Operative since January 1982,⁽¹⁾ the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD) continued during 1983 to help developing countries strengthen their scientific and technological capacities as envisaged by the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action. In June 1983,⁽²⁾ the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the DIEC Director-General reported to the Intergovernmental Committee that a detailed review of all projects approved by UNFSSTD had been carried out in January to assess the potential for the exchange of results and for follow-up. UNFSSTD also undertook a series of consultations with United Nations agencies and other organizations to clarify legal, financial and operational aspects of increased levels of core and non-core operations.

In a further report on UNFSSTD activities in 1983⁽³⁾ the Administrator noted that despite severe general resource constraints, the System made progress in developing nine projects to be financed through trust fund arrangements. In February, the first project on this basis, financed by Norway and valued at $1.3 million, was signed to provide for the establishment of the Beijing Institute for Software Research to strengthen the capacity for computer software development and training in China. The other projects, all of them to be financed by Italy, dealt with the application of technologies for rural areas in Indonesia, the strengthening of national capacity for mineral exploration and development in Costa Rica, the utilization of agro-animal wastes for production of energy and chemical products in Malaysia, improvement of technology planning and promotion in Mali, and assessment and planning of rural energy technologies in Mauritania and the Niger. Two other projects in the Niger were concerned with establishing a national centre of agricultural machinery and applied farming research in the country's four major ecological zones. UNFSSTD also entered into negotiations on further projects on food technology and technology management training.

Science and technology policy and planning activities had emerged as a key area within the UNFSSTD programme. In Costa Rica, for example, UNFSSTD assisted the Government in designing a national science and technology system, while in Botswana, Sierra Leone and Zimbabwe it focused on a comprehensive assessment of the state of science and technology. Among a variety of research and development projects, an effort in Malawi centered on developing high-yield, pest-resistant tea clones and in Pakistan on a combined research/production programme in alternative energy. With regard to scientific and technological information, UNFSSTD was instrumental in Kenya in setting up an information and documentation service with a national co-ordinating focal point and helped launch the Andean Technological Information System in the Andean subregion, and an interregional Technological Information Pilot System.

To draw the widest possible range of expertise, resources and linkages, UNFSSTD concluded agreement;; with a number of non-governmental and private sector organizations, among them the American Chemical Society and Stanford University's Engineering Department, as well as governmental bodies. With a view to promoting international co-operation, UNFSSTD co-sponsored an International Conference on Science and Technology policy in China, a meeting on International Co-operation for African Technological Development in Senegal and an International Conference on Carbon Fibre Applications in Brazil. It also supported a series of 24 sessions of lectures and discussions in the Arab region attended by leading national and international experts on technology choice, development, acquisition and transfer.

During 1983, the UNFSSTD portfolio of bankable projects increased to 88, with 47 of them fully appraised and internally cleared and the remaining 41 prepared for immediate implementation upon receipt of funds.

Responding to Governments' growing concern about the effectiveness of development assistance projects, UNFSSTD developed, from February to June 1983, evaluation procedures for examining a project's output, design, impact and its administrative and financial soundness. Evaluation operations covered four areas: analysis of existing project concepts, systems and practices; formulation of evaluation procedures; co-ordination with the activities of the UNDP Central Evaluation Office (see Chapter II of this section); and individual project evaluation, used to test the established procedures on four projects, one each in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East.

Reporting to the UNDP Governing Council on 1983 UNFSSTD operations,⁽⁴⁾ the UNDP Administrator noted that its working methods and procedure: ensured UNFSSTD's cost-efficiency, responsiveness and self-reliance, and provided for its effective co-operation with UNDP, proper evaluation and dissemination of project results and generation of sizable follow-up investment from public and private sectors. At the end of 1983, the total value of commitments by UNFSSTD was $44.2 million.

Intergovernmental Committee: action. As decided by the General Assembly in December 1982,⁽⁵⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee held a special session at New York from 25 April to 4 May 1983⁽⁶⁾ to assess the resource situation of UNFSSTD and the outlook for the following years. Following consultations, the Chairman submitted a statement of understanding according to which the Committee agreed that the target for core resources for a period of three years starting in 1983 should be at least $300 million based on a progressive build-up of resources and a joint pattern of contributions by developed and developing countries. The minimum requirement in contributions was set at $50 million for the period from July 1983 to June 1984. The statement also called for immediate consultations to assess the fulfilment of these conditions and work out the voting pattern of the UNFSSD Executive Board. Assuming agreement on those issues, interested Governments would state their intended contributions during the Committee's June session.

Taking up the institutional and financial issues in June, the Committee reached agreement on the pattern of voting in the Executive Board and incorporated it in a 17 June decision⁽⁷⁾ on the establishment of the long-term financial and institutional arrangements for UNFSSD. Under the same decision, the Committee endorsed the $300 million target for core resources and the $50 million minimum requirement in contributions set at its special session. It requested the Secretary-General to consult with Governments on mobilizing resources and, if appropriate, convene after an informal meeting in October, the Committee's fifth session in early November 1983 to enable Governments to state their intended participation in and pledges to UNFSSD. Subsequently, the Committee would adopt the financing plan and elect the Executive Board members.

With regard to the pattern of voting, the Committee stated that all Executive Board decisions would be taken on the basis of consensus. If consensus could not be reached, a two-thirds majority with a quorum of a least half the members from developed and developing countries would be needed for cases not concerned with individual national projects. For approval of those projects, a two-thirds majority was required; in other cases, the interested State might raise the matter in the Committee. The Executive Board would adopt conciliation procedures and call attention to unresolved issues when reporting to the Committee.

On 20 June,⁽⁸⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee requested the General Assembly and the Committee on Conferences to approve the pledging meetings and make arrangements for their convening as envisaged.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/157 without vote.

Long-term financial and institutional arrangements for the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and General Assembly resolution 34/218 of 19 December 1979,

Also recalling its resolutions 36/183 of 17 December 1981 and 37/244 of 21 December 1982,

Eking into account the report of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development on its fifth session, in particular decision 4(V) of 20 June 1983 on the establishment of the long-term financial and institutional arrangements for the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development,

Noting with appreciation the support provided over the past four years by Governments to the Interim Fund and to the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development,

Concerned that it has not yet been possible to bring into full effect the provisions of resolution 37/244,

Noting that the informal open-ended meeting, called for by the Intergovernmental Committee in its decision 4(V), indicates that a significant number of countries, developed and developing, are considering making financial contributions to the Financing System in an effort to attain the targets established by the General Assembly,

1. Decides that:

(a) The Secretary-General should be authorized to convene, in consultation with Governments, a pledging conference for the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development prior to the sixth session of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development to enable interested Governments to announce their pledges for the first year and, if possible, to provide an indication of the amount they may contribute in the two following years;

(b) Thereafter, the Intergovernmental Committee will, at its sixth session, proceed to adopt decisions as required, including, if appropriate, the financing plan for the Financing System, and to elect the members of the Executive Board of the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development, as decided by the General Assembly in resolution 37/244;

(c) In the meantime, the existing operating procedures of the present Financing System shall continue:

2. Decide also that the period up to the convening of the pledging conference should be fully utilized for all necessary consultations to bring about the successful outcome of the pledging conference and the establishment of the long-term financial and institutional arrangements for the Financing System;

3. Invites those Governments that are prepared to do so to indicate to the Secretary-General the amount of their financial contributions to the Financing System at the earliest possible time;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to make all efforts to mobilize the support of Governments for the establishment of the long-term arrangements for the Financing System and appeals to all Governments to co-operate with the Secretary-General in this regard.

Institutional arrangements

National focal points

Further efforts were made in 1983 to encourage the establishment of national focal points—originally set up for the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development—and to integrate them into the national system for science and technology, as called for by the operational plan for the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action.

As requested in June 1982 by the Intergovernmental Committee,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General, by a note of 31 March 1983,⁽²⁾ submitted a list of national focal points, which had been reactivated following a 1980 Intergovernmental Committee decision. National focal points had been designated by 22 countries for the first time, the Secretary-General reported.

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, by a resolution of 17 June 1983,⁽³⁾ took note with appreciation of the results of the November 1982 Brazzaville, Congo, meeting on the strengthening of science and technology capacities of African countries,⁽¹⁾ and again recommended organizing such meetings in other regions to promote application of science and technology at the national and regional levels and enhance the interaction of national focal points with the Centre for science and technology. The Committee requested the Centre's Executive Director to submit reports on such meetings and expand, through national focal points, his co-operation with Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. It also requested the Secretary-General to submit proposals aimed at strengthening national and regional activities to enable the General Assembly to take these proposals into account when considering the programme budget for 1984-1985.

As requested by the Committee, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in December 1983 revised estimates for the Centre's additional activities recommended by the Committee.⁽⁴⁾ Funds required for those activities were estimated at $87,400.

In an oral report before the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report.⁽⁴⁾ ACABQ noted that the report stated that every endeavour would be made to carry out the additional activities within the 1984-1985 programme budget; to the extent that that was not possible, the related programmatic adjustments and subsequent redeployment of resources would be reported in the context of the budget and programme performance reports on the 1984-1985 biennium. If the resources available were insufficient, the Secretary-General would bring the matter before ACABQ. As emphasized by the Secretary-General, the activities already approved by the Fifth Committee would not be curtailed for those additional activities.

On 16 December, the Fifth Committee decided without objection to recommend that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report and concur with the procedures outlined for obtaining resources for the additional activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted section XV of resolution 38/234 without vote.

Intergovernmental Committee on science and technology

Review of effectiveness

The Intergovernmental Committee, in a resolution of 20 June 1983,⁽⁵⁾ decided to review its organization and methods of work in order to strengthen its role and effectiveness and requested the DIEC Director-General, with the assistance of the Executive Director of the Centre for science and technology, to submit relevant proposals in 1984. The Committee also decided that documentation should be made available six weeks prior to its sessions and agreed to consider in 1984 the possibility of electing at the end of each session the officers for the subsequent session.

NGO participation

By a resolution of 17 June 1983,⁽⁶⁾ transmitted from its 1982 session,⁽⁷⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee adopted a procedure for the participation of NGOs in its activities, according to which NGOs, in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and other organizations which had participated in the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, might be invited to participate as observers. NGOs, whose names had been submitted by the Secretary-General, might be equally invited if the Committee so approved. Before submitting names of NGOs for approval, the Secretary-General would apply the following criteria: the organization concerned should be a recognized non-profit national or international NGO; as part of its programme, it should be concerned with issues related to the work of the Committee; and its activities related to the Committee's work should be of a nature that made them transferable for use in other countries.

By a decision of the same date,⁽⁸⁾ the Committee took note of the report of a March 1983 preliminary consultation meeting at Rome, Italy, on the contribution of NGOs in implementing the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action and encouraged their continued involvement through their co-operation with the Committee.

Work programme

The General Assembly, in decision 38/429, recommended that the Intergovernmental Committee consider adopting, on an experimental basis, a biennial cycle of meetings, in conformity with the biennial programme of work to be established for the Second Committee (see Chapter XXIV of this section).

Report of the Committee

The reports of the Intergovernmental Committee on its special and regular 1983 sessions (New York, 25 April-4 May and 6-20 June)⁽⁹⁾ were submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its July session. The Council allocated them to its First (Economic) Committee for consideration and, by decision 1983/167, decided to transmit the reports to the General Assembly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Council adopted decision 1983/167 without vote.

Science and technology for development

At its 39th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1983, the Council took note of the reports of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development on its special session and on its fifth session, and decided to transmit those reports to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session for consideration.

Advisory Committee on science and technology

The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development held its third session in New York from 1 to 8 February 1983 and submitted a report to the Intergovernmental Committee.⁽¹⁰⁾ The Committee reviewed and endorsed the reports of the December 1982 Los Baños and January 1983 Kuwait panels of specialists, and outlined background documentation for two other panels scheduled to be held in April and October 1983 in Tunis and Peru (see above). It considered the details of organizing in 1983 a panel of experts on science and technology and women (see Chapter XIX of this section) and proposed convening two panels in 1984, in Europe and the African region, on the following subjects: measurement of the impact of science and technology on national development, and a global perspective of science and technology for development and an analysis of obstacles in implementing the Vienna Programme. The Committee also recommended activities for the proposed advance technology alert system (ATAS) (see above) and considered guidelines for improving its collaboration with the international scientific community and the United Nations System for Science and Technology for Development.

By a decision of 17 June,⁽¹¹⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee took note of the Advisory Committee's report and invited Governments, the United Nations, and organizations to consider its recommendations seriously. It invited Government; to begin formulating and implementing pioneer projects. It recommended that the Advisory Committee be authorized by the General Assembly to establish a maximum of four panels of specialists in 1984 and 1985. Noting the choice of topics for the two 1984 panels, the Intergovernmental Committee proposed that the examination of impact measurement indices should include levels of attainment of scientific and technological development and take into account United Nations initiatives. It requested that a progress report on objective-oriented indices and on the mid-decade review of implementation of the Vienna Programme be submitted to it in 1984 and a final report in 1985. Topics for the 1985 panels were to be submitted to the Intergovernmental Committee at its 1984 session.

Centre for science and technology

During 1983, the United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development continued to assist the DIEC Director-General in implementing the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action, particularly in providing substantive support to the Intergovernmental Committee and its subsidiary bodies and promoting and co-ordinating United Nations science and technology activities at the secretariat level.

With regard to policy analysis and research, the Centre's major efforts were aimed at initiating an ATAS identification system, analysing levels of attainment of scientific and technological development, and organizing panels of specialists and follow-up action (see above). The Centre also played a major co-ordinating role in national and regional activities, closely co-operating with the Committee members through a network of national focal points (see above) and promoting systematic interaction with the scientific community and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. It continued to publish its newsletter UPDATE, which reported on progress in implementing the Vienna Programme.

The Centre maintained consultations with various United Nations entities, especially through the Task Force of Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (see below). It also promoted mobilization of resources to implement the Vienna Programme and co-operated with the United Nations Financing System in the appraisal of projects.

The Intergovernmental Committee, in a decision of 17 June 1983,⁽¹²⁾ took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Centre's activities for the period April 1982-March 1983.⁽¹³⁾ It requested the Centre to take into account the following factors, when planning its activities and establishing a multi-annual programme of work: the Centre should work on broad intersectoral disciplines of priority; the ACC Task Force should give high priority to identifying scientific and technological infrastructures and facilitating co-operation between national and regional units or centres; assessments of improvements to national, regional or wider infrastructures in intersectoral disciplines, as well as a list of these disciplines and relevant reports, should be submitted to the Intergovernmental Committee.

Information on the Centre's activities from April 1983 was provided by the Secretary-General in a March 1984 report.⁽¹⁴⁾

Proposed regional advisory bodies

After examining the Advisory Committee's February 1982 proposals regarding regional advisory bodies,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee, by a decision of 17 June 1983,⁽¹⁶⁾ invited regional commissions to consider the proposed development and strengthening of existing advisory bodies and the establishment, if necessary, of new bodies to assist the commissions in implementing regional strategies within the framework of the Vienna Programme and to facilitate interaction with the Advisory Committee's regional members.

Co-ordination in the system

The Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, set up by ACC as a mechanism of inter-agency co-operation in implementing tasks assigned to the Intergovernmental Committee, held its fourth session at Geneva from 26 to 28 January 1983.⁽¹⁷⁾

In considering the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action, the Task Force focused on the recommendations of four working groups established in 1982 to formulate specific proposals for joint activities.⁽¹⁸⁾ Having endorsed the proposed activities, it hoped that United Nations entities would support them from existing as well as extrabudgetary resources, and that support would also come from the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD). The Task Force stressed the importance of informing Member States of the proposed activities and recommended that an ad hoc meeting of the working groups' chairmen and UNFSSTD be called by the Centre to make arrangements for effective follow-up. It decided that each joint activity would be implemented by designated lead agencies or through joint management teams in cases involving a sharing of the work by several United Nations entities. The support of non-governmental institutions and organizations was also recognized as valuable. With regard to additional joint activities, the Task Force noted a proposal from the Economic Commission for Latin America concerning mineral development and stated that a detailed examination of the operational plan might be needed to identify other potential projects.

ACC consideration. By a decision of 31 March, ACC took note of the Task Force report and stressed the importance of joint activities as a major inter-agency co-operative undertaking for implementing the Vienna Programme and as a contribution to joint planning and programming in science and technology. The Committee decided that United Nations entities should, to the maximum extent possible, mobilize existing resources for joint activities, that the lead agencies should seek extrabudgetary resources, and that UNFSSTD should consider the possibility of supporting these activities within the applicable policies, procedures and criteria.

Report of the Director-General. Following endorsement of the proposed joint activities by ACC and its Task Force, the DIEC Director-General submitted a report to the Intergovernmental Committee, which was transmitted by the Secretary-General in April 1983.⁽²⁰⁾ The report described 24 joint activities, their scope and objectives and the lead agencies and participating organizations within the framework of the eight programme areas of the operational plan for the implementation of the Vienna Programme. Representing a collective effort in their formulation, design and execution, those activities encompassed a large number of organizations, covered a wide geographical range and took into account the relevant co-operation among developing countries. The report noted three major aspects of implementing the proposed activities: consultations with Member States, financing and appropriate institutional arrangements. Before submitting the joint activities to appropriate funding bodies, lead agencies would consult with concerned countries to reflect more accurately their needs and priorities.

Even though the Task Force proposals did not cover all activities of the operational plan, the Director-General emphasized that launching another elaborate exercise to identify additional joint activities would be premature without at least securing financing for the proposed activities. In the mean time, the Centre would continue to identify additional areas for joint activities, but submit the results for inter-agency consideration only after the financing for the proposed activities was cleared. It would also continue, in co-operation with individual lead agencies, to co-ordinate efforts to ensure implementation of the joint activities and report annually to the Intergovernmental Committee.

Intergovernmental Committee action. The Intergovernmental Committee, by a decision of 17 June,(21) recommended that all proposed joint activities contained in the Director-General's report should serve as a basis for consultations between lead agencies and Member States, with relevant procedural and project descriptions to be completed before submission of the resulting proposals for financing. The Committee also decided that the mobilization of resources for implementing the joint activities should be based on the existing resources of United Nations entities, the lead agencies' extrabudgetary resources and possible support from UNFSTSD, upon requests by States or groups of States concerned. The Committee requested the DIEC Director-General, with the assistance of the Centre's Executive Director, to monitor the overall implementation of the joint activities and to report to it annually. It also decided that the Centre should continue its efforts to identify additional fields for joint activities and should submit them for inter-agency consideration.

Programme evaluation

As a follow-up to a 1981 study by the Secretary-General of the efficiency of the United Nations in science and technology for development,(22) the ACC Task Force discussed, at its January 1983 session, the assessment of traditional means of assistance to developing countries, on the basis of a paper submitted by the Centre on science and technology in accordance with a 1982 request.(23) The Task Force concluded that, while there was need for reviewing the existing means of assistance, the matter required great care, suitable methodology and proper selection of functional areas. It requested the Centre to take into account all relevant information available within the United Nations system and draw up proposals for consideration by the ad hoc meeting of the working groups' chairmen (see above).

The question of efficiency was also addressed by the Intergovernmental Committee, which endorsed, by a decision of 20 June 1983,(24) the recommendations on evaluation in a March 1982 report by the DIEC Director-General.(25) In conducting these evaluations, the Intergovernmental Committee requested: co-operation by United Nations bodies with the selected recipient countries and the Director-General; biennial reporting by the Director-General on the results of these evaluations; and submission, by the Centre's Executive Director to the Committee in 1984, of proposals for establishing a data base on United Nations scientific and technological activities, geared towards endogenous capacity building of developing countries. The Intergovernmental Committee also invited the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to consider undertaking at a future session an updated cross-organizational analysis of policies related to science and technology for development.

During 1983, United Nations organizations continued to provide advisory services on the choice, acquisition and transfer of technology to developing countries. Those activities were related to programme area III of the operational plan of the Vienna Programme of Action. The bodies most directly concerned with technology transfer were the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) (see below).

UNCTAD activities. In response to a December 1982 request⁽¹⁾ of the Committee on Transfer of Technology, the UNCTAD Secretary-General submitted to the April 1983 session of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board a report on interregional linkages towards the implementation of strategies for the technological transformation of developing countries.⁽²⁾

Noting an imperative need for developing countries to widen the scope of technological options open to them and to improve the conditions for acquiring technology, the report gave three examples of alternative sources of technology that could be explored for joint efforts: the results of research and development financed by the United Nations and by the public sector, and the deccommercialization of technologies in the public sector. Following consideration of modalities for establishing interregional linkages in sectors of critical importance to developing countries and among technology centres, the UNCTAD Secretary-General suggested establishing a suitable forum for the discussion of measures and arrangements for co-operation among different regions and emphasized an urgent need to develop within UNCTAD the capacity to deal on a programme basis with sectoral issues.

The Trade and Development Board (TDB), on 28 April,⁽³⁾ noted that the issues raised in the report would be considered by the 1983 UNCTAD session based on a secretariat report on the UNCTAD work programme in the transfer of technology (see below). TDB also decided to make available the report on interregional linkages, together with the comments by the Board, to the Conference session. The Board further decided that the issue of interregional linkages and strategies for the technological transformation of developing countries be taken up at the 1985 session of the Committee on the Transfer of Technology in the light of the relevant decisions at UNCTAD's 1983 session. Comments by the Board, together with the UNCTAD Secretary-General's proposals, were transmitted to the sixth (June/July) session of UNCTAD (UNCTAD VI) (see p. 539) as an addendum to an UNCTAD policy paper on the work programme of UNCTAD in the development and transfer of technology.⁽⁴⁾ The paper gave an overview of UNCTAD's work in that area over the previous decade, outlined the main directions which should be pursued in the following decade to accelerate the technological transformation of developing countries, and summarized the consultations, co-operation and joint activities of UNCTAD with other United Nations bodies. The paper also outlined a strategy for the technological transformation of developing countries.

The session also had before it another policy paper on a strategy for the technological transformation of developing countries with an addendum containing comments by Governments at the 1982 session of the Committee on Transfer of Technology.⁽⁵⁾

quate legal and institutional framework for the transfer, acquisition and development of technology—including international laws, as well as an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology and the Diplomatic Conference on the Revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property (see PART TWO, Chapter XV). That framework, UNCTAD stated, should increase the technological capacity of developing countries as well as the contribution of technology to social and economic development of all countries. UNCTAD VI noted an October 1982 report by the UNCTAD secretariat on transfer of technology laws and regulations and endorsed the December 1982 resolution on that matter by the Committee on Transfer of Technology.⁽⁷⁾

The Conference requested its Secretary-General to respond to the pressing needs of developing countries, particularly the least developed, and to provide them with technical and operational assistance through the Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology, strongly urging that the Service be provided with sufficient resources to cover increasing requirements. With regard to other activities and initiatives, UNCTAD also expressed its belief that urgent action towards the technological transformation of developing countries was called for; requested the Committee on Transfer of Technology to take up, at its 1984 session, the issues of interregional linkages and co-operative arrangements; and noted the Conference's work in pharmaceuticals and the proposed joint project with other United Nations entities to facilitate pharmaceutical supplies to developing countries. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to: continue work on the transfer, application and development of technology in sectors of critical importance to developing countries and urgently consider issues related to their technological transformation; prepare proposals on possible complementary work by UNCTAD on new and emerging technologies for the 1984 session of the Committee on Transfer of Technology and submit to the same session proposals on ways of improving efficiency of United Nations-funded research and development; examine how developing countries could obtain the fullest and freest possible access to technology in the public domain; and transmit the report on a strategy for the technological transformation of the developing countries to a special session of the Committee on Transfer of Technology to be held before the Board's April 1984 session.

UNIDO activities. The activities of UNIDO, described in the 1983 report of its Executive Director,^(s) continued to be aimed at strengthening the negotiating capacity of developing countries. As part of these efforts, assistance was given to Paraguay in negotiations on selected major industrial projects and to Cuba in the negotiation of an export technology. A training workshop to strengthen negotiating capabilities was held in Venezuela. Questions related to further expansion of the UNIDO Technological Information Exchange System and elaboration of an outline for a global review of technological development and transfer were discussed in October at the eighth Meeting of Heads of Technology Transfers Registries in Caracas, Venezuela. The Meeting also considered several studies on the evaluation of transfer of technology agreements and made recommendations on co-operative programmes for training of registry personnel and regional activities.

On 13 May, the Industrial Development Board reiterated the high priority it attached to the development and transfer of technology to developing countries and stressed the significance of the Organization's work in that context.⁽⁹⁾ The Board requested early action on strengthening existing institutional arrangements within the UNIDO secretariat and stressed the importance of co-operation among relevant United Nations entities. It also stressed the utility of the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB) (see p. 599) to the developing countries and requested the Executive Director to submit to its 1984 session a report on UNIDO work relating to the development and transfer of technology, including INTIB.

Draft code of conduct

UNCTAD activities. UNCTAD VI, in resolution 143(VI) of 2 July 1983,⁽⁶⁾ urged the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology, initially convened under UNCTAD auspices in 1978,⁽¹⁰⁾ to complete the formulation of a code of conduct in 1983 so as to enable its adoption by the General Assembly in the same year. Recommending full participation of all countries in this process, UNCTAD strongly urged that the proposals of the Interim Committee of the Conference on a code of conduct, established by the Assembly in 1981,⁽¹¹⁾ should provide a basis for finding solutions to the outstanding issues.

These issues were considered by the Conference on a code of conduct at its fifth session held at Geneva from 17 October to 4 November 1983.⁽¹²⁾ The Conference focused special attention on questions dealing with the scope of application of the code, restrictive practices, responsibilities and obligations of parties to transfer of technology transactions and applicable law and dispute settlement. The Conference was able to finalize the formulation of chapter 5, on responsibilities and obligations of parties, except for the provision on confidentiality, and resolve a number of outstanding provisions on the preamble, as well as chapters 1 and 2. Despite an improved understanding of the complex issues involved, no consensus was reached on chapters 4 and 9, dealing, respectively, with the regulation of transfer of technology practices and arrangements, and applicable law and settlement of disputes. Since negotiations on these and other outstanding issues could not be concluded, the Conference, by a decision of 4 November, requested the Assembly to authorize the convening of the Conference's next session not later than the first half of 1985. It further invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General¹ to determine the dates of that session and prepare for it the draft international code of conduct and appropriate documentation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/153 without vote.

International code of conduct on the transfer of technology

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/210 of 20 December 1982 and decision 145(VI) adopted on 2 July 1983 by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its sixth session, held at Belgrade from 6 June to 2 July 1983,

Taking note of the decision adopted on 4 November 1983 by the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology at its fifth session, held at Geneva from 17 October to 4 November 1983,

1. Brain drain

During 1983, the negative economic, political and social effects of the reverse transfer of technology-the so-called brain drain of skilled personnel from developing to developed countries-continued to be of major concern for UNCTAD and the General Assembly.

UNCTAD activities. As requested by the General Assembly in December 1982,(1) the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, by a decision of 28 April 1983,(2) scheduled a Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Reverse Transfer of Technology to be held in August/September 1983. In resolution 143(VI)⁽³⁾ adopted on 2 July, UNCTAD VI invited its Secretary-General to hold consultations with the regional groups to obtain broadest possible participation at the Meeting.

Following wide regional consultations, the Meeting was held at Geneva from 29 August to 7 September, attended by government experts from 56 Member States. The Meeting had before it a June 1983 UNCTAD study on an integrated approach to international skill exchange.⁽⁴⁾ Containing proposals for policy and action on reverse transfer of technology, the study reviewed the existing international consensus on the problem, examined proposals for action by developed and developing countries at bilateral and multilateral levels, and outlined an integrated programme of action, with its basic components ranging from payment schemes to the establishment of norms and standards on skill exchange.

Discussions at the Meeting resulted in a set of conclusions and recommendations, which were annexed to a report it endorsed on 7 September.⁽⁵⁾ Stressing the serious negative economic, political and social implications of brain drain, the Meeting concluded that developing countries of origin should receive an equitable share of the benefits accruing to receiving developed countries. It also stated that there was a broad international consensus regarding an urgent need for national, regional and international policies to avoid the reverse transfer of technology and minimize its effects. It recommended that the UNCTAD Secretary-General convene at least two governmental expert meetings before the 1985 session of the Committee on Transfer of Technology, the earliest one to be held before the Committee's 1984 session to define principles and standards concerning brain drain, map up ways to improve the relevant data base and information and outline the terms of reference for subsequent expert meetings. It also recommended that the Trade and Development Board transmit the Meeting's report to the high-level intergovernmental group set up to consider the review and appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see p. 406). Further, the Meeting invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consult with Governments and regional groups for ensuring full participation at the subsequent meetings of governmental experts and recommended continued study of the brain drain problem by the UNCTAD secretariat.

On 20 October 1983,(6) the Trade and Development Board took note of the Meeting's report. The conclusions and recommendations of the Meeting were described in a November report⁽⁷⁾ by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly. The Secretary-General noted that the Meeting's results would benefit an inter-agency meeting requested by the Assembly,(1) which was scheduled to be convened by the UNCTAD Secretary-General prior to the 1984 session of the Committee on Transfer of Technology.

Another UNCTAD secretariat study on institutional and policy issues relating to the co-operative exchange of skills among developing countries (see p. 487) was submitted to the 1983 TDB session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/154 by recorded vote.

2. "Regrets that an inter-agency group to co-ordinate measures on the question of the reverse transfer of technology, as provided for in paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 37/207, has not been established;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to establish urgently an inter-agency group comprising representatives of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the Centre for Science and Technology for Development of the Secretariat, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the Statistical Office of the Secretariat and other appropriate organs and bodies of the United Nations system to co-ordinate measures on the question of the reverse transfer of technology and, in particular, to examine and enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations system in responding to the complex needs of the countries concerned, as well as any additional measures to that effect;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to convene the meetings of governmental experts on the reverse transfer of technology, at least two of which should be held at an appropriate time before the sixth session of the Committee on Transfer of Technology, scheduled to take place in 1985; the meetings should be based on the terms of reference outlined in General Assembly resolution 37/207 and should take into account the relevant conclusions and recommendations of the Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Reverse Transfer of Technology;

5. Appeals to all Member States to participate fully in the meetings of governmental experts on the reverse transfer of technology;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the results of the meetings of the inter-agency group to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Against: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Greece.

In the opinion of the United States, which had requested the vote in the Second Committee, the text would lead to a waste of UNCTAD resources; instead of compensatory measures for their alleged losses, the developing countries needed to pursue policies aimed at fulfilling their citizens' aspirations. Speaking on behalf of the ten-member European Economic Community (EEC), Greece explained that they had not participated in the Geneva Meeting of governmental experts on the transfer of technology and could not take into account its conclusions; in view of the lack of accurate knowledge on the extent of the problem, any work in that area should begin with studies to determine whether the flow of human resources had measurable economic consequences. The German Democratic Republic, also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said that the economic imbalance between the developing and the developed capitalist countries caused the reverse transfer of technology, which was used by international capital and corporations to sap the capabilities of the developing countries; stopping the brain drain would help promote the economic and social development of the developing countries with a view to establishing a new international economic order; they regretted that the developed countries had obstructed United Nations efforts by boycotting the Geneva Meeting. Mexico, on behalf of the Group of 77, stated that the reverse transfer of technology required high-priority attention by the international community as a most serious problem facing the developing countries.

Chapter XIII

Social and cultural development

The Commission for Social Development held its twenty-eighth session at Vienna, Austria from 7 to 16 February 1983, at which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council adoption of 16 resolutions and three decisions. Another four decisions adopted by the Commission were brought to the Council's attention.

Following the Commission's recommendations, the Council adopted resolutions on the world social situation (1983/8); economic and social development policies (1983/11); social aspects of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (1983/9); the adverse effects of the arms race on social development (1983/18); social welfare policies (1983/22); social integration through popular participation (1983/13); income distribution (1983/12); social aspects of rural development (1983/10); the role of the family in development (1983/23); co-operatives (1983/15); information exchange on the activities of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (1983/20); and reporting procedures of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (1983/25).

Both the Council and the General Assembly—in resolutions 1983/31 and 38/24, respectively—dealt with the issue of popular participation and human rights.

Following consideration of a report of the Secretary-General on national experience in achieving social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress, the Assembly, in resolution 38/25, reaffirmed the right of every State to choose its economic and social system, and requested the Secretary-General to make arrangements for an interregional seminar.

Preparations were made for the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders; five regional preparatory meetings were held in Europe, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America, Africa and Western Asia. The Committee on Crime Prevention and Control continued to function as the preparatory committee for the Congress. Taking up a March 1982 proposal by the Committee, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/25, decided that from now on the Committee should report directly to the Council.

The work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to promote the return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin, showed further progress. The Assembly, in resolution 38/34, reaffirmed that the restitution to a country of its cultural property contributed to international co-operation and preservation of cultural values. The Assembly invited States to become parties to the 1970 UNESCO Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property.

In accordance with a 1981 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the 1983 Assembly, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, a report on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for social progress.⁽²⁾ The report was based on 17 replies received by March 1983 to a note verbale sent by the Secretary-General to Member States.

Belgium, Denmark and the Netherlands gave information on their experiences in adapting social policies to changing economic conditions and societal change; Cyprus, Egypt, Kuwait and Pakistan on social welfare services; Ecuador, Mauritius, Nigeria and Tunisia on social guidelines for economic growth; China and Ethiopia on agrarian change; and the Byelorussian SSR, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR on a political and economic framework for social progress.

The Commission for Social Development took note of the Secretary-General's report on 16 February 1983.⁽³⁾

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of Israel, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, United Kingdom.

Introducing the draft that became resolution 38/25, Mongolia said it was a follow-up to a 1981 Assembly resolution⁽⁴⁾ affirming the right of every State to choose its economic and social system without outside interference; that was particularly important at a time when the world was witnessing so many flagrant violations of that right.

The United States said the reports on national experience in social and economic changes had produced little of value; in view of the shortage of resources, marginal projects should not be undertaken. Australia doubted whether discussing such vague ideas would produce anything of value. In Canada's view, the text lacked definition and clear focus and its intention was not substantially different from the mandate of the Commission for Social Development. Speaking on behalf of the ten member States of the European Community (EC), Greece said the subject should be considered a sub-item under the item on the world social situation; the EC members also had reservations on paragraphs 3 and 5 of the text.

Costa Rica felt it would have been better to add in paragraph 2 "freely expressed" after "in accordance with the will of its people", and to include further changes in the sixth preambular paragraph, such as adding terrorism, as well as ideological intervention and pressure, to the list of obstacles to economic and social progress. Colombia considered that the changes proposed by Costa Rica would have been constructive and positive.

The USSR supported the text whose core it said was the unconditional confirmation of the inalienable right of each State to choose its own social system with no outside interference. Democratic Kampuchea welcomed the adoption of the draft as it attached particular importance to the problems of young people; its own young people were engaged in a desperate fight to protect Kampuchea from its neighbour to the east which had been waging a war of aggression and genocide for nearly live years.

Social survey

By resolution 1983/8 of 26 May 1983, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the conclusions of the Commission for Social Development on the 1982 Report on the World Social Situation,⁽⁵⁾ and noted that the next report on the world social situation would be made in 1985.

The draft resolution originated in the Commission for Social Development which approved it on 15 February 1983. On 22 September,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the Commission's conclusions were transmitted to the Assembly by the Council resolution.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/8 without vote.

World social situation

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/54 of 3 December 1982, on the world social situation,

Having considered the report of the Commission for Social Development on its twenty-eighth session,

1. Endorses the conclusions reached by the Commission for Social Development on the 1982 Report on the World Social Situation, annexed to the present resolution;
2. Transmits those conclusions to the General Assembly for its consideration.

ANNEX

Conclusions of the Commission for Social Development on the 1982 Report on the World Social Situation

1. The Commission for Social Development notes that recent years have seen a worsening of the social situation. Achievements registered in certain regions and countries or in specific areas of social development do not alter this fact. This general deterioration affects in particular the developing countries. Some long-lasting problems have not been solved. Additionally, new problems have appeared, both in developing and in industrial countries, and much remains to be done to achieve the various objectives adopted by the international community. Some countries appear to remain untouched by this general deterioration.
2. The Commission reaffirms that the ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom.
3. It is necessary to achieve the rapid and complete elimination of the obstacles to the economic and social progress of peoples. Colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, aggression, occupation and foreign domination and all other forms of inequality and exploitation of peoples constitute major obstacles to the economic and social progress of developing countries and peoples.
4. The existing inequities and imbalances in international economic relations are widening the gap between developed and developing countries, thereby constituting a major obstacle to the development of the developing countries and adversely affecting international relations and the promotion of world peace and security. The arms race and aggravation of international tension continue to contribute to the deterioration of the world social situation. Disarmament would release resources which could be used for the development of developing countries and could contribute to the well-being and prosperity of all.
5. A reduction of social and economic disparities and the adoption of measures to ensure the effective participation of all people in the preparation and execution of national policies for economic and social development are required, based on a full enjoyment of human rights.
6. The adverse social situation reflects the lack of implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and of the objectives and overall development goals adopted and reaffirmed in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.
7. Certain social and economic changes have occurred that have had broad and negative repercussions on the elements constituting the social sphere. There is a need to adapt governmental policies to the new and urgent needs which have arisen.

8. Greater attention needs to be accorded to a united approach to development. The interdependence that exists between economic development and social development is becoming even more noticeable at the present time. The worsening of the social situation has a serious impact in particular areas and countries, notably on employment and income distribution. Even though additional measures are required for social progress, economic development is an essential prerequisite. It has been stressed that social change and development can have a positive influence for pulling societies out of their economic difficulties. The establishment of the new international economic order has become of great importance for social progress.

9. It is recommended that Governments make a more rational use of various available resources to deal with the worsening social situation, paying greater attention to the most essential and deserving aspects of social development which have experienced the greatest deterioration and have a multiplier effect on such development.

10. The 1982 Report on the World Social Situation, as well as the debate on the report in the Commission, clearly indicate that existing approaches to socio-economic development have not always been able to solve the problems of mass poverty and underdevelopment. Alternative development methods, involving in particular more effective people's participation, are needed.

11. The social situation should be monitored on a regular and in-depth basis with special attention to the manner in which the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the International Development Strategy and world plans of action have been implemented.

12. The 1985 report on the world social situation should retain a global overview while giving special attention to regional and other perspectives in social and overall development. The 1985 report should be focused on issues of international concern mentioned above and should be in line with the priorities established in General Assembly resolutions 34/152 of 17 December 1979 and 37/54 of 3 December 1982. It should fully reflect the crucial importance for social and overall development of all countries of such global international issues as the persisting imbalances in the world economy, the international economic crises particularly affecting the developing world, the relation between development and peace and the need for disarmament.

13. The 1985 report should emphasize the relationships among various aspects of national, regional and international trends and policies. It should reflect the complex and changing relations between the economic and social, national and international facets of development. It should provide an intersectoral analysis of trends and an intersectoral treatment of issues and policies, bearing in mind different social and cultural traditions.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/8

26 May 1983 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/62) without vote, 10 May (meeting 8) draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1983/14) agenda item 11. Meeting number. ESC 14.

In resolution 1983/11, the Council requested that future reports on social aspects of development, especially those on the world social situation, place special emphasis on the interrelationships between social and economic problems.

In resolution 1983/18, the Council requested the Secretary-General to include in his report on the world social situation a section on the adverse effects of the arms race on social progress and development, paying full attention to a redistribution of resources released as a result of disarmament measures for economic and social development.

Social conditions in developing countries

In response to a 1981 Economic and Social Council resolution,(7) the Secretary-General submitted to the Council's first session in 1983 a report on social trends in developing countries and current economic conditions. (8)The Secretary-General found that the world economic recession was straining the already fragile social structure in many developing countries.

The already meagre level of income and consumption had been reduced for large sections of the population, the growth of employment opportunities had slowed down considerably and expenditure on the social sectors, including education and health, had ceased to grow or had actually been reduced, thus further setting back long-term social development.

The Commission for Social Development took note of the report in a decision of 16 February.(3)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/130 without vote.

Report of the Secretary-General on some social trends in developing countries and the influence of current economic conditions

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 26 May 1983, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on some social trends in developing countries and the influence of current economic conditions.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/130

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/62). 10 May (meeting 8): agenda item 11. Meeting number. ESC 14.

Economic and social policies

By a resolution of 26 May 1983 on the inter-relationship of social and economic development policies, the Economic and Social Council urged that high priority be given to analysing that interrelationship and requested that future reports on social aspects of development place special emphasis on it. In other provisions, the Council recommended research on income distribution and other social problems, and requested the Secretary-General to report on the conclusions of the project on income distribution (see below).

The draft resolution originated in the Commission for Social Development, which approved it on 14 February.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/11 without vote.

Interrelationship of social and economic development policies

The Economic- and Social Council,

Considering paragraph 42 of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, according to which development is an integral process, embodying both economic and social objectives, and the national development plans and targets of the developing countries should be formulated on the basis of a unified approach to economic and social development,

Taking note of paragraph 8 of the International Development Strategy, according to which the ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom,

Taking note also of the preliminary conclusions of a project on income distribution,

1. Resolves to urge that high priority should be given to analysing the interrelationship of social and economic policies;
2. Calls upon Governments, when they prepare their national development plans, to have as their main objective the improvement of the quality of life and social conditions of the population, within the context of a unified approach to development;
3. Recommends that the Secretary-General should continue to carry out studies and research with a view to arriving at solutions, especially as regards the distribution of income, employment and other basic social problems;
4. Further recommends that the Secretary-General should carry out studies and research with a view to extending present knowledge of the interrelationships between economic and social problems;
5. Urges that the United Nations should co-operate with countries with a view to elaborating plans based on a unified approach to development;
6. Calls upon Member States, in view of the serious economic situation being faced, in particular, by the developing countries, which is also characterized by an increase in the cost of living, to take precautions with respect to the situation of low-income groups;
7. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the conclusions of the project on income distribution, including those relating to the adverse effects of the world economic crisis on the level and distribution of income in developing countries;
8. Further requests that all future reports on social aspects of development, especially the report on the world social situation, while pursuing a critical analysis of the issues of social problems, should place special emphasis on the interrelationships between economic and social problems.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/11

26 May 1983 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/62) without vote, 10 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1983/14); agenda item 11. Meeting number. ESC 14.

In its conclusions on the 1982 report on the world social situation, transmitted to the General Assembly by Council resolution 1983/8, the Commission for Social Development stated that the interdependence between economic and social development was becoming more noticeable; the worsening of the social situation had a serious impact notably on employment and income distribution. The Commission further stated that even though additional measures were required for social progress, economic development was an essential prerequisite.

Social aspects of the International Development Strategy

By a resolution of 26 May 1983, the Economic and Social Council dealt with social aspects of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s).⁽⁹⁾ On the same date, the Council decided that a report should be prepared on progress since 1981 in the area of social development, for submission to the General Assembly for its 1984 review of the implementation of the Strategy (see p. 406). Both the draft resolution and the draft decision originated in the Commission for Social Development which approved them on 15 and 16 February, respectively. A draft resolution introduced in the Commission by the Philippines for adoption by the Council, by which the latter would have decided that the Commission should be convened in 1984 to enable it to participate in the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Strategy, was withdrawn.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/9 without vote.

International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, emphasized the interdependence of economic and social development in the wider process of growth and change, as well as the importance of a strategy of integrated development which takes full account at all stages of its social aspects,

Recalling further that the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade called, inter alia, for the elimination of hunger and malnutrition, the achievement of full employment by the year 2000, health for all by the year 2000, appropriate population policies, the reduction of the infant mortality rate, the availability of safe water and adequate sanitary facilities by 1990, the attainment of a life expectancy of 60 years as a minimum by the year 2000, universal primary school enrolment by the year 2000 and the securing of the full participation of women in all sectors and at all levels of the development process,

1. Invites the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, established by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/202 of 20 December 1982, to carry out that review and appraisal and to examine fully the progress made towards the achievement of the social goals and objectives of the Strategy;

2. Invites Governments to examine ways and means of adjusting, intensifying or reformulating policy measures for achieving the social goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy;

3. Requests the Committee for Development Planning to give due attention to the social goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy, as well as to both economic and social policy measures designed to achieve the continuous raising of the material and spiritual standards of living of all members of society;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the report requested by the General Assembly in resolution 37/202 for submission to the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Strategy, to ensure full consideration of the social aspects of development, including measures for future action, and to report on the results of the review and appraisal to the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-ninth session.

Progress achieved since 1981 in the area of social development

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 26 May 1983, the Council decided, in accordance with paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 37/202 of 20 December 1982, that the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, including the Office for Development Research and Policy Analysis and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, should prepare a report on the progress achieved since 1981 in the area of social development, for submission to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, for its review, through the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, established by the Assembly in resolution 37/202, and the Economic and Social Council in 1984.

Arms race and social development

By a resolution of 26 May 1983, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to include in his triennial report on the world social situation a section on the adverse effects of the arms race on social progress and development, paying full attention to a redistribution of resources released as a result of disarmament measures for economic and social development. The draft resolution originated in the Commission for Social Development which approved it on 16 February.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/18 without vote.

Adverse effects of the arms race on social progress and development

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the 1982 Report on the World Social Situation, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on some social trends in developing countries and the influence of current economic conditions.

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, which draws attention to the need to achieve general and complete disarmament and to channel the progressively released resources to be used for economic and social progress for the welfare of people everywhere and, in particular, for the benefit of developing countries,

Recalling also the provision of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade concerning the need to achieve concrete progress towards the goals of general and complete disarmament,

Referring to General Assembly resolutions 32/75 of 12 December 1977, 35/41 of 12 December 1980 and 37/70 of 9 December 1982 on the economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/189 of 18 December 1982 on human rights and scientific and technological developments, in which the Assembly expressed the firm conviction that all peoples and all individuals have an inherent right to life and that the safeguarding of this foremost right is an essential condition for the enjoyment of the entire range of economic, social and cultural, as well as civil and political, rights,

Recalling also its resolution 1981/19 of 6 May 1981, in which it requested the Secretary-General to pay full attention in his reports on the world social situation to emerging social issues of international concern in connection with the changes in the world situation, giving special attention to the relationship between disarmament and development,

Deeply concerned that the arms race, particularly in nuclear armaments, and military expenditures continue to increase at an alarming speed, constituting a grave danger to world peace and security,

Recalling further the conclusions of the Final Documents of the tenth and twelfth special sessions of the General Assembly, devoted to disarmament, to the effect that the vastly increased military budgets have also contributed to current economic problems in certain States and that existing and planned military programmes constitute a colossal waste of precious resources which might otherwise be used to elevate living standards of all peoples and solve the problems confronting developing countries in achieving economic and social development,

Noting with concern the worsening of social conditions in many countries of the world, a situation which represents a threat to the attainment of the goals and tasks of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, every three years, through the Commission for Social Development and in the framework of his report on the world social situation, a section on the adverse effects of the arms race on social progress and development in the world;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to pay full attention in his reports on the world social situation to a redistribution of resources released as a result of implementation of disarmament measures for the purpose of economic and social development of all countries, including developing countries, and to contribute to the bridging of the economic gap between developed and developing countries;

3. Calls upon States, when preparing their national programmes of social and economic development, to take measures for reallocating the resources which are being spent for military purposes, in the interest of ensuring social progress;

4. Requests the Commission for Social Development, at its thirtieth session, to consider the question of the adverse effects of the arms race on social progress.

Social aspects of UN development activities

Pursuant to 1981(10) and 1982(11) Economic and Social Council decisions, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council in April 1983(12) a report reviewing the implementation of recommendations made in 1980 by the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Social Aspects of the Development Activities of the United Nations.⁽¹³⁾ The Secretary-General pointed out that the Working Group's recommendations on United Nations programme development concerned two complementary matters-integrated social and economic development and the advancement of women, youth, the aging, disabled persons, and international migrant workers and their families.

The main substantive recommendations were reflected in the major programmes in the economic and social sectors of the medium-term plan for 1984-1989, where integrated development, advancement of specific groups, and cross-sectoral development activities were given emphasis.

Since adoption of those recommendations, a number of international instruments had been adopted, the most significant among them the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see Chapter I of this section).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/128 without vote.

Report of the Secretary-General on the feasibility, programme and co-ordination implications, as well as the resource implications, of the main recommendations of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Social Aspects of the Development Activities of the United Nations

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 26 May 1983, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the feasibility, programme and co-ordination implications, as well as the resource implications, of the main recommendations of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Social Aspects of the Development Activities of the United Nations.

Social integration and welfare

Social welfare

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1981 Economic and Social Council resolution,(14) the Secretary-General submitted to the February 1983 session of the Commission for Social Development a report on developmental social welfare policies and programmes.(15) The report was based on the preliminary findings of a United Nations Secretariat study on global social welfare trends, in the context of overall development. Reports on social welfare in Ecuador, India, Kuwait, the Netherlands, Nigeria, the Philippines, Poland, the United States and Zambia had been analysed in the course of the study. Those reports were supplemented by analyses of social welfare policies and programmes from national as well as cross-national perspectives and from various sources, including Governments, academic and professional organizations and voluntary bodies.

The Secretary-General's report considered aspects of the changes in national social welfare policies since the 1968 International Conference of Ministers Responsible for Social Welfare,⁽¹⁶⁾ the results of regional and intergovernmental meetings on social welfare and their implications for global action, and key issues in social welfare such as global economic crises, with emphasis on the potential of the family in providing a framework for development and on the need for comprehensive and efficient social welfare delivery systems.

The Secretary-General concluded that there was a need to spell out more clearly the relationship between social welfare provisions and development policies as a basis for national planning, and to study the contribution of social welfare policies to overall development. There was also a need to improve social welfare machineries relevant to development, particularly in rural areas, and to assess the administrative structure of social welfare services. Social welfare policies conceived in industrialized countries and developed in times of economic expansion should be revised, not only for economy's sake but to take into account different societal patterns and economic systems. Due attention should be given to international action through research, increased global and regional consultation, better support of field-oriented projects, and closer integration between broader social welfare and activities specific to different population groups.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/22 without vote. The draft resolution originated in the Commission for Social Development which approved it on 16 February.

Interregional consultation on developmental social welfare policies and programmes

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/18 of 9 May 1979 and 1981/20 of 6 May 1981 on strengthening developmental social welfare policies and programmes,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on developmental social welfare policies and programmes,

Aware of the serious consequences of the world-wide economic recession for the welfare of peoples in all countries and for the funding and delivery of social services which are even more essential now than in periods of economic growth,

Bearing in mind the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Social Aspects of the Development Activities of the United Nations and of the Second Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Social Development, held at Bangkok in October 1980,

Recognizing the relevance to social development of the principles and objectives of the Arab Charter for Social Work, as formulated by the first Arab Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare, held at Cairo in 1971, the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, and the regional programme of action for the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade adopted by the Economic Commission for Latin America in its resolution 422(XIX) of 15 May 1981,

1. Reaffirms the essential role of social welfare in overall development and in dealing with pressing contemporary social issues, namely, the social aspects of unemployment, rural-urban imbalances, problems of urbanization and decreasing resources for social needs;

2. Urges the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in the field of developmental social welfare, in full collaboration with the regional commissions, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to initiate studies and field-oriented activities, within the limits of available resources, aimed at enhancing welfare services to lessen the problems of poverty and unemployment, at developing rural social welfare for balanced socio-economic growth, and at promoting better integrated, self-reliant and cost-effective patterns of social welfare administration and delivery of services, particularly involving families and local communities and strengthening training and research in social welfare;

4. Further urges the Secretary-General to take steps, within existing budgetary resources, for convening an interregional consultation at an appropriate policy-making level, preferably in 1986, to examine social welfare policies and provisions in relation to present problems and concerns of Governments, and against the background of experience gained since the 1968 International Conference of Ministers Responsible for Social Welfare, with the objective of setting specific goals in the social field for the year 2000;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-ninth session on the progress achieved in the above areas, particularly with regard to the preparations for the interregional consultation.

Popular participation

Social integration through popular participation

The Economic and Social Council, on 26 May 1983, adopted a resolution on a unified approach to development analysis and planning in the field of social integration through popular participation. Popular participation as a factor of change in rural areas was considered by the Secretary-General in a report on social aspects of rural development.

The importance of people's participation in rural development was stressed in another report by the Secretary-General on international experience in promoting the co-operative movement. Popular participation was also the topic of an ongoing research project of the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/13 without vote. The draft originated in the Commission for Social Development which approved it on 15 February.

Unified approach to development analysis and planning in the field of social integration through popular participation

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the pledge of Member States to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the United Nations to promote higher standards of living for all segments of the population and to ensure full employment and conditions of economic and social progress for the achievement of social justice and social equality,

Bearing in mind the fact that the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, stressed the interdependence of economic and social development in the wider process of growth and change,

Bearing in mind also the fact that in article 2 of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the General Assembly proclaimed the necessity for the elimination of all forms of inequality, exploitation of peoples and individuals, colonialism and racism, including nazism and apartheid, and other policies and ideologies opposed to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Recognizing that social progress and development require the full utilization of human resources, including, in particular, the active participation of all elements of society in defining and achieving the common goals of development, as well as the assurance to disadvantaged population groups of equal opportunities for social and economic advancement in order to achieve an effectively integrated society,

Conscious of the importance of the unified approach to development in the field of social integration through popular participation for the achievement of the social goals proclaimed in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, as well as in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Convinced that the basic orientation of the activities of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, which fell under the mandate of the Commission for Social Development as the concept of "social integration", must be prolonged and reinforced,

1. Reaffirm the importance for social progress and development to secure for the less advantaged population groups in society full access to their country's social and economic institutions on the basis of full equality;

2. Believes that the application of a unified approach in the field of social integration is connected with social and economic structural changes;

3. Emphasizes the role of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs in the study of popular participation of the specific groups within the broader framework of social development strategies and policies at the international, national and regional levels;

4. Considers that strategies and policies for social integration may be regarded as methods and instruments of social change which are aimed at eliminating obstacles and creating the necessary conditions for people, including less integrated population groups, to participate fully in development and to benefit therefrom;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with Governments and within the limits of existing resources, to arrange a study on the role of popular participation in the formulation and implementation of strategies and policies for social integration, in order to analyse and compare regional and national experience in this area and make those activities more effective;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to inform the Commission for Social Development on the results of those studies;

7. Requests the Commission for Social Development, at its twenty-ninth session, to consider recent trends in strategies and policies for the social integration of the less advantaged population groups in developing countries.

The Council, in resolution 1983/10, called on Governments to give special attention to the social impact of, among others, popular participation in the development process in rural areas.

Popular participation and human rights

The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution of 22 February 1983, noted the report of the May 1982 International Seminar on Popular Participation⁽¹⁷⁾ and recommended to the Economic and Social Council adoption of a draft resolution requesting the Secretary-General to undertake an analytical study of the right to popular participation as an important factor in the full realization of human rights (see Chapter XVIII of this section). Subsequently, by resolution 1983/31 of 27 May 1983, the Council adopted that recommendation.

In response to a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in 1983 a report on popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in the development and realization of human rights.⁽¹⁹⁾

As at 15 December, 13 countries and 11 United Nations organs and six specialized agencies had responded to the request for comments.

On 22 November, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report to it in 1985 on progress in the field and requested the Commission to continue considering the question.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/31 by a vote.

Question of the realization in all countries of the economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and study of special problems which the developing countries face in their efforts to achieve these human rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1929(LVIII) of 6 May 1975, in which it noted that, to be effective, popular participation should be consciously promoted by Governments with full recognition of civil, political, social, economic and cultural rights and through innovative measures, including structural changes and institutional reform and development, as well as through the encouragement of all forms of education designed to involve actively all segments of society,

Recalling further General Assembly resolutions 32/130 of 16 December 1977, 34/46 of 23 November 1979 and 37/55 of 3 December 1982,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake a comprehensive analytical study on the right to popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in the full realization of all human rights, and to submit a preliminary study to the Commission on Human Rights at its fortieth session and the final study at its forty-first session;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General in the preparation of the study, to take account of the work on the concept and practice of popular participation that has been carried out by relevant United Nations organs, specialized agencies and other bodies, as well as of the views expressed at the thirty-ninth session of the Commission on Human Rights and such views on, inter alia, relevant national experiences as may be submitted by Governments in response to General Assembly resolution 37/55 and the present resolution.

Income distribution

Pursuant to a 1981 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the February 1983 session of the Commission for Social Development a note containing preliminary conclusions of a research project on income distribution.⁽²¹⁾ The last report on income distribution had been submitted to the Council in 1978.⁽²²⁾ Since then, the Secretary-General pointed out, the deteriorating world economic situation had altered the approach to the main questions. Concern had shifted from those bypassed or hurt by structural changes and institutional transformation accompanying growth to the victims of faltering economies, shrinking employment opportunities, inflation, cuts in public spending and physical shortages. Lowered expectations affected both attitudes and policies towards questions of social justice, including income distribution. Both research and policy were hampered by still inadequate data on income distribution, particularly as to country coverage; improvement in the data base remained a pressing need. The latest estimates for some countries were more than 20 years old and for many others more than 10 years old.

However, in spite of data limitations and limited country coverage, some general observations on trends and patterns could be made, the Secretary-General noted. Despite pronounced fluctuations in income distribution over the short run, there appeared to have been considerable stability over the longer run. Few countries had shown a pronounced trend towards a more equal or a less equal distribution during the past 20 years. The small number of countries in which there had been some modest improvement seemed to be either countries with strong and persistent policies emphasizing equity, or small, higher-income and rapidly developing countries. In many countries, the very high incomes continued to be derived from property, including ownership of natural resources and land. Who owned property was one of the more hazy areas in knowledge about income distribution, except in the case of land which was better documented.

For many developing countries, especially the poorer ones, the basic problem remained of how to mobilize resources, or to save out of current production, in order to make the investments in infrastructure, equipment, public services, education, training and institutions that would improve living conditions. With regard to future research on income distribution and related issues, attention was likely to be concentrated on three critical needs, namely, improved flow and interpretation of basic information, integration of disconnected findings, and enhanced effectiveness of policy measures.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1983/12. The draft originated in the Commission for Social Development which approved it on 15 February.

Social policy and the distribution of national income

Recalling its resolutions 1086 D (XXXIX) of 30 July 1965, 1322(XLIV) of 31 May 1968, 2074(LXII) of 13 May 1977 and 1979/24 of 9 May 1979 concerning income distribution,

Recalling also the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Taking into account section II of General Assembly resolution 33/48 of 14 December 1978, in which the Assembly affirmed that the social progress of all countries implies, among other things, a just and balanced distribution of income at the national and international levels,

Considering that inequality in living conditions and income levels between the population groups in developed and developing countries is a major obstacle to social and economic progress,

Concerned at the high level of poverty, inflation and unemployment caused by the lack of development of social structures and, in many countries, the improper use of those countries' productive forces, as a result, inter alia, of the arms race,

1. Affirms the importance of preparing and implementing, with a view to achieving a more equitable distribution of national income, effective measures in the field of property relations, tax policy, the elimination of imbalances between rural and urban areas, and a reduction of the adverse effects of inflation, especially for low-income population groups;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for the twenty-ninth session of the Commission for Social Development a report on the equitable distribution of national income, and to include within the framework of the report on the world social situation information on its distribution between developed and developing countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to pay special attention in his future surveys and reports relating to the world social situation to the analysis of the national income structure in developed and developing countries;

4. Invites the Commission for Social Development to include in the agenda of its thirtieth session an item on the equitable distribution of national income.

In resolution 1983/11 the Council, taking note of the preliminary conclusions of the project on income distribution, requested the Secretary-General to report on the project conclusions, including those relating to the adverse effects of the world economic crisis on the level and distribution of income in developing countries. It recommended that he continue to carry out studies and research regarding income distribution, employment and other basic social problems.

Social aspects of rural development

In response to a 1981 Economic and Social Council request,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the February 1983 session of the Commission for Social Development a report on the social aspects of rural development.⁽²⁴⁾ He stated that agrarian reform had been the centre-piece of some of the farthest reaching attempts at rural transformation and development in recent decades. In conditions of extreme rural inequality in land and resource ownership, radical agrarian reform had proved to be vital in relieving the plight of the rural poor. In fostering economic growth among the poor, the provision of irrigated water, fertilizer and extension services had been contingent on giving the poor access to land. When not accompanied by agrarian reform, the targeting of rural development programmes towards low-income groups had been largely ineffective. Even the social welfare components of those programmes such as piped drinking water, electricity and feeder roads had under certain conditions benefitted the rural élite more than the masses. Politically influential landlords had sometimes restricted or diverted to their own ends the implementation of rural projects that would have hurt their interests.

Agrarian reforms, whether they had resulted in collective farming or egalitarian peasant farming, had demonstrated their capacity to break down relations of dependence, reduce exploitation and provide the preconditions for an improved quality of life. In certain cases, beneficiaries of reform had grievances and experienced setbacks. For example, not all production co-operatives had functioned smoothly or profitably, and sometimes timid reforms had ended in failure. Some land reforms had had a negative impact on food production; out of a sense of insecurity, land-owners had sometimes stopped investing in their land even before comprehensive reforms had taken place, as happened in Chile in the early 1970s. The same reaction had occurred in Nicaragua, despite the Government's pledges to maintain private modes of production, with no limit on the size of individual holdings for efficient producers.

The number of agrarian reform programmes currently undertaken in developing countries with a market or mixed economy was small in relation to the 1950s and 1960s, the Secretary-General noted. For developing countries with a socialist development strategy, agrarian reform remained an integral part of structural transformation and egalitarian policies. Other topics considered in the report were the promotion of co-operative endeavours, introduction of development planning, strengthening the role of national personnel in rural development, and encouraging popular participation in rural development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/10 without vote. The draft originated in the Commission for Social Development, which approved it on 15 February.

Social aspects of rural development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969,

Recalling also the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Stressing the need to implement comprehensive rural development programmes to raise the levels of living of the rural populations, particularly in developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the social aspects of rural development;
2. Calls upon Governments to give special attention to the social impact of such important policies as:
 - (a) Implementation of democratic land reforms;
 - (b) Promotion of co-operative movements;
 - (c) Introduction of rural development planning;
 - (d) Strengthening of the role of qualified national personnel in rural development;
 - (e) Encouragement of popular participation in the development process in rural areas;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to give special attention in the 1985 report on the world social situation to the social aspects of rural development;
4. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive analytical study based on the experience of various countries and to submit it to the Economic and Social Council through the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-ninth session;
5. Further requests the Secretary-General to consider holding seminars, within existing resources, on the social aspects of rural development, with special emphasis on developing countries;
6. Request the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Family and development

In accordance with a 1981 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General presented to the February 1983 session of the Commission for Social Development a report on trends in family and child welfare.⁽²⁵⁾ The report considered trends in national and international policies towards the family and children, and identified the unmet needs of the family, which needed to be given attention if the family was to be strengthened and thus to contribute to the development process.

The report set out a few of the major problems being encountered by the family-poverty, malnutrition, environment and structural changes.

The Secretary-General stated that significant research had been carried out on family and child welfare policies in developed countries; greater consideration should be given to such policies in developing countries, especially in terms of intent, target groups and scope. Also, efforts were needed to identify parameters, and systematic studies were required on the impact of assistance to families and of the potential application of family policy, as distinct from policies addressed to individuals, in order to provide more effective delivery of services in the face of a scarcity of resources.

With regard to international action, the Secretary-General said while attention had been drawn to the needs of the family through various international policy statements, no such statements or development strategies had systematically set out the basic concerns of the international community in terms of principles, objectives and strategies for strengthening the family. If the impact of international strategies on the family was to be understood, special consideration should be given to the family in international policy reviews.

The family also offered significant opportunities as a unifying theme or conceptual framework for linking international policies regarding specific groups such as children, youth, women, the aging and the disabled. It could also serve as a unifying factor in sectoral policies, such as social welfare, education, family planning and primary health care. Meetings, studies and international events should give importance to the family. The United Nations could, through conceptual analyses and country studies, call attention to common approaches to solving problems and to promoting shared roles and responsibilities, and could identify on a global basis resources of value in meeting family-related problems.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/23 without vote. The draft resolution originated in the Commission for Social Development which approved it on 16 February.

Role of the family in the development process

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 33/48 of 14 December 1978 on world social development, 34/59 of 29 November 1979 on the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and 34/152 of 17 December 1979 and 37/54 of 3 December 1982 on the world social situation,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the 'Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Having considered the 1982 Report on the World Social Situation,

Taking note of chapter II of the 1982 Report on the World Social Situation dealing with the family, in which is quoted article 4 of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, where it is stated that the family as a basic unit of society and the natural environment for the growth and well-being of all its members, particularly children and youth, should be assisted and protected so that it may fully assume its responsibilities within the community,

Recognizing that the institution of the family takes many forms and is undergoing important transformations in the process of development,

Concerned that the changes have an impact on the social fabric and the solidarity network, and that ways and means, therefore, need to be evolved to analyse those changes and take them into consideration in social policies,

Taking into account article 16 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which deals with the rights and responsibilities of women and men in marriage and family matters,

Stressing the fact that the relevant organs, organizations and bodies within the United Nations system should give due attention to the role of the family in the development process,

1. Invites Member States to expand their efforts at the national and community levels to consider, examine, identify and evaluate the needs of families and the ways in which those needs may be more effectively met;

2. Calls upon Member States to promote economic and social progress through the formulation and implementation of measures addressed to the welfare of the family as a whole, in order to achieve goals and objectives within the framework of national priorities and interests and the development process;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to enhance awareness among decision makers and the public of the problems and needs of the family, as well as effective ways of meeting those needs;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to continue studies and field-oriented activities, within the limits of available resources, aimed at enhancing the role of the family in development;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to study the data available in the reports and action plans developed in the course of recent United Nations activities such as the International Year of the Child and the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality. Development and Peace, as well as the World Assembly on Aging, the International Year of Disabled Persons and others, taking into account the need to strengthen policies for the welfare of the entire society;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to study further the impact of development on the family as a fundamental unit of society and to submit a progress report to the Council at its first regular session of 1985, through the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-ninth session, in consultation with the Commission on the Status of Women and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, containing an analysis of policies influencing the role and nature of the family and its members in the context of development and, in particular, an examination of the changing forms and roles of families.

Co-operatives

In pursuance of a 1981 General Assembly request,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in January 1983 a report on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement.⁽²⁷⁾ The term "world co-operative movement" covered a substantial reality, symbolized by the International Co-operative Alliance (ICA) with 360 million individual members in 64 countries; however, the term "national co-operative movement" was often misleading, the Secretary-General stated. There were many instances where the implied unity did not exist or was imperfect, often due to a conflict of interests. Nonetheless, co-operatives could make substantial contribution to implementing the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see Chapter I of this section).

An important aspect of co-operative universality was, according to the Secretary-General, that co-operatives could function in any political and economic system where they were not expressly forbidden. As for developing countries, there was no clear-cut relationship between the type of social system and the number of and importance of co-operatives. Many developing countries, particularly in Africa and Asia, retained certain features of the co-operative systems formerly imposed or sponsored by the colonial powers; many of those countries still relied heavily on the export of agricultural raw materials and cash crops to earn foreign exchange and had not given sufficient weight to the importance of increasing production, distribution and consumption of staple food crops and to the potential of co-operative endeavours in those fields.

Major obstacles to the development of co-operatives were inadequate management, lack of participation by co-operators in organizational affairs, and a shortage of credit, stated the report. Combined with those factors was the inhospitable social environment in which co-operatives were sometimes obliged to operate.

The work of co-operatives should be integrated within an overall government plan to promote development programmes that reached the poor, the Secretary-General said. Most co-operatives did not involve the rural poor; their membership was made up largely of the better-off rural people. He concluded that particular attention should be given to promoting people's participation in rural development projects and associations, along the lines adopted by the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development.⁽²⁸⁾ The development of urban co-operatives should also be encouraged.

In a May 1983 statement to the Economic and Social Council,⁽²⁹⁾ ICA urged that the Council support the Secretary-General's report and adopt the draft resolution on the subject approved by the Commission for Social Development on 15 February. The Council did so on 26 May by adopting resolution 1983/15 (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/15 without vote.

National experience in promoting the co-operative movement

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2459(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 3273(XXIX) of 10 December 1974, 31/37 of 30 November 1976, 33/47 of 14 December 1978 and 36/18 of 9 November 1981, as well as Council resolution 1668(LII) of 1 June 1972,

Desiring to promote the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Bearing in mind the fact that the establishment and growth of co-operatives is one of the important instruments for the full economic, social and cultural development of all members of society,

Reaffirming that co-operatives play an important role in the socio-economic development of developing countries,

Recognizing the necessity of training and educational programmes at various levels for the growth, diversification and professionalization of the management of co-operatives,

Convinced that the exchange among countries of national experience relating to the co-operative movement plays an essential role in strengthening co-operatives for the benefit of their members and in overcoming difficulties in the development of various co-operatives,

Convinced of the important role that co-operatives in the various sectors of the economy can play in improving the production, marketing and consumption of food, with particular reference to special population groups,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement;

2. Invites the regional commissions and specialized agencies concerned to make further efforts with a view to promoting the co-operative movement as an effective instrument for the improvement of the well-being of all people and, in particular, special population groups;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, with particular attention to developing countries, in consultation with Member States and relevant organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, a comprehensive report on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement, paying special attention, inter alia, to the following aspects of the question:

- (a) The role of co-operatives in overall social and economic development, particularly in rural areas;
- (b) The role of co-operatives in improving the welfare of their members;
- (c) The participation of all people, including women, youth, disabled persons and the aging in co-operatives;
- (d) The interrelationship between agrarian reform and agricultural co-operatives;
- (e) Strengthening of the "movement-to-movement" activities among co-operatives;
- (f) The role of co-operatives in the various sectors in improving the production, marketing and consumption of food;
- (g) Training and educational programmes to promote the effectiveness of co-operatives and make them more responsive to the needs of their members;
- (h) Difficulties faced by countries in the establishment and development of co-operatives in urban, as well as rural, areas and their experience in overcoming them;
- (i) The role of Government support in promoting co-operatives;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit that report, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session for discussion under the item entitled "National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress".

Institutional machinery

UN Research Institute for Social Development

The United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued research in 1983 on food systems and society, improving development data, popular participation in development and refugee settlements. The principal objectives of the food systems project were to suggest ways of improving food security, which was lacking for large social groups and many countries, to develop and test methodologies for analysing food security issues and to act as a catalyst in stimulating further research. The project received crucial support from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) through a subcontract with the International Food Policy Research Institute (IFPRI) for joint research. In September, UNRISD-IFPRI held a Conference on Sub-Saharan Food Policy in Zimbabwe. In the framework of a preliminary assessment of the food situation in Egypt and the Sudan, financed by the Federal Republic of Germany, UNRISD funded a mission to the Sudan in late 1983 to study the role of women in the food system. During 1983, research was begun by UNRISD in Chile and in eastern India.

Work on improving development data continued with projects on measuring and analysing socio-economic development and on setting up a methodology for monitoring change in socio-economic conditions and for examining interrelationships in the development process at local and national levels.

With regard to the popular participation project, launched in 1979, the research phase which had started in 1981 ended in mid-1983. By the end of the year, 18 draft case-studies on Latin America had been completed, as well as two on India and another on Thailand.

The UNRISD studies on refugee settlements started in 1979 as a series of field evaluations of refugee settlement conditions in Africa, and were carried out in close collaboration with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). In 1983, the Institute broadened the scope of its programme by tackling comparative sociological research projects on refugee social conditions and prospects not only in Africa, but also in Asia and Latin America.

Income of UNRISD for 1983 amounted to $1,581,992. Contributions by Governments totalled $879,812. Special purpose contributions were received from UNDP/IFPRI ($194,812), WHO ($15,000), UNHCR ($10,000) and UNEP ($8,506). Expenditures in 1983 were $1,259,764.⁽³⁰⁾

By a decision of 15 February 1983,⁽³¹⁾ the Commission for Social Development took note of the UNRISD report on its activities from 1 November 1980 to 31 October 1982.⁽³²⁾

Commission for Social Development

In its report on its February 1983 session,⁽³³⁾ the Commission for Social Development recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of 16 resolutions and three decisions. Another four decisions adopted by the Commission were brought to the Council's attention.

In May, the Council took note of the report and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's 1985 session. In July, the Council decided to maintain for another two years the discontinuance of the provision of several subsidiary bodies, among them the Commission for Social Development.

Information on activities of the Centre

As recommended by the Commission for Social Development on 16 February 1983, the Economic and Social Council, in May, adopted a resolution recognizing the need to exchange information on the activities of the United Nations Secretariat Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) between the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on the Status of Women.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/20 without vote.

Exchange of information on the activities of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs between the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on the Status of Women
The Economic and Social Council,

Expressing the view that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs should, at the same time as it is pursuing its group-specific mandates, pay special attention, inter alia, to popular participation, local-level action and social welfare policies, in order to make an appropriate contribution to the work of the United Nations system in the area of the social effects of development for the fulfilment of overall development objectives,

Recalling the responsibilities that have been given to the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs in the follow-up to the International Year of Disabled Persons and the World Assembly on Aging, and in the preparations for the International Youth Year, the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women and the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

1. Recognizes the necessity to exchange information on the activities of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs between the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on the Status of Women;

2. Reaffirms the need for an overview of the social aspects of the development activities of the United Nations by the Commission for Social Development;

3. Endorses the continuing efforts of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs in developing activities;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the progress report to the Commission for Social Development on the biennial work programme information on the activities of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to develop and maintain close collaboration between the work of the Commission for Social Development and that of the Commission on the Status of Women through the exchange of their reports in order, in particular, to ensure the social integration of women in society in a way beneficial to both women and society at large.

Location of the Centre

In a report on the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) recommended relocation of CSDHA from Vienna, Austria, back to New York (see Chapter XXIV of this section). Taking note of the JIU recommendation, and the comments on it by the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/134, section IX, reaffirmed its previous decision with regard to the Centre's location at Vienna.

Crime

In 1983, preparations for the Seventh (1985) Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders continued (see below). Other United Nations activities in crime prevention and criminal justice, especially by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of CSDHA, focused on research and training; publication and dissemination of information; and technical assistance, including interregional advisory services to several countries.

United Nations regional and interregional crime institutes conducted seminars, training courses and research.

The United Nations Social Defence Research Institute (UNSDRI) published the third edition of a world-wide Directory of Criminological Institutes, containing entries on 404 institutes and units in 60 countries.

UNSDRI was involved in activities related to an institute for Africa, south of the Sahara in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders, which was to be established in accordance with a 1979 Economic and Social Council resolution.(*) national seminar on innovations in the procedural methods and basic structure of criminal justice systems (14 February-19 March), which was attended by 25 public officials from 17 countries. It also held a training course on community-based corrections, including probation, parole, community service order, halfway houses, and residential facilities, in the community (19 April-9 July); the course was attended by 26 public officials from 14 countries. In addition, UNAFEI undertook surveys on such topics as the effectiveness of socio-legal preventive and control means in different countries, based on the interaction between criminal behaviour and drug abuse (in collaboration with the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute (UNSDRI), and of arts programmes organized in correctional institutions (in collaboration with the Graduate School and University Center, City University of New York, United States).

The Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, convened an ad hoc meeting of experts on the feasibility of information systems in relation to crime trends and criminal policy (9-10 May). A meeting on victim policy, convened by the Institute (30 October-2 November), brought together some 30 experts from various European countries. Research projects on prosecutorial decision-making and the use of solitary confinement were also carried out.

The United Nations Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (ILANUD) organized a number of activities. In April, eight experts from seven countries attended a meeting on victimology and 23 participants from seven countries attended a training course on rehabilitation programmes. A Workshop on Drug Control in the Andean Subregion, held in May in co-operation with the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, was attended by 20 participants from three Latin American and seven other countries.

Information on United Nations activities in the area was contained in a 1984 report of the Secretary-General.⁽²⁾

Preparations for UN congress on crime (1985)

In 1983, the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control continued to function as the preparatory committee for the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. Preparation of the Congress included the convening of regional and interregional preparatory meetings; inter-agency consultations; the commissioning of experts to assist in preparing documentation; and a wide public information programme.⁽³⁾

Five regional preparatory meetings were held during 1983 as follows: Europe (Sofia, Bulgaria, 6-10 June); Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand., 4-8 July); Latin America (San José, Costa Rica, 10-14 October); Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 28 November-2 December); and Western Asia (Baghdad, Iraq, 12-16 December). They were attended by representatives of Governments, national liberation movements, specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. The participants exchanged views and experiences on the issues to be discussed by the Congress and identified the main concerns of the countries of the respective regions..

Inter-agency aspects of the preparations were considered in October by the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC).

Several ad hoc meetings on different items of the Congress' provisional agenda were held, organized largely by non-governmental organizations. A preliminary meeting of experts on topic 1 (new dimensions of criminality and crime prevention in the context of development) was convened at Siracusa, Italy (10-14 January). An international conference on topic 2 (criminal justice processes and perspectives in a changing world) was organized at Milan, Italy (14-17 June). The Ninth International Congress of Criminology (Vienna, 25-30 September), whose overall theme stressed the relationship between criminology and public policy, dealt also with such issues as new tendencies in research and policy related to victimology (topic 3), and criminal justice and human rights (topic 5), among others. Further input to various Congress topics was provided by meetings held at Ottawa, Canada (28-31 August) on prison health care and at Houston, Texas, United States (25 October-4 November) on the Second United Nations Survey of Crime Trends and the formulation of guidelines for data-base development.

A public information programme, provided by the United Nations Department of Public Information, was to complement the preparatory work for the Congress. The intended target audiences of the programme were government officials; specialists in criminal law and criminal justice; public administrators; parliamentarians and planners active in the areas under discussion; practitioners in probation, parole and social welfare; editors and readers of publications specializing in criminology and penology; and officers and members of professional organizations of judges, law enforcement personnel and other pertinent professional groups.

Committee on crime

The Economic and Social Council, at its May 1983 session, took note of the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its 1982 session,⁽⁴⁾ which was considered by the Commission for Social Development at its February 1983 session. By the same decision, the Council approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Committee's 1984 session. The Committee did not meet in 1983, but continued to be involved in preparatory activities for the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see above).

On 16 February 1983, the Commission decided⁽⁵⁾ to approve a draft resolution on arbitrary or summary executions (see Chapter XVIII of this section) recommended by the Committee, which was subsequently adopted by the Council (resolution 1983/24). The Commission also decided to forward another draft by the Committee dealing with its reporting procedures, along with the differing views expressed in the Commission; the Council acted on that draft by adopting resolution 1983/25.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted decision 1983/125 without vote.

Report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 26 May 1983, the Council:

- (a) Took note of the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its seventh session submitted through the Commission for Social Development;
- (b) Approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the eighth session of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, to be held in 1984, as contained therein.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/125

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/62), 10 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on Crime Prevention and Control; agenda item 11.

Reporting procedures

Taking up a March 1982 proposal by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,⁽⁴⁾ the Economic and Social Council decided by resolution 1983/25 that from then on the Committee should report directly to it, instead of following the usual procedure of reporting through the Commission for Social Development. The Commission had considered the proposal at its February 1983 session, but was unable to arrive at a consensus on it. On 16 February,⁽⁵⁾ it decided to forward the proposal to the Council, together with views expressed in the Commission.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/25 without vote.

Functions and long-term programme of work of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1584(L) of 21 May 1971 on criminality and social change, in which, inter alia, it decided that the members of the Advisory Committee of Experts on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders should be appointed by the Economic and Social Council on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, that the Committee should be renamed the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and that it should report to the Commission for Social Development and, as appropriate on particular aspects, to the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs,

Recalling also, however, General Assembly resolution 32/60 of 8 December 1977, in which, inter alia, the Assembly decided that the members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control should be elected by the Economic and Social Council for a term of four years, with half the membership being elected every two years, on the basis of the principle of equitable geographical distribution, from among experts who possess the necessary qualifications and professional or scientific knowledge in the field and are nominated by Member States, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1979/19 and 1979/30 of 9 May 1979 on the functions and long-term programme of work and on the enlargement of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, Recalling further its decision 1981/122 of 6 May 1981 and General Assembly resolution 36/21 of 9 November 1981.

Mindful of General Assembly resolution 32/60 and of resolution 35/71 of 15 December 1980, in which the Assembly endorsed the Caracas Declaration adopted by the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, annexed to that resolution, and the recommendations of the Congress relating to the new perspectives for international co-operation in respect of crime prevention,

Considering that in the Caracas Declaration the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council were invited to ensure that appropriate measures be taken to strengthen, as necessary, the activities of the competent United Nations organs concerned with crime prevention and the treatment of offenders,

Deeply concerned that crime continues to spread in many parts of the world, requiring continuing and ever-increasing attention on the part of the world community, as demonstrated by the concern expressed by the General Assembly in resolutions 35/171 and 36/21,

Taking note of the important contributions of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in elaborating the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, the report on methods and ways likely to be most effective in preventing crime and improving the treatment of offenders, and its recommendations on capital punishment and arbitrary or summary executions,

Taking into account the fact that, in paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 32/60, the Committee was entrusted with the function of submitting to the Economic and Social Council appropriate proposals concerning the preparation of United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, and that the composition and the appointment procedures of the Committee were modified in paragraph 4 of the same resolution,

Bearing in mind that the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders have a comprehensive scope and that their agendas normally cover the main subjects within the functions and programme of the Committee,

Convinced that the magnitude and fundamental importance of the functions entrusted to the Committee require not only the most informed, thoughtful and deliberate consideration by the Committee, but also the timely submission of its recommendations to, and action thereon by, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly,

1. Decides that henceforth the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control shall report directly to the Council;

2. Decides also that the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control will send its report to the Commission for Social Development and, where appropriate, to other relevant United Nations organs.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/25

26 May 1983 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/62) without vote, 10 May (meeting 8); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/CN.5/1983/2). orally amended by Chairman, based on informal consultations; agenda item 11. Meeting number. ESC 14.

The draft recommended by the Committee on crime was amended by the Chairman of the Council's Second Committee to include a new paragraph 2. An amendment by the USSR to paragraph 1, by which the Council would have decided that the Committee might report directly to the Council at the Council's request, was not pressed to a vote.(6)

UN Trust Fund for Social Defence

In 1983, the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence supplied $457,925 to the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute in Rome, Italy. The Trust Fund was established pursuant to a 1965 resolution of the Economic and Social Council to strengthen United Nations work in social defence.(7)

Contributions to the Trust Fund in 1983 totalled $693,802, from Cyprus ($200), Denmark ($9,420), France ($18,571), Greece ($7,462), Italy ($305,891), Japan ($52,395), Nigeria ($4,510), Norway ($10,960), Saudi Arabia ($240,000), Sweden ($22,749), Switzerland ($10,347), Thailand ($2,000) and Yugoslavia ($9,297). Pledges for future years were received from France ($20,126), Italy ($408,805), Pakistan ($1,000), Switzerland ($10,563) and Thailand ($1,000).

Cultural development

Cultural property restitution

Pursuant to a 1981 General Assembly request,(1) the Secretary-General submitted in October 1983 a report on the return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin,(2) annexed to which was a report by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). Efforts by UNESCO to promote the return of cultural property had progressed steadily, the UNESCO Director-General said.

The subject had been given a prominent place at the 1982 World Conference on Cultural Policies at Mexico City,(3) and measures had been taken by States and the UNESCO secretariat to implement the 1981 recommendations of the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to the Countries of its Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation.(4) Among those measures were the promotion of bilateral negotiations and of wider awareness of the question and the preparation of national and regional inventories of cultural property.

The necessity of such measures was again stressed by the Intergovernmental Committee at its third session (Istanbul, Turkey, 9-12 May 1983). The Committee reiterated the need for member States to begin bilateral negotiations for the return of cultural property and to reinforce measures to combat illicit traffic in cultural property. The Committee recommended national and international action in that direction. It expressed the belief that the return of cultural property to its countries of origin should be seen as an integral part of international co-operation aimed at improving the understanding of the heritage of each people. With regard to its fourth session, the Committee recommended that the Director-General accept the invitation of Greece to hold the session at Delphi in early 1985.

At the Pacific Science Congress (Dunedin, New Zealand, 1-11 February 1983), a special session on museums in Pacific research was organized with UNESCO assistance. Twenty-nine museum specialists from eight Pacific countries or territories discussed the question of inventorying the dispersed heritage of the region. They proposed that all museums prepare national inventories of cultural property and that once those were completed steps be taken to prepare a selective common and centralized inventory.

The UNESCO secretariat organized a consultation of experts (1-4 March 1983) on the problems of interpretation or implementation encountered by States which had not yet ratified the 1970 Convention(5) on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property. As of August 1983, the Convention had been ratified or accepted by 52 countries.

A Meeting of Experts on Crimes against the Cultural Patrimony, organized by the United Nations Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders was attended by 23 experts from seven countries (February 1983). It was aimed at possible legislation to protect pre-Columbian archaeological treasures from theft, unauthorized exportation and wilful damage.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1983, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/34 by recorded vote.

Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3026 A (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 3148 (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3187 (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3391 (XXX) of 19 November 1975, 31/40 of 30 November 1976, 32/18 of 11 November 1977, 33/50 of 14 December 1978, 34/64 of 29 November 1979, 35/127 and 35/128 of 11 December 1980 and 36/64 of 27 November 1981,

Aware of the importance attached by the countries of origin to the return of cultural property which is of fundamental spiritual and cultural value to them, so that they may constitute collections representative of their cultural heritage,

Noting with satisfaction that some countries have taken positive steps towards the return or restitution of museum pieces, archives and objets d'art to their countries of origin,

Reaffirming the importance of inventories as an essential tool for the understanding and protection of cultural property and for the identification of dispersed heritage and as a contribution to the advancement of scientific and artistic knowledge and intercultural communication,

Deeply concerned at the clandestine excavations and the illicit traffic in cultural property that continue to impoverish the cultural heritage of all peoples,

Supporting the solemn appeal made on 7 June 1978 by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the return of irreplaceable cultural heritage to those who created it,

7. Takes note with satisfaction of the importance accorded by the World Conference on Cultural Policies, held at Mexico City from 26 July to 6 August 1982, to the question of the return or restitution of cultural property during the debate on cultural policies;

8. Endorses the opinion expressed at the World Conference on Cultural Policies that the return of cultural property to its country of origin should be accompanied by the training of key personnel and technicians and the provision of the necessary facilities for the satisfactory conservation and presentation of the property restored;

9. Invites once again those Member States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property;

Chapter XIV

Population

In 1983, the United Nations system continued efforts to meet needs arising from population-related problems, with the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA), the largest source of multilateral assistance, at the forefront. Highlighting those efforts was the presentation of the first United Nations Population Award for outstanding contribution to the awareness of population questions and to their solutions. A system-wide review of population activities was undertaken for the first time. Taking note of the review in July by resolution 1983/76, the Economic and Social Council urged enhanced co-ordination of population programmes.

Preparations for the International Conference on Population (1984) were advanced by four expert group meetings on topics for the Conference. Council resolution 1983/6, adopted in May, fixed the dates and place of the Conference, and specified the categories of participants to be invited and other pre-Conference arrangements to be made. Besides endorsing the Council decisions in December by resolution 38/148, the General Assembly also approved the budgetary resources for the Conference.

Topics related to this chapter. Regional economic and social activities-population: Africa; Asia and the Pacific; Europe; Latin America. Statistics: population and housing censuses.

UN Fund for Population Activities

UNFPA activities

In 1983, UNFPA continued to concentrate on the priority programme areas outlined by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in 1981:(1) family planning, communication and education, basic data collection, population dynamics, and population policy formulation, implementation and evaluation. Details of these activities and special programmes were described by the Executive Director in his annual report for 1983.(2)

Although UNFPA's total 1983 income of $134.7 million represented a 2.7 per cent increase over its 1982 income of $130.9 million, requests for assistance exceeded resources. Project allocations in 1983 totalled $117.4 million, broken down in the tables below by major function and executing agency, and geographically. Expenditures were $122.6 million, including $69.2 million for country programmes, $31.7 million for intercountry programmes, $4.4 million for the budgets of the UNFPA Deputy Representatives and Senior Advisers on Population, $6.3 million for overhead costs, and $11 million for the administrative budgets.

By the end of the year, UNFPA was assisting 1,831 projects—1397 country, 189 regional, 85 interregional and 160 global. New projects approved in 1983 numbered 271, amounting to $15.2 million, compared to 290 in 1982, amounting to $15.6 million. Projects completed were 240, bringing the cumulative total to 2,006.

UNFPA assistance for family planning programmes came to $54.1 million, or 46.1 per cent of total allocations, and focused on projects to enhance acceptance of family planning and to expand service delivery. Other projects were to bolster family planning efforts—information, education and communication programmes, and mass-media motivational campaigns; and to improve service quality and accessibility—personnel training and logistic support including transport, medical equipment and contraceptive supplies. UNFPA continued to sponsor the transfer of contraceptive technology and to support research in family planning, contributing $2 million in 1983 to the WHO Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction. UNFPA also continued to integrate family planning with maternal/child health-care and general health services.

Guidelines governing UNFPA assistance for family planning activities were issued in April. These took into account two principles consistently adhered to by UNFPA: a nation's right to determine its own population policies and programmes, and the right of every individual or couple to determine its own family size.

Support for population education and communication activities totalled $16.9 million, or 14.4 per cent of all allocations. The need for such activities continued to grow during the year, outstripping the capacity of the specialized agencies' regional advisers to provide the required technical support. To help meet this rising need, permanent UNFPA mobile teams were established in all regions to operate in close co-operation with executing agency teams.

Assistance for basic data collection was $12.2 million, or 10.4 per cent of all allocations. This amount was substantially less than that shown for 1982,(3) due principally to the phasing out in 1983 of a large number of projects and to the completion of costly census activities which had entailed purchase of data processing equipment. As in the past, population censuses took the largest share ($8.1 million); surveys, the second largest ($2.2 million); and civil registration and vital statistics systems and related activities, the remainder ($1.9 million). Of the 149 developing countries and territories that carried out censuses during 1970-1983, 109 did so with UNFPA support. Forty-six others received support for population surveys, 36 for improvement of civil registration and vital statistics systems, and 11 for related activities.

Some $14.2 million, or 12.1 per cent of all allocations, was devoted to population dynamics, including demographic analyses, projections and studies of the impact of factors affecting population change. Research, training, institution-building, technical backstopping and information exchange remained the main areas of support. Ongoing projects numbered 144 in 1983, of which 89 were at the country level, 20 at the regional and 35 at the interregional and global levels.

Assistance for the formulation and evaluation of population policies and programmes amounted to $6.6 million, or 5.7 per cent of total allocations. This went mostly towards strengthening or setting up national population commissions and units, including wider use of research findings in policy formulation.

Projects in the area of policy implementation—seven country and four interregional and global—totalled $1.2 million, or 1.1 per cent of all allocations. These were aimed at strengthening policy formulation and programme development and at institutionalizing responsibility for implementation.

Under its special programmes, UNFPA continued efforts to enhance the active participation of women and women's organizations in all aspects of population programmes (see Chapter XIX of this section). With UNFPA support, research projects on the potential contribution of the aging segment of the population towards local and national development were begun in selected countries (see Chapter XX of this section). Assistance for special programmes was $1.7 million, or 1.4 per cent of total allocations.

A major portion of the programmes and projects funded by UNFPA and executed by various United Nations bodies and NGOs was executed by the Department of Technical Cooperation for Development (see DTCD ACTIVITIES below).

By a decision of 24 June 1983(4) the UNDP Governing Council, UNFPA, requested the Executive Director to continue the governing body of tinue ensuring co-ordination of population programmes within the United Nations system and urged him to take advantage of United Nations bodies and non-governmental and international organizations as executing agencies for UNFPA programmes.

Country and intercountry programmes

In 1983, UNFPA continued to address the needs of the 53 countries given priority status in 1982, (3) of which 30 were in Africa, 16 in Asia and the Pacific, 2 in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 5 in the Middle East and the Mediterranean. Of the year's total UNFPA project allocations of $117.4 million, those for projects in individual countries amounted to $81.6 million. Intercountry activities accounted for the remainder, consisting of $16.1 million for regional projects, $9.2 million for interregional projects and $10.5 million for global projects.

The $97.7 million for country and regional projects was allocated as follows: $21 million for Africa south of the Sahara; $50.3 million for Asia and the Pacific; $14.9 million for Latin America and the Caribbean; and $11.5 million for the Middle East, the Mediterranean and Europe. The largest proportion of each region's resources was devoted to family planning and related health care activities.

Substantial assistance went to the International Institute for Population Studies (India), and to the Latin American Demographic Centre (Chile) to enable it to provide technical and other support for training, research and dissemination activities for regional demographic programmes. The Centre Démographique ONU-Roumanie (Romania) and Moscow State University (USSR) also received assistance, for offering courses in population and development planning to students from developing countries. Additional future funding for the Population Information Network in Africa, as well as for various African demographic research institutions and the Cairo Demographic Centre (Egypt), was discussed at a meeting (New York, November).

The year 1983 saw the end of the four-year programme cycle for most UNFPA-supported inter-regional projects executed by the United Nations, specialized agencies and NGOs. By December, information on project results was being prepared for dissemination to countries for use in programme planning and implementation. Reports on inter-country aspects of the various substantive areas of UNFPA support-completed and presented to the United Nations and specialized agencies during the year-served as the basis for the programming of intercountry activities for the 1984-1987 programme cycle.

On 24 June 1983,(4) the UNDP Governing Council approved recommended assistance to large-scale country programmes for Benin, Malawi, the Niger, Thailand, Zaire and Zimbabwe. It requested the Executive Director to continue efforts to reduce the proportion of assistance to intercountry activities so as not to exceed 25 per cent of total programmable resources by 1984, but at the same time to increase the proportion of regional activities. Increased UNFPA support was encouraged for family planning research at the country level, as was continued assistance for such research at the intercountry level, within 25 per cent of total resources for intercountry programmes.

The Council also approved recommended large-scale assistance to the various intercountry demographic training and research centres for 1984-1987, and asked the Executive Director to report in 1984 on the centres' programmes, taking account of the approved level of support and of the need for adequate support to the African demographic centres.

Family planning research

In response to a June 1982 request of the UNDP Governing Council,(5) the Executive Director presented to it a report on the future role of the United Nations system in family planning research, including contraceptive research and development.(6) Prepared jointly with the WHO Director-General, in consultation with the International Planned Parenthood Federation, the report was based on replies to questionnaires sent to 130 countries and 13 United Nations agencies. Additional information was provided by 34 organizations conducting or directly supporting family planning research and by 30 pharmaceutical firms on the subject of fertility regulating methods.

The report stated that in 1982 about $75 million-15 per cent of the estimated $500 million in global funding of population activities in developing countries-had been used for family planning research. It noted that the United Nations system had unique qualifications that justified its traditionally strong role in family planning research:

it enjoyed wide acceptability and could draw upon a global network of expertise, including from developing countries themselves, NGOs and commercial sources. A United Nations presence in nearly every developing country permitted the system to programme and monitor projects in a way not possible for other development agencies.

The report proposed the following areas be given priority: under programme research-acceptability of programme and methods, programme design and delivery strategy, and programme management, including personnel training, monitoring, logistics and impact evaluation; under biomedical research-contraceptive development and safety testing, improvement and adaptation of current methods to local conditions, and research on infertility; and under social research-research on determinants of fertility affecting acceptance of family planning. To increase research capacity at the country level, it was also proposed that priority be given to expanding research training and strengthening national capabilities for the three categories of research cited.

Accordingly, the Executive Director recommended that the Governing Council approve the priority areas outlined for UNFPA funding. It also recommended approval of a yearly UNFPA allocation to the WHO Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction of $2 million during 1984-1987, provided that overall UNFPA contributions remained at approximately the 1983 level.

On 24 June,(4) the Governing Council endorsed the recommended priorities, approved in principle the four-year funding commitment to the WHO Special Programme, subject to a yearly review by the Council, and decided that the 1984 contribution to the Programme should be $2 million.

Work programmes

The UNFPA work plan for 1984-1987, prepared by the Executive Director,(7) was based on a projected income increase of 7.8 per cent from 1984 to 1985 and of 10 per cent yearly thereafter to 1987. Intercountry activities would account for 25 per cent of total programmable resources, and priority countries would receive two thirds of new programmable resources for country projects. The possibilities of increased shares to family planning and population communication would also be taken into account.

The Executive Director calculated that the programme would cost $631.7 million for the four-year period—$138.2 million for 1984, $149 million for 1985, $164 million for 1986 and $180.5 million for 1987. Following a methodology established by the Governing Council in June 1982,(8) the Council, on 24 June 1983,(4) gave approval authority for 100 per cent of the 1984 figure and smaller proportions

Financial and administrative questions

Budget for 1984-1985

In keeping with a June 1982 request of the UNDP Governing Council, the UNFPA Executive Director submitted to it, for the first time in 1983, biennial budget estimates for UNFPA administrative and programme support services, for the biennium 1984-1985.(9)

On 24 June 1983,(4) the Council, taking note of those estimates, approved net appropriations for the biennium in the amount of $24,577,523. This amount, recommended for approval by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ),(10) was to be allocated to finance administrative and programme support services, as follows: $3,109,342 for executive direction and management; $8,255,972 for administration and information support services; and $13,212,209 for programme planning, appraisal and monitoring. The Council requested the Executive Director to continue to keep the cost of such services to a minimum and agreed that he be authorized to transfer credits between programmes within reasonable limits, with ACABQ concurrence.

Contributions

During 1983, 84 countries and territories paid a total of $130.3 million in voluntary contributions to UNFPA (see table on previous page), compared with $129 million from 67 countries and territories in 1982.(11) This figure, together with additions and adjustments to pledges for prior years, exchange-rate and currency revaluation adjustments, donations and other miscellaneous income, made up a total 1983 income of $134.7 million. Pledges for 1984 from 75 countries and territories totalled $69 million as at 31 December 1983 (see table above), compared with $31.3 from 63 countries and territories at the end of the previous year.(11)

On 24 June 1983,(4) the UNDP Governing Council urged all Governments to support UNFPA's work and to pay their contributions as early in the year as possible. It requested the Executive Director to strengthen his efforts to secure resources from all countries and to explore modalities for securing additional resources from the private sector.

Accounts for 1982

In 1983, following an audit of the UNFPA Financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1982, the Board of Auditors made a series of observations and recommendations.(12)

The Board observed that, as recently as April 1983, UNFPA had requested ACABQ concurrence to transfer amounts from the unencumbered balance of one appropriation line in the 1982 administrative and programme support budget to cover excess expenditures incurred under another line. In many projects, expenditures had exceeded, or had been incurred without, allocations. In addition to noting numerous weaknesses in the inventory control system, the Board noted that the UNFPA procurement unit had entered into two leasing agreements, each for over $20,000, without seeking Contract Committee advice, and that the unit's head was not a United Nations staff member. Some projects had their objectives defined only in terms of activities or inputs, and others did not include time-tables for implementation. No clear delineation of functions and responsibilities between UNFPA and UNDP existed, making it difficult to calculate support service costs rendered by each entity.

The Board recommended that requests for credit transfer from one appropriation line to another should be sought prior to incurring expenditures exceeding approved appropriations. It emphasized the need for better control of allocations and expenditures and for more realistic budgets. In its opinion, lease agreements were contracts and as such were subject to the contract clause of the UNDP Policies and Procedures Manual. Project objectives should be clearly defined and a review undertaken of inactive or slow-moving projects.. A description of the UNFPA/UNDP working relationship should be made readily accessible and cover areas where a duplication of responsibility was likely to occur.

Commenting on the Board's recommendation on credit transfers, ACABQ noted(13) the Executive Director's reply that the 1982 amounts involved were small ($68,980 and $76,824). In ACABQ's view, prior concurrence should be sought when a significant change in the UNFPA work programme required credit redeployment; otherwise, post facto reporting was the most practical approach as long as overall appropriation levels were respected. ACABQ welcomed the Executive Director's response that UNFPA would prepare a description of the UNFPA/UNDP working relationship.

By resolution 38/30 of 25 November 1983, the General Assembly accepted the UNFPA financial reports when it accepted various other 1982 financial reports and audited statements and the Auditors' opinions, concurred with the ACABQ observations, and requested the executive heads to take such remedial action as might be required.

Financial regulations

In accordance with a UNDP Governing Council decision of June 1982,(14) the Executive Director submitted proposed amendments(15) to the UNFPA Financial Regulations resulting from the change to a biennial budgetary cycle beginning with the 1984-1985 biennium and from changes in UNFPA operations that had made some of its financial regulations and rules inapplicable. Once the amendments were approved, the Executive Director would submit revisions to the corresponding UNFPA Financial Rules. The annotated text of the amendments provided a comparison between the current and proposed versions and indicated the comparable UNDP Financial Regulations. ACABQ noted(10) that most of the differences between the revised UNFPA Financial Regulations as proposed and the relevant UNDP regulations were not substantive.

The Council approved the proposed amendments on 24 June 1983,(4) and decided that consequent changes be made to the relevant provisions of the UNDP Financial Regulations. The revised UNFPA regulations were to supersede the current version with effect from 1 January 1984.

Staffing

In a review of UNFPA headquarters and field staffing requirements,(16) the Executive Director proposed that the UNDP Governing Council approve the principle of progressively including UNFPA

Deputy Representatives and their local core staff in the regular manning table, the plan for the proposal's phased implementation to be presented to the Council in 1984. ACABQ was unable to recommend Council acceptance of that proposal:(10) the financial impact of the full transfer to the regular manning table of such posts, currently funded from project funds, would be to increase considerably the budget component on administrative and programme support services, making adjustments more difficult and costly should income and project delivery decline.

On 24 June 1983,(4) the Council requested the Executive Director to submit to it in 1984 a comprehensive report that would enable it to discuss his proposal with a view to encouraging rotation between headquarters and field Professional staff.

Preparations for the 1984 Conference on Population

A number of activities in preparation for the International Conference on Population, to be convened in 1984 as decided by the Economic and Social Council in 1981,(1) were organized in 1983 by the United Nations system, at the regional and national levels and by NGOs. These activities were described by the Secretary-General in a November 1983 progress report.(2)

Of note were four expert group meetings on: fertility and the family; population distribution, migration and development; population, resources, environment and development; and mortality and health policy (see below). Another major undertaking, to facilitate Conference deliberations, was a review and appraisal of the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action (see also below), adopted by the 1974 World Population Conference.(3)

Within the United Nations system, a steering committee under the chairmanship of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation met twice (21 January and 19 October) to review preparatory activities. The Ad Hoc Task Force of the International Conference on Population of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination met (Geneva, 15-20 September) to review two Conference draft documents providing information and comments on population programmes and policies of the regional commissions and specialized agencies.

The United Nations Department of Public Information distributed a Conference brochure and poster to Member States, UNFPA and UNDP field offices, and United Nations information centres. Briefing papers on the topics of the expert group meetings were being prepared for dissemination to the media, NGOs, policy makers, and research and academic institutions. Production of a film on population developments since 1974 was under way and a photo exhibit was being planned. A background paper on the Conference, presented to the annual meeting of the Joint United Nations Information Committee (Geneva, 19-22 April 1983), elicited offers of collaboration from specialized agencies.

At a meeting of the Committee on Population of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, 23-29 August), it was recommended that the regional contribution to the Conference should be the Asia-Pacific Call for Action on Population and Development, adopted by the 1982 Third Asian and Pacific Population Conference.(4) In addition to a meeting on population organized by the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) (Sofia, Bulgaria, 6-12 October 1983), similar meetings were being planned by the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Western Asia for early 1984.

The Secretary-General of the Conference, who had been appointed in January 1982,(5) visited a number of countries and wrote to Member States: in April 1983, to invite them to organize national committees to co-ordinate preparatory activities; and in November, to set out the objective of such committees as heightening awareness of the importance of population issues and to suggest their composition and seminars they could organize. He also held extensive consultations with NGOs.

A committee created to plan and co-ordinate preparatory activities of the Conference of Non-governmental Organizations in Consultative Status with the Economic and Social Council organized an international consultation (Geneva, 13-15 September). Attended by 62 international and 30 national organizations, the consultation focused on the role of NGOs in furthering the objectives of the Plan of Action and in contributing to renewed Government interest in this area.

As at 1 November 1983, pledges for the Conference totalled $045,400—from 22 Governments, including those of developing countries.

Expert group meetings

As authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1981,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General convened four expert group meetings in preparation for the International Conference on Population (1984). Their purpose was to give the necessary scientific focus to the issues to be considered by the Conference and thus provide an appropriate basis for reassessing the recommendations of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action.

An Expert Group on Fertility and Family met (New Delhi, India, 5-11 January)⁽⁷⁾ to discuss fertility response to modernization, the relationship between family structure and fertility, choice in child-bearing, reproductive behaviour and economic activities of women, and national demographic policies and family planning programmes in relation to social and economic development objectives.

Among the Group's recommendations was formulation of population policies consistent with national priorities and with the principles of human rights. Such policies should take account of changes in population level, characteristics and trends, incorporate child labour and compulsory education legislation, promote a decline of general mortality, and initiate institutional mechanisms for old-age support and care. Family planning programmes should be integrated into other development programmes, and include safe and legal methods of limiting or spacing births as well as follow-up services. Legislation against child marriage, education and access to viable employment or income-generating activities for women were cited as measures to regulate or reduce fertility. Population policies should be bolstered through information, education and communication. Research on factors impeding and enhancing acceptance of family planning should be undertaken, in addition to biomedical research in contraceptive technology.

On the agenda of the meeting held by an Expert Group on Population Distribution, Migration and Development (Hammamet, Tunisia, 21-25 March)⁽⁸⁾ were: conceptual approaches to internal and international migration; migration and rural development; migration, urbanization and development in both developing and developed countries; population distribution policies; and international migration consisting of movements of illegal migrants, skilled groups and refugees.

The Group underlined the need to see internal and international migration in their historical contexts, to make it easier to evaluate various types of migration when formulating, implementing and reviewing migration and population distribution policies. Besides taking account of the fundamental human right to choose one's residence, such policies should help achieve the broader societal goals of greater per capita income, efficiency and inter-group equity. They should seek to balance population distribution and economic activity in strategies for rural, town and city development, and to improve integration of spatial and sectoral planning, as in the spatial allocation of public investments and human settlements. The Group agreed that the Plan of Action overemphasized the adverse effects of urbanization and migration and should be modified to reflect more precise population distribution policies, taking account of the effects that migration and urban development could have on individual migrants and society.

Policies on international migration should respect the individual's fundamental human rights and basic economic and social rights, as set out in ILO conventions. Receiving countries should safeguard the rights of non-nationals and ensure their access to health and social services. Countries affected by significant numbers of migrant workers were urged to conclude agreements to regulate migration and to protect the interests not only of those countries but also of such workers. United Nations Members which had not already done so were also urged to accede to international instruments concerning refugees.

The meeting of the Expert Group on Population, Resources, Environment and Development (Geneva, 25-29 April)(9) discussed trends in population, resources, environment and development and their interrelationships; food and nutrition; resources and environment; the social and economic aspects of development; and integration of population in policy, planning and programmes.

Among the Group's recommendations were measures for expanding agricultural production to meet food requirements of developing countries in the year 2000 and beyond. To protect the resource base and the environment, the Group suggested preparation of environmental impact assessments for large-scale development projects, proper management of hazardous industrial and agricultural wastes, prevention of irreversible changes in resource productivity, establishment of pollution control mechanisms and protection of genetic diversity. Measures to improve social and economic development included modification of national conventions relating to property ownership and inheritance to promote greater equality in land ownership, and increased attention to infrastructural needs of less developed areas. Governments were urged to adopt population policies to help redress imbalances between population growth and current and projected resource and environmental requirements. Research into long-term demographic projection methods should take account of interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development.

An Expert Group on Mortality and Health Policy was convened (Rome, Italy, 30 May-3 June)(10) to review prospects for mortality reduction through health policies and programmes.

To attain the objective of health care for all by the year 2000, Governments were urged to direct health resources on a multi-sectoral basis towards the most vulnerable groups. Governments were urged to provide clean potable water and regulated waste disposal as a matter of urgency. The Group recommended placing priority on health programmes in national budgets and development plans, orienting medical practice towards prevention, and promoting family planning as part of all maternal and child health programmes. It called for strengthening or creating systems for the collection and processing of data, on which to base policy, and for establishing a co-ordinated international data collection and research programme on health and mortality. Noting the need to improve strategies for ensuring health throughout the developing world, the Group strongly urged donor agencies and the United Nations system to increase resources for the formulation, implementation and evaluation of health programmes.

Review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action

In December 1983, the Secretary-General reported on the results of the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action,(11) the first such review having been undertaken in 1979.(12) The review was to facilitate the deliberations of the International Conference on Population (1984), by providing background information on population trends and policies and assessing progress in achieving the objectives of the Plan of Action.

The main input for the review was provided by the four expert group meetings (see above). The review covered the relationship between socio-economic development and population; the formulation and application of population policies; population trends, prospects, goals and policies; promotion of demographic research and information dissemination; the role of Governments and the international community in implementing the Plan; and monitoring and appraising the Plan's effectiveness.

The report, submitted for consideration by the Population Commission, acting as the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Population, served as the basis for the Secretary-General's recommendations⁽¹³⁾ for further implementation of the Plan.

Other population activities

DTCD activities

In 1983, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), with support from the Statistical Office of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA), executed a number of UNFPA-funded projects in developing countries. Some 82 projects were in population data collection, to provide population data needed for national development plans. More than 100 projects were in demographic activities, including training, analysis of census and survey data, and population policy and development.

DTCD also participated in a number of UNFPA-sponsored missions to assess assistance needs, formulate projects and conduct technical evaluations of on-going projects. It collaborated with UNFPA and DIESA on arrangements for the International Conference on Population (1984), which included preparation of papers on technical co-operation for the four expert group meetings, and contributed to the review and appraisal of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action (see above).

These activities were described in a report⁽¹⁾ on the work of the agencies and organizations responsible for executing UNFPA-funded projects.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

At the May/June 1983 session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (TCDC) (see Chapter II of this section), the UNDP Administrator presented a report⁽²⁾ on the role of TCDC in rural-urban migration.

The report reviewed selected interventions by Governments in developing countries aimed at diminishing rural emigration by development programmes, localized projects and special measures to "hold" the potential migrant in an improved rural milieu. Emphasis was placed on drawing conclusions for TCDC activities from examples with identified elements of success. The report's recommendations formed a unified strategy for an international system of TCDC for information exchange to reduce rural-urban migration.

By a decision of 6 June,⁽³⁾ the Committee took note of the report and invited developing countries to promote TCDC on rural-urban migration issues and to co-operate with other countries wishing to profit from particular country experiences on how to tackle problems arising from such migration. Governments were invited to encourage a subregional or regional intergovernmental organization, or a national institution, to serve as a documentation and referral centre for information exchange. The Committee recommended training courses reducing rural-urban migration. It invited developed countries to provide technical materials on the subject, developed from their own experiences, as well as financial support. It also invited NGO collaboration with Government institutions in project evaluation and migration research.

UN Population Award

On 14 October 1983, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report by the UNFPA Executive Director describing activities related to the United Nations Population Award for 1983.⁽⁴⁾

The Executive Director reported that the Committee for the United Nations Population Award held a series of meetings between 20 January and 8 September to select the recipients of the first annual United Nations Population Award. The Award for 1983 consisted of a diploma, a gold medal and a monetary prize of $12,500.

Two laureates were chosen from 71 nominees for their outstanding contribution to the awareness of population questions and to their solutions: Indira Gandhi, Prime Minister of India; and Qian Xingzhong, Minister-in-Charge, State Family Planning Commission, China. The Award was presented to each in a ceremony held at United Nations Headquarters on 30 September.

In 1983, the Committee also issued invitations for nominations for the 1984 Award.

Reporting on the status of the Trust Fund for the United Nations Population Award, the Executive Director stated that contributions had been received from three countries: China, $100,000; Japan, $200,000; and Mexico, $100,000. The Fund, established by the Secretary-General pursuant to a 1981 Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁾ and made up of voluntary contributions, was administered by the Executive Director.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/444 without vote.

Report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities on the United Nations Population Award

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities on the United Nations Population Award for 1983.

General Assembly decision 38/444

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/703) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); draft orally proposed by Chairman: agenda item 79 (d).

Cross-sectoral review and evaluation

Pursuant to a July 1982 resolution of the Economic and Social Council⁽⁶⁾ and to Council decision 1983/101, the Secretary-General submitted a review,⁽⁷⁾ dated 15 June 1983, of the population activities proposed in the medium-term plans of United Nations system organizations.

The report noted that, following the 1974 World Population Conference,^(s) various United Nations units and specialized agencies had modified the direction of their work to conform to the principles and recommendations of the World Population Plan of Action adopted by the Conference. Expenditures for all international (including bilateral and multilateral) technical co-operation in population had been nearing $500 million yearly, as illustrated by the revised total of $4.75 million for 1980 and $480 million for 1981. According to UNFPA, total commitments by Governments, the World Bank and private donors exceeded $500 million in 1979 and $550 million in 1980. Despite the sharp drop to $400 million in 1981, such commitment levels were expected to influence favourably the flow of assistance in the next five years, when yearly expenditures were expected to remain at or surpass $500 million.

As a percentage of net official development assistance, population assistance by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development had averaged approximately 2 per cent. Two significant developments in programme funding had emerged in recent years: the growth of multi/bilateral funds and the increase in Government resources allocated to multilateral programmes. A shift from bilateral to multilateral programmes had been equally significant. The share of Government funds for bilateral programmes had declined to 35.5 per cent in 1980 and 1981, from almost 40 per cent in 1977; for multilateral programmes, it had risen from 36 per cent in 1977 to over 39 per cent in 1980 and 1981. The share of Government funds channelled through NGOs remained at approximately 24 per cent.

Since 1969, when its management was entrusted to the UNDP Administrator,⁽⁹⁾ UNFPA had become the largest multilateral source of population assistance, its cumulative income adding up to $1 billion, or almost 30 per cent of all Government contributions for the same period.

United Nations activities, as reflected in the medium-term plan for 1984-1985, would emphasize the following aspects of population: improving countries' capabilities to formulate population policies and integrate them into overall development; planning; incorporating development strategies into population projections; fertility change and its effects on women and the family; differentials of mortality; and migration at all levels and its impact on development and planning.

A.; described by the report, the main United Nations bodies engaged in population activities, besides UNFPA, included: the Population Division and Statistical Office of DIESA; DTCD; the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, which had been concerned with the outflow of skilled manpower from developing to developed countries; the regional commissions, excepting ECE, for the medium-term period 1984-1989; and such specialized agencies as ILO, UNESCO and WHO.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/76 on 29 July 1983.

Cross-sectoral review of population

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1982/50 of 28 July 1982 on the revitalization of the Council, in which, inter alia, it decided to review every six years selected major issues in the proposed medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Recalling its decision 1983/101 of 4 February 1983, by paragraph 2 (c) of which it decided that food and agriculture and population would be the two areas for review in 1983,

Emphasizing the continuing relevance and importance of population policies and programmes in the economic and social development of the developing countries,

Recalling the World Population Plan of Action adopted by consensus at the World Population Conference and given endorsement by the General Assembly in its resolution 3344(XXIX) of 17 December 1974,

Recalling its resolutions 1981/87 of 25 November 1981, in which it decided to convene an International Conference on Population in 1984, and 1982/7 of 30 April 1982 and 1982/42 of 27 July 1982, concerning preparations for the Conference,

Reaffirming the importance of the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, which, inter alia, outlines population trends and policies since 1974 and contains a review of the planned programmes and activities of the organizations of the United Nations system concerned in the field of population;

2. Decides to continue to attach high priority to population programmes and activities as contributing to the social and economic development of the developing countries, and urges that increased financial support for population activities be made available and that competent entities of the United Nations system take appropriate action accordingly in a co-ordinated manner in their respective programmes of work;

3. Notes with satisfaction that the various organizational elements of the United Nations and members of the United Nations system in the area of population are working towards an effective division of labour, and urges them to ensure enhanced co-operation and co-ordination among themselves;

4. Decides to consider the matter again at a future session, taking into account the outcome of the International Conference on Population to be held in 1984 in Mexico, and the other developments in the area of population.

Chapter XV

Health and human resources

During 1983, many diseases continued to be aggravated in both developed and developing countries by environmental pollution. The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) worked with other United Nations bodies in preparing publications on environmental factors influencing human health.

As part of United Nations activities during the United Nations Decade for Disabled Persons (1983-1992), the General Assembly, by resolution 38/28 adopted in November, decided to continue the Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons (IYDP).

In May, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/19, called for implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons.

Strategies to reduce nutrition-related deaths were considered by the Sub-Committee on Nutrition and the Advisory Group on Nutrition of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC).

Despite financial constraints, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) began a new programme of training for economic and social development. By resolution 38/177 adopted in December, the Assembly agreed to advance $886,000 to UNITAR to cover its 1983 deficit.

The United Nations University (UNU) established its first research and training centre, the World Institute for Development Economics Research at Helsinki, Finland; the Assembly in December appealed for urgent contributions to the UNU Endowment Fund (resolution 38/178).

Topics related to this chapter. Environment: protection against harmful products. Children, youth and aging persons.

Health

Human and environmental health

In 1983, malnutrition, communicable diseases and environmental pollution continued to plague human health, their severity varying according to the regions and countries concerned, the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment

Programme (UNEP) said in his annual report to the UNEP Governing Council.⁽¹⁾ Malnutrition and communicable diseases remained the principal contributors to the high mortality in developing countries; the increasing and uncontrolled use of chemicals in the agricultural sector in those countries also posed a serious threat to human health and life. Even in developed countries, chemical pollution of the environment continued to aggravate many diseases-pulmonary, neoplastic, cardio-vascular and others. The contamination of the soil assumed serious proportions in many areas of the world.

UNEP continued co-operating during the year with ILO, WHO, and the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) in preparing and publishing health criteria documents, providing information to policy-drafters, decision-makers, health personnel and other specialists on a wide spectrum of environmental chemical and physical factors affecting human health. With IARC and WHO, UNEP published the sixth volume of Environmental Carcinogens: Selected Methods of Analysis-concerning N-nitroso compounds-which together with five earlier manuals in the series established an information base for control of such carcinogens. Another publication, Management of Hazardous Waste. Policy Guidelines and Code of Practice, was jointly financed by UNEP and WHO.

Among the meetings held on human and environmental health was that of the WHO/FAO/UNEP Panel of Experts on Environmental Management for Disease and Vector Control (Rome, Italy, 11-16 September). A meeting on lay reporting of environmental health information (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 7-11 March) took up the current procedures for lay reporting in the context of health and social systems in African countries. A training workshop organized by UNEP and WHO on mutagenicity and carcinogenicity testing was held at Nairobi, Kenya, from 24 January to 4 February.

Disabled persons

Three reports about disabled persons were prepared by the Secretary-General during the year.

Pursuant to a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General, in consultation with Governments, examined the need and possibility of continuing the United Nations

Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons (IYDP), which had been observed in 1981.⁽³⁾ In his report to the Assembly on the subject,⁽⁴⁾ he stated that, as at 17 October 1983, 27 Governments had responded to an invitation for comments. Views on the Fund also had been expressed at the following meetings: the Commission for Social Development (Vienna, Austria, 7-16 February); the inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (Geneva, 30-31 May); and an Expert Group Meeting on Development and Utilization of Local Manpower and Technology in Disability-related Services in the Rural and Poverty Areas of Asia and the Pacific Region (Manila, Philippines, 21 February-1 March). The World Assembly on Youth, the Disabled Peoples' International and the Council of World Organizations Interested in the Handicapped had also submitted their views.

The Secretary-General recalled that the Trust Fund had been established in 1978 in response to a 1977 Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁾ in which the Assembly appealed for contributions to IYDP. Thirty-two project proposals had been funded or were in the process of being approved by the Trust Fund at a cost of $856,193, and an additional 14 project proposals had been earmarked for funding; the majority of allocations had been for projects in developing countries.

From 1978 to early 1983, the Trust Fund had provided financial support for: advisory and consultative services concerning the design of national programmes for the prevention of disability, rehabilitation and equalization of opportunities for disabled persons; preparation of technical manuals and documents to assist Governments with statistics and data collection; participation of representatives of least developed countries in meetings and seminars; cultural activities and community programmes; establishment and strengthening of organizations of disabled persons; support services for the exchange of technical information and the transfer of technology, including training courses, seminars and workshops; and development of indigenous capacities to deal more effectively with the prevention of disability, rehabilitation and integration of disabled persons in their societies.

Nineteen of the 27 Governments that submitted views to the Secretary-General recommended continuation of the Trust Fund. However, some Governments felt that assistance regarding disability should be channelled through existing United Nations bodies and connected as closely as possible to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), or through bilateral programmes.

The Secretary-General concluded that there was a need to increase the flow of resources to developing countries for disabled persons, that the Fund had played a catalytic role in supporting activities related to disability, and that, in many cases, it had complemented other available resources. The Trust Fund would provide much-needed assistance, the Secretary-General said, in implementing the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, adopted by the Assembly in 1982,⁽⁶⁾ and in responding to activities for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, which had been proclaimed for 1983-1992.⁽²⁾

In a January 1983 report⁽⁷⁾ on the implementation of the 1975 Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons⁽⁸⁾ to the Commission for Social Development at its February session—submitted in response to a 1976 request by the General Assembly⁽⁹⁾—the Secretary-General discussed measures taken during the period 1979-1982 at the national level and by United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations, as well as the relation of the Declaration to the World Programme of Action and its monitoring system.

Implementation of the Declaration had been greatly enhanced by IYDP and its follow-up, he said. The principle of equalization of opportunities for disabled persons contained in the World Programme of Action could be used for improvement of their rights. Documents and declarations, resolutions and recommendations adopted during IYDP were important instruments for promotion of such rights and a prerequisite for their implementation. Technical assistance to disabled persons, especially in developing countries, and measures for technical co-operation could be among the aims of the Decade of Disabled Persons. To simplify monitoring, future assessment of the Declaration's implementation could be included in and carried out at the same time as the overall evaluation of the Programme of Action.

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1979 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽¹⁰⁾ reported to the Commission for Social Development's February session on disability prevention and activities concerning disabled persons.⁽¹¹⁾ An estimated 500 million people in the world were disabled as a result of mental, physical or sensory impairment, he said. Many disabilities could be prevented by measures against malnutrition, environmental pollution, poor hygiene, inadequate pre-natal and post-natal care, water-borne diseases and accidents. Furthermore, the provision of rehabilitation services was essential.

At the national level, activities undertaken included: provision of preventive, treatment and rehabilitation services; examination of current legislation; data collection and research; and information dissemination. It was noted that for a majority of disabled, especially those in developing countries, preventive measures reached only a small proportion of those in need. At the regional level, activities included holding conferences to exchange information, exploring long-term solutions, and technical co-operation. At the international level, the finalization by the Secretariat of the World Programme of Action was cited, together with programmes of the United Nations specialized agencies, interagency co-ordination within the framework of ACC, and activities of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

After the Commission for Social Development had considered the Secretary-General's reports on the implementation of the 1975 Declaration,⁽⁷⁾ and that on the prevention of disabilities,⁽¹¹⁾ the Commission recommended a draft resolution⁽¹²⁾ for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. On the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1983/19 on 26 May.

United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into consideration General Assembly resolutions 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and 37/53 of 3 December 1982 on the implementation of the World Programme of Action, in which the Assembly proclaimed the period 1983-1992 United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons and on the prevention of disability and on activities concerning disabled persons and of the conclusions reached in those reports,

Concerned with the necessity of keeping alive the momentum generated by the International Year of Disabled Persons in order to ensure the continuous implementation of the Year's main theme of "Full participation and equality",

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report containing national experiences in the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the related activities of the United Nations and other international organizations, to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council through the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-ninth session;

2. Requests that that report should integrate in one document all other documentation on the subject, such as that requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 31/82 of 13 December 1976 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons, and by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1979/14 of 9 May 1979, on prevention of disability, and that it should include a brief account of the progress achieved in developing criteria for monitoring the World Programme of Action;

3. Calls upon all governmental and non-governmental organizations interested in disabled persons to take action to implement the objectives of the World Programme of Action and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, and invites full and direct participation of disabled persons themselves;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to promote these activities, paying special attention to the situation of disabled persons in the developing countries, in accordance with the recommendations of the Vienna Affirmative Action Plan adopted by the World Symposium of Experts on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and Technical Assistance in Disability Prevention and Rehabilitation, held at Vienna from 12 to 23 October 1981;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor and support the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons by enlisting extrabudgetary resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which had considered the Secretary-General's report on the Trust Fund,⁽⁴⁾ the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/28.

Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/133 of 16 December 1977 and 34/154 of 17 December 1979, in which it appealed to Member States to make generous voluntary contributions to the International Year of Disabled Persons,

Recalling also its resolution 36/77 of 8 December 1981, in which it welcomed the contributions made by Governments and private sources to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons and appealed for further voluntary contributions which would facilitate the follow-up to the Year,

Deeply concerned that no less than five hundred million persons are estimated to suffer from disability of one form or another, of whom four hundred million are estimated to be in developing countries,

Convinced that the International Year of Disabled Persons gave a genuine and meaningful impetus to activities related to the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons, as well as prevention and rehabilitation at all levels,

Noting the emergence of organizations of disabled persons in all parts of the world and their positive influence on the image and condition of persons with a disability,

Desirous of ensuring effective follow-up to the International Year of Disabled Persons and aware that, if this is to be achieved, Member States, organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and organizations of disabled persons must therefore be encouraged to continue the activities already undertaken and to initiate new programmes and activities,

Stressing that the primary responsibility for promoting effective measures for the prevention of disability, for rehabilitation and for the realization of the goals of "full participation" of disabled persons in social life and development and of "equality" rests with individual countries and that international action should be directed towards assisting and supporting such national efforts in this regard as consultative services in designing national plans and programmes in the field of disability prevention, rehabilitation and the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities,

Reiterating its appreciation to the Advisory Committee for the International Year of Disabled Persons for its work, in particular for its contribution to the formulation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,

Recalling its resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, in paragraph 157 of which it is stated that the Trust Fund established by the General Assembly for the International Year of Disabled Persons should be used to meet requests for assistance from developing countries and organizations of disabled persons and to further the implementation of the World Programme of Action and, in paragraph 158, it is indicated that, in general, there is a need to increase the flow of resources to developing countries to implement the objectives of the World Programme of Action, and that, therefore, the Secretary-General should explore new ways and means of raising funds and take the necessary follow-up measures for mobilizing resources, and that voluntary contributions from Governments and from private sources should be encouraged,

Recalling further its resolution 37/53 of 3 December 1982, by which it proclaimed the period 1983-1992 United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons as a long-term plan of action, on the understanding that no additional resources from the United Nations system would be needed for this purpose, and encouraged Member States to utilize this period as one of the means to implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,

Concerned that developing countries are experiencing increasing difficulties in mobilizing adequate resources for meeting pressing needs in the field of disability prevention, rehabilitation and equalization of opportunities for the millions of persons with disabilities, in the face of pressing demands from other high-priority sectors concerned with basic needs,

Convinced that the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons should give a strong impetus to the implementation of the World Programme of Action and to a broader understanding of its importance,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/19 of 26 May 1983, in which the Secretary-General was requested to monitor and support the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons by enlisting extrabudgetary resources,

Noting with great appreciation the many generous voluntary contributions and pledges already made by Governments, organizations and individuals,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the results achieved so far by the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons during the Year and its follow-up activities,

Recognizing that the Trust Fund is an important instrument for the implementation of the World Programme of Action,

1. Recognizes the desirability of the continuation of the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons throughout the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons for the benefit of disabled persons, particularly those in developing countries;

2. Decides that the Trust Fund should continue its activities pending a report by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, which should include recommendations for the further implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, the funding of such activities by voluntary contributions, the possible terms of reference of a trust fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, the implementation of the provisions contained in Assembly resolution 36/77 concerning the organization of support services for technical co-operation in favour of disabled persons, as well as the organization of task forces mentioned in Assembly resolution 37/53;

3. Stresses the need for the administration of the Trust Fund to continue to be carried out as an integral part of the substantive responsibilities for disability matters discharged by the Secretariat;

4. Recommends that the resources of the Trust Fund should be geared, within the framework of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, towards the implementation of the World Programme of Action and towards helping persons with disabilities to organize themselves, towards assisting in implementing support and consultative services for technical co-operation and inter-organizational task forces, as mentioned in resolutions 36/77 and 37/53, and towards strengthening the activities of the regional commissions in the field of disability prevention and the advancement of persons with disabilities;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to strengthen the Trust Fund and, to this effect, to enlist extrabudgetary resources as indicated in paragraph 158 of the World Programme of Action;

6. Appeals to Governments and private sources for continuing generous voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund;

7. Calls upon all Member States, all non-governmental organizations concerned and organizations of disabled persons and also calls upon all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, through a reallocation of existing resources, to continue to ensure the early implementation of the World Programme of Action;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his reports to the General Assembly on the implementation of the World Programme of Action a section on the activities of the Trust Fund.

Other UN system activities

An inter-agency meeting on the Decade of Disabled Persons was held by the ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) at Geneva on 30 and 31 May.⁽¹³⁾ The meeting recommended that interorganizational task forces, as requested by the Assembly in 1982,⁽²⁾ be established as needed to explore issues of importance to the implementation of the Programme of Action. Further recommendations included: that the Secretariat's Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, in consultation with other bodies, should identify issues for further exploration, and that an inter-agency meeting on the Decade be held at Vienna in September 1984. The meeting also agreed that the IYDP Trust Fund was essential for implementation of the Programme of Action and promotion of the Decade.

Recommendations made with the assistance of WHO and ILO on employing disabled persons in United Nations organizations were endorsed by the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) (Personnel and General Administrative Questions) at its fifty-eighth session (Vienna, Austria, 28 February-18 March 1983).⁽¹⁴⁾ The Committee agreed: that the organizations should consider indicating in their staff regulations that there would be no discrimination on the grounds of disability in filling vacancies; that the organizations' medical advisers be asked to adopt a common policy on medical clearance for the employment of the disabled; that organizations should consider management with the special problems and potential benefits of employing such persons; that recruitment procedures should be the same as for the non-disabled; that organizations might need to modify their premises to facilitate employment of the disabled; that car pools and other ad hoc transportation be encouraged; that flexible employment arrangements, emphasizing task-oriented rather than time-oriented work, be considered; and that disabled staff should receive the same health insurance as others.⁽¹⁵⁾ While endorsing the recommendations, the Committee expressed two reservations. The first concerned the text of a proposed personal history form which it thought might diminish the chances of disabled candidates. The second related to a statement on participation of the disabled in the Pension Fund, which it considered irrelevant. The recommendations were made in response to a 1982 CCAQ decision that a study of the question be conducted.⁽¹⁶⁾

In support of the Decade of Disabled Persons, UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and WHO launched an international programme for the prevention of disability at New Delhi, India, on 2 October. The programme-- known as IMPACT—sought to apply proven low-cost techniques for preventing and treating disabilities by incorporating them into health and other development programmes. It was to promote the organization of temporary mass camps for treatment of cataracts and other disabling conditions, the introduction of green leafy vegetables into the diet to prevent nutritional blindness, the addition of iodine to salt to prevent goitre, treatment and reconstructive surgery for leprosy patients, widespread immunization of children against the major childhood diseases, information campaigns and new safety measures to prevent accidents.

In another development related to the rights of the disabled, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights requested, among other things, that the Commission invite Governments to identify the human rights problems of disabled persons in their jurisdictions (see Chapter XVIII of this section).

Nutrition

The ninth session of the ACC Sub-Committee on Nutrition and its Advisory Group on Nutrition (AGN) (Copenhagen, Denmark, 7-11 March)⁽¹⁷⁾ included a Symposium on Nutrition in Primary Health Care organized by WHO. Five main deficiencies (calories, protein, iron, iodine and vitamin A) were cited as being responsible for the bulk of malnutrition in developing countries. Since causes were complex and varied with location, eradication required collaborative efforts in several sectors over long periods.

It was pointed out that in the shorter term, proven methodologies could reduce nutrition-related deaths, blindness and mental impairment. One such highly cost-effective methodology was nutrient fortification of foods. Another, directly related to primary health care, was the "Road to Health Strategy," utilizing regular contact with families by village health workers throughout pregnancy and childhood, the monitoring of progress with growth charts, and the provision of multiple simple interventions—perinatal care, iron supplementation, immunization, oral rehydration, nutrition education, encouragement of breastfeeding, and improved water and sanitation.

The Sub-Committee decided: that WHO, in consultation with members of AGN and based on the Symposium, would prepare an action statement on nutrition in primary health care; that three countries in the WHO/UNICEF programme on nutrition in primary health care should be selected to test proposals made at the Symposium and be included in the AGN study on roles for international agencies responding to the changing nutritional conditions of the 1980s; and that following this experience, the action statement should be updated for further examination at a future session of the Sub-Committee.

Human resources

Human resources development

The UNDP Governing Council took note(1) at its 1983 meeting in New York of a report that evaluated human resources development for primary health care.(2) The Council had endorsed the study in 1980, following the International Conference on Primary Health Care (Alma-Ata, USSR, 1978)(3) and it was undertaken in 1982. A number of recommendations for strengthening international support in the development of resources for primary health care were given in the report. Among them were increasing basic health personnel, according higher priority to the training of community health and sanitary workers, improving the content and methods of training, upgrading statistics on primary health care needs, promoting the planning of human resources for health, systematically providing in-service and continuing education, and creating better working relations between members of the formal health system and practitioners of traditional medicine.

UN Institute for Training and Research

Activities

The United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), an autonomous organization within the United Nations system, restructured its training activities while reappraising its research programme during 1983. A special session of the UNITAR Board of Trustees (New York, 11-14 April) considered the work programme of the Institute in the light of its financial constraints and the need to improve its financial situation. Despite limited resources, a new programme of training for economic and social development was launched during the second half of 1983. The Institute's activities were described by the Executive Director in annual reports to the General Assembly for the periods from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983(4) and from 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984.(5)

At its special session, the Board of Trustees discussed the future role of the Institute. The Board felt that the Executive Director should be highly selective in the choice of projects that might be implemented, bearing in mind the needs of the Secretary-General, the priority concerns of the developing countries, the problems of peace, disarmament and development, and the improvement of the efficacy of the United Nations. It agreed that the Executive Director should prepare a two-year programme of training and research covering 1984-1985, the cost of which would be about $3 million per year.

A UNITAR Advisory Panel on Training met in New York from 9 to 13 May, and its conclusions were used to restructure UNITAR training activities and prepare its 1984-1985 programme. The Panel discussed the changing training needs of Member States, the relationship between training and research, training methodologies and techniques, the training of international civil servants, advisory assistance and ad hoc requests for training. The 1984-1985 programme had to be modified owing to the limited general purpose funds and the implications for staffing. For example, the programme of research on training and training promotion had to be given lower priority than seminars and advisory assistance.

In launching the new programme of training for economic and social development, much time was spent designing the courses, workshops and seminars and making contacts to obtain logistical support and financial assistance. The overall purpose of the programme was to foster the ability of developing countries to design, organize and evaluate training programmes which would enhance their effectiveness in the planning and management of national development. For the biennium 1984-1985, the programme was to concentrate on four areas of training: for development managers, modernization of public administration in African countries, management of public enterprises (state-owned and parastatal), and finance management.

Among the training activities conducted by UNITAR were seminars for members of permanent missions to the United Nations, including: an introduction to the workings of the United Nations system (New York, January); economic development and its international setting (Washington, D. C., 14-26 February); and the activities and special features of the United Nations bodies located at Geneva (Geneva, 28 November-2 December).

Training for other government officials included: the United Nations/UNITAR fellowship programme in international law (The Hague, Netherlands, 3 July-11 August, and other locations, 12 August-4 November) and a regional training and refresher course in international law for Latin American and Caribbean countries (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 26 September-7 October).

In response to ad hoc requests, 35 civil servants and foreign service officials from Cape Verde took part in a multilateral diplomacy training programme (Praia, Cape Verde, 7 February-7 May); two high-ranking officials from Qatar attended a training programme in the processes and techniques of multilateral diplomacy and international economic co-operation (16 May-3 June); and briefing seminars on the United Nations system and its activities were held for 30 Saudi Arabian diplomats (New York, 6-9 September and 21 November-1 December).

The current and proposed research programme of UNITAR was reviewed at the first session of its Advisory Panel on Research, composed of 13 high-level specialists in international organization, international law, economics, and science and technology (Vienna, Austria, 12-16 September).

The Board of Trustees established a single UNITAR Division of Research which absorbed the activities of the Project on the Future, concentrating on long-term problems of socio-economic and technological transformation. The 1984-1985 research programme was designed on the assumption that the limited resources of UNITAR would be better utilized if the Institute did not engage primarily in basic research, but rather served as a catalyst and synthesizer as well as a monitor of research carried out elsewhere. Research financed through the General Fund was to focus on three main areas: peace and security, economic and social development, and the United Nations system. In addition, UNITAR was to continue research funded by Special Purpose Grants, covering energy and natural resources and the developing regions of the world.

Research activities in 1983 included: a meeting in March of a Panel of Experts to discuss the results of a study of the development of international law related to the new international economic order; two meetings held jointly with the American Society of International Law on the preparation of a guide to the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights⁽⁶⁾ (Washington, D. C., February and Paris, March); a seminar on the alternative development of the developing countries and the Mongolian experience (Ulan Bator, Mongolia, September) and a symposium on development strategies for the Mediterranean area, attended by some 100 researchers who examined 73 studies concerning the countries of the area (Naples, Italy, 24-26 October).

As part of the Project on the Future, a symposium on the problems of exhaustible resources and North-South trade and development was held at Essex University (United Kingdom, January) and a programme on strategies for the future of Asia was begun in mid-1983 with an office provided by the University of Chulalongkorn Bangkok, Thailand.

Among publications issued by UNITAR during the year were Analytical Papers and Analysis of Texts of Relevant Instruments, ASEAN and the United Nations System, Creative Women in Changing Societies: A Quest for Alternatives, and Law and the Status of the Child.

Finances of UNITAR

An estimated 1983 deficit of $886,000 in the General Fund budget of $2,720,100 was reported by the UNITAR Executive Director to the General Assembly in November. Expenditures had been underestimated by some $300,000 and income over-estimated by about $600,000, he said, pointing out that, inflation notwithstanding, the 1983 programme cost was the same as that of 1980. The Institute requested an interest-free loan from the Assembly to cover the deficit.

As at 31 December 1983,⁽⁷⁾ the General Fund showed assets of $2,329,929 and liabilities of $3,024,047, a deficit of $694,118. The income of the Special Purpose Grants Fund totalled $920,147 and expenditures $2,071,486; the balance of the Special Purpose Fund was $1,542,565.

In response to a December 1982 Assembly request⁽⁸⁾ that the Secretary-General examine all possibilities for funding UNITAR, he submitted a report to the Assembly in November 1983,⁽⁹⁾ stating that the new Executive Director was reducing costs and trying to mobilize resources. To enable UNITAR to continue operating until a long-term financial solution could be found, the Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly advance $886,000 required to balance the 1983 budget. It was expected that UNHCR would be able to repay the advance over several biennia on a non-recurrent reimbursable basis, he said.

The Secretary-General's recommendation was considered by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) in December.⁽¹⁰⁾ It found that the Institute's continuing funding difficulties cast doubts on its future financial viability and ability to repay the proposed advance in the manner indicated. It concluded that the Secretary-General, together with the Executive Director and the Board of Trustees, should re-examine the future role of UNITAR. ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General, in reporting on the long-term financing of UNITAR in 1984, take into account institutional developments since its inception, in particular, the establishment of the United Nations University and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly took three actions concerning UNITAR and its finances.

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/177.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/142 of 17 December 1982 on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,

Having considered the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research covering the period from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983, and his introductory statement of 7 November 1983,

Recalling the important role assigned to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in achieving its major objectives, particularly in the maintenance of peace and security and the promotion of economic and social development,

Noting with satisfaction the emphasis being placed by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on the revitalization of its programme, the dissemination of the results of its research, the continuing need for improvement of its management and on the mobilization of adequate resources to enable it to perform its functions satisfactorily,

Sharing the concern of the Executive Director that only a small number of States are contributing to the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, as well as his concern over the inadequacy of the resources available to the Institute for its work,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the measures he has already taken, with the approval of the Board of Trustees of the Institute, with a view to revitalizing the Institute and enhancing its image;

2. Welcomes the continuing emphasis of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on economic and social training and research and the inclusion of specific projects on the problems that exist in the areas identified by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions, in the relevant decisions adopted at its twenty-ninth and subsequent sessions, and in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, taking into consideration the statements on the programme of work of the Institute made at the current session;

3. Encourages the Executive Director, bearing in mind the conclusions reached by the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research at its special session held from 11 to 14 April 1983, to continue to evolve clear long-term priorities in the training and research programme of the Institute which would emphasize its role in the promotion and strengthening of the development process and would make the need for that role more obvious;

4. Notes with satisfaction the efforts of the Executive Director to strengthen co-operation between the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and other institutions active in the Institute's field of competence;

5. Urges once again all States that have not yet contributed to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to do so, and calls upon all donor countries, especially those that are not contributing at a level commensurate with their capacity, to increase their voluntary contributions in order to meet the urgent financial needs of the Institute;

6. Again requests all States to continue to announce their contributions to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research early, and, if possible, not later than the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, and to speed up the payment of their voluntary contributions to the Institute;

7. Emphasizes the necessity for the Institute to intensify its efforts further to improve its management and to develop its programme of activities with a view to balancing its expenses with revenue, on the basis of realistic estimates, and, in this context, notes with satisfaction the steps being taken by the Executive Director to adjust administrative costs and to mobilize resources to ensure avoidance of future deficits in the Institute's budget;

8. Decides to support the recommendations of the Secretary-General contained in his interim report on the financing of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and agrees, on an exceptional basis, that an advance of $886,000 should be given to the Institute to cover the deficit in its budget for 1983; this advance will be non-recurrent and reimbursable, in accordance with the terms set out in the Secretary-General's report, and the repayment will begin after a grace period not exceeding two years;

9. Decides, in the light of paragraphs 4 and 5 of the report of the Secretary-General, to consider at its thirty-ninth session the question of long-term financing arrangements for the United Nations Institute for Training and Research.

Prior to the adoption of the resolution, the Assembly adopted paragraph 8 by a separate recorded vote of 121 to 15, with 5 abstentions. The Second Committee had approved the paragraph by a recorded vote-requested by the USSR—of 107 to 15, with 5 abstentions; the Committee also approved paragraph 9 by a recorded vote-also requested by the USSR-of 116 to 9, with 3 abstentions.

In the Second Committee, a number of States explained their votes. The United States, which had requested the recorded vote on the draft resolution as a whole, stated that it opposed the draft because of the financial consequences of paragraph 8 and the implication that the Assembly had agreed to a policy of bailing out voluntarily funded organ. The USSR said it had voted against paragraphs 8 and 9 and the draft as a whole since it believed that financing UNITAR's activities through the regular budget was illegal. Brazil, France and Sweden (speaking on behalf of the five Nordic States) stated that they had voted in favour of the resolution because the granting of a loan to UNITAR was to be non-recurrent; Austria said that its decision to vote for the draft should not be viewed as a precedent for the future. Canada declared it had reluctantly supported the resolution on the understanding that UNITAR's financial situation would be thoroughly examined during the next year. The Federal Republic of Germany said that, although it had voted in favour of the resolution as a whole, it had been unable to support the granting of a loan to UNITAR; as an indication of the value it attached to that body; however, it was increasing its voluntary contribution for 1984 and 1985. Belgium and the United Kingdom explained that they had abstained because they opposed the loan procedure.

On the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 38/446.

Accounts for 1982

The Board of Auditors, in examining the 1982 UNITAR accounts,(11) found a need for proper authorization of imprest payments, prompt issuance of receipts and for maintenance of adequate records to ensure effective financial control to improve cash management. Furthermore, it noted that the UNITAR administration was unable to submit the financial statements for 1982 before the deadline of 31 March 1983, as stipulated by the financial regulations. It said that its review indicated, however, that an appreciable effort had been made by the Administration to implement the Board's previous recommendations.(12)

ACABQ had no comments on the Board's report(13)

In resolution 38/30 of 25 November, the Assembly accepted the Board's financial report and opinions and requested that remedial action be taken by the Executive Director.

UN University

Activities

The major development in 1983 at the United Nations University (UNU), an autonomous academic institution within the framework of the United Nations, was the establishment of its first research and training centre, the World Institute for Development Economics Research (WIDER). The UNU Council at its twenty-second session (Tokyo, 5-9 December)(14) accepted an offer by the Government of Finland to host the Institute. The offer included $30,000,000 and premises for the centre at Helsinki. WIDER was envisaged as a small, pluralistic, interdisciplinary group of scholars researching aspects of the global economic system that affected the development prospects of the poorest nations. With the establishment of WIDER, moves to develop a network of such centres and broaden the University's institutional links were well under way, the UNU Council said.

Earlier in the year, at its twenty-first session (Tokyo, 27 June-1 July), the Council authorized the Rector of UNU to negotiate agreements with prospective host countries for the setting up of two other centres—the Institute for Natural Resources in Africa and the International Institute for Biotechnology in Venezuela.

The University programme concentrated on broadening the scope of its intellectual and policy concerns. Work was carried out under the five themes of its medium-term perspective, 1982-1987, adopted by the UNU Council in 1981.(16) These themes were: peace, security, conflict resolution and global transformation; the global economy; hunger, poverty, resources and the environment; human and social development and the coexistence of peoples, cultures and social systems; and science and technology and their social and ethical implications.

A brainstorming session was organized (New York, February 1983) with leading scholars from different parts of the world; the subject was the implications for developing countries of the prospects of continued low growth in countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, even following the end of the current recession.

As part of UNU's efforts to increase understanding of global problems, the University and the International Development Research Centre of Canada signed an agreement on 11 June in Tokyo to support an energy research project. Under the project, a 10-member Energy Research Group from developing countries would survey the capacity of those countries to conduct energy research; it was expected to play an innovative role in energy policy formulation. The Group, at its first meeting in Canada in August, commissioned 120 papers to review energy research and technology.

Other UNU activities included a conference on international food data systems (Italy, February); a study and conference tour on food-energy interactions that visited China, France, India and Senegal (September-October); and a workshop to evaluate a Kathmandu-Kakani area base map and mountain hazards maps (Nepal, October).

In the year ended June 1983, UNU held a total of 41 workshops, seminars, symposia and meetings. The number of University fellows in training was 49, 331 having completed training. Moreover, the University had 32 associated institutions and more than 100 research and training units in more than 60 countries carrying out its work.

Preparatory work for the permanent headquarters of the University in Tokyo moved ahead with the allocation of a budgetary provision for the fiscal year 1984-1985 for planning. A working group of an advisory commission of the Japanese Ministry of Education met in December to discuss the draft guidelines for its planning and design.

The activities of UNU were discussed in the annual reports of its Council to the General Assembly, covering 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983(15) and 1 July 1983 to 30 June 1984.(14)

Implementation of JIU recommendations

Of 15 recommendations put forward by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) in a 1981 report assessing UNU and its prospects,(17) only two had not been implemented, the Secretary-General stated in a report to the Assembly.(18)

Whereas it had been recommended that the University Council should normally meet once a year, the Secretary-General noted the Council's conclusion that, because UNU was relatively young, its work demanded periodic policy review, and therefore, the Council should continue to meet twice yearly.

JIU also recommended that to avoid compartmentalization of research activities, there should be only one Vice-Rector (at the Assistant Secretary-General level); current Vice-Rectors should become Programme Directors or Deans and maintain their grades (D-2). The Secretary-General stated that the Council supported the Rector's preference for maintaining the current structure since the proposed reduction in status would make it more difficult to attract distinguished scholars to the positions in question. The medium-term perspective, 1982-1987, had as one of its principal objectives the avoidance of compartmentalization of research activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, following the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/178.

United Nations University

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2951(XXVII) of 11 December 1972, 3081(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3313(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, 3439(XXX) of 9 December 1975, 31/117 and 31/118 of 16 December 1976, 32/54 of 8 December 1977, 33/108 of 18 December 1978, 34/112 of 14 December 1979, 35/54 of 5 December 1980, 36/45 of 19 November 1981 and 37/143 of 17 December 1982,

Having considered the report of the Council of the United Nations University on the work of the University,

Noting with appreciation the progress being made towards the construction of a permanent headquarters building in Tokyo, with active steps being taken by the Government of Japan,

Also noting with appreciation the dedicated service rendered to the University by the members of the Council whose terms ended in May 1983,

Mindful of the formulation and adoption of the medium-term perspective, 1982-1987,

Noting decision 5.2.2 adopted on 13 October 1983 by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its one hundred and seventeenth session,

1. Notes with satisfaction the further constructive development of the activities of the United Nations University in research, training and the dissemination of knowledge under the medium-term perspective, using multidisciplinary and integrative approaches designed, in accordance with the Charter of the University, to promote greater understanding of urgent and pressing global problems and provide ideas for solving them;

2. Welcomes the initiation of a new programme planning process at the University Centre, designed to facilitate the participation of the United Nations University's networks of collaborating scholars, and, as part of this process, the creation of a planning and evaluation services unit;

3. Also welcomes the adoption by the Council of the United Nations University of the initial statute of the University, in accordance with its Charter, on the basis of the experience gained by the University since its establishment;

4. Notes with satisfaction that progress has been made towards the establishment of the first three research and training centres of the United Nations University, which will be concerned with development economics, natural resources in Africa and biotechnology, respectively, and the further development of the work of the University in helping to strengthen existing institutions in developing countries through the extension of its networks of associate and co-operating institutions and in placing increased emphasis on its post-graduate training through fellowships relevant to the development of research, training and institution-building;

5. Also notes with satisfaction the further expansion of the co-operative activities of the United Nations University with the United Nations, its bodies and the specialized agencies, particularly United Nations research and training institutions, and the increasing collaboration of the University with the international academic and scientific community;

6. Recognizes that the United Nations University needs to build up its Endowment Fund and other contributions in order to increase its core income, to which end a number of Member States have already extended positive co-operation;

7. Earnestly appeals to all Member States to take cognizance of the important developments at the United Nations University and to contribute urgently and generously to its Endowment Fund and, additionally or alternatively, to make operating contributions to the University to enable it to fulfil its mandate effectively, in accordance with its Charter and with the relevant General Assembly resolutions.

UNU Council activities

In 1983, the UNU Council held its twenty-first and twenty-second sessions in Tokyo from 27 June to 1 July and from 5 to 9 December, respectively. In June, the Council reviewed the University's progress and the Rector's report on developments since the previous session. In addition to authorizing him to negotiate agreements for establishing UNU research and training centres (see above), the Council considered setting up an institute for advanced studies. It discussed the Rector's proposals for institutional arrangements with the International Centre for Theoretical Physics (Trieste, Italy), a proposed UNU International Centre for Distance Learning, and a proposed joint facility of the International Council on Scientific Unions and its Committee on Science and Technology in Developing Countries (Madras, India). It designated three new associated institutions, namely: Agricultural University of Wageningen, the Netherlands; Instituto de Agroquímica y Tecnología de Alimentos, Valencia, Spain; and London School of Tropical Hygiene and Medicine, United Kingdom.

In December, the Council approved the University's biennial programme and budget for 1984-1985, showing the consolidation of activities from 12 sub-programmes in 1982 to nine programme areas in 1983. The budget, which totalled $36.3 million, was the first biennial programme and budget adopted by the Council and brought UNU into line with the United Nations system planning cycle.

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1983/184 adopted on 29 July, reiterated its request to the UNU Council to consider rescheduling its meetings so that, starting in 1984, its report could be submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session.

UNU finances

As at 31 December 1983, the total income available to the UNU General Operating Fund for the 1982-1983 biennium was $33.1 million, including interest income of $28.1 million earned on the Endowment Fund. The total expenditure against the General Operating Fund amounted to $33.7 million, of which $8.4 million comprised unliquidated obligations.

Combined assets of the General Operating Fund, the Endowment Fund, and the UNU External Projects Trust Funds, Housing Assistance Trust Fund and Library Trust Fund amounted to $149.9 million.

In resolution 38/178, the General Assembly recognized that UNU needed to build up its Endowment Fund and other contributions and appealed to Member States to contribute generously.

Fund-raising activities

In 1983, payments to the UNU Endowment Fund by eight countries amounted to $3,622,237 and payments to the General Operating Fund by seven countries amounted to $636,409; as at 31 December 1983, one State had pledged $25,000 to the General Operating Fund for 1984 (see table below). In addition, a number of Governments, institutions and other organizations made indirect contributions in cash and in kind to the work of the University, including extra funds to its associated institutions and major projects in various parts of the world.

Accounts for 1982-1983

In examining the UNU accounts for the biennium ended 31 December 1983, the Board of Auditors(19) found that of $500 million, which was the long-term target figure for contributions to the Endowment Fund, pledges had been made for $140.4 million as at 31 December 1983, of which $117.3 million had been received and approximately $4.2 million was adjusted as cumulative loss in exchange. UNU hoped to raise $100 million during the medium-term period 1982-1987, but had received only about $9.2 million during the first two years. Furthermore, of 21 countries which had pledged contributions to the Endowment Fund, eight had not contributed the full amount. The Board recommended, and the UNU administration agreed, that fund-raising efforts should be further intensified.

Although the University issued guidelines and administrative instructions to ensure control of the use of grants, there was no system for rendering accounts regularly to UNU by grant recipients, the Board stated. It recommended, and the UNU administration agreed, that suitable formats be designed for rendering semi-annual or annual statements of expenditures by such recipients.

Examination of the expenditures of ongoing projects revealed that in a number of cases expenditures were made either in excess of or without allotments, while in others allotments remained unutilized or underutilized. The Board recommended that budgetary control be strengthened at all levels and that implementation of projects on schedule be ensured; the UNU administration had confirmed that it was exercising stricter budgetary controls at all levels.

Chapter XVI

Environment

In 1983, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) held its eleventh session, and adopted 12 decisions on various environmental questions. The Executive Director of UNEP reported on the Programme's activities for the year in his annual report to the Council.⁽¹⁾

Forty-four new projects were approved by the Environment Fund in 1983; 37 projects were concluded. During the year, the Fund disbursed $22 million for programme activities; government contributions totalled $28 million.

The Council decided to conduct a detailed assessment of the implementation of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification at its 1984 session, while the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) continued to mobilize resources for anti-desertification projects. By resolution 38/164, the General Assembly asked the Governing Councils of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and UNEP to continue to provide support for UNSO, which was responsible for implementing the Plan. By resolution 38/163, the Assembly requested Member States that had not yet provided their comments on a plan to establish an international corporation to finance non-commercial desertification measures to do so as soon as possible.

A number of other resolutions and decisions on environmental questions were adopted by the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly. The Assembly, in resolution 38/161, approved the UNEP Governing Council's decision to establish an intergovernmental committee to assist it in preparing an environmental perspective to the year 2000 and beyond, and requested the Secretary-General to appoint the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of a special commission to assist them. In resolution 38/162, it requested the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to urge States to conduct bilateral consultations and reach an agreement to solve the problems of material remnants of war.

The Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS) of Earthwatch, the assessment arm of the environment programme, monitored such things as renewable natural resources, climate, health, the long-range transport of pollutants, and oceans.

Among other UNEP activities were a meeting of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts for the Elaboration of a Global Framework Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer; implementation of plans to combat desertification, including deforestation control, range management and soil protection; integrated approaches to environment and development and environmental management; and support measures such as environmental education, training and information.

By resolution 38/149 on protection against products harmful to health and the environment, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to make available and regularly update the consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted, or not approved by Governments. It took note in decision 38/442 of a report of the UNEP Executive Director on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment.

In addition, the Assembly, in resolution 38/165, took note of the UNEP Governing Council report on its 1983 session^(*) and the decisions contained therein; endorsed a decision that there should be no Council session in 1986 and that in 1987 the Council would decide finally on the periodicity of its sessions; and decided to expand the mandate of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control to include information exchange on anti-desertification policies and programmes.

Programme and finances of UNEP

The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) held its eleventh session at UNEP headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya, from 11 to 24 May 1983.

UNEP Programme

In an introductory report to the Governing Council, submitted in February,⁽³⁾ the Executive Director presented his views on developments in UNEP during 1982 and made a number of proposals concerning major issues to be dealt with in 1983.

By the first(4) of its six policy decisions, the Council, on 24 May, in addition to providing general policy guidance, dealt with the following subjects: state of the environment and environmental data reports; co-ordination; co-operation with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) (Habitat); two proposed conferences, one on industry and environment, the other a parliamentary conference on the environment; the relationship between UNEP and non-governmental organizations (NGOs); and the assessment of progress in implementing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification adopted by the 1977 United Nations Conference on Desertification.⁽⁵⁾ With regard to UNEP's relations with environmental NGOs, the Council encouraged the Executive Director to expand that relationship and to extend it to those organizations which were not directly environmental. It noted the Executive Director's intention to support a global meeting of environmental and developmental NGOs.

The second of the remaining policy decisions, all adopted on 23 May, related to the periodicity and duration of Governing Council sessions. The Council considered it not feasible to meet biennially; it decided that, as of 1984, it would meet for a maximum of eight working days, that on an experimental basis there would be no Council session in 1986, and that it would decide in 1987 on the periodicity of its sessions. It also decided to discontinue forthwith the system of intersessional informal consultations with Governments.

By a third policy decision,⁽⁷⁾ the Council recommended to the General Assembly arrangements for the preparation of an environmental perspective. In a fourth decision,⁽⁸⁾ the Council stated its views on Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea (see p. 336). The impacts of apartheid on the environment were the subject of another decision.⁽⁹⁾ A sixth decision contained an appeal to Governments to halt the arms race and prevent a major threat to man and his environment.⁽¹⁰⁾

In an omnibus decision adopted on 24 May 1983,⁽¹¹⁾ the Governing Council dealt with such matters as programme budget; environment and development; environmental awareness; oceans; water; terrestrial ecosystems; desertification; and regional activities. It requested the Executive Director, in implementing the programme, to be guided by the Governing Council's advice in respect of priorities.

Other programme decisions took up assistance to the South Asia Co-operative Environment Programme⁽¹²⁾ and regional programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean.⁽¹³⁾ dealt with environmental issues. To prepare for ACC's discussion of those issues, the Executive Director convened an inter-agency meeting of the Designated Officials for Environmental Matters (Geneva, 21-23 September).

In a November report to the Council,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/168 without vote.

International co-operation on the environment

At its 39th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1983, the Council:

(a) Took note of the reports of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its eleventh session and on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, and decided to transmit them, together with the recommendations of the Governing Council, to the General Assembly for consideration and action;

(b) Noted with appreciation Governing Council decision 11/2 of 23 May 1983, concerning the periodicity and duration of Governing Council sessions;

(c) Took note of Governing Council decision 11/3 of 23 May 1983 on the process of preparation of the environmental perspective, and decided to recommend to the General Assembly the adoption of the draft resolution annexed to that decision.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/168

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/111) without vote, 15 July (meeting 14); agenda item 14.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/165.

International co-operation in the field of the environment

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its eleventh session,

Eking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1983/168 of 25 July 1983 on international co-operation on the environment,

Noting also the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment, together with the sixth supplement to the register of such conventions and protocols,

Bearing in mind the involvement of all countries in the protection of the environment with a view to enhancing the quality of life for future generations,

Aware that the continuing increase in the production, stockpiling and risk of use of weapons of mass destruction and the development of new types of weapons not only pose a major threat to the environment and even to life on Earth, but also compete for limited resources that could be better used for constructive purposes, including development,

Reaffirming the need to strengthen international co-operation in the field of the environment, particularly in order to deal with the most serious environmental problems of the developing countries in line with the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Bearing in mind the interrelationships between people, resources, environment and development and convinced of the importance of assessing those interrelationships as they relate to international co-operation for development,

Recalling the catalytic mandate and role of the United Nations Environment Programme with regard to international co-operation in the field of the environment, especially with regard to integrating environmental considerations into the development process,

1. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its eleventh session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Welcomes section II of Governing Council decision 11/1 of 24 May 1983, in which it decided, inter alia, that the topic to be considered in the 1984 report on the state of the environment would be "The environment in the dialogue between and among developed and developing countries";

3. Takes note of sections V and VI of Governing Council decision 11/1, which relate to the convening of an international conference on world industry and environmental management and a parliamentary conference on the environment;

4. Takes note with appreciation of Governing Council decision 11/2 of 23 May 1983 on the periodicity and duration of Governing Council sessions and endorses the decision that there shall be no session of the Governing Council in 1986, on an experimental basis, and that in 1987 the Governing Council shall decide finally on either of the two options for the periodicity of its sessions in the light of the experience gained in the previous years;

5. Also takes note of Governing Council decision 11/5 of 23 May 1983 on the impacts of apartheid on the environment, directed at promoting public awareness of the plight of the victims of apartheid;

6. Welcomes part one of Governing Council decision 11/7 of 24 May 1983, by which the Council, while setting priorities for its implementation, approved the programme budget for the first biennium of the system-wide medium-term environment programme, 1984-1985, as an overall framework for activities of the United Nations Environment Programme during that period, and invites Governments participating in relevant governing bodies of specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to endeavour to take the provisions of the system-wide medium-term environment programme fully into account in their consideration of related issues, so as to achieve the full implementation of the system-wide programme;

7. Welcomes the importance attached by the Governing Council to regional approaches and programmes in the field of international environment co-operation, as reflected in its decisions 11/7, 11/8 and 11/9 of 24 May 1983;

8. Welcomes section VIII of Governing Council decision 11/1, in which the Council decided to devote two days, during its twelfth session, to a detailed assessment of the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat

Desertification, which will include a thorough analysis of the state of implementation of the principal components of the Plan, the lessons learned and the priorities for future action;

9. Decides to expand the mandate of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control to include information exchange on anti-desertification policies and programmes of its participants, in addition to its basic mandate as set out in General Assembly resolution 32/172 of 19 December 1977;

10. Welcomes the progress made in the implementation of the Montevideo Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law and appeals to Governments to participate actively in the Programme and provide adequate financial resources or facilities in order to achieve its full and timely implementation;

11. Reaffirms the need for strengthening the co-ordinating role of the United Nations Environment Programme and the need for additional resources to assist developing countries in dealing with serious environmental problems, and urges the Executive Director of the Programme, in consultation with Governments and international organizations concerned, to accelerate and intensify his efforts in this field;

12. Urges the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to facilitate the provision of expert assistance to and among developing countries, at their request, in the preparation, monitoring and evaluation of priority environmental programmes and projects, including the application of environmental impact assessment, and in promoting and increasing the exchange of information and experience with respect to the integration of environmental considerations into development activities;

13. Expresses its appreciation to Governments that have contributed to the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme, particularly to those that have done so for the first time in 1982 and 1983 and those that have increased their contributions for those years, and also to those countries which have changed their yearly payment procedures in order to make their contributions available as early as possible;

14. Notes with deep concern, however, the very meagre pledges to the Fund so far received from Governments and strongly appeals to all Governments to pledge their contributions as soon as possible for 1984, and where possible for 1985, preferably before the end of 1983.

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/36/702/Add.7) without vote: 21 November (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.71), based on informal consultations on 22-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.18); agenda item 78 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 25,30,31,45,46; plenary 102.

In addition to drafting changes, the adopted text differed from the 22-nation draft (Western and developing countries) in that the preambular paragraph on weapons of mass destruction and the environment and the paragraph on the impacts of apartheid were inserted.

State of the environment

In a February 1983 report to the Governing Council on the state of the environment,(15) the Executive Director highlighted three topics-hazardous wastes, acid rain and environmental aspects of energy farms, selected by the Governing Council in 1982. The Executive Director pointed out that hazardous wastes were generated by chemical processes, by cleaning or closing chemical factories, or by contaminated sites; until recently, many hazardous wastes had been disposed of without evaluating the environmental consequences; however, laws controlling their disposal had become effective in most developed countries, and developing countries could do much to avoid disposal problems by studying those laws.

Acid rain was an environmental problem in parts of Europe and North America. Similarly polluted areas were likely to exist elsewhere, especially around large urban and industrial conglomerations. Rain mixed with pollution from burning fossil fuels, produced by power stations, factories and motor vehicles, and brought down dilute sulphuric and nitric acid. It acidified lakes and rivers, killing fish, accelerated the corrosion of building materials, and damaged historic monuments and other cultural objects. More research was needed to develop advanced control technologies, reduce sulphur and nitrogen oxide emissions, and implement further energy conservation measures.

Other environmental problems could be caused by production of renewable energy sources. The report cautioned that large-scale energy farms-for example, areas of land or water devoted to growing plants for fuel-could cause pollution and other problems that must be assessed at an early stage to make sure that such "green energy" was developed in an environmentally sound way.

UNEP Council action. The UNEP Governing Council on 24 May⁽⁴⁾ decided that the topic to be considered in the 1984 report on the state of the environment would be "the environment in the dialogue between and among the developed and developing countries". It requested the Executive Director to ensure that the report included an analysis of emerging global environmental issues, and to make specific proposals on how selected indicators might be published so as to bring environmental trends alive to the world community, and how an index of environmental data and concrete assessment statements of major environmental problems might be produced.

The Council decision was welcomed by the General Assembly in resolution 38/165.

Environmental Perspective

In 1983, the UNEP Governing Council again took up the question of preparing an environmental perspective to the year 2000 and beyond. In a February 1983 report to the Council,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Executive Director summed up government views on the creation of an independent commission of eminent persons representing all regions to report on global environment perspectives and on establishing an intergovernmental process, involving all States, the United Nations system and the world scientific community, to develop the perspective document, and on other possible options.

In his recommendations, the Executive Director stressed that the perspective must provide a framework for activities and a basis for negotiations and agreement on modes of co-operation. The Governing Council should have central responsibility for preparing and recommending action on the perspective. The Executive Director considered establishing an intergovernmental committee of the Council to be the most effective way of preparing the perspective. A special commission, as recommended in 1982,⁽¹⁷⁾ would help develop the perspective and mobilize public opinion. The Executive Director made several recommendations with regard to status and composition of such a commission which, he suggested, should report to the Assembly through the Governing Council. Annexed to the Executive Director's report were terms of reference and financial implications relating to both an intergovernmental committee and a special commission.

The Governing Council, on 23 May,⁽⁷⁾ established, subject to Assembly approval of the financial implications, an open-ended intergovernmental inter-sessional preparatory committee and a special commission, to assist it in carrying out its mandate in regard to the environmental perspective. The committee was to hold its first session in May 1984. The Council recommended to the Assembly adoption of a draft resolution on the process of preparing the perspective.

On 25 July, in decision 1983/168 the Economic and Social Council took note of the Governing Council's decision together with its recommendation that the Assembly adopt the draft resolution. The Assembly followed that recommendation by adopting resolution 38/161 (see below).

In a November report,⁽⁴⁾ ACC dealt with general environmental matters, among them preparation of the Environmental Perspective. It stated that the process decided on was in keeping with ACC's recommendations in 1981 and 1982.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/161 without vote.

Process of preparation of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond

The General Assembly,

Recalling the importance it has attached at previous sessions to the development of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond,

Recalling also its request to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its eleventh session to make concrete recommendations to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1983, on the modalities for preparing the Environmental Perspective,

1. Notes with satisfaction decision 11/3 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the process of preparation of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted on 23 May 1983;

2. Welcomes the desire of the Governing Council to develop the Environmental Perspective and transmit it to the General Assembly for adoption, benefiting in carrying out that function from its consideration of the relevant proposals made by, a special commission;

3. Approves the decision of the Governing Council to establish, in order to assist it in fulfilling its mandate in regard to the Environmental Perspective and to report to it in that respect, an intergovernmental inter-sessional preparatory committee to articulate to the special commission at an early stage in its work the Governing Council's expectations regarding the matters which it hopes will, inter alia, receive consideration by the commission and, in this connection:

(a) Notes that the commission, at a preliminary stage in the formulation of its conclusions on matters within the mandate and purview of the United Nations Environment Programme, should make them known to the committee with a view to giving consideration to any views of the committee thereon;

(b) Notes from paragraph 41 of the report of the Governing Council on its eleventh session that the cost of the intergovernmental inter-sessional preparatory committee will not result in any net increase in the regular budget of the United Nations;

4. Also welcomes the intention of a number of Governments to support the preparation of the Environmental Perspective by facilitating the establishment of the special commission, through the provision of voluntary contributions for its financing;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and with Governments, and after such other appropriate consultations as they deem necessary, to appoint the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the special commission, who will subsequently select the members of that commission and accordingly establish the special commission, which should co-operate closely with the intergovernmental inter-sessional preparatory committee; the Chairman and Vice-Chairman should have experience of policy-making at the highest level, demonstrated interest in environmental and developmental issues and the capacity to attract attention to the work of the commission, and should represent both developed and developing countries;

6. Expresses its view that the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman, in selecting the members of the special commission, should take fully into account the need for appropriate geographical distribution and regional balance in membership and the importance of ensuring that at least half of the members of the commission are from the developing countries, as well as the need to consult as appropriate with representatives of Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, industry, the scientific community and others concerned with the environment;

7. Requests the Executive Director to establish an interim special account under the financial regulations of the United Nations to which voluntary contributions would be credited and from which disbursements would be made for the purposes of the establishment of the special commission, custody over and responsibility for the account to be transferred to that commission, in accordance with its procedures, upon its establishment;

8. Suggests that the special commission, when established, should focus mainly on the following terms of reference for its work:

(a) To propose long-term environmental strategies for achieving sustainable development to the year 2000 and beyond;

(b) To recommend ways in which concern for the environment may be translated into greater co-operation among developing countries and between countries at different stages of economic and social development and lead to the achievement of common and mutually supportive objectives, which take account of the interrelationships between people, resources, environment and development;

(c) To consider ways and means by which the international community can deal more effectively with environmental concerns, in the light of the other recommendations in its report;

(d) To help to define shared perceptions of long-term environmental issues and of the appropriate efforts needed to deal successfully with the problems of protecting and enhancing the environment, a long-term agenda for action during the coming decades, and aspirational goals for the world community, taking into account the relevant resolutions of the session of a special character of the Governing Council in 1982;

9. Further suggests that, in fulfilling its terms of reference, the special commission should:

(a) Maintain an exchange of views with the scientific community, environmentalists and all other sections of public opinion, particularly youth, concerned with the environment, and those concerned with the relationship between development and environment;

(b) Receive the views of Governments, principally through the Governing Council and its intergovernmental inter-sessional preparatory committee, and through contacts with national leaders, opinion makers and concerned international figures;

(c) Maintain links with other intergovernmental bodies within and outside the United Nations system, while, however, using the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the designated officials for environmental matters as the channels of communication with the United Nations system; the willingness of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to assist should be communicated to the commission;

(d) Take account of the scope of environmental issues as defined by the United Nations system-wide medium-term environment programme and as reflected in the efforts of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Environment Programme, in the field of the environment;

(e) Make full use of relevant existing reports and material;

10. Considers that the special commission should make available a report on environment and the global problématique to the year 2000 and beyond, including proposed strategies for sustainable development, within a period of two years from its establishment;

11. Decides that, on matters within the mandate and purview of the United Nations Environment Programme, the report of the special commission should in the first instance be considered by the Governing Council of the Programme; for transmission to the General Assembly together with its comments and for use as basic material in the preparation, for adoption by the Assembly, of the Environmental Perspective;

12. Further decides that, on those matters which are under consideration or review by the General Assembly itself, the Assembly will consider the relevant aspects of the report of the special commission;

13. Recognizes that the special commission may in addition address its report, after consideration by the Governing Council or the intergovernmental inter-sessional preparatory committee, to other forums, intergovernmental and non-governmental, or to Governments, individuals and the general public, as it sees fit, it being understood that the report of the commission will not be binding on Governments.

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.7) without vote, 4 November (meeting 30); UNEP draft, recommended by Economic and Social Council decision 1983/168 (A/C.2/38/L.5); agenda item 78 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 25, 30, plenary 102.

Regional activities

The co-ordination of activities under various regional action plans continued under UNEP throughout 1983. Among its activities were a long-term pollution monitoring and research programme in the Mediterranean which became operational in 1983. The first phase of the Blue Plan was completed, providing a comprehensive picture of the state of the environment and development in the region, and proposals for a second phase were prepared.

In East Africa, a draft regional convention and two protocols were prepared and reviewed by a meeting of government experts in December. The experts also prepared country reports on the status of natural resources and conservation, environmental legislation and socio-economic activities. The reports were collated by FAO, the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN) and UNEP into regional reviews.

Other regional activities included desertification control, action to combat marine pollution, reforestation, regional seas action programme, information and training (see below).

UNEP Council action. The Governing Council, in its 24 May decision on policy matters,(4) reaffirmed its views expressed at its 1982 session(18) regarding UNEP's regional presence in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean and West Asia, and agreed that its presence should continue to be maintained on the current basis in Europe.

In its omnibus decision on programme matters,(“) the Council also dealt with regional activities. It requested the Executive Director to give high priority to assistance to African countries for dealing with the most urgent environmental problems, namely, desertification; safe water supply; protection of forests, reafforestation and soil management; food production systems and prevention of food losses; public awareness of environmental issues; protection of the marine environment; development of alternative energy resources; wildlife conservation; and the environmental aspects of mining and industrial development. The Council invited the Governments of the region to convene an African environmental conference to identify common problems and discuss national environmental priorities.

Referring to Asia and the Pacific, the Council requested the Executive Director to give high priority to assistance to regional activities and to provide financial support, including support for the Environmental Co-ordinating Unit of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), and to seek further funds.

By the same decision, the Executive Director was invited to continue co-operating closely on environmental issues with the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), and parties to the ECE Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution which entered into force in March 1983 were urged to reach agreement on financial arrangements for implementing the Convention at the first meeting of its Executive Body.

The Council also acted on environmental information and environmental education and training in the different regions (see below).

Noting with satisfaction the extent of co-operation among the member countries of the South Asia Co-operative Environment Programme, the Council, on 24 May,(12) requested the Executive Director to accord high priority to projects within the framework of that Programme, and to seek additional funds, especially for the priority areas of environment and development, environment and energy, environment and education, and marine ecosystems.

By another decision of 24 May,(13) the Council expressed appreciation to the Executive Director for convening the Meeting of Government-nominated Experts on Regional Environmental Programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean (Buenos Aires, 14-17 March). It decided to support the strengthening of regional and subregional environmental activities and urged Governments and international organizations to strengthen support for the Latin American Environmental Training Network, the Action Plan for the Protection of the Marine Environment and Coastal Areas of the South-East Pacific, and the Action Plan of the Caribbean Environment Programme. It recommended that future intergovernmental meetings in the region be preceded by meetings of high-level government experts to consider the technical aspects of environmental programmes. In addition, the Council invited regional intergovernmental agencies, United Nations organizations and NGOs to participate in the programmes adopted at the meeting and requested the Executive Director to give special consideration to intraregional co-operation.

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/165, welcomed the importance attached to regional approaches and programmes by the Governing Council.

Joint meeting with Habitat

The sixth joint meeting of the Executive Director of UNCHS (Habitat) and the Bureau of the Commission on Human Settlements with the Executive Director of UNEP and the Bureau of its Governing Council was held on 13 and 14 December 1983 at Nairobi.⁽¹⁹⁾ The meeting considered the following areas of collaboration: human settlements planning in relation to population and environmental policies; support of research and training in settlements planning; systems approach to rural settlements planning; global review of human settlements; energy requirements of rural settlements and the urban poor; assessment of environmental conditions in human settlements; environmental aspects of settlements planning and development; environmentally sound technologies; and research, training and information dissemination.

Noting with concern that both UNEP and UNCHS faced a lack of resources for key co-operative projects, the meeting hoped for broader support.

It was further noted that a clearing house mechanism had been established to channel additional resources through UNEP to deal with serious environmental problems in developing countries (see below). The bureaux felt that serious human settlements problems in those countries should be considered for support through that mechanism. It was also suggested that the UNCHS Executive Director might consider establishing a similar procedure.

In a 24 May decision,⁽⁴⁾ the UNEP Governing Council expressed satisfaction at the continuing co-operation between UNCHS and UNEP; requested the UNEP Executive Director to invite UNCHS to take part in UNEP's efforts to develop environmental guidelines for solid waste disposal; and asked him to ensure wide dissemination and use of those guidelines, as well as of the guidelines for environmentally sound human settlements. The Council expressed the view that annual joint meetings would no longer be necessary after 1984, because of the expected close proximity of the headquarters of both organizations in Nairobi by the middle of that year, and requested that its view be brought to the attention of the Commission on Human Settlements at its 1984, session.

UNEP Fund and trust funds

During 1983, the UNEP Environment Fund disbursed $21,867,238 for programme activities-not including $244,771 for activities under the programme reserve-in the following areas: human settlements and health, $2,263,006; support, $3,974,758; environment and development, $1,444,555; oceans, $3,370,195; energy, $525,956; environmental management and law, $360,266; terrestrial ecosystems, $2,932,105; natural disasters, $88,328; Earthwatch, $4,863,048; environmental data, $136,215; and arid and semi-arid lands, $1,908,806.⁽²⁰⁾

Forty-four new projects were approved by the Fund in 1983, compared with 70 in 1982; 37 projects were closed. At the end of 1983, a total of 299 projects were still open. The share of global projects was 57.4 per cent; regional, 30 per cent; and interregional, 12.6 per cent. Projects were shared among the regions as follows: Africa, 11.9 per cent; Asia, 8.1 per cent; Latin America, 7.9 per cent; Europe, 1.7 per cent; and North America, 0.3 per cent.

In 1983, no contributions were paid into the Regional Trust Fund for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment and Coastal Areas of Bahrain, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Contributions of $2.23 million were received by the Trust Fund for the Protection of the Mediterranean Sea against Pollution; $704,328 by the Regional Trust Fund for the Implementation of the Action Plan for the Caribbean Environment Programme; $464,134 by the Trust Fund for the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora; and $67,000 by the Regional Trust Fund for the Implementation of the Action Plan for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment and Coastal Areas of the East Asian Seas.

Procedures for administering the new international Sasakawa Environment Prize were agreed on in 1983, and the Japan Shipbuilding Industry Foundation contributed $1 million to a trust fund to finance the prize. In October 1983, the United Nations Secretary-General announced the establishment of a Prize Selection Committee.

The UNEP Governing Council, on 23 May, adopted three decisions on the Environment Fund and UNEP-administered trust funds. The Council approved for 1984-1985 $70 million for programme activities and $2 million for Fund programme reserve activities;⁽²¹⁾ requested the Executive Director to pursue efforts to obtain additional resources for dealing with serious environmental problems in developing countries(22) (see below); and approved revised appropriations for programme and programme support costs-$20,600,000 in 1982-1983 and $26,020,000 in 1984-1985.⁽²³⁾

The Council reiterated its appeal to Governments that had not yet pledged a contribution to the Environment Fund for 1983 to do so, and again appealed for contributions to be paid as near to the beginning of the year as possible. It reaffirmed the desirability of achieving a Fund programme during the medium-term environment programme 1984-1989, of $42.5 million per annum in 1982 prices.

UNEP administered nine trust funds and a Special Account for financing the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see below). The Governing Council, on 23 May,(21) extended until 31 December 1985 the following six trust funds: the trust fund for the protection and development of the marine environment and coastal areas of the Gulf States; the trust fund for protection of the Mediterranean Sea; the trust fund for the Convention on international trade in endangered species; the trust fund for the protection and development of the marine environment and coastal areas of the West and Central African region; the trust funds for the Caribbean and the East Asian Seas.

In resolution 38/165, the General Assembly expressed appreciation to those Governments that had contributed to the Environment Fund, but noted with deep concern the meagre pledges so far received. It appealed to all Governments to pledge their contributions as soon as possible for 1984, and where possible for 1985.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/228 A, decided to allocate one half of the net revenues from the sale of postage stamps on the conservation and protection of nature to UNEP for financing projects promoting the protection of nature and endangered species. It also requested the UNEP Executive Director to report to the Governing Council on the results of the projects.

Desertification control

Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

In January 1983, the Executive Director submitted a report to the Governing Council,⁽¹⁾ on progress achieved since the Council's 1982 session in implementing the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.⁽²⁾ After reviewing national and international action, he concluded that almost nothing indicated a reversal in the trends leading to more desertification, and that countries affected by it continued to give low priority to its solution. He stressed that among the areas in need of attention, the most important were regional action, financing, and the need to secure for desertification control projects a treatment different from that accorded to standard development projects. Among other measures, the Executive Director suggested that the Council might wish to draw the attention of Governments to the disastrous effects of desertification, and urge serious efforts to implement the Plan.

The Consultative Group for Desertification Control held its fourth meeting at Nairobi, Kenya, from 15 to 17 February.

Expressing deep concern about the slow implementation of the Plan of Action, the Governing Council, on 24 May,⁽³⁾ invited Governments and international organizations to support and strengthen the role of the Group and enable it to achieve its objectives. The Council invited the Assembly to consider expanding the Group's role to include information exchange, appealed for financial contributions and requested the Executive Director to persuade Governments to make their views known in reasonable time, in particular with reference to providing additional resources.

In an October report⁽⁴⁾ to the General Assembly submitted in response to a December 1982 Assembly request,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General summarized ten substantive replies from Governments containing views on financing the Plan, in particular on the establishment of an international financial corporation to finance non-commercial desertification measures, proposed in 1981.⁽⁶⁾ Concluding, the Secretary-General stated that the response from Member States in 1982(7) and 1983 had been very limited, and the great majority of the countries affected had not replied at all to his invitation for their comments. Therefore, he was not able to submit an objective report in 1983. He suggested that the Assembly might again wish to urge Governments to communicate their views not later than 30 April 1984, so that a final report could be prepared.

The ACC Inter-agency Working Group on Desertification held its eighth and ninth meetings at Geneva in April and September 1983, respectively.

In a November report on environmental issues,⁽⁸⁾ ACC again emphasized the need for integrated national action and for increased financial assistance to anti-desertification projects; estimates showed that resources of $2.4 billion annually for a period of 20 years were necessary to halt desertification. ACC suggested, that in order to overcome shortage of manpower, indigenous scientific institutions should focus on desertification projects. It considered it important that the assessment of the extent and nature of desertification should continue towards the establishment of a United Nations data base. Concluding, ACC called for intensified international efforts to prevent further deterioration and bring desertification to a halt by the end of the century.

Implementation of the Plan of Action in the Sudano-Sahelian region was also dealt with by the UNEP Council and the Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 33/163.

Study on financing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/172 of 19 December 1977, 33/89 of 15 December 1978, 34/184 of 18 December 1979; 36/191 of 17 December 1981 and 37/220 of 20 December 1982, dealing with the implementation and financing of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on financing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Notes that again very few replies were received from Governments in response to paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 37/220, thus not permitting the Secretary-General to prepare, in co-operation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, the report requested in paragraph 5 of that resolution;
3. Requests again all Member States that have not set provided their comments to the Secretary-General 'on the feasibility studies and concrete recommendations for the implementation of the additional measures of financing, as well as on the modalities for obtaining financial resources, as described in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 1 October 1981, to do so as soon as possible;

4. Also requests all Member States that have not yet provided their comments to the Secretary-General on the expert feasibility study and working plan for the establishment of an international financial corporation to finance non-commercial measures to combat desertification, contained in chapter V of the annex to his report, also to do so as soon as possible, particularly with respect to:

- (a) The establishment of the corporation;
- (b) Their interest in participating financially therein;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.7) without vote. 14 November (meeting 39); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.37), based on informal consultations on 3-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.15); agenda item 78 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 25, 30, 39; plenary 102.

In paragraphs 3 and 4, instead of requesting, the original draft sponsored by Jamaica, the Sudan and Turkey would have had the Assembly urge and strongly urge Member States to provide their comments; by the original, the Assembly would have also asked that they be submitted no later than 30 April 1985.

Desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region

In the annex to a January 1983 report to the UNEP Council,⁽¹⁾ on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, the Executive Director pointed out that the 19 countries (Benin, Cape Verde, Chad, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, Upper Volta) covered by the desertification control mandate of UNESO—a joint venture of UNEP and UNDP—had an area of 12.4 million square kilometres, of which 80 per cent were arid or semi-arid compared with a world average of some 30 per cent. Over 90 per cent of the rangelands and 85 per cent of the rainfed crop lands of the region were affected by desertification. The Executive Director gave an overview of the main features of UNESO activities which included forestry; range and water management; sand-dune fixation; planning and co-ordination; and other activities involving integrated approaches and alternative or supplementary livelihood systems aimed at easing pressure on the land. The Executive Director's report was transmitted to the General Assembly by a 29 July note of the Secretary-General.⁽⁹⁾

The UNDP Administrator, in his report on 1983 UNDP activities,⁽¹⁰⁾ stated that the countries of the region affected by desertification had a population of 212 million. Total resources mobilized by UNESO amounted to $62.6 million since the inception of its desertification control mandate in 1979,⁽¹¹⁾ with funds mobilized in 1983 amounting to $14.6 million.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a May report⁽¹²⁾ by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on UNESO activities, with his own comments made in June (see p. 526).

In its November 1983 report on environmental matters,⁽⁸⁾ ACC agreed with the Executive Director's concluding remarks in his report to the UNEP Council that the year had passed with almost nothing to indicate a reversal in the deteriorating trends leading to further desertification and loss of crop land, and less food-producing capacity. ACC noted the Council's decision of 24 May⁽³⁾ inviting Governments and international organizations to facilitate the task of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control, and noted that some progress had been accomplished during the year in mobilizing additional resources for Consultative Group projects.

UNEP Council action. The UNEP Council, in its 24 May decision on programme matters,⁽³⁾ expressed satisfaction at the progress made by UNESO in assisting Governments of the region, and invited the General Assembly to consider expanding UNESO's mandate to include the environmental consequences of drought.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1983/168, took note of the UNEP Executive Director's report on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/164.

Implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

Recalling its resolutions 36/190 of 17 December 1981 and 37/216 of 20 December 1982.

Noting part seven, section B, paragraph 5, of decision 11/7 of 24 May 1983 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region,

Noting also Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/68 of 29 July 1983 on the climatic situation and drought in Africa,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

1. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme;

2. Expresses its satisfaction with the progress made by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, on behalf of the United Nations Environment Programme, under a joint venture between the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Development Programme, to assist the Governments of the region in implementing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

3. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to continue to provide adequate support for the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in order to enable it to respond more adequately to the pressing needs of the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region;

4. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to examine, at its twelfth session, the possibility of including Ghana and Togo in the list of countries which receive assistance through the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in implementing in the Sudano-Sahelian region the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Expresses its gratitude to the Governments, agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations and other organizations that have contributed to the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

6. Urges all Governments to respond favourably to requests for assistance from the Governments of the Sudano-Sahelian region in combating desertification;

7. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to continue to report annually to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.7) without vote, 14 November (meeting 39); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.38), based on informal consultations on 20-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.20); agenda item 78 (g)
Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 25, 30, 39; plenary 102.

Paragraph 4 was added to the draft sponsored by 20 African States. Also, by that text, the Assembly would have invited the Governing Councils of UNDP and UNEP to strengthen their support for UNSO, rather than requesting them to continue supporting it.

In resolution 38/225 on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region, the Assembly urged Governments to make special efforts to increase UNSO resources, through contributions to the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see Chapter II of this section), as well as through bilateral channels.

Protection against harmful products

In accordance with a December 1981 request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in May 1983, a report on exchange of information on banned hazardous chemicals and unsafe pharmaceutical products⁽²⁾ to both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. The report summarized consultations with Member States on their experience in the exchange of such information, and described work by United Nations organizations which might be useful to governmental authorities. Certain conclusions were offered tentatively: the majority of the responding countries had legislative and other institutional and technical machinery to keep out undesired imports of hazardous chemicals and pharmaceutical products; international information systems available were not being used to the fullest extent. An unanswered question was whether countries had an adequate infrastructure to control the import of hazardous substances and if they did, whether it was used. Another difficulty was the lack of consistent product information and the problem of misrepresented products. An annex to the report described efforts by United Nations organizations to assist Governments in information exchange on harmful products.

Speaking on 3 November before the Assembly's Second Committee, a United Nations Secretariat representative reported on progress in implementing the Assembly's December 1982 request⁽³⁾ that the Secretary-General prepare a consolidated list of products whose consumption or sale had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or, in the case of pharmaceuticals, not approved. The list was to be based on information available within the United Nations system as well as from Governments. The Secretariat had collected information from United Nations bodies and agencies, primarily from the World Health Organization (WHO), UNEP and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations. A first list, based on information from both specialized agencies and Governments, was in an advanced stage of preparation, with the English version expected to be ready by the end of 1983; the list would be transmitted directly to Governments. So far, only 25 Governments had replied to the request for additional information; several had underlined the difficulties involved in preparing a list of the type requested and had indicated the need for more consultations on the subject. Though it was possible to produce the list without assistance from Governments, the result would be rather ineffectual; it was hoped that all Governments would supply the necessary information. A review of the format of the list could be undertaken at the 1984 Assembly session on the basis of the first edition.

The 1983 activities of UNEP concerning the effects of chemicals on human and environmental health were reported on by the UNEP Executive Director in his annual report(4) to the Governing Council (see chapter XV of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/149 without vote.

Protection against products harmful to health and the environment

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/166 of 16 December 1981 and 37/137 of 17 December 1982,

Bearing in mind the oral report presented by the Secretariat on 3 November 1983 with regard to progress made in the implementation of resolution 37/137,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the exchange of information on banned hazardous chemicals and unsafe pharmaceutical products, and of the work being carried out by the organizations of the United Nations system;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the work carried out in consultation with organizations of the United Nations system on the consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale have been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or, in the case of pharmaceuticals, not approved by Governments, is in the process of being completed;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make available the consolidated list, as established on the basis of information supplied thus far, in accordance with the objectives of General Assembly resolution 37/137, and to bring it up to date on a regular basis;

4. Urges the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, particularly the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, and other intergovernmental organizations to continue to co-operate fully in providing information for the consolidated list and for its updated versions;

5. Appreciates the co-operation extended by Governments and urges all Governments, in particular those that have not yet done so, to provide the necessary information for inclusion in the consolidated list and its updated versions, as well as comments and views that they deem relevant;

6. Urges non-governmental organizations to extend co-operation to the Secretary-General regarding the preparation of the consolidated list, particularly in the identification of potential sources of information among national Governments and in obtaining governmental information on relevant regulatory actions;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, for purposes of review by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, to submit a report on the implementation of Assembly resolution 37/137, including the consolidated list, taking into account the latest information and comments collected for possible improvement of the list, as envisaged in paragraph 6 of resolution 37/137;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the exchange of information on banned hazardous chemicals and unsafe pharmaceutical products identifying elements for possible further work in this area in regard to the needs and capabilities of developing countries to monitor and control those substances in the light of the relevant observations in the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Requests the Secretary-General and the competent organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to provide, within available resources, the necessary technical assistance to the developing countries, at their request, for the establishment or strengthening of national systems for better use by those countries of the information provided with regard to banned hazardous chemicals and unsafe pharmaceutical products, as well as for an adequate monitoring of the importation of those products.

GEMS activities

Environmental assessment and monitoring continued in 1983 to be one of the key tasks of UNEP. Its environment assessment programme Earthwatch was designed as an internationally co-ordinated global system of national facilities and services to study the interaction between man and the environment, provide early warning of potential environmental hazards and determine the state of selected natural resources. The cornerstone of "Earthwatch" was the Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS), a collective international effort to acquire, through monitoring, the data needed for the rational management of the environment. The activities of GEMS, which became operational in 1975,⁽⁵⁾ were divided in 1983 into live major programmes: renewable natural resource monitoring, climate-related monitoring, health-related monitoring, long-range transport of pollutants monitoring, and ocean monitoring.

Resource monitoring

In 1983, UNEP continued its investigations into the feasibility of establishing a global resource information data base. Sectoral and ad hoc expert working groups examined the desirability and logistics of a global system which would compile, in a geographically referenced form, the many data sets which had been collected within the GEMS monitoring networks. Preliminary designs specified a system by which national and regional planners would be supplied with complex sets of environmental information in easily usable form while building up capabilities for handling environmental data at the national level.

To illustrate how environmental data stored in the global data base might be analysed, data from the GEMS Global Assessment of Tropical Forest Resources were analysed by country to furnish, inter alia, a comparison of relative and absolute rates of deforestation. Such analyses were central to the production of environmental assessments.

A pilot project on the inventory and monitoring of Sahelian pastoral ecosystems in Senegal continued to demonstrate the usefulness of GEMS-style ecological monitoring to West Africa. A Workshop on Monitoring of Sahelian Pastoral Ecosystems (Dakar, Senegal, 16-18 November) was attended by rangeland practitioners from throughout the Sahelian region. There was widespread agreement on the soundness and relevance of the theory of rangeland monitoring; it remained to translate the theory into practice.

Two new resource monitoring projects were initiated in Latin America. In Peru, the dynamics of forest and surrounding ecosystems in the High Sierras were studied to gain better understanding of the processes of land degradation. In southern Chile, the behaviour of pollutants in relatively untouched temperate mixed forests was examined, with the assistance of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) and UNESCO; the results were to be compared to those of similar monitoring projects in the United States.

Climate-related monitoring

More analyses were completed in 1983 of data furnished by the UNEP-WMO Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network. However, the low sampling frequency and the probable contamination of many samples by sea-salt at isolated island stations had led to problems in analysing the data; it appeared that the data were not sufficiently reliable to serve as indicators of long-range atmospheric transport and deposition. Those findings prompted a critical reassessment of sampling procedures within the network.

Health-related monitoring

Analysis of data from the health-related monitoring networks continued during the year. A UNEP-WHO project on the assessment of human exposure to pollutants published findings on organochlorine compounds. The general observation was that levels of organochlorines, including dichlorodiphenyltrichloroethane (DDT), in human milk, had decreased over a nine-year period in those largely industrialized countries which had restricted or prohibited the use of DDT a decade ago. Industrialized countries tended to have lower levels of DDT, dichlorodiphenyldichloroethylene (DDE) and hexachlorocyclohexane (HCH) in milk fat than more agrarian countries. In the case of polychlorinated biphenyls, however, countries such as the Federal Republic of Germany and Sweden had higher levels than other industrialized countries.

The Monitoring and Assessment Research Centre at the University of London prepared for UNEP and WHO an analysis of air pollution concentrations in selected urban areas between 1973 and 1980. In cities with more than five years' data, the trends for both sulphur dioxide and suspended particulate matter were down. The general decrease in air pollution concentrations was attributed to the installation of emission reduction systems, the use of low-sulphur fuels, the enactment of oil conservation policies and the use of higher chimneys.

An Interregional Expert Review Meeting on Evaluation of Water Quality Data (Burlington, Canada, 17-21 October 1983) examined the status of the GEMS water programme and the integration of water quality monitoring into the activities to be conducted at proposed Health Exposure Assessment Locations, which were to be established to co-ordinate monitoring and assessment of exposure to various sources. The participants agreed that the number of variables collected in the current monitoring programme could be reduced, but at the same time recommended that, in order to achieve comprehensive representation of ranges in climate, urbanization and industrialization, the number of assessment locations should be increased from 15 to 27.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/57, urged Governments to develop and utilize techniques to monitor the environmental impact of water projects, and to ensure that environmental and human health considerations would be incorporated in the planning, implementation and operation of water schemes.

Long-range transport of pollutants monitoring

Monitoring the movement of airborne pollutants across national boundaries continued, even though extension of the programme to developing countries, where the extent of the acid rain problem had not yet been ascertained, was hampered by lack of resources.

An expert meeting on the meteorological aspects of the second phase of the European Monitoring and Evaluation Programme (Darmstadt, Federal Republic of Germany, 10-14 October), which monitored the long-range transport of airborne pollutants, examined the results obtained from data collection and modelling of the behaviour of sulphur dioxide by the co-operating Meteorological Synthesizing Centres in Moscow, USSR, and Oslo, Norway. The experts found that model predictions compared well with observed data, but that both needed to be further refined; the programme, developed in conjunction with the Economic Commission for Europe, needed to be expanded, particularly in view of recent damage sustained by European forests.

Ocean monitoring

At an International Symposium on Integrated Global Ocean Monitoring (Tallinn, USSR, 2-10 October) technical reports on the current state of ocean monitoring were reviewed. The importance of global ocean monitoring was highlighted. Participants called in particular for the merging of plans to monitor physical and ecological parameters. The monitoring of sea surface temperatures from co-ordinated satellite and ship observations was also felt to be important. Developing countries asked that special mention be made of the potential usefulness of the UNEP regional seas programme (see below) in relation to global ocean monitoring.

Ozone layer depletion

At its sixth session (Geneva, 5-8 April), the UNEP Co-ordinating Committee on the Ozone Layer prepared a new assessment of ozone layer depletion and its impacts, based on the results of national research programmes. The Committee found that current calculations indicated an ultimate reduction of 3 to 5 per cent in the total ozone column, considering only emissions of chlorofluorocarbons 11 and 12 at their current rates. This was a drop from 1981 predictions, resulting from new data on chemical reaction rates.

An assessment carried out by the United States National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) in late 1983 confirmed that estimate. The NASA assessment suggested that ozone column increases would outweigh decreases for the next few decades. One of the reasons was the injection of oxides of nitrogen into the upper troposphere and lower stratosphere by subsonic aircraft. However, the assessment also pointed to major difficulties in predicting the evolution of the ozone column beyond a few decades, arising from uncertainty about future atmospheric methane concentrations.

If atmospheric methane continued to increase at a substantial rate, the combined effect of methane and fluorocarbons might result in no ultimate depletion of column ozone.

Notwithstanding the revised estimate, there were still grounds for concern about the consequences of increased ultraviolet radiation which would occur as a result of ozone depletion, especially with regard to agricultural production, fisheries and human health. The Committee observed that distortion of the vertical ozone profile, as suggested by multiple-scenario models, might become more important than changes in the total amount as far as climatic implications were concerned. Calculations indicated that early next century the combined radiative effect of ozone and other trace gases on the surface temperature might be of the same order as that calculated for carbon dioxide at that time.

A seventh session of the Committee was tentatively planned for 1984.

In 1983, the Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts for the Elaboration of a Global Framework Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer held the second part of its second session (Geneva, 11-15 April) and its third session (Geneva, 17-21 October). The Group produced a revised draft text, two draft technical annexes and a separate draft protocol for the control, limitation and reduction of the use and emissions of fully halogenated chlorofluorocarbons.

The revised draft convention(6) included a preamble, 22 articles, and two annexes. The articles covered definitions, general obligations, research and monitoring, scientific and technological co-operation, transmission of information, conference of the contracting parties, secretariat, advisory body, adoption of protocols, amendment of the convention (or protocols), status of annexes, adoption and amendment of annexes, amendment by simplified procedure, settlement of disputes, signature, ratification, accession, entry into force of the convention, reservations, withdrawal, depositary and text languages. The annexes concerned research and monitoring, and information exchange.

UNEP Council action. The UNEP Council, on 24 May,(7) expressed appreciation of the work of the Working Group. It requested the Executive Director to convene a third session in 1983 and if required another in 1984, with a view to having the Group complete its work and transmit an agreed draft convention, through the Executive Director and the UNEP Council, to the General Assembly. It called on Governments and international organizations to participate fully in the Working Group's sessions, appealed to Governments to provide financial resources and facilities, and requested the Executive Director to report in 1984 on progress made on finalizing the draft convention, and to make recommendations with a view to its adoption.

Acid rain

In his report to the UNEP Council on the state of the environment(s) (see above), the Executive Director dealt with acid rain. He stated that the acidification of the environment was a major problem in several regions, particularly in Europe and North America, and might become one in others. The first step towards a solution would be to assess how each regional environment could resist acid fall-out. This would form the basis for implementing pollution control measures to keep deposition at safe levels. In practice, however, that approach would be difficult, as not enough was known about what deposition rates were acceptable, because pollutants were carried for long distances in the air and then distributed unevenly, and because there were uncertainties over the cost-effectiveness of control measures. Nor was enough known about the transport of pollutants to be able to predict, except very broadly, what effects reduced emission in one area would have on deposition rates in another. The Executive Director therefore deemed a stepwise approach to controlling acidification more feasible, both politically and economically.

He also stressed the need for meteorologically and ecologically oriented research topics, and for information on the effects on health of the increasing spread of cadmium and other toxic metals as a result of acidification; among other things, the levels of metals in food, human tissues and body fluids must continue to be monitored. Furthermore, the Executive Director stated, there must be more effort to develop ways of improving energy conservation, environmentally appropriate technologies for producing heat and power, and techniques for removing sulphur from fossil fuels and gaseous emissions.

In its 24 May decision on policy issues,⁽⁹⁾ the Council requested the Executive Director to consider UNEP's potential role in facilitating the monitoring of acidity of rainfall in developing countries where the extent of the acid rain problem had not yet been ascertained.

Terrestrial ecosystems

Tropical woodlands and forests ecosystems

The general public became more aware during 1983 of the consequences of unabated deforestation and forest depletion, and Governments responded by implementing programmes to reduce demands on their forest resources to a sustainable level. UNEP assisted by developing the basic information necessary to implement environmentally sound tropical forest management programmes and by training scientists and technicians to continue the programmes.

Training workshops were organized to enable managers and planners to draw up national programmes to conserve tropical forest ecosystems. A workshop was held on the management of indigenous hardwoods in west and central Africa (Abidjan, Ivory Coast, October); participants from eight African countries decided that a research programme should be undertaken to improve the quality and growth rates of west African timber trees. A meeting on reforestation (Wageningen, the Netherlands, September) proposed a world-wide programme to address the basic causes of deforestation and forest degradation; it recommended that the global rate of tree planting be increased fivefold.

In its 24 May decision on programme matters,⁽⁷⁾ the UNEP Council commended the initiatives taken by the countries of the South Asia Co-operative Environment Programme to overcome the regional deforestation problem by designating 1988 as Year of the Trees for South Asia. It invited other countries in the region to designate 1988 as Year of the Trees, and asked the Executive Director to support the formulation of projects in connection with the Year.

Mountain, island, coastal and other ecosystems

Awareness grew in 1983 of the fragility of some of the less resilient ecosystems, particularly those associated with coasts and islands. Five projects were being carried out by UNEP in this area; four were regional—two in Latin America and the Caribbean, one in Africa, and one in Europe and the Mediterranean—and one was global, dealing primarily with coastal and freshwater ecosystems.

Soils

During 1983, the international community became increasingly aware that the capacity of land and soil resources for further increases in agricultural production was rapidly diminishing. Increasing demand for food in Africa had resulted in an expansion of crop cultivation to marginal land. In Latin America, farming had encroached on forests, pasture land and bush. The average annual global loss of agricultural land to non-agricultural use was approximately 8 million hectares; erosion had destroyed an additional 3 million hectares and desertification 2 million, while 2 million had been lost to toxification.

A draft plan to implement the World Soils Policy was revised by UNEP. The policy sought to apply scientific management to the soils of the world; draw attention to the extent and importance of soil degradation and loss; monitor changes in soil quality and patterns of land use; slow down the loss of productive land to non-agricultural uses; enlarge the area and improve the quality of the world's agricultural land; and increase production on a sustainable basis.

Draft guidelines for the control of soil degradation were prepared, in co-operation with FAO. Another set of guidelines to improve food production and soil degradation control in the arid, semi-arid and humid tropics was prepared following a UNEP expert group meeting in June at Hyderabad, India; the meeting was attended by representatives of the International Crops Research Institute for the Semi-arid Tropics, the International Institute of Tropical Agriculture and the International Rice Research Institute. The third in a series of meetings on an international reference base for soil classification was held at Sofia, Bulgaria, in October with UNEP support; the meeting was intended to expedite progress towards an international agreement on soil classification.

In another development, the Save our Soils project, sponsored by UNEP and the International Federation of Institutes for Advanced Study, was extended to the end of 1983. A number of case-studies on the social, economic and legislative constraints to soil management were completed. A final report on the steps necessary to secure the application of technologies for soil degradation control was to be published. Implementation of a project on the impact of agricultural management on the environment, sponsored by UNEP and the USSR Commission for UNEP, continued throughout 1983; a map of the world's agrolandscape was prepared.

In its 24 May decision on programme matters,^(*) the UNEP Council requested the Executive Director to finalize a draft plan of action for implementation of the World Soils Policy and submit it, together with a financial plan, to the Council in 1984.

Genetic resources

Expressing concern at increasing genetic erosion, the UNEP Council, on 24 May,⁽⁷⁾ requested the Executive Director, in co-operation with Governments, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to continue to promote in situ conservation of endangered animal and plant genetic resources and to encourage international organizations to extend coverage of registers and gene banks to include all endangered plant and animal genetic resources.

Marine ecosystems

Marine pollution

An Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on the Protection of the Marine Environment against Pollution from Land-Based Sources held its first session Geneva, 28 November-2 December 1983),⁽¹⁰⁾ pursuant to a May 1982 decision of UNEP.⁽¹¹⁾ Experts from 25 countries and a number of United Nations agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations attended the session.

The Group considered draft guidelines/principles, and agreed that they should be prepared in the form of a checklist of basic provisions and available options for certain measures, rather than as a model agreement, from which Governments might select, adapt or elaborate to meet the needs of particular marine environments. It also agreed on the importance of preventive action over control measures or remedial action, which should be adequately reflected in the guidelines/principles. Definitions, general provisions, the assessment of inputs, pathways and effects of pollution, its prevention, reduction and control, pollution through media shared by several States, transboundary pollution, liability and compensation, and institutional arrangements were reviewed in relation to the provisions of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.⁽¹²⁾ Following the first reading of the draft guidelines/principles, the Group agreed that at its next meeting it should draft specific provisions. The Group recommended that UNEP/WHO undertake a study to identify a preferred option and set out definitions, interpretations and implementation requirements.

Annexed to the report were statements by States on the relationship between the draft guidelines/principles and the Convention on the Law of the Sea, as well as an exchange of letters concerning participation in the Working Group of an official of the Federal Environmental Agency of the Federal Republic of Germany which, the USSR stated, was located illegally in West Berlin.

The UNEP Council, in a decision of 24 May,⁽⁹⁾ requested the Executive Director to consider reviewing the environmental implications of the disposal of radioactive wastes at sea; the review would be carried out in conjunction with the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Commission of the Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter. In another decision of the same date,⁽⁷⁾ the Council appealed to all States to ensure compliance with the international legal obligation to protect and preserve the marine environment.

By the same decision, the Council also noted the co-operation since 1975 between the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) and UNEP and encouraged further co-operation on such projects as the regional seas programme (see below), the Programme for the Global Investigation of Pollution in the Marine Environment and the Marine Pollution Monitoring System.

In 1983, the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq led to a dispute about pollution of the Persian Gulf from the spillage of oil (see p. 237).

Living marine resources

In 1983, UNEP efforts in regard to living marine resources were concentrated on finalizing a global plan for the conservation of marine mammals. Jointly with FAO, UNEP was developing a world-wide conservation programme for whales, seals and other endangered marine mammals. Specific activities included two expert meetings to formulate research proposals for cetaceans and sirenians, a review of information on the interaction between marine mammals and fisheries, and a compendium of legislative texts on conservation, management and utilization of marine mammals. UNEP also assisted IUCN to continue its biophysical classification of coastal and marine environments based on the natural variability of ecosystems.

The UNEP Council, on 24 May,⁽⁷⁾ requested the Executive Director to finalize a financial plan for implementing the draft plan for the conservation of marine mammals.

Regional seas programme

Activities under UNEP regional seas programme included:

Mediterranean. A protocol for the Protection of the Mediterranean Seas against Pollution from Land-based Sources entered into force on 17 June.

Kuwait Action Plan region. UNEP continued to assist the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment to co-ordinate the implementation of five major projects in co-operation with FAO, IAEA, IOC, IUCN and UNESCO. The Marine Emergency Mutual Aid Centre in Bahrain convened several technical meetings to formulate surveillance programmes to determine the extent of oil pollution in the region.

Caribbean. Fourteen mainland and island countries and the European Economic Community signed a framework convention and a protocol on co-operation in combating oil spills in the region. At the third meeting of the Caribbean Action Plan Monitoring Committee, several projects were chosen for immediate initiation, with financing from the Caribbean Trust Fund and to be implemented in co-operation with the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA), IMO, WHO, IOC, UNESCO, the Caribbean Community, the Caribbean Conservation Association, Cuba and Mexico.

West and Central Africa. Implementation of three priority projects dealing with marine pollution, contingency planning for pollution emergencies and coastal erosion control continued in co-operation with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), FAO, IAEA, IMO, IOC, UNESCO, WHO,

the United Nations, and national institutions and experts.

Red Sea and Gulf of Aden. UNEP continued its support to marine pollution assessment activities through the Arab League Educational, Cultural and Scientific Organization. Implementation of the action plan continued, with environmental assessment and management activities in a number of the member countries.

South-west Pacific. Two regional meetings of Legal and technical experts from 19 Pacific States were held in Nouméa, New Caledonia to revise a draft regional convention and two associated protocols, which were expected to be submitted to the Governments of the region for approval in 1984.

South-east Pacific. In July, plenipotentiaries from the south-east Pacific countries adopted a regional contingency plan to control oil pollution in cases of emergency. They also adopted three regional programmes on research, monitoring and control of marine pollution.

East Asian Seas. Five regional projects became operational in the region.

South Asian Seas. Activities were initiated towards the development of an action plan in the south Asian seas.

UNEP Council action. Welcoming the action plans adopted for the environmental protection of regional seas, the UNEP Council, on 24 May,⁽⁷⁾ requested the Executive Director to designate the South Asian Seas as a region to be included in the regional seas programme in collaboration with the South Asia Co-operative Environment Programme and Governments in the region. It urged States to support the adoption and ratification of conventions and protocols for the protection and development of the regional marine environment and coastal areas. The Council urged Governments, United Nations and other organizations to support efforts to combat coastal erosion and marine pollution, and called on the Executive Director to provide funds to the regional seas programme as a high priority.

Freshwater ecosystems

In its 24 May omnibus decision on programme matters,⁽⁷⁾ the UNEP Council requested the Executive Director to sharpen the focus of the water programme by promoting water pollution control measures; waste water management, rational water management including river basin management; support for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) (see Chapter IX of this section); and development of inland fisheries and aquaculture. It also requested the Executive Director to accord high priority in those areas to training workshops, programmes and institution-building.

Biosphere preservation

The first International Biosphere Reserve Congress on conserving key species and ecosystems and enhancing the role of biosphere reserves in regional planning and development was held from 26 September to 2 October at Minsk, Byelorussian SSR, convened jointly by the Byelorussian SSR, the USSR, UNESCO and UNEP.

Solid waste management

An international symposium on solid waste management for developing countries, co-sponsored by the Federal Republic of Germany and UNEP, was held from 23 September to 7 October 1983 at Karlsruhe.

Environmental aspects of political, economic and other issues

Environmental law

Implementation of the 1981 Montevideo Programme

In his annual report to the UNEP Governing Council,⁽¹⁾ the Executive Director reported a clear shift in UNEP activities in environmental law during 1983 from nature conservation to man-made environmental problems, in particular the management of chemicals. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts for the Elaboration of a Global Framework Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer and the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on the Protection of the Marine Environment against Pollution from Land-Based Sources, met separately at Geneva.

Preparatory work was initiated on other priority topics identified in the Montevideo Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law adopted at the 1981 Ad Hoc Meeting of Senior Governmental Officials Expert in Environmental Law,⁽²⁾ particularly on the protection of international water resources against pollution (inter-agency consultations held in December 1983) and on guidelines for environmental impact assessment (working group meeting scheduled for 1984).

The UNEP Council, in a decision of 24 May 1983,⁽³⁾ noting progress in implementing the environmental law programme, in particular the follow-up to the Montevideo Programme, expressed satisfaction that work had begun on guidelines and principles relating to the protection of the marine environment against pollution from land-based sources; environmentally sound transport, handling (including storage) and disposal of toxic and dangerous wastes; and information exchange on the trade in and use and handling of potentially harmful chemicals, in particular pesticides. The Council also expressed appreciation of the work of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts for the Elaboration of a Global Framework Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer (see above, under ENVIRONMENTAL MONITORING). It called on Governments and organizations to participate in meetings on those topics, and appealed to them to provide financial resources and facilities to ensure full and timely implementation of the remaining parts of the Montevideo Programme, including the development of national environmental legislation.

In resolution 38/165, the General Assembly welcomed progress made in implementing the Montevideo Programme and appealed to Governments to provide financial resources for its full and timely implementation.

Role of the Group of Experts

The UNEP Council, on 24 May,⁽³⁾ decided to entrust its Working Group of Experts on Environmental Law with the task of developing principles and guidelines for environmental impact assessment.

International instruments

In response to a 1975 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted in August 1983 a report of the UNEP Executive Director on international conventions and protocols in the field of environment.⁽⁵⁾ The Executive Director's report contained information on 14 recent international environment conventions and protocols and changes in the status of existing conventions. It recorded the conventions and protocols for which corrections had been introduced and other conventions pertaining to the environment.

UNEP Governing Council action. The UNEP Governing Council, on 24 May,⁽³⁾ authorized the Executive Director to forward his report to the Assembly. It requested him to make available to it in 1984 an updated register of international treaties and other agreements on the environment, and to continue collecting and disseminating information on international and national legal machinery.

The Governing Council called on States not yet parties to existing conventions and protocols in the field of the environment to consider early adherence to them, in particular to the conventions on nature conservation. It appealed to contracting parties to promote implementation of those conventions, and appealed to all States to ensure compliance with the international legal obligation to protect and preserve the marine environment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted decision 38/442 without vote.

Environment

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee:

(a) Took note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment;

(b) Took note of the report of the Secretary-General on interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development and decided to keep the matter under review.

General Assembly decision 38/442

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.7) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); draft orally proposed by Chairman: agenda item 78 (g). Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 56; plenary 102.

Material remnants of war

In October 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly, pursuant to a December 1982 request,⁽⁶⁾ a report on the problem of remnants of war.⁽⁷⁾ The report analysed the environmental and economic problems experienced by developing countries affected, the loss of life and property they had suffered, their demands for compensation and the extent to which responsible States were willing to compensate them. It further examined legal aspects and international co-operation required to solve the problem.

Annexed to the report was a study by a high-level group of experts, based on a meeting convened by the UNEP Executive Director (Geneva, 25-28 July 1983). The experts named land, sea and river mines, booby traps and dud munitions as the main remnants of war. They affected ecological balances, impeded socio-economic development, and caused loss of human life and property. Demands of affected countries for compensation had to be seen in the light of the suffering and devastation experienced by them. Some of the Governments responsible had indicated that the question of compensation might delay or jeopardize any practical solution, and therefore should be left aside. The legal aspects of the question were complex and subject to widely different interpretations. It was stated that international co-operation to solve the problem should be considered under two chief headings-how to tackle the existing problem and how to establish preventive measures.

Among the experts' recommendations was that the Assembly might wish to appeal to all States to ratify or accede to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons. (8) Technical and historical information about the areas and objects to be cleared was required; similarly, there was an urgent need for a data base on technologies available for mine clearance. Suitable technology for clearing explosive remnants of war must be developed and be made readily available to affected countries. High-explosive munitions should be designed to have built-in mechanisms that rendered them harmless in due course. Clearance of remnants of war that constituted a threat to the environment should be carried out, with international co-operation, preferably under the aegis of the United Nations. The experts suggested the convening of an international conference to discuss the problem. They also stressed that the issue of responsibility for damage and compensation should not be minimized or neglected; fair compensation must be considered.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/162 by recorded vote.

Remnants of war

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3435(XXX) of 9 December 1975, 35/71 of 5 December 1980, 36/188 of 17 December 1981 and 37/215 of 20 December 1, 1982 concerning the problem of remnants of war,

Recalling also decisions 80(IV) of 9 April 1976, 101(V) of 25 May 1977, 9/5 of 25 May 1981 and 10/8 of 28 May 1982 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling further resolution 32 adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, and resolution 26/11-P adopted by the Eleventh Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Islamabad from 17 to 22 May 1980,

Convinced that the responsibility for the removal of the remnants of war should be borne by the countries that planned them,

Recognizing that the presence of the material remnants of war, particularly mines, in the territories of developing countries seriously impedes their development efforts and causes loss of life and property,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the study annexed thereto concerning the problem of remnants of war;

2. Regrets that no concrete measures have been taken to solve the problem of remnants of war despite the various resolutions and decisions adopted thereon by the General Assembly and the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Reiterates its support of the just demands of the developing countries affected by the implantation of mines and the presence of other remnants of war in their territories for full compensation from the States responsible for those remnants;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, to continue to seek the views of States on the recommendations contained in section VIII of the study annexed to his report;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to urge the States concerned to conduct bilateral consultations immediately, with the aim of concluding, as soon as possible, agreements for the solution of this problem, it being understood that the legitimate right of the affected developing countries to full compensation for damages due to them shall be ensured:

6. Calls upon all States to co-operate with the Secretary-General in carrying out the tasks requested of him in paragraphs 4 and 5 above, so as to enable him, in co-operation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report on the results of his consultations and endeavours with the States concerned.

Arms race and the environment

The UNEP Governing Council, on 23 May 1983,(9) appealed to Governments and the international community to halt the arms race and prevent a major threat to man and his environment. It noted with satisfaction the contribution in that field by United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. It requested the Executive Director to ensure that the environmental implications of armaments and warfare were taken into account in the documents discussed by the General Assembly and the Committee on Disarmament.

Environmental aspects of apartheid

In response to a May 1982 decision of the UNEP Council,(10) the Executive Director submitted in January 1983 a report(11) on impacts of South Africa's apartheid and bantustan policies on the environment. Among other social and economic problems, the report considered environmental impacts of border industries within or immediately outside the four "bantustans". It noted that the construction of factories and towns for black workers and their families and the provision of transportation for them were potential sources of environmental degradation. The report cautioned that basic environmental impact requirements which industries would be expected to comply with in the white areas of South Africa might be relaxed in order to attract industries to the bantustans. Specific information on the matter was not available, but there did not appear to be a categorical official statement affirming the Governments's concern with the observance of acceptable environmental safeguards as a condition for the establishment of such industries. The report considered it very important that assurances be clearly given, so that the bantustans were not turned into "pollution havens" where industrial development was rendered cheap at the cost of environmental devastation. The report concluded that the outlook for the black population was still gloomy. Such attempts as the South African Government had made at improvement had not had any real effect, partly because the rapidly growing dimensions of the problems created by its own racial policies had largely nullified those efforts.

By a decision of 23 May,(12) the Governing Council reaffirmed its condemnation of apartheid and called on the world community to bring that historical injustice to a quick end. It requested the Executive Director to continue to monitor the environmental impact of apartheid, with specific reference to industry in urban townships and in bantustans. It further requested him, in conjunction with other United Nations agencies, to respond to appeals from national liberation movements for assistance to victims of apartheid.

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/165, took note of the UNEP Council decision directed at promoting public awareness of the plight of the victims of apartheid.

Environment and development

Throughout 1983, UNEP continued its efforts to provide guidance on the integration of environmental considerations into development decision-making. Significant additions were made to the guidance available on the application of social cost-benefit analysis to environmental measures and environmental aspects of development projects.

UNEP published the first volume of a report, Environmental Decision-Making, intended to explain the use of social cost-benefit analysis in formulating development projects.

The use of environmental impact assessment methodology spread in the developing countries. To facilitate the exchange of information, UNEP and the Government of China convened a meeting of experts in Guangzhou in March 1983. Discussions focused on the problems and possibilities of applying available methodology in developing countries. In co-operation with the Republic of Korea, UNEP prepared a pilot case-study on Gwachon New Town Development; the study applied to urban development the Environmental Impact Assessment Test Model developed by the UNEP Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific.

Rapid economic development had caused serious congestion and pollution problems in metropolitan areas of several developing countries. A case-study of economic development in the Chubu region of Japan was initiated by UNEP, in co-operation with the United Nations Centre for Regional Development, the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and the Government of Japan, the aim of which was to prepare guidelines for integrated physical, environmental, economic and social development in an area with a fragile ecosystem and high population density.

Among projects approved for financing under a general trust fund for a co-ordinated interdisciplinary United Nations programme on interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development (see Chapter I of this section), was the first phase of a project on deforestation of the Himalayan foothills, implemented by UNEP in collaboration with the United Nations, ILO, FAO and UNESCO.

The year also saw the development within UNEP of a clearing-house mechanism for the mobilization of resources over and above regular contributions to meet serious environmental problems in developing countries. The clearing-house concept, which had emerged at the 1982 session of the UNEP Council,⁽¹³⁾ incorporated a programming element and a technical assistance element. The UNEP Executive Director reported to the Governing Council in a February 1983 note⁽¹⁴⁾ that the Netherlands and Sweden had pledged $1 million each to the clearing house for 1982-1983 and the Federal Republic of Germany had offered support in kind, in the form of consultants, experts, training and equipment, for the same period. UNEP would provide assistance to developing countries in formulating projects designed to meet their most serious environmental problems.

In a November 1983 report on environmental matters,⁽¹⁵⁾ ACC noted that the preparations by

UNEP to establish a clearing-house facility to act as intermediary between donors and recipients in reinforcing the national capacity of developing countries in dealing with their environmental problems, including finding the necessary funds, had progressed to the point where the facility was becoming operational. ACC suggested that United Nations organizations be informed of potential projects.

UNEP Council action. In its 24 May 1983 decision on policy matters,⁽¹⁶⁾ the UNEP Council requested the Executive Director, in co-operation with Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to continue to promote the exchange of information and experience with respect to the integration of environmental considerations in development activities, with a view to better co-ordinating efforts and enhancing general understanding of the concept of sustainable development.

In a decision of 23 May,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Council requested the Executive Director to pursue his efforts to obtain additional resources to deal with serious environmental problems in developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/165, reaffirmed the need to strengthen the co-ordinating role of UNEP and the need for additional resources to assist developing countries in dealing with serious environmental problems. It urged the Executive Director to intensify his efforts in this area.

Environment and industry

The environmental impact of industrial activities received continued attention from UNEP in 1983. Interest grew in the role that industry could play in the fight against acid rain, trade in hazardous substances and waste management. A survey of industry experience with, environmental management was begun, in preparation for the World Industry Conference on Environmental Management to be held in Paris in 1984. The three-day conference was to identify issues for action by industry, Governments, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

The UNEP Council, on 24 May,⁽¹⁶⁾ welcomed the Executive Director's call to industry to convene an international conference on ways that industry might contribute more effectively to environmentally sound development and promote an exchange of information on industrial pollution control, waste recycling, and low-waste and non-waste technologies. It requested the widest possible participation in the conference by industry, Governments, international organizations and other groups, as well as geographical balance.

In its decision on programme matters,⁽³⁾ adopted on the same day, the Council endorsed the general approach proposed by the Executive Director in the industry and transportation component of the programme budget. It encouraged him to maintain a balanced consultative process, involving Governments, the United Nations, industry and relevant international organizations, to ensure that activities in the industrial sector were coherent and sharply focused, efficiently conducted and fully co-ordinated.

Environmental information

In its 24 May omnibus decision on programme matters,⁽³⁾ the UNEP Council noted that UNEP public information activities were being reformed and the publications programme streamlined to ensure closer co-operation with non-governmental organizations and better communication of information to the regions and media. The Council recommended that the reform be based on a cost-effectiveness analysis to be commissioned from a consultant, whose terms of reference should include examination of target groups, current and projected impact, and current estimated costs and suggested improvements. It urged that UNEP extend its support to regional information activities and requested the Executive Director to ensure that reports on UNEP projects were distributed to Governments and, within available resources, to scientific institutions and non-governmental organizations.

By the same decision, the Council dealt with public information in the different regions. It requested the Executive Director to provide a public information programme to suit the needs of the African and Asian and Pacific regions.

By another decision of the same date,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Council encouraged the Executive Director to continue exploring new information technology and use it in support of the Programme's information role, and requested him to report on the matter in 1984. It also requested the Executive Director to continue to promote the exchange of information on the integration of environmental considerations in development activities.

Environmental education and training

During 1983, environmental training components were part of many UNEP projects: the International Referral System for sources of environmental information (INFOTERRA) organized three training courses, with 40 participants in all; three training courses in desertification control, specifically on ecological studies, soil erosion and water conservation, and sand dune fixation, were given for 75 technicians from developing countries; 185 participants were trained in eight separate regional training courses under the regional seas programme; and the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC), in conjunction with the USSR Commission for UNEP (UNEP-COM), held an international training course in preventive toxicology for 20 participants from developing countries.

An international post-graduate course on resource management and environmental impact assessment in developing countries organized by UNEP, UNESCO and the German Democratic Republic, began in October 1983 at the Technical University of Dresden with 15 participants. UNEP also continued to co-operate with the International Centre for Training in Environmental Sciences (CIFCA), a major institution providing environmental training for participants from the developing countries of Latin America and the Caribbean.

Twenty-one experts from 13 African countries, as well as Canada and Trinidad and Tobago, met at Nairobi, from 12 to 15 April, to draft a regional programme for environmental education and training. Representatives of UNESCO, the Economic Commission for Africa, the United Nations Children's Fund, UNCHS and seven non-governmental organizations also attended.

UNEP Council action. In its 24 May omnibus decision on programme matters,⁽³⁾ the UNEP Council requested the Executive Director to assist the countries of Asia and the Pacific region to promote environmental education and training. It also asked him to convene a meeting of experts from Governments and the academic and scientific communities within the region to develop an action programme, as well as public awareness.

The Council commended the Network of Environmental Training Institutions in Latin America and the Caribbean, and recommended that Governments intensify support for it. It requested the Executive Director to disseminate information on the Network and recommended that he continue financial support to it, particularly for environmental training.

Chapter XVII

Human settlements

The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS), also known as Habitat, continued to make progress in its work programme during 1983, completing 61 technical co-operation projects and beginning 69 new ones. The Centre also made plans for the observance of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987) (IYSH).

The Commission on Human Settlements, which performs the functions of the governing body of UNCHS, held its sixth session at Helsinki, Finland, from 25 April to 6 May 1983. Items on its agenda included UNCHS activities, its work programme and proposed budget for 1984-1985, land for human settlements, and IYSH. The Commission adopted 14 resolutions and six decisions based on recommendations of two committees of the whole. Two of the resolutions on human settlements in the Israeli-occupied Palestinian territories and the International Year-required action by the General Assembly.

As recommended by the Commission, the Assembly, in resolution 38/168, endorsed a programme of immediate international action for the International Year. Human settlements were the subject of three other resolutions adopted by the Assembly in December. By resolution 38/167 A, the Assembly reaffirmed its conviction that human settlements activities could play a leading role in stimulating development and in enhancing the quality of life of the poor and the disadvantaged. By resolution 38/167 B, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report summarizing an October decision of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (CC) concerning co-ordination of human settlements programmes within the United Nations system.

Topics related to this chapter. Middle East: territories occupied by Israel-settlements policy, living conditions of Palestinians. Development and international economic and social policy: International Development Strategy. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief: disaster preparedness and prevention. Regional economic and social activities. Environment. Refugees.

Programme and finances of UNCHS

Programme policy

Both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly took note of the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on its 1983 session.(1)

The Assembly, in resolution 38/167 A of 19 December, expressed appreciation to those who had supported the international effort to promote human settlements development through UNCHS activities, and again appealed to States, particularly the developed countries, to contribute or increase their contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted without vote decision 1983/169.

International co-operation in the field of human settlements

At its 39th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1983, the Council:

(a) Took note of the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the work of its sixth session and decided to transmit it, together with the recommendations of the Commission, to the General Assembly for consideration and action;

(b) Also took note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless and on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories, and decided to transmit those reports to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/167 A.

Report of the Commission on Human Settlements
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/162 of 19 December 1977 on institutional arrangements for international cooperation in the field of human settlements and 34/116 of 14 December 1979 on the strengthening of human settlements activities,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1983/169 of 25 July 1983 on international co-operation in the field of human settlements,

Having considered the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the work of its sixth session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Commission on Human Settlements:

2. Commends the Commission on Human Settlements on the effective manner in which it continues to discharge its mandate in assisting Governments to address the serious problems of human settlements development, as reflected in the various substantive recommendations adopted by it;

3. Reaffirms its conviction that human settlements activities can play a leading role in stimulating national economic and social development and in the enhancement of the quality of life of the poor and the disadvantaged, particularly in the developing countries;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments and to others that have so far provided financial support for the international effort to promote human settlements development through the activities of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat);

5. Appeals once again to Member States, particularly the developed countries and others in a position to do so, to make voluntary contributions, if they have not yet done so, or, as appropriate, to increase their voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation in support of the activities of the Centre.

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/39/702/Add.8) without vote (parts A and B together), 21 November (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/39/L.72, part A), based on informal consultations on 4-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.19, part A); agenda item 78 (h)

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 2nd Committee 30, 45; plenary 102.

By the original draft, introduced in the Second Committee by the Netherlands, also on behalf of Gabon, Kenya and the Philippines, the Assembly would have commended the Commission on its sound and practical approach to human settlements development, instead of commending it on the effective manner in which it continued to discharge its mandate. In paragraph 3, it would have reaffirmed its conviction that human settlements activities could play a leading role in stimulating national economic and social development, particularly in a period of economic recession.

Work programme for 1984-1985

A draft work programme and programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985,⁽²⁾ the first to be presented within the framework of the 1984-1989 medium-term plan, was submitted by the UNCHS Executive Director in January 1983. Under a decision adopted by the Commission on Human Settlements in 1981,⁽³⁾ the programme was organized on the basis of eight subprogramme areas, instead of the previous six selected at the 1976 Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.⁽⁴⁾ The eight subprogrammes were: settlement policies and strategies; settlement planning; shelter and community services; development of the indigenous construction sector; low-cost infrastructure for human settlements; land use; mobilization of finance for human settlements development; and institutions and management. Public participation was an integral part of each subprogramme, the Executive Director pointed out. The report provided details of programme elements, outputs, activities and resources.

The Commission, by a decision of 6 May 1983,⁽⁵⁾ commended the UNCHS Executive Director for producing a work programme which gave attention to all the high-priority objectives of the medium-term plan, while, at the same time, observing maximum restraint in requesting resources for programme execution. It approved the proposed outputs and activities of the 1984-1985 work programme, endorsing it as a whole as amended, as one that provided the minimum level of activity necessary for UNCHS to achieve the goals fixed by the Commission. It expressed concern that the programme level envisaged was far too low compared to the scale of problems to be addressed, and requested the Executive Director, in implementing the work programme, to take account of the comments by delegations during the debate on the various programme elements.

Administrative and budgetary questions

Extrabudgetary resources

Responding to a May 1982 request of the Commission on Human Settlements,⁽⁶⁾ the UNCHS Executive Director submitted a report in January 1983 on the use by the Centre of extrabudgetary resources during 1982-1983, and projections for their use during 1984-1985.⁽⁷⁾

Funds were available to UNCHS from the regular United Nations budget and from the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation (see below). Additional extrabudgetary funds for 1982-1983 came primarily from three sources: programme support income from the execution of projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and trust funds ($4,112,000), a subvention from the World Food Programme ($206,000) and programme support from the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) ($114,000). Of the total $4,432,000, an amount of $4,045,000 was spent, mostly ($3,725,000) for substantive and administrative support to field projects.

In addition, UNCHS received funds from two sources: contributions by Governments to trust funds and contributions in support of specific projects. During 1982-1983, trust fund contributions and pledges amounted to $4,931,000, and Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden provided funds to recruit 36 associate experts for technical co-operation projects. Donors such as Belgium, Denmark, the Netherlands and the World Bank made contributions in support of a number of training projects; UNCHS also entered into agreements with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Somalia and Upper Volta to implement technical co-operation projects in their countries, using earmarked contributions from them. In addition, contributions and pledges were received from several private organizations.

In a decision of 6 May,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission appealed to Governments to do their utmost to ensure that extrabudgetary resources were made available to UNCHS.

UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

Expenditures of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation for 1982-1983 totalled $6,718,502, including $199,841 in expenditures for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987). The excess of income over expenditure was $2,279,375.

Efforts to collect unpaid pledges should be intensified, the Board of Auditors stated in its financial report and audited financial statements on the Foundation.⁽⁸⁾ Unpaid pledges receivable as at 31 December 1983 amounted to $2,710,365, out of which $294,799 related to the period prior to the biennium. The Board noted that some unpaid pledges needed adjustment because of fluctuations in exchange rates, and recommended that such adjustments be made. It also recommended that, for effective implementation and monitoring of projects, work plans and reports should be prepared in time and in the prescribed format; experts/consultants should be fielded on schedule, and projects planned appropriately to avoid frequent revisions.

Contributions

The Commission on Human Settlements, by a decision of 6 May,⁽⁹⁾ noted with concern that voluntary contributions to the Foundation for 1982-1983 were far lower than for 1980-1981 and that a minimum of $7-$8 million in contributions would be needed to carry out the work programme for 1986-1987. It urgently called on States, particularly the developed countries, to make or increase their contributions.

The General Assembly in resolution 38/167 A reiterated that appeal. In 1983, contributions from 40 countries totalling $3 million were received; pledges for future years from 38 countries totalled $1.9 million.

Budget for 1984-1985

The Executive Director's report on the proposed programme budget for 1984-1985,⁽¹⁰⁾ submitted to the Commission in February 1983, showed projected income of $11,252,700—$8.5 million ($5.5 million in carry-over balance from 1983, plus $3 million in expected contributions and pledges) for the general funds of the Foundation and $2,752,700 for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless. Expenditures of the Foundation were estimated at $6,794,900, while the cost of activities for the International Year was estimated at $2,134,200.

In a report to the Commission in March 1983,⁽¹¹⁾ the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) stated that it would not object to the Executive Director's estimates for programme and programme support costs. Nevertheless, ACABQ pointed out that the estimate of $896,500 for programme support costs was $187,800, or 26.5%, more than the 1982-1983 estimate. In the light of the financial difficulties being faced by the Foundation, it believed that every effort should be made to reduce programme support costs. ACABQ had no objection to the estimates for the International Year, although those for communications and travel appeared to be on the high side.

The Commission, by a decision of 6 May 1983,(9) approved the proposed allocations for 1984-1985 and the proposed utilization of resources for the International Year.

Human settlements activities

Habitat Centre

In a report to the Commission on Human Settlements on the 1983 activities of UNCHS,(1) the Executive Director described progress made in implementing the 1982-1983 work programme, which was structured on the basis of the six priority areas selected at the 1976 Habitat Conference:(2) settlement policies and strategies; settlement planning; shelter, infrastructure and services; land policy; public participation; and institutions and management.

Reports on human settlements policy options, trends and guidelines and on human settlements policy issues in Asia and the Pacific were completed under the first subprogramme. An outline of the quinquennial Global Report on Human Settlements was prepared; the report itself was to be published in 1985. Questionnaires were sent out to determine progress by member States in implementing the recommendations for national action adopted at the 1976 Conference and to collect information on financial and other assistance provided to and among developing countries for human settlements. Theme papers on comprehensive approaches to training and information for human settlements were completed. The Centre participated in expert group meetings to establish the framework for an International Conference on Population which was to be held in Mexico in 1984 (see Chapter XIV of this section).

A forecast of settlement conditions up to the year 2000, with respect to population, economic activities, infrastructure and sanitation strategies, was being prepared under the settlement planning subprogramme. Reports on settlement planning in Latin America and the integration of physical planning with economic and social planning in Asia and the Pacific were being made ready for publication, and reports were completed on data management and urban planning and design of settlements in arid and semi-arid areas. A project was initiated in co-operation with Turkey on environmentally sound regional land-use planning for the metropolitan area of Cukurova, while assistance was provided in the development of Dodoma, the new capital of the United Republic of Tanzania.

Under the subprogramme on shelter, infrastructure and services, case-studies on the decision-making processes in housing programming were completed in Sri Lanka and Zambia. In co-operation with Finland, an expert group meeting on decision-making procedures was held at Nairobi, Kenya, in November. Work continued on upgrading squatter settlements in the Asia and Pacific region. Case-studies on financing human settlements were prepared, based on experiences in Brazil, Egypt, Kenya, India and Indonesia. Research was undertaken on the role played by community-based financial institutions in mobilizing funds for improving low-income settlements; studies were carried out of credit unions and housing co-operatives in Jamaica, Kenya and Zambia. The upgrading of inner-city slums was the subject of an expert group meeting held at Bangkok, Thailand, in November; four films were produced for training purposes on the upgrading of slums, describing experiences in Barrio Escopa (Manila, Philippines), Hann-Dalifort (Dakar, Senegal), Cissin (Ougadougou, Upper Volta) and Maseru (Lesotho). Research was completed on the construction industry in nine countries (Bolivia, Greece, Honduras, Kenya, Mexico, Pakistan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Yemen); reports were prepared on the contribution of the construction sector to national development goals and on government guidelines to improve the efficiency of the building industry. Transportation requirements in urban and rural settlements were examined with emphasis on current deficiencies.

Activities under the land policy subprogramme consisted mostly of research on land-resource management and monitoring of trends in land policies and land control measures. Data were collected from technical co-operation projects, government sources, regional commissions, the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations (NGOS).

The main project of the public participation subprogramme was the preparation of a training programme in community participation, conducted in co-operation with the Danish International Development Agency (DANIDA). During the first phase of the project, a reader in community participation was issued, and computer print-outs of a bibliography and a directory of institutions were completed. Another project involved the preparation of a technical report on promoting organized self-help through co-operative modes. Two films on mobilizing public participation in self-help construction were produced.

Four training courses in management of human settlements were held under the institutions and management subprogramme: at Bangkok, from March to May; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, June; USSR, August; and Washington, D.C., October/November. Three issues of Habitat News were published in 1983 with French and Arabic supplements, bibliographic and technical notes and a regular NGO news supplement. Nine television and 50 radio programmes were produced. A booklet on UNCHS activities in Arabic-speaking countries was issued in Arabic and English, and French and Spanish adaptations of the UNCHS draft Thesaurus were published. Some 38 UNCHS publications in several languages were currently available.⁽³⁾

Other UNCHS activities involved data-management assistance, including training workshops, special advisory services, project execution, software development, internal management support information and project monitoring. During 1983, workshops were conducted in Jamaica and Finland. An urban data management software package developed by UNCHS for use in human settlements planning received wide circulation. In addition, a new software package on housing finance was developed and installed in the Seychelles, and UNCHS was preparing it for wider distribution.

Special technical advisory services continued to be provided by the Centre to developing countries, with emphasis on the least developed, the landlocked and the island developing countries. In 1983, more than 31 missions were fielded in such areas as innovative use of local building materials, low-cost housing technologies and development of finance institutions.

Technical co-operation

The biennium 1982-1983 started with 122 technical co-operation projects, 61 of which were completed. Sixty-nine new projects were begun, so that at the end of the biennium 130 projects were ongoing.

These ongoing projects were divided among the six subprogrammes as follows: 17 related to national settlement policies and strategies; 27 to settlement planning; 49 to shelter, infrastructure and services; four to national land policy and land control measures; two to public participation; and 31 to institutions and management.

Sectoral support activities, whose main objectives were to identify national technical co-operation needs in the field of human settlements and to assist Governments in formulating project documents and proposals for financing by UNDP and other sources, were also provided by UNCHS. During 1983, missions were fielded to Afghanistan, Argentina, Chad, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Haiti, Jamaica, Kenya, Panama, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Sao Tome and Principe, Tonga, Turkey, Venezuela and Zambia. In 10 cases, one or more project proposals and project documents were prepared and submitted to UNDP and/or Governments concerned. For the 1984-1985 biennium, UNDP funding for sectoral support activities was reduced by half.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987)

The UNCHS Executive Director reported to the Commission on Human Settlements in February 1983(4) on the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987) (IYSH) which was proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1981.⁽⁵⁾ He stated that, in January 1983 appeal to Governments, he had asked them to pledge a significant financial contribution in support of IYSH. He pointed out that, in order to achieve its goals, a distinctive approach would be required, which would include a commitment by Member States to improve the shelter and neighbourhoods of at least some of the poor before the International Year began. Further, most of the limited funds would be used to support and stimulate national and local action through shelter demonstration projects. An information programme would concentrate not on publicizing problems but on searching for solutions and making successful results more widely known.

The emphasis would be on projects leading to affordable improvements in shelter and neighbourhoods for the many rather than providing conventional houses for a few, the Executive Director stated. Priority would be given to information and training projects related to self-help construction and the use of local skills, methods and building materials. The self-help efforts of the poor would be encouraged. Three major projects were under way with a total investment of $5 million—training for self-help construction, supported by DANIDA; the upgrading of slums and squatter settlements in Karachi, Pakistan, supported by the Bank of Commerce and Credit International Foundation; and a national self-help information and training programme in Sri Lanka, supported by the Netherlands and Sri Lanka.

Guidelines for shelter demonstration projects stated that they should demonstrate new approaches to basic problems such as providing shelter, drinking water, sanitation and waste disposal; improving health conditions; upgrading infrastructure and services for the poor, including roads, public transportation and medical, educational and recreational facilities; generating construction jobs; and using low-cost building techniques and materials. Projects could range from preparing pamphlets or posters showing how to make basic improvements, to conducting training courses in construction skills for local labour, to organizing co-operative and community improvement efforts.

Activities associated with the International Year would take place in three phases. From 1983 to 1986, new ways of improving the shelter and neighbourhoods of at least some of the poor would be devised and tested around the world. Project results would be made widely available so that during 1987 national policy makers could adapt shelter programmes to meet the needs of the majority of the poor. The new methods, policies and programmes would require constant refinement as a part of national development plans between 1988 and 2000.

Countries were asked to designate as soon as possible national focal points to receive and distribute information on the International Year. A budget of $4.9 million for 1983-1987 was proposed; of that total, approximately $4.3 million in voluntary contributions was needed.

In a later report,(6) the Executive Director noted that, as at 31 December 1983, voluntary contributions for the International Year totalling $1.8 million had been pledged by 13 developing and two developed countries; in addition, the Netherlands had pledged $790,000 to the national IYSH project in Sri Lanka. Meanwhile, consultations had been held on the International Year with many United Nations organizations and agencies, as well as NGOs.

Three resolutions on the International Year were adopted by the Commission on Human Settlements on 5 May 1983. The first was a resolution requiring action by the General Assembly.(7) It would appeal to Governments, financial institutions, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the International Year; it included an annex on national action required, the establishment of focal points, assessing needs, implementation of demonstration projects, and progress reports. Expressing deep concern at the increasing magnitude of the refugee problem, the Commission, by a second resolution,(8) declared that no human being should be ejected from his lawful home or land by any foreign Government or as a result of foreign intervention. By a third resolution,(9) the Commission requested the UNCHS Executive Director to give top priority to recruiting project consultants and experts from the developing countries to identify and implement demonstration projects for IYSH.

Pursuant to a December 1982 Assembly request,(10) the Secretary-General submitted a report in May 1983 on the implementation of the programme for the International Year.(11) He reviewed action by the Commission, the inter-governmental body responsible for organizing IYSH, at its 1983 session. With regard to contributions, he stated that initial support for the International Year had been strong, and that the pledges received were already sufficient to carry the programme to the end of 1984.

By decision 1983/169, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and decided to transmit it to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/168 without vote.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/221 of 20 December 1982, in which it proclaimed the year 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning measures and activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council decision 1983/169 of 25 July 1983,

Convinced that special efforts need to be made by States and the international community in order to reverse the chronic deterioration in shelter and living conditions suffered by the majority of the poor in urban and rural settlements, especially in developing countries,

Convinced also that national programmes and demonstration projects for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless should be launched as soon as possible, since most of the action and resources for the Year will be required at the national and local levels,

Noting with appreciation the voluntary contributions and pledges that Governments have so far made for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

1. Welcomes and endorses the overall plans for activities before, during and after the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless and the priorities for national and international action during 1983-1984 contained in the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to the Commission on Human Settlements at its sixth session;

2. Calls upon all Governments, especially those of developing countries, to give renewed political commitment and priority to the improvement of the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and to allocate the necessary resources to meet the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

3. Endorses the proposals contained in the annex to the present resolution on national action needed before

April 1984 in order to launch the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless quickly and effectively;

4. Urges all organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other interested intergovernmental, non-governmental and national organizations to make special efforts through existing and new programmes, including those aimed at involving public-opinion leaders and large groups of the population, to help achieve the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

5. Appeals to all Governments, especially those of developed countries and others in a position to do so, and to international financial institutions, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to provide effective financial and other support for the programme for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

ANNEX

National action needed before April 1984 for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

1. Most of the action and resources for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless will be required at the national and local levels. The programme for the Year must be launched quickly and effectively, so that most of the demonstration projects can be completed, or be at a stage where results can be evaluated, by late 1986.

2. The following national action should be undertaken by countries before the seventh session of the Commission on Human Settlements, to be held in April 1984:

(a) Establish national focal points for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

(b) Assess the existing situation and future needs;

(c) Begin implementation of demonstration projects for the Year.

A. Establishment of national focal points for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

3. All interested countries should designate, as soon as possible, a national focal point for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless. Although there should be a specific person as a contact point, the national focal point could be an existing agency or a new unit or national committee, including representatives of relevant agencies and non-governmental organizations, specifically established to stimulate and co-ordinate national and local action.

4. Although the functions of national focal points for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless will vary from country to country, they could include:

(a) Receiving, producing and exchanging information on the programme and plans for the Year, on relevant activities in other countries and other programme support information;

(b) Developing a national strategy and programme for the Year, including the identification and selection of appropriate demonstration projects;

(c) Encouraging close working relationships with and among non-governmental and community organizations on their projects, plans and possibilities relevant to the Year;

(d) Stimulating and co-ordinating local and national activities and projects for the Year;

(e) Organizing relevant meetings, seminars and training courses;

(d) Reporting periodically on the progress and achievements of activities and projects for the Year in the particular country.

B. Assessment of the existing situation and future needs

5. In launching a national programme for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless and before the actual selection of specific demonstration projects, countries should undertake at least a preliminary assessment of the existing situation, taking into account the following questions:

(a) What are the size, distribution and characteristics of the target group in quantitative (for example, those below the poverty line in urban and rural areas) and qualitative terms (for example, access to drinking water, sanitation services, transportation, food, education, energy)?

(b) What previous and existing programmes, or parts of programmes, have successfully provided affordable improvements in the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor, and how can they best be extended? Why have other programmes failed to do so?

(c) What national and local resources (money, land, labour, materials) are available and needed to improve the shelter and neighbourhoods of the target group? Are there obstacles to the full use of local resources?

(d) What changes are needed in existing programmes, policies and legal, institutional and financing arrangements in order to accelerate the provision of affordable shelter for the poor?

(e) What, based on the answers to the above questions, are the priorities within the national programme for demonstration projects during the Year?

C. Beginning of the implementation of demonstration projects for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

6. Demonstration projects for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless should test and demonstrate new approaches to basic problems in urban and rural areas, such as providing or improving shelter; providing an improved drinking water supply, sanitation and waste disposal; generating jobs in the formal or informal construction sector; improving environmental and health conditions and services; upgrading infrastructure and services for the poor, including roads, public transportation, energy, and medical, social, educational and recreational facilities; and providing low-cost building techniques and materials, especially through more widespread use of indigenous methods, skills and construction materials.

7. In addition to projects of a physical character, the national programme and project for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless should include the review and strengthening of policy, legislative, organizational and financial measures to assist the poor in improving their shelter and neighbourhoods. Areas of special concern might be legislation on land and tenure; building codes and regulations; financing, including credit and loans for shelter for the poor; and institutional arrangements within and between national and local authorities.

8. In order to meet the objectives for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, countries should take the following guidelines into account in the design, selection, implementation and monitoring of demonstration projects for the Year:

(a) Projects must explore, test and demonstrate existing or new ways and means of improving the shelter and neighbourhoods of the poor and disadvantaged, particularly those below the poverty line in urban and rural settlements;

(b) Projects must contribute to or result in a clear and visible improvement in the shelter or neighbourhoods of at least some of the poor and disadvantaged before 1987;

(c) Projects must be replicable, in order for them to reach many more of the poor and disadvantaged, leading to affordable improvements for many rather than major improvements for a few;

(d) Projects must seek a practical balance between what is desirable (in terms, for example, of basic health requirements and structural safety), attainable (technically and administratively, and using local skills, methods and materials), and affordable by the poor themselves and the nation as a whole.

D. Progress report

9. In order that all countries may be informed on the existing situation, priority concerns and activities and plans for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless in other countries, prior to the seventh session of the Commission on Human Settlements, in April 1984, the national focal points for the Year should submit to the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat):

(a) A brief overview (maximum two pages in length) of their national plans, priorities and activities for the Year, including information responding to the questions in paragraph 5 above;

(b) A one-page summary for each of the national demonstration projects for the Year launched to date, using a common format to be prepared by the Centre.

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.8) without vote, 14 November (meeting 39); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.26), based on informal consultations on draft by Commission on Human Settlements (A/C.2/36/L.9); agenda item 78 (i).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 39; plenary 102.

Settlements planning

In a resolution of 6 May 1983,⁽¹²⁾ the Commission on Human Settlements invited Governments to consider adopting policies of local planning for human settlements and incorporating them in their national development plans. The Commission requested the UNCHS Executive Director to work with UNEP and other United Nations bodies to assist countries in local planning by elaborating models and methods for the integral planning of communities, by disseminating information on local participation in developing settlements, by responding to government requests to elaborate policies for local planning, by supporting training programmes for local officials with the collaboration of universities and public administration institutions, and by organizing regional and national seminars to define methods and suggest models of local planning.

Construction

By a resolution of 5 May 1983,⁽¹³⁾ the Commission on Human Settlements requested the UNCHS

Executive Director to draw up a programme of action to provide assistance to developing countries in using and promoting local materials and assimilating local techniques for the use of those materials, and to report to the Commission in 1984 on progress made in that regard.

By another resolution of the same date,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Commission requested the Executive Director to select, collect and collate technical information relating to experience acquired in the building industry, particularly in developed countries, and to distribute such information to developing countries and others that were interested.

Land use

A report on land for human settlements,⁽¹⁵⁾ which reviewed and analysed the situation and set out a number of recommendations, was submitted to the Commission on Human Settlements by the UNCHS Executive Director in January 1983.

The report largely restricted its review to the problem of residential land for low-income groups which, the report stated, were excluded from legitimate access to land and housing in sufficient proximity to income-earning opportunities. As settlements grew, the housing needs of low-income groups became more serious, but an adequate political response to the challenge of making growing settlements liveable had not yet emerged. Public expenditures on housing programmes had remained much lower than necessary to meet needs; housing targets had rarely been met. Land was becoming the central issue in the housing crisis that faced growing settlements. The inadequacy of land for housing low-income groups was bringing settlements, particularly large cities, under increasing pressures, which reflected the inability of settlements to share the wealth created in them. The settlement process itself created wealth, and it was through the sharing of the value thus created that the issue of land for housing low-income groups could be adequately resolved.

The report also considered "informal" arrangements which low-income groups had used to obtain access to land and housing, such as the occupation of abandoned properties and encroachments on marginal lands; the limited role played by most Governments in providing land for low-income housing; and the increasing market pressures on land availability.

The report suggested a series of possible actions by Governments to make land for housing accessible to low-income groups, such as: increasing the supply of land through public intervention; increasing public participation in land development; increasing and upgrading the supply of land by the private sector; legitimizing informal settlements and preventing their unnecessary destruction; and financing land development. Land for housing low-income groups was primarily a national issue, not an international one, the report concluded. International action could only assist or supplement national initiatives. Action on the issue had to address the unique problems of a particular country. The international community could contribute by accumulating global experience on land issues, developing contacts with professionals, politicians and administrators, and assisting countries in identifying and resolving problems.

Endorsing the report in a decision of 6 May 1983,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Commission recommended that Governments focus increased attention on land development for housing the poor; ensure land availability by renewing decaying urban centres and expanding infrastructure construction; pursue land registration programmes; and monitor speculative practices as a source of undue increase in land costs for housing and related community services.

Natural disasters

By a resolution of 4 May 1983,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission requested the UNCHS Executive Director to promote the study of a global plan to make possible immediate technical and financial assistance to areas in developing countries affected by natural disasters such as earthquakes, typhoons, torrential rain and large-scale flooding.

Least developed countries

The Commission on Human Settlements, by a resolution of 5 May 1983,⁽¹⁸⁾ took note with appreciation of UNCHS activities for the benefit of the least developed countries (LDCs), in particular, the 49 projects currently being carried out in 35 LDCs in Africa, Asia and Latin America, and of the contribution those activities were making towards realization of the objectives of the 1981 Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s of the Least Developed Countries.⁽¹⁹⁾ The Commission appealed to States, the United Nations system, and multilateral development and financial institutions to take measures to accelerate implementation of SNPA in the field of human settlements. It requested the UNCHS Executive Director to continue giving high priority to formulating and implementing human settlements projects for the LDCs.

Financial institution for Asia and the Pacific

The UNCHS Executive Director reported in January 1983⁽²⁰⁾ to the Commission on Human Settlements on progress made in preparing a feasibility study requested in 1981⁽²¹⁾ on the creation of an Asian human settlements bank. To initiate a study on the mobilization of savings and their utilization for human settlements, questionnaires had been sent to all developing countries in the Asia and Pacific region; however, only six replies had been received.

An Ad Hoc Group of Experts had met in November/December 1982 at Manila, Philippines, to consider steps to accelerate the feasibility study. In its report annexed to the Executive Director's report, the Group stressed early establishment of such an institution. It was agreed that what was needed was not merely an association of housing institutions but a more active organization whereby share capital would be invested by Governments or their nominated institutions. In its initial stages, it would provide managerial and technical expertise and to a limited extent seed capital, as well as identify projects requiring expertise and potential donor agencies. In the long term, major emphasis should be placed on "self-help", mobilizing domestic capital to alleviate shelter problems. The design and structure of the new body were outlined, and details were provided on the procedures and timetable for its formation.

In a resolution of 4 May,⁽²²⁾ the Commission decided that further steps on the question of a financial institution for Asia and the Pacific should be taken, requested the Executive Director to call a meeting of a small working group of governmental experts, and accepted the offer of the Philippine:: to host the meeting of the working group.

Human settlements in territories occupied by Israel

Israel's policy of establishing settlements in the territories occupied by it as a result of previous armed conflict in the Middle East (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX) was the subject of a resolution adopted by the Commission on 4 May 1983.⁽²³⁾ The Commission condemned the destruction of homes and displacement of their owners by the Israeli authorities in the territories. It also condemned the establishment in their place by Israel of what it described as illegal colonies, and called on the Israeli authorities to stop establishing them. It recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to set up a team of experts on human settlements to study those colonies and their effects on the indigenous owners, in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization, and to report to the Commission in 1984. It recommended that the Assembly urge the occupying authorities to implement relevant United Nations resolutions and, in the event of their continuing non-compliance, that the Assembly take appropriate action.

Assistance to Africa

Assistance to national liberation movements

In a January 1983 report⁽²⁴⁾ on UNCHS assistance to the three African national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU)—the African National Congress (ANC), the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC) and the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO)—the UNCHS Executive Director stated that three projects were being carried out. They involved training and policy formulation in land use and human settlements development for SWAPO, assistance to self-help community development for ANC at Morogoro, United Republic of Tanzania, and preparatory assistance for the construction of a multi-purpose centre at Bagamoyo, Tanzania, for PAC.

On 5 May 1983, the Commission adopted three resolutions on assistance to Africa. In a resolution on victims of apartheid and colonialism in Africa,⁽²⁵⁾ it strongly condemned South Africa for domestic repression, aggression against neighbouring States, and its illegal occupation of Namibia. It requested the Executive Director to continue his efforts to aid the victims, and to provide additional assistance to those countries in which human settlements had been disrupted by South Africa's régime. It reaffirmed its 1982 request⁽²⁶⁾ that the national liberation movements recognized by OAU be represented by more than one person at Commission sessions.

By another resolution,⁽²⁷⁾ the Commission requested the Executive Director to intensify the programme of assistance to Lesotho in the area of human settlements, so as to help it contain its refugees and recover from the December 1982 aggression by South Africa.⁽²⁸⁾ By a third resolution,⁽²⁹⁾ the Commission urged increased UNCHS technical assistance for the reconstruction of housing in N'Djamena, Chad, which had been badly damaged during three years of fighting.

Co-operation with Shelter-Afrique

In a January 1983 report,⁽³⁰⁾ the UNCHS Executive Director traced the creation of Shelter-Afrique, a specialized housing finance institution. UNCHS had been closely involved in its establishment, in co-operation with the African Development Bank.

The first general meeting of Shelter-Afrique, attended by a UNCHS representative, had been held at Nairobi, in December 1982. Its principal officers had been elected, and a Board of Directors appointed. As soon as its permanent secretariat was established, the UNCHS Executive Director would identify specific areas of co-operation and their modalities.

By a resolution of 5 May,⁽³¹⁾ the Commission on Human Settlements requested the Executive Director to provide technical, financial and other assistance to Shelter-Afrique and to report on the progress made in 1984.

Organizational questions

Co-ordination in the UN system

Pursuant to a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in November 1983⁽²⁾ that he had formally proposed that UNCHS take part fully in the work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), and that informal consultations to that end had followed.

On 27 October,⁽³⁾ ACC decided that the UNCHS Executive Director should be invited to participate in ACC meetings when questions in which the Centre had a direct interest were under consideration. It further decided to invite UNCHS to participate in meetings of ACC subsidiary bodies when matters of concern to it were taken up.

In December, the sixth joint meeting was held between UNCHS and UNEP (see previous chapter).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/167 B.

Co-ordination of human settlements programmes within the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/77 C of 5 December 1980, in which it invited the Secretary-General to arrange, in consultation with the members of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, for the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to participate in all aspects of the work of that Committee and its subsidiary machinery,

Recalling also its resolution 37/223 C of 20 December 1982, in which it requested the Secretary-General to accelerate his efforts in arranging for such participation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General summarizing decision 1983/18 of 27 October 1983 of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the matter, as well as the oral explanation given by the representative of the Secretary-General.

Aware that the decision of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination does not completely meet the requirement of General Assembly resolutions 35/77 C and 37/223 C, Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General summarizing decision 1983/18 of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and requests him to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of its resolutions on the question.

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.8) without vote (parts A and B together), 21 November (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.72, part B), based on informal consultations on 4-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.19, part B); agenda item 78 (h).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 30, 45; plenary 102.

The adopted text was based on informal consultations on a draft introduced by the Netherlands, also on behalf of Gabon, Kenya and the Philippines. By that text, the Assembly would have noted with regret that the ACC October decision did not meet its December 1982 request(1) that UNCHS be enabled to participate in all aspects of the work of ACC and its subsidiary machinery; would have restated its conviction that full participation was essential for UNCHS to fulfil its mandate with respect to co-ordinating United Nations human settlements activities; and would have requested the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to arrange for full participation without delay.

Cross-organizational programme analysis

In a note submitted to the Commission on Human Settlements in March 1983,(4) the UNCHS secretariat reviewed human settlements activities within the United Nations system during 1982-1983, in accordance with a 1982 decision of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC).(5) CPC was to consider that note in preparation for a cross-organizational programme analysis (COPA) of human settlements activities in 1984 (see Chapter XXIV of this section).

The note reviewed 20 areas of action under the six main programme categories set out by the 1976 Habitat Conference,(6) to provide CPC with a basis for expressing its views on whether the current system of activities was responsive to international needs. The note stated that during 1982-1983 the following United Nations bodies were involved in human settlements activities: UNCHS, the United Nations Departments of International Economic and Social Affairs and of Technical Co-operation for Development, the regional commissions, UNIDO, UNDP, UNEP, UNFPA, UNDRO and UNHCR. Agencies involved included: FAO, ILO, ITU, UNESCO, WHO and WMO. In addition, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Bank and WFP provided primarily financial and material assistance. The pattern of involvement of United Nations organizations in human settlements activities and the distribution of resources were shown in a table.

The Commission on Human Settlements concluded in a decision of 6 May 1983(7) that the pattern of human settlements activities identified in the note addressed national needs. It requested UNCHS to transmit the note to the United Nations Office of Programme Planning and Co-ordination, Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, for further action.

Work programme of the Commission on Human Settlements

The Commission on Human Settlements decided on 6 May 1983(8) that a special theme for discussion at its 1985 session should be planning and management of human settlements, with emphasis on small and intermediate towns and local growth points. It requested the UNCHS Executive Director to submit for its consideration in 1984 a draft outline of the theme paper and a work plan for its preparation.

Training and information as part of overall human settlements policy were to be the special themes for discussion at the Commission's 1984 session. Information needs and approaches in human settlements development, including UNCHS information activities, were considered by 15 experts at a meeting held in collaboration with the Netherlands Ministry of Housing, Physical Planning and Environment (The Hague, 5-9 September 1983).

In 1983, the Joint Inspection Unit, CPC and the General Assembly examined plans to strengthen Secretariat machinery for evaluating United Nations programmes. These plans included an increase of staff of the UNCHS evaluation unit (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter II).

Chapter XVIII

Human rights

In 1983, the United Nations continued to take action against racism, racial discrimination, apartheid and other forms of discrimination, to investigate situations involving violations of human rights in several parts of the world, to develop international standards, and to pursue other means of promoting and protecting fundamental rights and freedoms. The Secretary-General stated in his annual report on the Organization's work (p. 3) that he believed it his responsibility to consider ways of dealing with specific cases involving human rights issues. To that end, he had contacted Governments and was determined to persist in his efforts.

Highlighting the year's activities was the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, which convened in August and adopted a Declaration and a Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. The Programme was approved by the General Assembly in November, when it proclaimed the Second Decade, to begin on 10 December, following the close of the first Decade.

The year saw a rise in the number of parties to several human rights instruments—the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to 122; the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, each to 77; and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to 80. Ratification of or adherence to those instruments was again called for in several Assembly resolutions.

The year also marked the commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, whose significance was stressed by the Assembly in December.

Work continued on the elaboration of separate instruments to protect the rights of the child, persons detained or imprisoned, migrant workers, minorities and non-citizens, and against torture and other inhuman treatment. The drafting of guidelines and guarantees for the protection of persons on grounds of mental ill-health or disorder was set in motion. An expert group was reconvened to draft a declaration on the right to development, a right reaffirmed as an inalienable human right by the Assembly in December.

Working groups set up by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities reviewed developments on detention, on involuntary disappearances, and on slavery and all manner of traffic in persons. A working group on the encouragement of universal acceptance of human rights instruments continued its country-by-country examination.

The right of peoples to self-determination was reaffirmed by the Assembly in November, as it was by the Commission for Palestinians and for the peoples of Afghanistan, East Timor, Kampuchea, South Africa and Namibia, and Western Sahara and by the Sub-Commission for the people of Nicaragua.

Alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries continued to be examined, including in Chile, Cyprus, El Salvador, Guatemala, Iran, Poland, South Africa and Namibia, as well as in the territories occupied by Israel. Besides reporting to the Commission on these alleged large-scale violations, the Secretary-General also reported to the Assembly on the question of human rights and mass exoduses. A Special Rapporteur was appointed by the Sub-Commission to update a study on the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide.

Establishment of a post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights was again discussed by the Commission and its Sub-Commission.

The Commission adopted 54 resolutions and 13 decisions at its thirty-ninth session, held at Geneva from 31 January to 11 March.⁽¹⁾ Its Sub-Commission held its thirty-sixth session, also at Geneva, from 15 August to 9 September, adopting 40 resolutions and 12 decisions.⁽²⁾ The Economic and Social Council reviewed the Commission's work in May, acting on it and other human rights questions in 12 resolutions and 28 decisions. The Assembly adopted 33 resolutions on various human rights questions between October and December.

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: South Africa and apartheid. Americas: Central America situation. Asia and the Pacific: Kampuchea situation; Afghanistan situation; Iran-Iraq armed conflict. Mediterranean: Cyprus question. Middle East: Middle East situation; territories occupied by Israel. Social and cultural development. Health

Decades for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983)⁽³⁾ drew to a close in December 1983, immediately following which a Second Decade (1983-1993) began. The Second Decade was proclaimed by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

Pursuant to a programme of activities covering the last four years of the first Decade (1973-1983)—adopted by the General Assembly in 1979⁽⁴⁾—and as decided by the Assembly in December 1982,⁽⁵⁾ a Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination was held towards the end of the Decade, from 1 to 12 August 1983, at Geneva.⁽⁶⁾ The first such conference took place in 1978.⁽⁷⁾

The purpose of the Second Conference was to evaluate the work undertaken during the Decade and to chart new measures where necessary. The Conference adopted a Declaration and a Programme of Action; it recommended that a Second Decade be launched with a view to achieving total elimination of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid. By resolution 38/14, the Assembly proclaimed a Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to begin on 10 December 1983, and approved the Programme of Action for the Second Decade.

Conference preparations

As authorized by the Economic and Social Council in May 1982,⁽⁸⁾ the Preparatory Sub-Committee for the Second World Conference held its second session in New York from 21 to 25 March 1983. It was opened by the Secretary-General of the Conference, who had been appointed in keeping with a December 1982 General Assembly request.⁽⁹⁾ The Sub-Committee's report,⁽¹⁰⁾ which was submitted to the Council's May 1983 session, supplied information on the status of documentation and other matters pertaining to the Conference preparations, including a draft programme of action containing proposals for activities to be undertaken during the Second Decade.

On 18 February,⁽¹¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 41 to none, requested the Preparatory Sub-Committee to consider recommending that a study of ways to ensure full and universal implementation of United Nations decisions on racism, racial discrimination and apartheid be included in the draft programme of action.

On 10 March,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the Preparatory Sub-Committee would be reporting to the Council in May and that United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations would be submitting information on implementation of the 1973 Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination⁽¹³⁾ to the Conference. He therefore proposed that the annual report requested of him, containing similar information, should not be submitted.

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), at its March session (see CONVENTION ON THE ELIMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION below), decided to transmit to the Conference two studies, on implementation of article 4 (on promotion of ideas against racial discrimination) and article 7 (calling for measures to combat prejudices leading to racial discrimination) of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. The Committee also designated two of its members to participate in the Conference.

Appointment of the members of the Preparatory Sub-Committee for the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

Conference action

The Conference set up a General Committee and a Credentials Committee, as well as two committees to prepare a draft Declaration and a draft Programme of Action. The General Committee established a Joint Drafting Committee.

On 12 August, the Conference adopted the Declaration by 101 votes to 12, with 3 abstentions, and the Programme of Action by 104 votes to none, with 10 abstentions.

Declaration. By the Declaration, the Conference, holding all human beings to be born equal in dignity and rights, declared any doctrine of racial superiority to be scientifically false, morally, condemnable and socially unjust, and without justification whatsoever. It regarded government policies based on such doctrine as jeopardizing friendly relations among peoples and nations, and thus international peace and security. It singled out apartheid as such a policy and an institutionalized form of racism constituting a crime against humanity. Therefore, it condemned any form of co-operation—whether economic, military, nuclear or other—with the racist régime of South Africa, in particular Israel's increasing relations with it, as an impediment to the struggle against apartheid.

Deeply concerned over the stepped up activities of many neo-Nazi and Fascist organizations that encouraged tendencies towards racism and racial discrimination, the Conference called for measures against all ideologies and practices—including apartheid, nazism, fascism and neo-fascism—based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror or systematic denials of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Likewise concerned over racial discrimination practices against Palestinians and other inhabitants of Arab territories occupied by Israel, the Conference demanded cessation of such practices.

Believing that persons belonging to national, ethnic and other minorities could play a significant role in promoting national and international co-operation and understanding, the Conference stressed that protecting their rights under existing and proposed international instruments and granting them full participation in the national political, economic and social life were essential to the fulfilment of that role. It recognized the rights of indigenous populations to maintain their traditional economic, social and cultural structures and to pursue their development within that context. Other groups affected by various forms of discrimination and cited for special attention in human rights programmes and legislation included women and children, refugees, immigrants and migrant workers.

The Conference called for the development of affirmative action programmes to address racism and racial discrimination inherent in economic, social and cultural systems and to combat racism through education and information. Deeming it the responsibility of Governments to promote awareness of the evils of racism and racial discrimination, the Conference called on them to make clear their condemnation of propaganda and organizations based on theories of superiority of one race or group of persons, and to adopt measures to eradicate all action and incitement to such discrimination. The Conference called for increased moral, political and material support to the South African and Namibian people who, under the leadership of their national liberation movements, were struggling to establish an independent, non-racial and democratic society. It also called for support to national liberation movements.

States, international organizations, governmental and non-governmental organizations, and local, private and religious institutions were called upon to ensure the effective realization of the goals and objectives of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, reaffirmed by the Declaration thus: to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, colour, descent, or national or ethnic origin; to identify, isolate and dispel beliefs, policies and practices contributing to racism, racial discrimination and apartheid; and to counteract alliances based on mutual espousal of racism and racial discrimination.

Towards these ends, the Conference, by the Declaration, recommended that a Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination be launched.

Programme of Action. The Programme of Action set forth in detail the legal and administrative measures to be taken at the national, regional and international levels to combat apartheid, racism and racial discrimination. The text of the Programme, as approved by General Assembly resolution 38/14, was annexed to that resolution (see below).

Prior to adoption of the Declaration as a whole, paragraph 19, condemning co-operation with South Africa, notably the increasing relations between its racist régime and Israel, was adopted by a roll-call vote, requested by the USSR, of 84 to 15, with 16 abstentions. Paragraph 20, calling for the cessation of practices of racial discrimination against Palestinians and other inhabitants of the occupied Arab territories, was also adopted by a roll-call vote, requested by Egypt, of 87 to 17, with 11 abstentions.

Prior to adoption of the Programme of Action as a whole, the section on action to combat apartheid (section A) was adopted by 92 votes to 7, with 12 abstentions, following a vote of 86 to 20, with 2 abstentions, on paragraph 3 (reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia and their national liberation movements for the elimination of apartheid by all available means, including armed struggle).

Reservations on the Declaration centred on its two separately adopted paragraphs. It was the unanimous opinion of the participants which voted against both that they introduced elements either divisive or extraneous to the purposes of the Decade and the Conference. Those participants were Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway and Switzerland. Finland and Sweden also voted against paragraph 20 (abstaining on paragraph 19).

Citing inclusion of those paragraphs as the primary reason for their vote against the Declaration as a whole were Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands, the same reason for New Zealand's abstention on it. 'The United Kingdom said it was unable to join in a consensus on the Declaration and the Programme of Action because they included the same unacceptable elements that were in the 1978 texts.'⁽¹⁾

Besides regarding the Middle East situation as beyond the purview of the Conference, Belgium thought it a regrettable error to single out Israel alongside South Africa. Abstaining on the two paragraphs on similar grounds were Austria, Ecuador and Portugal; Austria added that, while it deplored all discriminatory practices in the occupied Arab territories, it did not consider them as practices of racial discrimination. Japan, which also abstained on the paragraphs, said it understood the Middle East problem to be a political one with no direct bearing on the issue of elimination of racial discrimination. Botswana, Lesotho and Spain registered their reservations on the wording of paragraph 19 by abstaining on it.

That apartheid was a threat to international peace and security drew reservations from Belgium and Portugal, which noted that, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, it was for the Security Council alone to determine the existence of such a threat. France was uncertain whether, from a legal standpoint, there was full justification for characterizing apartheid as a crime against humanity—a reservation shared by Belgium, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and Portugal.

Total isolation of South Africa through mandatory sanctions would not lead to the desired goal of eradicating apartheid, Belgium, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and Portugal felt. Such isolation, Belgium claimed, would be extremely harmful to the oppressed majority of South Africans. Along with Denmark and Luxembourg, Belgium also pointed out that sanctions were solely for the Council to impose. In this connection, Colombia noted that Chapter VII of the Charter assigned special functions to the Council which should not be duplicated, exceeded or encroached upon.

France, which abstained on the Programme, said its objections stemmed primarily from its position that sanctions in most cases were ineffective. Lesotho, which supported the Declaration and the Programme of Action, said it had difficulties—as did Botswana—with those provisions calling for trade and economic sanctions or any other measure to isolate South Africa. The United Kingdom could not endorse further economic and cultural sanctions, nor could Portugal endorse the call for termination of all economic and financial collaboration with South Africa. In Japan's opinion, economic assistance and collaboration, as condemned by the Conference, did not include normal trade with South Africa; financial institutions, specifically the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, which were urged to refrain from extending credits to South Africa, should not be concerned with political issues.

To be effective, sanctions against South Africa must be carefully chosen and co-ordinated and must be imposed by the Council in accordance with the Charter, Ireland said.

Canada explained that, owing to serious reservations on the recommendations in the section on apartheid, it could not agree with the Programme as a whole. The Federal Republic of Germany said it abstained on the Programme and voted against that section because it contained certain unacceptable elements. Claiming difficulties with the same section, New Zealand said it was obliged also to abstain on the Programme. The United Kingdom made clear that its vote on the section was without prejudice to its well-known position on negotiations towards an independence settlement for Namibia and to its continuing commitment to an internationally acceptable settlement in accordance with a 1978 Council resolution.⁽¹⁴⁾ Belgium and Luxembourg declared their support for the efforts of Namibians to achieve national independence but believed the situation in South Africa to be fundamentally different in that the campaign against apartheid should aim at establishing a democratic and multiracial society.

Switzerland noted that it would take account of the national measures recommended for combating apartheid and racial discrimination within the framework of its obligations deriving from the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.⁽¹⁵⁾

While supporting the anti-apartheid efforts of the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, the Netherlands said it did not recognize them as national liberation movements, since the situation in South Africa was not a colonial one. By the same token, the efforts of the South African people to attain equal political and other rights could not be equated with a presumed right to self-determination. Colombia drew attention to the United Nations practice of recognizing only such movements as were recognized by their respective regional organizations.

Direct and indirect references to armed struggle were rejected by a number of countries, among them Austria, Belgium, Chile, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain and Turkey. On behalf of the five Nordic countries, which had voted for the Programme, Norway said their main difficulty lay in the formulation that implied United Nations condonement of armed struggle. France could not advocate it, nor could the United Kingdom accept proposals for its endorsement. Such endorsement, Ireland pointed out, was contrary to the Charter. Japan said armed struggle should not be considered an appropriate means for eliminating apartheid. Colombia reiterated its position in favour of peaceful settlement, and Ecuador its policy of non-recognition of territorial occupation or acquisition by force, support for the defence and protection of human rights, and respect for self-determination of peoples.

As to the call for implementation of Decree No. 1, for the protection of Namibia's natural resources adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia in 1974,⁽¹⁶⁾ and of the Assembly's December 1982 resolution on the Council's work programme for 1983,⁽¹⁷⁾ Belgium emphasized that the Decree and the resolution were only recommendations.

Voicing reservations on the provisions calling on States to use education as a means of eradicating racism and to apply strictly the principle of non-discrimination and equality in education were Austria and the Federal Republic of Germany. In Iran's view, such use of education should be programmed within the regional cultural, social and economic context, but the role of education should not be so overestimated as to turn action to combat racism and racial discrimination into an academic issue.

The Federal Republic of Germany also reserved its position regarding provisions on the legal status of migrant workers. France's reservations referred specifically to the principle of equality to be accorded to migrant workers and to article 27 (stating that persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities should not be denied the right to enjoy their own culture, practice their own religion or use their own language) of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.⁽¹⁸⁾

A number of States—among them Austria, Belgium, Chile, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Spain and the United Kingdom—expressed reservations on references to conventions and other international instruments to which they neither had acceded nor intended to accede, as well as on endorsements of final texts of international conferences in which they had not taken part. The appeal made by the Declaration and the Programme for implementation of those instruments, Austria said, would not prejudice its future decisions on them. Colombia reserved its right of accession as an act of national sovereignty. The United Kingdom stated that its acceptance of section F, on implementation of the 1965 International Convention against racial discrimination⁽¹⁵⁾ and other related instruments, did not change its view regarding the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.⁽¹⁹⁾ Belgium, Chile, France and Portugal reserved their positions on that Convention mainly on legal grounds.

Conference documents on which reservations were entered included the 1981 Paris Declaration on Sanctions against South Africa⁽²⁰⁾ and the Programme of Action adopted in April 1983 by the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence:

The United Kingdom could not accept the language of section G, calling for national legislation and action by national institutions. It noted that the subjects dealt with were already under discussion in an ad hoc committee established by the Assembly, and some of the proposals, under certain circumstances, would be unreasonable or incompatible with freedom of speech, association and movement and with other basic freedoms. The United Kingdom could not interfere particularly with freedom of expression; it could neither prescribe curricula and other educational provisions, nor impose strict prohibitions in sports. Italy voiced reservations on parts of the text which, it said, might give rise to interpretations contrary to its Constitution in relation to freedom of the press, expression and thought.

In the opinion of Iran, the Declaration and the Programme of Action, for which it had voted, should have referred explicitly to, among other things, the role of certain Western countries, in particular the United States, as the root cause of South Africa's and Israel's apartheid policies and practices and that action must be taken to eliminate that role; to the South African apartheid régime as illegal and to any relations with it as a crime against the South African and Namibian people; and to Zionism as a form of racism, to be cited in the same manner as racism, racial discrimination, Nazism and neo-fascism.

The Conference also adopted two resolutions and a decision without vote. By the first resolution, of 10 August, it approved the report of the Credentials Committee. By the second, of 12 August, the Conference took note with regret that on 5 August Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela had completed 21 years in prison for his leadership in the struggle against apartheid, expressed solidarity with him and the national liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia, demanded his immediate and unconditional release and that of all other South African and Namibian political prisoners, and called on the international community to redouble efforts in the campaign for their release. The paragraph expressing solidarity was adopted by 78 votes to none, with 10 abstentions, thereby retaining mention of the national liberation movements. (See also POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V.)

By the decision, also of 12 August, the Conference requested its President and Secretary-General, respectively, to submit the Conference report to the Assembly and to assist in the Assembly's consideration of the report, and invited the Secretary-General of the United Nations to make administrative arrangements for that purpose.

Annexed to the Conference report were: the opening addresses by, the United Nations Secretary-General, the Conference President and Secretary-General, and the Assembly President; messages from 16 heads of State or Government or other State representatives and from the Chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO); and a statement by the Conference President on 9 August, on the occasion of International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In a September 1983 report to the General Assembly, on the work of the Conference,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General expressed satisfaction that Conference participation had been global and noted that, during the deliberations, a constructive spirit had been generally maintained and the Programme of Action had been adopted with no dissenting vote. The successful conclusion of the Conference, he added, had created a favourable atmosphere within which greater efforts could be made for attaining a global consensus on matters relating to racism, racial discrimination and apartheid. He hoped that the international community would implement the Conference recommendations effectively so that the Second Decade would yield substantial results.

On 22 November, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 38/14 without vote.

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objective contained in the Charter of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism in all its forms: racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention against Discrimination in Education, adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Recalling further its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, on the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Emphasizing the necessity of attaining the objectives of the Decade,

Recalling the first World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva from 14 to 25 August 1978,

Noting that the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination was held at Geneva from 1 to 12 August 1983 pursuant to General Assembly resolution 37/41 of 3 December 1982,

Convinced that the Second World Conference represented a positive contribution by the international community towards attaining the objectives of the Decade, through its adoption of a Declaration and an operational Programme of Action,

Having considered the Report of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Noting with concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination has not attained its principal objectives and that millions of human beings continue to this day to be the victims of varied forms of racism and of racial discrimination,

Convinced of the need to take continuing and reinforced international measures for the elimination of racism and racial discrimination and the total eradication of apartheid in South Africa,

Noting that, in order to attain these objectives, it is imperative, in accordance with the recommendation of the Second World Conference, to declare a second decade at the end of the present Decade, which expires in December 1983,

1. Proclaims the ten-year period beginning on 10 December 1983 the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

2. Takes note of the results of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination contained in the report of the Conference;

3. Approves the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, which is annexed to the present resolution, and calls upon all States to co-operate in its implementation;

4. Requests the Economic and Social Council to take charge, with the help of the Secretary-General, of co-ordinating the implementation of the Programme of Action and of evaluating the activities undertaken during the Second Decade;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a plan of activities for the period 1985-1989 for implementing the Programme of Action and achieving the objectives of the Second Decade, taking into account the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

6. Decides to consider at its thirty-ninth session the plan of activities for the period 1985-1989 to be submitted by the Secretary-General;

7. Decides further that the Programme for the first Decade should continue to be applied and implemented until the plan of activities for the period 1985-1989 is adopted;

8. Invites Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate in the observance of the Second Decade by intensifying and extending their efforts to ensure the rapid elimination of racism and racial discrimination;

9. Decides to consider on an annual basis an item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination".

ANNEX

Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

A. Action to combat apartheid

1. The Conference calls upon all States, United Nations organs and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to ensure the full and universal implementation of mandatory Security Council resolutions and to make efforts to implement other United Nations resolutions. Particular attention should be paid to specific measures, including those contained in the present Programme of Action, designed to ensure the implementation of the provisions relating to apartheid.

2. The Conference reaffirms that the system of apartheid in South Africa is the most extreme form of institutionalized racism, a crime against humanity and an affront to the conscience and dignity of mankind, and that South Africa's policies and practices constitute serious breaches of and threats to regional stability and to international peace and security. The Conference calls upon all States, international organizations, private institutions and non-governmental organizations to render increased political and material assistance to the oppressed peoples of South Africa and Namibia and to accelerate greatly campaigns for obtaining the release of all political prisoners imprisoned for their activities against apartheid.

3. The Conference further reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed peoples of South Africa and Namibia and their national liberation movements for the elimination of apartheid by all available means, including armed struggle, and the special responsibility of the United Nations and the international community to provide them with moral, political and material assistance in the realization of their quest to exercise their right to self-determination.

4. The Conference reiterates the commitment of the United Nations to the total eradication of apartheid and to the establishment of a democratic society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour, sex or creed, will enjoy equal and full human rights and fundamental freedoms and participate freely in the determination of their destiny.

5. The Conference reaffirms the international community's rejection of the "bantustanization" policy and similar measures which are an integral part of the discriminatory apartheid system and which deny the black majority their legitimate rights to their land and to their citizenship of South Africa.

6. The Conference further confirms the international community's rejection of the régime's so-called reforms, especially the limited parliamentary representation for the Coloureds and Asians designed to split the black alliance and buttress the apartheid system.

7. The Conference calls upon all States to implement strictly the embargo on the sale and transfer of arms and related military materials imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977. The Conference further urges the Security Council to adopt urgent measures to strengthen the arms embargo, in accordance with the recommendations of the Council's committee established under its resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977.

8. The Conference calls upon the Security Council to consider urgently the imposition of mandatory sanctions, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, against the apartheid regime of South Africa, and in particular:

(a) The cessation of all collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field, as such collaboration would enhance South Africa's capacity to develop nuclear weapons;

(b) The prohibition of all technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms in South Africa and the provision of military supplies to South Africa;

(c) The cessation of foreign investments in, and financial loans to, South Africa;

(d) An embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic commodities that would enable South Africa to continue implementing its apartheid policy;

(e) The interruption of trade relations with South Africa.

9. The Conference strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its systematic oppression of and discrimination against the overwhelming majority of the population of South Africa and for its continuing illegal occupation of Namibia. The Conference also condemns acts of military aggression and acts of political and economic destabilization perpetrated by South Africa against the independent neighbouring States of Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, the Seychelles, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe, as well as South Africa's activities to recruit, train, finance and arm mercenaries for aggression against and destabilization of the neighbouring States, creating instability in this part of the world.

10. The Conference calls for increased international assistance and support to the front-line States and other independent States in the subregion that are subjected to threats and acts of aggression and destabilization by the apartheid régime of South Africa, in order to enable them to strengthen their defence capacity, defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity, fight the adverse South African and other propaganda that undermines racial harmony and peace in the subregion, and peacefully rebuild and develop their countries.

11. The Conference calls upon States to sever all sporting, cultural and scientific links with the racist regime and with organizations or institutions in South Africa which practise apartheid and to discourage their nationals from having any such contacts.

12. The Conference calls upon all States that have not yet done so:

(a) To refrain from any relations with the apartheid régime which could contribute to the continuance of the apartheid policy;

(b) To discourage or prevent all business enterprises, including transnational corporations, in so far as they are under their jurisdiction or control, from collaborating in any way with the racist regime of South Africa, as such collaboration may contribute towards the continuance of its apartheid policy.

13. The Conference, reaffirming the direct responsibility of the United Nations for Namibia pending its achievement of genuine self-determination, national independence and territorial integrity, demands the immediate and unconditional implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 and calls upon all States, intergovernmental organizations, private institutions and non-governmental organizations to make an active contribution to this aim. The Conference further calls upon all Governments and transnational corporations to implement Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and also calls for the implementation of the measures referred to in General Assembly resolution 37/233 C of 20 December 1982 on Namibia.

14. The Conference calls upon all States, intergovernmental organizations, private institutions and non-governmental organizations to continue to take all necessary measures to ensure the termination of all economic and financial collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, as such assistance will contribute to the continuance of the policies of apartheid, and to refrain from taking any action that might imply recognition of or support for the illegal occupation of the Namibian territory by that régime. In this connection, the Conference cautions against unilateral attempts to relax the application of the sanctions already imposed by the Security Council.

15. The Conference urges the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, as well as similar institutions, to refrain from extending any credits to the racist régime of South Africa.

B. Education, teaching and training

16. The Conference calls upon all States to use effectively education, teaching and training to create a favourable atmosphere for the eradication of racism and racial discrimination. These media should serve as channels for exposing the myths and fallacies of theories, philosophies, ideas and attitudes that are inherent in discriminatory actions based on differences of race, colour, descent and national or ethnic origin. It is imperative for all States to apply strictly the principle of non-discrimination and equality in the matter of education, as set forth in the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The Conference invites States:

(a) To examine history, geography and social studies textbooks with a view to correcting any erroneous assessment of historical and social data, or their unbalanced presentation, which could give rise to racial prejudice;

(b) To ensure that teachers are made conscious of the degree to which they may reflect the prejudices of their society and are instructed to avoid such prejudices;

(c) To provide adequate opportunities in schools and institutions of higher learning for the study of the activities of the United Nations in combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid;

(d) To provide pupils and students at all levels with access to literature and documentation on racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

(e) To ensure that the composition of the teaching staff of institutions reflects, as far as possible, the racial and ethnic composition of the community; affirmative action programmes should be instituted to facilitate the hiring of teachers who represent the racial, ethnic and linguistic composition of the community;

(f) To make available the resources of schools and of teaching and training facilities to persons belonging to all population groups;

(g) To take remedial measures in instances where particular racial, ethnic, linguistic or other groups have had a history of being placed at a disadvantage because of their origin and where such a situation has contributed to a lower level of education and a lower standard of living for persons belonging to various population groups; this is the responsibility of society; it might necessitate special educational programmes at all levels of society;

(h) To make law enforcement agents aware in their training of the possibility that they may reflect the prejudices of their society;

(i) To ensure that school curricula promote a dialogue between persons belonging to the various groups of the society; the curricula should be responsive to the needs and backgrounds of all these persons and foster, where possible, an interchange of cultural experience; in this regard, persons belonging to minority ethnic and racial groups should be allowed to introduce students to the practices and values of the respective cultures; efforts should also be made to allow the topic of human rights to permeate the curricula.

17. National institutions should inform the general public of the nature of their human rights as provided for in the existing international instruments directed towards combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, as well as in other instruments based on the principles contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or as otherwise covered in national legislation. The general public should be advised by the national institutions on the means of enforcing their rights in accordance with national law. National institutions should ensure that persons are made aware of their own rights and those of others and should assist them in the matter of protecting and enforcing their rights. These institutions should mobilize public opinion in their countries against violations of human rights, especially gross and massive violations, in particular against the practice of apartheid, racism and genocide.

18. One of the fundamental objectives of programmes of education and scientific research undertaken in national institutions should be the elimination of racial discrimination and prejudice.

19. It is imperative that all States apply strictly the principle of non-discrimination and equality in the matter of education and adhere to the principles set forth in the Convention against Discrimination in Education. It is important that the right to enter any school should be guaranteed to every child. The availability of special or supplementary education for children belonging to disadvantaged racial and ethnic groups may be appropriate in some cases for their development.

20. International agencies such as the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization should continue their work in the field of human rights education and promote such programmes on a continuing basis as guidelines for textbook analysis, teacher training, curriculum development and other undertakings and, in particular, should develop materials explaining how discrimination inherent in the system and institutionalized can be addressed through remedial programmes such as affirmative action plans.

21. As was recommended by the International Conference on Apartheid and Health, held at Brazzaville from 16 to 20 November 1981, the World Health Organization should continue to implement the Plan of Action in favour of the victims of apartheid, in particular in the fields of health, education and training.

C. Dissemination of information and the role of the mass media in combating racism and racial discrimination

22. The mass media should play a vital role in disseminating information on methods and techniques used in combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid. Taking into account the Declaration on fundamental principles concerning the contribution of the mass media to strengthening peace and international understanding, to the promotion of human rights and countering racialism, apartheid and incitement to war, adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 28 November 1978, the mass media should regard it as their task, by disseminating information on the aims, aspirations, cultures and needs of all peoples, to contribute to eliminating ignorance and misunderstanding between peoples, to making nationals of a country sensitive to the needs and desires of others, to ensuring respect for the rights and dignity of all nations, all peoples and all individuals without distinction as to race, sex, language, religion or nationality and in that way to contribute to protecting them against the influence of any propaganda supporting racism and racist régimes.

23. The mass media should contribute to making the peoples more aware of the close link between the struggle against apartheid and all forms of racism and racial discrimination and the struggle for international peace and security, in accordance with the provisions of the above-mentioned Declaration.

24. Lack of self-expression through the mass media for persons belonging to racial and ethnic minorities in a society can often cause the mass media to become one-sided or distorted. Media of all kinds—radio, television, films, the press, advertising, booklets and public meetings—as well as traditional forms such as drama and story-telling could play a vital role.

25. Events and activities aimed at combating racism and racial discrimination should be given broad coverage by the media. Mention may be made of such activities as the coverage of conferences, seminars, workshops and round tables, as well as of meetings of United Nations organs dealing with a particular question, and the publication and wide distribution of pertinent resolutions and decisions of such bodies. Success stories in combating racial discrimination through legislation, executive action or community action programmes should be given publicity, and the negative and evil side of racism and racial discrimination highlighted. Comic strips, films and magazines for children and adults should be screened with a view to eliminating any form of racial stereotyping, whether favourable or unfavourable. Events having a racial aspect should be presented in their economic and social, cultural and political context; they should not be treated as mere news items.

26. The negative and positive influences exercised by the media in their role as information-conveyors, entertainers, educators and advertisers should be studied. In addition, the media should seek to raise public consciousness about the positive roles and achievements of racial and ethnic groups from all walks of life throughout history. Efforts should be made to produce radio and television programmes depicting the evils of racial discrimination in a vivid way—for example, by illustrating the plight of individual victims of racial discrimination. Such audio and visual presentations are likely to have great impact, particularly in areas where literacy is not widespread.

27. There should be adequate opportunity within the mass media for persons belonging to groups which are victims of discrimination to express their own points of view, particularly by producing programmes or reports themselves. In addition, persons belonging to such groups should have equal access to the professions within the mass media, especially journalism.

28. National institutions should publicize widely basic texts on the elimination of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, as well as other human rights texts.

D. Measures for the promotion and protection of the human rights of persons belonging to minority groups, indigenous populations and peoples and migrant workers who are subjected to racial discrimination

29. Throughout the various regions of the world there is a diversity of peoples, cultures, traditions and religions that encompasses, in many instances, various minority groups. There is a need for constant effort and continued vigilance on the part of all Governments to obviate any form of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin, in accordance with article 1 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

30. National and local institutions, as adapted to the needs and conditions of each country, can play an important role in the promotion and protection of human rights, in the prevention of discrimination and the protection of the rights of persons belonging to national and ethnic minorities, of indigenous populations and of refugees. Such national and local institutions could be of varying types, including judicial, administrative, conciliatory, social and educational. Any or all of these types of institutions could be utilized by individual countries according to their own circumstances and needs.

31. In the area of legislation, Governments should abolish and prohibit any discrimination within their jurisdiction. Such legislation should seek to promote and protect the human rights of persons belonging to minority groups, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and other relevant international instruments. Persons belonging to minorities should enjoy all human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination as to national or ethnic origin, language, religion or sex.

32. Governments should create favourable conditions and take measures that will enable persons belonging to national or ethnic minorities within their jurisdiction to express their characteristics freely and to develop their education, culture, language, traditions and customs and to participate on a non-discriminatory and equitable basis in the cultural, social, economic and political life of the country in which they live. In maintaining their culture and traditions such persons should be in a position to develop the necessary contacts inside and outside their country, with due respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the States concerned and for the principle of non-interference by one State in the internal affairs of another State.

33. States should undertake to combat the causes of inter-group antagonism by adopting concrete measures designed to promote understanding, co-operation and harmonious relations among members of population groups. Where tension and friction exist, their elimination cannot be achieved if the realities of political, economic, cultural, religious and linguistic differences between the various components of the society concerned are not taken into account.

34. With respect to indigenous populations, Governments should recognize and respect the basic rights of such populations:

- (a) To call themselves by their proper name and to express freely their own identity;
- (b) To have official status and to form their own representative organizations;
- (c) To maintain within the areas where they live their traditional economic structure and way of life; this should in no way affect their right to participate freely on an equal basis in the economic, social and political development of the country;
- (d) To maintain and use their own language, wherever possible, for administration and education;
- (e) To enjoy freedom of religion or belief;
- (f) To have access to land and natural resources, particularly in the light of the fundamental importance of rights to land and natural resources to their traditions and aspirations;
- (g) To structure, conduct and control their own educational systems.

35. Indigenous populations should be free to manage their own affairs to the fullest practicable extent, and should be consulted in all matters concerning their interests and welfare, wherever possible through formal consultative arrangements. Special measures should be taken to remedy past dispossession, dispersal and systematic discrimination.

36. Funds should be made available by the national authorities for investments, the uses of which are to be determined with the participation of the indigenous populations themselves, in the economic life of the areas concerned, as well as in all spheres of cultural activity.

37. Governments should allow indigenous populations within their territories to develop cultural and social links with related or similar populations, taking into account the important role of international organizations or associations of indigenous populations, and with due respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the countries in which indigenous populations live.

38. The Conference further urges States to facilitate and support the establishment of representative non-governmental international organizations for indigenous populations, through which they can share experiences and promote common interests. The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities should ensure that the urgent work being carried out by its Working Group on Indigenous Populations is continued so that the complex issues involved can be analysed and appropriate measures taken at the international and national levels.

39. In view of the vulnerability of indigenous populations to discrimination and violations of their human rights, and of the gravity of the threat faced by indigenous populations in some parts of the world, Governments should pay close attention to situations in which the rights of indigenous populations may be violated or denied, in order to prevent such violations, which should be widely publicized as soon as they are detected.

40. States receiving migrant workers should eliminate all discriminatory practices against such workers and their families by giving them treatment no less favourable than that accorded to their own nationals. Host countries should eliminate from their legislation any type of legal or other provisions which may discriminate against migrant workers on the basis of their nationality. This should pertain, inter alia, to vocational training, the type of posts that migrants may occupy, the type of contracts accorded to migrant workers, their right to seek employment in any part of the country, regulations governing working conditions, trade-union activity and access to judicial and administrative tribunals to air grievances concerning discrimination. With a view to combating xenophobia, host countries should develop information campaigns in order to disseminate the idea of equality between nationals and migrant workers.

41. The following measures could also be undertaken by Governments to protect the rights of migrant workers:

(a) The General Assembly should complete, as soon as possible, the elaboration of an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families; the Conference considers that the conclusion of this convention by the United Nations would constitute an important contribution to its endeavours to protect fundamental human rights, because the convention would be added to the other instruments protecting these rights; the Conference recommends, pending the conclusion of the above-mentioned convention, that a joint consultative mechanism should be established in host countries with a view to contributing to good relations and mutual understanding;

(b) States should ratify, accede to and implement the international instruments aimed at protecting migrant workers from discrimination, including the relevant conventions of the International Labour Organisation;

(c) Migrant workers and members of their families should have the same rights as nationals of the State concerned as regards access to and treatment by the courts and tribunals;

(d) All migrant workers should enjoy treatment no less favourable than that accorded to nationals of the host State in respect of remuneration;

(e) Migrant workers should be ensured equal treatment with national workers in the field of social security, including the right to a retirement pension and similar social rights, while they have lawful residence in the host country;

(f) Host countries should be invited to co-operate with countries of origin to provide migrant workers and their families with the necessary facilities in the fields of education and information to safeguard their cultural identity;

(g) The children of migrant workers should be enabled to receive education in their mother tongue and on different aspects of their cultural heritage with a view to preserving their national identity;

(h) The State of origin and the State of employment should co-operate, as far as possible, with a view to helping to create new job opportunities for migrant workers returning to the State of origin.

E. Recourse procedures for victims of racial discrimination
42. The Conference invites States to take into account, within their domestic recourse procedures, the following considerations:

(a) Access to such procedures should be as broad as possible;

(b) Existing recourse procedures should be publicized within their respective jurisdictions, and victims of racial discrimination should be assisted in utilizing the procedures where appropriate;

(c) In each jurisdiction the rules relating to the initiation of complaints should be made simple and flexible and capable of being entertained in the language of the complainant;

(d) Complaints of racial discrimination should be dealt with as expeditiously as possible and there should be a reasonable time-limit with regard to the length of investigations;

(e) Indigent victims of racial discrimination should receive legal aid and assistance in prosecuting their complaint in civil or criminal proceedings, with the help of an interpreter when necessary.

43. Victims of racial discrimination should have the right to seek from tribunals just and adequate reparation or satisfaction for any damage suffered as a result of such discrimination.

F. Implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of 411 Forms of Racial Discrimination and other related international instruments

44. The Conference urges States which have not yet become parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to do so as part of their contribution to the objectives of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and until such States ratify the Convention they should utilize its provisions as guidelines in combating racial discrimination and in securing the realization of the principles of equality at both the national and international levels. The Conference calls upon States parties to the Convention to consider the possibility of making the Declaration provided for in article 14 of the Convention.

45. Those States should enact, as a matter of the highest priority, appropriate legislation and other suitable measures to prohibit and bring to an end racial discrimination, to abrogate, amend, rescind or nullify any policies or regulations that have the effect of creating or perpetuating racial hatred and to declare the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority and hatred to be an offence punishable by law, taking duly into account the provisions of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

46. The Conference also appeals to States which have not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to as soon as possible other relevant international instruments adopted under the aegis of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies, such as the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the Convention concerning Discrimination in Respect of Employment and Occupation adopted by the International Labour Organisation on 25 June 1958, the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women; States are urged to comply with the reporting requirements called for by the relevant conventions.

G. National legislation and institutions

47. The Conference suggests that States that have not already done so should consider the urgent enactment, as a matter of the highest priority, of appropriate legislation and other suitable measures to prohibit and bring to an end racial discrimination, to abrogate, amend, rescind or nullify any policies or regulations that have the effect of creating or perpetuating racial hatred and, with due regard to the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racism, Apartheid and Incitement to War, the Declaration on Race and Racial Prejudice adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 27 November 1978, and the rights set forth in the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, to declare the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority and hatred to be an offence punishable by law.

48. The Conference calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take effective legislative and other measures, including in the field of penal law, to prevent the recruitment, use, financing and training, transit and transport of mercenaries, in particular when the aim is to assist racist régimes, and to punish such mercenaries as common criminals. The conference urges the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, established by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session, to complete, as soon as possible, the draft international convention.

49. The Conference urges all States to adopt strict legislation to declare any dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred to be an offence punishable by law and to prohibit organizations based on racial prejudice and hatred, including neo-Nazi and Fascist organizations, and private clubs and institutions established on the basis of racial criteria or propagating ideas of racial discrimination and apartheid.

50. With regard to national legislation, the Conference recommends that:

(a) Governments, where necessary, should guarantee non-discrimination on grounds of race and equal rights for all individuals in their constitutions and legislation;

(b) Governments, where necessary, should undertake to review and update all national legislation and remove from it any discriminatory provisions;

(c) Legislation should be consistent with international standards embodied in relevant international instruments;

(d) Victims of discrimination should be informed and advised of their rights, by all possible means, and given assistance in securing those rights;

(e) Governments should, where necessary, establish appropriate and effective mechanisms, including conciliation and mediation procedures and national commissions, to ensure that such legislation is enforced effectively and thereby to promote equality of opportunity and good race relations.

51. A system of regular review and appraisal should be continued to enable Member States, all organizations of the United Nations system, including relevant regional bodies, and non-governmental organizations, to assess the measures taken towards achieving the aims and objectives of the Decade.

52. Within the framework of their national legislation and policy, and according to their means, States should set up national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights. Those institutions should study legal developments and review the laws and policies of the Government with a view to ensuring the elimination of all discriminatory laws, prejudices and practices based on race, sex, colour, descent and national and ethnic origin.

H. Seminars and studies

53. The Conference recommends that, in the context of future activities to combat racism and racial discrimination, consideration should be given to the organization of international and regional seminars on such subjects as:

(a) Political, historical, economic, social and cultural factors leading to racism, racial discrimination and apartheid;

(b) International assistance and support to peoples and movements struggling against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination and apartheid;

(c) Ways and means of denying support to racist régimes with a view to making them change their policies;

(d) The historical and current dimensions of tribalism;

(e) Main obstacles to the full eradication of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid;

(f) The human rights of persons belonging to ethnic groups in countries of immigration;

(g) Equality of treatment for persons belonging to ethnic and racial minorities and disadvantaged groups, such as indigenous populations;

Community relations commissions and their function.

54. The Conference also recommends that studies should be continued regarding ways and means of ensuring implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid, racism and racial discrimination. In particular, the Conference strongly encourages the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to continue to research, study and conduct seminars on racism and racial discrimination.

I. Action by non-governmental organizations

55. By virtue of their independent status, non-governmental organizations, individually and collectively have an important contribution to make to the achievement of the objectives of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. Through various activities sponsored by them, non-governmental organizations can be effective in identifying and publicizing areas of racial discrimination which otherwise might not come to light and in helping to create greater practical understanding among young people of the importance of actively combating all forms of discrimination, in their own countries as well as in the international community.

56. Non-governmental organizations have the opportunity to create and sustain awareness among their members and in society at large of the evils of racism and racial discrimination. Such awareness can be transmitted from a national to an international organization with all the added benefits of the concrete experience of a particular country. Governments should therefore ensure that non-governmental organizations shall be enabled to function freely and openly within their societies and thus make an effective contribution to the elimination of racism and racial discrimination throughout the world.

J. International co-operation

57. In order to obtain the full promotion and protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples, it is necessary to intensify national, regional and international action aimed at combating and eliminating the causes of the policies and practices of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid.

58. The Conference underlines that the maintenance and strengthening of international co-operation and peace, the implementation of human rights and the combating of apartheid and racial discrimination are clearly linked. In order to improve mutual understanding among peoples, exchange visits should be increased and educational, cultural and scientific exchange programmes should be expanded. The free flow of information and ideas with respect to combating racism and racial discrimination should be ensured. The Conference calls on States to exchange information and ideas with respect to combating racism and racial discrimination.

59. The Conference calls upon the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, to be held in 1985, to contribute to the struggle against racism, racial discrimination and apartheid by recommending the adoption of measures aimed at ensuring the active participation of women in the struggle against those evils.

60. The Conference recommends that, in the context of International Youth Year, in 1985, the United Nations and the specialized agencies should undertake activities to encourage the effective contribution of youth to the struggle against racism, racial discrimination and apartheid.

61. The Conference calls upon all Governments and international organizations to make every effort to change the economic, political and social conditions on which policies and practices of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid are based and to give all their support to the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and declares that the struggle against the remnants of colonialism and support of the liberation movements recognized by the regional organizations are worthy of particular attention.

62. Article 28 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights establishes that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Declaration can be fully realized. For this purpose, it is necessary to work for the establishment of a just and fair international order. The establishment of a new international economic order would be an important means of combating the causes which generate racism and racial discrimination.

63. National, regional and international action to combat and eliminate the causes of the policies and practices of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid should include measures aimed at improving the conditions of life of peoples and individuals in the economic, political, social and cultural spheres in order that the great inequalities now existing in the fields of employment, nutrition, health, housing and education, among others, may disappear. International development co-operation has an important role to play in securing the resources required by the developing countries to realize these objectives.

64. The Conference urges Governments, with the co-operation of the relevant international organizations, to consider adopting measures to guarantee, through special conventions or other provisions, asylum and transit facilities to those who desert from the armed forces of the racist regime in southern Africa on grounds of conscience or who are forced to leave because of their opposition to apartheid.

65. The Conference proclaims that the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination is a matter of high priority to the United Nations and the international community. It proclaims that racism and racial discrimination in all their manifestations are crimes against the conscience and dignity of mankind and must be eradicated by effective and concerted international action. The Conference pays tribute to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for its activities during the Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and recommends that, within the framework of its Second Medium-term Plan (1984-1989), that organization should continue:

(a) Its work (studies and research) on the factors of influence in the maintenance, transmission and alteration of prejudices and on the causes and effects of the various forms of racism and racial and ethnic discrimination;

(b) Its efforts to ensure that all groups which suffer from discrimination in the fields of education, science, culture and information shall enjoy equal opportunities with others and that the members of such groups shall have full representation and shall be able to exercise their rights in those fields;

(c) Its programme on the appreciation of differing cultures and the promotion and recognition of the equality of cultures and peoples;

(d) Its research and studies on apartheid, and the widest possible dissemination of the results of its work.

66. In spite of the efforts of the international community at the national, regional and international levels during the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, racism, racial discrimination and apartheid continue unabated and have shown no sign of diminishing. With a view to reaffirming its unalterable determination to mobilize maximum international pressure to attain the objectives of the Decade, the Conference strongly recommends that the General Assembly declare a Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination at the end of the current Decade in December 1983.

Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, by which it designated the ten-year period beginning on 10 December 1973 as the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Further recalling its resolution 37/41 of 3 December 1982, by which it decided to convene the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination at Geneva from 1 to 12 August 1983,

Taking note with appreciation of the Report of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination as well as the report of the Secretary-General on the Conference,

Recalling its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, by which the General Assembly proclaimed the ten-year period beginning on 10 December 1983 the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

1. Expresses its satisfaction at the serious and constructive work undertaken at the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;
2. Pays tribute to the Secretary-General of the Conference for his efforts to promote the aims and objectives of the Conference;
3. Expresses its firm determination to continue in the future to attach the highest importance to combating racism and racial discrimination in all their forms;
4. Appeals to all Governments, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as the concerned non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate in the observance of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination by intensifying and extending their efforts towards ensuring the rapid eradication of racism and racial discrimination;
5. Decides to consider at its thirty-ninth session concrete action to be undertaken during the Second Decade.

22 November 1983 Meeting 66 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/38/541) by consensus, 26 October (meeting 21); draft by Senegal, for African Group (A/C.3/38/L.9) orally revised; agenda items 82 and 83. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 3rd Committee 4-18, 21; plenary 66.

Following adoption of the foregoing resolutions, the United States noted for the record that it had not participated in the consensus on the draft texts in the Third Committee. In a statement of position during the Committee debate, the United States said that only by preserving the universal character of the concern for human rights could abuses of human rights be condemned. If the Assembly adopted resolutions against racial persecution only in South Africa, while ignoring political suppression in the USSR, or the terror that had claimed many lives in east Africa and eastern Europe or in the skies over the USSR, one was forced to wonder whether such resolutions arose from a desire to distract attention from such massive violations by Members whose voices were loudest in condemning South Africa. The United States went on to say that although it would not be easy to make changes in South Africa, the white community there was not a monolith; there appeared to be some tendency towards greater racial equity in the economic sphere, implying in some cases a political change as well. The task of bringing about the desired change required formulation of programmes aimed at giving greater impetus to the forces of constructive change. As long as there was hope of change through constructive means, it would be immoral to isolate the world from encouraging that hope.

Also speaking during the Committee debate, Israel said that it had unequivocally supported the 1973 Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.⁽¹³⁾ No lessons had been drawn from the negative experience of the first (1978) World Conference,⁽⁷⁾ however, so that, at the Second, Israel had once again been singled out for vicious and groundless accusations, which only harmed the general cause and undermined the consensus necessary for combating racism and racial discrimination. Israel objected in the strongest terms to the selective and unwarranted condemnations of it in the Declaration. Nothing in its attitude towards Arabs or others, Israel asserted, could be characterized as remotely akin to racial discrimination; if there was an element of racism in the Arab-Israeli conflict, it stemmed from the other side.

Other action. Noting that many points in the Programme of Action had a direct bearing on its work, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, by a resolution of 5 September 1983,⁽²²⁾ expressed appreciation for the Conference and the Declaration and Programme of Action. It endorsed the series of studies and seminars proposed in the Programme and recommended to the Commission on Human Rights a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, authorizing the Sub-Commission to entrust Asbjørn Eide (Norway) with a study on achievements made and obstacles encountered during the Decade, to include proposals for new or additional measures. The Sub-Commission took that action by 19 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions.

On 31 August,⁽²³⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission adoption of another draft resolution, commending the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) for its work in education to combat racism and racial discrimination, and appealing to States to encourage educational institutions to incorporate in their curricula the concept of oneness and biological unity of the human race and the social, economic, cultural and political interdependence of all peoples.

Convention on the elimination of racial discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1983, there were 122 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in 1965(15) and in force since 1969.(24) In 1983, five States (Afghanistan, Democratic Kampuchea, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Mozambique) became parties.

In his annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Convention,(25) the Secretary-General listed the States which had signed, ratified or acceded to it as at 1 September.

Implementation of the Convention

Communication. By a letter of 18 October 1983 to the Secretary-General, Israel drew attention to its statement of 16 October concerning the sentencing of Iosif Begun by a USSR court because of his desire to emigrate to Israel and to study and teach the Hebrew language and Jewish culture. Israel called on the USSR to desist from discrimination and repression against Jews and to accord them the human rights to which they were entitled.

CERD activities. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up under article 8 of the Convention, held two sessions in 1983, in New York: the twenty-seventh from 7 to 25 March and the twenty-eighth from 11 to 29 July.

Two thirds of the meetings at those sessions were devoted to an examination of reports and additional information submitted by 36 States parties under article 9 of the Convention, on measures to give effect to the Convention's provisions. The annual report of CERD to the Assembly(27) summarized members' views on each country report and statements made by the States parties concerned, and reported on action taken to ensure submission of reports.

As authorized by article 15 of the Convention, also examined were copies of petitions, reports and other information concerning Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted by the Trusteeship Council (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter 11) and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. In March, CERD approved the membership of its three working groups to examine documentation submitted under article 15 and to report their findings to its July session. On 26 July, CERD adopted the groups' reports with some amendments. On the basis of those reports and other information, it further adopted on the same date opinions and recommendations relating to: African Territories, including Namibia; Pacific and Indian Ocean Territories; and Atlantic Ocean and Caribbean Territories, including Gibraltar.

As a result of the entry into force in December 1982 of article 14⁽²⁸⁾ recognizing CERD's competence to accept and examine communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of any of the rights under the Convention, CERD, also on 26 July 1983, adopted provisional rules of procedure for considering those communications.

In addition, on 21 March,⁽²⁹⁾ CERD, alarmed at the reported changes in the demographic composition of that territory of Cyprus not under the control of its Government that excluded a considerable segment of the population from enjoyment of their legitimate rights, reiterated its expectation that Cyprus would be enabled, without further delay, to exercise full responsibility for implementing its obligations under the Convention on the whole of its national territory, and that the unacceptable state of affairs in Cyprus due to foreign occupation would be brought to an end.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/21 without vote.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

4. Calls upon the United Nations bodies concerned to ensure that the Committee is supplied with all relevant information on all the Territories to which General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 applies and urges the administering Powers to co-operate with these bodies by providing all the necessary information in order to enable the Committee to discharge fully its responsibilities under article 15 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

5. Commends the Committee for its continuous endeavours towards the elimination of the policy of apartheid, racism and racial discrimination in southern Africa and the implementation of the United Nations resolutions relating to the liberation and independence of Namibia;

7. Welcomes further the efforts of the Committee aimed at the elimination of all forms of discrimination against migrant workers and their families, the promotion of their rights on a non-discriminatory basis and the achievement of their full equality, including the freedom to maintain their cultural characteristics;

8. Calls upon all Member States to adopt effective legislative, socio-economic and other necessary measures in order to ensure the prevention or elimination of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin;

9. Further calls upon the States parties, to the Convention to protect fully, by the adoption of the relevant legislative and other measures, in conformity with the Convention, the rights of national or ethnic minorities and persons belonging to such minorities, as well as the rights of indigenous populations;

10. Commends the States parties to the Convention on the measures taken to ensure, within their jurisdiction, the availability of appropriate recourse procedures for the victims of racial discrimination;

22 November 1983 Meeting 66 Adopted without vote

Prior to approving the text as a whole, the Third Committee adopted paragraph 3 by 93 votes to none, with 20 abstentions, and paragraph 11 by 88 votes to none, with 25 abstentions.

Other action. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in August (see above) called for implementation of the Convention and urged States not parties to it to become parties, or to be guided by its provisions in combating racial discrimination.

Reporting obligations of States parties

As requested by the General Assembly in December 1982,(30) the Secretary-General reported to it in September 1983(31) on the reporting obligations of States parties to the Convention against racial discrimination and other relevant human rights instruments. Based on an analysis of replies received from 22 States in response to his note verbale of 25 January 1983, the Secretary-General put forward several recommendations to improve the situation arising from the high incidence of non-compliance with reporting obligations.

It appeared evident, the Secretary-General stated, that a number of States parties-many of them developing countries-experienced difficulties in submitting not only the periodic report but also the initial one due normally within a year of an instrument's entry into force. The difficulties cited included lack of human and material resources, language difficulties where a reporting country's language was not among the United Nations official languages, the shortness of the interval between reports (two years under article 9 of the Convention), and additional reporting obligations under other instruments that must be met simultaneously. Thus, international monitoring had become difficult and was rendered more so with the increasing number of parties to those instruments.

The Secretary-General recommended that the reporting interval for the Convention be extended from two to four years. With respect to the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights(32) and the 1973 Convention against apartheid,(19) the intervals should be extended by one year. Since the periodic review was one of the main mechanisms of international supervision and control, the Secretary-General stressed a greater degree of co-ordination among the monitoring bodies of human rights instruments. To that end, he suggested periodic meetings of the chairmen of CERD, the Human Rights Committee, the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the Group of Three established under the Convention against apartheid. The meetings' objectives would be to: establish flexible mechanisms for information exchange; examine reporting obligations from the substantive and procedural perspectives; and standardize reporting guidelines.

To improve the quality of reports, many of which the Secretary-General noted were utterly inadequate, he also suggested that technical assistance be provided to States parties on request. Such assistance, in the form of seminars, training programmes, follow-up missions, fellowships and advisory services, could be provided by United Nations organizations or States parties with technical and financial facilities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/20 without vote.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: reporting obligations of States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/44 of 3 December 1982,

Mindful of the obligation of all States parties to comply fully with the provisions of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, including the timely submission of periodic reports under article 9 of the Convention,

Acknowledging once again the burden which reporting obligations under international instruments place upon States parties, especially those with limited technical and administrative resources,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the reporting obligations of States parties under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and other relevant human rights instruments,

Noting that the report of the Secretary-General emphasizes the interrelationship of the problems affecting the reporting system under various human rights instruments,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit his report, and an analytical summary of the records of the General Assembly's consideration thereof, to the ninth meeting of the States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination for consideration;

3. Invites the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to consider the analysis and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General, taking into account the various suggestions made in the General Assembly and at the ninth meeting of the States parties to the Convention, and to transmit its views and recommendations to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Measures against nazism and fascism

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 7 March 1983,⁽³³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights again condemned all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred, terror, and systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It urged States to draw attention to threats to democratic institutions by such ideologies and practices and called for intensified measures against them. States were invited to enact laws to punish dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred and of war propaganda, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist ideologies; and ratify or accede to the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights,⁽³²⁾ the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,⁽³⁴⁾ the 1965 Convention against racial discrimination,⁽¹⁵⁾ the 1968 Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity⁽³⁵⁾ and the 1973 Convention against apartheid.⁽¹⁹⁾

The Commission called on States to bring to trial persons suspected of war crimes and crimes against humanity. It noted that 1985 would mark the fortieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War, an event that should serve to mobilize the world community in the struggle against totalitarian and other ideologies and practices.

Report of the Secretary-General. In keeping with a December 1982 General Assembly request,⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an April 1983 report with later addenda,⁽³⁷⁾ summarizing comments and suggestions for measures to eradicate nazism, fascism and related ideologies, from 21 States, 14 non-governmental organizations (NGOs), 2 intergovernmental organizations and a specialized agency.

Additional comments were transmitted by the USSR on 25 November.⁽³⁸⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/158.

Report of the Secretary-General on measures to be taken against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and all other forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on measures to be taken against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and all other forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/99 without vote.

Measures to be taken against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and all other forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror
The General Assembly,

Recalling that the United Nations emerged from the struggle against nazism, fascism, aggression and foreign occupation, and that the peoples expressed their resolve in the Charter of the United Nations to save future generations from the scourge of war,

Bearing in mind the suffering, destruction and death of millions of victims of aggression, foreign occupation, nazism and fascism,

Recalling also the close relationship between all totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred and terror and the systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the fortieth anniversary of the victory over nazism and fascism in the Second World War will occur in 1985 and should serve to mobilize the efforts of the world community in its struggle against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist and all other totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles laid down in the Charter, which are aimed at maintaining international peace and security, developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and the self-determination of peoples, and achieving international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Firmly convinced that the best bulwark against nazism and racial discrimination is the establishment and maintenance of democratic institutions, that the existence of genuine political, social and economic democracy is an effective vaccine and an equally effective antidote against the formation or development of Nazi movements and that a political system which is based on freedom and effective participation by the people in the conduct of public affairs, and under which economic and social conditions are such as to ensure a decent standard of living for the population, makes it impossible for fascism, nazism or other ideologies based on terror to succeed,

Emphasizing that all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist, based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror or systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, or which have such consequences, may jeopardize world peace and constitute obstacles to friendly relations between States and to the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Reaffirming that the prosecution and punishment of war crimes and crimes against peace and humanity, as laid down in General Assembly resolutions 3(I) of 13 February 1946 and 95(I) of 11 December 1946, constitute a universal commitment for all States,

Minciful of the principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, set forth in General Assembly resolution 3074(XXVIII) of 3 December 1973,

Recalling also its resolutions 2331(XXII) of 18 December 1967, 2438(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2545(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2713(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2839(XXVI) of 18 December 1971, 34/24 of 15 November 1979, 35/200 of 15 December 1980, 36/162 of 16 December 1981 and 37/179 of 17 December 1982,

Recalling further the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Underlining the importance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,

Acknowledging the fact that a number of States have established legal regulations which are suited to prevent the activities of Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist groups and organizations,

Noting again with deep concern that the proponents of Fascist ideologies have, in a number of countries, intensified their activities and are increasingly coordinating them on an international scale,

1. Again condemns all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, in particular Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist, based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror or systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, or which have such consequences;

2. Notes that the fortieth anniversary of the conclusion of the Second World War will occur in 1985 and should serve to mobilize the efforts of the world community in its struggle against the ideologies and practices described in paragraph 1 above;

3. Calls upon States to assist each other in detecting, arresting and bringing to trial persons suspected of having committed war crimes and crimes against humanity and, if they are found guilty, in punishing them;

4. Urges all States to draw attention to the threat to democratic institutions by the above-mentioned ideologies and practices and to consider taking measures, in accordance with their national constitutional systems and with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights, to prohibit or otherwise deter activities by groups or organizations or whoever is practising those ideologies;

5. Culls upon the appropriate specialized agencies, as well as intergovernmental and international non-governmental organizations, to initiate or intensify measures against the ideologies and practices described in paragraph 1 above;

6. Invites Member States to adopt, in accordance with their national constitutional systems and with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights, as a matter of high priority, measures declaring punishable by law any dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred and of war propaganda, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist ideologies;

7. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede or give serious consideration to acceding to the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity and the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

8. Calls once again upon all States to provide the Secretary-General with their comments on this question;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat pays attention to the dissemination of information on the forthcoming fortieth anniversary of the conclusion of the Second World War, exposing the ideologies and practices described in paragraph 1 above;

10. Reiterates its request to the Commission on Human Rights to consider this subject at its fortieth session;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, in the light of the discussion that will take place in the Commission on Human Rights and on the basis of comments provided by States and international organizations.

16 December 1983 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/38/680) without vote. 7 December (meeting 671: 15-nation draft (A/C.3/38/L.59), orally revised on suggestions by Netherlands and by United States and following consultations; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers, GA 38th session: 3rd Committee 18, 54, 55, 57-67; plenary 100.

In the Committee, following proposals made by the Netherlands and the United States, paragraph 7 was orally revised to appeal to States to accede or to consider acceding to the human rights instruments specified, rather than merely to accede; and, in paragraph 9, the phrase "conclusion of the Second World War, exposing the ideologies and practices described in paragraph 1 above" was substituted for "victory over nazism and fascism in the Second World War, and to the actions taken by the United Nations to combat these evils". Following consultations, paragraph 7 was further orally revised.

Other aspects of discrimination

Implementation of the 1981

Declaration against religious intolerance

Report of the Secretary-General. In a report⁽³⁹⁾ to the Commission on Human Rights on implementation of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, as at 17 February 1983, a specialized agency and two other United Nations bodies responded to his communication of 6 January bringing the Declaration to the attention of appropriate United Nations bodies.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a resolution of 9 March 1983,⁽⁴¹⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 39 to none, with 4 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights requested its Sub-Commission to undertake a comprehensive study of the dimensions of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, using the 1981 Declaration as terms of reference. It requested the Secretary-General to incorporate in his report to the Sub-Commission's 1983 session the views of appropriate United Nations bodies, including UNESCO, and NGOs on measures to implement the Declaration; and to hold, as part of the advisory services programme in 1984-1985, a seminar to encourage tolerance and respect for freedom of religion or belief.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/150 by vote.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/40 of 9 March 1983, endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to hold within the framework of the advisory services programme in the period 1984-1985 a seminar on the encouragement of understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief.

Sub-Commission action. As requested in September 1982,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Sub-Commission in 1983 a note⁽⁴³⁾ containing information on the problems of discrimination based on religion or belief, on action taken at the regional level, and on the state of discussions on the question within the United Nations system and by NGOs.

On 6 September,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended that the seminar relating to freedom of religion and belief, to be held during 1984-1985 (see above), should discuss the development of educational programmes to foster religious tolerance and include studies reflecting: the universal spiritual and human rights principles underlying the major world religions; appreciation of the different manifestations of those principles and of the social teachings of different religions; the root causes of religious intolerance and discrimination; the 1981 Declaration; and freedom of atheistic belief. The Sub-Commission appointed Elizabeth Odio Benito (Costa Rica) as Special Rapporteur to undertake the comprehensive study requested by the Commission on Human Rights in March (see above), specifying the various aspects to be covered, and asked the Secretary-General to provide the necessary assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly, on 16 December 1983, adopted resolution 38/110 without vote.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, in which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling its resolution 37/187 of 18 December 1982, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to consider what measures might be necessary to implement the Declaration,

Believing that further efforts are required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or whatever belief,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/40 of 9 March 1983, in which the Commission requested the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to undertake a comprehensive and thorough study of the current dimensions of the problems of intolerance and of discrimination on grounds of religion or belief, using as terms of reference the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, Expressing its satisfaction with the action taken by the Sub-Commission regarding the designation of a Special Rapporteur to undertake this study,

Noting that the Economic and Social Council, in its decision 1983/150 of 27 May 1983, endorsed the request of the Commission on Human Rights to the Secretary-General to hold, within the framework of the advisory services programme in the period 1984-1985, a seminar on the encouragement of understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief,

1. Pledges its determination to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and expresses the hope that the seminar will contribute towards the realization of these aims;

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief and to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance" and to consider the report of the Commission on Human Rights in the context of that item.

Indigenous populations

The report of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations on its 1982 (first) session, considered by the Sub-Commission in September that year,⁽⁴⁵⁾ was before the Commission on Human Rights at its January-March 1983 session. The Group's report on its 1983 (second) session was presented to the Sub-Commission in September. Also before the Sub-Commission was the final report on a study of discrimination against indigenous populations.

Other action on behalf of indigenous populations was taken by the General Assembly and the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. Following consideration of the 1982 report of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, the Commission on Human Rights, on 4 March 1983, asked its Sub-Commission to suggest ways of making the Group's activities better known to ensure the broadest participation of observers from indigenous populations. It also asked for more specific proposals for establishing a voluntary fund to allow such participation, as requested by the Sub-Commission in September 1982.⁽⁴⁵⁾ Suggestions for the fund's administration were asked of the Secretary-General.

On 15 July 1983, the Secretary-General submitted those suggestions⁽⁴⁷⁾ to the Sub-Commission, stating that it might wish to submit, for adoption by the Commission, a draft resolution inviting the Economic and Social Council to recommend that the General Assembly establish a trust fund. The draft should annex proposals for the fund's management along the lines he suggested.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations held its second session at Geneva from 8 to 12 and on 23 August 1983.⁽⁴⁸⁾ Among the participants were observers from five indigenous NGOs and from 18 indigenous population groups and other organizations. The Group reviewed developments in the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms of such populations, and in the evolution of standards governing those rights. Establishment of a trust fund was also considered.

The Working Group drew up a future work plan, which included the following items: land and other natural resources; the definition of indigenous populations and registration; and a preliminary list of priorities. The list included the rights of such populations to: develop their own culture; autonomy and self-determination; education, health and legal assistance; association; social security and labour protection; and economic, technological, cultural and social relations. The issue of treaties would be taken up, whenever pertinent.

Sub-Commission action. On 6 September 1983,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Sub-Commission endorsed the Working Group's work plan and requested the Group to examine in 1984 criteria for the administration of the proposed fund.

Also on 6 September,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Sub-Commission, having considered the final report on a study of the problem of discrimination against indigenous populations,⁽⁵¹⁾ undertaken by Special Rapporteur José R. Martínez Cobo (Ecuador), expressed appreciation for a valuable contribution towards clarifying the basic legal, social and cultural problems relating to indigenous populations. It asked that the conclusions and recommendations, which for technical reasons could not be issued in time, be submitted in 1984.

In connection with the final report, the Sub-Commission had before it a letter of 5 September 1983 from Bangladesh,⁽⁵²⁾ stating that the report contained references to what was described as the situation of "indigenous people" in Bangladesh, which were without foundation. There was no scientific or historical basis for treating the tribal people of Chittagong Hill Tracts as indigenous, the letter asserted, the entire population of Bangladesh being autochthonous.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/21 of 22 November 1983, the General Assembly welcomed CERD efforts to eliminate discrimination against persons belonging to indigenous populations and to secure for them full enjoyment of their human rights. It called on the parties to the 1965 Convention against racial discrimination to protect those rights.

Other action. Section D of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination-adopted by the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in August and approved by the General Assembly in November (resolution 38/14, annexing the Programme)-recommended specific actions to be taken by Governments and by national and local institutions to prevent discrimination against indigenous populations and to protect their rights. Specific rights which Governments should recognize were also cited.

Migrant workers

Social welfare

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1981 Economic and Social Council request,⁽⁵³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the February 1983 session of the Commission for Social Development a report on legislative and administrative regulations concerning the welfare of migrant workers and their families.⁽⁵⁴⁾

The Secretary-General noted that, despite the growing number of international instruments concerned with migrants, those instruments did not cover all legal aspects of migrants' welfare, and the social provisions were often too general and thus too weak to achieve the intended goals. The instruments were seldom fully applied and not ratified by all States concerned. To remedy that situation, the Secretary-General pointed to the need for international and regional, as well as for bilateral and national, action.

Among the measures suggested were: explicit social welfare provisions-for possible inclusion in a United Nations instrument-on family reunion, housing and other living conditions, education, health services, the preservation of national and cultural identity, and minimum standards of services for migrants in both sending and receiving countries; explicit legal provisions in bilateral and multilateral agreements, to ensure equality of opportunity and treatment, and harmonization of such agreements; special national legislative and administrative measures to facilitate family reunion, access to social services and transferability of social security rights; and development of comprehensive policies and programmes for the return and reintegration of migrant workers and their families. Regional commissions could conduct research and help draw up and enforce bilateral and multilateral agreements.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1983, acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/16.

Welfare of migrant workers and their families

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1926(LVII) of 6 May 1975, 1979/12 of 9 May 1979 and 1981/21 of 6 May 1981.

Having taken note of the report of the Secretary General on pertinent regulations concerning the welfare of migrant workers and their families,

Concerned at the fact that bilateral agreements concluded between labour-employing and labour-supplying countries, as well as national legislative and administrative provisions, do not completely exclude the possibility of practices that discriminate against migrant workers and members of their families, particularly with regard to living conditions and access to national systems of social services,

Conscious of the fact that the social situation of migrant workers and their families has deteriorated as a result of present unfavourable economic trends,

Recognizing the need for further efforts to improve the welfare of migrant workers and their families,

1. Expresses its general agreement with respect to the need for action at the national, regional and international levels to improve the welfare of migrant workers and their families;

2. Reaffirms the need for full implementation of the principle of equal treatment for migrants and their families, in accordance with ratified international agreements, particularly with regard to their living conditions and access to national systems of social services;

3. Affirms the need for concerted action by the Governments of both labour-employing and labour-supplying countries to harmonize existing bilateral and multilateral agreements on migrant workers, to extend the coverage of services and benefits provided for them and their families and to eliminate provisions that are either discriminatory or contradictory;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to ensure the effective co-operation of inter-governmental organizations, specialized agencies and organs of the United Nations system with a view to affirming the rights of migrants and their families and ensuring their full implementation, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1926 B (LVII);

5. Welcomes the progress made by the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 34/172 of 17 December 1979;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to use the information received from Member States pursuant to paragraph 2 of Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/21 to prepare, in co-operation with the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned, a report on the situation of migrant workers and their families in which the needs and problems emerging as a result of the changing conditions of international migration will be fully taken into account, and to submit that report to the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-ninth session.

Draft convention

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In March 1983, the Commission on Human Rights considered the progress made by the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, as described in the Group's reports on its 1982 May inter-sessional meeting and October/November session.⁽⁵⁵⁾ On 9 March 1983,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Commission invited all Member States to continue co-operating with the Group and reiterated its hope for an early completion of the convention's elaboration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council, on 27 May 1983, adopted resolution 1983/40 without vote.

Measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and their families

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the need for international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, intellectual or humanitarian nature and in developing and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling in that regard the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and of the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Mindful of the contribution made by migrant workers to the economic growth and the social and cultural development of the host countries,

Noting, in particular, that the problems of migrant workers, which are becoming more serious in some regions for political and economic reasons and for social and cultural reasons, constitute a matter of grave concern and continue to be of the greatest importance to certain countries,

Mindful of the important contribution made by the International Labour Organisation in the protection of the rights of all migrant workers,

Appreciating also the efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in matters relating to migrant workers,

Deeply concerned at the fact that, despite the general effort made by Member States, regional intergovernmental organizations and various United Nations bodies, migrant workers are still unable fully to exercise their rights in the social field and in the labour field as defined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Emphasizing, therefore, the efforts that must still be made effectively to protect the rights of all migrant workers and their living conditions,

Recalling its resolutions 1981/21 of 6 May 1981 and 1983/16 of 26 May 1983, and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/45 of 9 March 1983,

Recalling also its resolutions 1980/16 of 30 April 1980 and 1981/35 of 9 May 1981,

1. Welcomes the progress made by the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, established in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 34/172 of 17 December 1979;

2. Expresses again its conviction that the drafting of that convention will further facilitate the exchanges of views needed for protecting the human rights and improving the situation of migrant workers and their families;

3. Expresses the hope that substantial progress will be made by the Working Group during the two meetings to be held in 1983 in accordance with General Assembly resolution 37/170 of 17 December 1982, with a view to completing the drafting of the convention during the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly;

4. Decides to consider at its first regular session of 1984 the question of measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and to monitor the status of work done with a view to protecting the rights of all migrant workers and their families.

Working Group action. The open-ended Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, established by the General Assembly in 1979,⁽⁵⁷⁾ convened in New York in 1983 for its third inter-sessional meeting between 31 May and 10 June⁽⁵⁸⁾ and its fourth session from 27 September to 6 October.⁽⁵⁹⁾

At its May/June meeting, the Working Group concluded consideration of part III of the draft convention, with the exception of article 55 (covering migrant workers employed by foreign enterprises or their subsidiaries). That article was to be taken up together with parts IV and I, dealing, respectively, with particular categories of migrant workers and members of their families, and with the convention's scope and definitions. The Group also began consideration of proposals for part V, on promotion of sound, equitable and humane conditions for international migration of workers and their families.

At its September/October session, the Group concluded consideration of part V and of part VII on general provisions. Annexed to the session's report was a working paper submitted by Finland, Greece, Italy, Norway, Portugal, Spain and Sweden on a system for supervising the convention's application.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/86 without vote.

Measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers
The General Assembly,

Again reaffirming the permanent validity of the principles and standards embodied in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Bearing in mind the principles and standards established within the framework of the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and the importance of the task carried out in connection with migrant workers and their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that, in spite of the existence of an already established body of principles and standards, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling its resolution 34/172 of 17 December 1979, by which it decided to establish a working group open to all Member States to elaborate an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/198 of 15 December 1980, 36/160 of 16 December 1981 and 37/170 of 17 December 1982, by which it renewed the mandate of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and requested it to continue its work,

Having examined the progress made by the Working Group during its third inter-sessional meeting, held from 31 May to 10 June 1983,

Having also examined the reports of the Working Group during the current session of the General Assembly,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and expresses its satisfaction with the substantial progress that the Working Group has so far made in the accomplishment of its mandate;

2. Decides that, in order to enable it to complete its task as soon as possible, the Working Group shall again hold an inter-sessional meeting of two weeks' duration in New York, immediately after the first regular session of 1984 of the Economic and Social Council;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments the reports of the Working Group so as to allow the members of the Group to continue their task during the inter-sessional meeting to be held in the spring of 1984, as well as to transmit the results obtained at that meeting in order that the General Assembly may consider them during its thirty-ninth session;

4. Also invites the Secretary-General to transmit the above-mentioned documents to the competent organs of the United Nations and to international organizations concerned, for their information, so as to enable them to continue their co-operation with the Working Group;

5. Decides that the Working Group shall meet during the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, preferably at the beginning of the session, to continue and, if possible, to complete the elaboration of an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families.

Other action. On 31 August 1983,(60) the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities recommended to the Commission on Human Rights a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, by which the Council would decide that the 1976 report on exploitation of labour through illicit and clandestine trafficking(61) by Special Rapporteur Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco). should be printed, given the widest distribution and transmitted for comment to Governments, United Nations bodies, and governmental and non-governmental organizations.

Section D of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination—adopted by the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in August and approved by the General Assembly in November (resolution 38/14, annexing the Programme)—recommended specific actions to be taken by Governments to protect the rights of migrant workers.

Protection of minorities

In February/March 1983, the Commission on Human Rights, through an informal working group open to its membership, continued to consider a revised and consolidated draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, prepared by the Chairman/Rapporteur of the 1980 working group, Ivan Tosevski (Yugoslavia), and submitted to the Commission in 1981.⁽⁶²⁾ Continuing its first reading of the draft declaration, the group resumed consideration of article 1 and began to consider articles 2 to 6. No text was adopted at the session.

The Commission, on 10 March 1983,⁽⁶³⁾ after receiving the group's report,⁽⁶⁴⁾ decided to set up at its 1984 session an open-ended working group to continue work on the draft.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1983/151.

Rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/53 of 10 March 1983, endorsed the Commission's decision to establish at its fortieth session an open-ended working group to continue consideration of the revised draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities proposed by Yugoslavia, taking into account all relevant documents.

Draft declaration on the human rights of non-citizens

A Working Group established by the General Assembly in December 1982,⁽⁶⁵⁾ open to all United Nations Members, with Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco) as Chairman/Rapporteur, met between 4 October and 29 November 1983, to continue work on the drafting of a declaration on the human rights of individuals not citizens of the country in which they lived.

Following additional revisions to a revised text of the preambular section of the draft declaration, the Group adopted the preamble. At the second reading of the operative section, it adopted articles 2 and 3, part of article 4 and articles 5 and 6, on the understanding that consideration of those articles was subject for some delegations to elaboration of the part relating to definitions. The adopted texts were contained in the Group's report to the Assembly's Third Committee.

Report of the Secretary-General. Responding to a December 1982 General Assembly request,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁶⁷⁾ summarizing the substantive comments received on the draft declaration (see above), based on the reports of each of the working groups set up in the previous three years to work on the draft. As at 15 September 1983, comments were received from nine States, two United Nations organs, three specialized agencies and two intergovernmental organizations. The following stated that they had no comments on the subject: United Nations Industrial Development Organization, Economic Commission for Latin America, Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), World Bank, Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/87 without vote.

Question of the international legal protection of the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live
The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolutions 1790(LIV) of 18 May 1973 and 1871(LVI) of 17 May 1974 concerning the question of the international legal protection of the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 8(XXIX) of 21 March 1973, 11(XXX) of 6 March 1974, 16(XXXV) of 14 March 1979 and 19(XXXVI) of 29 February 1980 on the same subject,

Recalling also resolution 9(XXXI) of 13 September 1978 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Recalling that the Economic and Social Council, by its resolution 1980/29 of 2 May 1980, decided to transmit to the General Assembly, at its thirty-fifth session the text of the draft declaration on the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live, prepared by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and amended by the Sub-Commission, together with the comments on the text received from Member States in response to Council decision 1979/36 of 10 May 1979, and recommended that the Assembly should consider the adoption of a declaration on the subject,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/199 of 15 December 1980, 36/165 of 16 December 1981 and 37/169 of 17 December 1982, by which it decided to establish an open-ended working group for the purpose of concluding the elaboration of the draft declaration on the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live,

Having considered the comments submitted by Governments, specialized agencies, regional and intergovernmental organizations and the competent organs of the United Nations system pursuant to General Assembly resolution 37/169 on the reports of the open-ended working groups established at the thirty-fifth, thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh sessions of the Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Working Group established for the purpose of concluding the elaboration of the draft declaration on the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live;

1. Takes note of the report of the Working Group and of the fact that, although the Working Group has done useful work, it has not had sufficient time to conclude its task;

2. Decides to establish, at its thirty-ninth session, an open-ended working group for the purpose of concluding the elaboration of the draft declaration on the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live;

3. Expresses the hope that a draft declaration on the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live will be adopted by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Discrimination in criminal justice

On 31 August 1983,(68) the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities recommended that the Commission on Human Rights adopt a draft decision recommending to the Economic and Social Council that the 1982 study by Special Rapporteur Abu Sayeed Chowdhury (Bangladesh) on discriminatory treatment of members of racial, ethnic, religious or linguistic groups at the various levels in the administration of criminal justice, such as police, military, administrative and judicial investigations, arrest, detention, trial and execution of sentences,(69) be printed and given the widest possible distribution, including in Arabic.

On 5 September, the Sub-Commission noted that the South African Constitution, whereby the black majority was denied the franchise and the right to occupy positions as judges, magistrates and prosecutors, put the judicial system and the impartiality of the judiciary into serious doubt and thus could not be considered as a just basis for a fair judicial system (see under HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS below).

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocol

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1983, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966(l) and in force since 1976,(2) had been ratified or acceded to by 77 and 31 States, respectively. Afghanistan, Belgium, the Congo, Gabon and Luxembourg became parties to the Covenant in 1983. The Congo and Luxembourg also acceded to the Protocol, and Portugal ratified it. Two States-Denmark and Luxembourg—made the declaration under article 41 of the Covenant recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant.

In a report to the Assembly,(3) the Secretary-General provided information on the status of the Covenant and the Protocol as at 1 September 1983.

Implementation of the Covenant and the Optional Protocol

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In its 22 February resolution on the International Covenants on Human Rights⁽⁴⁾ (see under ADVANCEMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS below), the Commission on Human Rights expressed appreciation that the Human Rights Committee continued to strive for uniform standards in implementing the Covenant and the Optional Protocol, and urged States to become parties to them and to consider making the declaration under article 41. In emphasizing the importance of the strictest compliance with those instruments, the Commission stressed the obligations of a State party availing itself (in time of public emergency) of the right of derogation from the Covenant's provisions in accordance with article 4, paragraph 1, to inform the other States parties immediately, through the Secretary-General, of the provisions from which it had derogated and the reasons for doing so.

The Commission welcomed the measures taken by the Secretary-General to improve publicity for the work of the Committee and urged him to continue to consider steps for the publication of its documentation. The Commission encouraged Governments and United Nations information centres to give the Covenant and the Protocol the widest publicity. It took note of a December 1982 General Assembly request that the Secretary-General continue to ensure the ability of the Secretariat's Centre for Human Rights to assist the Committee in its functions under the Covenant.

Human Rights Committee activities. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 1983: the eighteenth, in New York, from 21 March to 8 April; and the nineteenth and twentieth, at Geneva, from 11 to 29 July and from 24 October to 11 November. The Committee set up pre-session working groups to make recommendations on communications under the Optional Protocol.

During the sessions, the Committee considered reports and additional information submitted by 10 States parties-Austria, El Salvador, France, Guinea, Lebanon, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Peru, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia-under article 40 of the Covenant. The Committee also concluded consideration of and adopted views on 16 communications by individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated and that they had exhausted all available domestic remedies. The cases concerned Italy (1), Madagascar (1), Uruguay (12) and Zaire (2). The Committee decided that five other such communications were inadmissible. It took a similar decision on two communications from NGOs.

On 8 April, the Committee adopted a decision recommending the inclusion of Arabic among its official and working languages. On 29 July, it unanimously adopted its seventh annual report⁽⁶⁾ to the General Assembly.

Sub-Commission action. By a resolution of 6 September 1983 on the administration of justice and the human rights of detainees⁽⁷⁾ adopted by 19 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities decided to include in its agenda an item on implementation of the right of derogation (in states of emergency) provided under the Covenant's article 4 and violation of human rights. Under that item, the Sub-Commission would request its Working Group on Detention (see below) to draw up and update an annual list of countries which proclaimed or terminated a state of emergency. It would also submit an annual report to the Commission on Human Rights containing information on compliance with internal and international rules, guaranteeing the legality of the introduction of a state of emergency.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/115 without vote.

Arabic language services for meetings of the States-parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Human Rights Committee

The General Assembly,

Aware of the need to achieve greater international co-operation and to promote harmonization of its activities in the field of human rights,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 3190(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 34/226 of 20 December 1979 and 35/219 of 17 December 1980 relating to the introduction of Arabic as an official and working language of the General Assembly and its Main Committees, Authorizes the provision of Arabic language services required for meetings of the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as of the Human Rights Committee, and requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to that end.

In resolution 38/116, also adopted on 16 December, the Assembly, taking note of the Human Rights Committee report, expressed satisfaction at the constructive manner in which the Committee continued to perform its functions. It expressed appreciation to those States parties that had co-operated in submitting their reports under article 40, and urged speedy submission of those that were due and compliance with the Committee's request for additional information. Besides repeating the urgings of the Commission on Human Rights for accession, declaration, strictest compliance and assistance (see above), the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Committee informed of the activities of the Commission and its Sub-Commission, CERD and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, and to expedite arrangements for publishing the Committee's official public records in bound volumes.

Resolution 38/117 of the same date also dealt with the reporting obligations of States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (see under ADVANCEMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS below).

Self-determination of peoples

In six resolutions adopted at its January-March 1983 session, the Commission on Human Rights dealt with the right of peoples to self-determination (see below). It reaffirmed that right for the following peoples: Palestinians;(8) South Africans as a whole and Namibians;(9) Kampucheans;(10) the people of Western Sahara;(11) Afghans;(12) and the people of East Timor. (13) The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities adopted a resolution on the right to self-determination of the Nicaraguan people.(14)

The Commission's actions and debate, and actions taken by the Economic and Social Council, were summarized by the Secretary-General in a report to the General Assembly on the universal realization of the right to self-determination.(15) Also summarized were responses to the Assembly's December 1982 resolutions on the topic(16) from 13 Governments, an intergovernmental organization and six NGOs.

On 22 November 1983, the Assembly adopted resolutions 38/16 and 38/17 on the right to self-determination—a right it repeatedly reaffirmed for individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV).

Communications. On 27 July 1983,(17) the United States transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement by its President on the occasion of the sixty-first anniversary of the 1922 de jure recognition by the United States of the three independent Baltic republics of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. Those States, the statement asserted, had been full members of the League of Nations and had signed non-aggression treaties with the USSR, yet had been forcibly incorporated into the USSR more than 40 years ago. By continuing to occupy them illegally, the USSR was in violation of international law, particularly of the right to self-determination as set forth in the Charter and in United Nations resolutions.

By a letter of 30 September 1983,(18) the USSR transmitted a statement of position on the right to self-determination and on the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective observance of human rights. The statement stressed that completion of the decolonization process and ensurance of the realization of the right to self-determination were the urgent tasks confronting the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted on 22 November 1983 two resolutions concerning the right of peoples to self-determination. The first of these—resolution 38/16—was adopted without vote.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation, which are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Further expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their conditions,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth sessions,

Reiterating its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981 and 37/42 of 3 December 1982,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention and occupation of foreign countries and territories, and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of these acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted by the aforementioned acts and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this issue to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session under the item entitled "Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights".

Recalling resolutions AHG/Res.105 on Namibia, AHG/Res.111 on the policy of destabilization of the racist regime of South Africa and AHG/Res.112 on South Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its nineteenth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 6 to 12 June 1983,

Recalling further its resolution 37/1 of 1 October 1982 concerning its appeal for clemency on behalf of the freedom fighters of South Africa and Security Council resolution 533(1983) of 7 June 1983 concerning the sentencing to death by South Africa of the three patriots of the African National Congress of South Africa,

Gravely concerned at the continuation of the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa and the continued violations of the human rights of the people in the territory and of the other peoples still under colonial domination and alien subjugation,

Deeply concerned at the continued terrorist acts of aggression committed by the Pretoria régime against independent African States in the region, in particular Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Seychelles, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe,

Recalling the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine,

Considering that the denial of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, sovereignty, independence and return to Palestine and the repeated acts of aggression by Israel against the people of the region constitute a serious threat to international peace and security,

Deeply shocked and alarmed at the deplorable consequences of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and recalling all the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982 and 521(1982) of 19 September 1982,

9. Condemns South Africa for its increasing oppression of the Namibian people, for the massive militarization of Namibia and for its armed attacks launched against the States in the region in order to destabilize them politically and to sabotage and destroy their economies;

17. Expresses its profound indignation at the callous murder, on 9 June 1983, of the three freedom fighters

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended not to participate.

In the Assembly, Brazil said it supported the resolution's main thrust, but recalled its previously expressed position on certain provisions of the two Declarations endorsed by paragraph 5. Not having been invited to the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel, mentioned in paragraph 18, it was not fully aware of the substance of the Conference debates and final documents. Mexico reiterated its reservations in Committee also on those two paragraphs.

Costa Rica did not participate in the vote because the resolution contained paragraphs that it called unilateral. However, it supported those referring to the Declaration on decolonization, the question of Namibia, the struggle of the Namibian people for liberation, the April Conference on Namibia, as well as those rejecting South Africa's policy of apartheid and condemning human rights violations, the policy of "bantustanization" and aggression against front-line States.

In the Third Committee, among the States which voted against the draft, the United States said the text was neither universal nor democratic and contained wording on the Arab-Israeli conflict that should be rejected, for it was not possible to support the right to self-determination in favour of one people at the expense of another. It further said it opposed assistance to so-called liberation movements.

Israel observed that it had again been singled out in a draft bearing no relevance to reality and whose wording was yet another proof that some of its initiators denied Israel, a United Nations Member, the very right of existence. Those initiators, it noted, coincidentally belonged to the League of Arab States, which denied self-determination to national minorities living in their midst and wished to deny it to Israel as well. Reaffirming its total rejection of apartheid, Israel denied the repeated fabrications about its relations with South Africa.

Greece, speaking on behalf of the 10 European Community members, said they strongly supported the principle of self-determination, but could not accept that to maintain relations with a State was equivalent to approval of its policies—a position shared by Uruguay, which voted affirmatively. They also found it strange for a draft resolution on self-determination to refer to particular situations without mentioning such flagrant and persistent violations as were occurring in Afghanistan and Kampuchea.

Among States abstaining, Portugal voiced reservations on the draft's endorsement of the Declarations in paragraph 5 on which it had previously entered reservations and of armed struggle—which neither Austria nor Spain could endorse and which Uruguay said violated Charter principles—as well as on the draft's references in paragraphs 18 and 21 to conferences in which it had taken no part and to condemning South Africa to isolation. Malawi (which did not participate in the Assembly vote but later advised that it had intended also to abstain) registered its reservations on a number of paragraphs.

Among States which did not participate in the Committee vote, Swaziland said the resolution, if implemented, would enhance the principle of self-determination world-wide, but reiterated its difficulty with sanctions, stressing that its position on the issue remained unchanged.

Of those voting for the draft, Lesotho reaffirmed that it favoured economic sanctions against South Africa, without prejudice to its support for self-determination. Uruguay, along with Turkey, disapproved of the selective wording of paragraph 19, and would have preferred a balanced wording of paragraphs 29 and 30, the latter to mention the need to withdraw foreign forces from Lebanon. Burma voiced reservations on those same paragraphs, and Haiti on paragraph 29. As to paragraph 32, Uruguay believed that the Palestinian people would select their representatives when they could freely exercise self-determination.

Chile entered reservations on those paragraphs that encouraged what it described as unacceptable means for settling conflicts, that condemned certain countries in a selective fashion while ignoring other situations involving violations of the right to self-determination, and that singled out certain Member States—such as Israel—in a discriminatory manner, or were highly subjective. Had separate votes been taken, it would have voted against paragraphs 2, 19, 30 and 32. Chile took the reference to national liberation movements to mean only those recognized by regional organizations. Likewise, it considered that implicit in the endorsement of the Declarations in paragraph 5 was the form in which they had been adopted by the relevant conferences; that is, talking account of the reservations expressed. On the references to the Middle East situation, Chile called for withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon as a prerequisite to that country's exercise of self-determination.

Colombia, pointing to the danger of using the most elemental human aspirations for political purposes, said that many countries denouncing human rights violations in Latin America were themselves guilty of denying peoples' rights—a fact to be kept in mind for more balanced resolutions in the future.

The USSR unconditionally supported the text because it was in favour of freedom and equality of peoples and of eradicating colonialism and neo-colonialism. Condemning United States aggression against Grenada as a crime against peace, the USSR believed that all peace-loving people should make their voices heard in support of the right to self-determination of that country and other sovereign peoples against whom the United States was waging undeclared war.

In the view of Cuba and Nicaragua, a future resolution on self-determination should apply also to other parts of the world, notably Latin America, where Puerto Ricans remained subject to colonial dominion and Grenada had been invaded by United States forces. That invasion underscored the need for strict respect for the right to self-determination, Bulgaria and the Lao People's Democratic Republic observed. The German Democratic Republic, saying the draft resolution had become all the more important in the light of that blatant aggression, accused the United States of suppressing the will of a small country to be its own master. In line with its continued connection with backwardness and reaction, the United States was supporting South Africa's apartheid policy and the aggressor in the Israeli-occupied territories; it was trying to destroy the revolution in Nicaragua and to deploy new and dangerous missiles in Western Europe.

Refuting those criticisms in right of reply, the United States asserted that it had acted in Grenada in response to an urgent appeal from the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, motivated by urgent security concerns stemming from the buildup of Cuban and USSR military forces in Grenada. Referring to what it described as USSR and USSR-sponsored violence in Afghanistan, the United States stated that the people of Grenada would avoid the horrible fate of the Afghans; that was not a violation of the principle of self-determination, it concluded, but a vindication and defence of it.

Afghanistan

By a resolution of 16 February 1983, adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 7, with 5 abstentions⁽¹²⁾ the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed its profound concern that the people of Afghanistan continued to be denied their right to self-determination, to determine their own form of government, and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint. It called for a political settlement based on: immediate foreign troop withdrawal from Afghanistan; full respect for that country's independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned status; and strict observance of the principle of non-interference. It urged all concerned to work towards such a settlement, which would also enable the Afghan refugees to return to their homes. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to promote a political solution, urged all concerned to continue to co-operate with him, and appealed for humanitarian relief assistance to alleviate the hardship of Afghan refugees, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

The Sub-Commission, by a resolution adopted on 5 September by 14 votes to 2, with 3 abstentions⁽¹³⁾ requested the Secretary-General to collect information on the human rights situation in Afghanistan for transmittal to the Commission in 1984. It recommended to the Commission a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, by which the Council would request appointment of a special rapporteur to examine that situation and formulate proposals towards ensuring full protection of human rights before, during and after the withdrawal of all foreign forces; and would authorize him to seek information from organizations and specialized agencies.

East Timor

By a resolution of 16 February 1983, adopted by a roll-call vote of 16 to 14, with 10 abstentions⁽¹⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of East Timor to self-determination and independence and declared that they must be enabled freely to determine their own future on the basis of relevant General Assembly resolutions and human rights instruments. The Commission called on Portugal, as the administering Power, and the representatives of the people of East Timor and Indonesia to co-operate with the United Nations with a view to guaranteeing the people of East Timor free and full exercise of that right. It also called on all concerned to facilitate entry of international aid into the Territory to alleviate the people's suffering due to the situation prevailing there.

The Sub-Commission, by a resolution adopted on 6 September by 10 votes to 7, with 8 abstentions⁽¹⁵⁾ welcomed the fact that the Assembly, in November 1982⁽¹⁶⁾ had included the question of East Timor in its 1983 agenda. The Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to encourage the parties to arrive at a stable solution, with due regard for the interests of the people of East Timor, and recommended that the Commission continue to consider the evolution of the situation of human rights there.

On 3 February⁽²²⁾ during the Commission's consideration of the question, Indonesia transmitted a memorandum of the same date stating that Indonesia categorically opposed United Nations discussion of issues related to the political and juridical status of East Timor. It rejected the draft resolution that was later adopted, stating that the allegations it contained were totally false.

Expressing support of the draft, Portugal stated on 7 February⁽²³⁾ that it could not accept Indonesia's restrictive interpretation, recognizing on the one hand the Commission's competence to deal with human rights and denying on the other its ability to deal with the question of East Timor.

Kampuchea

The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution of 15 February, adopted by a roll-call vote of 28 to 9, with 4 abstentions⁽¹⁰⁾ reaffirmed that the continuing occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived the people of Kampuchea of the exercise of their right to self-determination, which currently constituted the primary violation of human rights in that country. The Commission emphasized that foreign troop withdrawal, restoration of Kampuchea's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, recognition of Kampuchean right to self-determination and a commitment by all States to non-interference were essential components for a solution to the Kampuchea problem. It reaffirmed its call for a cessation of hostilities and for immediate withdrawal of foreign forces, to enable Kampucheans to exercise their human rights free from foreign interference, aggression and coercion and to determine their own political process through free and fair elections under United Nations supervision; to enable the United Nations to offer its services in the field of human rights; to make possible efforts towards a comprehensive political solution within the framework of the 1981 Declaration on Kampuchea⁽²⁴⁾ and relevant United Nations resolutions; and to make possible the return of all Kampuchean refugees.

The Commission reiterated its condemnation of the persistent occurrence of gross and flagrant human rights violations in Kampuchea, and deplored violations of the principles of humanitarianism and the Charter, particularly the recent military attack by occupying troops against encampments, including a hospital for Kampucheans, on the Kampuchea-Thailand border.

The Secretary-General was requested to continue to monitor developments in Kampuchea and to intensify efforts towards a political settlement and restoration of human rights. Noting the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea, the Commission requested the Committee to continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council continue to take measures to implement recommendations for the achievement by Kampucheans of the full enjoyment of human rights and freedoms, particularly the right to self-determination.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/155 by recorded vote.

Right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council endorsed Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/5 of 15 February 1983, by which the Commission, inter alia, recognized that the continuing illegal occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces had compelled a large number of Kampucheans to flee their own homeland; deplored the violations of the fundamental principles of humanitarianism and of the Charter of the United Nations, particularly the recent military attack by occupying troops against border encampments, including a hospital for Kampucheans on the Thai-Kampuchean border; and reaffirmed that the continuing occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived the people of Kampuchea of the exercise of their right to self-determination and constituted a primary violation of human rights in Kampuchea at present.

In this connection, the Council reaffirmed its decision 1982/143 of 7 May 1982 and once again repeated the call for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea and the exercise of the right to self-determination by the Kampuchean people as contained in the Declaration on Kampuchea adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea on 17 July 1981 and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolutions 36/5 of 21 October 1981 and 37/6 of 28 October 1982.

The Council expressed its grave concern at the continuing activities of the foreign forces in Kampuchea, particularly the systematic attacks on other refugee encampments along the Thai-Kampuchean border, resulting in further loss of life and property of Kampucheans and forcing large numbers of Kampuchean civilians to flee into Thailand.

The Council noted with appreciation the role of the Secretary-General and requested him to continue to monitor closely the developments in Kampuchea and to look into the situation, including the violations of humanitarian principles perpetrated against Kampuchean civilian refugees by the foreign-occupying troops along the border, as well as to intensify efforts, including the use of his good offices, to bring about a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem and the restoration of fundamental human rights in Kampuchea.

The Council noted with appreciation the efforts of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea and requested that the Committee continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/155

41-9-3 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/61) by recorded vote (34-8-4), 23 May (meeting 19); 23-nation draft (E/1983/C.2/L13); agenda item 10.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Fiji, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Sudan, Thailand, United Kingdom, Uruguay.

Meeting number. ESC 15.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Burundi, Canada, China, Colombia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Fiji, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Japan, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Portugal, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Benin, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Congo, German Democratic Republic, India, Nicaragua, Poland, USSR.

Abstaining: Algeria, Mali, Mexico.

Poland, also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR, expressed the view that the decision did not help to promote a stable peace in the region and diverted attention from the real reason for tensions along the Kampuchea-Thailand border; it also ignored the fact that armed groups, including those of the Pol Pot régime, were attacking the civilian population.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic said that, as one of the parties directly concerned, it did not believe that the decision would contribute to a solution of the problems of South-East Asia, which should be solved by the two groups of countries in the region—the countries of Indo-China and those of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN)—without outside interference. The decision did not take due account of the points of view of the two sides.

Viet Nam rejected the Commission resolution and the Council decision as blatant interference in the domestic affairs of a sovereign State. The Council decision, it said, used human rights to reimpose on Kampuchians, under the guise of a so-called government coalition, the genocidal Pol Pot régime, which had massacred millions and denied normal life to an entire people. What Kampuchians needed was disinterested support from the international community in defence of their human rights—above all of the right to life. Viet Nam asserted that the Kampuchians had exercised self-determination in January 1979 and were determined to defend it, with the help of Vietnamese troops who were in Kampuchea at the request of the People's Republic of Kampuchea. As to the security of refugees along the Kampuchea-Thailand border, Viet Nam pointed to the proposals by the People's Republic to: dissociate refugee camps from armed camps, establish a demilitarized or security zone, and repatriate refugees with the assistance of national Red Cross societies without making such repatriation contingent on reciprocal diplomatic recognition of the countries concerned.

Democratic Kampuchea said the Council decision would encourage Kampuchians under the leadership of the coalition Government to pursue their struggle for the complete liberation of their country. The problem in South-East Asia, it said, was not one between ASEAN and the Indo-Chinese countries, but Viet Nam's aggression against Kampuchea. United Nations response, as reflected in the vote on the decision, was an adequate one to the slanderous allegations by Viet Nam and its supporters.

(For details on the situation in Kampuchea, see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter VII.)

Nicaragua

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, by a resolution adopted on 31 August 1983 by 18 votes to 1, with 1 abstention⁽¹⁴⁾ recommended to the Commission on Human Rights adoption of a draft resolution. That draft would have the Economic and Social Council recommend that all Governments support efforts, especially those of the Contadora Group, towards attainment of peace so that Nicaragua might be assured its right to self-determination and to development without external interference.

This action stemmed from the Sub-Commission's concern, as stated in the resolution's preambular section, over numerous incursions by armed groups from a neighbouring country and sustained by an external force.

(For details on the situation in Nicaragua, see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter VI.)

Palestinians

By a resolution of 15 February 1983, adopted by a roll-call vote of 26 to 7, with 10 abstentions⁽⁸⁾ the Commission on Human Rights condemned the continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories by Israel and demanded its immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal. It reaffirmed the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination without external interference and to an independent and sovereign State of Palestine, and called for the return of Palestinians to their homes and property in exercise of that right. It recognized the right of Palestinians to regain their rights by all means in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter and reaffirmed that the future of Palestinians could be decided only with their participation in all efforts through their representative, PLO.

The Commission rejected all partial agreements and separate treaties in so far as they violated the rights of Palestinians and contradicted the principles of just and comprehensive Middle East solutions, as well as the "autonomy" plan proposed in the "Camp David accords", declaring those accords to be without validity. States, United Nations bodies and other international organizations were urged to extend support to Palestinians, through PLO, in the struggle to restore their rights.

The Commission adopted several other resolutions dealing with human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories (see under HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS below).

As requested by the Commission in the foregoing resolution, the Secretary-General submitted to the Sub-Commission a list of reports, studies and publications prepared by the Division for Palestinian Rights of the United Nations Secretariat⁽²⁵⁾ updating a similar list to the Commission⁽²⁶⁾.

On 31 August, the Sub-Commission reiterated that the inalienable rights of Palestinians included the rights to self-determination without external interference and to an independent and sovereign State of Palestine (see under HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS below).

South Africa and Namibia

Information from 14 Governments on the enactment of legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries to be punishable offences was summarized by the Secretary-General in a report⁽²⁷⁾ to the Commission on Human Rights at its 1983 session. The report was submitted in response to a February 1982 Commission resolution reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movements as well as the right of the Namibian people to self-determination, and calling on Governments to enact legislation against mercenaries (see also LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter II).

By a resolution of 15 February adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 7, with 4 abstentions⁽⁹⁾ the Commission called on States to take steps to enable the dependent peoples of South Africa and Namibia to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination. It reaffirmed the right of the Namibian people to freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands, in accordance with the Charter and relevant General Assembly resolutions. It further reaffirmed the legitimacy of their struggle and that of the oppressed people of South Africa by all means, including armed struggle.

cluding attempts to dismember its territory, declaring such occupation an act of aggression, a threat to international peace and security, and an affront to the United Nations, which had direct responsibility for the Territory until independence. It demanded the immediate release of all people detained or imprisoned by South Africa because of their struggle for independence, and full respect for their human rights. It condemned the policy of "bantustanization" as contrary to the principle of self-determination and inconsistent with genuine independence and national unity.

The Commission also condemned South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization against independent African States, in particular Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique and Zimbabwe, and demanded an immediate end to such acts and withdrawal of South Africa's forces from Angolan territory. It reaffirmed that the use of mercenaries against national liberation movements and sovereign States was a criminal act and that the mercenaries themselves were criminals, and called on Governments to declare the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries and transit of mercenaries through their territories punishable offences and to prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries.

The Commission reaffirmed that continuation of colonialism in all forms—including racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, exploitation by foreign and other interests of economic and human resources, and colonial wars to suppress national liberation movements—was incompatible with the Charter, the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽²⁸⁾ and the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁽²⁹⁾.

In one of two resolutions dated 18 February, the Commission reaffirmed the inalienable right of the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia to self-determination⁽³⁰⁾ in the other⁽³¹⁾ it reaffirmed that the Namibians could legitimately exercise that right only under conditions determined by the Security Council in 1978⁽³²⁾.

(For further details on the human rights situation in South Africa and Namibia, see under HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS below.)

Western Sahara

The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution adopted on 16 February 1973 by 16 votes to 2, with 15 abstentions⁽¹⁾ reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Western Sahara to self-determination and independence. It reiterated its appeal to the two parties to the dispute, Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro, to enter into direct negotiations for a cease-fire, an indispensable prerequisite for a referendum on self-determination. The Commission decided to follow closely the development of the situation in Western Sahara and to consider the question in 1984 as a matter of high priority. (See also TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV.)

Rights of detained persons

In 1983, work continued on a draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment. To expedite its finalization, the General Assembly, by decision 38/426 of 19 December, decided to establish in 1984 an open-ended working group of the Sixth (Legal) Committee.

The human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment were the subject of three reports by the Secretary-General to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The Sub-Commission's sessional Working Group on Detention met in August; it reviewed developments on detention in certain countries, considered ways to eliminate enforced or involuntary disappearances and made recommendations for the protection of human rights in states of siege or emergency (see below).

In February, the Commission on Human Rights asked the Sub-Commission to propose measures to ensure respect for human rights in states of siege or emergency. In March, it adopted a resolution dealing with persons detained by Israel (see under HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS below).

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a May 1983 report to the Sub-Commission on the question of human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, in keeping with a September 1982 Sub-Commission resolution⁽³⁴⁾ Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations had been invited to provide information on the question. As at 1 May, replies had been received from 14 countries, two specialized agencies and two intergovernmental organizations.

In June, the Secretary-General submitted a report containing a synopsis of material received from 10 NGOs.⁽³⁵⁾ Their comments covered persistent violations of the rights of detainees in the form of such practices as torture, arrest and detention on dubious grounds or without grounds, indefinite detention without trial, preventive detention during a state of emergency, incommunicado detention, death under suspicious circumstances during detention, extraterritorial abduction and forced disappearances. The report included certain features that emerged from the comments and suggestions for international action.

In August, the Secretary-General presented a preliminary survey of maximum detention periods under national laws and of decisions of international organs of investigation and settlement, using information from Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs⁽³⁶⁾ The organs of investigation included the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Freedom of Association of the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the European Commission of Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights, and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights.

Working Group activities. A sessional Working Group on human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment was set up by the Sub-Commission on 16 August 1983. The Group held two meetings during the remainder of the month, with John Carey (United States) as Chairman/Rapporteur. It reviewed developments on detention in certain countries and explored ways of eliminating enforced or involuntary disappearances. It adopted, with some modifications, a series of recommendations put forward by Special Rapporteur Nicole Questiaux (France) in a 1982 study of the implications for human rights of recent developments in situations known as states of siege or emergency⁽³⁷⁾ The recommendations, including measures for developing the role of special international surveillance organs and for strengthening substantive guarantees provided for by international law on human rights, were submitted to the Sub-Commission in the Working Group's report⁽³⁸⁾

Sub-Commission action. By a resolution adopted on 6 September 1983 by 19 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions,⁽³⁹⁾ the Sub-Commission decided to include in its agenda an item on implementation of the right of derogation (in states of emergency), as provided for under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁽¹⁾ and human rights violations. To be taken up under the item were: a list of countries proclaiming or terminating a state of emergency, to be drawn up and updated each year by the Working Group on Detention; and a report on compliance with rules guaranteeing the legality of a state of emergency, making reference to the principles defined in the 1982 study⁽³⁷⁾ for yearly submission by the Sub-Commission to the Commission on Human Rights.

The Sub-Commission also referred proposals to the Working Group, as follows: on the period of imprisonment—to make public without delay or at least enter in a register any arrest followed by remand to custody, to limit the time prescribed by the emergency law itself for holding a person incommunicado, and to make impossible the suspension of the habeas corpus procedure or similar remedies in any situation including a state of siege or emergency; on the right to a fair trial—a guarantee of a minimum of communication with a freely chosen defence counsel and the proceedings to be made public; on sentences and on procedure—to abolish capital punishment, particularly where political matters were concerned, and to suspend any provision of penal law permitting retroactive changes in jurisdiction or procedure upon introduction of a state of emergency.

By another resolution of the same date⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Sub-Commission requested one of its members, Louis Joinet (France), to prepare a technical study of amnesty laws and their role in the safeguard and promotion of human rights, including minimum criteria generally accepted by the various legal systems. The findings were to be presented to the Sub-Commission in 1984, for transmission to the Commission.

Arbitrary detention and cruel treatment of prisoners of opinion and other human rights violations, resulting from the state of siege in Paraguay, were dealt with by the Sub-Commission in a 6 September resolution (see under HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS below).

Human rights in emergency situations

On 22 February 1983,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, noting that the Sub-Commission had endorsed the conclusions of the 1982 study on human rights in states of siege or emergency⁽³⁷⁾ requested the Secretary-General to invite comments on the study from Governments, United Nations bodies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, for forwarding to the Sub-Commission and the Commission. It asked the Sub-Commission to propose measures to ensure respect for human rights in states of siege or emergency for priority consideration by the Commission in 1984.

Taking note of that request on 5 September and expressing concern about the numerous occurrences in many countries of excessive and unwarranted use of force during public gatherings, resulting in civilian loss of life or injury, the Sub-Commission requested the Commission to invite the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to consider in 1984 how the question of restraints on the use of force by law enforcement officials and military personnel might be effectively examined by the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see Chapter XIII of this section). It requested the Secretary-General to invite the views of the international community and organizations and to prepare an analysis of State policies and practices regarding such restraints.

On 6 September, the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission adoption of a draft resolution inviting Paraguay to end the state of siege in force in that country since 1954 (see under HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS below).

Human rights in states of siege or emergency were also dealt with in connection with the rights of detained persons (see above). In keeping with the Commission's request of 22 February, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Sub-Commission comments on the 1982 study on human rights in states of siege or emergency from six Governments, a United Nations organ, a specialized agency and an NGO⁽⁴²⁾

Draft principles for protection of detainees

In 1983, a Working Group open to all members of the General Assembly's Sixth Committee continued work on a draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment. The draft originated from a text adopted by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in 1978⁽⁴³⁾ work on which had since been carried out by working groups, of the Third Committee in 1980⁽⁴⁴⁾ and of the Sixth Committee in 1981⁽⁴⁵⁾ and 1982.⁽⁴⁶⁾

Established by the Assembly in December 1982,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the 1983 Working Group met in New York between 30 September and 30 November, with Luigi Ferrari Bravo (Italy) as Chairman/Rapporteur. It was agreed at the outset to postpone consideration of definitions and to concentrate on preparation of texts considered generally acceptable. Accordingly, it resumed work on principle 14 of the draft, at which the 1982 working group had left off. Following revisions and amendments, the Group approved principles 14 to 18 (entitlements to: family notification of arrest and place of detention, assistance of and consultations with legal counsel, family visitation, detention near place of residence). The approved provisional texts were annexed to the Group's report⁽⁴⁸⁾

In a September 1983 report with later addenda,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the views of six States on the draft text, based on the reports of the three previous working groups, which had been circulated for comment to all Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/426 without vote.

Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment

At its 101st plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee:

(a) Took note with appreciation of the report of the Working Group on the Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, established in accordance with General Assembly decision 37/427 of 16 December 1982 to elaborate a final version of the draft Body of Principles, a task which it had not been able to conclude;

(b) Decided to establish at its thirty-ninth session an open-ended working group of the Sixth Committee with a view to expediting the finalization of the draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment;

(c) Requested the Secretary-General to circulate to Member States the report of the open-ended Working Group established at the thirty-eighth session;

(d) Decided to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment".

General Assembly decision 38/426

Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/676) without vote, 8 December (meeting 70); draft by Sweden (A/C.6/38/L.26); agenda item 136. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 6th Committee 3, 70; plenary 101.

Torture and cruel treatment

Work continued in 1983, in the Commission on Human Rights and in a working group, on a draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Following the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council in May authorized a similar working group for 1984 to complete work on the draft. Its completion in that year as a matter of highest priority was requested of the Commission by the General Assembly in December 1983.

In November, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on the status of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, to which contributions of $350,882 were made in 1983. Contributions were again called for by the Assembly in December.

On 4 March,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Commission requested that implementation of a September 1982 decision of the Sub-Commission⁽⁵¹⁾ asking its Working Group on Detention to hear and receive information on torture of detained persons, be deferred until the 1984 Commission session.

Draft convention on the prohibition of torture

Working group activities. A working group with Jan Herman Burgers (Netherlands) as Chairman/Rapporteur and open to all members of the Commission on Human Rights met between 24 January and 24 February 1983 to continue work on a draft convention on the prohibition of torture. The sections considered included: article 3, paragraph 2 (determination of grounds for believing a person to be in danger of being subjected to torture); and article 5, paragraph 2, article 6, paragraph 4, and article 7 (on universal jurisdiction). Article 16 (State prevention of degrading treatment or punishment) was reconsidered to determine whether the reference to article 14 (redress and compensation) in paragraph 1 should be retained or deleted; since no consensus could be reached, it was decided to maintain the provisional status of the reference by retaining the square brackets around it.

The draft as it emerged at the end of the meetings was annexed to the group's report⁽⁵²⁾ to serve as a basis for further discussion. It consisted of a seven-clause preamble adopted in 1983; part I containing 16 substantive articles, decision on 5 of which remained pending; part II containing 8 articles relating to the convention's implementation, 5 of them based on proposals submitted by the Chairman/Rapporteur in 1983 and redrafted in the light of discussions; and part III containing 7 final clauses, 6 of them also based on proposals submitted by the Chairman/Rapporteur.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a resolution of 9 March 1983⁽⁵³⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, desirous of expediting work on the draft convention, to which it decided to give priority consideration at its 1984 session, recommended to the Economic and Social Council adoption of a draft resolution authorizing a working group to meet prior to that session to complete work on the draft.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May 1983, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1983/38 without vote.

Question of the human rights of all persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment, in particular torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/193 of 18 December 1982, by which the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to complete as a matter of the highest priority, at its thirty-ninth session, the drafting of a convention on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/38 of 7 May 1982, by which the Council authorized a meeting of an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights for a period of one week prior to the Commission's thirty-ninth session to complete the work on a draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Considering that it was not found possible to complete the work on the draft convention during the thirty-ninth session of the Commission,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/48 of 9 March 1983,

1. Authorizes a meeting of an open-ended working group for a period of one week prior to the fortieth session of the Commission on Human Rights to complete the work on a draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Commission on Human Rights at its fortieth session all relevant material relating to the draft convention.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/38

27 May 1983 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/61) without vote, 23 May [meeting 18]; draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1983/13); agenda item 10. Meeting number. ESC 15.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, resolution 38/119 without vote.

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Bearing in mind article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling also its resolution 32/62 of 8 December 1977, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to draw up a draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, in the light of the principles embodied in the Declaration, and its resolution 32/63 of 8 December 1977,

Recalling further that the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in its resolution 11 of 5 September 1980, expressed the belief that the draft convention should be finalized at the earliest possible time,

Considering that it was not possible to complete the work on the draft convention during the thirty-ninth session of the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/38 of 27 May 1983, in which the Council authorized a meeting of an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights for a period of one week prior to the fortieth session of the Commission in order to complete the work on a draft convention;

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to complete, at its fortieth session, as a matter of the highest priority, the drafting of a convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, with a view to submitting a draft, including provisions for the effective implementation of the future convention, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

Fund for victims of torture

On 22 February 1983,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, reiterating the need to provide assistance to the victims of torture or to activities on their behalf, called on Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981.⁽⁵⁵⁾ It requested the Secretary-General to transmit its appeal to all Governments and to keep it informed of the Fund's operations.

In his November report on the status of the Fund⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stated that in 1983 its Board of Trustees—at its first session at Geneva from 21 to 25 March and at its second in New York from 24 to 28 October—reviewed the Fund's programme of activities and a number of projects submitted for support. The Board found the needs of torture victims to be considerable and expected requests for assistance, already large in number, to increase. The Board thus decided, as a matter of priority, to solicit contributions from Governments and individuals and other public and private sources.

In keeping with its decision to concentrate initially on supporting programmes providing direct assistance for the rehabilitation of torture victims—a process requiring special medical and psychological care—the Board recommended a number of grants to the Secretary-General for such assistance, including support for medical and psychological training courses and for humanitarian missions by experienced medical personnel. The number of projects reviewed called for a total amount far exceeding the funds available. Nine grants were recommended, amounting to $263,200, which the Secretary-General subsequently made available.

In 1983, eight countries—Canada, Cyprus, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Luxembourg and Sweden—contributed $350,882 to the Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/92 without vote.

United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling further its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims of torture in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

Convinced that the struggle to eliminate torture includes the provision of assistance in a humanitarian spirit to the victims and their family members,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

1. Expresses its gratitude and appreciation to those Governments and individuals that have already contributed to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture;

2. Calls upon all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to respond favourably to requests for contributions to the Fund;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Board of Trustees of the Fund for the work it has carried out;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the support given to the Board of Trustees;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make use of all existing possibilities to assist the Board of Trustees of the Fund, inter alia through the preparation, production and dissemination of information materials, in its efforts to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known and in its appeal for contributions.

Principles of Medical Ethics

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly, on 16 December 1983, adopted resolution 38/118.

Principles of Medical Ethics

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/194 of 18 December 1982, by which it adopted the Principles of Medical Ethics relevant to the role of health personnel, particularly physicians, in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Alarmed that not infrequently members of the medical profession or other health personnel are engaged in activities which are difficult to reconcile with the Principles of Medical Ethics,

Recognizing the need for the full application of the Principles of Medical Ethics and desiring that the Principles be given wide publicity,

1. Urges all Governments to take measures with a view to promoting the application by all health personnel and government officials, in particular those employed in institutions of detention or imprisonment, of the Principles of Medical Ethics relevant to the role of health personnel, particularly physicians, in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to disseminate the Principles of Medical Ethics widely and in as many languages as possible and to issue a pamphlet containing the text of the Principles in the six official languages of the United Nations;

3. Calls upon all Governments to give the Principles of Medical Ethics the widest possible distribution, in particular among medical and paramedical associations and institutions of detention or imprisonment, in an official language of the State;

4. Invites all relevant intergovernmental organizations, in particular the World Health Organization, and non-governmental organizations concerned to bring the Principles of Medical Ethics to the attention of the widest possible group of individuals, especially those active in the medical and paramedical field;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the steps taken by the United Nations and the relevant specialized agencies, as well as by Governments, for the dissemination and implementation of the Principles of Medical Ethics.

Detention on grounds of mental illness

Following a Commission on Human Rights recommendation of 9 March 1983,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/37 on 27 May requesting the Sub-Commission to set up a sessional working group to examine as a matter of highest priority the draft principles, guidelines and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder. The draft had been prepared by Special Rapporteur Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), who was asked expeditiously to supplement her 1982 report.⁽⁵⁸⁾

Responding, the Special Rapporteur submitted a final report⁽⁵⁹⁾ to the Sub-Commission in August. Taking account of comments by Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, as well as of judgements of regional and national courts and writings of recognized scholars and scientists, the report summarized the history of the treatment and care of the mentally ill and of mental institutions. It also surveyed the basic contribution to the protection of the patient's human and legal rights by the United Nations and its specialized agencies, the courts, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

The report made a series of observations and conclusions. Among them were that: problems created by mental illness varied with such factors as a country's political and legal systems, medical standards, financial resources, and understanding and concern; psychiatry was frequently used to subvert political and legal guarantees of the individual's freedom; psychiatric hospitalization and treatment was forced on individuals who did not support the political régime under which they lived; persons were involuntarily detained and used as guinea pigs for scientific experiments; and patients who should be in the care of an institution because they were a danger to themselves or others were left to live freely without supervision. The definitions of "mental illness", "mentally ill" and "mental disorder" remained to be standardized. While they were sufficiently clarified by science and jurisprudence in some countries, there was no legislative uniformity or harmonization in the definition of those concepts.

Despite economic, social and medical advances, high standards in mental health institutions were not automatically a government priority. Overcrowding, inadequate services and a dearth of trained personnel were serious problems, as were the lack of proper community-care facilities and the tendency to integrate mental health services with services for other illnesses. Evidence pointed to a general pattern of allowing involuntary admission and detention on the grounds of mental illness or through medical discretion, without full judicial hearing. Attention was drawn to some scientific and technological advances with adverse effects which, in certain cases, threatened the patient's physical and intellectual integrity.

The report proposed that the Sub-Commission recommend to the Commission certain measures for consideration by Governments, which should: adapt national legislation to the draft principles; develop programmes for social and community care; ensure respect for the principles of legality, due process of law, fair and public hearing, equality and non-discrimination, and the writ of habeas corpus; recognize the patient's rights to accept or refuse treatment, to rehabilitation and protection, and to be informed of his or her medical diagnosis and report; safeguard confidential information in mental health records; ensure access to appropriate mental health services on a voluntary basis; adopt policy to make involuntary admission to a mental institution unjustifiable where accommodations, food or medical care were below acceptable standards; impose respect for the codes of medical ethics; prohibit psychological and psychiatric abuses in particular on political or other non-medical grounds; and limit restrictions on personal freedom to cases where a patient's condition or treatment so required.

Other measures called for humanizing and individualizing care and treatment, modernizing or upgrading institutional facilities to acceptable standards, developing special services and educational programmes for juvenile patients, rehabilitating former patients and integrating them in community life, establishing advocacy systems for patient representation, and disseminating information on the protection of human rights of the mentally ill, in particular against threats arising from certain scientific and technological developments.

On 15 August, the Sub-Commission set up a working group, with Mrs. Daes as Chairman/Rapporteur, to resume the first reading of the draft: principles. The group met between 24 August and 1 September and began with article 8, the preliminary consideration of the first seven articles having been completed the previous year. The group also heard statements from representatives of the African National Congress of South Africa and five NGOs.

Following examination of the working group's report⁽⁶⁰⁾ and of the Special Rapporteur's final report, the Sub-Commission, on 7 September⁽⁶¹⁾ expressed appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for a valuable report and requested that it be presented to the Commission. The Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission for adoption by the Economic and Social Council a draft resolution, by which the Council would decide that the Special Rapporteur's study be published and given the widest possible distribution in all the official United Nations languages, and would ask the Sub-Commission to set up a 1984 sessional working group to continue work on the draft principles.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1983/37 without vote on 27 May 1983.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of resolution 1982/34 of 10 September 1982 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/44 of 9 March 1983, concerning guidelines, principles and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Special Rapporteur, Mrs. Erica-Irene A. Daes, for her work in preparing her report on this question, Noting also with appreciation the report of the Sub-Commission's sessional working group on the question of persons detained on the grounds of mental ill-health.

1. Requests the Special Rapporteur expeditiously to supplement her final report, containing the body of principles, guidelines and guarantees as well as the summary compilation of replies received from Governments and specialized agencies, taking into account the basic views expressed in the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and in the Commission on Human Rights, and to include in the report any new replies from Governments or specialized agencies that may be transmitted in the mean time;

2. Requests the Sub-Commission to establish a sessional working group and to allocate to it appropriate time and facilities for a proper examination, as a matter of the highest priority, of the above-mentioned body of principles, guidelines and guarantees, and to submit the revised final report of the Special Rapporteur including the documentation referred to in paragraph 1 above, to the Commission on Human Rights at its fortieth session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all assistance needed for the completion of her work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted on 16 December 1983 resolution 38/111 without vote.

Implications of scientific and technological developments for human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/53 of 14 December 1978, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to urge the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to undertake, as a matter of priority, a study of the question of the protection of those detained on the grounds of mental ill-health, with a view to formulating guidelines,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/130 B of 11 December 1980, 36/56 B of 25 November 1981 and 37/188 of 18 December 1982, in which it noted with satisfaction the progress made by the Sub-Commission and urged the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission to continue and expedite their consideration of this question, so that the Commission could submit its views and recommendations to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/37 of 27 May 1983 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/44 of 9 March 1983,

Noting that the Commission on Human Rights will not be in a position to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session through the Economic and Social Council, as requested in Assembly resolution 37/188, because it was impossible for the Sub-Commission to conclude at its thirty-sixth session its consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees,

Reaffirming its conviction that detention of persons in mental institutions on account of their political views or on other non-medical grounds is a violation of their human rights,

Noting with satisfaction the progress made by the Sub-Commission in its consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees submitted to it,

Again urges the Commission on Human Rights and, through it, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to expedite their consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, so that the Commission can submit its views and recommendations, including a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Extra-legal executions

In January 1983, Special Rapporteur S. Amos Wako (Kenya) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report on questions related to summary or arbitrary executions, which in increasing numbers took place in various parts of the world. The Special Rapporteur had been appointed by the Commission Chairman in August 1982, in accordance with a May 1982 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽⁶²⁾ Following the recommendation of the Commission on 8 March 1983,⁽⁶³⁾ the Council, by resolution 1983/36 of 27 May, decided to continue the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year, requesting him to review his report in the light of information received from Governments, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. The General Assembly, in resolution 38/96 of 16 December, took note of that decision and again requested the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards appeared not to be respected, as provided for in articles 6 (on the right to life), 14 (on minimum guarantees in determining criminal charges) and 15 (on determination of penalty for criminal offence) of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.⁽¹⁾

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The report of the Special Rapporteur⁽⁶⁴⁾ reviewed international legal standards, national legislation and basic concepts of summary or arbitrary executions in relation to judicial or other proceedings, to those in detention or custody, and to killings resulting from law enforcement; and executions in states of war, armed conflicts and emergency. General patterns of such executions and their targets, and allegations of such executions in specific countries were analysed.

The report stated that summary or arbitrary executions were widespread, indicating a serious erosion of respect for the right to life that was bound to have an effect on international order. In the preceding 15 years, such executions had been practised in a number of countries in a consistent pattern. Conservative estimates had put the known victims at some 2 million persons. Executions were most prevalent in areas with internal disturbances or under states of emergency, and in the wake of government change resulting from war, revolutions or coups d'etat. In areas of political tension, individuals perceived to be leaders of groups opposed to the Government or simply to be critics of it were targeted for summary execution. Arbitrary executions involving a number of persons usually occurred during demonstrations, strikes or other forms of protest. Governments were found to be reluctant to investigate cases or punish those guilty of carrying out such executions, who in some cases had even been granted immunity from prosecution on the grounds that they had acted in "good faith".

Notable among the Special Rapporteur's recommendations was urgent action by the international community to halt erosion of respect for the right to life by setting up a preventive mechanism that would react speedily to threatened or imminent summary or arbitrary executions. A parallel mechanism should also be set up to monitor such executions and to suggest ways of eliminating them either generally or in specific situations. Among the suggestions received by the Special Rapporteur was to amend the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights to cover also such executions, or set up a separate working group. An appeal should be made to Governments to ratify international human rights instruments, in particular the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Protocols, and to enforce them. An international campaign should be launched to promote world opinion against summary or arbitrary executions.

Further work on standard-setting should include: clarification of the definition of summary or arbitrary executions, of the minimum guarantees to be observed by military, special or revolutionary tribunals in times of public emergency or of internal disturbance, and of the qualification and tenure of such tribunals; and clarification of the conduct of, and exercise of the powers of arrest by, police or other law enforcement agencies during events such as demonstrations or riots, as well as of safeguards against torture during interrogation. Other recommendations called for: development of minimum standards of investigation and accountability; a study of the specific types or patterns of execution, in order to set national, regional and international standards; and examination of the role of groups other than the Government in acts leading to deprivation of life in a manner equivalent to that from summary or arbitrary executions.

On 14 January, Guatemala invited the Special Rapporteur to visit the country. Responding on 25 January, the Special Rapporteur accepted the invitation in the context of a follow-up to his report, without, however, setting a date.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted two resolutions relating to arbitrary or summary executions. On 26 May, it adopted without vote resolution 1983/24, the draft of which had been prepared by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (see Chapter XIII of this section).

Arbitrary or summary executions

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 35/172 of 15 December 1980, in which the Secretary-General was requested to report to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its seventh session on arbitrary or summary executions, and 36/22 of 9 November 1981, in which the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control was requested to examine the problem with a view to making recommendations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 35/172,

Having regard to the provisions bearing on capital punishment in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in particular paragraph 1 of article 2 and articles 6, 14 and 15,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2393(XXIII) of 26 November 1968, in which the Assembly invited Governments of Member States, inter alia, to ensure the most careful legal procedures and the greatest possible safeguards for the accused in capital cases in countries where the death penalty obtains, Mindful that a substantive relationship exists between the issue of human rights, on the one hand, and criminal justice, on the other, which should be further recognized and promoted within the United Nations system,

Concerned about the statement made in the 1980 quinquennial report of the Secretary-General on the question of capital punishment, indicating that extrajudicial executions were increasing in certain countries, retentionist and abolitionist alike,

Taking note of resolution 5 of 5 September 1980 of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in which the Congress deplored and condemned extra-legal executions,

Further recalling the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and related recommendations adopted by the United Nations,

Taking account of the work done by the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in the areas of summary or arbitrary executions, and disappearances of persons, and the more general question of the human rights and protection of persons held under any form of detention and subjected to torture or any other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment,

Hopeful that work currently undertaken by competent bodies of the United Nations with a view to drafting a convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, a draft body of principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment and a draft code of medical ethics can be expedited,

1. Strongly condemns and deplores the brutal practice of summary executions in various parts of the world, and its apparent increase;

2. Equally strongly condemns and deplores the lack or non-observance in certain cases of the minimum legal guarantees and safeguards in respect of the use of capital punishment, which can lead to sham trials and arbitrary executions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its eighth session a report on the progress of the work done by the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

4. Decides that the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control should further study the question of death penalties that do not meet the acknowledged minimum legal guarantees and safeguards, as contained in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other international instruments, and welcomes the Committee's intention that the issue should be discussed at the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, under the appropriate item;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to obtain information, from Member States and other available sources, on the development of legal provisions, the actual practice relating to the death penalty and the arbitrary character of some executions, and to make his next report on capital punishment available to the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders for consideration.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/62) without vote, 10 May (meeting 8); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/CN.5/1983/2); agenda item 11. Meeting number. ESC 14.

On 27 May, the Council adopted resolution 1983/36 without vote.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which guarantees the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which states that every human being has the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/175 of 17 December 1979, in which the Assembly reaffirmed that mass and flagrant violations of human rights were of special concern to the United Nations and urged the Commission on Human Rights to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases of mass and flagrant violations of human rights,

Mindful of General Assembly resolutions 36/22 of 9 November 1981 and 37/182 of 17 December 1982, in which the Assembly condemned the practice of summary and arbitrary executions,

Bearing in mind resolution 5 of 5 September 1980 on extra-legal executions adopted by the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Taking note of resolutions 1982/10 and 1982/13 of 7 September 1983 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission recommended that effective measures should be adopted to prevent the occurrence of summary and arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions,

Deeply alarmed about the occurrence on a large scale of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions,

Convinced of the need to continue to deal urgently with the question of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions,

1. Strongly deplores, once again, the increasing number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, which continue to take place in various parts of the world;

2. Appeals urgently to Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental and humanitarian organizations to take effective action to combat and eliminate summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions;

3. Takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S. A. Wako, submitted in accordance with Council resolution 1982/35 of 7 May 1982;

4. Decides to continue the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S. A. Wako, for another year;

5. Requests the Special Rapporteur to review his report in the light of the information received, taking particularly into account any new information, including relevant internal legislation, provided by concerned Governments as well as views expressed in the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-ninth session and to submit a report to the Commission at its fortieth session;

6. Considers that the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, should continue to seek and receive information from Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council;

7. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that have extended invitations to the Special Rapporteur to visit their respective countries and urges the Special Rapporteur to respond positively to such invitations;

8. Urges all Governments and all others concerned to co-operate with and assist the Special Rapporteur;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

10. Decides that the Commission on Human Rights should consider the question of summary or arbitrary executions as a matter of high priority at its fortieth session under the item entitled "Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in any part of the world, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/96 without vote.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that every human being has the right to life, liberty and security of person and that everyone is entitled in full equality to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which states that every human being has the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling also its resolution 34/175 of 17 December 1979, in which it reaffirmed that mass and flagrant violations of human rights are of special concern to the United Nations and urged the Commission on Human Rights to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases of mass and flagrant violations of human rights,

1. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/35 of 7 May 1982, in which the Council decided to appoint for one year a special rapporteur to examine the questions related to summary or arbitrary executions, and to submit to the Commission on Human Rights, at its thirty-ninth session, a comprehensive report on the occurrence and extent of the practice of such executions, together with his conclusions and recommendations;

2. Takes note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/36 of 26 May 1983, in which the Council decided to continue the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S. A. 3. Appeals to all Governments to co-operate with and assist the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights in the preparation of his report;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur so that he may effectively carry out his mandate;

5. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appear not to be respected;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its fortieth session, on the basis of the report of the Special Rapporteur to be prepared in conformity with Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/35 and 1983/36, to make recommendations concerning appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the practice of summary or arbitrary executions.

Disappearance of persons

Activities of the Working Group. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980,⁽⁶⁵⁾ held three sessions in 1983: the tenth from 13 to 17 June in New York, and the eleventh and twelfth from 26 to 30 September and from 5 to 9 December, at Geneva.⁽⁶⁶⁾

The Working Group continued to review cases of disappearances submitted to it by relatives, by persons closely connected with the disappeared person, or by organizations acting on their behalf. Information was also submitted by individuals reporting having witnessed the arrest or abduction of missing persons, or stating that they had been detained with them, as well as by one person who claimed knowledge of disappearances from an official position previously held.

Selected for transmission to Governments were only those cases where factual material existed on which to base investigation. During the year, the Group transmitted reports on some 2,390 disappearances to 15 Governments, with requests for information. Some 555 of these had been received between sessions and were thus transmitted by the Chairman in accordance with established procedure. The reply received in a number of cases indicated that the person missing had been released or was being held in officially recognized detention. Such information was sent to the relatives concerned, with their attention drawn to the Commission's request for discretion in its use. Cases not transmitted either required further information from the reporting sources or fell outside the Group's mandate. The Group continued to press Governments for answers to outstanding cases transmitted earlier.

During its 1983 sessions, the Group met with representatives of Argentina, Bolivia, El Salvador, Nicaragua, the Philippines, Uruguay and Zaire, and with representatives of six organizations or associations directly concerned by reports of disappearances. In response to an invitation from the Latin American Federation of Associations for Relatives of Disappeared-Detainees, a Group member attended the Federation's Fourth Congress (Mexico City, 13-19 November), and reported on it at the December session.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. Taking note of the Working Group's report on its 1982 activities⁽⁶⁷⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, on 22 February 1983,⁽⁶⁸⁾ extended the Working Group's mandate for one year, retaining its membership for that period. It requested the Group to submit in 1984 a report on its work and to discharge its mandate with discretion, so as to protect persons providing information, or to limit dissemination of information from Governments. The Commission renewed its request to the Secretary-General to appeal for government co-operation and asked him to continue to provide the Group with necessary assistance. It reminded the Sub-Commission of its request to continue studying the most effective means for eliminating enforced or involuntary disappearances of persons, and asked for recommendations in 1984.

In a resolution of 7 March 1983 on persons detained by Israel, the Commission called on all parties to the conflict in Lebanon to secure for the International Committee of the Red Cross all available information concerning missing and disappeared persons in the wake of the June 1982 invasion of Lebanon. Disappearances of persons in Chile and Guatemala were also dealt with in two Commission resolutions of 8 March. (For details, see under HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS below). In another resolution, also of 8 March, on the human rights situation in Bolivia (see under ADVANCEMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS below), the Commission welcomed the creation of a national commission to investigate cases of disappearances.

On 22 February⁽⁶⁹⁾ by 41 votes to none, the Commission postponed until 1984 consideration of a draft resolution recommended by the Sub-Commission in September 1982⁽⁷⁰⁾ requesting the General Assembly to invite the International Law Commission to take into account, when elaborating the draft code of offences against the peace and security of mankind (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter II), the Sub-Commission's comments on the question of missing and disappeared persons.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/141 without vote.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/20 of 22 February 1983, approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the term of the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, as laid down in Commission resolution 20(XXXVI) of 29 February 1980, and requested the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary assistance, in particular the staff and resources it required to perform its functions in an effective and expeditious manner, and, if necessary, to make the appropriate arrangements to ensure the continuity of the Secretariat's work.

Sub-Commission action. On 5 September 1983⁽⁷¹⁾ the Sub-Commission requested its Working Group on Detention to prepare a first draft of a declaration against unacknowledged detention of persons, whatever their condition, for submission in 1984. The Secretary-General was asked to provide any available documentation for that purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/94 without vote on 16 December 1983.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978, entitled "Disappeared persons", and its resolution 37/180 of 17 December 1982 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/20 of 22 February 1983, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the term of the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, and Economic and Social Council decision 1983/141 of 27 May 1983, in which the Council approved the Commission's decision,

Convinced that the action taken, in consultation with the Governments concerned, to promote the implementation of the provisions of General Assembly resolution 33/173 and other United Nations resolutions concerning the plight of missing or disappeared persons should be continued,

Expressing its emotion at the anguish and sorrow of the families concerned, who should know the fate of their relatives,

1. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend for one year the term of the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, as laid down in Commission resolution 1983/20;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group for the work it has done and to those Governments that have co-operated with it;

3. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any step it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group when it considers the report to be submitted by the Group at its fortieth session;

4. Appeals to all Governments to provide the Working Group and the Commission on Human Rights with the full co-operation warranted by their strictly humanitarian objectives and their working methods based on discretion;

5. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary assistance.

Other aspects of civil and political rights

Slavery

The Working Group on Slavery held its ninth session at Geneva from 8 to 12 August 1983. It considered information on slavery and the slave trade, a Sub-Commission mission to Mauritania, female circumcision, debt bondage, traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, exploitation of child labour and the sale of children, and apartheid and colonialism.

In July 1983,⁽⁷²⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Sub-Commission on the steps taken to implement the 1981 Sub-Commission resolution seeking authorization to send a mission to Mauritania to study allegations of slavery-like practices there.⁽⁷³⁾ The Secretary-General reported that, in response to several communications in 1982 and January/February 1983, Mauritania had indicated that it was prepared to receive the Sub-Commission's delegation in July. However, because of the time needed for preparations, the two delegates appointed in 1982⁽⁷⁴⁾—Marc Bossuyt (Belgium) and Mohamed Yousif Mudawi (Sudan)—felt that the mission could take place after the 1983 Sub-Commission session. At their request, the Secretary-General, on 15 July, transmitted to Mauritania for comment a text with a list of questions dealing with matters on which information was needed.

Following examination of the Group's report on its August session⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Sub-Commission, on 31 August,⁽⁷⁶⁾ recommended to the Commission on Human Rights a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, authorizing the Sub-Commission to appoint Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco) and Mr. Mudawi to carry out a study on all aspects of the problem of female sexual mutilation, including extent and causes and suggestions on how it might be remedied, with a preliminary report to the Sub-Commission in 1984 and a final one in 1985.

Based on the Group's recommendations, the Sub-Commission on 5 September 1983⁽⁷⁷⁾ recommended to the Commission adoption of another draft resolution by which the Commission would: recognize apartheid as a slavery-like practice and endorse the call for mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa; appeal to States to become parties to the relevant Conventions or to explain in writing why they felt unable to do so; and request the Secretary-General to call on States parties to the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery⁽⁷⁸⁾ and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others⁽⁷⁹⁾ to submit regular reports on the situation in their countries, and to call on other States, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol) to supply relevant information to the Group.

The Commission would also request the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments for comment the statements submitted to the Group in 1981⁽⁸⁰⁾ by the Anti-Slavery Society for the Protection of Human Rights, the Minority Rights Group and the International Abolitionist Federation containing allegations on slavery-like practices, and to submit in 1984 a report on how work of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in certain countries could be adapted so as to contribute to the struggle against slavery; request the United Nations system to offer co-ordinated legal, technical, administrative, educational, financial and other practical assistance to help eliminate conditions conducive to slavery and slavery-like situations; invite ILO, FAO and UNESCO to include in their technical assistance programmes activities designed to eliminate slavery-type problems; invite the Sub-Commission to involve more closely in the Group's work the persons whose names appeared in the list of slavery experts; and ask the Secretary-General to submit to each Group session a résumé of information collected between sessions.

On 6 September, by 17 votes to 4, with 1 abstention⁽⁸¹⁾ the Sub-Commission deferred until 1984 consideration of a draft resolution recommending that the Council authorize appointment of a Special Rapporteur to carry out a study of gross exploitation of labour leading to slavery-like practices.

Complying with a 1981 Commission request, the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa examined two 1980 reports⁽⁸²⁾—one on apartheid as a collective form of slavery by the Secretary-General and another on child labour in South Africa by the Anti-Slavery Society for the Protection of Human Rights—with a view to proposing such measures as it deemed appropriate.

In a report on its findings⁽⁸³⁾ submitted to the 1983 Commission session, the Group summarized the main elements of the apartheid system, understood as a slavery-like system of labour control and exploitation, as it developed after 1948 and as it currently applied.

Those elements, as identified by the Secretary-General, included: strict controls through a system of identity documents enforced on Africans by penal sanctions introduced in 1952, to control their influx into areas designated for whites and deny them residence there; forcible removal of vast numbers of blacks not qualified to remain in white areas, because they were unemployed or considered redundant, to "reserves" and "group areas" where they faced starvation; progressive enforcement of a migratory labour system on the entire black population to limit their entry into white areas to certain periods and only to sectors requiring their services; enforcement of the colour bar in a way to permit adjustments when needed by the economy, without changing the conditions of exploitation of black workers; physical repression and abusive working conditions of black agricultural workers, including exploitation of child labour; and a discriminatory system of labour relations aimed at undermining autonomous African workers' organizations and facilitating government control over workers' movements.

Child labour was found to be widespread throughout South Africa but in a scale and manner that remained largely hidden. The majority of child labourers, generally offspring of farm workers, were in agriculture. Dating back to the days of slavery, child labour in agriculture was an integral feature of the apartheid system. In its recommendations, the Anti-Slavery Society stated that the Government of South Africa should be urged to appoint a commission to examine legislation to protect children and to stop the pernicious system of child labour.

The Group concluded that, owing to its exploitative character and country-wide application, the policy of apartheid might be described as a collective form of slavery.

The Group's recommendations called for the abolition of all transit and resettlement camps, and immediate discontinuance of the policy of transferring African workers involving prolonged separation from their families, as well as of removing populations and splitting up regions in Namibia. The Group reiterated that the Commission should propose revisions to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide⁽⁸⁴⁾ in particular to make inhuman acts resulting from the policies of apartheid punishable. Forcible removal of the African population from the Caprivi Strip (a stretch of land in north-east Namibia between Angola and Zambia to the north and Botswana to the south) being an element of genocide, a full investigation of it should be undertaken, as should another to determine whether elements of genocide currently existed in Namibia. The Group should be entrusted by the Commission with the task of looking into elements of genocide arising out of the policy of apartheid.

In addition, the Group supported the Sub-Commission's 1980 recommendation⁽⁸⁵⁾ calling on Governments, particularly South Africa's, to ratify the 1973 ILO Convention on Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, to implement the relevant Recommendation (No. 146) and to ensure enactment of legislation to protect the rights of working children.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 4 March 1983,⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Commission on Human Rights recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize the printing and widest possible distribution of the 1982 report on slavery⁽⁸⁷⁾

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/143 by vote.

Updating of the Report on Slavery

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/25 of 4 March 1983, decided that the report prepared by Mr. Benjamin Whitaker, Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, entitled "Updating of the Report on Slavery submitted to the Sub-Commission in 1966" should be printed and given the widest possible distribution, including distribution in Arabic.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/143

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/61) by vote (45-1), 23 May (meeting 18); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1983/13); agenda item 10. Meeting number. ESC 15.

Conscientious objectors

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 9 March 1983,⁽⁸⁸⁾ the Commission on Human Rights emphasized young people's role in their countries' political, economic and social development, and especially in the struggle against obstacles to such development—colonialism and neo-colonialism, racial discrimination, apartheid, foreign domination and occupation, aggression and threats to national sovereignty and territorial integrity, and denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms and of the rights to self-determination and to full sovereignty over their natural resources.

The Commission called on States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and United Nations bodies to devote attention to the exercise by young people of human rights, particularly the rights to education and vocational training and to work. It called on States to take legislative, administrative and other action providing for such exercise so as to create conditions for the active participation of young people in formulating and implementing their national economic and social development programmes. The Commission confirmed that it would examine in 1985 the question of youth's exercise of all their rights.

Report of Special Rapporteurs. As requested by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in September 1982⁽⁸⁹⁾ Special Rapporteurs Asbjorn Eide (Norway) and Chama L. C. Mubanga-Chipoya (Zambia) submitted to it in 1983 their final report on the question of conscientious objection to military service.⁽⁹⁰⁾ Based on material from governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental sources, the report analysed the concept of conscientious objection and international standards relating to it, and examined the actual situation with respect to conscientious objection under national laws and practices.

The Special Rapporteurs concluded that State practice varied widely as to the extent to which military service was voluntary or compulsory. Of 152 States and territories surveyed, 66 had no conscription (compulsory military service), 5 had conscription in law but did not enforce it, and 15 had enforced conscription but formally recognized conscientious objection on certain grounds. States in these three categories provided freedom in varying degrees for the individual to decide whether or not to join the armed forces. Grounds for considering an objection valid ranged from "religious" to "moral" to "political". Another 12 States enforcing conscription did not recognize the right of objectors to be exempted, but allowed them non-combatant roles in certain circumstances.

Where conscientious objection was recognized, provision was normally made for alternative service, which related to social development or to promotion of international peace in some countries. In others, it seemed to be considered more as a punishment, consisting of hard work without meaningful content.

The Special Rapporteurs requested the Sub-Commission to consider making several recommendations to the Commission on Human Rights, among them: recognition by law of the right to conscientious objection; setting up of independent decision-making bodies to determine the validity of the objection, with the right to appeal; provision of alternative service for the objector; imposition of penalties by a civilian court if the objector persisted in objection found to be invalid; international standards to ensure favourable attitude towards conscientious objectors requesting asylum; and provisions to prohibit recruitment of children and minors to military service.

Sub-Commission action. On 5 September 1983, the Sub-Commission, by 14 votes to none, with 5 abstentions⁽⁹¹⁾ transmitted the Special Rapporteurs' report to the Commission, with a request that it study the report's recommendations and in turn make appropriate recommendations to the Economic and Social Council, to include the printing and widest possible distribution of the report.

On 7 September⁽⁹²⁾ the Sub-Commission requested the Special Rapporteurs to present their report to the Commission in 1984.

Freedom of movement

On 31 August 1983, by a resolution adopted by 18 votes to 2⁽⁹³⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended adoption of a draft resolution by the Commission on Human Rights. That draft would have the Economic and Social Council endorse the Sub-Commission's appointment of Chama L. C. Mubanga-Chipoya (Zambia) to prepare an analysis of trends and developments in respect of the right of everyone to leave any country, including one's own, to return to one's country, and to have the possibility to enter other countries without discrimination or hindrance, especially with regard to the right to employment, taking account of the need to avoid brain drain from developing countries; and to study the extent of restrictions permissible under article 12, paragraph 3, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁽¹⁾

Independence of the judicial system

On 18 August 1983,⁽⁹⁴⁾ the Sub-Commission deferred until 1984 consideration of the question of the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors, and the independence of lawyers, when Special Rapporteur L.M. Singhvi (India) would submit his final report on the topic.

On 6 September⁽⁹⁵⁾ following consideration of the Special Rapporteur's June progress report⁽⁹⁶⁾ the Sub-Commission broadly approved the tentative synopsis of the study annexed to the report.

It asked the Secretary-General to so inform the Special Rapporteur and to convey the Sub-Commission's gratitude for his thorough work.

In a resolution of the same date, on technical assistance to States for strengthening their legal institutions (see under ADVANCEMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS below), the Sub-Commission requested the Special Rapporteur to consider in his study the most appropriate means by which the international community could contribute to strengthening legal institutions, especially in developing countries, with a view to promoting full respect for human rights.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1983, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966⁽¹⁾ and in force since 1976,⁽²⁾ had been ratified or acceded to by 80 States. Afghanistan, Belgium, the Congo, Gabon and Luxembourg became parties to it during 1983.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of ratifications or accessions to the Covenant—as at 1 March, in a note to the Economic and Social Council:⁽³⁾ and as at 1 September, in a report to the General Assembly.⁽⁴⁾

Implementation of the Covenant

The Commission on Human Rights, in a February 1983 resolution on the status of the International Covenants on Human Rights (see below, under ADVANCEMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS), took note of the May 1982 Economic and Social Council resolution on the review of the composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.⁽⁵⁾ The Commission requested the Secretary-General to include, in his 1984 report on the status of the Covenants, information on the work of the Council and its Group of Experts.

In 1983, the Group met in New York from 18 April to 5 May.⁽⁶⁾ Established by the Council in 1978⁽⁷⁾ and restructured in May 1982,⁽⁸⁾ the Group was composed of members elected by the Council in 1982 and 1983 from among the States parties to the Covenant (see APPENDIX III).

Based on the Group's recommendations and suggestions, the Council adopted resolution 1983/41 on the Covenant, its implementation and the reports required from States parties (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/124 of 16 December 1983, on alternative approaches within the United Nations system for improving the enjoyment of human rights, the Assembly affirmed that all human rights were indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category should not exempt States from promoting or protecting others. It also affirmed its conviction that equal attention and urgent consideration be given to implementing, protecting and promoting both civil and political and economic, social and cultural rights.

Reports under the Covenant

In 1983, the Group of Experts considered reports from 13 States parties on their implementation of specific provisions of the Covenant. On each report, the Group heard statements by, and put questions to, the respective State representative. Under a programme established by the Council in 1976,⁽⁸⁾ reports required under the Covenant were to be submitted in three biennial cycles or stages, each stage covering a related group of articles.

The Group considered a report from the Syrian Arab Republic covering articles 6 to 9 of the Covenant (concerning the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, the rights of trade unionists and the right to social security), and a report from Yugoslavia on rights covered by articles 10 to 12 (protection of the family, mothers and children, an adequate living standard, and physical and mental health). It also dealt with reports from: Barbados, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Poland, Senegal, Spain on rights covered by articles 13 to 15 (education, including compulsory education, and participation in cultural life).

Following consideration of the reports, the Group agreed to bring certain issues to the attention of the Council; based on the Group's suggestions and recommendations, the Council adopted resolution 1983/41 (see below).

In a March note on the status of ratifications and accessions to the Covenant⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General listed the reports received from States on rights covered by the three groups of articles. In April, he submitted to the Council the sixth report of ILO on the situation in certain countries with regard to articles 6 to 9⁽⁹⁾

On 27 May 1983, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/41 without vote.

Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its important responsibilities under articles 16 and 17 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In a September 1983 report to the General Assembly on the reporting obligations of States parties under human rights instruments⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General noted that 94 reports under the Covenant were overdue at the end of 1982. He suggested that parties requiring assistance in reporting, as well as in implementing the Covenant, might wish to request the expertise of the relevant specialized agencies through the Economic and Social Council, which was authorized under articles 22 and 23 of the Covenant to initiate the granting of such assistance.

Taking note of the Secretary-General's report, the Assembly, in resolution 38/117 on the reporting obligations of the States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights (see below, under ADVANCEMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS), requested him to transmit that report to the Council, and asked the Council and its Group of Experts to consider his suggestions with a view to improving the situation.

The right to development and the new international economic order

In 1983, the Commission on Human Rights reconvened the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development to elaborate a draft declaration on the topic. The Economic and Social Council, on 27 May, endorsed the Commission's decision to reconvene the Group as well as its request that the Group hold two meetings during the year. On 16 December, the General Assembly reaffirmed the right to development as an inalienable human right.

By a resolution adopted on 22 February by a roll-call vote of 40 to none, with 3 abstentions⁽¹¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights expressed concern at the current situation affecting the establishment of a new international economic order (NIEO) and the achievement of human rights, in particular the right to development. It reaffirmed that all nations had the inalienable right to pursue freely their economic and social development and to exercise full and complete sovereignty over all their natural resources; and that foreign occupation, colonialism, apartheid, racism and racial discrimination and the denial of the right to self-determination of peoples (see above, under CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS) and of universally recognized human rights were serious impediments to economic and social progress.

Noting with satisfaction the recommendations of the Working Group (in its report on sessions held in June/July and November/December 1982),⁽¹³⁾ the Commission decided to reconvene the Group with the same mandate to allow it to elaborate a draft declaration on the right to development. It requested the Group to hold two meetings of two weeks each at Geneva, in June and November/December 1983, and to submit proposals for the Commission's consideration in 1984.

By a resolution of the same date, adopted by 42 votes to 1,⁽¹³⁾ the Commission took note of the report on the International Seminar on Popular Participation, held in Yugoslavia in May 1982.⁽¹⁴⁾ At the same time, the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council adoption of a draft resolution requesting the Secretary-General to undertake a comprehensive analytical study on the right to popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in the full realization of all human rights, and to submit a preliminary study to the Commission in 1984 and a final study in 1985 (see also Chapter XIII of this section). Subsequently, by resolution 1983/31 of 27 May 1983, the Council adopted that recommendation. The Assembly, in resolution 38/24 of 22 November, requested the Secretary-General to report on progress in the field and requested the Commission to continue considering the question.

In a resolution of 9 March on human rights and scientific and technological developments, the Commission called for efforts by all States to use scientific and technological achievements for peaceful economic, social and cultural development and to improve the well-being of peoples, and requested the Sub-Commission to study the use of those achievements to ensure the right to work and development (see below, under OTHER HUMAN RIGHTS QUESTIONS).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted decision 1983/139.

Question of the realization in all countries of the economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and study of special problems which the developing countries face in their efforts to achieve these human rights

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/15 of 22 February 1983, endorsed the Commission's decision to reconvene the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development with its original mandate in order to allow it to elaborate, on the basis of its report and all the documents already submitted or to be submitted, a draft declaration on the right to development. The Council also endorsed the Commission's request to the Working Group to hold two meetings of two weeks each at Geneva, the first in June 1983 and the second in November/December 1983, and requested the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Working Group.

Working Group activities. In 1983, the Working Group of Governmental Experts, on the Right to Development held two sessions at Geneva: its sixth from 13 to 24 June and its seventh from 31 October to 11 November.⁽¹⁵⁾ At the sixth session, several drafts and proposals were circulated, on the basis of which the Group requested two experts to prepare a "technical consolidated text", to serve as an informal basis for further work. Following discussions at its seventh session, the Group reached a general understanding on several preambular provisions of the draft declaration.

Reports to the Sub-Commission. In August 1983, Special Rapporteur Raul Ferrero (Peru) submitted to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities a final report on the NIEO and the promotion of human rights⁽¹⁶⁾ authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1980.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Special Rapporteur reviewed the background to the current international economic order and its major characteristics; discussed the non-aligned movement and NIEO; the high indebtedness of developing countries; and the link between human rights, economic issues and the national and international orders. He analysed the guiding principles for eliminating disparities in the current economic system; international legislative bases for the establishment of NIEO; NIEO and the right to development; NIEO from the standpoint of human rights based on United Nations instruments; integration of human rights into development strategies; and the North-South dialogue.

The Special Rapporteur considered that the current economic order impeded realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The existing system magnified the gap between developing and developed countries, and, burdened by indebtedness, developing countries were making considerable cuts in their development programmes, and unemployment and underemployment were increasing uncontrollably. All this gave rise to a bad social atmosphere affecting the poorest classes and helped generate a dangerous climate of political insecurity.

The Special Rapporteur noted that after the "first generation" of human rights, which included civil and political rights, came economic, social and cultural rights; only in recent times had the right to solidarity—which included the rights to development, quality of the environment, peace and the common heritage of mankind—been recognized. This "third generation" of rights, he stated, had scarcely taken shape and to implement them would take a major effort. NIEO must take into consideration two sets of principles: the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States, the sovereign equality of every State, the principles of non-aggression, non-intervention and peaceful coexistence, equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and the peaceful settlement of disputes; and the right of developing countries and of the peoples of territories under colonial and racial domination or foreign occupation to achieve their liberation and regain control over their natural resources and economic activities.

The Special Rapporteur held economic aggression—including the use of threats, commercial sanctions or any other form of blockade, measures of coercion or blackmail, and political pressure aimed at influencing sovereign decisions—by some developed States against developing countries unacceptable. In his view, the concept of "development" should not be interpreted solely in terms of economic and material well-being but in much broader terms covering the physical, moral, intellectual and cultural growth of human beings. If NIEO was to produce a substantial improvement in the extent to which impoverished and oppressed peoples enjoyed human rights, it was important for such a goal to be fully incorporated in national and international development strategies. Disarmament was crucial to the realization of the right to development and to the achievement of NIKO.

In his recommendations, the Special Rapporteur stressed the role that could be played by international organizations in correcting the unjust international relations, and called for a new multilateralism founded on co-ordinated policies in which all countries participated. It was imperative that the global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development be approached with a renewed sense of commitment; the deferral of such efforts could have only an adverse impact on the full realization of human rights, particularly in developing countries.

Noting the importance of regional endeavours to promote economic co-operation, in particular among developing countries, the Special Rapporteur suggested the appointment, possibly within the United Nations regional commissions, of regional advisers on human rights as a means of ensuring that human rights concerns were reflected in regional economic decision-making. Concluding, he emphasized that the basic challenge—to ensure that the establishment of NIEO and the promotion of human rights went hand in hand—could not be resolved simply by focusing on one particular issue such as development assistance, commodity prices or the role of transnational corporations, but required honouring the dignity of the individual and of human solidarity as the guiding principles.

Also in August, the Secretary-General submitted to the Sub-Commission at its September 1982 request⁽¹⁸⁾ a report on technical assistance available to States in strengthening their legal institutions, including educational facilities⁽¹⁹⁾ in order to enhance respect for the rule of law in the development process. Summarizing information from three Governments—Bolivia, Equatorial Guinea and Uganda—which had requested advisory services, as well as from nine United Nations bodies and agencies, the report dealt with the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights (see below, under ADVANCEMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS) and similar activities, including seminars, fellowships and training.

Sub-Commission action. On 6 September 1983⁽²⁰⁾ the Sub-Commission decided to transmit the Special Rapporteur's study to the Commission on Human Rights in 1984, and recommended that the Commission recommend to the Economic and Social Council that it arrange for publication and widest distribution of the study in all official United Nations languages. The Sub-Commission considered it advisable to study in the near future the impact on human rights of the policies and practices of the major international financial institutions, such as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, and decided to consider in 1984 the appointment of a Special Rapporteur to undertake such a study.

On 7 September⁽²¹⁾ the Sub-Commission requested the Special Rapporteur to present his report to the Commission in 1984.

Also under the agenda item on NIEO and the promotion of human rights, the Sub-Commission, on 6 September⁽²²⁾ requested the Secretary-General to prepare and submit in 1984 a report on Governments' expressed need for technical assistance in strengthening their legal institutions with a view to promoting respect for human rights. In that connection, the Sub-Commission called on the Secretary-General to request Governments providing bilateral development assistance to give information on the extent to which such assistance was or could be used in strengthening legal institutions in recipient countries, and to include in his report information on the results achieved in response to requests by the Commission that technical assistance be made available to certain States to assist them in ensuring full respect for human rights. Special Rapporteur L. M. Singhvi (India) was requested to give consideration, in his study on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers, to the most appropriate means by which the international community could contribute to strengthening legal institutions, especially in developing countries, with a view to promoting full respect for human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/124 of 16 December 1983, on alternative approaches and ways within the United Nations system for improving the enjoyment of human rights, the General Assembly, by a separately adopted paragraph, reaffirmed that the right to development was an inalienable human right. It requested the Commission on Human Rights to promote the right to development, taking into account the results achieved by the Working Group, and welcomed the Commission's decision that the Working Group should continue its work with the aim of submitting as soon as possible a draft declaration on the topic.

In resolution 38/112 of the same date, on human rights and scientific and technological developments, the Assembly called on all States to use the achievements of science and technology for promoting peaceful social, economic and cultural development and progress.

In resolution 38/24 of 22 November, the Assembly requested the Commission to continue to consider the question of popular participation as an important factor in the full realization of all human rights.

Right to education and employment

In 1983, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council dealt with the right to education and employment, particularly in the context of the rights of youth. The right to education was also dealt with by the Secretary-General in two reports, one to the Commission on Human Rights, on implementation of the programme of measures and activities in connection with International Youth Year (1985) (see below, under

OTHER HUMAN RIGHTS QUESTIONS), the other to the Sub-Commission, concerning technical assistance to States in strengthening their legal institutions, including educational facilities (see above).

In his February report to the Commission⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, in establishing national priorities relating to youth, many States had identified unemployment, education and training, among other things, as important problems, and that several countries had enacted national legislation to bring about the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work. Among United Nations bodies and agencies, ILO provided advisory services, collected and disseminated information on national measures, and organized regional or subregional meetings on priority areas of employment policies concerning youth; it had also intensified vocational training for youth, and encouraged increased youth participation in the decision-making process through trade unions. The implementation of several international labour conventions on special youth schemes was to be a major ILO activity for International Youth Year (1985).

The integration of rural youth in the development process was of great concern to FAO, which had sponsored a large number of rural youth programmes in Latin America, Africa and the Near East.

In his report to the Sub-Commission⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General described technical assistance and co-operation activities provided by UNESCO in the field of education, as well as those of ILO in strengthening workers' organizations and assisting rural workers' organizations in identifying their educational and other problems.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1983/17 of 26 May, the Economic and Social Council noted with concern that the growth of unemployment made it increasingly difficult to implement the basic social and economic rights of youth, especially the rights to life, employment and education. The Council strongly urged for measures to ensure implementation of those rights and for provision in national development plans and budgets of specific programmes and resources for that purpose. The Council requested the Secretary-General to take into account the views expressed in the Commission for Social Development (see Chapter XIII of this section) concerning ways and means of realizing the rights of youth when preparing documentation for the 1984 session of the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year (see Chapter XX of this section). It resolved to consider at the 1985 session of the Commission for Social Development the progress achieved in connection with youth's participation in national development and in realizing and exercising their rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/23 of 22 November, on measures for securing implementation and enjoyment by youth of human rights, the General Assembly called on all concerned to pay continuous attention to the implementation of measures aimed at promoting human rights and their enjoyment by youth, particularly the right to education, vocational training and work, with a view to resolving the problem of youth unemployment. The Assembly requested the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year to give full attention to all relevant human rights instruments in preparing for and during the Year, and invited national co-ordinating committees or other similar organs for the Year to give priority to the implementation and enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and work.

Right to food

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

Expressing deep concern about the precarious nature of the food situation, particularly in the least developed countries, and about its implications for enjoyment of the fundamental right to food, the Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution adopted on 22 February 1983 by 36 votes to none, with 5 abstentions⁽²⁴⁾ recommended to the Economic and Social Council that it authorize the Sub-Commission to entrust Asbjorn Eide (Norway) with preparation of a study on the right to adequate food as a human right.

The Commission acted on a recommendation made by the Sub-Commission in September 1982.⁽²⁵⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/140 by vote.

The new international economic order and the promotion of human rights

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/16 of 22 February 1983, authorized the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to entrust Mr. Eide, Special Rapporteur, with the preparation of a study on the right to adequate food as a human right. The Special Rapporteur, in elaborating his study, should take into account all relevant work being done within the United Nations system and should consult with organs and agencies such as the World Food Council, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and relevant non-governmental organizations in the field. In his study the Special Rapporteur should give special attention to the normative content of the right to food and its significance in relation to the establishment of the new international economic order. The Council requested the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance he might require in his work, and requested the Special Rapporteur to submit his preliminary report to the Sub-Commission at its thirty-sixth session and his final report to the Sub-Commission at its thirty-seventh session.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/140

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/61) by vote (45-1), 23 May (meeting 18); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1983/13); agenda item 10. Meeting number. ESC 15.

In related action, the Council, in resolution 1983/71 of 29 July on food problems, reaffirmed that the right to food was a universal human right and that food should not be used as an instrument of political pressure.

Sub-Commission action. Acknowledging receipt of the Special Rapporteur's preliminary report⁽²⁶⁾ providing an outline for the study on the right to food, the Sub-Commission, on 6 September⁽²⁷⁾ expressed satisfaction for the approach chosen. It requested the Special Rapporteur to proceed in accordance with the outline and the comments by Sub-Commission members.

The Special Rapporteur believed that the examination of the right to adequate food provided an opportunity to address a number of fundamental questions relating to economic, social and cultural rights; other issues to be dealt with in the study covered the right to food as a human right, the normative content of that right, the relationship between this and other food-related studies, and NEIO and the right to food.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/158 of 19 December on food problems, the General Assembly reiterated the statement made by the Council in resolution 1983/71 (see above).

Advancement of human rights

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

On 10 March 1983,⁽¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights requested Governments to facilitate publicity regarding United Nations activities in the field of human rights. It welcomed the establishment of a programme for the dissemination of international human rights instruments and requested the Secretary-General to continue to report each year on the programme's implementation. It recommended again that the United Nations Secretariat develop a compilation of translations of international human rights instruments, particularly the International Covenants on Human Rights (see below), and invited those Governments which had such translations to forward copies to the Centre for Human Rights.

The Commission reiterated its request to the Secretary-General to establish small reference libraries of material in the human rights field in United Nations offices, particularly in developing countries. It requested him, among other things, to enhance and develop further the Centre's promotional and public information activities, and to keep the Commission informed of relevant activities, including the activities of the United Nations information centres in disseminating information on human rights.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly, in pursuance of its December 1982 request⁽²⁾ a study on international conditions and human rights⁽³⁾ based on information from 19 Governments and 11 NGOs. Their replies raised a broad range of issues, the Secretary-General noted, including the importance of international co-operation in promoting full respect for human rights and of protecting the right to life as the most fundamental human right; the threat posed by the arms race and the buildup of nuclear weapons; the importance of establishing a just and equitable international economic order; the inadmissibility of intervention in the internal affairs of States; the need to accord priority to combating gross and flagrant human rights violations, including apartheid; and the need for more effective international machinery to respond to such violations.

In submitting his report, the Secretary-General drew attention to the continued validity of the findings and views expressed in his first report on the topic, submitted in 1981.⁽⁴⁾ Among those findings were: the need, at all levels, to integrate the human rights dimension into political, economic, social and cultural policies and programmes; and the inadequate realization of the conditions necessary to bring about the freedom from fear mentioned in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, or freedom from want, with a large part of the world's peoples lacking basic necessities and suffering conditions far removed from any acceptable level of human decency. Human rights violations were prevalent, and particularly acute in southern Africa where the peoples of South Africa and Namibia were denied their rights to self-determination, equality before the law and equal protection of the law. Further, various patterns of domination and subversion impeded the enjoyment of human rights, and international standards in the human rights field were often flagrantly disregarded in practice.

In connection with his 1981 report, the Secretary-General noted that United Nations approaches for dealing with phenomena—such as torture, disappearances of persons, mass exoduses, and Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and other forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices—included the good offices of the Secretary-General, diplomatic and conciliatory approaches, fact-finding, complaints procedures, public consideration in United Nations organs and assistance measures. There was much room for improvement, however, in the way the United Nations responded to urgent situations of mass and flagrant human rights violations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/124 by recorded vote.

Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling also the purposes and principles of the Charter to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming the continued significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to the future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution, fective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in accordance with the provisions and concepts of General Assembly resolution 32/130 and other relevant texts;

2. Affirms that a primary aim of international co-operation in the field of human rights is a life of freedom and dignity for all peoples and for each human being, that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the others;

12. Expresses concern also at the disparity existing between the established principles and the actual situation of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in various parts of the world;

13. Urges all States to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights in the protection and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

14. Reaffirms also that, in order to facilitate the full enjoyment of all rights and complete personal dignity, it is necessary to promote the rights to education, work, health and proper nourishment through the adoption of measures at the national level, including those that provide for workers' participation in management, as well as the adoption of measures at the international level, including the establishment of the new international economic order;

15. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to take the necessary measures to promote the right to development, taking into account the results achieved by the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, which is engaged in the study of the scope and content of the right to development, and welcomes the decision of the Commission in its resolution 1982/17 of 9 March 1982, reaffirmed in its resolution 1983/15 of 22 February 1983, to the effect that the Working Group should continue its work with the aim of submitting as soon as possible a draft declaration on the right to development;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Abstaining: Canada, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Luxembourg, Norway, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

As a result of consultations on proposals from Bulgaria, China, Finland, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands and the USSR, a number of revisions were made to the draft that was to become resolution 38/124. The ninth preambular paragraph was added, as was paragraph 12, which was based on part of an amendment proposed by Italy, by which the Assembly would have expressed concern at the disparity between the established principles and the actual situation of human rights in various parts of the world, in particular with regard to the right to life, liberty and security of person.⁽⁵⁾

Paragraph 9 was adopted by a recorded vote, requested by Bulgaria, of 110 to 1, with 22 abstentions.

Voting against the paragraph as well as the text as a whole, the United States, while welcoming the spirit of paragraphs 2, 3, 6, 10 and 12, could not accept the implicit prejudgement of the Working Group's findings, particularly since some States members of the Group responsible for its slow progress were among those supporting the draft. The United States also had misgivings about the implied affirmation in paragraph 9 of the inalienable nature of the right to development and about the notion in the seventh preambular paragraph regarding the establishment of NIEO; the December 1982 Assembly resolution on further promotion and protection of human rights⁽²⁾ should guide the Committee in its future deliberations.

Japan, abstaining, observed that, while paragraph 9 reaffirmed that the right to development was an inalienable human right, paragraph 14 stated that the Working Group of Governmental Experts was still studying the matter; the Assembly should not pronounce itself definitely on the issue until the Working Group had reached clear conclusions on all questions relating to that right.

Canada said great care must be taken in matters involving the relationship between human rights and development; it felt that the draft gave scant regard to the International Covenants on Human Rights, implied acceptance of a new definition and seemingly asserted certain rights of States which were not human rights, and contained a number of political elements which should be dealt with elsewhere.

Turkey felt that there was no balance in the text between civil and political rights and economic and social rights on the one hand, and between individual and collective rights on the other.

The United Kingdom considered that the draft did not balance the provisions of the December 1982 resolutions—37/199⁽⁶⁾ and 37/200⁽²⁾—to be acceptable as a single text; nevertheless, it could be seen as a step towards a better future text. Though welcoming the inclusion of elements of one of those resolutions, the Federal Republic of Germany shared the misgivings about the implications of the seventh preambular paragraph and paragraph 9. New Zealand also voiced misgivings about paragraph 9.

Ireland said the text contained no unqualified statement that human rights violations were of concern to the United Nations—an omission all the more significant because paragraph 13 urging Member States to co-operate with the Commission had failed to refer to the latter's study of such violations. It regretted that the sponsors had retained "consistent patterns of in paragraph 6, despite its request.

The Netherlands said its affirmative vote did not imply acceptance of the entire text. The preambular part and paragraph 9 (on which it abstained) referred to the right to development in a way which prejudged the Working Group's findings; also, the assertion in the seventh preambular paragraph concerning the establishment of NIEO was premature, since the nature and scope of that order had not been defined. With regard to paragraph 13, protection of human rights was a matter for active United Nations involvement.

Portugal, while supporting the draft's stress on the importance of international dialogue for improved enjoyment of human rights, abstained on paragraph 9 which it feared would lead the Assembly to prejudge the outcome of the study; its future vote on similar resolutions would depend on their approach and their capability to reinforce a concept of human rights as one essentially concerning the relationship between State power and the individual.

Among those voting for the draft, the USSR stated that despite its shortcomings and ambiguities, for example in paragraph 6, it none the less hoped that such shortcomings would be overcome in the interest of international co-operation in encouraging respect for human rights. The German Democratic Republic, though not fully satisfied with the text, particularly paragraphs 5 and 6 which, it said, should not be interpreted as authorizing interference in the internal affairs of any State, said it voted in favour in a spirit of compromise and in recognition of the efforts made by the sponsors to take into account a series of ideas and proposals submitted in connection with the draft.

Spain observed that neither the concept of the right to development nor the exerciser of that right was sufficiently clear in the text.

Australia said it failed to see why the text could not reflect the possibility of innovations to United Nations structures aimed at enhancing the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms; nevertheless, the spirit of co-operation gave reason to hope that an improved text could be achieved in future. That hope was shared by France which felt that the text reflected efforts at compromise; however, it would have liked the text to reflect better the belief that no category of human rights, particularly civil and political rights, could be subordinated to others.

General Assembly a report on national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights⁽⁷⁾ in accordance with a 1981 Assembly request.⁽⁸⁾ Following up on a 1981 report on the same topic⁽⁹⁾ the 1983 report was based primarily on information received from 34 countries as at 15 August, in reply to the Secretary-General's 1982 requests. The Secretary-General also took into account information from, among other sources, the United Nations specialized agencies, government reports under various international instruments of concern, and reports and background papers of United Nations seminars.

As in his 1981 study, the Secretary-General understood the concept of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights to cover more than the authorities, agencies and procedures established by law; the report encompassed a wide range of organizations, including the media, the churches, professional and workers' unions, women's rights movements and many other voluntary organizations.

Among the national institutions for the protection of human rights, the Secretary-General reviewed judicial institutions and non-judicial organs supervising the observance of the law (such as the "Ombudsman"); human rights commissions and similar public bodies expressly entrusted with such responsibilities; legal counselling and assistance; human rights protection by legislative organs; and the role of NGOs, including trade unions. The Secretary-General also analysed the promotional role of human rights commissions and similar public bodies, and the promotion of those rights through participation in government and the legislative process.

From the data assembled, the Secretary-General considered it possible to observe a trend towards entrenching human rights guarantees in Constitutions and strengthening judicial control in that regard. Also noticeable were the geographical spread of institutions such as the Ombudsman, the creation of human rights commissions and similar bodies, as well as the strengthening of some promotional institutions in the fields of education, employment and labour matters. Those developments, the Secretary-General stated, appeared to reflect a growing awareness of the need for a flexible interplay of diverse approaches—judicial, investigative, conciliatory, legislative, educational—and a wider participation of individuals and groups in normative and implementation processes relating to their human rights.

International human rights instruments

Working Group activities. On 16 August 1983, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, acting in pursuance of a 1979 resolution⁽¹⁰⁾ established a five-member sessional Working Group on the encouragement of universal acceptance of human rights instruments—such as the 1966 International Covenants on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and on Civil and Political Rights and the latter's Optional Protocol⁽¹¹⁾ the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁽¹²⁾ the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide⁽¹³⁾ the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid⁽¹⁴⁾ the 1926 Slavery Convention and the 1953 Protocol amending it⁽¹⁵⁾ the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery⁽¹⁶⁾ and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others.⁽¹⁷⁾

Meeting on 26 and 31 August, the Working Group considered a report of the Secretary-General⁽¹⁸⁾ containing a summary of information from Governments regarding the circumstances that had so far not enabled them to become parties to the various human rights instruments. In addition, the Working Group continued its country-by-country examination, reviewing information from 17 States and the additional information supplied by four States, and also heard statements from observers for three NGOs.

Sub-Commission action. The Sub-Commission, acting on the Working Group's report and recommendations⁽¹⁹⁾ by a resolution of 6 September⁽²⁰⁾ expressed appreciation to Governments which had conveyed information and requested the Secretary-General, among other things, to invite Governments to submit information on the circumstances that had so far not enabled them to become parties to various human rights instruments. The Sub-Commission decided to include the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women⁽²¹⁾ in the list of human rights instruments whose universal acceptance was to be encouraged. It endorsed the Working Group's decision to prepare for the Group's 1984 session a discussion paper analysing types of difficulties preventing States from becoming parties to those instruments and submitting possible suggestions for overcoming them.

In a report to the Assembly⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General summarized information from 31 States concerning their annual observance of Human Rights Day, in 1982, in commemoration of the proclamation of the Declaration and in accordance with a 1950 Assembly resolution.⁽²⁶⁾

International Covenants on Human Rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In January 1983, the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on Human Rights on the status of the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights⁽¹⁾ and gave a synopsis of United Nations action taken in that context⁽²⁷⁾ Annexed to the report were current lists of States which had signed, ratified or acceded to the Covenants, as well as to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

By a resolution of 22 February⁽²⁸⁾ the Commission reaffirmed the importance of the Covenants as major parts of international efforts to promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, urged States to become parties and emphasized the importance of strictest compliance. It also emphasized the importance of States parties sending experts to present their reports under the Covenants, as well as nominating experts to serve on the implementation committees set up under them. It encouraged Governments to publish the Covenants' texts in as many languages as possible and to distribute and publicize them widely. It requested the Secretary-General to invite the United Nations information centres to increase their activities to make the Covenants better known and to report to the Commission on action taken in that regard. It further requested him to submit in 1984 a report on the status of the Covenants.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1983, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions—38/116 and 38/117—on the International Covenants on Human Rights. On 16 December, it adopted resolution 38/116 without vote.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/51 of 14 December 1978, 34/45 of 23 November 1979, 35/132 of 11 December 1980, 36/58 of 25 November 1981 and 37/191 of 18 December 1982,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Noting with appreciation that, following its appeal, more Member States have acceded to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee in the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto,

Taking into account the useful work of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, Bearing in mind the important responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council in relation to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1983/184 of 29 July 1983, in which the Council invited the General Assembly to consider at its thirty-eighth session the possibility of scheduling the meetings of the Human Rights Committee so that the Committee's report could be submitted to the Assembly through the Council at its first regular session,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Human Rights Committee on its seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth sessions, and expresses its satisfaction at the serious and constructive manner in which the Committee is continuing to perform its functions;

2. 4. Commends those States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights that have submitted their reports under article 16 of the Covenant and urges States that have not yet done so to submit their reports as soon as possible and, in those instances in which it is not possible to do so, to inform the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights as to when those reports will be submitted;

5. Notes with appreciation that the majority of States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and an increasing number of States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, have been represented by experts for the presentation of their reports, thereby assisting the Human Rights Committee and the Economic and Social Council in their work, and hopes that all States parties to both Covenants will arrange such representation in future;

6. Again invites all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

Reporting obligations of the States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/44 of 3 December 1982,

Mindful of the obligation of all States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights to comply fully with their provisions, including articles 16 and 17 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which require the submission of periodic reports in accordance with the programme established by the Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, in which he indicates that a large number of delays occur in the submission of reports on the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Noting that the report of the Secretary-General emphasizes the interrelationship of problems affecting the reporting system under various human rights instruments,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reiterates the importance it attaches to the reporting systems established by the International Covenants on Human Rights;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit his report to the Economic and Social Council, which is entrusted with the consideration of the reports of States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights under article 16 thereof;

Commission on Human Rights

Organization of work for the 1983 session

In 1983, the Commission on Human Rights held its thirty-ninth session at Geneva from 31 January to 11 March⁽²⁹⁾ On 1 February⁽³⁰⁾ the Commission decided to set up informal open-ended working groups to consider the following agenda items: torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment of punishment (see above, under CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS); further promotion and encouragement of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the programme and methods of work of the Commission (see below); convention on the rights of the child (see below, under OTHER HUMAN RIGHTS QUESTIONS); and the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities (see above, under DISCRIMINATION). The Commission also decided to establish a 10-member working group to consider the possibility of rationalizing the agenda of its 1984 session (see below).

By a decision of 2 February, adopted by 23 votes to 7, with 4 abstentions⁽³¹⁾ the Commission requested that the Economic and Social Council authorize 15 additional serviced meetings for the Commission at its 1983 session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On an oral proposal by its President, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/102 by vote.

Meeting services for the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-ninth session

At its 2nd plenary meeting, on 4 February 1983, the Council, taking into account the request made by the Commission on Human Rights at the 3rd meeting of its thirty-ninth session, decided to authorize the Commission to hold fifteen extra serviced meetings, without summary records, at its thirty-ninth session.

Programme and work methods

An informal open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights, similar to the one established in 1982⁽³²⁾ held six meetings between 2 February and 3 March 1983 on the question of the programme and work methods of the Commission. Annexed to the group's report⁽³³⁾ were several working papers and an informal listing of relevant issues, including structural and organizational issues.

In a 10 March resolution⁽³⁴⁾ based on a draft submitted by the group, the Commission noted that, along with a number of ideas which merited consideration, differing views had been expressed in the group on the inter-sessional role of the Bureau, the creation of a post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (see below), the possible review of the Commission's terms of reference, the Commission's long-term programme of work and the usefulness of the working group. It decided to renew its recommendation to the Economic and Social Council to consider the possibility of rescheduling the Commission's annual session to later in the year, providing for a longer interval following the annual Assembly session.

An informal 10-member Working Group, established under the 1 February 1983 Commission decision (see above), held five meetings between 7 February and 3 March to consider the possibility of rationalizing the agenda for the Commission's 1984 session.

On 10 March, the Commission,⁽³⁵⁾ having noted with appreciation the Working Group's report⁽³⁶⁾ decided to delete from its agenda the item "Communications concerning human rights"; to consider biennially the items "Human rights and scientific and technological developments" (beginning in 1984) and "The role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights, including the question of conscientious objection to military service" (beginning in 1985); and to consider in 1984 the need to re-establish the Working Group. On 11 March⁽³⁷⁾ the Commission took note of the draft provisional agenda for its 1984 session.

By a decision of 10 March, adopted by 29 votes to none, with 9 abstentions⁽³⁸⁾ the Commission made several recommendations on the organization of its 1984 session, which were endorsed subsequently by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/152 by vote.

Organization of the work of the fortieth session of the Commission on Human Rights

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights decision 1983/109 of 10 March 1983, decided to authorize 20 fully-serviced additional meetings, including summary records, for the Commission's fortieth session and endorsed the Commission's request to the Chairman of the Commission at its fortieth session to make every effort to organize the work of the session within the normal allotted time, the additional meetings authorized to be utilized only if such meetings prove to be absolutely necessary.

As agreed in 1982⁽³⁹⁾ and following the renewed recommendation by the Commission (see above), the Council considered in 1983 the question of rescheduling the annual Commission session. In decision 1983/184 of 29 July, the Council decided to continue for the time being the existing pattern of scheduling the sessions (see Chapter XXIV of this section).

Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities had held its thirty-fifth session at Geneva from 16 August to 10 September 1982.⁽⁴⁰⁾

By a resolution of 4 March 1983⁽⁴¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights called on the Sub-Commission to be guided in its work by relevant resolutions of the Commission, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, adding that it was inappropriate for the Sub-Commission to take decisions affecting its status, role and competence. It invited the Sub-Commission to make recommendations to the Commission on ways to ensure complementarity and co-ordination between the activities of both bodies as well as the undertaking of tasks by the Sub-Commission, which its particular status as a body of individuals elected in an independent and expert capacity best suited it to carry out.

The Sub-Commission was further invited to: examine in 1983 possibilities for rationalizing its method of work, ensure completion on time of studies requested by the Commission and the Council, seek the widest possible measure of agreement when adopting decisions, and be present when its report was considered by the Commission in 1984.

By a resolution of the same date, adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 5, with 7 abstentions⁽⁴²⁾ the Commission recommended to the Council a draft resolution on the nomination and election of candidates for the Sub-Commission (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution and a decision relating to the work of the Sub-Commission. Resolution 1983/32 was adopted by vote.

Report of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on its thirty-fifth session

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the terms of reference of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and in particular Commission on Human Rights resolutions 17(XXXVII) of 10 March 1981 and 1982/23 of 10 March 1982,

Recalling in particular that members of the Sub-Commission are elected by the Commission on Human Rights as experts in their individual capacity,

Considering that the same criteria and qualifications should apply to alternates as to members,

Decides that, notwithstanding paragraph 2 of article 13 of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, the following rules shall henceforth apply to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities:

(a) A nomination of a candidate for membership of the Sub-Commission may be accompanied by a nomination of an expert of the same nationality, who shall be elected simultaneously with the candidate for membership, and who may serve temporarily as an alternate if the member is unable to attend;

(b) The qualifications for alternates shall be the same as for members;

(c) No person may serve as alternate for a member except the expert elected as alternate, pursuant to subparagraph (a) above.

Sub-Commission action. By a 5 September resolution, adopted by 12 votes to 1, with 6 abstentions⁽⁴³⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission a draft resolution for adoption. By the draft, the Commission would note the Sub-Commission's decision to establish a working group in 1984 to study its working methods, and request the Sub-Commission to authorize a five-day inter-session meeting of the group at Geneva during the Commission's 1985 session for an exchange of views with the Commission. The group was to report back to the Sub-Commission for final consideration of the latter's work programme and methods.

On 7 September,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Sub-Commission adopted a new schedule for its 1984 session and for its pre-session Working Groups on communications alleging human rights violations, on slavery, and on indigenous populations. Also on that date,⁽⁴⁵⁾ it decided on the composition of those Working Groups.

By another decision of 7 September⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Sub-Commission requested one of its members, Ivan Tosevski (Yugoslavia), to prepare for its 1984 session a discussion paper on how it could best prepare in future years the report to the Commission on human rights violations.

Proposed UN High Commissioner for Human Rights

The establishment of a post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, first proposed in 1965 by Costa Rica⁽⁴⁷⁾ was discussed again in 1983 by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission.

By a resolution of 10 March, adopted by a roll-call vote of 24 to 11, with 7 abstentions⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Commission took note, and invited resubmission in 1984, of the Sub-Commission's proposals on the possible terms of reference for a High Commissioner, as contained in a September 1982 Sub-Commission resolution.⁽⁴⁹⁾ The Commission decided to continue consideration of the question in 1984.

In its 10 March resolution on programme and work methods (see above), the Commission noted that differing views on the creation of such a post had been expressed in its working group.⁽³⁴⁾

Following further discussion of the matter, the Sub-Commission, on 6 September, adopted by 16 votes to 3, with 3 abstentions, a resolution spelling out arrangements for the High Commissioner's office if that post were to be established.⁽⁵⁰⁾

Other measures to advance human rights

Advisory services

In 1983, advisory services of experts in the field of human rights were provided to three Governments: Bolivia, Equatorial Guinea and Uganda (see below).

On the thirty-fifth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see above), an international seminar (Geneva, 20 June-1 July) discussed the experiences of different countries in implementing international human rights standards.

In 1983, the Secretary-General received 86 governmental nominations for individual human rights fellowships; within the financial resources available, recommendations were made for awarding 26 fellowships to candidates from as many countries. During the year, no training course was organized under the programme.⁽⁵¹⁾

In an August report to the Sub-Commission on technical assistance to States for the strengthening of their legal institutions (see below), the Secretary-General also provided information on the programme.

Bolivia

Following consideration of a second study on the human rights situation in Bolivia⁽⁵²⁾ submitted by Special Envoy Héctor Gros Espiell (Uruguay), appointed in 1981⁽⁵³⁾ and the observations by the Government of Bolivia⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights, on 8 March 1983, adopted a resolution which was endorsed subsequently by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1983/146 (see below).

In the conclusions of his study, the Special Envoy stated that international assistance, including that of the United Nations, was needed to help ensure full observance of human rights and to assist in changing the adverse economic and social circumstances in the country. The campaign against hunger, poverty, disease and ignorance was the major basic problem confronting human rights in Bolivia, since under the democratic constitutional Government, respect for human rights had been achieved inasmuch as they were no longer directly violated by government action.

By its resolution of 8 March⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Commission thanked the Special Envoy and noted with satisfaction his conclusion that, particularly since the establishment of a constitutional Government on 10 October 1982, Bolivia had demonstrated a complete respect for human rights. It further noted the Government's determination to ensure a thorough investigation of past human rights violations, and welcomed the creation of a national commission to investigate cases of disappearances, as well as Bolivia's accession to the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocol to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. It requested the Secretary-General to provide advisory services and other human rights assistance upon request and decided to conclude consideration of the human rights situation in Bolivia.

During the Commission's session, in March, discussions were held between the Chairman, the Centre for Human Rights, the Special Envoy and representatives of the Bolivian Government, on possible assistance to that country in achieving economic and political stability. Following a government request of 7 July, the Special Envoy visited the country from 8 to 13 December.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/146 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Bolivia

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/33 of 8 March 1983, endorsed the Commission's decision to request the Secretary-General to provide advisory services and other forms of appropriate human rights assistance as might be requested by the constitutional Government of Bolivia.

Equatorial Guinea

In 1983, efforts continued to implement the plan of action for the restoration of human rights in Equatorial Guinea, which had been proposed by the Secretary-General in 1981 based on recommendations of a United Nations expert⁽⁵⁶⁾ Among those activities, meetings were held between the Government and officials of UNDP.

The Secretary-General submitted a report on advisory sendees to Equatorial Guinea in 1982 to the 1983 session of the Commission on Human Rights⁽⁵⁷⁾

On 8 March⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council adoption of a draft resolution concerning the situation in Equatorial Guinea. The Council subsequently adopted resolution 1983/35 (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/35 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Equatorial Guinea

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1982/36 of 7 May 1982,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/32 of 8 March 1983,

Mindful of the role that the United Nations could play in the promotion, protection and restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the world,

Conscious of the request of the Government of Equatorial Guinea for assistance in the restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country with a view to ensuring, in particular, the right of the population to participate in the management of public affairs in the country,

1. Takes note of the meetings held between the Permanent Representative of Equatorial Guinea to the United Nations and officials of the United Nations Development Programme;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the report submitted by two constitutional experts, Mr. Ruben Hernández-Valle and Mr. Jorge Mario Laguardia, who were recruited by the Secretary-General, at the request of the Government of Equatorial Guinea, to assist the Equatorial Guinea National Commission to draft a constitution for that country;

3. Encourages the Government of Equatorial Guinea to continue to display the same spirit of co-operation in implementing the plan of action prepared by the Secretary-General at the request of the Government of Equatorial Guinea;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in conjunction with the Government of Equatorial Guinea, to consider what further measures could be taken by the United Nations to assist that Government in the continued implementation of the plan of action and to report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fortieth session;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, in the light of the Secretary-General's report, to reconsider this question at its fortieth session under the item entitled "Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in any part of the world, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories".

Uganda

In accordance with a May 1982 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽⁵⁹⁾ approving the Commission on Human Rights's request for the provision of consultative advisory services and other assistance to Uganda, the Secretary-General developed contacts with the Government and with various United Nations sectors and agencies. The Government submitted in January 1983 a statement of needs and projects⁽⁶⁰⁾ calling, in particular, for expert assistance in reviewing legislation, for the training of law librarians, legal clerks, penitentiary staff and police officers, and for the supply of books and other legal materials. Information on 1982 advisory services to Uganda was submitted by the Secretary-General⁽⁶¹⁾ to the 1983 session of the Commission on Human Rights.

On 9 March,⁽⁶²⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to continue his contacts with the Government of Uganda in order to help it continue guaranteeing the enjoyment of human rights. The Commission again invited States, the United Nations system and humanitarian and non-governmental organizations to assist Uganda, and decided to review the question in 1984.

Technical assistance to strengthen legal institutions

In August 1983, the Secretary-General reported to the Sub-Commission on technical assistance currently available to States in strengthening legal institutions to enhance respect for the rule of law.⁽⁶³⁾ The report also dealt with the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights and summarized information from the three Governments which had requested such services (see above), as well as from nine United Nations bodies and agencies.

Noting with appreciation the Secretary-General's report, the Sub-Commission on 6 September⁽⁶⁴⁾ requested him to invite Governments to indicate whether they felt the need to receive such technical assistance, and request Governments providing bilateral development assistance for information on the extent to which such assistance was or could be used to strengthen legal institutions in recipient countries. Special Rapporteur L. M. Singhvi (India) was requested to give consideration in his study—on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers (see above, under DISCRIMINATION)—to the most appropriate means by which the international community could contribute to strengthening legal institutions, especially in developing countries, with a view to promoting full respect for human rights.

Draft declaration on promotion of human rights

On 8 March 1983,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the 1982 decision of the Sub-Commission to prepare draft principles on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights, taking into account information from Governments and other sources.⁽⁶⁶⁾ The Commission decided to work on a draft declaration in 1985 on the basis of a Sub-Commission report containing the draft principles.

In September 1983, Special Rapporteur Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), appointed in 1982, orally presented to the Sub-Commission an outline and the basic elements for possible inclusion in the draft principles. On 7 September⁽⁶⁷⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission a draft for adoption by the Economic and Social Council requesting the Special Rapporteur to continue her work with a view to submitting a final report in 1984.

Proposed establishment of a new international humanitarian order

In a September 1983 report to the General Assembly,⁽⁶⁸⁾ the Secretary-General stated that no further views had been submitted on the proposal for the promotion of a new international humanitarian order, advanced by Jordan in 1981.⁽⁶⁹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/125 without vote.

New international humanitarian order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/136 of 14 December 1981 and 37/201 of 18 December 1982,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General, Bearing in mind the need for seeking further the views of Governments regarding the proposal relating to a new international humanitarian order,

Noting the establishment in July 1983 of the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues, outside the framework of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the work of the Independent Commission could be useful for further study of the proposal,

1. Invites Governments that have not yet done so to communicate to the Secretary-General their views regarding the proposal for the promotion of a new international humanitarian order;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to remain in contact with Governments, as well as with the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues, in order to provide a comprehensive report on the subject to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

3. Decides to review at its fortieth session the question of a new international humanitarian order.

Regional arrangements

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1983,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, as requested by the General Assembly in December 1982.⁽⁷¹⁾ In the report, which contained information from a number of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, he stated that the United Nations had continued to encourage such arrangements through seminars and other activities.

The Commission on Human Rights had standing arrangements with regional intergovernmental organizations, according to which the latter might submit reports to the Commission on their human rights activities. To enhance this co-operation further, the Secretary-General suggested the mutual exchange of observers on a regular basis, as well as periodic meetings between the Commission Chairman and the heads of regional commissions and regional courts on human rights.

As regards the secretariats, the Secretary-General noted that there were effectively operating informal contacts and co-operation; exchange of information and experience took place at annual informal consultative meetings of the heads of human rights secretariats in the United Nations system as well as of other international organizations, including the regional intergovernmental organizations.

Since regional arrangements had been established or were being discussed, the Secretary-General felt the policy-making organs might consider how United Nations promotional activities could be further developed in the various regions and subregions, including the possibility of having regional advisers on international human rights standards; such a system of advisers, the Secretary-General added, operated successfully within the framework of ILO with regard to international labour standards. More seminars could be held in various regions and subregions to discuss national experiences in the implementation of international human rights standards.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/97 without vote.

Regional arrangements for the protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/127 of 16 December 1977, 33/167 of 20 December 1978, 34/171 of 17 December 1979, 35/197 of 15 December 1980, 36/154 of 16 December 1981 and 37/171 and 37/172 of 17 December 1982 concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and the regional intergovernmental organizations, as well as the non-governmental organizations concerned, which contributed to the preparation of that report;

3. Invites the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and the regional intergovernmental organizations which have not yet been able to do so to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on exchanges of information between the United Nations and the regional organizations and bodies for the promotion and protection of human rights, together with their views on ways and means of furthering such exchanges;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a further report amplifying the report prepared in accordance with resolution 37/172;

5. Decides to consider this question further at its thirty-ninth session.

Public information activities

In a February 1983 report to the Commission on Human Rights on public information activities in the field of human rights⁽⁷²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that activities by the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) included coverage of relevant meetings, publications, audio and visual programmes, and special programmes and information dissemination by information centres and services. In accordance with the Commission's March 1982 request to consider establishing in United Nations offices, particularly in developing countries, reference libraries for human rights⁽⁷³⁾ preparations were made to set up the basis for a reference facility in the United Nations Centre for Human Rights.

On 10 March⁽¹⁾ the Commission requested Governments, as well as the Secretary-General, to promote various public information activities in the human rights field (see above).

Human rights education

On 31 August 1983,⁽⁷⁴⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission on Human Rights adoption of a draft resolution commending UNESCO for its work in the field of education to combat racism and racial discrimination. The Commission would also appeal to States to encourage educational institutions, particularly at the primary level, to incorporate in their curricula, among other things, the concept of the oneness of the human race; the social, economic, cultural and political interdependence of all peoples; and such basic human needs and aspirations as self-identity, the need to belong to and participate in the life of a larger community, and the need of all groups to develop a sense of cultural identity.

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/57 of 9 December, urged UNESCO, in co-operation with Governments, to spread the teaching of human rights in all educational institutions, and requested the Director-General of that organization to report to the Assembly in 1988, on the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, on efforts made to those ends.

Human rights violations

Situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined in 1983 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by special bodies and officials appointed to examine some of those situations.

In addition, situations of alleged human rights violations involving the self-determination of peoples (see above, under CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS) were discussed with regard to Afghanistan, East Timor, Kampuchea, South Africa and Namibia, Western Sahara and the Palestinian people. The Commission also dealt with the human rights situation in Bolivia, Equatorial Guinea and Uganda, to which the United Nations provided advisory services (see above, under ADVANCEMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS).

Under a procedure established in 1970 by the Economic and Social Council to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights⁽¹⁾ the Commission held closed meetings during its 1983 session to study confidential documents, observations submitted by States and a confidential report by a working group which had examined the material. The Commission maintained all such action confidential. By a decision adopted on 28 February at a closed meeting, and agreed to be made public on 11 March⁽²⁾ the Commission decided to set up a working group of five of its members to meet for one week prior to the Commission's 1984 session to examine particular situations referred by the Sub-Commission and those of which the Commission was seized.

On 4 March⁽³⁾ the Commission decided to postpone consideration of a draft resolution recommended by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in September 1982⁽⁴⁾ by which the Council would authorize the Sub-Commission to arrange for one or more of its members to visit any country on which reliably attested allegations of gross and consistent human rights violations were received, in order to examine such situations first hand.

At its annual session from 1 to 12 August 1983, the Sub-Commission's five-member Working Group on Communications, established in 1971,⁽⁵⁾ also examined on a confidential basis communications alleging human rights violations. After considering the Group's report at four closed meetings, the Sub-Commission adopted, on 7 September, a confidential report communicating its findings to the Commission. On 6 September⁽⁶⁾ the Sub-Commission decided to defer until 1984 consideration of a draft resolution and amendments thereto, concerning possible expansion of the Group's membership in view of the increase in number of communications alleging human rights violations. In related action on 7 September⁽⁷⁾ it requested one of its members, Ivan Tosevski (Yugoslavia), to prepare for its 1984 session a discussion paper on how it could best prepare in future years the report to the Commission on human rights violations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/153 without vote.

General decision concerning the establishment of a working group of the Commission on Human Rights to examine situations referred to the Commission under Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) and those situations of which the Commission is seized

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council approved the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, in its decision 1983/110 of 28 February 1983, to set up a working group composed of five of its members to meet for one week prior to the fortieth session to examine such particular situations as might be referred to the Commission by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its thirty-sixth session under Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) and those situations of which the Commission is seized.

Adopted without vote

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/124 of 16 December on alternative approaches for improving the enjoyment of human rights, the General Assembly reiterated that the international community should continue to accord priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of the human rights of peoples and individuals. It reaffirmed that consistent patterns of human rights violations, wherever they existed, were of concern to the United Nations.

Africa

South Africa and Namibia

General aspects

In 1983, the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a progress report on developments concerning policies and practices violating human rights in South Africa and Namibia. Human rights violations there were also dealt with by the Commission in several resolutions. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1983/135 of 27 May, endorsed the Commission's decision to renew the Working Group's mandate.

Apartheid, racial discrimination and other aspects of the human rights situation in South Africa and Namibia were also dealt with at the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in August 1983 (see above, under DISCRIMINATION).

As in previous years, the Special Committee against Apartheid observed the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination at two meetings on 21 March⁽⁸⁾ the day when 69 demonstrators against the "pass laws" of the apartheid system were killed and 180 others were wounded at Sharpeville, South Africa, in 1960. Further, the Committee observed, on 16 June, the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa.

Working Group report. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa—established in 1967 by the Commission on Human Rights⁽⁹⁾ and composed of six members appointed by the Commission and acting in their personal capacities—submitted in January 1983 a report on developments since 1980 concerning policies and practices violating human rights in South Africa and Namibia.⁽¹⁰⁾ The Group had last submitted a report on the topic in 1981.⁽¹¹⁾ The 1983 report was based mainly on the analysis of published information and on information received in the form of oral testimony and written communications from individuals and organizations during the Group's mission of inquiry (12 July-3 August 1982); 59 witnesses were heard at closed and public meetings.

The report dealt with a wide range of issues, including capital punishment, detainees and political prisoners, forced removals of population and the "homelands" policy, and other serious human rights violations resulting from apartheid and racial discrimination. It provided information on persons suspected of being guilty of the crime of apartheid or of a serious human rights violation, and summarized the results of conferences, symposia and seminars pertaining to South Africa and Namibia.

In its conclusions, the Group stated that the constitutional developments in South Africa which had in the past ignored the interests of the black population continued to evolve in a discriminatory manner: the blacks were denied any role in the so-called constitutional proposals aimed at establishing three assemblies in which whites, Coloured and Asian population groups were to have representation; without consulting the affected population and contrary to the right to self-determination, the South African Government had planned to cede most of the KaNgwane "homeland" and the Ingwavuma area in Transvaal to Swaziland; and the granting of so-called independence to the homelands contributed to the disruption of national unity and the identity of black South Africans. In the Ciskei, as well as in other so-called independent homelands, security laws were introduced sanctioning apartheid. A new law—the Orderly Movement and Settlement of Black Persons Bill—raised the penalty for being in so-called white areas without permission.

The Group also found that: the right to life was violated by South African security forces inside and outside South Africa; the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims, to which South Africa was a party, were not applied to captured freedom fighters; torture was used during interrogation of suspects; the number of disappeared persons had increased; the conditions of black workers had not changed fundamentally; strikes by black workers were treated as criminal acts; and the rate of unemployed blacks remained high and unemployed blacks were forcibly removed from urban centres to the so-called homelands.

In Namibia, the Group noted that the human rights situation had not improved—security laws and measures had been strengthened, resulting in frequent infringements of guaranteed individual freedoms, such as the right to free choice of residence, freedom of movement and freedom of assembly and association. Though noting with satisfaction the beneficial effects of the activities by international organizations in securing a better situation of prisoners and detainees, the Group stated that there was no overall improvement in the situation of political prisoners. Persons disappeared or were indefinitely detained without trial; South African authorities continued to torture political prisoners and captured freedom fighters.

The Group recommended that the Commission denounce as discriminatory and racist the draft constitutional proposals by the South African Government, which denied the black population their birthright as South African citizens. Further recommendations included the strengthening of international campaigns whenever the life of political activists in South Africa was in danger; the study of the question of "sovereignty" of the homelands and the use of that policy to maintain apartheid; establishment by ILO of a list of jobs for which an adequate and thorough training for black workers was not guaranteed, and a request to Member States to offer all possible assistance to black South Africans to enable them to acquire professional training particularly in fields where they were denied such training in South Africa. The Group also made recommendations to promote further the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid (see below).

As regards Namibia, the Group recommended that the Commission call on United Nations organs to redouble their efforts to achieve an overall political solution to the Namibia question as rapidly as possible, in accordance with United Nations resolutions. It also invited the Commission to: recommend the adoption of measures on behalf of Namibian refugees, and assist and encourage Governments to take them into their territory; condemn frequent violations of the territorial integrity of the African States adjoining Namibia, recommend measures to avoid their repetition, and call for immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African forces from Angola; and ensure that the South African authorities granted the captured freedom fighters and political prisoners the status provided for in the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I thereto.

The Group reaffirmed the need to continue seeking information on the human rights situation in Namibia, especially by collecting evidence from Namibian refugees in the neighbouring countries, and for the Commission to persuade States to ratify the 1973 Convention against apartheid. It re-requested the Commission to encourage all individuals to report any human rights violations by South Africa and recommended the organization of a seminar to investigate ways of securing the rapid elimination of apartheid.

Also in January, the Group, in pursuance of a 1981 request by the Commission⁽¹²⁾ gave a brief summary⁽³⁾ of two 1980 reports: one by the Secretary-General on apartheid as a collective form of slavery, and the other on child labour in South Africa, submitted to the Working Group on Slavery by the Anti-Slavery Society for the Protection of Human Rights.

Another January 1983 report provided information on the effects of apartheid on black women and children in South Africa (see below).

By an 18 February resolution adopted by a roll-call vote of 42 to none⁽¹⁴⁾ the Commission congratulated the Working Group on the quality of the report and took note of its conclusions and recommendations. It affirmed that any constitutional arrangement in South Africa based on racial segregation constituted a denial of the political rights of the black population, and denounced the policy of "bantustanization".

The Commission expressed profound indignation at the scale and variety of human rights violations in South Africa, in particular: the increased number of sentences and executions; the torture of political activists during interrogation; the ill-treatment of captured freedom fighters and other detainees; and the deaths of detainees in South African prisons under suspicious circumstances. It expressed deep indignation at the continued practice of child labour, exploitation of black women and children, and discriminatory harassment and imprisonment of young blacks. It demanded that South Africa put an end to the policies and practices which violated the rights of the African population, especially women and children, and appealed for urgent action by the international community to save the lives of Bobby Tsotsobe, Johannes Shabangu, Jerry Mosololi, Simon Mogoerane, David Moise and Marcus Motaung, condemned to death as a result of their opposition to apartheid. The Commission also condemned South Africa's military attacks against neighbouring countries, such as Angola, Lesotho and Mozambique, and demanded their cessation (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V).

The Commission decided that the Group should continue to study the policies and practices violating human rights in South Africa and Namibia and asked it to submit its findings in 1985, with a progress report in 1984. The Commission also requested the Group, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to continue to investigate the cases of torture, ill-treatment and deaths of detainees and to bring cases of particularly serious violations to the attention of the Commission Chairman. It authorized the Group to organize in 1984 a seminar on the most effective means of reinforcing the Commission's efforts to eliminate apartheid.

The Commission requested the Economic and Social Council to transmit the resolution to the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia.

The Economic and Social Council followed that request in decision 1983/136 of 27 May (see below).

By another resolution of 18 February, adopted by a roll-call vote of 37 to none, with 5 abstentions⁽¹⁵⁾ the Commission reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence, and called on South Africa to comply with all Security Council and Commission resolutions on Namibia. It demanded that South Africa cease all acts of torture and ill-treatment of Namibian political detainees and prisoners, release all Namibian political prisoners, and grant prisoner-of-war status to the captured freedom fighters and treat them in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I.

The Commission requested the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to study as a priority matter the policies and practices violating human rights in Namibia, and to continue to institute inquiries in respect of any persons suspected of having committed in Namibia the crime of apartheid or a serious human rights violation, and to bring the results of those inquiries to the Commission's attention in 1984. It reiterated its request that South Africa allow the Working Group to make an on-the-spot investigation of the prison living conditions and the treatment of prisoners in Namibia and South Africa.

In a resolution of 15 February on the right of the South African and Namibian peoples to self-determination (see above, under CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS), the Commission strongly condemned the continued violations of the human rights of peoples still under colonial and foreign domination and condemned South Africa for its brutal repression and indiscriminate torture and killing of opponents of apartheid.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/136 without vote.

Violations of human rights in southern Africa: transmittal of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/9

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/9 of 18 February 1983, and pursuant to the Commission's request contained in paragraph 22 of that resolution, decided to transmit that resolution to the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/61) without vote, 23 May (meeting 18); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1983/13); agenda item 10. Meeting number. ESC 15.

Also on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted decision 1983/135 without vote.

Violations of human rights in southern Africa: report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/9 of 18 February 1983, endorsed the Commission's decisions to renew the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, to request the Group to submit a report on its findings to the Commission at its forty-first session at the latest, and to submit a progress report to the Commission at its fortieth session. The Council also endorsed the Commission's decisions to authorize the Ad Hoc Working Group to organize in 1984 a seminar to consider the most effective means of reinforcing the Commission's efforts to eliminate apartheid, racism and racial discrimination and to authorize the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to participate in conferences, symposia, seminars or other events connected with the action against apartheid organized under the auspices of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to provide every assistance within available resources to enable the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to discharge its responsibilities in accordance with paragraphs 17 and 18 of Commission resolution 1983/9 and with its terms of reference.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/135

Sub-Commission action. On 5 September⁽¹⁶⁾ the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities noted with particular concern that the South African Constitution, denying the majority of the black population the franchise as well as the right to occupy judicial posts, put the judiciary and its impartiality as well as the whole judicial system into serious doubt, especially in cases involving the conflicting interests of the ruling white minority and the disenfranchised black majority; under those circumstances, that Constitution did not provide for a fair and just judicial system. The Sub-Commission strongly condemned the South African regime's continuing campaign of repressions, detentions and persecution of those fighting its apartheid policies, and condemned in particular the June 1983 execution of three young South African militants for their involvement in the liberation struggle, as well as the continuing spate of political trials and the continued imprisonment of Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners. It called on the Commission to investigate the situation urgently and seek action and intervention by the General Assembly.

Note of the Secretary-General. By a note of 22 September⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General drew the General Assembly's attention to the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group⁽¹⁰⁾ as well as two other reports submitted by it, on apartheid as a collective form of slavery⁽¹³⁾ and on the effects of the policy of apartheid on black women and children in South Africa (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/39 A on the situation in South Africa, the General Assembly strongly condemned the South African régime for its brutal repression of opponents of apartheid, its torture and killing of detainees, its execution of freedom fighters, and its repeated acts of aggression, subversion and terrorism against independent African States. It demanded that South Africa release persons imprisoned or restricted for their opposition to apartheid, terminate all political trials and all repressive measures against opponents of apartheid, allow those exiled for their opposition to apartheid to return unconditionally to their country, and rescind bans on organizations and media opposed to apartheid. The Assembly reaffirmed that freedom fighters should be treated as prisoners of war in accordance with Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and condemned the policy of "bantustanization" designed to dispossess the African majority of its rights and to deprive it of citizenship, as well as the continuing forced removal of black people.

In resolution 38/17, on the right of peoples to self-determination, the Assembly strongly condemned the continued human rights violations of peoples under colonial domination and alien subjugation, the continuation of the illegal occupation of Namibia, South Africa's attempts to dismember its territory and the perpetuation of the racist minority régime in southern Africa.

(For further Assembly action on South Africa, see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V; for Assembly action on Namibia, see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III).

Women and children under apartheid

In January 1983, the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts presented to the Commission on Human Rights a report⁽¹⁸⁾ updating a 1982 study⁽¹⁹⁾ on the effects of apartheid on black women and children in South Africa, based on information obtained during a mission of inquiry in July/August 1982 (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V).

The Commission, on 18 February⁽¹⁴⁾ expressed deep indignation at the scale and variety of human rights violations in South Africa, including the continued exploitation of black women and children, who suffered the most from the policies and practices of apartheid (see above).

7573 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1983, there were 77 parties to the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.⁽²⁰⁾ During the year, eight States—Afghanistan, Bolivia, the Congo, China, Lesotho, Mozambique, Venezuela and Zambia—acceded to the Convention.

The Secretary-General annexed to a report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention—a list of States which had signed, ratified or acceded to it as of 1 September⁽²¹⁾

Activities of the Group of Three. The Group of Three, established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions, held its sixth session from 24 to 28 January 1983 at Geneva⁽²²⁾ As in 1982, the Group consisted of Bulgaria, Mexico and Zaire. The Commission on Human Rights, on 11 March 1983⁽²³⁾ took note of the Group's composition.

At its 1983 session, the Group considered first (initial) reports from Cape Verde, Ecuador, Peru, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines. Second periodic reports were filed by Czechoslovakia, India and Yugoslavia, and third periodic reports by Bulgaria, Cuba, Iraq, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR. Representatives of these States, except for Cape Verde and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, attended the meetings to supplement the information in the reports.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Group again expressed the opinion that the presence of States' representatives at its meetings in connection with the consideration of reports should be continued. It called on States parties to provide more information on the legislative, judicial and administrative measures adopted to implement article IV of the Convention (on suppression or prevention of encouragement of apartheid and prosecution and punishment for the crime of apartheid). The Group also called for more information on concrete cases in which measures had been applied to prosecute, bring to trial and punish persons responsible for, or accused of, "crimes of apartheid", as defined in article II. It called on

States to identify in their reports individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for such crimes, as well as those against whom legal proceedings were undertaken by the State party, to enable the Commission to continue updating its list under article X. It also drew their attention to the importance of article XI stipulating that "crimes of apartheid" should not be considered political crimes for the purpose of extradition.

It requested international organizations to intensify the publication and dissemination of materials concerning problems of racial discrimination, in particular apartheid.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

By a resolution of 18 February⁽²⁴⁾, adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights took note of the report of the Group of Three. It again requested the Secretary-General to invite States parties to comment on the interim study on ways of ensuring implementation of international instruments, including the establishment of international jurisdiction envisaged by the Convention, submitted in 1981 by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa.⁽²⁵⁾ It called on States parties to strengthen their co-operation to implement United Nations decisions on apartheid and stated the desirability of disseminating information on the Convention. It again requested the Group of Three to examine whether the actions of transnational corporations operating in South Africa came under the definition of the crime of apartheid, and whether or not some legal action could be taken under the Convention. The Commission decided that the Group should meet for no more than five days; before its 1984 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/19 by recorded vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3068(XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, by which it adopted and opened for signature and ratification the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and its subsequent resolutions on the status of the Convention,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, a gross violation of human rights and a crime against humanity, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Convinced that the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and their full implementation will contribute to the final eradication of apartheid and all other forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Strongly condemning South Africa's continued policy of apartheid and its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its repeated acts of aggression against sovereign African States, which constitute a manifest breach of international peace and security, Condemning the continued collaboration of certain States and transnational corporations with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, economic, military and other fields as an encouragement to the intensification of its odious policy of apartheid.

Underlining that the strengthening of the existing mandatory arms embargo and the application of comprehensive mandatory economic sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter are vital in order to compel the racist régime of South Africa to abandon its policy of apartheid,

Firmly convinced that the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa against apartheid, racism and colonialism and for the effective implementation of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence demands more than ever all necessary support by the international community and, in particular, further action by the Security Council,

Underlining that ratification of and accession to the Convention on a universal basis and the implementation of its provisions without any delay are necessary for its effectiveness and would be a useful contribution towards achieving the complete elimination of apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

2. Commends those States parties to the Convention that have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;

3. Appeals once again to those States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay;

4. Expresses its appreciation of the constructive role played by the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights, established in accordance with article IX of the Convention, in analysing the periodic reports of States and in publicizing the experience gained in the international struggle against the crime of apartheid;

5. Requests States parties to the Convention to take fully into account the guidelines prepared by the Group of Three;

6. Calls upon all States parties to the Convention to implement fully article IV thereof by adopting legislative, judicial and administrative measures to prosecute, bring to trial and punish, in accordance with their jurisdiction, persons responsible for, or accused of, the acts enumerated in article II of the Convention;

7. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to undertake the functions set out in article X of the Convention and invites the Commission to intensify, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, its efforts to compile periodically the progressive list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the Convention, as well as those against whom or which legal proceedings have been undertaken;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to distribute the above-mentioned list among all States parties to the Convention and all Member States and to bring such facts to the attention of the public by all the means of mass communication;

9. Appeals to all States, United Nations organs, specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities in enhancing public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the racist régime of South Africa;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

Foreign support of South Africa

Action by the Commission on Human Rights.

Having examined a June 1982 report⁽²⁶⁾ of Special Rapporteur Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt) which updated a list of banks, transnational corporations (TNCs) and other organizations assisting South Africa, the Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution of 18 February 1983 adopted by a roll-call vote of 30 to 4, with 8 abstentions⁽²⁷⁾ welcomed the September 1982 decision of the Sub-Commission to mandate the Special Rapporteur to continue updating the list, subject to annual review. It called on the Governments of countries where the institutions named were based to stop their activities in South Africa and Namibia and to end all technological assistance or collaboration in the military or nuclear field. It urgently requested all specialized agencies, particularly IMF and the World Bank, to refrain from granting loans to the South African régime.

In a 15 February resolution, on the right to self-determination of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia (see above, under CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS), the Commission condemned all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear, military and economic fields; the policies of Western and other countries whose relations with South Africa encouraged that régime to persist in suppressing the aspirations of peoples to self-determination and independence; and the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁽²⁸⁾ with respect to colonial Territories, particularly Namibia.

In a resolution of 18 February on implementation of the Convention against apartheid, the Commission again requested the Group of Three to examine whether the actions of TNCs operating in South Africa came under the definition of the crime of apartheid, and whether or not legal action could be taken under the Convention (see above).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/137 by vote.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/11 of 18 February 1983, endorsed the Commission's decision to welcome the decision of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to mandate Mr. Ahmed Khalifa, Special Rapporteur, to continue to update the list of banks, transnational corporations and other organizations assisting the racist régime in South Africa, subject to annual review, and to submit, through the Sub-Commission, the revised report to the Commission.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/611 by vote (33-4-10), 23 May (meeting 18); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1983/13); agenda item 10. Meeting number. ESC 15.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur submitted to the Sub-Commission in July an updated report containing a comprehensive list of banks, TNCs and other organizations assisting the South African régime⁽²⁹⁾ based on material received as at 10 May 1983.

Sub-Commission action. Having noted with satisfaction the Special Rapporteur's updated report, the Sub-Commission, on 31 August,⁽³⁰⁾ invited him to continue to update the list, subject to annual review, and to indicate the volume and nature of the assistance given to South Africa. It invited the Secretary-General to issue the updated report as a United Nations publication. Further, the Sub-Commission welcomed the December 1982 General Assembly resolution⁽³¹⁾ on adverse consequences for human rights of assistance to South Africa, which affirmed the importance of updating the report.

GEIMEKAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in several 1983 resolutions (38/17, 38/36 A, 38/39 A, 38/50), condemned collaboration with South Africa. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see above, under DISCRIMINATION), in its Programme of Action approved by the Assembly in resolution 38/14, also called for termination of relations with South Africa.

Violations of trade union rights

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. Expressing concern at infringements of trade union rights and actions against black trade union leaders, the Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution of 18 February 1983 on the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa (see above), demanded that South Africa respect international standards on trade union rights and adhere to the 1973 ILO Convention concerning Minimum Age for Admission to Employment.

Notes by the Secretariat and the Secretary-General. In March and May 1983, the Economic and Social Council was informed of allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights in South Africa.

In a March note⁽³²⁾ the Secretariat transmitted extracts from the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa (see above), concerning in particular the suppression of the right to organize trade unions. The Group had reported that at least 347 arrests of black trade unionists had taken place in South Africa in 1981 and had called for the release of workers and trade unionists arrested as a result of their trade union activities. The names of some trade union leaders persecuted by South Africa were annexed to the report.

In a May note⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted two 1982 communications, one each from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions on the arrest and continued detention of six South African women trade unionists, and from the World Federation of Trade Unions, calling on the ILO Director-General to make South Africa respect the fundamental trade union rights as set out in ILO Conventions. In so doing, the Secretary-General explained the prescribed procedure he followed in handling those communications, and added that the Economic and Social Council's 1950 resolution on the safeguarding of trade union rights⁽³⁴⁾ provided that upon receiving consent from a United Nations Member which was not an ILO member, the Council would transmit to the ILO Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association any allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights which it considered suitable for transmittal.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted two decisions relating to infringements of trade union rights in South Africa. Decision 1983/156 was adopted without vote.

Allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights in South Africa

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting that the consent of the Government of South Africa had been obtained, as required under paragraph 1 (c) (i) of Council resolution 277(X) of 17 February 1950, decided, in conformity with paragraph 1 (c) (ii) of that resolution, to transmit to the Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association of the International Labour Organisation, through the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, the allegations of infringements of trade union rights in South Africa submitted by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions on 12 February 1982 and the World Federation of Trade Unions on 13 July 1982, together with the text of the consent of the Government concerned; the Council also decided that, in accordance with the procedure outlined in its resolution 277(X), the Commission's findings should be transmitted to the Council as soon as possible, in keeping with the Commission's established practice.

Iran

Reports by the Secretary-General. In a February 1983 report on the human rights situation in Iran,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Commission on Human Rights of the direct contacts he had established with the Government of Iran, in accordance with the Commission's March 1982 request.⁽³⁶⁾ In his discussion with Iran's Permanent Representative to the United Nations on reported human rights violations, including alleged summary executions of members of the Baha'i religious community, the Secretary-General had been told that there was no religious persecution and that the Government regarded the Baha'is not as a religious group but as a political movement aimed at creating division among the people of Iran. In December 1982, the Permanent Representative had indicated the Government's preparedness to receive an envoy of the Secretary-General in Teheran to discuss human rights matters and to provide the United Nations with relevant information. As a follow-up to those contacts, the Secretary-General's Office contacted the Permanent Mission of Iran to the United Nations on 5 January 1983; the Mission confirmed on 19 January the Iranian authorities' readiness to receive an envoy, and further indicated, on 31 January, that the envoy could travel to Iran in the latter half of March. Details of that visit were being worked out. In addition to his direct contacts, the Secretary-General added, the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs and the Director of the Centre for Human Rights had raised with Iranian Government representatives individual cases on a purely humanitarian basis.

Also in February⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission a compilation of available information on the human rights situation in Iran. He examined alleged violations of human rights, in particular the rights to life, to physical integrity and freedom from torture, to fair trial and to freedom of conscience and opinion as laid down in the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁽³⁸⁾ Annexed to the note were communications from Iran, one to the Centre for Human Rights and another to the Commission Chairman, listing what it called counter-revolutionary activities and terrorist attacks, and charging the Baha'is with spreading anti-Islamic propaganda and spying. Annexed also was a 14 December 1982 statement by the Baha'i International Community refuting such allegations and inviting the establishment of an impartial body of investigation. Asserting that the Iranian Government persecuted the Baha'is on religious grounds, the Community stated that all nine members of the national governing body of the Baha'i Faith in Iran had disappeared, and eight of their successors had been secretly executed.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission adopted on 8 March 1983, by a roll-call vote of 17 to 6, with 19 abstentions, a resolution⁽³⁹⁾ expressing profound concern at what it called the continuing grave violations of human rights in Iran, particularly at the evidence of summary and arbitrary executions, torture, detention without trial, religious intolerance and persecution, in particular of the Baha'is, and the lack of an independent judiciary and other recognized safeguards for a fair trial. It urged once more that Iran, a State party to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, respect the rights recognized under that instrument. It requested the Secretary-General or his representative to continue direct contacts with the Iranian Government and to submit a comprehensive report in 1984.

In accordance with that request, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council (see below), contacts continued at various levels during 1983.⁽⁴⁰⁾ By a letter of 12 August, the Secretary-General communicated to the Permanent Representative of Iran his intention to appoint a representative, prior to whose nomination an understanding needed to be reached with the Government of its readiness to receive a visit by that representative. On 17 August, Iran responded that certain members of the Commission had decided to manipulate that body for their own illegitimate interests by taking sheer allegations for facts. By a letter of 23 August to Iran, the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights expressed the readiness of the Centre for Human Rights to discuss further details concerning United Nations contacts with the Government.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/147 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/34 of 8 March 1983, endorsed the Commission's request that the Secretary-General or his representative continue direct contacts with the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran on the grave human rights situation prevailing in that country, including the situation of the Baha'is, and that the Secretary-General or his representative submit to the Commission at its fortieth session a comprehensive report on the direct contacts and the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including conclusions and suggestions regarding the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country.

19-3-28 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/61) by recorded vote (17-1-26), 23 May (meeting 18); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1983/13); agenda item 10. Meeting number. ESC 15.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Austria, Canada, Denmark, Fiji, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Japan, Kenya, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Suriname, Swaziland, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Algeria, Benin, Pakistan.

Abstaining: Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Congo, Ecuador, German Democratic Republic, India, Liberia, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Nicaragua, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Thailand, Tunisia, USSR, United Republic of Cameroon.

Sub-Commission action. By a resolution adopted on 5 September 1983 by 13 votes to 1, with 7 abstentions⁽⁴¹⁾ the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities expressed profound concern at the reports of continuing grave violations of human rights in Iran, and expressed hope that the Secretary-General would succeed through his direct contacts with the Government in bringing about an improvement.

Also on 5 September, the Sub-Commission recommended for adoption by the Commission a draft resolution on the exploitation of child labour, among whose provisions was a call on Iran to cease immediately the use of children in its armed forces (see below, under OTHER HUMAN RIGHTS QUESTIONS).

Sri Lanka

The Sub-Commission, by a 5 September 1983 resolution adopted by 10 votes to 8, with 4 abstentions,⁽⁴²⁾ requested the Secretary-General to invite Sri Lanka to provide information, for submission to the Commission in 1984, on the recent communal violence, including its efforts to investigate the incidents and to promote national harmony.

Europe and the Mediterranean area

Cyprus

In January 1983, the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on Human Rights on the question of human rights in Cyprus⁽⁴³⁾ as requested by it in March 1982⁽³⁶⁾ He informed the Commission that procedural difficulties continued to prevent the Committee on Missing Persons, established in 1981⁽⁴⁴⁾ from performing its substantive functions.

The Secretary-General reported that the number of Greek Cypriots living in the north of the island had further diminished; as at 17 January 1983, 942 Greek Cypriots lived in the north, while 186 Turkish Cypriots lived in the south. Contacts remained frequent between members of the Maronite community residing on opposite sides of the cease-fire lines separating the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities.

The Commission, on 8 March 1983,⁽⁴⁵⁾ decided to postpone to its 1984 session the debate on the question of human rights in Cyprus, it being understood that action required by previous Commission resolutions on the subject continued to remain operative, including a request to the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on their implementation.

On 21 March,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination reiterated the hope that state of affairs in Cyprus—which it considered to be unacceptable—due to foreign occupation of part of its territory, would be brought to an end, so that Cyprus would be able to exercise its obligations under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (see above, under DISCRIMINATION).

(For the political aspects of the situation in Cyprus, see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter VIII).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 37/253 of 13 May 1983, on the question of Cyprus, the General Assembly called for respect for the human rights of all Cypriots, including the freedom of movement, the freedom of settlement and the right to property, and for urgent measures for the voluntary return of the refugees to their homes in safety.

Poland

In February 1983, Hugo J. Gobbi, designated on 21 December 1982 by the Secretary-General to follow the human rights situation in Poland on his behalf, submitted a report⁽⁴⁷⁾ to the Commission on Human Rights, in accordance with its March 1982 request⁽³⁶⁾

Mr. Gobbi reported that, by a letter of 3 January 1983, he had asked for Poland's co-operation in arranging for his visit to the country in the latter half of January. In a reply dated 6 January, Poland reiterated its rejection of the March 1982 Commission resolution as interference in its internal affairs and as illegal, null and void, politically harmful and morally hypocritical. In those circumstances, Mr. Gobbi considered that his visit could not be undertaken at the suggested time.

The report contained a communication of 1 February 1982 from Poland, addressed to the Secretary-General pursuant to article 4 (concerning a state of public emergency) of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁽³⁸⁾ stating that temporary limitation of certain rights of citizens had been prompted by exigencies of averting civil war, economic anarchy and destabilization of State and social structures; those measures, however, had already been considerably cut back and would be terminated as the situation stabilized. On 16 February 1982, the Secretary-General transmitted the communication to all Member States; he also informed the Human Rights Committee.

On 21 December 1982, Poland informed the Secretary-General that a law had been passed on 18 December terminating as of the end of the year derogation from certain Covenant articles, such as articles 9 (right to liberty and security of person), 12 (freedom of movement), 21 (right to peaceful assembly) and 22 (freedom of association); restrictions of other provisions still derogated from—namely article 14, paragraph 5 (stating that everyone convicted of a crime should have the right to his sentence being reviewed by a higher tribunal), and article 19, paragraph 2 (on the right to freedom of expression)—had been considerably reduced.

The report also gave a description of the main events in Poland since the declaration of martial law on 13 December 1981 (which was approved by the Parliament on 25 January 1982) and summarized allegations contained in information received from non-governmental and other sources, concerning conditions of arrest and internment, treatment of detainees, and infringements of the right to freedom of association and of trade union rights.

Concluding, Mr. Gobbi stated that, as he could not visit Poland to verify the allegations, his analysis of the situation was limited to the normative aspects of the question relating to the application of the relevant international instruments ratified by Poland, namely, the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights and ILO Conventions. In analysing the law of 8 October 1982, which gave a new trade union structure to the country and abolished all existing organizations, ILO expressed doubts concerning the compatibility of that law and ILO Conventions. Mr. Gobbi felt that some provisions introduced by that law, limiting the capacity to choose new employment, and those modifying articles of the penal code did not conform with the Covenants. With regard to allegations concerning the situation of political prisoners, he could not make any evaluation without verifying them on the site in direct consultation with those concerned and primarily the Polish authorities. Notwithstanding indications of a number of positive steps taken by the Government—such as the adoption of specific legal regulations that limited the competence of military courts with respect to civilians, lifted most of the restrictions on freedom of movement and, in particular, completely lifted internments—Mr. Gobbi hoped that further measures for normalization would be taken in order to satisfy all the requirements established by international instruments ratified by Poland.

By a resolution adopted on 8 March 1983 by a roll-call vote of 19 to 14, with 10 abstentions,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Commission thanked the Secretary-General and his representative for the report, deploring at the same time the attitude of the Polish authorities in not co-operating in the implementation of its March 1982 resolution. It reaffirmed the right of the Polish people to pursue its political, social and cultural development, free from outside interference, and called on the Polish authorities to realize fully and without further delay their stated intention to terminate the restrictive measures imposed on the exercise of human rights, particularly in relation to a review of the severe prison sentences imposed in the context of the state of martial law, the lifting of restrictions on the free flow of information, and the repeal of new restrictions imposed on the people. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to update and complete the study and to present a report in 1984.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/145 by a recorded vote, requested by Poland.

Situation of human rights in Poland

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/30 of 8 March 1983, endorsed the Commission's decision to request the Secretary-General or a person designated by him to update and complete the thorough study of the human rights situation in Poland requested in Commission resolution 1982/26 of 10 March 1982, based on such information as he may deem relevant, including comments and materials the Government of Poland may wish to provide, and to present a comprehensive report to the Commission at its fortieth session.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/145

22-12-18 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/61) by recorded vote (18-10-18), 23 May (meeting 18); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1983/13); agenda item 10. Meeting number. ESC 15.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Austria, Botswana, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Fiji, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Japan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Swaziland, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Algeria, Argentina, Benin, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, German Democratic Republic, India, Nicaragua, Poland, Romania, USSR.

Abstaining: Bangladesh, Brazil, Burundi, Congo, Ecuador, Liberia, Malaysia, Mali, Pakistan, Peru, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Suriname, Thailand, Tunisia, United Republic of Cameroon.

Expressing regret at the adoption of the decision, Poland charged that the 1983 Commission resolution completely distorted the actual situation. The Commission called on the Government to repeal "new restrictions", when martial law had been suspended and almost all the associated restrictions had been lifted; by recognizing the right of the Polish people "to pursue its political, social and cultural development, free from outside interference", the resolution represented interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign Member State.

Similarly, the USSR considered the Council decision to be illegal, irrelevant and all variance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations; the events of the preceding year had shown that the situation could be successfully dealt with by the Polish people themselves.

The United States said the violent suppression of non-violent May Day demonstrations in Polish cities, as well as subsequent acts of violence—including the beating and death of a Solidarity activist's son—made it clear that the crisis brought about by the imposition of martial law remained unresolved. It regretted the refusal by Polish authorities to co-operate in the study, for such co-operation would be taken as a sign of willingness to move towards dialogue and reconciliation.

Latin America

Bolivia

The Commission on Human Rights, on 8 March 1983, decided to conclude its consideration of the human rights situation in Bolivia (see above, under ADVANCEMENT OF HUMAN RIGHTS).

Chile

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In February 1983, Special Rapporteur Abdoulaye Diéye (Senegal) submitted a report on developments in the human rights situation in Chile during the second half of 1982,⁽⁴⁹⁾ supplementing a report submitted to the General Assembly in November 1982.⁽⁵⁰⁾ The Special Rapporteur stated that Chile had continued to refuse to co-operate; as in past reports, he had relied on official and other communications in the Chilean press, the testimony of witnesses, reports by organizations, and documents and letters from individuals in Chile and elsewhere.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Special Rapporteur stated that the human rights situation in Chile had not improved; there was no indication of measures designed to restore the enjoyment of human rights, either at the legislative or judicial levels or in the practice of the Executive. Violations of the right to life had increased over 1981 and judicial protection continued to be inadequate. The right to freedom was denied with excessive frequency, particularly in respect of persons attempting to exercise freedom of expression and opinion regarding political matters. While the number of "individual" arrests declined from 646 cases in 1981 to 312 in 1982, arrests in connection with mass demonstrations increased from 263 cases in 1981 to 901 in 1982. Arrests were made without a judicial or administrative warrant and were frequently made by persons not legally authorized to do so. In addition, judicial supervision of the illegal or arbitrary nature of arrests was practically non-existent.

The right to security of Chileans was at times violated by acts of persecution and intimidation in which the State security agencies were implicated; most of the cases appeared to be organized and planned acts against persons associated with organizations for the protection of human rights. With regard to the conditions of detention, there continued to be reports of persecution and intimidation. The fate of persons who had disappeared for political reasons—with the number of unresolved cases since 1973 increased to 662—had not been made clear by the Government, despite repeated appeals of the General Assembly and the Commission.

Concerning the right to freedom of movement, the Special Rapporteur noted that a Special Advisory Commission had been set up in November 1982 to propose to the President of the Republic measures regarding the situation of persons in exile. In that connection, he called for publication of an official list of persons in exile and termination of the double state of emergency, under which the Executive enjoyed discretionary power to prohibit entry into the country or to order expulsions or the assignment of forced residence. According to the Special Rapporteur, the number of persons in political exile might be between 11,000 (unofficial figure given by the authorities) and 38,000 (according to human rights organizations).

The Special Rapporteur stated that procedural guarantees, particularly the exercise of the right to effective remedy upon infringement of right or fundamental freedom, continued to be seriously restricted within the legislative framework of the double state of emergency. Also, such guarantees were extremely difficult to apply under military jurisdiction, particularly in the case of proceedings conducted before military courts, which had been reintroduced. A new procedure for appointing judges also increased the Executive's discretionary powers.

The right to freedom of thought, opinion and expression was also seriously restricted; what had previously been simply "administrative offences" against measures restricting freedom of information were classified as "crimes". During the second half of 1982, restrictions affected, in particular, radio broadcasting, the publication or importation of books and news periodicals, and persecution and intimidation of journalists.

The right of political association had been suspended until 1989 and any breach of that provision was liable to heavy penalties. Humanitarian associations and groups, which were forced to operate outside the law, were subjected to frequent harassment by the authorities. Exercise of the right to participation in public life was impossible, even in regional and communal development councils for which post-constitutional legislation had not always been enacted.

With regard to economic, social and cultural rights, the situation was becoming further removed from the international norm as a result of the special characteristics of Chile's worsening economic and social crisis. Working conditions, particularly with regard to levels of remuneration, were becoming increasingly unfavourable; there had been no improvements in the enjoyment of cultural or trade union rights. A number of leading figures in professional workers'/employers' organizations had been expelled from the country, a situation incompatible with the principle of trade union freedom.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission once again call on Chile to co-operate with United Nations bodies concerned with human rights protection. In particular, the Government should be requested to put an end to the institutionalization of the state of emergency and to re-establish democratic legal order; in the absence of such a change, the international community should remain concerned with the human rights situation in Chile, using the means it deemed most appropriate to ensure full restoration of those rights.

Annexed to the Special Rapporteur's report was a list of 63 persons subjected to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. Commending the Special Rapporteur for his report, the Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution adopted on 8 March by a roll-call vote of 29 to 6, with 8 abstentions,⁽¹⁾ urged the Chilean authorities to: put an end to the state of emergency under which serious and constant human rights violations were occurring; re-establish the principle of legality, democratic institutions and effective exercise of rights, in accordance with Chile's commitments under various international instruments; investigate and clarify the fate of persons who had disappeared for political reasons, and prosecute and punish those responsible for such disappearances; end intimidation and persecution, arbitrary arrest and detention in secret places and torture and other cruel or degrading treatment which, on occasion, led to unexplained deaths; respect, unconditionally, the rights of Chileans to live in their country and to enter and leave it freely, and put an end to relegation (confinement with forced residence) and forced exile; restore full enjoyment and exercise of labour rights, especially the right to form trade unions, the right of collective bargaining and the right to strike; and respect the rights intended to preserve the cultural identity and to improve the social condition of the indigenous population. It again requested the Chilean authorities to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur and to submit their comments on his report in 1984, when it would consider the question of human rights in Chile as a priority matter.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year, requesting him to report to the General Assembly in 1983 and to the Commission in 1984 on further developments.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/149 by recorded vote.

Question of human rights in Chile

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/38 of 8 March 1983, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile for a year and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient financial resources and staff are provided for the implementation of Commission resolution 1983/38.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/149

38-4-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/J.61) by recorded vote (32-4-10), 23 May (meeting 18); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1983/13); agenda item 10. Meeting number: ESC 15.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Congo, Denmark, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, India, Japan, Kenya, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Swaziland, Tunisia, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

Against: Argentina, Brazil, Pakistan, United States.

Abstaining: Bangladesh, China, Colombia, Ecuador, Fiji, Lebanon, Malaysia, Peru, Suriname, Thailand, United Republic of Cameroon.

Speaking after the vote in the Council, the USSR stated that recent events in Chile had shown that people suffered under the yoke of a dictatorship imposed by the United States. Venezuela stated that its affirmative vote was an unequivocal expression of concern for human rights.

Mexico welcomed the adoption of the decision and hoped that a new Special Rapporteur would soon be appointed following the death of Mr. Diéye in March (see below). Denmark and France also stressed the importance of appointing a successor as soon as possible.

Opposing the Council decision as well as the resolution adopted by the Commission on Human Rights, the United States said it would continue to work in the Commission for a resolution reflecting the situation accurately and in a balanced way and providing for equitable and fair procedures aimed at securing Chile's co-operation with the United Nations in its investigation of the human rights situation there.

Sub-Commission action. On 5 September⁽⁵²⁾ the Sub-Commission urged the Chilean authorities to put an end to all repressive measures, torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and to respect civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, especially those of the indigenous peoples. It recommended to the Commission that it urge the authorities to respect and promote human rights, in accordance with the international instruments to which Chile was a party, and to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur.

Further report of the Special Rapporteur. In accordance with the request of the Commission, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly in October 1983 (with a November addendum) the Special Rapporteur's report on further developments of the human rights situation in Chile.⁽⁵³⁾

Following the death on 17 March of Mr. Diéye, the Chairman of the Commission had appointed on 1 June Rajsoomer Lallah (Mauritius) as new Special Rapporteur, an action deplored by Chile in a statement of 3 June on grounds of what it called discriminatory procedure. By a reply of 24 June, the Special Rapporteur stressed the importance of the Government's co-operation in presenting the Commission with the most accurate and complete reflection of the human rights situation in Chile, a statement repeated in a letter of 14 July. On 8 July, Chile reiterated its opposition to what it called a discriminatory and selective procedure, established not only without Chile's prior consent, but also departing from universally accepted rules and violating the United Nations Charter; Chile's refusal to recognize the Special Rapporteur's competence and to co-operate was based on a position of principle.

The Special Rapporteur stated in his October report (covering January-June 1983) that, in view of the lack of co-operation, he had largely adopted the method of work followed in former reports. In the November addendum (on developments after 1 July), he stated that between 10 August and 10 October, the Government, under a new Cabinet, had supplied the Secretary-General for the first time with information on its intentions to lift the state of emergency, initiate a dialogue with the opposition parties, achieve democracy and solve the problem of exiles. The Special Rapporteur expressed the hope for closer co-operation with the Government.

Among the improvements in the situation, the Special Rapporteur noted the 28 August government decision not to renew the declaration of the state of emergency, and a decree of 15 September which, for the first time in 10 years, provided for the recognition and exercise of the right of assembly. According to government sources, 3,421 exiles had been permitted to return between September 1982 and October 1983.

Nevertheless, the Special Rapporteur noted, as disturbing elements during July and August 1983: the continuation of the declaration of "a state of danger of disturbance of the peace", under which the Government had exceptional powers affecting the right to liberty, the right of assembly, freedom of information and movement, and the possibility of effective judicial appeal for amparo in respect of those rights. Further, there was an increase in violations of the rights to life and to physical and psychological integrity, as well as in breaches of the right to the security of the person; in the first eight months of 1983, 165 acts of persecution and intimidation were recorded. As to freedom of the person, 2,860 arbitrary and/or unlawful arrests were recorded in the first eight months, most of them for public demonstrations; only 274 detainees were brought before a court of justice and only one person was charged with an alleged terrorist offence. On the other hand, 2,586 detainees were released without charge or accused of ordinary misdemeanours. The exercise of civil liberties was made conditional on continuation of the "political truce" which was to last until 1989.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the right of Chileans freely to enter their country could not be subject to arbitrary restrictions and that the Government should make clear the number and identity of the persons to whom some type of prohibition applied. Moreover, freedom of movement within the country had not been respected in a growing number of cases of internal exile (restricted residence) imposed as an administrative measure without the possibility of judicial remedy.

In conclusion, the Special Rapporteur expressed the hope that Chile would take more decisive steps towards re-establishing human rights protection, particularly the exercise of political rights without discrimination, the absence of which appeared to be central to all the human rights problems and the re-establishment of the traditional democratic order in that country.

Appended were lists of 21 persons subjected to torture and other cruel treatment and of 58 persons wounded by gunfire by the security services during July and August 1983.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/102 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile

The General Assembly,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and determined to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Stressing the obligation of Governments to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities they have undertaken by virtue of various international instruments,

Recalling its resolutions 3219(XXIX) of 6 November 1974, 3448(XXX) of 9 December 1975, 31/124 of 16 December 1976, 32/118 of 16 December 1977, 33/175 of 20 December 1978, 34/179 of 17 December 1979, 35/188 of 15 December 1980, 36/157 of 16 December 1981 and 37/183 of 17 December 1982, relating to the situation of human rights in Chile, as well as its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 on disappeared persons,

Recalling also the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Chile, in particular resolution 1983/38 of 8 March 1983, in which the Commission decided, inter alia, to extend for a year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile,

Deploring once again the fact that the repeated appeals of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and other international organs to re-establish human rights and fundamental freedoms have been ignored by the Chilean authorities, which continue to refuse to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur,

Expressing its profound concern that, according to the conclusions of the Special Rapporteur, the performance of the Chilean authorities with regard to the situation of human rights has been negative in general and that they have not been responsive to the concerns of the international community expressed in resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

Observing that the Chilean authorities have permitted a limited number of nationals to return to the country, but noting that the measures taken to that effect have been arbitrary and restrictive,

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile for his report, prepared in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/38;

2. Reiterates its grave concern at the persistence of and increase in serious and systematic violations of human rights in Chile, as described in the report of the Special Rapporteur;

3. Expresses once again its concern at the disruption of the traditional democratic legal order and its institutions by the maintenance of exceptional legislation, the institutionalization of various states of emergency and the existence of a Constitution in Chile which does not reflect a freely expressed popular will and the provisions of which not only fail to guarantee the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms but also suppress, suspend or restrict the exercise of those rights and freedoms;

4. Also reiterates its grave concern at the inefficacy of recourse to habeas corpus or amparo and of protection in view of the fact that the judiciary in Chile does not exercise its powers fully in this respect and carries out its functions under severe restrictions;

5. Once again requests the Chilean authorities to respect and promote human rights in compliance with the obligations they have assumed under various international instruments and, in particular, to end the régime of exception and especially the practice of declaring states of emergency, under which serious and continuing violations of human rights are committed, and to restore the principle of legality, democratic institutions and the effective enjoyment and exercise of civil and political rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination;

6. Once more urges the Chilean authorities to investigate and clarify the fate of persons who have disappeared for political reasons, to inform their families of the results of such investigation and to bring to trial and punish those responsible for these disappearances;

7. Reiterates its appeal to the Chilean authorities to put an end to intimidation and persecution, as well as arbitrary detentions and imprisonment in secret places and the practice of torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment which have resulted in unexplained deaths, and to respect the right of persons to life and physical integrity;

8. Expresses its concern at the violent suppression of the ever larger and more widespread popular protests in the face of the incapacity of the authorities to restore human rights and fundamental freedoms, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, which have resulted in serious, flagrant and systematic violation of human rights, including mass detentions and numerous deaths;

9. Once again urges the Chilean authorities to respect the right of Chileans to live in and freely enter and leave their country, without restrictions or conditions, and to cease the practice of "relegation" (assignment of forced residence) and forced exile;

10. Renews its appeal to the Chilean authorities to restore the full enjoyment and exercise of trade union rights, in particular the right to organize trade unions, the right to collective bargaining and the right to strike;

11. Once more urges the Chilean authorities to protect and restore the economic, social and cultural rights of the population and, in particular, to respect the rights intended to preserve the cultural identity and improve the social status of the indigenous population;

12. Concludes, on the basis of the report of the Special Rapporteur, that it is necessary to keep under consideration the situation of human rights in Chile;

13. Calls again upon the Chilean authorities to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur and to submit their comments on his report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fortieth session;

14. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to study in depth the report of the Special Rapporteur at its fortieth session and to take the most appropriate steps for the effective restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile, including the extension of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one more year, and requests the Commission to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

16 December 1983 Meeting 100 89-17-38 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/38/680) by recorded vote (86-15-32), 9 December (meeting 71); 13-nation draft (A/C.3/38/L.63), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Sponsor: Algeria, Cuba, Denmark, France, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, Spain, Sweden, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 3rd Committee 18, 54, 55, 57-71; plenary 100.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tomé and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bangladesh, Brazil, Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Indonesia, Israel, Lebanon, Morocco, Pakistan, Paraguay, Philippines, Thailand, United States, Uruguay.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Bhutan, Burma, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Democratic Kampuchea, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia, Nepal, Niger, Oman, Panama, Peru, Saint Lucia, Singapore, Sudan, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, Yemen, Zaire.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of vote, opposition or reservation was expressed by a number of delegations to what they considered to be a selective approach of the text; they included Australia, Bhutan, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica and Portugal.

Declaring itself in favour of protecting human rights in all regions, Bolivia did not participate in the vote. Acting likewise, Venezuela called for a balanced approach to the question of human rights violations.

Morocco considered the draft to be politically suspect and expressed doubts as regards the reliability and impartiality of information used or provided by the Special Rapporteur; it also regretted the retention of the post of the Special Rapporteur.

Indonesia viewed the text as interference in internal affairs under the pretext of protecting human rights. The Federal Republic of Germany felt that certain elements of the draft, in particular the reference to the 1980 Chilean Constitution, were political and had no relevance to human rights; in addition, little was said in the text of the Government's efforts to re-establish democratic institutions. Canada also observed that the text did not refer to the progress made since August 1983, specifically mentioned by the Special Rapporteur, nor did it mention the information provided by the Chilean Government to the Secretary-General or its recent overtures to opposition groups. Honduras also felt the international community should note the Government's efforts to ensure respect for human rights. The United States said the sponsors did not appear to be interested in encouraging the process of reform and transition to democracy which was under way; they no doubt would prefer a violent confrontation which would make more likely the imposition in Chile of a Marxist-Leninist dictatorship.

Singapore and Trinidad and Tobago abstained, stating that the draft's selective approach undermined the United Nations credibility and universality.

Expressing regret that the draft failed to reflect the positive responses Chile had given in certain specific aspects of concern, the United Kingdom hoped that the information provided by the Government would constitute a first step towards re-establishing the co-operation between Chile, the Commission and its Special Rapporteur; it also had reservations with regard to the Assembly's prejudging the decision of the Commission by inviting the latter to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate.

Australia called on the Chilean Government to establish a dialogue with the opposition to resolve the country's problems and promote basic human rights. Portugal said its support for the text was motivated by its concern at the continuing restrictions on human rights; Chile had twice contacted the Secretary-General on human rights questions and could be expected to co-operate with the United Nations in improving the prevailing human rights situation. Finland felt that a number of provisions of the draft were marked by partiality; it regretted that the Government had refused to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur and appealed to it to change its position in that regard.

Jamaica appealed for the establishment of a High Commissioner for Human Rights, to deal with human rights violations world-wide on an equitable basis.

Chile reiterated its rejection since 1979 of the establishment of what it called selective and arbitrary procedure, and its rejection of the Special Rapporteur, imposed upon it without its prior consent and in violation of the sovereign equality of all Member States. As regards specific provisions in the text, Chile said the reference to the judiciary was made in a perfidious and despicable way, and the denunciation, in paragraph 3, of the "institutionalization of various states of emergency" was ill-considered in view of the fact that the state of emergency had been imposed during what the sponsors' believed was "traditional democratic legal order" under Salvador Allende. Despite assertions made in the seventh preambular paragraph, 3,421 persons had been authorized to return; a special bureau had been set up on 29 October 1983 to deal with their situation. With regard to paragraph 6, Chile said it had been six years since any case of disappearance had been reported; for those who had disappeared before that period, the Government itself had solicited the co-operation of international bodies in the ongoing investigations. As for the charges of violent repression of "the ever larger and more widespread popular protests" at which the Assembly expressed concern in paragraph 8, Chile pointed out that the demonstrations were not spontaneous protests but public meetings announced in advance and authorized by municipal authorities, some of which had given rise to incidents that had resulted in the loss of lives. In so far as the necessary steps had been taken, such incidents were unlikely to recur. Chile added that it would refuse to become involved with any procedure stemming from the Commission or the Assembly, as long as it continued to be subjected to discriminatory treatment; guarantees against such treatment could be provided only by a High Commissioner for Human Rights endowed with the authority to play a universal, apolitical role free from pressure.

El Salvador

Report of the Special Representative. In January 1983, Special Representative José Antonio Pastor Ridruejo submitted to the Commission on Human Rights, in pursuance of its March 1982 request⁽⁵⁴⁾ a report on the human rights situation in El Salvador.⁽⁵⁵⁾ The report updated his November 1982 interim report and analysed information gathered during his visit to the country in September 1982,⁽⁵⁶⁾ as well as information provided since then in interviews. However, the Special Representative stated that the massive character of human rights violations in El Salvador prevented him from investigating each of the cases brought to his attention. In his opinion, members of the State apparatus, violent groups of the extreme right and armed groups of the extreme left bore responsibility for the violations of civil and political rights. While the situation remained unchanged as regards economic, social and cultural rights, he added that the guerrilla opposition's systematic attacks on the country's economy, although presented as aimed at military targets, seriously affected the future enjoyment of those rights by the Salvadorian people. The situation concerning the activity of the judiciary was still unsatisfactory; despite a slight increase in the punishment of human rights violations, the Special Representative had not heard that any of the proceedings had resulted in a sentence.

Regarding the continued armed clashes between the regular army and the guerrilla forces, he believed that the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims and the 1977 Protocols⁽⁵⁷⁾ were still not properly complied with, notwithstanding cases in which both sides had given humanitarian treatment to, and even released, persons captured in combat.

The Special Representative stated that while El Salvador had the right to adopt emergency measures to deal with the existing situation of violence and armed confrontation, nothing justified the use of such measures to violate fundamental and inalienable human rights, including foremost the right to life. He considered the restoration of civil peace a prerequisite for respect for civil, political and other rights, and urged the Government to consider entering into a dialogue with all political forces in the country with a view to ending armed confrontation.

In addition, he recommended to the Government the following measures: the repeal of all legal enactments and other measures that were incompatible with international human rights instruments; institution of real government control over the armed forces, security forces, and all armed organizations and individuals; adoption of legal measures to prevent and punish human rights violations; mass campaigns to promote respect for human rights; and administrative and social reforms.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a resolution of 8 March 1983, adopted by a roll-call vote of 23 to 6, with 10 abstentions⁽³⁸⁾ the Commission expressed deepest concern that human rights violations of the most serious nature continued in El Salvador, declared once more that the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions on the laws of war were applicable to the armed conflict in El Salvador, and requested all Salvadorian parties involved to apply a minimum standard of human rights protection and humane treatment to civilians. It reaffirmed the right of the Salvadorian people freely to determine their future without outside interference. It reiterated its appeal to States not to intervene and to suspend all military support, so as to allow the political forces in that country to restore peace and security and the establishment of a democratic system.

The Commission extended the mandate of the Special Representative for another year and requested him to report to the General Assembly in 1983 and to the Commission in 1984.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/144 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in El Salvador

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/29 of 8 March 1983, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Representative on the situation of human rights in El Salvador for another year and to request him to submit his report on further developments in the situation of human rights in El Salvador to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fortieth session, and requested the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/144

29-3-19 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/61) by recorded vote (28-3-15), 23 May (meeting 18); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1983/13); agenda item 10. Meeting number. ESC 15.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Austria, Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Congo, Denmark, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, India, Japan, Kenya, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Suriname, Swaziland, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

Against: Argentina, Brazil, United States.

Abstaining: Bangladesh, China, Colombia, Djibouti, Ecuador, Fiji, Lebanon, Liberia, Malaysia, Mali, Pakistan, Peru, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Thailand, Tunisia.

China said foreign intervention, particularly by the super-Powers, was responsible for the unrest in Central America; for peace and stability in the region, the people should decide for themselves on their domestic affairs and their destiny. Venezuela stated that its affirmative vote was an unequivocal expression of concern for human rights.

Sub-Commission action. On 5 September⁽³⁹⁾ the Sub-Commission, expressing the belief that efforts to restore human rights protection would be more easily obtained if all States abstained from intervening in the internal situation in El Salvador and from supplying weapons or military assistance to it, suggested that the Special Representative also give attention to the respect, or violation, of humanitarian law in armed conflict. It requested the Secretary-General to report in 1984 on the work of Special Representative and on the Commission's deliberations on it.

Further report. The Special Representative's interim report on the situation in El Salvador, prepared in accordance with the Commission's March request, was transmitted to the General Assembly by a November note of the Secretary-General⁽⁴⁰⁾ As in previous reports, the Special Representative analysed information from Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as information gathered during his visit to the country from 11 to 17 September, where he interviewed a number of persons, including political prisoners, and visited places of detention, a hospital where guerrilla fighters were treated and a farming village which had suffered in the conflict. The Special Representative also interviewed, among others, Salvadorians in exile in Mexico.

He reported that the Government extended full co-operation and its senior authorities assured him of their concern to improve the human rights situation in the country. Among the measures taken in that regard were the prohibition, by legislative decree of the Constituent Assembly, of all armed paramilitary groups, left or right; implementation of the Amnesty and Rehabilitation of Citizens Act proclaimed by the Constituent Assembly in May; and the efforts of the governmental Human Rights Commission. According to information given to the Special Representative, the Commission's consideration of 504 complaints during the first six months of 1983 resulted, among other things, in the release of 45 persons detained in military establishments and location of 91 missing persons in various military centres. The Commission also arranged for 152 persons benefiting from the Amnesty Act to be received by Australia, Belgium and Canada; assisted foreigners detained in military establishments; and conducted campaigns in various sectors and institutions—including the armed forces and security bodies—for the promotion and protection of human rights. The Special Representative learned that 1,137 persons—554 political offenders and 583 armed insurgents—had benefited from the Amnesty Act. As regards information on the arrest and murder of some prisoners released under the Act, the authorities told the Special Representative that those were persons released by judicial decision outside the scope of the Act, and that arrest and murder had been carried out by unidentified groups.

The Special Representative concluded that, despite the Government's declared intentions and demonstration of some efforts to improve the human rights situation, serious, massive and persistent violations of civil and political rights continued, including a large number of political murders of non-combatants. The capacity of the judicial system to investigate and punish human rights violations remained inadequate. The Special Representative again recommended that the Government as well as the opposition urgently end attacks on human life, and endeavour to establish a peaceful, democratic and pluralist coexistence. He recommended that the Government adopt measures enabling all parties to participate in future elections, in such a way that in particular the lives, physical integrity and freedom of all candidates, especially those belonging to the left-wing opposition, were safeguarded. In addition, he reiterated the recommendations made in his January report (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/101 on 16 December by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Conscious of its responsibility in all circumstances to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reiterating that the Governments of all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to carry out the responsibilities they have undertaken under various international human rights instruments,

Determined to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur and to take measures to restore respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling that, in its resolutions 35/192 of 15 December 1980, 36/155 of 16 December 1981 and 37/185 of 17 December 1982, it expressed deep concern at the situation of human rights in El Salvador, especially in view of the death of thousands of people and the climate of violence and insecurity prevailing in that country, as well as the impunity of paramilitary forces and other armed groups,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 32(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, in which the Commission decided to appoint a Special Representative on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, 1982/28 of 11 March 1982 and 1983/29 of 8 March 1983, whereby the Commission extended the mandate of the Special Representative for another year and requested him to report, inter alia, to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session,

Taking note with grave concern of the interim report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights, in which the continuation of a climate of violence and insecurity in El Salvador, characterized by armed clashes, acts of economic sabotage and grave and large-scale violations of human rights, as well as the failure of the Salvadorian authorities to prevent these constant violations of human rights in that country, are confirmed,

Bearing in mind that in its resolution 37/185 the General Assembly observed that the elections which were held in El Salvador in March 1982 had not led to the cessation of violence or to improvement in the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country,

Noting with satisfaction that the El Salvador Peace Commission, officials and special envoys of other Governments within and outside the region, as well as the representative political forces, have initiated talks in the search for a negotiated comprehensive political solution,

1. Commends the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights for his interim report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador;

2. Expresses its deepest concern at the fact that, as indicated in the report of the Special Representative, the gravest violations of human rights are persisting in El Salvador and that, as a result, the sufferings of the Salvadorian people are continuing, and regrets that the appeals for the cessation of the acts of violence made by the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the international community as a whole have not been heeded;

3. Again draws the attention of the Salvadorian parties concerned to the fact that the rules of international law, as contained in article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocols I and II thereto, are applicable to armed conflicts not of an international character, such as that in El Salvador, and requests all parties to apply a minimum standard of protection of human rights and of humane treatment of the civilian population;

4. Takes note of resolution 1983/18 of 5 September 1983 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission suggested that the Special Representative give attention in his report to respect for or violation of humanitarian law in armed conflict;

5. Recommends that the reforms necessary for the solution of the economic and social problems which are at the root of the internal conflict in El Salvador should be put into effect so as to allow the effective exercise of civil and political rights in that country, and reaffirms the right of the Salvadorian people freely to determine their political, economic and social future without interference from outside and in an atmosphere free from intimidation and terror;

6. Calls upon the Government of El Salvador and other political forces to intensify their talks and to work towards the creation of suitable conditions in the common search for a negotiated comprehensive political solution which will put an end to the internal armed conflict and establish a lasting peace which will allow the full exercise both of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights by all Salvadorians;

7. Once again urges all States to abstain from intervening in the internal situation in El Salvador and to suspend all supplies of arms and any type of military assistance, so as to allow the restoration of peace and security and the establishment of a democratic system based on full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

8. Expresses its deep concern at reports which prove that government forces regularly resort to bombarding urban areas in El Salvador that are not military objectives, and its concern for the fate of several hundred thousand displaced persons who are currently located in camps in which they are subjected to abuse and in which not even the minimum conditions of internment, in terms of either humane treatment or material needs, are observed;

9. Also expresses its deep concern at the resurgence of disappearances and murders of persons belonging to various sectors of the civilian population, for which the so-called "death squads" claim responsibility, and urges that these activities be investigated with a view to punishing those responsible;

10. Expresses its concern at the consequences of the damage done to the economy of El Salvador as a result of the attacks on the economic infrastructure attributable for the most part, according to the report of the Special Representative, to the opposition forces;

11. Reiterates its urgent appeal to the Government of El Salvador to fulfil its obligations towards its citizens and to assume its international responsibilities in this regard by taking the necessary steps to ensure that all its agencies, including its security forces and other armed organizations operating under its authority, fully respect human rights and fundamental freedoms;

12. Urges the competent authorities of El Salvador to establish the necessary conditions to enable the judiciary to uphold the rule of law, prosecuting and punishing speedily and effectively those responsible for the grave violations of human rights which are being committed in that country;

13. Reiterates its appeal to all Salvadorian parties in the conflict to co-operate fully and not to interfere with the activities of humanitarian organizations dedicated to alleviating the suffering of the civilian population, wherever these organizations operate in the country;

14. Deplores the violent death of Marianela Garcia Villas, President of the Commission of Human Rights of El Salvador, and, given the contradictory reports on the matter, requests the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights to investigate the circumstances of her death;

15. Renews its appeal to the Government of El Salvador, as well as all other parties concerned, to continue to co-operate with the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights;

16. Decides to keep under consideration, during its thirty-ninth session, the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador, in order to examine this situation anew in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

16 December 1983 Meeting 100 84-14-45 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/38/680) by recorded vote (79-13-41), 9 December (meeting 71); 10-nation draft (A/C.3/38/L62), orally revised on proposal by Morocco and further orally revised; agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Algeria, Denmark, France, Greece, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 3rd Committee 18, 54, 55, 57-71; plenary 100.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bangladesh, Brazil, Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Indonesia, Pakistan, Paraguay, Philippines, Saint Lucia, United States, Uruguay.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Bhutan, Burma, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gabon, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Lebanon, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Morocco, Nepal, Niger, Oman, Panama, Peru, Romania, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, Yemen, Zaire.

The draft resolution was revised on an oral proposal by Morocco, deleting, in paragraph 11, the words "or with its permission" after "operating under its authority".

Indonesia considered the text to be an interference in El Salvador's internal affairs under the pretext of protecting human rights. Haiti found it disturbing that consideration was given to the human rights situation in only one part of the world. Singapore and Trinidad and Tobago said the draft's selective approach undermined the United Nations credibility. Honduras rejected a selective approach, and added that mention should be made of the efforts of the Government to ensure respect for human rights. Bhutan asserted that human rights violations occurred in various parts of the world. Colombia, the Dominican Republic and Ecuador also criticized selectivity and discriminating criteria. Sharing that view, Jamaica appealed for the establishment of a high commissioner for human rights, to deal with violations world-wide on an equitable basis.

Declaring itself in favour of protection of human rights in all regions, Bolivia did not participate in the vote. Acting likewise, Venezuela called for a balanced approach to the question of human rights violations.

China felt that the instability in El Salvador and the region was due to the hegemonism of a super-Power which intervened in the internal affairs; the question of human rights could be solved only by allowing the peoples themselves to confront the situation.

Canada regarded the draft as unbalanced, in that it did not take account of certain indications demonstrating the Government's genuine concern for human rights. Canada felt that the frequent use in the text of the word "negotiated" conferred the same degree of constitutional legitimacy on the parties engaged in the negotiations in El Salvador which were no longer confined to the Government and opposition forces. Canada recognized the Government as legitimate and thus fully responsible for the administration of the country, including protection of fundamental rights; talk of "negotiations" was likely to undermine the Government's authority and diminish its responsibilities.

Viewing the draft as one-sided and unbalanced, the United States failed to hold the guerrillas responsible for the climate of fear and the acts of economic sabotage in the country. The Government of El Salvador was struggling to attain the institutional authority necessary to eliminate human rights abuses; improvements in that situation had been steady, although not dramatic, and much of the violence would cease with the end of the Marxist-Leninist insurgency. The United States stated further that paragraph 8 was wilfully inaccurate in that there was no proof of regular bombardment of civilian targets, whereas evidence pointed to the guerrillas interfering with military communications so as to direct fire against civilians rather than military targets. Attributing all the human rights problems to the Government served the cause of the insurgent forces whose only purpose, the United States said, was to use violence to create a revolutionary situation in which the Government would have no alternative but to intensify repression.

Costa Rica abstained in order not to prejudice the atmosphere conducive to negotiations by the Contadora Group.

The United Kingdom, while viewing the text as more balanced than in previous years, regarded as unacceptable the appeal for suspension of military assistance in the current circumstances; the régime, established following the 1982 elections in which 75 per cent of the population were reliably reported to have participated, had the right to defend itself. It deplored the fact that the full co-operation of the Salvadorian authorities with the Special Representative had not been mentioned in the text.

The Federal Republic of Germany said that for the first time an appeal was made to all parties, including the opposition forces, to respect the rules of international law applicable to armed conflict; on the other hand, none of the positive elements noted by the Special Representative in his report appeared in the text. In addition, it had serious reservations on paragraphs 6 and 7. Finland expressed reservations with regard to a number of provisions which, it felt, were marked by partiality. Portugal reserved its position on the wording of the ninth preambular paragraph, as well as paragraphs 6 and 7, adding that the text still stated, in paragraph 5, that the effective exercise of civil and political rights depended on a solution to the economic and social problems, and failed to stress sufficiently the need for the Salvadorians to express their true aspirations in free and democratic elections.

Belgium expressed the hope that no preconditions would be set for the efforts aimed at restoring representative democracy. Cuba considered the draft an appropriate response to the situation in El Salvador.

El Salvador stated that the text was not constructive for the promotion of human rights; it was partisan, interventionist and—like the drafts on Chile and Guatemala—ineffectual and irrelevant because of tendentious and biased wording. In particular, El Salvador objected that the text: indirectly criticized the free and open elections in which all political factions had participated; placed on an equal footing a legitimate Government and opposition minority groups, a point of view no country respecting its own interests could accept; disregarded developments in reform and used language that relegated those events to oblivion; left El Salvador without the means of defence against its opponents who resorted to violence in order to take power; referred, without proof, to regular bombarding of urban areas which were not military objectives, actions which were carried out by the armed opposition groups; and gave the Commission power beyond its established terms of reference.

Guatemala

By a note of 4 February 1983,⁽⁶¹⁾ the Chairman informed the Commission on Human Rights that he had appointed in December 1982, in accordance with the Commission's March 1982 request⁽⁶²⁾ Elizabeth Odio Benito (Costa Rica) as Spécial Rapporteur to study the human rights situation in Guatemala. Expressing the desire that the Special Rapporteur should not be a person who had participated as representative of a country in human rights debates, Guatemala, by a letter of 18 January 1983, had requested that another candidate be proposed before the Commission's session.

On 7 February⁽⁶³⁾ the Commission decided to continue examination of the situation of human rights in Guatemala and, in view of the wish expressed for information on developments there since March 1982, requested the Secretary-General to prepare a note containing a list of material received by the United Nations Secretariat, together with an indication of its contents. Following that request, the Secretariat, by a note of 15 February⁽⁶⁴⁾ transmitted a list of legislation, communications by the Government, and documents by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

By a resolution of 8 March, adopted by a roll-call vote of 27 to 4, with 12 abstentions,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Commission reiterated its concern at the continuing reports of massive human rights violations in Guatemala, particularly reports of violence against non-combatants, widespread repression, and killing and massive displacement of rural and indigenous people. It urged the Government to ensure that its authorities and agencies, including its security forces, fully respected human rights, suspend immediately any executions ordered by special courts, facilitate the entry of representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) into the country and investigate the fate of disappeared persons with a view to informing their relatives of their whereabouts. The Commission also called on Governments to refrain from supplying arms and military assistance as long as serious human rights violations in Guatemala continued to be reported.

The Commission again requested the Chairman to appoint a Special Rapporteur to study the human rights situation in Guatemala, and requested the Rapporteur to present an interim report to the General Assembly in 1983 and a final report to the Commission in 1984.

On 11 March, the Chairman announced the appointment of Viscount Colville of Culross (United Kingdom) as Special Rapporteur.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted decision 1983/148 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Guatemala

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/37 of 8 March 1983, welcomed the appointment by the Chairman of the Commission of a Special Rapporteur of the Commission whose mandate will be to make a thorough study of the human rights situation in Guatemala, based on all information which he may deem relevant, including any comments and information which the Government of Guatemala may wish to submit, and endorsed the Commission's decision to request that the Special Rapporteur present an interim report to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session and a final report to the Commission at its fortieth session. The Council requested the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur.

Sub-Commission action. By a letter of 18 August⁽⁶⁶⁾ Guatemala informed the Chairman of the Sub-Commission that it would be inadvisable for the Sub-Commission to take up the question of Guatemala in 1983 while the Special Rapporteur's report was still in preparation. Guatemala stated that it would therefore not participate in the Sub-Commission's 1983 session and rejected any groundless comments about the situation in the country that could interfere with the Special Rapporteur's mandate.

By a resolution adopted on 5 September by 17 votes to none, with 3 abstentions,⁽⁶⁷⁾ the Sub-Commission expressed deep concern that the persistent and systematic nature of human rights violations in Guatemala had made the effective exercise of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights impossible. The Sub-Commission called on the Government to refrain from forced displacement of the Indian communities and their confinement in strategic hamlets, as well as massacres scorched-earth policies and forced disappearances, and called on all parties to the conflict in Guatemala to assure the application of international norms of humanitarian law in war to protect the civilian non-combatant population. It insisted that the Government ensure compliance of the security forces with humanitarian law, applicable to armed conflicts of a non-international character, and urged it to facilitate the entrance of international humanitarian bodies to assist victims of that conflict. It urged Governments to abstain from providing arms or military assistance to Guatemala as long as reports of serious human rights violations continued.

Guatemala, in a letter of 5 September⁽⁶⁸⁾ protested the manner in which the Sub-Commission dealt with the human rights situation and rejected the resolution as being without foundation, it having ignored the reality and having interfered with the work of the Special Rapporteur.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. By a note of 4 November⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report by the Special Rapporteur on the human rights situation in Guatemala, prepared in accordance with the Commission's March request (see above).

The Special Rapporteur stated that, during his visit to Guatemala from 25 June to 5 July, he had received full co-operation of the Government and the military. The report was based on information collected up to July, with some updating following the change in the Presidency.

In addition to being a party to various international instruments, Guatemala had adopted on 29 March a decree-law approving the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees⁽⁷⁰⁾ and the 1967 Protocol to it⁽⁷¹⁾ While it had not ratified for technical reasons the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights⁽⁷²⁾ the standards set by them served as the report's foundation. The legal situation in the country had changed since the termination of the state of siege on 23 March, the Special Rapporteur added.

After giving a historical background of the situation in Guatemala, the report dealt with: the current conflict in the country; aspects relating to the indigenous population; current reforms; "model" villages protected by the army against the guerrillas and settlements of internal refugees; religious freedom; special tribunals; and refugees in Mexico.

In his conclusions, the Special Rapporteur stated that the demands and ambitions of the revolutionaries—unlikely to be accepted by the establishment—led to a continuation of the armed conflict which had infringed on civil and political rights. The right to life had unquestionably been violated in circumstances where confrontation in the civil war could not provide an excuse. The new administration had indicated its intention to continue with a credible programme, introduced by the last military Government, that could lead to a genuine improvement. However, time must elapse before any definitive judgement could be formed on the extent to which a comprehensive improvement in the human rights situation had actually been achieved.

The Special Rapporteur considered it desirable that the following policies be actively pursued within Guatemala: practical attempts, using recent experience and the latest amnesty on 8 August, to persuade the internal refugees, whose predicament was increasingly serious, to emerge from hiding in the mountains and forests; encouragement of humane and efficient reception of the returning refugees; and the longer-term plans of public land distribution, opportunities to engage in agriculture for cash and subsistence foodstuffs, projects for infrastructure, new community buildings, and extension of the road and airstrip network.

With regard to human rights under the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, he suggested the following: continuation of the work of the newly established Supreme Electoral Tribunal with adherence to the new President's expressed promise of a timetable for the election, free of intrigue or vested interest; urgent decision by the Supreme Court on changes to ensure the proper rights of a defendant in all criminal cases, as instructed by the new Government; prevention of disappearances at the hands of the authorities; and encouragement of the new Confederation of Trade Unions, together with new individual unions, to play their part in the country's economic process. The Special Rapporteur asserted, in connection with freedom of expression and freedom of the independent university, that, possibly, the borderline between freedom of expression and subversion was very narrow in the context of the conflict in the country, and that this area would be of continuing interest in the following months.

The Special Rapporteur, who had had an interview with the President of the Supreme Court, observed: that there had been much criticism of the Court's refusal to grant amparo in the case of certain persons sentenced to death earlier in the year by a Special Tribunal; that it was impossible to come to a conclusion on the effectiveness of the Court's powers of supervision if the reasoned judgements were not published; and that, with a fundamental reconstitution of the Supreme Court, it seemed possible that a new series of law reports, bypassing the existing backlog, could be immediately begun. Despite the manifest independence of the Electoral Tribunal, there was a project, in conjunction with the preparation of new electoral registers, to computerize that information under the direction not of the Tribunal but of a senior army officer, a fact that had raised suspicions about the use to which the information might be put.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/100 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Reiterating that the Governments of all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolution 37/184 of 17 December 1982,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/37 of 8 March 1983, in which the Commission reiterated its profound concern at the continuing reports of massive violations of human rights in Guatemala,

Noting that the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in its resolution 1983/12 of 5 September 1983, recognized that in Guatemala there existed an armed conflict of a non-international character, which stemmed from economic, social and political factors of a structural nature, and that within that conflict the security forces and government institutions had not respected the norms of international humanitarian law,

Expressing its satisfaction at the appointment of a Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights and taking note of the co-operation extended to the Special Rapporteur by the Government of Guatemala,

Taking note of the interim report by the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Guatemala, submitted in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/37,

Welcoming the lifting of the state of siege and the abolition of the special tribunals,

Disturbed at the large number of persons who have disappeared, including those reported to have been tried by the special tribunals, and who, despite appeals from various international organizations, remain unaccounted for,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the continuing massive violations of human rights in Guatemala, particularly the violence against non-combatants, and the widespread repression, killing and massive displacement of rural and indigenous populations, which are reported to have increased recently;

2. Calls upon the Government of Guatemala to refrain both from forcefully displacing people belonging to rural and indigenous populations and from the practice of coercing people into participation in civilian patrols, leading to human rights violations;

3. Urges the Government of Guatemala to take effective measures to ensure that all its authorities and agencies, including its security forces, fully respect human rights and fundamental freedoms;

4. Requests the Government of Guatemala to investigate and clarify the fate of persons who have disappeared and are still unaccounted for, including those reported to have been tried by the special tribunals;

5. Calls upon the Government of Guatemala to establish a system for the revocation of convictions and sentences passed by the special tribunals, now abolished;

6. Appeals to the Government of Guatemala to allow international humanitarian organizations to render assistance in investigating the fate of persons who have disappeared, with a view to informing their relatives of their whereabouts, and to visit detainees or prisoners, and to allow them to bring assistance to the civilian population in areas of conflict;

7. Appeals also to all parties concerned in Guatemala to ensure the application of the relevant norms of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts of a non-international character to protect the civilian population and to seek an end to all acts of violence;

8. Calls upon Governments to refrain from supplying arms and other military assistance as long as serious human rights violations in Guatemala continue to be reported;

9. Invites the Government of Guatemala and other parties concerned to continue co-operating with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights;

10. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to study carefully the report of its Special Rapporteur, as well as other information pertaining to the situation in Guatemala, and to consider further steps for securing effective respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all in that country;

11. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Guatemala at its thirty-ninth session.

16 December 1983 Meeting 100 85-15-44 (recorded vote)

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Bhutan, Burma, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gabon, Guinea, India, Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Lebanon, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Niger, Oman, Panama, Peru, Romania, Saint Lucia, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, United Republic of Cameroon, Yemen, Zaire.

Guatemala said the Special Rapporteur had objectively described the human rights situation in the country and had made recommendations for solutions that would gradually enable the Government to overcome the crisis; it deeply regretted that some countries had chosen to pay no heed to the Special Rapporteur's report, thus weakening his mandate.

Guatemala rejected the draft resolution for its selective condemnation, biased and politicized approach to the human rights situation in that country and for not reflecting the Special Rapporteur's conclusions in his report. In this context, Guatemala reiterated its support for the appointment of a high commissioner for human rights so that year by year the Centre for Human Rights could prepare a report on the human rights situation in each Member State.

Referring to specific provisions of the draft, Guatemala found unacceptable the assertion in the fourth preambular paragraph to an armed conflict of a non-international character; it disregarded Guatemala's call to the Sub-Commission to await the Special Rapporteur's conclusions before taking a decision; also, Guatemala had not been allowed to express its point of view during the Sub-Commission's debate. As regards paragraphs 4 and 8, Guatemala said the special tribunals had been abolished on 1 September 1983 and pending cases had been referred back to ordinary courts; no one tried during the existence of the special tribunals had disappeared, many cases had been dropped, and the suspects released. Guatemala rejected paragraphs 1 to 3 and 5 as not in keeping with the Special Rapporteur's conclusions. It also rejected the appeal contained in paragraph 6, saying that the paragraph was incomplete and did not reflect its willingness to co-operate with international humanitarian organizations; the Government had already authorized representatives of such organizations to take note of relevant developments in the country.

Colombia said the draft failed to welcome Guatemala's readiness to agree to a dialogue with the Special Rapporteur, much less recognize that his report encouraged dialogue and enabled the United Nations to exert the necessary pressure for change; the request to the Commission to study the report as well as other information pertaining to the situation in Guatemala meant that the Special Rapporteur's report would be put on an equal footing with often tendentious reports drafted by groups opposing the Government.

The United States said that, by speaking of a non-international conflict in Guatemala, the draft resolution ignored the training of insurgents in Cuba and Nicaragua and the weapons provided by the Soviet bloc; further, the text failed to mention violations of international law by the guerrillas who continued to kill non-combatants and utilize kidnapping as a political weapon. Paragraph 3 urged the Government, but not the guerrillas, to respect human rights, which seemed to suggest that there was no insurgency. No account was taken of the fact recognized by the Special Rapporteur that human rights violations were on a much reduced scale compared to 1981. Paragraph 6 ignored the Government's open-door policy towards responsible human rights groups, and paragraph 8 took no note of the prohibition of covert shipment of arms and military equipment to the guerrillas. The thrust of the draft was that the Government was fully to blame for the situation in the country and did not have the right to use force in opposition to the armed guerrilla insurgency.

Indonesia considered the draft resolution an interference in Guatemala's internal affairs under the pretext of protecting human rights.

Haiti and Honduras found disturbing the selective approach singling out particular countries. Also deploring the text's selectivity, the United Kingdom expressed doubts about the applicability of the references to "non-combatants" and "international humanitarian law" in paragraphs 1 and 7.

The draft's selective approach was rejected by several others, among them Bhutan, the Dominican Republic and Ecuador. Singapore and Trinidad and Tobago stated that they would abstain because of the selective condemnation of human rights, an approach which undermined the United Nations' credibility and universality. Similar views were voiced by Bolivia and Venezuela for their non-participation in the vote.

The Federal Republic of Germany had serious reservations particularly as regards the call on Governments, in paragraph 8, to refrain from supplying arms to Guatemala. The text did not take account of the fact that the Government was not alone in using armed force and that military operations were also part of the guerrillas' strategy; it did not acknowledge the positive initiatives such as the lifting of the state of siege and initiation of democratic reforms. Further, the text reflected only partially the Special Rapporteur's conclusions, and the fifth preambular paragraph took note only in a somewhat laconic manner of the Government's co-operation while it had, in fact, fully co-operated. Tunisia welcomed the co-operation between the Special Rapporteur and the Government, as well as such developments as the lifting of the state of siege and the abolition of the special tribunals. Morocco said the draft resolution took no account of the positive strides made by the Government, and mentioned by the Special Rapporteur, in tackling the root causes of discontent and violence.

Expressing alarm at the violence and internal conflict in Guatemala, Portugal deplored that the draft failed to mention that the Government was not solely to blame for it. Finland had reservations with regard to a number of provisions of the draft which, it felt, were marked by partiality. Australia felt that despite such reservations, the international community was duty-bound to express its concern to the Government.

In Cuba's opinion, the draft resolution was an appropriate response to the situation in Guatemala.

Paraguay

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, on 6 September 1983,⁽⁷³⁾ recommended that the Commission on Human Rights invite Paraguay to consider ending the state of siege in order to encourage the promotion of, and respect for, human rights in the country.

The Sub-Commission made that recommendation taking into account the conclusions of the Special Rapporteur on the status of human rights in situations of a state of siege or emergency (see above, under CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS). In so doing, the Sub-Commission noted that the state of siege had been used on a permanent basis in Paraguay since 1954 through its renewal every three months, and that recent information pointed to a growing incidence of threats to individual liberty, resulting in arbitrary detention and cruel treatment of prisoners of opinion, as well as of violations of the right to due and equitable process, and serious limitations to the freedom of expression.

Uruguay

By a decision of 31 August 1983⁽⁷⁴⁾ the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to communicate a text to the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights for transmission by him to the Uruguayan authorities. By that text, the Sub-Commission expressed grave concern over information regarding the health of a mathematician, José Luis Massera, and requested the Government to show an act of clemency and end his detention on humanitarian grounds.

Referring to the Sub-Commission's decision, Uruguay, by a letter of 6 September⁽⁷⁵⁾ stated that the person in question had been imprisoned as a result of regular criminal proceedings. As regards allegations of torture and bad health of the detainee, Uruguay said it had submitted updated reports on the state of his health in accordance with the confidential procedure established by the Economic and Social Council in 1970⁽¹⁾ for dealing with allegations of human rights violations (see above). Contrary to a statement that the detainee was an intellectual of international repute, not a politician, Uruguay said it was well-known that he had served as senator and Secretary-General of the Communist Party.

Middle East

Territories occupied by Israel

During 1983, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights, its Sub-Commission and the General Assembly. This was in addition to the consideration of political and other aspects by the Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and other bodies (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. Following consideration of two January 1983 reports of the Secretary-General on human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine, the Commission on Human Rights adopted on 15 February four relevant resolutions: two on human rights violations in the territories, and one each on Israeli occupation of the Syrian Golan Heights and on self-determination for the Palestinian people.

In the first report⁽⁷⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, following the Commission's February 1982 decision⁽⁷⁷⁾ a seminar on violations of human rights in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel had been held at Geneva from 29 November to 3 December 1982.⁽⁷⁸⁾

By the second report⁽⁷⁹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Commission that, in accordance with its February 1982 resolutions⁽⁷⁷⁾ he had brought them to the attention of the General Assembly, the Security Council, Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, and other organizations. He noted that, in response to the Commission's request, DPI had taken steps to ensure wide publicity for the first of the 1982 resolutions.

By the first 15 February 1983 resolution, adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 1, with 13 abstentions⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Commission reaffirmed that occupation itself constituted a fundamental violation of the human rights of the civilian population of the territories. It reiterated the alarm expressed by the Committee on Israeli practices that Israel's policy in the territories denied the right to self-determination and was the source of systematic human rights violations, it rejected Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and change the character and status of the city and of the territories. It declared that Israel's grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (the fourth Geneva Convention) were war crimes and an affront to humanity.

The Commission strongly condemned Israeli measures to promote and expand the establishment of settler colonies, as well as other practices, such as: annexation of parts of the territories, including Jerusalem; continuing establishment and expansion of settlements; arming of settlers and their acts of violence against Arabs; evacuation and displacement of Arabs and the denial of their right to return; confiscation and expropriation of Arab property; destruction and demolition of Arab houses; mass arrests, collective punishments, detention, ill-treatment, torture and inhuman conditions in prisons; pillaging of archaeological and cultural property; interference with religious freedoms and family customs; systematic repression against cultural and educational institutions; illegal exploitation of natural resources; and dismantling of municipal services by dismissing elected mayors and municipal councils and forbidding Arab aid funds.

The Commission called on Israel to take immediate steps for the return of displaced Arabs to their homes and property; to implement Security Council resolutions on the return of the expelled Mayors of Hebron and Halhul; to release all Arabs detained as a result of their struggle for self-determination; and to cease all acts of torture and ill-treatment of prisoners. It reiterated its call to States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize changes carried out by Israel in the territories, including Jerusalem, and to avoid taking action or extending aid which might be used by Israel in its annexation and colonization policies. It urged Israel to refrain from policies and practices violating human rights and to report to it in 1984 through the Secretary-General. It requested the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, to recommend to the Security Council adoption against Israel of measures under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, for its persistence in violating the human rights of the population of the territories.

By the second resolution, adopted by a roll-call vote of 39 to 1, with 3 abstentions⁽⁸¹⁾ the Commission expressed deep concern at the consequence of Israel's refusal to apply the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories, including Jerusalem. It reaffirmed that the Convention was applicable to all the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and condemned Israel's failure to acknowledge its applicability. It called on Israel to abide by and respect the obligations under the United Nations Charter, the Convention and other international instruments, and urged once more all States parties to the Convention to ensure Israel's compliance.

By the third resolution, adopted by a roll-call vote of 27 to 2, with 13 abstentions⁽⁸²⁾ the Commission condemned Israel for its failure to comply with Security Council and Assembly resolutions demanding that Israel rescind its 1981 decision to apply Israeli law to the occupied Golan Heights⁽⁸³⁾. The Commission reaffirmed the continued applicability to the territory of the Hague Convention of 1907 and the fourth Geneva Convention, and called the continued occupation of the Golan Heights since 1967 and its effective annexation in 1981, as well as the inhuman treatment of the Syrian population, a violation of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽⁸⁴⁾ the fourth Geneva Convention and United Nations resolutions. It strongly deplored the negative vote of a permanent member of the Security Council which had prevented the Council from adopting against Israel measures under Chapter VII of the Charter. The Commission firmly emphasized the necessity of total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from all Palestinian and Syrian territories as an essential prerequisite for a comprehensive and just Middle East peace.

In the fourth 15 February resolution, on the right of peoples to self-determination (see above, under CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS), the Commission condemned Israel's aggression and practices against the Palestinians, condemning in the strongest terms the September 1982 massacre at the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps⁽⁸⁵⁾ which, it decided, was an act of genocide. The Commission requested the General Assembly to declare 17 September a day to commemorate the victims, and expressed its grave concern that the Palestinians would be exposed to grave dangers such as the massacre until a just and equitable solution to the Palestine problem had been implemented.

In accordance with the Commission's request⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly⁽⁸⁶⁾ in July 1983 the conclusions, recommendations and appeal adopted by the 1982 seminar (see above).

Sub-Commission action. By a resolution of 31 August, adopted by 15 votes to 1, with 5 abstentions⁽⁸⁷⁾ the Sub-Commission affirmed that the Israeli occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, was a source of increasing human rights violations and of tension in the region. It reiterated that the Palestinians had inalienable rights to self-determination without external interference, to return to their homes and property, and to the establishment of a fully independent and sovereign State of Palestine.

The Sub-Commission reaffirmed that the future of the Palestinians could be decided only with its full participation, through PLO as its representative organ. It affirmed that the Palestinian and other freedom fighters detained by Israel were entitled to benefit of the status of prisoner of war, according to the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War (the third Geneva Convention), and that the Palestinians and other civilians arbitrarily detained by Israel should be immediately released.

The Sub-Commission reaffirmed the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the Israeli-occupied territories and expressed deep concern at the consequences of Israel's refusal to apply that Convention. It also expressed deep concern that, until a just and equitable solution to the Palestine problem had been implemented, the Palestinians would be exposed to grave dangers such as the September 1982 massacre at the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps, which had been qualified as an act of genocide and for which Israel's responsibility had been established.

The Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission the adoption of a draft resolution, condemning Israel for its continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories and for its persistence in colonizing them, reaffirming that such measures violated the 1907 Hague Convention and the fourth Geneva Convention, and calling on Israel to withdraw immediately from the occupied territories, in order to restore to the Palestinians their inalienable national rights.

Persons detained by Israel

By a note of 2 February⁽⁸⁸⁾ the Secretary-General presented to the Commission on Human Rights a report by the International Centre of Information on Lebanese and Palestinian Prisoners, Deportees and Disappeared Persons, transmitted to him on 31 January by PLO.

Expressing alarm at the situation of Palestinian, Lebanese and other detainees held by Israel as a result of the June 1982 invasion of Lebanon (see also POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX), the Commission, by a resolution of 7 March, adopted by a roll-call vote of 40 to none, with 2 abstentions⁽⁸⁹⁾ strongly reaffirmed that the fundamental human rights, as accepted by international law and formulated in international instruments, remained fully applicable in cases of armed conflict. It urged Israel to recognize, according to the third Geneva Convention, the status of prisoners of war to all combatants caught during the war in Lebanon and treat them accordingly; to release immediately all civilians arbitrarily detained since the beginning of that war; to allow ICRC to visit all those in detention centres under its control; and to ensure protection to the Palestinian civilians, including the released detainees, in the areas under its occupation, according to the fourth Geneva Convention and the 1907 Hague Convention. The Commission called on all parties to the conflict to secure for ICRC all available information concerning missing and disappeared persons in the wake of the invasion of Lebanon.

Mass exoduses

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In January 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report on human rights and mass exoduses.⁽⁹⁰⁾ It contained views and communications received, in reply to a December 1982 General Assembly invitation⁽⁹¹⁾ from 15 Governments, three United Nations bodies, five specialized agencies and 25 NGOs on a 1981 study by the Commission's Special Rapporteur Sadruddin Aga Khan⁽⁹²⁾

Reaffirming its solidarity with the millions of victims of mass exoduses and displacements, the Commission, on 8 March 1983⁽⁹³⁾ called on States fully to respect and promote principles of international law and practice guaranteeing such victims protection and assistance. It recognized the contribution the Special Rapporteur's study could make to the development of international thinking on the pressing problem of mass exoduses and their causes, and acknowledged that his recommendations could possibly contribute to the prevention of further mass movements of population and to the mitigation of their consequences. It again requested Governments to communicate to the Secretary-General their opinions on the Special Rapporteur's study and recommendations, and invited the Secretary-General to propose in his report to the General Assembly international co-operative arrangements to address and alleviate the root causes of mass movements of population related to violations or suppression of human rights, taking in account existing United Nations organs, skills and resources.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a November report to the Assembly⁽⁹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted further replies—from Austria, Canada, the Central African Republic, Colombia, the Philippines and Venezuela—pursuant to the Commission's resolution (see above). In addition, observations on the study were made orally during the 1982 Assembly session and the 1982 and 1983 Commission sessions.

The Secretary-General stated in the report that the international community recognized the urgent need to examine ways to solve the root causes of and the problems resulting from mass exoduses. Recognizing the importance of an early-warning system on potential mass exoduses, as recommended by the Special Rapporteur, the Secretary-General reported having initiated steps within the Secretariat in order to be alerted in advance to incipient problems. He expressed his intention to work closely with the Security Council in order to develop a wider and more systematic capacity for fact-finding in potential conflict areas. With respect to situations which could lead to mass exoduses, he expected to utilize existing United Nations machinery to obtain information at an early stage concerning the possibility of impending mass flows of refugees.

The Secretary-General expressed interest in learning further the attitude of Member States towards the proposal of appointing a special representative for humanitarian questions; in that connection, he had on many occasions designated special representatives on humanitarian issues on an ad hoc basis and was prepared to expand that practice where such an appointment would be helpful in identifying or resolving situations involving a potential mass exodus. The Commission, for its part, had designated special rapporteurs, special envoys or experts to deal with situations in human rights and humanitarian fields; in many cases, persons appointed by the Commission had exercised functions similar to those of his special representatives.

With regard to the establishment of a corps of "humanitarian observers", the Secretary-General considered that it would require the concurrence of the Governments concerned, as well as the legislative authority of the Assembly. Accordingly, the Assembly and the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees might wish to consider that proposal further.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/103 without vote.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Mindful of its general humanitarian mandate under the Charter of the United Nations and its mandate to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing scale and magnitude of exoduses and displacements of populations in many regions of the world and by the human suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons in all regions of the world,

Conscious that human rights violations are among the principal factors in the complex and multiple causes of mass exoduses of population,

Deeply preoccupied by the increasingly heavy burden being imposed, particularly upon developing countries with limited resources of their own, and upon the international community as a whole, by these sudden and mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 4(XXXIII) of 21 February 1977 on the full realization of economic, social and cultural rights,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/124 of 11 December 1980, 36/148 of 16 December 1981 and 37/121 of 16 December 1982 on international co-operation to avert new flows of refugees, 35/196 of 15 December 1980 and 37/186 of 17 December 1982 on human rights and mass exoduses and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 29(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, 1982/32 of 11 March 1982 and 1983/35 of 8 March 1983,

Convinced that there is an urgent need to improve co-ordination within the existing international machinery to deal with mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Recognizing that the study on human rights and massive exoduses prepared by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights can make an important contribution to the development of international thinking on the present problem of mass exoduses and their causes, and thus help in the prevention of further mass movements of population and the mitigation of their consequences,

1. Takes due note of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and mass exoduses;
2. Invites Governments to intensify their co-operation and assistance in world-wide efforts to address the increasingly serious problem of mass exoduses;
3. Requests those Governments that have not yet done so to communicate to the Secretary-General their opinions on the study prepared by the Special Rapporteur and the recommendations made therein with a view to the General Assembly taking a decision on those recommendations;

4. Notes the Secretary-General's request to the agencies and organizations of the United Nations system to make recommendations and to take whatever steps possible, within their mandates and existing resources, to improve international co-operation in these fields;

5. Considers it desirable for the Secretary-General to utilize to the greatest extent possible relevant United Nations machinery to analyse promptly information on situations which might cause mass exoduses;

6. Notes with interest that the Secretary-General has on many occasions designated special representatives on humanitarian issues on an ad hoc basis, and his readiness to continue and expand this practice;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely developments on this question, to take into consideration all the further comments of Member States, including those expressed at the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly and at the fortieth session of the Commission on Human Rights, and to keep under review the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur;

8. Recalls that, in its resolution 36/148, the General Assembly requested the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees to undertake a comprehensive review of the problem of massive flows of refugees and, in accordance with paragraph 7 of that resolution, invited the Group of Governmental Experts to consider the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur which fall within its mandate;

9. Decides to consider the question of human rights and mass exoduses at its thirty-ninth session.

Genocide

As recommended on 4 March 1983 by the Commission on Human Rights⁽⁹⁵⁾ following a September 1982 recommendation of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities⁽⁹⁶⁾ the Economic and Social Council in May 1983 (see below) requested the Sub-Commission to appoint a Special Rapporteur to revise and update the 1978 study on the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide⁽⁹⁷⁾ The Sub-Commission, on 18 August⁽⁹⁸⁾ appointed Benjamin Charles George Whitaker (United Kingdom) as Special Rapporteur.

The Ad Hoc Working Group on Southern Africa, in a report on apartheid as a form of slavery (see above, under CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS), called for an investigation to determine whether elements of the crime of genocide existed in South Africa and Namibia. The Group recommended that it be entrusted by the Commission to pay attention to the elements of genocide arising out of the policy of apartheid. It also renewed its recommendation that the Commission make specific proposals concerning revision of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide⁽⁹⁹⁾ with a view to making "inhuman acts resulting from the policies of apartheid" punishable under that Convention.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/33 without vote.

Updating of the study on the question of the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of resolution 1982/2 of 7 September 1982 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/24 of 4 March 1983, related to the revision and updating of the study on the question of the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide,

1. Requests the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to appoint one of its members as Special Rapporteur with the mandate to revise, as a whole, and update the study on the question of the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide, taking into consideration the views expressed by the members of the Sub-Commission and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as replies of Governments, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations to a questionnaire to be prepared by the Special Rapporteur;

2. Further requests the Sub-Commission to consider and to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its fortieth session the aforementioned revised and updated study.

Other human rights questions

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

A list of parties as at 21 September 1983 to the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims,⁽¹⁾ was submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly.⁽²⁾

As at 31 December 1983, 37 States and the United Nations Council for Namibia had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts), as follows (those adhering in 1983 are italicized):

Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Botswana, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Jordan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Niger, Norway, Republic of Korea, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire; United Nations Council for Namibia.

All of these parties, except Cuba, Cyprus, Mexico, Mozambique, the Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam and Zaire, had also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts).

Rights of the child

The General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights continued work in 1983 on a draft convention on the rights of the child. The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities recommended for adoption by the Commission two draft resolutions on child labour. The Assembly also adopted a resolution on a draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally (see Chapter XX of this section).

Draft convention

Working Group action. An open-ended Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights, chaired by Adam Lopatka (Poland), held meetings from 24 to 28 January and on 7 and 9 March to continue work on a draft convention on the rights of the child, begun in 1979.⁽³⁾ At those meetings, the Group adopted article 6, paragraphs 3 and 4 (concerning the rights of a child separated from its parents); part of article 6 bis (rights to reunification of children and parents residing in different States); article 6 ter (measures to combat illicit transfer and non-return of children abroad); and article 12, paragraphs 2-4 (rights and special needs of disabled children). The articles adopted in 1983 and prior years were annexed to the Working Group's report to the Commission.⁽⁴⁾

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 10 March 1983⁽⁵⁾ the Commission decided to continue in 1984, as a matter of highest priority, its work on a draft convention. It requested the Economic and Social Council to authorize prior to the Commission's 1984 session a one-week session of an open-ended working group to facilitate and speed up completion of the draft instrument. It also recommended to the Council that it request the Secretary-General to transmit to the Commission documents relating to the draft convention and to extend all facilities to the working group.

In accordance with a May 1982 Council request,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission in 1983 a report on the protection of the rights of children and parents in cases of removal or retention of children⁽⁷⁾—a question which the Council had invited the Commission to take into account in drafting a convention. The report summarized replies from 17 Governments.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/39 without vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/190 of 18 December 1982, by which the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give the highest priority at its thirty-ninth session to the question of completing the draft convention on the rights of the child, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/37 of 7 May 1982, by which the Council authorized a meeting of an open-ended working group for a period of one week prior to the thirty-ninth session of the Commission to facilitate the completion of the work on the draft convention on the rights of the child,

Considering that it was not found possible to complete the work on the draft convention during the thirty-ninth session of the Commission,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/52 of 10 March 1983,

1. Authorizes a meeting of an open-ended working group for a period of one week prior to the fortieth session of the Commission on Human Rights to facilitate and speed up the completion of the work on a draft convention on the rights of the child;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit documents relating to the draft convention on the rights of the child to the Commission on Human Rights at its fortieth session and to extend all facilities to the open-ended working group during its meeting prior to the fortieth session of the Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/114 without vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/166 of 20 December 1978, 34/4 of 18 October 1979, 35/131 of 11 December 1980, 36/57 of 25 November 1981 and 37/190 of 18 December 1982,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 20(XXXIV) of 8 March 1978, 19(XXXV) of 14 March 1979, 36(XXXVI) of 12 March 1980, 26(XXXVII) of 10 March 1981, 1982/39 of 11 March 1982 and 1983/52 of 10 March 1983 as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1978/18 of 5 May 1978, 1978/40 of 1 August 1978, 1982/37 of 7 May 1982 and 1983/39 of 27 May 1983 and Council decisions 1980/138 of 2 May 1980 and 1981/144 of 8 May 1981,

Bearing in mind that children's rights are basic human rights and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as their development and education in conditions of peace,

Mindful of the need to keep up the momentum of positive action for the sake of children generated by the International Year of the Child,

Noting the important role of the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations in promoting the well-being of children and their development,

Aware of the importance of an international convention on the rights of the child for a more effective protection of children's rights, as well as of the widespread interest in the elaboration of such an international instrument displayed by a growing number of Governments and international organizations,

Considering that the year 1984 will mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child,

Reaffirming that mankind owes to the child the best it has to give,

Noting with appreciation that further progress was made in the elaboration of a draft convention on the rights of the child prior to and during the thirty-ninth session of the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/39, in which the Council authorized a meeting of an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights for a period of one week prior to the fortieth session of the Commission to facilitate and speed up the completion of the work on a draft convention on the rights of the child;

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority at its fortieth session to the question of completing the draft convention and to make every effort to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, as the Commission's tangible contribution to the commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child;

3. Invites all Member States to offer their effective contribution to the completion without delay of the draft convention on the rights of the child;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the working group to ensure its smooth and efficient work;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Question of a convention on the rights of the child".

In related action, the Assembly, on 19 December, adopted resolution 38/142 on a draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally.

Child labour

In 1983, the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission for adoption two draft resolutions on child labour. The first draft, recommended on 31 August⁽⁸⁾ would have the Commission recommend that the Economic and Social Council request the Secretary-General to organize a seminar on measures to eliminate the exploitation of child labour, within the framework of the programme of advisory services in human rights. By the second, recommended by a 5 September resolution adopted by 12 votes to none, with 6 abstentions⁽⁹⁾ the Commission would call on the Government of Iran to cease immediately the use of children in the armed forces, especially in time of war; and would invite international organizations to offer all possible aid for the welfare of the children prisoners of war in Iraq, especially with regard to their education and physical and mental health, or to assist those children so desiring to settle in another Islamic country until their return to Iran became feasible.

Child labour was also dealt with by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa (see above, under HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS, and "Slavery" under CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS).

Youth and human rights

In February 1983,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General presented to the Commission on Human Rights, in pursuance of its March 1982 request,⁽¹¹⁾ a report on the implementation—by Member States, the United Nations system and others—of the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities in connection with International Youth Year (1985) (see Chapter XX of this section). He noted that a growing awareness had been observed in several countries of the need to establish mechanisms for co-ordinating youth-related activities; in establishing national priorities relating to youth, many had identified, as important problems, unemployment, education and training (see above, under ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL RIGHTS), population, environment and housing, health and crime prevention.

Another youth-related issue dealt with by the Commission and its Sub-Commission was conscientious objection to military service (see above, under CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS).

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/23 of 22 November, called on States, governmental and non-governmental organizations, and United Nations bodies and agencies to pay continuous attention to efforts and measures aimed at the promotion of human rights and their enjoyment by youth.

Women's rights

On 9 March 1983, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution⁽¹²⁾ on communications concerning the status of women (see Chapter XIX of this section).

Human rights of disabled persons

In August 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the Sub-Commission, in pursuance of its September 1982 request⁽¹¹⁾ a note⁽¹³⁾ summarizing information provided as at 18 August by five Governments, two United Nations bodies and a specialized agency, and three NGOs concerning measures for realizing the rights of disabled persons. The report also contained information drawn from the report of the Advisory Committee for the International Year of Disabled Persons (1981), specifically with regard to the objectives of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,⁽¹⁴⁾ the current situation of the disabled, and national and international measures (see Chapter XV of this section).

The Sub-Commission, on 5 September,⁽¹⁵⁾ requested that the Secretary-General again invite NGOs to investigate human rights problems of disabled persons and submit the findings in 1984. It also urged him to continue seeking views of the United Nations system, regional inter-governmental organizations, ICRC and NGOs on ways of preventing violations of human rights of disabled persons, as well as ways to prevent disabilities, especially those caused by violations of humanitarian norms governing armed conflict.

The Sub-Commission welcomed the General Assembly's December 1982 decision⁽¹⁶⁾ to proclaim 1983-1992 as United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons. It requested the Commission to invite Governments, in consultation with disabled persons, to identify human rights problems of such persons in their jurisdictions and to provide descriptions of those problems, along with plans to alleviate them, to the Sub-Commission for consideration in 1984. It recommended that the Commission request Governments to pay particular attention to ways to strengthen procedures whereby disabled persons could bring alleged human rights violations to an authoritative body or to the Government, as recommended by the Sub-Commission in 1982.⁽¹¹⁾

Questions related to disabled persons were also dealt with by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council (see Chapter XV of this section).

Human rights of the individual and international law

Work continued in 1983 on a study of the status of the individual and international law, mandated by the Commission on Human Rights in 1981⁽¹⁷⁾ and authorized by the Economic and Social Council the same year.⁽¹⁸⁾

On 4 March 1983,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission recommended to the Council adoption of a draft submitted in 1982⁽²⁰⁾ by its Sub-Commission.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1983/34 without vote.

Status of the individual and contemporary international law

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of resolution 1982/35 of 10 September 1982 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/26 of 4 March 1983,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Special Rapporteur, Mrs. Erica-Irene A. Daes, for the work she has thus far accomplished in connection with the important study in progress on the status of the individual and contemporary international law,

1. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue her work on the above-mentioned study with a view to submitting, if possible, her final report to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its thirty-sixth session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit a reminder with the relevant questionnaire to Governments, specialized agencies, regional organizations, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations that have not yet replied, to submit if they so wish their comments on and replies to the questionnaire of the Special Rapporteur;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance she may require in her work.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/34

27 May 1983 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/61) without vote, 23 May (meeting 18); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1983/13); agenda item 10.
Meeting number. ESC 15.

Sub-Commission action. Following consideration of a preliminary report by the Special Rapporteur⁽²¹⁾ the Sub-Commission, on 5 September 1983,⁽²²⁾ expressed appreciation for the work so far accomplished. It recommended that the Commission recommend to the Council adoption of a draft resolution requesting the Special Rapporteur to submit her final report in 1984.

Human rights and science and technology

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 9 March 1983, the Commission on Human Rights adopted two resolutions on human rights and scientific and technological developments. By the first,⁽²³⁾ it invited Member States and international organizations to submit to the Secretary-General their views on the most effective ways of using the results of scientific and technological developments for promoting and realizing human rights, and requested him to present to it in 1984 a report, prepared on the basis of those comments and other sources.

By the second resolution⁽²⁴⁾ adopted by 32 votes to none, with 9 abstentions, the Commission stressed the importance of the implementation by all States of the provisions and principles contained in the 1975 Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind⁽²⁵⁾ in order to promote human rights under conditions of scientific and technological progress. It requested its Sub-Commission to undertake, as a priority matter, a study on the use of those achievements to ensure the right to work and development.

In related action, the Commission adopted on the same date, and under the same agenda item, a resolution on human rights and peace (see below).

Sub-Commission action. On 7 September⁽²⁶⁾ the Sub-Commission approved the conclusions and recommendations contained in the final report on guidelines in the field of computerized personnel files⁽²⁷⁾ which had been presented by Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France) in June, in accordance with a 1980 Sub-Commission request⁽²⁸⁾ The Sub-Commission decided to submit the report to the Commission on Human Rights in 1984.

The report dealt with human rights affected by the computerization of personal data, reviewed international and regional measures to protect those rights and examined specific problems posed by the use of computerized personnel files. The Special Rapporteur recommended, among other things, that United Nations bodies adopt guidelines to encourage States to promote protective regulations in their domestic legislation and to help avoid excessive discrepancies between differing legislations. As an immediate step, he suggested that one of the Sub-Commission members be appointed to study draft internal regulations governing United Nations computerized files.

Report of the Secretary-General. Also in September, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report summarizing substantive replies from Governments⁽²⁹⁾ concerning implementation of the 1975 Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind.⁽²⁵⁾ The Assembly, in December 1982, had again invited States and United Nations agencies and organizations to submit such information.⁽³⁰⁾ The Secretary-General stated that as at 5 August 1983, substantive replies had been received from eight Governments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/112 by recorded vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is one of the important factors in the development of human society,

Noting once again the great importance of the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3384(XXX) of 10 November 1975,

Considering that implementation of the said Declaration will contribute to the strengthening of international peace and the security of peoples and to their economic and social development, as well as to international co-operation in the field of human rights,

Seriously concerned that the results of scientific and technological progress could be used for the arms race, to the detriment of international peace and security and social progress, human rights and fundamental freedoms and the dignity of the human person,

Recognizing that the establishment of the new international economic order calls in particular for an important contribution to be made by science and technology to economic and social progress,

Bearing in mind that the exchange and transfer of scientific and technological knowledge is one of the important ways to accelerate the social and economic development of the developing countries,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and scientific and technological developments,

1. Stresses the importance of the implementation by all States of the provisions and principles contained in the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind in order to promote Human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Calls upon all States to make every effort to use the achievements of science and technology in order to promote peaceful social, economic and cultural development and progress;

3. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take into account in their programmes and activities the provisions of the Declaration;

4. Invites those Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not yet done so to submit their information pursuant to General Assembly resolution 35/130 A of 11 December 1980;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to pay special attention, in its consideration of the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments", to the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration, taking into consideration (he information submitted by Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system pursuant to General Assembly resolution 35/130 A;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

Human rights and peace

By a resolution of 9 March 1983,⁽³¹⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 32 to none, with 11 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that all peoples and individuals had an inherent right to life, and that the safeguarding of that right was an essential condition for the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural as well as civil and political rights. It stressed once again the urgent need for the international community to strengthen peace, halt the arms race and achieve general and complete disarmament under international control, and to implement practical measures of disarmament for releasing resources for social and economic development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries.

The Commission urged all States to ensure that in matters relating to the right to life, everyone should have the right to freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and freedom of association, and to take part in public affairs. It called on States to prohibit propaganda for war and again called on them, as well as on the United Nations system and others, to ensure that scientific and technological achievements were used exclusively in the interests of peace, for the benefit of mankind and for promoting human rights.

On 8 March⁽³²⁾ the Commission decided that a draft resolution, concerning the effects of gross human rights violations on international peace and security, which had been recommended by the Sub-Commission in September 1982,⁽³³⁾ should be sent back to that body for further consideration in the light of the comments made by the Commission at its 1983 session.

Sub-Commission action. On 6 September⁽³⁴⁾ the Sub-Commission reaffirmed the need, in order to obtain peaceful and friendly relations among nations, to create conditions of stability and well-being, promote economic and social progress, find solutions to international problems, achieve universal respect for human rights and establish equal rights and self-determination of peoples. It reaffirmed the obligation of States to refrain from the threat or use of force in international relations, and expressed the hope that they would avoid threats to peace by promoting human rights, including releasing all persons detained for their views who had not used or advocated violence. The Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to ask Governments, specialized agencies and organizations for their views and comments and to present to the Sub-Commission in 1984 an analysis of the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/113 by recorded vote.

Human rights and use of scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination of the peoples of the United Nations to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to reaffirm faith in the dignity and worth of the human person, to maintain international peace and security and to develop friendly relations among peoples and international co-operation in promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling also the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, the Declaration on the Prevention of Nuclear Catastrophe and General Assembly resolutions 36/92 I of 9 December 1981, on the non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war, and 37/100 C of 13 December 1982, on a convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note with appreciation of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1982/7 of 19 February 1982 and 1983/43 of 9 March 1983,

Reaffirming the inherent right to life,

Profoundly concerned that international peace and security continue to be threatened by the arms race in all its aspects, particularly the nuclear arms race, as well as by violations of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and the self-determination of peoples,

Aware that all the horrors of past wars and all other calamities that have befallen people would pale in comparison with what is inherent in the use of nuclear weapons capable of destroying civilization on Earth,

Noting the pressing need for urgent measures towards general and complete disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, for the sake of life on Earth,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, any propaganda for war shall be prohibited by law,

Recalling the historic responsibility of the Governments of all countries of the world to remove the threat of war from the lives of people, to preserve civilization and ensure that everyone enjoys his inherent right to life,

Convinced that for no people in the world today is there a more important question than that of the preservation of peace and of ensuring the cardinal right of every human being, namely, the right to life,

1. Reaffirms that all peoples and all individuals have an inherent right to life and that the safeguarding of this cardinal right is an essential condition for the enjoyment of the entire range of economic, social and cultural, as well as civil and political, rights;

2. Stresses once again the urgent need for the international community to make every effort to strengthen peace, remove the growing threat of war, particularly nuclear war, halt the arms race and achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control, and prevent violations of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples, thus contributing to ensuring the right to life;

3. Stresses further the foremost importance of the implementation of practical measures of disarmament for releasing substantial additional resources, which should be utilized for social and economic development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries;

4. Calls upon all States, appropriate organs of the United Nations, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to take the necessary measures to ensure that the results of scientific and technological progress are used exclusively in the interests of international peace, for the benefit of mankind and for promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Again calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take effective measures with a view to prohibiting by law any propaganda for war;

6. Looks forward to further efforts by the Commission on Human Rights with a view to ensuring the inherent right of all peoples and all individuals to life;

7. Decides to consider this question at its thirty-ninth session under the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

Chapter XIX

Women

In 1983, Governments and the United Nations system worked for the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women and addressed issues concerned with preparations for the 1985 Conference to review the Decade. The Commission on the Status of Women, meeting as the preparatory body for the Conference, made recommendations on the preparations which were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in May (decision 1983/132) and the General Assembly in December (resolution 38/108).

The Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women continued its work to augment the flow of resources to rural and poor urban women. During 1983, the Fund spent almost $5 million on projects, the majority to expand employment of women in new income-generating activities to stimulate self-reliance in rural communities and urban slums.

The International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) completed the first phase of a programme to improve statistics on the situation of women and co-operated with other United Nations bodies to support related programmes.

The need for greater participation of women in development was further recognized throughout the United Nations system and the Commission cited the problems faced by rural women as deserving particular attention.

After considering a synthesis of studies on traffic in persons and prostitution, the Economic and Social Council recommended in May that States draw up policies to prevent prostitution (resolution 1983/30); in December, the General Assembly urged States to take humane measures, including legislation, to that end (resolution 38/107).

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women considered initial reports of States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and approved general guidelines on the form and contents of such reports. In May, the Council welcomed the beginning of the work of the Committee (resolution 1983/1), as did the Assembly in December (resolution 38/109).

Following a review by the Commission on Human Rights, the Council in May reaffirmed the mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women to consider confidential and non-confidential communications regarding the status of women (resolution 1983/27).

Advancement of womenDecade for Women (1976-1985)*Implementation of the Programme for 1981-1985

In 1983, Governments and the United Nations system continued their activities to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women—adopted in 1980 by the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and endorsed by the General Assembly the same year⁽¹⁾ In September 1983, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on the activities by four intergovernmental and 18 non-governmental organizations (NGOs) which had given particular attention to the need for technical co-operation to ensure women's full and equal participation in all sectors of development⁽²⁾

A December report by the Secretary-General⁽³⁾ to the Commission on the Status of Women focused on United Nations activities during 1982-1983, which included technical co-operation, fellowships and advisory services provided by, among others, the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, United Nations Fund for Population Activities, United Nations Children's Fund and United Nations Industrial Development Organization. Work by the United Nations Secretariat focused on elaborating and reviewing international standards, research, data collection and analysis, and the dissemination of information and experience. The Secretariat had prepared a compendium of international conventions and recommendations covering women, with notes on their respective current status. It started work on a series of inventories of national legislation on sex equality, to assist countries considering their own legislation; research concentrated on various international instruments and on deviations from standards adopted under the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women⁽⁴⁾

Preparations for the Conference on the Decade for Women (1985)

The Commission on the Status of Women, meeting for its first session as the preparatory body for the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, made recommendations for the Conference's preparation which were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in May and by the General Assembly in December. The Council also decided that the programme budget implications of those recommendations be revised to reflect the views expressed by delegations, and requested the Secretary-General to submit the revised proposals to the Assembly. Revised appropriations for preparations for the Conference were approved by the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. Kenya's offer to host the Conference was accepted by the Assembly.

Also in May, the Council requested the Secretary-General to invite NGOs to participate in the preparations and to submit their views on the progress made and on the obstacles towards attaining the objectives of the Decade, as well as on priorities and strategies. Governments were urged to invite NGOs to do the same on a national level and to co-operate in national reports to be submitted; and regional commissions were requested to ensure that NGOs participated in regional preparatory meetings.

Pursuant to a May 1982 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽⁷⁾ the Commission on the Status of Women met at Vienna, Austria, from 23 February to 4 March 1983. In its report on its first session as the preparatory body for the 1985 World Conference⁽⁸⁾ the Commission set priorities for the Conference, placing emphasis on identifying practical measures to ensure that existing programmes be effectively and rapidly carried out. It was the unanimous view of the Commission that both the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women, "equality, development and peace", and the sub-theme "employment, health and education", remained valid and should constitute the framework of the Conference.

Recommendations for the provisional agenda included a critical appraisal of progress achieved at the national, regional and international levels, and of the obstacles encountered in attaining the objectives of the Decade; as well as strategies and measures to overcome those obstacles.

Concerning preparatory meetings and activities, the Commission urged that steps be taken at the national level—including the ratification of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the realization of the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting Peace and Co-operation, proclaimed by the General Assembly in December 1982(7)—and that national committees, together with NGOs, participate in or promote preparatory activities. At the regional level, the Commission recommended that the regional commissions, in co-operation with Governments, organize meetings to review progress and obstacles; and that the Secretary-General convene an inter-regional seminar to consider measures for improving the situation of rural women, with emphasis on developing countries. It recommended that resources be provided from the existing 1983 budget and the regular budget for 1984-1985, with voluntary contributions to be channelled to a special trust fund for Conference preparations, set up under the Secretary-General.

To create public awareness and highlight preparatory activities for the Conference, the Commission recommended that the information programme aim to reach women and men particularly at the grass-roots level through national commissions, media, information agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. Special attention should be given to information activities to reach rural and poor urban women. A photo exhibit should be held depicting the objectives of the Decade.

The Commission also recommended that its title as preparatory body for the Conference be amended to Commission on the Status of Women, Acting as the Preparatory Body for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace.

Following the Council's invitation in May 1982, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report on the results of consultations held by the regional commissions on Conference issues and themes⁽⁸⁾

An Inter-Agency Meeting on the Preparations for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women⁽⁹⁾ was convened at Vienna, on 21 and 22 February 1983, under the auspices of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination. The Meeting agreed that following the first meeting of the Commission on the Status of Women, acting as the preparatory body, the collaborating agencies would determine the need for technical and lead agencies to ensure efficient co-ordination and analysis. It recommended that a second inter-agency meeting be convened at Vienna, in conjunction with the second session of the Commission as the preparatory body, in February-March 1984. It also made a recommendation with regard to the world survey on the role of women in development (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with the Council's decision, the report of the Commission was transmitted to the the General Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee by a 7 October note of the Secretary-General⁽¹⁰⁾ On 16 December, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/108 as approved by the Committee.

Preparations for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3520(XXX) of 15 December 1975, in which it endorsed, inter alia, the action proposals contained in the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year,

Recalling its resolution 3490(XXX) of 12 December 1975, in which it expressed its conviction that a comprehensive and thorough review and appraisal of progress made in meeting the goals of the World Plan of Action was of crucial importance for the success of the Plan and recognized that the results of the implementation of the Plan would contribute to the consideration of the review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade and would consequently promote the role of women in the development process,

Recalling its resolution 35/136 of 11 December 1980, in which it endorsed the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women as adopted at the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, and decided to convene in 1985, at the conclusion of the Decade, a World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women,

Recalling also that the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade stressed that the important set of measures to improve the status of women contained in the World Plan of Action adopted at Mexico City in 1975, and the important agreed measures relating to the International Development Strategy in the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women, adopted at Copenhagen in 1980, should be implemented,

Recalling further its resolution 37/60 of 3 December 1982, in which it welcomed the decision of the Economic and Social Council that the Commission on the Status of Women should act as the preparatory body for the Conference and noted that the Commission would hold its first session in that capacity at Vienna from 23 February to 4 March 1983,

Taking into consideration Economic and Social Council decision 1983/132 of 26 May 1983 on the recommendations of the Commission on the Status of Women as the preparatory body for the Conference as set forth in its report, and Council resolution 1983/28 of 26 May 1983 on the participation of non-governmental organizations in the preparations for the Conference,

Bearing in mind all its relevant resolutions and decisions regarding preparations for special conferences,

Having considered the report of the Commission on the Status of Women on the work of its first session as the preparatory body for the Conference,

1. Decides to accept with appreciation the offer of the Government of Kenya to act as host at Nairobi, in 1985, to the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women;
2. Takes note of the report of the Commission on the Status of Women on the work of its first session as the preparatory body for the Conference;
3. Endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Commission;
4. Considers that, within the framework of item 7 of the provisional agenda proposed by the Commission at its first session as the preparatory body for the Conference, particular attention will be paid to the problems of women in Territories under racist colonial rule and in Territories under foreign occupation, on the basis of appropriate documentation from the international conferences on women, held at Mexico City and Copenhagen, with the theme equality, development and peace;
5. Welcomes the decision of the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 1983/28, to invite non-governmental organizations to participate in the preparations for the Conference;
6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace".

16 December 1983 Meeting 100 141-2-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/38/681) by roll-call vote 1122-2-7 following a separate vote on operative paragraph 4 (107-8-14), 1 December (meeting 59); draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.3/38/L.27); agenda item 91 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 3rd Committee 55, 59; plenary 100.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao Peoples Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom.

In the Committee, a number of States spoke in explanation of vote. The United States regretted that it upset the delicate balance of the text, since it highlighted situations which were bound to be divisive and detracted from the substantive concerns of the Conference; it also expressed concern on the financial implications. Israel also objected to paragraph 4, which referred to questions which would enable the parties concerned to engage in procedures used at the 1980 Conference. The Federal Republic of Germany felt that the paragraph introduced unrelated political questions. The Netherlands believed that the specific problems of Palestinian women refugees and of women in South Africa, while important, ought not to be the primary issue; the Conference should confine itself to the agenda drafted by the Commission, which was sufficiently flexible to cover any questions without repeating the mistakes of previous conferences. Similarly, the United Kingdom also felt that the Assembly should not direct the Conference's attention to politically controversial issues, and Italy said polemic subjects should be avoided. In Canada's view, the text provided a poor basis for the Conference since it prevented the achievement of consensus.

Explaining its abstention on paragraph 4, the Ivory Coast said that creating a division with regard to the programme of the Conference could doom it to failure. Japan regarded it as inadvisable for the Assembly to adopt a position on the direction to be taken by the Conference debates. Australia said it abstained because it objected to any attempt to give the agenda a contentious political focus. New Zealand spoke in like manner. France would have preferred the agenda proposed by the Commission—whereby it was possible to consider equally the problems of women in all difficult situations. Austria believed that problems arising in that context were not related exclusively to women. Denmark, speaking on behalf of the five Nordic countries, said the Conference's objectives would be fully achieved only if it focused on improving the status of women.

Among those voting for the paragraph, Kenya felt that the raising of controversial issues would be settled during the Conference. Iraq felt that some States opposing the draft were responsible for preventing solutions to the question of Namibia and lending support to South Africa.

Bulgaria hoped the Conference would attend to the link between the problems of the inequality of women and the issues of peace, racism, apartheid, foreign occupation and the right of peoples to self-determination. The USSR considered the draft useful for the preparatory work and also supported it because it was based on extensive consultations. Algeria regretted that the efforts of the Group of 77 and the African States had not achieved a consensus, and, viewing paragraph 4 as the product of considerable negotiation, it felt that the attitude of those who opposed it did not augur well for the Committee's future work.

Introducing the draft on behalf of the Group of 77, Mexico said that the concerns in the draft were not exclusive to any country or region and it was only in that spirit that the status of women could be improved.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/131 without vote.

Programme budget implications of the recommendations contained in the report of the Commission on the Status of Women Acting as the Preparatory Body for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 26 May 1983, the Council decided that the programme budget implications of the recommendations of the Commission on the Status of Women Acting as the Preparatory Body for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women should be revised to adequately reflect the views expressed by delegations at the first session of that body and at the first regular session of 1983 of the Economic and Social Council, and requested the Secretary-General to submit those revised proposals to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/131

26 May 1983 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote
Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/63), 19 May (meeting 15); draft by United States (E/1983/C.2/L.11); agenda item 12.
Meeting number: ESC 14.

By a note of 6 May 1983,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General presented to the Economic and Social Council programme budget implications of the Commission's recommendations. Total cost of Conference preparations during 1984-1985 were estimated at $1,501,200.

Following the Council's decision on 26 May that the programme budget implications should be revised, the Secretary-General submitted in December to the General Assembly's Fifth Committee revised estimates totalling $1,405,000 for 1984-1985.⁽¹²⁾ The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in December⁽¹³⁾ recommended reductions of $364,400—$47,800 less for regional activities, $20,000 less for travel, and reductions of $213,000 and $83,600 for Secretariat support and public information activities, respectively. Following ACABQ's recommendations, the Fifth Committee, on 14 December, approved total appropriations of $1,040,600, comprising $183,000 for regional activities, $71,900 for the interregional seminar, $423,200 for Secretariat support and $362,300 for public information activities. The Committee took that action by 81 votes to 2, with 14 abstentions.

In addition to the appropriations of $1,040,600, the Fifth Committee noted that conference servicing costs of $889,400 would arise. However, much of this amount was absorbed through utilization of conference services already available.

NGO participation

The Commission on the Status of Women, acting as the preparatory body for the 1985 World Conference, made several recommendations at its first session pertaining to the participation of NGOs in the Conference.

A Council resolution of 26 May, inviting NGOs to participate in the Conference preparations, was welcomed by the General Assembly in resolution 38/108 of 16 December (see above).

Following the Council's invitation in May 1982, the Secretary-General presented to the Commission a report containing the views of NGOs on their contributions to the Conference and on possible issues and themes.⁽¹⁴⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1983, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/28 without vote.

Participation of non-governmental organizations in the preparations for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the report of the Commission on the Status of Women Acting as the Preparatory Body for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women,

Bearing in mind the valuable contributions that non-governmental organizations have made to the advancement of women, particularly during the United Nations Decade for Women and especially in the preparation for and follow-up of the World Conference of the International Women's Year, held at Mexico City from 19 June to 2 July 1975, and the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held at Copenhagen from 14 to 30 July 1980,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to participate actively in the preparations for and in the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, to be held in 1985;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to invite interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women Acting as the Preparatory Body for the 1985 World Conference, information, including their views on the progress made and the obstacles still to be overcome towards the attainment of the goals of the Decade, as well as their views on priorities and strategies looking to the year 2000;

3. Urges Governments to invite interested non-governmental organizations in their respective countries also to submit views on the progress made at the national level, obstacles remaining and goals to be attained, and to co-operate in the preparation of the national reports to be submitted by them to the Secretary-General;

4. Requests the regional commissions to ensure that the interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council participate in their respective regions in the preparations for and in the intergovernmental preparatory regional meetings for the 1985 World Conference.

Voluntary Fund

In 1983, the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women continued to provide financial and technical assistance to promote economic growth, employment and social equity, with special attention to rural and poor urban woman.

In 1983, contributions to the Fund by Governments totalled $2.4 million; in addition, non-governmental contributions amounted to $92,000. Savings from cancelled or completed projects and interest income allowed commitments of $4.9 million for new projects and additions to existing projects. Average costs per project increased to $95,000 in 1982-1983. Since a large number of projects were assigned to Governments and national NGOs as executing agencies, full-time international experts were employed in less than 10 per cent of country projects.

The Fund's activities from October 1982 to September 1983, its financial situation and needs, and a summary of the Consultative Committee's recommendations at its thirteenth (21-25 March) and fourteenth (29 August-2 September) sessions were detailed in an October report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly⁽¹⁵⁾ for support. In view of the multiplying demands on the Fund and the critical need for increasing women's access to development resources, it expressed the view that the Fund should have a sound financial basis for its future activities and that this could be accomplished through an endowment, with the target date set for 1985. The Committee also expressed the view that senior posts for women programme officers at the regional commissions should be financed from the regular United Nations budget.

Of about 200 projects for which Fund support was requested, 92 were approved on the recommendation of the Fund's Technical Advisory Group and Consultative Committee. Of those 92 projects, including programming missions, 37 were in Africa, 25 in Latin America and the Caribbean, 20 in Asia and the Pacific, and 9 in Western Asia, plus one global project. Fifty-two of the projects totalled $4.6 million; others were small-scale projects valued at less than $20,000, or additional inputs to ongoing activities. During 1982-1983, 42 per cent of all projects related to expanding employment in new income-generating activities such as animal husbandry, clothes production, pottery making, and fish smoking and marketing. An additional 30 per cent of projects involved human development, including the training of rural trainers and pilot projects to stimulate self-reliance in rural communities and urban slums. Other projects included training of development planners, and training for identification, execution and evaluation of programmes (17 per cent), as well as activities for energy production (7 per cent), such as promotion of fuel-saving cooking stoves, forest industries and re-forestation. National and regional information activities, including research on electronics and other industries, and on law, as well as the publication and dissemination of action-oriented research, accounted for 4 per cent.

In 1983, the proportion of country-level projects—all of which were administered by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—was some 90 per cent.⁽⁶⁾ The use of funds from UNDP's Individual Planning Figures for follow-up activities initially assisted by the Fund also increased, for example in Bangladesh, Bolivia and Burundi. Two out of four joint UNDP/Voluntary Fund programming missions undertaken in 1983 and intended to reorient large-scale activities to ensure consideration of women, had already produced positive results in Guinea-Bissau and Sierra Leone. One of the missions recommended that round-table donors' conferences should adopt a guideline that all appropriate projects involve women. Adoption of a similar guideline for World Bank projects was proposed by the Fund's Consultative Committee.

As at 31 December 1983, contributions and pledges to the Fund were as follows:

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/106 without vote.

Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/133 of 16 December 1976, containing the criteria and arrangements for the management of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women,

Recalling also its resolution 36/129 of 14 December 1981, in which it decided that the Fund should continue its activities beyond the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Recalling further its resolution 37/62 of 3 December 1982 and, in particular, its view that the appointment of senior women's programme officers at the regional commissions represents a valuable contribution to the implementation of the goals of the Decade,

Reaffirming that questions concerning women should be approached and dealt with as an integral part of overall policies and programmes in the field of social and economic development,

Noting with appreciation the effective management and continuing expansion of the activities of the Fund and the co-operation extended by relevant bodies of the United Nations, including the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme and the regional commissions, and by non-governmental organizations,

Welcoming the contributions made by Member States and non-governmental organizations towards the implementation of the goals of the Decade,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Fund,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the recommendations of the Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women at its thirteenth and fourteenth sessions, referred to in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its concern that the question of senior women's programme officers posts at the regional commissions is still unresolved and that lack of progress in this regard is seriously impeding work on the women's programmes in several regions;

3. Urges the Secretary-General, in consultation with the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, to give priority to solving the question of senior women's programme officers and to take urgently appropriate measures to ensure that all temporary and permanent senior women's programme officers posts at the regional commissions should be continued within the regular budget resources available to them;

4. Notes with satisfaction the continuing increase in the number of projects submitted to and financed by the resources of the Fund and their contribution to promoting the involvement of women in development;

5. Considers that the Fund has a unique contribution to make in the technical assistance field to the implementation of the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace;

6. Stresses that the Fund also has a unique contribution to make to the achievement of the goals of the Third United Nations Development Decade, and even beyond it;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the voluntary support given to the Fund by Member States, national committees for the Fund, national United Nations associations and other non-governmental organizations;

8. Notes with concern that contributions to the Fund have not been sufficient to enable it to take on all the worthwhile projects submitted to it;

9. Notes that contributions by Governments have a vital role to play in maintaining and increasing the financial viability and effectiveness of the work of the Fund;

10. Urges Governments, accordingly, to continue and increase, where possible, their contributions to the Fund and calls upon those Governments that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Fund;

11. Decides that, when considering the reports of the Secretary-General to be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session pursuant to Assembly resolution 36/129, all possible options for continuing the Fund's activities beyond the end of the Decade will be reviewed in depth;

12. Requests that the results of the forward-looking assessment that is being undertaken on the activities assisted by the Fund be reflected in the reports of the Secretary-General on the Fund to be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

13. Takes note with appreciation of the measures taken by the Secretary-General, in response to resolution 37/62, to improve and streamline the administration of the Fund;

14. Commends the United Nations Development Programme on its continuing technical and resource assistance to the Fund;

15. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to report annually on the management of the Fund and on the progress of its activities and to include in his report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session information on the implementation of measures taken in response to paragraph 3 above;

(b) To continue, on an annual basis, to include the Fund among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities.

1979 Convention on Discrimination against Women

As at 31 December 1983, there were 53 States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted in 1979.⁽⁴⁾ The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, established in 1982 under the Convention,⁽¹⁷⁾ held its second session in New York from 1 to 12 August 1983, to consider reports of States parties submitted under article 18 of the Convention. At that session, the Committee also adopted general guidelines regarding the form and contents of those reports. The Economic and Social Council in May urged States to become parties. The General Assembly in December extended a similar invitation.

Implementation of the Convention

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, at its second session⁽¹⁸⁾ considered initial reports of seven States parties on measures they had adopted to give effect to the Convention, out of 13 reports received since the Convention entered into force in 1981.⁽¹⁹⁾ On each report, the Committee heard a statement by, and put questions to, the respective States. General guidelines regarding the form and contents of reports from States parties to be submitted under article 18 of the Convention were elaborated by an informal working group and adopted by the Committee as orally revised.

With regard to participation of specialized agencies, the Committee decided by consensus to invite, in accordance with article 22 of the Convention, those whose activities were relevant to the Convention to prepare reports on such programmes which might promote implementation of the Convention and to provide the Committee with additional information.

The Committee agreed to hold its third session in New York from 26 March to 6 April 1984, while the second meeting of States parties to the Convention would be convened on 9 April 1984. The fourth Committee session would be held at Vienna in March 1985. The Committee also agreed to hold its sessions in New York when States parties met for the election of half of the Committee members every second year, and at Vienna in those years when no meeting of States parties was foreseen.

Following consideration of the report of the Committee⁽²⁰⁾ on its 1982 session⁽¹⁷⁾ the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/1 without vote on 17 May 1983.

In a report to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General listed the States which had signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention as at 1 August 1983.⁽²¹⁾ Annexed to the report were reservations made since 31 December 1982 by three States.

UN Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW)

The permanent headquarters of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW), at Santo Domingo in the Dominican Republic, were officially inaugurated on 11 August 1983. By a note of 21 October⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted a report on the programme activities of INSTRAW, as invited by the General Assembly in December 1982⁽²³⁾ The report covered the objectives, mode of operation and organizational structure, as well as the staffing, financial arrangements and programme of INSTRAW. It cited as the Institute's objectives to stimulate and assist, through research, training, and collection and exchange of information, the efforts of intergovernmental, governmental and non-governmental organizations aimed at the advancement of women and their integration in development, both as participants and beneficiaries.

The INSTRAW Board of Trustees held its third session in New York from 24-28 January. After reviewing the progress report of the Director, the Board examined a proposal for launching the Institute's fellowship programme and approved an allocation of $50,000 for 1983 for its implementation. It welcomed the proposals of the regional commissions for collaboration with INSTRAW and approved a decentralized system for implementing research and training. Examining the financial provisions for the Institute, the Board asked the Secretary-General to continue providing administrative, legal and other assistance, and urged the Economic and Social Council to continue to invite all Member States to contribute to the Institute trust fund. It authorized the Director to obtain supplementary funding, including inviting Board members to establish national support teams in their respective countries.

The Board decided that the 1984-1985 programme budget should focus on research, training and information activities to include follow-up of the current programme, development of new programmes with other United Nations bodies and agencies, and a contribution of the Institute to the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women.

The Board endorsed the proposal to conduct a series of research studies on the role of women in international economic relations. It invited the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) to continue co-operating with INSTRAW in that area and also invited other United Nations bodies, such as the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, to co-operate in this undertaking.

The Board approved INSTRAW's commitment to the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), and recommended that it organize a seminar on the role of women and the Decade.

The Board also adopted rules of procedure which were annexed to its report to the Economic and Social Council⁽²⁴⁾

Following the Board's decision, collaboration was initiated with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) regarding research studies on the role of women in international economic relations, the first series of those studies dealing with the transfer, development and choice of technology and its impact on women.

The first phase of a programme to improve statistics on the situation of women, undertaken jointly with the United Nations Statistical Office, was completed during the year. Within the framework of that programme, an expert group meeting was convened in New York from 11 to 15 April, at which 17 organizations both within and outside the United Nations system participated.

An interregional Seminar on the Incorporation of Women into Development Planning was held at the Institute's headquarters (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, 5-11 December) in order to exchange experience among high-level experts in development planning and women's issues and to raise awareness of the need to increase the involvement of women in development planning.

INSTRAW also continued its co-operation with UNDP's Special Unit for Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and started a series of publications on women and technical co-operation among developing countries.

In co-operation with other United Nations bodies, the Institute carried out a number of projects integrating concerns affecting women into development planning and worked with UNDP on implementing the policy of collective self-reliance in developing countries. In co-operation with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), a study of methods for mobilizing women in small-scale and rural industry was conducted. As part of a project to train women entrepreneurs, an exploratory mission was sent to the United Republic of Tanzania, and possibilities of joint training programmes between UNIDO and INSTRAW were being further explored.

Focusing on training programmes, in co-operation with FAO, the Institute examined the role of women in relation to food production strategies and post-harvest food preservation, especially in Africa. It followed the United Nations staff training activities as these related to women. An Institute fellowship programme was launched for implementation through the regional commissions and academic institutions. Advocacy activities to raise public awareness of action for the advancement of women included university lectures and seminars and the identification of a network of contact points for information on research and training activities. Serving as a clearing-house, INSTRAW responded to many requests for information on means available and institutions involved in improving women's conditions world-wide.

Status of women

Elimination of prostitution and illicit traffic in women

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in May 1982,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General appointed in October 1982 a Special Rapporteur to prepare a synthesis of the surveys and studies on traffic in persons and the exploitation of prostitution. In a January 1983 report to the Council⁽²⁾ the Special Rapporteur discussed economic factors and social attitudes underlying prostitution and its causes—poverty, emotional deprivation, trickery and coercion. The Rapporteur stated that it was not necessary to invoke any kind of mental weakness or supposed vicious inclination to explain why women fell into prostitution, and that, once there, prostitution became a form of slavery from which it was very difficult to escape. Few regions and countries were free of international traffic in women, which was far from confined to a flow from less developed to more developed regions, but rather involved the traffic of poor women towards rich men. Also discussed were the exploitation of prostitution for tourist purposes, its destructive effects on the identity of women and means available to combat this practice.

The Special Rapporteur felt that there would be no lasting change with regard to prostitution until collective attitudes changed concerning sexist discrimination in general and discrimination which placed prostitutes in a marginal situation, treating them as criminals and maintaining their dependence. The Rapporteur proposed the rehabilitation of prostitutes and prosecution of procurers through State action backed by private associations, both humanitarian groups and self-help organizations. He recommended that Governments co-operate openly with the competent international agencies to identify international procurers' networks and reconvert the sectors of their economies where poverty and indebtedness were recognized as the most common reason that women and children (often with the complicity of parents) fell into prostitution. He also identified organizations within and outside the United Nations system which were best suited for specific action in that regard. Concluding, the Rapporteur expressed the hope that his report would provide the Economic and Social Council with elements that would enable it to proclaim clear principles and inspire a coherent programme of action.

Annexed to the report were excerpts pertaining to prostitution from two reports: one on slavery, submitted to the Commission on Human Rights in 1982⁽³⁾ and another on child labour, presented to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in 1981.⁽⁴⁾

On 26 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/30 without vote.

Suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the enslavement of women and children subjected to prostitution is incompatible with the dignity and fundamental rights of the human person,

Recalling its resolution 1982/20 of 4 May 1982,

Having taken note of the report prepared by the Special Rapporteur in pursuance of that resolution,

1. Again invites Member States to sign, ratify and implement the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others;

2. Also invites Member States to sign, ratify and implement the International Convention for the Suppression of the Circulation of and Traffic in Obscene Publications, concluded at Geneva on 12 September 1923, as amended by the Protocol signed at Lake Success, New York, on 12 November 1947;

3. Recommends that Member States should take account of the report of the Special Rapporteur and draw up, subject to their constitutions and legislation and in consultation with the parties concerned, policies aimed, to the extent possible, at:

(a) Preventing prostitution by moral education and civics training, in and out of school;

(b) Increasing the number of women among the State's personnel having direct contact with the populations concerned;

(c) Eliminating discrimination that ostracizes prostitutes and makes their reabsorption into society more difficult;

(d) Curbing the pornography industry and the trade in pornography and penalizing them very severely when minors are involved;

(e) Punishing all forms of procuring in such a way as to deter it, particularly when it exploits minors;

(f) Facilitating occupational training for and the reabsorption into society of persons rescued from prostitution;

4. Further invites Member States to co-operate closely with one another in the research for missing persons and in the identification of international networks of procurers and, if they are members of the International Criminal Police Organization, to co-operate with that organization, requesting it to make the suppression of the traffic in persons one of its priorities;

5. Invites the regional commissions to help Member States and United Nations bodies wishing to organize regional expert meetings, seminars or symposia on the traffic in persons;

6. Suggests to the Secretary-General that he designate as a focal point the Centre for Human Rights, specifically the secretariat of the Working Group on Slavery, in close co-operation with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs;

7. Requests the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to consider the possibility of inviting the Commission on the Status of Women to designate a representative to participate in all sessions of the Working Group on Slavery, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 48(IV) of 29 March 1947;

8. Requests the Centre for Human Rights to prepare, in liaison with the United Nations agencies and organs concerned and with the competent non-governmental organizations, two complementary studies: one on the sale of children and the other on the legal and social problems of sexual minorities, including male prostitution, and to submit those studies as soon as possible to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

9. Encourages the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs to utilize the available resources of all its branches with a view to undertaking interdisciplinary studies, and to co-operate with the Division of Narcotic Drugs;

10. Invites all the organs, organizations and agencies of the United Nations system concerned, particularly the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Labour Organisation and the World Health Organization, to bring the traffic in persons to the notice of their representatives and experts and to transmit their observations and their studies to the focal point designated by the Secretary-General;

11. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to draw up, with member States, programmes for use in schools and in the media concerning the image of women in society;

12. Invites the World Tourism Organization to place the question of sex-oriented tourism on its agenda;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to have the report prepared by the Special Rapporteur in pursuance of Council resolution 1982/20 reproduced as a United Nations publication so that it may be widely disseminated;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1985, on the steps taken to implement the present resolution;

15. Decides that the activities recommended in the present resolution will be carried out within the limits of the resources provided for by the Secretary-General in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1983, following the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/107 by recorded vote.

Prevention of prostitution

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Taking into account the resolutions, declarations, conventions and recommendations of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and international conferences designed to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women, as well as those relating to the suppression of traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, including Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/30 of 26 May 1983,

Convinced of the importance of the full integration of women in the social, political and economic activities of their community,

Bearing in mind the essential role of women in the welfare of the family and the development of society,

Considering that prostitution and the accompanying evil of the traffic in persons for the purpose of prostitution are incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person and endanger the welfare of the individual, the family and the community,

Further considering that women and children are still all too often victims of physical abuse and sexual exploitation,

Mindful that the prevailing economic and social conditions are largely responsible for the continued existence of the social problems of prostitution and traffic in persons,

1. Urges Member States to take all appropriate humane measures, including legislation, to combat prostitution, exploitation of the prostitution of others and all forms of traffic in persons;

2. Appeals to Member States to provide special protection to victims of prostitution through measures including education, social guarantees and employment opportunities for those victims with a view to their rehabilitation;

3. Requests the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on the Status of Women, the regional commissions and other concerned bodies of the United Nations system to devote greater attention to the problem of prostitution and the means for its prevention;

4. Requests the Economic and Social Council to consider this question at its first regular session of 1985, together with the reports requested by the Council in its resolution 1983/30, and to transmit its comments to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Women and racism

The Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in August 1983 (see Chapter XVIII of this section) also addressed the issue of women and racism. The Declaration stated that, whenever there was racial discrimination, women were often doubly discriminated against and that, consequently, further special efforts were called for to eliminate the effects of racial discrimination on women, and to ensure conditions promoting women's equal participation in the political, economic, social and cultural life of their societies. In that context, the Declaration drew attention to the particular importance of the 1979 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.⁽⁵⁾

In its Programme of Action, approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/14, the Conference appealed to States which had not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention. It also called on the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, to be held in 1985, to contribute to the struggle against racism and apartheid by recommending measures aimed at ensuring the active participation of women in the struggle against those evils.

On 9 August, on the occasion of the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa and Namibia, the President made a statement on behalf of the Conference recalling the plight of women suffering particular indignities under apartheid and extending solidarity to the oppressed women of South Africa and Namibia.

The situation of women and children under apartheid was also considered by the Commission on Human Rights and its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa, as well as by the Task Force on Women and Children under Apartheid of the Special Committee against Apartheid (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V).

Women in rural areas

At the February/March 1983 session of the Commission on the Status of Women, meeting as the preparatory body for the 1985 World Conference (see above), one of the most frequently cited issues was that of problems faced by rural women—a high proportion of women in most developing countries—for whom, even in developed countries, difficult problems were caused by rapid societal change. A number of delegations pointed out that such issues as health and nutrition, family planning, education and training, access to water, sanitation and shelter, services and infrastructure, energy and technology took on a particularly difficult character for rural women.

Concerning a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽⁶⁾ for a report on national experience in improving the situation of women in rural areas, the Secretary-General stated, in December 1983,⁽⁷⁾ that a questionnaire had been sent to Member States as part of the preparations for a comprehensive report requested by the Commission for submission to the 1985 World Conference. The questionnaire covered policy-making and planning at the national level, institutional arrangements and programmes, and legislative and other provisions to facilitate the advancement of women. The review of national experience on improving the situation of women in rural areas would be part of a comprehensive review and appraisal by the Secretary-General for the 1985 World Conference.

The Economic and Social Council in July 1983 (resolution 1983/71) and the General Assembly in December (resolution 38/158) emphasized the role of women on the farm, called for more attention in matters of policy to the role of women in relation to food systems and stressed the need to involve women in the formulation and implementation of national food programmes (see Chapter XI of this section).

Women and society

Women in development

The need for greater participation of women in development was further recognized in 1983. In the Commission on the Status of Women, acting as the preparatory body for the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see above), a number of delegations reported that national machinery had been established to improve women's conditions and to integrate them in the development process. Plans for a world survey on the role of women in development were reviewed in February by an inter-agency meeting on preparations for the World Conference, which recommended using an analytical structure to include specific ways to improve women's role and examine the potential impact of such improvements on overall development goals. Among the Commission's recommendations was that the world survey constitute one of the Conference's basic documents. That recommendation was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1983/132 of 26 May. In December⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the world survey would contain seven sections prepared by different United Nations bodies, providing an overview and sections on the role of women in relation to agriculture, industry, trade, energy, money and finance, and science and technology. The survey would be prepared for submission to the General Assembly in 1984 and would be considered in 1985 by the Commission as the Conference's preparatory body.

At the April 1983 session of the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC) (see Chapter I of this section), the Advancement of Women Branch of the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) reported plans for development education kits on the objectives of the Decade and notes on priority issues for action. In addition, the Branch had allocated $50,000 to the United Nations Department of Public Information for its television series "Women and Development".

In his October report to the General Assembly on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women (see above), the UNDP Administrator stated that giving rural and poor urban women access to resources tended to have considerable spill-over effects on their families and communities—since women generally invested their earnings in family nutrition and in improving their homes, schools and communities—and the impact of projects benefiting women on their self-esteem and the attitudes of others towards them tended to increase their involvement in community and national activities.

A forward-looking assessment being undertaken by the Voluntary Fund, in co-operation with the regional commissions and the UNDP regional bureaux for presentation to the Assembly in 1984, sought to identify improved strategies of technical co-operation for increasing women's participation in development as both agents and beneficiaries. On 24 June 1983, the UNDP Governing Council decided that its evaluation of the involvement of women in technical co-operation should be available before the end of 1984.⁽²⁾

The Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), on 13 May 1983,⁽³⁾ stressed the contribution made by women to the industrialization of developing countries and reaffirmed its strong support for the increased involvement of women in the development process. The Board urged the UNIDO secretariat to give attention in its training programmes to the upgrading of women's skills and to provide information on projects integrating women in industrialization. The Board called for strengthening the work of the Interdivisional Working Group on Integration of Women in Industrial Development and its co-operation with the Advancement of Women Branch of CSDHA.

The United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) continued its efforts to integrate women and women's organizations in all aspects of population programmes. To this end, it organized two seminars in 1983: one on women, family and development (Tunis, Tunisia, October), attended by Arab and Islamic delegations from 15 countries; the other, on population and development (Basseterre, Saint Christopher and Nevis, November), attended by women leaders from the English-speaking Caribbean region.

In 1983, UNFPA assistance to activities relating exclusively to women's concerns totalled almost $2 million. It covered a wide range of projects but did not include women's components of projects concerned with family planning. Larger projects included one in Senegal aimed at promoting the situation of women in family and community, with planned allocations of $529,000, and a project for skills development and training for women in Mexico amounting to $509,581 for a four-year period. There were 41 ongoing country projects in this sector in 1983; the Asia and Pacific region accounted for 18 projects, followed by Africa with 11, the Middle East and Mediterranean with 6, and Latin America and the Caribbean also with 6. In addition, there were 7 regional and 6 inter-regional and global projects.⁽⁴⁾

The work of UNESCO concerning women concentrated in 1983 on promoting equal educational opportunities for girls and women; training women, particularly those in communications; fellowships, with 23 per cent of 1983 fellowships awarded to women; studies and research; and public information.⁽⁵⁾

FAO continued to promote a broad socio-economic approach to rural development by focusing on the small farmer, assisting women's co-operatives, training women extension workers and employing women advisers in an effort to counter attitudes which marginalized rural women. An Inter-Divisional Working Group on Women in Development within FAO advised on policies and programmes to integrate women into FAO's agricultural and rural development efforts and co-ordinated these policies with those of other agencies. Specific activities included community action for disadvantaged rural women, projects on women and food systems in Africa, on participation in local rural organizations, on household energy and technology, and on food policy and nutrition. Beginning in mid-1983, national consultants from 17 countries were asked to identify and prepare small-scale grass-roots projects of around $5,000 to promote women's activities in marketing. Other activities included national and regional seminars, research papers and studies, with special attention to women in food systems.⁽⁶⁾

The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development continued to link activities specifically for women with those carried out in other sectors. Training in practical skills—for example, in the operation and maintenance of water pumps—was found to increase the integration of women in development. Other projects provided training in public administration to improve the status of women in management positions and training for women statisticians.⁽⁷⁾

By a June decision⁽⁸⁾ the High-Level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (TCDC) (see Chapter II of this section) invited developing countries to strengthen links with women's organizations, to facilitate women's incorporation into development processes and to give due consideration to women's participation when identifying operational issues. United Nations agencies and organizations were invited to include specific references to women in their activities for TCDC, and the UNDP Administrator was requested to continue to support the incorporation of women's issues in all such activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 19 December, adopted decision 38/443 without vote (p. 438), by which it took note of a Second Committee report⁽⁹⁾ stating that there was no specific proposal pertaining to women in development.

In resolution 38/104 of 16 December on IN-STRAW, the Assembly requested that the Institute continue activities contributing to the full integration of women in the mainstream of development and that due attention be given to the interdependence of micro and macro economy and its impact on women's role in the development process. By resolution 38/106 of the same date, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the continuing increase in the number of projects financed by the Fund and their contribution to promoting women's involvement in development.

Women and science and technology

At its June 1983 session, the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development (see Chapter XII of this section) decided to review at its 1984 session progress in implementing the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action as it related to women, science and technology, taking into account the outcome of a 1983 panel of experts on that subject. The panel of experts⁽¹⁰⁾ met at South Hadley, Massachusetts, United States, from 12 to 16 September under the joint sponsorship of the United Nations Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development and the American Association for the Advancement of Science. It recommended that Governments appoint women to science and technology bodies, take account of the use of technology to relieve women from time-consuming and underproductive work, and increase educational and training facilities for girls and women. It also recommended that the United Nations system include women in its science and technology bodies, and that scientific and professional societies and funding agencies should increase the participation of women scientists and engineers on their staffs and in their projects, provide leadership opportunities for women, and assess the impact of new technical information on women.

Participation of women in promoting peace and co-operation

In considering preparations for the 1985 World Conference, a number of delegations in the Commission on the Status of Women drew attention to the 1982 Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation⁽¹¹⁾ Some indicated the importance of enhancing women's role in decision-making on peace, international co-operation and disarmament, acknowledging that women were frustrated by being extremely underrepresented in forums on such subjects. A number of delegations emphasized that only in conditions of peace was it possible to attain equality and development, and it was noted that in time of war women and children suffered most.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/105 without vote.

Participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 37/63 of 3 December 1982, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation,

Believing that further efforts are required to eliminate discrimination against women in all its forms and in every field of human endeavour,

Wishing to encourage the active participation of women in promoting international peace and security and co-operation,

Conscious of the need to implement the provisions of the Declaration,

Desiring that publicity be given to the Declaration,

1. Calls upon the Secretary-General to disseminate widely the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation in the six official languages of the United Nations;

2. Invites all Governments to take the necessary measures to ensure wide publicity for the Declaration;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the Declaration to the attention of the appropriate specialized agencies, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and other appropriate bodies within the United Nations system, for the consideration of measures to implement the Declaration;

4. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to consider what measures may be necessary in order to implement the Declaration and to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Decides to consider at its thirty-ninth session the report of the Commission on the Status of Women under the item entitled "United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace", together with the preparations for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, to be held in 1985.

Organizational questions

Procedures for communications received

On 9 March 1983,(1) the Commission on Human Rights decided, in pursuance of a May 1982 request by the Economic and Social Council,(2) to submit the following view for consideration by the Council: that implementation in the Commission on the Status of Women of a procedure to consider communications concerning the status of women would be a useful complement to procedures in the Commission on Human Rights for considering communications on human rights violations. In implementing such a procedure, efforts should be made to encourage co-ordination between the various United Nations organs receiving communications, and to avoid unnecessary duplication. The Commission on Human Rights should continue to consider all communications concerning human rights violations; the Commission on the Status of Women, for its part, could, on the basis of those communications which specifically affected the status of women, submit recommendations to the Council on issues relating to women's rights. The Commission on Human Rights also declared its readiness to continue to co-operate with the Commission on the Status of Women to ensure co-ordination of communications procedures.

The resolution was transmitted to the Council's Second Committee by a Secretariat note of 27 April.(3)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1983, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/27 by recorded vote.

Communications concerning the status of women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 76(V) of 5 August 1947 and 304 I (XI) of 14 and 17 July 1950, which continue to form the basis for the mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women to receive at each of its regular sessions a list of confidential and non-confidential communications relating to the status of women,

Recalling also its resolution 1980/39 of 2 May 1980,

Recognizing the desirability of strengthening the capacity of the Commission on the Status of Women to deal with communications and, in this respect, taking note of paragraph 274 of the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women, in which it was emphasized that the Commission's ability to consider communications should be improved,

Considering that, since the beginning of the United Nations Decade for Women, the volume of communications on the status of women has increased substantially,

Affirming that discrimination against women is incompatible with human dignity and that women and men should participate on the basis of equality, irrespective of race or creed, in the social, economic and political processes of their countries,

1. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women to consider confidential and non-confidential communications on the status of women;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission, beginning at its thirtieth session, a report on confidential and non-confidential communications on the status of women, which shall include:

(a) Communications received under Council resolutions 76(V) and 304 I (XI), including the comments of Governments thereon, if any;

(b) Communications received by the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other United Nations bodies, together with information on action that may have been taken following the receipt of such communications;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to solicit the co-operation of the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other United Nations bodies in compiling the report called for under paragraph 2 above;

4. Authorizes the Commission on the Status of Women henceforth to appoint a working group consisting of not more than five of its members, selected with due regard for geographical distribution, to meet in closed meetings during each session of the Commission in order that it may perform the following functions:

(a) Consideration of all communications, including the replies of Governments thereon, if any, with a view to bringing to the attention of the Commission those communications, including the replies of Governments, which appear to reveal a consistent pattern of reliably attested injustice and discriminatory practices against women;

(b) Preparation of a report, based on its analysis of the confidential and non-confidential communications, which will indicate the categories in which communications are most frequently submitted to the Commission;

5. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to examine the report of the working group and to avoid duplication of the work undertaken by other organs of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission being, in this respect, empowered only to make recommendations to the Council, which shall then decide what action may appropriately be taken on the emerging trends and patterns of communications;

6. Decides that all actions envisaged in the implementation of the present resolution by the Commission on the Status of Women shall remain confidential until such time as the Commission may decide to make recommendations to the Economic and Social Council;

7. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to provide, within existing budgetary resources, the services and facilities necessary for the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/27

26 May 1983 Meeting 14 34-5-9 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/63) by recorded vote (34-5-10), 19 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on the Status of Women as submitted by Secretariat (E/1983/C.2/L.6); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. ESC 14-16.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Austria, Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Fiji, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, German Democratic Republic, Poland, USSR.

Abstaining: Algeria, Argentina, China, Congo, Kenya, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Romania, United Republic of Cameroon.

In the Committee, the Byelorussian SSR, also on behalf of Bulgaria, introduced a draft decision⁽⁴⁾ requesting the Secretary-General to transmit to Member States the views of the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Human Rights on procedures concerning communications relating to the status of women for their consideration and possible comments, which the Council would discuss at its first regular session in 1984.

The Committee considered that draft decision together with the text that became resolution 1983/27. Following the rejection, by 20 votes to 16 with 13 abstentions, of a proposal by Kenya that the Committee first take action on the draft decision, Kenya proposed that no decision be taken on both texts. The Committee also rejected that proposal, by a recorded vote of 20 to 14 with 14 abstentions. The Committee then voted on the draft resolution, after which the Byelorussian SSR and Bulgaria indicated that they would not insist on having their draft decision put to the vote.

Following the vote in the Council, Romania said it had abstained because it considered that, from a legal point of view, a Council resolution could not establish procedures governing consideration of communications valid for all Member States. The Byelorussian SSR had voted against because it saw the resolution as at variance with Council resolutions on procedures for dealing with human rights communications, which should only be changed after consultations with all Member States. The USSR stated that confidential communications on the status of women were not within the mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women but were rightly dealt with by the Commission on Human Rights; the resolution would lead to duplication and would divert the attention of the former Commission from other issues.

Other organizational matters

On 26 May, the Council adopted resolution 1983/20 on the exchange of information on the activities of CSDHA between the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on the Status of Women. In that resolution, the Council recognized the necessity to exchange such information, and requested the Secretary-General to develop and maintain close collaboration between the two bodies to ensure the integration of women in society.

By decision 1983/184 of 29 July, the Economic and Social Council decided to discontinue for another two years the provision of summary records for several bodies, among them the Commission on the Status of Women (see Chapter XXIV of this section).

Chapter XX

Children, youth and aging persons

As in previous years, 1983 United Nations programmes for children were primarily carried out by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), which helped almost 1.3 billion children through programmes in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Mediterranean area. Support was provided for water supply and sanitation, primary health care, education, food and nutrition, social services and emergency relief. UNICEF continued to promote simple, inexpensive techniques to improve children's health and reduce child mortality; in comparison to those techniques, providing food supplements, promoting family spacing and extending education were either more costly or more difficult. The General Assembly reaffirmed the importance of UNICEF's basic-services approach for children. It called for comments by States on a draft declaration relating to children's protection and welfare, especially foster placement and adoption.

Activities during the year relating to youth—persons aged between 15 and 24 years—focused on preparations for International Youth Year (1985) and on strengthening communication between youth and the United Nations. The Assembly and the Economic and Social Council called for further preparations for the Year, while the Assembly also called for promoting the human rights of youth.

Following the Assembly's endorsement in 1982 of the Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging—concerning people over 60 years of age—both the Assembly and the Council in 1983 followed up on its implementation.

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: women and children under apartheid; Health and human resources. Human Rights: rights of the child; youth and human rights.

Children

Assistance for children in 113 countries—in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Mediterranean area—was provided by UNICEF during 1983, frequently in co-operation with other United Nations bodies, in the areas of water supply and sanitation, primary health care, education, food and nutrition, social services and emergency relief. As part of the health programme, UNICEF continued to promote four techniques aimed at reducing child mortality and morbidity. The General Assembly, in resolution 38/175, reaffirmed the paramount importance of the basic-services approach for children in the delivery of UNICEF programmes, and appealed to Governments to increase their contributions so that UNICEF could strengthen its co-operation with developing countries and respond to the needs of children in those countries. Concerning the legal aspects of child adoption, the Assembly, in resolution 38/142, took action on the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally, which was being prepared by the Commission on Human Rights. It requested the Secretary-General to report in 1984 on comments by Member States on that text.

UN Children's Fund

In 1983, UNICEF co-operated in programmes in 113 countries, with a total population under 16 years of age of approximately 1.3 billion. Total programme expenditure was $246.1 million. The average expenditure per child in 1983 for countries where UNICEF was co-operating in long-term programmes was 31 cents—21 cents from general UNICEF resources and 10 cents from supplementary funds. Support was given to basic maternal and child health services and nutrition in 105 countries, to social welfare services in 98 countries, water supply and sanitation in 97 countries, formal education in 96 countries, non-formal education in 87 countries and emergency relief in 33 countries. Of the total programme expenditure, 28 per cent was spent for water supply and sanitation, 24 per cent for basic child health, 16 per cent for formal and non-formal education, 12 per cent for planning and project support, 8 per cent for nutrition, 7 per cent for social services and 5 per cent for emergency relief.

The UNICEF Executive Board held its regular 1983 session from 9 to 20 May⁽¹⁾. It also met on 20 May and 30 June to elect officers for the period 1 August 1983 to 31 July 1984⁽²⁾. The Programme Committee, sitting as a committee of the whole, met from 12 to 16 May, and the Committee on Administration and Finance, sitting likewise, met from 17 to 19 May.

According to the UNICEF Executive Director⁽³⁾ programme and support activities had become more clearly focused on the priorities of child survival and development through primary health care and basic services programmes approved in 1983 by the Executive Board. At its May 1983 regular session, the Board considered a report on the state of the world's children which highlighted four low-cost, simple-to-use techniques for achieving significant gains in child well-being. Those techniques were: oral rehydration therapy—a method of preventing dehydration caused by diarrhoea, a leading cause of child death; growth monitoring of infants by plotting their weight on charts—a technique which, when used with back-up advice, could prevent up to half of the deaths due to malnutrition in the developing world; expanded immunization, using improved vaccines to prevent six communicable diseases from killing an estimated 5 million children annually; and breast-feeding, which has nutritional and sanitary benefits for children. The UNICEF programme was endorsed by the Board.

The Executive Director pointed out that the world recession had had grave consequences for children and mothers in the developing world, and the situation in sub-Saharan Africa was so serious that it was singled out as a special case. During 1983, a special study on the impact of the world recession on children was prepared by UNICEF with the assistance of economists. In spite of data deficiencies, the evidence confirmed that children in poor societies were measurably suffering from the recession's effects. In northern Zambia, for example, there were indications that children's height-for-age was falling; in São Paulo, Brazil, the proportion of low-birth-weight babies was rising; and in one area of Costa Rica, the number of children being treated for severe malnutrition doubled between 1981 and 1982. The impact of the world recession, however, differed considerably in different parts of the world.

Programme policy decisions

At its May 1983 session⁽¹⁾ the UNICEF Executive Board reviewed UNICEF's performance in 1982, endorsed new programme initiatives to accelerate child health and survival, reviewed the situation of children, and approved the programmatic and financial objectives of the medium-term plan for 1982-1986, as well as several budget estimates, including the budget for the 1984-1985 biennium, which had been formulated based on zero growth of Professional posts. As approved by the Board in its endorsement of programme approaches, the infant mortality rate, along with gross national product per capita and child population, would be used to guide the content and level of UNICEF programmes for individual countries.

The Board approved general resource commitments totalling $109.4 million and "noted" projects (for which funds had not been obtained) in the amount of $136.1 million for financing through specific-purpose contributions. It noted UNICEF's policy review on supplementary funding and specific-purpose contributions, stressing that general resources should continue to be the mainstay of funding. Following a debate on external relations, the Board endorsed a policy of improving and extending UNICEF external relations activities and encouraged the Executive Director to make full use of the National Committees for UNICEF.

The Board also endorsed the aims of a programme, to be undertaken jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), to foster primary education and literacy, and "noted" education projects in four countries.

By decision 1983/187 of 29 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of several documents on operational activities for development (see Chapter II of this section), including the report of the UNICEF Executive Board⁽¹⁾

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 38/175 without vote.

United Nations Children's Fund

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1983/187 of 29 July 1983,

Having considered the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund on its session held at United Nations Headquarters from 9 to 21 May 1983,

Reaffirming the principles and guidelines for programme activities established by the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund in its efforts to reach the most disadvantaged in order to bring about a major improvement in child survival and child development, taking special advantage of developments in primary health care techniques and communications,

Acutely aware that the present global economic situation adversely affects vulnerable groups such as children and therefore makes the need for those efforts all the more critical,

1. Commends the policies and activities of the United Nations Children's Fund;
2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the 1983 session of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund;
3. Reaffirms the role of the United Nations Children's Fund as the lead agency in the United Nations system responsible for co-ordinating the follow-up activities of the International Year of the Child related to the goals and objectives concerning children set forth in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

4. Reaffirms the paramount importance of the basic-services approach for children in the delivery of the programmes of the United Nations Children's Fund, while also urging the Executive Director to continue and intensify his efforts on the basis of recent developments in the social and biological sciences which present a new opportunity to bring about a virtual revolution in child survival and child development, at a low cost and in a relatively short time, in accordance with the relevant decisions of the Executive Board of the Fund;

5. Commends the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund for his efforts to enlarge the income of the Fund so that the Fund may respond effectively to the needs of the developing countries, in continued pursuance of its mandate;

6. Expresses its appreciation to Governments that have responded to the needs of the United Nations Children's Fund and expresses the hope that more States will come forward with positive responses;

7. Appeals to all Governments to increase their contributions so that, in the light of the current economic situation, the Fund may be able to strengthen its co-operation with developing countries and respond to the urgent needs of children in those countries.

General Assembly resolution 38/175

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/703) without vote, 9 December (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.108), based on informal consultations on 31-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.93); agenda item 79 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 46-53, 55; plenary 102.

The 31-nation draft—by developing and Western States—which was withdrawn in view of the adoption of resolution 38/175, was identical to that text except for paragraphs 4 and 5. Paragraph 4 of the multi-nation draft read: "Urges the Executive Director and the secretariat of the United Nations Children's Fund to continue and intensify their efforts based on recent developments in the social and biological sciences which present a new opportunity to bring about a virtual revolution in child survival and child development, at a low cost and in a relatively short span of time, thereby adapting the basic-services approach for children in the light of current developments in accordance with the relevant decisions of the Executive Board of the Fund". Under paragraph 5 of the original text, the Assembly would have commended both the UNICEF Executive Director and the secretariat for efforts to enlarge UNICEF's income.

Medium-term plan for 1982-1986

At its May 1983 session⁽¹⁾ the Executive Board approved the programme objectives of the medium-term plan for 1982-1986 as prepared by UNICEF⁽⁴⁾ which were to promote child survival and reduce infant and child mortality and to improve the situation and welfare of children and poorer women. Such objectives were sought through a basic-services strategy, with special emphasis on policies and programmes having the potential to achieve more benefits at proportionately less cost. In the report on the plan, the Executive Director recommended that the Board approve the plan as a framework of projections for 1983-1986, including the preparation of up to $215 million in programme commitments from general resources to be submitted to the 1984 Board session. That amount was subject to the condition that estimates of income and expenditure continued to be valid. The Board approved the financial objectives contained in the medium-term plan projecting that UNICEF income would increase from $410 million in 1983 to $495 million in 1986, while annual expenditure would increase from $356 million to $465 million.

Maurice Pate Memorial Award

In February, the Executive Director recommended that the 1983 Maurice Pate Memorial Award, established to commemorate the first Executive Director of UNICEF, be awarded to the Pan-African Institute for Development⁽⁵⁾ The Executive Board, by approving the 1983 commitments at its May session, approved the recommendation. The Institute was recognized for its efforts to train middle- and upper-level personnel involved with rural development in Africa, particularly in nutrition. The Institute planned to use the $15,000 award to research and produce a guide for training village-level nutrition workers.

UNICEF programmes by region

In 1983, programme expenditures for Africa increased by 16 per cent over 1982; for the Americas, by 22.5 per cent; for East Asia and Pakistan, by 2 per cent; and for the Eastern Mediterranean, by 57 per cent. Programme expenditures for South Central Asia decreased by 3 per cent, and there were no expenditures for Europe in 1983 (in 1982, Poland and Turkey were recipients of UNICEF programmes).

The tables on the following pages show expenditures and commitments for 1983⁽⁶⁾ and commitments and "notings" (for projects awaiting funding) approved by the Executive Board in May⁽¹⁾

Africa

In 1983, UNICEF reinforced its programmes in eastern Africa,⁽⁷⁾ an area that suffered from the global economic situation and from food shortages, notably in Ethiopia and Mozambique due to long-lasting drought (see Chapter III of this section). Large essential drug and nutrition programmes were launched in Africa. The essential drug programme in the United Republic of Tanzania moved from the planning stage to implementation.

NOTE: No regional projects were considered in 1983.

Joint World Health Organization (WHO)/UNICEF nutrition support programmes were begun in Ethiopia and the United Republic of Tanzania and were near implementation in Mozambique and Somalia. Training and staff development continued to receive considerable attention. A second regional programme workshop, held in August, was attended by national and international staff of various functions, including programme, supply, finance and audit. Efficient programme delivery continued to be a concern within each country, and a study of the periodic progress report system resulted in some changes and the addition of a programme officer to oversee and co-ordinate feedback.

Primary health care (PHC)—including training health workers, monitoring infants' growth, diarrhoeal-disease control by oral rehydration therapy, promotion of breast-feeding, and immunization—continued to be emphasized in eastern Africa by many Governments (Botswana, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Swaziland, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe), non-governmental organizations and professional groups, with UNICEF support. Education was another priority area, and in some countries, such as Ethiopia, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania, major reforms had been implemented to provide an educational system more relevant to the population's needs. In about one third of the countries, universal primary education had been achieved and emphasis turned to improving the quality of education and reaching minority groups. Other areas of work in the region included water supply and sanitation, child-related social statistics, technology to improve the home environment, and transport assistance.

In west and central Africa⁽⁸⁾ a region affected by political upheaval as well as the world economic recession and food shortages in 1983, UNICEF focused on providing food for the malnourished, child health and anti-epidemic measures. Infant mortality rates for the region were among the highest in the world and there was a high incidence of disease. UNICEF co-operation continued to be structured around health, nutrition and child survival; water and sanitation (particularly in Benin, the Central African Republic, Chad, Mali, Mauritania and the Niger); education (particularly in Angola, Benin, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Congo, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta); social and community development (through aiding Governments, including Benin, the Central African Republic, Guinea, the Niger and Senegal, to foster community developments); and response to emergencies (aiding Benin, Ghana and Togo—when their nationals were suddenly expelled from Nigeria—and Angola and Chad).

Americas

The basic services strategy continued to be the guide-post for the UNICEF country programmes in Latin America in 1983,⁽⁹⁾ with special attention given to the most disadvantaged geographical areas, especially where the infant mortality rate was high. The region did not experience the expected economic recovery predicted for that year, but was facing an economic crisis after many years of growth. Some countries were hit by major natural disasters (see Chapter III of this section).

UNICEF provided assistance in PHC (in Colombia, Ecuador, Haiti, Mexico and Nicaragua), a national care plan for young children in Bolivia, an inter-agency workshop in Chile on early childhood development programmes, community child care in Colombia, early childhood development (pre-school education in the Dominican Republic, health and nutrition services in Haiti and in the English-speaking Caribbean islands, and a regional seminar on pre-school education in Peru), primary education (Colombia and Jamaica), abandoned children (through developing community-based models and interventions in collaboration with Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador and Mexico), support for economic activities for women (Belize, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico and Nicaragua), and urban basic services in low-income areas (through active community involvement in Ecuador, Haiti and Mexico, and a regional project for Central America).

Asia

In East Asia and Pakistan⁽¹⁰⁾ UNICEF continued to concentrate its programmes on less privileged areas, with full participation and contribution of resources by local communities as well as by Governments and other agencies. The need to ensure national coverage of the techniques endorsed by UNICEF to promote better child care (see above) was generally recognized by Governments. In better-off countries where child survival was no longer the prime concern, greater attention was given to pre-school education, especially in Malaysia, the Republic of Korea and, to a certain degree, in the Philippines. Although several countries still had to import food, no famine had been reported in the region in the previous few years.

Many programmes focused on PHC. Indonesia was being considered for a joint UNICEF/WHO programme, as had been implemented in Burma and Papua New Guinea. The Philippines, with UNICEF support for training, expanded its infrastructure in this area and mobilized community groups for improved delivery of health services. In Thailand, emphasis was placed on community action for providing basic services. Because growth monitoring had become village-based, programmes in Burma, Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand were more effective. Immunization had been expanded in Pakistan and Viet Nam, and immunization programmes were audited in Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand. National codes to control the marketing of breast-milk substitutes were adopted by Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines and Thailand. A UNICEF-supported seminar on infant feeding in the Pacific Islands gave rise to a recommendation for Cabinet action on national codes. In Bangladesh, Burma, Indonesia and the Republic of Korea, UNICEF was involved in promoting such national codes.

UNICEF assistance was also provided for water and sanitation, and increasing attention was given to training, including construction, repair and maintenance of water systems (Papua New Guinea and Thailand). In Burma, Pakistan and Thailand, oral rehydration salts, a treatment for diarrhoeal disease, were produced. Seven countries of the region (Bangladesh, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Thailand) had projects in basic services in urban areas. PHC, nutrition, and non-formal education for women were the core services.

In South Central Asia⁽¹¹⁾ despite the shrinkage of aid resources and foreign earnings, major health projects with UNICEF and WHO collaboration—such as maternal and child health, family planning and goitre control—received more financial support than in 1982. Improved infant feeding was emphasized. Afghanistan and Sri Lanka adopted national codes on marketing of breast-milk substitutes, and India actively promoted breast-feeding. Immunization was expanded in co-operation with Governments (India, Nepal, Pakistan and Sri Lanka). UNICEF promoted local manufacture of oral rehydration salts by women's groups (India) and by government companies (Afghanistan, Nepal and Sri Lanka), and responded to an epidemic of meningitis in Nepal and of diarrhoea in Maldives and Sri Lanka.

After studies revealed severe iodine deficiency, special nutritional programmes were initiated in Bhutan and India. Regional co-operation was expanded in large-scale production and distribution of iodated salt, with UNICEF funding provided for setting up plants in India and for iodinated oil injections in India and Nepal. It also provided vitamin A tablets. Other programmes focused on education and literacy (Nepal and Sri Lanka), and water and sanitation (Bhutan, India and Nepal). Urban slum improvement (Afghanistan, India and Sri Lanka) was another area of concern.

Middle East and North Africa

In 1983, political confrontation continued to be the main factor affecting the lives of children and their families in the Mediterranean area. The situation had a major impact on regional institutional structures, which were not fully available to provide critical linkage, communication and technical support. The Gulf area UNICEF office in the United Arab Emirates, which was given a new mandate to provide leadership and support to the country offices in the Gulf, became fully operational in 1983. Throughout the conflict in Lebanon, the UNICEF office in Beirut continued to operate, despite a major disruption of its regional support functions when the Beirut airport was closed for the month of September. The uncertain political and economic climate was reflected in the reduced number of UNICEF Executive Board submissions for 1983. The Arab Gulf Programme for the United Nations Development Organizations (AGFUND) remained the best regional supporter of UNICEF. By the end of the fiscal year ending 31 August 1983, AGFUND had allocated $46.9 million to UNICEF.

The WHO regional office carried out in 1983 an assessment of the implementation of PHC activities in 23 Eastern Mediterranean countries, according to which achievements were far behind the targets set for the year 2000. The adult literacy rate was 36 per cent compared to the target of 70 per cent, and the immunization rate remained low. About 52 per cent of the population was within easy reach of safe drinking water and 40 per cent was within easy reach of waste disposal facilities, compared to targets of 100 per cent. Most countries of the region had responded to those problems and were implementing one or more of the strategies outlined by UNICEF to achieve a better state of child welfare (see above). UNICEF provided support for many of those programmes, for example: supplying oral rehydration salts for Jordan, supporting a vaccination campaign in Lebanon and an evaluation of infant care in the Syrian Arab Republic, providing instructional aids on nutrition to Jordan, and organizing workshops in Saudi Arabia on breast-feeding. Public information activities, centred on advocating UNICEF policies at both the country and regional levels, with special efforts to mobilize the mass media to support those strategies aimed at reducing infant mortality rates. In the Sudan, a conference on nomadic groups was being organized to identify methodologies to provide for their special needs.

UNICEF responded to emergencies caused by both man-made and natural disasters, providing assistance to Lebanon, Turkey and Yemen (see Chapter III of this section). During relief operations in Lebanon, UNICEF took the opportunity to introduce oral rehydration therapy and to emphasize the importance of breast-feeding. In Turkey, which was struck by an earthquake in 1983, UNICEF supplemented the relief assistance of other organizations by providing clothing and shoes for 1,800 children.

UNICEF programmes by sector

As in the previous five years, child health, including nutrition, accounted for the largest portion of UNICEF's expenditures in 1983, followed by water supply and sanitation. Other major programmes were social welfare services and education. The table below gives UNICEF expenditures⁽¹²⁾ and commitments⁽¹⁾ by sector.

Child welfare in urban areas

During 1983, UNICEF continued to expand support to community-based activities in the slums and shanty towns of third world cities⁽³⁾ according to policy guidelines approved by the Executive Board in 1982.⁽¹³⁾ Nearly 50 countries were receiving urban basic services assistance. Priority programme areas included reducing infant and child mortality and malnutrition, increasing women's income-earning potential, providing day-care facilities, improving water supplies and environmental sanitation, and reintegrating abandoned children into society. Slum and shanty dwellers represented a growing proportion of city populations, and UNICEF field offices reported an alarming increase in malnutrition among urban children. A contributing factor was the decline in the duration and incidence of breast-feeding. Other health problems occurring in high-density urban areas, where sanitation facilities and refuse disposal services were all but non-existent, included diarrhoea, measles, parasitic infestation and respiratory infections. UNICEF's approach to the problems of abandoned, refugee and abused children and those working under intolerable conditions—a problem in urban areas throughout developing countries—was to back non-conventional and non-institutional activities for street children and help Governments and voluntary organizations learn from such experiences.

An example of UNICEF assistance in this sector was support for the Davao Medical Foundation in Davao City, the Philippines, in a programme to reduce illness and malnutrition. In the light of the number of child minders in slum areas who were themselves children, "child-to-child" instruction was an important feature of the programme. In Peru, UNICEF-assisted PHC and pre-school services covered an urban community of 500,000 and included growth monitoring and oral rehydration. A project in Brazil to help reintegrate street children into their communities was expanded to include 120 state and local organizations. The urban basic services programme in Mexico, being initiated in four pilot communities, included activities focused on child health, low-cost water and sanitation technology, housing, food production and income-generation.

At its May session,⁽¹⁾ the Executive Board welcomed the continued expansion of UNICEF urban activities as consistent with its 1982 urban programme strategy⁽¹³⁾ More comprehensive support for urban children was called for, including special shelter facilities, sanitation and nutrition programmes, job preparation, organized community involvement, action against child labour, prevention of juvenile delinquency and help for abandoned children.

Education

In absolute terms, UNICEF's annual expenditure on education increased over previous years, but the proportion spent on education declined from an average of 21 per cent during 1975-1979 to 14.5 per cent during 1979-1982. In 1983, 16 per cent of expenditure was for education (both formal and non-formal), for a total of $40.4 million, compared with 14 per cent, or $29.1 million, in 1982. A growing share was being devoted to non-formal community activities for early childhood care and education. UNICEF, during 1983, co-operated in primary and non-formal education in 101 countries: 43 in Africa, 26 in Asia, 21 in the Americas and 11 in the Middle East and North Africa region. Its programmes included: providing stipends for training teachers, equipping primary schools and teacher-training institutions with teaching aids, and assisting countries to prepare textbooks locally by funding printing, bookbinding and paper.

UNICEF's support for basic and primary education focused on disadvantaged children, especially those living in remote and underdeveloped areas. According to estimates, 86 per cent of primary age children in developing countries were enrolled in schools in 1980, compared to 57 per cent in 1960, but of those, one in two did not complete the full primary education cycle. The low literacy rate among women in developing countries (50 per cent of women over 15 years of age) was particularly disturbing because of its negative implications for child welfare. Studies had found that the higher the level of the mother's education, the lower the mortality rate of infants. UNICEF's efforts to improve child education were included in activities designated as necessary for child survival, and emphasis was placed on participation of girls and women in primary education and literacy programmes. Support was given to special education projects for women in "family life training centres" in Chad, Ethiopia and Haiti, for example. In Bangladesh, Ethiopia, the Sudan and Zimbabwe, assistance was given to pre-service and in-service training for primary school teachers. In remote areas of Indonesia and the Syrian Arab Republic, UNICEF assisted in the development of one-room multi-grade schools. In Ethiopia and Oman, UNICEF supported the production of literacy and post-literacy materials, and in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the production and distribution of basic school supplies. Reading materials on health, hygiene and nutrition for use in schools and literacy classes were distributed to rural areas in Egypt.

In addition to the regular programme, in 1983 the Executive Board⁽¹⁾ approved a $30 million joint programme with UNESCO⁽¹⁴⁾ to be financed through special contributions, to support universal primary education and literacy, initially in five countries: Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Nepal, Nicaragua and Peru. In approving the programme, the Board endorsed the UNICEF initiative to collaborate with UNESCO, Governments and others in efforts to achieve education for all by the end of the century. Countries to be assisted were low on the socio-economic scale, with high infant mortality and low per capita income.

Nutrition

In 1983, UNICEF co-operated in nutrition programmes in 93 countries—39 in Africa, 25 in Asia, 20 in the Americas and 9 in the Middle East and North Africa region—with a total expenditure of $19.2 million, an increase of $200,000 over 1982. Its activities included expanding nutrition programmes in over 19,000 villages, equipping nutrition centres and demonstration areas, providing stipends to train nutrition workers, and delivering some 24,438 metric tons of food. A five-year joint UNICEF/WHO nutrition support programme, approved by the Executive Board in 1982⁽¹⁵⁾ and financed by a contribution of $85.3 million from Italy, had its first full year of operation in 1983, a year devoted to planning and project preparation. The programme aimed to combine dietary and non-dietary measures within the broad context of PHC, in order to reduce child mortality and morbidity, and improve child development and maternal nutrition. At a meeting on 1 and 2 February in Geneva,⁽¹⁶⁾ the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy noted with satisfaction the progress on this project—three countries (Mali, the Sudan and the United Republic of Tanzania) had formulated plans at that time, and funding had been approved.

Nutrition programmes included supplementary feeding in areas where drought or civil disturbance had caused crop failure. High priority was given to the control of dietary deficiency diseases by the distribution of iodized salt, vitamin A and other food supplements in many countries, including Angola, Egypt, Haiti, Indonesia, Lebanon and Zimbabwe. The use of appropriate weaning foods was another UNICEF concern, and it co-operated in home and community production of such foods, based on locally available ingredients, in Brazil, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Iraq and the United Republic of Tanzania. UNICEF also supported the industrial production of supplementary weaning foods, mostly for urban areas, in Algeria, China and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. Gardening and preservation of home-grown foodstuffs were supported in many countries, including Guatemala, Jamaica, Mexico, the Republic of Korea and Uganda.

Infant feeding

UNICEF and WHO continued to co-operate in 1983 with countries to promote breast-feeding, a practice beneficial to child health. Studies published in 1983—confirming that breast-feeding still predominated in the rural areas of almost all developing countries, but that in metropolitan areas bottle-feeding was on the rise—reinforced the arguments against bottle-feeding. Efforts were continued to strengthen the application in individual countries of the 1981 International Code on Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes.⁽¹⁷⁾ By the end of 1983, more than 20 countries had adopted the Code, and close to 1,000 more were engaged in actions related to the Code; however, most national regulations were legally weak, and there was little monitoring of violations.

The media were used to promote breast-feeding in many countries. UNICEF provided assistance for a multi-media national campaign for breast-feeding in Brazil and for distribution of breast-feeding booklets and posters in Egypt, the Philippines and Saudi Arabia.

Primary health care

UNICEF continued in 1983 to emphasize primary health care (PHC), and its expenditures in this sector totalled $58.4 million for the year. As the infant mortality rate remained high in many countries, UNICEF attempted to expand PHC through four low-cost techniques: monitoring child growth, oral rehydration for the treatment of diarrhoea, the promotion of breast-feeding, and universal childhood immunization (see above). It co-operated in child health programmes in 102 countries—43 in Africa, 27 in Asia, 21 in the Americas and 11 in the Middle East and North Africa region. Its activities included: providing grants for training health workers; providing technical supplies and equipment for health centres, especially in rural areas; and supplying medicines and vaccines against tuberculosis, diphtheria, tetanus, typhoid, measles, polio and other diseases.

Diarrhoea, acute respiratory infections, communicable diseases and malnutrition continued to be the major causes of death in children in developing countries. In general, PHC services expanded, although they were far from universal in their practical application. UNICEF played an important advocacy role in several countries and supported national seminars and reviews of PHC strategy. It recognized that PHC problems could only be tackled by better community services and involvement, incorporating education and nutrition.

Major initiatives on communication programmes for health were undertaken in the Arab Gulf countries, Central America, Liberia, Mauritius, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania. The Philippines taught organization and communication skills to Government health workers, and Kenya and Malawi trained district teams to mobilize community leaders for planning and managing PHC. Swaziland set up community health councils.

In many countries, maternal and child health were strengthened by training traditional birth attendants, who carried out the majority of deliveries. Programmes were expanded in Djibouti, Malawi, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Sudan and Yemen.

For several years, UNICEF and WHO had been co-operating in a programme on the supply of essential drugs. In 1983, UNICEF increased the level of its co-operation, giving special attention to a number of African countries, including Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, Somalia, the United Republic of Tanzania, and the Upper Volta. The UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy (Geneva, 1-2 February)⁽¹⁶⁾ considered how to support the implementation and development of PHC in countries with a clear commitment to that approach. It decided that progress reports should be made to the Committee every two years. It recommended that the two organizations pay particular attention to: strengthening community involvement, improving health information systems in order to monitor implementation, adapting health manpower planning to PHC objectives, increasing resources for PHC, and facilitating the exchange of experience among countries. The recommendations were endorsed by the Executive Director of UNICEF.⁽⁸⁾

A study by UNDP and WHO of human resources development for primary health care was completed in 1983 (see Chapter XV of this section).

UNICEF finances

The financial position of UNICEF continued to be sound in 1983, despite the continuing effects of global economic recession.⁽¹²⁾ Income, excluding funds for emergencies, was $332 million, compared with $328 million in 1982. Emergency funds provided another $10 million. Voluntary contributions from Governments continued to make up 75 per cent of the total, but contributions from private sources increased slightly to 17 per cent of the total; the remaining 8 per cent came from United Nations organizations and from other miscellaneous income. Income for general resources was $241 million, virtually the same level as in 1982, excluding contributions for Lebanon relief operations. It was estimated that the effects of the strengthening exchange rate for the United States dollar had reduced income by $19 million.

Total expenditure in 1983 was $332 million, which was $24 million, or 6 per cent, less than estimated. Expenditure of $236 million was from general resources and $96 million from supplementary funds. The higher purchasing power of the United States dollar reduced the cost of goods and services paid in other countries by $12 million.

Financial plan for 1983-1986

The UNICEF financial plan for 1983-1986, set out in the medium-term work plan, projected an income of $270 million for 1983, and $290 million, $315 million and $338 million for the following three years. Projected expenditures for the same period were $263 million, $288 million, $313 million and $335 million.

At its May meeting⁽¹⁾ the Executive Board approved the medium-term plan as a framework of projections, including the preparation of up to $215 million in programme commitments from general resources to be submitted to the Board in 1984. That amount was subject to the condition that estimates of income and expenditure made in the plan continued to be valid. The Board considered that the income projections were realistic, while recognizing that exchange rate fluctuations and other economic uncertainties continued to prevail.

Budget for 1984-1985

In a report to the Executive Board at its May session, the UNICEF Executive Director presented budget estimates for the 1984-1985 biennium.⁽¹⁹⁾ The budget proposal, based on the medium-term plan (see above), suggested that UNICEF goals could be achieved with zero growth in the number of professional and national officer posts.

UNICEF budget estimates for the biennium amounted to $218 million (gross), a 9.8 per cent annual increase over the 1982-1983 budget. The comparable annual increase of total UNICEF expenditure, both programme and budgetary, was about 14 per cent, from $657 million in 1982-1983 to $847 million in 1984-1985. The annual increase was mainly due to anticipated inflation estimated at a global rate of 6 to 7 per cent, mandatory salary increments, investment in electronic data processing equipment, staff consolidations and additional general service posts. Consolidation and integration of units and organizational changes in the secretariat were taking place to cope with the increased work-load anticipated for 1984-1985. The budget allocated $124.5 million for programme activities, $55.4 million for general administration, $26.8 million for external relations and $13.1 million for policy-making, direction, co-ordination and control.

In May, the Board approved a commitment of $219.8 million (gross) for the 1984-1985 budget, including expenditure and income ($38.1 million) estimates.⁽¹⁾ The budget of the UNICEF Packing and Assembly Centre at Copenhagen, Denmark, was approved as part of the regular budget on a provisional basis, on the understanding that the unit would remain self-financing. The Board found the projections to be realistic but expressed concern over the build-up of general resources liquidity, which had been slower than planned in 1982.

The Board, having considered the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the 1984-1985 budget estimates, decided to consider adopting a revised format for the UNICEF budget estimates and to request the Executive Director to submit a revised budget format more in line with the organizational structure of the secretariat. In December, the Director submitted a mock-up of the proposed format, using information from the 1984-1985 budget for presentation.⁽²⁰⁾

Accounts

At its May 1983 session⁽¹⁾ the Executive Board reviewed and noted the observations on the 1981 UNICEF financial report and the financial report of the Greeting Card Operation (GCO) for the 1980/1981 season by the United Nations Board of Auditors and ACABQ⁽²¹⁾ and the comments made and action taken by the Executive Director in response to those observations⁽²²⁾ The Board welcomed the improved format of the financial report, which presented for the first time the observations in one composite document organized by subject.

The Board acted on the recommendation of its Committee on Administration and Finance, which met in New York from 17 to 19 May.⁽²³⁾

In June 1983, following an audit of UNICEF accounts, the United Nations Board of Auditors submitted to the General Assembly the financial statements of UNICEF, including GCO, for 1982.⁽²⁴⁾

The Board made recommendations for improving financial management and control systems, and noted that the necessary data for banking and investment purposes had not been computerized in Geneva. Its examination of the balances in the advances recoverable locally and in accounts to Governments indicated the need for further streamlining of the existing follow-up and reporting procedures. The Board also found that consultants had been engaged in the field without authorization by headquarters and performance evaluation of their work had not been carried out. On procurement matters, it noted that occasionally competitive bids had not been submitted and delivery dates were not kept by suppliers. It recommended that the existing procedure for repeat orders be reviewed in order to effect more economy in procurement, and that project monitoring and evaluation be strengthened by headquarters.

Regarding GCO, the Board said that budgetary control could be made more effective by earmarking certain authorizations to clearly identifiable objects of expenditure and by instituting appropriate authorization control procedures. In addition, it said that further efforts were necessary to make GCO more profitable.

In its September 1983 report on audited financial statements⁽²¹⁾ ACABQ commented on the Board's suggestions and noted that UNICEF income for 1982 rose by 30 per cent over 1981. ACABQ, having inquired about a scheme of zero-balance bank accounts that the Board said would be introduced on an experimental basis, learned that the scheme had been partially implemented, with 23 accounts included. UNICEF estimated that, as a result of the procedure, it had been able to reduce its non-interest-bearing balances by 25 per cent. With the consolidation of UNICEF's supply, procurement and shipping services in Copenhagen, a number of procedures relating to procurement were being examined. ACABQ hoped that the re-examination would result in meeting some of the problems observed by the Board. On the issue of standardization, ACABQ was informed by UNICEF that the current system allowed for competitive bidding. Regarding its own 1982 recommendation that penalty clauses for late delivery be included in standard UNICEF procurement contracts⁽²⁵⁾ ACABQ noted that this was being considered on a contract-by-contract basis.

In statements to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the UNICEF Executive Director and administration also commented on the 1982 financial statements, and on the recommendations of the Board of Auditors and ACABQ. These comments and recommendations were included in a January 1984 report to the Economic and Social Council.⁽²⁶⁾ Regarding the recommendation on cash management, UNICEF noted that all its accounts earned interest and therefore, balances, which were kept at low levels, could not be considered idle cash. As a result of previous recommendations regarding consultancy services, UNICEF had taken corrective action when instructions had not been followed, including a reporting system on the performance of consultants. Procurement and shipping services were being improved by consolidation in the International Supply Centre in Copenhagen, and procedures were being re-examined, including redefinition of standardization concepts and review of the reordering process.

The UNICEF Committee on Administration and Finance, during its May 1983 meeting⁽²³⁾ noted that UNICEF's financial position had improved in 1982. It was pointed out that total current account balances at the end of 1982 were at about the same level as the previous year and represented about two weeks of average expenditures. Balances of restricted currencies at that time were at about the same level as the previous year, indicating that such currencies were turned over with no accumulation, although it had not been possible to reduce such holdings.

At its May 1983 session⁽¹⁾ the UNICEF Board reviewed and noted the financial report and statements for 1982. On 25 November, the General Assembly—in resolution 38/30, on a number of financial reports audited by the Board of Auditors, including UNICEF's—accepted those reports and concurred with the ACABQ comments. It requested the executive heads of the organizations concerned to take remedial action as required by the Auditors.

Organizational questions

Greeting Card Operation

During the 1982 GCO season (1 May 1982-30 April 1983), 115 million cards, 441,000 calendars, 314,000 packs of stationery and other items were sold in 139 countries⁽³⁾ The sales generated $46.9 million in gross revenues, compared to $46.8 million the previous year, yielding a net operational income of $18.1 million to UNICEF general resources. According to a May 1983 UNICEF report on GCO⁽²⁷⁾ the net proceeds were $40 million, or $5 million (14 per cent) more than in 1981/1982. The cost of goods delivered increased to $9 million, up $1 million (12 per cent), due to larger quantities produced and inflationary factors. The fixed costs amounted to $13 million, or $2 million (18 per cent) more than in the previous year, partly due to a one-time expenditure for the automation of the production plant in New York.

The UNICEF Executive Board, at its May session⁽¹⁾ approved the 1983/1984 work plan for GCO, in which planned card production ranged from 115 million to 135 million, expenditure from $24.6 million to $28.4 million and corresponding revenue projections from $42.9 million to $59 million. The work plan for 1 May 1983-30 April 1984 had been recommended by the UNICEF Executive Director.⁽²⁸⁾ He noted that there was no increase in planned expenditures for the 1983 season due to improved internal efficiency and currency changes.

NGO relations

UNICEF continued in 1983 to foster contacts with non-governmental organizations (NGOs).⁽³⁾ Several international NGOs working in developing countries adopted proposals to reduce infant mortality by supporting priority action measures, and possibilities for global and regional programmes were explored. A collaborative project with the International Paediatric Association called for three regional meetings to focus on the major avoidable causes of childhood mortality and morbidity, including discussion of how to expand immunization, oral rehydration therapy and growth monitoring, and promote breast-feeding and safe weaning (see above). Similarly, the League of Red Cross Societies was planning, in co-operation with UNICEF, to support information and health programmes of national societies in diarrhoea control, promotion of breast-feeding and nutritional awareness.

In its efforts to increase co-operation between UNICEF and NGOs, the NGO Committee on UNICEF asked its members for information on their activities in countries which were preparing programmes for the UNICEF Executive Board in 1984 and 1985. The information would be shared with programme staff as a basis for furthering co-operation at the country level. The Committee issued a report in April on UNICEF/NGO co-operation at intermediate and local levels.⁽²⁹⁾

Draft declaration on adoption and foster placement

In an October 1983 report with three later addenda⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly replies he had received from 22 Governments concerning the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally.

The draft declaration had been prepared by a group of experts in response to a 1975 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽³¹⁾ and was submitted to the Council in 1979.⁽³²⁾ In December 1982,⁽³³⁾ the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to circulate the draft text to Member States to obtain their views.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, adopted resolution 38/142 without vote.

Draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 36/167 of 16 December 1981, whereby it decided, inter alia, that appropriate measures should be taken to finalize the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally,

Noting, in this connection, the current efforts of the Commission on Human Rights to elaborate a draft Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling the action taken by the Economic and Social Council on the draft Declaration,

Bearing in mind the reports of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1980, 19 October 1982 and 6 October 1983, containing the views of Member States on the text of the draft Declaration,

Noting that the first of the above-mentioned reports contains, in section VI, some proposed amendments and reformulations of certain articles based on comments by Member States,

Fully aware of the sovereign right of Governments to define their national and international policies as regards the protection and welfare of children, including foster placement and adoption,

Bearing in mind the existence of different national legislation in the field of the protection and welfare of children,

Recognizing that it is the responsibility of Governments to determine the adequacy of their national services for children and to recognize those children whose needs are not being met by existing services,

Noting the usefulness of regional co-operation in matters regarding the well-being of children,

Recognizing that the best child welfare is good family welfare and that, when family care is unavailable or inappropriate, substitute family care should be considered, in conformity with national legislation,

Convinced that adoption of the draft Declaration will promote the well-being of children with special needs,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States to comment on the most appropriate procedure for completing work on the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally and the forum for future discussion, bearing in mind the suggestions and proposals made in the Sixth Committee;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report containing the comments and observations received pursuant to paragraph 1 above, with a view to taking a final decision on the procedure to be followed;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session an item entitled "Consideration of the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally".

Youth

Activities during the year relating to youth—persons 15 to 24 years old—focused on preparations for International Youth Year (1985) (IYY) and on strengthening communication between youth and the United Nations. The Assembly, in resolutions 38/22 and 38/26, and the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/14, called for further preparations for the Year. While the Council, in resolution 1983/26, acted to improve co-ordination and information relating to youth, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to publicize United Nations-related activities and also called for promoting the human rights of youth (resolution 38/23), particularly the right to education and vocational training and to work.

The Council, in resolutions 1983/14 and 1983/17, took note of a 1982 report of the Secretary-General on the situation of youth in the 1980s,⁽¹⁾ in which he stated that the youth population—20 per cent of that of the world—would continue to rise in developing countries and decline in developed nations. According to the report, young people in the 1980s faced economic recession and rising unemployment, coupled with social changes of family disintegration, rapid urbanization and industrialization. The Council called for measures to ensure the employment of young people, and for the implementation of their rights to social and economic development, education and employment.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1983, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted two resolutions concerning the development of youth.

It adopted resolution 1983/14 without vote.

Youth in the contemporary world

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting with great interest the importance attached by the General Assembly and other United Nations bodies to the concerns of youth,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/16 of 9 May 1979 and 1981/16 of 6 May 1981 on youth in the contemporary world, as well as General Assembly resolutions 35/126 of 11 December 1980, 36/28 of 13 November 1981 and 37/48 of 3 December 1982 on the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace, and 36/17 of 9 November 1981 and 37/50 of 3 December 1982 on channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations,

Noting with satisfaction that the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 2037(XX) of 7 December 1965, continues to provide a useful basis and incentive for further action in the field of youth, at the national, regional, interregional and international levels,

Convinced that the preservation and strengthening of international peace and security are prerequisites for a secure and happy future for the youth of all countries,

Recognizing the importance of integrating young people in the overall life of society and of taking fully into account their special needs when formulating national plans and programmes,

Emphasizing the need to increase the quantity and quality of opportunities for young people for their active and productive participation in the general development of society,

Reaffirming the necessity of intensifying and consolidating the efforts of the United Nations so as to give effect to a co-ordinated and practical approach to the youth programmes of all the United Nations agencies involved, as well as strengthening co-operation with non-governmental youth organizations or organizations dealing directly with youth,

Noting the views on the question of youth in the contemporary world expressed in the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of youth in the 1980s and in the report of the Commission for Social Development on its twenty-seventh session,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of youth in the 1980s;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session all relevant documents on the question of youth prepared for the Commission for Social Development;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to take into account the views expressed on youth in the Commission for Social Development in the preparation of the documentation to be submitted to the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit the present resolution to the five regional meetings devoted to the International Youth Year and to take all necessary organizational measures to ensure their success as provided by the General Assembly in paragraph 4 of its resolution 37/48;

5. Decides to include the item entitled "Youth in the contemporary world" in the agenda of the twenty-ninth session of the Commission for Social Development; decides also that the Commission should consider under that item a report of the Secretary-General on the situation of youth in the 1980s in connection with the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace; and decides further that the report should be transmitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/62) without vote, 10 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1983/14); agenda item 11. Meeting number. ESC 14.

The Council also adopted resolution 1983/17 without vote.

Youth participation in social and economic development and their exercise of the rights to life, employment and education

The Economic and Social Council,

Drawing attention to the exceptional importance of all forms of assistance in the large-scale integration of young people into the social and economic development of their respective countries for ensuring the economic, social, cultural, political and civil rights of youth, in particular the rights of youth to life, education and employment in conditions of peace,

Convinced that youth can make a valuable contribution to efforts to create a new international economic order,

Considering that States should take measures at the domestic level to create conditions for young persons in which they can play an effective and active role in the social and economic development of their respective countries,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 36/28 of 13 November 1981, by which the Assembly endorsed the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Youth Year, 37/48 of 3 December 1982 on the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace, and 37/49 of 3 December 1982 on efforts and measures for securing the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work in conditions of peace,

Recalling also its resolutions 1979/16 of 9 May 1979 and 1981/16 of 6 May 1981, in which, in particular, it recognized the importance of integrating young people into the overall life of society and of taking fully into account their special needs when formulating national plans and programmes,

Recognizing the fact that insufficient education and unemployment among young people limit their opportunities for participating in the process of development, and in this context emphasizing the importance of secondary and higher education, and also of the access of youth to suitable programmes of vocational and technical training,

Considering that in many countries the majority of young people, under the prevailing conditions of social and economic crisis, are facing serious problems in the exercise of their rights, mainly as regards employment and education,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of youth in the 1980s;

2. Notes with concern that at present there is a rapidly growing number of unemployed young people in the world, many of whom have never had work, and that with the growth of unemployment it is becoming increasingly difficult to implement the basic social and economic rights of youth, especially the rights to life, employment and education;

3. Strongly urges all Governments, all governmental and non-governmental organizations and interested United Nations bodies to give priority to the formulation and implementation of effective measures for ensuring the employment of young people, for the implementation of their rights to social and economic development, education and employment in conditions of peace, and also to make provision in national development plans and country budgets for the adoption of specific programmes and for allocation of the necessary resources for ensuring the employment, education and vocational training of youth;

4. Invites all interested United Nations bodies to take an active part in the implementation of the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities which has been developed in the United Nations and is to be implemented during the International Youth Year and in the preceding period;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account the views expressed in the Commission for Social Development concerning ways and means of realizing the rights of youth, in particular the rights to employment and education, and also the provisions of the present resolution, in the preparation of documentation for the third session of the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace;

6. Resolves to consider at the twenty-ninth session of the Commission for Social Development the progress achieved in connection with the participation of young people in the development of their respective countries and in the realization and exercise of their rights to life, employment and education.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/62) without vote, 10 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1983/14); agenda item 11. Meeting number. ESC 14.

In recommending the draft resolutions to the Council, the Committee approved drafts submitted by the Commission for Social Development in its report to the Council on its twenty-eighth session (7-16 February).⁽²⁾

Activities of the UN system

The Secretary-General, in a March 1983 report to the Economic and Social Council,⁽³⁾ described action by the United Nations system and other organizations to facilitate co-ordination and information with regard to youth (see also POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter X). The report, prepared in accordance with a May 1982 request by the Council⁽⁴⁾ was based on information received from United Nations bodies and other organizations, on the co-ordination of information on youth, in the context of implementing the 1981 Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during International Youth Year (1985).⁽⁵⁾

United Nations activities emphasized improving co-ordination and increasing dissemination of information about youth. New programmes were being developed and implemented. Networks at the regional and national levels were being strengthened or established. Informational and promotional activities within the context of IYY had been expanded to promote awareness and mobilize public opinion. Activities of the regional commissions included: special conferences, meetings, workshops and seminars; research and studies; co-operation with other United Nations bodies and NGOs; informational and promotional activities; and advisory services and preparations for regional meetings related to IYY. Within the Secretariat, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (Department of International Economic and Social Affairs) served as the United Nations lead entity for the Year, and provided information on policy measures and strategies for bringing young people into the mainstream of development. In addition to providing support to youth organizations to help them convene meetings, the Organization also provided advisory services to Member States, through an interregional adviser. Five regional meetings on IYY were held in 1983 (see below, under PREPARATIONS FOR INTERNATIONAL YOUTH YEAR (1985)). At the national level, the United Nations encouraged Governments to establish national co-ordinating committees.

The Secretary-General urged that channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and their organizations be strengthened. Because of the importance of information activities to the success of IYY, the Joint United Nations Information Committee would review the guidelines on information activities recommended by the IYY Advisory Committee.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May 1983, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1983/26 without vote.

Co-ordination and information in the field of youth

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/27 of 9 May 1979, 1980/25 of 2 May 1980, 1981/25 of 6 May 1981 and 1982/28 of 4 May 1982 on co-ordination and information in the field of youth,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 34/151 of 17 December 1979, 36/28 of 13 November 1981 and 37/43 of 3 December 1982 on the International Youth Year Participation, Development, Peace,

Noting that the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year will hold its third session at Vienna during the first half of 1984,

Considering that the implementation of the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Youth Year, as well as the recommendations endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/48, will contribute to intensifying and improving the co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations and specialized agencies relating to youth,

Convinced of the importance of giving widespread publicity to the activities of the United Nations in the field of youth and of increasing the dissemination of information about youth, especially in the context of the preparations for the International Youth Year,

Noting that the inter-agency consultations have proved to be a useful tool in planning, initiating, promoting and implementing activities in the field of youth in the context of the implementation of the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Youth Year,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination and information in the field of youth,

1. Endorses the conclusions contained in the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination and information in the field of youth;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary organizational measures to ensure the success of the regional meetings devoted to the International Youth Year, in accordance with paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 37/48;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account the ideas expressed in the Economic and Social Council on ways and means for improving the activities of co-ordination and information in the field of youth in the preparation of the documentation to be submitted to the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year at its third session;

4. Invites all United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional commissions and other international intergovernmental organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations concerned, to pay particular attention to the improvement of co-ordination and information in the field of youth in the context of the implementation of the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Youth Year, as well as of the recommendations endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/48;

5. Decides to consider at its first regular session of 1984, on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General, the progress achieved in co-ordination and information in the field of youth.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/22 on IYY (see below), the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue, within existing resources, using all communications media at his disposal, to publicize widely United Nations youth activities and to increase the dissemination of related information.

Strengthening channels of communication between youth and the United Nations

In a September 1983 report to the General Assembly,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, as requested in December 1982,⁽⁷⁾ reviewed the implementation of the 1977⁽⁸⁾ and 1981⁽⁹⁾ guidelines for improving communication channels between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations. He described developments to implement the guidelines. At the international level, for example, the IYY secretariat initiated a three-phase project to improve channels of communication within the context of IYY—a study on strengthening such channels, an expert group to elaborate on the measures proposed, and a technical publication based on the study due for completion in 1983.

While noting that innovative approaches had been suggested by Member States with greater emphasis on the developmental aspects of the socio-economic situation of various population groups, the Secretary-General said that new approaches were subject to the constraints of limited resources and disparities in the communication of countries. Existing channels required strengthening and needed to be extended to reach more people with relevant information.

In view of the recognized potential of public opinion in the development process, young people should be informed about United Nations activities and urged to participate in the elaboration of its programmes, according to the report. The main channels used to communicate with youth and their organizations were publications, radio and television programmes, exhibitions, correspondence, and briefings for individuals and groups. During IYY, those activities should be expanded, which would require extrabudgetary resources. Efforts needed to be made in public information to bring about awareness of the IYY objectives.

The following measures were suggested to expand the flow of information: Governments could assign higher priority to acting on information received from the United Nations; NGOs could make increased efforts to bring that information to their membership; mass media representatives should be encouraged to publicize United Nations activities; the role of the family in the education of young people should be strengthened; and Governments and concerned organizations could develop programmes to heighten public awareness of the role that families had as the principal informal educators of young people. The Secretary-General emphasized that proper information was a prerequisite for a successful IYY.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 38/26 without vote.

Channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/135 of 16 December 1977 and 36/17 of 9 November 1981, in which it adopted guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, and its resolution 37/50 of 3 December 1982,

Bearing in mind the importance of the existence of effective channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations for the proper information of young people and their effective participation in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies at the national, regional and international levels,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Also taking note of the efforts in inter-agency co-operation to promote and strengthen channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations within the context of the International Youth Year,

Convinced that the existence and proper functioning of channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations form a basic prerequisite of the active involvement of young people and thus of the successful preparation for, observance of and follow-up to the International Youth Year at all levels,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to give full co-operation and support to inter-agency co-operation and co-ordination in promotional and information activities within the context of the International Youth Year;

2. Calls upon Member States, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, in co-operation with youth and with youth organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and other youth organizations concerned, to continue to promote actively the full and effective implementation of the guidelines and additional guidelines adopted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 32/135 and 36/17, in particular through informing young people of relevant policies and programmes and encouraging them to participate in the preparation and implementation of these policies and programmes;

3. Requests the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year at its third session to monitor and evaluate the measures taken with respect to the implementation of the guidelines on the basis of the relevant reports of the Secretary-General and other relevant information provided to it and to make recommendations for the full and effective implementation and the further elaboration of the guidelines as an integral part of the preparation for, observance of and follow-up to the International Youth Year;

4. Decides to review at its thirty-ninth session (the question of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, on the basis of the report of the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year.

Preparations for International Youth Year (1985)

In October 1983, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽¹⁾ to the General Assembly on progress made in implementing the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities for IYY (1985). The report described trends and activities of Member States, the United Nations system and other bodies in preparing for the Year and, in particular, in implementing the Programme endorsed by the Assembly in 1981.⁽¹¹⁾ As requested by the Assembly in 1982,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General had transmitted to States and organizations concerned the recommendations of the Advisory Committee for IYY in 1982.

In general, the Secretary-General found there was an increasing awareness among Governments that youth policies should be aimed at the full participation of youth in the development process. As at 1 July 1983, 42 Governments had established, or were establishing, national co-ordinating committees or mechanisms, to assess the situation of youth within the country, to develop a national plan of action and to act as liaison between the United Nations and youth and their organizations, as well as to encourage IYY at the national level.

The concerned United Nations bodies had demonstrated their support for IYY by: co-operating with the Secretariat in expanding information and promotional activities; establishing new programmes and strengthening regular programme activities; strengthening networks at the regional and national levels; and identifying focal points for the Year, with a view to strengthening inter-agency co-ordination and co-operation (see above). The secretariat for the Year had participated in numerous youth meetings within and outside the United Nations system to disseminate IYY information and promote interest. Technical support to youth organizations had been provided to help them convene meetings on youth. The Youth

Information Bulletin, a United Nations quarterly publication produced in English, French and Spanish, continued to serve as a channel of communication.

Five regional meetings were held in 1983 to assess the situation of youth and propose recommendations to implement the Programme: for Africa, at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 20-24 June; for Asia and the Pacific, at Bangkok, Thailand, 26-30 July; for Europe, at Costinesti, Romania, 5-9 September; for Latin America, at San José, Costa Rica, 3-7 October; and for Western Asia, at Baghdad, Iraq, 9-13 October. These meetings made similar recommendations and adopted regional action plans. They encouraged the establishment of national committees, and four meetings called for an international conference on youth under United Nations auspices. The meetings recommended that technical co-operation projects and implementation of IYY activities be promoted, possibly through voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for IYY. In addition, each meeting made suggestions specific to its individual region.

The Secretary-General suggested further action to ensure successful preparations for the Year, particularly at the national level. He called for worldwide publicity, as well as the Programme's implementation, and urged States to establish national committees. In addition to assessing the situation of youth, they should prepare a national agenda for action identifying their needs within the context of IYY. The capability of the committees needed to be enhanced through their composition and location within the governmental structure and through provision of necessary resources. He also suggested that the regional commissions co-ordinate regional and national organizations, promoting exchange of views and experiences between countries and ensuring that all youth organizations would be closely involved in IYY preparations. The United Nations system should ensure joint planning at the field level to supplement national and regional action, particularly concerning technical co-operation activities, as well as promotional and information activities (see also POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter X). Improvements should be made in channels of communication between the United Nations and youth, and public information should be increased at all levels to generate awareness of the objectives of the Year, the Secretary-General said.

In February, the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on Human Rights, on the implementation of the programme of activities in connection with IYY (see Chapter XVIII of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions dealing with youth and IYY; both were adopted on the recommendation of the Third Committee.

The Assembly adopted resolution 38/22 without vote.

International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/151 of 17 December 1979, 35/126 of 11 December 1980, 36/28 of 13 November 1981 and 37/48 of 3 December 1982,

Recognizing the profound importance of the direct participation of youth in shaping the future of mankind and the valuable contribution that youth can make in the implementation of the new international economic order based on equity and justice,

Considering it necessary to disseminate among youth the ideals of peace, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, human solidarity and dedication to the objectives of progress and development,

Convinced of the imperative need to harness the energies, enthusiasms and creative abilities of youth to the tasks of nation-building, the struggle for self-determination and national independence, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, against foreign domination and occupation, and for the economic, social and cultural advancement of peoples, the implementation of the new international economic order, the preservation of world peace and the promotion of international co-operation and understanding,

Emphasizing again that the United Nations should pay more attention to the role of young people in the world of today and to their demands for the world of tomorrow,

Recalling the topicality of assessing the needs and aspirations of youth, and reaffirming the importance of current and projected United Nations activities designed to increase the opportunities for youth and for its active participation in national development activities,

Believing that it is urgently desirable to intensify the efforts of all States in carrying out specific programmes concerning youth and to improve the activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the field of youth, including youth exchanges in the cultural, sporting and other fields,

Reaffirming the importance of better co-ordination of efforts in dealing with specific problems confronting young people and in examining the manner in which those problems are being treated by the specialized agencies and by various United Nations bodies,

Aware of the valuable contribution which the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization is making to the promotion of international co-operation in the field of youth,

Convinced that the preparation for and observance in 1985 of the International Youth Year with the motto "Participation, Development, Peace" will offer a useful and significant opportunity for drawing attention to the situation and specific needs and aspirations of youth, for increasing co-operation at all levels in dealing with youth issues, for undertaking concerted action programmes in favour of youth and for involving young people in the study and resolution of major national, regional and international problems,

Confident that the International Youth Year will serve to mobilize efforts at the local, national, regional and international levels in order to promote the best educational, professional and living conditions for young people, to ensure their active participation in the overall development of society and to encourage the preparation of new national and local policies and programmes, in accordance with each country's experience, conditions and priorities,

Recognizing that the preparation for and observance of the International Youth Year will contribute to the reaffirmation of the goals of the new international economic order and to the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also in this connection its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 on the question of guidelines for international years and anniversaries,

Aware that, for the International Youth Year to be successful and to maximize its impact and practical efficiency, adequate preparation and the widespread support of Governments, all specialized agencies, international intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the public will be required,

Recognizing the important role of United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and the regional commissions in promoting international co-operation in the field of youth and the necessity of strengthening their role in the effective implementation of the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Youth Year,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 37/48;

2. Commends the five regional meetings devoted to the International Youth Year held during 1983 and requests the Secretary-General to bring the regional plans of action and the recommendations adopted by the regional meetings to the notice of all States with a view to their implementation;

3. Again invites all States that have not already done so to establish national co-ordinating committees or other forms of co-ordination for the International Youth Year;

4. Stresses again the importance of active and direct participation of youth organizations in the activities organized at the local, national, regional and international levels for the preparation for and observance of the International Youth Year;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to use all means at his disposal, within existing resources, to ensure the implementation of and follow-up to the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Youth Year, including the provision of information;

6. Decides that the third session of the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year shall be convened at Vienna from 2 to 11 April 1984;

7. Requests the Advisory Committee to make every effort to implement the tasks entrusted to it by decisions of the General Assembly and by recommendations of the five regional meetings devoted to the International Youth Year and to submit the report on its third session to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session with practical proposals on specific ways and means for the observance, in 1985, of the International Youth Year in an appropriate organizational framework within the United Nations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take concrete measures, within existing resources, using all the communications media at his disposal, to give widespread publicity to the activities of the United Nations system in the field of youth and to increase the dissemination of information on youth;

9. Welcomes the voluntary contributions made so far for the International Youth Year, expresses its appreciation to all contributors and again appeals to all States, to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and to the public to make in due time generous voluntary contributions to supplement funds provided under the regular budget of the United Nations for the costs of the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities and requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate measures for obtaining such voluntary contributions;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace" and to grant it high priority.

The Assembly adopted resolution 38/23 without vote.

Efforts and measures for securing the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/29 of 13 November 1981 and 37/49 of 3 December 1982, in which it, inter alia, recognized the need to adopt appropriate measures for securing the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work,

Recalling also its resolution 34/151 of 17 December 1979, by which it decided to designate 1985 as International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Convinced that it is necessary to ensure full enjoyment by youth of the rights stipulated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, with special regard for the right to education and to work,

Aware of the fact that insufficient education and the unemployment of young people limits their ability to participate in the development process, and, in this regard, emphasizing the importance of the secondary and higher education of young people, as well as of access for them to appropriate technical, vocational guidance and training programmes,

Expressing its serious interest in the success of the International Youth Year which should, inter alia, promote increasing participation of young people in the socio-economic life of their country,

1. Calls upon all States, all governmental and non-governmental organizations and the interested bodies of the United Nations and specialized agencies to pay continuous attention to the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 36/29 and 37/49 relating to efforts and measures aimed at the promotion of human rights and their enjoyment by youth, particularly the right to education and vocational training and to work, with a view to resolving the problem of youth unemployment;

2. Requests the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year to give full attention to resolutions 36/29 and 37/49 and to all relevant international human rights instruments in the preparation for and in the course of the International Youth Year, in particular in elaborating its recommendations concerning the Year;

3. Invites national co-ordinating committees or other organs of co-ordination for the International Youth Year to give appropriate priority in activities to be undertaken prior to and during the Year to the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work.

In resolution 38/27 on the question of aging (see below), the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue promoting, in co-operation with national committees, joint activities concerning aging and youth, particularly as they related to intergenerational matters, especially during IYY.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/173, reaffirmed that the United Nations Volunteers programme should continue its involvement in the IYY preparations and its activities in programmes relating to youth.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1983/17 on youth participation in social and economic development and their exercise of the rights to life, employment and education, the Economic and Social Council invited all interested United Nations bodies to take part in implementing the Specific Programme for IYY, and requested the Secretary-General to take into account the views of the Commission for Social Development on ways of realizing the rights of youth, in particular the rights to employment and education, in preparing documentation for the third (1984) session of the Advisory Committee for IYY.

Aging persons

Following the General Assembly's 1982 endorsement of the Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging, pertaining to people aged 60 and over, both the Assembly (in resolution 38/27) and the Economic and Social Council (in resolution 1983/21) called for follow-up on its implementation. In particular, Governments were urged to establish or maintain national machinery to promote the Plan. According to the Secretary-General, the response by Member States had been positive.

Implementation of the Plan of Action

Following the adoption of the Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging by the July/August 1982 World Assembly on Aging⁽¹⁾ and its subsequent endorsement by the General Assembly in December⁽²⁾ the United Nations took action in 1983 to follow up on its implementation. The basic aims of the Plan were to strengthen countries' capacities to deal with the aging of their populations and with the needs of the elderly. It attempted to promote understanding of the social, economic and cultural implications of aging and of related humanitarian and developmental issues; to encourage an international exchange of skills and knowledge; and to promote the education and training required to respond to the aging of the world's population.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1983/21 without vote.

Aging

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982 by which the General Assembly endorsed the International Plan of Action on Aging,

Convinced that the International Plan of Action on Aging should be considered an integral component of major international, regional and national strategies and should be implemented at the international, regional and national levels in order to enhance the quality of life of aging individuals and to respond effectively to the economic and social impact of the aging of populations on development,

Recognizing that the General Assembly, in its resolution 37/51, has requested the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission for Social Development, to review the implementation of the Plan of Action every four years, beginning in 1985, and transmit its findings to the General Assembly,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 37/51, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to make use of the United Nations Trust Fund for the World Assembly on Aging to meet the rapidly increasing needs of the aging in developing countries,

Acknowledging the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the field of aging and the need to strengthen and co-ordinate these activities to ensure the effective implementation of the Plan of Action,

Aware that the exchange of information and experience at the international level is an effective means for stimulating progress and encouraging the adoption of measures to respond to the economic and social implications of the aging of populations and to meet the needs of older persons,

1. Calls upon Governments to make continuous efforts to implement the International Plan of Action on Aging at the national level and to encourage, where appropriate, the maintenance of the national machinery established for the World Assembly on Aging and the co-operation of those committees with the United Nations through the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, for the exchange of information at the international and regional levels;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take such steps as may be appropriate for the necessary strengthening of activities in the field of aging at the central and regional levels of the United Nations, as set forth in the Plan of Action;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, in promoting the exchange of information and experience at the international level, as mandated by General Assembly resolution 37/51, to include, inter alia, the publication of an international review on aging and to continue research activities on the prospects and challenges of the aging of the world's population, to be financed from either voluntary contributions or existing resources;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General, in implementing General Assembly resolution 37/51 concerning the assessment, review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging, to convene an expert group meeting on the topic for the purpose of establishing guidelines and format for the preparation of the review, to be financed from voluntary contributions;

5. Invites the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to continue and strengthen their efforts in this field, in co-operation with the United Nations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/21

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/62) without vote, 10 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1983/14); agenda item 11.
Meeting number. ESC 14.

During the consideration of the topic at the Commission for Social Development's February session⁽³⁾ a representative of the Secretary-

General indicated that publishing an international review, provided it was printed at Headquarters, would have no financial implications for the regular budget.

In a note of 25 March⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General referred to the Council's 1981 request⁽⁵⁾ that he report to the Assembly in 1983, through the Council and the Commission for Social Development, on further actions to implement the recommendations adopted by the World Assembly. In view of the short time since the Plan of Action had been endorsed by the Assembly—in December 1982—he said, there had not been time to prepare a meaningful report for submission to the Commission in February. Consequently, the Secretary-General suggested that, as his report to the 1983 session of the Assembly in pursuance of the Assembly's 1982 request⁽²⁾ would deal with the implementation of the Plan of Action (see below), the Council might wish to inform the Assembly that that report might also be considered as the response to the 1981 Council request.

On 26 May, the Council acted on the Secretary-General's suggestion by adopting decision 1983/127.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 26 May 1983, the Council decided to inform the General Assembly that the report to be submitted by the Secretary-General to the Assembly at its thirty-eighth session on the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging in pursuance of Assembly resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982, should also be considered as the response to Council resolution 1981/23 of 6 May 1981.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/127

Secretary-General's report. In October 1983, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁶⁾ to the Assembly on implementation of the Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging, giving a brief account of activities regarding the exchange of knowledge, skills and experiences; research; international co-operation; and the Trust Fund for Aging (see below).

Following the Assembly's endorsement of the Plan of Action,⁽²⁾ the United Nations in early 1983 wrote to all national committees concerned with the Plan's implementation, indicating the Secretary-General's desire to continue to provide substantive support to them, and urging the continuation of the committees to ensure that the momentum generated by the World Assembly was not lost. Responses were positive, indicating a willingness to develop national priority plans. As part of its programme to promote the exchange of knowledge, skills and experiences, the United Nations continued to publish and disseminate the periodical Bulletin on Aging. The International Directory of Organizations Concerned with Aging was updated to include the newly established organizations concerned with aging, particularly in developing regions. The network of information exchange had a membership of about 50 research and training institutions. Among its own activities, the United Nations was undertaking the standardization of definitions, terms and research methodologies to facilitate the exchange and use of information. It had begun two research studies—a comparative analysis of the situation of the world's aging and a study of the impact of the aging of populations on selected economic and social institutions.

In response to the request that specialized agencies concerned co-operate in implementing the Plan of Action, an Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Aging was convened on 17 and 18 February at Vienna to establish a mechanism for joint action. At the meeting, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA), which continued to provide assistance with regard to aging, agreed to work with other organizations responsible for international population assistance, within the limitations of its mandate and resources.

Within the context of the Plan of Action, which noted that aging was a population issue affecting development, UNFPA provided support for three research projects begun in 1983 in Colombia, India and the Philippines.⁽⁷⁾ Designed to develop a better understanding of the aged and their potential contribution to development, the projects were intended to be completed for the 1984 International Conference on Population (see Chapter XIV of this section).

As, for co-operation with NGOs concerned with aging, the Secretary-General remarked that they had always been active in promoting related United Nations work. Two NGO committees on aging had played a major role in preparations for the 1982 World Assembly on Aging and had decided to continue to work for implementation of the Plan of Action. At all levels, NGOs were undertaking activities such as holding conferences, seminars and workshops to promote the Plan's implementation. They were also ensuring that aging was considered in the context of forthcoming United Nations international events, in particular, the Population Conference, International Youth Year (1985) (see above) and the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (1985) (see Chapter XIX of this section).

In a note verbale of 28 October to the Secretary-General⁽⁸⁾ the USSR submitted information concerning implementation in that country of the Plan and measures it had adopted concerning social welfare and services for the aged.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/27 without vote.

Question of aging

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982, in which it endorsed the International Plan of Action on Aging adopted by the World Assembly on Aging, and called upon Governments and the Secretary-General to make continuous efforts to implement the principles and recommendations of the Plan of Action,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/87 of 25 November 1981, in which the Council decided to convene in 1984 an International Conference on Population, and also recalling the International Plan of Action on Aging, in which it is acknowledged that aging is a population issue that affects development and requires increasing international assistance and co-operation,

Recognizing the significant contributions of the World Assembly on Aging and the United Nations Trust Fund for the World Assembly on Aging in the promotion and strengthening of international co-operation in this field,

Conscious of the positive response of many countries to the World Assembly on Aging and to the recommendations contained in the Plan of Action and of the need to provide national authorities, at their request, with assistance in their efforts to implement the Plan,

Noting with satisfaction that many Governments have retained or established national mechanisms to facilitate the planning, implementation and co-ordination of the activities recommended in the Plan of Action,

Recognizing the role played by the United Nations and the specialized agencies through their efforts in the field of aging and the need to strengthen this role, especially at the regional level, in order to ensure the implementation of the Plan of Action and the systematic and efficient functioning of the technical advisory and co-ordination services of the United Nations,

Acknowledging the role played by the international network of existing information, research and training centres in exchanging information and experience at the international level and in stimulating progress and encouraging the adoption of measures to respond to the economic and social implications of the aging of populations and to meet the needs of older persons,

Noting that the relationship between aging and youth, particularly as it relates to intergenerational matters, is recognized in the Plan of Action,

Recognizing that women have a longer life expectancy than men and that they will increasingly constitute the majority of the older population,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of aging;
2. Affirms that the question of aging should be considered in the context of economic development, political, social and cultural systems and social values and changes;
3. Calls upon Governments to continue to make efforts to implement the principles and recommendations contained in the International Plan of Action on Aging in accordance with the economic, social and cultural circumstances of each country;

4. Invites Governments to retain or establish, in a suitable form, mechanisms at the national level to promote the implementation of the Plan of Action;

5. Urges the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure effective implementation of and follow-up action to the Plan of Action and to maintain the impetus generated by the United Nations Trust Fund for the World Assembly on Aging at the national, regional and international levels;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to promote the Trust Fund so as to assist countries in formulating and implementing policies and programmes for aging;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his information exchange activities through, inter alia, the international network of existing information, research and training centres and to convene, using voluntary contributions, meetings of the members of this network, as appropriate, to strengthen these activities and to promote technical co-operation among developing countries;

8. Urges the Secretary-General to include advisory services to developing countries that request them in technical co-operation programmes, to the extent feasible under the funding of those programmes;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, as requested in the Plan of Action, that the question of the aging of populations is brought to the attention of the appropriate United Nations bodies responsible for the preparation of the International Conference on Population and that the question of aging is considered under the appropriate agenda items of the Conference itself;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to promote, in co-operation with the national committees concerned, joint activities in the field of aging and youth, particularly as they relate to intergenerational matters, especially during the International Youth Year, to be observed in 1985;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to examine the gender-based difference in longevity and the impact of the increasing number and proportion of older women on living arrangements, income, health care and other support systems, and to bring the question of older women to the attention of the preparatory body for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, to be held in 1985, for its consideration;

12. Urges the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, in co-operation with all organizations responsible for international population assistance, to continue its assistance, within its mandate, in the field of aging, particularly in developing countries;

13. Invites the regional commissions to review the objectives of the Plan of Action and contribute to their realization and to organize and conduct the regional periodic review and appraisal of the Plan in co-ordination with that at the international level;

14. Invites the specialized agencies and other inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to continue to be actively involved, in a co-ordinated manner, in the implementation of the Plan of Action;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report on the measures taken to implement the present resolution;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Question of aging".

UN Trust Fund

The Trust Fund for the World Assembly on Aging, set up in pursuance of a 1980 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁾ to provide supplementary funds for preparations for the 1982 World Assembly, had been used since then to meet the increasing needs of the aging in developing countries, in particular in the least developed countries, as requested by the General Assembly in 1982.⁽²⁾ In order to reflect this extended mandate, the Secretary-General changed the name of the Fund, which was financed by voluntary contributions, to the Trust Fund on Aging and reported on its use in an October 1983 report⁽³⁾ on implementation of the 1982 Plan of Action on Aging.⁽⁴⁾ To ensure that responses were made to the most urgent needs, priority areas of assistance were established for the use of Fund resources. Priority was given to selected developing countries, taking into account their level of development, demographic trends and the status of their aging population. Resources were used for housing, income security, health, education and social welfare. Resources were also used to finance activities concerned with the effect of the aging of populations on the economic and social development of society, including rural development, migration, and production, consumption and savings patterns. Governments were helped to develop national policies, including census analysis, surveys, research and seminars for the exchange of knowledge and experience.

Contributions to the Fund during 1981-1982 amounted to $991,986. The balance of available resources as at 31 December 1982 was $741,041. In 1983, additional pledges and contributions amounting to $70,000 had been received. During the first half of 1983, the United Nations approved $344,000 from the Fund's resources for support to 28 countries. In addition, one project at the level of $60,000 was to be financed multilaterally. Because the Plan of Action stressed national-level activities, 88 per cent of resources were to be used at that level. Project requests from all developing regions were under review, including requests from 15 countries.

In resolution 38/27 on the question of aging (see above), the General Assembly urged the Secretary-General to continue ensuring implementation of and follow-up action to the International Plan of Action on Aging and to maintain the impetus generated by the Trust Fund for the World Assembly on Aging at all levels. He was also requested to continue promoting the Fund so as to assist countries in formulating and implementing policies and programmes for aging.

Chapter XXI

Refugees and displaced persons

In 1983, with some large-scale refugee situations showing relative stability, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued to promote durable solutions and provide care and maintenance to refugees. Despite the absence of large new refugee influxes, however, more than $5 million was obligated from the Emergency Fund on 12 occasions.

Major assistance programmes continued, notably in Pakistan, which remained host to the world's largest refugee population; the Horn of Africa, where programmes benefited returnees as well as refugees; South-East Asia, which saw a decrease of over 37,000 in camp populations during 1983; and Central America and Mexico, where emergency assistance was coupled with local integration initiatives. New programmes in 1983 included aid to Afghan refugees in Iran; repatriations to Argentina and Chile; and emergency relief for Angolans in Zaire, Mozambicans in Zimbabwe and Sudanese in Ethiopia.

As in previous years, assistance to Palestine refugees was provided by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA).

The High Commissioner told the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme, at its thirty-fourth session (Geneva, 10-20 October), that there were currently some 10 million refugees, as against 1.5 million when UNHCR started its activities in 1951.

In his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (p. 3), the Secretary-General stressed that the refugee problem could be resolved only with a settlement of the root political causes; the means available to the United Nations to help alleviate the problem were grossly inadequate.

In December, the Assembly called on all States to promote durable solutions and to contribute generously to the High Commissioner's humanitarian programmes in order to assist refugees, displaced persons and returnees in a spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing (resolution 38/121).

The Assembly approved the arrangements for the Second (1984) International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa and appealed to the international community to make it a success (38/120). It also called for assistance to refugees in Djibouti (38/89), Somalia (38/88) and the Sudan (38/90) as well as to displaced persons in Ethiopia (38/91) and student refugees in southern Africa (38/95).

The Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees met for the first time in 1983, and the Assembly asked it to continue working towards developing recommendations to that end (38/84).

The Nansen Medal for the year—awarded since 1955 in honour of Fridtjof Nansen, the first League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—went to President Julius Nyerere of the United Republic of Tanzania in recognition of his personal contribution and that of his country to the cause of refugees. The President announced that the $50,000 prize accompanying the award would be used to build schools for refugee children in his country.

Programme and finances of UNHCRProgramme policy

Executive Committee action. In 1983, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme⁽¹⁾ while noting as a positive development the absence of new large-scale refugee outflows, expressed concern at the continued severity of refugee problems, notably in Africa, Asia and Central America, and requested UNHCR to continue providing assistance and international protection. It reaffirmed the principle of international solidarity and burden-sharing as well as the fundamental humanitarian character of UNHCR activities, and drew attention to the vital need for the international community to deal in appropriate forums with the root causes of refugee flows (see below).

The Committee noted with satisfaction the High Commissioner's renewed efforts, and progress made, in reorienting many major assistance activities from emergency or relief phase to the promotion of self-reliance and durable solutions through voluntary repatriation, local integration and resettlement. It welcomed the workshops and seminars held to further these objectives as well as the Commissioner's support of the international refugee integration resource centre.

However, the Committee expressed concern at decreasing resettlement rates and urged Governments, in accordance with the principle of international burden-sharing, to meet the needs of those refugees with no other durable solution immediately in prospect; it requested the Commissioner to co-ordinate and facilitate the planning of resettlement programmes by Governments through updated assessments of needs and priorities.

The Committee recommended that States seriously consider supporting UNHCR efforts to promote the Rescue at Sea Resettlement Offers scheme and providing the necessary quotas and other undertakings to enable UNHCR to initiate the scheme on a trial basis; welcomed the support given to the Disembarkation Resettlement Offers scheme; and commended the initiatives taken by UNHCR and the International Maritime Organization, including an October joint appeal, for facilitating the rescue of asylum-seekers in distress at sea.

UNHCR continued to co-operate with other United Nations organizations in its programme implementation. Such co-operation included the International Labour Organisation (ILO) promoting vocational training and income-generating activities in refugee settlements, and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) providing care and maintenance and supporting community development. Agreement was reached with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on future co-operation in situations requiring longer-term assistance to refugees and involving development projects. The World Food Programme (WFP) continued to meet most of the basic food needs of refugees and displaced persons in many affected areas.

UNHCR also co-operated with other intergovernmental organizations, liberation movements and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). As a result of NGO interest in greater involvement in the annual meeting of the Executive Committee, the Commissioner convened in October 1983 the first pre-Executive Committee meeting for NGOs, which was attended by the representatives of 66 agencies.

The Executive Committee welcomed the Commissioner's co-operation with other members of the United Nations system, in particular with WFP in providing relief assistance and with the World Bank and ILO in promoting self-sufficiency and income-generating or employment opportunities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1983/101 of 4 February 1983, the Economic and Social Council decided to transmit, without debate, the UNHCR report⁽²⁾ to the General Assembly.

Therefore, it did not consider the item at its second regular session of 1983, but adopted decision 1983/172 on 28 July, thereby taking note of the High Commissioner's oral report in the Council on assistance to refugees in Djibouti and Somalia, to displaced persons in Ethiopia, and to student refugees in southern Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In the General Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, High Commissioner Poul Hartling reviewed the activities of his Office and pointed out that the presence of a large number of refugees in a country could create social, economic or political difficulties which were compounded if there was little prospect for refugees to become an asset and not a burden. UNHCR could act only as a catalyst; it was up to Governments to create conditions leading to solutions.

On 16 December 1983, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/121 without vote.

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office, as well as the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner on the work of its thirty-fourth session, and having heard the statement made by the High Commissioner on 14 November 1983,

Recalling its resolution 37/195 of 18 December 1982,

Reaffirming the eminently humanitarian and non-political character of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner,

Noting with deep concern that problems of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner remain acute in all parts of the world, notably in Africa, Asia and Latin America,

Stressing the fundamental importance of the High Commissioner's international protection function and the need for States to co-operate with the High Commissioner in the exercise of this essential function,

Expressing serious concern over the difficulties encountered by the High Commissioner in the exercise of his international protection function in the face of continued violations of the basic rights of persons of concern to his Office,

Deeply concerned that in various regions the safety and welfare of refugees and asylum-seekers have been seriously jeopardized on account of military or armed attacks, acts of piracy and other forms of brutality,

Acknowledging with appreciation the note of the Executive Committee on the strengthening of the management policy of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, submitted by the High Commissioner, and the High Commissioner's efforts to strengthen the management of his Office,

Noting that the Executive Committee has requested the High Commissioner to undertake a comprehensive study of the full financial and practical implications of the inclusion of Arabic, Chinese and Spanish among the official and working languages of the Executive Committee,

Noting with deep appreciation the valuable support extended by many Governments to the High Commissioner in carrying out his duties,

Welcoming the increasing number of accessions by States to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

Emphasizing that voluntary repatriation is the most desirable and durable solution to problems of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner,

1. Commends the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his staff for the valuable work they perform on behalf of refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner;
2. Reaffirms the fundamental nature of the High Commissioner's function to provide international protection and the need for Governments to co-operate fully with him to facilitate the effective exercise of this essential function, in particular by acceding to and fully implementing the relevant international and regional instruments and by scrupulously observing the principles of asylum and non-refoulement;
3. Deplores all violations of the rights and safety of refugees and asylum-seekers, in particular through military or armed attacks against refugee camps and settlements, other forms of brutality and failure to rescue asylum-seekers in distress at sea;
4. Urges States, in co-operation with the Office of the High Commissioner and other competent international bodies, to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of refugees and asylum-seekers;
5. Reaffirms the principle of international solidarity and burden-sharing in responding to the refugee problem, particularly in view of the heavy burden borne by receiving countries on account of the presence of large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers;

In a related action, the Assembly, by resolution 38/16 on the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, deplored the plight of refugees and displaced persons and reaffirmed their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour (see Chapter XVIII of this section).

Financial and administrative questions

UNHCR'S overall voluntary funds expenditure in 1983 amounted to $398 million, including $316.2 million under General Programmes and $81.5 million under Special Programmes. Additional expenditure of $13.5 million represented administrative costs under the United Nations regular budget.

Total income for 1983 was $377.8 million.

Contributions

Contributions from governmental and private sources totalled some $312 million in 1983. In addition to Governments, intergovernmental organizations provided contributions amounting to $31.2 million, principally in food, and NGOs contributed in cash and kind valued at $5.3 million.

The establishment of a programme for voluntary repatriation of Ethiopian refugees in Djibouti required a special appeal in June, and later in the year it became necessary to reiterate the need for additional funding for the Programme of Orderly Departures from Viet Nam. In August, a special appeal was issued to promote contributions for a major income-generating project established by the World Bank for Afghan refugees in Pakistan, for which $1.6 million was received by year's end. (See below, for specific projects.)

At its October 1983 session, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme⁽¹⁾ approved a target of $368,460,000 for General Programmes in 1984. At the same time, it thanked donor Governments and NGOs for their generosity, reaffirmed the need for more equitable and widespread financial support within the international community for UNHCR programmes, and urged Governments to make early contributions and payments to the 1984 General Programmes so as to ensure early availability of funds and effective implementation of programmes.

Governmental contributions were announced at the 18 November 1983 meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to the 1984 Programme of UNHCR.⁽³⁾

Accounts of voluntary funds for 1982

The audited financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1982 on the voluntary funds administered by UNHCR showed a total expenditure of $407 million, and total income of $444 million.

After examining the financial statements, the Board of Auditors recommended in its report⁽⁴⁾ to the General Assembly that administrative budget monitoring and cash management of UNHCR field offices should be improved. It noted lack of adequate control in some cases over project implementation, particularly as regards expenditures in relation to allotments, and observed that inadequate feasibility studies, insufficient project budgets, or lack of control over the non-expendable property of projects, among other things, had resulted in cost overruns or substantial losses. Moreover, monitoring of some project activities was unsatisfactory due either to non-submission of periodic reports by the implementing agencies or to lack of co-ordination between them and the UNHCR field offices. Accordingly, it called for improved procurement planning and incorporation in agreements of specific penalty/liquidated damage clauses, as well as establishment of appropriate reporting procedures between headquarters and field offices, in order to protect the interests of UNHCR.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), commenting on the Board's audit in a September report⁽⁵⁾ stressed the importance of proper planning and of careful examination of procurement agreements in keeping losses to a minimum. It expected that UNHCR would introduce procedures for better financial control, and that the experience gained to date would lead to further improvements in project management.

The Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme, in October⁽¹⁾ took note of the 1982 financial accounts and the reports of the Board and ACABQ, as well as the report of its Sub-Committee on Administrative and Financial Matters (see below).

In November, the General Assembly, by resolution 38/30, accepted the financial reports, audited financial statements and the audit opinion of the Board of Auditors; concurred with the ACABQ observations; and requested the High Commissioner to take remedial action as called for by the Board.

Administrative and organizational questions

The Sub-Committee on Administrative and Financial Matters of the Executive Committee, at its third meeting (Geneva, October 1983),⁽⁶⁾ discussed the strengthening of UNHCR's management policy as well as personnel issues such as the geographical composition of UNHCR staff, recruitment policies, career development, promotion, staff rotation and training.

Taking note of the Sub-Committee's report, the Executive Committee⁽¹⁾ in October, urged continued efforts towards improved management of the UNHCR Office—particularly regarding devolution of authority, staffing policy and effective programme delivery—and asked the High Commissioner to report periodically on the question. Among a series of personnel questions, it commended the Commissioner for the proposed net zero growth in the established staffing level of his Office in 1984, and stressed the importance of continuing efforts to meet additional needs through redeployment of posts. The Committee also noted that the proposed voluntary funds programmes and budget for 1984 reflected part of the reapportionment of UNHCR's administrative costs between the United Nations regular programme budget and voluntary funds which were subject to General Assembly approval in 1983.

Noting the absence of consensus on a proposal made at the session by the Sudan on behalf of a number of other countries, the Executive Committee requested the High Commissioner to study the full financial and practical implications of including Arabic, Chinese and Spanish among its official and working languages—an action subsequently noted by the General Assembly in resolution 38/121.

Activities for refugees

Assistance

Because of the relative stabilization of major refugee situations and the absence of massive new movements, UNHCR expenditure in assistance programmes continued to fall for the third consecutive year, totalling $398 million in 1983 as compared with $497 million in 1980. The higher proportion of expenditures under General Programmes—$316.2 million as against $81.5 million under Special Programmes—reflected the trend away from purely emergency operations.

While the promotion of durable solutions—through voluntary repatriation, local integration in the country of first asylum or resettlement in a third country—remained the long-term goal, UNHCR responded to requests for emergency assistance to new arrivals and continued to pursue care and maintenance programmes (food, shelter, water, health services, education) for refugees for whom no immediate solution could be implemented. Whenever possible, relief programmes also included measures aimed at promoting self-reliance among refugees.

The largest single care and maintenance programme continued to be for Afghan refugees in Pakistan ($83.9 million), followed by Indo-Chinese refugees in South-East Asia pending a more durable solution ($58 million). Intermediate care and maintenance assistance amounted to some 55 per cent of total UNHCR 1983 General Programmes expenditure.

Some $5,455,000 was obligated from the Emergency Fund, of which $1.1 million was allocated to help 10,000 Sudanese refugees in Ethiopia and $1 million for the purchase and airlift of 5,000 family-size tents for an influx of Afghan refugees in Iran. Allocation of $1.2 million from the Fund assisted persons of concern to UNHCR in Lebanon as well as needy Lebanese who, due to events in their country, were unable to return and needed temporary assistance; of that amount, $685,000 was for assistance inside Lebanon, $250,000 for assistance to Lebanese displaced persons in the Syrian Arab Republic, $135,000 for Lebanese in Cyprus and $173,000 for those in various European countries. Further, $600,000 from the Fund was used to meet emergency needs of a new influx of Angolans in Zambia, $350,000 to assist illegal immigrants expelled from Nigeria, $675,000 for Nicaraguan refugees in Costa Rica, and $500,000 to assist a group of refugees and displaced persons in Uganda.

Various social services continued in the form of community services and counselling, education and aid to handicapped refugees. Disabled refugees and their families, totalling about 1,000 persons, were admitted to new countries of asylum under special resettlement programmes. Scholarship assistance programmes worth $12.7 million helped nearly 14,300 refugee students to study at the secondary and tertiary levels, an increase of 12 per cent over 1982; approximately 66 per cent of the students were in secondary school, 19 per cent in technical training courses and 15 per cent at universities.

A number of assistance projects, as in the Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire, were phased out and responsibilities for further assistance transferred to host Governments.

The UNHCR Handbook for Emergencies, published in English in 1982, was issued in French in 1983, and managerial and technical innovations as well as practical lessons learned in the field were being collated for the second edition.

Africa

In 1983, preparations were made for the Second (1984) International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (see below), and joint technical teams—comprising UNDP, UNHCR and, in some cases, the Organization of African Unity (OAU)—visited 14 countries to help them prepare requests for assistance to meet additional needs and the increased infrastructural requirements caused by the refugees' presence.

The 1983 UNHCR expenditures in Africa totalled over $153 million, of which some $114.8 million was obligated under General Programmes and $38 million under Special Programmes. Activities in the region featured formulating comprehensive plans of action for refugee self-sufficiency, income generation, education, and phasing-out of activities upon attainment of self-sufficiency.

In Chad, the repatriation operation which had started in 1981 was virtually completed by year's end, as remaining groups from the Central African Republic, Nigeria, the Sudan and the United Republic of Cameroon returned home; some 200,000 persons received UNHCR assistance under the operation. In order to complete UNHCR activities in Chad, a six-month agreement was concluded with UNDP in N'Djamena to phase out rehabilitation assistance.

A tripartite agreement on voluntary repatriation, reached in April between Djibouti, Ethiopia and UNHCR, led to the return of some 12,000 Ethiopian refugees from Djibouti. The Special Programme of Assistance to Ethiopian Returnees, originally scheduled for completion by June 1983, had to be extended owing to delays in various programme sectors; half of the total programme valued at $20 million had been obligated in cash, and $6.3 million in kind, by year's end. A new influx of some 21,000 refugees into south-western Ethiopia in the latter half of 1983 necessitated an emergency response, and a UNHCR review mission in October/November recommended some programme modifications.

The Sudan saw new refugee arrivals in its southern and eastern regions, due partly to the severe drought. WFP assisted in improving food transportation in the south, while ILO, which concluded in April a study with UNHCR on income-generating activities for refugees in eastern and central Sudan, developed activities to benefit some 10,000 families. Discussions began with UNDP to examine the longer-term needs of the refugee-affected area in the south.

Somalia continued to host a large number of refugees, where insufficient availability of food continued to pose difficulties; self-sufficiency schemes were implemented in most of the 35 refugee camps with the co-operation of voluntary agencies. With the Government's consent, agreement was reached on setting up a Steering Committee—chaired by the National Refugee Commission and comprising the Ministry of Planning, UNDP and UNHCR—to co-ordinate the local settlement programme for those refugees not wishing to repatriate; a specialist mission was undertaken in October/November to study the proposed settlements.

There were signs that Ugandan refugees were prepared to repatriate from the Sudan and Zaire, and frequent homeward movements, particularly to the West Nile region, had been observed. The programme in that region was implemented under a tripartite agreement between the Government, the Lutheran World Federation and UNHCR, with WFP, UNICEF and Médecins sans frontières co-operating in the effort. Other developments included a programme mission in September, and the appointment of a liaison officer to the UNHCR African Bureau to ensure co-ordinated action in the countries of asylum and origin.

The United Republic of Tanzania expressed its willingness to grant nationality to a large group of Burundi refugees once a programme to naturalize some 36,000 Rwandese refugees was completed. In Uganda, the right to citizenship was recognized for a group of long-time residents internally displaced during the previous year.

The situation remained largely unchanged for more than 27,000 South African refugees in Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, where UNHCR assistance continued to comprise subsistence allowances, scholarships and the promotion of self-sufficiency either in rural settlements or through individual income-generating activities. UNHCR continued to assist some 75,000 Namibian refugees in Angola, Zambia and other African countries. At the United Nations, the question of Namibian refugees was taken up by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III).

At its October 1983 session, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme⁽¹⁾ noted increased assistance needs in Africa, welcomed UNHCR efforts in preparing for the 1984 International Conference and invited the Office to collaborate with other organizations for its success.

In October, the Assembly, in resolution 38/5 on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, urged Member States and various organizations to continue their support of African refugee programmes and to assist host countries in coping with the burden imposed on their limited resources and weak infrastructures (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V). The Assembly also adopted, at its 1983 session, resolutions dealing with: the 1984 Conference; refugee situations in Djibouti, Somalia and the Sudan; the situation of displaced persons in Ethiopia; and South African student refugees (see below).

Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

Preparations were under way during 1983 for the Second (1984) International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, which the General Assembly in 1982⁽²⁾ had decided to convene for the purpose of: reviewing the results of the first (1981) Conference⁽³⁾ considering the assistance needs for the relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of refugees and returnees; and assessing the need for strengthening the economic and social infrastructure of the affected countries to cope with the problem. The 1981 Conference, while resulting in pledges and contributions amounting to some $570 million, could not meet the additional assistance needs of the affected countries.

Report of the Secretary-General. In his October report⁽⁴⁾ submitted in response to a December 1982 Assembly request⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General noted that most African countries affected by refugee situations were among the least developed in the world and, despite generous international assistance given to meet the emergency requirements of refugees, more resources were needed for the authorities concerned to implement durable solutions, such as land settlement schemes, strengthening the relevant infrastructure of the affected countries, and the creation of income-generating activities.

Recommending that the Assembly convene the Second Conference at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984, the Secretary-General stated that a Steering Committee—composed of his representative, as well as those of the OAU Secretary-General, the High Commissioner and the UNDP Administrator—had been established to maintain liaison with African Governments and to direct preparatory work, along with a United Nations Technical Team to assist in preparing country reports. Inclusion of UNDP in the Steering Committee underscored the emphasis of the Conference on the role of development in support of ongoing programmes and in the search for durable solutions. A public information campaign took place in 1983 to publicize the objectives of the Conference (see below).

The Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme, at its October 1983 session⁽¹⁾ recognized the importance and timeliness of the Second Conference in pursuing durable solutions to refugee problems in Africa, and reiterated the need for carefully prepared and realistic project submissions so as to help ensure the Conference's success. It also welcomed UNHCR efforts in its preparations and invited the Office to collaborate in that regard with other organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/120 without vote.

Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General concerning preparations for the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa and the sections on Africa contained in the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recalling its resolutions 37/197 of 18 December 1982, entitled "International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa", and 38/5 of 28 October 1983 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Bearing in mind resolution AHG/Res.114(XIX) on the Second Conference, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its nineteenth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 6 to 12 June 1983,

Gravely concerned at the persistent and serious problem of large numbers of refugees on the African continent, Aware of the economic and social burden borne by African countries of asylum on account of the presence of these refugees and its consequences for their national development and of the heavy sacrifices made by them, despite their limited resources,

Recognizing the universal collective responsibility of sharing the urgent and overwhelming burden of the problem of African refugees through effective mobilization of resources to meet the urgent and long-term needs of the refugees and to strengthen the capacity of countries of asylum to provide adequately for the refugees while they remain in those countries, as well as to assist the countries of origin in the rehabilitation of voluntary returnees,

Recognizing that the achievement of durable solutions to refugee problems, in particular voluntary repatriation and local integration, calls for generous humanitarian and developmental assistance to the affected countries, as well as for efforts to address the causes of refugee situations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General concerning preparations for the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa;

2. Approves the proposed Conference arrangements contained in paragraph 17 of the report of the Secretary-General;

3. 6. Commends those countries that are supporting programmes for refugees and returnees for their continued assistance and calls upon them, as well as other States and international organizations, to assist and co-operate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the promotion of durable solutions;

General Assembly resolution 38/120

16 December 1983 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/38/688) without vote, 30 November (meeting 57); draft by Sierra Leone, for African Group (A/C.3/38/L24), orally revised; agenda item 98 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session; 3rd Committee 42-46, 54, 56, 57, 59; plenary 100.

In a related action, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/5 on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, invited Member States and various organizations to participate actively in the 1984 Conference and to contribute generously to ensure its success.

Djibouti

In view of developments in the refugee situation in Djibouti during 1983, especially the tripartite agreement on voluntary repatriation by the Governments of Djibouti and Ethiopia, and UNHCR, an inter-agency mission concentrating on relief and rehabilitation, as requested by the General Assembly in 1982,⁽⁵⁾ was deemed inopportune. Instead, an internal UNHCR mission was undertaken in February 1983 to review with the Government an assistance programme for 1983 and 1984.

In a September 1983 report to the Assembly⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General observed that voluntary repatriation appeared to be the only viable durable solution for refugees in Djibouti, in view of the country's arid climate, sparse natural resources and lack of infrastructure. The refugee population in 1982 was estimated at 35,000—half of them children under the age of 15 and most with pastoral background—which represented more than 10 per cent of the local population. Under the voluntary repatriation programme, some 1,500 refugees had returned spontaneously to Ethiopia by the end of June 1983, and as many as 10,000 refugees were expected to repatriate by year's end. The UNHCR branch office in Djibouti was strengthened through the assignment of two repatriation officers.

In June, the High Commissioner appealed to the international community to support an additional special programme of immediate relief and assistance in Ethiopia to voluntary repatriates from Djibouti (see also below, under ETHIOPIA).

At its October 1983 session, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme⁽⁷⁾ commended the High Commissioner's efforts, in co-operation with the Governments concerned, to launch the voluntary repatriation programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/89 without vote.

Humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/182 of 15 December 1980, 36/156 of 16 December 1981 and 37/176 of 17 December 1982 on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti,

Having heard the statement made on 14 November 1983 by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Having considered with satisfaction the reports of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti,

Appreciating the determined efforts made by the Government of Djibouti, despite its limited economic resources, to cope with the pressing needs of the refugees,

Aware of the social and economic burden placed on the Government and people of Djibouti as a result of the presence of refugees and of the consequent impact on the development and infrastructure of the country,

Also noting with appreciation the concern and unremitting efforts of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the voluntary agencies which have worked closely with the Government of Djibouti in the relief and rehabilitation programme for the refugees in that country,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti;

2. Appreciates the efforts made by the High Commissioner to keep the situation of the refugees in Djibouti under constant review;

3. Welcomes the steps taken by the Government of Djibouti, in close co-operation with the High Commissioner, to achieve adequate, appropriate and lasting solutions in respect of the refugees in Djibouti;

4. Calls upon the High Commissioner to mobilize the necessary resources to implement lasting solutions in respect of the refugees in Djibouti;

5. Urges the High Commissioner to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that adequate, appropriate and lasting solutions are achieved in respect of the refugees in Djibouti and to maintain close contact with the Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies concerned with a view to mobilizing the necessary assistance to enable the Government of Djibouti to cope effectively with the refugee situation, which has been aggravated by the debilitating effects of the prolonged drought;

6. Appreciates the assistance provided thus far by Member States, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to the relief and rehabilitation programmes for the refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti;

7. Calls upon all Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to continue to support the efforts being made by the Government of Djibouti to cope with the current needs of the refugee population and the other victims of drought in that country;

8. Requests the High Commissioner, in close co-operation with the Secretary-General, to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Ethiopia

In an October 1983 report⁽⁷⁾ submitted in pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the Government of Ethiopia had extended its 1980 amnesty proclamation to the end of 1983, that the tripartite commission had agreed on principles governing voluntary repatriation, and that refugees wishing to remain in Djibouti would be permitted to do so while durable solutions were explored by Djibouti and UNHCR in co-operation with the international community (see above). The UNHCR regional liaison office had been expanded to include a protection officer and a logistics officer.

In June, the High Commissioner appealed for international support for a special programme—estimated to require some $8 million for the 12-month period beginning on 15 August 1983—aimed at providing voluntary repatriates from Djibouti with basic relief assistance as well as improving two irrigated agricultural sites. This organized voluntary repatriation programme differed in target population and geographic coverage from the separate ongoing returnees programme in the Eritrea and Hararge regions for an estimated 110,000 to 126,000 persons of Ethiopian origin returning mainly from Somalia and the Sudan (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/91 without vote.

Assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/91 of 5 December 1980, 36/161 of 16 December 1981 and 37/175 of 17 December 1982 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1980/54 of 24 July 1980 and 1982/2 of 27 April 1982,

Recalling also the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia, prepared pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/8 of 28 April 1980,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,

Recalling further the appeal of the Secretary-General contained in his note verbale of 11 November 1980 as well as those of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council,

Having heard the statement made on 14 November 1983 by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recognizing the number of voluntary returnees in Ethiopia,

Deeply concerned that the repeated appeals of the Secretary-General, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council have yet to receive an adequate response,

Aware of the heavy burden placed on the Government of Ethiopia in caring for displaced persons and victims of natural disasters,

1. Endorses once again the appeals of the Secretary-General, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council concerning assistance to displaced persons and voluntary returnees in Ethiopia;

2. Commends the efforts made by various organs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in mobilizing humanitarian assistance to the displaced persons and voluntary returnees in Ethiopia;

3. Appeals once again to the Governments of Member States and to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and all voluntary agencies to contribute generously to assist the Government of Ethiopia in its efforts to provide relief and rehabilitation to the displaced persons and voluntary returnees in Ethiopia;

4. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to intensify his efforts in mobilizing humanitarian assistance for the relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of numbers of voluntary returnees, as well as for displaced persons;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Lesotho

Following a December 1982 attack by South African forces on Lesotho,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General had been requested by the Security Council⁽¹⁰⁾ to consult with Lesotho and United Nations agencies to ensure the welfare and security of refugees there. In February 1983, he reported to the Council⁽¹¹⁾ the conclusions of a mission sent to the country in January (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V, and Chapter III of this section).

While the Government of Lesotho had not established verifiable refugee statistics, 2,000 were formally registered as refugees and some 9,000 persons concentrated in the national primary and secondary schools were believed to be eligible for refugee status.

On the basis of consultations with the Government and UNHCR, the mission was satisfied that current refugee programmes adequately met the needs of identified refugees, and that the policy of local integration offered the best arrangement for their security. However, the mission felt that the Government should process expeditiously the large number of unregistered refugees, so as to provide them with legal protection and qualify them for assistance.

Somalia

The High Commissioner⁽¹²⁾ in pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽¹³⁾ reported in September 1983 on the findings of a mission—led by UNHCR and including a representative of WFP—which had visited Somalia from 12 to 28 March to review the refugee situation. Due to difficulties in conducting a census in the 35 refugee camps spread over four different regions, the mission recommended, for programme planning purposes, the use of 700,000 as a camp population, as had been agreed in 1982.⁽¹⁴⁾ About 50 per cent were estimated to be children.

While an organized programme of voluntary repatriation was viewed as the best durable solution for Ethiopian refugees in the country, there was a need to give greater emphasis to self-help activities and land settlement, as refugees were likely to remain in Somalia for the time being. In 1983, Somalia developed a local settlement programme for those unable to attain self-sufficiency under prevailing camp conditions, and reviewed the programme with a United Nations technical inter-agency mission (19 October-9 November); pending the outcome of the mission, a provision of $12 million had been made to establish the settlements, with the initial aim of accommodating up to 40,000 refugees. Considerable material and financial assistance was required to sustain and strengthen Somalia's fragile economic infrastructure, particularly in refugee-affected areas, to enable it to support the increased population, the report stated.

Most of the refugees' basic care and maintenance needs were being met with external assistance, and some 30 voluntary agencies from Western Europe and North America operated in the camps. Assistance requirements for 1983 were estimated at $124 million, including $94.5 million for 150,000 metric tons of food.

In October, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme(1) welcomed the initiatives of Somalia and the High Commissioner in implementing the rural settlement schemes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly, on 16 December, adopted resolution 38/88 without vote.

Assistance to refugees in Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/180 of 15 December 1980, 36/153 of 16 December 1981 and 37/174 of 17 December 1982 on the question of assistance to refugees in Somalia,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1981/31 of 6 May 1981 and 1982/4 of 27 April 1982,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the conditions of the refugees in Somalia, particularly paragraph 6 of the report,

Deeply concerned that the refugee problem in Somalia has not yet been resolved,

Recognizing from the recommendations contained in the report of the High Commissioner that there remains an urgent need for increased assistance in the provision of food, water and medicines, the strengthening of health and educational facilities in the refugee camps, and the expansion of the number of self-help schemes and small-scale farming and fruit-growing projects necessary for the promotion of self-reliance among the refugees,

Noting the decision of the Government of Somalia to facilitate a programme of local settlement of the refugees,

Aware of the consequences of the social and economic burden placed on the Government and people of Somalia as a result of the continued presence of refugees and the consequent impact on the national development and the infrastructure of the country,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the High Commissioner for his continued efforts to mobilize international assistance on behalf of the refugees in Somalia;

3. Takes note with satisfaction of the assistance rendered to refugees in Somalia by various Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and other concerned inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations;

4. Appeals to Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to render maximum material, financial and technical assistance to the Government of Somalia in its efforts to provide all necessary assistance to the refugees;

5. Notes with satisfaction the visit of the United Nations technical inter-agency mission to Somalia from 19 October to 9 November 1983 to review with the Government a comprehensive settlement programme for refugees who wish to be settled in the country;

6. Notes that the Government of Somalia will indicate to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, to be held at Geneva in July 1984, its additional needs for material and financial help to assist the refugees in that country;

7. Requests the High Commissioner to make a further comprehensive review of the overall needs of the refugees, taking into account those aspects relating to their rehabilitation and settlement;

8. Also requests the High Commissioner, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the proposed review of the refugee situation in Somalia;

9. Further requests the High Commissioner, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Sudan

The Secretary-General, in a September 1983 report⁽¹⁵⁾ submitted in response to a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽¹⁶⁾ stated that the Sudan hosted an estimated refugee population of 670,000—of whom 465,000 were from Ethiopia, 200,000 from Uganda and 5,000 from Zaire. Some 22,000 Chad refugees had repatriated, either with UNHCR assistance or spontaneously.

A continuing refugee influx was noted, however, with a monthly average of 1,000 to 1,500 arriving in the east, and some 4,500 in the southern border area. As at August 1983, 22 settlements in eastern Sudan accommodated 100,000 refugees and 25 in southern Sudan sheltered as many as 140,000; in addition, the transit centres in the south held 21,150 people as at July.

During a mission undertaken in February, UNHCR arranged with the Sudan's Office of the Commissioner for Refugees for implementation of the recommendations made by an inter-agency review mission in November 1982.⁽¹⁷⁾ Major follow-up action being taken included international protection, co-ordination of assistance, delivery of social and technical services, access, to land and water, housing, wage-earning settlements, refugee participation, and the phasing-out of UNHCR activities. In order to ensure improved co-ordination of assistance provided from various sources, an advisory body comprising the Sudan's Commissioner for Refugees, UNHCR, WFP and several voluntary agencies had been established.

In view of the uncertain general situation in the region, a contingency plan was being worked out by UNHCR for possible large-scale emergency assistance. It was suggested that, in addition to the participation of WFP and ILO, consideration should be given to further UNDP involvement in refugee-affected areas of the Sudan and in developmental initiatives involving refugee settlements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/90 without vote on 16 December.

Situation of refugees in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/181 of 15 December 1980, 36/158 of 16 December 1981 and 37/173 of 17 December 1982 on the situation of refugees in the Sudan,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of refugees in the Sudan,

Taking note of the ever-increasing number of refugees arriving in the Sudan,

Recognizing the heavy burden placed on the Government of the Sudan and the sacrifices it is making in caring for the refugees and the need for adequate international assistance to enable it to continue its efforts to provide assistance to the refugees,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Sudan by Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of refugee programmes,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations of the inter-agency technical follow-up missions contained therein;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, donor countries and voluntary agencies for their efforts to assist the refugees in the Sudan;

3. Commends the efforts of the High Commissioner and the International Labour Office to create income-generating activities for refugees in the Sudan;

4. Appreciates the measures which the Government of the Sudan is taking to provide shelter, food, education and health and other services to the refugees;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the necessary financial and material assistance for the full implementation of the recommendations of the various inter-agency missions;

6. Appeals to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations, other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial institutions to provide the Government of the Sudan with the necessary resources for the implementation of development assistance projects in regions affected by the presence of refugees, as envisaged in the reports of the various inter-agency missions, and to strengthen its social and economic infrastructure so that essential services and facilities for refugees can be strengthened and expanded;

7. Requests the High Commissioner to continue co-ordination with the appropriate specialized agencies in order to consolidate and ensure the continuation of essential services to the refugees in their settlements;

8. Also requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to submit a comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations of the inter-agency technical follow-up missions as well as on the implementation of the present resolution.

Student refugees in southern Africa

In a September 1983 report⁽¹⁸⁾ submitted in pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General noted that all of the originally proposed projects designed to alleviate the burden which the presence of Namibian and South African student refugees posed on asylum countries had been completed, and that ongoing assistance to such refugees in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe had been fully incorporated into the UNHCR regular programme.

Government contributions received by July 1983, in response to the High Commissioner's 1977 appeal and earmarked for Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia, amounted to some $16 million, with various other contributions of $8.7 million and additional scholarships.

At different times during the year, the number of South African student refugees or school-age refugees were reported as: 154 in Botswana; 11,500 in Lesotho; 728 in Swaziland; 68 in Zambia; and 32 in Zimbabwe. The Namibian counterparts were estimated at: 121 in Botswana; one in Swaziland; and 3,500 in Zambia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 38/95 without vote.

Assistance to student refugees in southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/177 of 17 December 1982, in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who had taken asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing the review by the High Commissioner of assistance programmes for student refugees from South Africa and Namibia,

Noting with appreciation that some of the projects recommended in the report on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa have been successfully completed,

Noting with concern the continued influx into Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia of student refugees from South Africa, as well as from Namibia,

Convinced that the discriminatory policies and repressive measures being applied in South Africa and Namibia will lead to a further exodus of student refugees from those countries,

Conscious of the burden placed on the limited financial, material and administrative resources of the host countries by the increasing number of student refugees,

Appreciating the efforts of the host countries to deal with their student refugee populations, with the assistance of the international community,

1. Endorses the assessments and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and commends him and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for their efforts to mobilize resources and organize the programme of assistance for student refugees in the host countries of southern Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for granting asylum and making educational and other facilities available to the student refugees, in spite of the pressure which the continuing influx of those refugees exerts on facilities in their countries;

3. Also expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for the co-operation which they have extended to the Secretary-General and to the High Commissioner on matters concerning the welfare of those refugees;

4. Notes with appreciation the financial and material support provided for the student refugees by Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who have taken asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

6. Urges all Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue contributing generously to the assistance programmes for student refugees, through financial support of the regular programmes of the High Commissioner, of the projects identified in the report of the Secretary-General and of the projects and programmes, including unfunded projects, which will be submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, to be held at Geneva in July 1984;

7. Also urges all Member States and all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist the countries of asylum materially and otherwise to enable them to continue to discharge their humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

8. Appeals to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as well as other international and non-governmental organizations, to continue providing humanitarian and development assistance to expedite the settlement of student refugees from South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

9. Calls upon all agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to continue co-operating with the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in the implementation of humanitarian programmes of assistance for the student refugees in southern Africa;

10. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to keep the matter under review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the current status of the programmes and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

The Americas and Europe

UNHCR obligations in the Americas and Europe totalled $44 million in 1983, of which $40 million was under General Programmes and $4 million under Special Programmes.

The Americas

A major development in Latin America in 1983 included a continued increase in the number of refugees in Central America and Mexico—from some 312,000 to over 330,000, due mainly to new influxes of Nicaraguan and Salvadorian refugees in Costa Rica and Honduras and of Guatemalan refugees in Mexico. There was a proportional increase in the number of refugees assisted by UNHCR, which totalled some 96,500 by year's end.

The year also marked the beginning of significant voluntary repatriation movements to Argentina, Bolivia and Chile—following developments in the respective countries, including publication by the Chilean authorities in September 1983 of lists of exiles authorized to return. In response to a request by Bolivia, UNHCR used its good offices to solicit contributions to a rehabilitation fund for needy returnees facing difficulties in their economic and social reintegration; $200,000 was made available in May to assist up to 1,250 returnees.

In Honduras, some 17,500 Salvadorian and 500 Guatemalan refugees were regrouped in camps near the western border. Approximately 15,000 Nicaraguan refugees of Miskito origin, who began arriving in Honduras in 1982, were placed in rural villages where self-sufficiency projects were started; some 2,800 other Nicaraguan refugees had benefited from UNHCR assistance since the latter part of 1982. In Mexico, nearly 43,000 Guatemalan refugees, settled in 89 sites along the border, continued to receive care and maintenance assistance.

In Central America and the Caribbean, there were some 85,500 refugees—mostly Salvadorians, with the balance from Guatemala, Haiti, Nicaragua and other countries—in Belize (7,000), Cuba (2,000), the Dominican Republic (5,000), Guatemala (70,000) and Panama (1,500). Those receiving UNHCR assistance totalled some 3,700 in the region.

Many refugees and displaced persons continued to benefit from resettlement in Canada and the United States, where over 12,000 and 62,000 persons, respectively, were resettled, the majority being from South-East Asia and Europe, with the rest from Africa, the Middle East and Latin America. As in previous years, most assistance in North America was provided by voluntary agencies and government sources, with special help available from UNHCR on a case-by-case basis.

The Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme, at its October 1983 session⁽¹⁾ expressed concern over the refugee situation in Central America and appealed to Governments in the region to support the High Commissioner in implementing self-sufficiency projects and durable solutions.

Europe

In Europe in 1983, the total number of refugees was estimated at 600,000. The flow of asylum-seekers continued unabated, particularly from developing countries, with the number reaching 100,000. The countries receiving the most asylum-seekers continued to be France and the Federal Republic of Germany, although the latter's intake was greatly reduced in 1983. In relation to its population, Switzerland received the highest percentage of refugees in Europe; increases were also registered in Austria, Italy, Sweden and Turkey.

Many European Governments, preoccupied by economic recession and the heavy financial burden posed by asylum-seekers, indicated a growing reluctance to accept such applicants, while traditional resettlement countries also decreased their refugee intake; UNHCR was called on to increase its contribution to a number of projects, particularly in legal assistance. Some Governments introduced deterrents to discourage economic migrants from utilizing the asylum procedure, such as a ban on employment and a reduction in social benefits during examination of applications. As a result of such measures, accumulation of cases was noted in first-asylum countries such as Austria, Greece, Italy, Turkey and Yugoslavia.

UNHCR assistance was also given to needy Lebanese stranded in Europe.

The Executive Committee, at its October 1983 session⁽¹⁾ noted the increased assistance requirements in Europe, welcomed the High Commissioner's initiative in convening a seminar on the integration of refugees in Europe (Geneva, September)—attended by 19 Governments and by non-governmental organizations—and expressed the hope that there would be an appropriate follow-up to the seminar's conclusions.

East and South Asia and Oceania

In 1983, refugees of Indo-Chinese origin remained the largest refugee group in East and South Asia and Oceania. By year's end, those awaiting durable solutions in camps and centres in the region's asylum countries numbered some 167,000, of whom 42,237 were so-called boat people. In addition, there were 276,000 Indo-Chinese refugees settled on 257 state farms in China and some 26,000 Kampuchean refugees in Viet Nam, the majority of whom also benefited from UNHCR assistance.

Among the first-asylum countries in the region, Thailand accommodated the largest number of Indo-Chinese refugees—some 133,000, including 68,000 Lao, 56,300 Kampucheans and 8,600 Vietnamese. Other countries and areas providing temporary asylum to significant numbers of Indo-Chinese refugees included Hong Kong, Indonesia, Japan, Macau, Malaysia, the Philippines and Singapore. In addition, there were two refugee processing centres—one each in Indonesia and the Philippines—which provided temporary accommodation to some 21,000 Indo-Chinese who had already been accepted for resettlement by third countries.

During the year, some 68,000 Indo-Chinese refugees—35,000 Vietnamese, 27,000 Kampucheans and 6,000 Lao—were resettled in third countries, and an additional 19,000 Vietnamese, departing directly from Viet Nam under the Orderly Departure Programme, joined family members abroad. Over 16,400 refugees, mostly Indo-Chinese, were accepted for resettlement by Australia.

Voluntary repatriation candidates and groups of spontaneous returnees to countries of origin also benefited from UNHCR assistance, including provision of resettlement kits and, when appropriate, rice. Beneficiaries included 2,236 Kampuchean repatriates from the Lao People's Democratic Republic under a bilateral arrangement, and 2,397 Lao refugees from Thailand, who had repatriated voluntarily with UNHCR assistance since the programme's inception in 1980. While negotiations continued regarding the voluntary return of Kampuchean refugees in Thailand, 1,200 Kampucheans in the Lao People's Democratic Republic and 21,000 more in Viet Nam benefited from UNHCR assistance.

Other groups of concern to UNHCR in the region included some 8,000 Afghans and Iranians in India; asylum-seekers from Irian Jaya, Indonesia, in Papua New Guinea; and other individual refugees, mostly Iranians, in several other countries.

The High Commissioner told the Executive Committee in October(1) that new initiatives must be provided to cope with the special problem of some 4,000 unaccompanied minors in refugee camps in the region, many of whom had no relatives in third countries and might not qualify for current resettlement programmes.

During 1983, $74.2 million was obligated for assistance to refugees in East and South Asia and Oceania under General Programmes and $9.5 million under Special Programmes. Of this amount, $58 million was spent on multi-purpose assistance for Indo-Chinese refugees in the region.

At its October 1983 session, the Executive Committee drew attention to the difficulties that the ongoing refugee problems entailed for the affected countries in South-East Asia, noted with concern that the size of the Indo-Chinese refugee camp population remained stable despite a significant reduction in arrivals, and called on the High Commissioner to promote durable solutions to those problems. It welcomed the continuing co-operation between Governments concerned and UNHCR, which had facilitated the operation of the Orderly Departure Programme from Viet Nam. In addition, the Executive Committee commended the High Commissioner for his efforts to secure the disembarkation and resettlement of refugees rescued at sea, called on Governments of both coastal and flag States to facilitate disembarkation, and appealed to the latter to give guarantees for the resettlement of those rescued at sea by ships flying their flags.

Middle East and South-west Asia

The largest single UNHCR assistance programme continued in 1983 for an estimated case-load of 2.3 million Afghan refugees in Pakistan, where a $20 million joint project with the World Bank was finalized in the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan for income-generating activities through repairing damage to forest areas and improving irrigation systems and roads, all of which had been adversely affected by refugees and their livestock. UNHCR programmes incorporated some of the employment-generating and skills-training projects recommended by ILO after a mission to the country in late 1982; a vocational training project, funded by UNHCR and implemented by ILO, was started in Baluchistan. Under Pakistan's ongoing refugee relocation programme, some 40,000 refugees were transferred out of the North-West Frontier Province.

On top of its traditional assistance for refugees in the Middle East, events in Lebanon necessitated UNHCR emergency assistance to some 98,000 persons including displaced Lebanese and refugees, in addition to 38,000 Lebanese and Palestinians (not registered with UNRWA) who had taken refuge in the Syrian Arab Republic (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX). UNHCR also provided monthly subsistence grants to some 200 needy Lebanese in Cyprus.

Elsewhere in the region, UNHCR continued discussions with Iran on local integration of Afghan refugees, and co-ordinated the United Nations humanitarian assistance for Cyprus for the displaced and needy there (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter VIII). It obligated a total of $96 million for these programmes, of which $68.8 million was under General Programmes and $27.2 million under Special Programmes. Of this amount, $3.5 million was for an initial programme of assistance to Afghan refugees in Iran, including $1 million made available from the Emergency Fund to provide some 5,000 family-size tents to meet the urgent needs of new arrivals.

The Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme, at its October 1983 session⁽¹⁾ noted and encouraged the continued efforts of Pakistan and the High Commissioner in promoting employment and self-sufficiency activities for Afghan refugees in Pakistan.

In November, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/29 on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security, called on all parties concerned to create the necessary conditions for Afghan refugees to return voluntarily to their homes in safety and honour, and renewed its appeal for humanitarian relief assistance (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter VI).

Public information

UNHCR's public information activities in 1983 were aimed at promoting greater public awareness of the plight of refugees and of the objectives of the Second (1984) International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (see above).

In addition to the monthly newspaper Refugees, its quarterly supplement, Refugees magazine, focused on Afghan refugees in Pakistan, Indo-Chinese refugees, attacks on refugee camps, and refugees in Africa; the newspaper was published in English and French, with one special issue in German, while the magazine was published in English and French, with special issues in Arabic, Italian and Spanish. Other publications included a catalogue of information materials, posters, a refugee map and calendar, and country fact sheets.

The UNHCR photo library distributed some 45,000 photographs to the media, schools and NGOs. The film department prepared three documentary films: "The Camp on Lantau Island" (boat people in Hong Kong), "The Lost Tribes" (Afghan refugees in Pakistan) and "Beyond Emergency" (Ethiopian refugees in Somalia). UNHCR also continued film co-productions with major television networks on refugee situations around the world.

In the course of the year, journalists, television crews and photographers participated in itinerant media seminars, one of which visited South-East Asia and another the refugee asylum countries of Central America. Two other seminars travelled through a number of African countries on information-gathering programmes for the 1984 International Conference.

In resolution 38/120, the General Assembly noted with satisfaction the UNHCR public information programmes aimed at increasing public awareness of the refugee situation in Africa and the objectives of the 1984 Conference, and requested the United Nations Department of Public Information and other United Nations bodies to co-operate closely with the High Commissioner in ensuring maximum publicity.

Refugee protection

UNHCR continued to provide various measures of protection to refugees, who often lived in insecurity, fearful even of their lives and basic safety. Despite almost universal respect in recent years for the principle of non-refoulement—whereby asylum-seekers were not forcibly returned to countries where they faced persecution or death—cases of expulsion had been reported and large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers everywhere were subjected to various forms, and harsh conditions, of detention.

In addition, States showed an increasing unwillingness to recognize the distinction between refugees and ordinary migrants, as well as a tendency to regard as temporary the predicament, and admission, of refugees for the reason that most of them were fleeing armed conflicts or internal disturbances in their home country.

The climate of economic austerity in various parts of the world had an adverse effect on the range of economic and social rights granted to refugees and asylum-seekers. The fact that most of them were found in countries with a high unemployment rate among local populations also compounded their difficulties in seeking economic independence.

In May, UNHCR hosted a two-day seminar on international protection, attended by legal experts from NGOs and academic institutions. A Meeting of Experts on Refugee Aid and Development, held in August, called for a review of policies for refugee assistance in low-income countries with a major refugee problem and for a new approach to solving such problems. Government officials from some 30 countries attended the Second Refugee Law Course, organized jointly by UNHCR and the International Institute of Humanitarian Law at San Remo, Italy; the Institute also organized a Round Table on Movements of Populations (Florence, Italy, June). In Asia, a Seminar on Refugee Law (Colombo, Sri Lanka, June), held jointly by UNHCR and the Sri Lanka Foundation Institute, enabled government officials from southern and central Asian countries to discuss principles of international protection and problems relating to their practical application in the region.

The Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme, at its October 1983 session⁽¹⁾ noted the restrictive trends relating to the granting of asylum and the determination of refugee status, the burden that the problem of manifestly unfounded or abusive applications for refugee status or asylum placed on the affected countries as well as its detrimental effect on the interests of legitimate applicants, and recommended procedures for safeguarding the interests of both parties.

The Executive Committee also noted with profound concern the violation of the physical safety of refugees and asylum-seekers through military or armed attacks, acts of piracy and other forms of brutality and the failure to rescue asylum-seekers in distress at sea, and began consideration of a draft statement of principles on the prohibition of military attacks on refugee camps and settlements, taking into account a report by former High Commissioner Felix Schnyder (Switzerland) and the proposals made by its Sub-Committee of the Whole on International Protection (eighth meeting, Geneva, 3-6 and 11 October).⁽²⁰⁾

In 1983, UNHCR furnished Governments with some 9,500 Convention Travel Documents, provided for under the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees⁽²¹⁾ printed 250,000 refugee identity cards at the request of various Governments; and contributed to the cost of providing cards in several other countries.

In resolution 38/121, the General Assembly reaffirmed as fundamental the High Commissioner's function to provide international protection and the need for Governments to co-operate in the effective exercise of that function, deplored violations of the rights and safety of refugees and asylum-seekers, and urged States to ensure their safety.

International refugee instruments

As at 31 December 1983, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees⁽²¹⁾ and the 1967

Protocol⁽²²⁾ had been ratified or acceded to by 94 and 93 States, respectively, as a result of 1983 accession to the Convention by El Salvador, Guatemala and Mozambique, and to the Protocol by El Salvador, Guatemala and Peru.⁽²³⁾ Bolivia and Kiribati adhered to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons, as well as to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness, bringing to 34 and 12, respectively, the number of States parties to those instruments⁽²³⁾

The 1951 Convention, which described the various rights and obligations of refugees, was complemented by the 1950 UNHCR statute⁽²⁴⁾ which defined the persons of concern to the High Commissioner and the action he was required to take on their behalf.

Other intergovernmental legal instruments of benefit to refugees included: the 1969 OAU Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, the 1957 Agreement relating to Refugee Seamen and its 1973 Protocol, the 1959 European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas for Refugees, the 1980 European Agreement on Transfer of Responsibility for Refugees, and the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights Pact of San José, Costa Rica.

UNHCR expressed concern that, in two regions of the world where large-scale refugee problems existed and continued to arise, the international refugee instruments had been accepted by only a small number of States. The Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme⁽¹⁾ in October, stressed the importance for further States to accede to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol.

In resolution 38/121 on the report of UNHCR, the General Assembly reaffirmed the need for Governments to facilitate the effective exercise of the High Commissioner's function to provide international protection, in particular by acceding to and fully implementing the relevant international and regional instruments and by scrupulously observing the principles of asylum and non-refoulement.

International co-operation to avert new refugee flows

In 1983, the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, established by the General Assembly in 1981⁽¹⁾ to review the problem and develop recommendations, held its first two sessions in New York (12-15 April and 6-10 June). In its report, transmitted by a July note of the Secretary-General⁽²⁾ the Group informed the Assembly that it had agreed on a programme of work, to be conducted, as a general rule, in closed meetings. The work programme covered, among other things, examination of circumstances causing new massive flows of refugees, both natural (catastrophes, emergencies) and man-made (political, economic, other); analysis of existing relevant international instruments, machinery and practices; and consideration of political, juridical, economic and other means for improved international co-operation to avert refugee flows.

The Group requested that the Assembly renew its mandate, adding that, in view of the magnitude and complexity of the task, it would require two 2-week sessions in 1984, with one session meeting in New York and the other elsewhere. The Group recognized the need to have all experts present at its future sessions.

The Secretary-General, in a September report⁽³⁾ submitted to the Assembly the observations received from Canada and Colombia in response to the Assembly's renewed request in 1982 for comments on the topic.⁽⁴⁾

By a letter of 5 January 1983 addressed to the Secretary-General⁽⁵⁾ China termed it essential that the Assembly analyse cases of massive refugee flows, rather than speak in generalities; and deal with, and eradicate, the political and ethnic causes that had created the problems.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December, adopted resolution 38/84 without vote.

International co-operation to avert new flows of refugees

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/148 of 16 December 1981 and 37/121 of 16 December 1982 on international co-operation to avert new flows of refugees,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General containing observations received from Governments and the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Considering the urgency, magnitude and complexity of the task before the Group of Governmental Experts,

Recognizing the necessity of having all the experts participate in the future sessions of the Group, and concerned that, due to financial constraints, experts from least developed countries have been unable to attend,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General containing observations received from Governments;

2. Welcomes the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, including its programme of work and recommendations, as a constructive step in the fulfilment of its mandate;

3. Reaffirms and extends the mandate of the Group of Governmental Experts as defined in General Assembly resolutions 36/148 and 37/121;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General, without prejudice to the rule contained in resolution 36/148, to assist, as far as possible and by way of exception, the experts coming from least developed countries, appointed by the Secretary-General, to participate fully in the work of the Group of Governmental Experts, in order to fulfil its mandate;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a compilation of the comments and suggestions he may receive from Member States on this item;

6. Calls upon the Group of Governmental Experts to continue its work in two sessions of two weeks' duration each during 1984, in order to fulfil its mandate;

7. Requests the Group of Governmental Experts to submit a report on its work in time for consideration by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "International co-operation to avert new flows of refugees".

Prior to its approval by the Special Political Committee, the draft had been orally revised, taking into account amendments submitted, and later withdrawn, by Cuba and Mexico.⁽⁶⁾ The proposed amendments concerned the deletion, in paragraph 4, of a phrase qualifying the experts eligible for assistance as those coming from countries "which provide asylum or other significant services to refugees, including returning refugees"; the words "least developed countries", in the same paragraph and in the fourth preambular paragraph, would also have been replaced by "developing countries".

In a related action, the Assembly, in resolution 38/103 on human rights and mass exoduses, recalled having invited the Group of Governmental Experts in 1981(1) to consider the relevant recommendations made on the topic by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights (see Chapter XVIII of this section).

Chapter XXII

Drugs of abuse

In 1983, drug abuse—with its health, social and economic consequences—continued to cause concern in many parts of the world. While international controls on psychotropic substances were beginning to work more effectively, there was increasing availability of narcotic raw materials, and multiple use of drugs and the dangerous means of taking them augmented the health hazards.

In May, the Economic and Social Council—acting on the recommendations of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, which held its thirtieth session at Vienna, Austria, from 7 to 16 February—transmitted to the General Assembly activities proposed for the third and fourth years (1984-1985) of the five-year programme of action (1982-1986) adopted in the context of the 1981 International Drug Abuse Control Strategy (decision 1983/117). It also urged Governments of opiate-producing/consuming countries to dispose of excess stocks (resolution 1983/3).

Further, the Council called for improved international co-operation in the maritime interdiction of illicit drug traffic (resolution 1983/4), recommended that the Commission replace the current task force on the 1981 Strategy (resolution 1983/2), and enlarged the Commission's membership to 40, effective in 1984 (resolution 1983/5). It approved the Commission's recommendation that it would not be appropriate to proclaim an international year against drug abuse (decision 1983/116).

In December, the General Assembly, by resolution 38/93, called for improved co-ordination and co-operation against the illegal production, traffic and abuse of drugs. It outlined, in resolution 38/98, a strategy and policies for drug control and approved the programme of action for 1984-1985, and delineated, in resolution 38/122, an international campaign against traffic in drugs.

The International Narcotics Control Board, composed of 13 members serving in their personal capacities, held two sessions at Vienna—16 to 27 May (thirty-third session) and 4 to 21 October (thirty-fourth session)—at which it discussed drug abuse, drug supply and demand, reduction of illicit demand for psychotropic substances and the international drug control system; in addition, its 1983 report analysed the world situation by region and country.

International controlImplementation of the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy

Activities of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. In 1983, the 30-member Commission on Narcotic Drugs⁽¹⁾ recommended, through the Economic and Social Council, that the General Assembly entrust the Commission itself, rather than the task force provisionally established in 1982,⁽²⁾ with reviewing, monitoring and co-ordinating the implementation of the Assembly's 1981 International Drug Abuse Control Strategy⁽³⁾ and the five-year programme of action (1982-1986). The Commission made the proposal with a view to overcoming what it saw as possible organizational problems, such as the membership and size of the task force, and duplication of work. The recommendation was subsequently endorsed by the Council (resolution 1983/2) and by the Assembly (resolution 38/98).

The task force held its first meeting immediately prior to the Commission's 1983 session, and a further meeting on 14 February, when it reported to the Commission.

The Commission also prepared, and annexed to its report to the Council, a number of projects for 1984-1985, corresponding to the third and fourth years of the five-year programme of action. The Council transmitted the draft projects to the Assembly (decision 1983/117), which approved them in December (resolution 38/98).

Five activities proposed for implementation within regular United Nations budget resources aimed at: reducing excessive stocks of licit opiate raw materials; developing and promoting effective law enforcement; promoting scientific research and providing technical assistance to developing countries; monitoring demand reduction measures; and collecting and disseminating relevant information by the United Nations.

Additional projects, suggested for extrabudgetary financing, focused on: implementing multisectoral country programmes for reducing the illicit supply of narcotic raw materials; preparing drug identification kits for field officers; evaluating the use of community resources in demand reduction; strengthening national narcotics laboratories through provision of equipment and advice by the United Nations Narcotics Laboratory; providing fellowships and study programmes; conducting regional and interregional courses for law enforcement personnel; holding meetings of operational heads of law enforcement agencies; assisting Governments so requesting with the drafting of legislation for national implementation of treaty obligations; and promoting information dissemination.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his 1983 report on international co-operation in drug abuse control⁽¹⁾ stated that activities during the year had focused on developing a network of laboratories with appropriate analytical techniques in areas most affected by drug abuse problems, establishing a computer link between data bases, studying plans for the forfeiture of the proceeds of drug trafficking, researching on the characteristics of seized substances and developing a training programme to curb illicit traffic in transit countries. Although several programmes recommended by the Commission were not implemented due to lack of resources, projects using extrabudgetary resources provided technical assistance on drug law enforcement (Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, Malaysia, Pakistan, Peru, Turkey), facilitated the preparation of quick-testing kits for field law enforcement officers, provided equipment to national laboratories in over 30 countries, and offered fellowships, study tours and courses for national officials and law enforcement personnel.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in May 1983, adopted a resolution and a decision concerning the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy.

On 24 May, the Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1983/2 without vote.

Review and implementation of the programme of strategy and policies for drug control

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 36/168 of 16 December 1981, entitled "International Drug Abuse Control Strategy", by which the Assembly requested the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to establish a task force, in the context of that Strategy, to monitor and review the programme of action and to report to the Commission thereon,

Noting that the Commission, in its resolution I(S-VII) of 8 February 1982, decided, inter alia, to establish that task force on a provisional basis, as outlined in paragraph 90 of its report on the seventh special session, and to review the composition of the task force at its thirtieth session,

Noting further the number of representations subsequently made to the Secretary-General concerning the provisional membership of the task force and its possible enlargement,

Aware that a task force with limited participation may prove to be discriminatory in nature,

Recognizing that the original purpose of the task force would be thwarted if the task force were to become too large,

Recognizing also that the monitoring and review procedure, as currently organized, may lead to a duplication of effort between the Commission and its task force,

Concerned that the financial constraints under which the task force was authorized to meet made it necessary for the Commission to renounce its own meeting when its task force was in session, thereby further curtailing the time available to the Commission for examination of its agenda items,

Having taken note of the report of the task force on its discussions held immediately prior to and during the thirtieth session of the Commission,

Recommends to the General Assembly that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, meeting in plenary during its sessions and in the presence of all interested observers, should in future replace the present task force as provisionally established and thus constitute the task force envisaged in General Assembly resolution 36/168.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/2

24 May 1983 Meeting 11 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/64) without vote, 5 May (meeting 3); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1983/15); agenda item 13. Meeting number. ESC 11.

On the same day, also on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted decision 1983/117 without vote.

Strategy and policies for drug control

At its 11th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1983, the Council decided to transmit annex II to the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its thirtieth session to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session. The annex contains the programme for the third and fourth years, corresponding to the biennium 1984-1985, of the basic five-year programme of action adopted by the General Assembly in the context of the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy established by resolution 36/168 of 16 December 1981.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/117

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1983/64) without vote, 5 May (meeting 3); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1983/15); agenda item 13. Meeting number. ESC 11.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions concerning drug control.

On the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/98 without vote on 16 December.

Strategy and policies for drug control

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/124 of 16 December 1977, in which it requested the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to study the possibility of launching a meaningful programme of international drug abuse control strategy and policies,

Recalling also its resolution 36/168 of 16 December 1981, by which it adopted the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy and the basic five-year programme of action proposed by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in its resolution¹ (XXIX) of 11 February 1981,

Noting the recommendation contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/2 of 24 May 1983 that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, meeting in plenary during its sessions and in the presence of all interested observers, should in future replace the current task force provisionally established and thus constitute the task force envisaged in General Assembly resolution 36/168,

Noting also Economic and Social Council decision 1983/117 of 24 May 1983, in which the Council decided to transmit to the General Assembly annex II to the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its thirtieth session, containing the programme of action for the third and fourth years of the basic five-year programme of action,

1. Approves the programme of action for the biennium 1984-1985, the third and fourth years of the basic five-year programme of action, contained in annex II to the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its thirtieth session;

2. Decides that, beginning with its eighth special session, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, meeting in plenary during its sessions and in the presence of all interested observers, will constitute the task force envisaged in General Assembly resolution 36/168 to review, monitor and co-ordinate the implementation of the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy and the basic five-year programme of action.

General Assembly resolution 38/98

16 December 1983 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/38/680) without vote, 7 December (meeting 67); 2-nation draft (A/C.3/38/L60); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Bahamas, Canada.

Meeting numbers: GA 38th session: 3rd Committee 47, 48, 54, 59, 63, 65, 617; plenary 100.

On 16 December, the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted without vote resolution 38/93.

Measures to improve co-ordination and co-operation in the international struggle against illegal production of drugs, illicit drug traffic and drug abuse

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982 and 37/198 of 18 December 1982,

Recalling also that in paragraph 6 of its resolution 34/177 of 17 December 1979 it urged greater action by the specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, especially the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Development Programme, in developing and implementing, within their mandates, programmes aimed at the reduction of illicit production of and demand for drugs, and specifically requested those agencies to make that activity a regular item on the agendas of their governing bodies,

Considering that the scourge of drug abuse continues to spread and has reached epidemic proportions, both in developed and in some developing countries,

Considering further that transit States, which have no control over the production of or demand for illicit drugs, are increasingly affected by the illicit drug traffic,

Recognizing that illegal production of drugs, illicit drug traffic and drug abuse are political, security, economic, social and medical problems, in both producing and consuming countries, which must be met with a comprehensive, effective and co-ordinated strategy on the national, regional and international levels,

Acknowledging that constraints of an economic and technical nature are obstacles to many developing countries in their fight against illegal drug cultivation and production, as well as illicit drug traffic and drug abuse,

Aware that the illegal production of drugs must be stopped and that integrated rural development programmes, including crop substitution, combined with control activities are effective measures to curb the production of illicit drugs,

Noting with appreciation the generous contributions made so far and recently pledged to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, which should continue, considering the great needs in this field,

Aware of the need to improve regional, interregional and international co-operation and co-ordination in order to intensify the struggle against illegal production of drugs, illicit drug traffic and drug abuse,

Mindful of the decision taken by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-third session to undertake at its twenty-fifth session, in 1985, an intergovernmental review of drug control on the basis of an in-depth evaluation study to be prepared by the Secretary-General,

1. Calls upon Member States that have not yet done so to ratify the international drug control treaties and, until such time, to endeavour to abide by the provisions thereof;

2. Invites Member States to make generous contributions to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to enable the Fund further to improve and strengthen its activities to reduce the illicit supply of, traffic in and demand for narcotic drugs;

3. Calls upon donor countries to allocate an appropriate portion of their development aid resources to programmes aimed at the reduction of illegal production of drugs and to the development of programmes to control drug abuse and drug traffic in the developing countries;

4. Calls upon producing countries to identify suitable projects for possible presentation to the Fund, to the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and to international and regional financing institutions;

5. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and other international organizations concerned with assistance to developing countries to initiate and continue, as a matter of priority, within their respective fields and within existing budgetary resources or through voluntarily contributed funds, activities to help developing countries to take the necessary steps to stop the illegal cultivation and production of and trafficking in drugs, in consultation with and incorporating the experience of the Fund;

6. Invites international financing institutions to consider giving financial support to activities in producing countries with a view to stopping the cultivation and production of illicit drugs, and calls upon Member States to encourage regional financing institutions to support such projects;

7. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to identify special drug control activities in their respective fields and to accord higher priority to drug control activities in their programme budgets;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the Economic and Social Council, on the drug control activities carried out by the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes concerned, pursuant to the present resolution;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to improve the co-ordination of drug control activities within the United Nations system and among Member States, the specialized agencies and programmes and other international and regional organs and organizations involved in drug control activities, with due consideration for the respective jurisdictions of those bodies, so as to avoid duplication of efforts in this field;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on measures to improve co-operation and co-ordination of drug control activities within the United Nations system, in the light of the intergovernmental review of drug control to be undertaken by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-fifth session.

UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control

In 1983, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC) devoted 80 per cent of its resources to 21 programmes in 11 countries with major narcotics control problems. Research and training projects carried out by the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute and the World Health Organization (WHO) also received UNFDAC funding.

In December, the General Assembly, by resolutions 38/93 and 38/122, urged Member States to contribute to UNFDAC.

In 1983, 43 countries and one Territory contributed some $6.4 million to UNFDAC and 23 countries pledged approximately $3.4 million for 1984 (see table below). In addition, Italy pledged $40,880,503 to be utilized over a five-year period for agreed projects.

UN Narcotics Laboratory

The Narcotics Laboratory Section of the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs⁽³⁾ continued to help strengthen national narcotics laboratories in developing countries affected by illicit trafficking. In addition to technical information, it provided, with funds from UNFDAC, chemicals and/or equipment and—with special contributions from Norway—scientific texts and literature. Its reference collection of substances under international control as well as of scientific literature on drugs and drug abuse was further expanded, and preparation continued of a multilingual dictionary⁽⁶⁾ for use by authorities, of narcotic and psychotropic substances. The Laboratory also continued preparing low-cost portable kits to assist law enforcement officials in identifying seized drugs.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs⁽¹⁾ in 1983, took note of the report of an expert group to co-ordinate research on the physical and chemical characteristics of heroin to trace its origin and movement in the illicit traffic (Vienna, 28 September-1 October 1982)⁽⁷⁾ which had recommended, among other things, the establishment of international facilities for the rapid exchange of samples and data, requesting the Laboratory to procure and distribute statistically significant numbers of heroin samples and recent samples of opium from licit and illicit production.

Drug abuse

The International Narcotics Control Board (INCB), in its 1983 report⁽⁸⁾ observed that the menace of drug abuse—including opiates, cocaine, cannabis and various psychotropic substances—had reached unprecedented dimensions, while there were disquieting signs of the emergence of a permissive attitude towards the use of certain drugs regarded by some to be less harmful than others. It reported that, with traffickers manufacturing heroin and cocaine close to the sources of illicit production, the use of these products was spreading in the producer countries; new sources of cannabis were constantly appearing, including in countries which had been regarded as consumers. Noting that the abuse of psychotropic substances not under international control caused concern to many Governments, INCB observed the importance of the timely placing of particular substances under such control.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs⁽¹⁾ noted that abuse involving two or more drugs at a time, often in combination with alcohol, was generally increasing and had become the predominant pattern in certain countries. Impairment of health, personal and social dysfunction, accidents, violence and crime were frequently associated with drug abuse; the high profitability of the illicit drug supply, or diversion from licit sources, sustained the spread of abuse.

On 8 February, the Commission adopted a decision⁽⁹⁾ on the health, social and economic consequences of drug abuse, and a decision⁽¹⁰⁾ on the report of the Expert Group on Drug Abuse Reduction which had met in September 1982,⁽¹¹⁾ thereby asking the Division of Narcotic Drugs to publish, in its quarterly Bulletin on Narcotics, relevant information supplied by Member States and by the Group.

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/93, called on countries giving development aid to allocate a portion of that aid to drug abuse control in the developing countries.

Proposed international year

In pursuance of an April 1982 resolution of the Economic and Social Council⁽¹²⁾ the Commission on Narcotic Drugs⁽¹⁾ considered in 1983 a proposal to proclaim an international year against drug abuse.

In addition to a note submitted by the Secretary-General, containing replies from 11 Governments, the Commission heard the comments of its members and observers in debate. In the light of the mostly negative views, the Commission recommended against the proposal, adding that the year might even have a negative impact by generating more curiosity than opposition to drug abuse, and that the funds required could be used more wisely to enhance the international strategy for drug control.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council, on 24 May, adopted decision 1983/116 without vote.

International year against drug abuse

At its 11th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1983, the Council took note of, and approved, the recommendation contained in the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its thirtieth session that it would not be appropriate to proclaim an international year against drug abuse.

Supply and demand

In 1983, INCB reported⁽⁸⁾ that the international control system for the licit trade of narcotics generally worked satisfactorily, although there had been increasing diversions of certain narcotic drugs through use of falsified import certificates. It reminded Governments of their obligation under the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs to return copies of export authorizations, endorsed to indicate receipt, to the exporting countries so they could keep track of drug consignments and investigate possible diversions.

Narcotic raw materials for licit use

INCB observed in its 1983 report⁽⁸⁾ that, despite a balance achieved in 1982 and 1983 between supply of and demand for opiates for medical and scientific purposes, a return to over-production was anticipated for 1984, and the possibility of an increase in the already excessive raw material stocks, mainly in India and Turkey, could not be excluded. Failing concerted action by the Governments principally concerned, the economic effects of the crisis could worsen still further and lead to consequences unfavourable to the maintenance of effective drug control.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1983/3 on 24 May.

Demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981 and 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, as well as Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution I(XXIX) of 11 February 1981, entitled "Strategy and policies for drug control",

Having considered the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1982,

Taking note of the report of the expert group convened by the Division of Narcotic Drugs to explore the feasibility of creation of an international buffer stock of opiate raw materials or transfer of those stocks to the manufacturers' stocks or to special stocks in the consuming countries,

Noting with concern that the traditional supplier countries continue to hold large accumulated stocks of opiate raw materials which constitute a heavy financial and other burden for them,

Recognizing the urgent need to liquidate the accumulated stocks held by the traditional supplier countries, with a view to achieving a lasting world-wide balance between demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific purposes,

1. Urges the Governments of those countries that have not already done so to take urgent and effective steps to implement the above-mentioned resolutions;

2. Further urges the Governments of concerned producing and consuming countries to consider, after mutual consultation where necessary, implementing such measures for the disposal of excess stocks recommended in the report of the above-mentioned expert group as may be found feasible and most fruitful, and also to consider other possible measures suggested by the expert group which might contribute to an improvement in the present situation;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for their consideration and implementation.

Illicit traffic

INCB report. In its 1983 report, INCB(*) observed that the enormous criminal profits generated by illicit drug production and trafficking threatened to undermine the economic, social and political stability of the countries concerned. Accordingly, it appealed to Governments to accelerate domestic and international measures to facilitate co-operative investigations to identify and prosecute the criminals who financed organized trafficking. It also advised that manufacturing and exporting countries should exercise special vigilance to prevent the diversion to illicit trafficking of certain narcotics required for medical and scientific purposes.

Action by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, by a resolution of 16 February 1983,⁽¹³⁾ invited Governments to submit suggestions on resolving the problem of deliberate misrepresentation and mislabelling of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and requested the Secretary-General to summarize the information received with a view to developing standards for the clear identification of drugs in international commerce.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1983/4 without vote.

Measures to improve international co-operation in the maritime interdiction of illicit drug traffic

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the observations made by the expert group to study the functioning, adequacy and enhancement of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, at its 1982 meeting, particularly with regard to the need for bilateral regional arrangements concerning the boarding of sea-going vessels involved in drug trafficking,

Bearing in mind article 4 of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, applicable international conventions and the concern of the international community to suppress illegal traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Noting with concern the alarming number of private vessels transporting illicit drugs on the high seas,

Noting also with concern the large proportion of recidivists among smugglers of illicit drugs by sea,

Recognizing that in many instances illicit drug traffickers also engage in fraudulent practices with respect to the flag State registration of their vessels,

Firmly believing that, in order to be effective in combating illicit maritime traffic, registry information must be readily accessible to and verifiable by law enforcement personnel aboard the vessel and within the claimed flag State,

Convinced that legitimate shipping interests will not be unreasonably hampered by adoption of effective steps by all States to provide, in accordance with relevant domestic constitutional safeguards and legislations, for prompt, positive and unmistakable identification of private vessels registered under their flag,

1. Appeals to Governments to inspect closely all requests for registration of private sea-going vessels to ensure that the vessels are those which the applicants are appropriately entitled to register;

2. Urges Governments to require their flag vessels to carry on board documents attesting to their registry;

3. Requests Governments to explore methods of strengthening international co-operation in combating illicit maritime drug trafficking, and to respond promptly to inquiries made for law enforcement purposes by other States regarding the registry of vessels;

4. Recommends that Governments should consider establishing a national centralized vessel registry system for their private flag vessels, to facilitate the international co-ordination needed to implement the present resolution;

5. Encourages all States to take prompt action, with due regard to their constitutional, legal and administrative systems, to curtail employment of their flag vessels in the illicit drug trade and to impose significant sanctions on persons convicted of such activity;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Governments and to invite them to bring it to the attention of their competent authorities for consideration.

Report of the Secretary-General. In pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to it in October 1983 a report⁽¹⁵⁾ on activities carried out by the United Nations system in the context of the international campaign against traffic in drugs.

The Secretary-General reported that seven regional seminars were held in 1983—in the Bahamas, Belgium, Bulgaria, India, Malaysia, Peru and Tunisia—with assistance from the drug law enforcement agencies of the Member States, to train enforcement professionals in applying countermeasures to the illicit drug traffic. Study tours were organized for 20 such professionals from Cyprus, Greece, Malaysia, Morocco, Peru, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand and Tonga, and a record number of 12 fellows received training from the Narcotics Laboratory Section of the Division of Narcotic Drugs.

The Secretary-General noted that a number of Governments and law enforcement agencies in some regions, such as the Caribbean, where no standing regional co-ordination mechanisms currently existed for drug law enforcement, had expressed the need to remedy the situation. Measures to alleviate the special problems of transit States continued to receive attention, and the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East held joint meetings in two regions during the year (see below). The Division was invited to participate in a training seminar for customs officials of the Governments of States members of the League of Arab States (United Arab Emirates, November).

Special issues of the quarterly Bulletin on Narcotics⁽¹⁶⁾ in 1983, focused on forfeiture of the proceeds of drug crimes (No. 2, April-June) and on an analysis of the campaign against drug trafficking (No. 4, October-December).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly, on 16 December, adopted resolution 38/122 without vote.

International campaign against traffic in drugs

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982 and 38/98 of 16 December 1983,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/8 and 1982/9 of 30 April 1982,

Reaffirming the need to improve and maintain regional and interregional co-operation and co-ordination, particularly in the field of law enforcement, to counter drug trafficking and drug abuse,

Noting the growing interest in the development of regional and interregional co-ordination, as indicated by the holding of three meetings in the Bahamas, Greece and India during 1983,

Conscious that while many countries, both developed and developing, continue to divert substantial human, financial and other resources to combat the illicit traffic, the developing countries encounter particular hardships in doing so,

Acknowledging that the illicit production of, demand for and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances constitute a serious threat to the development and security of many countries, especially developing countries,

Recognizing, in particular, the dilemma of transit States, which have no control over the production of and demand for illicit narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances yet are seriously affected, both at the domestic and the international levels, by the movement of illicit drugs,

Noting that the international drug control treaties include provisions for the development of effective countermeasures to combat the illicit supply of, demand for and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Considering the important role of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in supporting various drug control programmes in developing countries, and the necessity of increasing contributions to the Fund to permit it to continue its most valuable work,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General

2. Calls upon Member States that have not yet done so to ratify the international drug control treaties and, until such time, to endeavour to abide by the provisions thereof;

3. Encourages Member States to contribute, or to continue to contribute, to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to enable it to expand its support for programmes in the field of drug abuse control;

4. Urges organizations and programmes within the United Nations system, as well as Member States with available resources and expertise, to continue to grant technical and other forms of assistance, especially in the area of training of law enforcement professionals, to countries most affected by the illicit production of and traffic in drugs and drug abuse and, in this regard, to give appropriate priority to providing the resources and assistance needed to ensure rapid, secure and accurate means of communication and exchange of information;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of the Bahamas, Greece and India for acting as hosts to regional and interregional meetings during 1983;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, to explore all avenues leading to a further improvement of regional and interregional co-ordination of activities against drug trafficking and drug abuse, in particular:

(a) To continue to pursue efforts and initiatives with a view to establishing, on a continuing basis, co-ordination mechanisms for drug law enforcement in regions where these do not yet exist;

(b) To give appropriate priority to measures designed to alleviate the special problems of transit States through co-operative regional and interregional efforts and, in this regard, to bring the present resolution to the attention of all regional and interregional meetings concerned with drug trafficking and drug abuse;

(c) To make every effort to convene, within the resources that may be made available to him, the inter-regional meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies proposed in paragraph 5 (c) of General Assembly resolution 37/198;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report, for review by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "International campaign against traffic in drugs".

Drug law enforcement

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, by a decision of 8 February 1983⁽¹⁷⁾ on controlled delivery in the fight against the illicit drug traffic, requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the International Criminal Police Organization and the Customs Co-operation Council, to prepare and distribute to appropriate national drug law enforcement agencies a comprehensive paper on controlled delivery and on practical ways of applying the technique.

Observing that depriving traffickers of the proceeds of drug crimes would help reduce the illicit traffic, the Commission, by a 15 February resolution⁽¹⁸⁾ called on Governments and appropriate regional and international organizations to continue improving the ways in which the assets of convicted drug traffickers which had been derived from illicit drug traffic could be made subject to forfeiture.

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in October⁽¹⁵⁾ that consultations had begun, in pursuance of a December 1982 Assembly request⁽¹⁴⁾ on arrangements for convening an interregional meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies in 1986.

Africa

On 16 February 1983⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission on Narcotic Drugs expressed concern at the increasing abuse of, and illicit traffic in, cannabis and psychotropic substances in Africa, and suggested that further domestic and international activities be undertaken for manpower training and solving the problems related to treatment, demand, illicit traffic and availability of drugs of abuse, including khat, in the region. It called for increased international assistance to African countries for research on and prevention and treatment of addiction, and for training drug law enforcement personnel.

Middle East

The Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East (fifteenth session, Vienna, 4 February 1983)⁽²⁰⁾ recommended that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs emphasize again the urgent need for Member States to ratify the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances and to reduce over-production, and that it endorse action aimed at developing greater knowledge of measures to deprive drug traffickers of illegally acquired assets. The Sub-Commission also suggested that the Commission promote improved co-ordination for drug law enforcement by encouraging regional meetings in areas where no such mechanisms currently existed.

The Sub-Commission held its sixteenth session at Vienna, on 3 and 4 October⁽²¹⁾

As authorized by the Commission on 8 February, the Sub-Commission held two joint meetings in 1983, one with the heads of national drug law enforcement agencies in Europe⁽²²⁾ (Greece, October), and another with the Heads of National Narcotics Law Enforcement Agencies, Far East Region⁽²³⁾ (India, November).

1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs and 1972 Protocol

On 16 December 1983, the General Assembly, by resolutions 38/93 and 38/122, called on Member States that had not done so to ratify international drug control treaties and, until that time, to endeavour to abide by them.

In its 1983 report,⁽⁸⁾ INCB urged States that had not adhered to the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs or its 1972 Protocol to become parties at an early date, and invited the few States not participating in the international drug control system to join in the common effort by developing de facto co-operation.

In 1983, no additional State adhered to the Convention and the total number of parties to that instrument remained at 114. The number of parties to the Convention as amended by the 25 March 1972 Protocol also remained unchanged—at 76.

Psychotropic substances

INCB stated in its 1983 report⁽⁸⁾ that the extent of abuse of psychotropic substances—among them, amphetamines—was probably greater than commonly assumed, and that the number of clandestine laboratories producing such substances was increasing, as was diversion from licit channels. The Board asserted that, while the number of parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances remained unchanged and most non-parties complied with its provisions, universal adherence was essential for bringing under control the international licit trade in these substances, thereby dealing effectively with illicit manufacturing and trafficking.

Implementation of the 1971 Convention

In 1983, no additional State adhered to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, the number of parties remaining at 76.

On 16 February, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs adopted three resolutions dealing with the Convention—procedures concerning scheduling of benzodiazepines, guidelines for exempting certain preparations, and application of an estimate system to certain scheduled substances.

Scheduling of benzodiazepines

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in 1983, discussed the advisability, as recommended by WHO, of scheduling (listing) 26 benzodiazepines under Schedule IV—one of four categories of control—of the 1971 Convention. The Commission recognized that many of the substances were already under various forms of national control, but there were differing views as to whether placing any of them under international control would make for better control at the national level.

At the request of the United States, the Commission voted individually on the inclusion of each substance in the Schedule, including a roll-call vote on diazepam. When none of the substances received the minimum 20 affirmative votes required under the Convention for inclusion, the Commission, at Malaysia's request, voted on the inclusion of the substances as a whole. That proposal, which was put to a roll-call vote requested by Italy, also failed to receive the minimum affirmative votes.

By a resolution⁽²⁴⁾ on procedures for it to follow in scheduling the benzodiazepines, the Commission requested WHO, among other things, to review and assess all benzodiazepines on the market as well as amphetamine-type stimulant substances and barbiturates and non-barbiturate sedative-hypnotics, and to provide the Secretary-General with its findings and recommendations.

Guidelines for exemptions

The Commission, having discussed WHO recommendations on establishing guidelines for exempting preparations under article 3 of the Convention, requested the Secretariat to continue reviewing the criteria and guidelines as submitted by WHO and to prepare a refined set for the Commission's consideration and adoption at its next session.⁽²⁵⁾

Reporting procedures

The Commission, by a resolution⁽²⁶⁾ dealing with the application of an estimate system to substances in Schedule II of the 1971 Convention, invited the States parties to that instrument to consider the appropriateness of amending the Convention by introducing a system similar to that used for narcotic drugs under the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol.

In making the recommendation, the Commission noted the 1982 conclusions of an expert group on the functioning, adequacy and enhancement of the 1971 Convention⁽²⁷⁾—that the time was ripe for instituting obligatory reporting to INCB of estimated requirements of the scheduled substances to enable it to monitor their manufacture, import and export.

Periodicity of Commission sessions

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs,⁽¹⁾ at its 1983 session, urged the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Commission to hold a five-day special session in 1984 to fulfil its treaty obligations and deal with other urgent matters. It also proposed a provisional agenda for the special session.

The Council, having deferred action on the subject in May 1983 until its second regular session of the year, adopted decision 1983/184 on 29 July, by section IV of which it authorized the Commission to hold the eighth (1984) special session, approved the provisional agenda for that session, and recommended that the Commission should, in the future, adhere to the established biennial cycle of meetings. The Commission, at its seventh (1982) special session⁽²⁸⁾ had requested authorization to meet annually in a regular session of no fewer than eight working days, asserting that it had found it necessary to meet annually in regular and special sessions since 1946 (except for 1967 and 1972).

Chapter XXIII

Statistics

In 1983, the Statistical Commission (twenty-second session, New York, 7-16 March) reviewed the developments, since it last met in 1981, in various fields of economic, social and demographic statistics.

The Statistical Office of the United Nations continued to collect and publish a wide range of statistical data, including those on international trade, industry, transport, energy, national accounts and population.

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1983/119, authorized the Commission to hold its twenty-third session in 1985.

Economic statisticsEnergy statistics

The first edition of a new recurrent publication—Energy Balances 1977-1980 and Electricity Profiles 1976-1981 for Selected Developing Countries and Areas⁽¹⁾—issued in 1983, contained information on energy balances for 26 developing countries and areas, and showed, for the first time, energy flows from the primary source to final consumption; it also presented electricity profiles for 68 developing countries and areas. In view of the special relevance of energy statistics to developing countries, the Statistical Commission, at its 1983 session⁽²⁾ agreed that further methodological work should be carried out in that field.

The programme in statistics on new and renewable sources of energy focused in 1983 on assessment of current and planned statistical activities in countries and in international or intergovernmental organizations. The data base on those sources of energy was improved and expanded to include information such as alcohol, vegetable and animal waste, as well as average conversion factors.

Environment statistics

Noting the progress made in the development of methodology for environment statistics, the Statistical Commission, at its 1983 session⁽²⁾ expressed regret over the termination as of January 1983 of financial support for that work by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP). The Commission requested the Secretariat to continue its methodology work on environment statistics and to promote the results through workshops, seminars and country studies.

The Statistical Office sponsored, together with UNEP, a workshop on natural resources and environment statistics (Abidjan, Ivory Coast, 21-26 November). A Directory of Environment Statistics⁽³⁾ was published, while draft guidelines for freshwater statistics were prepared and reviewed by an expert group (New York, 5-9 December).

Industrial statistics

An updated version⁽⁴⁾ of the 1968 International Recommendations for Industrial Statistics⁽⁵⁾ dealing with methods for conducting industrial surveys, was issued in 1983, as suggested by the Statistical Commission⁽²⁾ earlier in the year. A Group of Experts on the Standardization of Definitions and Terminology for Statistics on Mineral Production and Consumption (New York, 11-19 January), meeting in pursuance of a 1979 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽⁶⁾ made recommendations concerning the range of minerals covered by the Statistical Office, mineral consumption statistics, raw material balances and the secondary recovery of metals. Another group of experts (New York, 12-16 December) reviewed draft recommendations for a statistical programme for household and small-scale industries.

National accounts and balances

The Statistical Commission, at its 1983 session⁽²⁾ expressed continued support for the revision of the United Nations System of National Accounts (SNA), a task which it agreed should be completed by 1990. It emphasized that what was required was clarification and harmonization of SNA with related statistical systems, rather than its modification or extension, and welcomed the establishment of an intersecretariat working group—involving the United Nations Statistical Office, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and the European Economic Community—which would plan an overall work programme for SNA revision.

As regards the System of Balances of the National Economy (MPS), the Commission agreed that priority should be given to revising the methodology of intersystem comparisons published by the United Nations in 1977.⁽⁷⁾ The Commission also favoured the revision of the SNA/MPS glossary, as well as continuing work on total consumption of the population, on capital formation flows and on the adaptation of the system of indicators of non-material services, which had been developed by the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance for intersystem comparisons.

Price statistics

The Statistical Commission, at its 1983 session⁽²⁾ requested the United Nations Statistical Office to continue co-ordinating and producing world-wide comparisons in price statistics (used for assessing the relative economic development of countries) under the International Comparison Project (ICP), and to convene a meeting to complete phase IV of the Project. The Commission endorsed the division of responsibilities between the Statistical Office and the regional commissions, stating that the Statistical Office should play a co-ordinating role and carry out methodological work and analysis on a world-wide basis, while the regional commissions should carry out data collection and adjustments and take account of practical elements of the comparison (see also Chapter VIII of this section).

The Statistical Office computed purchasing power parities linking six main groups of countries. The inter-organizational group on ICP, meeting in June and November, discussed phases IV and V of the Project, and draft chapters were prepared for a manual on ICP.

The Commission decided that the inter-agency price statistics programme should be assigned low priority in view of limited resources.

Trade and shipping statistics

The Commission examined at its 1983 session⁽²⁾ the third revision prepared by the Statistical Office of the Standard International Trade Classification (SITC), which provided a detailed list of goods moving in international trade, classified in internationally comparable categories, for customs, transport, statistics and other purposes. The Commission requested the Statistical Office to undertake further work on the third revision, bearing in mind the need for harmonization with the International Standard Industrial Classification (ISIC) and with the Integrated System of Classifications of Activities and Products (known as ISCAP or SINAP), while maintaining the character and structure of SITC.

The Commission agreed that further methodological work should be carried out in shipping statistics, which it considered to be of special relevance and interest to developing countries.

International/ economic classifications

The Commission endorsed the continuing work of the Statistical Office towards harmonization of international economic classifications. It reviewed a progress report of the Secretary-General on the topic⁽⁸⁾ and requested that a draft of the proposed revised International Standard Industrial Classification (ISIC) covering transportable goods-producing activities and a draft of the proposed combined trade/production goods classification should be submitted to the Commission in 1985. The basis for harmonization was formed by ISCAP or SINAP. Draft proposals for SINAP categories of activities and transportable goods were prepared and revised. First drafts of the partial revision of ISIC were prepared.

The fourth session of the Joint Working Group on World Level Classifications, of the United Nations Statistical Office and the Statistical Office of the European Communities, was held in Luxembourg from 16 to 20 May 1983. An expert group on harmonization of international economic classifications met in New York from 12 to 16 December.

Social and demographic statistics

The Statistical Commission, at its 1983 session,⁽²⁾ expressed support for the continuing work of the Statistical Office in demographic and social statistics. It requested the Secretary-General to revise and expand the information contained in a progress report on population and housing censuses⁽⁹⁾ and to keep abreast of national and international work on social statistics and indicators.

An expert group meeting (New York, 5-9 December) discussed a draft of the Handbook of Vital Statistics Systems and Methods, while another meeting (New York, 11-15 April), held in co-operation with the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, discussed the development of statistics and indicators on the situation of women (see also Chapter XIX of this section). Reports and working papers were issued on the use of population and housing censuses as single-source, multi-subject data bases; population census cost and staffing requirements; development of statistics on disabled persons; integration of social, demographic and related economic statistics; and social indicators.

A revised edition of the Handbook of Household Surveys⁽¹⁰⁾ was issued, and data compilation was completed for the Compendium of Human Settlements Statistics,

National Household Survey Capability Programme

The Statistical Commission noted in 1983⁽²⁾ the considerable progress made in implementing the National Household Survey Capability Programme (NHSCP), a technical co-operation project bringing together national donors and international agencies to assist developing countries in producing socio-economic and demographic statistics needed for their development plans. Recommending that high priority be given to the implementation of country projects, the Commission emphasized the urgency of securing financial support from donor agencies for country programmes, and stressed the importance of continued co-ordination within the United Nations system, as well as with other multilateral and bilateral agencies, in the Programme's execution. As at the end of 1983, 43 countries had officially invited project formulation missions in NHSCP, and project proposals for all of them had been formulated; 34 of those proposals had been approved by the Governments concerned and submitted to interested donor agencies for funding.

Living Standards Measurement Study

In discussing the Living Standards Measurement Study (LSMS)—aimed at identifying ways for Governments to monitor progress in raising living standards—the Statistical Commission, at its 1983 session⁽²⁾ endorsed an integrated approach to data collection and analysis designed to provide a conceptual framework for bringing together micro- and macro-data by relating the results of household sample surveys to national accounts statistics. It welcomed the initiative of the World Bank in launching LSMS, emphasized the need for continued co-ordination with NHSCP, and encouraged the Bank to test LSMS methodologies in different developing countries in the light of their needs and capabilities.

Other statistical activities

Technical co-operation

During 1983, the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, in co-operation with the Statistical Office, supported country projects in statistics at a cost of $13.5 million. These comprised 80 projects in demographic statistics/population censuses, 14 in vital registration, 40 in statistical organization/multi-sector statistics, 10 in economic statistics and national accounts, 18 in data processing and 4 miscellaneous.

The first edition of the Directory of Technical Co-operation in Statistics was published⁽¹²⁾ and the Statistical Commission suggested that an annual update be prepared in a simpler form on a timely basis. Software packages, supplied by a project supported by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, were installed for a variety of small and large computers in 37 developing countries, and training arrangements were made for fellows from 15 countries in the use of statistical and various demographic analysis packages for processing census and survey data.

A May 1982 report of the Secretary-General on technical co-operation in statistics⁽⁷⁾ submitted to the Commission at its 1983 session⁽²⁾ contained information on such programmes during 1979-1982.

Administrative records

Concerning national administrative record systems—which provided vast amounts of information on enterprises and individuals—the Statistical Commission endorsed in broad terms the proposals for further work at the national level, as presented to it by the Secretary-General in an August 1982 report⁽¹⁴⁾. The report contained summary information on the experience of Canada, France, Israel, the Netherlands and the United States; discussed a number of issues, including increasing accessibility to such records as a result of technological developments; and offered proposals for further work at the national and international level.

The Commission considered that administrative records were not a suitable subject for general treatment at the international level, except for some specific kinds usable for methodological research, such as customs data and taxation and population registers.

Information technology

At its 1983 session⁽²⁾ the Statistical Commission discussed the impact of technological innovations on statistical systems, focusing on such issues as the role of meta-data systems for information co-ordination and computerization, the needs of end-users, the exchange of machine-readable data between countries and international agencies, and the selection of technology appropriate to a country's level of statistical development. Among the documentation considered was a September 1982 report of the Secretary-General on implications of new developments in information technology⁽¹⁵⁾ which outlined relevant developments in computer hardware and software, and assessed current trends and future possibilities.

The Commission agreed on the need for the Statistical Office to give more attention to disseminating generalized statistical software suitable for use on mini- and micro-computers, to assist developing countries. It urged the Office not to expend resources in work towards a global statistical network but to pursue a co-ordinated linking of the data bases of international statistical agencies.

Work programme of the Statistical Office

The Statistical Commission, at its 1983 session⁽²⁾ approved the work programme of the Statistical Office for 1984-1985, giving highest priority to the development of SNA and its linkage with MPS, and of concepts, classifications and methods for international trade, transport and related statistics.

Regarding a publication policy for statistics, the Commission endorsed the relevant activities of the Statistical Office, and decided to consider the matter in 1985 on the basis of a comprehensive report to be prepared by that Office.

Co-ordination in the UN system

In 1983, the Statistical Commission endorsed the approach to data collection outlined in a report of the Secretary-General on the co-ordination and integration of international statistical programmes,⁽¹⁶⁾ and asked that special attention be given to reviewing new ad hoc questionnaires for maximizing the use of the data already collected and for limiting the burden on respondents.

The Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities, of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, at its seventeenth session (Paris, 6-10 June 1983) decided that its members should exchange information on how to measure the informal sector, and agreed that co-ordination was needed on social statistics and indicators, especially in relation to the requirements under the major international strategies and plans of action in the social field. It also reviewed co-ordination of statistics on the environment, migration, women, nutrition, urban poverty, tourism and international trade and transport, industrial and energy data, and price statistics, as well as progress on NHSCP and LSMS.

In pursuance of Economic and Social Council decision 1983/119 of May 1983 (see below), the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination held its tenth session at Geneva from 26 to 28 September.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Working Group reviewed the statistical programmes of international organizations, discussed special topics for possible consideration by the Statistical Commission, and considered the co-ordination of statistical data-collection activities.

In May 1983, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted without vote decision 1983/119.

Institutional arrangements

In 1983, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) continued their efforts to harmonize the programme activities of the organizations of the United Nations system. Highlights of those efforts included a review of a cross-organizational programme analysis in marine affairs, an evaluation of the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) in manufactures, and a review of the programme aspects of the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1984-1985. Reviews of the organizations' medium-term plans in selected sectors—food and agriculture, and population—were begun in 1983. Joint Meetings of ACC and CPC centred on economic and technical co-operation among developing countries. Ways of improving the functioning of the Meetings were also pursued.

On the recommendation of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs), the Economic and Social Council granted consultative status to 40 additional NGOs. A report on prospects for co-operation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation, an intergovernmental organization, was noted by the Council and the General Assembly.

Consultations continued on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system. Aspects discussed concerned the Council's revitalization, including enlarging its membership, rationalizing its calendar of meetings, and limiting documentation; restructuring issues relating to the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA) of the United Nations Secretariat, on which the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) made recommendations; and rationalizing the work of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee and Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, on which the Council and the Assembly made a series of recommendations.

Co-ordination in the UN systemACC activities

In 1983, as in previous years, ACC held a general discussion on development and international economic co-operation in keeping with its objective of assisting Governments. It assisted in a comprehensive policy review of operational activities of the United Nations system and considered the question of strengthening the system's capacity to respond to natural disasters and disaster situations. ACC reviewed the state of implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s), through one of its task forces; the Strategy's implementation system-wide in respect of the environment; and the existing arrangements for inter-agency collaboration at the country level, including arrangements for resident co-ordinators. It also reviewed cross-organizational programme analyses and noted a new series of cross-sectoral reviews of selected sectors in the medium-term plans of United Nations organizations (see below). ACC also acted to strengthen the co-ordination of United Nations information systems, and revised procedures for prior consultations on programme planning documents.⁽¹⁾

Intensive joint programming was pursued regarding primary health care; aging; research and training in energy assessment, planning and utilization; and energy information systems. Joint programming was also promoted in other areas, such as disarmament and development, science and technology for development, environment, and preparation and support for international conferences (on aging, the Palestine question, the United Nations Decade for Women, population) and years (of disabled persons, world communications) and their follow-up. In addition, ACC took up certain administrative issues involved in regulating and co-ordinating the United Nations common system: staff security, methodology and application of current cost-of-living surveys and staff entitlements at hardship duty stations.

ACC described its activities in annual overview reports for 1982/83⁽²⁾ and 1983/84.⁽³⁾ It adopted 18 decisions in 1983—10 at its first regular session (Paris, 30 and 31 March) and 8 at its second (New York, 26 and 27 October). These decisions concerned a number of the aforementioned topics and matters relating to the ACC machinery; one contained a statement on treaties between States and international organizations or between such organizations. (For details, refer to SUBJECT INDEX or the relevant chapter.)

An organizational session of ACC was held in New York (7-9 February). Its principal subsidiary bodies met during the year as follows:

Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) (Personnel and General Administrative Questions) (fifty-eighth session, Vienna, Austria, 28 February-18 March; fifty-ninth session, London, 11-15 July, and New York, 18-29 July); CCAQ (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (fifty-eighth session, Geneva, 7-11 March; fifty-ninth session, New York, 12-16 September); Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (CCSQ) (Operational Activities) (first regular session, Geneva, 4-9 March; second regular session, New York, 3-6 October); Joint Meeting of CCSQ (Programme Matters) and CCSQ (Operational Activities) (Geneva, 9 March); CCSQ (Programme Matters) (first regular session, Geneva, 10-15 March; second regular session, New York, 7-13 October). The ACC Organizational Committee met at Geneva, 16-18 and 31 March, and 4 July; and New York, 14-18 October.

ACC bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Ad hoc inter-agency meeting on preparations for the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, Geneva, 19 and 20 January and 30 and 31 May; ad hoc inter-agency meeting on security matters, Geneva, 24 and 25 January; Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, fourth session, Geneva, 26-28 January; ad hoc inter-agency consultations on the cross-organizational programme analysis on human settlements, Geneva, 2 and 3 February; inter-agency meeting to review the cross-organizational programme analysis of the marine affairs activities of the United Nations system, New York, 2-4 February; Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, first and second sessions, New York, 17 and 18 February and 19-28 April; ad hoc meeting on co-ordination in matters of international drug control, Vienna, 17 and 18 February, and Geneva, 8-10 August; inter-agency meeting on follow-up to the World Assembly on Aging, Vienna, 17 and 18 February; inter-agency meeting on the preparations for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (1985), Vienna, 21 and 22 February; inter-agency consultation on follow-up of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, Geneva, 1 and 2 March; Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives, eleventh and twelfth sessions, Geneva, 2-4 March, and New York, 10-12 October (a technical working group met at Vienna in July, and a technical energy group met in New York in September), and joint meeting with CCSQ (Programme Matters), New York, 13 October; Joint United Nations Information

Committee, special session, Geneva, 7-9 March, and tenth session, Vienna, 19-22 April; Sub-Committee on Nutrition and its Advisory Group on Nutrition, ninth session, Copenhagen, Denmark, 7-11 March; Task Force on Rural Development, eleventh meeting, Rome, Italy, 11-13 April; inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, Geneva, 30 and 31 May; Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities, seventeenth session, Paris, 6-10 June; Ad Hoc Task Force on the International Conference on Population (1984), second meeting, Geneva, 15-20 September; Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems, first session, Geneva, 22 and 23 September; inter-agency meeting on outer space activities, Geneva, 4-6 October; Inter-Secretariat Group for Water, fourth session, Rome, 5-9 December.

Following consideration of the ACC 1982/83 annual overview report⁽²⁾ on 31 May and 1 June, CPC recommended that future reports should emphasize action required from United Nations organizations, rather than from member States, and contain more information on programme management problems, together with proposed solutions. The contributions of organizations to the review process of the Strategy should be consolidated into a synthesized analysis; and an abstract of a survey of their objectives and plans should be submitted to CPC in 1984.

CPC welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to rationalize the work of ACC and to prevent proliferation of its subsidiary machinery.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/175.

- (a) Annual overview report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination for 1982/83;
- (b) Report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the strengthening of the co-ordination of information systems in the United Nations system;
- (c) Report of the Secretary-General on the implications of declaring an international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources for food and agriculture in Africa;

CPC activities

In 1983, CPC met in New York for a series of organizational meetings on 11 and 29 April, and for its twenty-third session, the first part held from 9 May to 4 June, and the second from 29 August to 12 September⁽⁴⁾

At that session, CPC considered an in-depth evaluation of the work of the Department of Public Information and reviewed the activities of the Joint United Nations Information Committee (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter X). A summary of an evaluation study of the technical co-operation activities of UNIDO in manufactures was considered, as were elements of the UNIDO work programme for 1984-1985 on which CPC made recommendations (see Chapter VI of this section). CPC followed up on implementation of its 1982 recommendations on the mineral resources, programme and examined a cross-organizational programme analysis in marine affairs (see Chapter IX of this section). Special attention was given to the evaluation of the performance of the Information Systems Unit in DIESA, especially in terms of its coverage of and services to the regional commissions (see below), and to co-ordination of food and agriculture activities of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) (see Chapter VIII of this section).

Examination of the programme aspects of the substantive sections of the proposed programme budget for the 1984-1985 biennium, as well as of its foreword and introduction made up the bulk of CPC's work. The Committee also considered various aspects of programme planning, budgeting and evaluation, including proposed rules for planning, changes in the medium-term plan for 1984-1989, statements of programme budget implications for proposed new activities, and institutional arrangements for evaluation within the Secretariat (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter II).

Two ACC reports, on strengthening the co-ordination of United Nations information systems (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV) and on the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC (see below), were also examined, in addition to the 1982/83 ACC annual report (see above).

Owing to a delay in the issuance of parts of the proposed 1984-1985 programme budget, the CPC's work was seriously affected. Therefore, on 25 May 1983, it recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize a resumed session, in August/September. This decision, taken after the Secretariat advised that the costs could be absorbed within existing resources, was conveyed by the Chairman to the Council President on 26 May.⁽⁵⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On an oral proposal by its President, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/160 without vote.

Resumed twenty-third session of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council decided:

- (a) To authorize the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, on an exceptional basis, to hold a resumed session from 29 August to 9 September 1983;
- (b) Further, to authorize the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to submit the second part of its report, on its resumed twenty-third session, directly to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session.

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-fourth session on questions raised at its twenty-third session concerning the various programme elements, in order to enable the Committee to review the issues relating to the avoidance of duplication and the achievement of a more rational organization of the work programme of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in anticipation of the conversion of that organization to specialized agency status.

ordination; and rationalizing the current support structure, including the possibility of setting up a small CPC secretariat.

Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC

CPC and ACC held the eighteenth in their series of Joint Meetings at Geneva on 4 and 5 July 1983.⁽⁶⁾ In accordance with decisions taken by CPC at the first part of its 1983 session, the Meetings were devoted primarily to an examination of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries (see Chapter I of this section). Ways of improving the effectiveness of the Meetings were also examined, in particular the need for an earlier decision on topics for discussion, a better structuring of the Meetings and follow-up of their conclusions.

Unable to give exhaustive treatment to the primary topic, the Joint Meetings agreed to take it up at a future date, based on its consideration by ACC and CPC, at their respective next meetings during the year, and on a review to be conducted by United Nations organizations of their work in this area.

As to improving the functioning of the Joint Meetings, it was agreed that at least six months should, elapse between the selection of a topic for discussion and the date of the Meetings, to allow identification of the crucial issues for debate and preparation of proper documentation. It was further agreed that a systematic follow-up of recommendations be made to ensure their translation into action.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1983/50 of 28 July on the 1983 Joint Meetings, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the cross-organizational programme analysis of United Nations activities in economic and technical co-operation, scheduled for review in 1985, take account of the system-wide support towards implementation of the Caracas Programme of Action (adopted by a 1981 High Level Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries convened by the Group of 77 developing countries).⁽⁷⁾ The Council recommended that the initial report on the analysis requested by CPC be submitted through CPC to the General Assembly in 1984.

On the same date, the Council, acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted decision 1983/173.

Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 28 July 1983, the Council, recalling General Assembly resolution 34/214 of 19 December 1979, paragraph (c) of Council decision 1979/67 of 3 August 1979 and Council decision 1980/185 of 25 July 1980 regarding the improvement of communication between the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and intergovernmental bodies, decided to review, at its organizational session for 1984, the functioning of the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, and to request the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, at its resumed twenty-third session, and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, at its second regular session of 1983, to submit their comments in this regard to the Council at its organizational session for 1984.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/173

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/120) without vote, 22 July (meeting 16); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1983/C.3/L.13), based on informal consultations; agenda item 19.

Meeting number. ESC 40.

CPC action. Responding to the Council's request of 28 July, CPC, at the second part of its 1983 session, considered the question of improving the effectiveness of the Joint Meetings.

CPC concluded that the agenda be agreed on at least six months in advance and, if possible, decided on at the previous year's Meetings. The subject of a cross-organizational analysis on the CPC agenda, if one of system-wide concern, should be included in the Meeting's agenda for the same year. At each series of Joint Meetings, ACC should report on measures taken in response to the previous Meetings' recommendations and adequate time should be provided for a complete discussion of such report. CPC also recommended that documents of ACC and its subsidiary bodies be made available to Member States on request.

ACC action. At its October 1983 session, ACC adopted a statement⁽⁸⁾ by which it supported the CPC recommendation for an early agreement on the agenda to ensure adequate preparation. It recommended that specific questions be identified and topics defined, to provide a clear focus for discussion. ACC suggested that the Meetings might more usefully explore issues of overall co-ordination and co-operation, rather than examine programmes in detail, a function better served in other forums. An outline of themes for discussion, using the relevant cross-organizational analyses as background, would enhance dialogue on issues of system-wide concern. As to the discussion format, "set-piece" presentation should be avoided in favour of exchanges of views. Response to the Meetings' recommendations could be reported on by the ACC Chairman in his introductory statement, leaving open possible further discussion. To improve on full access to its reports and those of its subsidiary machinery, already provided by existing arrangements, ACC would annex a list of such documents to its annual overview report.

Cross-organizational programme analyses

In its annual report for 1982/83,⁽²⁾ ACC noted that the final draft of a cross-organizational programme analysis in marine affairs was reviewed by an ad hoc inter-agency meeting in February 1983. The Secretary-General submitted a report on the analysis to CPC at its 1983 session (see Chapter IX of this section), as well as a report on co-ordination of ESCAP and FAO activities in food and agriculture in Asia and the Pacific (see Chapter VIII of this section). In preparation for a cross-organizational analysis of human settlements activities, a note outlining the current distribution of such activities was presented to the Commission on Human Settlements for review during the year (see Chapter XVII of this section). ACC had carried out an overall review of results, methodology, effectiveness and evolution of cross-organizational programme analyses since their inception, aimed at making them more useful instruments of programming and co-ordination.

At the first part of its 1983 session⁽⁴⁾ CPC recommended that future cross-organizational programme analyses should bear closer relationship to programme planning, monitoring and evaluation. Suggested areas for analyses, to be presented to CPC in 1984, should take into account the feasibility of scheduling simultaneous consideration of evaluations, analyses and plan reviews on the same subject. Also, the Secretariat should continue to seek the views of States on priorities for action when undertaking an analysis.

These recommendations were endorsed by the General Assembly on 20 December, in resolution 38/227 B, in which it also requested the Economic and Social Council and CPC to review in 1984 an initial report on the cross-organizational analysis of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

Medium-term plans

In 1983, a series of cross-sectoral reviews of selected major issues in the medium-term plans of organizations in the United Nations system was initiated. The first two reviews were on food and agriculture, and population, on which the Secretary-General reported to the Economic and Social Council at its July 1983 session (see Chapters IX and XIV of this section). This was in keeping with both a July 1982 Council resolution⁽⁹⁾ by which it decided to review, every six years, selected major issues in the organizations' proposed medium-term plans, and with the Council's work programme for 1983-1984 (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/78 on 29 July 1983. Prior to adoption, the President stated that the purpose of the resolution was to clarify the nature of the cross-sectoral reviews called for by the 1982 Council resolution.⁽⁹⁾ The Committee had approved the text on the understanding that the future reviews would be described as "cross-organizational", instead of "cross-sectoral".

This resolution was endorsed by the General Assembly on 20 December, in resolution 38/227 B.

Cross-organizational review of selected major sectors in the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Conscious of its role in co-ordinating the economic and social activities of the United Nations system under the Charter of the United Nations and relevant General Assembly resolutions, particularly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977,

Recalling its resolution 1982/50 of 28 July 1982 on the revitalization of the Council, and recognizing the need to clarify the nature of the reviews provided for in paragraph 1 (f) of that resolution,

1. Decides to review, starting in 1985, on a biennial basis, one or more major sectors, taking account of the medium-term plans of, or equivalent documents and information from, the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system;

2. Further decides, in order to allow sufficient lead time for the preparation of documents and necessary financial data, to select the sector or sectors for review in 1985 at its organizational session for 1984, and to follow the same procedure for future reviews, taking into account the topics for cross-organizational programme analyses selected for review by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in the respective years;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to include in future reports specific conclusions and recommendations, based on an analytical assessment of the activities and programmes of the United Nations system in the selected sectors, in order to enable the Council to enhance its role in co-ordinating the activities and programmes of the system in the economic and social sectors.

Economic and Social Council

Proposed organizational change

Pursuant to a July 1982 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽⁷⁾ the President gave an oral report to the Council on 22 July 1983 on consultations he had undertaken in preparation for the General Assembly's consideration in 1984 of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system. The consultations had been held with various heads of delegations or group spokesmen, beginning with representatives of the five permanent members of the Security Council. The report represented the President's assessment of those consultations and included a number of suggestions, some of which he felt would be ripe for action in the near future.

The President stated that the issue of universal membership of the Economic and Social Council had aroused resistance for institutional and practical reasons: it would require an amendment to the Charter of the United Nations, and while the current membership level had been recognized as limiting the use of the Council's machinery, it had been equally recognized as facilitating the negotiating process. No clear view had emerged on the issue of holding special sessions devoted exclusively to certain topics, but it had been strongly felt that, to meet this need, the Council should take advantage of the rule in its rules of procedure providing for such sessions.

Among the suggestions advanced by delegations were: greater use of the Council to alleviate the burden of the Assembly's Second Committee; continuous implementation of the July 1982 Council resolution and the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring⁽²⁾ and also of the December 1982 Assembly resolution on the Organization's work;⁽³⁾ strengthening of the Council's co-ordinating role; examination of the usefulness of closer JIU involvement in that role, as well as of the usefulness of the ACC/CPC Joint Meetings as an instrument of co-ordination; and establishment of an open-ended inter-sessional working group to prepare for the deliberations of the Council on its revitalization.

Other suggestions called for pursuing the direct question-and-answer exchange, such as had taken place at the current session between delegations and the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, and widening its scope to include the heads of specialized agencies; eliminating debates on reports already undertaken by the reporting subsidiary bodies, and the general debate at the second regular session; focusing on selected subjects—leaving political issues to the Assembly—and improving the analytical quality of the relevant documentation; and substantially reducing the number of proposed resolutions and decisions. A renewed examination was recommended of the proposed alternatives to the Council's system of holding a spring session in New York and a summer session at Geneva, notably the proposal for a single annual but longer session to be held in New York or alternately between New York and Geneva. A rationalization of the calendar of meetings of the subsidiary bodies of the Council and those of the Assembly reporting through the Council was also advocated.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted two decisions on the issue of its revitalization: 1983/165, taking note of the President's oral presentation; and 1983/181, requesting him to continue informal consultations.

The Council adopted decision 1983/165 without vote.

Oral report by the President on the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 22 July 1983, the Council took note of the oral report on the revitalization of the Council made by the President in pursuance of Council resolution 1982/50 of 28 July 1982.

Revitalization of the Economic and Social Council

At its 41st plenary meeting, on 29 July 1983, the Council, bearing in mind the oral report made by the President at its second regular session of 1983, in pursuance of Council resolution 1982/50 of 28 July 1982, decided to request the President to continue his informal consultations with delegations on the question of the revitalization of the Council, and to report to it thereon in 1984.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/181

Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1983/L41), based on informal consultations; agenda item 4.
Meeting numbers. ESC 39, 41.

Prior to adopting decision 1983/181, the Council adopted, by a roll-call vote of 30 to 11, with 9 abstentions, a motion by Tunisia not to take action on a revised draft decision introduced by Mexico⁽⁴⁾. By that text, the Council would have requested a report from the Secretary-General on the practical implications of the alternative formats of Council meetings, as orally presented by the President, for its consideration in 1984.

Co-operation with other organizations

Non-governmental organizations

The Economic and Social Council's Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations met three times in 1983—in New York between 7 and 18 February⁽⁵⁾ and on 3 May,⁽⁶⁾ and at Geneva on 7 July⁽⁷⁾

In February, the Committee reviewed applications from NGOs for consultative status with the Council, recommending 24 of them for category II consultative status and 16 for the Roster. The reclassification of one organization from the Roster to category II and the withdrawal of consultative status from another were also recommended.

Owing to lack of time, the Committee deferred consideration of the quadrennial reports submitted by 20 NGOs in categories I and II on their United Nations-related activities during 1978-1981,⁽⁸⁾ as well as action concerning those that had failed to submit such reports.

In May and July, the Committee heard requests from NGOs with consultative status to address the Council or its committees in connection with items on the Council's agenda. Four organizations in category I and one in category II were recommended to be heard at the Council's May session, and nine in Category I at its July session. In connection with these hearings, the Council received statements submitted in 1983 by seven NGOs⁽⁹⁾ concerning specific areas of its work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, on the recommendation of the Committee on NGOs, the Economic and Social Council adopted two decisions concerning the consultative status of NGOs.

Decision 1983/109 was adopted without vote.

 Meeting numbers. ESC 4, 5.

As a result of the Council's decisions and other additions to the Roster, the number of NGOs in consultative status with the Council rose to 692 during the year (see list below).⁽¹⁰⁾ They were divided into three groups: category I, organizations representative of major population segments in a large number of countries, involved with the economic and social life of the areas they represented; category II, international organizations having special competence in a few of the Council's areas of activity; and organizations on the Roster, considered able to make occasional and useful contributions to the Council's work.

On 26 May 1983, the Council, in resolution 1983/28, requested the Secretary-General, the regional commissions and Governments to invite interested NGOs in consultative status with the Council to participate in preparations for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, scheduled for 1985.

Calendar of meetings

At its February 1983 meetings⁽⁵⁾ the Committee on NGOs was unable to reach a decision on the applications for consultative status or for reclassification from a number of NGOs, nor was it able to consider applications from 24 others for lack of time. Noting that it would not be able to reconsider these applications until its next biennial session in 1985—thereby depriving the United Nations of the expertise of the organizations concerned—the Committee requested that it be reconvened by the Economic and Social Council, as soon as possible for a period not exceeding one week, in order to complete its work, provided the costs involved were borne by existing resources. A draft text to that effect was submitted to the Council by Kenya⁽¹¹⁾ A draft by France, proposing a yearly eight-day session instead of the current two-week session every two years, was not put forward.⁽¹²⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Council's action was embodied in decision 1983/108, adopted without vote in May.

Reconvening of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations

At its 5th plenary meeting, on 12 May 1983, the Council decided to defer consideration of the draft decision entitled "Reconvening of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations" until its second regular session of 1983 in the context of its consideration of the item entitled "Calendar of conferences".

By section I of the same decision, the Council decided to maintain, for a further period of two years, discontinuance of summary records for a number of its subsidiary bodies, including the Committee on NGOs.

Intergovernmental organizations

Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation

In response to a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁴⁾ to the July session of the Economic and Social Council, detailing the areas of co-operation envisaged by the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation with the United Nations.

The Secretary-General pointed out that, in 1981, the Agency and UNIDO had jointly explored possible collaboration. Since then, UNIDO had provided technical support for the preparation of several Agency seminars on such topics as the creation of enterprises, evaluation and preparation of industrial projects and advanced training of management advisers for small and medium-sized industry. In March 1983, following discussions on prospects for joint activities for 1984-1985, the two organizations agreed to give priority to regional, subregional and interregional projects. The modalities of co-operation could take the form of joint activities, sub-contracting by one organization on behalf of the other and co-ordinated implementation.

The Agency had held a meeting in 1982 with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on research projects in the Indian Ocean. Its consultations with the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD) had resulted in a list of projects for possible co-financing. The Agency would consider financial support for training seminars at the UNFSSTD-backed African Regional Centre for Technology at Dakar, Senegal. Consultations with the United Nations Development Programme had led to some 20 specific projects—ranging from water resources to soil conservation and telecommunications—that could be carried out by the Agency through technical or financial support. Other possible areas of co-operation with the United Nations system were in activities relating to the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990); the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace (1985); and the United Nations Children's Fund.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In decision 1983/175 of 28 July 1983, the Economic and Social Council took note of, among other reports, that of the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/431 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation.

with Intergovernmental Agencies

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 4 February 1983, the Economic and Social Council agreed to reconstitute the Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies (see Chapter XXIV of this section and also APPENDIX III), to prepare a relationship agreement between the United Nations and UNIDO as a specialized agency.

Work programme for 1983-1984

At its 1983 organizational session, held in New York from 1 to 4 February, the Economic and Social Council considered the draft basic programme of work for 1983-1984 submitted by the Secretary-General⁽¹⁵⁾ and a draft text based on informal consultations on the draft work programme and submitted by the President on behalf of the Council's Bureau.⁽¹⁶⁾ Following consideration of both documents, the Council, on 4 February, adopted decision 1983/101 without vote.

By that decision, the Council approved its basic work programme for 1983 and allocated the agenda items for consideration at its sessions. It also decided, among other things, to give priority consideration, at its second regular session, to the world economic situation (under the item on international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments) and to operational activities for development. It assigned for cross-sectoral review, at the same session, two issues in the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system—food and agriculture, and population—and decided to transmit certain reports without debate to the General Assembly. The Council also noted a list of questions for inclusion in its work programme for 1984.

The Council held its first regular session in New York, from 3 to 27 May 1983, and its second regular session at Geneva, from 6 to 29 July. The First (Economic) Committee met at both sessions; the Second (Social) Committee met at the first session and the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights met prior to and at that session; and the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee met at the second session.

Discontinuance of summary records, and calendar of conferences and meetings

I

Summary records of subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council

At its 42nd plenary meeting, on 29 July 1983, the Council:

(a) Recalling its resolutions 1979/69 of 2 August 1979 and 1981/83 of 24 July 1981 and its decision 1980/133 of 2 May 1980, decided to maintain, for a further period of two years, the discontinuance of the provision of summary records for the following subsidiary bodies:

- Commission on Transnational Corporations;

(b) Recalling also its decision 1982/105 of 4 February 1982, decided to maintain, for a further period of two years, the discontinuance of the provision of summary records for its sessional committees (First (Economic) Committee, Second (Social) Committee and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee), and to list the participants in the general discussion held on each agenda item in the report of the Council to the General Assembly, starting in 1984.

II

Calendar of conferences and meetings for 1984 and 1985

At the same meeting, the Council, recalling paragraph 2 (i) of its decision 1983/101 of 4 February 1983, and having considered the views expressed by the Human Rights Committee and the letter dated 5 July 1983 from the President of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its sixth session to the President of the Economic and Social Council, decided:

(a) To request the General Assembly, at its thirty-eighth session, in the context of its consideration of the agenda item entitled "Pattern of conferences", to consider, in accordance with paragraph 2 (i) of Council decision 1983/101, the possibility of scheduling the meetings of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women so that, starting in 1984, the reports of those Committees can be submitted to the Assembly through the Council at its first regular session, and the possibility of scheduling the meetings of the Trade and Development Board so that, starting in 1984, its report can be submitted to the Assembly through the Council at its second regular session;

(b) To request the General Assembly also to consider the possibility of scheduling the tenth and eleventh sessions of the World Food Council and the thirty-first and thirty-second sessions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, with a view to ensuring the timely distribution of the reports of those bodies for consideration by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session;

III

Scheduling of the annual sessions of the Commission on Human Rights

At the same meeting, the Council, recalling its decisions 1982/145 of 7 May 1982 and 1982/156 of 28 July 1982, and having considered the request made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1982/40 of 11 March 1982, concerning the possibility of rescheduling the annual sessions of the Commission and, if necessary, of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, with a view to enabling the Commission to meet later in the year, decided to continue for the time being the existing pattern of scheduling the annual sessions of the Commission.

IV

Eighth special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs

At the same meeting, the Council, having considered the recommendations made by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, both at its seventh special session and at its thirtieth session, decided:

(a) To authorize the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to hold, on an exceptional basis, a special session of five days' duration in 1984, at a time when it will not overlap with other meetings, within existing United Nations resources;

(b) To approve the provisional agenda and documentation for that session, as proposed by the Commission at its thirtieth session;

(c) To recommend that the Commission should, in the future, pursuant to Council resolution 1768(LIV) of 18 May 1973, adhere to the established biennial cycle of meetings.

V

International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade

At the same meeting, the Council decided:

(a) To request the General Assembly, at its thirty-eighth session, to schedule one session of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

(b) To consider the report of the Committee at its second regular session of 1984, together with the contribution of the subsidiary bodies of the Council in their respective sectors in applying the International Development Strategy as the policy framework in the formulation and implementation of their programmes of work and the medium-term plan, pursuant to paragraph 2 (e) and (f) of Council decision 1983/101.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/184

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/119) without vote, 26 July (meeting 18); draft by Council Vice-President IE/1983/C.3/L.12, based on informal consultations, section VI orally revised on proposal by Pakistan, and section I orally amended in Council by Bangladesh, for Group of 77; agenda item 23. Meeting number. ESC 42.

The oral amendment by Bangladesh added to section I, paragraph (b), the decision to list the participants in the discussion on each agenda item in the Council's report to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In decision 38/429 of 19 December 1983, the General Assembly invited the Council to request its subsidiary bodies currently meeting annually to consider adopting, on an experimental basis, a biennial cycle of meetings (see below).

Calendar of meetings for 1984 and 1985

During consideration in July 1983 of the provisional calendar of meetings for 1984 and 1985⁽²⁰⁾ by the Economic and Social Council, a number of States stated their position regarding entries 41, 42 and 51, on each of which a vote had been taken in the Third Committee. These concerned, respectively, the proposed meetings of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) and ESCAP away from their headquarters.

Greece, speaking for the 10 member States of the European Economic Community, felt that, because the meetings would incur additional costs of $584,000 at a time of considerable pressure on the United Nations budget, the proposals should be examined against priority needs. The United States agreed, saying the calendar was already overloaded; hence it had proposed reducing the number of meetings by 10 per cent—a proposal it would repeat in due course. Canada regretted its vote in Committee against those entries but stressed that at issue was the justification, in the current period of austerity, for charging additional costs to the regular budget. Portugal had voted similarly because the budgetary implications of the entries had not been taken into account during the Committee's deliberations.

The USSR said it had not objected to the proposed ECA and ECLA meetings to be held at Conakry (Guinea) and Lima (Peru), since the costs involved might be charged to the regular budget when the host countries were developing countries. On that basis, it had been obliged in Committee to vote against the ESCAP meeting to be held in Tokyo and would do so again when the Assembly's Fifth Committee examined the matter. Japan remarked that to make such distinctions between host countries was dangerous; noting its adherence to a strict budgetary policy, it said it had nevertheless invited ESCAP to hold a session in Tokyo to highlight its support for United Nations activities.

Brazil, India and the Sudan—which had voted for the proposed meetings in Committee—held that, as provided for by a 1976 Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ most regional commission meetings had been held away from their headquarters and that the practice of charging the expenditures incurred to the United Nations regular budget had always enjoyed general approval.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/185 without vote.

Calendar of conferences and meetings for 1984 and 1985

At its 42nd plenary meeting, on 29 July 1983, the Council approved the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1984 and 1985.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/185

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/119) without vote, 26 July (meeting 18); provisional calendar of conference and meetings (E/1983/L20/Add.11, orally revised; agenda item 23).

Financial implications. S-G, E/1983/L37.
Meeting number. ESC 42.

Prior to adopting the calendar of meetings as a whole, the Council, at Japan's request, took separate roll-call votes on each of the three entries in question. The entries were approved as follows: entries 41 and 42, by 39 votes to 10, with 2 abstentions; entry 51, by 34 votes to 15, with 2 abstentions.

Norway, speaking also on behalf of Denmark, said they had been compelled to abstain—in all three votes—because no discussion had been held on the financial implications of the proposed meetings. Explaining their affirmative votes, Bangladesh said it regarded the practice of holding meetings away from headquarters as important and hoped this would be the only time that the issue was put to a vote; Brazil saw no reason to abandon a well-established practice and said that lengthy informal consultations had indeed been held on the issue.

Limitation of documentation

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the question of limitation of documentation, the Economic and Social Council, in July, adopted decision 1983/163 without vote.

Control and limitation of documentation

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 22 July 1983, the Council, recalling the resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council concerning the control and limitation of documentation, decided to request the Secretary-General:

(a) To bring to the attention of intergovernmental and expert bodies, before decisions are adopted, any request for documentation that exceeds the ability of the Secretariat to prepare and process on time and within its approved resources;

(b) To draw the attention of intergovernmental bodies to areas where duplication of documentation is likely to occur and/or where opportunities for integrating or consolidating documents that deal with related or similar themes might exist, with a view to rationalizing documentation.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/163

Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1983/L.39), based on informal consultations; agenda item 4.

Meeting number. ESC 38.

By section I of its decision 1983/184 of 29 July, the Council decided to maintain, for a further period of two years, discontinuance of summary records for the following subsidiary bodies: Commission for Social Development, Commission on Narcotic Drugs, Commission on the Status of Women, Commission on Transnational Corporations, Committee on Natural Resources, Committee on NGOs, CPC, ECA, Economic Commission for Europe, ECLA, ESCAP; and for the Council's First, Second and Third Committees. The Council also decided to list, starting in 1984, the participants in the general discussion held on each agenda item in its report to the Assembly.

Financial implications of resolutions and decisions

In a July 1983 report⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a summary of estimates of programme budget implications of resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1983. The estimated costs for 1982-1983 and 1984-1985, excluding conference servicing, totalled $3,615,600. This figure was subject to change, in the light of a review by the General Assembly to determine how much of the costs might be absorbed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, following consideration of the report and acting without vote on an oral proposal by its President, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1983/188.

Summary of estimates of programme budget implications of resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council during its first and second regular sessions of 1983

At its 42nd plenary meeting, on 29 July 1983, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General containing the summary of estimates of programme budget implications of resolutions and decisions adopted by the Council during its first and second regular sessions of 1983.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As later approved by the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, a net addition of $382,700 was made to the 1984-1985 budget to cover a number of the 1983 Economic and Social Council actions having financial implications. This amount, requested by the Secretary-General in a report revising his initial submission for the budget as a whole⁽²³⁾ was approved by the Fifth Committee on 8 December, on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).⁽²⁴⁾ The financial implications of a number of other items arising from Council resolutions and decisions were dealt with separately by the Fifth Committee when it considered the financial implications of Assembly resolutions on the same topics. Conference servicing costs were also dealt with separately (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

An additional $400,000 attributable to Council actions affecting 1983 expenditures was included in the package of budget revisions approved by the Fifth Committee on 19 December 1983 in connection with the Secretary-General's budget performance report for 1982-1983⁽²⁵⁾ (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the Assembly adopted two decisions on the report: 38/449, taking note of those chapters that had been allocated to the Fifth Committee; and 38/453, taking note of those that had been assigned to plenary meetings.

The Assembly adopted decision 38/449 without vote, on a recommendation of the Fifth Committee.

Organizational structure

In addition to the question of revitalizing the Economic and Social Council (see above), other aspects of the ongoing process of restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, initiated in 1977,⁽¹⁾ were considered in 1983. These concerned the organization of work of the Second and Third Committees of the General Assembly, as well as restructuring issues relating to the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat.

Work organization of the Second and Third Committees of the General Assembly

Second Committee

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

At its July session, the Council considered a set of draft recommendations on the organization of the Second Committee's work, on the basis of which it adopted without vote decision 1983/164.

Recommendations regarding the organization of the work of the Second Committee of the General Assembly

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 22 July 1983, the Council, pursuant to paragraph 6 of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977 and paragraph 1 (b) of Council resolution 1982/50 of 28 July 1982, decided to submit to the General Assembly the following recommendations regarding the organization of the work of the Second Committee of the General Assembly:

I. Structure of the deliberations of the Second Committee

(a) Debates in the Second Committee should be more meaningful, better focused, and action-oriented and should establish a constructive dialogue among delegations and between delegations and executive heads of organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system.

(b) There is general agreement that the debates in the Committee should be better structured. Recent experience has shown that a general debate in the Committee may perhaps be necessary, but that its relationship to the general debate in plenary, on the one hand, and to the discussion of specific issues in the Committee, on the other, should be further clarified. Such a general debate in the Committee should take place during the first two weeks of the session.

(c) Apart from the general debate, the deliberations of the Committee on various questions should be organized around clusters of related issues, focusing on specific reports and proposals submitted. Those deliberations should be as brief and concise as possible.

(d) Statements on behalf of organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should henceforth be made in the context of the deliberations on specific reports and should be circulated in advance. In this context, opportunities should be provided for members of the Committee to exchange views with the executive heads of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system.

II. Organization of the work of the Second Committee

(a) The General Assembly may consider adopting a biennial programme of work for the Second Committee, apart from the general debate, and identifying questions for substantive consideration in alternate years; in other years, the Assembly will be kept informed of progress on such questions.

(b) The subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly in the economic field should ensure that their substantive contributions are made available in time to the Assembly, in the context of its biennial programme of work. Furthermore, those subsidiary bodies may consider adopting, on an experimental basis, a biennial cycle of meetings, in conformity with the biennial programme of work to be established for the Second Committee.

(c) The Economic and Social Council shall continue to assist the Second Committee in the organization of work and documentation, and shall make recommendations in this regard to the General Assembly for its consideration.

(d) In that context, the Council should also identify:

- (i) Those issues on which it would take a final decision, particularly those issues which are considered in depth by its subsidiary bodies and/or those issues which are not included in the agenda of the General Assembly;
- (ii) Those issues which should be transmitted without debate to the Assembly for consideration and decisions;
- (iii) Those issues in respect of which the Council will substantively prepare the work of the Assembly by defining policy matters requiring special attention by the Assembly, and by formulating recommendations for action by the Assembly;

(e) The General Assembly may wish to consider making arrangements to have members of the Bureau of the Second Committee informally agreed upon at least two weeks before the beginning of the work of the Committee, so as to enable them, in consultation with Member States, to begin the preparation of the work of the Committee.

III. Deadlines for the submission of draft proposals, and consideration thereof by the Second Committee

(a) The Second Committee, in organizing its work, should identify issues which would require lengthy informal consultations, and should, to the extent possible, spread the consideration of those issues evenly throughout the session.

(b) The deadline for the submission of draft proposals under various items of the agenda should be established when the Second Committee approves its organization of work. Greater efforts should be made to adhere to the deadlines. To this end, the Chairman of the Committee should play an active role, in consultation with delegations, in ensuring the observance of deadlines.

(c) Efforts should be made to keep to a minimum the number of draft proposals under each item. To the extent possible, the Committee should endeavour to adopt only one draft resolution or decision on each specific issue before it.

(d) Draft resolutions should be concise and should concentrate on policy recommendations addressed to Member States and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system.

(e) Informal consultations on draft proposals have proved to be a useful procedure to expedite the work of the Second Committee. Further efforts should be made to improve the working methods and procedures of such informal consultations, including, to the extent possible, the establishment of a weekly programme of work for those consultations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/429 without vote.

Rationalization of the work of the Second Committee

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee:

(a) Endorsed the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council regarding the organization of the work of the Second Committee of the General Assembly, as contained in Council decision 1983/164 of 22 July 1983;

(b) Decided to adopt, beginning at its fortieth session, a biennial programme of work for the Second Committee, apart from its general debate;

(c) Requested the Economic and Social Council to consider and to recommend for consideration by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a proposed biennial programme of work for the Second Committee, including the identification of questions for substantive consideration by the Assembly in alternate years, taking into account the biennial programme of work of the Council and the invitation already addressed to the Council in Assembly decision 37/442 of 20 December 1982;

(d) Recommended that the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development should consider adopting, on an experimental basis, a biennial cycle of meetings, in conformity with the biennial programme of work to be established for the Second Committee;

(e) Invited the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to its resolution 1768(LIV) of 18 May 1973, to request its subsidiary bodies that currently meet on an annual basis to consider adopting, on an experimental basis, a biennial cycle of meetings;

ff) Requested the Trade and Development Board to consider scheduling its second regular session so that its reports might be available in all the working languages of the General Assembly in time for consideration by the Assembly;

(g) Decided that the work of the Second Committee should be organized in such a manner as to encourage meaningful and better-focused discussions, leading to action-oriented decisions, and, in that context, that the general debate of the Second Committee should focus on specific major issues of international economic co-operation and development.

Third Committee

At the Economic and Social Council's May session, the Chairman of an informal working group established to formulate recommendations regarding the documentation and organization of work of the Third Committee—in pursuance of the 1977 Assembly^C and 1982 Council⁽²⁾ resolutions on restructuring—orally reported to the Council that the group had not been in a position to discharge the task assigned to it. He said the group felt that, if the Council itself did not take up the matter in plenary meetings, it should be left to the Assembly to do so.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On an oral proposal by the President, the Council adopted decision 1983/159 without vote.

Documentation and organization of work of the Third Committee of the General Assembly

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 27 May 1983, the Council took note of the oral progress report made by the Chairman of the informal open-ended working group for formulating recommendations to the Council regarding the documentation and organization of work of the Third Committee of the General Assembly, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977 and Council resolution 1982/50 of 28 July 1982.

Department of International Economic and Social Affairs

In an August 1983 report transmitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly⁽³⁾ JIU analysed the organization, functions and work programme of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, as part of a series of studies to assess implementation of the 1977 Assembly resolution on restructuring. (1) Also analysed were the relationship of DIESA with other departments of the United Nations Secretariat and with the system's organizations, and the problems encountered by it in performing its functions as described by the Secretary-General in 1978 in keeping with the 1977 resolution. As a result of the study, JIU made seven main recommendations, six in respect of DIESA.

The recommendations called for definitive terms of reference to rationalize the Department's work and organization, including the transfer of its Energy Unit, Fiscal and Financial Branch, and Mineral Resources Section to the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD). Documents for the use of intergovernmental bodies should be more relevant to the world economic and social situation so as to provide a sound basis for action-oriented recommendations. A review should be made of DIESA's collaborative arrangements with DTCD devised in 1978, aimed at achieving a cross-fertilization between research and technical co-operation. DIESA should work out agreements with main United Nations entities involved in development research to harmonize their work programmes. The Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) should be moved back to New York from Vienna, to overcome communication difficulties between it and DIESA, which JIU felt were compounded by overly bureaucratic administrative arrangements.

Other recommendations called for the Secretary-General to present his views to the Assembly on the further integration of programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation functions in the specific components of the Secretariat, including his views on combining the current evaluation units into a central unit and allowing the Office for Programme Planning and Co-ordination to concentrate on elaborating guidelines for an evaluation system and its implementation; and to formalize the provisional arrangement placing technical co-operation functions in statistics under the Statistical Office.

Commenting on the report,(4) the Secretary-General agreed with JIU that the Department's performance needed strengthening. He welcomed the recognition that improvement had taken place and that DIESA faced a number of constraints outside its control. He concurred with the recommendations for definitive terms of reference, and agreed that the means for integrating research and technical co-operation needed examination, the key issues being the extent to which integration and feedback were required between the two activities. He noted that the organizational arrangements in the area of programme planning and evaluation were under review and that the steps recently initiated to streamline the Organization's management and administration would include treatment of programming and budgeting issues. The recommendation regarding the Statistical Office would be taken into account in his report to the Assembly in 1984.

The Secretary-General could not, however, agree with several of the recommendations. He felt that the units proposed for transfer were appropriately assigned as they were, that a mechanism for co-ordinating development research already existed, and that the problems identified as requiring the relocation of CSDHA were temporary and he was seeking to overcome them.

In its report on the JIU report and the comments of the Secretary-General, ACABQ⁽⁵⁾ noted that, in its final report on restructuring to be completed in 1984, JIU would address itself to a number of complex issues and problems with Secretariat or system-wide implications that had been brought to light. That final report and the JIU reports on individual departments or offices would be taken into account by the Secretary-General in his own report to the Assembly in 1984, when he was also to report on the results of an ongoing review of the Secretariat's administration and management by a high-level advisory group on administrative reform. Because of these forthcoming comprehensive reports, ACABQ did not attempt to consider all the JIU recommendations. In noting, however, that the Secretary-General did not adequately address the problems that had led JIU to recommend CSDHA relocation to New York, ACABQ also noted that, for the Assembly to reverse its 1976 decision⁽⁶⁾ transferring CSDHA to its current location at Vienna, it should be provided with an analysis more thorough than had been provided by either JIU or the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/234, section IX, on 20 December 1983.

Trusteeship and decolonization

Chapter I

General questions relating to colonial countries

During the year, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) continued to consider the implementation by international organizations of the Assembly's 1960 Declaration and foreign interests impeding its implementation, military bases in Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs), dissemination of information on decolonization, and reports on the Territories supplied by their administering Powers and by visiting missions of the Committee.

In addition to the general question of decolonization, the Committee examined situations in the following individual Territories: Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see next chapter), Namibia (see Chapter III of this section), Falkland Islands (Malvinas), East Timor, Western Sahara, American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Brunei, Cayman Islands, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, Gibraltar, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, St. Kins-Nevis, Tokelau, Turks and Caicos Islands, United States Virgin Islands (see Chapter IV of this section).

The 25-member Committee held two sessions in 1983 at United Nations Headquarters—on 18 May and from 12 to 31 August—and also held an extra-session meeting from 1 September to 13 October. The Committee's subsidiary bodies, the Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance and the Sub-Committee on Small Territories, met between 20 May and 8 September and between 20 May and 13 October, respectively, and made a number of recommendations for action.

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/42 reaffirming the extension of moral and material assistance to the people of Namibia and other colonial territories and their national liberation movements by the United Nations system, and deploring the collaboration of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) with the Government of South Africa.

Acting on the basis of the Committee's recommendations, the General Assembly took action in December on general aspects of colonial countries. By resolution 38/54, it called for the implementation of the 1960 Declaration, approved the recommendations of the Committee in that regard, and requested it to continue its efforts by taking certain measures. States, in particular the administering Powers, and United Nations bodies were urged to give effect to the Committee's recommendations for implementing the Declaration. The Assembly, by resolution 38/51, called for assistance by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in order to achieve implementation. The Economic and Social Council made a similar request in July by resolution 1983/42. In resolution 38/50, the Assembly condemned activities of foreign economic and other interests which were impeding the Declaration's implementation, as well as the policies of Governments that continued to collaborate with those foreign interests exploiting the resources of the Territories, and called on States to take measures in respect of their nationals and corporations under their jurisdiction operating in colonial Territories which were detrimental to the inhabitants' interests. The Assembly, by decision 38/419, condemned military activities in colonial Territories which denied the peoples concerned their right to self-determination and independence and which were detrimental to their interests.

By resolution 38/55 on the dissemination of information on decolonization, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take measures through the media at his disposal to give publicity to the work of the United Nations in decolonization. Resolution 38/53 included an invitation to States to make offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of NSGTs. In resolution 38/49, the Assembly requested the administering Powers to transmit information as prescribed in Article 73 e of the United Nations Charter as well as information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned.

Implementation of the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries

Various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁽¹⁾ were kept under consideration by the Committee on colonial countries which submitted its annual report to the General Assembly in October 1983.⁽²⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the report of the Committee on colonial countries, the General Assembly, on 7 December, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/54 on the implementation of the 1960 Declaration.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, and 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, in particular resolution 37/35 of 23 November 1982, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, held in Paris from 25 to 29 April 1983,

Condemning the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans, particularly in Namibia, by the Government of South Africa through its persistent, illegal occupation of the international Territory and its intransigent attitude towards all efforts being made to bring about an internationally acceptable solution to the situation obtaining in the Territory,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need to take all necessary measures to eliminate forthwith the remaining vestiges of colonialism, particularly in respect of Namibia where desperate attempts by South Africa to perpetuate its illegal occupation have brought untold suffering and bloodshed to the people,

Strongly condemning the policies of those States which, in defiance of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, have continued to collaborate with the Government of South Africa in its domination of the people of Namibia,

Conscious that the success of the national liberation struggle and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the total elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations in Africa,

Welcoming the achievement of independence by Saint Christopher and Nevis on 19 September 1983 and noting with satisfaction the imminent accession to independence of Brunei, scheduled for 31 December 1983,

Noting with satisfaction the work accomplished by the Special Committee with a view to securing the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting also with satisfaction the co-operation and active participation of the administering Powers concerned in the relevant work of the Special Committee, as well as the continued readiness of the Governments concerned to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Reiterating its conviction that the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories will be achieved most expeditiously by the faithful and complete implementation of the Declaration, particularly in Namibia, and by the speediest possible complete elimination of the presence of the illegal occupying régimes therefrom,

Keenly aware of the pressing needs of the newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 1514(XV), 2621(XXV) and 37/35 and all other resolutions on decolonization and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations—including racism, apartheid, the exploitation by foreign and other interests of economic and human resources and the waging of colonial wars to suppress national liberation movements—is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and poses a serious threat to international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms its determination to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the guiding principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1983, including the programme of work envisaged for 1984;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to give effect to the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee for the speedy implementation of the Declaration and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Condemns the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration with respect to the colonial Territories, particularly Namibia;

8. Strongly condemns all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear and military fields, with the Government of South Africa and calls upon the States concerned to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

9. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to withhold assistance of any kind from the Government of South Africa until the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence within a united and integrated Namibia, including Walvis Bay, has been restored, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the illegal occupation of Namibia by that régime;

10. Calls upon the colonial Powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones;

11. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide all moral and material assistance to the oppressed people of Namibia and, in respect of the other Territories, requests the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, to take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

12. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) in all Territories that have not yet attained independence and, in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

(b) To make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial Territories that are likely to threaten international peace and security;

(c) To continue to examine the compliance of Member States with the Declaration and with other relevant resolutions on decolonization, particularly those relating to Namibia;

(d) To continue to pay particular attention to the small Territories, including the sending of visiting missions to them, as appropriate, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination, freedom and independence;

(e) To take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations having a special interest in decolonization, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly as concerns the oppressed people of Namibia;

13. Calls upon the administering Powers to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and, in particular, to permit the access of visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants;

14. Requests the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide or continue to provide to the newly independent and emerging States all possible assistance in the economic, social and other fields;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the various resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Luxembourg, Malawi, Paraguay.

A number of delegations explained that they had reservations on various parts of the text, despite their positive votes. New Zealand could not accept the implication in paragraph 4 that force was legitimate to bring change in Non-Self-Governing Territories, or the assumption in paragraph 10 that the presence of military bases was necessarily an impediment to decolonization; it was disappointed that the sponsors had not put forward a draft that could be adopted by consensus.

Denmark, speaking also on behalf of Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, expressed their commitment to the decolonization process but regretted that paragraph 4 contradicted United Nations principles of always encouraging peaceful solutions; they felt paragraph 10 was too categorically formulated and had reservations regarding paragraphs that seemed to run counter to the principle of universality. Austria also expressed reservations on paragraph 4 which it said it understood to mean support for the struggle by peaceful and negotiated means only. Ireland stated that with regard to paragraph 10, its position on specific military bases and installations would be guided by the attitudes, freely expressed, of the inhabitants. Turkey felt that paragraph 10 had not been drafted in a sufficiently balanced manner.

Portugal, which mentioned the need to safeguard such principles as seeking a peaceful solution before resorting to armed struggle, the universality of the Organization, and the exclusion of unrelated matters, said it had particular reservations concerning paragraphs 4, 8 and 10. Japan commended the efforts of the authors in trying to avoid inserting unnecessarily controversial elements, but had reservations on paragraph 5 because it could not support all parts of the report of the Committee on colonial countries, as well as on paragraphs 4, 6 and 10. The Netherlands stressed the need to apply in Namibia the principles of the 1960 Declaration which it saw as the main task remaining in the decolonization process, and it expressed reservations concerning paragraphs 2, 4, 7, 8 and 10.

In other action in December, the Assembly in resolution 38/190 urged the speedy implementation of the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries when it reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist régimes and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

The right of such peoples was also recognized in a resolution adopted by the March/April 1983 United Nations Conference on Succession of States in respect of State Property, Archives and Debts (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter III).

Implementation by international organizations

In response to a series of calls by the General Assembly for implementation of its 1960 Declaration, including a November 1982 resolution⁽³⁾ a number of United Nations specialized agencies and organizations continued providing assistance to peoples of colonial countries and their national liberation movements, particularly in Namibia (see Chapter III of this section). Assistance to such movements in southern Africa was mainly provided by FAO, UNESCO, WHO, UNHCR, UNDP and UNCTAD (see p. 159).

In accordance with the same resolutions, a 1983 report⁽⁴⁾ was prepared by the Secretary-General summarizing the replies of 19 United Nations bodies on action taken since the circulation of the Secretary-General's previous report on the subject in 1982.⁽⁵⁾

Among the 1983 activities, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) monitored developments related to apartheid and provided assistance to its victims in southern Africa. Following an initiative undertaken by the Workers Group of the International Labour Conference and the United Nations Special Committee against Apartheid, an international conference of trade unions on sanctions and other actions against the apartheid régime in South Africa was held at Geneva in June 1983 as part of the ILO effort to mobilize public opinion against apartheid. The ILO technical co-operation programme in support of the front-line States and the liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) was expanded through additional ILO funds, which supplemented funds previously committed by UNDP and the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

The World Food Programme reported that at the beginning of the year it was conducting five projects for liberation movement refugees and displaced persons based on a $19 million budget, including a new commitment of $6.5 million for assistance for Namibians in Angola.

The Universal Postal Union (UPU) provided fellowships to Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Montserrat and the Turks and Caicos Islands for a UPU technical meeting of postmasters-general at Bridgetown, Barbados, from 30 May to 4 June, and UPU consultants visited Anguilla and Montserrat in June and July to discuss problems of postal management. In addition, training and other assistance were provided to a number of newly independent countries in Africa, the Caribbean and the Pacific.

The International Telecommunication Union continued to provide training courses in radio programme production and equipment maintenance at the Posts and Telecommunication Corporation's Staff Training College as part of the UNDP Nationhood Programme for Namibia. Consultancy services were provided for planning a telecommunication administration and a broadcasting authority for Namibia.

The International Maritime Organization cooperated with the United Nations Council for Namibia and the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia concerning a transport survey for Namibia and a maritime training and harbour survey. The International Civil Aviation Organization also participated in the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in that context, an evaluation of the future civil aviation needs of Namibia was completed, and civil aviation training fellowships were provided through a UNDP-funded programme.

The World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) provided assistance to refugees from colonial Territories and awarded two fellowships in the fields of industrial property and copyright. The World Bank reported that it was able to consider loans only to member Governments thus precluding any loans to colonies or national liberation groups, but that, in the case of Namibia, once conditions for independence were agreed upon and interest in Bank membership had been indicated by the new authorities, it would take steps in advance of membership to initiate discussions on development policy and assistance.

In accordance with a July 1982 Economic and Social Council request⁽⁶⁾ the President of the Council and the Acting Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries held consultations and reported⁽⁷⁾ that the situation in southern Africa as a result of South Africa's policies presented a serious threat to peace and security and that, while several United Nations organizations had continued to assist the peoples of Namibia and South Africa, the assistance to date was far from adequate in terms of acute needs. They called for renewed efforts to secure additional funds and emphasized the role of the executive heads of the institutions concerned. They also noted with satisfaction that, in response to the appeals of the General Assembly, FAO, UNESCO and ILO had waived overhead costs for projects, and they expressed the hope that all organizations concerned would act accordingly.

In accordance with the same request⁽⁶⁾ consultations were also held⁽⁸⁾ between the Council President and the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid on the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries. The two presiding officers agreed that the deteriorating conditions resulting from South Africa's policies required urgent action and continued co-operation of the Council, the Committee against Apartheid and the Committee on colonial countries. The commitment of the United Nations was a matter of priority for which all United Nations bodies should provide moral and material assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, adopted resolution 1983/42 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations and assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement by agencies and institutions within the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the reports of the President of the Economic and Social Council concerning the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations and of assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement by agencies and institutions within the United Nations system,

Having heard the statements of the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions adopted by United Nations bodies on this subject, including in particular Assembly resolution 37/32 of 23 November 1982 and Council resolution 1982/47 of 27 July 1982,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies,

Noting with deep concern that the situation in southern Africa continues to present a serious threat to peace and security as a result of South Africa's intensified and ruthless repression, its policy and practice of apartheid and other gross violations of the human rights of the peoples in Namibia and South Africa and its armed aggression and military, political and economic destabilization directed against independent States in the region,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their struggle for liberation from the illegal occupation of their country by the racist minority régime in South Africa,

Deeply concerned that, while progress has been maintained through the continuing efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the extension of assistance to refugees from southern Africa, the action taken thus far by the organizations and agencies concerned in the provision of assistance generally to the people of Namibia is still far from adequate to meet their urgent and growing needs,

Gravely concerned at the continued collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the continuing efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to the national liberation movements concerned, and commending the initiative taken by that organization in establishing channels for closer, periodic contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and United Nations institutions and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements in the formulation of assistance programmes,

Noting further the high-level meetings held at Addis Ababa in April 1983 between representatives of the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 37/15 of 16 November 1982 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Mindful of the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, held in Paris from 25 to 29 April 1983,

1. Takes note of the répons of the President of the Economic and Social Council and endorses the observations and suggestions contained therein;

2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by (the United Nations system of organizations of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Namibia, to do everything possible as a matter of urgency to render, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Council for Namibia, increased assistance to the people of Namibia, in particular in connection with the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;

5. Requests also the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue to take, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance to the Government of South Africa until that Government restores to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal occupation of Namibia by that régime;

6. Requests further the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council on the apartheid policy of the Government of South Africa, to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa and to take such measures as will totally isolate the apartheid régime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid;

7. Strongly condemns the attacks carried out by South African armed forces on Namibian refugee camps and settlements in Angola, and requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other competent organs of the United Nations and international organizations, as a matter of urgency, to use all ways and means to ensure the protection of those refugees and their safety from such attacks;

8. Strongly condemns the blatant aggression of the Pretoria régime in its bombing attack on Mozambique in the spring of 1983 and the frequent acts of destabilization carried out by that régime against the front-line States, which have resulted in heavy loss of life, the creation of large numbers of refugees and massive destruction;

9. Deeply deplores the persistent collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of repeated General Assembly resolutions to the contrary, and urgently calls upon the Fund to put an end to such collaboration;

10. Recommends that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity should be included in the agenda of future high-level meetings of the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations within the United Nations system, with a view to strengthening further the existing measures of co-ordination of action to ensure the best use of available resources for assistance to the peoples of the colonial territories;

11. Notes with satisfaction the inclusion of Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, in the membership of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the International Telecommunication Union, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 37/233 C of 20 December 1982, and urges the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system which have not yet granted full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia to do so without delay;

12. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and United Nations institutions which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those international institutions which have not yet done so to follow that example and make the necessary arrangements without delay, including arrangements to defray the cost of the participation of those representatives;

13. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

14. Urges those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress made by those organizations in their implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;

15. Further urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions;

16. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution and to the discussions on the subject at the second regular session of 1983 of the Council;

17. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue consultations on these matters with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid and to report thereon to the Council;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1984;

19. Decides to keep these questions under continuous review.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/42

25 July 1983 Meeting 39 35-1-13 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/14) by roll-call vote (29-1-13), 15 July (meeting 11); 25-nation draft (E/1983/C.3/L.2), orally revised and orally amended by Mexico; agenda item 22.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Congo, Djibouti, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, India, Kenya, Lebanon, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, Saint Lucia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia.

Meeting number. ESC 39.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Congo, Djibouti, Ecuador, German Democratic Republic, India, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Nigeria, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia, USSR, Venezuela.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom.

Prior to the approval of the draft in the Council's Third Committee, Mexico orally proposed amendments to the eighth preambular paragraph, to read "continued collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa" in place of "continued collaboration between the International Monetary Fund and the Government of South Africa" and to the ninth operative paragraph to replace "Deeply deplores the persistent collaboration between the International Monetary Fund and South Africa, in disregard of repeated resolutions to the contrary by the General Assembly, and calls upon the International Monetary Fund to put an end to such collaboration" by the text, "Deeply deplores the persistent collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with the Government of South Africa, in disregard of repeated General Assembly resolutions to the contrary, and urgently calls upon the International Monetary Fund to put an end to such collaboration". Mexico also proposed the deletion of the words "the United Nations Council for" between the words "full membership to" and "Namibia" at the end of operative paragraph 11; that proposal was rejected by the sponsors. The Committee adopted the eighth preambular paragraph, as amended, by 26 votes to 2, with 12 abstentions, and operative paragraph 9, as amended, by 27 votes to 2, with 12 abstentions.

Following the vote in the Council, several delegations explained their reservations. Affirming that the best way to negotiate change in South Africa was through peaceful persuasion rather than ostracism, the United Kingdom said it was unable to accept the language in the fifth preambular paragraph and operative paragraph 8; it also rejected the condemnation of IMF in the eighth preambular paragraph and operative paragraph 9 because it supported the principle of the universality and independence of the specialized agencies. Austria and New Zealand agreed with regard to respecting the independence of IMF, and Greece, speaking on behalf of the European Community, said the formulation on paragraphs concerning IMF was not in line with their views, although they commended the humanitarian and economic assistance furnished by specialized agencies and deplored South African attacks against front-line States. Norway, speaking also on behalf of Denmark, noting their increased humanitarian, technical and educational assistance to peoples struggling for self-determination, said that the statutes of the specialized agencies should be taken into account and that those institutions should retain their universal character.

Portugal supported many elements of the resolution but regretted that a number of discriminatory references and the allusion to certain Assembly resolutions prevented its endorsement.

In 1983, several other United Nations bodies were concerned with relations between IMF and South Africa, and the Assembly in several resolutions called for an end to those relations (see p. 146).

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 14 September, the Committee on colonial countries adopted a resolution⁽⁹⁾ on the role of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system which became the basis for a draft resolution recommended to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/51 which was based on the text by the Committee on colonial countries and was recommended by the Fourth Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations",

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and (the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980, as well as all other relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly on this subject, in particular resolution 36/52 of 24 November 1981 on the item and 37/233 of 20 December 1982 on the question of Namibia,

Having examined the reports submitted on the item by the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted at the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Political Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, and other documents of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries,

Aware that the struggle of the people of Namibia for self-determination and independence is in its crucial stage and has sharply intensified as a consequence of the stepped-up aggression by the illegal colonialist régime of Pretoria against the people of the Territory and the increased general support rendered to that régime by certain Western countries, especially the United States of America and Israel, coupled with efforts to deprive the Namibian people of their hard-won victories in the liberation struggle, and that it is therefore incumbent upon the entire international community decisively to intensify concerted action in support of the people of Namibia and their sole and authentic representative, the South West Africa People's Organization, for the attainment of their goal,

Deeply conscious of the critical need of the Namibian people and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, and of the peoples of other colonial Territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule and in their efforts to achieve and consolidate their national independence,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the necessary measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly those relating to the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements,

Deeply concerned that, although there has been progress in the extension of assistance to refugees from Namibia, the action taken hitherto by the organizations concerned in providing assistance to the people of the Territory through their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, still remains inadequate to meet the urgent and growing needs of the Namibian people,

Expressing its confident hope that closer contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movement concerned will help to overcome procedural and other difficulties which have impeded or delayed the implementation of some assistance programmes,

Recalling its resolution 37/233 C of 20 December 1982, requesting all specialized agencies and other organizations and conferences of the United Nations system to grant full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia,

Expressing its appreciation to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued co-operation and assistance extended by it to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in connection with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Expressing its appreciation also to the Governments of the front-line States for the steadfast support extended to the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, in their just and legitimate struggle for the attainment of freedom and independence, despite increased armed attacks by the forces of the racist régime of South Africa, and aware of the particular needs of those Governments for assistance in that connection,

Noting the efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to the national liberation movements and commending its initiative in establishing channels for closer periodic contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements in the formulation of assistance programmes,

Noting also the support given by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/9 A of 4 November 1977,

Deploping the continued links with and assistance rendered to South Africa by certain specialized agencies in the financial, economic, technical and other fields, in contravention of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Gravely concerned, in particular, at the continued collaboration between the International Monetary Fund and the Government of South Africa in disregard of relevant General Assembly resolutions, especially resolution 37/2 of 21 October 1982,

Bearing in mind the importance of the activities of non-governmental organizations aimed at putting an end to the assistance which is still being rendered to South Africa by some specialized agencies,

Mindful of the necessity of keeping under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question;

2. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute, within their spheres of competence, to the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

3. Reaffirms also that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

5. Expresses its concern that the assistance extended thus far by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, is far from adequate in relation to the actual needs of the peoples concerned;

6. Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to withhold from the racist régime of South Africa any form of co-operation and assistance in the financial, economic, technical and other fields and to discontinue all support to that régime until the people of Namibia have exercised fully their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia and until the inhuman system of apartheid has been totally eradicated;

7. Reiterates its conviction that the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of, or support for, the domination of the Territory by the racist régime of South Africa;

8. Regrets that, notwithstanding the statement of the representative of the World Bank on 8 June 1983 that the Bank has terminated business relations with the South African régime, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund continue to maintain links with the racist régime of Pretoria, as exemplified by the continued membership of South Africa in both agencies, and expresses the view that the two agencies should put an end to all links with the racist régime;

9. Strongly condemns the persistent collaboration between the International Monetary Fund and South Africa, in disregard of repeated resolutions to the contrary by the General Assembly, particularly the granting of a loan of $1.1 billion to South Africa in November 1982 in defiance of General Assembly resolution 37/2, and calls upon the International Monetary Fund to rescind the loan and to put an end to such collaboration;

10. Commends those non-governmental organizations which, by their activities, as exemplified by the co-operation between the Center for International Policy and the United Nations Council for Namibia, are helping to inform public opinion, in the United States of America and elsewhere, and mobilize it against the assistance rendered by the International Monetary Fund to South Africa, and calls upon all non-governmental organizations to redouble their efforts in this respect;

11. Urges the executive heads of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to draw the particular attention of their governing bodies to the present resolution, with a view to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial Territories, particularly Namibia;

12. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render or continue to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples struggling for liberation from colonial rule, bearing in mind that such assistance should not only meet their immediate needs but also create conditions for development after they have exercised their right to self-determination and independence;

13. Once again requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to provide all moral and material assistance to the newly independent and emerging States;

14. Reiterates its recommendation that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements directly or, where appropriate, through the Organization of African Unity, and review and introduce greater flexibility in their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes and projects so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay to help the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

15. Notes with satisfaction that the South West Africa People's Organization continues to be the beneficiary of a number of programmes established within the framework of the United Nations Institute for Namibia at Lusaka and that the United Nations Council for Namibia, in co-operation with the South West Africa

People's Organization, continues to represent the people of Namibia at meetings of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, and urges those agencies and organizations to increase their assistance to the South West Africa People's Organization, as well as to the United Nations Institute for Namibia and the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;

16. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress they have made in the implementation of the Declaration and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

17. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those agencies and organizations that have not yet done so to follow this example and to make the necessary arrangements without delay;

18. Notes with satisfaction the admittance of Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, as a member of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the International Telecommunication Union, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 37/233 C, and urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not so far granted full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia to do so without delay;

19. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to extend, as a matter of priority, substantial material assistance to the Governments of the front-line States in order to enable them to support more effectively the struggle of the people of Namibia for freedom and independence and to resist the violation of their territorial integrity by the armed forces of the racist régime of South Africa directly or, as in Angola and Mozambique, through puppet traitor groups in the service of Pretoria;

20. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to assist in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of the small Territories, particularly in the development of their economies;

21. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connection, that they should accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

22. Reiterates its proposal, under article III of the Agreement between the United Nations and the International Monetary Fund, for the urgent inclusion in the agenda of the Board of Governors of the Fund of an item dealing with the relationship between the Fund and South Africa and further reiterates its proposal that, in pursuance of article II of the Agreement, the relevant organs of the United Nations should participate in any meeting of the Board of Governors called by the Fund for the purpose of discussing the item and urges the Fund to discuss its relationship with South Africa at its annual meeting in September 1984, in compliance with the above-mentioned Agreement;

23. Recommends the sending in 1984 of a high-level mission to the International Monetary Fund which, subject to the agreement of the United Nations bodies involved, would be composed of the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid;

24. Draws the attention of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/118, in particular to those provisions calling on the agencies and organizations to render all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

25. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the provisions of paragraphs 14 and 24 above, to formulate, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity where appropriate, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and organizations, a report on the action taken in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution, since the circulation of his previous report;

27. Requests the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, appropriate measures for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

28. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Belgium, Bolivia,⁴ Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Denmark, Dominica, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guatemala, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Portugal, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden.

⁴ Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Prior to approving the text as a whole, the Fourth Committee voted on a United States amendment to the sixth preambular paragraph by which "Western" and "especially the United States of America and Israel" would have been deleted, and a second amendment in paragraph 10, to replace "in the United States of America and elsewhere against the assistance rendered by the International Monetary Fund to South Africa" by "on the situation in South Africa". The first amendment was rejected by a recorded vote of 65 to 40 with 19 abstentions, and the second by a recorded vote of 63 to 39 with 18 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United States said that paragraph 10, which was directed exclusively against the United States, constituted interference in its internal affairs and was therefore inadmissible and contradicted the principles of the Charter. Israel opposed the draft as a whole because of its imbalanced structure and phraseology and because Israel, the United States and "certain Western countries" were singled out for maintaining relations with South Africa when many other countries did so as well.

France recalled the importance it attached to the principles of universality and independence of the specialized agencies and expressed reservations on paragraphs 9 and 10 which it said amounted to unfair criticism of the actions of the World Bank and IMF. Canada had not been able to accept paragraphs 8, 9, 10 and 22 and the sixth preambular paragraph because it was opposed to the politicization of the decision-making processes of organizations such as IMF and the World Bank, United Nations efforts to impose its views on autonomous agencies, and the condemnation of certain States by name. Sri Lanka expressed reservations concerning paragraphs 8, 9 and 10, which it said contained inappropriate references to the role of certain international organizations.

While convinced that United Nations organizations had an obligation to promote decolonization, Uruguay objected to the selective nature of certain condemnatory references which did nothing to assist United Nations efforts to ensure the universal implementation of the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries, as well as certain references to IMF which were incompatible with the apolitical nature that should characterize its management and the implementation of its decisions. Similarly, Fiji and Togo opposed selective condemnation of countries and expressed reservations concerning the sixth preambular paragraph and paragraph 10. For the same reason, Gambia objected to paragraph 9. Greece said it was regrettable that certain countries had been mentioned by name, and for that reason it had voted for the United States amendments.

Although it supported the Special Committee's recommendations, Lesotho considered that it was impossible to implement certain paragraphs of the resolution, particularly those providing for commercial sanctions against South Africa.

Bolivia said it had reservations concerning certain preambular and operative paragraphs of the text.

Foreign interests impeding implementation of the Declaration on colonial countries

In 1983, both the Committee on colonial countries and the General Assembly reaffirmed their concern that the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in the colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa, constituted an obstacle to political independence by the indigenous population. The Committee considered the item from August 24 to September 1 including the subject of the profits of transnational corporations from colonial Territories. On 1 September, the Committee adopted a resolution⁽¹⁰⁾ on the activities of foreign economic and other interests which became the basis for a draft resolution recommended to the Assembly.

According to a November 1982 request by the Assembly⁽¹¹⁾ the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations was to complete a register indicating the profits that transnational corporations derived from their activities in colonial Territories and report to the Committee on colonial countries at its 1983 session, as originally requested in 1981⁽¹²⁾ However, since the report was not ready for the Committee meetings, the report was transmitted to the Assembly's Fourth Committee by a note⁽¹³⁾ of 30 September from the Secretary-General. It indicated the profits which transnational corporations derived from their activities in colonial Territories with a list of corporations and their affiliates by home country, host Territory, line of business and major economic sector, as well as data on profits and sales which were verified with or directly provided by the corporations themselves.

On 3 November, the Committee adopted by recorded vote a text as drafted by the Committee on colonial countries and recommended its adoption to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/50, which was based on the text by the Committee on colonial countries and recommended by the Fourth Committee.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa",

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to this question,

Taking into consideration the relevant chapter of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, relating to the preparation of a register indicating the profits that transnational corporations derive from their activities in colonial Territories, submitted in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 37/31 of 23 November 1982,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, and 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the item,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses.

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia, adopted at the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence,

Reaffirming that any economic or other activity which impedes the implementation of the Declaration on the

Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories is in direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of all Territories under colonial and racist domination are the heritage of the peoples of those Territories and that the exploitation and depletion of those resources by foreign economic interests, in particular in Namibia, in association with the occupying régime of South Africa, constitute a direct violation of the rights of the peoples and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Economic Declaration and other documents of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Arusha Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia, adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 13 May 1982 at its extraordinary plenary meeting held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania,

Noting with profound concern that the colonial Powers and certain States, through their activities in the colonial Territories, have continued to disregard United Nations decisions relating to the item and that they have failed to implement, in particular, the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 2621(XXV) and 37/31, by which the Assembly called upon all Governments that had not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories,

Condemning the intensified activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories and to accumulate and repatriate huge profits to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants, particularly in the case of Namibia, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning the support which the racist minority régime of South Africa continues to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests which are collaborating with it in the exploitation of the natural and human resources of the international Territory of Namibia, in the further entrenchment of its illegal racist domination over the Territory and in the strengthening of its system of apartheid,

Strongly condemning the investment of foreign capital in the production of uranium and the collaboration of certain Western States and other States with the racist minority régime of South Africa in the nuclear field which, by providing that régime with nuclear equipment and technology, enable it to develop nuclear and military capabilities and to become a nuclear Power, thereby promoting South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia,

Reaffirming that the resources of Namibia are the inviolable heritage of the Namibian people and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the illegal colonial administration, in violation of the Charter, of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, is illegal and contributes to the maintenance of the illegal occupation régime,

Concerned about the conditions in other colonial Territories, including certain Territories in the Caribbean and the Pacific regions, where foreign economic, financial and other interests continue to deprive the indigenous populations of their rights over the wealth of their countries, and where the inhabitants of those Territories continue to suffer from a loss of land ownership as a result of the failure of the administering Powers concerned to restrict the sale of land to foreigners, despite the repeated appeals of the General Assembly,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of natural and human resources, which impedes the independence of colonial Territories and the elimination of racism, particularly in southern Africa,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

2. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power that deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the entrenchment of colonial domination and racial discrimination in the Territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in the colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa, constitute a major obstacle to political independence and racial equality, as well as to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

4. Condemns the activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial Territories impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

5. Condemns the policies of Governments that continue to support or collaborate with those foreign economic and other interests engaged in exploiting the natural and human resources of the Territories, including, in particular, illegally exploiting Namibia's marine resources, violating the political, economic and social rights and interests of the indigenous peoples and thus obstructing the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of those Territories;

6. Strongly condemns the collusion of the Governments of certain Western States and other States with the racist minority régime of South Africa in the nuclear field and calls upon those and all other Governments to refrain from supplying that régime, directly or indirectly, with installations that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

7. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to monitor closely the situation in other Non-Self-Governing Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interests of the indigenous peoples and their speedy accession to independence and that those peoples are not exploited for political, military and other purposes detrimental to their interests;

8. Strongly condemns those Western States and all other States, as well as the transnational corporations, which continue their investments in, and supply of armaments and oil and nuclear technology to, the racist régime of South Africa, thus buttressing it and aggravating the threat to world peace;

9. Calls upon all States, in particular certain Western States, to take urgent, effective measures to terminate all collaboration with South Africa in the political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military and nuclear fields and to refrain from entering into other relations with the racist régime of South Africa in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and of the Organization of African Unity;

10. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

11. Calls upon all States to terminate, or cause to have terminated, any investments in Namibia or loans to the racist minority régime of South Africa and to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with that régime;

12. Requests all States that have not yet done so to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to the racist minority régime of South Africa, which uses such assistance to repress the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement;

13. Strongly condemns South Africa for its continued exploitation and plundering of the natural resources of Namibia, in complete disregard of the legitimate interests of the Namibian people, for the creation in the Territory of an economic structure dependent essentially upon its mineral resources and for its illegal extension of the territorial sea and its proclamation of an economic zone off the coast of Namibia;

14. Calls upon those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that have not yet done so to take effective measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist régime of South Africa;

15. Reiterates that the exploitation and plundering of the natural resources of Namibia by South African and other foreign economic interests, including the activities of those transnational corporations which are engaged in the exploitation and export of the Territory's uranium ores and other resources, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, are illegal and contribute to the maintenance of the illegal occupation régime;

16. Calls upon the Governments of all States, particularly those whose corporations are involved in the mining and processing of Namibian uranium, to take all appropriate measures in compliance with the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, including the practice of requiring negative certificates of origin, to prohibit and prevent State-owned and other corporations, together with their subsidiaries, from dealing in Namibian uranium and from engaging in uranium prospecting activities in Namibia;

17. Requests all States to take legislative, administrative and other measures, as appropriate, in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981, 36/121 B of 10 December 1981 and 37/233 A of 20 December 1982;

18. Calls once again upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial and trade relations with the racist minority régime of South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into any relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, which may lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that Territory;

19. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolution 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, to ensure, in particular, that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

20. Calls upon the administering Powers to abolish all discriminatory and unjust wage systems and working conditions prevailing in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, a sustained and broad campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and, in respect of Namibia, the support they render to the racist minority régime of South Africa;

22. Appeals to all non-governmental organizations to continue their campaign to mobilize international public opinion for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against the Pretoria régime;

23. Takes note of the register prepared by the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to take due account of the register in connection with its consideration of the related items;

24. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

General Assembly resolution 38/50

7 December 1983 Meeting 86 129-7-16 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/38/582) by recorded vote (101-6-16), 3 November (meeting 10); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/38/23); agenda item 103.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 4th Committee 2-10: plenary 86.

Abstaining: Austria, Denmark, Finland, France, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Lesotho, Malawi, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

^a Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of vote, New Zealand said it had always supported the broad principles in the text and scrupulously observed them in its administration of Tokelau; it could not accept the generally condemnatory tone of the text, the unjustified assertions made about the behaviour of administering Powers nor the assertion that foreign economic interests in colonial Territories were by nature detrimental to the interests of the people, since foreign investment and trade could be a vital spur to development. Italy, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom shared this view. The Netherlands added that economic interests did not necessarily constitute an obstacle to political independence and racial equality, and it could not accept the inclusion of unwarranted and selective criticism of Western countries, or the equation of the situation in South Africa with a colonial one. Speaking similarly, the Federal Republic of Germany felt the draft lacked balance and did not allow an in-depth approach to a solution. Ireland agreed and added that it did not address the complex range of issues which confronted the remaining small Territories for which carefully promoted economic development was an important factor in achieving independence.

Japan appreciated the Fourth Committee's efforts to reach consensus and to avoid accusing any country by name and felt that activities of investors must not deprive Territories of their rights, but it did not subscribe to the idea that all such activities in colonial countries were prejudicial to the interests of the peoples. Denmark said the failure of the draft to distinguish between activities which impeded decolonization and those which were beneficial detracted from its fundamental aims. Canada took the same position and also supported the principle that national Governments in whose territory transnational corporations had their headquarters should not interfere in the activities of such corporations in host countries.

Sweden noted with satisfaction that the draft did not regard all foreign economic activities as negative, but only those impeding decolonization, and felt the text was aimed mainly at the situation in southern Africa; none the less, it had difficulties with certain paragraphs dealing with the division of competence among the principal organs of the United Nations—a position shared by Denmark. Turkey expressed reservations on the naming of a specific region in the text. France noted that the draft had retained improvements over the corresponding 1981 resolution, particularly in having eliminated selective condemnations, but expressed reservations because, although it recognized that the activities of foreign interests could on occasion be harmful, the real problem was the imbalance between developing and industrialized countries.

Australia and New Zealand had reservations about the appropriateness of some of the paragraphs concerning Namibia and South Africa, even though Australia expressed concern about the exploitative practices of many companies in Namibia.

Regarding the situation in other Non-Self-Governing Territories, Australia said there was something contradictory in the wholesale condemnation of foreign economic involvement and the calls made in other resolutions for further economic development of those Territories; it did not consider that the terms of the draft related to the Australian administration of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands. The United Kingdom could not accept that a resolution extrapolating from conditions in Namibia was valid for other Territories, and, as an administering Power in 10 Territories, it took pride in the fact that it had fully complied with its obligations, and was frustrated to be exhorted to accelerate development and to be criticized for encouraging private economic contributions to the fulfilment of that objective in Territories where external trade and an inward flow of investment were crucial. Austria said that measures proposed should genuinely serve the political, economic and social interests of the Territories and should thus leave room for activities clearly benefiting their development. While supporting the basic ideas expressed in the resolution, Chile did not think that all economic activities hampered decolonization and, in this connection, it noted other United Nations resolutions where the administering Powers had been asked to increase investment in order to ensure the economic viability of Territories.

Uruguay supported the inalienable right of peoples to self-determination and to dispose of their natural resources, but had reservations on paragraphs 9, 10, 11 and 18 which could not be fully reconciled with the sovereign right of States to conduct freely their international relations.

Swaziland stressed the importance of independence for Namibia, but stated that owing to its geographical location, it would find difficulty endorsing certain provisions, especially paragraph 14, since oil sanctions against South Africa would have a disastrous effect on Swaziland's economy. Similarly, Botswana expressed reservations on economic sanctions and the oil embargo due to conditions beyond its control in southern Africa. Malawi could not endorse concepts and language in the draft which were not in line with the Charter and international law. Mozambique welcomed the draft and urged that transnational corporations and their affiliates provide the required information.

Military bases in colonial countries

Further to a September 1982 request of the General Assembly⁽¹⁴⁾ the Committee on colonial countries continued to consider in 1983 military activities and bases in colonial Territories and approved a decision on the subject on 1 September⁽¹⁵⁾ On the basis of that text, the Committee recommended a draft decision to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Decision 38/419, as recommended by the Fourth Committee, was adopted by the General Assembly by recorded vote in December.

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

At its 86th plenary meeting, on 7 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the Special Committee's agenda entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples', and recalling its decision 37/420 of 23 November 1982 on this subject, deplores the fact that the colonial Powers concerned have taken no steps to implement the requests repeatedly addressed to them by the Assembly, most recently in paragraph 10 of its resolution 37/35 of 23 November 1982, to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones.

"2. The General Assembly, in reaffirming the inalienable right of the peoples of all colonial and dependent Territories to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, reiterates its conviction that military activities and arrangements in the Territories concerned constitute, in a great number of instances, a serious impediment to the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration with respect to those Territories.

"3. The General Assembly deplores the fact that South Africa and the colonial Powers continue to engage in activities and dispositions of a military character and to establish and maintain bases and other military installations in Namibia and other colonial Territories in violation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of Assembly resolution 1514(XV).

"4. The General Assembly condemns all military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories which deny the peoples concerned their right to self-determination and independence.

"5. The General Assembly notes that, in southern Africa in general and in and around Namibia in particular, an extremely serious situation continues to prevail as a result of South Africa's continued illegal occupation of the Territory. The illegal occupying régime has resorted to desperate measures in order to suppress by force the legitimate aspirations of the people and to maintain its control over the Territory. In its escalating war against the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, struggling for freedom and independence, the régime has repeatedly committed acts of armed aggression against the neighbouring independent African countries, particularly Angola and Zambia, which have caused extensive loss of human life and destruction of the economic infrastructure.

"6. The General Assembly, noting that in Namibia the South African Government has continued to expand its network of military bases and carried out a massive build-up of its military forces, condemns the continuing co-operation of certain Western States and other States with South Africa in supplying it with arms and military equipment as well as technology, including technology and equipment in the nuclear field capable of being utilized for military purposes. The Assembly condemns South Africa for its massive military build-up in Namibia, its introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians, its recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies and its recruitment of mercenaries and other foreign agents in order to carry out its policies of internal repression and its military attacks against independent African States. In this connection, the Assembly calls upon all States to co-operate in taking effective measures to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia. The Assembly is particularly mindful in that regard of the relevant resolutions of the Organization of African Unity, the Political Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, and the Declaration adopted at the International Conference in Solidarity with the Front-line States, held at Lisbon from 25 to 27 March 1983.

"7. The General Assembly, accordingly, demands the immediate cessation of the war of oppression waged by the racist minority régime against the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, as well as the urgent dismantling of all military bases in the Territory. Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of Namibia to achieve their freedom and independence, the Assembly appeals to all States to render sustained and increased moral and political support, as well as financial, military and other material assistance, to the South West Africa People's Organization to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia.

"8. The General Assembly condemns the continued military collaboration and support which certain Western States and other States render to the Government of South Africa and calls upon all States to cease such collaboration with and support of that Government, particularly the sale of weapons and other matériel, which increases South Africa's capacity to wage wars against neighbouring African States. In particular, the Assembly calls upon all Governments to comply strictly with the provisions of Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, decided to apply specific sanctions against South Africa. In this connection, the Assembly draws particular attention to the relevant provisions of its resolution 37/233 of 20 December 1982, the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted at the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence and the Declaration adopted at the International Conference in Solidarity with the Front-line States.

"9. The General Assembly considers that the acquisition of nuclear weapons capability by the racist régime of South Africa, with its record of violence and aggression, constitutes a further effort on its part to terrorize and intimidate independent States in the region into submission while also posing a danger to all mankind. The continuing assistance rendered to the South African régime by certain Western States and other States in the military and nuclear fields belies their stated opposition to the racist practice of the South African régime and makes them willing partners of its hegemonistic and criminal policies. The Assembly accordingly condemns the continued nuclear co-operation by certain Western States and other States with South Africa. It calls upon the States concerned to end all such co-operation and, in particular, to halt the supply to South Africa of equipment, technology, nuclear materials and related training, which increases its nuclear capability.

"10. The General Assembly, noting that the militarization of Namibia has led to the forced conscription of Namibians, to a greatly intensified flow of refugees and to a tragic disorganization of the family life of the Namibian people, strongly condemns the forcible and wholesale displacement of Namibians from their homes for military and political purposes and the introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians and declares that all measures by the illegal occupation régime to enforce military conscription in Namibia are null and void. In this connection, the Assembly urges all Governments, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of refugees who have been forced by the apartheid regime's oppressive policies in Namibia and South Africa to flee into the neighbouring front-line States.

"11. The General Assembly recalls its resolution ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981, by which it strongly urged States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with South Africa in order totally to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally.

"12. The General Assembly strongly deprecates the establishment and maintenance by colonial Powers and their allies of military bases and other installations in the colonial Territories under their administration which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and which are incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of Assembly resolution 1514 (XV).

"13. The General Assembly reiterates its condemnation of all military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which are detrimental to the interests and rights of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the colonial Powers concerned to terminate such activities and eliminate such military bases in compliance with its relevant resolutions and in particular with paragraph 9 of the annex to its resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980, containing the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

"14. The General Assembly deprecates the continued alienation of land in colonial Territories for military installations. While it has been argued that the servicing of such installations creates employment, nevertheless, the large-scale utilization of local economic and manpower resources for this purpose diverts resources which could be more beneficially utilized in promoting the economic development of the Territories concerned and is thus contrary to the interests of their populations.

"15. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, an intensified campaign of publicity with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514 (XV).

"16. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee to continue its consideration of the item and to report thereon to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session."

General Assembly decision 38/419

123-10-16 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/38/582) by recorded vote (97-10-15), 3 November (meeting 10); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/38/23); agenda item 103.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 4th Committee 2-10; plenary 86.

A number of States explained their votes in the Fourth Committee. Greece, speaking on behalf of the 10 member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), expressed concern that a draft on a subject not in the list of items allocated to the Committee was being put to a vote. Australia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom agreed, as did Canada which added that the recommendation concerning military activities in the report of the Committee on colonial countries was incompatible with the recommendation concerning foreign economic interests and should not be treated as belonging to the same agenda item.

New Zealand could not accept the assertion that military activities in Non-Self-Governing Territories were necessarily detrimental to decolonization, and added that the decision had no relevance to its administration of Tokelau. Turkey felt that the text of the draft decision, particularly paragraphs 2, 4, 12, 13 and 14, could have been drafted in a more balanced manner, and also expressed reservations on the reference to a particular group of States made in several paragraphs of the text.

Mozambique said no one could deny that military activities of colonial Powers deprived the peoples there of the right to self-determination and independence, while Fiji stated that those activities and arrangements by Powers in Territories under their administration should not be detrimental to the people concerned, but did not think that all such activities impeded independence which was a question the inhabitants should be left to decide. Viet Nam would have preferred the word "are" instead of "might be" in paragraph 1 since it firmly believed that such military activities were indeed impeding implementation of the 1960 Declaration.

Also on 7 December, the Assembly called upon the colonial Powers to withdraw their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones in resolution 38/54 (see above). In further action the same day, the Assembly, in resolutions 38/42, 38/43 and 38/47 on Guam, Bermuda and the Turks and Caicos Islands, respectively (see Chapter IV of this section), reaffirmed that the administering Powers must ensure that military bases and installations not hinder the population of the Territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence.

Information dissemination

On 14 September, the Committee on colonial countries considered dissemination of information on decolonization, and approved the recommendations on this subject put forward by its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance. Reiterating the importance of the widest possible dissemination of information on the aims of the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries, the Sub-Committee made a number of recommendations concerning the work of the Information Unit on Decolonization in the Secretariat's Department of Political Affairs, Trusteeship and Decolonization, and of the Department of Public Information (DPI). It considered the studies and monographs published in the Decolonization series a valuable source of information and urged that they be published without delay in various languages and updated more frequently. It noted with satisfaction the intensified efforts of DPI to disseminate information on decolonization and to monitor responses received from United Nations information centres, and urged it to increase its efforts to obtain wider coverage by the mass media, particularly in certain countries in Western Europe and the Americas which received limited coverage. Both Departments were called on to continue speaking engagements at North American universities on decolonization with particular emphasis on Namibia (see Chapter III of this section).

The General Assembly, in decision 38/419 (see above), requested the Secretary-General to continue, through DPI, an intensified campaign to inform world public opinion of the facts concerning military activities in colonial Territories which were impeding the implementation of the 1960 Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By recorded vote, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/55 on 7 December.

Dissemination of information on decolonization

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization, in particular General Assembly resolution 37/36 of 23 November 1982,

Reiterating the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the aims and purposes of the Declaration and mindful of the continuing pressing need to take all possible steps to acquaint world public opinion with all aspects of the problems of decolonization with a view to assisting effectively the peoples of the colonial Territories to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence,

Aware of the increasingly important role being played in the widespread dissemination of relevant information by a number of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization, and noting with satisfaction the intensified efforts of the Special Committee in enlisting the support of those organizations in that regard, including its decision to organize in Europe in 1984 a seminar on decolonization with the non-governmental organizations concerned,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization;

2. Reaffirms the importance of effecting the widest possible dissemination of information on the evils and dangers of colonialism, on the determined efforts of the colonial peoples to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence and on the assistance being provided by the international community towards the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in all its forms;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, having regard to the suggestions of the Special Committee, to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal, including publications, radio and television, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization, and, inter alia:

(a) To continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, to collect, prepare and disseminate basic material, studies and articles relating to the problems of decolonization and, in particular, to continue to publish the periodical Objective: Justice and other publications, special articles and studies, including the Decolonization series, and to select from them appropriate material for wider dissemination by means of reprints in various languages;

(b) To seek the full co-operation of the administering Powers concerned in the discharge of the tasks referred to above;

(c) To intensify the activities of all United Nations information centres, particularly those located in Western Europe and the Americas;

(d) To maintain a close working relationship with the Organization of African Unity by holding periodic consultations and by systematically exchanging relevant information with that organization;

(e) To enlist the support of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization in the dissemination of the relevant information;

(f) To ensure the availability of the necessary facilities and services in this regard;

(g) To report to the Special Committee on the measures taken in implementation of the present resolution;

4. Invites all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization to undertake or intensify, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and within their respective spheres of competence, the large-scale dissemination of the information referred to in paragraph 2 above;

5. Requests the Special Committee to follow the implementation of the present resolution and report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth

Week of Solidarity with peoples of Namibia and all other colonial Territories

The Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Namibia and All Other Colonial Territories, as well as those in South Africa, Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights was observed by a series of United Nations activities from 23 to 30 May 1983.

Following the General Assembly's 1982 decision⁽¹⁶⁾ to enlarge the scope of the Week by including the peoples of all the remaining dependent Territories, the name of the Week was changed (formerly the Week of Solidarity with the Colonial Peoples of Southern Africa Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Equal Rights). DPI arranged events at Headquarters and at United Nations information centres, including an exhibition of photographs and publications depicting the struggle of the colonial peoples for independence, the public screening of films on that subject, and the distribution of audio-visual materials to national radio and television stations.

On 23 May, the three presiding officers of the Committee on colonial countries, the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia issued a joint statement[^] paying tribute to the courageous peoples who had given their lives to the cause of freedom for colonial peoples and urging States to mobilize support for the peoples of southern Africa struggling for freedom and human rights by disseminating information on their cause, organizing publicity programmes, and increasing assistance to oppressed peoples.

Role of NGOs

The Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance of the Committee on colonial countries noted that a considerable number of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) were playing an important role in broadening the dissemination of information on decolonization and appealed for further assistance in this regard. In its annual report⁽²⁾ the Committee approved the Sub-Committee's conclusions and recommendations.

The Sub-Committee reiterated its appeal to NGOs active in decolonization to intensify their campaigns in support of all colonial peoples, in particular those in southern Africa and their national liberation movements; recommended that they strive to counteract hostile propaganda that liberation movements in southern Africa were terrorists; and proposed that the Secretary-General be requested to maintain an updated list of NGOs active in decolonization so that the Sub-Committee could increase its contacts with them. The Sub-Committee also proposed that a seminar be held in Europe during 1984 with relevant NGOs to improve co-ordination with the Committee in disseminating information on decolonization.

Puerto Rico

In 1983, the Committee on colonial countries reviewed the list of Territories to which the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries⁽¹⁾ was applicable and considered an item based on its August 1982 decision⁽⁷⁾ concerning Puerto Rico. At meetings held between 22 and 24 August 1983, the Committee heard the representatives of 20 organizations mainly from Puerto Rico. By a resolution of 24 August⁽¹⁸⁾ adopted by a vote of 10 to 2, with 10 abstentions, the Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, urged the United States to transfer all sovereign powers to the people of Puerto Rico, requested it to assist the Committee in sending a fact-finding mission there, deplored measures aimed at changing the Latin American character of the Puerto Rican people, deplored decisions to enlarge military installations, demanded the cessation of repressive measures against Puerto Rican independence forces including intimidation by the United States federal Grand Jury, and requested the Committee's Chairman to undertake consultations with respect to the proposed fact-finding mission.

On 26 October, during the Fourth Committee's consideration of the topic, Rafael Anglada-Lopez of the Central Committee of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party, whose request for a hearing had been circulated, made a statement concerning Puerto Rico.

Fellowships and scholarships

In a report to the General Assembly covering 1 October 1982 to 30 September 1983, (1) the Secretary-General stated that the following 32 States had offered to make scholarships and fellowships available to persons from Non-Self-Governing Territories for secondary, vocational and post-graduate studies: Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Israel, Italy, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Malta, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United States and Yugoslavia. The Secretary-General reported that 150 applications for scholarships were received by the United Nations Secretariat and were transmitted to the offering States for consideration and to the administering Powers for information. Five new fellowships were offered in Bulgaria, two new scholarships in Cyprus and one new scholarship in Pakistan for a Namibian national.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/53 on 7 December.

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/34 of 23 November 1982, Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Considering that more scholarships should be made available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories in all parts of the world and that steps should be taken to encourage applications from students in those Territories,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;
3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;
4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution;
6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Information to the United Nations

Under the terms of Article 73 e in Chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations, States responsible for the administration of Territories which had not attained a full measure of self-government undertook to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General information on their economic, social and educational conditions. In addition, several General Assembly resolutions, including the most recent of November 1982,(2) requested the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments. In an October 1983 report to the Assembly(3) the Secretary-General stated that he had received information with respect to the following Non-Self-Governing Territories:

Australia: Cocos (Keeling) Islands
 New Zealand: Tokelau
 United Kingdom: Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Turks and Caicos Islands
 United States: American Samoa, Guam, United States Virgin Islands

On 28 March⁽⁴⁾ Portugal informed the Secretary-General that it had nothing to add to the information provided in a 1979 note (stating that conditions in East Timor had prevented it from assuming its responsibilities for the Territory's administration)⁽⁵⁾

With respect to Western Sahara, the Secretary-General noted in his October report⁽⁶⁾ that Spain had informed him in 1976 that with the termination of its presence in the Territory, it considered itself exempt from any international responsibility in connection with the administration of the Territory⁽⁶⁾

The Secretary-General also reported that the United Kingdom, as the administering Power for Anguilla, had informed a 14 September meeting of the Committee on colonial countries that it would resume the transmission of information on Anguilla (information was received by the Secretariat in November)⁽⁷⁾ As regards Brunei, the United Kingdom considered that the transmission of information was no longer appropriate since it had attained full internal self-government.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/49 on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee based on a draft by the Committee on colonial countries.

Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and the action taken by the Committee in respect of that information,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General on the question,

Recalling its resolution 1970(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, in which it requested the Special Committee to study the information transmitted to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73 e of the Charter and to take such information fully into account in examining the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its resolution 37/29 of 23 November 1982, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII),

Noting the decision of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to resume transmission of information with respect to Anguilla, under Article 73 e of the Charter,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government under the terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;

3. Requests the administering Powers concerned to transmit, or continue to transmit, to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73 e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;

4. Requests the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under General Assembly resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Visiting missions

In August, the Committee on colonial countries adopted a resolution on the question of sending visiting missions to Territories⁽⁸⁾ stressing the need to continue to dispatch missions to facilitate the full implementation of the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries.⁽⁹⁾ The Committee called on the administering Powers concerned to co-operate or continue to co-operate with the United Nations by permitting the missions access to Territories under their administration.

In resolution 38/54 of 7 December (see above), the General Assembly called on the administering Powers to continue to co-operate with the Committee on colonial countries in the discharge of its mandate and, in particular, to permit the access of visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants.

The question of sending visiting missions to other Territories was also dealt with by the Assembly in individual resolutions on these Territories (see Chapter IV of this section).

Chapter II

International Trusteeship System

The Trusteeship Council continued during 1983 to supervise, on behalf of the Security Council, the one Trust Territory remaining under the International Trusteeship System—the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, a strategic Territory administered by the United States.

The Council considered the annual report submitted by the Administering Authority, heard 13 petitioners, and examined 83 written petitions and 29 communications concerning the Territory. After considering the report of a 1982 Visiting Mission sent by the Council to the Trust Territory, the Council invited the Administering Authority to take into account the Mission's recommendations and conclusions as well as comments by the Council members (resolution 2175(L)). It also took note of the report of a February 1983 Visiting Mission to observe a plebiscite in Palau (resolution 2176(L)). Two other visiting missions were dispatched in June and August to observe plebiscites in the Federated States of Micronesia and the Marshall Islands. Following a general debate on conditions in the Territory, the Council adopted a report to the Security Council containing conclusions and recommendations.

The Trusteeship Council held its fiftieth session at United Nations Headquarters from 16 May to 10 June and resumed the session on 28 November. Of the Council's five members (China, France, USSR, United Kingdom, United States), China did not participate in the session.

Trust Territory of the Pacific IslandsConditions in the Territory

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, designated as a strategic area and administered by the United States under an Agreement approved by the Security Council in 1947,⁽¹⁾ comprised three archipelagos of more than 2,100 islands and atolls scattered over an area of some 7.8 million square kilometres of the western Pacific Ocean, north of the Equator. The Territory, known collectively as Micronesia, had a population of some 133,000 according to the 1980 census.

There were four administrative entities within the Territory—the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands and Palau. As a result of referendums, each had its own constitution and popularly elected legislature and executive head.

Trusteeship Council action. The Trusteeship Council, at its 1983 session, adopted its report ⁰ to the Security Council after considering the annual report for the year ending 30 September 1982, submitted by the United States as Administering Authority for the Trust Territory and transmitted by the Secretary-General in April.⁽³⁾ The Council's report contained conclusions and recommendations which covered such questions as land and people and war-related damage claims; political, economic, social and educational advancement; and constitutional development and progress towards self-government or independence.

These conclusions and recommendations, drafted on the basis of the Council's discussions, were annexed to a report on conditions in the Trust Territory⁽⁴⁾ prepared by the Drafting Committee (France and the United Kingdom). On 10 June, the Council adopted the conclusions and recommendations, before adopting the Committee's report as a whole. It also adopted, on the Committee's recommendation, a Secretariat working paper on conditions in the Territory⁽⁵⁾ as the basic text for the relevant sections of its report to the Security Council. The draft of that report was adopted by the Trusteeship Council on 28 November. All these actions were taken by a vote of 3 to 1.

In explaining its negative vote, the USSR said that the report contained shortcomings and inaccuracies, had not taken account of its comments, did not reflect the actual situation in the Territory or respond to the mandate of the Council, and failed to conclude that, as a result of the Authority's policy, the people of the Territory were deprived of the opportunity to exercise their inalienable right to genuine independence. In addition, the part of the report dealing with constitutional developments was viewed by the USSR as a would-be justification of United States efforts to change the status of the Territory contrary to the Charter of the United Nations.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. On 13 October, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) adopted, by 19 votes to none, with 4 abstentions, conclusions and recommendations concerning the Trust Territory(6) made by its Sub-Committee on Small Territories.

The 25-member Committee expressed regret over the repeated refusal of the Administering Authority to co-operate with it and called again on the United States to ensure the presence of its representative at Committee meetings to provide information. It noted that the reports on the strategic Trust Territory were a matter of which the Security Council was seized, and drew the attention of the relevant United Nations bodies to Article 83 of the Charter empowering the Security Council to exercise all United Nations functions relating to strategic areas, with the Trusteeship Council's assistance on political, economic, social and educational matters.

The Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the Trust Territory to self-determination and independence, recalled the Administering Authority's duty to transfer all power to the Territory's freely elected representatives and called for increased economic assistance thereto (see below). It also encouraged the local authorities to develop closer relations with regional and international agencies, particularly within the United Nations system, noting with satisfaction the material assistance provided to the Territory by some of them.

In accordance with decisions taken in May and August, the Committee recommended to the General Assembly adoption of a draft resolution, repeating most of its conclusions on the question of the Trust Territory.

The Chairman transmitted the Committee's conclusions to the Security Council by a letter of 13 October⁽⁷⁾

General Assembly consideration. On 23 September, the Assembly referred to the Fourth Committee the chapter of the report of the Committee on colonial countries relating to the Trust Territory. On 17 November, the Committee Chairman suggested, based on his consultations with the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries and delegations concerned, that the Fourth Committee should take no action at that stage on the draft resolution. The suggestion was adopted without objection⁽⁸⁾

In resolution 38/54 (see Chapter I of this section), the Assembly called on the administering Powers to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and, in particular, to permit the access of visiting missions to the Territories to secure firsthand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants.

Self-determination and independence

The future political status of the Trust Territory was a dominant issue in its relations with the Administering Authority, with the negotiations between the two sides centring on the compact of free association which defined the political status of the Federated States, the Marshall Islands and Palau in the post-Trusteeship period⁽⁹⁾ To enable the people of Micronesia to express their wishes on the proposed option, the Administering Authority held plebiscites in each of the areas to which the compact applied (see below).

Conclusions of the 1982 Visiting Mission. In its March 1983 report⁽¹⁰⁾ the Council's July 1982 Visiting Mission to the Territory⁽¹¹⁾ noted that the Micronesian Governments concerned wished to maintain close and preferential relations with the United States after termination of the Trusteeship Agreement, particularly concerning economic development and defence. It believed that during the period of Trusteeship the Authority had fostered the political, social and educational development of the Territory, which, however, remained almost totally dependent economically and financially on the United States. The Visiting Mission felt that Micronesia should receive technical assistance from the United States and the international community, even after termination of the Agreement. The Mission noted at the same time that the Administering Authority had avoided setting any specific date for terminating that Agreement.

Plebiscites in Palau, the Federated States of Micronesia and the Marshall Islands

By a December 1982 resolution⁽¹²⁾ the Trusteeship Council had decided to send visiting missions in 1983 to observe plebiscites in Palau, the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia.

Palau. The Mission to Palau, composed of one representative each from Fiji, France, Papua New Guinea and the United Kingdom, was dispatched to observe the plebiscite on the compact of free association and a number of subsidiary agreements, conducted throughout the area on 10 February 1983. The visit began on 3 February in Koror and lasted until 12 February, with a United Nations Secretariat staff member remaining in Palau until 17 February to observe the counting and tabulation of votes. The Mission held meetings with executive, legislative and community leaders and individuals, groups and the general public in Koror, Babelthuap, Angaur and Peleliu, which together accounted for over 90 per cent of Palau's population, and observed the arrangements and procedures of vote casting and ballot counting and tabulation.

In its April report on the plebiscite⁽¹³⁾ the Mission concluded that, although the compact and its subsidiary agreements were long and complex, the broad issues raised and the wording of the ballot were generally understood by voters due to the political campaign itself and to a political education programme conducted co-operatively by the Administering Authority and the Palau Government. It reiterated the importance of holding political education programmes prior to plebiscites in the Federated States of Micronesia and the Marshall Islands. The Mission observed no irregularities, violence or improper intervention by the Authority during the campaign and plebiscite. Vote counting was carefully carried out by a single team, enabling the Mission and general public to verify the counting's propriety.

Summing up the results, the Mission stated that 88.2 per cent of the 8,213 registered voters took part in the plebiscite, with 4,452 (61.4 per cent) voting for the compact and 2,715 against, the remaining 79 ballots being void. With regard to the subsidiary agreement on the introduction of radioactive, chemical and biological materials into Palau, as provided for by the compact, 3,717 voters (51.3 per cent) approved of it and 3,309 voted against; 220 ballots were void. Thus the compact was approved by the people of Palau but could not enter into force because of the insufficient number of votes in favour of the agreement on radioactive materials (51.3 per cent as against the 75 per cent required by the 1979 Palau Constitution). The Mission concluded that it was for the Governments of Palau and the United States to look for a mutually acceptable solution to reconcile the differences between the relevant sections of the Palau Constitution and the compact. The third question on the ballot, concerning political status arrangements in case the compact was rejected, elicited response from only 56.1 per cent of the voters, 55.5 per cent of whom favoured closer relationship with the United States, while 44.5 per cent preferred independence.

Federated States of Micronesia. The plebiscite in the Federated States of Micronesia, held on 21 June, was observed by another Visiting Mission, composed of one representative each of Fiji and France and two representatives each of Papua New Guinea and the United Kingdom, which began its visit at Kolonia, Ponape, on 15 June and ended it on 26 June at Moen, Truk. During its stay there, the Mission met ministers and officials at national and state levels, as well as traditional leaders and the public in each of the four federated states of Ponape, Truk, Yap and Kosrae.

In its October report⁽¹⁴⁾ the Mission stated that, although few voters fully grasped the details of the compact, thanks to a public information programme the majority had some idea of the main issues. However, in the Mission's view, the programme's effectiveness was undercut by lack of adequate written teaching aids, and little attention was given in the programme to alternative options to the compact. Further, the Mission noted the unsatisfactory composition of the advisory section of the ballot, which was largely misunderstood by voters.

No systematic political campaign was observed in the Federation, with the exception of Truk, where the plebiscite was boycotted in the Faichuk and Udot islands. Despite inadequate verification of affidavits, and certain irregularities in Truk, vote counting and tabulating were generally professional. Of the 40,538 registered voters, 25,606 (63.2 per cent) took part in the plebiscite, with 20,121 (79 per cent) voting in favour of the compact and 5,348 against. In the advisory part of the ballot, 13,924 voters indicated a preference for independence in case the compact was not approved; 1,319 voted in favour of United States Commonwealth status; 820 opted for "United States territory" and 568 for "state of the United States"; 2,587 indicated a preference for a different status or gave no description of what that status should be; and 4,771 advisory section ballots were rejected or spoilt. The Mission concluded that the compact was thus approved by the voters of the Federated States of Micronesia.

Marshall Islands. To observe the plebiscite in the Marshall Islands, held on 7 September 1983, a Visiting Mission, composed of one representative each of Fiji, France, Papua New Guinea and the United Kingdom, began its visit at Majuro on 31 August and ended it there on 10 September, with a member of the United Nations Secretariat staying behind until 15 September to continue observing the counting and tabulation of votes.

In its report,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Mission stated that the plebiscite had been accompanied by a lively political campaign in which no violence was observed and everyone appeared able to express his or her views freely and openly. The Mission concluded that, as a result of a well-organized and well-executed political education campaign, the Marshallese had a knowledge of the major issues involved and some idea of the alternative constitutional options. The plebiscite was largely dominated by financial considerations related to compensation under the radiation agreement and the scale of payments to the Kwajalein landowners. Other aspects of the compact played little part in the campaign and the alternative constitutional options did not excite much interest.

With the exception of two polling stations on Majuro and Ebeye, the Mission had found polling arrangements to be excellent and the vote counting and tabulating thorough, careful and correct, although unduly long. It noted, however, that same-day registration procedures employed during the plebiscite were open to abuse without foolproof means of voter identification. According to the official results, 6,215 votes had been cast for the compact and 4,509 against, which led the Mission to conclude that it had been approved. Some minor inconsistencies in the totals, in the Mission's view, had not significantly affected the result.

Trusteeship Council action. In its 1983 report⁽²⁾ the Trusteeship Council reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Micronesia to self-determination, including the right to independence in accordance with the United Nations Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement. It noted that full functional self-government in the Trust Territory would be realized with the termination of the Agreement and noted the wish of the constitutional Governments to maintain links with the Administering Authority after termination. The Council also expressed satisfaction with the Authority's reaffirmation that the people of Micronesia would have the opportunity to choose their future political status from a range of options and the fact that the Palau plebiscite was conducted in complete freedom and without any irregularities. It endorsed the view of the Mission with regard to reconciling conflicting provisions of the Palau Constitution and the compact of free association (see above) and noted establishment of a task force by Palau, and the Authority's readiness to negotiate resolution of the problem.

Refraining, as in previous years, from making recommendations on the future political status of the various Micronesian entities, the Council reiterated its view that free association was not incompatible with the Trusteeship Agreement, provided that it was freely accepted by the populations concerned, and noted that, following approval of the compact, the Administering Authority would take up the matter of terminating the Agreement with the Trusteeship and Security Councils. The Trusteeship Council welcomed the Authority's commitment to provide economic assistance to the constitutional Governments during the initial stage of the free association relationship and expressed hope for speedy termination of the Agreement, noting with interest the formation of an inter-agency group for maintaining liaison with the United States in the post-Trusteeship period. It expressed some regret at the decision of the peoples of Micronesia to seek their future separately and urged all interested parties to co-operate fully in establishing, after the Agreement's termination, the all-Micronesian entity as agreed at Molokai, Hawaii, in 1977.

On 2 June 1983, the Trusteeship Council adopted resolution 2176(L) by vote.

Report of the United Nations Visiting Mission to observe the plebiscite in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, February 1983

The Trusteeship Council,

Having examined at its fiftieth session the report of the United Nations Visiting Mission, dispatched at the in-itation of the Administering Authority and pursuant to its resolution 2174(S-XV) of 20 December 1982, to observe the plebiscite in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands,

1. Takes note of the report of the Visiting Mission;
2. Expresses its appreciation of the work accomplished by the Visiting Mission on its behalf.

Trusteeship Council resolution 2176(1)

2 June 1983

Meeting 1559

3-1

Draft by France and United Kingdom (T/L.1237); agenda item 7.
Meeting number. TC 1559.

In explanation of its negative vote, the USSR said that the United States actions, including the organization and holding of a plebiscite in Palau, were aimed at dismembering and annexing the Trust Territory under its administration in violation of the Charter, despite the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁽¹⁰⁾ and in circumvention of the Security Council, without whose decision no change in the status of a strategic territory could be legally binding. The USSR pointed out that sending a Mission to Micronesia to observe the plebiscite was tantamount to United Nations participation in an illegal process. It said that the Mission's report could not prove convincingly that the plebiscite in Palau had been carried out on a free basis and that petitions presented to the Council indicated that it had been held in a politically tendentious atmosphere which had made impossible a proper expression of will by the population.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries.

In its conclusions and recommendations⁽⁶⁾ the Committee on colonial countries reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the Territory to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Charter and the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries, the speedy implementation of which should not be delayed by the Territory's size, geographical location, population and limited natural resources. It reiterated that the Authority had an obligation to create conditions enabling the people to exercise freely that right with full knowledge of the various options open to them. Calling on the Authority to refrain from any action that might impede the Territory's unity, the Committee said that termination of the Trusteeship Agreement should be in strict conformity with the Charter. It also reaffirmed its strong conviction that the Authority must ensure, by complying fully with United Nations resolutions, that military installations and activities in the Territory should not hinder the population from exercising its rights.

Communications. By a letter dated 15 August⁽¹⁷⁾ the USSR transmitted to the Secretary-General a 12 August TASS statement, charging that the United States was involved in illegal activities aimed at dismemberment and defacto annexation of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. Describing those activities as contrary to the Charter, the statement accused the United States of preventing the creation of an independent viable economy in the Territory, turning parts of it into a testing ground for nuclear weapons, imposing on the inhabitants long-term military agreements, and using the United Nations mandate as a cover to frustrate the exercise of the inalienable right of the people of Micronesia to self-determination, freedom and independence.

In a 29 August statement, transmitted the next day to the Security Council President,⁽¹⁸⁾ the United States said that the USSR description bore little relationship to reality. It pointed out that it acted in accordance with the Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement by improving the quality of life in Micronesia, relinquishing virtually all executive, legislative and judicial functions to the Governments of Palau, the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia and signing compacts of free association with them after extensive debate within Micronesia. It also stated that under the Agreement the United States was authorized to establish military facilities and station armed forces in the Territory.

Politics and government

1982 Visiting Mission's conclusions. In its report⁽¹⁹⁾ the Council's 1982 Visiting Mission noted that since the emergence of new constitutional Governments in Micronesia there had been a reduction in the day-to-day exercise of administrative, legislative and juridical powers over the Territory, which were to be retained formally by the Administering Authority until termination of the Trusteeship Agreement. Apart from legal matters, most functions previously carried out by the Authority were transferred to the new Governments, which emphasized, in their contacts with the Mission, the importance of the interim period for gaining experience. With regard to foreign affairs, the Authority informed the Mission that it was assisting in contacts with foreign countries and international organizations. However, Micronesian leaders had expressed concern over their inability to sign directly the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea⁽²⁰⁾ or to negotiate with a group of South Pacific States on the establishment of a common fisheries organization. Assessing the role of tradition and traditional authorities, the Mission noted the influence they continued to exert on emerging institutions. It also reported a high level of political awareness and education of the Territory's inhabitants.

In the Mission's view, since 1980 each of the Territory's political components had achieved full functional self-government under the Agreement. In the Federated States of Micronesia, the new state governments, with fully elected executive and legislative branches, carried out their functions in accordance with the terms of their charters. The Palau Constitution provided for observance of democratic principles and local traditions, without being inconsistent with the national Constitution. The Marshall Islands Constitution recognized the right of each populated atoll, or island not a part of an atoll; the Northern Mariana Islands was divided into four municipal jurisdictions, each headed by an elected mayor. The Mission also reported that all the Micronesian entities had established their respective civil services and judicial authorities.

With regard to the political education programme, the Mission characterized it as successful in instructing Micronesians in democratic processes, but noted that the objective of informing them of the political options in the post-Trusteeship period had been overshadowed by preparations for constitutional referendums. During its visit, the Mission found a growing recognition on the part of constitutional leaders for an education programme that would inform the voters about the issues at stake and their political options. Noting a certain diminishing of fear among the population that termination of the Agreement would result in cessation of all financial aid and expert assistance from the United States and the United Nations, the Mission recommended that the political campaign should cover economic as well as political options and urged the Authority and the constitutional leaders to set up new education programmes.

Trusteeship Council action. The Trusteeship Council, in its 1983 report⁽²¹⁾ welcomed the continuing devolution of administrative responsibility for the Territory to fully organized constitutional Governments and noted with satisfaction that the Administering Authority was encouraging their contacts with regional and international organizations and other nations in the region. The Council also reiterated its satisfaction at the performance of legislative bodies in the Trust Territory. Regarding the civil service, a 1981 government employee strike and 1981/82 budgetary problems in Palau were a cause of concern for the Council, which reiterated that the Authority should continue to assist the Governments in stimulating private sector employment. The Council noted the reduction by the Authority of its headquarters staff in 1982 by 200 employees.

Noting with satisfaction the $375,000 for political education provided by the Administering Authority to the three Governments by the end of 1982, the Council welcomed the 1982 Mission's findings that the Territory's population appeared politically well-informed while enjoying complete freedom of expression, and the view of the 1983 Mission to Palau that the political education programme there had been useful and effective. The Council emphasized the importance of conducting adequate education programmes on economic as well as political issues, prior to plebiscites in the Federated States and the Marshall Islands, and noted with satisfaction that the juridical systems in the Territory were fully established and functioning.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. In its conclusions and recommendations⁽⁶⁾ the Committee on colonial countries noted that administrative responsibility throughout the Territory was exercised by local authorities but regretted that the High Commissioner still maintained the power, although rarely invoked, to suspend certain legislation. The Committee recalled that the Administering Authority was duty-bound to transfer all power to the Territory's freely elected representatives.

Economic conditions

Conclusions of the 1982 Visiting Mission. While noting in its report⁽¹⁰⁾ the significant efforts by the Administering Authority in preparing for the end of Trusteeship, the 1982 Visiting Mission pointed out the limited impact on the Micronesian economy, which remained structurally imbalanced and dependent on outside financing.

Given Micronesia's great distances and the spread of population over a large number of islands, the Mission was particularly concerned about the problem of transport, which, despite some progress, was exacerbated by the inadequate road network and irregularities of the inter-island shipping service. It called on the Authority to play a galvanizing role in developing an effective transportation system and proposed increased participation in the effort by relevant United Nations agencies.

Micronesian agriculture, although facing a number of serious constraints such as subsistence-type farming, a fragmentary pattern of landholding and dependence on food imports, was viewed as having the potential for development. The Mission noted the encouraging results of the introduction in various parts of the Territory of import taxes on foodstuffs, financial incentives, export promotion and other measures, and made recommendations on improving livestock breeding and production of copra, Micronesia's most important agricultural product. Of crucial importance for its future development were Micronesia's rich marine resources, capable of meeting the entire domestic demand and becoming a major source of export earnings, processing activity, employment and income in most parts of the Territory. In this connection, the Mission found that the Governments in various entities were concerned with the protection of their 200-mile economic zone.

Another priority issue was the neglected state of economic development in the outer islands and the outlying municipalities. The Mission urged the Authority to provide the necessary resources under the second-level capital improvement programme to establish and upgrade the economic infrastructure. It also said that due attention should be given to maintenance of the rapidly deteriorating infrastructure, increase in export earnings and income from tourism, establishment of a viable statistical system and a long-term planning programme, and reduction of administrative expenses.

With regard to public finance and taxation, the Mission reported a steady enhancement of the budgetary powers of the territorial entities, stressing, however, that the taxation system remained heavily dependent on income tax. It also noted numerous requests for greater financial assistance from the Administering Authority, whose appropriations and federal programme grants were the main source of investment capital in the Territory.

Trusteeship Council action. In its 1983 report⁽²⁾ the Trusteeship Council noted with regret that Micronesia remained, to a large extent, economically and financially dependent on the Administering Authority and that there had been no significant reduction of the economy's structural imbalances. Emphasizing the need for economic and financial assistance to Micronesian Governments, the Council noted the Authority's efforts in that respect, including an overall 9 per cent increase in budgetary allocations, but regretted the delay in launching the second phase of the capital improvement programme; it was hopeful that the Authority would provide substantial budgetary support through the compact of free association. The Council endorsed the conclusions of the 1982 Visiting Mission, laying stress on the problems of infrastructure, transport and outer island development, and on the pressing need for a viable statistical system. It urged the Administering Authority to give serious consideration to preparing an overall development programme as a prerequisite for inward investment.

Regarding public finance matters, the Council noted that in 1981/82 the constitutional Governments had received $98.6 million from the Administering Authority and $21.3 million from federal categorical grants, and that the number of health and education programmes had increased over that period, while several federal programmes had been, regrettably, reduced or discontinued. The Council also reiterated the Mission's conclusions with regard to the need for early establishment of separate financial management systems in each Micronesian entity and the advisability, in view of the taxation system's heavy dependence on income tax, of introducing import duties on non-essential goods or items competing with local products.

The Council welcomed the continuing development of relations between Micronesian Governments and other regional States, as well as international organizations and regional and international programmes. It also noted with satisfaction that the Economic Development Loan Fund (EDLF) was fully operational through the central banks in each government centre; expressed hope for the speedy resolution of the administrative and legal difficulties encountered in the transfer of public lands and spoke for continuation of the cadastral survey of private lands; and reaffirmed that the Authority had a duty to help the constitutional Governments expand agricultural and livestock production to achieve greater self-sufficiency.

Reiterating that the development of marine resources was a high-priority aspect of the Territory's economic future, the Council noted the Administering Authority's intention to endorse the constitutional Governments' efforts in developing their fishing industries and assist them in ensuring their rights over the 200-mile zones. It also noted the hope of the Governments of the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands and Palau to sign the Convention on the Law of the Sea even before the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement and the fact that the Authority had no objection to their signing after the termination of the Agreement.

The Council endorsed the Mission's conclusions that tourism should develop in a gradual and planned manner to avoid overwhelming the small and fragile economies, social structures, environment and cultural traditions of the Territory.

With regard to transport, while noting such positive developments as the construction of new airstrips, road improvements and inauguration of satellite ground stations in Palau and the Marshall Islands and gradual commissioning of all the stations in the Federated States, the Council called for better sea transport to integrate the outer islands into the Territory's economy and increased efforts to provide a minimum road network. It also reiterated its concern at the poor development of small industrial enterprises in the Territory.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. In its conclusions and recommendations⁽⁶⁾ the Committee on colonial countries called for increased economic assistance to the Trust Territory to help its people gain economic independence and reduce the structural imbalances of the economy.

Noting the overall 9 per cent increase in budgetary allocations for the Territory, an $18.4 million appropriation for the capital improvement programme, the progress in EDLF operation and the encouragement given to investment, exports and tourism, the Committee recalled the Administering Authority's obligation to the Territory's economic development. It also urged the Authority to safeguard and guarantee, in co-operation with the local authorities, the right of Micronesians to own and dispose freely of the natural resources and to control their future development. In this connection, the Committee noted the work of the Territory's maritime authorities to strengthen the existing legislation on a 200-mile exclusive economic zone, and reaffirmed that the Micronesian people's rights over such a zone should be respected and that they should receive all benefits deriving from it.

Social conditions

Conclusions of the 1982 Visiting Mission.

Regarding social advancement, the 1982 Visiting Mission concluded⁽¹⁰⁾ that all aspects of medical and health care services in the Territory were the responsibility of the constitutional Governments, with the Micronesia Health Co-ordinating Council periodically reviewing health plans and their implementation and the Trust Territory Bureau of Health Services providing technical and advisory assistance. The Mission commended the Administering Authority for its efforts to improve health standards, noting its consistently increasing expenditures on public health.

After touring hospitals and dispensaries in various parts of the Territory, the Mission recommended that medical facilities be constructed with due consideration to local weather conditions and that sufficient funds be set aside for regular maintenance. It also hoped that both the Administering Authority and the constitutional Governments would give priority to improving the dispensary services in the Territory, particularly in the outer islands. With regard to medical referrals, the Mission noted the considerable improvement in inter-island transportation for carrying patients from outer islands to hospitals within the Territory, but reported numerous complaints about the exorbitant cost of health referring services.

Addressing other aspects of social development, the Mission expressed deep concern over the worsening unemployment problem, observed that there continued to be too much reliance on external aid for financing and carrying out community activities, and described as sensible the approach to the population problem by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, which was prepared to assist a family planning programme in the Territory. The Mission also questioned the Administering Authority's assumptions that local materials were inadequate for use in the housing construction programme, partly sponsored by the Trust Territory Administration, and that high maintenance costs frequently precluded preventive maintenance.

While noting the legal equality of men and women in the Territory and certain steps taken to put it into practice, the Mission urged the authorities to recognize the importance of women playing a full part in economic, social and political development. Juvenile delinquency continued to be a major concern, its increase caused mainly by a lack of job opportunities, the drift of youth to the urban centres and alcoholism. The Mission commended various youth training programmes for unemployed and potentially delinquent youths and called on the Administering Authority to view sympathetically requests from the Governments for appropriate assistance and technical support.

Trusteeship Council action. The Trusteeship Council, in its 1983 report⁽²⁾ took note of the transfer of all health-related activities to the constitutional Governments, an increase in the number of doctors in the Territory and the Governments' encouragement of students to go into the medical field. It also urged the Administering Authority to continue assisting the development of health services in the Territory and welcomed its emphasis on the improvement of hospital facilities and the efforts to improve health standards in the Territory, particularly noting the doubling of health appropriations to $8.1 million per annum between 1970 and 1980, and the Authority's $10 million in assistance to the construction of a new health-care centre in the Northern Mariana Islands. The Council welcomed the combined efforts of the Governments, the Authority, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund in containing and eradicating a cholera epidemic in Truk. It also stressed the importance of maintaining and expanding dispensary services in the Territory, especially away from state centres.

Noting that community activities regrettably continued to rely too much on external aid, the Council reiterated the need for the Territory's inhabitants to participate more actively in community projects and urged the Authority to continue assisting various kinds of infrastructure-building undertakings. It also expressed considerable concern over the apparently worsening unemployment and the persevering imbalance between the wage-earners in the public and the private sectors, urging the Authority and the constitutional Governments to give high priority to the problem. The Council was concerned about the discontinuation of a housing loan programme for the Federated States of Micronesia and the increasing incidence of juvenile delinquency. It regretted the phasing out of youth-related programmes, but expressed satisfaction at the increased funding under the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act. With regard to public safety, the Council welcomed the Authority's assurances of continued assistance to the constitutional Governments in maintaining order and training juridical, legal and police agencies.

Education

Conclusions of the 1982 Visiting Mission. Assessing educational advancement in the Territory, the 1982 Visiting Mission reported⁽¹⁾ that responsibility for educational operations had been transferred to the constitutional Governments and commended the Administering Authority for its achievements in laying a sound foundation for future development. There were many problems remaining, however, such as inadequate funds and shortages of qualified teachers, school supplies and accommodation. The Mission observed that there was an urgent need to maintain and restore existing buildings, as well as to construct new ones, and reiterated the importance of providing adequate funds. The Mission also noted various steps taken to train more teachers and provide more school-books in local languages, emphasized the importance of aid for the development of the College of Micronesia and noted the increasing interest by the constitutional Governments in preserving their cultural heritage.

Trusteeship Council action. In its 1983 report⁽²⁾ the Trusteeship Council congratulated the Administering Authority for the sound foundations it had laid in the Territory for primary education but noted with regret such remaining problems as inadequate funding and shortages of teachers and supplies. The Council continued to be concerned about the deterioration of school facilities and the spreading of social problems among the unemployed youth, including university graduates and school drop-outs.

Noting the Authority's concern about the deterioration of primary school buildings, the Council urged it to consider funding maintenance programmes after termination of the Trusteeship Agreement. Of particular concern for the Council was the lowering of standards at the College of Micronesia, the Territory's only institution of higher learning, which was overcrowded due to building deterioration and threatened with losing accreditation. The Council recommended speedy implementation of the Authority-funded project for a new College campus, while noting with satisfaction the expanded role of the Northern Mariana Islands Community College.

The Council was pleased to note the interest shown by the constitutional Governments in preserving their cultural heritage, including broadening programmes for preserving indigenous language as well as measures to provide more school-books in local languages. Addressing the problems of vocational training, it indicated the need for its close correlation with job requirements and welcomed the Administering Authority's intention to continue co-operation in training for actual job opportunities in the various jurisdictions of the Territory.

The Council commended the efforts made to overcome the shortage of qualified teachers and drew special attention to the College of Micronesia as the principal teacher training institution.

The Council urged the Authority to co-operate fully with the constitutional Governments and the United Nations Information Centre in Tokyo in ensuring rapid, efficient and comprehensive dissemination of information on the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System in the Trust Territory.

Claims

In its report⁽¹⁰⁾ the 1982 Visiting Mission reiterated that outstanding claims for damage resulting from Second World War hostilities between Japan and the United States (Title I claims) should be met in full as speedily as possible and before the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement.

This concern was reiterated by the Trusteeship Council⁽²⁾ which urged both countries to resume negotiations and welcomed the Administering Authority's statements that all parties were continuing their efforts to settle Title I claims, with nearly 30 per cent of the awarded $34 million already paid, and that all post-war claims against the United States (Title II claims) had been settled.

Radioactive waste management

During its 1982 tour of the Territory⁽¹⁰⁾ the Visiting Mission noted the expressed opposition of the Trust Territory's public officials and private citizens to the possible disposal of nuclear wastes in the sea by States having Pacific coastlines.

The Trusteeship Council noted this concern in its 1983 report⁽²⁾ the United States statement that it did not intend to dispose of nuclear wastes in the Territory or in adjacent waters and the Administering Authority's assurances that the competent agencies continued to take this problem into consideration.

The Council also noted that the Northern Marianas Commonwealth Legislature had passed a law declaring a nuclear-free and chemical-free zone in and around the Northern Mariana Islands.

Resettlement of the Bikini and Enewetak populations

The 1982 Visiting Mission to the Trust Territory⁽¹⁰⁾ examined the situation of the people of Bikini and Enewetak atolls in the Marshall Islands who had relocated to other islands because of radioactive contamination from nuclear-weapon tests three decades earlier. On Ejit Island, the Mission was asked by Bikinians living there to convey to the Administering Authority their request for resettlement on Bikini or Hawaii, or, if that was not possible, to have the United States develop Ejit. During the meetings with the Mission at Majuro, Marshall Islands, representatives of the people of Enewetak spoke of various medical, food, maintenance and youth problems and stressed that the United States should assume responsibility for them, in part in the compact of free association.

In its 1983 report⁽²⁾ the Trusteeship Council reiterated its serious concern about the quality of medical care available to the displaced persons of Bikini and Enewetak and regretted that a health programme proposed under United States legislation had not been implemented. While noting the 1982 supplementary appropriation of $21.4 million by the United States for resettlement purposes and the Administering Authority's measures to assist and compensate nuclear test victims, the Council reiterated that resettlement proposals should take fully into account any remaining health hazards and recommended that the Authority continue to remove radiation threats.

The Council recalled the wish of the Bikinians of Ejit to resettle to another island and urged the Administering Authority to develop Ejit in case such resettlement was not feasible. It hoped that the Authority would interpret its obligations generously, particularly regarding health and compensation matters, and that there would be a speedy conclusion to the negotiations between the Authority and the Marshallese authorities on establishing a compensation fund and referral of complaints to the competent courts. The Council also noted that a scientific research mission was studying the possible rehabilitation of Bikini.

Military base

The 1982 Visiting Mission described in its report⁽¹⁰⁾ a sail-in strike held from June to October 1982 by the inhabitants of Ebeye and Third Island who, as owners of the land used for the United States military facility on Kwajalein Atoll, reoccupied it by establishing camps at Kwajalein and Roi-Namir and stationed their boats in the mid-atoll corridor of the Kwajalein lagoon. The Mission concluded that the conflict between the landowners, on the one hand, and the Government of the Marshall Islands and the Administering Authority, on the other, was caused by inadequate compensation for rent provided in the interim agreement and the compact of free association, and the landowners' inability to return to leased ancestral land while having to live in overpopulated conditions, with deteriorating housing and community services. The Mission welcomed the moderation displayed by the parties to the conflict, which occurred without serious incident. It also called on the United States scientific community at Kwajalein and Roi-Namur to improve its knowledge and understanding of the people of the Marshall Islands.

The Trusteeship Council(2) reiterated its concern over the difficulties of the people living on Ebeye arising primarily from over-population. It also urged the Administering Authority to arrive at universally satisfactory solutions to specific problems raised by the United States military installations on Kwajalein Atoll and to avoid a repetition of incidents such as the sail-in.

Visiting missions

The report of the July 1982 Visiting Mission to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands⁽¹⁰⁾ was submitted, on 16 May 1983, to the Trusteeship Council for consideration (for the report's conclusions, see above, under subject headings).

Trusteeship Council action. On 2 June 1983, the Trusteeship Council adopted resolution 2175(L) by vote.

1. Takes note of the report of the Visiting Mission and of the observations of the Administering Authority thereon;

2. Expresses its appreciation of the work accomplished by the Visiting Mission on its behalf;

3. Decides that it will continue to take the recommendations, conclusions and observations of the Visiting Mission into account in future examination of matters relating to the Trust Territory;

Trusteeship Council resolution 2175(L)

2 June 1983 Meeting 1559 3-01

Draft by France and United Kingdom (T/L.1236); agenda item 6.
Meeting number. TC 1559.

Explaining its abstention, the USSR said that, while the report indicated the failure by the Administering Authority to fulfil its obligations, the material had not been presented in a way to enable valid conclusions to be drawn and specific proposals to be put forward to alter the situation and compel the Authority to discharge its obligations. The USSR asserted that the report did not give due consideration to the illegal fragmentation of the Territory by the United States, was silent on the planned expansion of its illegal military activity aimed at establishing a military strategic staging-point in the Pacific region, and contained no objective evaluation of the United States responsibility for the catastrophic economic situation in the Territory. The USSR also noted that the preambular paragraphs of the resolution might have referred also to other statements made in the Council, but did not oppose it because it invited the Administering Authority to take into account the Council members' recommendations.

During 1983, visiting missions of the Council observed plebiscites in Palau, the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia (see above).

Hearings

From 18 to 20 May 1983, the Trusteeship Council heard the following 13 petitioners whose requests for oral hearings had been previously circulated: Senator Henchi Balos, of Bikini; Stuart Beck, on behalf of Senator Joshua Koshiba, National Congress of the Republic of Palau; William Butler, Minority Rights Group; Roger S. Clark, International League for Human Rights; Silvestre T. Cruz, Tinian Landowners' Association; Douglas Faulkner, a photographer/writer living in New York; Ibedul Y. M. Gibbons, Mayor, Koror State, Palau; Bernie Tosie Keldermans, of Palau; Julian Riklon, of the Rongelap and Kwajalein Atolls, Marshall Islands; Christopher Roosevelt, on behalf of the Coalition to Support the Palau Constitution; George Wald, Professor Emeritus of Biology at Harvard University, United States; Jonathan M. Weisgall, Legal Counsel, Bikini; and Father William Wood, Focus on Micronesia Coalition.

Meeting numbers. TC 1546-1549.

Petitions, communications and observations

The Trusteeship Council, on 2 and 8 June 1983, examined 83 written petitions and 29 communications it received, and drew the attention of the petitioners to the observations of the Administering Authority, where applicable.

Other aspects of the International Trusteeship System

Fellowships and scholarships

Under a scholarship programme, launched by the General Assembly in 1952,(1) 11 Member States had in the past made scholarships available for students from Trust Territories: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, USSR, Yugoslavia. In a report to the Trusteeship Council, covering the period from 14 May 1982 to 18 May 1983,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that in April 1983 those States had been requested to provide up-to-date information on the scholarships available and the extent of their utilization. As of 18 May, a response had been received from the USSR, which stated that it had no students from the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

On 26 May, the Council, without objection, took note of the report.

Meeting number. TC 1556.

Information dissemination

A report of the Secretary-General covering the period from 1 May 1982 to 30 April 1983⁽³⁾ described activities by the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) in distributing United Nations documents, official records and information materials throughout the Trust Territory, including its legislatures, libraries, offices of administrators, educational institutions and the information media. The United Nations Information Centre in Tokyo, while continuing to mail materials to the Territory, gave wide publicity to the 1983 Visiting Mission to observe the plebiscite in Palau. Its counterpart in Washington, D. C., provided information on developments in the Trusteeship Council to the United States Congress and Departments of State and the Interior, as well as to non-governmental organizations and the media. DPI radio programmes, considered the most effective means of bringing news of United Nations activities to Micronesians, were dispatched weekly to the Territory and played by all local radio stations. Video tape cassettes were widely used by various educational institutions and the library of the College of Micronesia in Ponape kept United Nations films for loan (temporarily suspended during the period under review due to a shortage of staff).

In observance of the 1982 United Nations Day, messages from the President of the Trusteeship Council and the Secretary-General were broadcast throughout Micronesia.

On 26 May, the Council took note of the report without objection.

Trusteeship Council

The Trusteeship Council held its fiftieth session at United Nations Headquarters from 16 May to 10 June 1983. The agenda of the session⁽⁴⁾ was adopted on 16 May (for list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV).

At its resumed fiftieth session, held on 28 November, the Council adopted its report to the Security Council⁽⁵⁾

Meeting numbers. TC 1544, 1563.

Co-operation with the Committee on colonial countries

At its 1983 session,⁽⁵⁾ the Trusteeship Council considered together the questions of attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory and co-operation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

On 10 June, the Council, by 3 votes to 1, decided to draw the Security Council's attention to the conclusions and recommendations adopted at the session, along with the statements by its members, on the attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory in accordance with the Charter's relevant provisions. An amendment proposed by the USSR, which would have added a reference to the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries, was rejected by 3 votes to 1.

Meeting numbers. TC 1558, 1561.

Co-operation with CERD and the Decade against racial discrimination

In 1983, the Trusteeship Council⁽⁵⁾ considered together the question of co-operation with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) and the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983). On 26 May, the Council took note, without objection, of the statements made.

Chapter III

Namibia

United Nations efforts to achieve independence for Namibia—the largest Territory remaining under colonial rule—continued throughout 1983.

The Security Council convened twice at the request of the African countries and the Non-Aligned Movement to consider the question of Namibia. At each series of meetings it considered a report by the Secretary-General on implementation of the plan for Namibia's independence approved by the Council in 1978. In May 1983, the Secretary-General reported that despite progress in certain areas, issues outside the scope of the United Nations plan were being raised. South Africa had agreed to co-operate, provided that Cuban troops were withdrawn from Angola. After the first set of meetings, the Council, in resolution 532(1983) of 31 May, mandated the Secretary-General to consult with the parties to the proposed cease-fire and requested him to report on the results.

Having visited the front-line States in February and South Africa, Namibia and Angola in August, the Secretary-General stated that further progress had been made on the outstanding questions, but South Africa had not changed its position on linking the two issues, which made it impossible to launch the independence plan. After considering the Secretary-General's report, the Council, in resolution 539(1983) of 28 October, rejected South Africa's linking Namibia's independence to extraneous issues, called on South Africa to decide on the electoral system it preferred for a constituent assembly in an independent Namibia, and requested the Secretary-General to report on progress in implementing the plan for Namibia's independence before the end of the year. In the event of continued obstruction by South Africa, the Council decided to consider the adoption of appropriate measures under the United Nations Charter.

Reporting to the Council in December, the Secretary-General noted that South Africa had not changed its position, nor had it indicated its choice for an electoral system.

At its regular 1983 session, the General Assembly considered the question of Namibia and adopted five resolutions on the subject, including one (resolution 38/36 B) requesting the Security Council to implement the plan for Namibia's independence and urging it to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

Resolution 38/36 A dealt with the situation in Namibia resulting from South Africa's illegal occupation. By that text, the Assembly called for action by Member States, the Security Council, other United Nations bodies and intergovernmental organizations, and the United Nations Secretariat to counteract the occupation. The Assembly outlined the work programme of the United Nations Council for Namibia in resolution 38/35 C and requested the Secretariat and the Council to take measures to disseminate information in support of Namibia in resolution 38/36 D. By resolution 38/36 E, the Assembly called for assistance to Namibians, particularly through the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

The International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, organized by the Council for Namibia, was held in Paris from 25 to 29 April. It adopted the Paris Declaration on Namibia and issued a Programme of Action. In the Declaration, the Conference, expressing concern over South Africa's continued illegal occupation, stated that the repeated use of the veto by the Security Council's Western permanent members to prevent the adoption of sanctions had encouraged South Africa to defy the United Nations. Affirming that the Namibian people were entitled to use all means at their disposal to achieve independence, the Conference expressed solidarity with the people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), their sole and authentic representative, and called for assistance to them. It stated that sanctions were the only means to ensure South Africa complied with United Nations decisions and called on the Security Council to take such steps.

Namibians outside their country continued to receive assistance from various United Nations programmes, financed primarily by the Fund for Namibia. In 1983, the Fund spent $8.8 million, while contributions to the Fund by States totalled $4.3 million. Funding was also provided from the regular United Nations budget, UNDP and executing agencies. The Assembly, in resolution 38/36 E, allocated $1 million to the Fund from the 1984 United Nations regular budget.

The Fund consisted of three main programmes co-ordinated by the United Nations Council for Namibia—the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; the United Nations Institute for Namibia; and educational, social and relief assistance to Namibians. Under the Nationhood Programme, which continued to finance training programmes and surveys of the Namibian economic and social sectors in preparation for independence, the United Nations Vocational Training Centre for Namibia in Angola became operational in August 1983 when 100 students were enrolled. Also concerned with developing human resources in preparation for independence, the Institute for Namibia continued its various research, training and planning activities, including studies on agrarian reform, constitutional options, a language policy and manpower requirements. The third programme, administered by the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, emphasized the immediate needs and welfare of Namibians.

Namibia question

Conference on the Namibian people. The International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, organized by the United Nations Council for Namibia in accordance with a December 1982 resolution of the General Assembly⁽¹⁾ was held in Paris from 25 to 29 April 1983.⁽²⁾ Pursuant to the Assembly's resolution, invitations to participate were sent to all States Members of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies; organizations which had been invited to participate as observers in the Assembly; national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU); United Nations bodies, organs and offices; the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries; eminent persons; and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). (For list of States Members attending, see APPENDIX III.) The Conference was preceded by a journalists' encounter on 21 and 22 April and followed by a workshop for NGOs on 30 April. The Conference conducted its work in four series of simultaneous meetings—plenary, the Committee of the Whole, the drafting Committee and the Bureau.

At its concluding session on 29 April, the Conference adopted by acclamation the Paris Declaration on Namibia. The Declaration and the Committee's report and a Programme of Action on Namibia were transmitted by a 9 May letter⁽³⁾ from the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia to the Secretary-General for consideration by the Assembly and the Security Council.

In the Declaration, the Conference affirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and national independence in a united Namibia. It expressed concern over South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia in disregard of the international community as expressed in numerous United Nations resolutions. The Conference found that the repeated use of the veto by the Security Council's Western permanent members to prevent the adoption of sanctions against South Africa had not only encouraged the South African régime in its lawlessness but had provoked increased acts of defiance to the authority of the United Nations (see p. 119 et seq.). The Conference affirmed that the Namibian people, in the exercise of their right of self-defence, were entitled to use all means at their disposal, including armed struggle, to repel South Africa's aggression and to achieve independence. Expressing solidarity with the people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), their sole and authentic representative, it called on participants to render increased assistance to the Namibian people and to SWAPO, its liberation movement.

The Conference denounced South Africa's military buildup in Namibia and its use of compulsory military service for Namibians and of mercenaries; it expressed concern about South Africa's nuclear weapons capability, and reports of certain countries' military and nuclear assistance to that country (see p. 135). It strongly condemned the armed aggression and acts of destabilization against independent States of the region (see p. 169) and condemned aggression against Angola (see p. 173). Concern was also expressed about violations of human rights of Namibians, its imprisonment of SWAPO freedom fighters, the rapid depletion of Namibia's natural resources which were the inviolable heritage of its people, assistance provided by international organizations to South Africa (see p. 146), and South Africa's refusal to comply with United Nations resolutions on Namibia.

Calling for the release of Namibian political prisoners, the Conference demanded that all captured freedom fighters be accorded prisoner-of-war status as called for by the 1949 Geneva Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and the 1977 Additional Protocol I.⁽⁴⁾ It called for increased material assistance to oppressed Namibians and to SWAPO in the liberation struggle. It called on transnational corporations to terminate their illegal exploitation of Namibia's natural resources and affirmed that South Africa and the foreign economic interests which were illegally exploiting those resources were liable to pay reparations to the Government of an independent Namibia. Denouncing any South African scheme to perpetuate its domination in Namibia, it stated that the United Nations plan for Namibia endorsed by Security Council resolution 435 (1978)⁽⁵⁾ remained the only basis for peaceful settlement of the Namibian question, called for its immediate implementation, and rejected the attempts of the United States and South Africa to obstruct implementation. The Conference also rejected their efforts to link Namibia's independence with irrelevant issues, in particular the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola, which constituted interference in the internal affairs of that country.

According to the Conference, South Africa's policies towards Namibia constituted a threat to international peace and security, and expressed dismay at the Security Council's failure to discharge its responsibilities owing to the opposition of Western permanent members, and affirmed that sanctions under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter were the only available means to ensure South Africa's compliance with United Nations decisions. Therefore, the Conference called on the Council to consider further action to implement the independence plan and, pending the imposition of sanctions by the Council (see p. 129), urged the adoption of economic measures against South Africa.

The Committee of the Whole considered assistance to the people of Namibia in their struggle for independence in a united Namibia under the leadership of SWAPO, and to the front-line States so they could sustain support for the cause of Namibia, as well as measures for implementing the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence as provided for in Security Council resolutions 385(1976)⁽⁶⁾ and 435(1978).⁽⁵⁾ The Committee adopted a report and a Programme of Action on Namibia which were included in the Conference's report.⁽²⁾

In the Programme of Action, the Committee agreed that the Council should immediately impose sanctions, in view of its aggression and threat to international peace and security. It requested the Council to implement its resolutions on Namibia's independence, declare Walvis Bay an integral part of Namibia not to be negotiated between an independent Namibia and South Africa, and tighten the 1977 arms embargo against South Africa.⁽⁷⁾ States were urged to support resolution 435(1978) and to oppose linking independence with extraneous issues, in particular the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola.

It called on Governments to apply sanctions called for by the Assembly in September⁽⁸⁾ and December 1981⁽⁹⁾ and December 1982;⁽¹⁰⁾ to render political, financial, military and other material support to SWAPO in the liberation struggle and to the front-line States in exercising their right of self-defence vis-à-vis South Africa; to contribute to the United Nations Fund for Namibia and the United Nations Institute for Namibia in support of projects for the economic and social development of Namibia once independence was achieved; and to ensure that corporations and individuals within their jurisdiction complied with efforts to protect Namibia's natural resources within the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, proclaimed by the Council for Namibia in 1974⁽¹¹⁾

United Nations and other international organizations were urged to provide assistance to SWAPO and the front-line States in supporting Namibia's struggle. Increased assistance for refugees was also urged.

The Committee supported an appeal by the President of the Council for Namibia to the United Kingdom to prohibit the export of radar equipment to South Africa. Taking note of a resolution by the European Parliament concerning aid to Namibians, the Committee requested the Council, in co-operation with SWAPO, to consult with the European Economic Community and the Parliament to ensure that no action was taken implying recognition of South Africa's illegal administration of Namibia.

The Secretary-General was requested to ensure that all companies with which the United Nations had contracts complied with United Nations sanctions policies against South Africa. United Nations bodies were called on to expand the campaign for Namibia's cause and to participate in the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, including providing funds for projects approved by the Council.

NGOs were urged to support the liberation struggle and SWAPO, and to increase public awareness of the issues, especially the campaign for sanctions. An appeal was made to trade unions to organize an embargo on shipments to and from South Africa as well as transport and communication with it. Individuals working in communications and information were urged to promote Namibia's cause.

On 26 April, two countries addressed letters to the Secretary-General concerning the Conference. South Africa, in a letter⁽¹²⁾ from its Minister of Foreign Affairs and Information, said that the United Nations, by deciding to hold the Conference, had raised further doubts concerning its fitness to play the role envisaged in resolution 435(1978) by supporting SWAPO's violence, generating propaganda in SWAPO's favour, and undermining the current international negotiations on Namibia. The USSR forwarded a 25 April message⁽¹³⁾ from the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet and the Council of Ministers to the Conference's participants, expressing solidarity with peoples struggling against colonialism, condemning South Africa and its imperialist sponsors for attempts to maintain its rule in Namibia, and demanding an end to the manoeuvres of the United States and other Western Powers to frustrate United Nations decisions on Namibia's independence.

Report of the Secretary-General. In May⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on developments since 1981 concerning the implementation of its resolutions 435(1978)(5) and 439(1978).⁽¹⁵⁾

Since the adoption of the independence plan for Namibia, he and the parties concerned had held consultations on setting a date for a cease-fire and the start of the plan, but no progress had been made. In September 1981, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States (the countries known as the Western contact group which had proposed the settlement plan) said that they had developed proposals for a timetable for negotiations with the objective of implementing the independence plan in 1982. The Secretary-General was kept informed of the progress of successive phases of the ensuing negotiations. In consultations with the contact group, the front-line States, OAU, Nigeria and SWAPO, as well as with South Africa, on all aspects of United Nations involvement in implementation of the plan, he had emphasized that resolution 435(1978) must remain the basis for settling the Namibian situation. Despite reports of progress in 1982 on many points⁽¹⁶⁾ it had become clear that issues outside the scope of that resolution were becoming a factor—South Africa had informed the Secretary-General of its willingness to co-operate, provided that agreement was reached on the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. Issues unrelated to resolution 435(1978) constituted the main reason for delay in its implementation, the Secretary-General said.

As far as the United Nations was concerned, the only outstanding issues were the choice of the electoral system and the settlement of some final problems relating to the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG), to be installed in Namibia while a new government was being formed. The views of South Africa on those issues were being awaited.

The Secretary-General, having visited in February 1983 all the front-line States, where he had held discussions on Namibia with African leaders as well as with SWAPO, remained convinced of the necessity of implementing the plan without delay. He noted that the political situation in the region had deteriorated and there had been recurrent fighting; the delay in implementing the independence plan was having an adverse effect on the people of Namibia, on the prospect for a peaceful future of the region, and on international relations. He urged that the Namibia problem be regarded as a primary question in its own right.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council debated the question of Namibia at a series of 12 meetings held from 23 May to 1 June. Requests for the Council to convene were made to the President on 12 May by Mauritius⁽¹⁷⁾ on behalf of the Group of African States, and on 13 May by India⁽¹⁸⁾ on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

At their requests, the following States were invited to participate in the discussion: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, the Federal Republic of, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Niger, Nigeria, Panama, Qatar, Romania, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zambia. In accordance with a decision by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 7-12 March), which adopted a political declaration⁽¹⁹⁾ on several subjects including Namibia, a number of non-aligned States were represented in the debate by their Minister for Foreign Affairs. Those countries represented at that level were: Angola, Benin, Botswana, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

At the request of Council members and another State, certain individuals were invited to participate in conformity with rule 39^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On 20 May, Togo, Zaire and Zimbabwe called for such an invitation to Sam Nujoma, President of SWAPO⁽²⁰⁾ similar requests were made on 25 May by Jordan concerning Clovis Maksoud, Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States⁽²¹⁾ on 26 May by Togo, Zaire and Zimbabwe concerning Johnstone F. Makatini, representative of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC)⁽²²⁾ and Lesaoana S. Makhanda, representative of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC);⁽²³⁾ and on 26 May by France, the United Kingdom and the United States concerning L. J. Barnes and J. G. A. Diergaardt.⁽²⁴⁾ In addition,

^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

the Council invited representatives of certain other United Nations bodies to participate, in accordance with past practice: the President of the Council for Namibia, a representative of the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, and the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries).

On 31 May, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 532(1983).

The Security Council,
Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,
Recalling General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966,
Recalling and reaffirming its resolutions 301(1971), 385(1976), 431(1978), 432(1978), 435(1978) and 439(1978),

Reaffirming the legal responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and the primary responsibility of the Security Council for ensuring the implementation of its resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978), including the holding of free and fair elections in Namibia under the supervision and control of the United Nations,

Taking note of the results of the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, held at UNESCO House in Paris from 25 to 29 April 1983,

Taking note of the protracted and exhaustive consultations which have taken place since the adoption of resolution 435(1978),

Further noting with regret that those consultations have not yet brought about the implementation of resolution 435(1978),

1. Condemns South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia in flagrant defiance of resolutions of the General Assembly and decision of the Security Council;

2. Calls upon South Africa to make a firm commitment as to its readiness to comply with Council resolution 435(1978) for the independence of Namibia;

3. Further calls upon South Africa to co-operate forthwith and fully with the Secretary-General in order to expedite the implementation of resolution 435(1978) for the early independence of Namibia;

4. Decides to mandate the Secretary-General to undertake consultations with the parties to the proposed cease-fire, with a view to securing the speedy implementation of resolution 435(1978);

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the results of these consultations as soon as possible and not later than 31 August 1983;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 532(1983)

31 May 1983 Meeting 2449 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/15803).
Meeting numbers. SC 2439-2444, 2446-2451.

Speaking after the vote, the United Kingdom said that in regard to the third preambular paragraph listing previous Council resolutions 301(1971)⁽²⁵⁾ and 439(1978)⁽¹⁵⁾ on which the United Kingdom had abstained, its position remained unchanged; in regard to the results of the international Conference on Namibia (see above), of which the current Council resolution took note, the United Kingdom was not a party to its decisions. The latter view was echoed by the United States, which also pointed out that the third preambular paragraph referred to resolution 439(1978) which it did not support.

All speakers in the debate supported implementation of resolution 435(1978) and many (Angola, Bangladesh, China, Egypt, Gabon, Gambia, Federal Republic of Germany, Guyana, India, speaking for the Non-Aligned Movement, Indonesia, Kenya, Kuwait, Niger, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda and Venezuela) described it as the sole basis for negotiations on independence for Namibia. Gambia, for example, considered that the framework for a settlement to the question of Namibia existed in resolution 435(1978) and that what was needed at the current juncture was the political will to implement it. Sierra Leone called for its immediate implementation and for resolving the remaining issues; to that end, voter education and registration was needed, as well as free assembly to permit political parties to participate in an electoral process without intimidation, the removal of South Africa from the Territory and increased responsibilities for the Council for Namibia in the electoral process.

Most speakers expressed appreciation for the Secretary-General's report and agreed with his conclusions.

South Africa felt that the Council had been convened to undermine negotiations currently under way. During the previous five years, South Africa, which had never accepted the United Nations view that its presence in the Territory was illegal, had persistently searched for an internationally acceptable settlement and had advised the Secretary-General in 1979 that early implementation of resolution 435(1978) was imperative. Since then, Secretariat officials had altered the independence proposal to remove basic guarantees for the security of Namibians, at the insistence of SWAPO and with the connivance of certain countries. The United Nations, through material and political assistance, had demonstrated its bias in favour of SWAPO. South Africa believed there was a defacto linkage between the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola and the settlement of the Namibia question since the introduction of hostile surrogates of a super-Power into southern Africa had implications for the region's security. South Africa had attempted to play a constructive role in removing the last major obstacle to a settlement—the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola—and was prepared to hold further talks with Angola.

It would not bow to threats nor tolerate the expansion of Soviet imperialism on its borders.

Responding to South Africa's claims, Botswana said that by giving some form of recognition to the role played by the Western contact group, the United Nations had demonstrated its desire to dispel South Africa's concerns regarding bias in favour of SWAPO.

Much of the debate focused on whether Namibia's independence should be linked to security in the region, in particular to the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola, as suggested by South Africa. Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Benin, China, Cuba, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, India, speaking for the Movement of Non-Aligned countries, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Mauritius, on behalf of the African Group at the United Nations, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, speaking for the Arab group at the United Nations, Romania, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Zambia and Zimbabwe rejected the idea of linkage, which many of them described as extraneous or irrelevant to Namibia's independence. According to the United States, if there were to be a lasting settlement, the conditions needed to be created in which all countries in the region, particularly South Africa and Angola, could feel secure; this would involve respect for territorial integrity by all countries and the withdrawal of all foreign forces in the region.

Angola, noting that South African troops had continued occupying southern Angola since 1981, said that the major obstacle to implementation of resolution 435(1978) was the fact that the United States persisted in trying to link the two issues although linkage was incompatible with the letter and spirit of that resolution and constituted unacceptable interference in the internal affairs of Angola. Similarly, Grenada said that Namibia was held hostage because the United States insisted on the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola, a policy Grenada rejected because independence could not be predicated on a diminution of Angolan sovereignty. Kenya viewed South Africa's demand as unrealistic, unrelated and unacceptable. Mongolia and Togo stated that Cuban troops were there to protect Angola from South African aggression. Cuba stressed that its forces were there at the request of the Government.

Having participated in negotiations regarding implementation of the United Nations plan, Nigeria said it was not prepared to expand the discussion beyond resolution 435(1978); independence was being sacrificed on the altar of mistaken strategic perceptions by the United States. Sri Lanka noted that the withdrawal of Cuban troops had been acknowledged by some members of the Western contact group to be irrelevant, as did India, which added that the non-aligned countries regretted that certain countries had supported linkage thus abetting South Africa in delaying Namibia's independence. According to Tunisia, South Africa and its allies were introducing extraneous issues to prolong the illegal occupation of Namibia; the resurgence of East-West tension provided the pretext for prejudicing the negotiating process by trying to establish an unacceptable link between Namibia's independence and the right of States to choose their allies.

While Canada, a member of the contact group, could not accept South Africa's conditions for the implementation of resolution 435(1978), it acknowledged that regional security concerns existed and posed an obstacle, which it hoped could be resolved with respect for the sovereignty of the States concerned.

The United Republic of Tanzania said that linkage, rejected by the front-line States, OAU, the non-aligned summit and the General Assembly, was in defiance of international law because it was interference in the internal affairs of Angola.

Many countries agreed that the question of foreign troops in a country was a matter between sovereign States, pertaining to the right of a State to defend itself, and that raising the issue constituted interference in its internal affairs. Angola, Benin, Botswana, Cuba, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guyana, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique, the Netherlands, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania shared that view. The Syrian Arab Republic said that South Africa had aborted all efforts to implement the United Nations plan by raising unrelated issues.

Botswana, China, Ghana, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar, speaking for the Arab group, Romania, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, the USSR, Upper Volta, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe said that raising the linkage issue was the direct cause for the delay in implementing resolution 435(1978). Uganda said that the only matter holding up Namibia's independence was the injection of that issue into the negotiations. Zimbabwe was among those pointing out that Cuban troops had been in Angola since 1975 but the issue had not been raised at the time resolution 435(1978) was accepted by all sides; it added that pressure should be put on South Africa to withdraw its forces from Angola, since that was the current obstacle to peace in the region.

According to Argentina, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Canada, Chile, China, Cyprus, France, Ghana, Guinea, Indonesia, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua, Niger, Panama, Romania, Tunisia, Zaire and Zimbabwe, extraneous issues or conditions should not be attached to implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence. France, a member of the contact group, said that Namibia's independence could not be impeded by such considerations, conditions or prerequisites, and for that reason, the Council should give the Secretary-General a mandate to resume contact with all parties concerned to ensure implementation of resolution 435(1973); as for the future security of Namibia, France was willing to serve as guarantor in the region if requested. Panama said that the Council should not allow Namibia's independence to be made conditional on or linked to the strategic interests of other States, or to the conclusion of international agreements under the doctrines of geographical proximity.

Many countries stressed that it was the responsibility of the Council to implement the resolution in question. Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Benin, Botswana, China, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, India, on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, Jamaica, Jordan, Malaysia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Romania, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam and Zimbabwe shared this view.

Some States, including Bulgaria, Cuba, China, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, India, on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, Indonesia, Kenya, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, for the Arab group, Romania, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, said that South Africa was using delaying tactics to prolong its occupation by raising obstacles to implementation. Ethiopia said that in negotiations conducted through the contact group, South Africa, using such tactics, had pursued its policy of intransigence and prevarication, and currently insisted on introducing extraneous issues; in addition, the United States was striving to make implementation conditional on some of its strategic objectives.

In a similar vein, Afghanistan, Benin, Bulgaria, China, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Mozambique, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Togo, the USSR and Upper Volta believed that South Africa had been able to maintain its intransigent position because of the support it received from certain countries. Bulgaria said that without that assistance provided by some Western countries, particularly the United States, Namibia would have achieved independence; South Africa continued its oppression and aggression through the use of mercenaries whom it recruited from Western countries. China spoke similarly, stating that South Africa would not have been so intransigent had it not been for the support of a super-

Power which sought to maintain its vested interests in the region. In Ghana's view, South Africa was emboldened by the support it received from some powerful countries in a position to bring it to heel and which had been entrusted with the responsibility of seeking a peaceful solution to the problem.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that South Africa and its allies were attempting to bypass SWAPO and to impose a solution that would support their interests. Mexico believed that the presence of South Africa in Namibia was something which had been acquiesced in by those who could have prevailed upon it to cease its occupation. Pakistan expressed a similar view, adding that protection provided by some members of the contact group, as demonstrated by the veto of mandatory sanctions in the Council, had emboldened South Africa to continue its occupation and aggression. Poland said that South Africa's policies would not have been possible without the co-operation of major countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, particularly the United States.

A number of countries mentioned the United States role, in particular, in blocking implementation of resolution 435(1978). They included Afghanistan, Botswana, Bulgaria, Cuba, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Iran, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Poland, Qatar, for the Arab group, Uganda, the USSR and Zambia. The German Democratic Republic rejected the United States efforts to interfere in the internal affairs of States through the linkage policy and to raise new obstacles to resolving the Namibia problem. While appreciating the role of the contact group, Zambia noted that the United States had injected the linkage issue just at a time when the parties to the conflict had resolved major misunderstandings.

Algeria, Benin, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guyana, Jamaica, Liberia, Malaysia, Nicaragua, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia and Uganda were among those questioning the intentions or usefulness of the contact group in trying to negotiate implementation of the United Nations plan on Namibia. Benin said that for political and military as well as economic reasons, the group had refused to exert real pressure on South Africa, and the net result of its efforts was helping South Africa to gain time to consolidate its entrenchment and to exploit Namibian territory. In Ethiopia's view, the contact group had collaborated with South Africa in its attempt to undermine and modify the plan, and the United States was trying to make it conditional on some of its own strategic objectives. Jamaica said there was growing concern within the international community that the contact group had not succeeded in securing South Africa's compliance with resolution 435(1978) and therefore had outlived its usefulness. In Malaysia's view, the discussions initiated by the contact group could have complemented United Nations efforts to seek a negotiated settlement, but it had introduced extraneous issues which served only to prolong South Africa's domination of Namibia.

Some countries, including Australia, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Jordan, Kuwait, Mauritius, the Netherlands, Senegal, the United Kingdom, the United States and Zambia, expressed satisfaction that the contact group had been able to achieve agreement on some elements of the United Nations plan or believed it had the potential to achieve further results. The Federal Republic of Germany, a member of the contact group, pointed out that the group had undertaken to strengthen the confidence between the parties concerned in order to establish the basis for implementation; however, the negotiations had shown that the presence of foreign troops in the region was a matter causing mistrust. Security in the region was also a concern of the United Kingdom, another member, which stressed that a solution on Namibia must assure the security of all States in the region.

Jordan welcomed the co-operation of the front-line States with the contact group in the search for implementation, as well as the realistic spirit shown by SWAPO and its willingness to sign a cease-fire agreement. While recognizing the primary responsibility of the Council to implement the plan, Kuwait emphasized the group's role in making that a reality. Mauritius, speaking for the African group, felt that the contact group members should help by using their influence in a positive manner, particularly through economic, moral and other pressures. In Senegal's view, the group, whose efforts it encouraged, had a special responsibility in settling the Namibia question; however, the members needed to show greater firmness in order to compel South Africa to implement resolution 435(1978). Chile and Romania spoke similarly. In the opinion of the Netherlands, the contact group remained the only viable way to enable the Namibian people to exercise early self-determination. Yugoslavia viewed the group's role as an instrument of implementation, which could influence South Africa to comply with the United Nations plan.

Japan hoped that the talks among the parties concerned, particularly the contact group members, the front-line States, SWAPO and South Africa would resolve the Namibia problem. Malta believed that collective and bilateral efforts should be intensified and that the guidelines in resolution 435(1978) needed to be maintained but added that it was time to concentrate on the most effective practical modalities to achieve those guidelines.

In regard to the contact group, Guyana, Kuwait, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar, speaking for the Arab group, and Uganda praised one of its members—France—for having dissociated itself from the linkage policy.

Bangladesh, Botswana, Egypt, India, speaking for the non-aligned countries, Liberia, Mozambique, Poland, the USSR, Upper Volta and Viet Nam stressed that the United Nations was the proper framework for achieving independence for Namibia. According to Egypt, the Council and the Secretary-General should undertake the main role in achieving a just solution. The USSR pointed out that the United Nations had not mandated anyone to take over its role and responsibility to find a Namibia settlement; it called for strengthening the United Nations role by ensuring effective control by the Security Council, and not some group of States, over all aspects of independence, including UNTAG.

Benin, Malaysia, Mozambique, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta and Zaire expressed concern that the credibility of the United Nations or the Council was at stake if the Council did not take effective action. Angola, Cyprus, France, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Liberia, Morocco, Mozambique, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe believed that the role of the Secretary-General should be strengthened or reaffirmed in regard to implementation of the United Nations plan.

Afghanistan, Benin, Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Cuba, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, India, for the non-aligned countries, Indonesia, Jamaica, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, for the Arab group, Uganda, the USSR, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zaire felt that the Council should establish a time-frame for implementing resolution 435(1978). Colombia stated that the Council should shoulder its responsibility by defining specific objectives, particularly in terms of deadlines, so that independence could be achieved. Similarly, Zaire urged the Council to draw up a timetable for implementation.

Many countries either called on the Council to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa, in accordance with Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, as a means of pressuring it to grant independence, or urged that sanctions be applied if no progress was achieved in implementing the resolution in question. Those countries included Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Benin, Bulgaria, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guyana, India, for the non-aligned countries, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mongolia, Niger, Pakistan, Panama, Poland, Qatar, for the Arab group, Romania, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda and Viet Nam. Guyana believed that in the event of non-compliance on the part of South Africa, the contact group had an obligation to support the adoption of effective measures to achieve United Nations objectives, and that continued intransigence would warrant mandatory sanctions. In the light of recent experience, Turkey said, only sanctions as envisaged by the Charter would produce the necessary effect.

Iran, Morocco and Nicaragua also called for measures against South Africa. Iran believed that barring South Africa from United Nations membership would guarantee progress in attaining Namibia's independence. In Morocco's view, the Council should adopt concrete measures to compel South Africa to proceed with the settlement plan. Nicaragua believed that if those countries with economic, political and military links with South Africa were to pressure it, the possibilities of a solution would be much greater.

Afghanistan, Argentina, Barbados, Botswana, Cyprus, Indonesia, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Uganda and Zambia emphasized that Namibia was a decolonization issue, and Afghanistan, Algeria, Pakistan, Qatar, speaking for the Arab group, Zaire and Zambia said the issue should not be viewed as an East-West issue. Qatar, for example, said that the United States was using the linkage issue to serve its national interests and that linkage represented a dimension of the East-West confrontation.

Support was expressed by Afghanistan, Argentina, Barbados, Benin, Gabon, the German Democratic Republic, India, for the non-aligned countries, Indonesia, Nicaragua, Panama, Qatar, for the Arab group, Sierra Leone, Uganda and the USSR for maintaining the territorial integrity of Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands, once Namibia became independent.

Algeria, the German Democratic Republic, Kenya, Mongolia, Sierra Leone, Uganda and Viet Nam said that South Africa was using Namibia as a base or springboard for launching aggression against neighbouring States. Viet Nam stated that the enemy of the Namibian people was seeking to hold on to the Territory at all costs and to make it a military base for perpetuating the illegal occupation and a platform for launching such armed attacks. A number of countries expressed the view that South Africa and its allies, frequently through their transnational corporations (TNCs), were exploiting the natural resources of Namibia. They included Afghanistan, Argentina, Benin, Bulgaria, China, Cyprus, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guyana, India, for the non-aligned countries, Indonesia, Jamaica, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia,

Nicaragua, Qatar, for the Arab group, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Uganda, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia. Some added that human resources were being exploited as well. Indonesia said that since South Africa had continued to destroy the territorial integrity and undermine the economic viability of Namibia, the Council must act against the continuing economic collaboration between certain States or their TNCs and South Africa which had accelerated the illicit plundering of Namibia's natural wealth, in violation of the 1974 decree to protect Namibia's natural resources. (11)

Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Mozambique, Pakistan, Romania, Upper Volta and Zaire welcomed the flexible attitude SWAPO had shown in negotiations on Namibia. Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, India, for the non-aligned countries, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mongolia, Qatar, for the Arab group, Romania, the Syrian Arab Republic and Uganda affirmed their support for SWAPO as the sole legitimate representative of the Namibian people, and several of those States called for assistance to SWAPO. Guinea urged increased assistance to Namibian refugees and to the front-line States suffering from South Africa's aggression.

India, Niger and Uganda felt that the use of armed force was justified in the struggle of the Namibian people to obtain independence, while Australia and Chile rejected use of force. Cuba, Jamaica, Pakistan and the Syrian Arab Republic warned that if no progress were made towards a solution, the consequences would include confrontation, bloodshed or armed struggle.

The representative of SWAPO said that the organization had concluded that the contact group, in particular the United States, by injecting the linkage issue, had lost proper contact with the letter and spirit of resolution 435(1978), that the group had ceased to be an honest broker in its implementation, and that the whole exercise had turned out to be a rescue operation for South Africa; the Council should oblige South Africa to make a firm commitment on signing a cease-fire agreement with SWAPO, as provided for in the United Nations plan, and the Secretary-General should initiate contact with the parties to the conflict and report to the Council.

The President of the Council for Namibia also rejected what he said were attempts by the United States and South Africa to obstruct implementation of the resolution and to link independence with extraneous issues, in particular the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola; the Council for Namibia believed that the time had come to bring all talks on independence back to the United Nations, which had legal and primary responsibility for the Territory, and for the Security Council to consider appropriate action under the Charter to ensure South Africa's co-operation. Also rejecting the linkage issue, the representative of the Chairman of the Committee against apartheid said that it was apparent that attempts to move negotiations away from the United Nations framework had been used by South Africa's trading partners as a means of muting criticism and delaying action towards independence; it was time for the Council to consider sanctions against South Africa as a means of ensuring compliance with United Nations decisions on Namibia. The Acting Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries joined in rejecting linkage and calling for coercive action provided for in the Charter; he welcomed SWAPO's willingness to facilitate the negotiating process and clear the way for elections based on universal suffrage.

Echoing the views of the United Nations bodies, the representative of PAC said that the Council had no alternative but to meet South Africa's intransigence firmly, which required the collective will of all Council members to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions; should the Council fail to take this action, the people of Namibia, acting through SWAPO, would use every effort to regain their inalienable rights.

Referring to South Africa's statement that it had never accepted the view that its presence in the Territory was illegal, the ANC representative said that statement went to the root of the problem and negated the contact group's assurances that negotiations had reached a crucial stage and Namibia's independence was near.

The Permanent Observer of the Arab League called on the Council to set its resolutions in motion and to restore its effectiveness and credibility.

Communications. During the period the Security Council was debating the question of Namibia, several countries addressed letters to the Council President on the issue. On 20 May⁽²⁶⁾ Mauritius, on behalf of the African Group, forwarded to the Council a document entitled "Namibia: The Crisis in United States Policy towards Southern Africa", produced by TransAfrica and 23 other non-governmental organizations in the United States. India, on 23 May⁽²⁷⁾ forwarded a message from its Prime Minister, the current Chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, stating that the Council must make South Africa comply with the United Nations plan on Namibia by imposing mandatory sanctions, if necessary. Panama forwarded a 26 May letter⁽²⁸⁾ from its President in which he expressed confidence that the Council would take prompt, decisive action to ensure there was no further delay in independence for Namibia, in accordance with United Nations resolutions. Venezuela, on 31

May⁽²⁹⁾ also forwarded a message from its President, expressing support for the struggle of the Namibian people and accusing South Africa of continuing to defy United Nations resolutions on Namibia's independence.

On 1 June⁽³⁰⁾ Somalia forwarded a statement calling on the Council to reaffirm the direct responsibility of the United Nations for the independence of Namibia, to condemn South Africa's stalling tactics and its internal arrangements designed to maintain control of Namibia, and to set a date for the implementation of the United Nations plan. Stating its position on 10 June⁽³¹⁾ the Seychelles said that the primary reason for the delay in implementing the plan was the linkage by foreign interests of independence with the withdrawal of Cuban forces in Angola. India forwarded on 5 August⁽³²⁾ the text of a communiqué adopted at a meeting of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries held that day at United Nations Headquarters. Expressing concern over South Africa's decision to establish a so-called State Council in Namibia to draw up a "constitution" for the Territory, the Movement said this action was another demonstration of South Africa's intention of imposing an "internal settlement" in Namibia and of blocking the plan's implementation.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 29 August⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General issued a further report on the implementation of resolutions 435(1978)⁽⁵⁾ and 439(1978)⁽¹⁵⁾ concerning Namibia, in accordance with the Council's June 1983 resolution. Exercising his mandate, he said that he had held discussions with South African senior officials at Headquarters and visited South Africa in August for talks with the Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister, the Defence Minister and the Administrator-General of Namibia, among others. At that time, South Africa restated its commitment to seek a settlement based on resolution 435(1978) within the framework reached with the United States and the other members of the Western contact group. South Africa maintained that there was one major issue to be resolved—the withdrawal of foreign troops from Angola, on the understanding that they would not be replaced by any other hostile force. In reply, the Secretary-General said that the United Nations could not accept the linkage precondition for implementation of the independence plan.

In regard to the electoral system for a constituent assembly, South Africa indicated that its choice would be communicated as soon as a date for implementation had been set. At the discussions, South Africa expressed agreement on the proposed composition of UNTAG and said that as far as South Africa was concerned the matter was resolved. The discussions also resulted in the settlement of outstanding issues regarding the Agreement on the Status of UNTAG, which would provide UNTAG with the necessary immunities and privileges to facilitate its work.

The Secretary-General also visited Namibia, where he noted the consequences of the drought which was having a devastating effect on the people, and Angola, for talks with the President of SWAPO. SWAPO reaffirmed that it was ready to sign a cease-fire with South Africa and to co-operate with the Secretary-General and UNTAG in facilitating the speedy implementation of resolution 435(1978). In addition, SWAPO expressed support for recommendations the Secretary-General would make to the Council with regard to UNTAG's composition. On the two proposals for an electoral system, SWAPO was prepared in principle to accept either choice—proportional representation or the single-member constituency system.

The Secretary-General concluded that his consultations had resulted, as far as UNTAG was concerned, in resolving virtually all outstanding issues and that finality on the modalities of implementing resolution 435(1978) had never been so close. However, the position of South Africa regarding the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola still made it impossible to launch the United Nations plan. Real progress could not be claimed until an actual date was fixed for the start of implementation and the cease-fire came into force.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council considered the Secretary-General's August report⁽³⁾ at a series of nine meetings held between 20 and 28 October. It convened in response to a 17 October⁽³⁴⁾ request of Senegal, on behalf of the Group of African States, and an 18 October⁽³⁵⁾ request of India, on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Botswana, Bulgaria, Canada, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Germany, the Federal Republic of, Hungary, India, Iran, Kenya, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Mozambique, Nigeria, Peru, Senegal, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia, at their request, were invited to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote.

During the debate, certain individuals were also invited to address the Council, under rule 39^b of its provisional rules of procedure. On 20 October⁽³⁶⁾ Togo, Zaire and Zimbabwe asked that Peter Muesihange, Secretary for Foreign Relations of SWAPO, be invited to speak, and on 24 October⁽³⁷⁾ they made a similar request for Johnstone F. Makatini, representative of ANC. Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, by a letter of 25 October⁽³⁸⁾ submitted communications from K. Riruako, President of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance in Namibia, and L. J. Barnes of the Labour Party of Namibia, presenting their positions on representation of the people of the Namibia. The President of the Council of Namibia, the Acting Chairman of the Committee against apartheid, and the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries were also invited to speak at their request.

On 28 October, the Council adopted resolution 539(1983) by vote.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 29 August 1983,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolutions 301(1971), 385(1976), 431(1978), 432(1978), 435(1978), 439(1978) and 532(1983),

Gravely concerned at South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia,

Gravely concerned also at the tension and instability prevailing in southern Africa and the mounting threat to the security of the region and its wider implications for international peace and security resulting from continued utilization of Namibia as a springboard for attacks against and destabilization of African States in the region,

Reaffirming the legal responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and the primary responsibility of the Security Council for ensuring the implementation of its resolutions, in particular, resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978), which call for the holding of free and fair elections in the Territory under the supervision and control of the United Nations,

Indignant that South Africa's insistence on an irrelevant and extraneous issue of "linkage" has obstructed the implementation of resolution 435(1978),

1. Condemns South Africa for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia in flagrant defiance of resolutions of the General Assembly and decisions of the Security Council;

2. Further condemns South Africa for its obstruction of the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) by insisting on conditions contrary to the provisions of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia;

3. Rejects South Africa's insistence on linking the independence of Namibia to irrelevant and extraneous issues as incompatible with resolution 435(1978), other decisions of the Security Council and the resolutions of the General Assembly on Namibia, including General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

4. Declares that the independence of Namibia cannot be held hostage to the resolution of issues that are alien to resolution 435(1978);

^b See footnote a. p. 1047.

5. Reiterates that resolution 435(1978), embodying the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, is the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian problem;

6. Takes note that the consultations undertaken by the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 532(1983) have confirmed that all the outstanding issues relevant to resolution 435(1978) have been resolved;

7. Affirms that the electoral system to be used for the elections of the Constituent Assembly should be determined prior to the adoption by the Council of the enabling resolution for the implementation of the United Nations plan;

8. Calls upon South Africa to co-operate with the Secretary-General forthwith and to communicate to him its choice of the electoral system in order to facilitate the immediate and unconditional implementation of the United Nations plan embodied in resolution 435(1978);

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the implementation of this resolution as soon as possible and not later than 31 December 1983;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter and to meet as soon as possible following the Secretary-General's report for the purpose of reviewing progress in the implementation of resolution 435(1978) and, in the event of continued obstruction by South Africa, to consider the adoption of appropriate measures under the Charter of the United Nations.

Security Council resolution 539(1983)

28 October 1983 Meeting 2492 14-0-1

8-nation draft (S/16085/Rev.2).

Sponsors: Guyana, Jordan, Malta, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Togo, Zaire, Zimbabwe.
Meeting numbers: SC 2481-2486, 2488, 2490, 2492.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, France, Guyana, Jordan, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Poland, Togo, USSR, United Kingdom, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Explaining its vote, the United States said it supported the spirit of the resolution; however, it had reservations about the time-frame and warned of unreasonable or unrealistic constraints on the negotiating flexibility required to overcome remaining obstacles, and the resolution's implicit allusions to possible future action under Chapter VII of the Charter which the United States regarded as premature. The United Kingdom was concerned at the burden the Council placed on the Secretary-General by asking him to make a further report in a short period and had reservations about the reference in the fifth preambular paragraph to the use of Namibia as a springboard for destabilization. The USSR supported the resolution because it strengthened the role of the United Nations in settling the question; it regretted, however, that a direct statement that sanctions should be imposed against South Africa was not included. Zimbabwe stated that the resolution used language reflecting the international consensus expressed in the Council and in other places which would be useful to move forward with implementing resolution 435(1978)^(c) and to reject obstacles to it.

During the second 1983 Council debate on Namibia, speakers again praised the work of the Secretary-General in pursuing a settlement based on resolution 435(1978) and the conclusions he drew in his latest report⁽³³⁾. Many noted that the debate was occurring at a time when South Africa was mounting an attack against Mozambique (see p. 179)—an attack which they condemned. A number of countries reiterated the points they had raised earlier, and, in general, States expressed increased concern over South Africa's insistence on linking Namibia's independence with the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. Those setting forth additional points are described below.

South Africa praised the Secretary-General for having accurately reflected its position in his August report. It reaffirmed its commitment to seek a settlement on the basis of resolution 435(1978) and stated that there remained only one major issue to be resolved—the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola (which it estimated at 30,000) on the understanding they would not be replaced by other hostile forces. This position had support from within the international community, according to South Africa. SWAPO operated from Angola with Cuban support; therefore, the presence of Cuban forces there was relevant to the search for a peaceful settlement. The introduction of surrogate forces of the USSR into southern Africa was a cause for concern to all countries of the region. South Africa continued to reject the General Assembly's recognition of SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the people of Namibia; under no circumstances would it receive United Nations representatives in Namibia on that basis. Certain United Nations bodies remained biased in favour of SWAPO and no settlement plan could be implemented unless the Secretariat acted with strict impartiality. It would be futile for the Council to set deadlines for implementation until the matter of the Cuban presence had been resolved.

Angola, affirming that it had a right to self-defence and to be assisted by friends of its choice, said that if independence were to be achieved peacefully, the next and only step was the immediate implementation of resolution 435(1978), starting with a cease-fire, the emplacement of UNTAG, the withdrawal of South African troops and elections under United Nations supervision; as part of that process, South Africa should immediately announce its choice of electoral system, hold talks to fix a date for the cease-fire and withdraw from Angolan territory. In regard to its troops, Cuba pointed out that under its 1982 declaration with Angola, the two States had agreed that if the resolution were implemented and if South Africa withdrew its occupying troops to the other side of the Orange River, thereby diminishing the danger of aggression against Angola, then Angola and Cuba would consider withdrawing Cuban forces in keeping with a timetable agreed upon by the two Governments.

Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, speaking for OAU, Hungary, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania stressed that Cuban troops were in Angola because its security was threatened and its territory occupied by South Africa. According to Ethiopia, the Cuban troops were in Angola at its request and in conformity with the Charter for the purpose of repulsing the South African invasion; it was convinced that the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola was intended to achieve the occupation of Angola, the overthrow of its Government, its replacement by elements subservient to neo-colonist interests, and the weakening of the liberation struggle of the Namibian people. Uganda added that South Africa was continuing to use Namibia as a launching pad for aggression.

Togo believed that the Cuban troop withdrawal would be greatly facilitated by South Africa's military withdrawal from Namibia and southern Africa. Stressing that measures to build confidence and reduce conflict in the region were urgently needed, Canada said the first step towards a settlement must be the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African forces from Angola. Bulgaria, Hungary, Mexico, Senegal, speaking for the African group, the USSR, Zaire and Zimbabwe stressed that the presence of foreign troops in a country was an issue to be decided between the sovereign States; a similar position was held by Venezuela. Nicaragua called on the Council to declare that the presence of Cuban troops was exclusively a sovereign decision of Angola.

Many speakers, including Botswana, Bulgaria, Hungary, Mexico, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Sri Lanka, Togo, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zaire urged the Council to reject linkage of Namibia's independence with the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. In Bulgaria's view, the growing aggressiveness of the United States, motivated by its ambition for world supremacy, could be seen clearly in its attempts to impose such a link arbitrarily. Botswana called on the Council to reject such linkage which challenged its authority. In addition to those speakers and many others in the first series of 1983 Council meetings on Namibia (see above), Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, for OAU, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Senegal, the United Kingdom and Venezuela rejected linkage. The United Kingdom stressed that the Council could not accept that the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola should be a precondition for implementing a settlement.

Kuwait, Malta, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Uganda and Zambia believed that raising the linkage issue was a tactic to delay implementation of a settlement.

Algeria, Angola, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mexico, the Netherlands, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia joined those who had stated at previous meetings that no extraneous issues should be attached to the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence.

While recognizing that the linkage issue was not within the scope of the contact group, the Federal Republic of Germany said the problem would have to be taken into account by those who realistically aimed at implementing resolution 435(1978); as pointed out by the Secretary-General, the problem had to be solved by those directly concerned acting within their sovereign rights.

A number of States offered suggestions for the Council to take as the next steps to achieve implementation of resolution 435(1978). France, the Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zaire said that South Africa should be required to inform the Secretary-General of its choice regarding the electoral system. According to France, all other issues had been completely settled in regard to implementation of the plan; although the situation remained difficult, concessions were possible.

Nicaragua, the United Republic of Tanzania and Yugoslavia, among others, affirmed that resolution 435(1978) remained the sole basis for negotiating Namibia's independence. Nicaragua called on the Council to demand its immediate implementation. In Yugoslavia's view, the Council should confirm the plan as the only basis for a settlement, thus removing any grounds for obstructing its implementation. Argentina, Cuba, Kuwait, Nicaragua, Senegal, speaking for the African group, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia stressed that the United Nations or the Council was responsible for Namibia's future and was the proper framework for reaching a solution. Mexico, the Netherlands and Nigeria warned that the effectiveness of the Council would be questioned if it could not act decisively.

That an issue outside the scope of that resolution was delaying its implementation was a matter of frustration, the United States said, but implementation would take place only if the fundamental concerns of all parties were addressed; the United States was seeking a solution based on reciprocity with mutual respect for security and sovereignty on all sides and with Namibia's independence as the only acceptable result.

Iran stated that rather than through the United Nations, the issue could be resolved only through the collaboration of African countries, independent of all affiliations with either West or East.

Senegal, for the African group, said that Africa expected the Council to adopt appropriate and specific measures to enable the Namibians to achieve independence. Malta emphasized that a unanimously adopted resolution would confirm to South Africa that it was isolated and would demonstrate the real wishes of the international community. The Netherlands believed that South Africa should be called on to agree to a cease-fire; failing that, the Council was duty-bound to consider appropriate means of applying pressure on South Africa.

In addition to those which had called at the previous series of meetings for sanctions or measures under Chapter VII of the Charter, Angola, China, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Kenya, Kuwait, Mexico, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Togo, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe called for such action either immediately or, if South Africa's position did not change, within a set time-frame. Hungary, Kenya, Kuwait, the Sudan, Tunisia and Zambia joined those advocating a time-frame or deadline.

Peru, the Sudan, the United States and Venezuela agreed that progress had been made at the latest round of discussions held by the Secretary-General.

The German Democratic Republic and India, speaking for the Non-Aligned Movement, on the other hand, felt that there had been no progress in finding a solution. India hoped that the Council members would appreciate the limits to forbearance, and display the necessary political will to implement its own decision without further delay.

The role of the contact group was discussed by several countries. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Pakistan said it was the group's responsibility to bring about implementation of resolution 435(1978). Hungary urged the members of the group to exert pressure on South Africa to ensure its compliance with United Nations resolutions. Kenya stressed that those countries which had assumed responsibility for negotiations and had received the co-operation of SWAPO should stop sending conflicting signals to South Africa. The Sudan felt that the group's mission had been completed and that it was time for the Council to shoulder its responsibilities in accordance with the Charter. Zimbabwe charged that some members of the group, instead of pressuring South Africa to co-operate in implementing resolution 435(1978), had been trying to usurp the role of the United Nations by seeking solutions outside that resolution; the current series of meetings had been convened to protect the plan for Namibia's independence from the newly contrived strategem of linkage and to ensure that nothing would delay its launching. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Poland questioned the intentions and seriousness of the group's discussions. In the opinion of the latter, the group had only gained time for South Africa to strengthen its hold over Namibia. China noted that most members of the group had indicated that they did not approve of linkage, but added that it was regrettable that there was still a permanent member of the Council which supported that unreasonable position.

Czechoslovakia, Kenya, Kuwait, Nigeria and Zimbabwe believed that the support of certain countries had encouraged South Africa's intransigence. Czechoslovakia, Kuwait, Sierra Leone, the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania believed that the United States had played a leading role in blocking progress. According to Czechoslovakia, the United States had been instrumental in putting forward the unjustified and unacceptable demand to link Namibia's independence with withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. In the opinion of the USSR, the United States was using excuses for its interference in the affairs of the region and to ensure its strategic interests; together with South Africa, it intended to block a settlement of the Namibia question, to weaken Angola through military threats and to limit its sovereign rights.

Algeria, Mozambique, Senegal, for the African countries, and Togo emphasized that Namibia was a decolonization issue. India, Kuwait and Nicaragua could not accept that the issue should become part of the East-West confrontation. Kuwait stated that the delay in implementing the United Nations plan had opened the way for introducing new, extraneous elements stemming from the escalating tension between the two super-Powers, and the linkage issue was being used by the United States to serve its strategic interests. According to Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland, South Africa and others were exploiting the natural resources of Namibia through their transnational corporations.

Czechoslovakia, Kuwait, Mexico, Nicaragua, Poland, Togo, Turkey, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia joined those expressing support for SWAPO as the sole legitimate representative of the people of Namibia. The German Democratic Republic and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya called for increased assistance to SWAPO.

Poland and Sierra Leone considered that armed struggle would be justified if the United Nations were unable to achieve Namibia's independence, but the United States rejected the use of force. Poland said that if sanctions were not effective and if the supply of weapons to South Africa continued, there would be no other way for Namibians led by SWAPO but to continue the liberation struggle by all means, including armed struggle, as a legitimate way to achieve independence. In Sierra Leone's view, SWAPO, faced with South Africa's intransigence, was left with no alternative but to intensify the armed struggle. Support for the action of SWAPO and the front-line States was expressed by Argentina.

The representative of SWAPO, who urged the Council to impose sanctions against South Africa, said that linkage was the primary source of the catastrophe in the negotiations and the only obstacle to Namibia's full independence; there was a political will on SWAPO's part to sign a ceasefire agreement and to co-operate with the Secretary-General in implementing the United Nations plan, and SWAPO challenged South Africa to do likewise.

Also calling for sanctions if South Africa did not choose an electoral system within a certain time, the President of the Council for Namibia said that the problems relating to UNTAG's composition had been of South Africa's making; Namibia would continue to be held hostage as long as South Africa linked its independence to other issues. The Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries, explaining the Committee's position, said it had recommended comprehensive mandatory sanctions and rejected the attempts by the United States and South Africa to establish any linkage, attempts which would only retard the decolonization process in Namibia and interfere in Angola's internal affairs. Again calling for sanctions and rejecting linkage, the Acting Chairman of the Committee against apartheid said South Africa intended to impose an internal settlement in Namibia through a so-called State Council, or constitutional changes which were to be the subject of a referendum some 10 days hence among whites only; those proposed changes would set up a racially segregated Parliament giving limited representation to coloureds and Indians but excluding the Africans who made up 72 per cent of the population.

The representative of ANC said that the change in the United States administration had resulted in the cancellation of limited positive elements achieved by the contact group and the multiplication of the negative elements; the linkage issue introduced by the United States was a flagrant act of hostility against the liberation cause of Africa and the international community.

Communications. At the time of the Council's October debate, the President received two communications on Namibia. On 17 October⁽³⁹⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries transmitted parts of a 13 October Committee decision, in which it condemned South Africa for its military buildup in Namibia as well as the collaboration between South Africa and certain States, and recommended that the Council impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa, under Chapter VII of the Charter. Guinea transmitted on 20 October⁽⁴⁰⁾ a message by its President, stating that resolution 435(1978) had not been implemented because of the opposition of the South African minority régime, supported by certain Member States, and that it was time that all Council members defined their position on Namibia.

After the Council adopted resolution 539(1983) (see above), South Africa forwarded three messages to the Secretary-General, from its Minister of Foreign Affairs and Information. In a 29 October statement⁽⁴¹⁾ the Minister pointed out that while the choice of an electoral system was not of great importance and should not cause unnecessary problems, what was important was that no settlement plan could be implemented unless a firm agreement was reached on Cuban withdrawal from Angola; he added that South Africa did not intend to succumb to the Council's threat. Two other messages were forwarded in a letter of 15 December⁽⁴²⁾ By the first, dated 22 November, the Minister, referring to the Secretary-General's August report⁽³³⁾ expressed surprise that the relatively inconsequential issue of the electoral system had been resurrected, since South Africa had received the impression that its position was acceptable to the other parties involved; since a decision on the choice of electoral system would involve further consultations with the leaders of the Territory, the Minister suggested that a further exchange of views between the Administrator-General and the Secretary-General's Special Representative might be useful. In a letter of 15 December, the Minister said South Africa was prepared to begin a disengagement of its forces, which from time to time conducted military operations against SWAPO in Angola, on 31 January 1984, on the understanding that Angola would reciprocate by assuring that Angolan forces, SWAPO and the Cubans would not exploit the resulting situation, in particular with regard to the security of the inhabitants of Namibia; South Africa remained prepared to begin implementing resolution 435(1978) when the problem of Cuban forces in Angola was resolved.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with resolution 539(1983) (see above), the Secretary-General, on 29 December⁽⁴³⁾ submitted to the Council a further report—his third in 1983—concerning the implementation of resolutions 435(1978)⁽³⁾ and 439(1978).⁽⁵⁾ He reported that during discussions with South African ambassadors to the United Nations, he had pointed out that the Council had already rejected South Africa's insistence on linking the independence of Namibia to irrelevant issues and that resolution 435(1978) must remain the only basis for a peaceful settlement. He urged South Africa to co-operate and to communicate its choice of the electoral system in order to facilitate implementation of the United Nations plan. The ambassadors informed him that South Africa's position with regard to implementation of resolution 435(1978) had not changed, and they agreed to refer the question of the electoral system to their Government.

At subsequent meetings, the Secretary-General had again asked South Africa for a definitive response with regard to the electoral system. Stressing that it was essential to abide by the Council's decisions, he urged South Africa to reconsider its position and communicate its choice as a matter of urgency in order to facilitate implementation of the United Nations plan. As South Africa had not provided a definitive response, the Secretary-General said he was not in a position to report any further progress.

Activities of the UN Council for Namibia. Throughout 1983, the United Nations Council for Namibia, acting as a policy-making organ of the United Nations and the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence under the role assigned to the Council by the General Assembly in 1967,⁽⁴⁴⁾ continued to carry out its mandate. The Council reported to the Assembly at its 1983 regular session on developments concerning the Territory and on the Council's activities from 1 September 1982 to 31 August 1983.⁽⁴⁵⁾ Later 1983 activities were described in its 1984 report⁽⁴⁶⁾

As part of the activities assigned to it by the Assembly in December 1982⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Council, in consultation with OAU, organized the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence (Paris, 25-29 April 1983) (see above).

The Council considered that South Africa's continued illegal occupation of the Territory, its war of repression against the Namibians, its persistent acts of aggression launched from Namibia against neighbouring States, its policy of apartheid and development of nuclear weapons seriously threatened international peace and security. It believed that South Africa must be made to comply with the United Nations plan for Namibia without prevarication, dilution or further delay, and it reiterated its position that it was incumbent on the Security Council to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions in order to compel South Africa to withdraw from Namibia. Those views were expressed not only in the annual report, but also during the Security Council debates on Namibia (see above), in which the Council participated.

As part of its ongoing programme of consultations with Member States, the Council held high-level meetings in 1983, sending two missions to Europe (10-22 April and 15 April-6 May) and one to Latin America (11-22 April). The first mission to Europe visited the USSR, Belgium, Denmark and Czechoslovakia; the second went to Greece, Turkey, Bulgaria, Italy and Switzerland. The mission to Latin America visited Costa Rica, Haiti, the Dominican Republic and Nicaragua. Following those visits, individual statements and joint communiqués were issued.

The Council continued to provide material assistance to Namibians through the United Nations Fund for Namibia, the United Nations Institute for Namibia, and the Nationhood Programme for Namibia (see below). Other activities included meetings and seminars to further the implementation of relevant United Nations resolutions. In 1983, the Council organized its first regional symposium—the Regional Symposium in Support of the Namibian Cause in Latin America (San José, Costa Rica, 16-19 August). The programme of co-operation with non-governmental organizations was strengthened as part of its efforts to mobilize international public opinion in support of the liberation struggle of the Namibians and their representative, SWAPO.

On 26 August, the Council held its annual commemoration of Namibia Day, and on 27 October, it commemorated the Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia and their Liberation Movement, SWAPO (see below, under INFORMATION DISSEMINATION).

The Council participated in the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in August 1983 (see p. 802).

The Council continued to co-operate with OAU and to attend its meetings, including the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-12 June) with the status of observer. The OAU Assembly adopted a number of resolutions which were forwarded to the General Assembly on 6 July.⁽⁴⁸⁾ In a special resolution on Namibia, OAU expressed concern at the attempt to introduce extraneous elements to resolution 435(1978), declared that that resolution remained the only basis for a negotiated settlement and welcomed the May 1983 report⁽⁴⁹⁾ of the Secretary-General on its implementation. As in the past, the Council participated in the meetings of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, including the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 7-11 March). In its Political Declaration forwarded to the Security Council and the Assembly on 30 March⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Conference pledged to give increased support to SWAPO; expressed concern that South Africa continued to obstruct implementation of resolution 435(1978), rejected the linkage being drawn by the United States on the Namibia issue; called on the Security Council to consider further action with regard to implementation of resolution 435(1978); and reiterated its support for the Council for Namibia in its role as the sole legal administering authority of Namibia until independence. That position was reiterated in a communiqué⁽⁵⁰⁾ issued by the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the Assembly (4-7 October, New York), in which the Council also participated.

The Council also continued to participate as a full member in the activities of a number of United Nations agencies and other bodies. On 17 February, Namibia, represented by the Council, was granted full membership in the International Atomic Energy Agency.

In its report⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Council described developments and social conditions in Namibia. The economy, based primarily on mining of natural resources (diamonds, uranium, copper, lead, zinc, tin, cadmium, vanadium, silver and lithium), continued to be dominated by South African and Western transnational corporations (TNCs). As in previous years, the bulk of the profits was repatriated to foreign shareholders. There were 88 TNCs operating in Namibia, of which 35 were based in South Africa, 25 in the United Kingdom, 15 in the United States, 8 in the Federal Republic of Germany, 3 in France and 2 in Canada. Agriculture and fishing, the second and third largest sectors of the economy, were also dominated by South African companies.

With regard to the military situation in Namibia, the Council reported that the size of the South African occupation force in Namibia was estimated at 100,000 (approximately 1 soldier for every 12 Namibians), stationed at approximately 85 to 90 South African bases. The number of troops increased considerably when preparations were made for military attacks on neighbouring Angola. Among the forces deployed by South Africa were units consisting largely of mercenaries.

South Africa's apartheid policy continued to characterize all spheres of life in Namibia—housing and living conditions, labour and work, education and health facilities. Repressive legislation enacted by South Africa was used to crush the national liberation struggle through arbitrary arrests and maltreatment of political prisoners. Thousands of Namibians had fled their native land to seek refuge in Angola, Botswana and Zambia (seep.949).

While maintaining its military occupation, South Africa attempted in 1983 to impose internal institutions. Following the collapse in mid-January of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance "internal administration", South Africa had announced the creation of what the Council said was another puppet institution, a so-called Council of State; due to lack of support, however, that plan was postponed. In view of its repeated failures at imposing "internal schemes", South Africa had sponsored another political coalition—the Multi-Party Conference—meant to be an alternative to SWAPO.

Activities of the Committee on colonial countries. On 13 October 1983, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples adopted a decision on Namibia⁽⁵¹⁾ Noting that the situation continued to deteriorate because of South Africa's refusal to comply with United Nations decisions, the Committee stated that South Africa, by perpetuating its illegal occupation and trying to impose an "internal settlement" on the Namibians, was responsible for a situation which threatened international peace and security. South Africa's intransigence, its continued failure to implement Security Council resolution 435(1978), its military build-up in Namibia and armed aggression against the Namibians, made it imperative for the United Nations to reassert its legal responsibility for Namibia until its independence and to take steps to bring about South Africa's compliance so that the Namibians could exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence without further delay.

Reiterating its position in support of the legitimacy of the people's struggle by all means and of the territorial integrity of Namibia, the Committee rejected all manoeuvres by South Africa to bring about a sham independence under a puppet régime, including the establishment of the so-called State Council to draw up a draft constitution. It called on States to deny recognition to and refuse to co-operate with any illegal entity which South Africa might impose.

The Committee rejected attempts by the United States and South Africa to establish linkage between Namibia's independence and extraneous issues, in particular the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. It demanded that South Africa release all Namibian political prisoners, and that all captured Namibian freedom fighters be accorded prisoner-of-war status.

South Africa was condemned for its military build-up in Namibia, its recruitment of Namibians, use of mercenaries in occupying Namibia and in attacks against other States, use of Namibia for aggression against other States and the establishment of military bases. The Committee called on States to prevent recruitment of their nationals to serve as mercenaries in Namibia.

The Committee also condemned South African and other foreign economic interests which exploited the human and natural resources of Namibia, ineluding marine resources off the coast, in disregard of the Council's 1974 Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,⁽¹⁾ and demanded that the exploitation cease. States whose TNCs continued to operate in Namibia were urged to end such co-operation.

The Committee recommended that the Security Council impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa. Endorsing the policies and programmes defined by the Council for Namibia in co-operation with SWAPO to promote the self-determination and independence of the Namibians, it again requested the Secretary-General to mobilize world public opinion against South Africa's policy.

The Committee took other action in regard to Namibia. With the assistance of the United Nations information centres, it organized activities in observance of the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Namibia and All Other Colonial Territories, as well as those in South Africa, Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights (see p. 1029).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In several February resolutions, the Commission on Human Rights took action relating to human rights violations in Namibia by South Africa. Among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Namibians to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia; condemned the occupation of Namibia; and demanded that South Africa cease human rights violations there (see p. 836).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1983/42, the Economic and Social Council requested United Nations agencies and organizations to withhold financial, economic, technical or other assistance to South Africa until it restored to Namibians their right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from action which might imply support for the illegal occupation of Namibia. It also noted with satisfaction the inclusion of Namibia, represented by the Council for Namibia, in the membership of IAEA and ITU, and urged other United Nations bodies which had not granted full membership to the Council to do so without delay (see p. 1015). In resolution 1983/74, the Council called for action to limit the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia; in particular, it called on home countries of TNCs to terminate the collaboration of their corporations with South Africa, to prevent further investments and reinvestments and to bring about an immediate withdrawal of existing investments in South Africa and Namibia. The Council, by resolution 1983/75, took steps towards organizing public hearings on TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia. (See p. 144.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Of the five resolutions (38/36 A-E) on Namibia adopted by the General Assembly in December, two dealt with the situation in that country.

On 1 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/36 A by recorded vote.

Situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the Territory by South Africa
The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling, in particular, its resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967 and subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to Namibia, as well as the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, delivered in response to the request addressed to it by the Security Council in its resolution 284(1970) of 29 July 1970,

Recalling also its resolutions 3111(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973 and 31/146 and 31/152 of 20 December 1976, by which it, inter alia, recognized the South West Africa People's Organization as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people and granted observer status to it,

Recalling further its resolutions ES-8/2 of 14 September 1981 and 36/121 B of 10 December 1981, by which it called upon States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with South Africa in order totally to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally,

Recalling the Political Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983,

Recalling the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the report of the Committee of the Whole and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted at the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence,

Recalling the debate on the question of Namibia held in the Security Council from 23 May to 1 June 1983,

Recalling the resolution on Namibia adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its nineteenth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 6 to 12 June 1983,

Strongly reiterating that the continuing illegal and colonial occupation of Namibia by South Africa, in defiance of repeated General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, constitutes an act of aggression against the Namibian people and a challenge to the authority of the United Nations, which has direct responsibility for Namibia until independence,

Stressing the grave responsibility of the international community to take all possible measures in support of the Namibian people in their liberation struggle under the leadership of their sole and authentic representative, the South West Africa People's Organization,

Reaffirming its full support for the armed struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia,

Indignant at South Africa's refusal to comply with repeated resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976, 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, 439(1978) of 13 November 1978 and 532(1983) of 31 May 1983, and at its manoeuvres aimed at perpetuating its brutal domination and exploitation of the Namibian people, as repeatedly manifested in the course of the consultations for the implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia,

Commending the front-line States and the South West Africa People's Organization for the statesmanlike and constructive attitude which they have displayed throughout the consultations to implement Security Council resolution 435(1978),

Strongly condemning South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its brutal repression of the Namibian people and its ruthless exploitation of the people and resources of Namibia, as well as its attempts to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia,

Strongly condemning the racist régime of South Africa for its efforts to develop a nuclear capability for military and aggressive purposes,

Deeply concerned at the increasing militarization of Namibia, the forceful conscription of Namibians, the creation of tribal armies and the use of mercenaries for internal repression and external aggression,

Noting with grave concern that, as a result of the Security Council's failure on 31 August 1981, on account of the veto of the United States of America, to exercise its responsibilities, unprovoked massive armed aggression against Angola continues and recently has escalated to extremely dangerous proportions,

Expressing its strong condemnation of South Africa's continuing acts of aggression against independent African States, particularly Angola, which have caused extensive loss of human life and destruction of economic infrastructures,

Reaffirming that the resources of Namibia are the inviolable heritage of the Namibian people and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the illegal colonial administration, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and in disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, is illegal and contributes to the maintenance of the illegal occupation régime,

Deeply deploring the continued collaboration with South Africa of certain Western States, in particular the United States of America, as well as that of Israel, in disregard of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council,

Deeply concerned at the continued assistance rendered to the racist Pretoria régime by certain international organizations and institutions, in particular the International Monetary Fund, in disregard of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Indignant at the continuing arbitrary imprisonment and detention of political leaders and followers of the South West Africa People's Organization, the killing of Namibian patriots and other acts of brutality, including the wanton beating, torture and murder of innocent Namibians, and the arbitrary inhuman measures of collective punishment and measures designed to intimidate the Namibian people and to destroy their will to fulfil their legitimate aspirations for self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia,

Noting with grave concern that the Security Council has been prevented on several occasions from taking effective action against South Africa in the discharge of its responsibilities under Chapter VII of the Charter on account of the vetoes cast by one or more of the Western permanent members of the Security Council,

Commending the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia in the discharge of the responsibilities entrusted to it under the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence,

1. Approves the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

2. Takes note of the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the report of the Committee of the Whole and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted at the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence;

3. Takes note of the debate on the question of Namibia held in the Security Council from 23 May to 1 June 1983, in which the international community overwhelmingly pronounced itself against the establishment of any linkage or parallelism between Namibian independence and extraneous and irrelevant issues, in particular the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola;

4. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and as recognized in General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) and 2145(XXI) and in subsequent resolutions of the Assembly relating to Namibia, as well as the legitimacy of their struggle by all the means at their disposal, including armed struggle, against the illegal occupation of their territory by South Africa;

5. Reiterates that, in accordance with its resolution 2145(XXI), Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and national independence are achieved in the Territory and, for this purpose, reaffirms the mandate given to the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence under resolution 2248(S-V) and subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly;

6. Reaffirms that the South West Africa People's Organization, the national liberation movement of Namibia, is the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people;

7. Solemnly reaffirms that the genuine independence of Namibia can be achieved only with the direct and full participation of the South West Africa People's Organization in all efforts to implement resolutions of the United Nations relating to Namibia and further reaffirms that the only parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, South Africa, as the illegal occupying Power, and, on the other, the Namibian people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative;

8. Commends the Namibian people's courage and determination and proclaims its full support for the heroic struggle they are waging under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

9. Strongly condemns the South African régime for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia in defiance of the resolutions of the United Nations relating to Namibia;

10. Declares that South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia constitutes an act of aggression against the Namibian people in terms of the Definition of Aggression contained in General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974 and supports the armed struggle of the Namibian people, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, to repel South Africa's aggression and to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

11. Reiterates that, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations, in particular Security Council resolution 432(1978) of 27 July 1978 and General Assembly resolutions S-9/2 of 3 May 1978 and 35/227 A of 6 March 1981, Walvis Bay and the offshore islands of Namibia are an integral part of Namibia and that all attempts by South Africa to annex them are therefore illegal, null and void;

12. Calls upon the Security Council to declare categorically that Walvis Bay is an integral part of Namibia and that the question should not be left as a matter for negotiation between an independent Namibia and South Africa;

13. Reaffirms that Security Council resolution 435(1978), together with Council resolution 385(1976), is the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia and calls for its immediate and unconditional implementation without qualification or modification;

14. Firmly rejects the manoeuvres by the United States of America and South Africa aimed at undermining the international consensus embodied in Security Council resolution 435(1978) and at depriving the oppressed people of Namibia of their hard-won victories in the struggle for national liberation;

15. Firmly rejects and condemns the persistent attempts by the United States of America and South Africa to establish a linkage or parallelism between the independence of Namibia and any extraneous issues, in particular the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola, and emphasizes unequivocally that all such attempts are designed to delay the decolonization process in Namibia and that they constitute interference in the internal affairs of Angola;

16. Expresses its appreciation to the front-line States and the South West Africa People's Organization for their statesmanlike and constructive attitude throughout the consultations to implement Security Council resolution 435(1978);

17. Strongly condemns South Africa for obstructing the implementation of Security Council resolutions

385(1976), 435(1978) and 439(1978) and for its manoeuvres, in contravention of those resolutions, designed to consolidate its colonial and neo-colonial interests at the expense of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people for genuine self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

18. Denounces all fraudulent constitutional and political schemes through which the illegal racist régime of South Africa may attempt to perpetuate its colonial domination of Namibia and, in particular, calls upon the international community, especially all Member States, to continue to refrain from according any recognition or extending any co-operation to any régime which the illegal South African administration may impose upon the Namibian people in disregard of the present resolution, of Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978) and 439(1978) and of other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Council;

19. Strongly condemns the illegal South African administration in Namibia for its manoeuvres, such as the establishment of another puppet institution in the form of the so-called State Council in direct violation of Security Council resolution 439(1978), aimed at perpetuating its domination and exploitation of the people and natural resources of the Territory;

20. Strongly urges the Security Council to act decisively against any dilatory manoeuvres and fraudulent schemes of the illegal occupation régime aimed at frustrating the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, for self-determination and national liberation, as well as at negating the achievements of their just struggle;

21. Declares that all so-called laws and proclamations issued by the illegal occupation régime in Namibia are illegal, null and void;

22. Calls upon Member States and the specialized agencies and other international organizations associated with the United Nations to render sustained and increased support as well as material, financial, military and other assistance to the South West Africa People's Organization so as to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia;

23. Urges all Governments and the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of Namibian refugees who have been forced by the apartheid regime's oppressive policies to flee Namibia, especially into the neighbouring front-line States;

24. Calls upon all Governments, especially those which have close links with South Africa, to support, in co-operation with the United Nations Council for Namibia, the actions of the United Nations to defend the national rights of the Namibian people until independence;

25. Condemns the increased assistance rendered by the major Western countries and Israel to South Africa in the political, economic, financial and particularly the military fields, expresses its conviction that this assistance constitutes a hostile action against the people of Namibia and the front-line States since it is bound to strengthen the military capability of the racist régime, and demands that such assistance be immediately terminated;

26. Declares that the resolution on the need for development aid for Namibia, adopted by the European Parliament on 13 January 1983, calling upon the European Economic Community to extend aid to occupied Namibia as well as to so-called "refugees from southern Angola" in Namibia, if implemented, would flout international law by implying recognition of South Africa's presence in Namibia and would subsidize Pretoria's illegal administration of the Territory, while encouraging its acts of aggression against Angola and the occupation of a part of Angolan territory;

27. Notes, in this connection, the declaration of the European Parliament of 14 November 1983 concerning the resolution on the need for development aid for Namibia, which the Parliament adopted on 13 January 1983, and the letter of 15 November 1983 from the President of the European Parliament to the Secretary-General underlining that the European Parliament and the European Community support and respect the framework established by the United Nations in respect of Namibia;

28. Condemns, in this connection, the visit in August 1983 by four members of the European Parliament to Namibia and the parts of Angolan territory occupied by South Africa;

29. Strongly condemns South Africa for its military build-up in Namibia, its introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians, its recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, its use of mercenaries to suppress the Namibian people and to carry out its military attacks against independent African States, its threats and acts of subversion and aggression against those States and the forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes;

30. Strongly condemns South Africa for its persistent acts of subversion and aggression against Angola, including the occupation of a part of its territory, and calls upon South Africa to cease all acts of aggression against and withdraw all its troops from that country;

31. Condemns the use of the territory of Namibia by the racist régime of South Africa as a staging ground from which to launch armed attacks against neighbouring African States, particularly the repeated unprovoked acts of aggression against and invasion of Angola, including occupation of parts of that country, in order to intimidate those States and, inter alia, to prevent them from supporting the legitimate struggle of the Namibian and South African peoples for freedom and independence;

32. Condemns the continuing military and nuclear collaboration on the part of certain Western States and Israel with the racist régime of South Africa, which is encouraging the Pretoria régime in its defiance of the international community and obstructing efforts to eliminate apartheid and bring South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia to an end, and urges those States to cease and desist forthwith from such collaboration with South Africa, which is in violation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977;

33. Expresses its grave concern at the acquisition of nuclear weapons capability by the racist régime of South Africa, with its record of violence and aggression, and declares that such acquisition constitutes a further attempt on its part to terrorize and intimidate independent States in the region into submission, while also posing a danger to all mankind;

34. Strongly condemns the collusion by the Governments of certain Western and other States, particularly those of the United States of America and Israel, with the racist régime of South Africa in the nuclear field and calls upon France and all other States to refrain from supplying the racist minority régime of South Africa, directly or indirectly, with installations that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium or other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

35. Calls upon the international community to extend, as a matter of urgency, full support and assistance, including military assistance, to the front-line States in order to enable them to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity against the repeated acts of aggression by South Africa;

36. Condemns South Africa's attempts to thwart the work of the Southern African Development Coordination Conference, and calls upon all States to render all possible assistance to the Conference in its efforts to promote regional economic co-operation and development;

37. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to develop, in consultation with the United Nations Development Programme, a comprehensive programme of assistance to States that are neighbours of South Africa and Namibia, on the understanding that such assistance should not only envisage the overcoming of short-term difficulties but be designed to enable those States to move towards complete self-reliance, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the development of this programme;

38. Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the development of a comprehensive programme of assistance to States neighbouring South Africa and Namibia;

39. Reiterates its call upon all States to take legislative and other appropriate measures to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia;

40. Strongly condemns the illegal South African administration for its massive repression of the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, with the intention of establishing an atmosphere of intimidation and terror for the purpose of imposing upon the Namibian people a political arrangement aimed at undermining the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia as well as perpetuating the systematic plunder of the natural resources of the Territory;

41. Demands that South Africa immediately release all Namibian political prisoners, including all those imprisoned or detained under the so-called internal security laws, martial law or any other arbitrary measures, whether such Namibians have been charged or tried or are being held without charge in Namibia or South Africa;

42. Demands that South Africa account for all "disappeared" Namibians and release any who are still alive and declares that South Africa shall be liable for damages to compensate the victims, their families and the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia for the losses sustained;

43. Reaffirms that the natural resources of Namibia are the birthright of the Namibian people and expresses its deep concern at the rapid depletion of the natural resources of the Territory, particularly its uranium deposits, as a result of their reckless plunder by South Africa and certain Western and other foreign economic interests, in violation of the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 July 1971 and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;

44. Declares that all activities of foreign economic interests in Namibia are illegal under international law and that consequently South Africa and all the foreign economic interests operating in Namibia are liable to pay damages to the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia;

45. Strongly condemns the activities of all foreign economic interests operating in Namibia under the illegal South African administration which are illegally exploiting the resources of the Territory and demands that transnational corporations engaged in such exploitation comply with all the relevant resolutions of the United Nations by immediately refraining from any new investment or activities in Namibia, by withdrawing from the Territory and by putting an end to their co-operation with the illegal South African administration;

46. Requests once again all Member States to take all appropriate measures, including legislation and enforcement action, to ensure the full application of, and compliance by all corporations and individuals within their jurisdiction with, the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;

47. Declares that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources and continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in Namibia constitute a major obstacle to its independence;

48. Calls upon the Governments of all States, particularly those whose corporations are involved in the mining and processing of Namibian uranium, to take all appropriate measures in the context of the implementation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, including the practice of requiring negative certificates of origin, to prohibit and prevent State-owned and other corporations, together with their subsidiaries, from dealing in Namibian uranium and from engaging in any uranium-prospecting activities in Namibia;

49. Requests the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which operate the Urenco uranium-enrichment plant, to have Namibian uranium specifically excluded from the Treaty of Almelo, which regulates the activities of Urenco;

50. Deeply deplores the continued collaboration of the International Monetary Fund with South Africa in disregard of General Assembly resolution 37/2 of 21 October 1982, and calls upon the Fund to put an end to such collaboration;

51. Reiterates its request to all States, pending the imposition of mandatory sanctions against South Africa, to take legislative, administrative and other measures unilaterally and collectively, as appropriate, in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2 and 36/121 B and 37/233 A of 20 December 1982;

52. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to continue to follow the implementation of the provisions of paragraph 51 above on the basis of information received from States as well as from other sources;

53. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia, in implementation of paragraph 15 of General Assembly resolution ES-8/2 and of the relevant provisions of Assembly resolutions 36/121 B and 37/233 A, to continue to monitor the boycott of South Africa and to submit to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a comprehensive report on all contacts between all States and South Africa, containing an analysis of the information received from Member States and other sources on the continuing political, economic, financial and other relations of States and their economic and other interest groups with South Africa and of measures taken by States to terminate all dealings with the racist régime of South Africa;

54. Requests all States to co-operate fully with the United Nations Council for Namibia in the fulfilment of its tasks concerning the implementation of General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2, 36/121 B and 37/233 A and to report to the Secretary-General by the thirty-ninth session of the Assembly on the measures taken by them in the implementation of those resolutions;

55. Requests the Secretary-General to seek to ensure that all banks, corporations and other institutions with which the United Nations has contracts are in compliance with United Nations sanctions policies against South Africa;

56. Declares that the liberation struggle in Namibia is a conflict of an international character in terms of article 1, paragraph 4, of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and, in this regard, demands that the Conventions and Additional Protocol I be applied by South Africa, and in particular that all captured freedom fighters be accorded prisoner-of-war status as called for by the Geneva Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and Additional Protocol thereto;

57. Declares that South Africa's defiance of the United Nations, its illegal occupation of the Territory of Namibia, its war of repression against the Namibian people, its persistent acts of aggression launched from bases in Namibia against independent African States, its policies of apartheid and its development of nuclear weapons constitute a serious threat to international peace and security;

58. Strongly urges the Security Council, in the light of the serious threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to respond positively to the overwhelming demand of the international community by immediately imposing comprehensive mandatory sanctions against that country, as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

59. Calls upon the Security Council to adopt the necessary measures to tighten the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Council resolution 418(1977) and to ensure strict compliance with the embargo by all States;

60. Further calls upon the Security Council to implement, as a matter of urgency, the recommendations contained in the report of the Committee established by Council resolution 421(1977);

61. Deplores the decision of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to supply radar equipment to South Africa and urges the Security Council Committee established in pursuance of resolution 421(1977) to take appropriate action to ensure that the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa is not violated;

62. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978)

The General Assembly,

Indignant at South Africa's refusal to comply with Security Council resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976, 431(1978) of 27 July 1978, 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, 439(1978) of 13 November 1978 and 532(1983) of 31 May 1983 and at its manoeuvres aimed at gaining international recognition for illegitimate groups which it has installed in Namibia, and which are subservient to Pretoria's interests, in order to maintain its policies of domination and exploitation of the people and natural resources of Namibia,

Reaffirming the imperative need to proceed without any further delay with the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978), which, together with Council resolution 385(1976), is the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia,

Condemning the attempts by South Africa and the United States of America to continue to deny the Namibian people their inalienable right to self-determination and independence by linking the independence of Namibia with totally irrelevant and extraneous issues,

Reaffirming that the Cuban forces are in Angola by a sovereign act of the Government of Angola, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, and that the attempts to link their presence in that country with Namibia's independence constitute interference in the internal affairs of Angola,

Reaffirming that the only parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and, on the other, the racist régime of South Africa which illegally occupies Namibia,

Recalling its request to the Security Council, in the light of the serious threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to respond positively to the overwhelming demand of the international community by immediately imposing comprehensive mandatory sanctions against that country as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its call upon all States, in view of the threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa, to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against that country in accordance with the provisions of the Charter,

Taking note of the further reports of the Secretary-General dated 19 May 1983 and 29 August 1983 concerning the implementation of Security Council resolutions 435(1978) and 439(1978) concerning the question of Namibia,

1. Strongly condemns South Africa for obstructing the implementation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978), 439(1978) and 532(1983) and for its manoeuvres, in contravention of those resolutions, designed to consolidate its colonial and neo-colonial interests at the expense of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people for genuine self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

2. Reaffirms the direct responsibility of the United Nations for Namibia pending its achievement of genuine self-determination and national independence;

3. Reiterates that Security Council resolution 435(1978), in which the Council endorsed the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, is the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia and demands its immediate and unconditional implementation without qualification, modification or amendment or the introduction of extraneous and irrelevant issues of "linkage", "parallelism" or "reciprocity" insisted upon by the United States of America and South Africa;

4. Emphasizes once again that the only parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, the Namibian people represented by the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative, and, on the other, the racist régime of South Africa, which illegally occupies Namibia;

5. Demands that South Africa urgently comply fully and unconditionally with the resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978) and subsequent resolutions of the Council relating to Namibia;

6. Firmly rejects and condemns the persistent attempts by the United States of America and South Africa to establish a linkage or parallelism between the independence of Namibia and any extraneous and irrelevant issues, in particular the presence of Cuban forces in Angola, and emphasizes unequivocally that all such attempts are designed to delay the decolonization process in Namibia and that they constitute interference in the internal affairs of Angola;

7. Calls upon all States to condemn and reject any attempt to link the independence of Namibia with extraneous and irrelevant issues;

8. Expresses its dismay at the fact that the Security Council has been prevented by its three Western permanent members from adopting effective measures against South Africa in the discharge of its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security, and considers that comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, if universally and effectively implemented, would ensure South Africa's compliance with the decisions of the United Nations;

9. Requests the Security Council to exercise its authority with regard to the implementation of its resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978) and 532(1983) so as to bring about the independence of Namibia without further delay, and to act decisively against any dilatory manoeuvres and fraudulent schemes of the South African administration in Namibia aimed at frustrating the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people for independence;

10. Urges the Security Council to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter, in order to ensure the total cessation of all co-operation with that régime, particularly in the military and nuclear fields, by Governments, corporations, institutions and individuals;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

In explanation of vote on the five resolutions on Namibia (38/36 A-E), many countries expressed general reservations which applied to all of them, as well as to specific texts. The Federal Republic of Germany, on behalf of the five members of the Western contact group, said they had reservations about certain aspects, and it had been their custom not to adopt a substantive position on texts on Namibia because of the group's involvement in formulating the United Nations settlement plan and subsequent negotiations aimed at its implementation. Speaking for the 10 member States of the European Community (EC), Greece said they regretted that in certain respects the texts did not take into consideration the on-going efforts to find a solution in accordance with Council resolution 435(1978),⁽³⁾ implementation of which should not be delayed or made subject to preconditions; they believed that the United Nations had to encourage peaceful solutions and that no one should be designated in advance as the sole representative of the Namibians, reaffirmed their commitment to the Charter and the division of competences of United Nations organs, and rejected all arbitrary and unjustified attacks on individual Member States. With regard to paragraphs 26 and 27 of resolution 38/36 A, they explained that the resolution on development aid to Namibia, adopted by the European Parliament in January 1983, had been in keeping with the United Nations framework.

Australia, Austria, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden (speaking also for Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway) and Uruguay had reservations about designating SWAPO as the sole representative of the Namibians prior to free elections; they did not want to associate themselves with the endorsement of armed struggle and opposed the selective condemnation of certain countries. The concept of armed struggle was also found unacceptable by Ireland, which pointed specifically to the twelfth preambular paragraph and paragraph 4 of resolution 38/36 A, and by New Zealand.

Selective singling out of States and groups of States drew further objections from Burma, Chad, Chile, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Fiji, Honduras, Ireland, Maldives, New Zealand, Oman, Panama, Peru, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Togo and Turkey. In this regard, Turkey mentioned the eighteenth, twenty-first and twenty-fourth preambular paragraphs and paragraphs 14, 15, 25, 31, 33 and 42 of resolution 38/36 A, as well as the third preambular paragraph and paragraphs 6 and 8 of resolution 38/36 B. Botswana and Swaziland specifically expressed reservations on paragraph 57 of resolution 38/36 A which, Swaziland said, would prejudice its relations with the countries concerned; Botswana also had reservations on paragraph 10 of resolution 38/36 B.

Guatemala did not participate in the vote because of serious reservations on certain paragraphs. Reservations on many provisions were expressed by the Bahamas. Malta stated that it did not fully subscribe especially to those paragraphs with operative intent.

While supporting both resolutions, Greece noted that it would have abstained if a separate vote had been taken on the eighteenth, twenty-first and twenty-fourth preambular paragraphs and paragraphs 14, 15, 25, 26, 28, 31, 33 and 60 of resolution 38/36 A, as well as on the third preambular paragraph and paragraphs 3, 6 and 8 of resolution 38/36 B. Uruguay had reservations in particular on paragraphs 26, 27 and 43, and on similar concepts in other resolutions.

The language of some preambular and operative paragraphs of both resolutions 38/36 A and 38/36 B was variously described as extreme, excessive and categorical and was considered to be inappropriate by Austria, the Bahamas, Brazil, Burma, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ireland, the Ivory Coast, the Philippines and Singapore, while Turkey particularly disagreed with the wording of paragraph 14 of resolution 38/36 A as lacking balance. The Ivory Coast believed that the wording of certain paragraphs was not likely to facilitate a solution, an opinion shared by Brazil and others. Malawi had difficulties in endorsing the language in some paragraphs.

Commitment to the United Nations Charter and the division of competence between the General Assembly and Security Council was expressed by Chile, the Netherlands, Sweden (on behalf of the Nordic countries) and Uruguay, the last two stressing that only the Council could adopt decisions binding on Member States. Austria had strong reservations about the attempt to prejudge and influence the independent work of the Council.

Chile had reservations about the attempt to apply extreme measures, by which, it believed, the Assembly would infringe on the competence of the Council. Japan doubted the effectiveness of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa. Costa Rica said it had a different opinion about some of the proposed means of exerting pressure on South Africa. The Netherlands believed that selective measures against South Africa would be more effective than total isolation, which would bring hardship to the entire population of South Africa and its neighbouring States.

With regard to the reference to the International Monetary Fund (IMF) in paragraph 50, Chile expressed the view that IMF's autonomy precluded the Assembly's attempt to influence its decisions.

Uruguay said it would have expected a reference in the texts to the progress made in the negotiations between the front-line States, the Western contact group and SWAPO.

A number of other Assembly actions in 1983 were related to issues covered by the two resolutions. In resolution 38/17, the Assembly, reaffirming its condemnation of the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa, demanded the immediate implementation of its 1981 call⁽⁸⁾ for comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa and for the immediate start of unconditional implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978), and urged support for the Namibians through their sole representative, SWAPO, in their struggle for independence. In resolution 38/21, it strongly condemned apartheid in South Africa and Namibia as the most abhorrent form of racial discrimination and urged Member States to adopt measures to eliminate that policy and to implement the relevant United Nations resolutions.

In resolution 38/50, the Assembly reiterated the illegality of the exploitation and plundering of Namibian natural resources by South Africa and other foreign economic interests, and condemned South Africa and Governments that continued to support economic interests exploiting Namibia's marine resources. It called on all States to end assistance to and discontinue all economic, financial and trade relations with South Africa concerning Namibia, terminate all loans and investments and prevent corporations from dealing in Namibian uranium. In resolution 38/54, the Assembly requested all States to withhold any assistance from South Africa and refrain from any action implying legitimization of its occupation of Namibia.

Noting the extremely serious situation in and around illegally occupied Namibia, the Assembly, in decision 38/419, condemned South Africa for its massive military build-up there and certain Western and other States for their continuing co-operation in that regard. It called on all States to prevent recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia and demanded the immediate cessation of the racist minority regime's war of oppression against the people of Namibia and its national liberation movement, as well as the urgent dismantling of all military bases there. Noting that the militarization of Namibia had led to forced conscription of Namibians and a flow of refugees, the Assembly strongly condemned the forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes and declared that measures by the régime to enforce military conscription were null and void.

(For full texts, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

As requested by the Assembly in December 1982,⁽⁵²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁵³⁾ in May 1983, with two later addenda in July and November containing replies from a total of 17 Governments with regard to action taken or envisaged by them in the implementation of the resolution.

Work programme of the UN Council for Namibia

In December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/36 C by recorded vote.

Programme of work of the United Nations
Council for Namibia

The General Assembly,
Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

In explanation of their votes, Australia, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Sweden, speaking also for Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway, expressed concern about the financial implications of resolution 38/36 C. Australia objected to the Council for Namibia holding plenary meetings away from Headquarters because it was not convinced that the considerable amount of money involved was spent to good advantage. New Zealand spoke similarly, while recognizing the Council as the legally-constituted administering body for Namibia. The Netherlands felt that conference facilities at Headquarters were more than adequate for the Council. Sweden said the Nordic countries had hesitations about some paragraphs containing sweeping financial implications as well as vaguely defined meeting proposals which might not always serve to promote the early independence of Namibia.

Brazil, Ireland and Oman had reservations about certain parts of the Council's 1983 report.⁽⁴⁵⁾ Affirming that the report fully justified the confidence vested in the Council by the international community, Brazil nevertheless expressed disappointment that the Council saw fit to refer to press reports in which Brazil was mentioned in the context of a North Atlantic Treaty Organization-style South Atlantic pact, thereby disregarding the Government's official denials. Oman believed that the Council's report was unbalanced because it condemned the dealings of certain groups of countries with South Africa whereas other countries belonging to various groups were not mentioned, even though they too had such dealings, the latest of which were within the framework of the Antarctic Treaty. While it generally supported the activities of the Council and many of its recommendations, Ireland had difficulties with some of them and had reservations about the powers of the Council in regard to certain issues. The Netherlands questioned the need to ensure for the Council the same rights and privileges in international organizations as were reserved for States, and expressed reservations about the Programme of Action adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence (see above).

Japan said its affirmative vote on resolution 38/36 C should not be construed as support for all paragraphs.

Information dissemination

In 1983, the Council for Namibia continued to disseminate information to Governments, institutions, NGOs and directly to the public, in order to inform and to mobilize world public opinion in support of independence for Namibia,⁽⁴⁵⁾ in accordance with a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽⁵⁴⁾ In this regard, the Council acted through its Standing Committee III, which worked closely with the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the Secretariat and NGOs, and consulted with DPI and the Department of Conference Services to guide them in their efforts.

The Council held its annual commemorations of Namibia Day on 26 August and of the Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia and their Liberation Movement, SWAPO, on 27 October 1983,⁽⁴⁶⁾ at which United Nations officials and representatives of regional groups and organizations spoke. To highlight Namibia Day, the Council, in co-operation with the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa, organized an art exhibit depicting political prisoners in Namibia and South Africa, at United Nations Headquarters from 26 August to 15 September.

To mark the Week, the three presiding officers of the Council for Namibia, the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries) issued a joint statement to the effect that the only political and internationally acceptable solution for Namibia should be based on the termination of South Africa's illegal occupation and on the exercise by Namibians of their right to self-determination and independence within a united Namibia. They urged Member States to mobilize support for the peoples of southern Africa struggling for their rights by disseminating information on their cause. In particular, they requested preparation of publicity programmes to encourage support by all media operating under their jurisdiction.

The Council's activities included publicity for and at the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence (see above). In preparation for the Conference, the Council, with DPI assistance, produced a press kit, a brochure, a poster, a leaflet on the Council's activities and a pamphlet entitled "Namibia: A Unique United Nations Responsibility". Advertisements announcing the Conference were placed in The Guardian (Manchester), Le Monde, The New York Times, The Times (London) and The Washington Post. A journalists' encounter was held in Paris on 21 and 22 April, at which 40 journalists and media representatives from around the world participated. The television series World Chronicle produced a programme featuring the Secretary-General of the Conference. A background press release outlining the issues was widely disseminated, and daily press releases during the Conference were issued.

Additional funds were provided to 33 United Nations information centres for such special activities as organizing information sessions for NGO representatives, student groups and prominent personalities, and translating United Nations publications on Namibia into local languages. Radio coverage in Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish included feature and magazine programmes, interviews, round-table discussions and excerpts of statements. Film recordings of the Conference were made by DPI for archival purposes and for later use. A total of 386 news releases in three languages were transmitted to the media through the information centres. Daily press briefings were held and special press conferences were organized for the public and NGOs. The Conference was covered by 187 accredited correspondents.

Apart from Conference-related activities, the Council carried out its regular information programme, publicizing its activities through press releases distributed at Headquarters and through the information centres. Material on Namibia was also made available to the centres and to the pool of non-aligned news agencies for dissemination to local media. Radio coverage was provided in Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Greek, Hebrew, Japanese, Filipino, Portuguese, Russian, Somali, Spanish and Swahili. In addition, some 470 radio programmes were devoted entirely to Namibia, most of which were produced in the daily anti-apartheid series in Afrikaans, English, Sotho, Tswana, Xhosa and Zulu. DPI continued to provide film, television and photo coverage of the Council's activities, which was made available to news syndicators and other film producers.

As part of its programme of co-operation with NGOs, the Council, in consultation with SWAPO, made financial contributions to a number of NGOs for special activities to advance the cause of Namibia's independence. DPI held a special commemorative meeting for NGO representatives on 26 May to mark the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Namibia and All Other Colonial Territories, as well as those in South Africa, Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights (see p. 1029).

The Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia assisted the Council in its activities and also disseminated information on the Council's work. It continued preparing the Namibia Bulletin, a quarterly review and analysis of events relating to Namibia published in English, French, German and Spanish, and Namibia in the News, a weekly newsletter. Both publications were widely distributed.

In a decision adopted on 13 October⁽⁵¹⁾ the Committee on colonial countries, noting the massive publicity campaign by South Africa to gain support for its occupation of Namibia, reiterated its request to the Secretary-General to intensify efforts, through all available media, to mobilize world public opinion against that Government's policy on Namibia and to increase dissemination of information on the liberation struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of SWAPO.
