before it could take decisions. It recommended that the Secretary-General should further clarify and identify the specific activities for decentralization and present concrete proposals in order to ensure the most economical and effective use of resources.

The Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's April report in decision 39/437.

Africa

In 1984, Africa faced the most critical economic conditions which, for some countries on the continent experiencing famine and malnutrition, came down to the question of sheer survival. Some 36 countries were affected by drought and were dependent on food aid. In addition, several disasters disrupted transport and communications with wide-ranging long-term effects (see p. 465).

Meeting from 24 to 26 May at its headquarters at Addis Ababa, the Economic Commission for Africa (nineteenth session) and its Conference of Ministers (tenth meeting)<sup>(1)</sup>—the highest policy body of ECA—focused on the critical economic situation, external indebtedness, food and agriculture, effects of the climatic situation and drought, and development issues. The Conference of Ministers adopted 43 substantive resolutions covering all aspects of socio-economic development, including a Regional Plan of Action to Combat the Impact of Drought in Africa, and a Kilimanjaro Programme of Action on Population and Self-Reliant Development. In addition, it adopted a final communiqué and a Special Memorandum on Africa's Economic and Social Crisis, to which was annexed a Declaration on Africa's External Indebtedness, adopted in June by the African Ministers of Finance.

The Commission's activities focused on achieving the goals and objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU)<sup>(2)</sup> and taken note of by the General Assembly in 1980.<sup>(3)</sup>

Economic and social trends

The overall economic situation in Africa in 1982-1983 was one of stagnation of output, according to a summary of the ECA survey of economic and social conditions in Africa.<sup>(4)</sup> After declining by 2.7 per cent in 1981, the regional product remained practically constant in 1983, and only a handful of countries had grown at rates exceeding the population growth or comparable to the average of the 1970s. There was a steep decline in per capita income to a level estimated at 10 per cent lower than in 1980. The major factors behind the recession affecting Africa were decline in demand for its exports, resulting from the recession of the industrialized economies, and the drought. The exports of oil-producing Nigeria and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, for instance, fell by 55 and 48 per cent, respectively, between 1980 and 1983, while other primary commodity prices fell sometimes to record lows. Lower export revenues led to acute shortages of imported raw materials and inputs for industry, leading to production slow-downs and even close-ups; capacity utilization fell to 20 per cent in some cases.

Continuing drought in the west and southern subregions depressed agricultural production (see p. 509), with diverse consequences on the external balance as well as the industrial sector which was highly dependent on agriculture for supplies.

Other factors leading to the poor economic performance pertained to the policies followed by Governments, tending in many instances to create an unfavourable framework for production activities.

The survey foresaw a recovery in 1984, although prospects beyond 1984 were not favourable.

The summary was noted by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1984/187.

The survey for 1983-1984<sup>(5)</sup> indicated that Africa's economic performance continued to be affected by, among other factors, the catastrophic drought, which covered a vast area from the Sahel to eastern and southern Africa, with a population of nearly 182 million in a total of 27 countries. A substantial tightening of budget policies was noted in the region in 1983-1984, the terms of trade improved slightly in 1984 and the total external debt of developing Africa at the end of 1984 was estimated at some $158 billion (see p. 606).

Critical economic situation

Special Memorandum

In May 1984, the ECA Conference of Ministers adopted a Special Memorandum on Africa's Economic and Social Crisis,<sup>(6)</sup> consisting of a preamble and five parts dealing with the nature and causes of the crisis, the emergency needs of the 24 most affected countries, short- and medium-term measures, long-term structural adjustment measures for the continent, and conclusions.

In the preamble, grave concern was expressed over the alarming and significant deterioration in the economic and social conditions of the African countries, the effects of the drought affecting 34 member States, and the devastating impact of the global economic recession on Africa, with the collapse in commodity prices, unexpectedly high interest rates, sharp exchange-rate fluctuations, increased protectionism, balance-of-payments difficulties, mounting external debt and decline in real terms of official development assistance (ODA). (See also p. 468.)

In analysing the current crisis and its causes, the Special Memorandum noted that the crisis stemmed mainly from the interaction of widespread, severe and persistent drought and the rapidly deteriorating international economic environment; solution was beyond the ability of African countries, for many of which the issue was that of sheer survival. In particular, the prolonged drought had led to severe food scarcity and had triggered off famine, malnutrition and related diseases, loss of human lives, depletion of livestock, water shortages and severe dislocation of normal life and the fragile African economies. The food situation had deteriorated so drastically that in the 34 drought-stricken countries, the imports of cereals had increased from some 4 million metric tons in 1970 to over 23 million tons in 1982.

The emergency situation had also aggravated the movement of persons in search of food and water.

In addition to emergency requirements such as food aid, the African Ministers appealed to the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank to liberalize the conditionalities of their loans and aid, and to all creditors to grant a moratorium to loan servicing and repayments to the 24 countries so as to enable them to cope with the emergency situation. Immediate balance-of-payments support and direct credit to enable reactivation of under-utilized industrial capacities was requested.

In the Memorandum's conclusions, the ECA members expressed the belief that Africa should not continue to be the weakest link in the network of world economic interdependence, and that it was in the interest of world peace and stability for the international community to co-operate fully with African Governments in averting the impending economic and social disaster and in putting Africa on the path of growth and development.

In a special appeal to the London Summit, in June, of seven major industrialized countries, the ECA Conference of Ministers called on the participants to mobilize massive resources to assist African countries.

A Declaration on Africa's External Indebtedness, adopted by the African Ministers of Finance at a regional ministerial meeting in June (see p. 606), was subsequently annexed to the Special Memorandum in accordance with a decision of the ECA Conference of Ministers.

Activities in 1984

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

Implementation of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action

In a report submitted to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in June, with a July addendum,<sup>(7)</sup> the Secretary-General discussed, in response to a December 1983 Assembly request,<sup>(8)</sup> the activities of the United Nations system in relation to the social and economic development of Africa, and progress made in implementing the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action,<sup>(2)</sup> covering areas such as human resources development, investment studies and activities, technology development and transfer, and technical assistance and co-operation projects.

The report pointed out that, while the ODA component in bilateral assistance continued to decline in real terms, more aid was anticipated in response to the Secretary-General's appeal for assistance to deal with the current critical economic situation and as a result of the Economic and Social Council's special consideration of the matter at its second regular session of 1984. The Secretary-General said he would continue to allocate the necessary resources to ECA, taking into account its role as the main economic and social development centre within the United Nations system for the African region. The report was taken note of by the Council in decision 1984/184 and by the General Assembly in decision 39/445.

In May, the ECA Conference of Ministers took note of the 1982-1983 report of the Executive Secretary, expressed concern that ECA did not have the necessary resources for evaluating its programmes and projects, and appealed to the international community to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development. Further, it urged UNDP, and requested the Secretary-General, to increase allocations to ECA. By another action, the Ministers requested the ECA and OAU secretariats to intensify their technical and logistic support to the African countries prior to and during international negotiations on development issues.

The Commission's Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MPOCs) continued to promote and sustain economic co-operation and integration activities in the region.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendations of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1984/76 without vote.

Matters arising from the biennial report of the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa for 1982-1983

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 403(XVI), adopted on 10 April 1981 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, on the biennial report of the Executive Secretary of the Commission for 1979-1980,

Recalling also section IV of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, in which, inter alia, it is stipulated that the regional commissions should be enabled fully to play their role under the authority of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council as the main general economic and social development centres within the United Nations system for their respective regions,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 38/199 of 20 December 1983 on special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s, in which, inter alia, the Assembly urged donor countries to provide substantial and sustained levels of resources for promoting the accelerated development of African countries and the effective implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos and to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development,

Convinced that a strengthened secretariat of the Economic Commission for Africa is an imperative necessity for the States members of the Commission, both individually and collectively, particularly in view of the current economic and social crisis facing Africa,

1. Appeals to the international community, particularly the developed countries of Western and Eastern Europe, North America, Japan and the members of the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries, other developing countries in a position to do so, and international and regional financial institutions to contribute generously at the Fifth Biennial Pledging Conference for the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide additional resources to the Economic Commission for Africa as the centre for general social and economic development within the United Nations system for the African region so as to enable it, in general, to assist member States more effectively and, in particular, to develop the required capacity and capability in the field of evaluation of programmes and projects.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/76

27 July 1984 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/142) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by ECA (E/1984/21); agenda item 9.

Development planning

The Joint Conference of African Planners, Statisticians and Demographers (third session, Addis Ababa, 5-14 March) prepared five draft resolutions for consideration by the ECA Conference of Ministers, on short-term forecasting in the African region, perspective studies in Africa, demographic training institutes, infrastructure posts for the ECA secretariat in the population field, and the Pan-African Documentation and Information System (PADIS).

In May, the Conference of Ministers called on African countries to undertake and strengthen short-term outlook activities, and to undertake perspective studies on their respective economies. It also decided to establish a regional technical committee, which would set a policy for PADIS and oversee project execution.

Implementation of the International Development Strategy

The ECA Conference of Ministers, in May, expressed concern over the lack of progress in implementing, in Africa, the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s).<sup>(9)</sup> It urged African Governments to renew their efforts to remove obstacles to the Strategy's implementation, invited them to bring such impediments to the attention of the Economic and Social Council, and requested the Executive Secretary to prepare a progress report.

Least developed countries

The Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries (LDCs) held its fourth meeting at Addis Ababa from 22 to 25 May 1984.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, also in May, urged African LDCs to prepare themselves for the 1985 mid-term global review, by an intergovernmental expert group of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCs.<sup>(10)</sup> It also urged donor countries and multilateral financial institutions to provide financial assistance to the African LDCs on favourable terms and conditions, and to alleviate their debt burden through retroactive adjustment measures or complete cancellation of debts. (See also p. 412.)

International trade and finance

The Ministerial Follow-up Committee on Trade and Finance for African Development (third meeting, Addis Ababa, 9-14 May) considered trade issues of concern to Africa, including the implication of UNCTAD VI on the region's development; it also called on the secretariat to seek dialogue with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe on trade and economic relations and co-operation.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, in May, asked the 26 African LDCs to bring up to date their institutional pricing structures and to make appropriate price-fixing arrangements for agricultural producers, and invited IMF and the World Bank to make compensatory arrangements regarding pricing policies. In another action, the Ministers accepted Togo's offer to host the Fourth All-Africa Trade Fair at Lomé in 1985 and created an organizing committee of 15 countries for the Fair.

Secretariat activities placed special emphasis on identifying domestic trade distribution channels, bearing in mind the region's food crisis; high priority was given to the preparatory work for setting up an African Monetary Fund.

Intraregional trade

The Federation of African Chambers of Commerce was established in September 1984 with 24 national chambers of commerce, industry, mines and agriculture signing its constitution: the ECA secretariat was designated to serve as the Federation's interim secretariat until January 1986.

Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November 1984, Zimbabwe, on behalf also of 11 other African States, submitted a draft resolution<sup>(11)</sup> to the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which would have had the Assembly request donor Governments to provide financial and technical assistance to the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States—established by a treaty signed at Lusaka, Zambia, in 1981<sup>(12)</sup>—to accelerate its development into an economic community by 1992.

In December, the Assembly adopted decision 39/433 without vote.

Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to refer to its fortieth session for consideration the draft resolution entitled "Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States".

General Assembly decision 39/433

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790Add.3) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); oral proposal by Vice-Chairman; agenda item 80 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 53, 56; plenary 104.

Other action. The ECA Conference of Ministers appealed to member States which had not done so to sign and ratify the 1981 treaty, urged those which had not done so to ratify the treaty establishing the Economic Community of Central African States, called for measures to strengthen MULPOCs and appealed for assistance for projects whose final objective was establishment of an African economic community by the year 2000.

External debt

The African Ministers of Finance—at a regional ministerial meeting, held at Addis Ababa from 18 to 20 June 1984—adopted a Declaration on Africa's External Indebtedness.<sup>(13)</sup> In addition to a preamble, the Declaration contained sections dealing with the causes of the external indebtedness; measures for implementation at national, subregional, regional, interregional and international levels; and conclusions.

The Declaration noted that Africa's external debt was $150 billion, out of the total third-world indebtedness of $785 billion in 1983, with rates of overall debt and debt servicing as compared to exports, respectively, at 223.5 per cent and 25.1 per cent, far ahead of Asia (81.4 per cent and 10.8 per cent) and closer to Latin America (288.5 per cent and 44 per cent); the available margin for internal adjustments was much smaller in Africa because of the large number of countries classified as LDCs facing the vagaries of the weather and food problems.

Among measures called for at the international level were possible cancellation of external debts of developing African countries; improved debt rescheduling; a moratorium, for at least 3 to 5 years, on debt servicing of both public and private lenders; containing debt services at a reasonable percentage of export earnings and gross national product; and introduction of fairer and more far-reaching multi-lateral arrangements for reorganizing debt-servicing obligations. IMF was called on to adopt more concrete measures for balance-of-payments support at an increased level.

Further, the Declaration saw a need for increased ODA in view of the substantial reduction in private resource flows to Africa, and for consideration by the industrialized countries of reducing international interest rates, setting a ceiling on interest rates, and writing off accumulated arrears in interest payments or converting them into grants. It recommended the convening of international conferences—one to deal with the external indebtedness of African countries, and another on money and finance for development.

The Declaration was annexed to the Special Memorandum on Africa's Economic and Social Crisis (see p. 603), as previously agreed to by the ECA Conference of Ministers.

Africa's external debt problem was also dealt with by the General Assembly in resolution 39/29, on the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa.

Transport and communications

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988)

The second phase (1984-1988) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Africa (1978-1988)<sup>(14)</sup> was launched by the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning (fourth session, Conakry, Guinea, 7-11 February 1984), which also reviewed the implementation of the first phase (1980-1983) and approved the programme for the second phase.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly, in May,<sup>(15)</sup> a listing and financial analysis of the work programme developed for 1984-1985, and reported that no response had been made to his March appeal for voluntary contributions towards the unappropriated resources required. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination,<sup>(16)</sup> on 8 May, took note of the report and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its 1984 session an updated report indicating all activities foreseen and the status of resources available for their implementation.

In his annual progress report on the implementation of the programme for the Decade, submitted in June to the Assembly and the Council,<sup>(17)</sup> the ECA Executive Secretary discussed the preparation and presentation of the second-phase programme, consisting of 1,053 projects costing $18.36 billion. Of those, 581 projects were for transport ($14.43 billion) and 472 for communications

($3.93 billion). Some 37 per cent of the funds required for the former, and 46 per cent for the latter, had been or were about to be secured. The Secretary-General also reported in June to the Assembly and the Council<sup>(18)</sup> that the second-phase programme reflected ECA efforts to prepare a rational programme based on the evaluation of the first-phase activities. Emphasis was placed on certain categories of projects that were both critical and would have the greatest impact on the physical integration of the continent, namely, maintenance and rehabilitation, human resources development, transit corridors and inter-country and subregional projects.

Evaluation of the first phase showed that, during implementation, the initial programme had increased from 771 to 1,091 projects and costs had risen from an estimated $9 billion to $15.4 billion; of the $7.1 billion secured for the first phase, some $5.2 billion, or 75 per cent, was provided by the African countries themselves. It was considered that a firm base had been established during the first phase for the eventual solution of Africa's major transport and communications problems.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, in May, endorsed the programme for the second phase and called on donor countries and international financial institutions to provide African countries with technical and financial resources on liberal terms for implementing the new phase, giving particular attention to projects of land-locked countries. The Secretary-General and the UNDP Administrator were also asked to secure and provide funds.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, took note of the ECA Executive Secretary's progress report (decision 1984/184) and adopted resolution 1984/68 without vote.

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/150 of 19 December 1983 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, by which it approved the organization of technical consultative meetings and studies on the harmonization and co-ordination of the various modes of transport and communications,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/68 of 27 July 1984,

Considering the priority attached to transport and communications in the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos, and the endorsement of the programme for the second phase (1984-1988) of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa in its resolution 487(XIX) of 26 May 1984,

Noting the approval of the programme for the second phase of the Decade by the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning at its fourth session, held at Conakry from 7 to 11 February 1984, and the efforts made by the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa in the preparation of the plan,

Bearing in mind that the programme for the Decade requires regular adjustment throughout the Decade,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the progress report of the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa on the implementation of the programme for the first phase (1980-1983) of the Decade and the approved programme for the second phase (1984-1988),

1. Reaffirms its resolution 38/150 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and calls for its immediate and effective implementation;

2. Endorses the programme for the second phase of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa approved by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa in its resolution 487(XIX);

3. Notes the financial support provided by the Secretary-General and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to the Economic Commission for Africa for the preparation of the programme for the second phase of the Decade and for the continued operations of the Decade Co-ordination Unit;

4. Invites all Governments, particularly those of the developed countries, and international financial institutions to increase substantially their financial support for the programme for the second phase of the Decade and to accord particular attention to the financing and implementation of transport and communications projects of the land-locked countries, to participate fully and positively in the scheduled technical consultative meetings and to provide financial and technical resources on liberal terms to African countries for the implementation of the programme for the second phase of the Decade;

5. Appeals to the international community and international financial institutions to provide the Economic Commission for Africa with experts for short terms who would carry out specialized activities in the programme for the Decade, including the preparation of project documents;

6. Appeals also to the United Nations Development Programme to continue to provide the Economic Commission for Africa with funds during the next programming cycle;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Economic Commission for Africa with adequate financial resources from the regular budget of the United Nations to enable it:

(a) To fully implement the activities previously mandated in paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 38/150;

(b) To ensure the preparation of relevant financial and technical documents of selected projects for the programme for the second phase of the Decade;

(c) To ensure prompt follow-up on interest expressed by Governments and international financial institutions, during technical consultative meetings, in financing Decade projects;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure the implementation of the present resolution and to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report on the progress achieved in the implementation of the Decade programme.

On 15 December, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, by a recorded vote of 73 to 17, with 9 abstentions, decided to inform the Assembly that the resolution's adoption would entail an additional appropriation of $1,439,600 in the 1984-1985 budget.

Paragraphs 4 and 7 were approved in the Second Committee by recorded votes of 102 to 1, with 22 abstentions, and 94 to 14, with 17 abstentions, respectively. In explanation of vote on the text as a whole, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Ukrainian SSR (also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR) and the United States objected to the financial implications. Denmark further objected to a departure from the Committee's efforts to adopt by consensus those resolutions having financial implications. Similarly, Japan and the United Kingdom felt that paragraph 7 (a) contravened the arrangements set forth in the December 1983 Assembly resolution on the topic<sup>(19)</sup> whereby financing was assured for the 1984-1985 biennium.

Air transport

A Conference on Freedoms of the Air (Mbabane, Swaziland, 19-23 November 1984)—organized, in response to a December 1983 Assembly request,<sup>(19)</sup> by ECA in collaboration with OAU, the African Civil Aviation Commission and the African Airlines Association—adopted the Mbabane Declaration, thereby creating a technical committee to, among other things, take inventory of existing or potential main routes necessary for the economic development and physical integration of Africa, and to promote multinational airlines or joint operations at subregional levels.

Satellite communications and remote sensing

An extraordinary meeting of experts of transport, communications and planning (Addis Ababa, March) reviewed the activities of the Inter-Agency Co-ordinating Committee in conducting a feasibility study on an African satellite communications system.

Conscious of the benefits to be derived from the applications of remote sensing to communications and natural resources development and to the solution of many of the phenomena affecting Africa's social and economic development, the Conference of Ministers requested the Economic and Social Council and the Secretary-General to provide ECA with adequate resources on a regular basis for development of the African remote-sensing programme.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendations of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1984/69 without vote.

Development of the African remote-sensing programmeThe Economic and Social Council,*

Noting with appreciation the steps taken by the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa, as highlighted in his biennial report for 1982-1983, towards the implementation of resolution 280(XII), adopted on 28 February 1975 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, concerning the introduction of remote-sensing technology into Africa, and resolution 313(XIII), adopted on 1 March 1977 by the Conference of Ministers, concerning the establishment of a remote-sensing programme in Africa,

Recalling that the achievements reported by the Executive Secretary have been accomplished principally through the utilization of extrabudgetary resources which have continued to be inadequate for the development of the programme,

Mindful of General Assembly resolution 37/90 of 10 December 1982 on the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to review the current programme of the Commission, with a view to reallocating funds for the implementation and development of the African remote-sensing programme.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/69

27 July 1984 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/142) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by ECA (E/1984/21), orally amended during informal consultations; agenda item 9.

Strait of Gibraltar

The Executive Secretaries of ECA and ECE, in an interim report submitted to the Economic and Social Council through the Secretary-General in June,<sup>(20)</sup> stated that all transport work in the Mediterranean region should take into account the possibility that a permanent link would be built between Africa and Europe through the Strait of Gibraltar by the end of the century. They expressed the hope that material resources would be allocated to the project, which they believed was essential for communications between the two continents.

In May, the ECA Conference of Ministers adopted a resolution similar to that subsequently adopted by the Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1984/75 without vote.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of GibraltarThe Economic and Social Council,*

Recalling its resolutions 1982/57 of 30 July 1982 and 1983/62 of 29 July 1983 on the proposed Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Recalling also the conclusions contained in the interim report prepared by the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe,

Bearing in mind the need to take into account the principles of good-neighbourliness and co-operation among all parties interested in and concerned with the pursuit of this project,

1. Invites the Governments of Morocco and Spain to continue to provide information to, and to consult and co-operate with, Governments, international organizations, research institutions and universities in the Mediterranean area and elsewhere, the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe and to make concerted efforts in the pursuit of the development of the project for the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar;

2. Also invites Governments, international organizations, research institutions and universities in the Mediterranean area and elsewhere to continue to co-operate with the Governments of Morocco and Spain and with the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe and to make concerted efforts in the pursuit of this project;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe, within available resources, with the additional resources necessary for the implementation of the recommendations on the proposed permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar;

4. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe to submit an interim report on the progress made with regard to the studies on this project, through the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe, to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1985.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/75

27 July 1984      Meeting 50      Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/142) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1984/C.1/L.21), based on informal consultations on draft by ECA (E/1984/21) and orally amended during those consultations; agenda item 9.

Transport and trade of Zaire

In 1984, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a June note,<sup>(21)</sup> later taken note of in Council decision 1984/184, transmitting the report of the ECA Executive Secretary on the results of the first round-table meeting organized in 1983<sup>(22)</sup> to assist the semi-land-locked country of Zaire with its international trade and transit problems. It was reported that—due to project cancellation or suspension, or cost adjustment since the 1983 meeting—the number of projects had been reduced from 59 to 56, while the total cost of the programme had increased from $2,239 million to $2,526 million.

Tourism

A Regional Conference on Tourism, organized in collaboration with the World Tourism Organization (Niamey, Niger, 2-6 October), decided to establish a Conference of African Ministers of Tourism to be convened every two years; it also asked for studies on the possibility of establishing an ad hoc machinery for co-ordinating the activities of regional and subregional tourism development institutions.

Industrial development

Implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990)

Efforts continued to focus in 1984 on implementing the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) (1980-1990).<sup>(23)</sup>

The OAU Council of Ministers, at its February-March 1984 session, urged the international community to give increased assistance to African countries in their effort to implement industrial programmes and projects within the IDDA framework.

The Seventh Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Addis Ababa, March) reviewed the progress made, endorsed the programme of activities for 1985-1990, and formulated and approved a common African position for the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). It noted that, out of 36 countries classified by the United Nations as least developed, 26 were in Africa, and 21 of the 34 countries classified by the World Bank as "low-income" developing countries were located in the region; in 1980, the industrial sector in Africa accounted for 9.8 per cent of the region's GDP and for only 0.9 per cent of world manufacturing output. It stressed the need for international support, adding that preliminary estimates for some of the core projects in the IDDA programme stood at $140 billion.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, in May, reiterated the need to accord priority to developing strategic core industries, providing sectoral linkages and essential inputs for the production and processing of natural resources, especially food and agricultural products. It also noted that the African Industrial Development Fund, which the Conference of African Ministers of Industry in 1979 had requested ECA and the African Development Bank to establish,<sup>(24)</sup> had become operational with 15 member States—three more than the minimum number required—having signed or ratified the Fund's constitution. It agreed that the African Development Bank should manage the Fund under the policy direction of the Ministers of Industry.

UNIDO action. On 19 May, the Industrial Development Board (IDB) of UNIDO<sup>(25)</sup> requested the UNIDO Executive Director, in co-operation with OAU and ECA, to assist African countries and intergovernmental organizations in implementing the programmes endorsed by the Seventh Conference of African Ministers of Industry. It welcomed the 1983 Assembly decision<sup>(26)</sup> to increase allocations to IDDA by $1 million (see p. 611) and noted with interest the appeal expressed by the Seventh Conference that the Assembly allocation be increased to an annual minimum level of $5 million and be put on a permanent basis.

A third progress report on IDDA, prepared in response to a 1983 Assembly request<sup>(26)</sup> by the UNIDO Executive Director, in co-operation with the ECA Executive Secretary, and considered by IDB, was later submitted by the Secretary-General<sup>(27)</sup> to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. The report described co-operation between, and activities by the secretariats of, ECA, OAU and UNIDO in implementing the IDDA programme.

On 19 August,<sup>(28)</sup> the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO invited the Assembly to consider the appeal for a permanent allocation of an annual minimum of $5 million to IDDA. It also recommended that UNIDO assist African countries and organizations in a wide range of industrial development endeavours, including developing industries based on locally available natural resources, especially those promoting self-sufficiency in food supplies and creating employment in rural areas.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1984/70 without vote.

Implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/66 B of 5 December 1980, by which the Assembly proclaimed the 1980s as the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, section II of Assembly resolution 36/182 of 17 December 1981, section II of Assembly resolution 37/212 of 20 December 1982 and section II of Assembly resolution 38/192 of 20 December 1983, concerning the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Recalling also resolutions 442(XVII), adopted on 30 April 1982 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, concerning the formulation and implementation of a programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, and 466(XVIII), adopted on 2 May 1983 by the Conference of Ministers, concerning the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Welcoming resolution CM/Res.941(XL), adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fortieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 27 February to 5 March 1984,

Reiterating the need to accord priority to the development of strategic core industries that provide intrasectoral and intersectoral linkages and essential input for the production and processing of natural resources, especially food and agricultural products,

Convinced of the need to undertake concerted action for the mobilization of financial resources, including technical assistance from the secretariats of the Economic Commission for Africa, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Organization of African Unity and from other African and international organizations and bilateral and multilateral donor agencies, for the implementation of the programme for the Decade,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the General Assembly for its decision, in section II of resolution 38/192, to increase the allocation to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization from the regular budget of the United Nations by $1 million in 1984 for assistance to African countries and to intergovernmental organizations in the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, notes with interest the appeal made by the Seventh Conference of African Ministers of Industry, held at Addis Ababa from 26 to 28 May 1984, that the allocations made by the General Assembly for the Decade should reach an annual level of at least $5 million and be placed on a permanent basis, and calls upon the General Assembly to give it due attention; to this end, a similar arrangement should be considered for the Economic Commission for Africa to enable it and its Multinational Programming and Operational Centres to assist member States at the subregional level in their consultations, negotiations and investment promotion for multi-country projects;

2. Welcomes with appreciation the generous financial contributions made by a number of countries to the Economic Commission for Africa, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and some African regional centres for the implementation of activities related to the Decade;

3. Reiterates the repeated appeals made to the international community, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the African Development Bank, the Fund for International Development of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa and other international organizations, multilateral and bilateral agencies and financial institutions to increase and intensify their technical and financial assistance, on preferential conditions, to African countries and to intergovernmental organizations in the formulation and implementation of the programme for the Decade.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/70

27 July 1984 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/142) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by ECA (E/1984/21), orally amended during informal consultations; agenda item 9.

In related action, the Council, by decision 1984/167, took note of, and transmitted to the General Assembly, the IDB report and the Secretary-General's note transmitting the third progress report on IDDA.

Financing. In response to a December 1983 Assembly decision<sup>(26)</sup> to increase the allocation to UNIDO by $1 million in 1984 for assistance in IDDA programme implementation, the Secretariat reported to CPC in April 1984<sup>(29)</sup> that reviews and consultations had been initiated on various possibilities for savings from the 1984-1985 programme budget or redeployment aimed at meeting the allocation target, but that little could be said before a review was made of submissions from units within the Secretariat for the first programme budget performance report in September. CPC recommended in May,<sup>(16)</sup> that the Secretary-General speed up efforts to present a comprehensive report on his proposal to achieve the necessary reimbursement of funds.

The Secretary-General reported to the Fifth Committee in November<sup>(30)</sup> that savings of $127,100 had been identified from the 1984-1985 programme budget and that, during the current biennium, a balance of $872,900—required to reimburse fully the $1 million drawn from savings in the 1982-1983 programme budget—was expected from further savings and redeployments. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) endorsed the approach taken by the Secretary-General; since the budget was approved on a two-year basis, savings could not be reported unless it was certain that an activity would not be implemented in either year. In November, the Fifth Committee<sup>(31)</sup> took note of the Secretary-General's report and approved certain transfer of funds and reduction of income estimates.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/233 by recorded vote.

Industrial Development Decade for Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in which, inter alia, the importance of industrialization in the development of developing countries is stressed,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/70 of 27 July 1984, in which the Council noted the appeal to the General Assembly to increase substantially the allocation to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization from the regular budget of the United Nations for assistance to African countries and to intergovernmental organizations in the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa to an annual minimum level of $5 million and to place that allocation on a permanent basis,

Reaffirming resolution 8 adopted on 19 August 1984 by the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, concerning the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Reaffirming also Industrial Development Board resolution 57(XVIII) of 19 May 1984, in which the Board, inter alia, reaffirmed its request to the United Nations Development Programme to allocate adequate financial resources to the programme for the Decade, taking into account the high priority attached to it by the General Assembly, the Industrial Development Board and the African countries,

Taking note of resolution CM/Res.941(XL) adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fortieth ordinary session, concerning the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Mindful of the need for African countries to undertake the priority activities designated for the preparatory phase of the programme for the Decade,

Mindful also of the high level of investment expenditure required for promoting the objectives of the Decade,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 38/192 and 38/199 and calls for their immediate and effective implementation;

4. Endorses resolution 8 of the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and requests the General Conference, in co-ordination with other bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as with technical and financial institutions in both Africa and the donor countries, to take appropriate measures for the implementation of that resolution, in particular paragraph 9 thereof;

5. Endorses also Industrial Development Board resolution 57(XVIII) in which, inter alia, the Board requested the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to provide, to the extent possible, in co-operation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity and the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa, assistance to African countries and intergovernmental organizations concerned in the implementation of the initial integrated industrial promotion programmes at the subregional level, including the convening of follow-up subregional meetings to review the progress made in their implementation;

6. Endorses further the appeal made by the Seventh Conference of African Ministers of Industry, held at Addis Ababa from 26 to 28 March 1984, for the allocation of at least $5 million, on a permanent annual basis, from the regular budget of the United Nations in order to enable the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to assist the African countries and the intergovernmental organizations concerned in the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa;

7. Reiterates its appeal to all countries, particularly the developed countries, and to multilateral financial institutions to increase their contributions to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund, taking into account the financial requirements of projects directed towards the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa;

8. Urges the international community, in particular the developed countries and international financial institutions, to intensify and increase their technical and financial assistance to African countries for the implementation of programmes and the execution of projects at the national, subregional and regional levels, in the context of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa;

9. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in co-operation with the Economic Commission for Africa, to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Industrial Development Board and the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1985, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa.

General Assembly resolution 39/233

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 120-1-28 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.4) by recorded vote (93-1-28), 10 December (meeting 58); draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.35); agenda item 80 (d).

Financial implications: 5th Committee, A/39/830; S-G, A/C.2/39/L.94, A/C.5/39/94. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 39, 58; 5th Committee 53; plenary 104.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom.

In the Second Committee, paragraphs 5 and 6 were approved by recorded votes of 90 to 10, with 21 abstentions, and 91 to 22, with 8 abstentions, respectively.

All those speaking in explanation of vote objected to the draft's financial implications. The United States felt it was inappropriate to spend large sums of money for the purpose indicated in the text at a time when millions of people were starving. The Ukrainian SSR (also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, and the USSR) spoke of the need to check budgetary growth. The United Kingdom opposed the financing of operational activities from the regular budget, and the idea of a permanent annual allocation. Sweden felt the draft went much further than the resolution adopted by consensus by UNIDO. For Denmark, the action on the draft disregarded the Committee's efforts to adopt, by consensus, resolutions having financial implications. The Federal Republic of Germany stated that its support for the text's objectives notwithstanding, it could not go along with the financial implications.

On 15 December, by a recorded vote of 71 to 18, with 10 abstentions, the Fifth Committee decided to inform the Assembly that the resolution's adoption would entail an additional appropriation of $5 million in the 1984-1985 budget.

In related action, the Assembly, in resolution 39/29 on the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, noted the need for increased resources and international support for rapid implementation of IDDA.

Natural resources and energy

In 1984, ECA activities in mineral resources focused on strengthening the Eastern and Southern African Mineral Resources Development Centre (Dodoma, United Republic of Tanzania), by providing technical and administrative assistance. An extraordinary Governing Council meeting took place in December to enable the Central African Mineral Resources Development Centre (Brazzaville, Congo) to become operational.

In the energy field, work continued on an inventory of potential resources, coal, oil and gas production and oil refineries, and thermal and hydropower stations and transmission lines. Preparations were made for an African Regional Centre for Solar Energy.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, in May, endorsed the undertaking of a comprehensive study on the pipeline distribution, and a comparison of various modes of transport, of African natural gas for marketing within Africa and possible transport to Europe.

National capabilities for marine resources management were studied at an African intergovernmental meeting on aspects of applications of the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (Addis Ababa, September).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1984/73 on water resources development and follow-up to the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan.<sup>(32)</sup>

Water resources development and follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 32/158 of 19 December 1977, by which the Assembly adopted the report of the United Nations Water Conference and approved the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Guided by resolution VIII of the United Nations Water Conference, in which the regional commissions were called upon to play a central role in the promotion of intergovernmental co-operation as a follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan on integrated water resources development and management,

Recalling also Council resolutions 2043(LXI) of 5 August 1976, in which it requested the Secretary-General to make adequate provisions so as to enable the regional commissions to carry out their activities effectively, and 1979/67 of 3 August 1979, in which it recommended that the secretariats of the regional commissions should be provided with sufficient manpower and financial resources to enable them to discharge the expanded responsibilities assigned to them by the United Nations Water Conference in relation to the execution of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Recalling further the recommendation on institutional strengthening at the regional level contained in paragraph 82 (iii) of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa,

Requests the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Africa in the area of water resources so that water experts can be deployed to the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres to assist member States in the planning and execution of their water development activities and in the follow-up to the recommendations contained in the Mar del Plata Action plan.

27 July 1985      Meeting 50      Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/142) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by ECA (E/1984/21), orally amended during informal consultations; agenda item 9.

Food and agriculture

In 1984, hunger, famine and malnutrition threatened Africa with greater force than ever before, the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly in a June report,<sup>(33)</sup> prepared in response to a December 1983 Assembly request.<sup>(34)</sup> He reported that, by the end of 1983, the number of African countries threatened by food shortages had risen from 22 to 24, that the line of vegetation on the southern fringes of the Sahara desert had moved 200 kilometres southwards from 1982 to 1983, and that a large majority of the countries were failing to meet increased food demand from domestic production. (See also Chapter XI of this section.) In the mean time, the sub-Saharan population—which had grown by 87 per cent since 1960 to 393 million—continued to increase by some 3 per cent annually, the fastest growth rate in the world. The climatic conditions continued to worsen in southern and eastern Africa. It was observed that one of the prime objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action<sup>(2)</sup>—the acceleration of food programmes and actions for greater collective food self-sufficiency by the turn of the century—could not be achieved if current trends continued. The report examined recent trends, some possible causes, outlook for the future, and issues constituting a basis for possible action; it called for greater policy adjustments, the setting of priorities and stepped-up investments for reversing the unfavourable trends.

A Conference for Africa, held by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) at Harare, Zimbabwe, in July, adopted the Harare Declaration and a resolution appealing for additional international food aid to Africa (see PART II, Chapter III).

The Sub-Committee on Nutrition of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (tenth session, Rome, Italy, 5-9 March),<sup>(35)</sup> decided that information on nutrition assistance contained in United Nations development assistance reports should be collated and that three institutions in Africa south of the Sahara should be identified, strengthened and expanded to provide regional competence in food and nutrition training, research and advisory services. Its suggestion for investigating the possibility of strengthening the Joint FAO/WHO/OAU Regional Food and Nutrition Commission for Africa was reiterated by ACC in its annual overview report for 1983/84.<sup>(36)</sup>

The World Food Council (tenth session, Addis Ababa, 11-15 June)<sup>(37)</sup> noted the gravity of the food crisis facing Africa, especially the sub-Saharan region, and the estimates by FAO that almost half the African countries, with some 150 million people, were facing food shortages. It called on donors to step up emergency and relief supplies to the highly affected African countries, while underlining the importance of greater integration of short-term relief with medium-term rehabilitation measures and the longer-term social and economic objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action. The Council believed that resources should be concentrated during the next decade on such areas as human resources development, restructuring of grain markets and improving pricing policies, greater integration of consumption and nutritional factors in production programmes, and expanding irrigation schemes. International support should be given to regional or subregional efforts in water management, agricultural research, trade organization, management of agricultural commodity markets and the fight against desertification.

The United Nations/FAO Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (eighteenth session, Rome, 29 October-8 November) urged donor countries to provide more emergency assistance in terms of food and logistical support for those African nations facing imminent threats of starvation and malnutrition. It also urged affected countries to mobilize local resources for transportation and distribution of available food, and resident representatives of international organizations to co-ordinate in assisting recipient nations to ensure the effective and efficient delivery of emergency food aid.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, in May, having examined a report prepared by the Executive Secretary, in collaboration with FAO, on a study to ascertain the causes of the apparent discrepancy between the increasing resource allocation to food and agriculture and the declining performance of that sector, called on African States to undertake such studies at the national level and report to the Conference in 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/165 without vote.

Critical situation of food and agriculture in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic cooperation,

Gravely concerned at the dramatic deterioration in food and agricultural production in Africa, as a result of which there has been an alarming increase in the number of people exposed to hunger, malnutrition and even starvation,

Recognizing the special emphasis placed upon food and agriculture and the undertaking and resolve of Africa to devote its scarce resources on a priority basis to the rehabilitation of food and agricultural production as reflected in and in accordance with the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the critical situation of food and agriculture in Africa,

Noting the exacerbation of Africa's food and agricultural crisis by the adverse impact of prolonged drought and accelerating desertification and, moreover, that the African countries have been hit by adverse external forces, including falling trade earnings resulting from the global economic recession, the worsening terms of trade and the debt crisis,

Convinced that the food and agricultural crisis in Africa has a long genesis and has been rendered more acute by natural factors, such as poor rainfall, widespread bush fires, unusually severe crop infestation, and epidemics of plant and animal diseases,

Welcoming the adoption, on 25 July 1984, by the Thirteenth FAO Regional Conference for Africa, of the Harare Declaration on the food crisis in Africa, prepared by the African Ministers for Agriculture and Rural Development,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 38/159 of 19 December 1983, as well as all other relevant resolutions on the critical situation of food and agriculture in Africa, and calls for their immediate and effective implementation;

2. Welcomes the conclusions and recommendations of the World Food Council at its tenth ministerial session, held at Addis Ababa from 11 to 15 June 1984, in particular those relating to the African region;

3. Notes with appreciation the encouraging response by the international community to the various appeals made for the alleviation of the present critical food supply situation in Africa;

4. Welcomes the unanimous adoption by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes on 8 November 1984 of a resolution on the food crisis in Africa, and calls for its full and prompt implementation;

5. Urges the international community, in view of the continued critical food supply situation in a large number of African countries, to sustain and increase its efforts to provide the additional food aid required on an emergency basis, as well as technical and other forms of assistance needed in that connection;

6. Urges the international community also to respond generously to the urgent need for agricultural inputs for the rehabilitation of agriculture and animal husbandry;

7. Calls upon the international community to continue to support efforts undertaken by African countries at the national, subregional and regional levels to increase food production through, inter alia, the provision, on a priority and long-term basis, of additional financial and technical assistance to Africa by organizations of the United Nations system, such as the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations Development Programme and other organizations involved in the financing of agricultural development, and through an increase in lending by the World Bank to the agricultural sector in Africa;

8. Takes note of the efforts already undertaken by African countries in the field of food and the formulation of agricultural policies, and encourages them to pursue and strengthen these efforts, especially in the definition and implementation of national food strategies, plans and programmes;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1985, a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution, with particular emphasis on the role and activities of the United Nations system in assisting the African countries towards the solution of their food and agricultural problems.

General Assembly resolution 39/165

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.6) without vote, 30 November (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.54), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.13); agenda item 80 (ff).
Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 31, 54; plenary 103.

In a related action, the Assembly—by a 27-paragraph Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, annexed to resolution 39/29—expressed deep concern over Africa's economic and social crisis, which, it said, had assumed alarming proportions seriously jeopardizing the very survival of millions of people. It recognized the urgent need for massive international emergency relief aid in: additional food and other emergency supplies, together with the technical and financial assistance necessary for their transportation, storage and distribution; improvement in water supplies; improvement of health and nutrition, including the needs of refugees and displaced persons; safeguarding national nuclei of livestock herds; establishment of income-generating projects; and promotion of new and renewable energy projects, particularly in rural areas. Urgent international action was required to support national and regional efforts to implement the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification. The Assembly also recognized the need for, among other things, an early attainment of national and collective self-reliance in food production, the provision of appropriate incentives, improvement of storage and transport, reduction of food losses, achievement of a better balance between agricultural export commodities and food production, diversification of agricultural production and utilization of irrigation potential, particularly in drought-prone areas.

In resolution 39/166, the Assembly called on the international community for greater flow of resources in support of programmes and policies for increasing food and agricultural production and raising nutritional standards in the developing countries, particularly in Africa.

Science and technology in Africa

In May, the ECA Conference of Ministers approved recommendations of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development, which had met in 1983,<sup>(38)</sup> and thanked India and the Federal Republic of Germany for financial support in promoting rural technologies and mobilizing adaptive technology potential in African economies.

Social development

In May, the ECA Conference of Ministers expressed concern about the increasing criminality of different forms and dimensions in many African countries, endorsed the report of the 1983 African Regional Preparatory Meeting for the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,<sup>(39)</sup> and urged member States to consider crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of overall development. The United Nations system was invited to assist African States in achieving a concerted socio-economic development within the context of the Lagos Plan of Action in order to improve living conditions, thereby reducing crime tendencies resulting from poverty, unemployment and overcrowded slums.

On the question of youth and the 1985 International Youth Year (IYY), the Conference of Ministers endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of an ECA report on the situation of African youth in the 1980s and the report of the 1983 regional meeting on IYY, including a regional plan of action on youth (see Chapter XX of this section).

In resolution 1984/71, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to continue strengthening the ECA secretariat in order to enable it to fulfil its extended mandate in the field of youth, including implementation of the regional plan of action.

Population

The Second African Population Conference, meeting at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 9 to 13 January, adopted a Kilimanjaro Programme of Action for African Population and Self-Reliant Development.

The Programme of Action,<sup>(40)</sup> comprised of principles and objectives and 93 recommendations, noted that the current African population of about 439 million was likely to double by 2010, that half the population was under 20 years old and that the current high levels of fertility and mortality caused concern about the region's ability to maintain even living standards already attained since independence.

Among objectives, the Programme listed the formulation and implementation of comprehensive population policies which provided lasting solutions to the major problems of high mortality and fertility, uneven population distribution, growing unemployment, stagnation of living standards and unequal income distribution. The recommendations dealt with population and development strategy and policy; fertility and family planning; morbidity and mortality; urbanization and migration; the changing role of women in the development process; children and youth; population data collection, analysis, training and research; population information; community involvement and the role of private and non-governmental organizations; and actions by the international community. It asserted that population should be seen as a central component in formulating and implementing policies and programmes for accelerated socio-economic development.

In May, the ECA Conference of Ministers approved the Kilimanjaro Programme of Action and urged the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) to reactivate certain posts for ECA in the population field. It also urged African Governments to support, administratively and financially, the Regional Institute for Population Studies in Ghana and the Institut de formation et de recherche démographiques in Cameroon.

The UNDP Governing Council, in June, supported continued assistance to regional and inter-regional demographic training and research centres, taking into account the particular needs of the centres located in Africa south of the Sahara (see p. 722).

ECA activities in 1984 included assistance to member States in preparation for the International Conference on Population in Mexico (see p. 714).

Human resources development

In May, the ECA Conference of Ministers called on United Nations agencies and other organizations carrying out activities in the field of human resources development to give preference to using and strengthening existing African institutions in order to assist the continent in achieving self-sufficiency in human resources supply.

Environment

The ECA Conference of Ministers, discussing the critical economic and social conditions in Africa which were being aggravated by drought and other natural calamities, noted that 34 African countries, including 16 LDCs, were affected by drought and desertification (see also p. 756). It adopted a Regional Plan of Action to Combat the Impact of Drought in Africa, which had been approved by the Scientific Round-Table on the Climatic Situation and Drought in Africa (Addis Ababa, 20-23 February) with a view to equipping the African countries with the means better to monitor and predict the drought and deal with its adverse impacts (see p. 507).

The Conference of Ministers also called on ECA and the World Meteorological Organization to explore the feasibility of establishing an advanced centre for meteorology in Africa to assist in applying meteorological services for development and for combating drought.

On environment and development, it called for the promotion of technical co-operation, information exchange, technology and expertise for combating desertification in Africa; invited African Governments to increase awareness of environmental issues and concerns, particularly in the rural population; and recommended that Governments take immediately all precautionary measures for environmental protection in industrial development by adapting into national industrial development programmes the guidelines developed on the topic by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), and develop national environmental institutions. Further, the Conference urged the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly to consider including the United Republic of Tanzania in the terms of reference of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) so that it could receive assistance in combating desertification, and expanding UNSO's scope so as to assist members of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (see p. 620) in implementing programmes to combat desertification and drought.

The report of the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment (second meeting, Addis Ababa, January) (see also p. 618) was considered by the Conference of Ministers.

Related action. The UNEP Governing Council, at its May 1984 session,<sup>(41)</sup> requested its Executive Director, within available resources, to strengthen the Regional Office for Africa and to study the establishment of subregional offices in the future.

African wildlife

A training seminar on implementation of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) for African parties was held in Belgium in June, organized by the CITES secretariat and financed by UNEP, the Commission of the European Communities and European CITES parties.

JIU report. A progress report on the implementation of recommendations in regional programmes in the conservation and management of African wildlife,<sup>(42)</sup> prepared by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) in 1983<sup>(43)</sup> and taken note of by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1984/184 of 27 July 1984, found that the implementation of the 1979 JIU recommendations on the topic<sup>(44)</sup> had been piecemeal, without a lead organization in the United Nations system charged with co-ordination or co-operation in that regard.

JIU asserted that the success of an integrated regional conservation programme depended on full co-operation not only among ECA member States but also among United Nations organizations concerned, in particular members of the Ecosystem Conservation Group (FAO, UNEP, UNESCO and the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources) in close co-operation with ECA. JIU recommended specific support measures by ECA, FAO, UNDP, UNEP and UNESCO for the Ecole de faune (Garoua, Cameroon) and the College of African Wildlife Management (Mweka, United Republic of Tanzania)—which JIU had identified in 1979 as highly successful regional training entities—and assistance to other institutes in developing regional training programmes. It added that ECA should inform relevant organizations of member States' request for co-operation in formulating and implementing an integrated regional living resources conservation strategy and programme, while ECA, FAO and OAU should consult with member States with a view to establishing a single, formal technical forum to bring together agencies in member States responsible for wildlife resources administration and management. Encouragement should be given to more member States to ratify or accede to the OAU African Convention on the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources and related treaties and agreements.

The Secretary-General, in his February 1984 comments<sup>(45)</sup> on the JIU report, noted actions being taken in relation to the JIU recommendations, and said consultations with the Governments concerned indicated that the most suitable arrangement for the Garoua and Mweka institutions was for them to continue operating under their respective Government's execution while housing regional programmes. In a September report to the Assembly on implementation of JIU recommendations,<sup>(46)</sup> the Secretary-General discussed the funding arrangements for the two institutions and stated that the establishment of a task force had been suggested for implementing the JIU recommendations, examining alternative options and formulating strategies for collaboration among United Nations agencies.

Human settlements

In 1984, the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment, in addition to recommending measures against desertification in Africa (see p. 617), adopted resolutions on establishing a regional programme for protection and restoration of the environment and human settlements in the case of natural disasters and earthquakes in Africa, a plan of action regarding the 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, promotion of local building materials and ECA human settlements activities in 1984-1985.

The Commission on Human Settlements,<sup>(47)</sup> by resolution of 9 May, requested the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements to continue providing assistance to the Company for Habitat and Housing in Africa (Shelter-Afrique), based at Nairobi, Kenya (see also p. 780).

Women in development in Africa

The Joint ECA/OAU Regional Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting for the 1985 World Conference on the United Nations Decade for Women/Third Regional Conference on the Integration of Women in Development (Arusha, 8-12 October) adopted strategies for the advancement of women in Africa beyond the end of the Decade (1976-1985). The Conference was followed, on 13 October, by a donors' round-table on assistance to women in Africa, which took note of a new strategy drafted by an expert group.

In May, the ECA Conference of Ministers called for the full and equitable participation of African women in the development process and for measures to ensure recruitment or promotion of African women to senior-level and decision-making positions in ECA and elsewhere in the United Nations system.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1984/77 without vote.

Mobilization of human and financial resources for the women's programme of the Economic Commission for Africa beyond the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware that the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace have not yet been fully achieved, especially in Africa,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 33/143 of 20 December 1978, in section III of which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to increase the number of women in posts in the United Nations Secretariat subject to geographical distribution to 25 per cent of the total over a four-year period,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/235 B of 21 December 1982, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to implement fully section III of Assembly resolution 33/143 and section V of Assembly resolution 35/210 of 17 December 1980,

Recalling also resolution 21 adopted by the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, in which the Secretary-General was requested, as an interim measure, to explore the possibility of redeploying vacant posts within the regional commissions to the women's programmes, and General Assembly resolution 35/136 of 11 December 1980,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 38/106 of 16 December 1983, in which the Assembly urged the Secretary-General, in consultation with the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, inter alia, to take urgently appropriate measures to ensure that all temporary and permanent senior women's programme officers posts in the regional commissions should be continued within the regular budgetary resources available to them,

1. Urges the Secretary-General and the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to do all in their power to provide a core group of posts from regular budgetary resources, through the redeployment of vacant posts and in the context of the proposals for the programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987, to the African Training and Research Centre for Women and to the women's programmes of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres in order to ensure their long-term viability beyond the United Nations Decade for Women;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Development Programme, the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and the international community for the financial and technical assistance provided for the women's programme of the Economic Commission for Africa.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/77

27 July 1984                      Meeting 50                      Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/142) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by ECA (E/1984/21); agenda item 9.

The General Assembly, by resolution 39/127, expressed concern over a lack of progress in regularizing senior women's programme officers posts at the regional commissions, and requested the Secretary-General to take corrective measures.

Statistics

In 1984, the ECA Conference of Ministers, acting on the recommendations of the Joint Conference of African Planners, Statisticians and Demographers (see also p. 605), called on all African countries to undertake and strengthen short-term forecasting activities and appealed to member States to undertake perspective studies on their respective economies. The secretariat activities focused on the African Household Survey Capability Programme, the statistical training programme and the regional advisory service in demographic statistics. Work on statistical data-base development was also carried out.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions concerning ECA

ECA as executing agency

Using funds from United Nations, multilateral and bilateral sources, ECA continued in 1984 to engage in diverse technical co-operation activities. In addition to United Nations regular programme funds, resources were provided by UNDP, UNFPA, the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, UNEP and the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development.

In May, the ECA Conference of Ministers, supporting the strengthening of ECA as an executing agency, requested the Secretary-General to relax certain administrative constraints by realigning the rules of recruitment and procurement with those of other United Nations executing agencies to enable ECA to execute projects promptly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1984/74 without vote.

Strengthening of the role of the Economic Commission for Africa as an executing agency

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 33/202 of 29 January 1979 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, in which, inter alia, the Assembly decided that the regional commissions should have the status of executing agencies, in their own right, in respect of the categories of project described in and in conformity with paragraph 23 of the annex to its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977,

Recalling also the agreement signed on 1 March 1977 between the United Nations Development Programme and the Economic Commission for Africa, designating the Commission as a participating and executing agency for the inter-country projects of the United Nations Development Programme,

Noting with satisfaction the progress that has been achieved within a short space of time by the Commission acting as an executing agency for the inter-country projects of the United Nations Development Programme and other such projects, with the result that it is currently one of the largest executing agencies for the inter-country projects in Africa financed by the Programme,

Noting with concern the administrative difficulties being experienced by the Commission in the implementation of those projects, owing to the lack of differentiation between the rules and procedures that apply to its role as an executing agency and those that govern its regular budgetary activities, both in the recruitment of project personnel residing outside Africa and those above level L-5 and in the procurement of project equipment and supplies costing more than $20,000,

Noting with regret that the rate of implementation by the Commission of the inter-country projects of the United Nations Development Programme and other such projects has decreased substantially, owing to the above-mentioned constraints, which create unnecessary delays,

Bearing in mind the current critical economic situation in Africa and the expectation of member States that the secretariat of the Commission should play an increasing role in assisting them in the expeditious execution of operational projects funded from the resources of the United Nations system,

Requests the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of streamlining and, if necessary, relaxing the above-mentioned administrative constraints by aligning the rules and procedures of the Commission governing recruitment and procurement with those of other United Nations executing agencies so that the Commission will be able to execute projects promptly, thereby placing it on the same basis as the other executing agencies of the United Nations system.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/74

27 July 1984 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/142) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by ECA (E/1984/21), orally amended during informal consultations; agenda item 9.

Expansion of

Addis Ababa conference facilities

In a follow-up to developments in 1983<sup>(48)</sup> on a proposal for new conference facilities at ECA headquarters at Addis Ababa, including the General Assembly decision<sup>(49)</sup> to defer consideration until 1984, the Secretary-General, in September,<sup>(50)</sup> reported that the Government of Ethiopia had officially confirmed its offer of a parcel of land immediately adjacent to ECA's existing site free of charge to the United Nations. It had also confirmed that materials and furniture and equipment required for constructing the conference facilities would be exempt from duty or sales taxes.

The Secretary-General reiterated his proposal for the construction of one large, two medium and four small conference rooms, and recommended that the Assembly accept Ethiopia's offer of land of approximately 42,400 square metres. He also recommended that the Assembly approve, in principle, the project at a total estimated cost of $89,360,000; an appropriation of $3,120,000 for 1984-1985 in order to formulate detailed designs; and $111,400 for the same period for a proposed planning unit.

ACABQ, also in September,<sup>(51)</sup> recommended approval, in principle, of the project at an estimated cost of $73,501,000. Its other recommendations were the same as those of the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted section III of resolution 39/236 by recorded vote.

Conference facilities of the Economic Commission for Africa at Addis Ababa

(The General Assembly . . .)

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the adequacy of the conference facilities of the Economic Commission for Africa at Addis Ababa, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Concurs with the comments and observations of the Advisory Committee as contained in its report;

2. Accepts with appreciation the generous offer by the Government of Ethiopia of approximately 42,400 square metres of land immediately adjacent to the existing site of the Economic Commission for Africa, taking due account of the assurance by that Government that all goods will be exempt from duty and sales taxes;

3. Approves, in principle, the project at an estimated cost of $73,501,000, excluding the cost of the Planning Unit at the Economic Commission for Africa;

4. Decides that the appropriation of $3,120,000 approved for the biennium 1984-1985 in order to formulate detailed designs should be placed in a construction account and any unexpended balance carried forward until the completion of the project;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit annual progress reports thereon to the General Assembly;

Before acting on the draft, the Committee rejected—by 73 votes to 21, with 2 abstentions—a motion by the United States, seconded by the United Kingdom, to adjourn the debate on the topic, while consideration was given to other proposals of possible greater utility. Egypt, on behalf of the Group of 77, and Ethiopia spoke against the motion.

The United States requested the recorded vote on the draft.

In explanation of vote, Belgium and Norway expressed reservations about the intended use of the ECA facilities for holding a major United Nations conference and the consequences of establishing such a precedent.

Ethiopia spoke of the need for a new ECA complex, and added that ACABQ had taken account of the need for economy and was advocating a lesser facility. Egypt and Cameroon stressed the need for better facilities at ECA, and, along with Cuba, expressed readiness to accept the ACABQ proposal despite their preference for the Secretary-General's original recommendations. Cameroon and Cuba rejected attempts to link the question with other agenda items, with Cuba dismissing what it saw as the implied criticism that the project represented an undesirable transfer of resources. Brazil felt ACABQ had conducted a careful examination of the project. While supporting the draft, Italy stressed the need for effective monitoring of project execution to ensure careful spending of resources.

Regional institutions

In 1984, the ECA Conference of Ministers considered a report submitted by an ad hoc committee it had created in 1983 to evaluate and harmonize the activities of the African multinational institutions sponsored by ECA and OAU, and extended the committee's mandate by a year so that it could complete its work.

Commission sessions

The ECA Conference of Ministers decided to continue meeting annually subject to a review in 1988.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference

In an August 1984 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(52)</sup> submitted in pursuance of its December 1983 request,<sup>(53)</sup> the Secretary-General described the co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC)—a subregional organization, established in 1980 to forge links between member States (Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe)—for promoting and harmonizing mutual contacts. He reported that the fifth SADCC conference (Lusaka, 2 and 3 February) focused on agriculture, in the context of additional burdens created by the drought conditions.

The fifth SADCC summit (Gaborone, Botswana, 6 July) appealed to donor Governments and agencies not to use their aid programmes in attempts to divide SADCC member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 39/215 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), at its fortieth session (Tokyo, 17-27 April, 1984),<sup>(1)</sup> focussed on technology for development, reviewed the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)<sup>(2)</sup> as well as the Substantive New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs),<sup>(3)</sup> and considered the transport and communications needs of the region.

The Commission—headquartered at Bangkok, Thailand—called for a further review of the functioning of its legislative committees, recommended including in the 1984-1989 medium-term plan a new programme on marine affairs, and reviewed the functioning of the regional institutions and the special projects.

Vanuatu, which had been an associate member of the Commission since joining the United Nations membership in 1981, became a full ESCAP member in February 1984, and the Economic and Social Council, accordingly, revised the Commission's terms of reference (resolution 1984/66).

In December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Council (resolution 1984/78), proclaimed a Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994) to improve the infrastructure and services of developing member countries of the region (resolution 39/227). The Assembly also approved a three-year construction project to expand ESCAP conference facilities at a total estimated cost of $44 million (resolution 39/236).

Economic and social trends

The Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1983,<sup>(4)</sup> the summary of which was noted by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1984/187 of 27 July, found that, although the developing countries of the ESCAP region showed greater resilience than those of other regions, there was a definite and significant downward trend in growth rates in almost all the developing economies in the region prior to 1984. However, the survey for 1984<sup>(5)</sup> showed that the seven LDCs in the region—Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Maldives, Nepal and Samoa—did not share either the general resilience displayed by others during the 1980-1983 recession or the improvement in growth rates achieved in 1983-1984, with a dire scarcity of resources and vulnerability to weather fluctuations seriously hampering their efforts to achieve better economic growth and development.

Activities in 1984

Development policy and planning

In reviewing the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission identified four areas for immediate policy implementation: monetary and financial issues; trade and raw materials, including trade liberalization and price stabilization; energy; and food and agriculture. The Commission felt that emphasis should be placed on collective co-operation for self-reliance.

With regard to implementation of the SNPA for the 1980s for LDCs,<sup>(3)</sup> the Commission urged immediate action to improve the basic standards of living in those countries and to transform their economies towards self-sustained development.

The Committee on Development Planning (fifth session, Bangkok, 17-20 December) noted the negligible progress made in implementing the Strategy and SNPA, and the need to provide LDCs with financial resources at concessional terms, technical assistance, and the transfer of technology; liberalization of commercial policies in developed countries would also contribute to development.

The Asian and Pacific Development Centre continued training and research activities.

Mekong River basin development

The Interim Committee for Co-ordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin held two sessions in 1984 in Thailand (nineteenth, Chiang Mai, 16-21 January; twentieth, Bangkok, 30 July-3 August)<sup>(6)</sup> and endorsed projects for the revision of the Indicative Basin Plan (1970-2000). It also held a special session at Bangkok (30 April-2 May) and approved, effective as of 1985, the recommendations made by UNDP on restructuring the Committee's secretariat to render it more operational and cost-effective.

Technical co-operation and assistance

Under the United Nations regular programme for technical co-operation,<sup>(7)</sup> ESCAP conducted 28 missions during 1984 to meet requests from 41 Governments—mostly of LDCs and island developing countries—for technical and advisory services.

The United Nations Development Advisory Team for the South Pacific at Suva, Fiji, and the ESCAP Pacific Liaison Office at Nauru were merged on 1 July into the ESCAP Pacific Operating Centre (EPOC), based at Port Vila, Vanuatu.

The Commission,<sup>(1)</sup> in April, welcomed the establishment of EPOC, and requested the Executive Secretary to assist Kiribati and Tuvalu in preparing materials that would enable them to be included in the United Nations list of LDCs.

International trade

The Commission,<sup>(1)</sup> which continued to attach importance to trade in raw materials and commodities, welcomed the establishment of the International Jute Organization at Dhaka, Bangladesh, in January 1984 (see p. 538); noted the progress made by the members of the Regional Consultative Group on Silk in implementing specific co-operative activities; and welcomed the holding of an Asian Silk Fair at Hong Kong in August. It urged more member countries to join the Asian Clearing Union, the Asian Reinsurance Corporation and the Bangkok Agreement for the further promotion of intraregional trade. There was agreement in the Commission that a meeting of ministers of trade should be held.

The Committee on Trade (twenty-fifth session, Bangkok, 6-12 November) noted with concern that the majority of developing countries in the region, which were mainly exporters of primary products, had not as yet benefited significantly from renewed world trade growth as prices of such products remained depressed; it urged, among other things, that current tendencies towards intensification of trade restrictions be arrested and that efforts be made to promote foreign trade expansion particularly through diversification of external markets and exploration of new export possibilities.

Transport and communications

In 1984, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council, proclaimed a Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994), with a view to raising the relevant infrastructural facilities of developing countries of ESCAP to a level commensurate with their development objectives and priorities (resolution 39/227).

Transport and communications decade (1985-1994)

In April, the Commission<sup>(1)</sup> proclaimed the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, 1985-1994, endorsing the recommendation of its ad hoc intergovernmental group, which, at one session each in 1983<sup>(8)</sup> and 1984 (Bangkok, January), had formulated objectives, an action programme and organizational arrangements for the decade.

The Decade was aimed at improving the transport and communications infrastructural facilities of developing member countries, with special attention to the needs of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries of the region; promoting a more effective and efficient integrated network; and encouraging effective co-ordination and co-operation. In proclaiming the Decade, the Commission noted that the deleterious effects of inadequate attention paid to the transport and communication sectors in the region had been compounded by several oil price crises, worsening terms of trade and economic recession; scarce resources had been diverted from infrastructure maintenance and improvement to the more immediately evident need to cover day-to-day operating costs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In a June report informing the Economic and Social Council of the ESCAP proclamation of the Decade,<sup>(9)</sup> known as the Tokyo Proclamation, the Secretary-General noted that the intergovernmental group had estimated the first quinquennium of the regional action programme to cost some US$20 million, and had proposed setting up an inter-agency co-ordinating committee for the Decade. The Secretary-General also reported that, in pursuance of a 1983 Council resolution,<sup>(10)</sup> the ESCAP secretariat had consulted with ECWA on Decade activities applicable to the latter region.

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1984/78 without vote.

Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, 1985-1994

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting resolution 236(XL) of 27 April 1984 of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, concerning a transport and communications decade for Asia and the Pacific during the period 1985-1994,

Bearing in mind the imperative need to mobilize funds for the decade through reprogramming or extrabudgetary contributions,

Recalling paragraph 30 of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Recalling also the section of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries relevant to the improvement of transport and communications infrastructure,

Recalling further Council resolution 1983/69 of 29 July 1983 concerning a transport and communications decade in Asia and the Pacific during the period 1985-1994,

Convinced of the critical role of all modes and means of transport and communications as enabling elements in economic development and the importance, therefore, of the improvement and growth of transport and communications infrastructure and services in a manner commensurate with the anticipated growth of all sectors of the economy generating the demand for transport and communications,

Recognizing the need for an integrated approach to the planning of transport and communications development and taking into account the positive contribution which the proclamation of a transport and communications decade for Asia and the Pacific during the period 1985-1994 would make towards the mobilization of support for such an approach,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/69 concerning the proclamation of a transport and communications decade in Asia and the Pacific,

Endorses resolution 236(XL) of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, with a view

(a) Raising the transport and communications infrastructural facilities of developing member countries to a level commensurate with their development objectives and priorities, giving particular attention to the special needs of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries of the region;

(b) Identifying systematically and in a comprehensive manner the problems of transport and communications in the region and working out feasible solutions;

(c) Promoting a more effective and efficient transport and communications network comprising all modes and means in an integrated way, in particular for development of intraregional and interregional transport and communications linkages, as well as in the fields of maintenance and co-ordination of networks, tariff setting and physical planning;

(d) Encouraging effective co-ordination and co-operation in the field of transport and communications in the region;

2. Recommends the General Assembly to proclaim a Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific during the period 1985-1994, in accordance with resolution 236(XL) of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to extend, within existing resources, all necessary facilities and support to the Executive Secretaries of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and the Economic Commission for Western Asia in their elaboration of a practical and integrated regional action programme for the Decade and to mobilize the necessary international support for the successful implementation of the programmes for the Decade;

5. Calls upon the Secretary-General to promote intergovernmental and inter-agency co-ordination at the regional and subregional levels;

6. Invites all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries and others in a position to do so, to contribute and participate effectively in the implementation of the regional action programme for achieving the objectives of the Decade;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986, and every two years thereafter until the end of the Decade.

(a) Raising the transport and communications infrastructural facilities of States members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific which are developing countries to a level commensurate with their development objectives and priorities, giving particular attention to the special needs of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries of the region;

General Assembly resolution 39/227

18 December 1984 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/789) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.112), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.31); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 28-32, 39, 56; plenary 104.

Explaining its position, the United States said that, given the absence of indication as to the availability of sufficient extrabudgetary funds for the proposed activities, it questioned whether participation in the Decade was the most prudent way for ESCAP to use its scarce resources.

Regional remote sensing programme

A regional remote sensing programme, funded by UNDP, continued to promote information exchange and co-operation among the developing ESCAP countries in upgrading national facilities for the surveying, mapping and monitoring of natural resources. The Commission, which executed the programme, called for UNDP funding of the programme beyond 1986.

Industrial development

At its April 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> ESCAP endorsed the report of its Preparatory Meeting (Bangkok, 15 and 16 March) of Ministers of Industry for the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO (UNIDO IV, Vienna, Austria, 2-18 August) as the regional position for submission to the Conference.<sup>(11)</sup> (See also Chapter VI of this section.) In so doing, the Commission noted the heterogeneity of the ESCAP region, and stressed the need for a gradual increase in the developing countries' share in world industrial production as part of the process of global industrial restructuring. It agreed to establish a technical advisory group to assist in implementing projects at the national level, and urged that a follow-up to the industrial survey be carried out by ESCAP, the Asian Development Bank and the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Co-operation, with a view to further promoting industrial initiatives in the Pacific islands region.

The Committee on Industry, Technology and Human Settlements and the Environment (eighth session, Bangkok, 11-17 September)<sup>(12)</sup> suggested, among other things, that developing Asian and Pacific countries should pursue joint ventures and tripartite forms of industrial co-operation.

Transnational corporations

The ESCAP/United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations (UNCTC) Joint Unit on Transnational Corporations organized in 1984 a Ministerial Round Table on Transnational Corporations and the Developing Pacific Island Countries (Samoa, 27 February-2 March). It also provided administrative and technical support to advisory missions and workshops, and continued to process information on transnational corporations in the region.

Natural resources and energy

The Committee on Natural Resources (eleventh session, Bangkok, 16-22 October) made a series of recommendations<sup>(13)</sup> on exploitation and management of natural resources and energy in the ESCAP region.

The Committee felt that ESCAP and other international agencies should help initiate regional collaboration on specific projects and management problems as well as promote and strengthen efforts towards integrated energy planning. It noted the importance of alternative sources of energy and the potential for regional co-operation in exploring and harnessing energy technology; stressed the need to improve rural energy supplies; and reiterated that ESCAP should review and assess technological capabilities of the region and suggest action plans. The Committee also endorsed, in general, the recommendations on energy-sector strategies under the ESCAP Plan of Action on Technology for Development (see below, under "science and technology"), and the priorities and recommendations of the Meeting of Focal Points on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (Bangkok, June) and the High-level Regional Consultative Meeting for the Mobilization of Financial Resources for New and Renewable Sources of Energy (Bangkok, September).

Activities remaining from the first phase (1982-1983) of the regional energy development programme were completed. In July, UNDP approved the project document for the second phase (1984-1986).

The Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in South Pacific Offshore Areas (CCOP/SOPAC), at an extraordinary meeting held in the Cook Islands in May 1984, approved a Memorandum of Understanding, which conferred on CCOP/SOPAC the status of a regional intergovernmental organization. The Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in Asian Offshore Areas and the Regional Mineral Resources Centre continued to implement their work programmes.

Food and agriculture

In 1984, several meetings were held on drought-related food shortages, pesticide use and marketing, agro-climatic assessment techniques, farm broadcasting and rural savings mobilization and agriculture banking systems.

The ESCAP Committee on Industry, Technology and Human Settlements and the Environment<sup>(12)</sup> recommended that the middle- and low-income countries of the region should not overlook the importance of agricultural development and its contribution to increasing employment and income.

The Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery—an inter-country project aimed at increasing agricultural output and land productivity in the participating countries (India, Indonesia, Iran, Pakistan, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka, Thailand)—continued to operate with additional funding from Australia, Japan and UNDP.

The Governing Board of the Regional Co-ordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific (second session, Bogor, Indonesia, 6-8 March) suggested that the Centre focus on agro-economic and socio-economic aspects of developing such crops.

Science and technology

In April 1984, the Commission<sup>(1)</sup> adopted the ESCAP Plan of Action on Technology for Development as a guideline for further activating technology-related activities in order to accelerate socio-economic development in the region. Prepared by the High-level Expert Group Meeting on Technology for Development, and endorsed by the Intergovernmental Meeting on Technology for Development (Bangkok, February), the Plan<sup>(14)</sup> stated that most developing countries in the ESCAP region lacked integration of technological considerations in the overall national development planning process; it analysed common issues and policies, considered national action plans and discussed the role of, and the need to strengthen, ESCAP's technology units.

The Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment<sup>(12)</sup> called for assigning priority to projects on technology transfer among small- and medium-scale industries, technological needs and capabilities of LDCs, and technological information sharing. Further, it endorsed the draft statute of the Regional Centre for Technology Transfer (RCTT), and called on the Centre to organize a special training programme on technological forecasting and monitoring.

Social and cultural development

At its 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> ESCAP urged Governments to give special attention to the social impact of policies relating to integrated rural development programmes.

Cultural and natural heritage. In a 1983 report, transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council in April 1984,<sup>(15)</sup> JIU discussed the United Nations contribution to conservation and management of cultural and natural heritage in Asia and the Pacific.

The Inspectors found that demographic and other problems deriving partly from national modernization imperatives hindered heritage conservation and management in the region, which had more than half of the world's population and the highest population density. That, coupled with large-scale development schemes, urbanization and industrialization processes exerted increasing pressure on the carrying capacity of land and heritage resources, often leading to deforestation, desertification and the near extinction of some wildlife species. Natural disasters and poverty also posed intractable environmental problems and escalated the costs of heritage conservation and management. While impressed by what had been done, the Inspectors thought it desirable for Governments of the region to formulate comprehensive and coherent long-term conservation strategies involving the full participation of all segments of the population.

The Inspectors recommended that ESCAP, UNEP, FAO and UNESCO encourage and support Governments of the region to formulate long-term national strategies as recommended by the 1980 World Conservation Strategy.<sup>(16)</sup> It was also recommended that FAO, UNDP and UNESCO direct their efforts towards helping train technical and management personnel with a view to ensuring national self-reliance in regard to wildlife and national parks; develop and enforce administrative and legislative aspects for cultural heritage protection and management; and ensure completion of operations and achievement of project objectives within planned time-frames and resources. Further, the Inspectors suggested that FAO, UNDP and UNEP explore with Governments of the region possibilities of assisting the wildlife training facilities in Dhera Dun, India, and Ciawi, Indonesia, to develop and operate regional and subregional training programmes, and establishing two new subregional centres in other suitable locations. It was recommended that UNESCO encourage establishment of a network of co-operation linking restoration and conservation laboratories in the region.

The Secretary-General<sup>(17)</sup> supported the JIU recommendations.

Population

The ESCAP Population Division and its information services continued to receive institutional support from UNFPA.<sup>(7)</sup> ESCAP also received funds for regional advisory services on population census and surveys and data preparation and processing, technical assistance and training in demography and population statistics, fellowships for demographers for training at the International Institute for Population Studies in India, and for various demographic studies.

Environment

At its April 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> ESCAP adopted a resolution on prevention of oil pollution of the marine environment, expressing grave concern over the fact that severe oil pollution had occurred in the region, and calling on Governments to refrain from action which might cause such pollution.

The ESCAP Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and Environment<sup>(12)</sup> welcomed the initiative taken by the member countries of South Asia in formulating a regional seas programme for that sub-region under the auspices of the South Asia Co-operative Environment Programme and UNDP, and in designating 1988 as the Year of Trees for South Asia in response to a UNEP Governing Council decision. Work continued on a draft declaration and action plan for consideration at a ministerial-level conference on environment in Asia, scheduled for 1985.

The UNEP Governing Council in a 28 May resolution on regional activities in Asia and the Pacific, requested its Executive Director to accord continued higher priority to, and seek support and funds for, the region's environmental programmes, including the regional seas programme and the preparatory activities for a new South Asian seas action plan (see p. 745).

Typhoons

In 1984, ESCAP organized a number of roving missions on improving typhoon damage information compilation or disaster prevention systems. It organized, in co-operation with the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), a seminar on the application of remote sensing techniques to flood hazard assessment and to flood loss prevention and management (Bangkok, November) for the members of its Typhoon Committee and the WMO/ESCAP Panel on Tropical Cyclones.

The Typhoon Committee (seventeenth session, Manila, Philippines, 4-10 December) recognized the need for institutional support to put into more stable status its planning and co-ordinating role.

Human settlements

The Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and Environment<sup>(12)</sup> agreed that development of small and intermediate towns and rural hinterlands would provide an alternative to unbalanced human settlement patterns, that optimum land use be seriously pursued and that sanitation and water supply was a basic factor in improving the habitat of the poor.

The Executive Director of UNCHS reported to the Commission on Human Settlements in February 1984<sup>(18)</sup> that a small working group had met at Manila, Philippines, in January, and discussed a proposal for a financial and advisory institution for human settlements in Asia and the Pacific. The group had recommended, among other things, that the Habitat Executive Director initiate high-level consultations with selected countries of the region and the Asian Development Bank to explore the role the Bank might play, and that a regional forum be selected to discuss the proposal and make arrangements for establishing the institution.

Statistics

The Working Group of Statistical Experts (fourth session, Bangkok, July) considered the multidisciplinary approach adopted by the secretariat in advisory services, emerging issues relating to national capability-building in statistics and the allocation of national resources for statistical services. The Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific continued to offer training courses in general statistics and automatic data processing.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions concerning ESCAP

Amendment of terms of reference

On 27 April,<sup>(1)</sup> ESCAP noted the decision by Vanuatu<sup>(19)</sup>—an associate member since the country's admission to the United Nations membership in 1981—to become a full member of the Commission as at 17 February 1984, and adopted a draft resolution for action by the Economic and Social Council to amend paragraphs 3 and 4 of the Commission's terms of reference containing, respectively, the listing of full and associate members.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/66 without vote.

Amendment of the terms of reference of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific: membership of Vanuatu

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting that Vanuatu has become a member of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific in accordance with paragraph 3 of the terms of reference of the Commission, Decides to amend paragraphs 3 and 4 of the terms of reference of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific accordingly.

Conference facilities

The Secretary-General, who had informed the General Assembly in 1983<sup>(20)</sup> of the need to expand conference facilities at ESCAP headquarters at Bangkok, Thailand, reported to the Assembly in October 1984<sup>(21)</sup> that, with the assistance of a secretariat advisory group, a design, which provided a total built-up area of 47,244 square metres, was selected through international bidding and competition. The construction project, if begun in January 1985 and completed early in 1988, was estimated to cost $44,177,700. The Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly approve the project at that total estimated cost, including an appropriation of $5,126,305 for 1984-1985.

The Secretary-General also proposed establishing a team in the Secretariat's Office of General Services in New York to direct and control all overseas construction projects. As a counterpart to the Headquarters team, in the case of the ESCAP project, he proposed setting up a small planning unit in the Commission's Division of Administration, for which the Secretary-General asked the Assembly to provide necessary appropriations.

ACABQ recommended in November<sup>(22)</sup> that the Assembly approve the construction project and provide the appropriations requested.

In a letter dated 28 November,<sup>(23)</sup> Thailand assured the Secretary-General that the terms and conditions concerning the lease agreement on the additional land it had offered for the construction project would not be less favourable than those applicable to the current lease and that the necessary imported construction materials and equipment would be tax-exempted.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 39/236, section XI, by recorded vote.

Expansion of the conference facilities of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at Bangkok

[The General Assembly . . .]

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the expansion of the conference facilities of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at Bangkok and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking note of the assurances given by the Government of Thailand, as contained in the letter dated 27 November 1984 addressed to the Secretary-General,

1. Approves, in principle, the construction project for expansion of the conference facilities of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at a total estimated cost of $44,177,700, excluding the cost of the Planning Unit at the Commission;

2. Decides that the appropriation of $5,126,300 approved for the biennium 1984-1985 for the construction project should be placed in a construction account and any unexpended balance carried forward until the completion of the project;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit annual progress reports to the General Assembly on the progress of the construction project;

General Assembly resolution 39/236, section XI

18 December 1984 Meeting 105 126-10-10 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/39/839) by recorded vote (104-11-8), 30 November (meeting 39); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 109.

Financial implications: ACABQ, A/39/7/Add.7; S-G, A/C.5/39/24.

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 5th Committee 39, 40, 55; plenary 105.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain.

In the Fifth Committee, a recorded vote was taken on the draft, at the request of the United States.

In explanation of vote, the United Kingdom said the provision of expensive new conference facilities was not a priority at a time of widespread economic difficulty and United Nations budgetary restraint. Sharing that view, the United States said it regarded the proposed project a burden. The USSR said the proposed expansion was unnecessary because meeting requirements could be satisfied by existing facilities and by the construction of a number of small conference rooms.

Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany said they would have preferred a more modest project than the one proposed. Sweden, while voting in favour, shared the misgivings as regards priority under the current critical economic situation. Ireland supported the proposal on the understanding that the project would cover the needs of ESCAP alone and would not result in the establishment of another international conference centre.

While agreeing that the economic situation was not favourable, Japan considered the project reasonable in view of ESCAP's long-term needs; it added that, in order to ensure proper execution of the project, there be close co-operation between Headquarters and ESCAP, and that the Secretary-General include detailed financial information in his progress reports. Brazil, Egypt and Pakistan felt the project should be started immediately.

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) at its thirty-ninth session (Geneva, 3-14 April 1984)<sup>(1)</sup> reviewed the economic situation in the region, discussed the activities of its subsidiary bodies<sup>(2)</sup> and approved plans for its future work.

In a resolution of 14 April on its work and future activities, ECE called on its members to continue taking full advantage of its potential as an instrument for dialogue and for strengthening economic relations and multilateral co-operation in the region. It noted the importance, to that end, of full respect for the principles guiding relations among States as set out in the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki (Finland) Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE) and those contained in the Concluding Document of the Madrid Meeting of Representatives of the Participating States of CSCE. ECE also requested its subsidiary bodies to take into account in their activities its possible contribution to the United Nations programmes designed to assist developing countries and the necessity of effective co-operation with other international organizations.

Among several decisions taken in April, the Commission adopted a Declaration of Policy on the Rational Use of Water and a set of 18 principles governing its use, took note of the decision by the Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments to prepare an overall economic perspective to the year 2000, and invited member Governments to submit proposals to improve the efficiency of the work of its Sessional Committee.

Economic trends

In 1984, the economies of the ECE region—Europe and North America—continued their recovery from the longest post-war recession, with real output growth exceeding 4 per cent, the highest rate since 1978.<sup>(3)</sup>

In the market economies, the western European recovery was influenced by the strength of United States import demand, and of the dollar, as well as the high United States interest rates. Average GDP growth in western Europe in 1984 was about 2.5 per cent, as against the United States rate of around 7 per cent. The volume of western European exports of goods and services rose some 6 per cent compared with about 2 per cent in 1983. Imports accelerated sharply, but the net balance on goods and services nevertheless contributed about 14 per cent of the increase in GDP in the four large economies and some 20 to 25 per cent in the smaller ones; however, in the United States much of the increase in domestic expenditure had gone into imports, and the current account deficit, which had risen from under 1 per cent of GNP at the beginning of 1983 to over 3 per cent in the last quarter of 1984, had become an increasing drag on the growth of domestic output. The recovery of the preceding two years had not been accompanied by an upsurge in inflation rates; moderate wage increases and rising productivity not only had helped to reduce such pressures but had also contributed to the significant rise in profits in 1984, supporting the recovery of business investment. Recovery had a marked effect on employment and unemployment only in the United States, where the former increased by about 4.5 per cent in 1984 and the latter fell from 8 to 7 per cent of the labour force in the course of the year. In western Europe, unemployment generally remained a rising trend, at a little over 9.5 per cent (19 million people) of the total labour force.

In southern Europe, the export-led recovery of output growth, of nearly 3 per cent, had not prevented a further increase in unemployment or stopped the persistent and dramatic fall in fixed investment. The still high levels of inflation in the subregion had required caution towards any stimulus of domestic demand.

In the centrally planned economies, aggregate net material product (NMP) increased by some 3.5 per cent in eastern Europe and the USSR in 1984, thus continuing the upturn in economic growth which had started in 1983. In eastern Europe, the growth of NMP accelerated to about 5 per cent in 1984, while the rate of growth weakened in the USSR due to stagnation of agricultural output. In eastern Europe, in contrast, agricultural output rose by about 7 per cent. It was estimated that labour productivity continued to grow at rates close to those of NMP, while capital productivity probably continued to decline in most countries, although at a more moderate pace. There was a further strengthening of the eastern European countries' financial position in 1984, as reflected in larger current-account surpluses, a rising accumulation of assets, declining net debt (from $70 billion at the end of the 1983 to some $62 billion at the end of 1984) and increasing access to a wider variety of credit instruments, including commercial credits from international banks.

The volume of world trade increased at a rapid pace—some 8 per cent—in 1984, with the import boom in the United States accounting for about half of the rise, and a considerable impetus also coming from the nearly 6 per cent growth in imports into the European ECE countries. United States exports grew nearly as fast as those from Europe, though at less than one third of the rate of import growth. While the United States deficit continued to widen mainly from the upsurge in imports, both market and centrally planned economies in Europe showed some improvement in current accounts, due largely to favourable export developments. Because of the large share of intra-regional flows in European trade, a 39 per cent rise in western European exports and a 50 per cent rise in eastern European exports, both to the United States, accounted for a small portion of their overall export growth in 1984.

In 1984, east-west trade continued to expand. Western trade with eastern Europe showed a pronounced pickup, with a further widening of deficit in the former, while Western trade with the USSR slowed substantially. The volume of trade rose between the eastern European countries and the USSR, probably reflecting fuel and raw material deliveries to the former for the upswing of production growth there.

By decision 1984/187, the Economic and Social Council took note of a document<sup>(4)</sup> prepared by ECE on recent economic developments in the region.

Activities in 1984

Regional economic co-operation

The Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments (twentieth session, 20-24 February), continuing to explore wider co-operation, especially between countries having different economic and social systems, agreed to prepare an overall economic perspective (OEP) to the year 2000. In April, ECE expressed the hope for a timely preparation of OEP, including main economic variables.

Ad hoc working groups, convened for OEP preparation, discussed science and technology, human resources and synthesis work, agreed on a scenario, and identified other topics for analysis. Work was initiated on international trade and co-operation, employment and labour productivity, development of production capacities and investment, patterns of consumption and possible constraints of future economic growth.

Co-operation among Mediterranean countries

In pursuance of an April ECE request, its Executive Secretary participated in a seminar on economic, scientific and cultural co-operation in the Mediterranean (Venice, Italy, 16-26 October) in the light of the CSCE Final Act and co-operated with ECA and ECWA in convening a meeting on transport development in the Mediterranean region (Thessaloniki, Greece, 2-4 October). At the Thessaloniki meeting, there was general agreement that transport study centres be established at Barcelona, Spain, for the western Mediterranean, and Volos, Greece, for the eastern Mediterranean, as well as a training centre in Turkey.

International trade

The Committee on the Development of Trade (thirty-third session, 3-7 December) decided to continue work on an inventory of obstacles to trade, and agreed to convene expert meetings in 1985: one on prospects for east-west trade in the 1980s, and another on industrial co-operation. The Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures (March, September) concentrated on efforts towards harmonization in automatic trade-data interchange, while the Group of Experts on International Contract Practices in Industry (July, December) continued preparing a guide on drawing up contracts for services relating to maintenance, repair and operation of industrial and other works.

Transport and communications

The Inland Transport Committee (forty-fifth session, 30 January-3 February) completed work on methodological aspects of an intermodal evaluation of policy measures affecting international transport; a set of operational guidelines had been formulated to facilitate integrated development of the different transport modes.

The Working Party on Road Transport (June, November) adopted a consolidated resolution on the facilitation of road transport and new technical regulations for motor vehicle equipment and parts. The Group of Experts on Combined Transport (June) studied commercial attitudes of users and providers of piggyback services, the economic viability of piggyback transport and delays in international combined transport. Other subsidiary bodies meeting during the year finalized a draft text of an international instrument relating to the development of a European railway network; made further progress in preparing an updated version of the European Code for Inland Waterways; settled administrative, technical and legal questions related to the practical application of the 1975 Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets; and promoted accession to the International Convention on the Harmonization of Frontier Controls of Goods. The Group of Experts on Transport Statistics (April/May) decided to meet annually, instead of every 18 months.

Countries participating in the Trans-European North-South Motorway (TEM) agreed to continue the project after 1986 so that TEM would become a permanent ECE activity; with the end of phase II, most of the physical and operational standards had been finalized and a set of recommended practices for border crossing operations had been adopted. By the end of 1984, 2,200 kilometres of motorway were in operation and 3,700 kilometres were in various stages of design or construction.

Standardization of summer time

The Commission recommended in April<sup>(1)</sup> that all Governments pursue their efforts to standardize over a medium-term period the application of summer time in Europe.

Industry

The Chemical Industry Committee (seventeenth session, 26-28 September) assessed market trends and selected techno-economic issues affecting the industry. It decided to continue work on the recycling of waste rubber and initiated an analysis of new developments in the field of additives for polymers, particularly thermoplastics. Internationally comparable statistics were being developed on aromatic hydrocarbons, olefins and polyamides.

The Steel Committee (fifty-second session, 24-26 October) examined factors influencing the structure of steel production costs and improvement of steel consumption forecasting, and decided to revive the Working Party on Steel Statistics. A study on the evaluation of the specific consumption of steel was published.

The Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation (fourth session, 7-9 March) continued studies of techno-economic aspects of introducing new manufacturing concepts and methods. Three studies were finalized—on the use of industrial robots, energy-effective engineering equipment, and equipment for better waste-water management—and outlines for two new studies were agreed, on a review of recent trends in electrical and electronic engineering and use of digital image processing in biomedical engineering. Work was begun on a study of telematics equipment and application of information technology.

The Commission,<sup>(1)</sup> in April, decided to consider in 1985 the request made by the Working Party to be upgraded to a principal subsidiary body with the title of a committee.

Water

In April 1984, the Commission<sup>(1)</sup> adopted a Declaration of Policy on the Rational Use of Water—consisting of 18 principles—in recognition of the need for co-ordinated efforts to formulate and apply strategies of water-demand management to cope with limited water supply. It decided that national water policies and planning should pay specific attention to protecting ground water from the possibility of pollution and over-use.

The principles emphasized the need for a unified national strategy for water withdrawal, distribution, treatment, use and discharge; integrated water use, attaching priority to drinking-water requirements and environmental protection; water-demand management and preventive measures so as to avoid water shortages and pollution; non-structural measures aimed at increasing operation efficiency of existing water schemes; co-ordinated utilization of both surface and ground-water, with priority to public drinking-water supply in ground-water use; and measures to combat harmful effects of water, such as flooding and soil erosion.

In a related action, the Commission recognized the significance of developing and strengthening co-operation among the ECE countries in water-pollution control matters, including transboundary water pollution.

In further implementation of the ECE Declaration, the Committee on Water Problems (sixteenth session, 19-23 November) decided to elaborate a set of guidelines on ground-water management, in view of the importance of the problems associated with the over-exploitation of aquifers and the hazards resulting from long-term effects of ground-water pollution. A seminar on co-operation in the field of transboundary waters (Düsseldorf, Federal Republic of Germany, October) drew up a set of recommendations to Governments and prepared draft principles on international co-operation in the harmonious development, use and conservation of water resources shared by two or more countries.

Energy resources

The Steering Committee of the inter-country project on international co-operative research in low-calorie fuel technology held its first session in March and, in accordance with decisions taken, an ad hoc meeting was convened in December of Governments interested in participating in the project (Bulgaria, Greece, Hungary, Poland, Romania, Spain, Turkey, USSR, Yugoslavia).

No consensus was reached in 1984 on the convening of the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Energy prior to the 1985 session of the Commission. In the mean time, work on general energy problems concentrated on research on energy balances, energy conservation, and new and renewable sources of energy. Long-term series of energy production, exports, imports and consumption by sector on a comparable basis had been established as a result of the preparation by the ECE secretariat of an updated version of abridged energy balances, 1965-1982. The secretariat also prepared studies on waste energy recovery and the efficient use of energy in industry in the ECE region.

The Coal Committee (eightieth session, 1-4 October) considered the current situation and prospects of coal demand, supply and use, with special focus on world coal trade and updated world and ECE-region coal prospects to the year 2000.

The Committee on Electric Power (forty-second session, 16-20 January) discussed problems of planning and operating large power systems, electric power stations and the relationship between electricity and the environment.

The Committee on Gas (thirtieth session, 23-26 January) examined the current situation in the ECE region, natural gas markets, availabilities, and import possibilities, and the future role of gas in the energy requirements of the region.

Agriculture and timber

The Committee on Agricultural Problems (thirty-fifth session, 12-16 March) concentrated on programmes to assist Governments in the gradual reorientation of the agricultural sector in the light of difficult production and market conditions created, in part, by the general economic situation, population trends, balances of trade and payments and foreign indebtedness. Among the activities undertaken in that regard, the Working Party on Standardization of Perishable Produce (November), after 35 years of work on quality standards, began revising the overall framework of its work, with a possibility of finishing the task in 1985.

The Timber Committee (forty-second session, 8-12 October) focused its efforts on preparing a new study of long-term timber trends and prospects in Europe, including development of more sophisticated demand projection models for wood, a review of the outlook for non-wood goods and services of the forest, and an attempt to assess the impact of forest damage on forest productivity and future supply.

The Joint FAO/ECE/ILO Committee on Forest Working Techniques and Training of Forest Workers held its fifteenth session in Turkey in May, together with a seminar and study tour on the rehabilitation of low-productivity forests.

Science and technology

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology (twelfth session, 17-21 September) reviewed changes which had occurred in national science and technology policies over the previous four years and analysed those policies aimed at increasing the effectiveness of research and development activities. The Senior Advisers decided to extend the coverage of the Manual of Licensing Procedures in Member Countries of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe by inviting six industrialized countries from outside the region (Australia, Brazil, India, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand) to contribute national chapters.

Environment

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems (twelfth session, 7-10 February) completed a plan for the elaboration of a strategy for environmental protection and rational use of natural resources in member countries up to the year 2000 and beyond. An ad hoc meeting, subsequently held in November, developed the basic elements and structure of a long-term regional strategy as well as a tentative schedule and method of work.

The Commission, in April,<sup>(1)</sup> adopted decisions on air pollution, a conference on the causes and prevention of damage to forests and water through air pollution in Europe (see below), monitoring and evaluation of transboundary water pollution, and co-operation in the field of protection and improvement of the environment. The Commission, among other things, invited the Senior Advisers to pursue efforts at drawing up a compendium on non-waste technology, to intensify activities regarding air pollution matters not covered by the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution, and to elaborate proposals for protecting flora and fauna and their habitats in the ECE region.

A multilateral conference on the causes and prevention of damage to forests and water by air pollution in Europe (Munich, Federal Republic of Germany, June) strengthened and enhanced the work carried out under the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution. The Executive Body for the Convention (second session, September) adopted, and 16 contracting parties subsequently signed, a protocol on long-term financing of the Co-operative Programme for Monitoring and Evaluation of the Long-range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe, setting forth mandatory annual contributions and a scale for sharing the costs among the contributors. The Executive Body also recognized the need for reducing by 1995 the total annual national emissions of nitrogen oxides from stationary and mobile sources or their transboundary fluxes, as well as for internationally harmonized assessment methods and systems for monitoring forest damage in relation to air pollution.

An ad hoc meeting in November recommended ways for the Senior Advisers to contribute to the comprehensive protection of flora, fauna and their habitats, including the elaboration of an all-European declaration.

Human settlements

The Committee on Housing, Building and Planning (forty-fifth session, 10–14 September) discussed long-term perspectives for human settlements development in the region. The fifth Conference on Urban and Regional Research (Lisbon, Portugal, May) evaluated research on long-term perspectives as related to management structures, and a seminar on the city and its transportation (Moscow, USSR, October), organized jointly with the Inland Transport Committee, considered problems and policies related to the integration of transportation infrastructure into the urban structure.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (thirty-second session, 18–22 June) concentrated on revising and harmonizing economic classifications and on developing the United Nations System of National Accounts and its linking with the System of Balances of the National Economy of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance. Continuing attention was paid to the European Comparison Programme of the International Comparison Project. The first phase of the inter-country project on use of computers for statistical purposes was completed at the end of 1984, with a number of software products arising from the project ready for use.

Standardization

The Government Officials Responsible for Standardization Policies (eighth meeting, 20–24 February) continued to promote mutual recognition of certification systems and tests, and adopted, among other things, a revised ECE Standardization List. The Commission, in April,<sup>(1)</sup> agreed to consider in 1985 the convening of a ninth meeting of the group.

The Group of Experts on Standardization Policies decided to compile a directory of international, regional and national certification systems, arrangements and other agreements.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The economic crisis and the future prospects of Latin America and the Caribbean, the internal adjustment policies and the renegotiation of external debt were among the topics discussed by the Economic Commission for Latin America,<sup>(1)</sup> as it held its twentieth session at Lima, Peru, from 29 March to 6 April 1984. Regarding internal adjustment policies and renegotiation of the external debt, the Commission stressed that responsibility must be shared by both the debtor and the developed countries, international private banks and multilateral financial agencies.

After considering the Commission's recommendations, the Economic and Social Council, in July, approved the Commission's name change to Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) and the decision to admit Portugal as a full member and the British Virgin Islands and the United States Virgin Islands as associate members (resolution 1984/67).

The Commission—headquartered at Santiago, Chile—also reviewed the work and recommendations of its subsidiary bodies and approved the programme of work for 1986–1987. Four sessional committees of the Commission examined the topics of water, human settlements, co-operation among developing countries and regions, and population, the latter in preparation for the 1984 International Conference on Population, held in Mexico in August.

With the Council's approval, the Commission's Committee of the Whole held a one-day special meeting at United Nations Headquarters on 28 June (p. 638).

Among other developments in the region was the holding in January, at Quito, Ecuador, of the Latin American Economic Conference, in response to an initiative by the President of that country; and a June meeting, at Cartagena, Colombia, of Ministers of Foreign Affairs and of Finance of 11 countries of the region.

Economic trends

The economic evolution of Latin America in 1983 was characterized by the falling GDP, worsening employment situation and accelerating rate of inflation, according to the Economic Survey of Latin America, 1983. The Economic and Social Council took note of a summary of the survey<sup>(2)</sup> in its decision 1984/187 of 27 July 1984.

There was further exacerbation of the crisis which, by 1982, had already reached dimensions not witnessed since the economic depression of the 1930s. Many economies of the region made adjustment efforts in order to reduce the profound disequilibria that had developed in the external sector over previous years. For the second consecutive year, an extraordinary contraction was observed of net capital inflows, accompanied by the transfer of resources abroad by Latin American countries.

In 1984,<sup>(3)</sup> a weak and inadequate recovery of economic activity was seen, along with a sharp increase in the rate of inflation for the fourth consecutive year and an improvement in the external sector situation. It was estimated that Latin America's total GDP increased by 3.3 per cent, after having fallen by a little over 3 per cent in 1983. The interruption of the downward trend that economic activity had been showing since 1981 was widespread, since GDP increased in 14 of the 19 countries for which comparable data were available. However, inasmuch as the economic recovery was very slight in most countries, and also as a result of population growth, the per capita product rose in 1984 by only 0.9 per cent in the region as a whole and once again diminished in 10 of the 19 countries. Thus, Latin America's per capita product was almost 9 per cent lower in 1984 than in 1980 and was similar to that already obtained by the region in 1977. The inadequacy of the recovery was also evidenced by the fact that urban unemployment rates continued to rise or remained unusually high in most of the countries.

As a result of the adjustment effort and of more favourable world trade trends in 1984, Latin America succeeded in further reducing its balance-of-payments deficit on current account, to barely $2.1 billion, or 95 per cent less than that recorded on average during 1981-1982.

After plummeting from a record peak of $37.7 billion in 1981 to barely $4.4 billion in 1983, the net amount of loans and investments obtained by Latin America rose to $12.4 billion in 1984. Thanks to that increase and also to the reduced deficit on current account, the balance of payments closed in 1984 with a surplus of more than $10 billion. Although that positive balance—the first since 1980—permitted a partial recovery in the level of international reserves, the net inflow of capital continued to fall far short of the amount of net remittances of interest and profits. In 1984, therefore, Latin America was obliged for the third consecutive year to make a substantial transfer of resources abroad, of approximately $25 billion—a sum which, although lower than the $30 billion recorded in 1983, implied a reduction in the region's capacity to import equivalent to about 22 per cent of the value of exports of goods and services.

In 1984, as the growth rate of Latin America's total external debt was slower than that of exports, the debt-export coefficient decreased for the first time in four years, although at a level still very high in internationally comparable terms and far exceeding those recorded in Latin America up to 1982.

Activities in 1984

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

At its 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> the Commission adopted a number of resolutions concerning economic co-operation and development. It decided that its Committee of the Whole should examine in 1985 those aspects of long-term economic and social development policies which could help the countries of the region meet the challenges arising from the changing international economy. By a second resolution, the Commission reaffirmed that the serious economic problems of the region, aggravated by processes of adjustment and renegotiation of external debt, had been caused by factors beyond their control; and that it was the economic policies of some developed countries which had caused a constant deterioration of the terms of trade, a decline in trade, an excessive increase in interest rates and an abrupt reversal of capital flows, as a result of which the countries of the region had become net exporters of capital. Calling the situation untenable, unfair and irrational, the Commission stressed that responsibility for the external debt problems must be shared by both the region's debtor countries and by the developed countries of and outside the region, the international private banks and the multilateral financial agencies. The ECLAC secretariat was called on to undertake studies to identify trends, limitations and alternatives for the region regarding domestic adjustment processes and external indebtedness.

In a third resolution, the Commission approved a secretariat report<sup>(4)</sup> on the review and appraisal of the regional implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (1980s),<sup>(5)</sup> containing an appraisal of the current economic and social situation in the region and of the implementation of the Regional Programme of Action for Latin America in the 1980s,<sup>(6)</sup> as well as policies and measures for action which took into account, among other things, the agreements reached at the Latin American Economic Conference at Quito, Ecuador, in January 1984 (see below). The report viewed it as essential to change the framework in which the external negotiations of the region were being held, with the region mobilizing its bargaining power in order to guarantee import levels compatible with its socio-economic objectives. The Commission requested its Executive Secretary to transmit the report to the Economic and Social Council and to the General Assembly's Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

In December, the Technical Sub-Committee of the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) met in preparation for the fifth (1985) conference of ministers and heads of planning of Latin America and the Caribbean and the 1985 meeting of the ILPES Technical Committee.

Latin American Economic Conference. In 1984, high-level representatives of 26 Latin American and Caribbean countries—including 5 heads of government—attended the Latin American Economic Conference (Quito, Ecuador, 9-13 January), held in close co-operation with the Latin American Economic System and in response to the 1983 Santo Domingo Pledge<sup>(7)</sup> resulting from the initiatives of the President of Ecuador. The Conference adopted the Quito Declaration and Plan of Action,<sup>(8)</sup> containing various measures for reactivating the economy and dealing with the external debt.

The Declaration stated that the countries of the region faced the most serious and intense economic and social crisis of the century, manifesting itself in an unprecedented level of unemployment and reduction of personal incomes and living standards, with grave consequences for the political and social stability of its peoples. It recognized the need for concerted regional and international action, including efforts at achieving and maintaining regional food security; and called for an attitude of shared responsibility by the Governments of creditor countries, the international financing organizations and the international private banks in solving the external debt problem. It also stressed an urgent need to reform the international monetary and financial system, expressed alarm over the increase in protectionist measures of industrialized countries, called for dynamic price stabilization for export commodities for the region, and asked support for the Latin American Energy Organization.

The Plan of Action for intraregional co-operation covered measures dealing with financing, trade, regional food security, energy co-operation, and services.

In a letter dated 12 June,<sup>(9)</sup> the Presidents of Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru and Venezuela informed the Secretary-General of the communiqué they had sent to the heads of State or Government participating in the London Summit meeting, asking them to consider the situation and prospects of Latin America's economies, particularly as regards issues of trade, financing and the external debt.

Caribbean area

In 1984, the Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee (eighth session, Port-au-Prince, Haiti, 6-12 June) admitted the United States Virgin Islands and the British Virgin Islands as associate members; in other action, it noted the completion of a Caribbean Draft Maritime Search and Rescue Plan, the first of its kind produced in the developing world.

In April,<sup>(1)</sup> ECLAC requested the Commission's Executive Secretary to accelerate efforts to seek and to channel funding and resources to the ECLAC subregional Headquarters for the Caribbean.

International trade and finance

In an April 1984 resolution on actions affecting the freedom of trade and economic development of Central America, the Commission<sup>(1)</sup> noted the need to banish from the subregion all foreign intervention striking against its peace and economic development (see also POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter VI), and urged backing for the work of the Action Committee in Support of the Economic and Social Development of Central America.

A study on international economic relations and regional co-operation in Latin America was presented to the eighth session of the Committee of High-level Government Experts (Montevideo, Uruguay, 19-23 January) and, in expanded and revised form, to the 1984 session of the Commission.

As in past years, the Commission's bimonthly bulletin on Facilitation of commerce and transport—Latin America and the Caribbean reported on the latest worldwide advances in reducing or eliminating non-tariff barriers to international trade.

The Second Ibero-American Conference on Economic Co-operation was held at Lima, Peru, 30 March-3 April. In July, a seminar met at Buenos Aires, Argentina, on economic relations between Latin American countries and member countries of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance.

External debt

Meeting on 21 and 22 June at Cartagena, Colombia, Ministers of Foreign Affairs and of Finance of Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela signed on 22 June the Cartagena Consensus statement on the international economic situation, with particular reference to external debt.<sup>(10)</sup>

In a series of proposals contained in the statement, they called for a drastic and immediate reduction by Governments of the industrialized countries of nominal and real interest rates on international markets; the use by international banks, during renegotiation of debt agreement and negotiation of new loans, of reference interest rates not exceeding the true cost of raising funds in the market-place; and the elimination of commissions and cancellation, during renegotiation periods, of interest payments on arrears. Other proposals called for reactivating flows of finance to debtor countries and revising the procedures of IMF, the World Bank Group and the Inter-American Development Bank. It was also proposed that debtor countries should be accorded longer repayment periods and new credit lines on preferential terms and in amounts enabling them to avert suspension of imports; and that immediate attention should be paid to developing countries' demands with respect to stabilizing commodity prices, and to eliminating the industrialized countries' tariff and non-tariff barriers restricting access to their markets.

The Ministers agreed on regional consultation and follow-up machinery, to facilitate exchange of information and experience, promote contacts outside the region with other developing countries, and promote dialogue with Governments of the creditor countries and possibly with multilateral financial institutions and the international banking system.

A North-South round-table meeting at ECLAC headquarters, 27-29 February, discussed the adjustment process, the renegotiation of external debt and the terms established by IMF for the creditor countries.

Technical co-operation

In co-operation with ILPES and the Latin American Demographic Centre, ECLAC continued to provide advisory services and regional training courses in socio-economic planning and policy. Interregional technical or economic co-operation among developing countries continued to be promoted and the Commission prepared with ECA a joint project document for promoting such co-operation in developing the mineral resources of both regions; the project was submitted to UNDP for funding.

At its 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> ECLAC requested identification of methods and procedures for co-operation among the countries of the region which made fullest possible use of financial resources in national currencies and promotion of joint interregional technical and economic co-operation activities with other regional commissions.

Technical co-operation in Central America and the Caribbean

The first of a two-part report of JIU on United Nations technical co-operation in Central America and the Caribbean—volume I on Central America<sup>(11)</sup> and volume II on the Caribbean (issued in 1985)<sup>(12)</sup>—was transmitted to the Economic and Social Council in November 1984 by the Secretary-General.

The report on Central America—covering Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama—examined the extent to which such co-operation had helped mitigate the social and economic problems, enhance self-reliance at the national level, and develop their co-operation potential in the subregion. Focusing attention on the development of national and regional institutional frameworks for policy formulation, planning and programme management, and on population—as elements critical to the socio-economic development and political stability of the region—the Inspectors drew conclusions based on projects supported with resources from UNDP and UNFPA.

The Inspectors recommended, among other things, that a balance be struck between programmes for social development and those for economic development, that every opportunity be exploited for joint programmes so as to enhance mutual co-operation and a harmonious development process in the region, and that efforts be made to speed up the pool of trained human resources.

In commenting on the JIU recommendations, the Secretary-General<sup>(13)</sup> said the aim of a more balanced distribution between social and economic development projects should be viewed as a recognition that Governments were ultimately responsible for deciding which projects required external assistance. He observed that the effectiveness and impact of United Nations and other technical co-operation in the subregion depended on a climate of political stability, accompanied by programmes aimed at enhancing the countries' capabilities for self-reliance and addressing the most basic needs of their population.

Transport

The Commission continued in 1984 to provide technical assistance and convene meetings to assist its member countries to improve land, river, maritime and multimodal transport. Its Transport and Communications Division considered, at the request of the Latin American Integration Association (ALADI), a study on a system of information on international transport.

Industrial development

A diagnosis of events in the industrial sector in the region and long-term policies in industrialization was considered by the Latin American Technical Meeting on Industrialization (Santiago, Chile, May), whose conclusions were used in establishing the position of the countries of the region at the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO (UNIDO IV) (see p. 758).

The Regional Programme on Industrial Reorganization was initiated toward the end of 1984 in conjunction with UNIDO. Its aim was to provide Governments of the region with analytical information relating to trends in industrial and technical reorganization within the industrialized countries, to assess the repercussions of such changes on the region's industrialization process and to assist countries in formulating appropriate strategies and policies. The first meeting of the working party on industrial reorganization in the region was held at Santiago in November.

Natural resources and energy

In 1984, articles of association of the Latin American Mining Agency were approved at a meeting at Lima, Peru, 3-4 April, with delegates from 13 countries in the region participating.

In the field of water resources, the Commission decided in 1984 to pursue, at the request of Governments, efforts supporting the national and regional implementation of the Mar del Plata Plan of Action, adopted at the 1977 United Nations Water Conference,<sup>(14)</sup> and urged Governments to co-operate in preparing a progress report on the Plan's implementation. It was recommended that the ECLAC secretariat also continue its support for activities in connection with the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990).<sup>(15)</sup>

A meeting on global energy issues and their relation to Latin American energy policies and options (Santiago, 1-3 March) made a number of proposals, including the creation of a Latin American prospecting fund for petroleum as a way of mobilizing international sources of high-risk capital.

In the field of new and renewable sources of energy (NRSE), a number of technical missions and meetings were organized on the economics of solar energy, development of NRSE projects in Latin America and the Caribbean, and developing a plan of action on rural energy in the region, with special reference to NRSE.<sup>(16)</sup>

Food and agriculture

Work continued in 1984 on research projects on rural poverty in Latin America, agricultural policies and rural development, and structure and operation of national food systems.

The subject of rural poverty was tackled with technical and financial help from FAO, including the preparation of country case studies and documents of regional scope. A round-table on rural poverty in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, May) enabled government and private-sector experts from 17 countries of the region, working together with experts from 9 international institutions, to evaluate the Commission's activities in the field. Other 1984 meetings dealt with rural development, farm finance techniques, and farming systems.

Science and technology

In 1984, the Committee of High-level Government Experts (ninth session, Montevideo, Uruguay, 23-24 January), at a session devoted to science and technology for development, reviewed regional developments relating to the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development (VPA) and its Operational Plan—adopted at the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, at Vienna, Austria.<sup>(17)</sup>

The Committee adopted a series of proposals for future action dealing, among other things, with promotion of mechanisms for co-operation among the countries of the region; modification of conditions contributing to the exodus of qualified personnel; regulation of importation of technology built into capital goods and reorienting the demand for such goods to suppliers in the region; monitoring practices of transnational corporations that worked against national policies; protection and promotion of national capabilities in engineering, consultant services and technological management; stressing the importance of standardization, measurement and quality control; allocation to science and technology of resources equivalent to twice the present percentage of GDP; and strengthening training in priority areas.

The Commission continued to study the possible impact of the incorporation of new techniques—such as biotechnology, including genetic engineering, robotization and microelectronics—on the economic and social development of the countries of the region. The Second Meeting of High-Level Government Experts on Science and Technology (Caracas, Venezuela, May) expressed support for a co-operative programme of action in microelectronics, including recommendations for the establishment of a regional microelectronics network.

Social and cultural development

The Commission, at its 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> urged Governments to encourage the full integration of women into the economic and social development processes of their countries, to adopt short- and medium-term policies to that end, and to prepare a comprehensive diagnosis of the situation of women.

Governments were also urged to adopt policies aimed at slowing down the migration to the cities of women and their families, to improve the working conditions of women in rural areas and to extend or increase effectively the coverage of social security schemes.

In July, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to assist in holding a regional meeting in 1985 to review the implementation of the Regional Plan of Action for Latin America and the Caribbean for the International Youth Year (see below, resolution 1984/67, sect. II).

Conservation of cultural property

In September 1984,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly information on the implementation of the 1982 JIU recommendations on the United Nations contribution to the conservation and management of Latin American cultural and natural heritage.<sup>(19)</sup> The Secretary-General, in commenting on the JIU report in 1983,<sup>(20)</sup> had generally concurred with the Inspectors' observations, including the view that the United Nations system needed to be fully attuned to the exigencies of a conservation-oriented approach to development in the region. In his 1984 report, the Secretary-General noted that the creation of a single regional intergovernmental forum on heritage conservation, if the region so decided, might be explored most appropriately in the framework of the established international or regional organizations.

Population

The Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE), whose work programme had been approved by ECLAC member countries, continued to focus on demographic statistics and projections of population trends, population and development, and education and training.

The Commission, at its 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> recognized the collaboration given by UNFPA, a major funding agency for CELADE, in supporting the efforts of the countries of the region in the population field, and urged increased contributions to UNFPA to enable it to respond more adequately to the region's growing assistance needs.

Environment

The Commission continued studies and research aimed at promoting horizontal co-operation, advisory services and training. Work continued on efforts to incorporate the environmental dimension in development planning processes. In August, a new project on tourism and the environment in the Caribbean was begun.

At its May 1984 session,<sup>(21)</sup> the UNEP Governing Council urged the Governments of the region to continue strengthening co-operation and promoting exchange of experience. Among the meetings held in 1984 was one of high-level experts designated by Governments to review regional environmental programmes (Peru, April) (see also Chapter XVI of this section).

Statistics

In 1984, the Commission continued to maintain, up-date and improve statistics contained in the External Trade Data Bank for Latin America and the Caribbean (BADECEL), broadening work in the areas of national accounts, external trade and external indebtedness, income distribution, consumption, prices, production and population, as well as social development.

Recognizing the importance of access to reliable and timely statistics in achieving the economic integration of the region, the Commission, in 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> noted with satisfaction the progress made in launching and operating BADECEL, urged regional integration bodies to continue collaborating with the ECLAC secretariat in creating a regional system of foreign trade statistics, and urged Governments to give priority to improving and processing their foreign trade statistics.

Western Asia

The Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) held its eleventh session at its headquarters at Baghdad, Iraq, from 22 to 26 April 1984.<sup>(1)</sup> Major issues discussed included regional co-operation and integration, food security and agricultural development and development of human resources. In reviewing the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)<sup>(2)</sup> (see also p. 391) discussions focused on how negatively the deteriorating world economic conditions, the declining prices in the oil market and the continuation of the Iran-Iraq war had affected the capacity of the region to extend assistance to third world countries.

The Commission adopted nine resolutions, two of which were for consideration by the Economic and Social Council. In July, the Council approved the two texts, thereby designating ECWA's Standing Committee for the Programme as the Technical Committee (resolution 1984/80), and recommending to the General Assembly a proposal for recruiting staff for the ECWA secretariat from among the Commission's members, including the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). The Assembly subsequently adopted the proposal in December (resolution 39/243).

Other ECWA resolutions concerned a 1983 study of the economic and social conditions and potential of the Palestinian Arab people,<sup>(3)</sup> participation in the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO (UNIDO IV, August 1984) (see p. 558), a regional conference on population and the Amman Declaration on Population in the Arab World, strengthening of national capabilities in household surveys, increasing the participation of Arab women in development, developing the ECWA information system, and social and economic studies on the Palestinian people in the occupied territories.

Economic and social trends

The summary of the survey of economic and social development in the ECWA region,<sup>(4)</sup> taken note of by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1984/187 of 27 July, found that the region, comprising some of the most open economies among the developing countries, was vulnerable to external factors which adversely affected the efforts at achieving many of the targets of the current International Development Strategy.<sup>(2)</sup> While the Strategy called for an average annual GDP growth rate of 7 per cent for developing countries, the region averaged a negative growth rate of 6.4 per cent (at constant 1980 prices) during 1980-1983.

The ECWA region, facing lower oil prices and sharply reduced exports, experienced the disturbing effects of declining revenues and the consequent curtailment in expenditures; the region's oil revenues, which provided the major source of funds for development, had fallen in 1983 to only 49 per cent of those received in 1980. The deterioration in the balance of payments and sharp decline in oil revenues had also affected the non-oil and least developed economies in the region, which largely depended on economic assistance from the oil-exporting countries to finance their development endeavours. Nevertheless, the performance of the oil-exporting countries of the region remained above the Strategy's target in terms of concessional aid, and was better than the actual performance of the developed countries in connection with official development assistance. However, if oil revenues did not pick up and development expenditures continued to be constrained, many countries would be seriously affected in terms of foreign exchange earnings, return migration and settlement, and consequent aggravation of domestic employment situation.

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

A follow-up report was completed in 1984, on the regional implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries<sup>(5)</sup> (see also p. 413); the report was submitted to the Commission's 1985 session. Advisory services and assistance to Yemen concentrated on budgetary, monetary and foreign exchange issues, as well as on establishing a department for investment encouragement at the Ministry of Economy and Industry. Democratic Yemen was given assistance in applying modern techniques in project planning and monitoring.

At its 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> the Commission, during an examination of current issues in regional co-operation and integration, noted that the Council for Arab Economic Unity had expanded the membership of the Arab Common Market, and the accession to membership of the least developed Arab countries had been facilitated by means of a compensation fund.<sup>(6)</sup> It was stressed that co-operation and co-ordination among Arab and international organizations and institutions and among Arab businessmen and investors through their chambers of commerce or federations could greatly contribute to the strengthening of joint Arab economic action.

International trade and finance

A number of reports on international trade and development finance were completed in 1984, including a review and analysis of developments in the external trade and payment situation of ECWA member countries, and the role of joint ventures in regional co-operation and integration.

Development assistance

Technical co-operation

The Commission, under the support programme of UNDP,<sup>(7)</sup> continued to provide short-term regional advisory services to ECWA member countries in such areas as development planning, industrial project identification, formulation and appraisal, financial management, human resources development, household surveys and demography, national accounts and economic statistics, transport and communication, new and renewable sources of energy and industrial and mechanical engineering.

Activities undertaken in co-operation with the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women included case studies of women's position in national plans, a project in institutional development for rural women and training activities for income-generation (see also Chapter XIX of this section).

Transport and communications

In 1984, the data and information necessary for preparing a study on a transport development strategy for the region were collected and analysed, in addition to a comparative analysis of national transport plans in ECWA member countries. In co-operation with UNCTAD, the Commission explored the feasibility of an intraregional maritime information system and subregional centres for the TRAINMAR project.

Studies were completed or published on development of national merchant marines and promotion of multinational shipping enterprises, development of inland waterways and coastal shipping, improvements of road maintenance, and on transport harmonization and standardization of documents. A report on legal aspects of the simplification of border crossing facilities in countries of Western Asia was circulated.

Industrial development

A techno-economic study on the integrated development of manufacturing facilities for automotive activities was completed, and a project was initiated for a feasibility study on development of diesel engines and components at the Arab regional level. A work plan was formulated regarding preparation of master plans for developing technological capabilities in oil refining, petrochemicals and fertilizers; capital goods and heavy engineering; and iron and steel. Preparations continued for a solidarity meeting for Democratic Yemen, to be held in 1985 in the context of industrial programming for LDCs.

The Commission, at its April 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> requested the Executive Secretary to continue providing member countries with information and studies on the topics for discussion at UNIDO IV, and to maintain co-ordination with the Arab Industrial Development Organization in that respect.

Transnational corporations

Work continued on a report on the status of formulating the draft code of conduct relating to transnational corporations (TNCs) (see also p. 591), with special reference to the participation of Arab countries. Studies were initiated on the impact of TNC operations on development in Western Asia, and on TNC operations in the industrial sector in Bahrain. An interim report on the scope of TNC operations in Western Asia was completed and incorporated in a mid-term review of the International Development Strategy.

Preparations were made for a joint project with the Arab Industrial Development Organization on the role of TNCs in the transfer of technology in Arab countries.

Natural resources, environment and energy

A study was completed on co-operation and co-ordination of activities in the field of water and sea resources in the region. Work continued on identifying the activities of ECWA member States and international agencies in water resources development during 1980-1985.

A report on industrial pollution control in the ECWA region was completed with recommendations for pollution abatement and integration of environmental dimensions in industrial development programmes.

Work continued towards establishing a regional network on new and renewable sources of energy (NRSE), aimed at mobilizing and strengthening existing capabilities in the region and at fostering regional co-operation.

Food and agriculture

In the context of encouraging development in environmentally less favourable areas of the region, three studies were completed on integrated development of mountain farming areas. A report was submitted to the Commission on the progress and impact of national and intercountry action programmes to combat desertification.

As a joint undertaking with the Arab Organization of Agricultural Development, food security issues in the West Bank and Gaza were studied.

Science and technology

Agreements were reached with institutions in Jordan, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia on promoting sub-regional and regional co-operation for strengthening national scientific and technological capabilities. A review was made of progress in the ECWA region since the 1979 Vienna Conference on Science and Technology for Development.<sup>(8)</sup>

Social development

In 1984, an Expert Group Meeting on a strategy for the advancement of Arab women in the ECWA region to the year 2000 (Baghdad, 29-31 October) and a regional preparatory meeting (Baghdad, 3-6 December) for the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women considered two documents prepared in relation to the Conference: the assessment of the conditions of Arab women in Western Asia during the Decade for Women (1976-1985) and a regional strategy to the year 2000. The first document gave special reference to the issues of women and peace in the region, especially those concerning Palestinian women and the Iran-Iraq war. The second document formulated priority areas, such as policies and programmes for political participation and improvements in legal status, employment and production, and education and training.

The Commission, at its April 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> had urged the Executive Secretary to establish contacts with the League of Arab States and other Arab regional organizations in connection with the holding of a regional preparatory meeting for the 1985 Conference, and requested a report on a possible regional project (see also Chapter XIX of this section).

The secretariat continued to provide technical assistance to regional projects financed by the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, dealing with subjects such as the role of rural women in economic development and education and training for income generation.

A report was completed on the situation and needs of youth, with emphasis on education and employment.

Population

A regional population conference for the Arab world—meeting at Amman, Jordan, from 25 to 29 March, in preparation for the International Conference on Population (Mexico, August 1984) (see Chapter XIV of this section)—adopted the Amman Declaration on Population in the Arab World,<sup>(9)</sup> containing recommendations on development strategies and population policies; components of population policy; data, research, exchange of information and training; and intraregional and international co-operation. Noting that the Arab population, of some 180 million in 1984, was expected to rise to over 250 million by the end of the century, the development strategies and population policies recommended included planning designed to meet basic needs in employment, education, health, food, housing, clothing and social security by the year 2000, and pursuit, in each sector, of a demographic course of action conducive to achieving the objectives of an integrated population policy and providing an appropriate minimum level of family income. Among other specific recommendations was a call to halt support and assistance to Israel, whose policy, the Declaration asserted, affected the demographic character of the occupied Arab territories.

The Amman Declaration was subsequently endorsed by ECWA at its April 1984 session.<sup>(1)</sup>

Other developments in 1984 included the meeting of an Arab parliamentary conference on development and population (Tunisia, May).

Human settlements

Preparation of country profiles—intended as a basis for formulating human settlement policies and strategies—commenced in Egypt, Iraq and Kuwait, while one on Yemen was published and those on Democratic Yemen and Jordan were finalized.

Work continued in preparing a study on the status of the building material industry and the requirements and potentials for its development, and in assessing alternative energy-saving building materials and low-cost housing designs and projects.

Statistics

The seventh issue of Statistical Abstract of the Region of the Economic Commission for Western Asia, covering 1973-1982, was published with main statistical data on population, social statistics, national accounts, agriculture, forestry and fishing, industry, energy, foreign trade, finance and transport, communications and tourism. Among other publications were a 1984 issue of National Accounts Studies and that of External Trade Bulletin of the ECWA Countries.

The Commission, in April 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> urged financial and technical assistance to enable its member countries to carry out their national household survey programmes.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

Information system

At its 1984 session,<sup>(1)</sup> ECWA asked its Executive Secretary to elaborate a comprehensive programme of work to develop the secretariat's information infrastructure, and to co-operate with Arab, regional and international organizations in co-ordinating the programme.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1984, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1984/80 without vote.

Staffing

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1984/81 by roll-call vote. In April, ECWA<sup>(1)</sup> had adopted a resolution with essentially the same wording.

Staff and administrative questions of the Economic Commission for Western Asia

Recognizing also the importance of knowledge of the Arabic language by the staff of the Commission for the effective performance of their work,

1. Urges unrepresented and underrepresented States to endeavour to encourage competent personnel to work in the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Western Asia as staff members on a regular or fixed-term basis;

2. Proposes to the General Assembly that it should authorize the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to enable the Economic Commission for Western Asia to recruit staff from any State member of the Commission to meet the Commission's personnel requirements;

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The text of Council resolution 1984/81 was transmitted to the General Assembly in December by the Secretary-General.<sup>(10)</sup>

The Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 39/243 on 18 December by recorded vote.

Staff and administrative questions of the Economic Commission for Western Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/81 of 27 July 1984,

Deeply concerned about the high vacancy rate and difficulties in recruitment which have prevailed for a number of years in the regional commissions, particularly in the Economic Commission for Western Asia,

Convinced that the high vacancy rate has had a serious impact on the work programme of the Economic Commission for Western Asia,

Recognizing that repeated efforts have been made by the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Western Asia to find qualified staff from unrepresented or underrepresented States in the region covered by the Commission, but that the difficulties still persist in the recruitment of such staff,

Recognizing also the importance of knowledge of the Arabic language by the staff of the Economic Commission for Western Asia for the effective performance of their work,

1. Urges unrepresented and underrepresented States to endeavour to encourage competent personnel to work in the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Western Asia as staff members on a regular or fixed-term basis;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to enable the Economic Commission for Western Asia to recruit staff from any State member of the Commission to meet its personnel requirements;

3. Decides that all members of the Economic Commission for Western Asia should be treated in a manner consistent with their full membership in the Commission in regard to employment in the secretariat of the Commission.

General Assembly resolution 39/243

18 December 1984 Meeting 105 123-2-20 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/39/516) by recorded vote (72-2-17), 15 December (meeting 53); 8-nation draft (A/39/L.17), orally amended by Indonesia; agenda item 116.

Sponsors: Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

Meeting numbers: GA 39th session: 5th Committee 49, 53; plenary 105.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

The Assistant Secretary-General for Personnel Services told the Fifth Committee, before the vote, that the draft's second preambular paragraph seemed not to reflect reality, as a recent cable from ECWA indicated the current number of vacant posts as 10; the situation in the other regional commissions likewise did not seem to be a matter of concern to their respective executive secretaries. Egypt, however, reiterated that a high vacancy rate had long been a problem in ECWA.

Israel said the exclusion of Israel and the inclusion of a non-State in ECWA were in violation of the United Nations Charter; it protested the recruitment of members of PLO for service in the Commission's secretariat.

The United States asserted that the expedient proposed in the draft would create a bad precedent as it would allow ECWA to violate the principle of equal employment opportunities for nationals of all Member States and even to offer employment to members which were neither Governments nor States nor Members of the United Nations but organizations which paid no assessment and therefore had no claim to be represented in the secretariat. Moreover, the statistics cited by the Assistant Secretary-General seemed to indicate that the critical situation no longer existed.

Speaking also on behalf of the States members of the European Economic Community, Ireland said it understood that the draft was of a temporary nature intended to resolve problems in ECWA and that it should not constitute a precedent for any other regional commission or United Nations body, particularly in respect of States which were already overrepresented.

Chapter IX

Natural resources and cartography

During 1984, the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFRNRE) continued to assist developing countries. Programme expenditures in 1984 were estimated at $3.7 million, a decline of some $1 million from the previous year. Concern over the Fund's diminishing financial capacity was expressed by the administering body, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

A Global Plan of Action for the Conservation, Management and Utilization of Marine Mammals, prepared by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) in co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), was endorsed by the UNEP Governing Council.

The Economic and Social Council decided that the Third United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas should be held in 1985 instead of 1984 (decision 1984/105) and that the Conference should meet in New York rather than at Buenos Aires, Argentina (decision 1984/117).

In decision 1984/112, the Council took note of an offer by Turkey to host the Eleventh United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific in 1987.

Exploration

UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

Activities

UNRFRNRE continued to provide developing countries with comprehensive assistance, including project design, execution and follow-up, as well as high-risk financing, expertise, advanced technology and help in obtaining investment. The Fund's 1984 activities, administered by UNDP, were described in a March 1985 report<sup>(1)</sup> by the UNDP Administrator.

Inadequate financial support remained the major constraint to assisting more developing countries in natural resources exploration and development (see below).

In the mining sector, severely depressed metal prices caused a general lack of investment. Lack of investment in the San Bartolomé silver deposit in Ecuador illustrated the situation, but was also indicative of the long lead time experienced in mining projects and the long-term nature of the Fund's operations.

Work was completed during 1984 on projects in Burkina Faso and Suriname. A project in Mali neared termination, and a new project was begun in Peru. At the end of the year, only three projects—in Haiti, Peru and Sierra Leone—were fully operational.

Detailed geological mapping, two geophysical campaigns, trenching and sampling were carried out in Haiti, concentrating on two areas: at La Mine, polymetallic sulphide mineralization (zinc, copper, gold and barite) was discovered within a three-kilometre zone of acid volcanics; in the structurally complex Faille area, widespread gold showings were found.

In Peru, investigation of gold contained within high-altitude glacial moraine deposits at San Antonio de Poto dominated activities. Most heavy equipment had been received, drill access and drilling pads were prepared, a processing plant was constructed at Ananea, and project headquarters and a final processing laboratory had been installed at Arequipa. Meanwhile, initial exploration for zinc and other base metals was completed over the Orquideas prospect near San Ramon.

In Sierra Leone, field work was initiated, target areas with gold mineralization were identified, and detailed investigations were being conducted in two areas: the southern portion of the Sula Mountains-Kangari Hills for bedrock gold and the Pampana River flood plain, which drains part of the bedrock area, for placer gold. The Administrator recommended that the UNDP Governing Council take note of his approval of the minimum work for gold exploration in the Sula Mountains-Kangari Hills at a cost of $0.97 million and approve the project involving a maximum expenditure of $2.72 million. On 29 June,<sup>(2)</sup> the Council approved the project, subject to availability of funds.

Other project development work was continued by the Fund. Areas in southern Rwanda with good indications of gold mineralization were appraised positively, and a phosphate exploration project in Chile was endorsed by UNRPNRE's Joint Operations Group (JOG). Missions to Brazil and Ghana had positive results. Work proceeded well in Guatemala, where a positive project recommendation was expected in 1985.

A gold deposit was identified in Suriname and determined to be of sufficient grade and tonnage to support a small mining operation.

Further testing was undertaken to provide Governments and potential investors with more detailed analyses of the Fund's discoveries in Benin and the Congo. In Benin, laboratory evaluation of a kaolin deposit resulted in a decision to proceed to applied industrial testing of a large bulk sample. The deposit could be of value in the manufacture of cement, tiles, paint and paper. Similarly, following successful completion of a second phase of explorations for offshore phosphates near Pointe Noire in the Congo, bulk sample tests were being financed by UNRPNRE. Some 25 million tons of mixed shell/phosphorite for use as quality fertilizers for the sugar-cane industry were believed to be recoverable using simple, cost-effective offshore mining methods.

In Kenya, an additional $350,000 was allocated for detailed geophysical work, geological studies and additional drilling for a copper-silver mineralization project.

After field work in Mali demonstrated no economic potential at the In Darset gold prospect and the Adrar Tadhak alkaline complex, the project was closed down. Tin and tungsten possibilities in the Tessalit/Kidal area produced no signs of mineralization, while drilling of the Immanal carbonatites and Tessalit sulphides uncovered sub-economic mineralization. In Burkina Faso, nickel-laterite and gold were discovered, but the mineralization was insufficient.

Although a negative assessment was made in Burundi, the Fund continued to study follow-up possibilities uncovered by UNDP and the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) in Cibitoke Province.

Advanced geothermal energy projects were pursued in several countries. A project in Mexico at Las Planillas, near Guadalajara, was endorsed by JOG, following two Fund missions; if successful, the project was expected to lead to the development of a large block of power to assist industry in the area. In Saint Lucia, pre-feasibility studies resulted in a positive appraisal of the Qualibou Caldera prospect near Soufrière for a Fund project, estimated at $5 million, to meet all Saint Lucia's electrical requirements and thereby replace imported diesel oil as the main power source. Discussions took place with the Government and the United States Agency for International Development for possible co-financing. An appraisal mission visited the Seferihisar prospect near Izmir, Turkey, in October 1984. A DTCD consultant appraised two prospects in Bolivia, for one of which a project was set up at Laguna Colorada by UNDP using Italian bilateral funding.

Contributions and expenditures

In 1984, programme expenditures were estimated at $3.7 million, a decline of about $1 million from 1983. Contributions in 1984 totalled $190,462; thus contributions fell far short of the level needed for new projects. Some 40 proposals for exploration projects were under consideration.

The Fund's cumulative expenditure on completed projects, including its current programme commitments and an actuarial estimate for subsequent work, was $32.8 million as at 31 December 1984.

Although it was uncertain how quickly negotiations on various projects would proceed with Governments, it was clear that funding capacity was rapidly being exhausted. If projects endorsed by JOG, in addition to others in an advanced stage of development, were approved by the UNDP Governing Council, estimated funding for other new programming would be reduced to $1.5 million.

On 29 June,<sup>(2)</sup> the Governing Council expressed concern about the deteriorating capacity of the Fund to meet the demands of developing countries, appealed for significant voluntary contributions, and requested the UNDP Administrator to pursue co-financing as a means of increasing resources.

Mineral resources

Technical co-operation

During 1984, DTCD, in addition to UNRFRRE, carried out activities related to mineral exploration, institution building and strengthening, rehabilitation of mines, mine development, formal and on-the-job training, mineral sector planning, mining legislation and contract negotiation, supply of equipment, and application of computer techniques in mineral exploration and development.

A total of 55 projects were operational in 1984 funded from the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation, UNDP and trust funds, with total expenditures of almost $14 million; about 10 projects were in the final stages of becoming operational. The projects were described in an addendum to a report by the Secretary-General on United Nations technical co-operation activities.<sup>(1)</sup>

An increase was reported in the number of projects to strengthen national institutions—geological surveys, bureaux of mines, ministry departments, State mining companies—and training, in several cases in conjunction with other activities, such as exploration for non-metallic and metallic minerals. The projects included operational assistance to the Ghana State Gold Mining Corporation, together with rehabilitation of its mines; a training programme for geologists and mining engineers from Namibia; mineral exploration, evaluation and development planning in the United Republic of Tanzania; supervision of the evaluation of gold mineralization in Suriname; and three projects in co-operation with the Indian Bureau of Mines.

The United Nations and Colombia completed an economic and technical evaluation of a major mineral deposit, containing molybdenum and copper. Since the deposit was located in mountainous terrain, near the southern village of Mocoa, supplies and personnel had to be flown in by helicopter. Project activities included not only diamond core drilling, metallurgical testing, preliminary investigation of infrastructure requirements and cash flow estimates but the training of Colombian nationals in mining, engineering, geology, and computer applications in mineral exploration. It was concluded that the molybdenum-copper reserves were comparable to those in deposits in production around the world but, as prices for the two metals were at historically low levels, development of a mine was currently unlikely.

Exploration for metals and minerals continued in many countries. In Burundi, a search went on for precious and other minerals and metals; training in the application of computer techniques to mineral exploration and development also was being given. In Jamaica, non-metallic minerals were investigated. In Paraguay, geological, hydrogeological and metallogenic maps were prepared. In Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, a volcano monitoring system was installed and local personnel were trained in its operation.

Several projects continued to explore for precious metals, especially gold, which were among the relatively few mineral commodities suffering less severely from low prices and slow rates of growth in consumption. In addition, the United Nations co-operated in the rehabilitation of existing gold mines.

Advisory services were made available to developing countries under the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation. About 20 missions were undertaken in regard to mining legislation, contract negotiations and mineral sector planning. Other advisory missions were concerned with electronic data processing in mineral exploration and development, mining engineering, geochemistry and geophysics.

In November, a Group of Experts on Electronic Data Processing in Mineral Exploration and Development held a meeting and an interregional seminar in Brazil; more than 80 persons from developing countries attended.

Water and marine resources

Water resources development

During 1984, some 90 water resources projects were carried out by DTCD in 50 countries at a cost of more than $18 million.<sup>(1)</sup> More than 60 technical and interregional advisory missions were undertaken. Some 20 projects were started at a cost of $8.3 million; half of them were to alleviate arid conditions in Africa, four in direct response to drought. In Burkina Faso, the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund (UNEOTF) provided $80,000 to deepen wells which had dried. In the Central African Republic, UNDP gave $250,000 to construct 22 new wells and deepen 23 existing ones. In the Comoros, UNEOTF contributed $300,000 to strengthen drilling operations on Grand Comoros Island. In Somalia, new pumping equipment was installed at 15 deep wells, 35 others were repaired, and 50 well operators were given maintenance training.

In Mauritania, UNDP contributed $1 million to repair and maintain wells. In the Niger, UNDP and the United Nations Children's Fund contributed $1.5 million and $1.7 million, respectively, to the second phase of a project to develop ground water in rural areas. In Chad, a preparatory rural water-supply project was completed, prior to a full-scale project.

Elsewhere, a project was under way to assist the assessment of ground-water resources in a major grain-producing plains area of northern China through consultant services, scientific equipment and training programmes. Assistance was provided to Viet Nam in the exploration for ground-water resources; hydrogeological maps were prepared and exploration teams organized. Argentina received assistance in ground-water exploration, flood forecasting, river basin planning, laboratory research and information systems. In the Turks and Caicos Islands, water legislation was drafted.

Pursuant to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in May 1984 concerning the establishment of a technical unit for technical co-operation among developing countries in ground-water resources development within the Centre for Waters at Zagreb, Yugoslavia.<sup>(3)</sup> He had held consultations with UNDP and Yugoslavia on the possibilities of establishing such a unit, whose objectives would be to encourage technical co-operation and to strengthen technical capabilities. The unit's activities would include organization of round-table discussions, establishment of an information network and data bank, a newsletter, a roster of experts, and the provision of consultancy services.

To carry out the unit's activities, it was estimated that $200,000 for non-local costs would be required during its first two years of operation, as follows: training and meetings of representatives of developing countries, $100,000; ad hoc consultants, $40,000; information and documentation, $40,000; and travel, office and miscellaneous expenses, $20,000. In support of the unit, Yugoslavia would provide a director and a hydrogeologist and would be responsible for the costs of secretarial and administrative services and local facilities.

Limited funds might be forthcoming from multilateral sources to support fellows from least developed countries, the Secretary-General said. He added that, in view of the modest level of funding required, interested Member States and multilateral funding agencies should be encouraged to assist in setting up the unit.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the unit when it adopted decision 1984/171.

The Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) held its fifth session at Vienna, Austria, from 29 October to 2 November 1984.<sup>(4)</sup> It considered such matters as implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan for the development of water resources, adopted by the United Nations Water Conference in 1977;<sup>(5)</sup> the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1980;<sup>(6)</sup> and integrated approaches to education and training in water resources, in accordance with a 1981 Economic and Social Council resolution.<sup>(7)</sup> The Group reviewed draft reports by the Secretary-General and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) on implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan. It also dealt with co-ordination among organizations of the United Nations system in implementing their programmes under the Action Plan and, in that connection, emphasized the need for full utilization of the substantive and operational capabilities of the different organizations in allocating responsibility for projects.<sup>(8)</sup>

Other Group activities included<sup>(9)</sup> the preparation of a briefing note on the involvement of organizations in water resources development; the completion of a Consolidated Catalogue of Publications on Water Resources in Print from 1971 to 1981,<sup>(10)</sup> and the compilation of information on bilateral and international assistance programmes, with a view to increasing the flow of financial resources.

UNEP activities. As a consequence of socioeconomic development, and especially water resources development in the river basins of the world, freshwater ecosystems were becoming more and more complex in their structural, spatial and temporal dimensions, the Executive Director of UNEP said in his annual report for 1984.<sup>(11)</sup>

Perceptions of the functions of freshwater bodies (rivers, lakes, aquifers) also changed during development, he pointed out. Fresh water was not only a renewable natural resource for which no substitute existed, but formed a very important part of ecosystems and landscapes. Contrary to the prevailing practice, which focused almost exclusively on the function of fresh water as a natural resource, all the related functions should be considered simultaneously. That meant environmental effects could not be viewed only in the context of specific water projects, but also on a basin-wide scale, which was particularly important in regard to international water systems.

Against this background, UNEP concentrated in 1984 on the environmental aspects of water resources management; support for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade; freshwater ecosystems; and preparation of a comprehensive water programme.

Emphasis was given to Africa, in the light of the serious drought it was experiencing. Ground-water management and erosion control in Africa were considered by an International Symposium on Challenges in African Hydrology and Water Resources, organized by the International Association of Hydrological Sciences (IAHS) and Zimbabwe at Harare in July 1984. The participation of 12 African experts was financed by UNEP; the proceedings of the Symposium, containing several African case-studies, were published by IAHS in co-operation with UNEP, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Meteorological Organization.

In keeping with a 1983 UNEP Governing Council decision concerning the UNEP water programme,<sup>(12)</sup> UNEP began in 1984 a programme on the environmental management of the common river system of the Zambezi whose aim was to prepare a plan for sound management of the Zambezi by the basin countries and to co-ordinate the efforts of interested United Nations organizations. It was hoped that eventually an international treaty would be concluded.

As part of an effort to rehabilitate agricultural systems and control schistosomiasis, diarrhoeal diseases and malaria in a group of 31 villages in the large Gezira-Managil Scheme in central Sudan, a strategy for health and water supply improvements was developed under a joint UNEP/World Health Organization (WHO) project on integrated irrigation.

Providing support to the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade was a major activity. UNEP took part in the twelfth meeting of the Steering Committee for Co-operative Action at Vienna in October. Two new projects were begun during the year in co-operation with WHO, one to test methods and guidelines for the control of drinking-water quality in rural areas and the other to evaluate the health hazards of and provide guidelines for waste water reuse. UNEP participated in an international seminar on waste water reuse organized by WHO at Al Manamah, Bahrain, in September. The seminar concluded that waste water reuse was not only a desirable but an absolutely necessary method of meeting water demands in arid regions, especially in Arab countries, and that the permissible limits of waste water reuse in relation to health risks should be determined.

Among the training courses given in 1984 were three organized by the International Training Centre for Water Resources Management and supported by UNEP. A four-week course on rural community water supply for 17 participants from English-speaking African countries was held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, in September-October. Two four-week courses on sanitation in urban areas were given, one for French-speaking and the other for English-speaking African countries, with 18 and 16 participants, respectively; the planning, operation and maintenance of water supply and sanitation schemes were discussed.

Several other meetings were held. An Inter-Parliamentary Conference on Environment, organized by UNEP (Nairobi, Kenya, 26 November-1 December), recommended that parliamentarians urge their Governments to use international rivers rationally and to maintain the quality of their waters. The importance of sound environment management principles for lake ecosystems was stressed at a conference at Otsu, Japan, in August; the conference adopted a number of recommendations concerning official activity in drainage basins, environmental impact assessment, international co-operation among countries sharing drainage basins, public awareness, popular organization, education and training and the international exchange of information. The second meeting of the UNEP Advisory Group on Water Resources was held at Geneva in June; the Group reviewed UNEP water activities, discussed a draft programme on environmentally sound management of inland waterways, and made recommendations for future UNEP water activities.

The UNEP Governing Council, on 28 May 1984,<sup>(13)</sup> noted the establishment of the Advisory Group in 1983<sup>(14)</sup> and the convening of a working group on large-scale water projects.

On 27 July 1984, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1984/73, concerning the strengthening of the secretariat of the ECA in the area of water resources (see Chapter VIII of this section).

Marine resources

CPC consideration. In its annual overview report for 1983/84,<sup>(9)</sup> ACC noted that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) had recommended in May 1983,<sup>(15)</sup> that United Nations organizations co-operate closely in the follow-up to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,<sup>(16)</sup> using existing ACC mechanisms, and that the follow-up had been influenced by several developments at the intergovernmental level (see p. 108).

The ACC report also dealt with assistance to developing countries in marine science, technology and ocean service infrastructures.

CPC considered at its twenty-fourth session (New York, 23 April-1 June 1984)<sup>(17)</sup> the follow-up to a cross-organizational programme analysis of United Nations activities in marine affairs, which it had taken up in 1983. It had before it a note by the Secretary-General transmitting a report by the Secretaries-General of the International Maritime Organization (IMO) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).<sup>(18)</sup> The report was submitted in response to a CPC request that IMO and UNCTAD increase their co-operation in maritime transport and report to CPC. Considering the report as preliminary, CPC requested them to take into account the need to eliminate duplication and overlap in their activities and to clarify further a proposed arrangement to meet the needs of developing countries for maritime transport. CPC also requested additional information on the proposed involvement of the regional commissions.

Marine mammals: Global Plan of Action

In response to a 1981 decision of the UNEP Governing Council,<sup>(19)</sup> a draft Global Plan of Action for the Conservation, Management and Utilization of Marine Mammals and a financial plan for its implementation were submitted to the May 1984 session of the Council by the UNEP Executive Director.<sup>(20)</sup> The Plan was prepared by UNEP in co-operation with FAO. Early in 1984, the Executive Director reported,<sup>(21)</sup> representatives of UNEP, FAO, the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources, the Scientific Committee on Antarctic Research of the International Council of Scientific Unions, and the International Whaling Commission met at Rome, Italy, revised the draft Plan and agreed on a final draft.

Under the Plan, marine mammals were taken to include those mammals which spent all or a large proportion of their time in the sea and obtained their food predominantly from it; a few species whose ancestors were marine but which had moved into fresh waters also were included. They belonged to four groups: cetaceans, pinnipeds, sirenians and others. Their populations had been severely depleted by human activities, mainly by hunting but also by fishing, destruction of their habitats and disturbance of breeding colonies; pollution had seriously affected some species. The most seriously depleted large whales were the right and bowhead whales and to a lesser extent the blue and humpback whales. The fin and sei whales, although less depleted, were well below their most productive levels in most areas.

There was greater uncertainty about the status of a number of small cetaceans, but those probably in the most dire circumstances were some of the freshwater forms whose habitats had been gravely impoverished by the construction of dams and water pollution. Many of the pinnipeds which had been seriously reduced by hunting had made good recoveries; those in the most danger currently were several species of monk seals, whose habitat requirements made them particularly susceptible to coastal modification and disturbance, and some fur seals and sea-lions. The sirenians, which lived in coastal and fresh waters in tropical areas, had been severely reduced throughout much of their range.

The Plan put forward a series of recommendations dealing with the identification of conservation and management objectives and actions to meet current critical situations, to increase current knowledge so as to provide a basis for further stages of the Plan, and to improve the overall machinery of conservation.

Nine projects in support of the Plan were listed at a total cost of $11,841,500 for 1984-1985. The projects were: review of harvesting operations on marine mammals which were not under international control, $40,000; determination of safe catch limits and scientific sampling in protected areas, $100,000; assistance to developing countries in the protection of threatened marine mammal populations and training of additional scientists, $1,150,000; international co-ordination and support for the Plan, $340,000; information systems and research to support conservation—large cetaceans, $3,083,500, small cetaceans, $2,687,000, and pinnipeds, sirenians and some otters, $4,246,000; legal aspects of conservation, $95,000; and increasing public awareness, $100,000.

On 28 May 1984,<sup>(22)</sup> the UNEP Governing Council endorsed the Plan as a timely and valuable framework for policy formulation by the international community. It noted the efforts of the Executive Director to prepare a financial plan and appealed to Governments and international organizations to make firm commitments. It requested the Executive Director to promote a broad-based response to the Plan, to circulate to potential donors fact sheets on the nine projects, and to investigate the possibility of adopting a regional approach to the funding of projects with a strong regional component.

Cartography

Projects, missions and fellowships

In 1984, cartography continued to receive a high priority from DTCD in many developing countries and 20 projects were carried out.<sup>(1)</sup>

Technical co-operation projects, including geodetic surveying, mapping, hydrography, photogrammetry and map production, were active in Bhutan, Burundi, the Cayman Islands, Ethiopia, Fiji, Jamaica, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Nepal, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Trinidad and Tobago, and Viet Nam.

Advisory and preparatory assistance missions to identify future projects or extend activities were made to Honduras, Iraq, Madagascar, Nepal, Qatar, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Arab Emirates and Viet Nam.

A total of 22 fellowships and 12 grants for study tours were awarded for studies in surveying, cartography, photogrammetry and hydrography to candidates from Bhutan, Burundi, the Cayman Islands, Ethiopia, Nepal, Trinidad and Tobago, and Viet Nam.

Conferences

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1981 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(2)</sup> submitted a report to the Council on the desirability and feasibility of holding United Nations interregional cartographic conferences.<sup>(3)</sup> He had consulted widely on the question and at the Fifth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Africa (Cairo, Egypt, 28 February–7 March 1983) and the Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific<sup>(4)</sup> had obtained the views of delegations. He concluded that regional conferences provided a unique forum for the senior administrative, technical and management personnel of the various Governments to discuss mutual problems, exchange of information, transfer of technology and exchange programmes. They were the only conferences at which the subject-matter covered the full range of surveying and mapping according to the United Nations definition of cartography; discussion was at the executive and management level, in line with social and economic aims rather than the scientific and scholarly aims of most international professional associations; and technical subjects were weighed by participants in terms of policy, programme and production implications.

The regional conferences should continue to be held, the Secretary-General said, but at four-year intervals (instead of the current three-year intervals), and their length should be shortened to 10 working days. The question of holding inter-regional conferences could be deferred in view of the 1983 Economic and Social Council decision<sup>(5)</sup> endorsing the convening of the Eleventh United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific in 1987 (see below). Moreover, the question should be further considered to avoid duplication by international organizations and to give particular attention to the needs of small countries. The provisional agenda for the 1987 meeting and other recommendations for future regional cartographic conferences were provided in an annex to the report.

Chapter X

Energy resources

In 1984, United Nations entities continued their work in trying to diminish world-wide dependence on depletable sources of energy, focusing special attention on the energy needs of developing countries. In an effort to accelerate progress in the development of their energy resources, the General Assembly, in resolution 39/176, urged improved international co-operation and consideration of new avenues for financing. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) remained a major force in mobilizing funds in support of developing countries' energy efforts through collaboration with the World Bank, the international donor community and various co-financing arrangements. As an instrument for channelling additional voluntary resources into high priority projects, the UNDP Energy Account had, at the end of 1984, $18 million allocated to projects. Transfer of technology and expertise to developing countries was a key element in energy-related activities of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the Secretariat's Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), while the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) focused on assisting developing countries in integrating national industrial and energy policies and improving industrial energy efficiency.

The 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy provided the basis for another sphere of United Nations efforts concerning such sources in 1984. Practical problems concerning its implementation were examined at the second session of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, which made recommendations to that end. In resolution 39/173, the Assembly called for early action on them, expressing concern over the slow pace of the Programme's implementation.

With regard to nuclear energy, most United Nations work continued to be carried out by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). After considering IAEA's annual report for 1983, the Assembly urged, in resolution 39/12, international co-operation in promoting the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, strengthening technical assistance to developing countries, and promoting nuclear safety. By resolution 39/74, the Assembly decided that the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy would be held at Geneva in November 1986.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: nuclear weapons. Peaceful uses of outer space. Regional economic and social activities: energy resources—Africa; Asia and the Pacific; Europe; Latin America. Statistics: energy statistics.

General aspects

Energy resources development

Report of the Secretary-General. In August 1984, the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly an expanded analysis of the development of energy resources in developing countries,<sup>(1)</sup> as requested by the Assembly in December 1983.<sup>(2)</sup> Designed to complete his June 1983 analysis,<sup>(3)</sup> the report focused on the process of real capital formation in the energy industries of the developing world, particularly what were termed domestic energy enterprises, that is, organizations such as national oil companies, private coal producers and public utilities with headquarters in developing countries, which had a considerable effect on energy resources development.

In assessing energy investment requirements of developing countries for the period 1982-2000, the report identified the major participants in energy resources development in each of the main energy sectors and estimated their future capital expenditures and investment needs. It concluded that in aggregate, the domestic energy enterprises of developing countries must invest up to $1,489 billion over the 19-year period, with 62 per cent of the projected investment going for hydrocarbon exploration and development.

The report also examined the supply of capital to the energy industries of developing countries. After reviewing three major financing sources of energy enterprises in the developing world—funds generated internally from operations, new loans, and new infusions of equity capital—it assessed prospects for energy capital supplies from conventional sources. The report concluded that with the exception oil-exporting and potential coal-exporting countries, the capacity of domestic energy enterprises in the developing countries to finance their own investment programmes from their own operations was very limited, implying an increasing recourse to governmental funds in competition with other development aims. Estimating the cumulative flow of funds to domestic energy enterprises, the report assumed some shift in the relative importance of individual sources of funds by the year 2000 and predicted that cash from operations and new equity would rise to represent 55 and 14 per cent of cumulative financing, respectively, and drop to 31 per cent with regard to new debt.

The report examined the balance between the demand for and supply of energy capital to developing countries and considered policy measures which might be appropriate under the circumstances. It was estimated that about $311 billion or 60 per cent of the overall gap between investment requirements and funds likely to be forthcoming was centred on the hydrocarbons sector. In primary electricity, where investment requirements and funds available came closest in relative terms, the gap was $124 billion or 40 per cent, while in oil and gas, coal and new and renewable sources of energy requirements exceeded funds by 50 per cent or more. The report suggested that, due to their considerable financing gaps in hydrocarbons, coal, primary electricity and new and renewable sources of energy, over the rest of the century energy-deficient countries would suffer one half of the overall energy investment requirements deficit among the developing countries as a whole. It was noted, however, that the expected $520 billion total deficit of domestic energy enterprises in the developing countries reflected only investment and its financing and thus significantly underestimated the overall imbalance between future uses and sources of funds in upstream energy in those countries.

To help redress that imbalance, the report proposed a number of policy measures at national and international levels. Promotion of energy conservation and direct foreign investments as well as a greater use of small-scale energy resources were described as effective ways of reducing the investment burden of the developing countries without sacrificing rapid economic growth. Those policies were to be complemented by various efforts to maximize the capital available to domestic energy enterprises, mainly through an increase of domestic energy prices to reflect opportunity costs of the energy provided.

The need for joint international action to augment purely national policies in reducing the deficit between energy investment demand and supply was also emphasized. Bilateral economic and technical co-operation among developing countries as well as through various regional programmes yielded promising results in exploring petroleum resources and developing hydro-electric potential of major river systems. The energy situation could also be improved through political and diplomatic means. External support, however, reflected a slow-down in world economic growth, especially with regard to bilateral assistance. Under these circumstances the international community needed, the report maintained, to consider additional institutional arrangements to supplement the flow of external capital to developing countries. Reviewing such proposals as the creation of an energy affiliate of the World Bank or exploration insurance and energy development funds, the report stressed that the main difficulty lay in achieving a political consensus on the need for further institutional innovation at the international level.

UNDP activities. Throughout 1984, UNDP worked closely together with the World Bank to provide developing countries, donors and investors with assessments of pressing energy issues and options for dealing with them. These activities were carried out within the framework of the joint UNDP/World Bank Energy Sector Assessments Programme, with the Energy Management Assistance Programme (ESMAP) serving as the primary vehicle for ensuring appropriate action on the Assessments Programme recommendations.<sup>(4)</sup> Most ESMAP operations were related to pre-feasibility or pre-investment studies, particularly with regard to energy needs of African countries. The projects concentrated on rehabilitation of power generation and transmission systems, conservation of energy and its efficient use in industry and transport, creation of peri-urban fuelwood plantations and assistance in developing improved woodstoves. At the end of 1984, there were 86 completed or ongoing pre-investment projects in 35 countries, with a potential for co-financing and pre-investment activities in another six, in association with eight donors.

In addition to the core resources available from UNDP, the international donor community and the World Bank, ESMAP received funds for pre-feasibility studies through collaboration with a number of individual donors under various co-financing arrangements, among them third-party cost-sharing arrangements with the UNDP inter-regional programme, a trust fund facility and various country programmes.

Another instrument for channelling additional voluntary resources by interested donors into high priority energy projects in developing countries, was the UNDP Energy Account. In his 1984 report on UNDP's main programme record,<sup>(5)</sup> the Administrator stated that as at 31 December, $18 million of the Account's $21.12 million total resources had been allocated to projects. $9.3 million of the allocated funds went to cover ESMAP and Energy Sector Assessment Programme activities. Among Energy Account-sponsored programmes, training continued to receive heightened emphasis. A seminar on energy assessment and planning for senior developing country officials was organized together with the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, while a Sub-Saharan Energy Seminar was a joint effort with the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank. Several major efforts were also launched in the area of new and renewable sources of energy (see p. 661).

In May,<sup>(6)</sup> the Committee on new and renewable sources of energy (see below, under "Non-conventional energy sources") recommended that the UNDP Governing Council should review the current interim arrangements for the Energy Account with a view to strengthening its activities.

In connection with that review, the UNDP Administrator proposed in a May report<sup>(7)</sup> to the UNDP Governing Council that he be authorized to transform the Energy Account into a stable funding arrangement and strengthen its activities concerning new and renewable sources of energy. He also proposed to increase participation of United Nations development system organizations in implementing programmes and projects and to expand the funding base by appealing for increased contributions to the Account.

Having considered the Administrator's report and the Committee's recommendations, the UNDP Governing Council, by a decision of 29 June,<sup>(8)</sup> authorized him to continue with the Energy Account, as established by the Council in 1980,<sup>(9)</sup> as long as it received adequate donor support, and called on Governments in a position to do so to increase their contributions. In addition, the Administrator was requested to harmonize Account-financed activities with regular Programme projects and to report more comprehensively to the Council's 1985 session on the results.

UNU activities. Energy-related activities of the United Nations University (UNU) were aimed at developing the concept and methodology of integrated energy systems and providing needed information for and training to third world planners and technicians.<sup>(10)</sup> Working within the framework of that programme area, the Integrated Rural Energy Systems Association expanded the number of its projects to 12 and held its first official meeting at Cairo, Egypt, in March 1984. A project group of four institutions in Argentina, Brazil, France and India which dealt with energy planning and management was expanded to include the University of Chile and received support from the International Development Research Centre of Canada. Following a 1983 agreement on joint energy research with the Centre,<sup>(11)</sup> the UNU Energy Research Group held its second meeting at Singapore in April 1984 and decided that the members should referee the 120 commissioned research papers and generate a synthesis document to reflect the Group's position.

The year 1984 also saw an expansion of the Abstracts of Selected Solar Energy Technology (ASSET) network to more than 1,100 members from 115 developing countries. Nine issues of Asset were published, while an agreement with Spain on a Spanish translation provided for a greater input from Spanish-language nations into the Asset data base. A project on biogas technology involved the use of videotape for disseminating information on biogas utilization among rural communities in Guyana.

As of December 1984, 18 fellows and 4 special fellows had completed training while 5 others were in training.<sup>(12)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1984, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 39/176 without vote.

Development of the energy resources of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, its resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade contained in the annex to its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Recalling its resolutions 37/251 of 21 December 1982 and 38/151 of 19 December 1983,

Considering that the principal impediments to the realization of the indigenous energy potential of the developing countries are, in addition to inadequate exploration, the scarcity of financial resources, insufficient exploration data, inadequate access to technology and a shortage of skills,

Reaffirming the principle of the full and permanent sovereignty of each State over its natural resources,

Reaffirming also that effective and urgent measures need to be taken by the international community to assist and support the efforts of the developing countries, in particular the energy-deficient among them, for developing their energy resources, in order to meet their needs through co-operation, assistance and investment in the field of conventional and of new and renewable sources of energy, consistent with their national plans and priorities, as called for in the International Development Strategy,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 38/151 and calls for the immediate and effective implementation of all its provisions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to improve further and update the contents of his report on the development of the energy resources of the developing countries and, in so doing, to consider all sources of energy, including new and renewable sources of energy, in a balanced and integrated manner and to submit a consolidated and comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

3. Urges, in this connection, early consideration of possible avenues that would increase energy financing, including, inter alia, the mechanisms being examined by the World Bank, such as an energy affiliate, and calls upon Member States to take appropriate measures to this end in the relevant forums;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the organs and organizations of the United Nations system, to promote international co-operation for the development of internal technological and other capabilities in developing countries in order to achieve the development of their energy resources;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to include in that report the results of symposia and similar undertakings in support of efforts by developing countries for the exploration and development of their energy resources.

General Assembly resolution 39/176

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.16) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.89), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.14); agenda item 80 (p). Financial implications: S-G, A/C.2/39/L.50, A/C.2/39/L.102, A/C.5/39/77. Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 31, 55, 56; 5th Committee 45; plenary 103.

In addition to drafting changes, the adopted text differed from that of the Group of 77, which was withdrawn. Added in the preamble was the Assembly's reaffirmation of the principle of each State's sovereignty over its natural resources. Paragraph 5 was also expanded to have the Secretary-General include in his report the results of undertakings in support of efforts by developing countries to explore their energy resources.

Technology transfer

UNCTAD activities. Following a December 1983 General Assembly request<sup>(2)</sup> and recommendations by the 1982 Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Transfer, Application and Development of Technology in the Energy Sector,<sup>(13)</sup> UNCTAD continued in 1984 to analyse issues related to strengthening the technological capacity of developing countries' energy resources. As part of that effort the UNCTAD secretariat presented six reports to the October session of the UNCTAD Committee on Transfer of Technology.

An August progress report on UNCTAD activities in that sphere over the previous year<sup>(14)</sup> reviewed the current application of energy policy in developing countries, assessed the results of country studies in such areas as transfer of petroleum exploration technology, power plant procurement and development of renewable energy technology, and indicated possible directions for UNCTAD's future work. The report found that an increasing number of developing countries were beginning to establish a comprehensive policy for their energy sector, while the studies on selected individual technology issues confirmed the importance of strengthening the domestic technological capability for the sector's development. The following areas were outlined for in-depth expert examination under UNCTAD auspices: enhancement of institutional mechanisms for exchange of experiences among developing countries; assessment of potential benefits for individual participants of a forum of public power plant utilities; cooperation between developed and developing countries in research and development and transfer of energy technology; and ways of building a skilled manpower base in developing countries.

Factual information, which served as the basis for the above conclusions, was supplied by several national-level case-studies undertaken by UNCTAD with financial support by Sweden. A report on Peru, for example, focused on developing the technological capability of the petroleum industry.<sup>(15)</sup> It concluded that in order to satisfy its growing petroleum requirements, the country must adapt its petroleum contracts without reducing the necessary technological development effort. Noting the importance of Peruvian experience for other developing countries, the report stressed the significance of conserving skilled human resources by ensuring proper higher education, technical training and remuneration. It also suggested that the contribution of national industry could be extended by developing preferential regional markets and that the investments which Peru planned for petroleum exploration over the coming 15 years would act as an incentive for the development of service industries.

A comparative analysis of oil exploration in Cameroon, Guinea-Bissau and the Ivory Coast<sup>(16)</sup> highlighted the methods used by those West African countries to strengthen their technological capacity in oil exploration and production and difficulties they had encountered. It emphasized the strategic role of contacts among the three and other developing countries with wider experience, especially in formulating a legal and fiscal framework, in drawing up a strategy for negotiating contracts, and for training personnel.

Another UNCTAD report studied power alcohol technology in Kenya and Zimbabwe.<sup>(17)</sup> Assessing its attractiveness for developing countries, the report concluded that power alcohol might reduce their strategic dependence on imported fossil fuels and have a positive effect on the balance of payments, as well as on increased rural development, employment opportunities and indigenous technical capacity. It also listed factors influencing the effectiveness of power alcohol application and recommended strategies to enhance its viability.

A report dealing with the experience of the power plant sector in the Republic of Korea<sup>(18)</sup> analysed the effect of government procurement policy on the technological development of the domestic energy industry and appraised implications of the Korean experience for other developing countries. Technology issues of small-scale hydropower projects in Nepal were the subject of another report,<sup>(19)</sup> which recommended specific means for strengthening overall development in that sphere. The report concluded that even a least developed country could acquire and develop small-scale hydropower technology and thus contribute to solving some of its energy problems.

DTCD activities. Introduction of new and high technology to developing countries was a key element of Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) energy-related technical co-operation projects in 1984.<sup>(20)</sup> The Department provided advanced equipment and expertise for a geophysical survey using reflection seismic techniques in China and supplied the most modern three dimensional seismic technology to India. It contributed to establishing a computer-based system for coal-operation management in Romania and assisted Yugoslavia in exploiting oil shale. DTCD was also developing microcomputer-based software for energy planning to be provided on request to the developing countries with which it had technical co-operation projects. Interregional advisory missions in petroleum legislation, formulation of legal codes for exploration and production of oil, and model agreements applicable to the petroleum industry were provided to 12 developing countries; six countries were assisted in coal resource development and one in energy planning.

Of 31 electricity supply development projects under way in 1984, many concentrated on computerization of utility management, the application of new technologies in thermal power plant fuel cycles and use of computerized training simulators. They included establishment of a centre in China to train thermal power plant operators and a training simulator in India to study management of high voltage interconnections between different areas and power systems. Introduction of computerized techniques for electricity supply planning and management was involved in projects carried out in Egypt and the United Arab Emirates. DTCD also assisted developing countries in assessing technical problems arising with the greater use of solid fuels and in establishing research and test facilities. As part of the latter effort, two projects to create national centres for testing power plant facilities were launched in Bhutan and Iran. DTCD's conventional energy effort included 15 projects in planning and economics, and 24 in petroleum and coal.

UNIDO action. Issues related to the transfer of technology in the energy industry of developing countries were also considered by the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO in August. The Conference, which considered the transfer of technology in conjunction with other aspects of energy and industrialization (see below), urged the further promotion of the transfer of energy-related industrial technologies to developing countries on equitable terms.<sup>(21)</sup> It also recommended that UNIDO and other relevant United Nations entities should support local manufacture of energy equipment in developing countries and facilitate the transfer of the necessary technology, particularly through the activities of the UNIDO Industrial and Technological Information Bank (see Chapter VI of this section).

Energy resources in industry

The principal objectives of developing countries in the field of energy and industrialization were identified in August at the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO (see p. 558), which had a separate agenda item devoted to energy. The objective included development of integrated national industrial and energy policies, strengthening of the energy resource base, enhancement of capital goods manufacture, maintenance of energy-related capital equipment, and improvement of industrial energy efficiency. Describing the organization's 1984 activities in pursuance of those goals, the UNIDO Executive Director reported completion of approximately 90 projects with an estimated expenditure of $8.4 million, representing about 9 per cent of the total amount spent on technical assistance.<sup>(22)</sup>

During the year, UNIDO expanded its activities to foster improved industrial energy efficiency, holding interregional seminars, workshops and training programmes on energy conservation techniques and energy savings in the cement, glass, and sugar beet industries and in petroleum refineries. Sri Lanka was assisted in launching an industrial energy conservation programme and establishing an energy management unit. An energy conservation project was initiated in the energy-intensive sectors of European developing countries. In Colombia, a project was started to provide assistance in manufacturing energy-related capital goods. Special attention was also devoted to new and renewable sources of energy (see below).

After considering various questions related to energy and industrialization, particularly with regard to development and application of energy resources and manufacture of equipment, the Fourth General Conference, on 19 August,<sup>(21)</sup> invited developing countries to promote co-operation among themselves at different levels and to develop capital goods manufacture and services. It also invited all countries, especially developed ones, to provide adequate resources to developing countries to help them utilize their indigenous energy resources. The Conference recommended that UNIDO, together with other United Nations entities, assist developing countries in such areas as: integration of development, industrial and energy policies; formulation of industrial energy projects; implementation of a technical assistance programme in regard to hydroelectric power plants; rational use of energy in industry; harmonization of electric power supplies and interconnections in the various subregions; and industrial application and development of appropriate energy options in the industrial sector.

Non-conventional energy sources

Implementation of the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action

Throughout 1984, various United Nations bodies continued their efforts to implement the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, endorsed by the General Assembly in 1981.<sup>(1)</sup>

As requested by the Assembly in December 1983,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(3)</sup> to the April/May 1984 session of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy (see below) describing the contribution of consultative meetings to the mobilization of additional resources and the finalization of projects aimed at implementing the Nairobi Programme of Action. The Secretary-General reported that the United Nations system had undertaken extensive preparatory work at the national, regional and global levels. A number of national round-table conferences and consultative group meetings, organized with the assistance of UNDP and the World Bank, considered energy projects related to new and renewable sources of energy and had resulted in pledges of support.

Proposals on further ways of mobilizing financial resources for new and renewable sources of energy were presented by the Secretary-General in a March report to the Committee,<sup>(4)</sup> as also requested by the Assembly.<sup>(2)</sup> Focusing mainly on financial resources for technical co-operation, the report stressed the crucial role of supporting actions and pre-investment activities for the development of new and renewable resources, generally financed as regular programmes or through the resources of UNDP and its associated funds. The way to increase those financial flows, in the Secretary-General's view, was through strengthening the UNDP Energy Account as an active mechanism with a potential for expanding its activities. A review of the interim arrangements could result in turning that account into an energy fund with the responsibility for promoting the mobilization of additional voluntary resources. Such a strengthening and expansion, the Secretary-General noted, could benefit a wider variety of new and renewable sources, improve geographical coverage and diversify the types of projects undertaken in the executing agencies.

Annexed to the report was a list of projects approved for financing from the Energy Account, and updates of the Secretary-General's 1982 reports<sup>(5)</sup> on the role of United Nations entities and the regional, subregional and other financial institutions in new and renewable sources of energy. In 1982-1983, the World Bank was reported to have lent $1.56 billion for those activities, planning another $1.54 billion for the period ending 1984-1985, the bulk of which would go to hydropower development. The World Bank's volume of lending, although the largest for any single agency, was still relatively small and was unlikely to exceed an annual average of $4 billion over the 1983-1987 period due to resource constraints. Also included were summaries of ongoing projects financed by UNDP and its associated funds.

In relation to regional banks and other official financial institutions, the report noted an increase in their assistance programmes to developing countries, which totalled $1.6 billion in annual financial commitments and was estimated to surpass $2 billion in 1985. While funding for hydropower projects represented more than two thirds of the total financing, there was a perceptible move by some institutions to other new and renewable energy sources which accounted for about 8 per cent of the total energy-related activities financed by regional institutions.

As requested by the Assembly in December 1982,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General also submitted to the Committee an analysis<sup>(7)</sup> of information on resource commitments and flows and activities undertaken in implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action. From 1980 to 1984 the United Nations system committed resources for 750 activities and projects amounting to $2,782 million, the dominant part of which (93.2 per cent) was related to financial co-operation projects. There was a substantial increase in resource commitments for activities under the regular programme for the 1982-1983 biennium; however, resource constraints made it difficult to maintain the momentum in the 1984-1985 biennium. Fluctuations in resource commitments for UNDP-funded technical co-operation projects brought the 1982 high of $48 million down to $14 million in 1983 and the decrease was expected to continue in 1984-1985. Commitments for financial co-operation projects funded from World Bank resources also registered considerable fluctuations but showed no commensurate increase.

As regards the regional distribution of resource commitments for both technical and financial co-operation projects, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean accounted for 47.4 and 35.1 per cent respectively, and developing areas in Europe and Africa for 9.5 and 7.9 per cent respectively of the total, while Western Asia received under 0.1 per cent. The regional distribution for technical co-operation projects showed a slightly different pattern, with Asia and the Pacific accounting for more than half of the total and Africa for one third. The balance was committed for Latin America and the Caribbean and for Europe; a minor share went to Western Asia.

Broken down by source of energy, commitments allocated for large-scale hydropower development totalled 74.4 per cent, fuelwood received 12.7 per cent and geothermal development 5.0 per cent of the total. Most of the remaining commitments were allocated for planning, energy conservation, biomass and multi-source projects. Large-scale hydropower development was the focus of reported bilateral and intergovernmental commitments as well as mobilized domestic resources for the implementation of World Bank-funded projects. Reported resource commitments for the development and utilization of new and renewable sources of energy amounted to an annual average of approximately $2,231 million during 1982 and 1983. The Secretary-General concluded that even if the reported commitments reached about half the actual total commitments for supporting actions and pre-investment in developing countries, it would still be well below the estimated requirement of some $1,000 million.

ACC action. Established by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) in 1983 to increase the United Nations responsiveness to the Nairobi Programme of Action and to improve co-ordination within the system,<sup>(8)</sup> the Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy held its third session in New York on 18 and 19 April and 2 and 4 May 1984.<sup>(9)</sup> The Group assessed progress in implementing the Nairobi Programme, discussed joint planning activities and considered contributions by United Nations bodies to the second session of the Committee on new and renewable sources of energy which was taking place at the same time (see below).

In its report, the Group noted that more complete information should be provided to the focal point in the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA) on the synopsis of projects and their expected output, as well as the need for an improvement of the verification process. Regarding the consultative meetings, it examined the status and time schedules of their preparation and, while noting appreciable progress at all levels, called for the speediest convening of the regional and global meetings.

The Group also considered avenues for carrying out its co-ordinating responsibilities and agreed on ways to avoid overlapping with the DIESA focal point of information. It was decided that the Inter-Agency Group, as an ACC task force, should be ready to assist the Secretary-General in assessing progress in the implementation of relevant projects as well as in updating existing and preparing new proposals. After considering the joint planning of energy activities financed through regular budgets, the Group identified UNESCO and DTCD as the lead agencies in the two areas of: energy information systems; and research and training for energy assessment, planning and utilization, respectively. The Group agreed that if it were entrusted with joint planning, it would be able to undertake that responsibility in co-operation with the identified lead agencies.

In October,<sup>(10)</sup> the ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) expressed satisfaction with the Group's work, agreeing that it could serve as a forum for prior consultations on proposed programme budgets for the 1986-1987 biennium in all areas covered by its mandate.

Activities of the Committee on new and renewable sources of energy. The Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, established by the General Assembly in December 1982<sup>(6)</sup> to promote implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action, held its second session in New York from 23 April to 4 May 1984. In its report,<sup>(11)</sup> the Committee reiterated the need for early implementation of the Programme of Action and characterized the development of new and renewable sources of energy as a long-term endeavour, implying wide multilateral action. It reaffirmed the importance of the Programme's areas for priority action, recognizing at the same time their need to reflect the specific circumstances of each country or region. While the primary responsibility for promoting the development of new and renewable energy sources rested with individual countries, implementing the Programme of Action required continuous commitment of the world community and a balance between national efforts and international support. The Committee stressed that countries with economic and managerial potential had a particular responsibility to support efforts for an effective energy transition.

Having examined the Secretary-General's reports (see above), the Committee characterized them as useful but limited in scope and lacking balanced information on financing and on operational experience of ongoing or completed projects. The Committee was concerned about the delay in preparing consultative meetings, particularly at the regional level, and about the generally slow pace of Programme implementation, especially in such priority areas as mobilizing financial resources. The Committee also welcomed the establishment and operation of the focal point for information, reaffirmed the validity of the mandates already given to United Nations entities and reiterated that action-oriented plans and programmes should be part of integrated efforts at the national, subregional, regional and global levels.

Emphasizing the medium- and long-term goals in the implementation of the Programme of Action, the Committee agreed on a number of recommendations and policy guidelines. It requested the UNDP Governing Council to review the current interim arrangements for the Energy Account (see above) and called for improved co-operation among United Nations bodies involved in the development of new and renewable energy sources. In accordance with the main thrusts of the proposed guidelines, the Secretary-General was requested to submit to the Committee in 1985 the following: an analytical report on monitoring the implementation of the Programme, with a special emphasis on co-ordination activities, the performance of the Inter-Agency Group, utilization of experts and consultants from developing countries, and the results of ad hoc technical panels and expert meetings; a progress report on consultative meetings and the performance of the consultative mechanism in general, including an update of his report on further ways of mobilizing financial resources, as well as information on the UNDP Governing Council's review of the Energy Account current interim arrangements; and a progress report on implementing projects and programmes as outlined at the Committee's April 1983 session,<sup>(8)</sup> including an update of existing and formulation of new proposals.

The Committee called on the international community to take urgent action to make available additional financial resources for the needs of developing countries. Reiterating its call for the convening of consultative meetings, the Committee encouraged developing countries to launch them at the national level. It stressed that at regional and subregional levels responsibility rested with the regional commissions and, globally, with the Director General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. It urged Governments and United Nations entities to provide all relevant data to the focal point for information of the Secretariat Unit on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a brief guide for improving its co-operation with national focal points. The Committee also invited the international community to use existing institutional arrangements in the Secretariat more efficiently, called on United Nations entities to support economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, and drew particular attention to the needs of the least developed countries. In addition, it recommended that the United Nations system consider improving the statistical coverage of new and renewable sources of energy.

UNDP activities. Some project results concerning new and renewable sources were described by the Administrator in his 1984 annual report.<sup>(12)</sup> The UNDP Energy Office, charged with supervising the optimal use of Energy Account resources, assisted the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) in holding the Third International Conference on Heavy Crude and Tar Sands as well as a conference on the development of shallow oil and gas resources. Together with the World Bank and the European Economic Community it participated in supporting the improvement of biomass gasifiers through demonstration activities in numerous developing countries. Stepping up its support for country-level operations, the Office contributed $1 million to geothermal resource identification in Djibouti, which catalysed a total financial package from multiple sources valued at $16.6 million. In Morocco, a feasibility study on utilizing and transporting natural gas from the Essaouira field for industrial applications had elicited donor interest, while in the Dominican Republic joint preparations with the Government and the OPEC Fund for rehabilitating a mini-hydro station were finalized. A mini-hydro proposal for Fiji was also being developed.

UNIDO action. Projects related to new and renewable sources of energy constituted a sizeable part of UNIDO activities throughout 1984, with a special emphasis placed on small hydropower, biomass and solar energy. In his 1984 annual report,<sup>(13)</sup> the UNIDO Executive Director noted that a six-volume manual on the design of Pelton, cross-flow and axial turbines, regulators and control systems, prepared in co-operation with the Latin American Energy Organization (OLADE), was particularly useful to developing countries wishing to manufacture equipment for small hydropower stations. Another project involved assessing techno-economic possibilities for establishing a small hydroelectric plant in Mali. With regard to biomass, new initiatives included: an interregional project for the use of fermentation ethanol as fuel and chemical feedstock; a bio-fuels demonstration programme in Ethiopia; improvements in industrial charcoal production in Somalia; a pilot plant for the production of alcohol from cellulosic raw material in the Philippines; assistance in the manufacture of efficient wood-burning stoves in Samoa; the industrial use of cane-sugar by-products in Colombia; and—in co-operation with the French Government—a consultative meeting on energy production from agro-industrial by-products and wastes. Solar energy efforts ranged from construction of a prototype solar timber drying kiln in Guyana and assistance in establishing a salt industry in the Solomon Islands, to a fact-finding mission in Maldives for the manufacture and application of solar collectors and a research and development programme on renewable energy in Madagascar.

Working to implement the Nairobi Programme of Action, UNIDO prepared, in co-operation with the Special Co-ordinator for New and Renewable Sources of Energy, specific proposals for a global consultative meeting to be held in 1985. It also submitted proposals for the regional consultative meeting in Asia and the Pacific (see Chapter VIII of this section) and participated in the work of the Inter-Agency Group on new and renewable sources (see above).

In August, the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO recommended<sup>(14)</sup> that the organization should assist developing countries in obtaining energy from new and renewable sources and promote co-operation between institutions engaged in their research and development.

DTCD activities. During 1984, DTCD aimed many of its technical co-operation activities towards the development of new and renewable sources of energy to assist developing countries in reducing their dependence on energy imports.<sup>(15)</sup> Over the year geothermal energy projects were carried out in China, Djibouti, Ethiopia, India, Kenya, the Philippines, Romania, Thailand and Yugoslavia. Projects in wind, solar, and bio-energy, as well as energy conservation and rural energy supplies, were implemented in Argentina, Cape Verde, China, Egypt, India, Maldives, Mauritius, Mongolia, Pakistan, Romania, Seychelles and Yugoslavia. As part of a programme for developing small hydropower resources, 33 of a targeted 48 developing countries were surveyed by the end of the year with funding from Japan, Norway and Sweden. The Department also provided advisory services to Argentina, Haiti, Indonesia, Iran, Maldives, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Nigeria, Romania, Saint Lucia, Thailand and Yugoslavia. Cost analysis reports, prepared by DTCD for photovoltaic systems in developing countries and solar, wind and diesel-pumping at village sites in Nigeria, Somalia and Zimbabwe, were circulated to UNDP offices.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1984/170.

Development and utilization of new and renewable sources of energy

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1984, the Council took note of the report of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy on its second session, and of the recommendations contained therein and decided to transmit the report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session for consideration.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/170

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/134) without vote, 9 July (meeting 3); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 17.

Nuclear energy

United Nations technical work regarding nuclear energy continued to be dealt with mainly by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in 1984. (For information on IAEA activities during the year, see PART II, Chapter I.)

IAEA report

The IAEA report for 1983 and a later addendum were transmitted to the 1984 General Assembly session by the Secretary-General in September.<sup>(1)</sup>

Updating the report in a statement before the Assembly on 12 November, the IAEA Director General reiterated that despite the persistent shrinking of energy demand in industrialized countries due to the economic recession, the past year had witnessed a continued rise in electricity demands and a steady growth world-wide in the production of nuclear power. As the nuclear industry strove to become more efficient and economical, there were increased efforts to develop nuclear reactors for heat production or co-generation of heat and electricity and growing interest among manufacturers in small and medium-sized plants, especially useful for developing countries. The development of new generations of power reactors, such as breeders, and research on nuclear fusion were described by the Director General as areas of great potential importance, with IAEA providing an international forum for exchange of experience and joint projects.

With regard to safety, he said that the Agency's review covering 1983 detected no health or environment-endangering radiation accidents at any of the more than 300 nuclear power plants in operation. IAEA also examined on request the operational safety of plants in several countries and launched, jointly with the Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), an international system designed to monitor all accidents and incidents with safety implications. Continuing to serve as a centre for reaching an international consensus on nuclear waste management standards, the Agency undertook a review of the dumping of low-level radioactive wastes into the deep ocean.

Although the majority of developing countries would not be introducing nuclear power in the foreseeable future, the Director General pointed to the IAEA role in assisting them in energy planning and infrastructure development, as well as in applying nuclear techniques for food production and health improvement. The use of radioisotopes and nuclear techniques in food and agriculture, particularly in developing countries, was given special prominence in 1984 as IAEA and FAO marked the twentieth anniversary of joint work to promote those applications. IAEA technical co-operation programmes in nuclear techniques had been steadily expanding, with the total volume of activities oriented towards developing countries reaching in excess of $60 million in 1984.

With regard to the transfer of nuclear technologies and hardware producing or making use of fissionable material, the Director General described it as a complex problem requiring a mutually acceptable accommodation of the interests of the suppliers and importing States, since the former were concerned about the potential misuse of nuclear fuel for military purposes and the latter depended on a reliable supply of fuel and technology. While seeking to reconcile these interests in its Committee on Assurances of Supply, the Agency was also acquiring extensive experience of systematic on-site verification which might be of use in connection with future arms control agreements. The Director General also reported progress in IAEA verification of peaceful nuclear activities in the nuclear-weapon States, including a negotiated agreement with the USSR following its voluntary offer to accept IAEA's safeguards on some of its peaceful nuclear facilities.

Expressing regret over lack of progress in nuclear disarmament, he hoped to see further efforts in applying nuclear technology for peaceful purposes and cited substantial gains in the international transfer of technology, despite a decrease in funds available for technical assistance and co-operation with developing countries.

With regard to the consequences of Israel's 1981 attack on an Iraqi nuclear research reactor<sup>(2)</sup> (see p. 280) and South Africa's nuclear potential (see p. 39), the Director General said that IAEA had again urged both countries to accept comprehensive safeguards. He noted, however, that while the safeguards aspects of the two issues fell within IAEA statutory obligations, a perennial consideration of the broader political ramifications placed a strain on the Agency.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 November 1984, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/12 without vote.

Preparations for the Conference on nuclear energy

Preparatory Committee activities. The Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, established by the General Assembly in 1980,<sup>(3)</sup> held its fifth session at Geneva from 25 June to 6 July 1984 during which it held 19 formal and a number of informal meetings, and reported the results to the Assembly.<sup>(4)</sup>

After several years of unsuccessful attempts to resolve basic matters pertaining to the Conference, the Committee agreed on a provisional agenda and approved draft provisional rules of procedure. While not entirely satisfactory to all delegations, the agenda represented a compromise, specifically in relation to an item dealing with the principles of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, drafted with an understanding that relevant decisions in the Conference should be adopted by consensus. The draft provisional rules of procedure were approved on the understanding that questions relating to elections of officers and records of meetings would be considered at the Committee's October 1985 session. Following a proposal that such records should not be provided for the Conference, the Committee agreed to consider that issue in 1985 and requested the Secretary-General to provide a statement of administrative and financial implications of the proposal.

The Committee also considered a report by the Secretary-General on the preparations for the Conference and documentation<sup>(5)</sup> which reviewed contributions to the preparations by Member States, IAEA, the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations. Noting lack of concrete information in material received from contributors, the Secretary-General reported that a broad list of relevant issues had been sent to all Governments on 19 March 1984 and that a comprehensive evaluation of the forthcoming data would be prepared upon receipt of responses. Concerning the input of international institutions, the OECD Nuclear Energy Agency offered to prepare a paper on a suitable topic. Interest in the Conference was expressed, among others, by the International Centre for Theoretical Physics, the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis, and the World Energy Conference. Regional preparations involved two interrelated sets of activities: studies on regional experiences, problems and priorities in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and follow-up regional meetings by expert groups. The Secretary-General also briefly reviewed the status of preparations with regard to invitations, documents on decisions and conclusions, and public information activities highlighting the Conference's goals and purposes.

The Committee emphasized the importance of adequate preparations and asked the Secretary-General to continue his efforts as outlined in the report, keeping in mind the Committee's suggestions. It also agreed to begin formal inter-sessional intergovernmental work with its 1985 session and recommended that the Assembly request the Committee's Chairman and the Conference Secretary-General to continue individual and group consultations to expedite preparations. The Committee decided that contributions from specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies should conform to Assembly directives on the control of documentation and be specifically related to the Conference. It was agreed that the Committee should receive input materials before their distribution for the Conference. The Committee recommended that the Assembly should provide resources for a meeting of a 15-member advisory group of internationally eminent experts drawn on equitable geographical distribution, to be held some six months prior to the Conference. Another recommendation concerned potential participants.

The Committee further decided that if no invitations were forthcoming from Member States, the Conference should be held at Geneva for three weeks during September-November 1986.

Chapter XI

Food

Faced with a persisting dichotomy, when hundreds of millions of people in the world went hungry and malnourished just as ample food was available at a global level, various United Nations entities stepped up their efforts in 1984 to tackle the gamut of food problems through emergency operations, development aid and policy planning assistance.

In a year that marked the tenth anniversary of the World Food Conference, the World Food Council (WFC) reviewed progress in the implementation of the Conference objectives and identified major tasks to be addressed by the international community and individual countries to ensure food security and eradicate hunger and malnutrition. WFC's recommendations were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1984/54) and welcomed by the General Assembly (resolution 39/166), which called on Governments and international organizations to give particular attention to the measures proposed by WFC. The role of fisheries in ensuring national self-reliance in food production was high on the agenda of the World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development, which mapped out a strategy and associated programmes of action, endorsed subsequently by the Assembly (resolution 39/225).

For the World Food Programme (WFP), 1984 brought record levels of activity in providing food aid to developing countries. As compared with the previous year, WFP food commitments increased by 48 per cent to reach 2.1 million metric tons. By 31 December 1984, a total of $999.8 million had been pledged to the regular WFP budget for 1985-1986. That represented 74 per cent of the $1.35 billion WFP target for the period, the need for achieving which was stressed by the Assembly in resolution 39/166. The governing body of WFP, the 30-member Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, held its seventeenth and eighteenth sessions, approving projects at a total cost of more than $770 million.

Food problems

Following a 1982 decision of WFC,<sup>(1)</sup> an independent seven-member panel of experts sponsored by Australia, Canada and the Netherlands prepared a report<sup>(2)</sup> on the world food and hunger problem over the 1974-1984 period for submission to the tenth ministerial session of WFC (see below). Assessing progress in meeting food objectives since the 1974 World Food Conference<sup>(3)</sup> and the priority tasks which remained to be achieved, the report examined in particular the impact of the current food balance on low-income, food-deficit countries. It noted that many of the dire forecasts in 1974 had not been borne out. Aggregate food and agricultural production was at record levels and the threat of global food scarcity seemed remote, although the possibility of major production shortfalls was still evident and chronic malnutrition proved to be a much more intractable problem than previously thought.

The report specifically focused on the key paradox of the current food situation—alongside a growing output, an estimated 400 million to 600 million people, especially in the low-income countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America, went without adequate food. It sought to make a distinction between the world hunger problem and the world food problem, noting that while increased food production was important to deal with hunger, ultimate success was impossible until the undernourished had access to meaningful employment and income-generating opportunities, which could come about mainly through greater output and productivity of the food and agriculture sectors. Therefore, in the panel's view, the problem of hunger had to be tackled at the national level where most of the economic and financial decisions influencing the overall food situation were made.

The report identified the global food problem as the inability to reconcile the increasing commercialization of domestic and international agricultural trade with divergent national agricultural policies and expanding food surpluses. To deal with it, the panel called on the industrially advanced countries to begin shaping their national agricultural policies by understanding their implications for international prices and the low-income countries, the nexus where the global food and hunger problems came together.

Another assessment effort, initiated by WFC in response to a 1982 decision,<sup>(1)</sup> was a progress report by the Executive Director covering the past decade, with focus on the role of multilateral agencies in eradicating hunger.<sup>(4)</sup> Describing multilateral resources as a salient factor in implementing the 1974 World Food Conference resolutions, the report concluded that they had been applied in conformity with the Conference's objectives and the evolving needs of the developing countries. The main emphasis was placed on low-income countries, the small farmer and rural poor, with considerable resources assigned to technical assistance for strengthening individual and institutional capacity and to application of improved technologies. At the same time, however, the report noted faltering support in the 1980s for the work of the multilateral agencies, demonstrated by dwindling resources available multilaterally for food and agriculture. In the Executive Director's view, sustained progress in attaining the Conference's goals could be achieved only if multilateral institutions were to play a central role in concerting national and international efforts. Despite certain co-ordination problems (see below), the report affirmed the importance of continued support for multilateral agencies, emphasizing that strategic decisions to that end by the world community were unavoidable.

Specific problems related to co-ordination among multilateral agencies were reviewed by the Executive Director in another report<sup>(5)</sup> prepared for the tenth ministerial session of WFC. The review was limited to examining two related areas of inter-agency co-ordination: the delineation of institutional policies and resource allocation, and the co-ordination of project and programme implementation. The report concluded that co-operation among the multilateral agencies was more pervasive than had been generally recognized. However, to overcome jurisdictional disputes and further improve co-ordination, Governments and agencies should work together towards eradicating hunger and malnutrition. The importance of an expanded policy framework raised what the Executive Director saw as the central co-ordination issue: how to assure convergence of action at the country level in order to implement a coherent set of policies and programmes that promoted food and nutrition objectives.

The most difficult problems were found in the least developed countries, especially in Africa. Inability of their Governments to keep up with management and co-ordination requirements, while receiving aid from a multiplicity of agencies, highlighted the importance of a more unified multi-agency approach under United Nations auspices and underscored a key role for United Nations resident co-ordinators, who continued to be responsible for co-ordinating United Nations operational activities for development in individual countries (see Chapter II of this section).

A mutual political and diplomatic accord among aid agencies and host Governments on the direction of development efforts, rather than creation of additional co-ordination mechanisms, was seen by the Executive Director as a prerequisite for raising the effectiveness of co-ordination in solving the food problem. In Africa, the food sector could be a unifying theme for all development activities, with a comprehensive "Accord on food" serving to galvanize the necessary political and financial support, providing a focal point for a broader consensus on meeting immediate needs and achieving national food self-determination, and becoming the driving force for sustained development. A better integration of aid in support of national food strategies could improve operational co-ordination of external assistance.

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in July 1983,<sup>(6)</sup> a global assessment of resource flows through the United Nations system to the food and agriculture sector<sup>(7)</sup> was prepared for consideration by WFC at its tenth session. Focusing on development assistance as well as expenditures for policy, research and related activities, the study covered the 1974-1982 period and was based on roughly 14,000 data entries collected from 22 organizations. It found a 13.7 per cent annual increase, in real terms, of resource flows to the food and agriculture sector through the United Nations system, with the World Bank supplying more than half of all external resources. Other major sources included WFP, trust funds, the United Nations Development Programme and, towards the latter part of the period, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD). Among United Nations agencies responsible for programme execution in developing countries, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) remained the major one. Among regions, Asia and the Pacific received 18.5 per cent annual increases in disbursements, expanding its share of all external flows from 29.4 to 43 per cent. By comparison, flows to Africa and to the least developed countries rose annually at 12.1 per cent.

The study found the most rapid growth to be in the subsectors of agricultural credit, forestry and rural development—each in excess of 21 per cent annually. Resource flows to land and water had an annual increase of 16.7 per cent to comprise more than 25 per cent of total resource flows by 1982, whereas flows to nutrition, livestock, crops and agricultural support services declined as a percentage of total flows. The report noted that since 1974 the international community had accelerated its resource commitments and disbursements in response to the consensus achieved at the World Food Conference. None the less, the magnitude of resource flows, bilateral as well as multilateral, had remained short of widely acknowledged resource needs. In addition, the rate of growth of commitments for food and agriculture was declining, with a consequential effect on disbursements in the near future.

WFC activities. Marking the tenth anniversary of the World Food Conference, WFC met for its tenth ministerial session at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 11 to 15 June 1984.<sup>(8)</sup> The 36-member Council—the world's highest-level body dealing with food problems—reviewed the progress made during the past decade, noting that the global food situation had become more complex and was characterized by large imbalances and the increasing risks of food insecurity in many low-income developing countries despite an improved supply of food world-wide. While conceding that the Conference's goal of eliminating hunger and malnutrition within a decade had proved unattainable, WFC reaffirmed the feasibility of reaching that objective in the foreseeable future and stressed the need for much greater emphasis on food and development problems. It described sub-Saharan Africa as the centre of the food problem, and noted that Asia, although progressing towards self-reliance, still had most of the world's chronically undernourished, while Latin America's advances in the commercial food and agricultural sector had been made largely at the expense of the subsistence farm sector. Citing the persisting instability of agricultural markets, WFC recommended that all countries avoid self-centred policies and promote real dialogue for improving international commodity and financial markets.

To meet the World Food Conference objectives, WFC concluded that the following major tasks had to be addressed: increased food production and improved access to food supplies by the developing countries; an accelerated reduction of chronic hunger and malnutrition; resolution of the African food and development crisis; further negotiation of measures to aid developing countries in the event of global food shortages; reduction of trade protectionism and international market instability; resolution of the serious financial problems of developing countries; and sustained development assistance, with a strengthened role for multilateral agencies and improved international assistance co-ordination. The Council also reaffirmed that peace and disarmament were prerequisites to enhanced food security and that food was a universal human right.

Special emphasis was placed on national food policies and agro-food systems. WFC stressed the urgent need for more autonomous economic growth strategies and national food strategies, which encouraged improved co-ordination of food and agricultural policies with technical operations and investments. It recognized that an integrated food strategy approach would be of even greater importance in the future, when feeding large urban populations and providing employment for the vastly increased rural and urban populations would become the two priority objectives at the national level. With regard to the problems of chronic hunger and malnutrition, WFC resolved that it must put greater emphasis on removing political, economic and social barriers to more equitable access to food by all people. It also called for increased support for small-holders, underlining the importance of beneficial pricing policies, and of co-operatives and agricultural institutions blending modern management practices with traditional cultural patterns.

Concerning the situation in Africa, WFC noted that the region faced a food crisis of the gravest proportions and called on donors and multilateral agencies to step up emergency supplies to the highly affected countries. It also stressed the need for additional financial resources for logistic support, called for greater integration of short-term relief with medium-term rehabilitation measures and longer-term social and economic objectives, identified the major priority areas for concentrating internal and external resources during the next decade, and stressed the need for regional and subregional co-operation. WFC requested further steps to promote co-operation between Africa and other regions and supported efforts of the Secretary-General to increase international awareness of the economic and social crisis in Africa and to promote additional international support.

The Council attached great importance to the fact that, since 1974, multilateral agencies had implemented many of the specific proposals called for by the World Food Conference to deal with emergencies and food security. The means for meeting emergency situations had been much improved, it said. Among them, the Global Information and Early Warning System of FAO could identify production shortfalls and potential food crises, and the International Emergency Food Reserve, administered by WFP, proved to be effective in mobilizing emergency assistance. There had been a better conceptualization of the elements that comprised food security and their application: FAO now related many of its ongoing programme activities to an integrated food-security concept and was attracting extrabudgetary resources to help make national food systems operational; WFC had placed world food security within the context of national food strategies, as well as of international policies; food aid, as carried out by WFP, now operated as a development resource and as a transfer of income, usually to the most needy people in the poorest countries; and the cereal facility of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), though used only on limited occasions since its establishment in mid-1981, provided balance-of-payments relief to food-deficit countries experiencing temporary increases in the cost of their cereal imports.

With regard to the role of multilateral agencies, WFC noted that, although a larger proportion of total food aid was moving through their channels, needs were larger than a decade ago and food aid levels were way below the growing cereal-import requirements of many low-income developing countries. The Council also stressed the role of multilateral agencies in rendering technical and financial support, particularly in promoting measures to increase income and employment, as well as other poverty-related measures for reaching chronically hungry groups. Expressing deep concern that the world-wide recession had set back prospects of increased food security for developing countries, WFC agreed on the value of more open trade and reaffirmed its position against the use of food as an instrument of political pressure. Another matter of concern was an apparent erosion of the 1974 international understanding for increased financial assistance in support of the food and agricultural sectors of developing countries, although the impetus of the World Food Conference had resulted in a doubling of external resources, in real terms, during the 1970s. Referring to the global assessment of resource flows,<sup>(7)</sup> the Council emphasized the need to reverse the tide of declining aid; it supported the Executive Director's recommendation that donor countries devote more of their aid flows (at least $5 billion over five years, starting in 1986) to promoting the implementation of food strategies of low-income developing countries.

Improvements in international co-operation and changes in national decision-making structures were seen by WFC as an integral part of the commitment to eliminate hunger and malnutrition. It stressed that the real problem of co-ordination lay not only in the food agencies themselves, but also in the different objectives and policy orientations of non-food agencies, particularly financial institutions. Additionally, there was a need for greater participation of non-governmental organizations in a better co-ordinated international co-operative effort.

In conclusion, WFC affirmed that hunger was largely a man-made phenomenon resulting from human error and neglect; asserted that its most important task was to maintain confidence that hunger could be eradicated in our time and that, to achieve that goal, it was WFC's responsibility to monitor and advocate innovative approaches; expressed commitment to act as a catalyst for concerted action; commended to the Economic and Social Council that a special session of the General Assembly on Africa be convened; and invited the international community to renew its commitment to eradicate hunger and malnutrition by no later than the end of the century.

The WFC conclusions and recommendations were reiterated by its Executive Director in his statement before the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 17 October 1984.

3. Welcomes the ninth annual report of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes;

4. Urges the international community, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the World Food Conference, to rededicate itself to the objective of that Conference and intensify concerted efforts for the fulfilment of its commitment to eliminate hunger and malnutrition as soon as possible, and definitely by the end of the present century, and in this regard, calls upon Governments and international organizations to give particular attention to the measures agreed to by the World Food Council at its tenth ministerial session as the major tasks for achieving the objectives of that Conference;

5. Reaffirms that the maintenance of peace and security and the strengthening of international co-operation in food and agriculture are important for improved economic conditions and enhanced food security;

6. Reaffirms that the right to food is a universal human right which should be guaranteed to all people, and, in that context, believes in the general principle that food should not be used as an instrument of political pressure;

7. Reaffirms that urgent action should be taken to increase food production, which is one of the most important elements in meeting the food needs of the developing countries, and that, in this regard, sustained efforts at the national, regional and international levels should be pursued and that the national food strategies, plans and programmes of developing countries should play a central role in the process of establishing priorities, in co-ordinating national and international funding and in the application of technology, in order to promote food production and increase the national self-reliance of the developing countries;

8. Calls upon the international community to support the efforts of the developing countries facing constraints in the development of their food and agricultural production to enable them to achieve self-reliance;

12. Emphasizes the need to reverse any declining trends in aid commitments to food and agriculture and calls upon the international community, particularly the developed countries, to increase the flow of resources to adequate levels, through all channels, in support of programmes and policies for increasing food and agricultural production and raising nutritional standards in the developing countries, particularly in Africa and the least developed countries, keeping in view the proposal made by the Executive Director of the World Food Council at its tenth session for increases of at least $5 billion in external resources over five years, starting in 1986, in roughly equal proportions for both capital and programme assistance, to be channelled through existing agencies and programmes;

13. Stresses the need for the successful completion of the first replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and urges all countries concerned, bearing in mind the particular contribution of the developed countries, to reach agreement on a priority basis for the second replenishment, in order to enable the Fund to continue its effective contribution at an adequate level;

18. Considers that improvement of the conditions of farmer groups particularly affected by the small size of holdings or other constraints is critical;

19. Emphasizes the role of women as part of the rural family, calls for more policy attention to the role of women in relation to food systems, and stresses the need to involve women in the formulation, implementation and follow-up of national food strategies, plans and projects;

20. Urges the international community to respond immediately, adequately and in a concerted manner to the initiative of the Secretary-General and the appeal of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in favour of the African countries threatened by severe food shortages by continuing and increasing emergency food and technical assistance to those countries, as well as by augmenting all forms of assistance towards rehabilitation of their food and agricultural sectors;

21. Notes that the proliferation of import restrictions and increasing export subsidization are seen to have contributed to international market instability and to growing resource allocation distortions in developed and developing countries, that all countries should demonstrate the requisite political will by refraining from creating tariff obstacles to agricultural imports, especially those from developing countries, and that exporting countries should endeavour to limit export subsidies and analogous practices which might hinder trade, especially that of developing countries;

22. Stresses, inter alia, that in order to attain an overall solution of food and agricultural problems, efforts should be made to resolve the serious financial problems in general, and liquidity problems in particular, confronting the developing countries, which are caused to a large degree by the impact of the increases in interest rates;

23. Reaffirms the commitment to sustained and increased development assistance in the food sector, with a strengthened role for multilateral co-operation and improved international assistance co-ordination;

24. Stresses the need for strengthening subregional, regional and interregional co-operation for the promotion of food security and the development of agriculture in developing countries and, in this context, calls upon the relevant entities of the United Nations system to accord priority support to economic and technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture;

25. Welcomes the comprehensive and systematic review of the progress in agrarian reform and rural development carried out by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action as adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development and looks forward to a similar review in four years.

General Assembly resolution 39/166

17 December 1984 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/790/Add.6) without vote, 6 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.118), based on informal consultations on draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/39/L.10); agenda item 80 (f). Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 28, 31, 54, 56; plenary 103.

Apart from drafting changes, the adopted text differed from the original draft submitted by the Group of 77 in a number of ways. The fourth preambular paragraph and operative paragraphs 5, 9 and 23 were added, while a provision dealing with the FAO World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development (see below) was deleted. Paragraphs 4 and 10 were expanded to draw attention, respectively, to the measures agreed at WFC's June session, and the adequacy, stability and security of food supplies, production and markets. A number of paragraphs were reworded considerably, changing emphasis. Thus, instead of urging developed countries to fulfil their pledges under the first replenishment of IFAD and announce their contributions for the second, as proposed in the draft, the adopted text, in paragraph 13, stressed the need for successful completion of the first replenishment and urged all countries concerned, bearing in mind the particular contribution of the developed ones, to agree on the second replenishment. Paragraph 17 expressed concern over the limited use of IMF's financing facility, whereas the draft only requested a review to liberalize its use. While focusing on the same general subject, paragraph 21 did not express, as did the original, the urgent need for developed countries to refrain from imposing various import barriers and using export subsidies.

The USSR did not press to a vote an oral amendment to paragraph 5 by which the Assembly would have reaffirmed that, apart from peace and security, disarmament was also important for improved economic conditions and enhanced food security.

Food problems, particularly with regard to Africa, figured prominently in two other 1984 Assembly resolutions. In its Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, adopted by resolution 39/29 (see Chapter III of this section), the Assembly recognized early attainment of national and collective self-reliance in food production by African countries as the first urgent task, noting that national food strategies and integrated rural development plans played an important role, especially in achieving food security. It also recognized the important role of women in food production and stressed the necessity for providing incentives and credit, improving storage and transport, reducing food losses, balancing out agricultural export commodities and food production, diversifying agricultural production and utilizing irrigation potential. In resolution 39/165 on the critical situation of food and agriculture in Africa (see Chapter VIII of this section), the Assembly welcomed WFC's conclusions and recommendations, particularly those relating to the African region. It noted with appreciation the encouraging response by the international community to appeals for alleviating the critical food supply situation there, and called for continued international support of African efforts to increase food production and for additional financial and technical assistance. African countries were encouraged to strengthen their efforts, especially in defining and implementing national food strategies.

Fisheries management and development

Utilization of world fishery resources with a view to enhancing food security of developing countries and their national self-reliance in food production became an important area of activity for various United Nations entities in 1984, culminating in the World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development (see below). Problems related to the application of remote sensing for assessing and harvesting aquatic food supplies were addressed at the ninth annual joint United Nations/FAO international training course, held for 20 participants from 19 developing countries at Rome, Italy, in September.<sup>(9)</sup>

World Conference on Fisheries

The role of fisheries in solving food problems was high on the agenda of the FAO World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development, which met at Rome from 27 June to 6 July (see PART II, Chapter III). The Conference endorsed a Strategy for Fisheries Management and Development, whose text formed a part of the Conference's report, transmitted to the General Assembly in October,<sup>(10)</sup> as requested by the Economic and Social Council (see below). The Strategy covered such key areas as the contribution of fisheries to national economic, social and nutritional goals; improvement of national self-reliance in fisheries; rational management and optimum use of fish resources; the special role and needs of small-scale fisheries; international trade in fish and fish products; investment in fisheries; and economic and technical co-operation and international collaboration in fisheries. The Conference also approved five programmes of action, which covered the following interlinked elements: planning, management and development of fisheries; small-scale fisheries development; aquaculture development; international trade in fish and fish products; and the role of fisheries in alleviating undernutrition.

On 17 July, the Secretary-General of the Conference highlighted its results in a statement before the First Committee of the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted decision 1984/164 without vote.

World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1984, the Council:

(a) Noted with satisfaction the statement made on 17 July 1984 before the First (Economic) Committee by the Secretary-General of the World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development, convened by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at Rome from 27 June to 6 July 1984;

(b) Decided to invite the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to submit the report of the World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session for consideration.

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/164

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/143) without vote, 20 July (meeting 15); 5-nation draft (E/1984/C.1/L.13); agenda item 11.

Sponsors: Australia, Canada, Mexico, Netherlands, Pakistan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 39/225 without vote.

World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the recent developments in the law of the sea have created new opportunities and responsibilities for States and that national and international objectives and policies for fisheries management and development are being re-examined and adjusted,

Recognizing also the relevant provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,

Bearing in mind the importance of the need to promote improvements in the production and distribution of all food and agricultural products, including those from fisheries, and to raise levels of nutrition and standards of living,

Noting with appreciation the convening of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development at Rome from 27 June to 6 July 1984, with a view to promoting the optimum utilization of world fishery resources from the economic, social and nutritional points of view, increasing the contribution of fisheries to national self-reliance in food production and towards food security, enhancing the capacity of developing countries in the management and development of fisheries and fostering international co-operation in fisheries between developed and developing countries and among developing countries themselves,

1. Endorses the Strategy for Fisheries Management and Development and the associated programmes of action adopted by the World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development;

2. Invites States and international organizations concerned to take into account the principles and guidelines contained in the Strategy when planning the management and development of fisheries;

3. Urges all bilateral and multilateral donor agencies and financing institutions to provide the support required for the effective implementation of the programmes of action;

4. Invites the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in collaboration with the organs, organizations and bodies concerned within the United Nations system, to continue to play its important role in assisting States in their efforts towards the improved management and development of fishery resources.

General Assembly resolution 39/225

Food aid

World Food Programme

For a second consecutive year, 1984 marked record levels of activity for WFP,<sup>(1)</sup> a joint undertaking of the United Nations and FAO charged with providing food aid to developing countries to support development projects and meet emergency needs. Commitments for both development projects and emergency operations rose substantially as compared with 1983, as did the total amount of food shipped.

Responding to the critical need for food aid in sub-Saharan Africa, WFP increased its emergency assistance, allocating over two thirds of its emergency operations to that region and establishing an Africa Task Force Secretariat as a focal point for all its activities related to the crisis. WFP also worked to strengthen co-ordination between donors and recipient countries, and took steps to lessen, with financial help from the World Bank, the logistical problems impeding the flow of emergency food aid to and within developing countries.

It reviewed various issues related to the function and cost of food aid as a development resource, arranged to strengthen its project cycle and continued work on design and implementation of built-in monitoring and evaluation systems to improve project management and performance assessment.

Highlighting WFP's 1984 activities in his address to the General Assembly's Second Committee, the WFP Executive Director stressed that food aid constituted some 10 per cent of total global development assistance. In order for it to be effective for development, food aid must be co-ordinated with technical and financial assistance, which prompted WFP's efforts to improve co-operation with the World Bank and seek closer ties with the African Development Bank and IFAD. The Executive Director saw WFP's role in helping co-ordinate all food aid as its greatest contribution in major emergencies, but emphasized that this was a highly specialized and complex task requiring further strengthening of WFP capabilities.

Food aid policies and programmes

CFA activities. At its seventeenth session, held at Rome from 28 May to 9 June 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA), the WFP governing body, conducted its ninth annual review of food aid policies and programmes, focusing mainly on the use of food aid in sub-Saharan Africa in support of an employment-led, equitable growth strategy for rural areas. The Committee generally agreed that the problem of hunger must be tackled at the national level, where decisions should be made on a whole range of agricultural, economic, financial and social matters, and unanimously upheld the view that food aid should be integrated into the national development plans of recipient countries, to provide an incentive for increased production and to support humanitarian objectives. It urged all donors to stimulate food production in, and trade among, developing countries in order to make food aid more effective. The Committee noted that despite significant advances in implementing the recommendations of the 1974 World Food Conference, the minimum annual food aid target of 10 million tons of grain had yet to be attained and forward planning of food aid on a multi-annual basis had been undertaken only on a limited scale. Total food aid had not increased and the ability of low-income countries to purchase their food imports on commercial terms had declined.

The Committee approved 34 projects, among them 17 project expansions, at a total cost of $557.5 million and 13 budget increases for approved projects; the combined value of projects and budget increases amounted to over $600 million or an equivalent of 1.2 million metric tons of food.

The Committee held its eighteenth session at Rome from 29 October to 8 November 1984.<sup>(3)</sup> It considered a report of the United Nations Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on WFP personnel problems and an interim report by WFP and FAO reviewing the basis of costing of services provided by FAO. As a result of the JIU report, the Secretary-General and the FAO Director-General decided to establish a task force to review problems between WFP and FAO. The Committee urged the task force to address all matters regarding the interpretation of rights and responsibilities. It agreed that the basic relationship with the United Nations and FAO should be preserved and improved, and that there was no question of WFP becoming a separate agency.

Continuing its review of selected national experiences, the Committee supported efforts to use food aid as a broad-based development resource to augment Lesotho's drive to increase production, employment and incomes in rural areas. In view of the serious food crisis in many African countries, the Committee allocated an additional $10 million to the 1984 emergency budget from WFP's regular resources. It also adopted a resolution calling on donors to provide more emergency assistance to the African nations facing starvation and malnutrition, and urging the affected countries to make the utmost effort in distributing food with the co-ordinating assistance of in-country representatives of international organizations.

The Committee approved 22 projects at a total cost of $216.1 million and 16 budget increases for approved projects. The combined value amounted to approximately $240 million, equivalent to about 520,000 tons of food. In addition, 11 projects had been approved by the Executive Director from 1 January to 30 June, at a total cost to WFP of $16.7 million.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1984, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1984/165 without vote.

Ninth annual report of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1984, the Council welcomed the ninth annual report of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes.<sup>(4)</sup>

Economic and Social Council decision 1984/165

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1984/143) without vote, 20 July (meeting 15); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 11.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The ninth annual report of CFA was also welcomed by the General Assembly, in resolution 39/166. In resolution 39/165, the Assembly welcomed the unanimous adoption by CFA on 8 November of a resolution on the food crisis in Africa, and called for its full and prompt implementation (see Chapter VIII of this section).

Development assistance

In 1984, the level of WFP commitments for development projects rose by 33 per cent over the previous year, from $696 million to a record $925 million, while the amount of food shipped grew by 48 per cent, from 1.4 million tons to an unprecedented 2.1 million tons.<sup>(1)</sup> The programme increase was also reflected in the number of projects approved, which rose from 67 (valued at $577 million) in 1983 to 82 (valued at $808 million) in 1984—a 22 per cent increase. Of the 57 developing countries which received WFP development commitments in 1984, 38 belonged to the low-income or least developed categories. Commitments to low-income, food-deficit countries amounted to $706 million, with an increasing share going to the least developed countries—$348 million, up from $250 million in 1983.

With a prevailing emphasis throughout the year on assistance to sub-Saharan Africa, WFP commitments to that region increased from $168 million to $325 million. In Latin America and the Caribbean, both the volume of assistance and number of projects increased, while commitments in Asia and the Pacific reached an all-time record of $339 million, despite a 5 per cent drop in relative terms from the 42 per cent share in 1983.

Emergency operations

In 1984, WFP committed $233.1 million to provide 740,100 tons of food to 63 emergency operations in 38 countries, as well as $595,700 as a cash subsidy for three operations approved in 1983. This was an almost 12 per cent increase over 1983 in dollar terms and a 13 per cent rise in food volume. Of the 17.6 million people receiving WFP emergency food aid in 1984, the principal beneficiaries (57 per cent) were victims of drought. Of WFP's emergency assistance, 54 per cent (in dollar terms) went for 43 operations in sub-Saharan Africa, 35 per cent for 8 operations in Asia, 9 per cent for 8 operations in Latin America and 2 per cent for 4 operations in North Africa and the Near East.

As in previous years, WFP was involved throughout 1984 in a number of large-scale emergency operations. It continued co-ordinating the procurement and delivery of food aid to Kampuchea and to relief operations along the Thai/Kampuchean border. By the end of 1984, the total cumulative cost of this aid stood at about $367 million, with 237,000 tons of food provided from the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR) and 580,000 tons bilaterally. The necessary funds had been mobilized through pledging conferences held in New York in 1984, with pledges of $35 million, and other special appeals. WFP committed 222,500 tons of food for the 2 million Afghan refugees in Pakistan, bringing its total commitment to them since 1979 to over 1 million tons, mainly drawn from IEFR. In sub-Saharan Africa, WFP emergency assistance was implemented in all of the 10 countries identified as most seriously affected by drought and other calamities, as well as nine other affected countries with total commitments amounting to more than 350,000 tons. Additional quantities were committed for countries struck by poor harvests in 1984. WFP's contribution towards the cost of internal transport, storage and handling of its emergency food supplies in seven African countries amounted to $2.8 million; and eight logistical missions were dispatched to assist in identifying measures to improve and accelerate the delivery of food aid. On behalf of bilateral donors, WFP also purchased, shipped or monitored more than 350,000 tons of food to 24 African countries. Eight emergency operations were approved for six Latin American countries, mainly for refugees and displaced persons—victims of the persistent civil strife in the region.

Two evaluations of selected WFP emergency operations were carried out during the year. The evaluations drew attention to the remaining problems of refugee enumeration and food aid planning and scheduling; as a longer-term strategy, the phasing out of free food distribution in favour of food and cash for work was suggested.

WFP resources

Pledges and contributions

By the end of 1984, announced contributions to WFP from 21 donors amounted to 655,449 tons of food at a value of $173 million. Of the total 1984 contributions, 87 per cent were channelled multilaterally through WFP. During the year, the Programme received $150.1 million in cash, of which $104 million came from regular contributions; the balance came from IEFR ($20.1 million), Food Aid Convention (FAC) contributions ($3.1 million), government contributions towards local operating costs ($1 million) and other miscellaneous income. By the end of the year, almost the entire quantity of commodities at the disposal of WFP, including both regular pledges and FAC contributions of all donors, had been called forward and, for the most part, shipped. FAC grains contributed outside the regular programme or IEFR amounted to 38,000 tons, valued at approximately $8.5 million. For the third time since the inception of IEFR, its target of 500,000 tons of cereals was reached in 1984.

By 31 December 1984, pledges by 69 countries totalled $999.8 million or 74 per cent of the $1.35 billion regular pledges target for 1985-1986. Approximately 49 per cent of that goal was reached at the WFP Pledging Conference held in New York on 6 March 1984,<sup>(5)</sup> when 52 countries pledged $658.3 million worth of contributions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 39/166, the General Assembly stressed the need to ensure achievement of the agreed target for WFP regular resources of $1.35 billion for 1985-1986 (see above, under "Food problems").
