In explanation of their votes on resolution 38/36 D, a number of countries expressed reservations in addition to general reservations on the five resolutions on Namibia (38/36 A-E). Most of those countries objected to the specific mention of certain States as in paragraph 4. Austria, Chad, Greece, Ireland, the Ivory Coast, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Sri Lanka and Turkey made such comments.

Austria did not believe that the arbitrary singling out of certain States for condemnation was either justified or advanced the legitimate interests of the Namibians. Chad stated that such selective condemnation was not likely to facilitate a solution. Similarly, Ireland believed that while it was important for the Council for Namibia to consider ways of mobilizing public opinion in support of the struggle of the Namibians for independence, it objected to paragraph 4 on the grounds that an intensified campaign to expose the collusion of certain Western countries with South Africa would be harmful to the pursuit of common objectives.

Objecting to what it called extravagant assertions about the policies of certain countries, New Zealand said such provisions were not well calculated to reinforce efforts to overcome the final impediments to the implementation of the United Nations settlement plan. The Netherlands feared that if the entire effort of the Council in the field of information was harnessed to a campaign of defamation against certain States, the Council's ability to contribute to Namibia's early and peaceful attainment of independence would inevitably suffer. Portugal was not able to support the resolution because of the language in some of its provisions and because of discriminatory references to certain countries. Sri Lanka would have preferred to have avoided specific condemnation of countries with which it had diplomatic relations.

Greece said if a separate vote had been taken on paragraph 4, it would have abstained because of the wording and because of some elements of the content. The Ivory Coast expressed reservations with regard to paragraph 4, particularly subparagraph 4(a).

Japan, attaching importance to the dissemination of information on Namibia, believed that such information must be accurate, fair and balanced, and that close co-operation must be maintained between the Council for Namibia and DPI to ensure that DPI facilities were used effectively and information disseminated in a co-ordinated manner.

Austria and New Zealand were concerned about the financial implications of some of the proposed activities.

Guatemala did not participate in the voting because of serious reservations on certain paragraphs.

In resolution 38/51, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue, through DPI, a broad campaign to inform world public opinion, with respect to Namibia, of the facts concerning the support of the South African régime by foreign monopolies.

UN Commissioner for Namibia

Activities of the Commissioner

In 1983, the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia continued to collect and analyse information on Namibia and followed internal political, economic and legal developments in South Africa concerning the Territory⁽⁴⁵⁾. It continued to administer assistance programmes for Namibians under the United Nations Fund for Namibia (see below), composed of the General Account, the Nationhood Programme for Namibia and the United Nations Institute for Namibia. It prepared project proposals for consideration by the Fund's Committee and reported on activities financed from the General Account. In addition, the Commissioner participated in several fund-raising missions for the Fund (see below, under INTERNATIONAL ASSISTANCE). Under the Nationhood Programme, consultants were recruited for various sectoral survey projects, and trainees were selected for fellowships. Two consultants were engaged to prepare a document on all aspects of economic planning in an independent Namibia. As in previous years, the Office renewed or issued travel and identity documents to Namibians in Africa and other parts of the world.

To secure universal implementation of the 1974 Decree for the protection of Namibia's natural resources⁽¹¹⁾ the Commissioner's Office undertook consultations with Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States, which indicated, however, that they had not banned trade with Namibia. The Office subsequently engaged lawyers in Belgium, France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States to determine the feasibility of instituting legal proceedings in domestic courts against firms or individuals engaged in trade in Namibian products in violation of the Decree.

The Office was preparing a study on transnational corporations (TNCs) operating or investing in Namibia, as requested by the General Assembly in December 1982.⁽¹⁾ The study was to identify the commercial and investment practices of foreign companies and the extent of their exploitation of Namibian resources, and to recommend future action by the Council for Namibia. The first draft of the section on North American companies was completed and sections on Western European and South African companies were planned. A study on assistance to the front-line States was also in preparation, as was a demographic study of the Namibia population that would analyse socio-economic characteristics and make growth projections.

The regional Office of the Commissioner at Luanda, Angola, which opened in August 1982,⁽⁵⁵⁾ became fully operational on 21 January 1983. It served as the liaison between the New York office and the provisional headquarters of SWAPO in Luanda, and assumed new responsibilities when 21 projects were transferred to it from the regional office at Lusaka, Zambia. The Luanda office facilitated the work of a consultant conducting a workshop for Namibian broadcasters and assisted in placing some 100 Namibians in training programmes in various countries. It worked with United Nations bodies in co-ordinating assistance programmes for Namibians in Angola. The regional office at Lusaka served as a centre for political and informational activities, as well as an administrative office for assistance programmes of the Fund for Namibia, providing support to executing agencies and consultants associated with 26 projects remaining in Lusaka. The Lusaka office also co-ordinated placement of Namibians in training programmes in various countries and participated in seminars on health training, TNCs, mineral development and telecommunications planning. Similarly, the office at Gabarone, Botswana, maintained contacts with the host Government, SWAPO and United Nations organizations concerning assistance to Namibian refugees. It made periodic visits to refugee settlements to assess the needs of Namibians, assisted in placing Namibians in educational institutions and helped administer other Fund projects.

Appointment of the Commissioner

The Secretary-General, by a note of 28 November 1983,⁽⁵⁶⁾ proposed to the General Assembly that it extend the appointment of Brajesh Chandra Mishra as United Nations Commissioner for Namibia for a one-year term beginning on 1 January 1984. Mr. Mishra had served in that capacity since his appointment on 1 April 1982.⁽⁵⁷⁾

International assistance

United Nations assistance to Namibia continued during 1983 mainly through the United Nations Institute for Namibia and the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, both of which received financing from the United Nations Fund for Namibia and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

In December, the General Assembly outlined the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia in respect of the Fund, the Institute and the Nationhood Programme, called for increased support for the Fund and allocated $1 million to it for 1984 from the Organization's regular budget (resolution 38/36 E).

The International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, in adopting the Paris Declaration on Namibia⁽¹⁾ also called for increased international assistance for the Namibian people and to the front-line States (see above). The Conference stated that the United Nations and the international community had to take energetic and concerted action in support of the Namibian people's struggle for self-determination, freedom and national independence. In its Programme of Action on Namibia, the Conference called on the United Nations system to initiate a major programme of assistance to the front-line States enabling them to implement more effectively United Nations resolutions supporting the Namibian people's struggle for liberation and to withstand the economic sabotage perpetrated against them by South Africa. Governments were asked to make or increase their contribution to the Fund (see below) in order to assist the Nationhood Programme and the Institute in formulating and implementing projects in support of the Namibian people.

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries), in a 14 September resolution⁽²⁾ expressed concern that assistance extended by certain specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations to colonial peoples—particularly the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO)—was far from adequate in relation to their needs (see Chapter I of this section).

The Committee noted with satisfaction that SWAPO continued to benefit from programmes established within the framework of the Institute and that the Council for Namibia, in co-operation with SWAPO, continued to represent the people of Namibia at United Nations meetings. Specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations were urged to increase assistance to SWAPO and to the Institute and the Nationhood Programme, and to extend material assistance to the front-line States.

In an October report⁽³⁾ submitted to the Assembly in pursuance of its December 1982 request⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General, who had been asked to develop a comprehensive programme of assistance to States bordering Namibia and South Africa to enable them to move towards complete self-reliance, noted that the beginning elements of such a programme were available in the national development plans of those States and in the projects being developed under the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (see p. 170); he therefore considered that additional international assistance to ensure their implementation would represent the most realistic approach to the type of assistance envisaged by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In 1983, the General Assembly called for assistance to the Namibians in two resolutions adopted on 7 December (see Chapter I of this section).

By resolution 38/51, it requested United Nations organizations to withhold from South Africa any financial, economic or technical co-operation and assistance until the Namibian people had exercised their right to self-determination and apartheid had been totally eradicated. They should also refrain from taking action implying recognition of the legitimacy of or support for South Africa's domination of Namibia. The Assembly again called for increased assistance by those organizations to SWAPO, the Institute and the Nationhood Programme.

By resolution 38/54, the Assembly urged all States, directly and through action in United Nations bodies, to provide moral and material assistance to the oppressed people of Namibia.

Further, the Assembly, by resolution 38/36 A of 1 December, called on Member States and United Nations organizations to increase support and material, financial, military and other assistance to SWAPO to enable it to intensify its struggle for Namibia's liberation. The Assembly declared that implementation of a resolution on the need for development aid to Namibia, adopted by the European Parliament on 13 January, calling on the European Economic Community (EEC) to extend aid to occupied Namibia, as well as to so-called "refugees from southern Angola" in Namibia, would flout international law by implying recognition of South Africa's presence in Namibia and would subsidize Pretoria's illegal administration of the Territory, while encouraging its acts of aggression against Angola and the occupation of a part of Angolan territory. The Assembly noted the 14 November declaration of the European Parliament concerning the January resolution, and a 15 November letter from the President of the Parliament to the Secretary-General underlining that the Parliament and the European Community supported and respected the framework established by the United Nations in respect of Namibia.

By resolution 38/36 C, also of 1 December, the Assembly decided to make adequate financial provision in the United Nations programme budget to finance the SWAPO office in New York to ensure appropriate representation of the Namibian people at the United Nations, and agreed to continue to defray the expenses of SWAPO representatives whenever the Council for Namibia so decided.

UN Fund for Namibia

Activities of the Fund

The United Nations Council for Namibia reported⁽¹⁾ that the United Nations Fund for Namibia, which became operative in 1972⁽²⁾ and for which the Council was trustee, continued to serve in 1983 as the main vehicle through which the Council channelled its assistance. The Fund financed three main programmes: the United Nations Institute for Namibia (see below); the Nationhood Programme for Namibia (see below); and educational, social and relief assistance to Namibians.

While the first two programmes were set up with particular reference to the future attainment of independence, the establishment of State machinery and the assumption of administrative responsibilities by Namibians, the third programme emphasized their immediate needs and welfare. This programme was administered by the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia and financed from the Fund's General Account.

Under the scholarship programme, during the period 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983, 49 new awards were made and 26 students completed their courses. As of 1 July, 126 awards were being used for various fields of study in 13 countries. In accordance with a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁶⁾ requesting a study of the Namibian population's educational needs, a consultant was engaged to evaluate the scholarships awarded under the Fund in order to increase their effectiveness. The General Account financed training projects in broadcasting, cinematography and video techniques, journalism and communications, and vocational training. In addition, individual scholarships were provided to 28 Institute graduates and educational materials were provided to Namibian students in SWAPO schools. Individual Namibians in need received emergency medical treatment and other forms of humanitarian assistance.

Fund expenditures for the three programmes in 1983 were: $2,143,192 for the Nationhood Programme; $4,310,471 for the Institute; and $2,332,769 for educational, social and relief assistance.

Japan recalled that the Fund had been established on a voluntary basis and said it had reservations with regard to allocating $1 million from the regular budget. Sweden, on behalf of the five Nordic countries, said they, too, had reservations about sweeping financial implications, a point also raised by Austria. New Zealand also had reservations on certain aspects of the text.

Most of the other States which spoke in explanation of vote indicated their position on resolution 38/36 E when they spoke on all the resolutions (38/36 A-E) adopted concerning Namibia (see above).

Financing of the Fund

In 1983, 43 States made a total contribution of $4,256,412 to the United Nations Fund for Namibia (see table). Other income included $1 million from the United Nations budget, as authorized by the General Assembly in December 1982.⁽⁶⁾ Funding for assistance projects was also provided by UNDP and the executing agencies.

Several fund-raising missions were conducted in 1983,⁽¹⁾ in response to the Assembly's 1982 request.⁽⁶⁾ Missions composed of the Vice-Chairman/Rapporteur of the Committee on the Fund and the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia visited Austria, Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands and the headquarters of EEC (21 January-3 February); and Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden (14-17 February). The Commissioner visited Australia and Japan (25 February-2 March). The Vice-Chairman/Rapporteur undertook a mission in Paris, during the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence (25-29 April), and continued fund-raising efforts with the permanent missions in New York. Finland was visited again on 2 May.

Governments visited unanimously recognized the need to prepare the Namibians for independence and expressed support for the Council's assistance programmes. They further stressed the importance of thorough project evaluation.

In the Programme of Action on Namibia, the Conference on Namibia called on Governments to contribute or to increase contributions to the Fund and to appeal again to their national organizations and institutions for contributions.

By resolution 38/36 E (see above), the General Assembly allocated $1 million to the Fund from the regular budget of the United Nations for 1984 and called for increased contributions to the Fund.

Nationhood Programme

The Nationhood Programme for Namibia, launched by the General Assembly in 1976,⁽⁷⁾ continued in 1983 to finance training programmes and surveys of the Namibian economic and social sectors in preparation for independence.

The Council for Namibia⁽¹⁾ reported that, during 1982 and the first half of 1983, one group of students embarked on the fourth phase of training in the administration of public enterprises, while another group commenced training in development planning; groups commenced studies in railway operations and in the mining industry, as well as in maritime economics and management; a group of disabled Namibians began remedial training to be followed by basic trades training; and training continued in agricultural economics, pre-engineering in preparation for

In August 1983, the United Nations Vocational Training Centre for Namibia (Sumbe, Kwanza-Sul province, Angola) became operational when 100 students were enrolled in full-time vocational training courses. The Centre's financing derived from both the Trust Fund for the Nationhood Programme and UNDP, whose contribution from the indicative planning figure (IPF) for Namibia for 1983 was $575,629. The International Labour Organisation was the executing agency.

The fourth meeting of the Centre's Governing Board was held in May 1983 at Luanda, Angola, with the Council's participation.

The Committee on the Fund for Namibia approved a project, drawn up by the Office of the Commissioner in consultation with SWAPO, to provide training in English, mathematics, natural and social sciences and physical education for 100 Namibians to prepare them to follow more specialized training courses such as those provided under the Nationhood Programme. The Government of Zambia agreed to make teaching facilities available.

Of the sectoral surveys envisaged by the Programme, final reports on transport, health, and land use and human settlements were submitted to the Council, draft reports on mineral resources and mining, transnational corporations and labour legislation were awaiting finalization, and draft reports on agrarian reform, agricultural education, maritime training and harbour survey, civil aviation, telecommunications, energy, protection of food supplies, public administration systems, water resources, land suitability and the criminal justice system were awaiting further discussion. All sectors had been surveyed to some extent except trade and information, which were to be dealt with in a comprehensive study on all aspects of economic planning to be prepared by the Institute for Namibia as requested by the Assembly in 1982⁽⁶⁾ (see below).

By a 25 July resolution (1983/42), the Economic and Social Council requested United Nations organizations to render increased assistance to the Namibian people, particularly in connection with the Nationhood Programme.

By resolution 38/36 E (see above), the General Assembly requested the Council for Namibia to elaborate policies and contingency plans for the transitional and post-independence phases of the Nationhood Programme and called on United Nations organizations to expedite execution of the Programme's projects.

UN Institute for Namibia

The United Nations Institute for Namibia, inaugurated in 1976⁽⁸⁾ to undertake research, training, planning and related activities, continued in 1983 to develop human resources in anticipation of Namibia's independence.

In 1983, the Institute, located at Lusaka, Zambia, and open to persons of Namibian origin who fulfilled the requirements of the Institute's 16-member Senate, had a student body of 422.(1) The expanded curriculum of the Institute included teacher training/upgrading courses, secretarial instruction and special preparatory courses in English, statistics and mathematics. In January, the fourth group of students, numbering 62, graduated from the Institute with diplomas in management and development studies, bringing the total number of graduates to 282. A group of 76 students also graduated from the secretarial course, to which 86 new ones were admitted.

As part of its continuing applied research programme, intended to make available basic documentation for policy formulation by the future Government of an independent Namibia, the Institute published studies on agrarian reform, constitutional options, a language policy, a legal system, and manpower requirements and development implications. Studies on health, education and mining had been completed and readied for publication. Work continued on a comprehensive reference book covering aspects of the Namibia question as considered by the United Nations since its inception.

By a December 1982 resolution,⁽⁶⁾ the Institute had been requested to prepare a comprehensive study on all aspects of economic planning in an independent Namibia. Inter-agency meetings were held in May and November 1983 to discuss details of the study and the work carried out by consultants and specialized agencies, as well as by other organizations.

In 1983, the Institute's Namibian Extension Unit, which became operational in November 1981, was serving some 40,000 Namibians in Angola and Zambia who had limited access to formal education.

UNDP, which had provided assistance to the Institute since its establishment, continued in 1983 with financing for various research and training activities. The UNDP contribution of $968,592 for 1983 financed the services of the Institute's deputy director, three assistant directors, six lecturers, a senior librarian and a publications editor. There was also provision for administrative support, stipends and maintenance costs for 400 students, equipment and supplies.

In the Programme of Action on Namibia, the Conference on Namibia urged States and United Nations organizations to contribute to the Institute in the form of scholarship grants and other assistance.

By resolution 38/36 E (see above), the General Assembly commended the Institute for the effectiveness of its training programmes and research activities, requested early completion of the Namibia reference book and comprehensive document on economic planning, and urged United Nations organizations to co-operate with the Institute in strengthening its activities.

Other UN assistance

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa. In an October 1983 report to the General Assembly⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that for the 1982/83 academic year, the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa granted 18 new scholarship awards to Namibians and extended 5, making a total of 23 scholarship holders studying in seven countries. The scholarships did not include awards financed by the United Nations Fund for Namibia. (For details of other scholarships granted and contributions to the Programme in 1983, see p. 190.)

In resolution 38/36 E, the Assembly decided that Namibians should continue to be eligible for assistance through the Programme, and, in resolution 38/52, it appealed for greater financial and other support to the Programme.

UNIDO activities. In a report on technical assistance to the Namibian people in 1983,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) stated that UNIDO undertook a mission to Zambia in July to discuss implementation of a pre-independence assistance project, for which it had approved $103,960 from the United Nations Industrial Development Fund. Designed to lead to industrial and technological co-operation with the Institute for Namibia, the project was to award fellowships for the acquisition of skills to meet the tasks that independence would entail. Also discussed was the possible UNIDO contribution to a comprehensive document—under preparation by the Institute in co-operation with SWAPO, the Office of the Commissioner for Namibia and UNDP—on all aspects of economic planning in an independent Namibia, as requested by the Assembly in December 1982.⁽⁶⁾ For this purpose, UNIDO revised its project to consist of assistance in the preparation of that document.

Implementation of the project began in December 1983 and it was expected to be completed in 1984. Approval of three project proposals of assistance to SWAPO, submitted to UNDP for financing in 1982,⁽¹¹⁾ remained in abeyance in 1983 for lack of funds.

On 13 May 1983,⁽¹²⁾ the Industrial Development Board took note of the Executive Director's report on technical assistance to Namibians in 1982.⁽³¹⁾ It emphasized the need for effective delivery of such assistance, taking account of the priority areas within the industrial sector as defined in the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990) and the Nationhood Programme for Namibia. The Board reiterated its request to UNDP to approve the technical co-operation projects submitted by UNIDO and release funds for implementation of those already approved. It also reiterated the importance of close co-operation between UNIDO, UNDP, the Institute, the Council for Namibia and SWAPO.

UNDP assistance. In 1983, UNDP financed three projects for Namibia, in the amount of $1,545,721.⁽¹⁴⁾ This covered assistance for: establishment of the Vocational Training Centre for Namibia in Angola; various research and training activities of the Institute for Namibia; and preparation of the report on a project completed in 1982, under which advisory services on labour legislation had been provided.

On 18 June 1983,⁽¹⁵⁾ the UNDP Governing Council decided that information on assistance to Namibia should be submitted in a separate report, and not as theretofore part of the Administrator's annual report on assistance to national liberation movements. On 24 June⁽¹⁶⁾ the Council requested the Administrator, in consultation with the executing agencies, to examine the feasibility and financial implications of waiving agency support costs of projects financed from the United Nations Fund for Namibia, as called for by the Assembly in 1982.⁽⁶⁾ To ensure that contributions from the Fund were used mainly for project, rather than for administrative, support costs, the Council also requested that those contributions be treated as government cash counterpart contributions so that executing agencies would not charge more than 3.5 per cent as reimbursement of their support costs.

In resolution 38/36 E of 1 December (see above), the General Assembly called on UNDP to continue to allocate, at the request of the Council for Namibia, funds from the Namibia IPF for implementation of projects within the Nationhood Programme and for the Institute and to raise the IPF for Namibia.

UNCTAD activities. Following consideration of a report on UNCTAD assistance to national liberation movements recognized by regional intergovernmental organizations⁽¹⁷⁾ UNCTAD VI on 2 July adopted resolution 147(VI) on assistance to the peoples of Namibia and South Africa⁽¹⁸⁾ (see also p. 160). By that resolution, the Conference urged the UNCTAD Secretary-General to co-operate with the Institute for Namibia, by providing technical expertise, in preparing the comprehensive document on all aspects of economic planning in an independent Namibia.

Chapter IV

Other colonial Territories

Progress towards self-determination and independence in individual Non-Self-Governing Territories continued to be closely examined in 1983 by the General Assembly and its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Committee on colonial countries).

The Assembly adopted resolution 38/12 requesting Argentina and the United Kingdom to resume negotiations for a peaceful solution to their sovereignty dispute over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and asking the Secretary-General to continue his renewed mission of good offices to assist the parties. By resolution 38/40, the Assembly urged Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to conduct cease-fire negotiations and to create the necessary conditions for a referendum among the people of Western Sahara on their future. In decision 38/402, it decided to defer the item on East Timor to its 1984 session. Human rights issues in Western Sahara and East Timor were taken up by the Commission on Human Rights and in the latter by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

For most of the Territories, the United Nations Secretariat prepared working papers for the 25-member Committee on colonial countries, outlining recent developments. The Committee, and usually its Sub-Committee on Small Territories, examined the situation in each Territory and adopted conclusions and recommendations for the Assembly's consideration; these were discussed mainly in the Fourth Committee.

The Assembly adopted resolutions on American Samoa (38/41), Guam (38/42) and the United States Virgin Islands (38/48), under United States administration, and on Bermuda (38/43), the British Virgin Islands (38/44), the Cayman Islands (38/45), Montserrat (38/46) and the Turks and Caicos Islands (38/47), under United Kingdom administration.

Because of a United Kingdom decision to resume transmitting information on Anguilla to the Committee on colonial countries, the Assembly by decision 38/418 deferred consideration of the Territory to its 1984 session. In decision 38/417, it took note with satisfaction of the imminent accession to independence of Brunei. It noted in decision 38/412 that Australia, as the administering Power, had discussed with representatives of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands the holding of an act of self-determination to determine their future status, and that Australia was ready to receive visiting missions in that regard. It urged in decision 38/415 that the United Kingdom and Spain initiate negotiations to settle the Gibraltar problem. The Assembly called on the United Kingdom in decision 38/414 to continue to safeguard the interests of the people of Pitcairn. It also adopted decisions 38/416 and 38/413, declaring that the dispatch of visiting missions to St. Helena and Tokelau, respectively, should be kept under review.

Question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

Communications January-August). A number of letters were addressed to the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General by Argentina and the United Kingdom on the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) between January and August 1983.

On 3 January⁽¹⁾ Argentina reiterated its claim to sovereignty over the Malvinas, protested against measures by the United Kingdom, such as a so-called protection zone and militarization of the Territory, which, it said, constituted a source of serious tension in the South Atlantic, and expressed readiness to implement immediately the General Assembly's November 1982 resolution⁽²⁾ calling for negotiations for a peaceful solution. On 12 January⁽³⁾ Argentina added that a visit to the Malvinas by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom had aggravated tension in the region and that the British Government had shown no readiness to implement the 1982 resolution. Argentina, on 24 January⁽⁴⁾ denounced international press reports about an alleged Argentine military build-up in the South Atlantic, and declared it was scrupulously observing the existing defacto cessation of hostilities and was committed to a peaceful settlement of the dispute.

Referring to the three Argentine letters, the United Kingdom, on 27 January⁽⁵⁾ stated that its position on the sovereignty issue remained unchanged and added that the criticism of "militarization" ignored the unprovoked Argentine invasion of the Islands in 1982 and the need to defend them from further attacks.

On 30 March⁽⁶⁾ Argentina drew attention to continuous public pronouncements by the highest British authorities that the United Kingdom was not prepared to negotiate on the sovereignty of the territories and asserted that that attitude was a challenge to the decisions of the Security Council and the Assembly.

Replying, the United Kingdom said on 18 May⁽⁷⁾ that the continuing tension in the South Atlantic lay in the refusal of Argentina to declare a definitive cessation of hostilities and to renounce the use of force as a means of resolving the dispute. Argentina declared on 28 June⁽⁸⁾ that study of the 18 May letter and other statements by the British authorities indicated that the United Kingdom was not ready to seek a definitive negotiated solution to the sovereignty question but seemed bent on consolidating its illegal colonial presence in Argentine territory.

On 16 July⁽⁹⁾ Argentina called attention to the United Kingdom's decision to build a new airfield for civil and military use in the Malvinas at March Ridge about 30 kilometres from Puerto Argentino (Port Stanley), and declared that its construction, combined with the intention of establishing a naval base in the islands capable of accommodating nuclear submarines, showed that the United Kingdom planned to introduce nuclear weapons into the region as part of its global strategic design. The United Kingdom, on 9 November,⁽¹⁰⁾ declared that the military facilities were strictly limited to the scale required to meet the current threat to the Islands.

On 26 July⁽¹¹⁾ Argentina transmitted a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS) on 20 November 1982, expressing support for the 1982 Assembly resolution and exhorting Argentina and the United Kingdom to carry it out.

On 10 August⁽¹²⁾ Argentina charged that on 1 August two fishing vessels, the Rivera Vasca and the Arcos, flying the Argentine flag and fishing in what it described as Argentine jurisdictional waters, were forced by British helicopters and a missile frigate to leave the area where the United Kingdom had illegally established a so-called exclusion zone. On 7 November⁽¹³⁾ the United Kingdom stated that repeated incursions by the two vessels into the protection zone on 1, 5 and 6 August were attempts to bolster Argentine claims to sovereignty over the Falklands and to jurisdiction over their surrounding waters; it also reported an incursion on 5 August by an Argentine naval aircraft and its interception by two British aircraft, pointing out that such actions created the risk of a serious incident.

Responding on 25 August⁽¹⁴⁾ to the Argentine letters of 28 June and 16 July, the United Kingdom rejected the allegations that it was maintaining a climate of confrontation and militarizing the Falklands; it added that recent incursions by both Argentine military aircraft and unauthorized civilian vessels had demonstrated the continuing need for measures to defend the Islands.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) was considered by the Committee on colonial countries on 31 August and 1 September.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Committee heard statements by the United Kingdom as the administering Power, by representatives of the Falklands Executive and Legislative Councils, by Argentina and by Committee members. On 1 September, the Committee requested Argentina and the United Kingdom to resume negotiations, expressing support for a renewed good offices mission by the Secretary-General based on the 1982 Assembly resolution⁽²⁾ and deciding to continue examining the question, subject to any directives by the Assembly.

Report of the Secretary-General. In pursuance of the 1982 Assembly resolution⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1983 a report on the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) question⁽¹⁶⁾ Recalling that he had been requested to assist Argentina and the United Kingdom to resume negotiations, he said that he had had extensive exchanges with the two Governments, including meetings with the President of Argentina and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom as well as with their respective Foreign Ministers. It was his belief that a resumption of negotiations could open the way towards a solution of the problem in the South Atlantic, and he stood ready to assist both parties in that process.

Communications (October-December). Further letters on the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) question were received by the President of the General Assembly and the Secretary-General from October to December.

Twelve Latin American and Caribbean countries transmitted in a letter dated 3 October⁽¹⁷⁾ a resolution adopted on 19 May by the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (OPANAL) on the alleged introduction of nuclear weapons by the United Kingdom into the Falklands Islands (Malvinas) region. The Conference took note of the allegations by Argentina. It also took note of a statement by the United Kingdom that it was upholding its obligations under Additional Protocols 1 and II of the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)⁽¹⁸⁾ and had not deployed nuclear weapons in areas for which it was internationally responsible. The Conference expressed concern that nuclear-propelled submarines had been used in warlike actions within the geographical zone defined by the Treaty, and reaffirmed the commitment of all States bound by the Treaty and its Protocols to refrain from activities which might endanger the military nuclear-free status of Latin America (see also p. 42).

On 3 November,⁽¹⁹⁾ Argentina stated that the military base being constructed by the United Kingdom was not only a provocation against Argentina but also a source of growing concern for Latin America, and that its characteristics and cost left no doubt as to the global nature and long-term thrust of the United Kingdom's current policy in the South Atlantic. By another letter of the same date⁽²⁰⁾ Argentina transmitted a document summarizing and discussing the consideration given to the Malvinas question during 1982 and 1983 by the General Assembly, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, OAS and OPANAL; resolutions adopted by those bodies were included in a series of appendices.

On 9 November⁽²¹⁾ Argentina transmitted an 8 November statement by the President-elect of Argentina in which he said that negotiations, with the good offices of the Secretary-General in the context of the 1982 Assembly resolution, were the proper way to settle the Malvinas dispute.

On 8 December⁽²²⁾ Argentina conveyed the text of a resolution adopted by the OAS General Assembly on 17 November, expressing concern at the lack of progress in complying with the 1982 resolution and resolution 38/12 (see below) and urging that they be complied with.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/12 by recorded vote.

Question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas),

Aware that the maintenance of colonial situations is incompatible with the United Nations ideal of universal peace,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, 2065(XX) of 16 December 1965, 3160(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 31/49 of 1 December 1976 and 37/9 of 4 November 1982,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 502(1982) of 3 April 1982 and 505(1982) of 26 May 1982,

Having received the report of the Secretary-General on his mission of good offices,

Regretting the lack of progress in the implementation of resolution 37/9,

Aware of the interest of the international community in the resumption by the Governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland of their negotiations in order to find as soon as possible a peaceful and just solution to the sovereignty dispute relating to the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas),

Taking into account the existence of a de facto cessation of hostilities in the South Atlantic and the expressed intention of the parties not to renew them,

Reaffirming the need for the parties to take due account of the interests of the population of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 2065(XX), 3160(XXVIII) and 37/9,

Reaffirming also the principles of the Charter of the United Nations on the non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations and the peaceful settlement of international disputes,

1. Reiterates its request to the Governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to resume negotiations in order to find as soon as possible a peaceful solution to the sovereignty dispute relating to the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas);

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 37/9;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his renewed mission of good offices in order to assist the parties in complying with the request made in paragraph 1 above, and to take the necessary measures to that end;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)".

Following adoption of the resolution, several countries explained their votes. Austria said it voted in favour because the resolution was founded on the principles of non-use of force and the right of peoples to self-determination, while in no way prejudging the sovereignty question. Guyana, Japan, Malaysia and Papua New Guinea supported the resolution's call for negotiations which could lead to a settlement of the dispute.

Greece averred that its abstention should be construed as a reflection of its desire to see a negotiated settlement. Italy declared that it abstained to keep alive the possibility of pursuing its efforts to re-establish a dialogue between the parties. The Netherlands said it had close ties with both and that it could not support a text that described their negotiations in a prejudicial manner. Maldives held that, although the resolution contained a number of welcome elements, it also lacked certain principles necessary to finding a solution to the conflict. Turkey said it abstained because it was not possible to agree on a consensus text that would have facilitated the resumption of negotiations.

Fiji, Qatar and Samoa said they abstained because the resolution failed to provide the population adequate opportunity to express their wishes about the future.

Earlier, on 15 November, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 38/405. The following petitioners had requested hearings⁽²³⁾ and made statements before the Fourth Committee on 14 November⁽²⁴⁾ Anthony T. Blake and John E. Cheek, members of the Falkland Islands Legislative Council; Alexander Jacob Betts, a native of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas); and Derek William Rozee, a native currently residing in Argentina.

East Timor question

In a note dated 19 August 1983,⁽¹⁾ regarding implementation of the General Assembly's November 1982 resolution on East Timor⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General said that in view of developments in the situation he did not consider it opportune to submit a substantive report on his efforts to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the problem to the Assembly at its 1983 session. He proposed to submit the report in 1984.

The Secretary-General had held consultations with Indonesia and Portugal throughout 1982 and in the first half of 1983; as a result, contacts were initiated between the two States in July 1983.

On 23 September, the Assembly adopted decision 38/402 in which it decided to defer the East Timor question to its 1984 session.

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. The question of East Timor was considered by the Committee on colonial countries on 2 September 1983⁽³⁾ The Committee examined the military developments, the human rights situation, the food situation and economic, social and educational conditions.

After hearing statements by Portugal as the administering Power, Indonesia, Amnesty International, Human Rights Advocates International, and the Frente Revolucionaria de Timor Leste Independente (FRETILIN), the Committee decided to continue consideration of the question in 1984, subject to any directives by the General Assembly.

Communications. The President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received four letters on the question of East Timor between October and December.

Two of the letters were from Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe. On 7 October⁽⁴⁾ they forwarded a letter of the same date from FRETILIN, charging that a major Indonesian military offensive was currently under way in East Timor, giving a report from church sources on the massacre of 200 East Timorese villagers, commending the Secretary-General for his efforts to find a solution to the East Timor problem, and declaring that the FRETILIN leadership welcomed any peace initiative and was available for consultations with him and Indonesia and Portugal. On 24 October⁽⁵⁾ they transmitted a 20 October letter from FRETILIN, providing additional information on what it described as the extremely grave situation and alleging widespread violations of human rights in East Timor; excerpts of an interview given in September to a London-based human rights organization by the former Bishop of East Timor; and excerpts of a 25 July FRETILIN report on the human rights and social and humanitarian situation.

Referring to the 7 October letter from FRETILIN, Indonesia on 8 November⁽⁶⁾ charged that it was an attempt to transform an earlier orchestrated media campaign of deception into a more respectable exposition of so-called facts; it stated that no major military offensive was under way, that the only security activity during the year took place in an area where a band of FRETILIN die-hards attacked an army engineering unit on 8 August, and that the one major development in East Timor was the significant progress being made by the East Timorese, with the assistance of some humanitarian organizations, in the reconstruction of their province.

On 9 December⁽⁷⁾ Vanuatu forwarded a 30 November letter from its Prime Minister, enclosing an August report by Amnesty International; the report reviewed the conduct of Indonesian forces in East Timor and said evidence had been received indicating that official policy condoned torture, extrajudicial executions, disappearances, and the transportation of people to Atauro island and elsewhere, where they were held without charge or trial.

Western Sahara question

Co-operation with OAU. On 2 November 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on the question of Western Sahara,⁽¹⁾ pursuant to the Assembly's November 1982 resolution⁽²⁾ and decision⁽³⁾ requesting him to co-operate closely with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the OAU Implementation Committee on Western Sahara in organizing a referendum on self-determination in the Territory.

The Secretary-General reported that on 6 January 1983 he had informed the OAU Secretary-General that he was ready to provide assistance and to co-operate with him. On 28 June, the OAU Secretary-General transmitted the text of a resolution on Western Sahara adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (nineteenth session, Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-12 June). In a further message, on 29 June, he requested United Nations assistance in implementing the resolution, by which OAU urged the parties to the conflict in Western Sahara—Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO Front)—to undertake cease-fire negotiations; directed the Implementation Committee to work out the details of the cease-fire and the conduct of the referendum in December 1983; requested the United Nations in conjunction with OAU to provide a peace-keeping force for Western Sahara; and decided to remain seized of the question.

The United Nations Secretary-General replied on 30 June that he had noted the resolution and would co-operate closely with the OAU Secretary-General. A United Nations team was sent to Addis Ababa to meet with an OAU secretariat task force on 19 and 20 September and to attend meetings of the Implementation Committee on 21 and 22 September.

Co-operation between the United Nations and OAU continued in a number of other political and economic areas in 1983 (see p. 191).

Action by the Committee on colonial countries. Western Sahara was considered by the Committee on colonial countries on 2 and 8 September⁽⁴⁾. The Committee discussed recent developments in the Territory and heard statements by a representative of POLISARIO, Cuba, Iran and Mali. It decided to continue consideration of the question in 1984, subject to any directives by the General Assembly.

On 7 December, following the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/40.

"The General Assembly, having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and having heard the statement of the representative of Australia regarding the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, notes with appreciation the continuing co-operation of the Government of Australia, as the administering Power, with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, in respect of the Territory. The Assembly reaffirms that it is the responsibility of the administering Power to create conditions under which the people of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands will be able to determine freely their own future in conformity with resolution 1514(XV) as well as other relevant resolutions of the Assembly. In this respect, the Assembly notes the positive and continuing commitment of the administering Power to the political, social and economic advancement of the people of the Territory to enable them to exercise fully their inalienable rights as quickly as possible. It notes in particular that the administering Power has directly discussed with the representatives of the Cocos (Keeling) community the question of the holding of an act of self-determination to determine their future status. The Assembly welcomes the continuing willingness of the administering Power to receive visiting missions in the Cocos (Keeling) Islands and, in this regard, reaffirms that the need to send further missions as appropriate should be kept under review."

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Guam,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the administering Power,

Noting with appreciation the continued active participation of the administering Power in the work of the Special Committee in regard to Guam, thereby enabling it to conduct a more informed and meaningful examination of the situation in the Territory with a view to accelerating the process of decolonization towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration,

Noting that a referendum on political status was organized in the Territory, the final phase of which was held on 4 September 1982,

Recalling all relevant resolutions of the United Nations relating to military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Noting the great potential for diversifying and developing the economy of Guam offered by commercial fishing, agriculture and the development of the transportation industry,

Bearing in mind that an obstacle to the economic development of the Territory has been the uncertainty concerning land held by the federal authorities,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of Guam and the necessity of diversifying the economy of the Territory as a matter of priority and noting the great potential for diversification offered by commercial fishing, agriculture and the development of the transportation industry,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the small Territories and expressing its satisfaction at the willingness of the administering Power to receive visiting missions in the Territories under its administration,

5. Reaffirms its strong conviction that the administering Power must ensure that military bases and installations do not hinder the population of the Territory from exercising its right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter and urges the administering Power to take all necessary measures to comply fully with the relevant resolutions;

6. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power, under the Charter, for the economic and social development of Guam and calls upon the administering Power to take all necessary steps to strengthen and diversify the economy of the Territory, with a view to reducing the Territory's economic dependence on the administering Power;

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted without vote resolution 38/46 on 7 December.

Question of Montserrat

The General Assembly,

Taking into account the statement of the representative of the administering Power, in which he said that the policy of his Government was to respect the wishes of the people of the Territory in determining their future political status,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the administering Power for the economic and social development of the Territory,

Noting that during the period under review the economy of Montserrat grew in real terms and that in recent years no budgetary grant-in-aid from the administering Power has been considered necessary to balance the regular budget of the Territory,

Noting that an in-service review of the organization and training needs of the public service was undertaken in 1982 and that priority would be given to the establishment of a civil service training centre,

Mindful of the responsibility of the United Nations to help the people of Montserrat to realize their aspirations in accordance with the objectives set forth in the Declaration,

Noting the assistance being rendered by those organizations of the United Nations system operating in the Territory,

Aware of the special problems facing the Territory by virtue of its isolation, small size, limited resources and lack of infrastructure,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories visited,

6. Reaffirms that it is ultimately for the people of Montserrat themselves to determine their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration and reiterates its call upon the administering Power to launch, in co-operation with the territorial Government, programmes of political education so that the people of Montserrat may be fully informed of the options available to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence;

Pitcairn

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote decision 38/414.

Question of Pitcairn

At its 86th plenary meeting, on 7 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text as representing the consensus of the members of the Assembly:

"The General Assembly, having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, takes note of the statement of the representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland affirming the policy of his Government to encourage as much local initiative and enterprise as possible, so that the people of Pitcairn can make the most of their own way of life. The Assembly takes note of the willingness of the administering Power to discuss any change of constitutional status with the people of the Territory whenever the latter so desire. It notes that the present size of the population continues to raise the question of the capacity of the islanders to maintain the essential services such as education and medical welfare and their ability to launch long boats on which, in the absence of adequate dock facilities, trade with passing ships depends. In that connection, the Assembly calls once again upon the administering Power to continue to take the necessary measures to safeguard the interests of the people of Pitcairn. The Assembly requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question at its next session and to report thereon to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session."

General Assembly decision 38/414

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/38/612 & Corr.1) without objection, 17 November (meeting 19); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/38/231; agenda item 18.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 4th Committee 8-19; plenary 86.

The draft was recommended by the Committee on colonial countries on 12 August,⁽¹⁾ following approval of a draft consensus submitted by the Sub-Committee on Small Territories. The Committee had considered Pitcairn's constitutional and political developments, and economic, social and educational conditions.

St. Helena

In a letter of 22 August 1983⁽²⁾ to the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries, the United Kingdom enclosed excerpts from an address by the Governor of St. Helena to its Legislative Council on the work of a commission set up in 1981 to consider changes in the St. Helena Constitution. The Governor stated that every reasonable effort had been made to obtain people's views on the question, but that little interest was shown and no positive proposals had emerged. He suggested that the Council might prepare changes, or improvements, as a modest step in St. Helena's constitutional development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/416 by recorded vote.

Question of St. Helena

At its 86th plenary meeting, on 7 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and having heard the statement of the representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960. The Assembly noted the commitment of the Government of the United Kingdom to respect the wishes of the people of the Territory and, in that regard, urged the administering Power, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the people of St. Helena, to continue to take all necessary steps to ensure the speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of that Territory. The Assembly expressed the hope that the administering Power would continue to implement infrastructure and community development projects aimed at improving the general welfare of the community and to encourage local initiative and enterprise, particularly in the areas of forestry, fisheries and the handicrafts industry. The Assembly reaffirmed that continued development assistance from the administering Power, together with any assistance that the international community might be able to provide, constituted an important means of developing the economic potential of the Territory and of enhancing the capacity of its people to realize fully the goals set forth in the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the improvement of economic conditions in the Territory. The Assembly noted with concern the presence of a military base on the dependency of Ascension and, in that regard, recalled all the relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions concerning military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories. Noting the positive attitude of the administering Power with respect to the question of receiving United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under its administration, the Assembly considered that the possibility of dispatching such a mission to St. Helena at an appropriate time should be kept under review. The Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue to examine the question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a visiting mission to St. Helena, at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

114-2-31 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/38/612 & Corr.1) by recorded vote (95-2-26), 17 November (meeting 19); draft by Committee on colonial countries (A/38/23); agenda item 18.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 4th Committee 8-19; plenary 86.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Belize, Canada, Comoros, Denmark, Dominica, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Liberia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Sweden, Turkey.

The draft was recommended by the Committee on colonial countries on 14 September⁽¹⁾ following adoption of a draft decision submitted by its Sub-Committee on Small Territories. The Committee had considered St. Helena's constitutional arrangements and economic, social and educational conditions, as well as its dependencies—Tristan da Cunha and Ascension Island.

Before the Fourth Committee approved the draft, it took a vote, requested by the United Kingdom, on the fifth sentence of the text, which was retained by a recorded vote of 72 to 27, with 17 abstentions.

Explaining its vote on that sentence, the United Kingdom said it felt that the reference to Ascension Island was out of place; that the island and St. Helena were legally distinct, 1,000 miles apart and connected only for administrative reasons; and that the military facilities there were not an obstacle to the self-determination of a people, since there was no local population on that island. Australia, voting for the sentence's omission, agreed that the two islands were separate entities.

Voting in favour of the sentence, Czechoslovakia pointed out that it did not mention that the military facilities on Ascension had been used by British invasion forces during the South Atlantic conflict or that the United Kingdom had used a colonial Territory to restore its rule over another Non-Self-Governing Territory. Venezuela said the fact that Ascension Island did not have an indigenous population did not justify the installation or use of military bases on colonial Territories; since the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) conflict, Ascension Island had been used as a supply and refuelling centre for naval and air units going to the South Atlantic. Cuba said it had voted for the draft for the same reasons as Venezuela and Czechoslovakia and because, as a member of the Committee on colonial countries, it felt that decisions adopted there by consensus should be respected by the Fourth Committee.

Norway, on behalf of the Nordic countries, stated that they considered that Ascension Island was not covered by the Assembly's 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁽⁴⁾ under which the question of St. Helena was being considered. Canada agreed and said it regretted that the controversial sentence had not been withdrawn. Nepal said it had abstained because the text covered two separate issues, decolonization and the question of military bases; it would have been preferable for the Committee to discuss the question of demilitarization separately.

St. Kitts-Nevis

The Committee on colonial countries took note on 14 September 1983 of the scheduled accession to independence of St. Kitts-Nevis on 19 September 1983.⁽¹⁾ The Committee also welcomed the declared intention of the Government, upon attaining independence (as Saint Christopher and Nevis), to apply for United Nations membership (see p. 388).

Tokelau

In December, the General Assembly adopted without vote decision 38/413 as recommended by the Fourth Committee.

Question of Tokelau

At its 86th plenary meeting, on 7 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text as representing the consensus of the members of the Assembly:

"The General Assembly, having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and having heard the statement of the representative of New Zealand with regard to Tokelau, notes with appreciation the willingness of the administering Power to maintain its close co-operation with the United Nations in the exercise of its responsibility towards Tokelau. The Assembly reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Tokelau to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and reaffirms further that it is the responsibility of the administering Power to keep the people of Tokelau fully informed of this right. In this regard, the Assembly notes that the people of the Territory have expressed the view that, at the present time, they do not wish to review the nature of the existing relationship between Tokelau and New Zealand. The Assembly welcomes the assurances of the administering Power that it will continue to be guided solely by the wishes of the people of Tokelau as to the future status of the Territory. The Assembly notes that the administering Power has assured the people of Tokelau of its continuing assistance in the event that they should desire to change their status. The Assembly calls upon the administering Power to continue its programme of political education within the context of its efforts to ensure the preservation of the identity and cultural heritage of the people of Tokelau. The Assembly recognizes that the economic development of Tokelau is an important element in the process of self-determination. The Assembly notes the continuing efforts of the administering Power to promote the economic development of the Territory and the measures it has taken to safeguard and guarantee the rights of the people of Tokelau to all their natural resources and the benefits derived therefrom. The Assembly is of the opinion that the administering Power should continue to expand its programme of budgetary support and development aid to the Territory. The Assembly notes with appreciation the continuing efforts of the administering Power to make improvements in the fields of public health, public works and education. The Assembly reiterates its expression of appreciation to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as to the regional organizations, for their assistance to Tokelau and calls upon those bodies to continue providing assistance to the Territory. Mindful of the effective means provided by United Nations visiting missions to assess the situation in the Territories, the Assembly is of the opinion that the possibility of sending another visiting mission to the Territory at an appropriate time should be kept under review, taking into account, in particular, the wishes of the people of Tokelau. The Assembly requests the Special Committee to continue to examine this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission to Tokelau, at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session."

Turks and Caicos Islands

On the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/47 on 7 December.

Question of the Turks and Caicos Islands

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the Turks and Caicos Islands,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to the Turks and Caicos Islands,

Taking into account the statement of the representative of the administering Power relating to the Territory, in which he said that his Government would fully respect the wishes of the people of the Turks and Caicos Islands in determining the future constitutional status of the Territory, and bearing in mind the importance of fostering an awareness among the people of the Territory of the possibilities open to them,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory,

Noting with appreciation the participation of the administering Power in the work of the Special Committee in regard to the Turks and Caicos Islands, thereby enabling it to conduct a more meaningful examination of the situation in the Territory,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability and to develop a wider economic base for the Territory,

Recalling all relevant resolutions of the United Nations relating to military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Noting the assistance rendered by the United Nations Development Programme in the development of the Territory and welcoming the attendance of a delegation from the Turks and Caicos Islands at the Fifth Annual Conference of the Caribbean Group for Co-operation and Economic Development, held under the auspices of the World Bank,

Noting the arrangements made for university training abroad and for vocational training in the Territory,

Legal questions

International Court of Justice

In 1983, the International Court of Justice continued to deal with two contentious cases. A third dispute was referred to it in October.

In December, the General Assembly amended the Pension Scheme Regulations for members of the Court, with effect from the beginning of 1984 (resolution 38/239).

Judicial work of the Court

In 1983, the International Court of Justice—meeting at The Hague, Netherlands, from 23 February to 2 March⁽¹⁾ and on 13 October⁽²⁾—continued to deal with cases concerning the continental shelf delimitation between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta, and the maritime boundary delimitation between Canada and the United States. In October, a case concerning a frontier dispute between Mali and the Upper Volta was submitted to the Court.

Continental shelf delimitation between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta

On 26 July 1982, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta had instituted proceedings by joint notification to the Court of a Special Agreement signed on 23 May 1976 and in force since an exchange on 20 March 1982 of instruments of ratification. The Agreement requested the Court to indicate the principles and rules applicable to delimitation of the continental shelf between the parties and the practical method for their application.

In 1983, the parties filed Memorials, in compliance with the Court's 1982 Order⁽³⁾ setting 26 April 1983 as the time-limit. By an Order made that day,⁽⁴⁾ the Court fixed 26 October as the time-limit for the filing of Counter-Memorials; the pleadings were duly filed.

Since the Court did not include on the Bench a Judge of Libyan or of Maltese nationality, each of the parties exercised its right under Article 31 of the Statute of the Court to choose a person to sit as Judge ad hoc. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya chose Eduardo Jiménez de Aréchaga and Malta chose Jorge Castañeda.

On 24 October, Italy filed an application for permission to intervene pursuant to Article 62 of the Statute, explaining that it wished to take part in the proceedings to defend its rights over certain areas claimed by the parties. On 5 December, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta submitted written observations on Italy's request.

Maritime boundary delimitation between Canada and the United States

On 25 November 1981, Canada and the United States had notified the Court of a Special Agreement, signed on 29 March 1979 and in force as from 20 November 1981, by which they submitted to the Court a question concerning the course of the maritime boundary dividing the continental shelf and fisheries zones in the Gulf of Maine area.

Memorials were filed by the parties in 1982⁽⁵⁾ and by 28 June 1983, the date fixed by the Court, Counter-Memorials were filed. A five-member Chamber, formed in January 1982 to deal with the case, met from 18 to 20 October 1983. In accordance with an Order of 27 July⁽⁶⁾ by the President of the Chamber fixing 12 December as the time-limit for the filing of Replies, the parties submitted to the Chamber documentation—some 9,500 pages—in support of their contentions.

Frontier dispute between Mali and the Upper Volta

On 14 October 1983, Mali and the Upper Volta jointly notified to the Registrar of the Court a Special Agreement concluded by them on 16 September, having entered into force on that day and registered with the United Nations, by which they submitted to a chamber of the Court the question of the delimitation of part of the land frontier between them.⁽⁷⁾

Organizational questions

ICJ pension scheme

In December 1983, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)⁽⁶⁾ in response to a request by the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, considered proposals on post-retirement benefits for members of the International Court of Justice as put forward in a report of the Secretary-General.⁽⁷⁾

ACABQ concurred with the Secretary-General's suggestions for: changing from 65 to 60 the normal minimum age at which pension might be payable; reducing from five to three years the minimum period of service requirement for payment of a retirement pension; amending the provisions for disability pension; introducing a provision on benefit for an incapacitated child, and amending another provision regarding the ceiling to child's benefit; and revising those concerning pension payment and adjustment procedure.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/239 on 20 December by recorded vote.

Orally proposing that the Fifth Committee recommend to the Assembly approval of the Secretary-General's proposals on the question, the Committee Chairman stated that the action entailed direct financial implications of $63,500, but that no appropriation was currently required.

Chapter II

Legal aspects of international political relations

In 1983, the United Nations continued to explore effective legal measures for promoting friendly relations among States as well as for combating mercenary activities and international terrorism.

In December, the General Assembly adopted several resolutions calling for continued work towards the legal codification of: good-neighbourliness (38/126), peaceful settlement of disputes (38/131), non-use of force in international relations (38/133), and the banning of mercenary activities (38/137). States were also invited to take measures for the speedy and final elimination of international terrorism (38/130).

Further, the Assembly invited the International Law Commission (ILC) to continue elaborating the 1954 draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind (resolution 38/132), as well as draft articles on non-navigational uses of international watercourses.

Topic related to this chapter. International peace and security.

Peaceful settlement of disputes between States

In 1983, the question of peaceful settlement of disputes between States was considered by the General Assembly, in pursuance of a November 1982 decision⁽¹⁾ and by the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization. In December 1983, the Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue work on the question and to consider elaborating a handbook on the topic.

Following Assembly approval in November 1982 of the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General, on 14 January 1983,⁽³⁾ transmitted the text to the President of the Security Council, as requested by the Assembly. The Declaration—based on work by the Special Committee and the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee—set out principles for States' observance, such as good-faith action for avoiding disputes or the use of direct negotiations, and discussed the United Nations role in dispute settlement.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee, at its April/May 1983 session⁽⁴⁾ continued work on the peaceful settlement of disputes, as called for by the Assembly in December 1982.⁽⁵⁾ This was one of three main questions considered by the Committee, the others being proposals on rationalizing the existing procedures of the United Nations and ways to maintain international peace and security (see Chapter IV of this section).

An open-ended Working Group of the Committee held eight meetings on the question between 25 and 28 April, devoting three of them to consideration of an oral proposal by the Philippines and Romania—later joined by Nigeria, and submitted as a working paper to the Assembly in August⁽⁶⁾—for the creation of a United Nations permanent commission on good offices, mediation and conciliation for the settlement of disputes and the prevention of conflicts among States. The proposed commission was to be composed of all Member States and established by the Assembly, for preventing situations of tension from degenerating into armed conflict and for the mediation of disputes. The commission would be seized of a dispute at the request of a State party concerned, on the Assembly's decision or that of the Security Council, or on the Secretary-General's recommendation. The proposal met with varied responses.

The Working Group also reviewed 21 other proposals, contained in a list prepared by the Special Committee in 1979,⁽⁷⁾ and agreed that the Assembly should call on the Secretary-General to prepare a preliminary outline of a handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes, which was to contain all existing means and mechanisms available for that purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 38/131 without vote.

Peaceful settlement of disputes between States

The General Assembly,

Having examined the item entitled "Peaceful settlement of disputes between States",

Recalling its resolution 37/10 of 15 November 1982, by which it approved the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes, annexed thereto,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of conflict situations and the emergence of new sources of disputes and tension in international life, and especially at the growing tendency to resort to force or the threat of force and to intervention in internal affairs, and at the escalation of the arms race, which gravely endanger the independence and security of States as well as international peace and security,

Taking into account the need to exert the utmost effort in order to settle any situations and disputes between States exclusively by peaceful means and to avoid any military action and hostilities against other States, which can only make more difficult the solution of existing problems.

Considering that the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes should represent one of the central concerns for States and for the United Nations, and that efforts for strengthening the process of the peaceful settlement of disputes should be continued,

Taking note of the working paper on the establishment of a permanent commission on good offices, mediation and conciliation for the settlement of disputes and the prevention of conflicts among States, submitted to the General Assembly by Nigeria, the Philippines and Romania,

1. Again urges all States to observe and promote in good faith the provisions of the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes in the settlement of their international disputes;

2. Stresses the need to continue efforts to strengthen the process of the peaceful settlement of disputes through the progressive development and codification of international law and through enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in this field;

3. Requests the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, during its session in 1984, to continue its work on the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and, in this context:

(a) To consider the proposal contained in the above-mentioned working paper;

(b) To continue, in conformity with the agreement reached by the Special Committee, consideration of the proposal concerning the elaboration of a handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the report of the Special Committee, to prepare a preliminary outline of the possible content of a handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, which will comprise all the existing means and mechanisms available for the purpose, and to submit this outline to the Special Committee at its session in 1984;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Peaceful settlement of disputes between States".

19 December 1983 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/664) without vote, 8 December (meeting 70); 33-nation draft (A/C.6/38/L.9); agenda item 124.

Sponsors: Australia, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Chile, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guinea, Guyana, Ivory Coast, Madagascar, Mali, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sudan, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

When the Sixth Committee approved the text, its Chairman announced that the peaceful settlement of disputes between States would be considered, at the 1984 Assembly session, in conjunction with the Special Committee's report.

In explanation of position, the Federal Republic of Germany expressed concern at what it said was a trend to deal with various aspects of the report of a subsidiary body under separate agenda items, thereby leading to separate draft resolutions. Sharing that view, the United Kingdom added that if procedural questions such as the combining of agenda items were to become political and prestige matters, the Sixth Committee might lose control of the organization of its work.

Somalia felt that the United Nations would be strengthened if the preparation of a handbook led to the actual observance of human rights. The USSR, which favoured a handbook, opposed the establishment of a permanent commission, considering it to be contrary to the Charter and likely to undermine the prerogatives of the Security Council. Peru said its views as regards paragraph 1 remained unchanged from those it had expressed in 1982.

The Assembly's call for consideration of proposals for a permanent commission on good offices and for a handbook was repeated in resolution 38/141 (see Chapter IV of this section). Explaining its position on that text, Viet Nam said the proposal for a commission would impinge on the right of States under the Charter to choose freely among the various means of dispute settlement; the lack of political will, rather than of mechanisms and procedures, accounted for impasses in settlement, and it preferred mediation by regional organizations of direct negotiations between the parties.

Good-neighbourliness between States

In 1983, the General Assembly called again for developing good-neighbourly relations between States and declared it appropriate to start clarifying and formulating the elements of good-neighbourliness as part of a process of elaborating an international document on the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in September 1983, in follow-up to its December 1982 request⁽⁸⁾ a report with a later addendum⁽⁹⁾ containing the views and suggestions on good-neighbourliness as received from 12 States in 1982 and from 14 States in 1983, along with those received from organizations within the United Nations system in the same two years.

In addition, Romania transmitted to the Secretary-General on 21 September a working paper⁽¹⁰⁾ suggesting an outline for an international document on good-neighbourliness, as first suggested by the Assembly in 1981.⁽¹¹⁾ The proposed outline dealt with the elements and legal content of good-neighbourliness, ways of strengthening and developing the concept, and the role of international organizations in its promotion.

On 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 38/126 without vote.

Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the determination of the peoples of the United Nations, as expressed in the Charter, to practise tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours,

Recalling the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, approved by its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Recalling its resolutions 1236(XII) of 14 December 1957, 1301(XIII) of 10 December 1958, 2129(XX) of 21 December 1965, 34/99 of 14 December 1979, 36/101 of 9 December 1981 and 37/117 of 16 December 1982,

Bearing in mind that, owing to geographic proximity and to other relevant reasons, there are particularly favourable opportunities for co-operation and mutual advantage between neighbouring countries, in many fields and various forms, and that the development of such co-operation may have a positive influence on international relations as a whole,

Considering that the great changes of a political, economic and social nature, as well as the scientific and technological progress which have taken place in the world and led to unprecedented interdependence of nations, have given new dimensions to good-neighbourliness in the conduct of States and increased the need to develop and strengthen it,

Taking into account the working paper concerning the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States, as well as the written replies sent by States and international organizations on the content of good-neighbourliness and on ways and means to enhance it and the views expressed by States in 1981 and 1982 on this subject,

Recalling its opinion that it is necessary to continue to examine the question of good-neighbourliness in order to strengthen and develop its content, as well as ways and modalities to enhance its effectiveness, and that the results of this examination could be included, at an appropriate time, in a suitable international document,

1. Reaffirms that good-neighbourliness fully conforms with the purposes of the United Nations and shall be founded upon the strict observance of the principles of the Charter and of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and so presupposes the rejection of any acts seeking to establish zones of influence or domination;

2. Calls once again upon States, in the interest of the maintenance of international peace and security, to develop good-neighbourly relations, acting on the basis of these principles;

3. Reaffirms that the generalization of the long practice of good-neighbourliness and of principles and rules pertaining to it is likely to strengthen friendly relations and co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter;

4. Deems it appropriate, on the basis of the working paper concerning the development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States mentioned above, as well as of other proposals and ideas which have been or will be submitted by States, and the replies and views of States and international organizations, to start clarifying and formulating the elements of good-neighbourliness as part of a process of elaboration of a suitable international document on the subject;

5. Requests the Sixth Committee to decide, at the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, on the appropriate framework to accomplish the above-mentioned tasks;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States".

Non-use of force in international relations

The General Assembly, in 1983 as in previous years, requested the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations to continue its work with the goal of drafting a world treaty on that principle.

In the course of 1983, the Secretary-General received a number of communications concerning alleged incidents of the use of force in international relations (see specific conflicts discussed in POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS).

Special Committee consideration. In response to a December 1982 Assembly resolution⁽¹²⁾ the 35-member Special Committee—established in 1977(13) to consider proposals and suggestions with the goal of drafting a world treaty as well as the peaceful settlement of disputes or such other recommendations as the Committee deemed appropriate—met at United Nations Headquarters from 31 January to 25 February 1983.⁽¹⁴⁾

The Committee had before it a draft world treaty on the non-use of force submitted in 1976 by the USSR;⁽¹⁵⁾ a 1979 working paper by Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom;⁽¹⁶⁾ and a 1981 revised working paper from 10 non-aligned countries (Benin, Cyprus, Egypt, India, Iraq, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Senegal, Uganda).⁽¹⁷⁾ Also before the Committee was an informal paper by the Chairman of the Committee's 1982 session⁽¹⁸⁾ which had been discussed in a preliminary manner at that session. The informal paper grouped the suggestions made in the Committee under the headings of: manifestations, scope and dimensions of the threat or use of force; general prohibition of the threat or use of force; consequences of the threat or use of force; legitimate use of force; peaceful settlement of disputes; role of the United Nations; and disarmament and confidence-building measures.

Also before the Committee was a report of the Secretary-General⁽¹⁹⁾ containing comments submitted by five Member States in reply to a renewed Assembly invitation in 1982 for States' observations.⁽¹⁾

An open-ended Working Group, re-established by the Committee, held 13 meetings between 8 and 18 February and considered one by one the headings contained in the 1982 Chairman's informal paper.

On 25 February, the Committee approved the Working Group's report as well as its own report. Since the Committee had not completed its work, it generally recognized the desirability of further considering the question before it. While the majority was in favour of renewing the Committee's mandate, some delegations were not; others thought the mandate should be reviewed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/133 by recorded vote on 19 December. In the Sixth Committee, the recorded vote was requested by France.

Report of the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/9 of 8 November 1976, in which it invited Member States to examine further the draft World Treaty on the Non-Use of Force in International Relations as well as other proposals made during the consideration of this item,

Recalling also its resolution 32/150 of 19 December 1977, by which it established the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations,

Recalling, in particular, its resolutions 33/96 of 16 December 1978, 34/13 of 9 November 1979, 35/50 of 4 December 1980, 36/31 of 13 November 1981 and 37/105 of 16 December 1982, in which it decided that the Special Committee should continue its work,

Taking note of the statement made by the Chairman of the Special Committee at its session in 1983, based on the informal working paper presented by the Chairman of the Special Committee at its session in 1982,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee,

Taking note of the prospects of progress in the work of the Special Committee registered during its session in 1983,

Taking into account that the Special Committee has not completed the mandate entrusted to it,

Reaffirming the need for effectiveness in the universal application of the principle of non-use of force in international relations and for assistance by the United Nations in this endeavour,

Expressing the hope that the Special Committee will, on the basis of the proposals before it, complete the mandate entrusted to it as soon as possible,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations;

2. Decides that the Special Committee shall continue its work with the goal of drafting, at the earliest possible date, a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations as well as the peaceful settlement of disputes or such other recommendations as the Committee deems appropriate;

3. Requests the Special Committee, in order to ensure further progress in its work, to continue at its session in 1984 the elaboration of the formulas of the working paper containing the main elements of the principle of non-use of force in international relations, taking duly into account the proposals submitted to it and the efforts undertaken at its session in 1983;

4. Invites Governments to communicate their comments or suggestions or to bring them up to date, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 31/9;

5. Requests the Special Committee to be mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement whenever it has significance for the outcome of its work;

6. Decides that the Special Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States, including participation in the meetings of its working group;

7. Requests the Special Committee to concentrate its work in the framework of its working group;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the necessary facilities and services;

9. Invites the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations".

Against: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ireland, Ivory Coast, New Zealand, Sweden, Turkey.

In explanation of vote, Norway and Spain felt that elaborating a treaty could raise doubts with regard to the legally binding character, and interpretation, of the provisions in the Charter of the United Nations, which already prohibited the use of force in international relations. Sharing that view, Sweden also observed that the only exception allowed under the Charter was the use of force in legitimate self-defence (Article 51). Spain and Sweden asserted that the non-use of force could be strengthened through better observance by all States of the relevant Charter provisions.

Australia regretted that the text continued to place undue emphasis on drafting a new treaty and that the suggestions by many States about future work on the subject had not been taken into account.

Draft code of offences against peace and security

In December 1983, the General Assembly invited the International Law Commission to continue work on the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind by first elaborating an introduction as well as a list of offences. The Assembly took this action after ILC had continued working on the draft Code at its 1983 session,⁽²⁰⁾ in response to a 1982 Assembly invitation.⁽²¹⁾

Prepared by ILC in 1954⁽²²⁾ in response to a 1947 Assembly request⁽²³⁾ the draft Code defined offences which were crimes under international law and for which the responsible individual was to be punished.

ILC consideration. The Commission, at its 1983 session, considered, and held a general debate based on, the first report submitted by its Special Rapporteur on the topic, Doudou Thiam (Senegal)⁽²⁴⁾ The report focused on the scope and methodology as well as implementation of the draft Code.

ILC also had before it a compendium of relevant international instruments⁽²⁵⁾ and an analytical paper containing the written or oral comments of Member States,⁽²⁶⁾ both prepared by the Secretariat at the Commission's 1982 request. According to the analytical paper, divergent views had been expressed, among other things, on: the advisability of elaborating a code; implications, and relationship with the proposed Code, of the Assembly's 1974 Definition of Aggression⁽²⁷⁾ and the status of the 1954 draft as a possible basis for further United Nations work on the topic.

The Secretary-General submitted to ILC comments received from three Member States⁽²⁸⁾ in response to a December 1982 Assembly invitation⁽²¹⁾ he also submitted these replies in a September report to the Assembly⁽²⁹⁾

The Commission, concluding that the draft Code should cover only the most serious international offences, solicited the Assembly's views on: the subjects of law to which international criminal responsibility could be attributed; whether the ILC mandate extended to the preparation of the statute of an international criminal jurisdiction for individuals; and whether such jurisdiction should also apply to States. ILC considered it advisable to include in the draft Code an introduction recalling the general principles of criminal law, such as the non-retroactivity of such law and the theories of aggravating CT mitigating circumstances, complicity, preparation and justified acts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/132.

Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind

The General Assembly,

Mindful of Article 13, paragraph 1 a, of the Charter of the United Nations, which provides that the General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling its resolution 177(11) of 21 November 1947, by which it directed the International Law Commission to prepare a draft code of offences against the peace and security of mankind,

Having considered the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind prepared by the International Law Commission and submitted to the General Assembly in 1954,

Recalling its belief that the elaboration of a code of offences against the peace and security of mankind could contribute to strengthening international peace and security and thus to promoting and implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 36/106 of 10 December 1981, in which it invited the International Law Commission to resume its work with a view to elaborating the draft Code and to examine it with the required priority in order to review it, taking into account the results achieved by the process of the progressive development of international law,

Taking into account the views expressed during the debate on this item at the current session,

Taking note of the report of the Special Rapporteur,

Taking into account the importance and the urgency of the subject,

1. Invites the International Law Commission to continue its work on the elaboration of the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind by elaborating, as a first step, an introduction in conformity with paragraph 67 of its report on the work of its thirty-fifth session, as well as a list of the offences in conformity with paragraph 69 of that report;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States and intergovernmental organizations regarding the questions raised in paragraph 69 of the report of the International Law Commission and to include them in a report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session with a view to adopting, at the appropriate time, the necessary decision thereon;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind", to be considered in conjunction with the consideration of the report of the International Law Commission.

19 December 1983 Meeting 101 128-0-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/665) by vote (104-0-13), 8 December (meeting 70); 27-nation draft (A/C.6/38/L.19 & Corr.1); agenda item 125.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Belgium, Burma, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Before acting on the text as a whole, the Sixth Committee approved paragraph 3 by a vote, requested by Norway and the United States, of 89 to 2, with 26 abstentions.

In explanation of vote in the Sixth Committee, Canada, France, Ireland, Norway (on behalf also of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Sweden), Spain and the United States asserted that the draft Code should be considered in conjunction with the ILC report, rather than constitute a separate agenda item. Canada, which abstained in the vote on paragraph 3 but voted in favour of the text as a whole, said steps should be taken first to rationalize the work of the Sixth Committee through either the joint discussion or the combining of various items which had points in common. Further, France, Ireland and Norway (on behalf of the five Nordic countries) saw no reason to assign special priority to preparing a draft Code.

Spain, which abstained in the vote on the whole text because it could not accept paragraph 3, had doubts about the methods adopted for elaborating the draft Code and about its scope. Abstaining in both Committee votes, Israel said it would have voted against the penultimate preambular paragraph had it been put to a vote; that paragraph implied that the Assembly would take note of the report of the Special Rapporteur, which the Sixth Committee had neither considered nor approved.

Also abstaining in the votes, the United Kingdom felt that the political pressure implied in the last preambular paragraph, along with paragraph 3, could give the impression that the Sixth Committee was not confident of ILC's ability to carry out the task entrusted to it. It also observed that, while paragraph 1 referred to a list of offences, the ILC report made no such mention; it would be premature to elaborate such a list until ILC had specified general criteria for application.

The USSR supported the text and stressed its support for paragraph 3, saying that separate consideration of important questions produced better results.

Draft convention against mercenaries

In 1983, the General Assembly decided that its Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries should continue its work towards that goal, with a view to completing its mandate in 1984.

Work of the Committee against mercenaries. Responding to a December 1982 Assembly resolution,⁽³⁰⁾ the Committee against mercenaries held its third session at United Nations Headquarters from 2 to 26 August 1983.⁽³¹⁾ Established in 1980,⁽³²⁾ the Committee, which was to be composed of 35 Member States, continued to have one vacancy during 1983 (see APPENDIX III).

The Committee re-established two Working Groups: Group A to deal with issues of definition and the convention's scope, and Group B to deal with all other issues relevant to the future convention. In addition to the Committee's 1982 report to the Assembly⁽³³⁾ and the documents and proposals annexed thereto, Group A had, for its consideration, an 18-article draft convention submitted by France, which was subsequently annexed to the Committee's 1983 report to the Assembly. Following discussions, the Chairman of Group A introduced as a basis for future work six draft articles (articles 1 to 6) relating to definition of "mercenary", scope of the convention and the obligations of States, which were included as paragraph 56 of the Committee's report. Group B had before it a draft convention submitted by Nigeria in 1981⁽³⁴⁾ and subsequently revised⁽³⁵⁾ and the draft convention submitted by France in 1983. It resumed consideration of a provision on preventive measures on which the debate in 1982 had remained inconclusive. It decided to discuss, subsequently, damage reparation, status of mercenaries and settlement of disputes, it being understood that the questions of jurisdiction and extradition would be examined at a later stage in view of their close links with matters being dealt with in Group A.

The Committee also had before it a 5 August communication from Angola⁽³⁵⁾ forwarding the text of its Revolutionary Council Law of 1977 on the prevention and repression of the crime of mercenary conduct, and a note by the Secretariat⁽³⁶⁾ listing documents relevant to the topic.

Other action. A number of other actions were taken in 1983 with regard to mercenaries.

In July, the Security Council agreed that the Commission of Inquiry, established in 1981 to investigate the mercenary aggression of 25 November 1981 against Seychelles, had fulfilled its mandate (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V).

On the right of peoples to self-determination, the Commission on Human Rights, on 15 February⁽³⁷⁾ and the General Assembly, by resolution 38/17 of 22 November, reaffirmed that the practice of using mercenaries against sovereign States and national liberation movements constituted a criminal act. They called on all Governments to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territories and the transit of mercenaries through their territories to be punishable offences, and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General. By a 17 November report⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission the summaries of replies received from 13 Governments as of 15 November on the status of such legislation.

In 1983, Mexico submitted to the Assembly's Sixth Committee, for referral also to the Committee against mercenaries, an informal working paper⁽³⁹⁾ containing elements for a draft convention, such as the definition of mercenaries, obligations as to prevention and suppression, co-operation among States, international responsibility, dispute settlement and final clauses.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 38/137 without vote.

Drafting of an international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need for strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples, enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions, particularly resolutions 2395(XXIII) of 29 November 1968, 2465(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2548(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2708(XXV) of 14 December 1970, 3103(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973 and its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, as well as Security Council resolutions 405(1977) of 14 April 1977, 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, 496(1981) of 15 December 1981 and 507(1982) of 28 May 1982, in which the United Nations denounced the practice of using mercenaries, in particular against developing countries and national liberation movements,

Recalling in particular its resolution 37/109 of 16 December 1982, by which it renewed the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, composed of thirty-five Member States,

Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on its third session,

Recognizing that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and seriously impede the process of self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Bearing in mind the pernicious impact that the activities of mercenaries have on international peace and security,

Considering that the progressive development and codification of the rules of international law on mercenaries would contribute immensely to the implementation of the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Taking account of the fact that, although the Ad Hoc Committee has made substantial progress, it has not yet fulfilled its mandate,

Reaffirming the need for the elaboration, at the earliest possible date, of an international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries and the progress made by the Ad Hoc Committee, especially during its third session;

2. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall continue its work, with the goal of drafting, at the earliest possible date, an international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee, in the fulfilment of its mandate, to consider the suggestions and proposals of Member States, bearing in mind the views and comments submitted to the Secretary-General and those expressed at the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly during the debate in the Sixth Committee devoted to the consideration of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee, including the various views expressed on the definition of the term "mercenary";

4. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee to take into account the draft articles contained in paragraph 56 of its report for the elaboration of the provisions relating to the scope of the convention, the definition of the term "mercenary" and the obligations of States, as well as the proposals which have been made and which may be submitted at its next session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Ad Hoc Committee at its fourth session any up-to-date and relevant documentation on the subject;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide the Ad Hoc Committee with any assistance and facilities it may require for the performance of its work, such as preparing a topical summary of the discussions that have taken place in the Sixth Committee during the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly;

7. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall hold its fourth session for four weeks, from 30 July to 24 August 1984;

8. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to make every effort to complete its mandate at its fourth session;

9. Also requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit its report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries".

19 December 1983 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/669) by consensus, 1 December (meeting 60); 54-nation draft (A/C.6/38/L.5), orally revised; agenda item 129.

In explanation of position, Greece (on behalf of the 10 States members of the European Community (EC)), Japan, Norway (on behalf also of Denmark, Finland and Iceland) and the United States felt that the statement in the fifth preambular paragraph was far-reaching; the misdeeds of private individuals acting in a personal capacity could not be imputed to States or regarded as breaches of international law.

Further, the EC members believed that the term mercenary should be defined on the basis of the only existing definition of universal character, as contained in article 47, paragraph 2, of Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions (relating to the protection of victims of international armed conflicts), although the scope of the draft convention need not be restricted to cases covered by that Protocol. While in favour of a speedy finalization of a draft convention, the EC members asserted that the request in paragraph 8 should not be interpreted as fixing a rigid time-limit for the completion of negotiations, and that the Committee against mercenaries should continue to work on the basis of consensus.

The United States said it would have been more accurate to state in the second preambular paragraph that the Security Council, in resolutions mentioned therein, denounced the use of mercenaries to destabilize States or violate their territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence; as to the sixth preambular paragraph, the United States condemned the illegal use of force by mercenaries, but considered that a future convention should recognize Governments' legitimate need for assistance to ensure their self-defence.

Prevention of terrorism

Deep concern about continuing acts of international terrorism and the need for closer international co-operation for its prevention and elimination were expressed by the General Assembly when, in 1983, it re-endorsed the 1979 recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism.⁽⁴⁰⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1981 Assembly resolution⁽⁴¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in September 1983 a report, with later addenda⁽⁴²⁾ containing the views and other information on the topic received from nine Governments, one United Nations specialized agency and two other international organizations.

Annexed to the report was information on the state of signatures, ratifications of or accessions to, as at 19 August 1983, a number of relevant international conventions, including the following, for which the Secretary-General was the depositary: the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents⁽⁴³⁾ and the International Convention against the Taking of Hostages.⁽⁴⁴⁾

On 1 December,⁽⁴⁵⁾ Chile transmitted to the Secretary-General a press release issued on 7 November by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in which it denounced as an act of international terrorism an attack of 9 October in Rangoon, Burma, that had killed four ministers and other officials of the Republic of Korea.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted without vote resolution 38/130 on 19 December.

Measures to prevent international terrorism which endangers or takes innocent human lives or jeopardizes fundamental freedoms and study of the underlying causes of those forms of terrorism and acts of violence which lie in misery, frustration, grievance and despair and which cause some people to sacrifice human lives, including their own, in an attempt to effect radical changes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3034(XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 31/102 of 15 December 1976, 32/147 of 16 December 1977, 34/145 of 17 December 1979 and 36/109 of 10 December 1981,

Recalling also the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Definition of Aggression and the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949,

Deeply concerned about continuing acts of international terrorism which take a toll of innocent human lives,

Convinced of the importance of international co-operation for dealing with acts of international terrorism,

Reaffirming the principle of self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the inalienable right to self-determination and independence of all peoples under colonial and racist régimes and other forms of alien domination, and upholding the legitimacy of their struggle, in particular the struggle of national liberation movements, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter and of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Deeply deplores the loss of innocent human lives and the pernicious impact of acts of international terrorism on friendly relations among States as well as on international co-operation, including co-operation for development;

2. Urges all States, unilaterally and in co-operation with other States, as well as relevant United Nations organs to contribute to the progressive elimination of the causes underlying international terrorism;

3. Invites all States to take all appropriate measures at the national level with a view to the speedy and final elimination of the problem of international terrorism, such as the harmonization of domestic legislation with international conventions, the implementation of assumed international obligations and the prevention of the preparation and organization in their territory of acts directed against other States;

4. Calls upon all States to fulfil their obligations under international law to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in acts of civil strife or terrorist acts in another State, or acquiescing in organized activities within their territory directed towards the commission of such acts;

5. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the existing international conventions relating to various aspects of the problem of international terrorism;

6. Urges all States to co-operate with one another more closely, especially through the exchange of relevant information concerning the prevention and combating of international terrorism, the apprehension and prosecution of the perpetrators of such acts, the conclusion of special treaties and/or the incorporation into appropriate bilateral treaties of special clauses, in particular regarding the extradition or prosecution of international terrorists;

7. Re-endorses the recommendations submitted by the Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism in its report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session relating to practical measures of co-operation for the speedy elimination of the problem of international terrorism;

8. Calls upon all States to observe and implement the recommendations submitted by the Ad Hoc Committee;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to follow up, as appropriate, the implementation of the present resolution and, in particular, of the recommendations submitted by the Ad Hoc Committee and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

10. Decides to include the item in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session.

19 December 1983 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/663) by consensus, 8 December (meeting 71); 4-nation draft (AC.6/38/L.21), orally revised, and orally amended by France and by Romania; agenda item 123.

Sponsors: Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Lao Peoples Democratic Republic, Mongolia. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 6th Committee 63,66-69, 71, 72; plenary 101.

The Sixth Committee approved the text as orally revised and amended. Revisions by the sponsors included deleting a paragraph by which the Assembly would have unequivocally condemned all acts of international terrorism. Amendments by France and by Romania resulted in rearranging some paragraphs in what they felt was a more logical order.

Statements in explanation of position were made by a number of States.

Asserting that it would not have supported the text, had a vote been taken, and calling the Ad Hoc Committee's report sterile, Israel said the Sixth Committee, by deleting the paragraph condemning all acts of international terrorism, had rendered possible interpretation of some provisions as encouraging such acts. For Israel, the text's call to United Nations organs included prohibition of the abuse of the United Nations flag, asserting that the Security Council had agreed to that abuse by allowing Yasser Arafat of the Palestine Liberation Organization to leave Tripoli, Lebanon, in December 1983 (see also POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX).

The United States said the rights and duties mentioned in the text should be interpreted in the light of the United Nations Charter and the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;⁽⁴⁶⁾ some acts were so barbarous that not even Charter Article 51, concerning the right of self-defence, could justify them.

Ethiopia, Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand said they joined in the consensus on the understanding that the national liberation movements referred to in the preamble were those recognized by the United Nations and the relevant regional organizations.

Draft articles on non-navigational uses of international watercourses

Pursuant to a December 1982 General Assembly recommendation⁽⁴⁷⁾ the International Law

Commission, at its May-July 1983 session,⁽²⁰⁾ continued work on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses. ILC took up the first report submitted by Jens Evensen (Norway)⁽⁴⁸⁾ who had been appointed in 1982⁽⁴⁹⁾ as the new Special Rapporteur. The report, the fourth on the topic, contained, as a basis for discussion, a tentative draft of a convention, consisting of 39 articles divided into six chapters: an introduction (articles 1 to 5); general principles (rights and duties of system States) (articles 6 to 9); co-operation and management in regard to international watercourse systems (articles 10 to 19); environmental protection, pollution, health or natural hazards, regulation and safety, use preferences, and national or regional sites (articles 20 to 30); settlement of disputes (articles 31 to 38); and final provisions (article 39).

ILC focused attention on the approach suggested by the Special Rapporteur on the definition of "international watercourse system", on the question of such a system as a shared natural resource, and on other general principles to be reflected in the draft. It also had before it a note⁽⁵⁰⁾ submitted by a Commission member concerning a set of draft principles of conduct in the field of the environment for the guidance of States in the conservation and harmonious utilization of natural resources shared by two or more States, as approved in 1978 by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme⁽⁵¹⁾ and taken note of by the General Assembly in 1979.⁽⁵²⁾

In its 1983 resolution (38/138) on the work of ILC, the Assembly recommended that, taking into account government comments, ILC should continue preparing the draft articles (see Chapter VII of this section).

Chapter III

States and international law

In 1983, a United Nations Conference, held in Austria, adopted the Vienna Convention on Succession of States in respect of State Property, Archives and Debts, the draft of which had been finalized by the International Law Commission (ILC) in 1981.

ILC at its May-July 1983 session (see Chapter VII of this section) continued preparing draft articles with a view to elaborating legal instruments on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by courier, jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, international liability for injurious consequences arising from acts not prohibited by international law, and State responsibility for internationally wrongful acts.

In December, the General Assembly, by resolution 38/136, condemned acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, and urged States to ensure their protection.

Topics related to this chapter. International organizations and international law: host country relations. Other legal questions: International Law Commission.

Diplomatic relations

Throughout the year, the United Nations continued to receive reports of incidents which threatened the security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives. The General Assembly, by resolution 38/136 adopted in December, urged States to protect those missions and representatives. Also in 1983, ILC continued preparing draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by courier.

Protection of diplomats

As at 31 December 1983, the number of parties to the various international instruments relating to the protection of diplomats and to diplomatic and consular relations⁽¹⁾ was as follows: 141 States were parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations⁽²⁾ Sao Tome and Principe having acceded in 1983; 40 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning acquisition of nationality;⁽³⁾ and 51 States were parties to the

Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes.⁽³⁾

The 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations⁽⁴⁾ had 108 States parties, Japan, Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe, and Togo having acceded in 1983; 33 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality⁽⁵⁾ and 40 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes⁽⁵⁾ Japan having acceded in 1983.

The 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents⁽⁶⁾ had 59 States parties, Guatemala and the Republic of Korea having adhered in 1983.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a December 1982 General Assembly resolution⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to that body in September 1983 a report, with later addenda⁽⁸⁾ containing information from States on serious violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives as well as on subsequent action taken by them to bring offenders to justice and prevent a repetition.

Turkey gave information about a February discovery and defusion of an explosive device at its Embassy in Luxembourg; a May bomb explosion at its Embassy's Culture and Information Office at Brussels, Belgium, and a July killing of a Turkish diplomat there; and a July attack on its Embassy in Portugal, which resulted in the death of seven persons, including the wife of a Turkish diplomat. Luxembourg and Portugal informed of their actions in connection with those attacks, as did the Netherlands and the United Kingdom on the sentencing of the perpetrators of actual or attempted attacks, respectively, against Turkish diplomats in 1982.

Lebanon reported that, in April 1983, an attack using explosives perpetrated against the United States Embassy in Beirut had killed 63 people and wounded some 100 others; also, an attempt was made on the life of a Libyan diplomat in June for which (he perpetrator was arrested. Other 1983 incidents were reported by: El Salvador, a January occupation of its Consulate at Granada, Spain; France, an April shooting incident at the USSR Consulate-General and indictment of the perpetrator; the Netherlands, a February bomb explosion at the Consulate-General of France in Amsterdam and the resultant ongoing investigation;

Nicaragua, aggressive acts against its diplomats by the authorities of Honduras; the USSR, offences against its diplomatic and consular representatives and property in the United States; and the United Kingdom, a March sentencing of three men accused of a 1982 assassination attempt against Israel's Ambassador to the United Kingdom.

While Austria, El Salvador and Nicaragua also reported on several incidents that had taken place in 1982, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Kenya, Kuwait and the Sudan informed the Secretary-General that they had no incidents to report; the United States said it had had no major incidents.

The Secretary-General's report also contained the views of 13 States (Austria, Denmark, El Salvador, Finland, France, Nicaragua, Portugal, Sudan, Sweden, Tunisia, USSR, United States, Uruguay) on measures needed to enhance the protection of diplomatic missions and representatives.

Communications. By a letter of 4 January to the Secretary-General,⁽⁹⁾ Israel reported on two bombing incidents of 23 December 1982 at Sydney, Australia; one resulted in serious injury to an employee and damage to the building housing its Consulate-General. In the same letter, Israel listed six other 1982 incidents against its diplomatic missions or representatives in Colombia, Ecuador, France, Guatemala and the United Kingdom.

In a letter of 30 November to the Secretary-General⁽¹⁰⁾ the USSR charged that the United States had committed criminal acts against its diplomatic mission and citizens in Grenada in October by, among other things, blockading the USSR Embassy and firing at those premises, thereby wounding an employee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/136, as recommended by the Sixth (Legal) Committee.

Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Emphasizing the important role of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as of missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, in the maintenance of international peace and the promotion of friendly relations among States,

Emphasizing also the duty of States to take all appropriate steps, as required by international law:

(a) To protect the premises of diplomatic and consular missions, as well as of missions to international intergovernmental organizations;

(b) To prevent any attacks on diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as on representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations;

(c) To bring the offenders to justice;

Deeply concerned about the continued large number of failures to respect the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, and about the serious threat presented by such violations to the maintenance of normal and peaceful international relations, which are necessary for co-operation among States,

Expressing its sympathy for the victims of illegal acts against diplomatic and consular representatives and missions as well as against representatives and missions to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations,

Convinced that respect for the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations, in particular those aimed at ensuring the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, is a basic prerequisite for the normal conduct of relations among States and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting that only a small number of States have so far, in response to the call by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth, thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh sessions, become parties to the relevant conventions concerning the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Convinced that the reporting procedures established under General Assembly resolution 35/168 of 15 December 1980 and further elaborated in Assembly resolutions 36/33 of 13 November 1981 and 37/108 of 16 December 1982 are important steps in the efforts to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Desiring to maintain and further strengthen those reporting procedures,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Strongly condemns acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations;

3. Emphasizes the importance of enhanced awareness throughout the world of the necessity of ensuring the protection, security and safety of such missions, representatives and officials, as well as of the role of the United Nations in this regard;

4. Urges States to observe and to implement the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations and, in particular, to take all necessary measures in conformity with their international obligations to ensure effectively the protection, security and safety of all diplomatic and consular missions and representatives officially present in territory under their jurisdiction, including practicable measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts against the security and safety of such missions and representatives;

5. Recommends that States should co-operate closely through, inter alia, contacts between the diplomatic and consular missions and the receiving State, with regard to practical measures designed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and with regard to exchange of information on the circumstances of all serious violations thereof;

6. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the instruments relevant to the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

7. Calls upon States, in cases where a dispute arises in connection with a violation of the principles and rules of international law concerning the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, to make use of the means for peaceful settlement of disputes, including the good offices of the Secretary-General;

8. Requests:

(a) All States to report to the Secretary-General as promptly as possible serious violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

(b) The State in which the violation took place—and, to the extent applicable, the State where the alleged offender is present—to report as promptly as possible on measures taken to bring the offender to justice and eventually to communicate, in accordance with its laws, the final outcome of the proceedings against the offender, and on measures adopted with a view to preventing a repetition of such violations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate to all States, upon receipt, the reports received by him pursuant to paragraph 8 above, unless the reporting State requests otherwise;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to invite States to inform him of their views with respect to any measures needed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, when a serious violation has been reported pursuant to paragraph 8 (a) above, to draw the attention, when appropriate, of the States directly concerned to the reporting procedures provided for in paragraph 8 above;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report on the state of ratification of, and accessions to, the instruments referred to in paragraph 6 above, as well as the reports received and views expressed pursuant to paragraphs 8 and 10 above, and invites him to submit any views he may wish to express on these matters;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives: report of the Secretary-General".

19 December 1983 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/668) without vote, 28 November (meeting 56); 18-nation draft (A/C.6/38/L.13); agenda item 128.

Sponsors: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ivory Coast, Japan, Nigeria, Norway, Philippines, Sierra Leone, Sweden, Turkey, Uruguay.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 6th Committee 8-11, 53, 56; plenary 101.

The USSR explained its position by saying that, while it supported the resolution's condemnation of failure to protect diplomats, the text did not go far enough and could be improved.

Status of diplomatic bags and couriers

Responding to a December 1982 General Assembly recommendation⁽¹⁾ ILC, at its 1983 session, continued preparing draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by courier, with a view to elaborating a legal instrument on the topic.⁽²⁾

The Commission had before it a fourth report by the Special Rapporteur, Alexander Yankov (Bulgaria)⁽³⁾ Due to lack of time, it considered only those parts of the report containing draft articles 15 to 23 of part II (status of the diplomatic courier, the diplomatic courier ad hoc and the captain of a començai aircraft or the master of a ship carrying a diplomatic bag): general facilities (article 15), entry into the territory of the receiving State and the transit State (article 16), freedom of movement (article 17), freedom of communication (article 18), temporary accommodation (article 19), personal inviolability (article 20), inviolability of temporary accommodation (article 21), inviolability of the means of transport (article 22) and immunity from jurisdiction (article 23).

The Commission referred articles 15 to 19 to its Drafting Committee, while deciding to resume debate on articles 20 to 23 at its 1984 session.

On the recommendation of the Drafting Committee, ILC provisionally adopted in 1983 eight draft articles and commentaries concerning: scope of the articles (article 1), couriers and bags not within such scope (article 2), use of terms (article 3), freedom of official communications (article 4), duty to respect the laws and regulations of the receiving State and the transit State (article 5), non-discrimination and reciprocity (article 6), documentation of the diplomatic courier (article 7), and appointment of the diplomatic courier (article 8). Draft articles 1 to 6 belonged to part I, on general provisions, and 7 and 8 belonged to part II (see above).

The texts of these articles were transmitted to the Assembly in an August note by the Secretary-General. (14)

State succession in respect of property, archives and debts

The United Nations Conference on Succession of States in respect of State Property, Archives and Debts—convened at Vienna, Austria, from 1 March to 8 April 1983 in pursuance of 1981(1) and 1982(2) General Assembly resolutions—adopted on 7 April a Convention on the subject, on the basis of a text finalized by ILC in 1981.(3)

Known as the Vienna Convention on Succession of States in respect of State Property, Archives and Debts(4) the instrument dealt with various aspects of State succession—the replacement of one State by another in the responsibility for the international relations of a territory. In addition to general provisions, the Convention covered such topics as State property; the preservation of the unity of State archives; the effects of the passing of State debts with regard to creditors; and the transfer of part of a State's territory, newly independent States, uniting of States, separation of part(s) of a State's territory and dissolution of a State.

The Convention was opened for signature on 8 April at Vienna, and subsequently in New York, with the Secretary-General serving as its depositary from 1 January 1984. As at 31 December 1983, Algeria, Argentina, Peru and Yugoslavia had signed the Convention.

Among the resolutions adopted by the Conference, which were annexed to the Final Act,(5) was one recognizing that the Convention's provisions would not impair the exercise of the right to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, for peoples struggling against colonialism, alien domination or occupation, racial discrimination and apartheid; and recognizing also their permanent sovereignty over their resources and their rights to development, information concerning their history and the conservation of their cultural heritage. In another action, the Conference resolved that the articles of the Convention should be interpreted, in the case of Namibia, in conformity with relevant United Nations resolutions and that all the rights of the future independent State of Namibia should be reserved.

Ninety States participated in the Conference in response to the Assembly's 1982 invitation(2) (for participating States and officers, see APPENDIX III). Also participating were a number of organizations and intergovernmental bodies invited by the Assembly. Mohammed Bedjaoui (Algeria), Judge of the International Court of Justice and former ILC Special Rapporteur on the topic, acted as the Expert Consultant.

Among the documentation before the Conference were the draft articles by ILC and an analytical compilation, prepared by the Secretariat(6) of comments of Governments on the draft articles, as submitted in writing or made orally in the Assembly's Sixth Committee in 1981 and 1982. Comments were made on the value of the draft and usefulness of a convention, the general approach and basic principles reflected in the draft and its scope and structure.

State immunities, liability and responsibility

In response to a December 1982 General Assembly resolution(1) ILC, at its 1983 session(2) continued drafting articles on three aspects of international law concerning States: jurisdictional immunities of States and their property; international liability for injurious consequences arising from acts not prohibited by international law; and State responsibility for internationally wrongful acts.

In its resolution 38/138 adopted in December, the Assembly recommended that, taking into account government comments, ILC should continue its work on the topics in its current programme.

Draft articles on State immunities

In 1983, ILC continued preparing draft articles on the jurisdictional immunities of States and their property. Its work, detailed in its annual report(3) was based on a fifth report by the Special Rapporteur, Sompong Sucharitkul (Thailand)(3) which dealt with part III (to comprise articles 11 to 20) of the draft articles concerning exceptions to State immunity and contained articles on contracts of employment (article 13), personal injuries and damage to property (article 14), and ownership, possession and use of property (article 15).

While the Commission members generally supported draft article 15, they suggested improving draft articles 13 and 14 by either enlarging or restricting the scope of the possible exceptions. In so doing, many recognized that draft article 13 covered a completely new area, while some saw few cases for application of, and hence doubted justification for, draft article 14. Based on the discussion, the Special Rapporteur subsequently submitted to the Drafting Committee a revised version of draft articles 13 and 14.

On the recommendation of the Drafting Committee, the Commission provisionally adopted in 1983 draft articles and commentaries on counter-claims (article 10), commercial contracts (article 12), and ownership, possession and use of property (article 15), as well as two paragraphs belonging to draft articles 2 (use of terms) and 3 (interpretative provisions).

The texts of these articles were transmitted to the Assembly in an August note by the Secretary-General.⁽⁴⁾

Draft articles on State liability

In 1983, ILC continued its work on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law⁽⁵⁾. It had before it a fourth report by the Special Rapporteur, Robert Q. Quentin-Baxter (New Zealand)⁽⁶⁾ containing a single chapter entitled "The delineation of the topic", intended to re-evaluate the topic's schematic outline—which was annexed to the report—in the light of the views expressed in the Commission and in the Assembly's Sixth Committee in 1982 and to provide a more complete commentary. The Special Rapporteur also suggested that the Commission should decide in 1984 on the future of the topic.

The Commission agreed, among other things, that those parts of a Secretariat study, dealing, respectively, with multilateral and bilateral treaty practice, and with settlements and claims practice, should be made widely available; and that the Special Rapporteur, with the Secretariat's assistance, should prepare a questionnaire to be addressed to selected international organizations, in view of the fact that the mutual obligations of States as members of such organizations might fulfil or replace some of the procedures indicated in the schematic outline.

Draft: articles on State responsibility

In 1983, ILC⁽⁷⁾ continued preparing draft articles on State responsibility for internationally wrongful acts, and had before it a fourth report by the Special Rapporteur, Willem Riphagen (Netherlands),⁽⁸⁾ which focused on an outline of the possible contents of part II (dealing with the content, forms and degrees of international responsibility) and part III (concerning the implementation of such responsibility and the settlement of disputes) of the draft articles. Four draft articles were presented for inclusion in part II. The first of these (article 1) marked the transition and the link between part I, dealing with the conditions under which the international responsibility of a State arose, and part II, determining the legal consequences of the internationally wrongful act. Draft articles 2 and 3 dealt with limitations and rules of customary international law, respectively. Draft article 5 stipulated that the legal consequences set out in part II were subject to the provisions and procedures of the Charter of the United Nations relating to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Commission provisionally adopted the four draft articles and commentaries thereto, on the recommendation of the Drafting Committee, and the Secretary-General transmitted these texts to the General Assembly in an August note⁽⁹⁾. The Commission, at its 1983 session, had before it, comments and observations submitted by Czechoslovakia⁽⁷⁾ on the draft articles contained in chapters IV and V of part I, in pursuance of a 1980 Assembly resolution.⁽⁸⁾

Chapter IV

International organizations and international law

In 1983, at its April/May session, the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization continued work to that end, and, in December, the General Assembly, by resolution 38/141, asked it to devote more time to considering the maintenance of international peace and security and to complete its work on rationalizing the Organization's existing procedures.

The United Nations remained concerned with the security of missions and their personnel accredited to Headquarters and, by resolution 38/140 adopted in December, the Assembly called on all countries to make the public aware of the role of the United Nations and its accredited missions in strengthening international peace and security.

The Assembly deferred, until its 1984 regular session, consideration of draft standard rules of procedure for United Nations conferences (decision 38/427), and agreed to consider, when its current session resumed, an item on the implementation of United Nations resolutions (decision 38/456).

Topics related to this chapter. International peace and security. Legal aspects of international political relations.

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

The Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, in 1983, continued its consideration of the maintenance of international peace and security in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations, in particular the Security Council, and to enable it to discharge fully its responsibilities under the Charter.

Report of the Secretary-General for 1982/83

The Secretary-General, in his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (p. 3), observed that the weakening of universal commitment to the Charter of the United Nations, perhaps more than any other factor, had led to the partial paralysis of the United Nations as the guardian of international peace and security. Instead of bypassing the Organization or using it as a forum for polemical exchanges, parties to international disputes should co-operate with the Security Council and the Secretary-General in suitable forms of conflict control. At the same time, the willingness of the parties to co-operate with the United Nations was contingent upon the capacity of the Organization to act as an effective and impartial instrument of peace.

Activities of the Special Committee

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization met in New York from 11 April to 6 May 1983 to consider Member States' proposals on rationalizing the existing procedures of the United Nations, and submitted a report on its work⁽¹⁾ to the General Assembly. The 47-member Committee, meeting in response to a December 1982 Assembly resolution⁽²⁾ also continued consideration of ways of maintaining international peace and security, and the peaceful settlement of disputes (see Chapter II of this section).

An open-ended Working Group of the Committee held eight meetings between 14 and 18 April at which it discussed rationalization of United Nations procedures on the basis of a draft list, prepared jointly by the Philippines and Romania. Of 31 proposals relating to the General Assembly, it found that general agreement on most of them was unlikely, except for a few such as the one on streamlining the Assembly's agenda. Due to lack of time, the Committee was unable to complete consideration of the list. Working papers containing proposals on the topic were also submitted, individually by Egypt (two), France (two), Greece, Mexico, the Philippines, Romania, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia, and jointly by Mexico and El Salvador, and by Romania and Turkey.

Concerning the maintenance of international peace and security, including suggestions on the functioning of the Security Council, the Working Group took up a revised draft recommendation presented by Egypt on behalf of Committee members belonging to the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, two proposals submitted by France and a draft list of proposals prepared by Romania (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter XI).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

During its consideration of the question, the General Assembly had before it the comments of Ecuador, Senegal, Suriname and Uruguay, submitted in response to a 1982 invitation⁽²⁾ and forwarded to it in September 1983 by the Secretary-General.⁽³⁾ The Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Sweden), by a letter of 10 June, also transmitted to the Secretary-General their views on the strengthening of the United Nations.⁽⁴⁾

On the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/141 on 19 December without vote.

Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization
The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its support for the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 686(VII) of 5 December 1952, 992(X) of 21 November 1955, 2285(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 2552(XXIV) of 12 December 1969, 2697(XXV) of 11 December 1970, 2968(XXVII) of 14 December 1972 and 3349(XXIX) of 17 December 1974,

Recalling also its resolutions 2925(XXVII) of 27 November 1972, 3073(XXVIII) of 30 November 1973 and 3282(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 on the strengthening of the role of the United Nations,

Recalling especially its resolution 3499(XXX) of 15 December 1975, by which it established the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, and its resolutions 31/28 of 29 November 1976, 32/45 of 8 December 1977, 33/94 of 16 December 1978, 34/147 of 17 December 1979, 35/164 of 15 December 1980, 36/122 of 11 December 1981 and 37/114 of 16 December 1982,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, as well as of the views and comments expressed on it by Member States,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization on the work of the session it held in 1983,

Noting the importance that pre-session consultations among the members of the Special Committee and other interested States may have in facilitating the fulfilment of its task,

Considering that the Special Committee has not yet fulfilled the mandate entrusted to it,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization;

2. Decides that the Special Committee shall convene its next session from 2 to 27 April 1984;

3. Requests the Special Committee at its next session:

(a) To accord priority by devoting more time to the question of the maintenance of international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations, in particular the Security Council, and to enable it to discharge fully its responsibilities ties under the Charter in this field; this necessitates the examination, inter alia, of the prevention and removal of threats to the peace and of situations which may lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute; the Special Committee will work on all questions with the aim of submitting its conclusions to the General Assembly, in accordance with paragraph 4 below, for the adoption of such recommendations as the Assembly deems appropriate;

(b) To continue its work on the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and in this context:

(i) To consider the proposal contained in the working paper on the establishment of a permanent commission on good offices, mediation and conciliation for the settlement of disputes and the prevention of conflicts among States;

(ii) To continue, in conformity with the agreement reached by the Special Committee, the consideration of the proposal concerning the elaboration of a handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States;

(c) To finalize its present work on the question of the rationalization of existing procedures, with a view to submitting its conclusions to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

4. Also requests the Special Committee to be mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement whenever that has significance for the outcome of its work;

5. Urges members of the Special Committee to participate fully in its work in fulfilment of the mandate entrusted to it;

6. Decides that the Special Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States, including in the meetings of its working groups;

7. Invites Governments to submit or to bring up to date, if they deem it necessary, their observations and proposals, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3499(XXX);

8. Requests the Secretary-General to render all assistance to the Special Committee;

9. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

19 December 1983 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/6741 without vote, 9 December (meeting 72): 49-nation draft (A/C.6/38/L241; agenda item 134.

Sponsors: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Cyprus, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Guyana, Indonesia, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, Nepal, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia. Before approving the 49-nation draft, the Sixth Committee Chairman stated his understanding that it would be for the Special Committee to decide, in accordance with paragraph 4, whether conclusions for submission to the Assembly should be of a comprehensive character or should deal with successive phases of its work.

In explanation of position, the United Kingdom said the Special Committee should accord priority to consideration of the proposals on which agreement seemed possible; it was pleased that the consensus rule laid down in the Assembly's 1982 resolution⁽²⁾ was reiterated more flexibly in paragraph 4 and that the three major issues in the work programme had been retained. France and the United States supported the text for its commitment, though implicit, to the idea that the Committee should give priority to areas where general agreement seemed possible.

Algeria welcomed paragraph 3 (a) for giving priority to international peace and security and for encouraging the Committee to move away from the listing of relevant proposals; however, the Assembly should have asked the Committee for recommendations in its next report. The USSR felt that efforts should be directed not at trying to amend the Charter but at ensuring universal adherence to its obligations and compliance with Security Council resolutions. Viet Nam said that direct negotiations between parties concerned in a dispute and mediation by regional organizations were preferable to mediation by an international body as envisaged in the draft. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya saw the text as an encouragement to broader participation in the Committee, and urged further consideration of an increase in its membership.

Acting on a proposal by the Netherlands, the Sixth Committee decided—by a recorded vote, requested by France, of 58 to 45, with 23 abstentions—not to act on another draft on the Special Committee's report, sponsored by Benin, Iran and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.⁽³⁾ That draft would have had the Assembly decide to have the Special Committee examine what the sponsors called the adverse effects of the abuse of the unanimity rule (the right of veto) on the maintenance of international peace and security, taking into account, among other things, the need to restrict the rule's use on matters relating to the rights of peoples struggling for self-determination.

Publication of repertoires of practice

Pursuant to a 1981 General Assembly resolution⁽⁶⁾ requesting that high priority be given to the preparation and publication of supplements to the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council and the Repertoire of Practice of United Nations Organs in order to bring both up to date, Supplement No. 7 to the Repertoire covering 1972-1974 was published in 1983 in French,⁽⁷⁾ and volumes I and II of Supplement No. 4 to the Repertory, covering 1 September 1966 to 31 December 1969, were published in English.⁽⁸⁾

Implementation of UN resolutions

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly—which, in pursuance of a December 1982 decision,⁽⁹⁾ had retained on its agenda an item on implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations for consideration at its resumed thirty-seventh session—adopted decision 37/457, on an oral proposal by its President, at the closing of that session on 19 September 1983.

Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations

At its 122nd plenary meeting, on 19 September 1983, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its thirty-eighth session the item entitled "Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations".

General Assembly decision 37/457

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 141.

By decision 38/456 of 20 December, the Assembly decided to resume its thirty-eighth session, at a date to be announced, for the sole purpose of considering six agenda items, one of which was the implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter XI).

Host country relations

Improving the relations between New York City's diplomatic community and the local population continued to be a major concern of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country in 1983, and the Committee's recommendations to that end were endorsed by the General Assembly.

Consideration by the Committee on host country relations. The 15-member Committee on Relations with the Host Country met seven times in 1983, in pursuance of a December 1982 Assembly resolution.⁽¹⁾ Details of its work on various aspects of relations between the Headquarters diplomatic community and the host country—the United States—were contained in its 1983 report to the Assembly⁽²⁾

In the course of the year, several communications, summarized in the Committee's report, were received by the Committee or the Secretary-General, concerning the security of Member States' missions accredited to the United Nations.

In March and April, the USSR complained of anti-USSR "telephone hooliganism"—numbering 845 calls in January and 1,795 in February, many of them containing bomb threats—and asserted as insufficient a United States proposal to place a "tap" on the Mission telephone. While strongly condemning the irresponsible and illegal activities directed against the Mission, the United States said the USSR refusal to co-operate with the law enforcement authorities had hampered investigations and police records did not reflect the great number of calls reported by the Mission.

Responding to a USSR protest that a group of people had trespassed on its Riverdale (New York City) residential complex grounds in May, the United States reported that an investigation had revealed the trespassers to be college students playing pranks, and that the USSR refusal to sign a complaint had led to the dismissal of the charges.

The USSR also protested⁽³⁾ that, in September, the United States authorities failed to prevent an enraged crowd of some 100 people, accompanied by United States journalists and camera-equipped television correspondents, from breaking into the grounds of the Glen Cove, New York, residence of its Permanent Representative to the United Nations. It asserted that the presence of journalists attested to the pre-planning and organization of the criminal action. Recounting the incident, the United States reported that about 75 persons, breaking away from a peaceful demonstration by some 500 members and supporters of the Korean Association of New York, had entered the grounds but that order was restored by the additional police force summoned to the scene; no arrests were made due to the confusion resulting from the disturbance. The United States rejected the USSR assertion of the authorities' failure to safeguard the residence and of their connivance in criminal actions; it asserted that the Soviet diplomatic premises in New York City and suburbs continued to receive a large protective security force on a 24-hour basis, and that the Soviet authorities' refusal to co-operate with the law enforcement authorities, by not presenting themselves as witnesses or documenting alleged damage or losses, demonstrated the Mission's lack of co-operation. Subsequently, the USSR denied misrepresentation of facts in the Glen Cove incident and stated that it co-operated according to the principles and norms of diplomatic immunity, including questions of court jurisdiction.

The Committee also considered communications concerning the safety of Member States' mission personnel. In January 1983, the United States and the USSR exchanged notes concerning the latter's protest against New Jersey police authorities in apprehending the wife of a Mission member for alleged shoplifting in December 1982.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea protested as unjust, in communications of July and August, a 1982 sexual assault charge by the host country against one of its Mission members⁽⁴⁾ the United States subsequent charge against the Mission for allegedly harbouring that person as a fugitive from justice, and its refusal to issue visas to some Mission members. The Committee Chairman subsequently noted that an arrangement had been found and that the person in question had left the United States.

In June, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that the host country had violated the norms of international law by authorizing the use of property, acquired at Englewood, New Jersey, as its Ambassador's residence, solely for his and his immediate family's recreational purposes.

In the Committee, the USSR asserted that the United States refusal to create normal conditions and guarantee the safety of its Foreign Minister who was heading its delegation to the thirty-eighth (1983) session of the General Assembly as well as to provide for the proper arrival and handling of the USSR plane at either Kennedy or Newark airport violated the 1947 Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations.⁽⁵⁾ In response, the United States said that normal conditions had ceased to exist when the USSR shot down a civilian airliner belonging to the Republic of Korea (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter VII, and PART II, Chapter X); that its proposal for the USSR Foreign Minister's plane to land at a military airfield in New Jersey was reasonable; and that it would continue to fulfil its obligations as long as delegations conducted legitimate business in the United States.

The Committee also considered, and agreed to keep under review, questions relating to the application of the United States Foreign Missions Act which had become effective on 1 October 1982, particularly section 205, pertaining to the acquisition of real estate by foreign missions, which had been extended to United Nations missions. At the Committee's request, the Legal Counsel of the United Nations prepared a note, in which he examined the Act and stated that he intended to seek from the host country the assurances that its application of section 205 would conform to that country's international obligations.

Other questions considered by the Committee included issuance of entry visas to representatives of non-governmental organizations and liberation movements, tax exemption, diplomatic vehicle parking problems, public relations, and organization of the Committee's work. It also took note of the establishment of child-care facilities for members of the United Nations community in New York.

By recommendations approved on 18 November, the Committee, among other things, urged the host country to continue preventing acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel or property, and to ensure normal conditions for their functioning. It urged the host country to continue punishing those responsible for criminal acts against missions and called on missions to co-operate fully with United States authorities in cases affecting security. It also called on the host country to avoid actions not consistent with its international obligations regarding Member States' privileges and immunities.

The Committee also welcomed the diplomatic community's readiness to co-operate with local authorities in solving traffic problems, and appealed to the host country to review its diplomatic parking measures. It expressed the hope that the host country could ameliorate the housing situation causing problems for the diplomatic community and that efforts would be intensified to acquaint the people of New York City with the privileges and immunities of mission personnel and the importance of their international functions. It suggested that the Secretariat and others concerned work together to solve difficulties regarding unpaid bills of certain missions and their diplomats. Further, it expressed appreciation to the New York City Commission for the United Nations and the Consular Corps and those bodies, particularly the New York City Police, contributing to its efforts to help the diplomatic community, provide hospitality and promote mutual understanding between the community and the local population.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 38/140 without vote.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations,

Recalling further that the problems related to the privileges and immunities of all missions accredited to the United Nations, the security of the missions and the safety of their personnel are of great importance and concern to Member States, as well as the primary responsibility of the host country,

Noting with deep concern the continued acts violating the security and the safety of the personnel of those missions accredited to the United Nations,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 60 of its report;

2. Strongly condemns any acts violating the security of missions accredited to the United Nations and their personnel;

3. Urges the host country to continue to take all necessary measures to ensure effectively the protection, security and safety of the missions accredited to the United Nations and their personnel, including practicable measures to prohibit illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts and activities against the security and safety of such missions and representatives;

4. Recalls that continued adherence to the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations remains an indispensable condition for the normal functioning of the Organization;

5. Calls upon all countries to build up public awareness by explaining the importance of the role played by the United Nations and all missions accredited to it in the strengthening of international peace and security;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country and to continue to stress the importance of effective measures to avoid acts of terrorism and violence against the missions and their personnel;

7. Requests the Committee on Relations with the Host Country to continue its work, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

Draft standard rules of procedure for conferences

Since asking the Secretary-General in 1980⁽¹⁾ to propose draft standard rules of procedure for special conferences of the United Nations, the General Assembly had twice deferred consideration of the reports he submitted in 1981⁽²⁾ and 1982.⁽³⁾

In August 1983, the Secretary-General resubmitted his 1982 report⁽⁴⁾ offering a set of draft rules of procedure which followed closely those of United Nations conferences convened during the previous decade. The report was followed by two addenda⁽⁵⁾ containing the comments and observations of 12 Member States and three international intergovernmental organizations on the proposed rules, submitted in response to a December 1982 Assembly decision⁽⁶⁾

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted decision 38/427 without vote.

Draft standard rules of procedure for United Nations conferences

At its 101st plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee:

(a) Decided to defer to its thirty-ninth session consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on draft standard rules of procedure for United Nations conferences;

(b) Again invited Governments and the international organizations concerned to communicate to the Secretary-General, by 1 May 1984, their observations on the above-mentioned report;

Chapter V

Treaties and agreements

In 1983, the General Assembly decided, by resolution 38/139, to convene not earlier than 1985 a conference of plenipotentiaries on the law of treaties between States and international organizations or between such organizations. The International Law Commission (ILC) resumed consideration of the relations between States and international organizations as they related to the status, privileges and immunities of such bodies and their representatives. By decision 38/425, the Assembly agreed that work on reviewing the multilateral treaty-making process should continue in 1984.

As in previous years, several multilateral treaties, concluded under United Nations auspices, were deposited with the Secretary-General. The Assembly approved additional appropriations aimed at eliminating the backlog in publishing the Treaty Series.

Drafting process for multilateral treaties

In December 1983, the General Assembly decided that in 1984 it would establish a working group of the Sixth (Legal) Committee to try to complete work on the review of the multilateral treaty-making process.

Earlier, the Sixth Committee reconvened, as decided in 1982,⁽¹⁾ the Working Group on the Review of the Multilateral Treaty-making Process, which held 10 meetings between 28 October and 7 December.⁽²⁾ The Group completed the first reading of a working paper prepared by the Chairman in 1982,⁽³⁾ dealing with initiating a treaty-making process, formulating and adopting a multilateral treaty and post-adoption and entry into force. Further proposals were submitted in 1983—by the Chairman, on draft rules of procedure of treaty-making conferences convened within the Assembly framework; and jointly by Australia, Egypt and Mexico, on establishing an advisory drafting committee of the Assembly.

The Working Group discussed, among other things, the role of a drafting committee, provision of legal advisory services through technical assistance, determination of readiness for treaty adoption and choice of forum, follow-up action on adoption, preparation and publication of records and commentaries, and monitoring of treaty implementation. Due to lack of time, it did not consider in detail proposals submitted by its members on various aspects of the topic.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted decision 38/425 without vote.

Review of the multilateral treaty-making process

At its 101st plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee:

(a) Took note with appreciation of the report of the Working Group on the Review of the Multilateral Treaty-making Process, established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 36/112 of 10 December 1981 to determine whether the current methods of multilateral treaty-making were as efficient, economical and effective as they could be to meet the needs of the Member States;

(b) Decided to establish at its thirty-ninth session an open-ended working group of the Sixth Committee with the aim of completing the work on the review of the multilateral treaty-making process;

(c) Requested the Secretary-General to circulate to Member States the report of the Working Group on the Review of the Multilateral Treaty-making Process established at the thirty-seventh session and reconvened at the thirty-eighth session;

(d) Decided to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Review of the multilateral treaty-making process".

Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/670) without vote, 9 December (meeting 73); draft by Australia (A/C.6/38/L.29); agenda item 130.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 6th Committee 73; plenary 101.

Treaties involving international organizations

In December 1983, the General Assembly decided to convene not earlier than 1985 a conference of plenipotentiaries for the final consideration of the draft articles, adopted by ILC in 1982,⁽⁴⁾ on the law of treaties between States and international organizations or between such organizations.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a December 1982 Assembly request,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to it in September 1983 a report with a later addendum,⁽⁶⁾ containing the written comments and observations on the final draft articles submitted by 13 Governments, the United Nations, six agencies and organizations within the United Nations system and two other international intergovernmental organizations.

ACC action. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), at its October 1983 session, considered the procedural and substantive matters relating to the draft articles and adopted a decision, which was presented to the Sixth Committee by the Secretariat.⁽⁷⁾ ACC suggested that: the Assembly, without precluding the eventual conclusion of a convention, consider the possibility of first incorporating the draft articles in a declaration, endorsing them as principles or guidelines to be applied by all intergovernmental organizations. It further observed that, whichever approach the Assembly chose in respect of the instrument to incorporate the draft articles, and whether it decided to have such incorporation accomplished at a conference or by the Sixth Committee, the process should involve the widest possible representation of those actively concluding treaties. ACC deemed it prudent to allow sufficient time to elucidate the serious substantive questions raised by the draft articles, meanwhile perhaps convening one or more working groups.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION.

On the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly, on 19 December 1983, adopted resolution 38/139 without vote.

United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/112 of 16 December 1982, by which it decided that an international convention should be concluded on the basis of the draft articles on the law of treaties between States and international organizations or between international organizations, adopted by the International Law Commission at its thirty-fourth session,

Recalling further that, by its resolution 37/112, it agreed to decide at its thirty-eighth session upon the appropriate forum for the adoption of the convention in the light of the comments received in accordance with that resolution,

Having received the report of the Secretary-General which contains the comments and observations submitted by a number of States and principal international intergovernmental organizations, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 37/112, and having further received the statement adopted by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,

1. Decides that the appropriate forum for the final consideration of the draft articles on the law of treaties between States and international organizations or between international organizations, adopted by the International Law Commission at its thirty-fourth session, shall be a conference of plenipotentiaries to be convened not earlier than 1985;

2. Agrees to decide at its thirty-ninth session upon the question of the date and place for the convening of the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations, as well as upon the question of participation in the Conference;

3. Invites States that have not already done so to submit, not later than 1 July 1984, their written comments and observations on the final draft articles on the law of treaties between States and international organizations or between international organizations prepared by the International Law Commission, as well as on the questions referred to in paragraph 60 of the report of the Commission on the work of its thirty-fourth session;

4. Invites also the principal international intergovernmental organizations that have not already done so to submit, within the same period, their written comments and observations on the subject;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate such comments so as to facilitate the discussion on the subject at the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly;

6. Appeals to potential participants in the Conference to undertake consultations on the draft articles concerned and other related questions prior to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, in order to facilitate the successful conclusion of the work of the Conference;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session an item entitled "United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations".

19 December 1983 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/672) by consensus, 8 December (meeting 70); 26 nation draft (A/C.6/38/L.23); agenda item 132.

Sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bolivia, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Guatemala, Guyana, Iraq, Kuwait, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Oman, Qatar, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Thailand, United Kingdom.

Speaking in explanation of position, Israel, the USSR and the United States believed that the subject would be more appropriately dealt with by the Sixth Committee, rather than by a conference of plenipotentiaries, because of the financial implications involved. Recalling that a recent similar conference had cost more than $3 million, the United States said it would have abstained had a vote been taken on the text. Israel dissociated itself from the consensus and asked the Secretariat to submit in 1984 a memorandum on the organization of the work of the proposed conference, after consulting ILC. Both the USSR and the United States stressed that the question of financial implications would have to be settled in due course.

Relations between States and international organizations

In 1983, ILC resumed consideration of the relations between States and international organizations⁽⁸⁾ which it had last dealt with in 1979⁽⁹⁾ taking up a preliminary report⁽¹⁰⁾ of the Special Rapporteur on the second part of the topic, Leonardo Díaz-González (Venezuela). Work on the first part of the topic, dealing with the status, privileges and immunities of representatives of States to international organizations, had been completed with the adoption in 1975 of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character.⁽¹¹⁾ Work on the second part of the topic—relating to the status, privileges and immunities of international organizations and persons engaged in their activities who were not representatives of States—had commenced in 1976 and was suspended between 1980 and 1982 while ILC focused on other studies with respect to which the process of preparing draft articles was already advanced. The second part of the topic had also been the subject of two previous reports submitted by a former Special Rapporteur.

The Commission agreed in 1983 to adopt a broad outlook and include regional organizations in the study, and to request the Secretariat to revise and update the 1967 Secretariat study on the practice of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency concerning their status, privileges and immunities. It also agreed to request the United Nations Legal Counsel to gather relevant information through questionnaires addressed to legal counsels of regional organizations.

On 19 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/138 on the ILC report, recommended that the Commission continue its work on the subject (see Chapter VII of this section).

Registration and publication of treaties by the United Nations

During 1983, some 1,273 international agreements and 588 subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 259 registrations of formalities concerning agreements for which the Secretary-General performs depositary functions.

The texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded are published in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1983, the following volumes of the Treaty Series covering treaties registered or filed and recorded in 1973, 1974, 1975 and 1976 were issued:

Elimination of the backlog in publication

In November 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly his second biennial report⁽¹²⁾ on his plan for eliminating the backlog in publishing the United Nations Treaty Series.

The report reviewed the plan since its inception in 1980⁽¹³⁾ and gave the overall situation as at 31 July 1983. The Secretary-General estimated the number of depositary formalities in 1983 at 738, and noted that an increasing number of legal opinions had been provided, particularly with regard to final clauses of multilateral treaties. He reported that, while marked progress had been achieved in 1982-1983 in eliminating the backlog, delays still experienced at various stages warranted some adjustments, requiring an additional appropriation of $994,000 for 1984-1985. On the basis of its examination of the report, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended that the Assembly provide $938,400.⁽¹⁴⁾

On 20 December, the Assembly adopted, by recorded vote, resolution 38/236 A on the programme budget for the 1984-1985 biennium, in which it approved, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the additional appropriations recommended by ACABQ (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I).

In explanation of vote in the Fifth Committee, the USSR said it could not support the appropriation requested, as savings could be made through greater efficiency and co-ordination. The United Kingdom also considered the funds requested to be excessive and felt that more might have been done through redeployment of resources. Sharing that view, the Byelorussian SSR felt that the publication of the Treaty Series could be speeded up by such measures as having some Member States provide English and French translations of treaties concluded in other languages; it saw no need to publish in the Treaty Series those treaties which had already been published in other United Nations documents. Japan had difficulty understanding why the requests had been made in the form of revised estimates rather than in the original budget submission.

In addition, the Assembly, by section XII of resolution 38/234 of 20 December, invited the Committee on Conferences to examine, at its substantive session in 1984, the question of backlogs in documentation (ibid.). The proposal was made in the Fifth Committee by the United States, which noted the recurrence of requests for additional appropriations to eliminate other publication backlogs. Australia supported the United States proposal.

Chapter VI

International economic law

Various legal aspects of international economic relations continued to be dealt with in 1983 by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee.

In December, the Assembly, by resolution 38/135, recommended that States implement the Uniform Rules on Contract Clauses for an Agreed Sum Due upon Failure of Performance, which UNCITRAL had adopted at its May/June session. In taking note of its report, the Assembly, in resolution 38/134, called on UNCITRAL to continue work on the topics in its work programme and reaffirmed the importance of training and assistance in international trade law. On legal aspects of the new international economic order, the Assembly, by resolution 38/128, requested the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to complete an analytical study on the topic for submission in 1984. In resolution 38/127, it again invited States and interested organizations to comment on, among other things, draft articles on most-favoured-nation clauses, which the International Law Commission had adopted in 1978.

Topics related to this chapter. Development and international economic and social policy: economic rights and duties of States. Industrial development: industrial co-operation contracts.

General aspects

Report of UNCITRAL

At its sixteenth session, held at Vienna, Austria, from 24 May to 3 June 1983,⁽¹⁾ UNCITRAL considered such legal aspects of international commerce as contract practices, payments and commercial arbitration. It also considered legal aspects of the new international economic order, as well as training and assistance.

The 1983 report of UNCITRAL was considered and taken note of by the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on 4 October (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV)-an action which the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in November.⁽²⁾

By resolution 38/134 adopted without vote on 19 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, also took note of the UNCITRAL report.

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law

Recalling that the object of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law is the promotion of the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law,

Having regard for the need to take into account the different social and legal systems in harmonizing and unifying the rules of international trade law,

4. Takes note with appreciation of the commencement by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, through its Working Group on the New International Economic Order, of work on drafting a legal guide on drawing up contracts for the supply and construction of industrial works, identifying the legal issues involved in such contracts and suggesting possible solutions to assist parties, in particular from developing countries, in their negotiations;

7. Reaffirms the mandate of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to co-ordinate legal activities in this field in order to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law, and, in this connection:

(a) Recommends that the Commission should continue to maintain close co-operation with the other international organs and organizations active in the field of international trade law, in particular the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Law Commission, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Commission on Transnational Corporations, the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law and the Hague Conference on Private International Law;

International trade law

In December 1983, the General Assembly, by resolution 38/135, recommended that States give serious consideration to, and implement, the Uniform Rules on Contract Clauses for an Agreed Sum Due upon Failure of Performance, which UNCITRAL had adopted earlier in the year. It again invited Member States, United Nations organs and intergovernmental organizations to comment on the 1978 draft of the International Law Commission on most-favoured-nation clauses (38/127).

In addition, UNCITRAL continued considering a draft model law on international commercial arbitration and the draft Conventions on bills of exchange and promissory notes and on international cheques; took note of progress made in preparing a legal guide on electronic funds transfers; and supported continued co-operation in harmonizing international trade law.

Unification of trade law

International commercial arbitration

Draft model law

At its May/June 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ UNCITRAL—which in 1981 had requested its Working Group on International Contract Practices to prepare a draft model law on international commercial arbitration for use in modernizing and harmonizing national laws and practices on the subject—took note of two reports by the Group (fourth session, Vienna, 4-15 October 1982;⁽²⁾ fifth session, New York, 22 February-4 March 1983⁽³⁾) and requested it to proceed with its work expeditiously. The sixth session of the Group was held at Vienna from 29 August to 9 September;⁽⁴⁾ the Group requested the UNCITRAL secretariat to redraft the articles it had discussed at the session.

The Commission agreed that the model law could help to facilitate arbitration as an appropriate method of settling disputes in international trade transactions.

Suggestions made in UNCITRAL concerned: exploring suitable means by which the Commission and its secretariat could assist regional arbitration centres and similar institutions in developing countries; including in the model law some provisions on conciliation; and having the Group study all aspects of the relationship between courts and arbitral tribunals.

In resolution 38/134 of 19 December on the work of UNCITRAL, the General Assembly noted with appreciation the progress made by the Working Group in preparing the draft model law:

International payments

Draft Conventions on international bills of exchange and promissory notes and on international cheques

In 1983, UNCITRAL⁽¹⁾ agreed to devote not more than two weeks at its seventeenth (1984) session to discussing main features and controversial issues which might be identified in written comments-expected from Governments and international organizations by 30 September 1983—on the draft Conventions on international bills of exchange and promissory notes (mainly credit instruments) and on international cheques (mainly payment instruments).

These draft Conventions, adopted in 1981 by UNCITRAL's Working Group on International Negotiable Instruments,⁽⁵⁾ would establish comprehensive sets of uniform rules applicable to international instruments for optional use in international payments; UNCITRAL was to decide in 1984 on future action on the draft texts.

Electronic funds transfer

UNCITRAL⁽¹⁾ took note in 1983 of a progress report that its secretariat and its Study Group on International Payments—a consultative body composed of representatives of banking and trade institutions—had begun preparing a legal guide on electronic funds transfers, which would identify the legal issues, describe the various approaches, point out the advantages and disadvantages of each approach and suggest alternative solutions. The Study Group was expected to continue its work, and several draft chapters of the legal guide were to be submitted to UNCITRAL's 1984 session.

Draft uniform rules on international trade contracts

UNCITRAL adopted in 1983⁽¹⁾ draft uniform rules on contract clauses for an agreed sum due upon failure of performance, which specified the circumstances and conditions under which a party to an international contract was entitled to recover or forfeit an agreed sum in the event of a failure or delay in performance. The rules, prepared in 1981 by UNCITRAL's Working Group on International Contract Practices,⁽⁶⁾ were to apply to both liquidated damages (where a contract sought to pre-estimate compensation payable on its breach) and penalty clauses. The draft rules, which had been revised by the secretariat at the Commission's 1982 request,⁽⁷⁾ were discussed in 1983 by UNCITRAL and a six-member Drafting Group. The Commission agreed to change provisionally the title of the rules from that previously used—"uniform rules on liquidated damages and penalty clauses". It took this action because in civil law systems the term "penalty clauses" covered both penalty clauses and liquidated damages clauses as understood in common law. The draft rules, as adopted, were annexed to the Commission's 1983 report.

The Commission also considered, as in 1982, whether the draft rules should be in the form of a convention, a model law or general contract conditions. A fourth possibility, suggested as a compromise, was a convention with the draft rules annexed, thus allowing those States not wishing to adhere to a convention the option of using the annex as a model law; a sample draft convention prepared by the UNCITRAL secretariat for that eventuality was also annexed to the Commission's 1983 report.

UNCITRAL noted a greater preference in favour of a model law as well as considerable support for the approach based on a convention with the rules annexed. In the absence of a consensus and in view of the importance of the issue, the Commission felt that the General Assembly's Sixth Committee should decide on the final form of the rules.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 38/135 without vote.

Uniform Rules on Contract Clauses for an Agreed Sum Due upon Failure of Performance

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that a wide range of international trade contracts contain clauses obligating a party that fails to perform an obligation under the contract to pay an agreed sum to the other party,

Noting that the effect and validity of such clauses are often uncertain owing to disparities in the treatment of such clauses in various legal systems,

Believing that these uncertainties constitute an obstacle to the flow of international trade,

Being of the opinion that it would be desirable for the legal rules applicable to such clauses to be harmonized so as to reduce or eliminate the uncertainties concerning such clauses and remove these uncertainties as a barrier to the flow of international trade,

Noting that the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law has adopted Uniform Rules on Contract Clauses for an Agreed Sum Due upon Failure of Performance,

Recognizing that there are various ways in which the Uniform Rules on Contract Clauses for an Agreed Sum Due upon Failure of Performance could be implemented by States, and being of the opinion that a recommendation by the General Assembly to States that they should implement the Uniform Rules in an appropriate manner would not prejudice the Assembly from making a further recommendation or taking further action with respect to the Uniform Rules if circumstances so warrant, Recommends that States should give serious consideration to the Uniform Rules on Contract Clauses for an Agreed Sum Due upon Failure of Performance adopted by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law and, where appropriate, implement them in the form of either a model law or a convention.

19 December 1983 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/667) without vote, 30 November (meeting 59); 13-nation draft (A/C.6/38/L.16); agenda item 127.

Sponsors: Australia, Austria, Chile, Cyprus, Egypt, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Japan, Nigeria, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand.
Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 6th Committee 2-8, 59; plenary 101.

Also on 19 December, in resolution 38/134 on the work of UNCITRAL, the Assembly noted the adoption of the Uniform Rules.

In explanation of position on the draft that became resolution 38/135, Algeria and Tunisia said Governments should be given time to study the substance of the rules and comment on their form; for Algeria, the text ignored the preference expressed by many States for other ways of implementing the rules, while Tunisia felt that it was ambiguous. The United Kingdom believed it was unlikely that the rules could be implemented in the form adopted by UNCITRAL.

Co-ordination of trade law activities

In 1983, UNCITRAL⁽¹⁾ continued to consider the co-ordination of trade law activities. It took note of a report of the Secretary-General on current activities of international organizations related to the harmonization and unification of international trade law, and urged its secretariat to continue co-operating and co-ordinating work with those bodies. The secretariat was requested to report to the Commission's 1984 session on action taken to create closer co-operation between UNCTAD and UNCITRAL.

Among other things, the Commission noted that the Governing Council of the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law, in adopting a preliminary draft Convention on Operators of Transport Terminals in May 1983, had stated that it would forgo further work on the topic if UNCITRAL were to decide to pursue it. The draft Convention sought to fill in the gaps in the liability régime for the international transport of goods by unifying the disparate legal rules on the liability of international terminal operators. The Commission decided to include the topic in its work programme, asked the Institute for the draft text, and requested the secretariat to submit in 1984 a study of important issues arising from the preliminary draft Convention and of the possibility of broadening the scope of the rules to cover storage and safekeeping of goods not involved in transport.

The Commission had before it a report on legal aspects of automatic data processing by the Working Party of the Economic Commission for Europe and UNCTAD on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures. The Party had identified UNCITRAL as the appropriate forum to undertake and co-ordinate activities in the field, and the secretariat planned to submit to the Commission in 1984 a report on actions that might be taken in that regard.

UNCITRAL was informed that the Council of the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) expected to adopt in June 1983 a new version of the 1974 Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits, being prepared by the ICC Commission on Banking Technique and Practice, for submission to UNCITRAL in 1984 with a request for endorsement.

Most-favoured-nation clauses

As it had decided in 1981,⁽⁸⁾ the General Assembly, in 1983, resumed consideration of a set of draft articles on the scope and application of most-favoured-nation clauses in international agreements, adopted by the International Law Commission (ILC) in 1978⁽⁹⁾ with a recommendation that they be submitted to Member States as the basis for a convention. Since then, the Assembly had solicited in 1978,⁽¹⁰⁾ 1980⁽¹¹⁾ and 1981⁽⁸⁾—the views of Member States, United Nations organs and intergovernmental organizations on the ILC draft. Pursuant to the 1981 Assembly invitation, the Secretary-General submitted a report in September 1983,⁽¹²⁾ containing the comments and observations received from Ecuador, Spain and Venezuela as well as from the World Intellectual Property Organization.

The ILC draft on most-favoured-nation clauses dealt with: the scope of the articles and definitions, including the definition of the most-favoured-nation clause and the definition, legal basis, source and scope of most-favoured-nation treatment (articles 1 to 8); the general application, including the scope and acquisition of rights under such a clause, and compliance with the laws and regulations of the granting State (articles 9 to 22); and exceptions to the application in relation to a generalized system of preferences, arrangements between developing States, frontier traffic, and rights and facilities extended to land-locked States (articles 23 to 26). The final four articles dealt with, among other things, the establishment of new rules of international law in favour of developing countries and a provision on the residual character of the articles.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

At the Assembly's 1983 session, two draft resolutions on the topic were submitted and later withdrawn in the Sixth Committee, in favour of a third draft submitted by the Committee Chairman which was based on informal consultations on the two texts. The Committee subsequently approved the Chairman's draft and submitted it for Assembly action.

One draft, sponsored by 11 Eastern European and other socialist States, would have had the Assembly establish at its fortieth (1985) session a working group of the Sixth Committee to conclude elaboration of the draft articles with a view to their submission for the Assembly's final consideration. The other draft, sponsored by 10 Western European States, would have had the Assembly bring the draft articles adopted by ILC and the proposals for amendment thereto to the attention of Member States for their consideration and use, where appropriate, in concluding agreements bearing on most-favoured-nation treatment or in dealing with questions concerning their interpretation and application.

On 19 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 38/127 without vote.

Consideration of the draft articles on most-favoured-nation clauses

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/139 of 19 December 1978 relating to the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirtieth session, in particular section II of that resolution,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/161 of 15 December 1980 and 36/111 of 10 December 1981, entitled "Consideration of the draft articles on most-favoured-nation clauses",

Reaffirming its appreciation of the high quality of the work done by the International Law Commission in elaborating a series of draft articles on most-favoured-nation clauses,

Bearing in mind the importance of facilitating international trade and the development of economic co-operation among all States on the basis of equality, mutual advantage and non-discrimination in the establishment of the new international economic order,

Bearing in mind also the complexity of codification or progressive development of international law on most-favoured-nation clauses at a time of rapid development of new forms of economic co-operation, notably those in favour of developing countries,

Taking note of the comments and observations submitted and of the statements made in the Sixth Committee at the thirty-fifth, thirty-sixth and thirty-eighth sessions of the General Assembly, including the proposals for amendment of the draft articles adopted by the International Law Commission,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to reiterate his invitation to Member States and interested organs of the United Nations, as well as interested intergovernmental organizations, to submit or bring up to date, not later than 31 March 1985, any written comments and observations which they deem appropriate on chapter II of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirtieth session, in particular on:

(a) The draft articles on most-favoured-nation clauses adopted by the International Law Commission;

(b) Those provisions relating to such clauses on which the International Law Commission was unable to take a decision;

(c) Any other aspects of problems relating to most-favoured-nation clauses that Governments may consider relevant in view of recent developments of international practice, including the recommendation of the International Law Commission on the conclusion of a convention;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States to comment on the most appropriate procedure for completing work on most-favoured-nation clauses and on the forum for future discussion, bearing in mind the suggestions and proposals made in the Sixth Committee, including the suggestion to establish a working group of the Sixth Committee after one of the existing working groups accomplishes its mandate;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report containing the comments and observations received pursuant to paragraphs 1 and 2 above with a view to taking a final decision on the procedure to be followed;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Consideration of the draft articles on most-favoured-nation clauses".

19 December 1983 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/660) by consensus, 30 November (meeting 59); draft by Chairman (A/C.6/38/L.17), based on informal consultations on drafts by 11 (A/C.6/38/L.3) and 10 (A/C.6/38/L.4) nations; agenda item 120.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 6th Committee 18, 20-23, 25, 41, 59; plenary 101.

Training and assistance

Throughout 1983, the UNCITRAL secretariat continued to promote training and assistance and to publicize the work of UNCITRAL, through association with several regional seminars dealing with international trade law. Regional seminars and symposia dealing with the 1980 United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods⁽¹³⁾ were held in 1983, by: the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (Moscow, April); the Austrian Ministry of Justice, the Economic University in Vienna and the Österreichische Kontrollbank A. G. (Vienna, April); the International Law Section of the American Bar Association (Atlanta, Georgia, United States, August); and the Law Association for Asia and the Western Pacific (Manila, Philippines, September). Other meetings included the eighth Inter-American Conference on Commercial Arbitration (Santiago, Chile, April) and an international conference on the techniques of international commerce, organized by the Chamber of Industry of the Ivory Coast, the Economic Community of West Africa and the International Chamber of Commerce (Abidjan, Ivory Coast, November).

The Commission⁽¹⁾ approved the general approach taken by the secretariat in training and assistance activities, but suggested that more specific mention should be made in future regarding the secretariat's involvement in the various projects, and that university-level teaching material on international trade law should be developed.

In resolution 38/134 of 19 December on the work of UNCITRAL, the General Assembly reaffirmed the importance of training and assistance in international trade law, particularly for developing countries, and invited Governments, United Nations bodies and individuals to help finance and organize seminars.

Legal aspects of the new international economic order

Consideration of legal aspects of the new international economic order continued in 1983 in UNCITRAL⁽¹⁾ and in the General Assembly's Sixth Committee, while other aspects were considered in other United Nations forums (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I). In December, the Assembly, by resolution 38/128, requested the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) to complete and submit in 1984 an analytical study on the legal aspects.

UNCITRAL Working Group action. In 1983, the UNCITRAL Working Group on the New International Economic Order (fourth session, Vienna, 16-20 May) began considering the draft structure and sample draft chapters of a legal guide on drawing up contracts for the supply and construction of industrial works (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI).

UNCITRAL agreed with the Working Group on the need for expeditious preparation of the guide. The view was expressed that other legal aspects of the new international economic order were also important and that consideration should be given to the Group's long-term work programme.

UNITAR study. Pursuant to a December 1982 Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1983 a report with an addendum,⁽³⁾ containing a progress report by UNITAR on its analytical study on the progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order - a study requested by the Assembly in 1980.⁽⁴⁾ The addendum gave the views of Bulgaria and Madagascar, while an annex carried a report of a Panel of Experts (New York, 6-8 July), convened in response to the Assembly's 1982 invitation⁽²⁾ to assist in the third and final phase of the study. The first phase of the study - a compendium listing all possible sources of norms and principles evolving in the direction of law - had been forwarded to the Assembly in 1981.⁽⁵⁾ As part of the second phase, UNITAR had completed in 1982 analytical papers on three principles - preferential treatment for developing countries, stabilization of their export earnings, and permanent sovereignty over natural resources. The Institute engaged, in 1983, four consultants to assist in the preparation of papers dealing with four other principles—entitlement of developing countries to development assistance, right of every State to benefit from science and technology, participatory equality of developing countries in economic relations, and common heritage of mankind. The Panel of Experts recommended that, in view of the complexity of the task and of the need for the consultants and UNITAR to revise some papers, UNITAR should submit to the Assembly a progress report in 1983, and the completed study in 1984 or, more realistically, in 1985.

Reporting that it could not meet the deadline for completing the study in 1983, UNITAR requested the Assembly to extend its mandate to accomplish the task which, it asserted, dealt with a vast and complex question encompassing all aspects of international economic relations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly, on 19 December, adopted resolution 38/128 by recorded vote.

Progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the General Assembly is called upon to initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling its resolutions 34/150 of 17 December 1979 and 35/166 of 15 December 1980, entitled "Consolidation and progressive development of the principles and norms of international economic law relating in particular to the legal aspects of the new international economic order", and its resolutions 36/107 of 10 December 1981 and 37/103 of 16 December 1982, entitled "Progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, particularly of the progress report prepared by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, of the analytical papers and analysis of texts of relevant instruments, prepared by the consultants and the Institute in accordance with paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 37/103, of the views submitted by States in response to resolution 37/103 and of the report of the Panel of Experts,

Taking note, in particular, of the recommendation of the Panel of Experts that the United Nations Institute for Training and Research should complete, in 1984, the analytical study on the progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order,

Recognizing the need for a systematic and progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order,

1. Requests the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to continue preparing the third and final phase of the analytical study and to complete it in time for the Secretary-General to submit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

2. Also requests the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to prepare a summary and an outline of the study in order to facilitate debate on the item;

3. Urges Member States to submit, not later than 31 May 1984, relevant information with respect to the study, including proposals concerning further action to be taken on the final study to be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

4. Requests the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the regional commissions, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and other relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations active in this field, as determined by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, to submit relevant information and to co-operate fully with the Institute in the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report on the final study prepared by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for its consideration, on a priority basis, under the item entitled "Progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order" to be included in the provisional agenda of that session.

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Luxembourg, Mongolia, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom.

In related action, the Assembly, by resolution 38/134 on the work of UNCITRAL, noted with appreciation that the Working Group on the New International Economic Order had commenced work on drafting a legal guide on industrial works contracts, and called on the Group to continue taking into account the Assembly resolutions relevant to the new international economic order.

In explanation of vote on the text that became resolution 38/128, Chile observed that, during the debate, one group of States had criticized with severity the outcome of UNITAR's work, another group had proposed that the item be referred to UNCITRAL, while a third, despite its special interest in the new international economic order, had said that the study fell short of expectations; under the circumstances, it was doubtful that current efforts would result in a satisfactory legal instrument.

The Netherlands considered the study lacking in desired analytical structure and legal clarity. Belgium felt the methodology used by UNITAR was neither scientific nor politically appropriate. Similarly, the United Kingdom, which had expressed the fear that the study could result in an ex post facto justification of predetermined conclusions, felt the composition of the Panel of Experts did not guarantee a balanced and representative character of legal systems or political approaches. For the United States, the authors of the study had dealt with extraneous questions in the erroneous belief that they could thus compensate for the lack of juridical material pertinent to the subject.

Along with the United Kingdom, which expressed dismay at UNITAR's request for further financial subvention, the United States found it perplexing that the study, which originally was to have had no financial implications, should require additional expenditures chargeable to the regular budget.

Apart from finances, Belgium doubted that UNITAR could achieve the task in the time allotted; it would have preferred giving that body two years to complete the study. Austria, even though it did not fully agree with all aspects of the procedures followed nor with the total content of the studies carried out, believed the work had been useful.

Czechoslovakia, on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, continued to consider UNCITRAL, especially its Working Group on the New International Economic Order, as the most appropriate body to consider the subject; apart from financial implications, asking UNITAR to undertake a study affecting the interests of States in various spheres of international relations was unjustified and unacceptable. The socialist States felt that if the obligatory legal norms were to be based on the recommendations mentioned in the second preambular paragraph, their practical application would have to be analysed carefully, bearing in mind the diversity of economic relations between States.

While supporting the establishment of a new international economic order, Spain abstained because the text was subjected to a vote, and because it doubted the appropriateness of the progressive development of the principles in question.

Argentina—which had serious reservations about the systematization used by UNITAR in its analytical study—and Chile considered it inappropriate to introduce an item on Antarctica under the heading "Common heritage of mankind", terming the views of the Panel of Experts as ignoring the characteristics of the system established by the Antarctic Treaty and incompatible with the rights of the countries exercising sovereignty in Antarctica (see also POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter X).

Chapter VII

Other legal questions

In 1983, the International Law Commission (ILC), which held its thirty-fifth session at Geneva from 3 May to 22 July, continued work on the progressive development and codification of international law. By resolution 38/138, the General Assembly recommended that ILC continue work on all the topics in its current programme.

During the year, activities under the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law included the granting of fellowships and the holding of seminars, lectures and training and refresher courses. In December, the Assembly, by resolution 38/129, authorized further activities for 1984 and 1985.

By resolution 38/37 adopted in December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue strengthening co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee.

International law Commission

ILC work programme

The 1983 ILC session (Geneva, 3 May-22 July)⁽¹⁾ was devoted mainly to considering draft articles on the following aspects of international law: jurisdictional immunities of States and their property (see Chapter III of this section); State responsibility (ibid.); status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by courier (ibid.); non-navigational uses of international watercourses (Chapter II); and international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law (Chapter III). It also continued work on elaborating the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind, which it had prepared in 1954 (Chapter II), and resumed consideration of relations between States and international organizations (Chapter V).

The Secretary-General, by an August note,⁽²⁾ transmitted to the General Assembly the texts of the draft articles which had been provisionally adopted by ILC on the first three topics.

The 34-member Commission also maintained co-operation with other juridical bodies such as the Inter-American Juridical Committee, the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (see below), the European Committee on Legal Cooperation and the Arab Commission for International Law.

The Commission's programme and methods of work were examined at four meetings of a planning group set up for the 1983 ILC session. The group, whose recommendations were included in the Commission's report to the Assembly, observed that interest was shown among members to the idea of staggering annually the major consideration of topics on the ILC work programme, and the need was expressed for further expanding and intensifying research and studies undertaken by the Codification Division of the Secretariat's Office of Legal Affairs. ILC emphasized the importance of timely preparation and distribution of documentation, and decided to give priority in 1984 to the work of its Drafting Committee and to continue preparing draft articles on all topics in its current programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, the General Assembly, on 19 December, adopted resolution 38/138 without vote.

Report of the International Law Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirty-fifth session,

Emphasizing the need for the progressive development of international law and its codification in order to make it a more effective means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and to give increasing importance to its role in relations among States,

Recognizing the importance of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics which might be submitted to the International Law Commission, and of enabling the Sixth Committee and the Commission further to enhance their contributions to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling the need to keep under review those topics of international law which, given their new or renewed interest for the contemporary international community, may be suitable for progressive development and codification of international law and therefore may be included in the future programme of work of the International Law Commission,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirty-fifth session;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the International Law Commission for the work accomplished at that session;

3. Recommends that, taking into account the comments of Governments, whether in writing or expressed orally in debates in the General Assembly, the International Law Commission should continue its work on all the topics in its current programme;

4. Expresses its satisfaction with the conclusions and intentions of the International Law Commission concerning its procedures and methods of work, as reflected in paragraphs 305 to 307 and 310 to 314 of its report;

5. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning the increased role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and those concerning the documentation of the International Law Commission and endorses the request of the Commission contained in paragraph 310 of its report;

6. Appeals to Governments and, as appropriate, to international organizations to respond as fully and expeditiously as possible to the requests of the International Law Commission for comments, observations and replies to questionnaires and for materials on topics in its programme of work;

7. Reaffirms its wish that the International Law Commission continue to enhance its co-operation with intergovernmental legal bodies whose work is of interest for the progressive development of international law and its codification;

8. Expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the opportunity to attend those seminars;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the debate on the report of the Commission at the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly and to prepare and distribute a topical summary of the debate.

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/671) by consensus, 8 December (meeting 70): 61-nation draft (A/C.6/38/L.22); agenda item 131.

Sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Cyprus, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guyana, India, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sudan, Thailand, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 6th Committee 34, 36-50, 54, 70; plenary 101.

In explanation of position in the Sixth Committee, Bulgaria felt that the text should have included specific reference to the ILC recommendations and that consideration needed to be given to priorities of topics and the progress made in each one. Sharing that view, the USSR hoped ILC would take into account the comments made concerning the allocation of priority to various topics; along with Turkey, it could not accept all of the Commission's conclusions.

UN Programme for the teaching and study of international law

The 1982-1983 activities of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, along with recommendations for the Programme's future implementation, were outlined by the Secretary-General in a biennial report,⁽³⁾ submitted to the General Assembly in accordance with its 1981 request.⁽⁴⁾ As in previous years, the report gave an account of steps taken or planned by the United Nations as well as a description of those of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

International law Seminar

Pursuant to a December 1982 Assembly wish,⁽⁵⁾ the nineteenth session of the International Law Seminar-intended for advanced students and junior government officials dealing with international law-was held at Geneva from 24 May to 10 June 1983 with 24 participants, all of different nationality and a majority from developing countries.⁽¹⁾ The participants followed the work of ILC at its 1983 session and heard lectures given by its members and other eminent jurists. As in the past, none of the Seminar's costs fell on the United Nations. Austria, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and Viet Nam made fellowships available to participants from developing countries, and a private body, the Dana Fund for International and Comparative Legal Studies (United States), also made funds available.

In its December 1983 resolution 38/138 (see above), the Assembly expressed the wish that seminars would continue to be held in conjunction with ILC sessions and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries would be given the opportunity to attend.

Fellowships

Under the joint fellowship programme of the United Nations and UNITAR, which continued to be administered by the latter,⁽³⁾ 17 fellows in 1982 and 15 in 1983—middle-grade governmental legal officers and young teachers of international law—attended courses at the Hague Academy of International Law (Netherlands), participated in lectures, seminars and courses organized by UNITAR, and, in some cases, received practical training at legal offices of the United Nations and related organizations.

The Secretary-General reported that the late receipt of voluntary contributions had prevented the launching, during the 1982-1983 reporting period, of the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, established in 1981⁽⁶⁾ as a memorial to the Sri Lankan diplomat who was President of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea until his death in 1980. The Assembly had called for contributions to the Fellowship in 1981.⁽⁷⁾

Other activities

UNITAR organized and financed regional training and refresher courses in international law—one for Asia (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 18-29 October 1982) and another for Latin America and the Caribbean (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 26 September-7 October 1983).⁽³⁾ The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law also collaborated in organizing, or participated in, a number of activities and trained four interns at its secretariat during 1982-1983 (see Chapter VI of this section).

UNESCO continued, among other things, to develop university-level teaching materials, provide fellowships and training, and organize seminars and expert meetings, including consultations on the teaching of international law in Africa (Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon, 28 November-2 December 1983).

The Secretary-General—following consultation with the 13-member Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law (seventeenth session, 11 January; eighteenth session, 27 October)—recommended the continuation, in 1984 and 1985, as in previous years, of fellowship programmes and other training activities in international law.

Noting that the four-year term of membership on the Advisory Committee was to expire at the end of 1983, the Secretary-General, by a November note,⁽⁸⁾ drew the the Assembly's attention to the need to appoint new members for 1984-1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly, on 19 December, adopted resolution 38/129 without vote.

United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law The General Assembly,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law and the recommendations made to the Secretary-General by the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching,

Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, which are contained in that report,

Considering that international law should occupy an appropriate place in the teaching of legal disciplines at all universities,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by States at the bilateral level to provide assistance in the teaching and study of international law,

Convinced, nevertheless, that States and international organizations and institutions should be encouraged to give further support to the Programme and to increase their activities to promote the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, in particular those activities which are of special benefit to persons from developing countries,

Recalling that, in the conduct of the Programme, it is desirable to use as far as possible the resources and facilities made available by Member States, international organizations and others,

Noting that, following the request for voluntary contributions made to Member States by the Assembly in its resolution 36/108 of 10 December 1981, the fund of the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea has not yet become operational and consequently no fellowships have yet been awarded,

1. Authorizes the Secretary-General to carry out in 1984 and 1985 the activities specified in his report, including the provision of:

(a) A minimum of fifteen fellowships each in 1984 and 1985, at the request of Governments of developing countries;

(b) A minimum of one scholarship each in 1984 and 1985 under the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Fellowship on the Law of the Sea to be financed by the voluntary contributions specifically made for the Fellowship as a result of the requests set out in paragraphs 9 and 10 below;

(c) Assistance in the form of a travel grant for one participant from each developing country who will be invited to the regional courses to be organized in 1984 and 1985; and to finance the above activities from provisions in the regular budget and also from voluntary financial contributions which would be received as a result of the requests set out in paragraphs 9 and 10 below;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his constructive efforts to promote training and assistance in international law within the framework of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law in 1982 and 1983;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for its participation in the Programme, in particular for the efforts made to support the teaching of international law;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for its participation in the Programme, particularly in the organization of regional courses and in the conduct of the fellowship programme in international law sponsored jointly by the United Nations and the Institute;

5. Also expresses its appreciation to the States which provided host facilities for the regional training and refresher courses held in 1982 and 1983;

6. Further expresses its appreciation to the Hague Academy of International Law for the valuable contributions it has made to the Programme by enabling international law fellows under the sponsorship of the United Nations and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to attend its annual international law courses and by providing facilities for seminars organized by the Institute in conjunction with the Academy courses, and for its constructive efforts in organising the regional training and refresher courses held at Tunis in 1982;

7. Notes with appreciation the contributions made by the Hague Academy of International Law to the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law and calls upon Member States and interested organizations to give favourable consideration to the appeal of the Academy for a continuation of and, if possible, an increase in their financial contributions in order to enable the Academy to go on with the above-mentioned activities;

8. Urges all Governments to encourage the inclusion of courses on international law in the programmes of legal studies offered at institutions of higher learning;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to publicize the Programme and to invite periodically Member States, universities, philanthropic foundations and other interested national and international institutions and organizations, as well as individuals, to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme or otherwise to assist in its implementation and possible expansion;

10. Reiterates its request to Member States and to interested organizations and individuals to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme and expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made voluntary contributions for this purpose;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the implementation of the Programme during 1984 and 1985 and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme 'of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, to submit recommendations regarding the execution of the Programme in subsequent years;

12. Decides to appoint thirteen Member States as members of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, for a period of four years beginning on 1 January 1984;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law".

19 December 1983 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/38/662) by consensus, 9 December (meeting 73); draft by Chairman (A/C.6/38/L.32); agenda item 122.

On 20 December, the Assembly entrusted its President with the task of appointing 13 Member States as members of the Advisory Committee.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

In pursuance of an October 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to that body in 1983 a report⁽¹⁰⁾ on co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee—an organization to which the Assembly had accorded permanent observer status in 1980.⁽¹¹⁾

By a letter of 9 December,⁽¹²⁾ Iraq submitted to the Secretary-General, on behalf of 64 delegations, the views and suggestions of the Legal Advisers of the member States of the Consultative Committee, which met in New York in November, for rationalizing the work of the Assembly's Sixth Committee. The Legal Advisers concluded that several matters needed urgent consideration: amalgamation of items on similar subjects for discussion in the Sixth Committee; identification of items for resolutions of formal or carry-forward character; consideration of items referred to ad hoc committees in appropriate stages; allocation of sufficient time to working groups at the beginning of sessions or between sessions; restricting debate on ILC reports to such issues where discussions were essential for policy guidelines, method of approach or acceptance of draft articles; and mechanisms for consultations on inscription of items of a legal character on the Assembly's agenda as well as other legal issues referred to the Sixth Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/37.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/38 of 18 November 1981 and 37/8 of 29 October 1982.

Administrative and budgetary questions

United Nations financing

A United Nations programme budget for 1984-1985 containing appropriations of $1,587,159,800 was adopted by the General Assembly in December 1983 (resolution 38/236 A). This was $117,520,300, or 7.4 per cent, above the $1,469,639,500 in final appropriations for 1982-1983, also approved by the Assembly in December (resolution 38/226 A). Excluding inflation and foreign exchange rate movements, the real budgetary growth between the two bienniums was calculated by the Secretariat at 0.9 per cent.

Most of the budget was to be financed by assessed contributions from Member States. Assembly-approved estimates of income from other sources totalled $256,685,700 for 1982-1983 (resolution 38/226 B) and $283,892,800 for 1984-1985 (resolution 38/236 B).

The Committee on Contributions began a study on possible changes in the criteria for determining the share of each United Nations Member in future budgets, with a view to making the scale of assessments more equitable.

The Secretary-General reported in August 1983 that the cash position of the United Nations had improved, due in large measure to the fact that many Members were responding to the Assembly's 1982 appeal for expeditious payment of their budget contributions. However, the overall deficit increased by $19.8 million, to a total of $326.4 million, because of withheld contributions relating to activities which some Members regarded as illegal or unjustified.

In November, the Assembly, by decision 38/408, approved a change in the auditing terms of reference, specifying matters on which the United Nations Board of Auditors was asked to give its opinion when reviewing the Organization's financial management.

Approval of the two budgets and action on other financial matters was taken by the Assembly on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

Budget for 1982-1983

Appropriations

The final appropriations under the United Nations programme budget for the biennium 1982-1983 were fixed by the General Assembly in December 1983 at $1,469,639,500. This was the second reduction since the initial budget was approved in 1981,⁽¹⁾ the first having been made in December 1982 when the Assembly approved the mid-biennium budget adjustment.⁽²⁾

The $3,322,200 reduction in 1983 was due in large part to lower inflation rates than had been foreseen when the initial budget was adopted in 1981, permitting savings which exceeded increases due to other factors. The reduction was based on figures supplied by the Secretary-General in his budget performance report of December 1983,⁽³⁾ which put the net savings resulting from lower inflation at $5 million. Further savings, in a net amount of $1.6 million, arose from the fact that the staff vacancy rate was higher than had been anticipated and actual salary and common staff (fringe benefit) costs were lower than standard figures used in the initial budget calculations. The vacancy factor was the main cause of reductions in certain areas, notably conference and library services ($6.9 million), public information ($2.1 million) and human settlements ($1 million). Unused appropriations for meetings serviced by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development accounted for savings of $1 million.

These savings were partly offset by increases due to other factors. The largest of these, totalling $5.6 million, were for general services at Headquarters, notably steam for heating and cooling ($1.6 million), office alterations in a recently occupied building ($1.4 million) and increased use of the diplomatic pouch for carrying mail ($1.2 million). Higher than anticipated staff costs were the prime factor in increases of $2.8 million for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and $1.1 million for the Economic Commission for Latin America. The relocation to Baghdad, Iraq, of the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VIII) cost $1.3 million more than had been appropriated. Less favourable foreign exchange rates for non-dollar expenditures resulted in net additional requirements of $1.6 million. Decisions of policy-making organs led to a $1.4 million gross increase.

The United Nations Controller informed the Fifth Committee that the 1982-1983 budget as revised by the Assembly showed a real growth rate of 4.4 per cent over that of the previous biennium.

After analysing the increases and decreases proposed by the Secretary-General, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended in a report to the Assembly that his figures be approved.(4)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly on 20 December adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/226 A based on the Secretary-General's figures but with two additional appropriations approved by the Committee earlier in December: $886,000 as an advance to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XV) and $240,000 for grants for emergency disaster assistance (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter III). The UNITAR appropriation was in a new temporary section of the budget.

Against: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Israel, Japan, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Romania.

The USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, explaining their negative votes on the draft and that on income (see below), said the savings were largely the result of unexpectedly lower rates of inflation, while the rate of real growth had risen unacceptably. The United States thought the savings should be passed on to Member States by reducing their assessments, a position shared by the Netherlands, which noted that its abstention was a break from its tradition of voting for revised budgets and felt that many opportunities to save money through redeployment had been missed. The USSR also criticized the Secretariat for not saving more by eliminating obsolete activities. Israel based its opposition on what it called anti-Israeli activities financed by the budget.

Chile, while voting in favour, reiterated its reservations on the financing of the Special Rapporteur on human rights in Chile. Egypt commended the Secretariat for producing savings and expressed the view that there was no such thing as zero real growth.

Income sources

Final income estimates under the United Nations programme budget for 1982-1983, covering income other than that derived from assessments of Member States, were approved by the General Assembly in December 1983 in the amount of $256,685,700. This was $374,200 below the total approved when the budget was revised in December 1982.⁽⁵⁾ According to the Secretary-General's December 1983 budget performance report⁽³⁾ and the analysis of that report by ACABQ,⁽⁴⁾ an increase of $3.5 million in items classified as general income was more than offset by reductions of $2.9 million and $1 million in income from sales revenue and staff assessment, respectively.

The increase in general income was the net effect of several changes. The largest positive ones - rises of $2.9 million in miscellaneous income including gains on foreign exchange, and $1 million in bank interest - were due to actual receipts exceeding projections. Offsetting shortfalls in general income included $1.7 million due to a postponed reimbursement of an advance by the United Nations to the Common Fund for Commodities (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV), and $1.3 million due to lower reimbursement by the International Atomic Energy Agency for its space in the Vienna International Centre, a consequence of reduced buildings management costs there.

Most sales revenue showed net decreases in income, notably from the Souvenir Shop at Headquarters, whose net revenue was $1.1 million below the original projection of $1.8 million. Also, ACABQ noted that a net deficit of $1.3 million was projected for catering in United Nations buildings. Staff assessment, a kind of income tax levied by the United Nations on its employees, produced less income as a consequence of lower staff costs (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The income estimates were approved by the Assembly on 20 December in resolution 38/226 B adopted by recorded vote, in the amount submitted by the Secretary-General, as recommended by ACABQ and the Fifth Committee. In both the Fifth Committee and the Assembly, the appropriations and income resolutions were voted on together (see above, under resolution 38/226 A, for recorded vote in the Assembly).

Budget for 1984-1985

The United Nations programme budget for 1984-1985, in a net amount of $1,303,267,000, was adopted by the General Assembly in December 1983. This total - essentially the amount to be paid by Member States - consisted of appropriations of $1,587,159,800 less $283,892,800 in estimates of income expected from sources other than Members' contributions.

The Secretary-General initially proposed a budget calling for gross expenditures of $1,605,568,000, of which $284,565,400 was to be financed from income sources other than Members.⁽⁶⁾ Recommendations for reductions of $17,714,200 in expenditures and $1,887,900 in income estimates were made by ACABQ in its first report on the proposed budget.⁽⁷⁾ Following a general debate in October on the budget and related matters, the Fifth Committee examined the proposed budget's 32 expenditure and 3 income sections, taking also into account revised estimates presented by the Secretary-General subsequent to his initial submission, along with the financial implications of actions taken by the Assembly during the session and ACABQ recommendations on each of these proposed changes. The result, as recommended by the Fifth Committee and approved by the Assembly, was a gross budget $18,408,200 less than the Secretary-General had initially proposed, with income estimates $672,600 below the initial estimate.

The programme contents of the budget were reviewed by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC)⁽⁸⁾ and its recommendations were incorporated into the programme descriptions contained in the budget document.⁽⁹⁾

The major factor in the reduction from the initial level was a recalculation of costs, done by the Secretary-General in December,⁽¹⁰⁾ based on a drop in the assumed annual inflation rate from 5.5 to 5 per cent and an increase in the value of the United States dollar relative to other currencies. This recosting lowered expenditure estimates by a total of $35,129,000 and income estimates by $5,745,200. The Fifth Committee approved these changes in two separate actions on 18 and 19 December, the first (covering the bulk of the amount) by a vote of 80 to 9 and the second without vote.

These reductions were partly offset by the Committee's action on some 27 sets of revised estimates and 48 statements of administrative and financial implications of resolutions and decisions proposed during the session by the Assembly's Main Committees or directly in plenary meetings. Most of these involved additions to the budget, of which two exceeded $1 million each: common services at the United Nations offices at Nairobi, Kenya, $1,398,300 in expenditures and $1,295,600 in income⁽¹¹⁾ (see Chapter IV of this section), and preparations for the Common Fund for Commodities, $942,000 in expenditures and $1,750,500 in income from repayment by the Fund⁽¹²⁾ (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV). Both actions were taken without vote.

The estimated additional cost of servicing all conferences and meetings approved by the Assembly during the 1983 session, totalling $7,340,000, was added to the budget by the Committee on 18 December by 64 votes to 17 (see Chapter IV of this section).

The Secretary-General stated in the foreword to his proposed budget that he had asked programme managers to exercise maximum restraint in their budgetary requests, while ensuring that provision was made for fulfilling their objectives. Considerable effort had been expended in determining priorities and redeploying resources. The resulting real growth rate of less than 1 per cent might not arouse marked enthusiasm from the proponents of either contraction or expansion.

However, he hoped examination of the budget would not be dominated by the question of growth, since growth was a concept not satisfactorily defined.

In the introduction to the proposed budget, the Secretary-General noted that this was the first programme budget based on a medium-term plan approved by the Assembly—the 1984-1989 plan, adopted in December 1982—and prepared within the framework of programme planning and budgeting regulations adopted by the Assembly when it approved the medium-term plan.⁽¹³⁾

Analysing the budget's main features, the Secretary-General attributed most of the increase over the 1982-1983 level to inflation. He estimated the real growth rate of his proposed budget at 0.7 per cent, but pointed out that the rate was higher in the areas of disarmament, regional commissions, energy resources, law of the sea and refugees. A policy of containment was in effect for political programmes other than disarmament, for legal and public information activities, and for common (administrative and conference) services. He observed that much of the proposed growth was offset by a decrease in extrabudgetary funds available to the United Nations.

In its report on the Secretary-General's budget proposals, ACABQ noted that the regular budget represented only part of the funds available to the United Nations.⁽⁷⁾ It cited estimates of $1,873 million anticipated in voluntary contributions for United Nations programmes during 1984-1985, excluding the costs of peace-keeping operations and funds contributed to other organizations in the United Nations system.

Analysing its own recommendations for cuts totalling $17.7 million, ACABQ said that $11.1 million of this represented "real" reductions. The rest consisted of $2.7 million resulting from an increased "turnover deduction" (a percentage subtracted from staff costs to take account of likely vacancies), $2.2 million due to deletion of provisional budget estimates that were to be updated during the Assembly session, and $1.7 million resulting from a recalculation of the cost of certain staff allowances and inflation rates.

The approved budget included provision for 11,904 established and 271 temporary posts. This represented an increase of 182 established and 55 temporary posts over the authorized strength in 1982-1983. (A section-by-section breakdown of approved posts appears in the table "UN programme budgets, 1982-1983 and 1984-1985" (see below).

The budget adopted by the Assembly was set out in three resolutions, detailing appropriations (38/236 A), income estimates (38/236 B) and the financing of 1984 appropriations (38/236 C) (see below). Other resolutions relating to the budget biennium concerned unforeseen costs (38/237) and Working Capital Fund financing (38/238) (see these headings below). In addition, a 23-section resolution (38/234) dealt with miscellaneous matters relating to the budget, and two others concerned health insurance contributions for the international civil service (38/235) and pensions for members of the International Court of Justice (38/239) (refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

Appropriations

The $1,587,159,800 in appropriations approved by the General Assembly under the expenditure sections of the 1984-1985 budget were divided among major fields of activity as follows: common support services, 36 per cent; economic, social and humanitarian activities, 32.3 per cent; staff assessment, 14.2 per cent; political and Security Council affairs and peace-keeping activities, 5.7 per cent; public information, 4.5 per cent; overall policy-making, direction and co-ordination, 2.5 per cent; international justice and law, 1.5 per cent; trusteeship and decolonization, 1.5 per cent; interest and repayment of principal on the 1961 United Nations bond issue, 1.1 per cent; buildings, 0.8 per cent.

According to an analysis by the Secretariat included in its published breakdown of the approved budget,⁽⁹⁾ real growth of the 1984-1985 budget over the 1982-1983 level amounted to 0.9 per cent. (Real growth excludes inflation, foreign exchange rate movements and non-recurrent expenditures for such matters as special conferences.) Programme support and common services together, which made up the bulk of the budget, rose by 1.2 per cent in real terms, while appropriations for buildings (other than routine maintenance) fell by 39.2 per cent. The main growth areas (above 10 per cent) were political policy-making organs (70.4 per cent, mainly for printing of records), CPC travel costs (21.8 per cent), Namibia (11.9 per cent) and the Executive Office of the Secretary-General (10.3 per cent). Declines greater than 10 per cent were recorded for ACABQ (16.2 per cent) and conference services at Vienna (13.4 per cent). A subsection for the new Information Service at Vienna was added to the budget.

(Growth rates of individual budget sections and subsections can be found in the table "UN programme budgets, 1982-1983 and 1984-1985".)

Several activities provided for in 1982-1983 were dropped from the initial 1984-1985 budget: activities relating to the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security (amalgamated with the provision for the Under-Secretaries-General for Special Political Affairs), the situation in Kampuchea, missing persons in Cyprus, special identification cards to all Palestine refugees, the proposed University of

Jerusalem for Palestine refugees, Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea, the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, the International Conference for Assistance to Chad, and the Office of the Special Representative for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Operations in Kampuchea (superseded by the Office of the Co-ordinator of the Programme of Assistance to the Kampuchean People).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The expenditures sections of the 1984-1985 budget, comprising the appropriations for the biennium, were adopted by recorded vote by the General Assembly on 20 December in resolution 38/236 A, on the Fifth Committee's recommendation.

General Assembly resolution 38/236 A

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 122-9-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/760 & Corr.1, draft resolution III A) by recorded vote (81-9-13), 20 December (meeting 741; agenda item 109).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 5th Committee 7, 12-23, 26-32, 34-37, 39, 40, 42, 43, 46, 52, 63, 74, 75; plenary 104.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Romania, Spain, United Kingdom, United States, Viet Nam.

Explaining its vote against the appropriations, the USSR said the budget authorized unjustified expenditures and included appropriations for illegal activities violating the Charter of the United Nations; the USSR would not pay for costs related to the United Nations bond issue or for posts previously financed from voluntary funds.

Among those abstaining, Belgium commended the Secretary-General's efforts to limit real growth but said the rise in its 1984 contribution, which might reach 35 per cent in terms of Belgian currency, was too heavy a burden. France said that although the Secretariat had produced a markedly improved budget, necessary decisions on redeployment among programmes had not been taken and there had been excessive use of the budget to offset reductions in voluntary funding.

The Federal Republic of Germany said it had abstained rather than voting against, as it had done on past budgets, because the current one was moderate and balanced, though a zero-growth budget would have been preferable. Israel announced that it would continue to withhold its share of the costs of activities directed against it. Italy called for continued restraint and voiced reservations about higher administrative and staff costs, but noted that it had substantially increased its voluntary contributions to United Nations activities. Japan also expressed concern at rising administrative costs and the increase in staff, particularly for posts transferred from extrabudgetary funding.

The Netherlands, though pleased with the Secretary-General's restraint and the improved format and programme content of the budget, considered the growth rate too high and said supporting future budgets would be difficult if there were further growth. Spain explained that, as in 1982, it had been unable to vote in favour because of the enormous amounts requested and the unfair and arbitrary increase in its contribution.

The United Kingdom, while welcoming the restraint shown in the Secretary-General's proposed budget, preferred zero growth to maximum restraint as the best way of imposing discipline and redeploying resources to priority areas. The United States believed that much progress had been achieved in reconciling divergent interests, and commended the Secretary-General's efforts at budgetary restraint and his commitment to administrative reform; however, it was concerned at the dramatic increases in expenditures on activities for whose costs Members should not be assessed and those contrary to the Charter, and felt that unrestrained increases in assessments might lead to lower voluntary contributions. Viet Nam said it could not accept expenditures relating to the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea.

Of the States which voted for the appropriations, Austria regarded the budget as a realistic compromise between the aspirations of the majority and the position of major contributors; it believed that both redeployment and growth were needed. Canada said it had cast a positive vote to enable the United Nations to carry out its mandate; however, priority-setting was necessary if the Organization was to be dynamic. Iceland, speaking for the five Nordic countries, said they had no difficulty with the rate of real growth but felt that broader application of a programme approach would have produced a better budget.

Mexico, noting that the developing countries had voted positively, said they were concerned at the inadequacy of available resources for carrying out the increasingly complex tasks of the United Nations; they rejected such concepts as zero growth, freezes and maximum restraint. Cuba, while endorsing the views of the developing countries on the budget, said it had reservations on various items, including the bond issue. Iraq, pointing to unimplemented programmes of ECWA, opposed savings achieved by terminating activities which, although authorized, had never been implemented for justifiable reasons.

Turkey, though voting in favour of the appropriations, opposed expenditures relating to the law of the sea and said it would withhold the part of its contribution related to such items. The United Republic of Cameroon said it would be strange to curtail or terminate priority activities provided for in the current budget just because the Assembly later decided to authorize new ones; the Secretary-General must request sufficient resources to carry out the increasing tasks called for by Members.

Income sources

The appropriations approved by the General Assembly in December 1983 under the 1984-1985 budget were to be financed from three main income sources: assessments on Member States, 82.1 per cent (see "Budget contributions" below); staff assessment (an income tax levied by the United Nations on staff salaries), 14.3 per cent, and sales revenues (mainly, from postage stamps), 1.3 per cent. The remaining 2.3 per cent was to come from miscellaneous source, classified as "general income", about half of which consisted of reimbursement for services provided to specialized agencies and others.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Estimates of income other than Members' assessments, in a total amount of $283, 892, 800, were approved by the General Assembly on 20 December 1983, when it adopted resolution 38/236 B without vote, as part of the 1984-1985 budget. The approval process was the same as that for appropriations-involving proposals by the Secretary-General, analysis by ACAEQ and recommendation by the Fifth Committee (see BUDGET FOR 1981-1985 above).

Working Capital Fund financing

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Establishment of the Working Capital Fund at a level of $100 million during 1984-1985 was authorized by the General Assembly on 20 December 1983 by resolution 38/238, adopted by recorded vote; as recommended by the Fifth Committee. The provisions of this resolution corresponded to those approved in 1981 for the previous biennium, when the Assembly raised the level of the Fund from $40 million.⁽¹⁵⁾ As in the past, the Fund was to be used to finance appropriations pending the receipt of Members' contributions, and to pay unforeseen costs.

Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1984-1985

The General Assembly

Resolves that:

1. The Working Capital Fund shall be established for the biennium 1984-1985 in the amount of $US 100 million;

2. Member States shall make advances to the Working Capital Fund in accordance with the scale adopted by the General Assembly for contributions of Member States to the budget for the year 1984;

3. There shall be set off against this allocation of advances:

(a) Credits to Member States resulting from transfers made in 1959 and 1960 from surplus account to the Working Capital Fund in an adjusted amount of $1,025,092;

(b) Cash advances paid by Member States to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1982-1983 under General Assembly resolution 36/231 B of 18 December 1981;

4. Should the credits and advances paid by any Member State to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1982-1983 exceed the amount of that Member State's advance under the provisions of paragraph 2 above, the excess shall be set off against the amount of the contributions payable by the Member State in respect of the biennium 1984-1985;

5. The Secretary-General is authorized to advance from the Working Capital Fund:

(a) Such sums as may be necessary to finance budgetary appropriations pending the receipt of contributions; sums so advanced shall be reimbursed as soon as receipts from contributions are available for the purpose;

(b) Such sums as may be necessary to finance commitments which may be duly authorised under the provisions of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, in particular resolution 38/237 of 20 December 1983 relating to unforeseen and extraordinary expenses; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates for reimbursing the Working Capital Fund;

(c) Such sums as, together with net sums outstanding for the same purpose, do not exceed $200,000, to continue the revolving fund to finance miscellaneous self-liquidating purchases and activities; advances in excess of the total of $200,000 may be made with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(d) With the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, such sums as may be required to finance payments of advance insurance premiums where the period of insurance extends beyond the end of the biennium in which payment is made; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates of each biennium, during the life of the related policies, to cover the charges applicable to each biennium;

(e) Such sums as may be necessary to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits; such advances shall be repaid as soon as credits are available in the Tax Equalization Fund;

6. Should the provision in paragraph 1 above prove inadequate to meet the purposes normally related to the Working Capital Fund, the Secretary-General is authorized to utilize, in the biennium 1984-1985, cash from special funds and accounts in his custody, under the conditions approved in General Assembly resolution 1341(XIII) of 13 December 1958, or the proceeds of loans authorized by the Assembly.

Budget contributions

The General Assembly's Committee on Contributions began a detailed study during 1983 of ways to improve the calculation of the share payable by each United Nations Member towards the Organization's budget. The Assembly, which in December 1982 had approved a scale of assessments for 1983-1985 setting out the percentage of each Member's budget contribution,⁽¹⁾ requested the Committee in December 1983 (resolution 38/33) to carry out the mandate the Assembly had given it in 1982⁽²⁾ to propose methods for determining future scales.

Report of the Committee on Contributions. Following its forty-third session (New York, 3-27 May 1983), the Committee submitted to the Assembly a report describing the initial results of its study on possible refinements of, and alternatives to, the current methods of calculating Members' capacity to pay their share of the budget.⁽³⁾

The Committee considered four alternatives:

I. To divide Members into three groupings—developed market economies, centrally planned economies, and others, mainly developing countries—then negotiate the share to be borne by each group, and have the groups themselves, or the Committee, establish individual shares. The Committee agreed to study this idea further in 1984.

II. To replace the capacity-to-pay principle by "personnel and sovereignty factors", according to which a fourth of each country's share would be the same in recognition of their equal sovereignty, and the remainder would depend on the number of their nationals in the Secretariat and possibly on other factors, such as the size of the Member's permanent mission to the United Nations, supplements for the host country and for permanent members of the Security Council, and reductions for least developed countries. The Committee agreed to consider this further, along with a possible link between assessment rates and benefits derived by States from their membership.

III. To use national wealth as the primary criterion in place of national income. The Committee decided not to pursue this alternative on the ground that statistical methodology, and the availability and comparability of national wealth statistics, had not progressed sufficiently.

IV. To vary the current methodology. In this respect the Committee focused on three main areas:

(1) Tempering national income statistics by the use of socio-economic indicators. The Committee experimented with several formulae that took account of such factors as the share of manufacturing in gross domestic product, manufactured exports as a percentage of total exports, dependence on a few export commodities, agricultural employment as a share of total employment, telephones per capita, literacy and per capita cereal production. However, agreement was not reached on which indicators would best reflect development or on the weights to assign them. The Committee decided to study the matter further, based on a detailed assessment of the effects on individual rates.

(2) Adjustments for inflation and changes in foreign exchange rates. Various methods were examined to correct over- or underestimation of changes in the United States dollar value of a State's national income due to these monetary factors, but the Committee reached no conclusion.

(3) Other elements, including a different statistical base period for measuring changes in national income, a revised upper limit of the low per capita income allowance formula used to lower the rates of the poorest countries, and a limit for increases between two successive assessment scales. The Committee agreed to study these matters again in 1984.

An addendum to the Committee's report contained a table showing the assessed and voluntary contributions of countries to organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in 1981 and 1982⁽⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 38/33, adopted without vote on 25 November 1983 on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly requested the Committee on Contributions to carry out the mandate given it in 1982, taking account of the views of Member States expressed to the Assembly in 1982 and 1983.

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/125 B of 17 December 1982,

Having examined the report of the Committee on Contributions,

Recognizing the need for an improved methodology to assess the real capacity to pay of Member States, in order to increase the fairness and equity of the scale of assessments,

Mindful of the obligation of Member States to bear the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly according to the real capacity to pay,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee on Contributions on the work in progress, as requested in General Assembly resolution 37/125 B;

2. Requests the Committee on Contributions to carry out the mandate entrusted to it by resolution 37/125 B, taking into account the views expressed by Member States during the thirty-seventh and thirty-eighth sessions of the General Assembly;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to provide the Committee on Contributions with the facilities it requires to carry out its work and, if requested by the Committee, necessary supplementary assistance;

4. Requests the Secretary-General in particular to forward to the members of the Committee on Contributions the studies prepared by the Statistical Office of the Secretariat as soon as possible after each study has been completed.

25 November 1983 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/583) without vote. 11 November (meeting 35); 3-nation draft (A/C.5/38/L.5), amended by France (A/C.5/38/L.8): agenda item 115.

Sponsors: Canada, Morocco, Poland.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 5th Committee 4, 8-12, 14, 19, 35, 36; plenary 71.

The wording of the request to the Committee on Contributions (paragraph 2) came from an amendment by France which replaced a paragraph in the original text asking the Committee, in carrying out its 1982 mandate, simply to take account of the views of Member States. The amendment, approved without vote by the Fifth Committee, also deleted a paragraph containing requests that the Committee on Contributions submit in 1984 a completed study on alternative methods to assess capacity to pay together with suggestions for methods to determine future assessment scales, and guidelines for the collection and presentation of data.

Budget contributions in 1983

Of the $760.7 million in budget contributions payable as at 1 January 1983, $590.2 million had been collected from Member States by 31 December, leaving $170.5 million outstanding⁽⁶⁾ (see table, "Status of contributions to the UN regular budget"). Of the total payable, net assessments for 1983, due early in the year, totalled $612.6 million; the remaining $148.1 million related to prior years. In addition, nine non-member States were assessed a total of $2.3 million for their share of United Nations activities in which they participated⁽⁶⁾ (see table, "Assessment of non-member States for 1983 expenses of UN activities in which they participated"). Assessments of Members and non-members for the regular budget were in accordance with scales for 1983-1985 approved by the General Assembly in 1982.⁽¹⁾

The continuing shortfall in collections was among the matters dealt with in a report to the Assembly by the Secretary-General on the Organization's financial situation (see below).

At the resumption of the thirty-seventh session of the Assembly on 10 May 1983, the Secretary-

General, in a letter of that date, informed the Assembly President that eight Members (Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, El Salvador, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Mauritania, South Africa) were more than two years in arrears: in the payment of their budget contributions.⁽⁷⁾ By 19 September, the Central African Republic, Chad, El Salvador, Guinea-Bissau and Mauritania had made payments bringing their arrears below the two-year limit.⁽⁸⁾

When the Assembly opened its thirty-eighth session on 20 September, the Secretary-General reported that only two Members (Comoros, South Africa) were more than two years in arrears.⁽⁹⁾ By a letter of 29 September, he reported that the Comoros had paid enough to reduce its arrears below the two-year limit.⁽¹⁰⁾ Consequently, only South Africa remained in arrears throughout 1983; it would have had to pay $14,773,229 to remove itself from this category.

This information was conveyed by the President to the Assembly, which took note of it at both of its sessions in 1983.

Under Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations, a Member in arrears to the extent of contributions due for the preceding two full years shall have no vote in the Assembly, but the Assembly can permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that failure to pay was due to conditions beyond the State's control.

Financial situation

Report of the Secretary-General. An improved cash position for 1983 was reported by the Secretary-General in an analysis of the United Nations financial situation. In an August 1983 report,⁽¹⁾ requested by the General Assembly in November 1982,⁽²⁾ he attributed the improvement to the higher percentage of budget contributions paid by mid-year, the increase in the Working Capital Fund authorized by the Assembly in 1982 (see WORKING CAPITAL FUND FINANCING above) and the retention of unspent appropriations under previous budgets.

The Secretary-General reported that a substantial number of States had heeded the Assembly's 1982 appeal for expeditious and full payment of contributions. By 30 June 1983, 42 Members had paid their 1983 assessment in full and 50 others had made partial payments. A small number of others had indicated the date and approximate amount of payments. On the other hand, more than 50 Members had neither paid nor replied to the Organization's written communications on the subject. As at 30 September,⁽³⁾ $308.2 million had been collected, representing 50.3 per cent of 1983 assessments, compared to 48.6 per cent at the corresponding time in 1982. By 31 December, collections had risen to $486 million, or 79.3 per cent of 1983 assessments.

(A table showing the status of contributions to the regular budget appears in the preceding subchapter. This lists contributions outstanding for 1983 and prior years.)

The Secretary-General reported that a provisional saving of $14 million had resulted from the Assembly's 1981 decision⁽⁴⁾ to suspend financial regulations requiring unspent appropriations to be returned to Members. This saving related to 1980-1981 appropriations; no figures pertaining to the 1982-1983 budget were available.

Although the cash flow situation had improved, the Secretary-General stated that the short-term deficit of the United Nations, projected to 31 December 1983, had risen by $19.8 million during the year, to $326.4 million. This increase was due to continued withholding by Members in regard to expenditures for activities to which they objected in principle. The withholdings consisted of $19.8 million relating to peace-keeping operations and $6.3 million relating to the regular budget. The net impact on the deficit was lessened by $6.2 million in interest income. Cumulative withholdings totalled $265.7 million (see table above).

The Secretary-General estimated that net revenue of $1.25 million would be derived from the sale of postage stamps on the subject of nature conservation, issued by the United Nations Postal Administration in November 1982 (see Chapter IV of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 38/228 B of 20 December 1983 adopted without vote, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, requested the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations to keep the financial situation under review and report as and when appropriate. The Negotiating Committee, established by the Assembly in 1975,⁽⁵⁾ had not met since 1976.⁽⁶⁾

Financial situation of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the relevant statements of Member States in the Fifth Committee on the item entitled "Financial emergency of the United Nations",

1. Requests the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations to keep the financial situation of the Organization under review and to report, as and when appropriate, to the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session detailed information relating to the extent, rate of increase and composition of the deficit of the Organization, as well as voluntary contributions received from Member States and other sources;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Financial emergency of the United Nations: report of the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations".

General Assembly resolution 38/228 B

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/743) without vote, 19 December (meeting

The draft resulted from informal consultations with Committee members.

Along with this text, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/228 A, by which it decided to allocate to the United Nations Special Account half of the revenue from the 1982 postage stamps on nature conservation (see Chapter IV of this section). The Special Account, originally set up for voluntary contributions aimed at resolving the Organization's financial difficulties, recorded no such contributions from States during 1983.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The 1982 accounts and financial statements of six voluntarily financed United Nations development and humanitarian assistance programmes were accepted by the General Assembly, along with reports on those programmes by the United Nations Board of Auditors.⁽¹⁾ The Assembly also concurred with the recommendations of ACABQ on the subject.⁽²⁾ These actions were incorporated into resolution 38/30, adopted without vote on 25 November 1983, as recommended by the Fifth Committee.

Financial reports and audited financial statements and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered the financial reports and audited financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1982 of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking into account the views expressed by delegations during the debate in the Fifth Committee,

1. Accepts the financial reports and audited financial statements and the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors;

2. Concurs with the observations and comments made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report;

3. Requests the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to continue to give greater attention to areas regarding which they have made observations and comments, including the problems relating to the use of experts and consultants, where appropriate;

4. Requests the executive heads of the organizations and programmes concerned within the United Nations system to take such remedial action in areas falling within their competence as may be required by the observations and comments made by the Board of Auditors in its reports;

5. Invites the governing bodies of the organizations concerned to consider each year at their regular sessions the remedial action taken by the respective executive heads in response to the observations and comments made by the Board of Auditors in its reports.

25 November 1983 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/492) without vote, 10 October (meeting 8); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/38/L.3), orally amended by Benin, and by Greece for EC members; agenda item 107.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 5th Committee 3, 5-8; plenary 71.

The Fifth Committee considered the Board of Auditors' observations and the administration's response on various aspects of the financial management of each programme (see the headings ACCOUNTS FOR 1982 in the chapters of this book pertaining to individual programmes).

The draft resolution was adopted with two oral amendments approved in Committee without vote. The first, by Greece on behalf of the European Community members, added paragraph 5. The second, by Benin, added a call for greater attention to "problems relating to the use of experts and consultants, where appropriate". Benin had originally proposed a new paragraph requesting the Board and ACABQ to consider the use of experts and consultants in project execution, but withdrew that proposal in favour of the addition of a phrase to paragraph 3.

Accounts and financial statements for 1983 relating to the United Nations and other programmes were submitted to the Assembly in 1984.⁽³⁾

Auditing terms of reference

The General Assembly in November 1983 amended the terms of reference for the audit by the Board of Auditors of the United Nations and related programmes and funds.

The amendments, as proposed by the Board, were intended to deal with situations which had prevented it from expressing a clear opinion on the financial statements prepared by programme administrations. They added two matters on which the Board would henceforth be required to express an opinion: that the statements accorded with stated accounting principles of the Organization and that those principles had been consistently applied. They retained two matters on which the Board was already mandated to express an opinion: whether the statements presented fairly the financial position and the results of operations, and whether transactions were in accordance with the Financial Regulations of the United Nations and with legislative authority.

The Board also sought to remove from the terms of reference a clause specifying language to be placed in each audit opinion, describing the scope of audit coverage as including a general review of accounting procedures and tests of records and other evidence. However, the Fifth Committee accepted the view of ACABQ that this language was an important part of the audit opinion which should be retained.

The proposed amendments by the Board were included in an August note by the Secretary-General in which he stated that he had no objection to them.⁽⁴⁾ The ACABQ comments were made in its annual report on United Nations financial reports and statements.⁽²⁾

The Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted decision 38/408 without vote.

Additional terms of reference governing the audit of the United Nations: amendments to the annex to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations

At its 71st plenary meeting, on 25 November 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, decided to amend paragraphs 5, 6 and 8 of the annex to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, entitled "Additional terms of reference governing the audit of the United Nations", to read as follows:

Paragraph 5

"5. The Board of Auditors (or such of its officers as it may designate) shall express and sign an opinion on the financial statements which shall read as follows:

" 'We have examined the following appended financial statements, numbered . . . to . . . , properly identified, and relevant schedules of (name of the body) for the financial period ended 31 December 19 . . . Our examination included a general review of the accounting procedures and such tests of the accounting records and other supporting evidence as we considered necessary in the circumstances.' and which shall state, as appropriate, whether:

"(a) The financial statements present fairly the financial position as at the end of the period and the results of its operations for the period then ended;

"(b) The financial statements were prepared in accordance with the stated accounting principles;

"(c) The accounting principles were applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding financial period;

“(d) Transactions were in accordance with the Financial Regulations and legislative authority.”

Paragraph 6

“6. The report of the Board of Auditors to the General Assembly on the financial operations of the period should mention:

Paragraph 8

“8. Whenever the scope of audit of the Board of Auditors is restricted, or whenever the Board is unable to obtain sufficient evidence, it shall refer to the matter in its opinion and report, making clear in its report the reasons for its comments and the effect on the financial position and the financial transactions as recorded.”

and to add a new paragraph 10, as follows:

“10. The Board is not required to mention any matter referred to in the foregoing that, in its opinion, is insignificant in all respects.”

United Nations programmes

Further steps were taken in 1983 to improve programme planning, budgeting and evaluation in the United Nations, so that its activities could have greater coherence and impact.

A Programme Planning and Budgeting Board (PPBB), established within the Secretariat in 1982, guided the preparation of the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1984-1985, which the General Assembly adopted in December 1983. In a resolution on programme planning and evaluation (38/227 A), the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the capacity of United Nations programme planning units and systems. It also asked him to issue as soon as possible rules to implement the Regulations Governing Programme Planning, the Programming Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation adopted by the Assembly in 1982.

The Secretary-General's draft rules, originally requested by the Assembly at the time it adopted the Regulations, were examined in 1983 by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU). Both bodies recommended changes.

Also by resolution 38/227 A, the Assembly adopted revised versions of two portions of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989 which it had asked to be reformulated when it adopted the bulk of the plan in 1982. It also asked the Secretary-General to submit to it a statement of programme implications every time proposals for new United Nations activities were made. At the request of the Economic and Social Council in July (resolution 1983/51), the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report on experience gained in preparing the 1984-1985 budget.

Plans to strengthen programme evaluation units in the Secretariat, involving the addition of a few posts, were approved by the Assembly in its programme planning resolution.

JIU submitted a number of reports in 1983, most of which evaluated specific programmes. The Assembly requested those bodies to bear in mind a JIU recommendation that they specify which points of each JIU report they approved and disapproved.

The annual report on administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the United Nations system, prepared by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), concentrated in 1983 on cash flow and liquidity problems.

Programme planning

Integration of programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation functions in the United Nations Secretariat was the subject in 1983 of recommendations by CPC and of the General Assembly.

In an August report on this subject considered by both bodies,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General said the most significant step taken during the previous year to integrate these functions had been preparation of the proposed programme budget for 1984-1985 (see Chapter I of this section) under the guidance of PPBB (see next subchapter). The Secretary-General considered that the effect of the Board and the new planning methods had been an improvement in the quality of the programme budget proposals and a more satisfactory correlation between programme and financial aspects.

He also mentioned plans for a Central Monitoring Unit, work on the preparation of programme planning rules and steps towards a procedure for providing information on programme implications of proposals before the Assembly. A separate report analysed the Secretariat's preparations for the 1984-1985 budget. (Details of these subjects can be found under relevant subject headings in this Chapter.)

The August report had been called for by the Assembly in a December 1982 resolution on programme planning.⁽²⁾ The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/49 of 28 July 1983 concerned with work done by CPC at the first part of its 1983 session in May/June, asked the Secretary-General to ensure that the report was submitted as requested.

Noting this report in September at its resumed session,⁽³⁾ CPC agreed that integration of programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation was an evolving process and that judgement on the new institutional arrangements should be reserved for the time being. It recommended improved co-ordination between the Secretariat and intergovernmental bodies in determining programme priorities. It also recommended further study of how the Secretariat could better assist CPC in programme planning matters.

In a recommendation concerned with programme planning throughout the United Nations system, CPC asked that ACC pursue progress in joint planning and report the results in 1984. According to the overall ACC report for 1983-1984,⁽⁴⁾ joint planning, which involved co-operation between organizations on the planning of activities in selected programme areas, was under review in four areas: primary health care, aging persons, energy information systems, and research and training of personnel in energy assessment, planning and utilization.

In its annual report on administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the United Nations system⁽⁵⁾ (see subchapter below under that heading), ACABQ concluded that the varying arrangements in different agencies for programme planning, budgeting and evaluation lent support to the idea that institutional arrangements for this purpose should be tailored to meet the needs and size of each organization. Consequently, it cautioned that harmonizing arrangements among agencies in this area might not be desirable or feasible.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted without vote resolution 38/227 A on various matters related to programme planning, including the medium-term plan, programme evaluation (see under those headings) and the evaluation of technical co-operation in regard to manufactures (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI). It was adopted along with resolution 38/227 B on co-ordination in the United Nations system.

Programme planning

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3043(XXVII) of 19 December 1972, in which it approved the new form of presentation of the United Nations budget,

Recalling also its resolutions 3199(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3534(XXX) of 17 December 1975, 31/93 of 14 December 1976, 32/197 of 20 December 1977, 32/206 of 21 December 1977, 33/118 of 19 December 1978, 34/224 of 20 December 1979, 35/9 of 3 November 1980, 36/228 of 18 December 1981 and 37/234 of 21 December 1982, in which it elaborated further on the establishment of an integrated programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation system in the United Nations,

Having considered the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-third session, the report of the Economic and Social Council and the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985,

Having also considered the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985, the reports of the Secretary-General on the set of rules governing programme planning, the programme aspects of the budget, the monitoring of implementation and methods of evaluation, on the integration of the programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation functions in the Secretariat of the United Nations, on the methods, procedures and timetable followed in the preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985, and on strengthening the capacity of the United Nations evaluation units and systems and timetable for review of the evaluation programmes, as well as the second report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the elaboration of regulations for the planning, programming and evaluation cycle of the United Nations,

Concerned by the delay in the submission of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985 to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling the intention expressed by the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to improve the effectiveness of the programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation system of the United Nations,

Stressing that the budgetary policy of maximum restraint should not adversely affect the efficient and effective implementation of the activities and programmes of the Organization,

Taking note with satisfaction of the improvements in the quality of the presentation of programmes in various sections of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985,

I

Medium-term plan

Adopts subprogramme 5 of programme 1 of chapter 21 (Social development and humanitarian affairs) and chapter 25 (Marine affairs) of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989, as revised by the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-third session and the Economic and Social Council in its resolutions 1983/48 and 1983/49 of 29 July 1983, and subject to any observations with regard to that subprogramme that may be formulated by the Third Committee of the General Assembly;

II

1. Requests the Secretary-General to improve the programme analyses of all the sections of the programme budget and to strengthen the capacity of United Nations programme planning units and systems;

2. Takes note of the assurance given by the Secretary-General that he will take appropriate measures in order to avoid delays in the future in the issuance of documentation regarding the programme budget;

3. Takes note further of the intention expressed by the Secretary-General to review the operation, structure and performance of the Secretariat in 1984;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in undertaking the review referred to in paragraph 3 above, to take fully into account General Assembly resolution 32/197, in particular section VIII of the annex thereto, as well as the related views expressed by Member States during the thirty-eighth session, and to submit his proposals on organizational changes, if any, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

9. Decides that the fact that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination will not normally be in a position to review the programme implications statements during the General Assembly should not prevent or delay their adoption by the Assembly, and their subsequent implementation by the Secretariat, unless the Assembly decides otherwise;

4. Takes note with satisfaction of the progress made in improving the quality of the in-depth evaluation studies in specific programme areas and stresses the need to develop a comprehensive evaluation system along the lines of the recommendations contained in paragraphs 189 to 197 of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

5. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-third session on the in-depth evaluation of the work of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and on the timetable for intergovernmental review of in-depth and triennial evaluation studies;

Rules and regulations

The Secretariat continued work in 1983 on the drafting of rules to supplement the Regulations Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation adopted by the General Assembly in December 1982.⁽²⁾ The proposed rules, and implementation of the Regulations, were the subject of reports by the Secretary-General and JIU, and of recommendations by CPC and the Assembly.

In an April 1983 report to the Assembly⁽⁶⁾ which was first examined by CPC, the Secretary-General submitted a revised set of draft rules which he said he intended to promulgate. They differed in several respects from a 1982 draft which the Assembly asked him to bring into line with the new Regulations.⁽⁷⁾

The proposed rules, to be implemented by the new PPBB (see "Programme budgeting" below), contained details on the preparation of the medium-term plan (see next section) and on programme aspects of the budget, including links between budget and plan. They also covered monitoring of programme implementation by a central monitoring unit and included two new rules on programme evaluation. An annex to the 1983 report contained definitions of programming and planning terms.

The report also contained the Secretary-General's comments on 1982 recommendations by JIU made in a report on programme planning rules and regulations.⁽⁸⁾ Referring to a JIU suggestion that all planned activities be placed in one of three categories: plannable, partly plannable and unplannable, the Secretary-General acknowledged that some United Nations activities were less amenable to planning than others, but he did not think it possible to envisage the formal distinctions proposed by JIU.

Maurice Bertrand, the JIU inspector responsible for the 1982 report on this topic, submitted a second report on the programme planning rules and regulations which was also circulated to the Assembly in April 1983.⁽⁹⁾ Criticizing the Secretary-General's redrafted rules as based on the idea that the medium-term plan was purely a management tool for the Secretariat, he suggested changes which he said were intended to enable intergovernmental bodies to examine the design of programmes and select between various types of activity to attain their objectives (see next section). Additional changes were suggested to strengthen programme evaluation.

After considering these divergent views in May,⁽³⁾ CPC recommended a number of changes to the draft rules. One of them was a proposed new rule specifying a five-stage process for programme planning by the Secretariat, applicable to both the medium-term plan and the proposed budget. These stages consisted of: (a) formulation of policy guidelines; (b) issuance of instructions incorporating the guidelines; (c) submission of proposals by the heads of Secretariat units; (d) revisions of original submissions within the concept of the medium-term plan or programme budget; and (e) finalization and approval of the proposed plan or budget by the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General would be responsible for establishing a timetable for this procedure and for ensuring that his plan and budget proposals reached CPC and ACABQ on time.

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/227 A of 20 December on programme planning, urged the Secretary-General to issue the rules as soon as possible, taking full account of the CPC recommendations.

Medium-term plan

Following General Assembly adoption in December 1982 of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989,⁽²⁾ CPC and the Assembly examined in 1983 proposals by the Secretary-General and JIU to codify procedures for preparing future plans. In addition, the Assembly adopted reformulated versions of the two segments of the plan which it had failed to approve in 1982 (see next section).

Procedures for future plans were considered in the context of proposed rules for programme planning (see preceding section). The set of rules which the Secretary-General proposed to the Assembly and CPC in April 1983⁽⁶⁾ spelled out the requirement that activities included in the plan must have a legislative mandate, in the form of a decision by a United Nations intergovernmental body. Assembly adoption of the plan would give a mandate for new activities proposed in it by the Secretary-General. Objectives and strategies would be specified for each subprogramme, subprogrammes being defined as activities within a programme aimed at achieving one or a few closely related objectives, such as the subprogramme on traffic facilities in the programme on transport.

Medium-term plan proposals for substantive services would be submitted to the Assembly through CPC and ACABQ, for common (administrative) services through ACABQ, and for conference services through the Committee on Conferences and ACABQ. The proposed rules spelled out the types of information to be included in the plan's descriptions of substantive and servicing activities, the circumstances under which revisions to the plan would be required and an outline of the kinds of documents to be submitted. The Secretary-General would indicate, for Assembly action, the subprogrammes he considered as having highest and lowest priority, based on recommendations by intergovernmental bodies.

The JIU report on the proposed rules,⁽¹⁾ also submitted in April, suggested a number of changes in the section on the medium-term plan. They would have required objectives and strategies to be defined for programmes rather than subprogrammes, in line with the author's belief that this would better enable intergovernmental bodies to choose among various possible objectives for achieving the aims of Member States. They would also have placed additional emphasis on the introduction to the plan, as a vehicle for allowing the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly to define the Organization's priorities.

In May, CPC recommended its own set of changes.⁽²⁾ One of these, in line with the JIU emphasis on programmes, would require the Secretariat to include, for each programme in the medium-term plan, an analysis of the rationale for selecting objectives and the subprogrammes intended to attain them. Another would require achievement indicators to be included in subprogramme descriptions as an aid to evaluation. The policy nature of the plan's introduction would be detailed and its inter-agency co-ordination aspect elaborated. The responsibility of PPBB for formulating the draft plan would be specified, as would the Secretary-General's responsibility for recommending priorities among subprogrammes.

No action to promulgate the rules was taken in 1983.

In July 1983 the Economic and Social Council decided by resolution 1983/78 to initiate biennial reviews of selected major sectors in the medium-term plans of organizations in the United Nations system. In addition, the medium-term plans of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the International Trade Centre and the United Nations Children's Fund were considered in the bodies concerned with those areas (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapters IV and XX).

Medium-term plan for 1984-1989

On the recommendation of CPC and the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly adopted on 20 December 1983 the two portions of the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989 which it had recommended for reformulation when adopting the plan as a whole in December 1982.⁽²⁾ These were a subprogramme on "Participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation" (see p. 922) and a major programme on marine affairs, comprising a new chapter of the plan. The new major programme covered activities formerly included under the major programme on natural resources as well as those carried out in connection with the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (see p. 104, and p. 657).

The reformulated portions of the plan included a number of revisions recommended in May by CPC.⁽³⁾ These were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1983/48, on marine affairs, and resolution 1983/49, on the work of CPC. The Assembly adopted them in resolution 38/227 A of 20 December, on programme planning.

Programme budgeting

Arrangements for informing the General Assembly of the programme implications of proposed new activities at the same time that it was given information on the financial implications were approved by the Assembly in December 1983. In addition, CPC, the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly examined the methods, procedures and timetable followed in the preparation of the proposed budget for 1984-1985 which the Assembly adopted in December (see previous Chapter), and CPC considered procedures for future programme budgeting in the context of rules for programme planning.

Programme implications

Following consideration by CPC, the General Assembly in December, by resolution 38/227 A, adopted guidelines to be followed by the Secretary-General in presenting it with information on the programme implications of draft resolutions being considered by the Assembly.

A report on the methods and procedures for the provision of such statements was submitted in May to CPC,⁽¹⁾ in response to a December 1982 request by the Assembly.⁽²⁾ In it, the Secretary-General suggested that the statements should describe the effects of each draft resolution on the medium-term plan and on existing work programmes, cite the output expected from the proposed activities, analyse the full costs of work-months and other resource requirements, propose activities that could be terminated or curtailed if resources were redeployed for the new tasks, and set out funding alternatives through redeployment or new appropriations. Each statement would go to the Main Committee of the Assembly which was considering the related draft resolution. That Committee would recommend whether the Assembly should add the proposed activities to the existing work programme or help pay for them by terminating or curtailing other projects.

In his April report proposing rules for programme planning (see previous subchapter),⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General suggested a rule specifying three types of information to be presented in his statements on the programme budget implications of draft resolutions: what changes to the work programme would be required, what similar work was being done by the Secretariat or in the United Nations system, and what would have to be cut if resources were redeployed from another activity.

In June, CPC noted the Secretary-General's report on programme implications after a brief discussion.⁽⁴⁾ With regard to the proposed rule, it expressed the view that the programme budget statement should merge programme, financial and administrative implications.

In resolution 1983/49 of 28 July, concerned with the work of CPC, the Economic and Social Council reiterated the Assembly's 1982 request for information on programme implications of proposals, and emphasized the CPC recommendation for an integrated statement on the implications of draft resolutions.

The guidelines approved by the Assembly, in resolution 38/227 A of 20 December 1983 on programme planning, called for programme information to be integrated with the statements on financial and administrative implications previously supplied. These statements would include the Secretary-General's recommendation for funding of the proposed activities, an analysis of alternative funding through existing or additional appropriations and the implications for existing programmes. Review procedures would be the same as those for financial implications statements, namely, submission of statements to both the Fifth Committee and the Main Committee considering the related draft resolution, with only the Fifth Committee required to make a recommendation to the Assembly on programme and financial implications.

Programme budgeting methods and procedures

A report by the Secretary-General⁽⁵⁾ analysing the methods, procedures and timetable followed in preparing the proposed budget for 1984-1985 was considered in 1983 by CPC and the General Assembly. As noted in the report, this was the first budget prepared with the assistance of the new PPBB.

This Secretariat Board, set up with effect from 7 April 1982, was chaired by the Secretary-General or, in his absence, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. Other members were the Under-Secretaries-General for Administration and Management, for International Economic and Social Affairs, and for Political Affairs, Trusteeship and Decolonization; the Controller; the Assistant Secretary-General for Programme Planning and Co-ordination, and the Executive Assistant to the Secretary-General. During 25 meetings between 15 June 1982 and 4 May 1983, the Board evaluated programme proposals and made recommendations to the Secretary-General on the programme content and financial level of the proposed budget.

Programme aspects of the budget were also dealt with in a number of rules proposed by the Secretary-General in April (see previous subchapter). In his report on this subject,⁽³⁾ he proposed rules spelling out the link between the medium-term plan and the budget, the budget structure, standards for programme narratives, and criteria for identifying obsolete and marginal activities which might be dropped. Also included was a proposed rule on programme implications statements (see previous section).

After considering these proposed rules in May,⁽⁴⁾ CPC recommended several changes, including a new paragraph requiring the Secretary-General, in the context of budget preparation, to submit to the Assembly, through CPC, information on activities he considered obsolete, marginal or ineffective, and an estimate of resources that might be released by terminating or curtailing them.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The report on programme budgeting methods and procedures was requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1983/51 of 28 July 1983, adopted without vote on the recommendation of the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

Situation with regard to the preparation and submission of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the situation with regard to the preparation and submission of the proposed programme budget, within the context of Council decision 1983/160 of 27 May 1983, and the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination thereon,

Noting the statement made at the second regular session of 1983 of the Council by the representative of the Secretary-General,

1. Deeply regrets that the Council is not in a position to carry out a thorough review of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985, in accordance with Council resolution 1982/50 of 28 July 1982, as a result of the serious delays in the preparation and submission of the sections of the budget to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

2. Affirms that this situation is untenable and, in this context, endorses the conclusions of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination that the present grave situation is unrelated to the schedule established for the meetings of the Committee and that therefore no modification of that schedule should be contemplated;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To take the necessary measures to ensure that complete and final texts of all sections of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985, in particular sections 7, 15 and 25, shall be submitted to the members of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in good time prior to its resumed twenty-third session;

(b) To ensure that there shall be no repetition of the present situation in connection with the preparation and submission of future proposed programme budgets;

(c) To this end, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its resumed twenty-third session, an analytical report on the methods, procedures and timetable followed in the preparation of the programme budget, with a view to identifying deficiencies and shortcomings.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/51

28 July 1983 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/117) without vote, 22 July (meeting 16); draft by Chairman (E/1983/C.3/L.9/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 20. Meeting number. ESC 40.

The request for a report was added to the initial draft by the Chairman, taking account of an oral amendment by Pakistan, not pressed to a vote, that would have had the Council call for the submission to the Assembly of an analytical table showing the time-frame and preparation stages of the 1984-1985 budget.

Reports of the Secretary-General and CPC action. Submitted in August, the Secretary-General's report⁽⁵⁾ identified seven shortcomings and deficiencies in the preparation of the 1984-1985 budget: a late decision on budget priorities, delays and inadequacies in revaluating the 1982-1983 resource base (used to project budget growth in real terms), difficulties in reconciling data on extrabudgetary resources, provision of excessive detail on programmes to PPBB, difficulties in consulting programme managers on changes the Board proposed to make in their requests, late issuance of budget instruction forms and delays in the submission of budget proposals by departments. According to the report, five of those problems were being corrected but two-the timing of departmental submissions and the need for extensive consultations with programme managers--raised more complex issues and efforts to resolve them were continuing.

Noting this report in September,⁽⁴⁾ CPC requested the Secretary-General to keep each phase of budget preparation under constant review in order to avoid delays in issuing documents, and to report to it in 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/227 A of 20 December on programme planning, the General Assembly noted an assurance by the Secretary-General that he would act to avoid delays in issuing documents on future budgets.

Programme evaluation

Plans to strengthen Secretariat machinery for evaluating the efficiency and impact of United Nations programmes and activities were drawn up in 1983, and possibilities for further action were examined by JIU, CPC and the General Assembly.

In April the Secretary-General circulated to the Assembly a report proposing steps to strengthen the capacity of United Nations evaluation units and systems, and a timetable for intergovernmental review of evaluation studies.⁽¹⁾ Submitted in response to Assembly requests in 1981⁽²⁾ and December 1982,⁽³⁾ the report detailed provisions in the Secretary-General's proposed 1984-1985 budget to increase the staff of evaluation units in the regional commissions for Africa and for Asia and the Pacific as well as in the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS).

Rules for programme evaluation and for monitoring programme implementation were included in the set of rules proposed by the Secretary-General in April⁽⁴⁾ (see PROGRAMME PLANNING above). They provided for both periodic self-evaluation of programmes by their managers and ad hoc evaluations, internal or external, conducted at the initiative of intergovernmental bodies or the Secretariat. A central evaluation unit would set standards for self-evaluation.

The proposed rules also covered procedures for monitoring ongoing activities. Under the guidance of PPBB (see PROGRAMME BUDGETING above), a central monitoring unit would keep track of changes in the work programme, determine programme delivery in comparison with commitments made in the budget document, and prepare a report to the General Assembly every second year. Procedures were also set out for monitoring within departments.

The Secretary-General informed the Fifth Committee, in his August report on intergration of programme planning, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation⁽⁵⁾ (see PROGRAMME PLANNING above), that PPBB had been designated as a steering committee for all evaluation studies.

In its April report commenting on the draft rules,⁽⁶⁾ JIU proposed additional provisions requiring evaluation of all major programmes once every six years (the length of each medium-term plan), with the resulting reports to be considered either by CPC or by the intergovernmental or expert body directly concerned. Three major programmes would be covered each year by the central evaluation unit and CPC, according to a list and timetable that would be drawn up by the Secretary-General for Assembly approval. Another list and timetable would identify all other programmes due for self-evaluation.

JIU also suggested that more specific guidelines for report preparation be added to the rules, including a requirement that evaluation reports identify alternative subprogrammes to help achieve the major programme's objectives. Other provisions spelled out how policy-making bodies, making use of evaluation reports, might recommend changes in Secretariat structure, procedures and programme contents.

Commenting on the Secretary-General's report on evaluation machinery,⁽¹⁾ JIU criticized it for not indicating clearly whether there should be a central evaluation unit and for reflecting a decentralized concept of evaluation, with each department or regional commission left to decide whether to set up its own unit. The author favoured a central unit staffed by at least six Professionals, and a network of 22 evaluation officers in the departments.

After reviewing these reports in May,⁽⁷⁾ CPC expressed concern that more had not been done to strengthen evaluation units and recommended ways in which the Secretary-General might continue to strengthen them. These included studying the possibility of merging central evaluation units, ensuring that sectoral and regional units drew on the experience of central ones, developing mechanisms for disseminating evaluation findings to intergovernmental bodies and programme managers, emphasizing to programme managers the significance of incorporating those findings into decision-making, and monitoring implementation. The Committee suggested nine functions for central evaluation units, in the areas of evaluation policy, standards, methods, monitoring, co-ordination, training of personnel and information services.

The Committee established a timetable for in-depth evaluations to be reviewed by CPC at the rate of one topic a year, and for reviews of what had been done to implement decisions taken by CPC as a result of earlier evaluations. New evaluations would alternate between economic and social sectors one year and political, legal, humanitarian and other sectors the next. The first topics selected were technical co-operation in manufactures (1984) and drug control (1985). A tentative timetable for 1986-1992 listed population, electronic data processing and information systems, development issues and policies, human rights, human settlements, political and Security Council affairs, and science and technology for development.

Reviews of implementation were to begin in 1985 with the three topics on which evaluations had been conducted since 1979-manufactures (examined in 1980), transnational corporations and mineral resources. Thereafter, the reviews were to take place three years after the evaluations.

In 1983 CPC made recommendations with regard to four areas previously chosen for evaluation. Two concerned public information: Department of Public Information activities (see p. 383) and the work programme of the Joint United Nations Information Committee (see p. 385). The other two were on economic subjects: technical co-operation in manufactures financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and executed by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI), and mineral resources development (Ibid., Chapter IX).

Two JIU reports circulated in 1983 dealt with programme and project evaluation of operational activities for development. One of these concerned inter-agency co-operation to encourage evaluation by Governments, and the other dealt with the UNDP evaluation system (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter II). JIU also performed its own evaluation of a number of programmes (see next section).

On the matter of resources needed to implement the CPC recommendations for strengthening evaluation in the Secretariat, the Committee, at its May/June session, called its views to the attention of ACABQ and requested the Secretariat to prepare a statement of programme and financial implications.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/49 of 28 July on the work of CPC, requested ACABQ to transmit to the General Assembly its review of the Secretary-General's report on evaluation.

In September, the CPC Chairman informed the Committee that, at a meeting with its other officers to clarify the Committee's intentions, it had been reaffirmed that CPC had recommended that the reinforcement proposed for strengthening evaluation units and systems would be required.

In a statement of the financial and other implications of the CPC call for strengthening evaluation in the Secretariat, submitted to the Fifth Committee in September,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General suggested that six additional Professional posts would be needed. One of these, in the Evaluation Unit of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, would help perform the central evaluation functions identified by CPC. The others would be for the regional commissions for Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and Africa, UNCTAD and UNCHS. However, the Secretary-General asked for no additional funds pending a review of possibilities for redeploying staff, the results of which would be reported to the Assembly in 1984.

The ACABQ Chairman told the Fifth Committee that his Committee would await the results of the Secretary-General's review before commenting.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/227 A of 20 December 1983 on programme planning, reiterated the need to strengthen the capacity of evaluation units and systems, particularly in the regional commissions, in accordance with the Secretary-General's estimates. It requested him to report on possibilities in that regard, including a timetable for establishing units in all departments and redeployment measures. It stressed the need to develop a comprehensive evaluation system along the lines recommended by CPC and endorsed the CPC timetable for intergovernmental review of evaluation studies.

Joint Inspection Unit

JIU activities. During 1983 the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) submitted 10 reports, most of them evaluating selected programmes of the United Nations and the United Nations system. Eight were circulated to the General Assembly and two to the Economic and Social Council. In most cases the reports were the subject of written comments by the Secretary-General or, on reports affecting more than one organization, by ACC.

Five of the reports covered specific organizational units: the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East⁽⁹⁾ (see p. 345), the Office for Projects Execution of the United Nations Development Programme⁽¹⁰⁾ (circulated in 1984), the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development⁽¹¹⁾ (see p. 478), the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office⁽¹²⁾ (see p. 526) and the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs⁽¹³⁾ (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XXIV).

The other reports were studies of activities in which more than one unit was involved. One concerned the UNDP programme and project evaluation system⁽¹⁴⁾ (see p. 460). Another dealt with cultural property preservation and environmental protection in Latin America⁽¹⁵⁾. A report circulated for consideration in 1984 by the Economic and Social Council concerned wildlife conservation in Africa⁽¹⁶⁾ and cultural property preservation and environmental protection in Asia and the Pacific.⁽¹⁷⁾ One report contained JIU comments on programme planning rules and regulations in the United Nations⁽⁶⁾ (see RULES AND REGULATIONS above).

During 1983 the UNDP Governing Council considered a 1982 JIU report on inter-agency co-operation regarding programme evaluation by Governments of operational activities for development.⁽¹⁸⁾ (see p. 453).

The activities of JIU from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983 were described in its fifteenth report to the Assembly.⁽¹⁹⁾ The rest of the year was covered in the 1983-1984 report.⁽²⁰⁾ Each document included summaries of all JIU topical reports during the period covered.

In its 1983 report,⁽¹⁹⁾ JIU stressed the need for renewed efforts to comply with established time-limit; for comments on its reports by the executive heads of the United Nations system or ACC. Those limits were three months for the reports addressed to one organization and six months for those addressed to more than one. It observed that, between January 1980 and June 1982, the time-limits had been met for only 32 per cent of its 32 reports.

On another matter, it reported that arrangements had been made to list its reports as separate sub-items on the Assembly's agenda wherever they related to existing items. The aim was to enable Main Committees of the Assembly to consider the reports individually.

In paragraph 12 of its report, JIU suggested a form of wording by which the Assembly or other intergovernmental body could state precisely which JIU recommendations that body approved or disapproved. It would then become standard practice for JIU to follow up, a year later, on action taken on each report by the organizations concerned.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee in October his annual report on implementation of past JIU recommendations, with explanations for why certain of them had not been carried out.⁽²¹⁾ The report dealt with recommendations on: organizational change in the Economic Commission for Africa (see p. 634); the United Nations University (see p. 765); relationships between the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and other Secretariat units (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XXIV); geographical distribution in the Secretariat, consultants, and travel of officials (see next Chapter); and organizational structure of conference secretariats and documents limitation (see Chapter IV of this section).

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the UN system

In its annual report to the General Assembly on administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the United Nations system,⁽¹⁾ submitted in October 1983, ACABQ reviewed financial problems of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency related to cash flow and liquidity. It observed that, as in the case of the United Nations (see previous Chapter), a serious problem existed regarding the collection of contributions from member States. For most specialized agencies, only between 37 and 62 per cent of 1983 contributions had been received by 30 June. As an exception, the two agencies that charged interest on late payments (International Telecommunication Union, Universal Postal Union) had received over 90 per cent of their contributions by mid-year.

The report described measures taken to speed the payment of arrears and encourage the timely receipt of contributions, as well as to cope with the cash flow problem through the use of working capital and reserve funds, and internal borrowing. ACABQ emphasized the serious nature of the cash flow problem throughout the system.

The report also dealt with programme planning, budgeting and evaluation in the United Nations system (see PROGRAMME PLANNING above).

According to the report, which covered organizations other than the international financial institutions with headquarters in Washington, D. C., the regular budgets of the United Nations system, excluding the International Fund for Agricultural Development, would total $1.76 billion in 1984, of which $1.64 billion was to be paid by member States' assessments. Including voluntary funds, States paid over $3.9 billion to United Nations organizations in 1982. Staff totals were also provided in the report (see next Chapter).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

After the ACABQ report had been considered in the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly, on 25 November 1983, adopted resolution 38/31 without vote, as recommended by the Committee.

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency

The General Assembly

1. Notes with appreciation the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Refers to the organizations concerned the report of the Advisory Committee as well as the comments and observations made in the course of its consideration in the Fifth Committee;

3. Transmits the report of the Advisory Committee to the Board of Auditors, the Panel of External Auditors, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Joint Inspection Unit for their information;

4. Invites the Advisory Committee to continue, in odd-numbered years, to conduct special studies and report thereon, as necessary, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 (b) of General Assembly resolution 36/229 of 18 December 1981.

25 November 1983 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/587) without vote, 10 November (meeting 33);

Also in relation to co-ordination in the United Nations system, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/227 B, concerned with programme co-ordination, and decision 38/409, on the possibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal. In addition, it acted on a number of personnel questions affecting the system as a whole (see next Chapter).

Chapter III

United Nations officials

Staff in organizations of the United Nations system belonging to the common system of salaries and fringe benefits of the international civil service totalled 50,799 as at 31 December 1983, according to figures compiled for the inter-agency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). This total consisted of 26,719 in the United Nations Secretariat and 24,080 in specialized agencies and other related intergovernmental organizations. The common system encompassed the entire United Nations system except for the international financial institutions with headquarters at Washington, D. C.

Of the total in the system, 21,113, or 41 per cent, were stationed at the organizations' headquarters, 20,269, or 39 per cent, were at other established offices, and 9,417, or 18 per cent, were project staff, working on technical co-operation and other operational activities in the field. By category, 19,315 were Professionals and 31,484 were in the General Service or related categories.

Salaries and benefits for the international civil service of the common system were for the most part determined by the General Assembly, guided by advice from the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), which in turn consulted the administrations and staff representatives of participating intergovernmental organizations. The Assembly also determined certain personnel management policies to be followed by the central Secretariat, encompassing United Nations staff in units financed mainly under the regular budget. Such staff numbered 16,159 as at 31 December.

In 1983, ICSC held its seventeenth and eighteenth sessions, 7 to 24 March at Vienna and 18 July to 5 August in New York, and a special session, 21 to 23 November in New York. After considering its activities and recommendations, the Assembly in December, by resolution 38/232, urged all organizations concerned to implement ICSC decisions, and took a number of actions affecting salaries and benefits. Among them, it asked to be kept informed annually of the difference between international civil service pay and that of the best-paid national civil service, using a new comprehensive method of assessing total compensation; approved an increase in the education grant paid to internationally recruited staff to help them meet the expenses involved in their childrens schooling while the staff served outside their home country; and acted on matters relating to job classification, language incentives, field staff, post adjustment (the cost-of-living component of salaries), miscellaneous allowances and a cost-of-living index for pensioners.

By decision 38/451, the Assembly requested consultations on a proposal to remove a prohibition on the recruitment of ICSC members by a United Nations organization within three years of leaving the Commission.

Also in December, by resolution 38/231, the Assembly requested special efforts to meet previously established goals aimed at improving the balance among nationalities and women's status in the Secretariat. It accepted the Secretary-General's proposals on job classification of General Service staff at Geneva (resolution 38/284, section XIX). Regarding steps to promote better linguistic balance, it noted a report by the Secretary-General proposing that no limitation be placed on the number of languages a United Nations staff member could study free of charge in the Organization's language-training programme (section VIII). The language teachers in that programme were to be given the contractual status of staff members, the Assembly decided (section XIII).

Acting on proposed amendments to the Staff Rules of the United Nations, the Assembly, by decision 38/450, requested a review of provisions relating to staff/management relations.

An expression of concern about what the Assembly called continuing neglect of principles relating to respect for the privileges and immunities of the international civil service was contained in resolution 38/230. It acted after examining a report on further incidents adversely affecting staff security.

Acting on recommendations by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, the Assembly, by resolution 38/233, decided to raise, for the first time, the contribution rates of staff and their employing organizations to the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, so as to improve its financial situation. By the same resolution, the Regulations of the Fund were amended to alter certain benefits and a 1984 budget was approved. A report on the Fund's improved investment picture was noted by the Assembly in decision 38/452.

By resolution 38/235, the Assembly approved the experimental use of an ICSC formula authorizing the United Nations to pay a larger share of the health insurance premiums of Secretariat staff.

As the United Nations Administrative Tribunal delivered 20 judgements during 1983 in cases involving labour contracts of the international civil service, work proceeded on ways to improve co-ordination with the Administrative Tribunal of the International Labour Organisation (ILO). In November, by decision 38/409, the Assembly asked that these consultations be accelerated.

The Assembly noted reports on steps to improve United Nations machinery for handling its officials' travel and on savings achieved by using economy-class travel where first-class had once been the norm (resolution 38/234, section IV). It urged maximum restraint on staff travel to attend Assembly sessions (section XVI) and deferred action on proposals to increase certain allowances payable to the officers of two United Nations bodies (section XVII).

Personnel management

The General Assembly dealt in 1983 with a number of personnel questions, some affecting the international civil service as a whole and others confined to the United Nations Secretariat. It acted after considering reports and other documents from the Secretary-General and the bodies principally concerned, namely ICSC, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), and three organizations representing groups of staff in the United Nations system.

Some of these questions concerned personnel management issues such as United Nations staff composition, career development, staff representation, field staff, the Staff Rules of the United Nations, and privileges and immunities. Other questions involved staff costs (see next subchapter). A question pertaining to certain non-Secretariat officials was also raised (see under OTHER UN OFFICIALS below).

The 1983 ICSC report to the General Assembly covered its two regular sessions and one special session held during the year (for places and dates see the introduction to this chapter).⁽¹⁾ Recommendations regarding ICSC proposals were made by ACABQ.⁽²⁾

The Secretary-General submitted reports on seven United Nations personnel and related questions: staff composition,⁽³⁾ Staff Rules,⁽⁴⁾ privileges and immunities,⁽⁵⁾ staff security in the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA),⁽⁶⁾ health insurance,⁽⁷⁾ travel,⁽⁸⁾ and allowances and pensions of non-Secretariat officials.⁽⁹⁾

Three staff organizations submitted comments on various personnel matters which were circulated by the Secretary-General to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. Two of the organizations, the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA)⁽¹⁰⁾ and the Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations Secretariat,⁽¹¹⁾ commented in October. The third, the Co-ordinating Committee for Independent Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations System (CCISUA),⁽¹²⁾ conveyed its views in November.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/232, covering various matters pertaining to the international civil service and ICSC.

United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered with appreciation the report of the International Civil Service Commission for the year 1983,

Reaffirming the central role of the Commission within the United Nations common system in the development of a single unified international civil service through the application of common personnel standards and arrangements,

Notes the progress made to date concerning the comparison of total compensation based on non-expatriate benefits applicable on both sides and requests the Commission to inform the General Assembly, on an annual basis, of the margin between the remuneration of United Nations employees and those of the United States federal civil service on this total compensation basis;

II

1. Expresses concern that the International Civil Service Commission was unable to make corrections in the current post adjustment classification at certain duty stations in spite of the fact that the post adjustments were found to be higher than those which the results of the new cost-of-living survey could justify;

2. Notes the efforts by the Commission to improve the post adjustment system and requests the Commission in this regard to expedite, in particular, the application of the revised methodology for cost-of-living measurement, called for in General Assembly resolution 34/165 of 17 December 1979, in order to improve the mechanism for adjusting United Nations remuneration to reflect more accurately the differences in cost of living at various duty stations;

3. Calls upon the executive heads and the staff of organizations of the United Nations common system to co-operate fully with the Commission in the application of the post adjustment system;

4. Notes the introduction by the Commission, with effect from 1 April 1983, of a rental subsidy scheme for staff in the Professional and higher categories at Headquarters and other duty stations not previously covered by a subsidy scheme;

(a) The education grant for eligible staff members shall be set at a level of 75 per cent of the cost of attendance at an educational institution in respect of expenses up to a maximum of $6,000 per year, with a maximum reimbursement of $4,500 per child per year;

(b) The reimbursement rate for disabled children shall be set at 100 per cent of a maximum of $6,000 for expenses at an educational institution;

(c) The limit of allowable boarding costs within the overall maximum allowable expenditure of $6,000 shall be raised to $1,500 per year;

(d) Provision shall be made to use a currency floor for this grant, using exchange rates effective 1 March 1983, to ensure the maintenance of equitable reimbursement of education costs among duty stations;

4. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to conduct a study of the education grant, the purpose of which was to facilitate a child's reassimilation in the staff member's home country, and to report on the results of the study to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

IV

1. Takes note of the decision of the International Civil Service Commission to modify, with effect from 1 September 1983, the non-resident's allowance provisions to make the allowance payable for a fixed duration of five years at designated duty stations and to make it non-pensionable, subject to the protection of acquired rights as set out in paragraph 63 of the report of the Commission;

2. Approves the Commission's recommendation that the present non-contributory system of death-grant benefits be continued inasmuch as it provides benefits in the most cost-effective manner;

VI

1. Recalls section IV of its resolution 37/126 of 17 December 1982 and reaffirms its support for the overall approach envisaged by the International Civil Service Commission, which aims at the development of policies for an integrated personnel management system, based on human resources planning, to assist organizations in achieving their programme objectives in an efficient manner, while providing improved conditions for career development;

2. Welcomes the decision taken by the Commission to establish job classification standards, under article 13 of its statute, for locally recruited staff in field offices where several of the organizations employ staff in common areas of work;

3. Expresses its satisfaction that job classification standards have been developed for the General Service and related categories in New York and requests the organizations concerned to co-ordinate their implementation of these standards in order to utilize fully the opportunities they provide for improved job design, recruitment, career planning and training;

4. Welcomes the Commission's efforts to develop a common approach to skills inventories on an inter-organizational basis;

5. Recommends that the organizations normally dispense with the requirement for a probationary appointment as a prerequisite for a career appointment following a period of five years' satisfactory service on fixed-term contracts;

6. Again requests the Commission to pursue its mandate under article 14 of its statute, in consultation with organizations and staff, with regard to the development of common training, recruitment and promotion policies for the organizations and to report thereon to the General Assembly as each phase of its studies is completed;

Before approving the draft as a whole, the Fifth Committee approved two amendments by the United States by separate votes. The amendments added paragraphs on post adjustment (section II, paragraph 1) and the education grant (section III, paragraph 4) (see those topics under STAFF COSTS below). The United States withdrew a third amendment, on extensions of appointment beyond retirement age (see STAFF COMPOSITION below).

A Moroccan amendment to change the ICSC statute in regard to the duties of Commission members⁽¹³⁾ was withdrawn in favour of a separate draft decision on the matter (see next section).

Among those voting against the resolution, the USSR objected to ICSC recommendations which, in its view, would result in unjustified pay increases for the international civil service. The German Democratic Republic also spoke of the need to reduce excessive salaries and added that career development should apply as well to staff members holding fixed-term contracts and should not affect equitable geographical distribution among nationalities in the staff.

Abstaining in the vote, Cuba said it had reservations on a number of paragraphs and regretted that there had not been more consultations among delegations on the text.

Voting for the resolution, Mexico opposed the United States amendments but thought they did not alter the basic thrust of the text. Bolivia also had reservations on the amendment concerning post adjustment. Venezuela described the text as balanced.

In addition to this resolution, the Assembly adopted others dealing with specific personnel questions (see the introduction to this chapter). A draft decision⁽¹⁴⁾ on the staffing of regional commissions was withdrawn by its sponsor, Iraq. By that text, the Assembly would have called on the Secretary-General to make special efforts to solve the problem of vacancies in certain regional commissions.

In resolution 38/231 on the composition of the Secretariat, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the role of the Office of Personnel Services in all personnel matters throughout the Secretariat.

ICSC statute

In December 1983, the General Assembly asked for consultations with other United Nations organizations and with ICSC on a Moroccan proposal to amend the ICSC statute by removing a restriction that prevented any former Commission member from working for an organization in the United Nations system within three years of leaving ICSC. The request was made in decision 38/451, adopted by recorded vote on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee.

Statute of the International Civil Service Commission

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 20 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, requested the Secretary-General to consult with the organizations members of the common system of the United Nations and the International Civil Service Commission, bringing to their attention, inter alia, the discussions in the Fifth Committee on the draft decision annexed to the present decision and to report on the results of those consultations to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

ANNEX

Draft decision on the statute of the International Civil Service Commission

The General Assembly decides to amend article 6, paragraph 2, of the statute of the International Civil Service Commission to read:

"2. No member of the Commission may participate in the deliberations of any organ of the organizations on any matter within the competence of the Commission unless the Commission has requested him or her to do so as its representative; nor shall a member of the Commission serve as an official or consultant of any such organization during his or her term of office."

The ICSC statute, adopted by the Assembly in 1974,⁽¹⁵⁾ provided that no Commission member could serve as an official or consultant with any United Nations organization that accepted the statute. This restriction applied "during his or her term of office or within three years of ceasing to be a member of the Commission".

During the Fifth Committee's discussion of the ICSC report in December 1983, Morocco proposed that the Assembly adopt an amendment that would in effect delete from the statute the reference to a three-year period.⁽¹³⁾ Morocco explained that it wished to give the organizations broader options in the choice of experts.

This proposal was originally presented as an amendment to what became resolution 38/232 on the international civil service. However, Morocco withdrew this amendment in favour of an oral proposal by Egypt for a separate decision to have the Secretary-General consult on the proposed amendment with the other organizations involved.

On an oral proposal by the United States, the Committee approved the addition of two points to the Egyptian proposal: to involve ICSC in the consultations and to call attention to the Committee's discussion. The United States amendment was adopted by 37 votes to 10, with 14 abstentions.

Voting against the amended text in Committee but in favour in the Assembly, Morocco objected to prior consultation with other organizations and with ICSC. The USSR and the United States voted against on the ground that the proposed amendment of the statute could jeopardize the independence of ICSC members.

In the Assembly, the Bahamas said it wished to record its non-participation in the vote.

ICSC budget for 1984-1985

On 10 November 1983, by 74 votes to 8, the Fifth Committee approved revised ICSC budget estimates totalling $366,200 (gross) for 1984-1985,⁽¹⁶⁾ raising total appropriations for the Commission to $7,107,100. The increase over the initial estimates submitted by the Secretary-General was attributed by him to a recosting of office space requirements and to the need for an additional clerk, raising the Commission's staff to 52.⁽¹⁷⁾ As a consequence of this increase, the Committee also approved revised income estimates, representing the 59.8 per cent share of the ICSC budget to be paid by other organizations of the United Nations system that helped finance the Commission. The Secretary-General's revised estimates were endorsed by ACABQ.⁽¹⁸⁾

Later Fifth Committee actions, including approval of pension contributions for the ICSC Chairman and Vice-Chairman (see below, under OTHER UN OFFICIALS), brought the Commission's total appropriation for 1984-1985 to $7,187,000.

Staff composition

Various matters affecting the composition of the international civil service, with special reference to geographical distribution and women's advancement and status, were considered during 1983. In addition to the treatment of these matters in the Secretary-General's annual report on the composition of the United Nations Secretariat,⁽³⁾ ICSC examined aspects of recruitment, staff contracts and retirement affecting the entire international civil service-topics also commented on by staff organizations. In December, the General Assembly called for special efforts to meet previously established goals on Secretariat composition.

In his September 1983 report to the Assembly,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General presented statistical data showing changes in the composition of the Secretariat during the year ended 30 June, with respect to the geographical distribution of staff among nationalities and the proportion of men and women. The report stated that the number of nationalities unrepresented in the Secretariat among the 157 Member States had fallen from 17 to 14, as a result of the appointment of nationals of Equatorial Guinea, Samoa and Suriname. Unrepresented were Albania, Bahrain, Djibouti, Gabon, Guinea-Bissau, Kuwait, Maldives, Mongolia, Papua New Guinea, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Solomon Islands and Vanuatu.

Twenty-five Members were underrepresented, in the sense that the number of their nationals was less than the lower limit of their desirable ranges of representation, calculated according to a formula based largely on budget contributions. This constituted a net increase of one underrepresented nationality. Eighty-seven Members were within range, down from 90, while 31 were above range, up from 26. The States which moved from adequately represented to slightly overrepresented (by one to three posts) were Kenya, Morocco, Peru, Poland, and Trinidad and Tobago. Those remaining above range were Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Chile, China, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guyana, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Lebanon, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire.

These figures were limited to the 3,077 posts subject to geographical distribution. They thus excluded staff in posts with special language requirements (mainly interpreters and translators) and certain other staff among the total of 4,251 Professional posts in the Secretariat.

During the year covered, 277 appointments were made to these "geographical" posts, of which 98 were of unrepresented or underrepresented nationalities, 151 were of those within range and 26 were of overrepresented nationalities.

Another table in the report showed that the proportion of women in geographical posts had risen from 16.3 per cent in 1973 to 22.3 per cent in 1983, falling short of the 25 per cent target first set by the Assembly in 1978.⁽¹⁹⁾ During the year covered, 15.9 per cent of appointees to geographical posts were women.

The report stated that, in compliance with a 1980 Assembly request,⁽²⁰⁾ an annual work plan of recruitment had been drawn up for 1983, corresponding to the first stage of a medium-term recruitment plan for 1983-1985.

Steps taken in regard to recommendations on geographical distribution made by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) in 1981⁽²¹⁾ and 1982⁽²²⁾ were reported to the Assembly in an October 1983 report of the Secretary-General⁽²³⁾ on the implementation of various JIU recommendations (see preceding chapter). He stated that 6 of the 10 recommendations made in 1981 were either being implemented or were the subject of Assembly decisions that were being implemented.

He reported that progress had been achieved towards bringing unrepresented and underrepresented nationalities within their desirable ranges. However, he considered that the JIU recommendation for an interruptible fixed-term staff contract, permitting rotation of persons seconded from their national service and others holding fixed-term contracts, would interrupt the continuity of the Secretariat's work and create difficulties for career development. Secondment arrangements could be systematized, he felt, without introducing a new type of appointment. With regard to top echelon staff, he said the Secretariat's efforts were directed towards an objective fixed by the Assembly in 1982⁽²⁴⁾—to have the largest possible number of Member States represented at the higher levels.

ICSC acted in 1983 on three matters affecting staff composition throughout the international civil service—recruitment, types of appointment, and retirement.^(*) Regarding the first, it established at its July/August session a three-year timetable for its consideration of various aspects of recruitment, beginning in 1984 with selection interviews and reviews of candidates' prior education and experience.

On the matter of types of appointment (staff contracts), ICSC instructed its secretariat in March 1983 to continue consultations with United Nations organizations and staff representatives, with the goal of reporting back in 1984 with proposals on the subject. The Commission suggested that there be three basic types of appointment: short-term, fixed-term and career. It requested its secretariat to propose criteria to harmonize the granting of career appointments, while allowing for the reappointment of fixed-term staff such as those on secondment from government service. It recommended that organizations normally dispense with the requirement that staff who had satisfactorily served on fixed-term contracts undergo further probationary appointment before becoming eligible for career appointment.

After considering proposals to raise the mandatory age of separation from service from 60 to 62 years, ICSC decided by a majority at its July/August session not to recommend any change. It recommended that organizations facilitate the transition of their staff to retirement, ensure that they received full information on retirement provisions well before their departure, and provide pre-retirement training on such matters as material problems, health issues and the use of time.

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, in July 1983, reiterated its 1982 recommendation⁽²⁵⁾ that the retirement age be raised to 62 while maintaining the right to full pension at 60 for those who chose to leave earlier. (See also PENSIONS below.)

With regard to recruitment, FICSA, in its comments to the Fifth Committee on various personnel matters,⁽¹⁰⁾ expressed disappointment at what it called the low priority assigned in the ICSC work programme to aspects of recruitment which should have higher priority, such as underrepresentation of some countries. Criticizing what it called the proliferation of fixed-term contracts in the United Nations system, FICSA reiterated its view that at least 75 per cent of the international civil service should have career appointments and asked the Assembly to commend to other organizations its 1982 decision⁽²⁶⁾ that United Nations staff, after five years of fixed-term contracts, be given every reasonable consideration for career appointment. It also hoped the Assembly would reiterate that political considerations should not be allowed to affect recruitment.

On retirement, FICSA said it would not oppose giving the staff the option of working until age 62, provided that this applied to staff at all levels, that it was exercised solely at the staff member's discretion, and that existing rights to retirement at 60 and early retirement at 55 were not affected.

Commenting on personnel questions,⁽¹²⁾ CCISUA stated with regard to staff contracts that excessive reliance on fixed-term appointments should be avoided.

Staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, in their written comments to the Fifth Committee,⁽¹¹⁾ observed with concern that the proportion of women in geographical posts had risen by only 0.1 per cent since mid-1982. They believed that fixed- or short-term staff contracts must not replace the notion of a career staff. While taking no position on proposals to raise the retirement age, they insisted on maintaining the right to retire on full pension at age 60 and with reduced benefits at 55.

Geographical distribution in the Department of Public Information was the subject of an April 1983 report by the Secretary-General to the Committee on Information.⁽²⁷⁾ The Committee, in a recommendation approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/82 B of 15 December 1983, said the Department should intensify efforts to redress the imbalance in its staff, particularly in the Radio and Visual Services Division.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/231. The Assembly took this action on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee following its consideration of the Secretary-General's report.

Composition of the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on personnel policy and in particular resolutions 33/143 of 20 December 1978, 35/210 of 17 December 1980 and 37/235 of 21 December 1982,

Noting that some limited progress has been made with respect to the situation of unrepresented and under-represented Member States and towards a balanced and equitable geographical distribution of staff in the Secretariat,

Concerned by the lack of progress, especially in the past year, towards increasing the proportion of women in the Secretariat and, in particular, the failure to reach the target set in section III of resolution 33/143,

Recognizing the central role of the Office of Personnel Services in the implementation of personnel policies,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat;

2. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to make every effort to ensure the implementation of the provisions of the previous resolutions of the General Assembly, in particular of resolutions 33/143, 35/210 and 37/235;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make special efforts to meet the goals and objectives established with respect to:

(a) The situation of unrepresented and under-represented Member States;

(b) The recruitment, career development and promotion of women;

(c) The achievement of a balanced and equitable geographical distribution of staff throughout the Secretariat;

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/744) without vote, 19 December (meeting 73); draft by Barbados (A/C.5/38/L.27); agenda item 116.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 5th Committee 41, 45-48, 50, 53, 60, 73; plenary 104.

An amendment by the United States relating to retirement age,⁽²⁸⁾ proposed to the draft resolution on the international civil service (resolution 38/232), was withdrawn by its sponsor. It would have had the Assembly invite executive heads in the United Nations system to make greater use of their authority to extend appointments beyond normal retirement age when that was in the Organization's interest.

Career development

Various aspects of career development in the international civil service were dealt with by ICSC in 1983.⁽¹⁾ The General Assembly acted on two aspects, job classification and language instruction (see following sections). In addition, ICSC briefly considered human resources planning, promotion and training (see below) as well as recruitment and types of appointment (see preceding section).

In March, welcoming initiatives by United Nations organizations to integrate human resources management, ICSC assigned three tasks to its secretariat: to continue work on a common approach to inter-agency skills inventories aimed at fostering career development and staff exchange, to explore the possibility of a seminar for personnel management specialists on human resources planning for General Service staff and to serve as a focal point for information exchange on human resources matters.

At its July/August session, the Commission postponed substantive discussion of promotion policy until 1984. It also adopted a work programme on staff training and asked its secretariat to report on progress.

Comments on career development were included in the documents submitted to the Fifth Committee in 1983 by the three main organizations of staff representatives (see PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT above).

Welcoming ICSC initiatives on human resources planning, FICSA suggested that the Assembly recommend the development of an integrated approach to such planning, with a view to enhancing career development opportunities.⁽¹⁰⁾ For its part, CCISUA thought that ICSC could co-ordinate activities in this area, starting with the creation of a computerized roster of staff skills that could be matched with each organization's long-term planning.⁽¹²⁾

Staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat favoured a unified personnel structure to eliminate the distinctions between Professional and General Service staff, comprehensive career development planning through a career development service, strengthened staff training and greater opportunities for promotion from the General Service to the Professional category by competitive examination.⁽¹¹⁾

Job classification

As part of a continuing process of developing job classification standards for occupational groups throughout the international civil service, ICSC established standards during 1983 for civil engineers (March session) and for purchasing and contracting specialists (July/August session).⁽¹⁾

With regard to non-Professional categories, ICSC promulgated standards for some 600 positions in New York, covering Headquarters tour guides, security officers, printers, buildings maintenance workers, and shipping, transportation and receiving workers. These had been prepared by the Co-ordination Committee for Development of Classification Standards for the General Service Category in New York, established in 1981 by the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund. They covered jobs other than the 3,200 General Service positions for which standards had been promulgated in 1982.⁽²⁹⁾ At the Commission's request, the standards for printers and for the two manual workers groups, developed separately, were merged into a combined standard defining eight grade levels.

ICSC also became involved, at the request of the United Nations, in the development of standards for the General Service and related categories at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. Welcoming the initiative of the organizations concerned in establishing a Joint Committee on Job Classification, the Commission requested that Committee to take account of standards and guidelines established for New York and asked for a final report in 1984.

The Sub-Committee on Job Classification, a sub-committee of the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) ACC, held two sessions in 1983—its ninth (New York, 24-27 May)⁽³⁰⁾ and tenth (Geneva, 5-8 December)⁽³¹⁾—at which it continued work on developing standards for various occupational groups of the international civil service. In December, it approved a procedure for testing standards proposed for General Service posts in non-headquarters duty stations and approved a standard for auditors' jobs that was to be placed before ICSC in 1984.

Staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, in their comments to the Fifth Committee on various personnel questions,⁽¹¹⁾ felt that, before the new job classification systems were implemented, agreement should be reached on all aspects of career development planning through joint staff/management machinery.

In a December report to the Fifth Committee,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General made several proposals to complete implementation of a job classification scheme for General Service staff at the United Nations Office at Geneva. With implementation under way since 1982 for the six lower levels, he asked for authority to complete the process at the principal level (G-7) by converting 11 General Service posts to the Professional category, shifting the 72 existing principal-level posts among budget sections and assigning a temporary G-7 level to 29 staff members already at that level but whose posts had been downgraded. He announced the intention of absorbing the additional costs, estimated at $410,200 for 1984-1985, without an additional appropriation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Secretary-General's proposals on job classification for General Service staff at Geneva, which had the endorsement of ACABQ, were accepted by the General Assembly without vote on 20 December 1983 in section XIX of resolution 38/234, on miscellaneous matters relating to the 1984-1985 budget. The action was recommended by the Fifth Committee.

In related action, the Assembly, in resolution 38/232, welcomed the ICSC decision to establish job classification standards for local recruits in field offices where several organizations employed staff in common areas of work. With regard to the standards developed for the General Service and related categories at Headquarters, the Assembly requested the organizations concerned to co-ordinate their implementation in order to utilize the opportunities they provided for improved job design, recruitment, career planning and training.

Language instruction and incentives

Language instruction

The Secretary-General, in an August 1983 report to the Fifth Committee,⁽³³⁾ proposed that no limitation be placed on the number of languages a staff member could learn free of charge in the United Nations language-training programme. Tables in the report showed that 125 students in 1981 and 142 in 1982 who had studied two of the six official languages taught in the programme (Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian, Spanish) subsequently studied a third. The Secretary-General concluded that this number was so low that limiting the number of languages would not result in substantial cost savings. The idea of a limit had been advanced by the Secretary-General in 1981, in a package of four proposals for making the language programme more effective, but the Assembly at that time requested a further report on the matter while approving the three other proposals.⁽³⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote section VIII of resolution 38/234.

Language teachers

In December 1983, the General Assembly approved proposals by the Secretary-General to grant staff member status to the 48 full-time teachers conducting language instruction for the Secretariat at Headquarters and major United Nations offices overseas.

The proposals were made in a November report to the Fifth Committee⁽³⁵⁾ in which the Secretary-General explained why he and the teachers favoured changing their status from that of hourly paid employees to locally recruited staff. He recalled the objectives of a similar proposal he had made in December 1982:⁽³⁶⁾ to improve the language-training programme through greater participation of full-time teachers, and to give the teachers greater security of tenure, pension coverage, and benefits and allowances available to locally recruited staff. He proposed that they be paid on a scale, varying by duty station, that took account of their current pay, the salaries of other locally recruited staff and the pay received by outside teachers. He put the cost at $532,200 for 1984-1985, covering a contribution to the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, the salary difference and fringe benefits.

A similar approach, to rectify what they described as an injustice, was endorsed by staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat in their comments to the Fifth Committee on personnel questions.⁽¹¹⁾

In a December 1983 report to the Assembly,⁽³⁷⁾ ACABQ reiterated its December 1982 recommendation that the teachers' status not be changed. It suggested that a new one- to three-year contract be devised, providing for the same pay they currently received, requiring them to teach at least 15 hours a week for no less than 10 months a year, and allowing for sick and maternity leave as well as post-employment benefits. No appropriation would be required other than the $225,900 already included in the Secretary-General's initial budget proposals for 1984-1985, earmarked for post-employment benefits.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly accepted the Secretary-General's proposals when it adopted by recorded vote section XIII of resolution 38/234, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Vanuatu, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Mongolia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Costa Rica, Cuba, Israel, Mexico, Netherlands, Pakistan, Panama, Portugal, Romania, Spain, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Among those voting in favour, Belgium thought the Secretary-General's proposals offered a more comprehensive solution. Benin, France and Morocco saw a need to promote an equitable geographical balance; Benin added that there should be no second-class employees. The United Republic of Cameroon also spoke in favour.

Voting against, the USSR suggested that the ACABQ proposals be implemented experimentally for two years, allowing the Secretary-General to recommend a longer-term solution. This suggestion was supported by India and the United Kingdom, and by Cuba, which abstained in the vote. It was opposed by New Zealand, which voted for the Egyptian proposal. Canada viewed the ACABQ proposals as the best solution for the teachers and the United Nations.

The Bahamas abstained because it was not satisfied about career development aspects and the ultimate status of the teachers.

Language incentives

Following discussion by ICSC at its July/August 1983 session of the scheme of financial and other incentives applied to encourage the broader use of languages in the United Nations Secretariat,⁽¹⁾ a majority of its members concluded that the scheme was not achieving its objective. They felt that the scheme as currently applied should not continue, that it would be desirable to harmonize, among organizations in the United Nations system, practices to encourage and recognize language knowledge, and that a solution should be found as soon as possible. ICSC instructed its secretariat to examine alternative approaches, such as enhanced training facilities, and to report back with recommendations.

The extension of language incentives to additional organizations in the United Nations system, including accelerated salary increments and other payments in recognition of language skills, was advocated by FICSA in its comments to the Fifth Committee on personnel matters.⁽¹⁰⁾

In resolution 38/232, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report in 1984 on the status of the linguistic skills of United Nations staff, including the effects of the language incentive programme, and to propose further measures if necessary to improve the situation.

Staff representation

Following consideration by its CCAQ Working Party on Staff Representation (Geneva, 26 and 27 January 1983),⁽³⁸⁾ ACC decided in April to invite CCISUA to address it at future sessions when issues of concern to the international civil service were on the agenda.⁽³⁹⁾ It also reaffirmed its past invitation, couched in similar terms, to FICSA, which had previously been the sole staff organization heard by ACC and ICSC.

At its July/August session,⁽¹⁾ ICSC approved three criteria to determine whether to invite staff bodies to attend and address its meetings and those of its subsidiary bodies: the constituent organizations of such a body should meet specified criteria of recognition, the body should represent staff preferably in more than one United Nations organization and it should represent at least 25 per cent of the international civil service within the common system. On the basis of those criteria, the Commission invited CCISUA to participate but decided not to invite the Federation of Associations and Unions of the International Civil Service.

Staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, in their written comments to the Fifth Committee on personnel questions,⁽¹¹⁾ stressed the importance of staff representation and expressed the view that the staff had an important role in contributing to administrative efficiency, streamlining personnel procedures and making the United Nations more responsive to its Members' needs.

Provisions on staff representative bodies and joint staff/management machinery were included in provisional amendments to the Staff Rules of the United Nations acted on by the General Assembly in December (see below).

Field staff

At its July/August 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ ICSC authorized a review of duty stations and of the allowances and benefits received by staff. This was to be conducted by its tripartite Working Group on the Classification of Duty Stations according to Conditions of Life and Work, composed of representatives of the Commission, United Nations organizations and staff. ICSC also requested other information on conditions of service in the field, with emphasis on health and security.

The Commission also authorized additional reimbursements for field staff relating to departure expenses and family medical expenses (see "Other allowances" below, under STAFF COSTS).

The concerns of field staff were dealt with in comments by the three groups of staff representatives which submitted written statements to the Fifth Committee. Declaring that conditions of service in the United Nations system compared unfavourably with those offered by other development assistance organizations, FICSA called for the elaboration of a methodology to set benefit levels and review them periodically, and asked that ICSC complete its studies without further delay.⁽¹⁰⁾ Better security arrangements (see PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES below), the possible introduction of hazardous duty pay, and improved rotation policies that would encourage training were urged by CCISUA.⁽¹²⁾ Staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat stressed staff security concerns, adequate briefing about local conditions, the provision of housing in areas where the local market was limited and expanded medical coverage.⁽¹¹⁾

In resolution 38/232, the General Assembly noted the progress by ICSC in its review of conditions of service in the field and asked to be kept informed of developments. It also welcomed the ICSC decision to establish job classification standards for local recruits in field offices where several organizations of the United Nations system employed staff in common areas of work.

Staff Rules of the United Nations

Provisionally amended staff rules designed to update and improve the Secretariat machinery for handling staff appeals of administrative decisions were prepared by the Secretary-General in 1983. The rules covered the establishment of Joint Appeals Boards and detailed the appeals procedure.

Two other rules changes were also prepared and reported to the General Assembly. One, concerning payment of the installation grant to compensate staff for expenses they incurred as a result of transfer to a different duty station, provided for full payment as long as the staff member had not served at that duty station during the previous year; under the previous rule, the full grant was not paid unless the absence had been for at least two years. The second change amended the rule on suspension of staff pending investigation of alleged misconduct, so as to provide for suspension with pay as the norm.

All these changes were reported in September 1983 in the Secretary-General's annual report to the Fifth Committee⁽⁴⁾ on amendments to the Staff Rules of the United Nations since the previous report in 1982.⁽⁴⁰⁾ In accordance with revisions to the Staff Regulations approved by the Assembly in December 1982,⁽⁴¹⁾ the provisional amendments were to take effect on 1 January 1984, the beginning of the year following their submission to the Assembly. The report also covered changes in salary scales and certain allowances for the General Service and related categories, put into effect under the Secretary-General's authority.

The Secretary-General also submitted provisional amendments to the Staff Rules pertaining to staff/management relations, made to implement amendments to the Staff Regulations approved by the Assembly in December 1982.⁽⁴¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by decision 38/450, requested the Secretary-General to review two subparagraphs of the provisional amendments to the Staff Rules in the light of amendments proposed by the USSR. The Assembly acted without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee.

Amendments to the Staff Rules

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 20 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the amendments to the Staff Rules;

(b) Requested the Secretary-General to review the text of staff rules 108.1, subparagraph (d), and 108.2, subparagraph (c), in the light of the amendments submitted by the delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/744) without vote, 19 December (meeting 73); oral proposal by Chairman, based on informal consultations on proposal by USSR, amended by German Democratic Republic; agenda item 116. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 5th Committee 41, 45-48, 50, 53, 60, 73; plenary 104.

The two rules referred to in the Assembly decision concerned staff/management relations. Rule 108.1, on staff representative bodies, defined the scope of action of staff councils and similar bodies elected by the staff at each duty station. According to subparagraph (d), they could participate in identifying, examining and resolving staff welfare issues, including conditions of work, general conditions of life and other personnel policies, and could make proposals to the Secretary-General on behalf of the staff. Rule 108.2, on joint staff/management machinery, provided for joint advisory committees at each duty station, composed of equal numbers of representatives of the staff and the Secretary-General, and a similarly constituted Secretariat-wide body. According to subparagraph (c), instructions or directives em-bodily the joint bodies' recommendations, if made with the staff representatives' concurrence, would be regarded as satisfying the requirements of rule 108.1 (d).

The USSR proposed orally in the Fifth Committee the deletion of "and other personnel policies" from rule 108.1 (d) and subparagraph (c) from rule 108.2. It described the purpose of the proposal as the elimination of provisions that might be interpreted as giving staff representatives powers that ran counter to the Secretary-General's role as chief administrative officer.

The Committee accepted an oral motion by the German Democratic Republic, made after informal consultations, to have the Assembly request the Secretary-General to review the two subparagraphs in the light of the USSR amendments.

Privileges and immunities of the international civil service

Measures to safeguard staff security and encourage respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and related intergovernmental organizations were called for by the General Assembly in December 1983.

ACC activities. Administrative measures to clarify and safeguard the privileges and immunities of the international civil service, especially of field staff, were discussed at an ACC Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Security Matters held at Geneva on 24 and 25 January 1983.⁽⁴²⁾ Among those attending were designated officials responsible for security co-ordination in the various organizations.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1983, the Secretary-General, on behalf of ACC, submitted to the Fifth Committee the third in a series of annual reports originally requested by the General Assembly in 1980⁽⁴³⁾ on problems that had arisen in regard to the exercise by international officials of the privileges and immunities necessary for the independent exercise of their functions. The report⁽⁵⁾ gave information as of 31 August 1983 on 98 cases of officials from 13 organizations or units in the United Nations system who had been arrested and detained in 21 countries or areas. Twenty-three of these, involving four organizations and live countries or areas, were listed as cases in which the Secretary-General or other organization head had not been able, during the year covered, to exercise fully his responsibility for protecting officials. Of the latter group, 20 were officials of UNRWA, including 15 in Lebanon.

The chief difficulties, according to the report, concerned the arrest and detention of locally recruited nationals whose status as "officials" for purposes of privileges and immunities was not always readily accepted and understood by local authorities.

The report also detailed other cases in which the safety or security of officials had been affected, as well as problems arising over tax exemption for locally recruited international officials, and travel restrictions in territories occupied by Israel. It stated that a problem relating to the duty-free importation of furniture and effects of certain officials serving in Thailand had been resolved.

The Secretary-General mentioned the issuance in December 1982 of two Secretariat documents (annexed to the report) outlining procedures to be followed in the event of arrest and detention, and clarifying for all staff the nature and scope of their privileges and immunities. He said he would give favourable consideration to proposals by the United Nations Staff-Management Co-ordination Committee, including one for an interdepartmental advisory committee in the Secretariat to report to him on each case of arrest and detention, and another for a co-ordinator to act as a focal point for reporting cases. He would also consider the wider use of sending a special representative to the country concerned when other channels were not productive. He concluded by calling for the full observance by all concerned-Member States, organizations and officials of the law and practice of international immunities.

The Secretary-General submitted an addendum to this report in November, updating information on UNRWA staff, and a separate report in October on UNRWA staff detained in Lebanon by Israeli authorities (see p. 347).

Comments of staff representatives. Staff security was also addressed by the three bodies of staff representatives in their written comments on personnel questions to the Fifth Committee.

The first of these, FICSA,⁽¹⁰⁾ pointed out that the steady stream of cases of arrest, detention, disappearance or death of staff members had continued unabated. It appealed to the States concerned to grant immediate access by United Nations officials to any staff member arrested or detained, to provide full details of facts and charges, to ensure due legal process, to release those against whom no charges had been made, to find humane solutions to pending cases, and to respect international conventions.

Urging the Assembly to endorse strong measures, CCISUA⁽¹²⁾ stated that the growing tendency by some Members to interfere in the independent role of the international civil service by actions against locally recruited staff must be discontinued.

Staff representatives of the United Nations Secretariat⁽¹¹⁾ presented a proposal calling on Member States to recognize their obligation to report immediately to the Secretary-General any arrest or detention of a staff member, disclose charges, grant access by United Nations authorities and allow the Organization to be represented in legal proceedings. States would also be asked to recognize the primacy of the Charter of the United Nations over national legislation where staff members' rights were concerned, respect the independence of United Nations officials in their own countries and elsewhere, recognize an obligation not to interfere with appointments and other personnel actions, honour compensation claims in cases of staff members killed or injured as a result of detention, and commit themselves to collective measures against Governments that had not respected the privileges and immunities of the international civil service.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Further measures to safeguard the privileges and immunities of the international civil service were called for by the Assembly in resolution 38/230 of 20 December 1983, adopted without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee.

Respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/212 of 17 December 1980, 36/232 of 18 December 1981 and 37/236 of 21 December 1982,

Recalling that, under Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, officials of the Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Member States such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the Organization, which is indispensable for the proper discharge of their duties,

Recalling the obligation of the staff in the conduct of their duty to observe fully the laws and regulations of Member States,

1. Takes note with concern of the reports submitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General on behalf of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, which show a continuing neglect of the observance of the principles related to respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations;

2. Expresses particular concern at the detention of a great number of officials of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and about the cases in which full exercise of the right of functional protection was impossible, as mentioned in the reports of the Secretary-General;

3. Reaffirms the above-mentioned resolutions;

4. Welcomes the measures already taken by the Secretary-General to enhance the safety and protection of international civil servants, as outlined in paragraph 7 of his report;

5. Calls upon the Secretary-General, as chief administrative officer of the Organization, to continue personally to act as the focal point in promoting and ensuring the observance of the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations by using such means as are available to him;

6. Welcomes the designation by the Secretary-General of officials to take on special responsibilities for the security and protection of the Organization's personnel and property;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to give priority through his designated officials, as mentioned in annex III to his report, to the reporting and prompt follow-up of cases of arrest, detention and possible other matters relating to the security of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations;

8. Calls upon the staff of the United Nations to comply with the obligations arising from the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, in particular regulation 1.8;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to suggest in his annual report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session further measures to be taken with regard to the safety and protection of international civil servants.

Salaries

ICSC activities. In its 1983 report,⁽¹⁾ ICSC informed the General Assembly that the average net remuneration of international civil service Professional staff in the period from 1 October 1982 to 30 September 1983 was 16.5 per cent above that of matching grades in the United States federal civil service, down from an 18.2 per cent difference 12 months earlier. This calculation of the pay margin between the two services, performed annually at the behest of the Assembly in order to relate international civil service salaries to those of a comparator representing the best-paying national civil service, took into account net salaries and post adjustment payable to United Nations staff in New York, adjusted for the cost-of-living differential between New York and Washington, D. C. (In the international civil service, net salaries are those received by the staff after deduction of staff assessment; they correspond to after-tax salaries in national services.)

ICSC attributed the decrease in the margin since 1982 to a 4 per cent salary increase for the United States civil service in October 1982, lower United States federal tax rates, and bonuses and performance awards received by the United States Senior Executive Service. The only pay increase for the international civil service in New York during the period was a post adjustment increase in May 1983, raising average salaries by 5.9 per cent in response to a rise in the cost of living.

After several years of work on a methodology for comparing total compensation under the two systems, a majority of ICSC members agreed at its July/August session to submit two sets of margin calculations in future: the traditional one based on salary alone and a new one comparing all benefits, including pensions and insurance subsidies, except for expatriate benefits paid specifically for service outside the employees' home country. This action was taken after a majority endorsed a proposal covering the last outstanding issue in regard to the comparison. This was a formula to adjust for the fact that United States government employees, who had no mandatory retirement age, could earn higher pension benefits by remaining in service beyond 60 years whereas international civil servants had to retire at that age, thus limiting their pension entitlements.

With regard to General Service staff, ICSC surveyed best prevailing conditions of employment in Paris and in Montreal, Canada, and then recommended salary scales for employees in those cities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Civil Aviation Organization, respectively.

Comments of staff representatives. In its written comments on personnel issues submitted to the Fifth Committee in October 1983,⁽²⁾ FICSA urged a 10 per cent increase in Professional staff salaries, on the ground that their purchasing power had declined substantially since the previous increase, approved in 1974⁽³⁾ with effect from 1975.

With regard to the comparison of total compensation, FICSA expressed the view that the methodology would not be complete until a comparison was made of the benefits paid by the two civil services to employees serving outside their home country. In November, CCISUA urged that a review of total compensation be completed for Assembly consideration in 1984.⁽⁴⁾

In resolution 38/232 of 20 December 1983 on the international civil service, the General Assembly noted the pay margin between that service and the United States federal civil service, requested ICSC to complete the study of grade equivalents between the higher grades of the United Nations system and the United States Senior Executive Service, and asked it to report annually on the margin of total compensation. The Assembly also asked for an ICSC report in 1984 on longevity and merit steps in the various grade levels.

By decision 38/450 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of amendments to the Staff Rules of the United Nations reported by the Secretary-General in September, including revised salary scales for General Service staff at Headquarters, effective 1 October 1982, and Geneva, effective 1 February 1983.⁽⁵⁾

Post adjustment

By consensus, ICSC agreed at a special session in November 1983⁽⁶⁾ to take no decision on post adjustment classifications of the main duty stations in the United Nations system. It thus left frozen the levels at which various locations were classified for purposes of determining how much post adjustment the staff serving there would receive as a supplement to base salaries in response to cost-of-living changes over time and purchasing power differentials between duty stations.

The operation of the post adjustment system, and specifically the results of cost-of-living surveys at six headquarters locations and Washington, D. C., were examined at the eighth session of the ICSC Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions (ACPAQ), held at Rome, Italy, from 30 May to 10 June and resumed in New York from 31 October to 10 November. The ICSC secretariat had found the current post adjustment indices higher than the surveys justified. However, ACPAQ was unable to verify those results and asked the secretariat to reprocess them. As ACPAQ had not found the technical justification for making recommendations, ICSC concluded at its November session that it was not in a position to take specific decisions. Instead, it requested ACPAQ to make final recommendations in 1984 on the survey results, after which the Commission would again take up post adjustment classifications at the six duty stations.

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/232 of 20 December, expressed concern that ICSC had been unable to correct post adjustment classifications despite the fact that post adjustments had been found higher than justified by the cost-of-living surveys. It requested ICSC to expedite the application of revised methodology so as to improve the mechanism for adjusting remuneration to reflect more accurately the cost-of-living differences at various duty stations. Organization heads and their staff were asked to co-operate fully with ICSC in the application of the post adjustment system.

The expression of concern in section II, paragraph 1, of this resolution was added on an amendment by the United States, orally revised by the sponsor, which the Fifth Committee accepted by 32 votes to 21, with 32 abstentions.

Allowances

Education grant

On the recommendation of ICSC, the General Assembly, in December 1983, increased the maximum of the education grant payable to internationally recruited staff of the international civil service serving outside their home country. The grant was designed to reimburse such staff for a substantial share of the tuition and boarding costs they incurred in sending their children to schools, universities or colleges.

The level of the grant was fixed at 75 per cent of the cost of attending an educational institution, up to an annual maximum grant of $4,500 per child (increased from $3,000). In the case of disabled children, all costs would be reimbursed up to a $6,000 maximum (formerly $3,750). The limit of allowable boarding costs in cases where the institution did not provide board was fixed at $1,500 (formerly $1,100).

In recommending these increases, ICSC estimated their cost to the United Nations system at $1.7 million a year.⁽¹⁾ It agreed to review the level of the grant again in 1986.

In its written comments on personnel questions submitted to the Fifth Committee,⁽²⁾ FICSA urged the extension of the grant to all international recruits, including those serving in their home country, and eventually to all staff regardless of category. It also favoured continuous monitoring by ICSC to ensure that the grant remained in line with educational fees.

Assembly approval of the increased education grant was included in section III of resolution 38/232. On an amendment by the United States, orally revised by the sponsor, a paragraph was added by which the Assembly requested ICSC to study the grant and to report in 1984. The amendment was approved in the Fifth Committee by 63 votes to 13, with 15 abstentions.

Other allowances

Decisions were taken during 1983 on four allowances and fringe benefits payable to the international civil service: secondary dependant's allowance, death grant, non-resident's allowance and housing rent subsidy. In addition, certain additional reimbursements for field staff were authorized.

Secondary dependant's allowance. At its July/August session,⁽¹⁾ ICSC confirmed existing rules on eligibility for this allowance, which was payable to all Professional staff, as well as to General Service staff at many duty stations, when a father, mother, brother or sister received substantial financial support from the staff member. In so doing, it did not accept the position of staff representatives that, for General Service staff, this should be considered as a social benefit applicable at all duty stations whether or not a similar benefit was paid by outside employers at a given location.. Instead, the Commission decided that it should be paid only at duty stations where local practice called for such payment, in amounts determined by surveys of local pay scales. It also decided to study variations in eligibility criteria among outside employers at different duty stations, but in the mean time to apply universal criteria for all categories of staff everywhere. In cases where the allowance was currently being paid at duty stations where no local practice existed, or for persons not meeting universal eligibility standards, payments would continue to staff already receiving them but new staff, joining on 1 September 1983 or later, would have the entitlement only within the framework of local practice and the criteria decided by ICSC.

Death grant. Regarding this grant, payable to a survivor when a staff member died in service, ICSC, at its July/August session, recommended to the General Assembly the retention of the current scheme, whereby all costs (averaging $897,188 a year for the United Nations system) were met by the employing organization. It concluded that this would be more cost-effective than two other options-a 50-50 sharing of costs by organizations and staff, and a scheme arranged through an insurance company.

The Assembly, which in 1980 had requested ICSC to review the possibility of establishing a cost-effective contributory scheme,⁽⁷⁾ approved the ICSC recommendation in resolution 38/232 of 20 December 1983.

Non-resident's allowance. Also in resolution 38/232, the Assembly noted an ICSC decision to modify the non-resident's allowance, payable to internationally recruited General Service staff at selected duty stations in Africa and Asia. As decided by ICSC at its July/August session, this allowance was to be granted for a fixed duration of five years from time of arrival and was to be non-pensionable. The amount, set in comparison with the assignment allowance received by Professional staff in similar circumstances, was to be $3,000 a year for staff with dependants and $2,400 a year for others. To protect acquired rights, allowances already being paid would not be reduced, but a staff member who opted for the new scheme in order to receive a higher allowance would have to accept the conditions of duration and non-pensionability.

The Assembly decided that the allowance, formerly pensionable, would be made non-pensionable for the time being, pending the outcome of a review by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board.

Housing rent subsidy. With effect from 1 April 1983, ICSC decided in March to extend the existing rent subsidy scheme for Professional staff to Headquarters and other duty stations not previously covered. Under the expanded scheme, applicable to newly appointed staff and those transferred from other duty stations, the United Nations or other employing organization would pay, for up to five years, a share of the amount by which the staff member's rent exceeded a "threshold rent". The subsidy would also be paid, but only for three years, when a staff member was obliged to rent new housing for reasons beyond his or her control, such as building demolition, eviction, or conversion of the dwelling to co-operative or condominium. The subsidy would decrease from 80 per cent of the difference the first year to 20 per cent in the fifth year. ICSC noted that the scheme would not cost the organizations extra money and might even result in savings, because the subsidies would tend to keep post adjustment rates down.

Noting this scheme in resolution 38/232, the Assembly requested ICSC to monitor it so as to ensure equity and effectiveness.

At its July/August session, ICSC agreed on a trial basis to grant a housing rent subsidy to internationally recruited General Service staff at high-rent duty stations where no non-resident's allowance was being paid. The annual subsidy would not exceed the limits fixed for that allowance—$3,000 for staff with dependants and $2,400 for others. ICSC instructed its secretariat to study the problem and report back with proposals in 1984.

Field staff. Also at that session, ICSC decided that, effective 1 September, United Nations organizations should reimburse their field staff for pre-departure hotel expenses incurred when they left a non-headquarters duty station. Reimbursement was to be limited to 10 days and to 60 per cent of the daily subsistence allowance payable at that duty station, and to half of that rate for dependants. The Commission also approved reimbursement of the costs of basic medical examinations for family members accompanying staff assigned to countries where the majority of duty stations were classified as having adverse health conditions, up to a limit of $150 per staff member every two years. The annual cost of these two measures for the United Nations system was estimated at $200,000 for the first and $150,000 for the second.

Pensions

To improve the financial situation of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, the General Assembly decided in 1983 to raise the contribution rates of organizations of the United Nations system and their staff. The change, recommended by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, marked the first increase in contribution rates since the Fund was established in 1946.⁽⁸⁾

The Assembly also decided to defer any increase in pensionable remuneration which might become due in 1984 as a result of the operation of the automatic formula that adjusted pension entitlements of serving staff to cost-of-living changes. The effect was to freeze such entitlements for Professional and top echelon staff of the international civil service until the Assembly re-examined the matter in 1984, following consideration by the Pension Board and ICSC.

As at 31 December 1983, the number of participants in the Pension Fund had risen by 1,466 since the same date in 1982, to 52,432. The increase was due in part to the impact of an amendment to the Regulations of the Fund approved by the General Assembly in December 1982, whereby participation in the Fund began upon commencing six months rather than one year of service with a participating Organization.⁽⁹⁾

During 1983, the principal of the Fund increased by $352,363,028, to $3,115,548,779. On 31 December, the Fund was paying 7,001 retirement benefits, 7,065 early and deferred retirement benefits, 2,402 widows' and widowers' benefits, 3,937 children's benefits, 454 disability benefits and 40 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the year, it also paid 3,579 lump-sum withdrawal and other settlements.

Pension Board activities. The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board held its thirty-first session in London from 4 to 14 July 1983.⁽¹⁰⁾ Its Standing Committee met in New York from 4 to 6 October to make recommendations to the General Assembly on certain adjustments in the pension scheme for the international civil service.⁽¹¹⁾ These tripartite bodies—composed of representatives of the international civil service (participants), administrations of organizations in the United Nations system (employers) and inter-governmental bodies of the organizations—continued to oversee the Fund's operations.

The major item dealt with by the Board was the financial situation of the Fund, as measured by the actuarial balance, comparing projections of future income and anticipated benefit payments. The Board made recommendations to improve the existing imbalance, going beyond economy measures approved by the Assembly in December 1982.⁽⁹⁾ It also devoted considerable attention to the management of the Fund's investments. In addition, it recommended a 1984 administrative budget and an addition to the 1983 budget, and dealt with miscellaneous matters pertaining to the functioning of the pension system, including the development of a cost-of-living index for pensioners.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/233.

Report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board
The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for 1983 to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Welcoming the improvement in the actuarial situation of the Fund as a result of the economy measures applied with effect from 1 January 1983,

Concerned at the continuing actuarial imbalance of the Fund and the mounting cost of the pension system,

Desirous of bringing about a further improvement in the actuarial situation of the Fund,

Concerned at the different evolution over the years of the levels of pensionable remuneration for staff in the Professional and higher categories and those of the comparator civil service,

Recalling its resolutions 3526(XXX) of 16 December 1975, 31/196 of 22 December 1976, 33/120 of 19 December 1978, 34/221 of 20 December 1979, 35/215 of 17 December 1980, 36/118 of 10 December 1981 and 37/131 of 17 December 1982,

Bearing in mind earlier General Assembly resolutions which stated, inter alia, that changes in the pension adjustment system should not lead to increases in the liabilities of Member States,

Conscious that a number of factors have combined to make necessary the consideration and adoption of significant remedial actions on the problem of the actuarial imbalance, including the raising of the rate of contributions hereinafter referred to,

Mindful of the social aspects of the pension system,

Aware that a co-operative effort by member organizations, participants and beneficiaries is required if the actuarial imbalance is to be reduced or eliminated, thereby securing an adequate level of benefits under the Fund,

I

Amendments to the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

1. Decides that, with effect from 1 January 1984, the rate of contributions shall be raised from 21 to 21.75 per

2. Amends the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, without retroactive effect, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

II

Measures to improve the actuarial balance of the Fund

3. Further requests the International Civil Service Commission, in examining the comparative levels of pensionable remuneration in co-operation with the Board, to compare the levels of pension entitlements in the light of all the factors it brought to the attention of the General Assembly in its fifth annual report. as part of the total compensation comparisons to be carried out within the framework of the Noblemaire principle, and to report thereon to the Assembly by the beginning of its thirty-ninth session on the basis of the latest data available in 1984;

4. Decides that the implementation of any adjustment which may become due in 1984 on the basis of article 54 (b) of the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund shall be deferred until the General Assembly, at its thirty-ninth session, has considered the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission and the Board on the level of pensionable remuneration;

5. Decides further that, if the General Assembly is unable to take a decision on the level of pensionable remuneration at its thirty-ninth session, it will re-examine at that session the question of the deferment of implementation of adjustments which become due under article 54 (b) of the Regulations of the Fund;

6. Requests the Board, in the light of the recommendations on the level of pensionable remuneration, to recommend to the General Assembly, at its thirty-ninth session, consequential amendments to article 54 (b) of the Regulations of the Fund;

Complementary Pension Scheme of the International Labour Organisation

Draws the attention of the International Labour Organisation to the strong concern expressed during the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly about the need to maintain the unity, cohesion and integrity of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension system and to avoid any action which may have an adverse effect on the said system;

V

Emergency Fund

Authorizes the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to supplement the voluntary contributions to the Emergency Fund, for a further period of one year, by an amount not exceeding $100,000;

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 127-10-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/746) by vote (78-9-2), 16 December (meeting 68); draft by vice-Chairman (A/C.5/38/L.24), based on informal consultations: agenda item 118.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 5th Committee 28, 33, 36, 38, 45, 68; plenary 104.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Cuba.

Explaining its negative vote, the USSR disagreed in principle with any increase in Member States' contributions to the pension scheme and stated that the economy measures proposed were inadequate to eliminate the actuarial imbalance.

Though voting in favour, Argentina voiced reservations regarding the decision to defer adjustments in pensionable remuneration. Benin was pleased that the text omitted mention of a higher retirement age and hoped the Pension Board would not reopen the subject. Kenya reserved its position on the specific issues which the Pension Board and ICSC were asked to study and which the Assembly was to consider in 1984.

The United Nations Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management told the Fifth Committee that representatives of the administrations and staff of organizations participating in the pension system were profoundly concerned at, and regarded as undesirable, unjustified and legally contestable, the decision to defer adjustments in pensionable remuneration. Expressing similar concern, the ICSC Chairman said the decision amounted to an amendment of the Regulations of the Pension Fund without consulting the participating organizations and without prior study.

The Fifth Committee annexed to its report to the Assembly on this item a paper⁽¹²⁾ containing statistical data on the evolution since 1971 of the levels of pensionable remuneration and retirement benefits of staff in the Professional and higher categories under the United Nations system and those of the United States federal civil service.

In other action pertaining to pensions, the Assembly, in resolution 38/239 of 20 December, amended the Pension Scheme Regulations of the International Court of Justice (ICJ), affecting members of the Court. Retirement income of certain other non-Secretariat officials was dealt with in a report by the Secretary-General (see under OTHER UN OFFICIALS below).

Pension Fund financing

Financial situation and amendments to the Regulations

An actuarial valuation of the Pension Fund as at 31 December 1982, performed by the Board's Consulting Actuary (George B. Buck Consulting Actuaries, Inc.), showed an improvement in the Fund's financial situation since the last such valuation two years previously. This was attributed largely to the latest economy measures, which took effect on 1 January 1983. However, calculations based on seven different sets of assumptions about salaries, interest earnings and inflation rates for pensions after retirement all indicated that the current contribution rates would be insufficient to meet the Fund's long-run obligations to pensioners.

Using a "regular valuation basis" designated by the Board's Committee of Actuaries, the Fund's imbalance was found to be 4.79 per cent, down from 7.32 per cent two years previously. This figure represented the amount by which contributions to the Fund by participants and their employing organizations would have to be increased above the current rate of 21 per cent of pensionable remuneration (14 per cent by organizations and 7 per cent by staff) in order to restore the balance.

After reviewing these results, the Committee of Actuaries recommended three steps to improve the Fund's financial situation: a gradual increase in the contribution rate to 24 per cent of pensionable remuneration, a higher age for mandatory retirement and consideration of further reducing early retirement benefits.

The Board accepted the first two of these proposals. It recommended that the Assembly approve a 3 per cent increase in the contribution rate, to take place in four equal stages of 0.75 per cent each, starting on 1 January 1984 and continuing every two years until 1 January 1990, by which time it would reach 24 per cent. The organizations would pay two thirds of the increase (about $8.6 million a year for the first round) and the employees one third (about $4.3 million). The Board also reaffirmed its 1981 recommendation that the mandatory retirement age be raised from 60 to 62 years⁽¹³⁾ (see also STAFF COMPOSITION above). However, it decided not to endorse the Committee's third recommendation, citing the advantages of the Fund's liberal early retirement provisions for the organizations and staff alike.

Commenting on these proposals in its November 1983 report to the Assembly on pensions,⁽¹⁴⁾ ACABQ agreed in principle that the contribution rate should be increased, in view of what it saw as the likelihood that the imbalance would progressively worsen if left uncorrected. However, it recommended that the Assembly initially approve only the first of the proposed increases and request the Board to review the situation on the basis of the December 1984 actuarial valuation, making any further increases subject to prior Assembly confirmation.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/233, decided on a 0.75 rise in the contribution rate with effect from 1 January 1984 but made no reference to possible future increases. It requested the Board to review various proposals to improve the actuarial situation and to report back in 1984.

The Assembly also approved several amendments to the Regulations of the Fund intended to correct anomalies resulting from the package of economy measures it had adopted in 1982. These changes were recommended by the Pension Board's Standing Committee, which met in October at the Board's request to study this problem.⁽¹¹⁾ The Consulting Actuary informed the Standing Committee that these adjustments would have an extremely small financial impact.

The amendments provided for clarification or corrective action in three areas.

The first related to the reduced annual rate of accumulation of pension benefits for persons entering the Fund on or after 1 January 1982-1.5 per cent during the first five years of service, 1.75 during the next five and 2 per cent thereafter up to a career maximum of 25 years. For those entering prior to 1 January 1983, the rate was 2 per cent during the first 30 years and 1 per cent thereafter up to a career maximum of 35 years. Under the new amendments, participants with broken service periods, such as technical assistance experts rehired for a series of projects, would have those periods added together for the purpose of determining the accumulation rate, rather than having to stay indefinitely at the 1.5 per cent rate until they had five years of continuous service. However, persons who had not been participants during the five years following 1 January 1978 would be treated as new entrants if they rejoined after 1 January 1983.

The second change related to the provision limiting to five years the length of prior service which a person returning to the United Nations system after a break could have restored to his or her service record for pension purposes. The new amendments provided that, if the break in service was no more than 12 months, service would not be deemed to have been interrupted.

The third change related to a provision that, if persons leaving the system before age 50 elected to receive a deferred pension instead of withdrawing their full entitlement in a lump sum, cost-of-living adjustments would not be applied to the value of that pension until the prospective recipients reached 50 years of age. The new amendments allowed all persons affected by this provision, and who had been separated before 1 January 1983, to choose again between a deferred benefit and a withdrawal settlement. If they chose the latter, they would receive the amount they would have been given on separation plus 6.5 per cent compounded interest, corresponding to the Fund's average investment return.

Investments

The market value of Pension Fund investments stood at $3,519,891,000 as at 31 December 1983, compared to $2,975,117,000 a year earlier. Income of the Fund from interest and dividends during 1983, less investment management costs, was $203,670,000.

According to a report of the Secretary-General on the Fund's investments for the 12 months ended 31 March, submitted to the Fifth Committee in October,⁽¹⁵⁾ the investment return for the year was 27.05 per cent, the highest ever recorded for the Fund. Over the preceding 33 years, the book value of the investment portfolio had risen from $13 million to $2,790 million, a compound increase of 18 per cent a year. The report said that a turnaround in investment market conditions, sparked by falling interest rates, had been largely responsible for the high rate of return in 1982/83.

During the preceding two years, the report stated, emphasis had been placed on investments in the United States, where yields had been higher than elsewhere. The non-dollar portion of the Fund's portfolio, which had stood at 40 per cent in 1982, had declined to 38 per cent by 31 March 1983. Investment in equities (stocks) amounted to 52 per cent of the portfolio's market value, compared with 47 per cent a year earlier, the shift from bonds having been made in response to the sharp rebound in the equity market.

In a section of the report on implementation of General Assembly resolutions, the Secretary-General said that funds from investment income and contributions were sufficient to cover increasing investment in developing countries without resorting to sale of transnational corporation stocks. As at 30 June 1983, development-related investments had reached $554 million at cost, up from $481 million a year earlier, and represented 19.2 per cent of total investments. Most of these ($344 million in 1982, rising to $421 million in 1983) were in international development institutions rather than directly invested in specific countries. Investments in Africa had risen to $50.2 million from $27.6 million.

The Pension Board reviewed the investments picture in July. During the discussion, according to its report to the Assembly,⁽¹⁰⁾ particular emphasis was placed on diversification as a means of ensuring the integrity of the Fund's assets and on the requirement that all investments meet strict criteria. In deciding to recommend a gradual increase in the rates of contribution to the Fund (see above), the Board took note of the fact that the inflation-adjusted rate of return over the previous 23 years had been only 1.3 per cent annually.

Following a recommendation by the Board of Auditors that the administration make maximum use of the latest technology for portfolio analysis, provision for subscriptions to computerized economic data services was included in the Fund's 1984 administrative budget, as approved by the Assembly in December 1983 (see next section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Decision 38/452 was adopted without vote by the General Assembly on a recommendation of the Fifth Committee.

Investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

Secretary-General on the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund.

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/746) without vote, 115 December (meeting 68); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 118.

Meeting numbers GA 38th session: 5th Committee 28, 33, 36, 38, 45, 68; plenary 104.

Budgets for 1983 and 1984

In resolution 38/233 of 20 December 1983, the General Assembly approved an additional $17,700 in regard to the administrative expenses of the Pension Fund in 1983, and a total of $6,723,100 for 1984. These two amounts, net of staff assessment, were recommended by the Pension Board⁽¹⁰⁾ and endorsed by ACABQ.⁽¹⁴⁾ The 1983 increase, raising estimated expenses for the year to $5,973,000, was attributed to a rise in investment costs, partly offset by administrative savings due to vacant posts. The $750,100 increase between 1983 and 1984 was attributed mainly to an increase in advisory and custodial fees due to the assumed higher market value of the Fund's investment portfolio.

The Fund's secretariat was to be increased to 84 posts by the conversion of 5 temporary positions to established posts. In addition, one new post, for a data collection and management information supervisor, was to be added to the Investment Management Section of the Office of the United Nations Controller, raising its complement to 11.

Accounts for 1982

The Board of Auditors, in its report on the 1982 accounts of the Pension Fund annexed to the Pension Board's 1983 report,⁽¹⁰⁾ made several recommendations to improve financial and administrative management, including a suggestion that the Fund strengthen procedures to verify that beneficiaries were still alive. The Pension Board, though concluding that existing verification arrangements were adequate, requested its Secretary to keep the matter under review. On another point, it accepted the Auditors' suggestion that the Fund's Administrative Manual be amended to specify the responsibility of the United Nations Internal Audit Service for internal audit of all operational and financial aspects of the Fund.

Cost-of-living index

In resolution 38/232 of 20 December 1983, the General Assembly approved the development of a special index for pensioners to replace the post adjustment index used since 1981 to determine cost-of-living adjustments to benefits paid to retired staff members living at different locations.

A method for applying such an index was recommended in 1983 by both the Pension

Board⁽¹⁰⁾ and ICSC,⁽¹⁾ in response to a 1980 Assembly request that the matter be given high priority.⁽¹⁶⁾ The purpose was to have an index reflecting the expenditure patterns of retirees, rather than to rely for pension adjustments on the post adjustment index, which was designed to measure the purchasing power of the salaries of serving staff.

According to the approach recommended by the two bodies and accepted by the Assembly, the special index would initially exclude the impact of national income tax. However, for locations where the index indicated the need to raise pension payments, the cost-of-living differential would be lowered where pension income was not taxed or was taxed at a substantially lower rate than in New York. ICSC found that this approach would be less costly to the Pension Fund than if the special index automatically took account of national income tax along with costs relating to consumables, housing and similar factors.

Work on developing a special index for pensioners continued in ACPAQ, which at its May/June session expressed the view that more case studies were needed to judge the effects of such an index. Initial studies by the ICSC secretariat, based on four high-cost locations, showed few differences between the results given by the special index and the post adjustment index, but ACPAQ felt that it could not draw conclusions from such a small sample.

Other pension questions

The Pension Board, in its 1983 report,⁽¹⁰⁾ responded to 1982 requests by the Assembly⁽⁹⁾ that it consider two types of problems relating to the financial obligations of pensioners to their spouses or former spouses: the absence of effective measures within the pension scheme for dealing with such obligations, and the effects of the dissolution of a marriage on survivors' entitlements. The Board expressed the view that such questions should be left to national tribunals. This view was endorsed by ACABQ in its report on pensions.⁽¹⁴⁾

In response to another 1982 request by the Assembly,⁽⁹⁾ the Board informed it that few persons employed by United Nations organizations for periods of at least six months were expressly excluded, by the terms of their appointment, from participation in the Pension Fund. Consequently, it saw no need to change the Fund regulation allowing such exclusion.

The Board also reported that it had discussed a proposal being considered by ILO for a complementary pension scheme to provide additional coverage for ILO Professional staff. The balance of opinion in the Board was that the Board could not support the proposal, primarily because nothing should be done to jeopardize efforts to improve the Pension Fund's actuarial status. The Board's concern was shared by ACABQ,⁽¹⁴⁾ which stated that, if organizations participating in the Fund adopted complementary schemes, the costs to both organizations and participants would be significantly higher.

In written comments on personnel questions circulated to the Fifth Committee,⁽²⁾ FICSA urged flexibility that would allow individual organizations to resolve local issues.

In resolution 38/233 of 20 December, the Assembly drew the attention of ILO to the strong concern expressed in the Assembly about the need to maintain the unity, cohesion and integrity of the existing pension system and to avoid any action that might adversely affect it.

Other fringe benefits

Health insurance

In December 1983, the General Assembly, responding to rising health insurance costs which especially affected staff at United Nations Headquarters, approved the experimental use of a formula devised by ICSC authorizing the Organization to pay a larger share of the premiums than the 50-50 ratio between employer and employee payments which had been the previous norm.

ICSC considered this issue in March and July/August,⁽¹⁾ in response to a December 1982 request by the Assembly that it examine the need to raise the ratio of the organizations' contributions for the health insurance of their staff.⁽¹⁷⁾ It agreed that the matter should be considered from the point of view of all staff of the United Nations system at all duty stations. On behalf of the organizations, the Chairman of CCAQ had taken the position that, as several organizations had no problem with the 50-50 share in effect at most locations while others proposed a 2 to 1 ratio, the matter should not be pursued on an inter-agency basis.

ICSC noted that the 50-50 ratio had produced satisfactory results in most instances, but that some organizations had experienced serious difficulties because of high health-care costs at one or more locations. The health insurance contribution was a relatively small part of total compensation for all categories of staff. Nevertheless, whereas the staff contribution amounted to about 3 per cent of net salary for staff with dependants at Geneva and Vienna, it was above 6 per cent in New York, indicating apparent difficulties with the 50-50 formula at that location.

ICSC decided to supply organization heads with figures showing average staff contributions for health insurance as a proportion of total remuneration, weighted by the number of staff at the seven headquarters locations of the United Nations system. Where the ratio was above average, it said, those officials might wish to propose to their legislative bodies cost-sharing formulae that would reduce the staff share to a level in line with the average.

The Secretary-General, in an October note to the Fifth Committee,⁽¹⁸⁾ endorsed the ICSC recommendations, while observing that he would have preferred the world-wide application of a 2 to 1 ratio. He proposed that the new rate take effect on 1 January 1983 rather than 1 January 1984 as recommended by ICSC. He estimated the additional cost, for the United Nations regular budget and extrabudgetary programmes, at $1.8 million in 1983, $3.8 million in 1984 and $4.9 million in 1985. He also proposed, with the Assembly's concurrence, to liberalize eligibility requirements for after-service health insurance.

In support of the argument for an increase in the organizations' contributions, he noted that between May 1978 and April 1983, while the cost of living had risen by 49 per cent in New York, the cost of health insurance under the commercially insured Headquarters plans had gone up by an average of 123 per cent. A similar increase had occurred in respect of the world-wide plan for United Nations system staff, while smaller increases had been recorded at Geneva and Vienna. At Headquarters, staff were paying an average of 2.9 per cent of their net remuneration for health insurance to cover themselves alone or 6.4 per cent for family coverage, compared to a world-wide average for United Nations staff of 1.9 per cent for individual coverage and 3.8 per cent for families.

In a November report to the Assembly on this subject,⁽¹⁹⁾ ACABQ endorsed the ICSC cost-sharing formula with effect from January 1984. It further recommended that ICSC be invited to review the formula's application and report in 1985 on any required modifications.

As to the Secretary-General's proposals to implement the ICSC formula by raising the United Nations health insurance contribution for Headquarters staff, ACABQ concurred with his intention to report on the costs after they occurred rather than to seek additional appropriations immediately. It recommended that the method of charging Headquarters staff on a sliding scale whereby the United Nations paid between 10 and 90 per cent of a given staff member's insurance premium depending on salary level—be re-examined to keep a constant average ratio between salary and health insurance payments by staff. It offered no objection to the Secretary-General's proposals on after-service insurance but suggested that the financing of the scheme be kept under review.

In written comments on personnel questions circulated to the Fifth Committee, FICSA supported steps to alleviate the problems experienced by New York staff, stressed the need for equal representation by staff and administration in the management of health insurance schemes, and urged a thorough review of health insurance questions, including benefits and after-service coverage.⁽²⁾ The Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations Secretariat welcomed the Secretary-General's initiative and expressed the view that the Organization should bear 75 per cent of health insurance costs.⁽²⁰⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The ICSC formula and ACABQ recommendations were approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/235 of 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote on the Fifth Committee's recommendation.

Health insurance contributions by the organizations of the United Nations common system

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Civil Service Commission on health insurance contributions by the organizations of the United Nations common system as well as the note by the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Civil Service Commission and the note by the Secretary-General;

2. Approves the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in paragraphs 23 to 25 of its report;

3. Decides that, in applying the formula recommended by the International Civil Service Commission and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, a maximum ratio of 2 to 1 between the share of the organization and the contributor, respectively, will be used, on an experimental basis, until the study requested in paragraph 5 below is submitted to the General Assembly;

4. Requests the International Civil Service Commission, as a matter of priority, to study the possibility of providing a range of health insurance plans, including practices in the comparator service, both, basic and comprehensive, with deductible clauses, as well as health maintenance organization plans, which could be made available, at lower costs, to contributors, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Further requests the International Civil Service Commission to study the following related matters and to report thereon to the General Assembly, preferably at its thirty-ninth session and not later than at its fortieth session:

(a) Fixing a maximum rate for the share to be borne by the organization and by the contributor;

(b) Making participation in a health insurance plan or plans of the organization mandatory, especially to those who are not covered by other plans.

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 126-9-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/760 & Corr.1) by vote (70-7-12), 7 December (meeting 58); draft by Egypt (A/C.5/38/L.16): agenda item 109.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Abstaining: France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Japan, Romania, United Kingdom, United States.

After the Fifth Committee approved the draft, the United States withdrew a draft it had submitted.⁽²¹⁾ Rather than approving the ICSC formula, the United States proposal would have had the Assembly request the Commission to follow United States federal civil service practice on the employer-employee contribution ratio, study the experience of that service in providing a range of health insurance plans and report back in 1984 with advice on the possible application of its studies to the United Nations system.

The USSR expressed preference for the United States draft and said the matter should be studied further before the contribution ratio was altered. The United States said the Assembly decision to approve the ACABQ recommendations should not take precedence over its approval of a 2-to-1 ratio on an experimental basis. Canada voiced satisfaction that the Assembly had faced the problem of the high cost of health insurance and was moving towards agreement on a ratio.

In another action relating to health insurance, the Assembly, in resolution 38/232 of 20 December, requested ICSC to review after-service health-care coverage with particular attention to locally recruited field staff.

UN Administrative Tribunal

Activities of the Tribunal

The United Nations Administrative Tribunal delivered 20 judgements during 1983 in cases brought by staff members against the Secretary-General or the executive heads of other organizations in the United Nations system with respect to claims arising under labour contracts. They concerned such personnel management matters as compensation, disability, promotion and tax reimbursement on pensions.

The Tribunal met in special plenary session on 9 June at Geneva and in annual plenary session on 26 October in New York. It also held two panel sessions, 16 May to 10 June (Geneva) and 3 to 28 October (New York). In accordance with past practice, it submitted a note to the General Assembly outlining its activities for the year.⁽¹⁾

The Assembly's Committee on Applications for Review of Administrative Tribunal Judgements, at the final meeting of its twenty-second session (New York, 14 December 1982 and 4-16 February 1983),⁽²⁾ adopted rules of procedure incorporating a number of amendments designed to meet concerns about some Tribunal procedures expressed by ICJ in its July 1982 advisory opinion reviewing Tribunal Judgement No. 273 of 1981 (Ivor Peter Mortished v. the United Nations Secretary-General).⁽³⁾ Three new rules required the Committee to work in closed session except for public meetings at which its decisions were to be announced, to elect a Chairman and a Rapporteur, and to have its Secretary prepare verbatim records of its proceedings on any case on which it decided to request an advisory opinion. Other changes concerned details of the form and processing of applications by staff members.

Co-ordination with the ILO Administrative Tribunal

Consultations continued in 1983 among legal advisers of organizations in the United Nations system on proposals to improve co-ordination between the United Nations Administrative Tribunal and the ILO Administrative Tribunal. According to a report by the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly's Fifth Committee in October,⁽⁴⁾ considerable agreement was reached on a number of proposed reforms designed to improve and/or harmonize the proceedings of the two Tribunals. He proposed to prepare proposals on the instruments governing the Tribunals and their practices, consult on them with organization and staff representatives, and submit the proposed reforms in 1984 to the Assembly and ILO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly acted on this report by adopting without vote decision 38/409, as recommended by the Fifth Committee.

Feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal

At its 71st plenary meeting, on 25 November 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal;

(b) Requested the Secretary-General to accelerate the necessary consultations and to report thereon to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/587) without vote, 10 November (meeting 33); oral proposal by Chairman, orally amended by Spain; agenda item 112 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 5th Committee 16, 24, 33; plenary 71.

Paragraph (b) of this decision was added in Committee on an oral proposal by Spain, accepted without vote.

Travel

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly's Fifth Committee in October 1983⁽¹⁾ on actions taken regarding 1982 JIU recommendation@ to improve the organization and methods for United Nations-financed travel by its staff and other officials. The report had been requested by the Assembly in December 1982.⁽³⁾

The principal step was the selection, on a competitive basis, of a new agency to handle official travel arrangements at United Nations Headquarters. As a result, Don Travel Services replaced Thomas Cook Travel, with a three-year contract effective 1 November 1983. The United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund joined in the contract. The agent was to reimburse the three organizations a total of $350,000 a year for facilities and services they provided to it.

On related matters, the Secretary-General reported that: negotiations with national airlines on fare discounts had been mentioned as a possibility by six States in response to a Secretariat questionnaire sent to all permanent missions of United Nations Member States and non-members; obstacles to establishing a United Nations travel agency remained but the situation would continue to be monitored; action was being initiated to review contracts with travel agencies at United Nations offices overseas; revised administrative instructions on staff travel had been issued, introducing the use of business class in place of first class for certain flights and making greater use of excursion fares; and recommendations on travel procedures were being studied.

In another October report,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Fifth Committee of 81 cases in which first-class air travel had been allowed in exercise of his discretion during the year ended 30 June 1983, under circumstances in which a less costly mode was not considered appropriate. According to the report, the latest in an annual series, $372,623 had been saved during the year covered, through implementation of a 1977 Assembly resolution limiting first-class travel of United Nations officials.⁽⁵⁾

Further information on these matters was furnished by ACABQ in a November report to the Assembly.⁽⁶⁾

Allowances and pensions

The General Assembly decided in December 1983 to defer until 1984 consideration of proposals by the Secretary-General to increase certain allowances payable to the Chairman of ACABQ and the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of ICSC.

The proposals were made by the Secretary-General in a November report to the Fifth Committee reviewing the compensation and fringe benefits paid to these three officials and to ICJ members.⁽¹⁾ They called for: a $3,000 increase in the special allowance for the two Chairmen, currently $5,000 a year, and a $2,000 allowance for the ICSC Vice-Chairman, who currently did not receive one; reimbursement of education costs and related travel of the children of the three officials, similar to the education grant for staff; a relocation allowance payable on completion of their appointment; and an installation allowance for newly appointed officials.

Also, as the three officials had joined the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund with effect from 1 January 1983 under a change in the Regulations of the Fund approved by the Assembly in December 1982,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General proposed a United Nations contribution to the Fund representing the Organization's share of the pension entitlements related to the officials' service prior to that date.

The Secretary-General estimated the total cost of these measures at $379,100 for 1984-1985, of which the other organizations sharing the cost of ICSC would pay $128,600 in relation to its officers.

Although recommending that action be deferred on those aspects of the Secretary-General's proposals pertaining to increased benefits for the three officials, the Fifth Committee, on 15 December, approved without vote appropriations in the 1984-1985 budget to cover the pension contributions he had proposed. These amounted to $160,100 for the ICSC officials and $81,300 for the ACABQ Chairman, with $95,700 of the former figure to be reimbursed by other organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly adopted section XVII of resolution 38/234 without vote on 20 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee.

Chapter IV

Other administrative and management questions

The General Assembly, in 1983, adopted a number of resolutions on matters related to conferences, meetings and documentation. It approved the calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations for 1984-1985 (38/32 A), approving a change of venue for the 1984 regular sessions of three of the regional commissions; and requested the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the Committee on Conferences the summary of the discussion in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on the pattern of conferences (38/32 C). By other resolutions, it dealt with the shortening of sessions or adoption of a biennial cycle for sessions of United Nations organs (38/32 D) and with control and limitation of documentation (38/32 E). In addition, it requested information on conference-servicing resources (38/32 F). With the three-year term of the members of the Committee on Conferences expiring at the end of 1983, the Assembly President was requested to appoint 22 Member States for the term starting 1 January 1984 (38/32 B). Most of these actions were taken on the recommendation of the Committee on Conferences.

In December, the Fifth Committee approved additional appropriations for conference services in 1984 totalling $7,340,000.

Improvements to United Nations premises in various parts of the world—notably the office accommodation and common services at Nairobi, Kenya—were considered, and actions taken, by the Assembly in December.

As part of continuing efforts to strengthen co-ordination of information systems in United Nations organizations and agencies, an inter-agency Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems was established in March. The Committee on Information and the Assembly's Special Political Committee reviewed an interim report on acquiring a United Nations communications satellite, and the 1984 budget estimates for the International Computing Centre at Geneva were approved.

Gross revenue from the sale of philatelic items totalled over $6 million in 1983. In December, the Assembly allocated half of the net revenues from the sale of a special issue of postage stamps to the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) to finance projects to conserve and protect nature and endangered species (38/228 A).

Conferences and meetings

The work of the 22-member Committee on Conferences in 1983 focused on five main areas: calendar of conferences; control and limitation of documentation; utilization of conference resources; further improvements in conference services facilities in 1984-1985; and evaluation of the preparation and holding of United Nations special conferences.

In 1983, the Committee held two series of five meetings each, between 2 and 6 May and between 24 and 31 August. In its report on the session,⁽¹⁾ it submitted five draft resolutions to the General Assembly. The Assembly, on 25 November, adopted without vote six resolutions (38/32 A-F) relating to various aspects of the work of the Committee (see below).

Calendar of meetings

By a note of 21 April 1983 to the Committee on Conferences,⁽²⁾ the United Nations Secretariat submitted data on the utilization of conference resources by subsidiary bodies of the Assembly in 1980-1982, with the recommendation that the Committee might wish to identify those for which adjustments in the duration of their sessions appeared to be appropriate.

After considering the matter at its 1983 session, the Committee recommended two draft resolutions on the subject for the Assembly's consideration (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1983, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 28/32 C without vote.

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly

1. Requests the Committee on Conferences to examine the provisions of section I of General Assembly resolution 31/140 of 17 December 1976, as well as all other provisions relating to the pattern of conferences, and to report to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

II. Requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the Committee on Conferences the summary of the discussion in the Fifth Committee during the current session on the item entitled "Pattern of conferences", including the text of all amendments proposed to draft resolution C recommended by the Committee on Conferences in paragraph 4 of its report.

General Assembly resolution 38/32 C

25 November 1983 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/585) without vote, 2 November [meeting 25]; draft by Chairman (A/C.5/38/L.6, para. 2), based on informal consultations on draft by Committee on Conferences (A/38/32): agenda item 114.
Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 5th Committee 4, 8, 9, 25; plenary 71.

On the same date, again on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/32 D without vote.

Shortening of sessions or adoption of a biennial cycle for sessions of United Nations organs

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 32/71, section IV, and 32/72 of 9 December 1977 and 35/10 A of 3 November 1980,

Concerned at the serious under-utilization of conference resources by United Nations organs,

1. Takes note of the proposals submitted by the Committee on Conferences designed to relieve the overloading of conference services;

2. Invites the Committee on Conferences to pursue further its consultations with the officers of those organs which have over the past three years utilized 75 per cent or less of the conference resources made available to them, with a view to adjusting the length of their sessions accordingly;

3. Requests its subsidiary organs to consider, in the interests of greater efficiency, meeting and reporting on a biennial basis;

4. Requests United Nations organs, especially those which have over the past few years under-utilized the meeting time allocated to them, to consider at their organizational sessions the question of improving the organization of their work in order to secure a more effective use of conference resources and to put forward concrete proposals on this matter, including, where feasible, the shortening of sessions;

5. Invites United Nations organs to hold informal consultations with the aim of reaching agreement on organizational questions as well as on the composition of the bureaux before the opening of their substantive sessions.

General Assembly resolution 38/32 D

25 November 1983 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/585) without vote, 2 November (meeting 25); draft by Committee on Conferences (A/38/32), emended by Chairman (A/C.5/38/L.6, para. 3), based on informal consultations; agenda item 114.
Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 5th Committee 4, 8, 9, 25; plenary 71.

By the original draft on the pattern of conferences, as proposed by the Committee on Conferences, the Assembly would have reaffirmed the general principle that, in drawing up the schedule of conferences and meetings, United Nations bodies should plan to meet at their respective established headquarters, with the exception of sessions and meetings of the following: the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme; the International Law Commission; the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law; the Economic and Social Council (second regular session) and its functional commissions; the regional commissions (regular sessions), except for the Economic Commission for Europe, and their subsidiary bodies; the International Civil Service Commission; the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space; and the Committee on Disarmament.

The Assembly further would have: decided that United Nations bodies might hold sessions away from their headquarters when a Government issuing an invitation had agreed to defray the actual additional costs, and that, as a general principle, invitations from specialized agencies to United Nations bodies should not be encouraged; reaffirmed its instruction to all its subsidiary organs to complete their reports for the following Assembly session not later than 1 September; requested the Secretary-General to provide interpretation services for informal meetings on an ad hoc basis as resources permitted and authorized him to apply maximum overprogramming of meetings to achieve better utilization of conference resources.

The Assembly would have requested the Committee on Conferences and the Secretary-General to take account of the following principles in drawing up the draft calendar of conferences: the biennial calendar approved by the Assembly should govern the meetings programme; all United Nations meetings should be carried out within the resources allocated; between Assembly sessions, departures from the calendar might in special circumstances be approved by the Committee; subsidiary organs should not without Assembly approval create new standing bodies or ad hoc sessional or inter-sessional bodies requiring additional resources; an adequate time interval should be allowed between sessions of the same bodies to permit Member States to derive maximum benefit from the activities and to provide sufficient time for preparation of future activities; United Nations bodies should in general meet at their headquarters; only one United Nations special conference should be convened at any one time; and, in one year, no more than five special conferences, i.e. no more than one in each of the five fields of activity (political, scientific, economic, social, legal), should be convened.

The original draft resolution on shortening of sessions or a biennial cycle for sessions of United Nations organs, as proposed by the Committee on Conferences, did not contain paragraph 5. The original paragraph 4 differed from that adopted in that the phrases "especially those" and "this matter, including, where feasible" were not included.

Calendar for 1983

In 1983, the Committee on Conferences approved two inter-sessional departures from the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1983 which involved financial implications. The changes concerned the venue and dates of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine (see p. 275), and an additional session in New York in September of the Group of Experts on All Aspects of the Conventional Arms Race and on Disarmament relating to Conventional Weapons and Armed Forces (see p. 65).

By approving these changes, the Committee followed requests by the United Nations Secretariat in notes of 20 June⁽³⁾ and 2 August.⁽⁴⁾

By letters of 15, 19 and 23 September,⁽⁵⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on Conferences informed the President of the General Assembly that he had received requests from a number of subsidiary organs of the Assembly asking to meet at United Nations Headquarters during the regular 1983 Assembly session in order to finalize their reports. He stated that the Committee did not object to those requests on the clear understanding that any meetings would have to be accommodated as facilities and services became available, so that the activities of the Assembly itself would not be adversely affected. He asked that the Assembly authorize additional meetings for the bodies which had requested them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly adopted decision 38/403 without vote.

Meetings of subsidiary organs during the thirty-eighth session

At its 3rd and 11th plenary meetings on 23 and 29 September 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the Committee on Conferences and of the General Committee, decided that the following subsidiary organs should be authorized to hold meetings during the thirty-eighth session:

- (a) Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;
- (b) Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/38/250) without vote, 21 September (meeting 1); proposals by Committee on Conferences (A/38/414 & Add.1,2) (Add.2 approved by Assembly); agenda item 8.

Meeting numbers GA 38th session: General Committee 1: plenary 3, 11.

Calendar for 1984-1985

A draft calendar of conferences and meetings of United Nations bodies for 1984-1985 was recommended by the Committee on Conferences at its 1983 session and was annexed to the Committee's report.⁽¹⁾ The General Assembly, by resolution 38/32 A, approved the calendar subject to later modifications it might make. Before adopting the resolution, the Assembly changed the Venues for the 1984 regular sessions of three of the regional commissions—the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1983/185, approved the calendar for its subsidiary and related bodies. Various aspects of the 1984-1985 calendar were also dealt with by the Council in decision 1983/184.

The Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) took similar action with regard to the UNCTAD calendars for the remainder of 1983, and for 1984-1985 (see p. 568).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1983, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/32 A without vote.

Report of the Committee on Conferences

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Conferences,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Conferences;

2. Approves the calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations for 1984-1985 as submitted by the Committee on Conferences, subject to any amendments as a result of subsequent decisions taken by the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate measures with a view to achieving maximum efficiency and effectiveness in the use of conference resources when implementing the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1984-1985.

25 November 1983 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/585) without vote, 2 November (meeting 25); draft by Committee on Conferences (A/38/32), amended by Chairman (A/C.5/38/L.6, para. 1), based on informal consultations. agenda item 114.

Financial implications. ACABQ, A/38/7/Add.10; 5th Committee, A/38/585/Add.1; S-G, A/C.5/38/31.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 5th Committee 4, 8, 9, 25, 46; plenary 71.

An amendment by the Chairman of the Fifth Committee replaced paragraph 3 of the draft proposed by the Committee on Conferences, by which the Assembly would have authorized the Committee on Conferences to make within approved resources adjustments to the calendar that might become necessary as a result of action and decisions by the Assembly at its 1983 session.

Before adopting the resolution, the Assembly approved the proposed venues of the 1984 regular sessions of ECA, ECLA and ESCAP by a recorded vote of 106 to 21, with 9 abstentions.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Comoros Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Italy, Luxembourg, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Poland, Portugal, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Norway, Sweden.

In taking that action, the Assembly followed the recommendation of the Fifth Committee which, on an oral proposal of its Chairman, had approved the venues on 2 November, by 65 votes to 18, with 14 abstentions. The venues, proposed by the Commissions concerned, were reflected in the report of the Committee on Conferences and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council (see p. 1005). On 23 November, by 69 votes to 19, with 12 abstentions, the Committee approved additional resources of $611,900 required for holding the sessions of those Commissions away from their headquarters. The Committee made these appropriations on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

Speaking in the Committee, the United States, which had requested the vote, took strong exception to the implications of the changed venues for the budget and said the way in which those implications had been submitted to the Committee was equally regrettable; the matter should have been referred to the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee first. Austria, however, said the changes had been approved by the Economic and Social Council and their financial implications were within the Fifth Committee's competence.

The USSR pointed out that host countries were required to defray the additional costs. A similar position was taken by the Netherlands and New Zealand. The Federal Republic of Germany thought it inconsistent to appropriate funds for expanding conference facilities on the one hand and for holding sessions of regional commissions away from their headquarters on the other. In a similar vein, Canada pointed out that new conference facilities were shortly to be installed at a number of headquarters; it intended to request the Economic and Social Council to review exceptions to the calendar of meetings in the light of that situation.

The Bahamas said it did not understand the way in which the 1976 Assembly resolution on conference matters⁽⁶⁾ was to be applied with regard to those exceptions. Trinidad and Tobago explained that it had voted for ACABQ's recommendation based on that resolution. Japan pointed out that the Assembly had followed that practice of approving exceptions since 1969;⁽⁷⁾ also, the meetings of the regional commissions should not be confused with those of other United Nations bodies for which the Assembly did not authorize exceptions.

Original estimates of the additional costs were $584,800. They were submitted by the Secretary-General in a 20 July statement to the Economic and Social Council.⁽⁸⁾

On 21 October,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted revised estimates of $637,400 for the additional costs; he noted that while the amounts for ECLA and ESCAP remained the same as those included in the proposed 1984-1985 programme budget, the estimate for ECA was $136,600 higher than the $150,700 originally estimated because at the time of the budget preparation it had been planned to hold the ECA session at Maputo, Mozambique, but the Commission changed the venue subsequently to Conakry, Guinea. He noted that the revised estimates were at the same level as the resources requested in the proposed programme budget, which ACABQ had recommended to be provisionally deleted until the Council and the Assembly had approved the venues.

In a 22 November report,⁽¹⁰⁾ ACABQ recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's estimates of additional resources for ECA ($287,300) and ECLA ($143,300); with regard to the additional requirements for ESCAP, however, it recommended a reduction of the estimate of $206,800 to $181,300, thereby reducing the overall additional allocation requested to $611,900.

Conference and meeting services

By a resolution of 25 November 1983: the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to provide information on conference-servicing resources (see below).

In the context of the 1984-1985 United Nations programme budget (see Chapter I of this section), the Fifth Committee approved on 18 December 1983, by 64 votes to 17, additional appropriations totalling $7,340,000 for conference services in 1984. The Committee followed the recommendation of ACABQ to reduce the Secretary-General's estimates by $1,233,000.

In a 14 December statement,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General estimated conference-servicing requirements for 1984, calculated on a full-cost basis, at $18,972,100, comprising $15,293,200 for Headquarters, $2,751,000 for Geneva and $927,900 for Vienna. Taking into account existing resources available, he requested appropriations totalling $8,573,000, of which $4,133,000 related to Headquarters, $2,340,000 to Geneva and $2,100,000 to Vienna. The additional Headquarters conference-servicing requirements were based on a comparison of weekly work-load capacity as against actual requirements, whereas requirements for Geneva and Vienna were based on overall work-load requirements for the year. The appropriations requested reflected the application of over-programming of 13 per cent under temporary assistance requirements for interpretation at Headquarters and 10 and 11.8 per cent overall at Geneva and Vienna, respectively.

In an oral report to the Committee, ACABQ expressed the opinion that a slight increase in the percentage of over-programming in a number of areas, combined with an increase in productivity, could result in a reduction of $1,233,000. Accordingly, it recommended a total appropriation of $7,340,000 broken down as follows: $3,500,000 for Headquarters ($633,000 less than estimated by the Secretary-General); $1,940,000 for Geneva ($400,000 less than his estimate); and $1,900,000 for Vienna (a reduction of $200,000).

Improvement of conference resources

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1983, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/32 F without vote.

Improved organization of work and effective use of conference resources

The General Assembly

1. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Committee on Conferences with data in summary form on:

(a) The physical and human conference-servicing resources for United Nations Headquarters and United Nations offices generally, including rooms available and documentation, interpretation and translation capacity, in a format enabling comparison of the demand and the conference-servicing capacity for all categories of meetings of United Nations organs-scheduled, anticipated to the extent possible, and held-grouped according to subject-matter;

(b) External conference servicing available to the United Nations in case of urgent or unforeseen demands on the calendar;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to all United Nations bodies the relevant information requested under paragraph 1 above as supplementary data for their implementation of the present resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/32 B without vote.

Membership of the Committee on Conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3351(XXIX) of 18 December 1974, 32/72 of 9 December 1977 and 35/10 A of 3 November 1980,

Requests the President of the General Assembly, after consultations with the chairmen of the regional groups, to appoint twenty-two Member States, on the basis of an equitable geographical balance, to serve on the Committee on Conferences for a three-year term.

Guidelines for conferences

In its draft resolution on the pattern of conferences (see above), submitted to the General Assembly in its 1983 report,⁽¹⁾ the Committee on Conferences recommended that only one United Nations special conference should be convened at any one time and that annually no more than five special conferences, i.e. not more than one in each of the five different fields of United Nations activity (political, scientific, economic, social, legal), should be convened.

In an October report, on implementation of recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU)⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General referred to its 1982 recommendations on the organization and preparation of United Nations special conferences. On the basis of those recommendations and his comments on them,⁽¹³⁾ the Committee on Conferences had recommended a set of guidelines which the General Assembly adopted in November 1982.⁽¹⁴⁾ The Secretary-General noted, however, that in the guidelines the following three recommendations were not reflected: that the function of Conference Secretary be merged with that of Executive or Administrative Officer; that the new preparatory mechanism be supplemented by standard guidelines and by the development of basic servicing requirements and costing rates; and that the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly consider adopting guidelines for the formulation and evaluation of future special conferences, similar to those adopted in 1980 for international years.⁽¹⁵⁾ The reasons for non-implementation of those recommendations had been explained in the Secretary-General's 1982 comments.⁽¹³⁾

Draft rules of procedure for conferences

By decision 38/427, the General Assembly decided to defer consideration of a report of the Secretary-General on draft standard rules of procedure for United Nations conferences (see p. 1126) to its 1984 session, and requested him to submit another report at that time.

Smoking in conference rooms

By decision 38/401, the General Assembly adopted several recommendations made by the General Committee concerning the organization of its 1983 regular session (see p. 392), among them a recommendation that smoking should be prohibited in small conference rooms and be discouraged in large ones.

Documents

Documents limitation

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1983 report to the Fifth Committee on implementation of JIU recommendations on various operational aspects of the United Nations system,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General recalled that the 1981 JIU report on documents limitation⁽²⁾ had contained 18 specific recommendations, of which 10 required decisions by the legislative organs of the United Nations organizations and 8 could be implemented by their executive heads. Of the latter group, 7 had been or were being implemented. The Secretary-General recalled that he had considered the remaining recommendation-suggesting introduction of a documents quota system-as unworkable where the nature and volume of documentation were determined largely by Member States. Any attempt to administer the provision of central services, such as those for documentation, in the same way as budgetary appropriations would substantially detract from the flexibility of those services to respond to the Organization's priority needs as they arose.

The Secretary-General stated that the main purpose of a quota system, namely, to limit the volume of documentation originating in the Secretariat, was being sought through the application of a maximum-length rule to individual documents. On 24 February 1982,⁽³⁾ he had directed that documents submitted to United Nations organs and bodies in the name of the Secretary-General or of the Secretariat should not exceed 24 single-spaced pages in length; exceptions to that rule must be authorized by the Under-Secretary-General for Conference Services and Special Assignments.

Activities of the Committee on Conferences. In 1983, the Committee on Conferences^(*) discussed various aspects of the question of documents control and limitation. The basis for the Committee's consideration were Secretariat notes on: documents for treaty bodies⁽⁵⁾ and subsidiary organs;⁽⁶⁾ recurrent United Nations publications;⁽⁷⁾ identification of documents that might be discontinued, shortened or consolidated;⁽⁸⁾ and compliance by subsidiary organs with the 32-page limit for reports,⁽⁹⁾ the desirability for which was reiterated by the General Assembly in November 1982.⁽¹⁰⁾ The Committee also considered comparative costs of the preparation of meeting records.

In the light of its consideration of these documents, the Committee made a series of recommendations in a draft resolution on documents control and limitation, which it submitted to the Assembly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted two decisions designed to control and limit documentation (see p. 1005): decision 1983/163, by which the Council requested the Secretary-General to draw to the attention of intergovernmental and expert bodies any request for documentation exceeding the Secretariat's ability to process on time and within approved resources, and areas where duplication was likely to occur or where opportunities for consolidating documents might exist; and decision 1983/184, by section I of which the Council extended, for another two years, discontinuance of summary records for 11 of its subsidiary bodies and for its sessional committees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/32 E without vote.

Control and limitation of documentation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2292(XXII) of 8 December 1967, 2438(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2732(XXV) of 16 December 1970, 31/140, section II, of 17 December 1976, 23/56, section II, of 14 December 1978, 34/50 of 23 November 1979, 36/117 of 10 December 1981 and 37/14 C and D of 16 November 1982 and its decision 34/401 of 21 September, 25 October, 29 November and 12 December 1979,

1. Recommends to Member States that they take into consideration the aim of limiting to a minimum requests for the preparation of reports or the circulation of documents;

2. Recommends to Member States and specialized agencies that, when preparing their replies to questionnaires or submissions of organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, they take into consideration the aim of achieving maximum brevity in setting out their positions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, when sending out such questionnaires, to attach to them a reference to the present resolution;

4. Invites its subsidiary organs to include in their agenda an item on control and limitation of documentation with a view to ensuring the production of concise reports;

5. Commends the Secretary-General for his efforts in reducing the length and number of reports originating in the Secretariat and requests him to continue with these measures;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to examine ways of improving the drafting skills of Secretariat officials who are involved in the various phases of preparing final reports of United Nations bodies with a view to ensuring the production of more concise reports;

7. Calls upon its subsidiary organs not to reproduce in their reports the full text of earlier resolutions relevant to their work, but instead, as a frame of reference, to include a list of relevant documents in their reports, giving the exact titles and symbols;

8. Decides that the practice of reproducing statements in extenso as separate documents shall be discontinued for all its subsidiary organs that are entitled to summary records;

9. Decides further that any exceptions to this rule may be made by the body concerned only if the statements are to serve as bases for discussion and if, after hearing a statement of the relevant financial implications, the body decides that one or more statements in extenso may be included in the summary record, or reproduced as separate documents or as annexes to authorized documents;

10. Requests the Committee on Conferences to undertake a study of the feasibility of instituting an abbreviated form of summary record;

11. Requests the Committee on Conferences to examine the various causes of the late issuance of documents in the different official and working languages and to consider possible solutions to this problem;

12. Urges all treaty bodies to review their documentation requirements, with particular reference to the possible reduction of their need for summary records;

13. Invites the Committee on Conferences to examine the report to be issued by the Joint Inspection Unit on publications policy and practice in the United Nations system;

14. Requests its subsidiary organs responsible for the issuance of recurrent publications to review them with the objective of identifying and discontinuing those which no longer serve a useful purpose;

15. Invites the Economic and Social Council similarly to request its subsidiary organs responsible for recurrent publications to undertake such a review;

16. Requests the Committee for Programme and Coordination to review recurrent publications in the context of the medium-term plan or the programme budget, as appropriate;

17. Recommends that, in conducting their reviews, intergovernmental bodies bear in mind the following criteria:

(a) Usefulness to the end-user of the publication as gauged from end-user response or from the sales record of a publication;

(b) Filling of a need;

(c) High standard of analysis or data;

(d) Promotion of the principles and purposes of the Organization;

(e) Continued validity of the original mandate;

(f) Recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit in its report on publications policy and practice in the United Nations system, if applicable.

General Assembly resolution 38/32 E

25 November 1983 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/585) without vote, 2 November (meeting 25); draft by Committee on Conferences (A/38/32), amended by Chairman (A/C.5/38/L.6, para. 4, following informal consultations, and further orally amended by Vice-Chairman); agenda item 114.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 5th Committee 4, 8, 9, 25; plenary 71.

In the version recommended by the Committee on Conferences, the Assembly would have: called on Member States to limit requests to a minimum, in paragraph 1; proposed to Member States and specialized agencies that they strive for maximum brevity, in paragraph 2; requested Secretariat officials (instead of the Secretary-General), in paragraph 3; referred to improving the drafting skills of Secretariat officials who assisted rapporteurs in their work with a view to producing more concise reports, in paragraph 6; and referred only to the late issuance of documentation (without mentioning official and working languages), in paragraph 11. A drafting change was also made to the preambular paragraph. The recommended version and the adopted text were the same in all other respects.

Documents production

During discussion by the Fifth Committee of a report on the depositary functions of the Secretary-General and registration and publication of treaties (see p. 1129) in connection with its examination of the proposed programme budget for 1984-1985, the question of backlogs in documentation arose as a result of the request for additional resources required during that biennium to implement the Secretary-General's 10-year (1980-1989) plan to eliminate the backlog in the publication of the United Nations Treaty Series. Stating that it could not support that request and in view of the recurrence of such requests, the United States proposed that the Fifth Committee should recommend that the Assembly invite the Committee on Conferences to examine the whole question of backlogs in documentation at its next substantive session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted section XII of resolution 38/234 without vote.

UN premises

Addis Ababa

After considering in 1983 the adequacy of the conference facilities of ECA at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, the General Assembly approved a programme of maintenance and alterations (see p. 634). It deferred, until 1984, consideration of a proposal for constructing new conference facilities at ECA headquarters.

Bangkok

The Assembly considered, in 1983, a proposal to expand the conference facilities of ESCAP at Bangkok, Thailand (see p. 641).

Nairobi

Construction

In a November 1983 report to the Fifth Committee,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General described the progress made in constructing at Nairobi permanent headquarters facilities for UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, also known as Habitat, and accommodation in that complex for other United Nations offices. The report also contained information on the status of appropriations, disbursements and obligations in connection with the construction.

The report stated that, following approval in June 1983 by ACABQ, additional construction of an office block and a visitors and tours pavilion was incorporated in the building work programme in pursuance of a December 1982 Assembly resolution.⁽²⁾ Completion of all construction work was projected for May/June 1984, while occupancy of a number of buildings began in September 1983. Further negotiations were being planned with the potential occupants with a view to reducing the projected office space deficit. Security requirements were identified by a Headquarters Security Service mission in September.

In December, ACABQ⁽³⁾ recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted section XXII of resolution 38/234 without vote.

Common services

The Secretary-General, in a December 1983 report to the Fifth Committee,^(*) stated that agreement had been reached between interested parties at Nairobi and at Headquarters on the organizational structure, general procedures and the staffing for common services and the related functions of the administrative offices of UNEP and Habitat. Accordingly, he proposed setting up a United Nations Common Services Unit (UNCS) at Nairobi, effective 1 June 1984, to be funded mainly through redeployment of existing regular budget and extrabudgetary resources. UNCS would provide all tenants with common services (utilities, security, local transportation of some staff, buildings and grounds management), while providing only UNEP and Habitat with joint services covering finances, personnel, computers, conferences, library, procurement, legal liaison, local transportation and communications. The net additional cost to the regular budget was estimated at $109,500 for 1984-1985.

After considering the Secretary-General's report, ACABQ⁽³⁾ recommended, among other things, that no fixed date should yet be set for the implementation of the joint services, that the proposed budgetary transfer in respect of joint services should not be made at the 1983 Assembly session, and that the Secretary-General should report to the Assembly at its 1985 session on the progress made in integrating administrative services at Nairobi. With regard to common services, ACABQ made a number of observations and recommendations on staffing requirements and financial aspects of the occupancy of the United Nations accommodation, and recommended that the Assembly approve a revised appropriation of $102,700.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted section XXI of resolution 38/234 without vote.

Other premises

In an April 1983 report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC),⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General summarized the results of a 1982 review by the Administrative Management Service (AMS) of the efficiency of maintaining the United Nations Supply Depot-in operation at Pisa, Italy, since 1958, as a central point for the delivery of equipment, materials and supplies to United Nations peace-keeping operations. AMS had concluded that maintaining the Depot would be in the best interests of United Nations peace-keeping missions.

As regards the ECLA Subregional Office for the Caribbean, at Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, the Secretary-General, in a December report⁽⁶⁾ to the Assembly's Fifth Committee, requested an additional appropriation of $242,500 for 1984-1985 for the leasing of an additional office space of 6,000 square feet in order to relieve overcrowding of staff and to provide sufficient conference facilities.

Computerized information systems and communications

Co-ordination of information systems

ACC activities. In an April 1983 report to the Economic and Social Council, on strengthening co-ordination of information systems in the United Nations system⁽¹⁾—prepared according to a November 1982 Council resolution⁽²⁾ and submitted through CPC—the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) reported on the establishment, at its first regular session of 1983 (Paris, 30 and 31 March),⁽³⁾ of an Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems (ACCIS).

By the 1982 resolution, the Council had urged setting up a small central mechanism in ACC, as replacing the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems (IOB), to ensure more efficient operation of United Nations information systems from the perspective of users at the national level and to enhance the capacity of the United Nations system to process information. The question of establishing such a body was discussed at a joint meeting, held at Geneva on 9 March 1983, of the ACC Consultative Committees on Substantive

Questions—one on programme matters and the other on operational activities.⁽⁴⁾

ACC stated in the report that ACCIS—an inter-secretariat body, composed of representatives of each of the participating organizations and guided by a steering committee—would focus its work programme on: information needs of Member States, tools for accessing United Nations system information, a register of development activities, proposals for new information systems, and basic co-ordination services. It would monitor and orient the work of technical panels of specialists from interested organizations, which would carry out projects under a lead agency able and willing to make its expertise and guidance available.

In May, CPC⁽⁵⁾ noted with satisfaction the ACC report, recommended that ACC continue its work, and decided to keep under close review progress made by ACCIS.

The ACC report was also taken note of by the Economic and Social Council, in decision 1983/175 of 28 July; the General Assembly, in section II of resolution 38/277 B of 20 December, endorsed the CPC conclusions and recommendations on the ACC report.

ACCIS activities. At its first session (Geneva, 22 and 23 September),⁽⁶⁾ ACCIS drew up its work programme, established a procedure for recruitment of its secretariat staff, and approved guidelines for its technical panels. Panels were set up on: computer-based communication services, a register of development activities, and access to United Nations data bases.

In preparing its 1984-1985 budget estimates, which had previously been reviewed by the ACC Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (New York, 12-16 September),⁽⁷⁾ ACCIS noted that, in accordance with the directives given by the Council (2) and ACC,⁽³⁾ they were not to exceed the level previously approved for IOB. It estimated that some $1.3 million would be required for the biennium, to be financed by the participating organizations.

In a November report to the Fifth Committee,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General said the United Nations share of ACCIS's 1984-1985 estimated budget, representing approximately 43 per cent of the total, would be $561,600, or $288,200 in excess of the provisional amount included in the proposed programme budget for the period. However, no additional appropriation was requested since related expenditures during 1982-1983 had been below the approved estimates.

In October, ACCIS prepared a report on the performance of the Information Systems Unit of the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (see p. 427).

Revised programme budget estimates for word-processing equipment

In a December 1983 report to the Fifth Committee,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General recommended introduction of word-processing equipment in the Conference Services Division of the United Nations Office at Geneva. The non-recurrent costs for 1984-1985—of acquiring and installing the equipment and furniture as well as preparing the site—were estimated at $1.8 million, while recurring costs per biennium for maintenance, supplies and staff were estimated at $470,000. The Secretary-General requested an additional appropriation of $975,600, with the balance to be met from within existing resources.

Acting on the recommendation of ACAQB, the Fifth Committee approved the additional appropriations, on 18 December, by 74 votes to 1, with 8 abstentions.

UN communications

In 1983—observed as World Communications Year: Development of Communications Infrastructures (see p. 576)—ways to improve communications within the United Nations system and with those outside it were discussed in various forums. The Committee on Information considered among other things, at its June/July session,⁽¹¹⁾ the viability of a United Nations communications satellite (see below) and a world-wide short-wave network involving the regional commissions (see p. 378).

At its February/March session, CCAQ considered a January note⁽¹²⁾ by its Secretary on improving telecommunications between its secretariat and United Nations organizations, annexing basic information on the possibilities offered by ICC at Geneva (see above).

In an April report to CPC,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General discussed the measures taken to improve the coverage and services of the Development Information System and the co-operative activities with the information systems of the regional commissions (see p. 427).

Communications satellite

The question of the acquisition and operation by the United Nations of its own communications satellite was again discussed in 1983 by the Committee on Information (see p. 362),⁽¹¹⁾ in pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly resolution.⁽¹⁴⁾ It heard an oral summary of an interim report prepared by the International Telecommunication Union at the Secretary-General's request, which examined the technical and financial implications of a single-satellite system to cover most major United Nations locations in North and South America, Africa, the Middle East and Europe, as well as a two-satellite system which would also cover Asia. The report concluded that, currently, other alternatives appeared preferable, as the financing of either system would involve major budgetary increases and would significantly impinge on other allocations.

The Committee's suggestion that the Secretary-General should submit a final report on the subject to the Assembly in 1983 was subsequently included in the annex to Assembly resolution 38/82 B of 15 December, as one of 62 recommendations made by the Committee.

The interim report was submitted to the Assembly's Special Political Committee through a note by the Secretary-General⁽¹⁵⁾ in lieu of the final report, which was still under preparation during the Committee's consideration of questions relating to information. It was understood that the Committee on Information would receive the final report at its 1984 substantive session.

UN Postal Administration

In 1983, gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration (UNPA) from the sale of philatelic items at United Nations Headquarters and at overseas offices totalled over $6 million. Revenue from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes was retained by the United Nations; revenue from stamps used for postage from Headquarters was retained by the United States Postal Service under an agreement between the United Nations and the United States Government. Similarly, revenue from stamps used for postage from the Palais des Nations, Geneva, and from the Vienna International Centre was retained by the Swiss and Austrian postal authorities, respectively, in accordance with agreements between the Organization and the Swiss and Austrian Governments.

Six commemorative stamps and two souvenir cards were issued during the year.

On 28 January, the first commemorative stamp, on the subject of "World Communications Year", was issued in denominations of 20 and 40 United States cents, 1.20 Swiss francs (SwF) and 4 Austrian schillings (S).

The theme of the second commemorative, issued on 18 March, was "Safety at Sea". Stamps were issued in denominations of 20 and 37 cents, SwF 0.40 and 0.80, and S 4 and 6. A souvenir card was also issued.

The third stamp, issued on 22 April in denominations of 20 cents, SwF 1.50 and S 5 and 7, commemorated the "World Food Programme".

On 6 June, the fourth stamp was issued on the theme "Trade and Development", in denominations of 20 and 28 cents, SwF 0.80 and 1.10 and S 4 and 8.50. A souvenir card accompanied the issue.

On 23 September, the fourth group of 16 stamps was issued in the commemorative "Flag Series", in denominations of 20 cents each. This was the fifth commemorative issue for the year.

The sixth and final commemorative, issued on 9 December, honoured the "Thirty-fifth Anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights". The stamps were issued in denominations of 20 and 40 cents, SwF 0.40 and 1.20 and S 5 and 7.

The number of first day covers serviced for the various issues in 1983 was as follows:

World Communications Year	465,115
Safety at Sea	638,672
World Food Programme	512,109
Trade and Development	530,661
Flag Series	2,214,134
Thirty-fifth Anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights	737,761

Issue of special postage stamps

As requested by the General Assembly in November 1982,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General, in August 1983,⁽²⁾ provided an analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations (see Chapter I of this section), which included the status of the project to issue special postage stamps. At the Assembly's request, he was to include proposals to use a portion of the revenues to further the cause of the protection of nature.

A total of 10.9 million stamps on the subject of conservation and protection of nature were issued simultaneously in New York, Geneva and Vienna on 19 November 1982.⁽³⁾ In order to publicize the stamp, UNPA, in co-operation with UNEP, printed brochures, information folders, photographs and press releases for use by the general public, the press and collectors and at stamp shows. An information circular was sent to delegations and staff. Two television programmes were produced and advertisements were taken in specialized European and United States magazines. Special exhibitions were held in the three UNPA offices on conserving and protecting nature and the stamp issue.

As at 31 March 1983, gross sales amounted to $1,867,183, which yielded a net revenue of $1,133,687 after expenses. Income on the issue was expected to be about $1.25 million when the stamps were withdrawn from sale on 19 November.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 38/228 A by recorded vote.

Issue of special postage stamps

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 35/113 of 10 December 1980 and, in particular, paragraphs 1 to 3 thereof, according to which the provisions of regulations 5.2 and 7.1 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall not apply to the sale proceeds of postage stamps on the conservation and protection of nature so that a portion of the revenues so earned, after deduction of the cost of producing the stamps, shall be earmarked for promoting, under United Nations auspices, the noble cause of the conservation and protection of nature and endangered species, and the remainder of the net proceeds shall be placed in a special account,

Recalling also its resolution 37/13 of 16 November 1982,

1. Decides to allocate one half of the net revenues from the sale of the above-mentioned postage stamps to the United Nations Environment Programme for financing projects which promote conservation and protection of nature and endangered species;

2. Decides to allocate the remaining one half of the net proceeds to the United Nations Special Account;

3. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to submit a report to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, at an appropriate time, on the results of the projects and their impact on conservation and protection of nature and endangered species;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a financial report on the project to issue special postage stamps.

Intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

In 1983, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued to assist research on and practical application of atomic energy for peaceful purposes and to ensure that the assistance provided was not used for military purposes.

Continued emphasis was placed on safeguards, the safety of nuclear power stations, nuclear fuel-cycle services and the management of nuclear wastes, and on providing technical assistance to member States, particularly developing countries.

At the end of 1983, the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons^a (Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT)) had 118 non-nuclear-weapon States parties and 98 per cent of the world's nuclear facilities outside the nuclear-weapon States were under IAEA safeguards. The Agency continued its efforts to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of its international safeguards system, which aimed at deterring the proliferation of nuclear weapons by early detection, while respecting States' sovereign rights. Work also continued on assuring supplies of nuclear material, equipment and technology and fuel-cycle services, on possible schemes for international storage of plutonium and on the international management of spent fuel.

Further progress was made during the year towards completion of an up-to-date set of internationally agreed safety standards for nuclear power plants—IAEA's Nuclear Safety Standards (NUSS)—and the Agency assisted member States in implementing NUSS recommendations through advisory missions and training courses. Increased emphasis was also given to an exchange of information in such fields as safety research, nuclear-plant operating experience and emergency preparedness.

During 1983, IAEA continued to assist in preparations for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy which, the General Assembly decided by resolution 38/60, would be held in 1986 (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter X).

Membership of IAEA rose to 111 in 1983 when Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, became a member on 17 February. China's application for membership was unanimously approved by the IAEA General Conference on 11 October. China was to become a member on 1 January 1984.

The twenty-seventh session of the IAEA General Conference was held at Vienna, Austria, from 10 to 14 October. The Conference decided, among other things: to declare that armed attacks against nuclear installations devoted to peaceful purposes should be prohibited and to urge member States to adopt binding international rules prohibiting such attacks; to demand that South Africa submit its nuclear installations and facilities to IAEA inspection, and to call on member States which had not done so to end nuclear co-operation with South Africa and, in particular, to terminate transfers of fissionable material and technology to South Africa which could be used to develop nuclear arms; and to call on Israel to withdraw forthwith its threat to attack and destroy nuclear facilities in Iraq and other countries, to withhold Agency research contracts to Israel, to discontinue the purchase of equipment and materials from Israel and to refrain from holding seminars and scientific and technical meetings there if, by the 1984 General Conference, Israel had not complied with the call to withdraw its threat.

The Board of Governors met four times during 1983, in February and June, and twice in October, at Vienna.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

As at 31 December 1983, 118 non-nuclear-weapon States and three nuclear-weapon States (USSR, United Kingdom, United States) had ratified or acceded to NPT. Safeguards agreements with IAEA, concluded under article III of the Treaty, had entered into force for 76 non-nuclear-weapon States parties. Negotiation of an agreement with the USSR under which IAEA might apply safeguards to certain nuclear material in civil nuclear facilities in the USSR commenced. Similar agreements were in force with France (1981), the United Kingdom (1978) and the United States (1980).

Agency safeguards were applied under other agreements in 10 non-nuclear-weapon States not party to either NPT or the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) but which have significant nuclear activities—Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, India, ^aYUN 1968, p. 17, GA res. 2373(XXII), annex. 12 June 1968.

Israel, Pakistan, South Africa and Spain-as well as in Viet Nam (which is a party to NPT).

At the end of 1983, safeguards applied by IAEA in non-nuclear-weapon States covered material in 147 power reactors, 177 research reactors and critical assemblies, 7 conversion, 40 fuel fabrication, 6 reprocessing and 4 enrichment plants, and in some 500 other installations.

Technical assistance

During 1983, more than 70 countries received IAEA technical assistance in the form of expert services or equipment or both. A total of 631 fellows were carrying out individual field studies, and 891 persons participated in 35 group training projects. Technical assistance provided by IAEA in 1983 exceeded $26 million in value, some 16 per cent higher than in 1982.

The Agency served as the executing agency for 29 large-scale projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Among these were: nuclear engineering (Argentina); nuclear minerals exploration (Bangladesh, Chile, Colombia, Madagascar); nuclear manpower training, and development of agriculture through nuclear technology (Brazil); centre for isotope applications (Bulgaria); introduction of nuclear techniques (Cuba, Senegal); national centre for radiation technology (Egypt); nuclear techniques in animal production (Nigeria); nuclear energy (Peru); training in nuclear power plant safety analysis, engineering and public information, and manpower development (Philippines); nuclear technology (Romania); radioactive tracer techniques for studying coastal sedimentation (Sri Lanka); industrial application of high-energy ionizing radiation (Yugoslavia); strengthening the regional centre for nuclear studies at Kinshasa (Zaire); industrial application of isotopes and radiation technology, and nuclear techniques training in the mineral industry (regional, Asia and the Pacific); and Rift Valley fever control and modern techniques in physics (interregional).

The Agency also continued to provide large-scale assistance to projects in Bangladesh and India for the use of nuclear techniques in agricultural research, financed by Sweden.

The target for member States' voluntary contributions to IAEA's regular programme was $19 million in 1983, of which $17.6 million was pledged. Other sources of support for the technical assistance programme were UNDP funds ($3.7 million), extrabudgetary contributions ($9.4 million) and assistance in kind ($2.2 million).

Nuclear power

At the end of 1983, 317 nuclear power plants with a total capacity of some 191,000 megawatts (electrical) accounted for around 12 per cent of the world's electricity-generating capacity. The record of operating nuclear power plants continued to be excellent; 3,150 reactor years had accumulated without any significant spread of radioactivity, to the environment or any radiation-induced fatality.

The Agency continued to assist developing member States to introduce nuclear-powered electricity-generating plants with planning surveys, feasibility studies and development of manpower and infrastructure. It also continued preparing a series of guidebooks on, for example, manpower development for nuclear power, bid specifications for nuclear power plants, technical and economic evaluation of bids for nuclear power plants, introduction of nuclear power, the interaction of grid characteristics with design and performance of nuclear power plants, nuclear power plant instrumentation and control, qualification of nuclear power plant operations personnel, expansion planning for electrical generation systems, and energy planning in developing countries with special attention to nuclear energy.

In 1983, six interregional training courses, three of which focused on special aspects of nuclear power plant safety, were attended by about 200 participants from developing countries.

IAEA continued to develop its energy and economy data bank and to collect and disseminate information on nuclear technology and the reliability of nuclear power plants. A computerized power-reactor information system containing nuclear power plant operating-experience data provided by member States since 1971 had been in use since 1982.

Environment

In co-operation with the United States Department of Energy, the International Conference on Radioactive Waste Management was held at Seattle, Washington, United States, in May 1983. The Conference brought together 528 participants from 29 member States and eight international organizations. It covered the entire spectrum of radioactive waste management, including technological, environmental, regulatory, institutional, legal, economic, social and policy issues. In general, the Conference confirmed that nuclear power could be harnessed for mankind without creating an unmanageable waste disposal problem.

In the area of handling and treatment of radioactive waste, six reports were published dealing with off-gas treatment, managing waste from nuclear plants, conditioning of wastes and decommissioning of nuclear power plants. Two co-ordinated research programmes were initiated on the retention of iodine and other airborne radio-nuclides during abnormal and accident conditions, and the decommissioning and decontamination of nuclear facilities-and three were completed-on the evaluation of solidified high-level waste forms, the treatment of spent ion exchange resins and the testing of particulate filters.

In 1983, IAEA's underground disposal programme organized three technical committee meetings and one advisory group meeting on regulatory, safety, technological and other aspects of underground disposal of radioactive wastes. Publications included a guidebook on disposal of low- and intermediate-level solid radioactive wastes in rock cavities, and reports on concepts and examples of safety analysis for radioactive waste repositories in continental geological formations, and criteria for underground disposal of solid radioactive wastes.

Among material published in 1983 relating to environmental aspects of nuclear energy were a bibliography of information and data for a review of the scientific and technical considerations related to the dumping of radioactive wastes at sea, and reports on an oceanographic model for the dispersion of wastes disposed of in the deep sea, environmental assessment methodologies for sea dumping, de minimis concepts in radioactive waste disposal, and the regional and global environmental behaviour of radio-nuclides.

Two co-ordinated research programmes were in progress: one on the role of sediments in the transport and accumulation of radioactive pollutants in rivers and estuaries, and one on the environmental migration of radium and other contaminants present in solid and liquid wastes from the mining and milling of uranium.

Nuclear safety

The development stage of the NUSS programme neared its end in 1983 with the completion of 52 safety codes and guides for nuclear power plants. As part of a new activity aimed at increasing the safety of operating nuclear installations, an operational safety review team was sent to a member State. This activity was to be expanded with teams going to several other member States in 1984.

A revised code of practice on radiation protection in the mining and milling of radioactive ores, jointly prepared by the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization (WHO) and IAEA, was published in 1983. Work continued on implementing the revised Basic Safety Standards for Radiation Protection, through publication of documents on occupational safety, radiation protection of the public and the environment, and radiation safety during transport.

Information exchange continued to be emphasized. Safety information was transmitted through training courses and seminars given by IAEA throughout the world, and through visits of individual experts to member States.

The Agency made final preparations in 1983 to initiate a reporting system to collect information on incidents occurring at nuclear power plants. Its purpose would be to provide information to plant operators, designers and regulatory bodies in order to aid in preventing or mitigating the consequences of similar accidents.

To assist member States in emergency planning and preparedness for radiological emergencies, guidelines for mutual emergency assistance in connection with nuclear accidents were prepared. An interregional training course which included instruction in the use of computers in accident assessment was developed. Missions to assess emergency planning arrangements visited three countries, and a report was prepared on a full-scale emergency exercise carried out in Yugoslavia.

Nuclear information

The International Nuclear Information System, with 72 participating countries and 14 international organizations, in 1983 enlarged its bibliographic data base on nuclear literature to some 807,000 records.

Life sciences

In co-operation with WHO and several other international organizations, IAEA continued in 1983 to assist member States-especially the developing countries-with the application of nuclear techniques in medicine, biology and health-related environmental research, and in improving the accuracy of radiation dosimetry for medical and industrial purposes.

A symposium was held jointly with WHO in April on the biological effects of low-level ionizing radiation with special regard to stochastic and non-stochastic effects (Venice, Italy). A training seminar was conducted in June on calibration procedures in Secondary Standard Dosimetry Laboratories (SSDLs) (IAEA Laboratory, Seibersdorf, Austria). Co-sponsored by WHO, advisory group meetings dealt with the future of the dose intercomparison service for radiation therapy, and with radiation sterilization practices for tissue grafts and tissue banking of sterile grafts in the developing countries of Asia and the Far East.

In 1983, Venezuela nominated a dosimetry laboratory for membership in the IAEA/WHO network of SSDLs, bringing the number of member laboratories to 46, 31 of which were in developing countries.

Nineteen co-ordinated research programmes were carried out during 1983. These included: maintenance of nuclear instruments; data processing for internal quality control for radioimmunoassay; optimization of nuclear medicine procedures; comparative methods for studying trace elements in human nutrition; application of nuclear-related techniques in occupational health; high dose standardization and intercomparison for industrial radiation processing; nuclear techniques for determining parasitic antigens in body fluids; possible use of high-LET (linear energy transfer) radiation in cancer therapy; improvement of cancer therapy by combining conventional radiation and physical or chemical means; comparative biological hazards from low-level radiation and major chemical pollutants; analysis of radiation-induced chromosomal aberration for genetic risk evaluation in occupationally exposed workers; radiation sterilization of medical supplies including tissue graft sterilization; and health-related environmental research using nuclear techniques.

Efforts were made to assist the Agency's technical co-operation programme in the relevant areas, particularly for developing member States, including an IAEA/WHO project on the use of brachy-therapy in treating cancer of the cervix, which was started in Egypt. The first training/demonstration course was attended by 33 participants. A training course on nuclear techniques for dealing with parasitic infections, organized by IAEA in collaboration with the United States Department of Energy, was attended by 30 clinicians and biomedical researchers.

Physical sciences and laboratories

IAEA's role in co-ordinating the international effort in controlled fusion continued through the International Tokamak Reactor Workshop, in which scientists from the major fusion laboratories of the European Atomic Energy Community, Japan, the USSR and the United States participated. Work on optimization of the design and cost/benefit/risk analysis of design alternatives was under way in 1983. Problems facing developing countries in their plasma physics and fusion work were addressed at several informal meetings, and assistance was provided in a number of cases.

Support was given by IAEA to a large-scale UNDP project on the industrial application of radioisotopes and radiation technology in Asia and the Pacific, conducted within the framework of the Regional Co-operative Agreement for Research, Development and Training Related to Nuclear Science and Technology. Under this project, construction of an irradiation facility and the commissioning of an associated rubber vulcanization plant were completed in September. Obstacles to the wider use of industrial radiation processing and priorities for international action to overcome them were reviewed by an advisory group.

The Agency continued to support the transfer of isotope hydrology techniques to its member States through 24 technical co-operation projects. Research was also promoted through 18 research contracts. A new co-ordinated programme on isotope application in ground-water hydrology in Latin America was initiated with funding from the Federal Republic of Germany. The current status of isotope hydrology was reviewed at an international symposium at Vienna in September. The symposium was followed by an interregional training course attended by participants from 25 countries.

The Agency continued to provide nuclear data services to member States, responding in 1983 to some 700 requests for data and associated information from more than 60 countries. Expert groups were convened to review the status of basic nuclear properties of reactor materials and to identify requirements associated with the use of nuclear techniques in geological exploration. In line with its general policy of transferring nuclear data technology to developing member States, the Agency organized an interregional training course and study tour in the USSR on neutron physics and nuclear data measurements with accelerators and research reactors, in which 20 scientists from developing countries participated.

The Seibersdorf Laboratory provided support services for the Agency's food and agriculture, life sciences, physical sciences and safeguards programmes. Work in biotechnology in 1983 included producing sterile insects for biological methods of control, developing genetic techniques for rearing only male Mediterranean fruit flies, and developing controlled-release insecticide. Work in the environment and nutrition field focused on applications of nuclear analytical techniques in studies of trace elements in the human diet. In the physical sciences, the Laboratory's work was concerned mainly with instrumentation for nuclear measurements and chemical analysis. The Safeguards Analytical Laboratory, also at Seibersdorf, analysed nuclear fuel-cycle samples collected by IAEA safeguards inspectors.

The International Laboratory of Marine Radioactivity in Monaco continued to evaluate the impact of radio-nuclides released into the marine environment, with particular attention paid to problems connected with the deep-sea disposal of radioactive wastes. During 1983, the Laboratory increased the number of trainees, mostly from developing countries, accepted for training in measuring radioactive and non-radioactive marine pollutants. The Laboratory also continued to organize intercalibrations of measurements of radio-nuclides in marine samples and to develop methods for low-level measurements. In collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Laboratory provided scientific and technical expertise in non-nuclear marine pollution for the UNEP action plans for the Mediterranean, Kuwait, and West and Central Africa.

The International Centre for Theoretical Physics at Trieste, Italy, continued research and training-for-research in plasma and nuclear physics, non-conventional energy, elementary particle physics and fundamental theory, applications of physics in medicine and biology, atomic molecular and laser physics, geophysics and mathematics. Among its 1983 activities, the Centre held, for the first time, a workshop/college on the physics of communications, with particular emphasis on significant advances made in space research; 62 scientists took part, 51 of them from developing countries.

Food and agriculture

Under joint programmes of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and IAEA, work continued through 27 co-ordinated research programmes on the application of isotope and radiation techniques to increase agricultural production, improve food quality, reduce food losses and minimize pollution of food and the environment. Support was given to about 140 technical assistance projects in 46 developing member States during the year.

Work continued on insect control, particularly of the Mediterranean fruit fly in Peru and Egypt and the tsetse fly in Nigeria. Other projects were designed to improve crop and livestock production.

Secretariat

As at the end of 1983, 1,756 staff members were employed by IAEA. Of these, 619—drawn from 74 countries—were in the Professional and higher categories and 1,137 were in the General Service and Maintenance and Operatives Service categories.

Budget

The General Conference of IAEA at its October 1983 session adopted a regular budget of $96,830,000 for 1984. The target for voluntary contributions to finance the Agency's technical assistance and co-operation programme for 1984 was set at $22,500,000.

Chapter II

International Labour Organisation (ILO)

During 1983, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) continued activities in its six major programme areas: promotion of policies to create employment and satisfy basic human needs; development of human resources; improvement of working and living conditions and environment; promoting social security; strengthening of industrial relations and tripartite (government/employer/worker) co-operation; and the advancement of human rights in the social and labour fields. The main instruments of action continued to be standard-setting, technical co-operation activities, research and publishing.

The ILO membership remained at 150 during the year.

Meetings

The sixty-ninth session of the International Labour Conference, held at Geneva from 1 to 22 June 1983, was attended by some 1,850 delegates and advisers from 138 countries. The Conference had before it the annual report of the ILO Governing Body, the report of the Director-General, focusing on child labour, and the nineteenth special report on the effect of apartheid on labour and employment in South Africa.

The Conference adopted an International Labour Convention and Recommendation on vocational rehabilitation and employment (disabled persons), and a Recommendation on maintenance of rights in social security. It held a first discussion on employment policy with a view to adopting an instrument on this theme at its 1984 session.

A general discussion was held on the social aspects of industrialization.

In accordance with usual practice, a tripartite Conference committee examined the application by member States of the 158 Conventions and 166 Recommendations adopted since 1919 and reviewed the application of ILO standards concerning freedom of association, the right to organize, collective bargaining and rural workers' organizations.

A resolution was adopted on young people and the ILO contribution to International Youth Year (1985). In another resolution, the Conference decided to place on the agenda of its seventieth (1984) session all questions examined by its Committee on Structure relating to amendment of the ILO Constitution.

Ratifications of ILO Conventions registered during the Conference raised their total to 5,103.

Special sittings of the Conference were addressed by President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, Prime Minister Robert Hawke of Australia and Prime Minister Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe.

The Sixth African Regional Conference, held at Tunis, Tunisia, from 4 to 12 October, was attended by some 230 delegates from 40 countries. A general discussion was held on the Director-General's report on social aspects of development in Africa. Conclusions were adopted on the application of the Declaration of Principles and Programme of Action of the 1976 World Employment Conference,^a and on conditions of work and the working environment. The Conference also reviewed the ratification and implementation of international labour standards, and adopted resolutions on standards, action against apartheid and aid to refugees.

Reviews of technical co-operation programmes and the application of international labour standards in Asia and the Pacific were carried out by the eighteenth session of the Asian Advisory Committee (Geneva, 21-24 November). It decided that rural and urban vocational training and rehabilitation of the disabled should be included on the agenda of the next ILO Asian Regional Conference.

Two sets of conclusions on improving working conditions and the working environment in the construction industry and on management training for the industry in developing countries were adopted at the tenth session of the Building, Civil Engineering and Public Works Committee (Geneva, 12-21 April). Resolutions were adopted on future ILO activities, measures to expand employment, collective bargaining, labour-leasing and labour-contracting.

Technical discussions at the eleventh session of the Metal Trades Committee (Geneva, 20-29 September) led to the adoption of conclusions on collective bargaining, and training and retraining. Resolutions were adopted on employment and social policies, freedom of association, multinational enterprises and occupational safety and health.

Among issues examined at the tenth session of the Advisory Committee on Rural Development (Geneva, 22 November-1 December) were the promotion of rural employment through non-farm activities, aspects of rural labour markets and employment policies, and labour utilization, remuneration and the position of women. ILO rural development activities since 1979 were also reviewed.

^aYUN 1976, pp. 346 and 942.

Social problems and employment in developing countries and the need to adapt training to changing needs were considered by the Third Tripartite Technical Meeting for Hotels, Restaurants and Similar Establishments (Geneva, 6-15 December). The meeting adopted conclusions on these items, as well as resolutions on other aspects of the hotel and catering sector.

Working environment

The International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment (PIACT) continued to encourage member States to set definite objectives. The Programme used all means of action at ILO's disposal, including standard-setting, studies and research, tripartite meetings, technical co-operation and the dissemination of information. In addition to the wide range of activities carried out within PIACT during 1983, preparatory work began for its evaluation by the International Labour Conference at its 1984 session.

A number of technical co-operation activities were designed to assist member States in establishing policies for the improvement of working conditions and environment through the organization of national tripartite seminars or multidisciplinary team missions. Activities included a large-scale project to assist Angola; a national tripartite seminar on occupational safety and health in Bolivia; and support for tripartite national workshops in Indonesia and Thailand. Some 20 technical advisory missions were carried out and preparatory work was undertaken for forthcoming missions and national tripartite meetings.

Training activities were increased and an innovative consultancy and training programme was organized for the benefit of small-scale enterprises in Asia, which included the development of training materials.

Continued emphasis was placed on disseminating technical information. The Clearing-house for the Dissemination of Information on Conditions of Work published two issues of Conditions of work: A cumulative digest, containing fact sheets on law and practice, information about research in progress and forthcoming meetings, and selected bibliographies in occupational safety and health.

Collaboration with the World Health Organization (WHO) and other United Nations agencies in occupational safety and health continued, and included participation in the United Nations Environment Programme/WHO/ILO International Programme on Chemical Safety, as well as close co-operation with the International Atomic Energy Agency and WHO in protecting workers against ionizing radiation.

In 1983, the International Occupational Safety and Health Information Centre added two new centres to its network of national centres, bringing the total to 46.

World Employment Programme

The World Employment Programme (WEP) was launched in 1969 to assist Governments to promote an increase in employment and income, alleviate poverty and satisfy basic needs. The Declaration of Principles and Programme of Action adopted by the 1976 World Employment Conference, endorsed by the 1979 International Labour Conference, reinforced ILO's central role in the worldwide attack on unemployment and poverty.

During 1983, through its action-oriented research, technical advisory services and other field activities, WEP continued to address employment and development problems of the rural poor, of disadvantaged groups such as women and youth, and of the rapidly growing urban informal sector. Among other important elements comprising this major programme were employment, manpower and basic needs planning, population and labour-market policy, appropriate and new technologies, special public works programmes, participatory organizations, and international aspects of employment and adjustment policy. Much of this work was carried out by WEP regional employment teams in Africa and southern Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Field activities

During 1983, ILO spent almost $94.7 million on technical co-operation activities (about 8.5 per cent less than in 1982) to promote employment, development of human resources and social institutions, and improvement in living and working conditions.

Most of this expenditure ($44 million) continued to be financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The ILO regular programme provided $9.1 million, while expenditure funded from multi-bilateral arrangements and other special programmes was $36.4 million. Activities financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) accounted for $5.1 million.

Training received the largest share of funds ($34.8 million), followed by employment planning and promotion ($30.8 million), sectoral activities ($13.2 million), industrial relations and labour administration ($3.8 million), working conditions and environment ($3.1 million), workers' activities ($2.9 million), regional and other services ($1.4 million), personnel, budget and finance, and internal administration ($1.2 million) and social security ($1.1 million); other activities received $2.5 million.

A breakdown of expenditure on technical co-operation by field of activity and source of funds, and country, territory, region or organization is shown in the following tables.

Educational activities

The International Institute for Labour Studies at Geneva, an ILO centre for advanced labour and social studies, held its eighteenth annual international internship course on active labour policy development from 19 April to 1 June 1983 in Spanish. Of the 22 participants, 20 came from Latin America, one from Spain and one from the Ukrainian SSR. The four major topics studied were: processes of economic and social change; manpower and population policies; labour-management relations; and the role of ILO in formulating and implementing labour and social policy. The Institute also organized a UNDP-supported training programme for officials to be attached to the Office of the President of Benin.

During 1983, the ILO International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin, Italy, organized 83 courses and seminars involving 1,680 participants from 138 countries, as well as administering and executing 482 fellowships and study tours. There was increased demand for the training of trainers and managers, particularly in the energy, small enterprises and rural co-operatives sectors. Management courses and seminars represented one third of total activity. Four seminars and workshops were completed: one in Africa, on interaction between Governments and employers' and workers' organizations in planning and programming vocational training; another in Asia, on the management of welfare facilities for women workers; and two in Latin America, on collective bargaining and international labour standards.

Publications

ILO's published research covered a wide range of topical social and labour questions. New volumes issued in 1983 included: Accident prevention: A workers' education manual; Collective bargaining: A response to the recession in industrialised market economy countries; Economics: A workers' education manual; Employment and manpower problems and policy issues in Arab countries: Proposals for the future; International conflicts of labour law: A survey of the law applicable to the international employment relation; Labour co-operatives: Retrospect and prospects; Microelectronics and office jobs: The impact of the chip on women's employment; Occupational safety and health in the iron and steel industry: An ILO code of practice;

Rural small-scale industries and employment in Africa and Asia; and Strategic management of development programmes.

A new, completely revised edition of the Encyclopaedia of occupational health and safety was published, in two volumes, and the forty-third (1983) issue of the Year Book of Labour Statistics appeared. Regular periodicals and technical series continued to be published, including the bimonthly International Labour Review, the quarterly Social and Labour Bulletin and the biannual Legislative Series.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1983, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and elsewhere was 2,982. Of these, 1,465 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 114 nationalities), and 1,517 were in the General Service or Maintenance categories. Of the Professional staff, 636 were assigned to technical co-operation projects.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The twenty-second biennial session of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) was held at Rome, Italy, from 5 to 23 November 1983. The Conference unanimously approved FAO's programme of work and budget for 1984-1985 and adopted far-reaching resolutions concerning world food security, rural development, plant genetic resources and the African food crisis.

The Conference reviewed the world food situation and the overall global economy and found both critical. It noted with concern that preliminary assessments indicated a decline of 1 per cent in world food and agricultural production in 1983 after an increase of about 3 per cent in the preceding two years. Moreover, the Conference noted that production in developing countries had increased at a rate well below that of the previous two years and was also lower than the average for 1978-1982. In the developed countries, food production had declined by 8 per cent overall. Cereal output, including coarse grains, had fallen by 13 or 14 per cent, notably in North America.

The Conference noted that the budget of some $421 million for the 1984-1985 programme of work provided for a net increase of 3.6 per cent in resources for FAO's technical and economic programmes of direct development impact, while limiting the overall net programme growth to only 0.5 per cent.

The Conference expressed special concern about the situation in Africa where as many as 22 sub-Saharan countries were threatened by grave food shortages. It stressed the need for additional immediate food and agricultural aid.

The Conference adopted the International Undertaking on Plant Genetic Resources, which sought to ensure that the world's plant genetic resources were better identified, preserved and made available for breeding and scientific purposes. (Plant genetic resources are drawn upon by breeders in the search for new crop varieties better suited to local conditions.) The Conference, which launched the Undertaking as a moral instrument rather than as a legally-binding convention, also resolved that a Commission on Plant Genetic Resources should be set up to guide FAO policy and to monitor implementation of the Undertaking. The Commission was established by the FAO Council on 24 November.

On 7 November, the Conference admitted four new members to FAO-Antigua and Barbuda, Belize, Saint Christopher and Nevis, and Vanuatu-bringing its membership to 156. Monkombu Swaminathan of India was re-elected as Independent Chairman of the FAO Council-FAO's governing body between sessions of the Conference-for a further two years.

Funding

FAO funds come from three main sources: contributions by member nations, national trust funds and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

The regular programme, financed by members according to a scale of contributions set by the Conference, supports field work and enables FAO to advise Governments, to provide a neutral forum for discussing issues related to food and agriculture and to provide the international farming community with information.

In 1983, slightly less than half the expenditure under FAO field programmes was funded by UNDP. National trust funds provided a similar share, while slightly less than 10 per cent was provided by FAO's regular programme budget through the Technical Co-operation Programme (TCP), which allows FAO to respond quickly to unforeseen demands for emergency assistance and to provide training, investment project preparation and specialized advice.

Preliminary figures suggested that UNDP funding fell by 16 per cent in 1983 following a fall of some 27 per cent in 1982. The impact of the reduction was cushioned to some extent by the increasingly important role of trust funds, both bilateral and unilateral. Even so, total FAO field programme expenditure fell by about 7 per cent in 1983.

Food emergency in Africa

In early 1983, reports from the FAO Global Information and Early Warning System indicated that famine threatened almost 150 million people in sub-Saharan Africa. In April, the Director-General established a task force to review and monitor the food and crop situation and on 3 May he appealed for extra food and other aid for the affected countries.

Prospects for the 1983/84 harvest worsened as the year progressed. In August, satellite pictures showed that the northern edge of the "green belt", which normally appears across the Sahel during the most critical period of the growing season, had moved south by an average of 200 kilometres. A huge and normally productive area was left parched and useless.

On 27 October, the Director-General reported to the United Nations General Assembly on the scale of the problem and the measures necessary to overcome it. Special meetings of affected countries, donors and international organizations at Rome in October and November resulted in a threefold increase in pledges of food aid by the end of 1983. Total food aid pledged to the 24 affected countries amounted to 1.75 million tonnes, compared with estimated requirements for the 1983/84 season of 5.3 million tonnes.

In addition to co-ordinating food aid supplied bilaterally or through the World Food Programme (WFP)-a joint venture of FAO and the United Nations-FAO gave direct help to farmers, including supplying them with seeds and fertilizers, so that they could resume production. The FAO Office for Special Relief Operations co-ordinated more than 20 emergency projects in sub-Saharan Africa, with a total budget of some $15 million. Many of them were small-scale operations financed through TCP: seven were designed to rehabilitate crop production affected by drought; four provided assistance to control rinderpest (in cattle) and other animal diseases; and four helped to resettle refugees in their home countries by providing them with essential inputs such as seeds and hand tools.

Field programmes

FAO devotes a large proportion of its field and regular programme resources to increasing production of crops, livestock and foodfish. Activities include research support, the supply of seeds and semen, and the provision of technical advice and assistance to field projects. Emphasis is placed on assisting developing countries to plan and carry out their own programmes and on encouraging technical co-operation among those countries.

Crops. About a third of FAO's field programme expenditure in 1983 was devoted to increasing crop production, with more than 600 field projects under way. The emphasis was on demonstrating to small farmers techniques for increased production, particularly of staple foods and oil crops, without high risk of failure. Governments were advised on conserving genetic resources, improving the supply of seeds and protecting crops from diseases and pests.

Livestock. By mobilizing greater resources in 1983 to deal with animal diseases, FAO responded to the advance southwards in Africa of the cattle disease rinderpest and the continuing outbreaks of African swine fever in many countries of Latin America and the Caribbean. More than 200 field projects, involving expenditure of almost $13 million, were concerned with animal health. Some $4 million in emergency assistance was provided through TCP to help more than 20 African countries control rinderpest, and a long-term Pan-African Rinderpest Campaign was planned.

An Italian trust fund project to strengthen veterinary services to prevent African swine fever in five South American countries became operational in July. Some 700,000 doses of foot-and-mouth disease vaccine were supplied to Bulgaria, Greece and Turkey during the year to maintain a buffer zone in south-eastern Europe, while Morocco was supplied with 1.5 million doses through TCP to control a serious outbreak of the disease.

Swedish funding for the International Meat Development Scheme (IMDS) ended in 1983 after nine years, during which missions had visited 45 countries to advise on meat and livestock sector development. IMDS identified $400-million worth of technical assistance and investment projects, resulting in $250 million of funding. Altogether, some 250 field projects involving expenditure of more than $25 million during 1983 were concerned with animal production.

Fisheries. The FAO Committee on Fisheries met in October to consider an overall strategy for fisheries management and development and associated action programmes, with final proposals to be submitted to the 1984 FAO World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development. The Conference would represent the first major initiative to examine the practical implications for fisheries of exclusive economic zones claimed by many coastal States.

Some 50 FAO fisheries projects under way in 1983 centred on small-scale fisheries and aquaculture. The Bay of Bengal Programme, one of the first and most successful of the regional programmes directed specifically at artisanal fisheries, was extended until 1986. The Programme, which began in 1979, was funded largely by Sweden.

Other projects helped member countries to improve marketing and distribution of fish catches and foodfish handling and processing. FAO operated 352 fisheries projects with expenditure of almost $30 million in 1983.

Food security, distribution and marketing. In April 1983, the FAO Committee on World Food Security adopted a new concept of food security proposed by the Director-General, which recognized that food security should have three specific aims: to ensure production of adequate food supplies; to maximize stability in the flow of supplies; and to secure access to available supplies by those who need them.

Much of FAO's direct help to improve distribution and marketing was channelled through its Programme for the Prevention of Food Losses and its Food Security Assistance Scheme, designed to help vulnerable countries strengthen their basic food security measures.

FAO technical assistance for marketing and trade led to significant investment by Governments and financing institutions. In 1983, financing institutions approved five marketing and credit projects prepared by the FAO Investment Centre worth some $484 million.

Land and water management. Greater awareness of the importance of soil conservation for agricultural production was reflected in the increasing number of requests from countries for assistance to control erosion and desertification and to reclaim degraded lands. In 1983, some 40 field projects with an expenditure of more than $2 million and involving some 50 resident experts were either entirely or partly concerned with soil conservation. Almost 140 projects worth some $11 million dealt with water development and irrigation.

FAO Fertilizer Programme activities expanded considerably during 1983 with projects under way in 19 African, Asian and Latin American countries. Increasing emphasis was given to integrated plant nutrition, combining the use of chemical fertilizers, locally available organic wastes such as crop residues and dung, and the biological "capture" of atmospheric nitrogen (nitrogen fixation).

Rural development. In accordance with the Programme of Action of the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development (WCARRD),^a FAO continued to support national policies to alleviate rural poverty and to promote rural development.

Twenty-nine country studies on the causes of rural poverty and the impact of government programmes formed the basis of the first of a series of progress reports on rural development, called for by WCARRD.

An important part of WCARRD follow-up was a programme to support women's roles in food production. In 1983, projects were under way in 12 countries, mostly in Africa. They concentrated on involving women in identifying what they needed to increase food production while making their other activities more efficient.

The People's Participation Programme was FAO's main vehicle for carrying out specific field elements of the WCAARD Programme of Action. In 1983, projects were under way in seven countries in Africa, six in Asia and the Pacific and one in the Near East.

Technical co-operation in rural development was encouraged through regional centres for integrated rural development, two of which were operating in Africa and in Asia and the Pacific. In October, Amman, Jordan, was selected as the site for the Near East centre.

Forestry. In forestry, FAO concentrated on training, curriculum development and institution building in member countries and was involved in 1983 in more than 300 projects costing almost $27 million.

The role of forestry in rural development was supported through programmes such as the Forestry for Local Community Development Programme supported by Sweden, which in 1983 approved funding for a three-year second phase. Sixteen projects remaining in operation from the first phase were concerned with increasing fuelwood supplies through village or farm woodlots, introducing and strengthening agro-forestry systems and increasing income through small-scale forest-based activities.

FAO helped the World Bank's Economic Development Institute to prepare and teach a course on project planning in forestry and forest industries. A comprehensive study was completed in 1983 on Foreign Investment in the Forest-based Sector in Africa, and work was begun on updating a similar study for Latin America.

Nutrition. A long-term strategy to improve nutrition by introducing the subject into all agricultural development projects became fully operational in 1983.

During the year, FAO was involved in some 80 field projects, with a total expenditure of almost $3 million, directed specifically at improving nutrition surveillance, education and food standards. Activities included assisting 16 countries to strengthen their food quality-control systems with advice on food laws and their enforcement, assistance in setting up laboratories and food inspection systems, and training programmes.

Popular participation. The FAO-sponsored Freedom from Hunger Campaign/Action for Development (FFHC/AD) programme encourages non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in developing countries to find partner organizations in the developed world. In 1983, FAO helped NGOs in developed countries to allocate more than $2 million to projects run by partners in developing countries. FFHC/AD projects encouraged the rural poor to identify and satisfy their own needs.

Each year, World Food Day (16 October) provides a major opportunity for people to reflect on the importance of food. In 1983, the day was observed in more than 150 countries.

Investment in agriculture. FAO continued to help developing countries prepare agricultural investment projects to attract external capital. In 1983, financing institutions and Governments approved 38 projects worth $2,053 million prepared by the ^aYUN 1979, p. 500.

FAO Investment Centre. Besides continuing its co-operation with major multilateral institutions such as the World Bank, FAO negotiated new agreements with three financing institutions: the United Nations Capital Development Fund, the East African Development Bank and the Central American Bank for Economic Integration.

By the end of 1983, FAO was responsible for carrying out more than $60-million worth of technical assistance in 36 investment projects, 29 of which were funded by the World Bank. FAO's work in this area was financed by host Governments, which recovered the costs from the investment funds.

World Food Programme. In 1983, 400 projects in 88 countries valued at $3,500 million were operational through WFP, which began operations in 1963.^b By the end of 1983, pledges in food aid and cash to WFP for 1983-1984 totalled $961.4 million-80 per cent of the target for the period and more than the total pledged during any previous biennium.

The 1983 FAO Conference established a pledging target of $1,350 million for WFP for 1985-1986.

WFP committed $696 million to development projects in 1983, a record for any one year. The projects were designed to increase food production, improve nutrition standards, promote human development and reduce rural poverty. Projects approved in 1983 included three totalling $84 million for forestry activities in the Indian states of Bihar, Madhya Pradesh and Orissa, three projects totalling $30 million to improve drainage and irrigation in three provinces of China, and multi-purpose projects for rural development in Mali ($31 million) and the Central African Republic ($10 million).

Much of the food aid for projects was supplied in the form of "food for work" paid to landless agricultural workers who would otherwise be unemployed. Food aid was also given to improve the nutritional standards of vulnerable groups such as pregnant women and children.

In 1983, the food crisis in sub-Saharan Africa absorbed a large part of WFP's emergency relief resources. Some 382,380 tonnes of cereals were shipped to the 24 African countries most affected by food shortages, mostly from the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR), which WFP managed on behalf of the international community.

All IEFR and WFP resources set aside for emergency purposes in 1983 were used. Apart from sub-Saharan Africa, WFP shipped emergency food aid to refugees along the Thai/Kampuchean border, to Afghan refugees in Pakistan and to refugees in Lebanon and Central America.

Secretariat

At end of 1983, the total number of staff employed by FAO at its headquarters was 3,265, of whom 1,098 were in the Professional and higher categories. Field project personnel working in 113 countries numbered 1,112 in the Professional and higher categories and 726 in the General Service category. Regional office, joint division and country representation staff numbered 241 in the Professional and higher categories and 717 in the General Service category. Of the 293 associate experts working with FAO, 246 were in the field, 16 in regional and country offices and 31 at headquarters. In addition, WFP employed 120 Professional and higher category staff and 184 General Service personnel at headquarters and 197 staff in the field.

Budget

The November 1983 session of the FAO Conference approved a budget of some $421 million for 1984-1985.

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

During 1983, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued to promote collaboration among nations through education, natural and social sciences, culture and communication.

Three States joined UNESCO during 1983—Saint Vincent and the Grenadines (15 February), Fiji (14 July) and Saint Christopher and Nevis (26 October)—bringing the membership to 161. The Netherlands Antilles and the British Virgin Islands were admitted as associate members of UNESCO on 26 October and 24 November, respectively, raising the associate membership to three.

The twenty-second session of the UNESCO General Conference was held at UNESCO headquarters, Paris, from 25 October to 26 November.

Education

The 1983 UNESCO education programme continued to emphasize literacy, the elimination of all forms of inequality and discrimination, improvement of the quality of education, while assuring its relevance with respect to the advancement of knowledge and of the needs of a multidimensional endogenous development, and its contribution to strengthening peace, disarmament, international understanding and co-operation, the promotion of human rights and the elimination of all forms of oppression.

An international conference on education for international understanding, co-operation and peace and education relating to human rights and fundamental freedoms, with a view to developing a climate of opinion favourable to the strengthening of security and disarmament, was held in Paris from 12 to 20 April. Attended by representatives from 122 member States, the conference took stock of their efforts to implement UNESCO's 1974 recommendation on the subject.

On the thirtieth anniversary of the Associated Schools Project, an international congress (Sofia, Bulgaria, 12-16 September), attended by more than 200 people from 69 countries, reviewed three decades of activities and drew up a strategy to reinforce the Associated Schools network. By 1983, there were 1,730 schools in 85 member States belonging to the network.

The fifth regional conference of Arab education ministers and those responsible for economic planning, scheduled for 1983, was postponed until 1984 for technical reasons.

In science and technology education, a regional consultation was held in 1983 as a follow-up to a recommendation of the 1982 conference of African education ministers and ministers for economic planning. The meeting suggested establishing a regional consultative committee to advise on formulating a programme for renewal of science and technology education in Africa. Among publications produced during 1983 to improve science and technology education were New Trends in Primary School Science Education and New Trends in School Science Equipment, published in English; French, Spanish and Arabic versions were under preparation. A number of books on physics teaching and mathematics education were also ready for publication.

During the 1981-1983 triennium, there was an increase in aid given to member States under UNESCO's regular programme to support national efforts in the fight against illiteracy, with 60 countries (including 15 of the least developed) benefiting from this co-operation, compared with 35 during the previous biennium. Projects were divided among the regions as follows: Africa, 20, including one regional; Asia and the Pacific, 11 (one regional); Arab States, 9; Latin America and the Caribbean, 13 (one regional and one subregional). Some activities were carried out within large campaigns for literacy (Ethiopia, Nicaragua and Yemen). Efforts to rally world opinion and stimulate international co-operation to combat illiteracy were principally directed towards intensifying activities related to International Literacy Day (8 September). In 1983 there were 32 candidates for literacy prizes.

UNESCO's activities in higher education, aimed at improving the mobility of students, teachers and research workers, included the adoption by an international conference of States (Bangkok, Thailand, 12-16 December) of a Regional Convention on the Recognition of Studies, Diplomas and Degrees in Higher Education in Asia and the Pacific. Co-operation with member States in developing higher education continued during 1983 with assistance provided in the form of missions and advisory services. Study grants were allocated under the regular programme and the Participation Programme.

Activities of UNESCO's regional and subregional educational innovation programmes and networks were further developed and expanded during the year, The Asian Programme of Educational Innovation for Development and the Network of Educational Innovation for Development in Africa held regional advisory meetings at Bangkok and Kano, Nigeria, respectively, and an agreement was signed with Kuwait to set up a regional co-ordination centre for the educational innovation programme for development in Arab member States.

Other efforts by UNESCO during 1983 to develop co-operation with member States in education included: training educational personnel; building schools; financing education; promoting equality of educational opportunity; improving educational structures, content, methods and techniques; promoting technical, vocational and adult education; and integrated rural development.

The International Institute for Educational Planning (IIEP) in Paris continued to organize workshops, seminars and fellowship programmes in educational planning and administration. Its annual training programme had 44 participants in 1983. Workshops and seminars dealt mainly with educational reform and the new role of educational planning; special emphasis was given to microplanning, education and employment, administration and communication. IIEP continued to conduct research and publications programmes.

The International Bureau of Education at Geneva and the UNESCO Institute for Education at Hamburg (Federal Republic of Germany) strengthened research and training activities at all levels.

During 1983, UNESCO took part in some 300 national, regional and subregional education projects with financial assistance from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA), the World Bank, regional banks and funds-in-trust. Over 100 missions were fielded to identify and prepare projects and to provide technical backstopping.

Natural sciences

During 1983, UNESCO strengthened its efforts to use the resources of science and technology for the benefit of developing countries by assisting member States in planning, training and research activities. Following a meeting in March, a group of eminent scientists and engineers made final proposals concerning the draft programme and budget for 1984-1985 in implementation of the second medium-term plan (1984-1989).

Increased co-operation between UNESCO and the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU) led to the launching of a joint fellowship programme with stipends of $50,000 each. The two organizations also collaborated in creating the new ICSU Press.

The International Geological Correlation Programme (IGCP) continued to undertake projects in geological sciences. At its 1983 session, the UNESCO

General Conference endorsed the IGCP Scientific Committee's recommendation that the name of the Programme be changed to International Geological Co-operation Programme in order to accommodate disciplines such as geophysics. During the year, IGCP published a second bibliographic catalogue of more than 14,000 titles. A conference of Central and East African countries on the study of the Kibarian chain (Bujumbura, Burundi) enabled those countries to pool their contribution to the study of a major structure. Studies of the metallogeny of various pre-Cambrian formations of West Africa were carried out in Togo and the Upper Volta.

The year 1983 marked the end of the implementation of the second phase (1981-1983) of the International Hydrological Programme. Through projects co-ordinated by its Intergovernmental Council, improvements were made in understanding hydrological processes, in surveying and assessing water resources, in computing hydrological parameters, in analysing and predicting changes in the hydrological régime due to human activities, and in developing procedures for managing water resources.

In the area of ocean and coastal-marine systems, a major interregional project of research and training leading to integrated management of coastal-marine systems saw, in 1983, its first research schemes financed from extrabudgetary sources.

Social sciences

During 1983, UNESCO continued to support the development of the social sciences in all regions, both directly and indirectly, through international professional non-governmental organizations, regional centres and associations. Activities involved training, research, theory and methodology, information and documentation services, international exchanges and publications.

Concerning development planning, several studies were undertaken on the endogenous development process, bearing mainly on factors favourable to it or prerequisites in respect of various aspects—social, economic, administrative, cultural—of endogenous development. A meeting of some 15 experts was held in Paris in October on the exchange of knowledge for an endogenous development—a study of the conditions for North-South and South-South co-operation. An important UNESCO publication devoted to the study of development was issued in 1983 entitled Towards a new philosophy of development. Other studies on development were concerned with: socio-cultural inequalities between and within nations; new styles of development and participation of populations in the development process; socio-cultural aspects of rural development; the socio-cultural impact of the activities of transnational corporations; and the situation and role of children in different cultural and environmental contexts.

Socio-economic analysis and development planning activities were aimed at elaborating and applying social science methods of analysis, planning and evaluation, with a view to strengthening national capacity in those skills. They dealt with: the practical use of socio-economic indicators at the national and subnational levels for analysis and planning; research on planning methods, including modelling, and the strengthening of national capacity to use the UNESCO Educational Simulation Model; and studies on evaluation methods and their use in different countries.

Environmental activities were directed towards research on rural habitat and public participation-rehabilitation of historic centres, the broader ecosystem in which people lived, the integrated training of planners and administrators of human settlements, the training of "barefoot" architects, and the UNESCO mass media programme to inform the public of environmental issues which concerned them. A second seminar on setting up a training programme for specialists wishing to help inhabitants of precarious human settlements to improve their physical living conditions was held at Bangkok from 30 May to 4 June. A third seminar on possible solutions to urban problems was held at the end of December at New Delhi, India. The third in a series of meetings organized in conjunction with the International Association of City and Regional Planners was held at Amsterdam, Netherlands, during the year on the theme "Implementation of town-planning: the partners".

Population activities dealt with the demographic, socio-cultural and economic aspects of internal and international migration; the interrelationship between population, resources and development; assistance to member States to develop strategies for peoples' participation and involvement in development and in implementing population policies and programmes; the integration of human rights and development considerations in population communication programmes; the training of personnel in social communication techniques; and the training of journalists. The research network in three key areas-internal and international migration, effects of demographic trends and development on the status of women, and family structure and socio-economic change-was extended to a large number of universities and research institutions in all regions. An international symposium was held in October 1983 to investigate migration problems which needed to be studied as a basis for future action. Technical documents issued in 1983 contained: a descriptive analysis of the pilot experiments integrating human rights factors in population communication programmes; an analysis of research on population communication and its implications for population policies and programmes in West Africa; the role of folk media and mass media in population communication; and analysis of communication for population and development programmes in Egypt. A study on the attitudes of Chinese youth to family formation was published in Chinese.

In continuing its work on an analysis of human rights violations and the conditions for a constructive peace, UNESCO collaborated more closely with the United Nations., the United Nations University and an increasing number of universities and research institutions. The second and third in a series of regional meetings of experts on ethno-development and ethnocide were held during 1983. The participants at a meeting on Africa (Ouagadougou, Upper Volta) emphasized the need to maintain an African cultural identity rather than isolate specific ethnic identities within Pan-Africanism. The European regional meeting (Karasjok, Norway) was held with the assistance of the Norwegian National Commission for UNESCO, the Nordic Sami Institute and the University of Troms. A meeting of experts on improving the exercise of human rights in urban areas was held at Cairo, Egypt, in April with the support of the Arab Regional Centre for Social Sciences.

Regarding disarmament education, the third in a series of regional training seminars took place in 1983 at Dakar, Senegal. An international symposium on the role of the media concerning disarmament (Nairobi, Kenya, April) revealed divergent positions held by specialists on the question of the relationship between the media and society and the conditions required for disarmament. The 1983 UNESCO Prize for Peace Education was awarded to Pax Christi, International Catholic Peace Movement.

The UNESCO programme on the status of women, their participation in development and their role in strengthening peace involved studies and analyses on the implications of certain social phenomena for the status of women. Interdisciplinary research was conducted on the role of women in society and forms of discrimination and mechanisms conducive to discrimination against them. Women's participation in political and public life was the subject of an expert meeting (Lisbon, Portugal) and a workshop (Ottawa, Canada).

UNESCO's youth programme evolved national operational projects in developing countries through: analysis and dissemination of information concerning youth; enlistment of young people in the service of international co-operation, development and peace; and action on behalf of disadvantaged young people. During the year UNESCO participated in planning activities for International Youth Year (1985), both within and outside the United Nations system. To promote subregional co-operation in youth affairs, a meeting of senior officials from Indian Ocean countries was organized in Réunion.

Culture

In 1983, preparations began on the General History of Latin America and the General History of the Caribbean, and work continued on the General History of Africa and the History of the Civilisations of Central Asia. Historical studies and research were carried out on various aspects of Islamic culture, on Asian, Pacific, Celtic, Slav, South-East European and Arctic cultures.

New literary works, translated from a number of languages into others, both widely spoken and less widely spoken, were added to the UNESCO collection of representative works. Radio programmes based on these translations were produced for broadcasting services in different parts of the world.

In the field of artistic creativity, a UNESCO collection of dance films, kept at the Stockholm Dance Museum, Sweden, was started in 1983 with the assistance of the International Dance Council. Four important meetings, organized with the assistance of various bodies, took place in Africa in 1983: a seminar on oral tradition as a source of literary inspiration, International PEN (Dakar); a symposium on musical traditions, International Music Council (Kinshasa, Zaire); a meeting of experts on cinema education, International Film and Television Council (Upper Volta); and a workshop on utilizing theatrical traditions as an aid to social development, International Theatre Institute (Harare, Zimbabwe).

The third UNESCO/International Music Council Prize was awarded in 1983 to Claudio Arrau, Herbert von Karajan and the Royal Academy of Music of Sweden in recognition of their efforts in the cause of international co-operation and their contribution to the enrichment and development of music. The International Simon Bolivar Prize was awarded for the first time on 24 July 1983, the bicentenary of Bolivar's birth.

During 1983, there was an increase in activities to implement international campaigns for the protection of cultural heritage. By the end of the year, 29 international campaigns approved by the UNESCO General Conference were being conducted or were in preparation and $2.9 million had been collected. New campaigns were launched to safeguard the historic quarters of Istanbul and the site of Göreme (Turkey), as well as for the Plaza Vieja at Havana (Cuba). A second appeal was launched for the preservation of the monumental site of Moenjodaro (Pakistan).

The World Heritage Committee, established under the 1972 International Convention concerning the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage, held its seventh session at Florence, Italy, from 5 to 9 December 1983. The Committee inscribed 29 additional sites on the World Heritage List, making a total of 165 cultural and natural properties in 45 countries protected by the Convention, to which 78 States were party as at 31 December 1983. Efforts continued to promote public awareness of the Convention's objectives and to encourage contributions to the World Heritage Fund which provided assistance for training activities and restoration work at World Heritage sites.

Communications

During 1983, UNESCO continued to promote a free flow and wider and better-balanced dissemination of information and to conduct research on the social role of communication. Work was expanded in communication policy and planning to bridge the gap between research and action to improve communication systems in developing countries.

Studies and analyses were undertaken to frame proposals for the establishment of a new world information and communication order. A major event was a round-table meeting held at Innsbruck, Austria, in September, in conjunction with the United Nations.

Work continued on defining and analysing the concept of the right to communicate and the findings of studies carried out under this programme were published, in English and French, under the title The right to communicate. Assistance was provided for a conference on the role of information in the realization of the human rights of migrant workers (Tampere, Finland).

Studies on the flow of information included a global survey of the flow of television news and programmes, carried out by a network of institutions, which supplied data from 57 countries. A report on the circulation of world news in the early 1980s was prepared for publication.

Information flow activities included renewed efforts to lower telecommunication tariffs for the mass media (in co-operation with the International Telecommunication Union), co-operation with journalists' and broadcasters' organizations, and proposals to establish a network for the exchange of television films and documentaries. The exchange of news by satellite was a specific concern, and an experiment in the regular exchange of televised news by satellite among broadcasting services of 25 African, Arab, Asian and Pacific countries was successfully carried out during March.

Communication research work was undertaken on the role of communication media in combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid. An international symposium was held at Nairobi on the theme of the media and disarmament. Communication technologies were examined at three 1983 symposia organized with UNESCO assistance. The economic and socio-cultural impact of such technologies was the central topic of a fourth symposium, held in Rome.

A meeting of documentation centres belonging to the International Network of Documentation Centres on Communication Research and Policies was held at Cracow, Poland, in 1983, and plans were made for further expansion of the network and for its progressive automation.

Preparations were intensified for the Intergovernmental Conference on Communication Policies in the Arab States (1984), and follow-up activities to earlier meetings held in Africa, Asia and Latin America were pursued. Preliminary discussions were held with member States on a possible European region conference.

The Intergovernmental Council of the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC) held its fourth session at Tashkent, USSR, in September. The Council recommended 32 interregional, regional and national projects for financial support, ranging from the training of communicators to providing electronic field production facilities for rural television. Of these, 13 national and six interregional and regional projects were approved for immediate funding.

Development of communication infrastructures continued to be one of the most important IPDC objectives. Operational activities were centred on the creation or development of regional news exchange organizations, the Pan-African News Agency, the Latin American Features Agency and the Asian News Network. A project to expand the Caribbean News Agency, including creating a specialized radio news bulletin service, was also launched.

Many training projects were also organized, such as the establishment of a national training centre in Bangladesh and assistance to regional training programmes in Africa, Asia, the Arab States and the Caribbean.

Two in a series of regional consultations to co-ordinate follow-up action to the 1982 World Congress on Books^a were held in June 1983: one for Africa at Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon, and the other for Asia and the Pacific in Singapore.

General Information Programme

The UNESCO General Information Programme was concerned with developing and promoting national, regional and international information systems in scientific and technological information, documentation, libraries and archives.

The Programme continued to emphasize socio-economic information and the special needs of developing countries. It aimed to facilitate member States' choice, use and adaptation of advanced information and communication technology and to strengthen UNESCO's information role in the United Nations system.

Publications included the quarterly Journal of Information Science, Librarianship and Archives Administration, as well as guidelines, studies, technical reports, state-of-the-art reviews and directories.

As at 31 December 1983, allocations approved by the Director-General for 1981-1983 under the UNESCO Participation Programme, through which member States and organizations participate in technical assistance activities, amounted to $15,738,818. In view of the fact that the budget provisions, approved by the UNESCO General Conference at its twenty-first (1980) session, were for three years, distribution of the funds was made in two instalments.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

The thirty-sixth World Health Assembly met at Geneva from 2 to 16 May 1983 and approved a wide-ranging programme of activities in support of the plan of action for attaining health for all by the year 2000, approved in 1982.^a The Assembly also endorsed the findings of an international committee of experts on the probable effects of nuclear war. The committee had concluded that it was impossible to prepare health services to deal in any systematic way with a catastrophe resulting from nuclear warfare, and that nuclear weapons constituted the greatest immediate threat to the health and welfare of mankind. Members of the committee included physicists, physicians, geneticists, epidemiologists, and experts in public health, nuclear medicine and biology, radiopathology, radiation protection, burn injuries and plastic surgery. The Assembly urged the member States of the World Health Organization (WHO) to give careful consideration to the committee's conclusions, and requested the Director-General to publish the committee's report to ensure that it received wide publicity.

Dr. Halfdan Mahler was reappointed as WHO Director-General by the Assembly for a third live-year term beginning in July 1983.

Among other programme and operational topics considered by the Executive Board and the Assembly in 1983 were: infant and child nutrition; alcohol-related health problems; cardiovascular diseases; tuberculosis control; African human trypanosomiasis; oral health; progress towards the goals of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990); and the role of nursing/midwifery personnel in health-for-all strategies.

In 1983, responding to an Executive Board resolution, the Director-General outlined a framework for the optimal use of WHO's resources in direct support of member States. Such resources would be used to help Governments build up their health systems, emphasizing the creation of sound infrastructures to carry out health programmes using appropriate technology.

Three countries became members of WHO during 1983—Vanuatu on 7 March, Solomon Islands on 4 April and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines on 2 September—which brought its membership to 161 and one associate member.

Emergency assistance

WHO continued to participate fully in providing emergency assistance in 1983, its work being carried out in close collaboration with United Nations agencies and other institutions and non-governmental organizations active in disaster work. WHO undertook over 50 emergency actions in connection with earthquakes, hurricanes, cyclones, Volcanoes, epidemics, the plight of refugees, post-war conditions and civil strife. WHO also took part in all major United Nations multi-agency missions on disaster situations.

Health system infrastructure

Health system development

Information, training, research and legislative activities related to health system development were carried out by WHO during 1983.

A meeting of regional advisers (Geneva, December) examined the global implications of WHO's programme to assess health situations and trends, set up in 1982.^b

WHO assisted 13 countries to perform morbidity and mortality surveys and health studies: four 'in South-East Asia, three in Europe and six in the Eastern Mediterranean. Assistance was also given in investigating epidemics, including an outbreak of illness on the West Bank of the Jordan.

Four students graduated from the field epidemiology training programme in Thailand, which was supported by WHO and the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, Georgia (United States).

Courses on health statistics and health records were given in many countries, and a number of teaching manuals and aids were prepared for publication. Guidelines were drafted for those teaching the collection, analysis and use of health information to primary health care workers.

A systematic attempt was made to strengthen national health research capabilities in the African region. Numerous workshops, short courses and courses on research methodology and management were arranged for participants from English- and French-speaking countries. At the same time, the region's network of national research centres was expanded with the establishment of institutions in Ethiopia, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Mozambique, Nigeria, Zaire and Zambia.

In the region of the Americas, WHO co-operated with Peru and Uruguay in general surveys of health services with a view to their reorganization. The surveys were aided financially by the World Bank in Peru and by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in Uruguay.

In the South-East Asia region, a health services research information system was being developed and linked with the health literature, library and information services network. Guidelines for the standardization of information were tested in some countries. A conceptual description of health systems research, as recommended by the Advisory Committee on Medical Research (ACMR), was circulated to all countries.

In the European region, ACMR recommended that WHO activate and support health services research wherever it was lacking. Reviewing the recommendations of a regional study group (Mürren, Switzerland, January), ACMR discussed a programme on social equity and health. The programme had started in 1982 and focused initially on migrants and the unemployed. ACMR stressed that equity in health was a research priority of increasing importance. An advisory committee on the programme met in October to examine national experience in the field.

Workshops supported by WHO were held on drug legislation in Nepal in April and on food safety laws in China in October.

A study on trends in health legislation in Europe was completed. It attempted to demonstrate the importance of such legislation in the reorientation of national health systems and the implementation of specific health programmes. Two meetings were held at Brussels, Belgium, to prepare for an international course on health legislation; the course was to be held in 1984 (in English) and in 1985 (in French).

Primary health care systems

Translating the primary health care approach into tangible programmes that national health services could implement in such varied places as remote rural villages and crowded urban slums remained one of the greatest challenges facing WHO. As a means of diverting resources away from undue emphasis on sophisticated, hospital-based technologies, WHO developed in 1983 guiding principles to demonstrate what might be accomplished through alternative methods. The principles were intended to help reorient health delivery systems to primary care and overcome the dearth of information available to those responsible for system planning, implementation and evaluation.

A project for the joint control of diabetes and cardiovascular diseases within the primary health care system was begun in the United Republic of Tanzania in 1983, while workshops at Lomé, Togo, and Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, discussed ways of improving malaria control.

With support from the Swedish International Development Authority and the Swedish Agency for Research Co-operation with Developing Countries, co-ordinated efforts to strengthen primary health care were begun in Ethiopia, Sri Lanka, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia. Often focused on specific districts, activities included decentralized planning, practical research, management and other training, and evaluation. The needs common to most countries were found to be logistic support, information system development, drug supply, integration of services and promotion of teamwork. Areas for further action were identified at an interregional meeting held in Zambia in December.

An interregional consultation (Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, April), which brought together participants from national and regional health and management training institutions in 14 developed and developing countries, identified three areas for future collaboration: strengthening of training capabilities; development of teaching/learning modules; and research on the roles of middle-level managers.

Health manpower

The motive power behind the concept of health for all comes primarily from trained personnel, each with the necessary training and understanding of the tasks he or she is to perform, whether at the ministry level or the rural health centre, whether highly trained medical specialist or part-time community health worker. To bring about a broader comprehension of the tasks to be performed, WHO conducted workshops and study groups in 1983, dealing with intersectoral co-operation, manpower planning, administration of fellowship programmes, continuing education and resources deployment.

In November/December, an interregional consultation at Bangalore, India, assessed health manpower management and proposed ways to improve it. In support of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, a workshop was held (Geneva, November) to form a global team to explore ways to implement the strategies for the Decade. Fellowship officers from the Western Pacific region met at Manila, Philippines, in October to discuss improving the planning of fellowships and the selection of fellows.

Public information and education for health

Topics related to public information and health education were the focus of technical discussions at the World Health Assembly and regional committee meetings in 1983. The Assembly considered new policies for health education in primary health care. The consensus was that new policies must include unequivocal recognition of the need to involve the community in health planning, and awareness that health was not merely a medical issue, but involved environmental, cultural, political, social and economic factors. In the regions, the concept of community participation was emphasized. The importance of providing children and youth with adequate information and education for health and the use of appropriate technology, including traditional methods of communication, were also high on the list of priorities.

World Health Day 1983 (7 April) warned of the need for drastic and immediate action, with the slogan "Health for all by the year 2000: the countdown has begun".

General health protection

During 1983, WHO prepared a monograph on nutritional surveillance and an updated set of guidelines for the measurement of change in nutritional status.

An interregional WHO meeting at Geneva in June reviewed the strengthening of national capabilities in nutrition and stressed the importance of filling manpower gaps through the training of senior staff. The training of staff was explored in detail and a plan of action drawn up at a meeting in September of representatives of training institutions, the United Nations and bilateral agencies.

A common strategy for oral health was outlined by the World Health Assembly in 1983. The strategy was based on the recognition that all national oral health situations were really variations on a single theme. Whatever the prevalence of oral disease, the key to its reduction was the well-managed prevention of periodontal disease and dental caries. The role of WHO was to help countries to analyse the situation, establish policies and goals, plans and programmes, and identify obstacles to their achievement.

The accident prevention programme was expanded beyond its initial focus on motor vehicle mishaps. Children and the aged were given special attention in the overall programme. Information was collected on accident risks in domestic surroundings in different socio-cultural settings. A consultation was held in October to examine the types of accidents and injuries encountered in agricultural work.

The first interregional post-graduate course on injury prevention in developing countries was held in June at Baltimore, Maryland (United States), in co-operation with Johns Hopkins University. Seventeen countries from five WHO regions sent participants.

Health of specific population groups

The wide gap between maternal mortality rates in developed and developing countries reflected differences in health, the availability of care, socio-economic conditions and the status of women. Data were being collected and analysed at the global level on the incidence and causes of maternal mortality, with particular reference to women who received no qualified care during childbirth. In the Eastern Mediterranean region, a system of confidential inquiries was promoted to improve understanding of avoidable maternal deaths, with a view to modifying health workers' training and service.

In 1983, 70 countries, 44 of which were developing countries, took part in the WHO Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction. Some 600 research projects were carried out, 36 research training courses and workshops were held, and 120 research training grants were awarded to scientists from 25 countries.

The study of two practical problems associated with aging was undertaken in 1983 by WHO. The first was senile dementia, an intractable problem causing widespread suffering. A WHO scientific group (Paris, August/September) reviewed biomedical and health services research on senile brain disorders. Its report, containing an integrated plan for collaborative research, was submitted to ACMR in October. The second problem concerned the consequences for health of longevity, raising the question of whether disabling diseases might increase with the life-span. This was discussed by the WHO Scientific Group on the Epidemiology of Aging (Geneva, January), which recommended epidemiological investigations directed to the maintenance of function.

Mental health

The mental health programme of WHO comprised three interrelated activities: psychosocial factors in promoting health and human development; preventing and controlling alcohol and drug abuse; and preventing and treating mental and neurological disorders.

Collaboration with countries in formulating national mental health programmes and policies remained a central concern of WHO in 1983. To this end numerous symposia, meetings and workshops were held in various regions.

Environmental health

During 1983, WHO co-operated with member States to provide safe drinking-water and sanitation to people still unserved or underserved as part of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade. The World Health Assembly, noting that countries were encountering difficulties in achieving the goals that they had set for the Decade, recommended that member States promote safe drinking-water and sanitation as an essential component of primary health care.

With the support of 17 member States and more than 100 institutions, the International Programme on Chemical Safety spearheaded a global effort to reduce existing environmental hazards and to anticipate the possibly adverse effects of new substances. The first phase of an international study on short-term, in vitro tests for genotoxicity and carcinogenicity was completed in 1983.

Environmental pollution control in relation to development was considered by a WHO expert committee (Geneva, November). It reviewed problems associated with agrochemicals, urbanization and industrial operations, and offered recommendations on prevention and control measures.

In the Western Pacific region, a WHO-sponsored intercountry workshop on environmental mutagenesis, carcinogenesis and teratogenesis (Shanghai, China, May) was attended by experts from 11 countries.

Traditional medicine

A WHO survey of traditional medicine, 'completed in 1983, provided information on some national activities. Member States showed increasing interest in utilizing traditional and indigenous resources in implementing primary health care programmes. Legislation was adopted by Burma, Malawi, Mexico, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Thailand, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam and Zambia. WHO collaborating centres for traditional medicine continued to aid national efforts. By the end of 1983, 16 centres had been designated: four in Africa, three in the Americas, two in South-East Asia, one in Europe and six in the Western Pacific. Guidelines were developed on the recognition, use, preparation and quality control of the most commonly used medicinal plants and their extracts.

Disease prevention and control

Acute respiratory infections

The mortality rate from respiratory infections was still very high in developing countries. The situation for children was particularly disturbing, with a mortality rate some 50 times greater than in developed countries.

A newly appointed technical advisory group on acute respiratory infections held its first meeting at Geneva in March 1983. It concluded that there was enough knowledge and technology available to enable countries to introduce programmes for the control of such infections. Programmes should be carried out in the context of primary health care and include early discrimination between mild and severe infections, antimicrobial treatment, criteria for referral of cases to a higher health care level, health education of families, and immunization against measles, diphtheria, pertussis and childhood tuberculosis.

Blindness

The WHO programme advisory group on the prevention of blindness met at Manila in 1983 and focused on the development of prevention strategies within a framework of primary health care. Collaborative efforts with non-governmental organizations also were explored.

A working group met at Geneva in November/December to recommend methods for the prevention and treatment of ophthalmia neonatorum, with particular reference to primary health care.

Cancer

The three programme priorities in cancer control were prevention, early detection coupled with efficient therapy, and pain relief. National cancer policies being formulated were based on those principles. The use of primary health care systems for delivery of control measures was explored and the cost-effectiveness of those measures and existing knowledge taken into account.

A clearer division of work between WHO and the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) was established with WHO concentrating on cancer control, including developing national policies, prevention, early detection, therapy, after-care and operational research. IARC efforts were directed towards the identification of carcinogenic factors in the environment, the definition of risk groups, and the description of the epidemiological situation throughout the world, including related laboratory and field research.

The list of essential drugs for cancer chemotherapy was reviewed at a consultation (Geneva, October). Therapeutic clinical trials were conducted at 12 cancer institutes in Latin America and 10 centres in the United States, as part of the collaborative cancer treatment research programme.

The African Organization for Research and Training in Cancer was established with the help of WHO in 1983. Among its objectives were the development of regional training facilities and the formulation of a regional curriculum in oncology.

An international case-control study of cancer of the pancreas, with emphasis on the role of known stimulators of cholecystokinin release, currently involved centres at Adelaide, Australia; Toronto, Canada; Utrecht, Netherlands; and Warsaw, Poland. The analysis of occupational histories in case-control studies was also being sponsored.

Cardiovascular diseases

In 1983, the World Health Assembly concurred with recommendations of the Executive Board that additional funds be allocated to the programme on cardiovascular diseases, with particular reference to the prevention of coronary heart disease. The Assembly urged member States to give special attention to the wide possibilities for prevention and control of cardiovascular diseases as part of their national health plans.

The chief investigators of community control programmes in developing countries met at Manila in June to consider the possibilities for the prevention of cardiovascular diseases in primary health care. They recommended that for the time being projects be restricted to a defined area and a few priority problems. Such programmes were being developed in the Philippines, Sri Lanka, Thailand and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Heart muscle disease of obscure or unknown etiology was an important cause of cardiovascular morbidity and death in many parts of the world. In some Latin American countries, for example, mortality from involvement of the heart due to Chagas' disease accounted for more than 40 per cent of all cardiovascular deaths. Many questions remained unanswered in this area of cardiology and there was still much confusion in terminology. In April, the Expert Committee on Cardiomyopathies met at Geneva to review current knowledge and propose action and research, including epidemiological studies which might be undertaken.

Diarrhoeal diseases

By the end of 1983, of the 71 developing countries that had completed plans for national programmes of diarrhoeal disease control, 50 were operational. Much of the planning had been facilitated by the WHO training course for programme managers which had been given 20 times and had been attended by 678 senior staff from 117 developing countries.

Forty-three morbidity and mortality surveys were carried out in 19 countries to provide baseline data for national programmes. They showed that, on average, children under the age of five had three episodes of diarrhoea annually and that about one third of all deaths in this age-group were associated with diarrhoea.

An International Conference on Oral Rehydration Therapy (Washington, D. C., June), attended by more than 500 participants, was sponsored by the United States Agency for International Development in co-operation with the International Centre for Diarrhoeal Disease Research (Bangladesh), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and WHO.

Malaria

The UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy, at its twenty-fourth session in February 1983, recognized that malaria continued to be a major problem in many countries, with serious effects on the health of mothers and children. A study group on malaria control as part of primary health care (Geneva, November) met to identify practical approaches that could be applied at various levels and those which needed to be further developed.

A regional workshop on drug-resistant malaria (Jakarta, Indonesia, May) was devoted to research on the monitoring, epidemiology and control of drug-resistant falciparum malaria. 'The development of new antimalarial drugs had become a major need for the global malaria programme and field trials of new drugs were being conducted. The largest such field trial, using a combination of mefloquine, sulfadoxine and pyrimethamine and involving 100,000 people, was conducted in Thailand by the Government, industry and WHO.

Other parasitic diseases

Multicentre clinical trials of the new, effective, orally administered antischistosomal drug, praziquantel, co-ordinated by WHO and the manufacturers, were completed by the end of 1983. Long-term toxicity and carcinogenicity studies also co-ordinated by WHO did not reveal untoward effects. Extensive experience with use of the drug was gained, particularly in the Blue Nile health project in the Sudan, whose most important achievement to date was the prevention of the introduction of schistosomiasis into the Rahad zone. Other countries showed interest in the large-scale use of the drug; in the Philippines, striking reductions in the prevalence of infection were seen after field trials.

Emphasis was placed on the use of diethylcarbamazine (DEC) to control acute manifestations of lymphatic filariasis and thus prevent the development of chronic disabling lesions such as elephantiasis and hydrocele. This approach, using relatively small doses of DEC given at intervals of a week, a month or a year, was being followed with success, and was sometimes being extended to treatment of asymptomatic microfilariae carriers, as in China, French Polynesia, Indonesia and Samoa. It was being considered for use in India as a supplement to existing mosquito control measures.

Technical co-operation continued for the control of onchocerciasis, using larvicides against Simulium, nidulectomy and chemotherapy. Participating countries in Africa were Malawi, Nigeria, the Sudan and the United Republic of Tanzania, as well as those involved in the Onchocerciasis Control Programme in the Volta River basin area and its proposed western extension. Similar work in the Americas involved Brazil, Ecuador, Guatemala, Mexico and Venezuela. In Mexico a WHO collaborating centre was designated, and in Ecuador the distribution and delineation of the endemic foci were assessed. Research to find new drugs for treatment of onchocerciasis included clinical trials of mebendazole, flubendazole and ivermectin, preclinical toxicity testing of new macrofilaricides, and expansion of basic research on biochemistry, chemical synthesis and screening to find new active compounds.

Accurate data on the prevalence and distribution of Chagas' disease were scarce, but current estimates suggested that some 65 million people lived under conditions favouring transmission and that the number of infected people probably was about 25 million. For control, large-scale insecticide spraying was being carried out in Argentina, Brazil and Venezuela. A cause of concern was the apparent spread of the disease through the migration of people from rural areas to the cities and through blood transfusion from infected donors. Research concentrated on the prevention of transmission by blood transfusion, development of new therapeutic drugs, and exploration of various epidemiological methods including serological tests.

The public health importance of the leishmaniasis had been re-emphasized during the past few years. Severe outbreaks in India and Kenya were brought under control, but new active foci were suspected, for instance in Afghanistan and Nepal. In South America, the leishmaniasis were on the increase, often as a result of movements of temporary labourers in sandfly-infested areas such as the Amazonian forest. In general, control efforts were insufficient and hampered by the wide diversity of transmission situations. Ad hoc technical support continued to be provided where needed by WHO.

Sexually transmitted diseases

A meeting at Geneva in November 1983 synthesized global knowledge of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), whose aetiology and therapy remained unknown. It examined risk factors, possible causes, and the clinical and immunological picture. It made preliminary recommendations for prevention, diagnostic and screening tests, and clinical management of cases, and indicated promising areas for research.

The WHO Expert Committee on Venereal Diseases and Treponematoses also met at Geneva in November and reviewed complex changes which had taken place in the perspectives and dynamics of sexually transmitted infections. The Committee outlined an adaptation of technologies and priorities to improve control.

Smoking and health

Co-sponsored by WHO, the Fifth World Conference on Smoking and Health (Winnipeg, Canada, July 1983) was attended by more than 1,000 people from about 80 countries. Emphasis was given to issues relating to developing countries; smoking among women and young people; and the social and economic aspects of tobacco consumption. An important recommendation was that non-smoking and the right to a smoke-free atmosphere should be established as the social norm.

Tuberculosis

In view of the fact that tuberculosis hardly seemed to be declining in developing countries and of the unexpected finding from a study in south India that BCG (Bacillus Calmette-Guérin) vaccination might not afford the protection against the disease formerly thought to be the case, the World Health Assembly directed the WHO tuberculosis programme to develop more effective control strategies. To achieve nation-wide coverage, it was suggested that tuberculosis programmes be integrated into comprehensive health systems. An epidemiological breakthrough might come from the judicious extension of programme activities towards early detection and better case-holding (retaining patients on long-term therapy). Technological developments in immunology and molecular biology indicated that well co-ordinated research in these fields could produce more effective control measures in a relatively short time.

Vector control

Resistance to pesticides remained the greatest technical impediment to the control of arthropod vectors, rodent reservoirs and snail intermediate hosts of disease. Continual monitoring of the susceptibility status of target vector species was required to determine the necessity of shifting to an alternative pesticide or control method. Results of more than 1,000 susceptibility tests, received between January 1982 and June 1983, were passed on to investigators. The appearance of resistance to temephos in one member of the Simulium damnosum complex in the Ivory Coast had given rise to particularly serious concern. Within the framework of the Onchocerciasis Control Programme, the area in which resistance had been detected was immediately treated with the biological control agent Bacillus thuringiensis H-14 and the infestation was eliminated.

More than 60 representatives of the world's leading pesticide producers attended a meeting in June 1983 on insecticide resistance problems with the aim of encouraging industry to direct research towards the needs of vector control.

Zoonoses

The zoonoses receiving high priority in WHO's programme were rabies, hydatidosis, leptospirosis, and major food-borne diseases related to animals and animal products, such as salmonellosis and brucellosis.

A consultation organized by WHO, the International Committee on Food Microbiology and Hygiene, and the International Union of Microbiological Societies (Budapest, Hungary, July 1983) discussed current international problems in food microbiology and recommended future action for better protection of the consumer against food-borne infections.

Two centres—one at Madison, Wisconsin (United States), the other at Brno, Czechoslovakia—collaborated in the food virology programme. Up-to-date knowledge was summarized in a manual on food virology, in which measures for preventing human viral infections by way of food were proposed for the veterinary and public health services at the national level.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1983, the total number of full-time staff employed by WHO stood at 4,444 on permanent and fixed-term contracts. Of these, 1,521 staff members, drawn from 119 nationalities, were in the Professional and higher categories and 2,923 were in the General Service category. Of the total number of staff, 155 were in posts financed by UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.

Budget

The thirty-fourth (1981) World Health Assembly had approved a working budget of $468,900,000 for 1982-1983.^c

The thirty-sixth Assembly approved a working budget of $520,100,000 for the biennium 1984-1985.

The budget was divided into allocations for WHO's programme of work as follows: health system infrastructure, 33 per cent; health science and technology, 32 per cent; programme support, 23 per cent; and direction, co-ordination and management, 12 per cent.

Chapter VI

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

During the fiscal year 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), continued to help developing countries to raise their standards of living by channelling to them financial resources from developed countries.

Lending commitments by the Bank, credit approvals from IDA, and investment commitments by a second affiliate, the International Finance Corporation (IFC), amounted to $15,322 million-up $1,694 million from the previous fiscal year.

Membership in the Bank rose to 146 in 1983, with the admission of Antigua and Barbuda (22 September) and Malta (26 September).

Lending operations

In the fiscal year ending 30 June 1983, the World Bank made 137 loans amounting to $11,136 million to 43 countries, an increase of $806 million over fiscal 1982. This brought the cumulative total of loan commitments by the Bank since its inception in 1946 to $89,616.2 million.

The following table summarizes World Bank lending in fiscal 1983 by region or country and by purpose.

Agriculture and rural development

The Bank continued its commitment to agriculture and rural development, making 32 loans in fiscal 1983 amounting to $2,386 million in 21 countries. Brazil received $467.8 million, of which $400 million went for an agro-industries credit project to finance plants and to help industries processing agricultural products and inputs. Indonesia received a total of $319.1 million, of which $154.6 million went to establish about 50,000 hectares of tree crops, thereby assisting government estates, providing employment for 4,000 estate workers and benefiting 19,000 smallholder families. A total of $253.4 million was provided to Mexico, of which $138.4 million went to a rainfed development project to increase crop production, benefiting more than 17,000 families.

Development finance companies

The Bank made 12 loans totalling nearly $1,178 million in fiscal 1983 to assist development finance companies in 10 countries and the Western Africa region. The largest borrowers were Mexico ($350 million to help expand non-petroleum exports), the Republic of Korea ($255 million to finance high-priority investment projects, technical assistance and training) and Indonesia ($208.9 million for foreign exchange to finance medium-sized and large industrial projects).

Education

During fiscal 1983, the Bank granted nine loans totalling $296.4 million for education projects in eight countries. Indonesia received a total of $137.4 million, of which $107.4 million went to expand existing polytechnic schools and construct new ones. Egypt received $38 million to build and equip vocational schools for construction and industry and provide technical assistance and training. Tunisia received $27 million to improve the country's agricultural-education and training system, strengthen the Ministry of Agriculture and assist in expanding and improving primary teacher-training capacity.

Energy

Twenty-two projects in the energy field-oil, gas, coal and power-were assisted in 15 countries during fiscal 1983 at a total cost of $2,508.3 million.

Four loans totalling $794.9 million were made to India, of which $250.7 million went to provide a major transmission capability to the southern region and interregional transmission links. Indonesia received two loans for a total of $579 million, of which $300 million was to diversify electricity production sources, improve national distribution networks, reduce system losses and provide training and consultant services. China received a total of $263.2 million for two loans; $162.4 million went to develop a new reservoir in an oilfield and introduce modern technology into the petroleum industry. Of two loans totalling $218.2 million to Turkey, one for $163 million was to construct about 1,500 kilometres of 380-kilovolt transmission lines to accommodate new generating capacity.

Other loans went for: improvement of electricity services; energy policy and conservation programmes; hydroelectric power plants and storage dams; geothermal power projects; and petroleum exploration and appraisal.

Industry

The Bank made seven loans to seven countries for the industry sector, amounting to $625.1 million during fiscal 1983. A $304.5-million loan went to Brazil to develop and export iron ore. Egypt received $165.3 million to construct an integrated reinforcing bar plant. Hungary received $109 million to help contain its import of energy by institution building.

Non-project

Six non-project loans amounting to $1,174.7 million were made to six countries during the fiscal year. The Philippines received $302.3 million to finance essential imports and improve the allocation and efficiency of investment over the medium term. A $300.8-million loan to Turkey went to finance imports in support of redirecting its economy towards a more outward-oriented strategy. Yugoslavia received $275 million to finance essential imports and improve the balance of payments and the efficiency of investment selection and resource allocation.

Other loans went to finance high-priority import requirements and assist government structural-adjustment programmes.

Population, health and nutrition

Two loans totalling $60.5 million were made to two countries in fiscal 1983. Peru received $33.5 million to establish a primary health-care system benefiting 3.5 million people by providing staff training and constructing health facilities in four regions. Indonesia received $27 million to increase the effectiveness of health-care services and reduce malaria.

Small-scale enterprises

Five loans totalling $516.1 million were made to five countries for small-scale enterprises during the fiscal year. Brazil received $220 million to reduce distortions affecting trade and industrial development, to provide resources to small and medium enterprises, to strengthen State development banks and to undertake studies for industrial policy change. A $175-million loan to Mexico was to provide credit and technical assistance to small and medium-sized enterprises for maintaining or expanding production and employment levels. The Republic of Korea received $70 million for technical assistance to about 660 individual enterprises and training in manufacturing processes and management techniques for 3,300 managers, engineers and supervisors.

Technical assistance

Three countries received a total of $25.7 million for technical assistance in fiscal 1983. The Congo received $11 million to improve the quality of government public-finance management and its urban infrastructural-investment programme through institution building. A $10.2-million loan went to Peru to design and implement a programme-budgeting system and a compensation system for the central Government and to support public-sector, management-training programmes. Tunisia received $4.5 million to promote investment projects in agriculture, industry and energy, and to strengthen local project-preparation capabilities in the public and private sectors.

More than 90 per cent of loans had some provision for technical assistance; in fiscal 1983, these components totalled $1,275.3 million in 219 operations. Among the larger amounts financed as components of Bank loans were $74 million for a transmigration project in Indonesia, $30 million in a power loan to Zimbabwe and $24.9 million in a water and sewerage loan to Brazil.

The Bank continued to serve as executing agency for projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The number of such projects in progress at the end of fiscal 1983 stood at 127-down from 132 a year earlier-while 33 new projects involving commitments of $33.1 million were approved during the year, compared to 37 projects with commitments of $41.8 million previously. With the Bank as executing agency, UNDP financed a number of large and innovative projects, one being the preparation of a water sector master plan in Bangladesh which utilized one of the largest grants ($6.6 million) UNDP had ever made. About one third of Bank-executed UNDP projects involved some form of cost-sharing, most of which was provided by Governments out of the proceeds of Bank loans and IDA credits.

To enhance economic management and assist in investment projects in the Caribbean, the Bank agreed to serve as executing agency for a $2.4-million inter-agency resident mission programme, involving cost-sharing contributions from the Bank, UNDP and other sources. Continuing its work on global and interregional projects, in March the Bank and UNDP inaugurated an energy sector management programme, an outgrowth of the 1980 energy assessment programme, expected to cost $47 million over four years.

The Bank's technical co-operation extended to capital-surplus developing countries in Europe, the Middle East and North Africa on a reimbursable basis when the annual programme exceeded one staff-year of Bank input, such as in the case of Oman, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, and on a non-reimbursable basis in response to ad hoc requests for programmes requiring less than one staff-year. In fiscal 1983, about 29 staff-years of reimbursable technical assistance were provided by the Bank, of which Saudi Arabia received more than 86 per cent. The Bank also provided non-reimbursable technical assistance to Bahrain for an energy policies study and to the United Arab Emirates for a general economic review.

Transportation

Eighteen loans totalling $1,406.1 million were made to 17 countries during fiscal 1983 to help develop their transportation systems. India received $200 million to upgrade existing diesel electric locomotives, to continue a modernization programme for electric locomotives, to improve fuel efficiency and to upgrade the operation of bulk freight movements. A $154-million loan to Brazil went to construct, improve and rehabilitate about 8,000 kilometres of feeder roads in order to expand and diversify agricultural production by providing rural communities with all-weather access to storage, marketing and processing facilities. Chile received $128 million for road reconstruction and maintenance, including the purchase of road-maintenance vehicles.

Other loans were for highway and railroad maintenance and improvement, and port operations and management.

Urbanization

Ten countries received loans totalling $328.3 million to aid the urban poor. The Republic of Korea received $100 million to develop 22,000 low- and middle-income urban-housing plots, 10,000 housing units for low-income families and 10,000 middle-income serviced lots. A $67-million loan went to the Philippines to reduce infrastructure bottle-necks to economic development in targeted cities, provide basic urban services and improve the project-management capabilities of the cities and participating government agencies. Morocco received $60 million for 13,000 new housing units affordable to households in the lower half of the urban income-distribution scale.

Water supply and sewerage

In fiscal 1983, the Bank made 11 loans amounting to $630.9 million for water supply and sewerage projects in nine countries. Brazil received $302.3 million to finance investments in support of a national plan to provide 90 per cent of the urban population with piped water and 65 per cent with sewerage services by 1990. A $100.3-million loan to Mexico went for water supply and sewerage services in small and medium-sized cities throughout the country. The Philippines received $35.5 million for the Government's rural water supply and sanitation programme, benefiting more than 6 million people.

Economic Development Institute

The fiscal 1983 programme of the Economic Development Institute (EDI), designed to train senior officials of the Bank's developing member countries in economic management and investment, included 17 seminars at Washington, D. C., and 52 activities in countries other than the United States for about 1,500 participants. The emphasis in the EDI programme began to shift during the fiscal year towards increased training activities for trainers in other institutions; improvement and expansion of training materials for EDI and other institutions' use; and more policy-oriented seminars for high-level officials. At Washington, D. C., the sixth annual seminar on world development issues, co-sponsored by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, was held for senior delegates assigned to United Nations Headquarters. EDI co-operated with other United Nations bodies in offering seminars in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Six seminars were held in China on several topics, including two held under an expanded training programme financed by UNDP, for which the Bank was the executing agency. Assistance was given to the Arab countries through seminars and by helping the Arab Organization for Agricultural Development to organize regional seminars on agricultural project planning and implementation. In Latin America and the Caribbean, seminars were co-sponsored for the first time with the Caribbean Agricultural Credit Association and the Inter-American Institute for Co-operation in Agriculture. Other EDI activities in fiscal 1983 included seminars on costs, efficiency and strategies in education; industrial development for small economies; forestry projects; management of the project cycle; and telecommunications.

To guide future objectives and programmes, EDI's Executive Directors established new priorities: an institutional development programme in developing countries; direct training efforts; and a programme of seminars on national and sectoral policy issues. By emphasizing institutional development, EDI hoped to enable more officials to benefit from Bank experience than would be possible with direct training activities. The 10 per cent of training activities for trainers during fiscal 1983 was projected to increase to 50 per cent by fiscal 1989. Despite the planned reduction in direct training in Asia and Latin America (where the largest growth of training institutions had occurred), direct training was to increase in sub-Saharan Africa and institutionally least developed countries in other regions, as well as those with special training needs.

Co-financing

During fiscal 1983, three new co-financing instruments were introduced which permitted the Bank, for the first time, to participate directly in commercial loans, supplementing its methods of co-financing with the private sector and providing a wider range of options for co-financing. Approved by the Bank's Executive Directors in January 1983, these were: direct financial participation by the Bank in the later maturities of a commercial loan; guarantees of the later maturities of a private loan instead of direct funding; and contingent participation in the later maturities of a commercial loan initially financed by commercial lenders. These options were to be tested for one or two years to see if they proved attractive to co-lenders and advantageous to borrowers. During the pilot phase, the Bank was authorized to provide up to $500 million for participation in about 15 to 20 commercial loans; assuming, its share of each transaction was 20 per cent, $2.5 billion could be raised.

Special Assistance Programme

In February 1983, the Executive Directors approved a Special Assistance Programme, aimed at helping developing countries restore their development efforts despite adverse external circumstances. The Programme's objectives were to: emphasize high-priority operations supporting policy change; expand lending to help maintain infrastructure and fuller use of existing capacity, especially in export-oriented activities; expand Bank advisory services in the design and implementation of appropriate policies; maintain the impetus of project activities by increasing the share of Bank financing; and accelerate disbursements out of existing loans and credits, where feasible, urging other lenders to do the same. The Programme's major elements were expanded structural-adjustment lending, sector-adjustment support, financing an increased share of project costs, enhanced policy dialogue and co-ordination with other donors.

The Programme was established for two years in the expectation that the world economy would have begun to recover in that period; if recovery took longer, an extension would be considered. The estimated increase in Bank disbursements resulting from the Programme was $2 billion over the fiscal period 1983-1985, an 8 per cent increase in total projected disbursements. Net transfers (disbursements less interest and amortization) were expected to increase by nearly 25 per cent. The Programme's major impact would be on Bank borrowings, which would have to increase by $1.6 billion—a slight increase over the $30.2 billion previously anticipated for this period—to accommodate its needs.

Financing activities

During fiscal 1983, the World Bank borrowed the equivalent of $10,292 million: $3,536.9 million in United States dollars; $2,514 million in Swiss francs; $1,518.8 million in deutsche mark; $1,325.9 million in Japanese yen; $810.7 million in Netherlands guilders; $320.5 million in pounds sterling; $130.7 million in Canadian dollars; $92.3 million in Austrian schillings; and $42.1 million in Belgian francs. Of these borrowings, $9,224 million were new funds and $1,068 million represented refinancing of outstanding medium- and long-term borrowings. This record amount of borrowings—some $1,771 million over fiscal 1982 totals—reflected the Bank's desire to maintain substantial liquidity.

Of the 86 medium- and long-term borrowing operations conducted by the Bank, 70 were public issues or private placements throughout the world and accounted for $6,994 million, or 68 per cent of total funds borrowed. The other 16 issues, totalling $1,780 million, or 17 per cent of the funds raised, were placed with official sources such as member Governments of the Bank, central banks and government institutions. Short-term borrowings outstanding as at 30 June amounted to $1,501 million. At the end of fiscal 1983, the Bank's outstanding obligations had increased $7,567 million to $39,407 million, denominated in 18 different currencies placed with investors in over 100 countries.

The Bank continued to engage in currency swaps, initiated in fiscal 1982 to increase its access to Swiss francs, deutsche mark and other currencies. In fiscal 1983, the Bank executed 49 currency swaps, aggregating $1,731 million: $1,116 million was swapped into Swiss francs, $324 million into deutsche mark, $152 million into pounds sterling, $108 million into Netherlands guilders, and $31 million into Austrian schillings. In fiscal 1982, currency swaps amounted to $758 million. In a currency swap, the Bank, having borrowed in a particular currency (usually United States dollars), converts the currency into another while entering into a long-term, forward-exchange contract with a counter-party. The Bank agrees to repurchase the borrowed currency from the counter-party in exchange for the currency obtained through the swap. The amounts repurchased correspond to the Bank's debt-service obligations on the swapped borrowing. Thus the Bank effectively borrows the swapped-for currency on a fully hedged basis at a known cost, no greater, and frequently less, than it would have paid had it borrowed the currency directly.

Capitalization

In the Bank's Articles of Agreement, the institution's capital stock is expressed in terms of 1944 dollars-the United States dollar of the weight and fineness in effect on 1 July 1944. On 1 April 1978, when the Second Amendment of the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) became effective, currencies no longer had par values, and the basis for translating the 1944 dollar into current United States dollars no longer existed.

Thus, for the fiscal year ended 30 June 1983, the value of the Bank's capital stock was expressed on the basis of special drawing rights (SDRs) in terms of the United States dollar as computed by IMF on 30 June. On that date, the value of the SDR was set at $1.06835.

The subscribed capital of the Bank totalled SDR 48,756 million as at 30 June, an increase of over SDR 9,200 million from fiscal 1982.

Income, expenditures and reserves

The Bank's gross revenues, generated primarily from its loans and investments, increased by $860 million-26 per cent-to a record level of $4,232 million in fiscal 1983. Net income was $752 million, an increase of $154 million or 26 per cent from fiscal 1982, largely due to high rates of return on the Bank's liquidity.

Total expenses amounted to $3,480 million, up 25 per cent from the previous fiscal year. Administrative costs totalled $322 million, up $32 million.

The General Reserve of the Bank amounted to $3,134 million at the end of fiscal 1983.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1983, the staff of the World Bank numbered 5,587, of whom 2,821 were in Professional or higher categories, drawn from 106 nationalities.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC) was established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to assist developing member countries by helping them to promote the private sector of their economies. The principal objectives of IFC are: to provide risk capital for productive private enterprise, in association with private investors and management; to encourage the development of local capital markets; and to stimulate the international flow of private capital.

In the fiscal year ending on 30 June 1983, the IFC Board of Directors approved 58 projects in 36 countries, with investments totalling $844.5 million, an increase of 38 per cent over the previous year. Fewer projects were approved than in the previous year (65) and several were cancelled or postponed due to the unfavourable investment climate. Of the total approvals, $789.2 million was for loans made at prevailing commercial rates, including four subordinated loans totalling $20.4 million. The typical loan was for seven years with a grace period of three years.

Operating income for fiscal 1983 was $137.4 million, up from $126.5 million in 1982. Equity investments in 41 companies totalled $55.3 million, the highest in IFC's history. In January 1983, Saudi Arabia agreed to make $100 million available to be used in parallel with IFC for equity investments. Net income was $23 million compared with the previous year's $21.6 million. Syndications—a measure of IFC's ability to attract others to help finance projects in which it is involved—reached a record level of $418.9 million, representing a greater total and percentage of total approved investments (about 50 per cent) than ever before. Among the 18 transactions was a $73.2 million syndication for Pakistan Petroleum Limited which attracted 12 commercial banks.

The estimated total cost of approved investments—$2,894 million—and the investment ratio of IFC to other financial institutions—one dollar to six—were about the same in fiscal 1983 as in the previous year. More than 57 per cent of project financing was raised from domestic sources. Most of the funds from foreign sources were in the form of suppliers' credits or government funding. Of the $599.2 million from foreign commercial banks, 70 per cent was raised through the syndication of IFC loans.

Manufacturing, which in the past accounted for about two thirds of the number of projects, was less than 38 per cent of the total and fewer fertilizer, chemical and petrochemical projects were approved than previously. Fourteen agribusiness projects, accounting for 24 per cent of all investments, were approved at a cost of almost $55 million. Developing country financial institutions received 13 investments totalling $198 million, and seven mining enterprises were supported with $126 million of investments. Among the 58 projects approved were five cement plants, four leasing companies and two pulp and paper mills. IFC diversified its operations into new types of business: coconut growing and processing in Brazil, the production of mini-hydroelectric plants in Colombia, ornamental plants for export in Costa Rica, diamond mining in Guinea, and industrial packages, arranged through commercial banks, in Mexico and Yugoslavia.

Reflecting an emphasis on projects in low-income countries, 22 projects totalling $324 million, 38 per cent of both the total approved projects and the year's total dollar volume, were in countries with a per capita income of less than $730. Although projects in low-income countries tended to be small, two large projects were supported: a steel bar production project in Egypt for over $102 million and a natural gas project in Pakistan for some $90 million.

Projects approved were located in 36 countries, up from 31 countries in fiscal 1982. In six of these countries (Botswana, Costa Rica, Malaysia, Uganda, Yemen, Zaire), IFC had not undertaken investments during the previous three years and in three (Fiji, Gabon, Guinea), investments were undertaken for the first time. About 28 per cent of the projects approved were in Africa; particular attention was given to sub-Saharan Africa where 12 projects with a total cost of $275 million were located in 10 countries. Sixteen investments were made in Asia, 19 in Latin America and the Caribbean and seven in the Middle East and Europe.

Membership in IFC increased to 124, with the admission of Guinea and Maldives.

Capital and reserves

The terminal payment date for subscriptions to IFC's capital increase-approved by its Board of Governors in November 1977-was 1 August 1982. Of the $468.8 million allocated for subscription, $420.9 million had been paid for. Seven countries, representing an additional $1.8 million, were granted a payment extension. After the terminal date, five other countries subscribed to $8.2 million additional capital which had been allocated but not subscribed by others. By the end of fiscal 1983, $435.3 million-93 per cent of the total allocated-had been subscribed.

With a paid-in capital of $543.8 million, the total paid-in capital and accumulated earnings was $747.6 million, as at 30 June 1983, up from $678.1 million at the end of fiscal 1982. Accumulated earnings amounted to $203.8 million, including the $23 million net income. Reserve against losses was increased to $99.6 million, including a provision of $25.7 million made from operating income.

Technical assistance

IFC provided technical assistance that, in many cases, resulted in conceptual and fundamental technical restructuring of projects. It also provided industry and sectoral technical assistance. Greater emphasis was placed on technology for small industrial units, designed to use available natural resources and promote import substitution, in developing countries with limited markets and scarcity of skills. IFC staff also took part in several technical seminars to discuss the problems of appraising, financing, implementing and operating projects in developing countries.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1983, IFC staff numbered 410, drawn from 68 nationalities. In order to strengthen administrative procedures and serve IFC investment priorities better, one vice-presidency and one investment division were created and an overseas representation was established in India.

Chapter VIII

International Development Association (IDA)

Established in 1960 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the International Development Association (IDA) promotes economic development primarily in poorer developing countries.

IDA lends for the same purposes as the World Bank and uses the same staff and appraisal criteria, but its capital and assets are entirely separate from those of the Bank.

The funds used by IDA, called credits to distinguish them from World Bank loans, come mostly from subscriptions, general replenishments from its more industrialized and developed members and transfers from the net earnings of the Bank. Credits are lent to the poorest countries on more flexible terms that bear less heavily on their balance of payments than World Bank loans.

In general, a country eligible to receive IDA credits must have an annual per capita gross national product of less than $796 (in 1981 dollars); thus, in the fiscal year ending on 30 June 1983, more than 50 countries were eligible. Credits are interest-free, with a service charge of 0.75 per cent on disbursed and 0.5 per cent on undisbursed balances. The credits have an initial grace period of 10 years before repayment begins and then are repayable over 50 years.

Unlike the Bank, which may lend to public and private entities with government guarantees, IDA lends only to Governments. In the case of revenue-producing projects, IDA credits are lent by the Governments on terms reflecting the local cost of capital. In this way, IDA terms assist Governments to finance economic development without distorting the local credit structure.

At the end of fiscal 1983, IDA's resources totalled $27,967 million.

The bulk of IDA funds for lending is provided by its Part I (richer) member countries and several Part II (developing) countries under a series of replenishment agreements.

The sixth replenishment of IDA was negotiated at a level of $12 billion at October 1979 exchange rates and it was envisaged that these contributions would be committed in the fiscal period 1981-1983. However, reductions in the United States appropriations for the sixth replenishment resulted in a 13-month delay in its effectiveness, a substantial reduction in its fiscal 1982-1984 programme and a delay in negotiations for the seventh replenishment, originally expected to have become effective in fiscal 1984. A meeting of IDA Deputies (The Hague, Netherlands, 5 and 6 July 1982) reviewed the status of IDA's commitment authority and discussed ways to increase such authority in fiscal 1983 and, especially, in fiscal 1984. At another meeting (Toronto, Canada, 4-8 September), donors-other than the United States-agreed to provide special contributions, in general equivalent to one third of their total contributions to the sixth replenishment through either a Fiscal Year 1984 Account or a Special Fund. It was agreed that these two schemes should operate in parallel, permitting donors to choose the mechanism accommodating their concerns and facilitating approval for such special contributions in their respective legislatures.

Negotiations for the seventh IDA replenishment were launched with a meeting of Deputies on 22 and 23 November 1982 (Washington, D. C.). Resources contributed would provide funds for credit commitments in the fiscal period 1985-1987. Deputies met on two other occasions in fiscal 1983: in Paris (February) to discuss IDA's allocation criteria; and at Copenhagen, Denmark (March), to discuss burden-sharing arrangements. Donors' sixth replenishment releases, a Special Fund contribution by France-representing the equivalent of its sixth replenishment release beyond the pro rata level-and other IDA resources brought the level of commitment authority for fiscal 1983 to about $3.3 billion (3.1 billion special drawing rights).

Membership of IDA rose to 131 in fiscal 1983, with the admission of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines on 30 August 1982.

Lending operations

By 30 June 1983, IDA had made cumulative net commitments totalling $30,078.9 million. Commitments in fiscal 1983 amounted to $3,340.7 million, of which $1,816.1 million went to seven countries in South Asia and $803.2 million to 15 countries in Eastern Africa. India was the largest borrower during the year with seven credits amounting to $1,063 million, followed by Bangladesh with seven credits of $367.3 million and Pakistan with five credits totalling $228.8 million.

The following table summarizes IDA lending in fiscal 1983 by region or country and by purpose.

Agriculture and rural development

As in previous years, in fiscal 1983 credits for agriculture and rural development accounted for the largest amount of IDA lending—39.3 per cent. Thirty-nine credits totalling $1,312 million were committed in 23 countries.

Of credits totalling $474 million made to India, one of $150 million went to modernize canals and waterways by lining about 2,900 kilometres of canals and about 7 million metres of watercourses, and installing 325 augmentation tubewells to supplement irrigation water.

Bangladesh received two credits amounting to $168 million, of which $100 million went to a rural development project to provide credit, institution-building measures, expansion of an irrigation management programme and assistance to the Bangladesh Rural Development Board.

Other credits went to agricultural credit, irrigation and drainage, agro-industry, area development, fisheries, forestry, livestock and research and extension.

Development finance companies

Five credits totalling $60.3 million were made to development finance companies in fiscal 1983. A credit of $30 million went to China to establish the China Investment Bank, a new institution providing investment loans for small and medium-sized industries in three cities. The Western Africa region received $14 million to be re-lent for projects in IDA-eligible countries that were members of the West African Development Bank, a regional institution furthering its six member States' national development objectives. The Caribbean region received $7 million to finance small projects too costly and difficult for the World Bank to appraise and supervise. Rwanda received $7 million to develop a small-scale enterprise programme, and a $2.3-million credit was made to the Comoros to strengthen a newly created development bank.

Education

Eleven countries received 12 credits totalling $251.5 million for educational projects during fiscal 1983.

China received $75.4 million to strengthen higher education and research in the agricultural sciences by providing assistance to agricultural colleges and research institutes and a new national rice research institute. A $34-million credit was made to Malawi to improve primary education, expand secondary education, increase the number of trained accountants and strengthen the management of education and audit systems. Uganda received $32 million to assist its education system with such items as books, teachers' guides and classroom equipment, roofing materials, spare parts and tools.

Other purposes for which credits were committed included public administration, business administration and primary-teacher training, educational materials, and construction and equipping of facilities.

Energy

Thirteen countries received credits totalling $309.8 million for energy-related projects. India received $170 million to build a hydroelectric power plant, increasing power-generating capacity in Orissa State by about 600 megawatts. A credit of $26 million was made to Haiti to construct a diesel power station at Port-au-Prince, rehabilitate 10 kilometres of the distribution network, and undertake repairs, surveys and a feasibility study. Mali received $24 million for technical assistance to help alleviate major managerial and operational constraints in the Energie du Mali, and to construct a 2-megawatt biomass power plant and distribution-system works.

Other credits went for strengthening the management of national petroleum industries, geothermal energy development, evaluation of hydrocarbon potential, petroleum and mineral research and exploration, and an electrification programme.

Industry

Six countries received credits totalling $66.7 million for industrial development projects in fiscal 1983. Bangladesh received a credit of $28.5 million to rehabilitate refinery facilities, provide technical assistance to the Bangladesh Petroleum Corporation, conduct a feasibility study on export projects, and develop energy conservation/diversification programmes and the uses of methanol. A credit of $18 million went to the United Republic of Tanzania for management services to operate a pulp and paper mill and to market its output, and convert the mill's power boiler to use fuelwood as well as coal and oil. Senegal received a $7.7-million credit for studies and tests to help maximize the efficiency of the phosphate mining and processing operations and orient the country's development efforts to exploit its phosphate resources. Other countries received credits for technical and economic feasibility studies of the mining and petroleum industries.

Non-project

In the non-project sector, four credits totalling $260 million were made to four countries during fiscal 1983. Bangladesh received $110 million for essential imports in support of improvements in public financial-resource mobilization and budgetary management, agricultural and food policies, and trade and industrial policies. A $70-million credit was made to Kenya for a structural-adjustment programme to rationalize the trade régime, promote exports, stimulate agricultural output, encourage conservation and efficient production of energy and reduce population growth. Ghana received $40 million to meet priority import requirements of an economic-recovery programme and Togo received $40 million to aid a structural-adjustment programme by financing imports of raw materials, intermediate goods, capital equipment and spare parts.

Population, health and nutrition

During fiscal 1983, five countries received credits amounting to $57.9 million for projects in population, health and nutrition. Pakistan received $18 million to implement its new population welfare plan and establish an effective long-term population-planning effort. A $15-million credit to Senegal went for better health-care services, especially maternal and child health care, to the rural population by strengthening basic services and the Ministry of Public Health, in-service training of personnel, improved drug utilization and developing health education services. Yemen received $10.5 million for technical assistance, training, civil works, equipment and supplies for infrastructure development for the Ministry of Health in order to strengthen and expand the country's health-care system.

Other credits were made to establish and strengthen primary health-care systems.

Small-scale enterprises

Two countries received credits totalling $15 million for small-scale enterprises. Ghana received $9.3 million and Togo $5.7 million to assist Ciments de l'Afrique de l'Ouest, a clinker-producing firm, to improve its operations and finances, by providing technical assistance, equipment and spare parts, financing fuel oil and restoring the level of its working capital.

Technical assistance

Credits totalling $27 million went to four countries for technical assistance in fiscal 1983. Mali received $10.4 million for a project assisting cereals marketing, rural development agencies, State enterprises, economic-policy analysis and data management, the civil service bureau and other local agencies. Kenya received $6 million to provide technical assistance in grain pricing and marketing, land policy and management and budget in support of a structural-adjustment programme in the agriculture sector. Another $6 million went to Nepal to provide assistance for a number of high-priority projects suitable for financing by the Government and external donors. Mauritania received $4.6 million to assist the Ministry of Planning to formulate and monitor macro-economic policy, implement a national investment plan, support technical ministries and sectoral planning, and continue the rehabilitation of key public enterprises.

Telecommunications

Two credits totalling $57 million were granted for telecommunications during the fiscal year. Bangladesh received $35 million to provide equipment, transmission facilities and technical assistance as well as to increase telephone service to rural areas. A credit of $22 million went to Uganda to finance part of the rehabilitation and investment programme of its Posts and Telecommunications Corporation, including rehabilitation of telecommunications and postal and common services, technical assistance and imported spare parts and materials.

Transportation

Thirteen credits totalling $517.5 million were awarded to 12 countries for transportation projects in fiscal 1983. India received $200 million to upgrade existing diesel electric locomotives, continuing a programme of modernization of electric locomotives, improving fuel efficiency and upgrading the operation of bulk freight movements. A $50-million credit to Burma would enable the port of Rangoon to handle the projected growth in international breakbulk and facilitate containerized traffic by improving port efficiency and basic port services. Pakistan received $50 million for its railways system to improve locomotive maintenance, install a management-information system, facilities and equipment for an international container service and provide spare parts, technical assistance and training.

Credits approved for other countries went to improve highways, ports, railways and transportation.

Urbanization

Five countries received credits amounting to $226 million for urban development during fiscal 1983. India received $147 million to improve urban management in Calcutta through a comprehensive approach, including institutional and financial reforms and physical improvements. Kenya received $22 million to benefit about 29,000 lower- and middle-income urban households by land and construction loans for residential and small-enterprise development, community facilities, support of urban-sector projects and policy studies. Haiti received $21 million—its first IDA credit for urban development—to rehabilitate and upgrade the Port-au-Prince central market area, a sites-and-services scheme for families displaced by that upgrading, and measures for institutional development. Other purposes for which credits were awarded included housing construction, upgrading of settlements, and the provision of services, technical assistance and training.

Water supply and sewerage

Of eight credits totalling $180 million, $72 million went to India to expand water supply and sewerage facilities in eight urban areas by constructing reservoirs, transmission lines and treatment plants, and to build tubewells for safe water to more than 300 villages. A $25-million credit to Pakistan was to expand the Karachi water supply system, improve service for as many as half a million low-income consumers and provide technical assistance. The United Republic of Tanzania received $22.5 million to develop low-cost, on-plot sanitation and services, institutions and management practices for the first phase of a long-range programme rehabilitating the sewerage system and developing basic sanitation services in Dar es Salaam. Other credits were for institution building and strengthening, improved sewerage systems, safe drinking water, studies, technical assistance and training.

Chapter IX

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

Financial assistance by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to its member countries rose sharply in 1983 in response to the continuing deterioration in world trade and payments positions and to the increasing difficulties experienced by developing countries in servicing their external debt. Total purchases—measured in special drawing rights (SDRs), the unit of account of IMF—amounted to a record SDR 12.6 billion in 1983, or 69.4 per cent above the 1982 peak of SDR 7.4 billion, with all drawings representing financial assistance by IMF to its developing member countries. The total did not include reserve tranche drawings, which were not regarded as uses of IMF credit but rather as drawings by members on reserve assets deposited by them with IMF. Reserve tranche drawings, which are subject neither to conditionality nor to repurchase requirements, rose moderately in 1983 and amounted to SDR 1.5 billion, compared with SDR 1.3 billion in 1982.

New loan commitments under stand-by and extended arrangements, which had amounted to only SDR 2.4 billion in 1982, rose fourfold in 1983 to SDR 10.5 billion. At the end of 1983, there were 33 stand-by arrangements and 10 extended arrangements in effect with an approved value of SDR 22.9 billion and an undrawn balance of SDR 12.4 billion.

Purchases made available in support of economic adjustment programmes and subject to relatively strong conditionality requirements accounted for about 75 per cent of the drawings of SDR 12.6 billion in 1983, up about 13 per cent on 1982. This reflected almost a doubling of drawings under stand-by arrangements (typically made over a one-year period) to SDR 4.6 billion and more than a doubling of drawings under extended arrangements (usually made over three years) also to SDR 4.6 billion; first credit tranche purchases that were made under stand-by arrangements amounted to SDR 259.1 million.

Conditionality requirements, linking financial assistance by IMF to the adoption of economic adjustment policies by members, were less rigorous for drawings under the first credit tranche, which may be made outright or through a stand-by arrangement. Purchases in the upper credit tranches, almost always made under a stand-by or extended arrangement, required substantial justification and were subject to phased disbursements and to fulfilment of specific performance criteria.

Drawings under the compensatory financing facility, designed to compensate for temporary shortfalls in export earnings of member countries or for excessive increases in cereal import costs and entailing less restrictive conditionality, rose by 8 per cent in 1983 to SDR 2.8 billion. Purchases under the buffer stock financing facility, which assists members in making contributions to Fund-approved international buffer stocks, rose to around SDR 352 million in 1983.

In contrast to the rise in total drawings, repurchases (repayments by IMF members) grew only slightly in 1983 to SDR 2 billion, from SDR 1.8 billion in 1982. This small increase resulted in an increase in net purchases of more than 82 per cent to a record SDR 10.6 billion, compared with the previous record of SDR 5.9 billion in 1982.

Use of SDRs also increased substantially in 1983, largely because of payments in SDRs by participants of all or part of the reserve asset portion of their quota increases under the Eighth General Review of Quotas (see below). These payments, made in December 1983 by 120 member countries and amounting to SDR 6 billion, helped to increase total SDR transfers to SDR 20.7 billion, from SDR 12.2 billion in 1982. Transactions “by agreement”, voluntary transfers in exchange for currencies, grew to a record SDR 2.7 billion in 1983, compared with the previous record of SDR 1.8 billion in 1978. This was the first time since 1978 that the level of transactions “by agreement” exceeded that of transactions “with designation”, which totalled SDR 2.1 billion. Under transactions “with designation”, participants whose international financial position was sufficiently strong were designated by IMF to exchange their usable currencies for the SDRs of participants requiring balance-of-payments assistance.

IMF liquidity

Several important decisions were reached in 1983 with the purpose of effectively doubling the usable resources of IMF so that it could continue to provide adequate financial assistance to its members. These decisions included an increase of about 50 per cent in the level of IMF quotas, an almost threefold enlargement in the total amount of commitments under the General Arrangements to Borrow (GAB) and the extension of this facility to finance purchases by any member, as well as the establishment of a separate credit facility by Saudi Arabia to provide financial assistance to IMF under the same conditions as GAB.

The increase in Fund quotas from the current level of about SDR 61 billion to SDR 90 billion under the Eighth General Review of Quotas was agreed by the Interim Committee of the IMF Board of Governors, meeting at Washington, D. C., in February. The Committee agreed that 40 per cent of the overall increase was to be distributed to all members in proportion to their existing individual quotas and that the balance should be distributed in the form of selective adjustments reflecting members' relative positions in the world economy.

A resolution authorizing the increase in quotas was adopted by the Board of Governors on 31 March. The new quotas were to become effective when members having at least 70 per cent of total quotas had consented to their individual increases and paid them in full. IMF said that this provision had been met on 30 November. As at 2 December, 132 member countries (of a total membership of 146, unchanged in 1983), representing 96.55 per cent of total Fund quotas, had notified IMF of their consent to the increases.

Another measure to improve the liquidity of IMF was adopted on 18 January by the Group of 10—the original industrial member countries participating in GAB—when it agreed to increase the aggregate commitments available under GAB from SDR 6.4 billion to SDR 17 billion and to make the resources available for drawings by any member of IMF if needed to forestall or cope with an impairment of the international monetary system. Previously, use of GAB had been limited to financing drawings by participants in GAB. The revision, which was approved by the Fund's Executive Board on 24 February and entered into force on 26 December, also authorized the participation of Switzerland in GAB and permitted IMF to enter into GAB-associated borrowing arrangements with lenders other than GAB participants. One such borrowing arrangement with Saudi Arabia for up to SDR 1.5 billion was approved by the Executive Board on 20 May.

Access to IMF resources

In addition to augmenting the resources of IMF, the increase in quotas was to raise the levels of members' access to these resources. The enlarged access policy, which was to replace the supplementary financing facility, would enable IMF to provide supplementary financing to all members facing payments imbalances that were large in relation to their quotas. No funds were to be disbursed by the supplementary financing facility after 22 February 1984.

Because of the continuing high demand for IMF financial assistance, a review of access limits was under taken in 1983. At a meeting in Washington, D. C., on 25 September, the Interim Committee recommended that the enlarged access policy should continue for 1984.

Access to the Fund's resources under the policy during the extension was to be subject to annual limits of 102 or 125 per cent of quota, three-year limits of 306 or 375 per cent of quota, and cumulative limits of 408 or 500 per cent of quota, depending on the seriousness of the balance-of-payments needs and the strength of the adjustment effort. These limits were to be examined periodically in conjunction with reviews of the enlarged access policy itself.

Debt renegotiation

In 1983, a number of developing countries continued to face major debt-servicing difficulties owing to high interest payments and to a further contraction of their export markets that reflected the recession in the industrial countries and their recourse to protectionist measures. With Governments, central and commercial banks, and the Bank for International Settlements, IMF helped to put together financing arrangements for the major debtor countries. An important aspect of the Fund's role was to explain the thrust of Fund-supported adjustment policies, to identify the immediate financing requirements of the debtor countries, and to encourage commercial banks to reschedule payments due on their loans to these countries and to make new loans.

Exchange rate policies

Under its Articles of Agreement, the Fund was charged with overseeing the international monetary system. Article IV, Section 3 (b), provided that "the Fund shall exercise firm surveillance over the exchange rate policies of members, and shall adopt specific principles for the guidance of all members with respect to those policies". The timing and timeliness of Article IV consultations were of considerable importance. In principle, consultations were to take place annually, but in practice even the operational guideline that had been adopted—covering three fourths of the membership annually—had not been met in the early 1980s. This slippage led the Executive Board in 1983 to implement a stricter adherence to an annual consultation cycle for most members, particularly those whose policies had a significant impact on other economies, those that had Fund-supported programmes, and those for which there were substantial doubts about the medium-term viability of the balance-of-payments situation.

IMF also strengthened its surveillance activities in 1983 to encompass in-depth analyses of debt policies of individual countries, including debt developments and debt-servicing prospects. The analyses were to cover all members engaged in significant external borrowing operations.

Another decision in 1983 initiated a system whereby the Executive Board would be notified regularly of all sizeable changes in real effective exchange rates. A large change in a country's exchange rate would result in the issuance of an information notice to the Board. The notice would include a discussion of developments in the member's exchange rate and its costs and prices, together with a statement of how they were related to changes in the balance of payments and other developments in the economy.

Other developments

The Executive Board adopted a decision on the SDR interest rate, effective 1 August 1983. The general purpose of the decision was to enhance further the role of the SDR as an international reserve asset by bringing its yield closer in line with yields on other reserve assets included in the SDR interest basket. The SDR interest rate and charges and the rate of remuneration that IMF pays on members' creditor positions were to be calculated weekly instead of quarterly; payments of SDR interest and charges, as well as those of remuneration, were to be made quarterly rather than annually.

IMF made the final payments from its oil facility subsidy account on 23 August. Disbursements to 25 members amounting to SDR 11.7 million brought the amount of total payments under the subsidy account to SDR 186.8 million. The account had been established in 1975 to assist Fund members most seriously affected by oil price increases to meet part of the cost of using the IMF oil facility, which was in operation from June 1975 until May 1976.

Publications

Publications issued by IMF in 1983 included the Annual Report, Summary Proceedings of the annual meeting of the Board of Governors, the Annual Report on Exchange Arrangements and Exchange Restrictions, World Economic Outlook, International Financial Statistics (including supplements on international reserves and on money), Direction of Trade Statistics, Balance of Payments Statistics, and Government Finance Statistics Yearbook. Periodicals included the quarterlies Staff Papers and Finance and Development (published jointly with the World Bank), the IMF Survey, published 23 times a year, and the monthly IMF Memorandum. Also published were explanatory pamphlets on the workings of the Fund and papers on wide-ranging subjects of interest to the international financial community.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1983, the total full-time staff of IMF, including permanent, fixed-term and temporary employees, was 1,734, drawn from 101 nationalities. On 12 May, the Managing Director of IMF, Jacques de Larosière, was appointed to a second five-year term.

Chapter X

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) estimated total traffic of the world's scheduled airlines to be close to 146 billion tonne-kilometres during 1983, an increase of almost 6 per cent over 1982. The airlines carried over 780 million passengers at a load factor of 64 per cent, as in 1982. Air freight increased by 10 per cent to some 34 billion tonne-kilometres, the second highest annual increase during the past decade. Airmail traffic amounted to 4 billion tonne-kilometres, an increase of about 4 per cent, close to the average rate of increase in 10 years.

In 1983, in addition to three regular sessions, the ICAO Council—at the request of Canada and the Republic of Korea—held an extraordinary session (15 and 16 September) to consider the destruction of a Korean Air Lines civil aircraft, on 1 September, by USSR military aircraft. The Council directed the ICAO Secretary-General to investigate the incident. The ICAO Assembly, which meets triennially, held its twenty-fourth session at Montreal, Canada, from 20 September to 7 October and referred to the Council for further consideration a Canadian proposal for a convention on the interception of civil aircraft. (For further details, see below, under AIR NAVIGATION and LEGAL MATTERS.)

During 1983, membership of ICAO rose to 152 with the admission of Vanuatu on 16 September and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines on 15 December.

The official opening ceremonies of ICAO's new Eastern African Regional Office took place on 1 December at Nairobi, Kenya.

Air navigation

At its 1983 extraordinary session, the ICAO Council requested the Air Navigation Commission to examine ways to improve the co-ordination of communication systems between aircraft and air traffic control services and to improve procedures in cases involving identification and interception of civil aircraft, and to consider possible amendments to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, United States, 1944) to prevent a recurrence of such an incident as that involving the Korean aircraft (see also below, under LEGAL MATTERS).

During 1983, ICAO's efforts in air navigation continued to be directed mainly towards updating and implementing ICAO Specifications and Regional Plans. The Specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 17 technical annexes to the Chicago Convention, and of Procedures for Air Navigation Services (PANS) contained in three PANS documents. Regional Plans set forth air navigation facilities and services required for international air navigation in the nine ICAO regions.

During the year, the Specifications in eight annexes and in two PANS documents were amended. Amendments were also made to Regional Plans.

Eight air navigation meetings were held in 1983. They covered a wide range of subjects and made recommendations for changes to ICAO Specifications; to promote their uniform application, ICAO made available guidance material—new and revised technical manuals and ICAO circulars—to assist States in establishing and maintaining up-to-date and effective aeronautical infrastructures.

ICAO regional offices helped States to implement Regional Plans and experts were sent to advise on installing new facilities and services and on operating existing ones.

Special attention was given to: aircraft airworthiness, operations, noise and accident investigation and prevention; aerodromes; air traffic control; aeronautical charts, communications, information services and meteorology; helicopter operations; personnel licensing and training; search and rescue; aviation medicine and security; and transport of dangerous goods.

Air transport

Concerning air transport during 1983, ICAO continued its programmes of economic studies, collecting and publishing air transport statistics and promoting greater facilitation in international air transport. Air transport meetings convened during the year included three meetings of panels of experts and nine regional workshops.

Panel meetings considered the regulation of international non-scheduled air services (Montreal, March), guidelines on route facility cost accounting and cost allocation (Montreal, June), and international air transport fares and rates (Montreal, November/December). Workshops were held on aviation forecasting and economic planning (Bangkok, Thailand, February; Dakar, Senegal, November), airport and route facility economics (Rome, Italy, March), international fares and rates (Dakar, January; Lima, Peru, July; Bangkok, November), and statistics (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, August; Lima, November; Mexico City, November).

ICAO publications in 1983 included a study of air passenger and freight development for Latin America and the Caribbean, the regular series of digests of civil aviation statistics, the yearbook on world civil aviation statistics, the triennial review of the economic situation of air transport covering the period 1972-1982, a manual on the establishment of international air carrier tariffs, a manual of airport and air navigation facility tariffs, two studies, covering 1980 and 1981, of regional differences in fares, rates and costs for international air transport and a survey of international air transport fares and rates in 1982.

ICAO continued to co-operate closely with other international organizations such as the International Air Transport Association, the Airport Associations Co-ordinating Council, the Customs Co-operation Council, the World Tourism Organization and the Universal Postal Union. It also continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies—the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

Following a 1982 conference to amend a 1956 joint financing agreement for air navigation services in Greenland and the Faeroe Islands, and another for Iceland, the two agreements as amended were provisionally applied from 1 January 1983.

Legal matters

The Legal Committee held its twenty-fifth session at Montreal from 12 to 25 April 1983 to review its general work programme. In the light of a decision of the twenty-third (1980) session of the ICAO Assembly that only problems of sufficient magnitude and practical importance requiring urgent international action should be included, the Committee's work programme contained the following three items: implications of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea^a for the application of the Chicago Convention; liability of air traffic control agencies; and study of the legal instruments of the Warsaw System (the 1929 Warsaw Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air, as amended by the Protocols of 1955, 1971 and 1975). In connection with the last item, the Committee urged all member States to ratify the Protocols as soon as possible.

The ICAO Council, at its extraordinary session, decided to examine the question of an amendment to the Chicago Convention involving an undertaking to abstain from recourse to the use of force against civil aircraft, and to convene an extraordinary session of the ICAO Assembly to examine and adopt that amendment. This decision was endorsed by the Assembly and it was decided to hold the session from 24 April to 11 May 1984. By the end of 1983, specific proposals for an amendment were received from Austria and France (joint proposal), the USSR and the United States.

On 9 December, the Council decided to include in the work programme of the Legal Committee an item, proposed by Canada, on the preparation of a draft instrument on the interception of civil aircraft and to accord the item high priority. A sub-committee was to consider the matter from 25 September to 5 October 1984.

The Committee on Unlawful Interference with International Civil Aviation and its Facilities held six meetings during the year. It reviewed proposals of the Air Navigation Commission related to the authority and responsibility of the pilot-in-command.

The following conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices were ratified, adhered to or denounced during 1983:

Technical assistance

During 1983, ICAO provided technical assistance to 99 States; in 58 of these, there were resident missions consisting of one or more experts. In addition to resident expertise, assistance was provided in the form of equipment, fellowships and scholarships and through short missions by experts.

Fifteen new large-scale projects, each costing more than $500,000, for which ICAO was to be the executing agency, were approved by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Three large-scale projects were financed under trust fund assistance.

ICAO employed 626 experts from 51 countries during all or part of 1983, 337 on assignments under UNDP and 301 on trust fund projects (including 18 under the associate experts programme). There were also 28 United Nations Volunteers. The number of experts in the field at the end of 1983 was 373 as compared with 411 at the end of 1982.

A total of 985 fellowships were awarded in 1983 (compared with 1,014 in 1982), of which 945 were implemented.

Equipment purchases and sub-contracts were a substantial proportion of the technical assistance programme in 1983. Thirty-three Governments or organizations had registered with ICAO under the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service. The total equipment and sub-contracts committed during the year amounted to almost $13 million.

The following countries and territories were aided:

Included in the above were the following, aided during the year under trust fund arrangements: Argentina, Bolivia, Cape Verde, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jordan, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria, Peru, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela, Yemen.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1983, the total number of staff members employed in the ICAO secretariat stood at 889: 316 in the Professional and higher categories drawn from 65 nationalities, and 573 in the General Service and related categories. In addition, 208 persons were employed in regional offices and 173 in the Professional category served as technical experts on UNDP projects in the field.

Chapter XI

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU), established at Berne, Switzerland, in 1874 for the reciprocal exchange of postal services between nations, is one of the oldest international intergovernmental organizations. Its aim is to promote the organization and improvement of postal services and to further the development of international collaboration in this sphere. It also participates in various forms of postal technical assistance requested by its member States.

In 1983, the membership of UPU remained unchanged at 166.

Activities of UPU organs

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, composed of all member States, is the supreme legislative authority of UPU. The Congress, which normally meets every five years, met most recently at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 1979; the next (the nineteenth) was due to be held at Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, in 1984. The work of the Congress consists mainly of examining and revising the Acts of the Union based on proposals submitted by member States, the Executive Council or the Consultative Council for Postal Studies, and of making administrative arrangements for UPU activities. The Acts in force since 1 July 1981 were those of the 1979 Congress.

Executive Council

The 40-member Executive Council, which carries out the work of UPU between sessions of the Congress, held its annual session at Berne from 28 April to 13 May 1983. It considered administrative matters and examined studies concerning international mail referred to it by the 1979 Congress.

Among questions examined by the Council in 1983 were: technical assistance for developing countries; relations with the United Nations and other international organizations and with restricted postal unions; the organization, functioning and work methods of the Congress and Executive Council, including the delimitation of powers between the Council and the Consultative Council for Postal Studies; UPU finances; international high-speed mail (Datapost, Express Mail, Postadex, etc.); measures to ease payment of international accounts; customs treatment of postal items; calculation of basic airmail conveyance rates; maximizing air conveyance of mail; the situation of the international parcel-post service in UPU member countries; the development of postal financial services; and preparations for the 1984 Congress.

The Council approved measures taken or envisaged by the International Bureau of UPU in connection with the observance of 1983 as World Communications Year: Development of Communications Infrastructures, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1981^a (see below and ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter V), and took note of activities planned by postal administrations for that occasion.

Consultative Council for Postal Studies

The 35-member Consultative Council for Postal Studies continued studying problems in the technical, operational and economic fields and technical co-operation problems of interest to the postal administrations of UPU member States, including matters of particular interest to new and developing countries.

During its annual meeting held at Berne from 10 to 21 October 1983, the Council took note of progress made in studies undertaken by its committees and finalized its draft work programme for 1984-1989, to be submitted to the 1984 Congress. Two colloquia were held during the Council's session—one on the future of the postal services and the other on the promotion of savings banks in developing countries.

International Bureau

The Berne-based International Bureau, the secretariat of UPU, continued to serve the postal administrations of UPU member States as an organ for liaison, information and consultation. The Bureau's responsibilities included collecting, co-ordinating, publishing and distributing information of interest to the international postal service. At the request of postal administrations, it also conducted inquiries and acted as a clearing-house for settling certain accounts between them.

With regard to the 1983 World Communications Year, the Bureau provided postal administrations with information and materials concerning the Year and invited them to apply the programme of activities prepared for that purpose, including measures, such as issuing postage stamps, to make the public aware of the Year's objectives.

As at 31 December 1983, the total number of permanent and temporary staff members employed at the Bureau was 138, of whom 57 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 48 countries) and 81 were in the General Service category. Also, 14 officials were employed in the Arabic, English, Portuguese, Russian and Spanish translation services.

Technical co-operation

In 1983, technical co-operation provided by UPU was financed for the most part by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); UNDP/UPU project expenditures amounted to some $1.6 million.

The Union furnished complementary assistance from its own resources: the UPU Special Fund, financed by voluntary contributions from member States in cash and kind, and the UPU regular budget. Total expenditures from these two sources in 1983 amounted to approximately $998,000. In addition, postal administrations provided assistance on a bilateral basis.

Training of postal instructors continued to be given priority with training courses held in France and the United Kingdom, as well as at regional training centres; four interregional courses were organized in developing countries (Angola, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Malawi).

During the year, 46 national and regional projects relating to postal services were carried out under UNDP auspices. Forty-nine expert missions were undertaken and 134 scholarships were awarded, two thirds of which were for students to participate in study courses or tours. Several projects received assistance in the form of equipment. Projects dealt with all main branches of the postal service, including national or regional vocational training centres.

The UPU Special Fund and regular budget funded various projects such as expert missions, training scholarships, instruction materials and equipment, and also financed individual expert missions and scholarships. During 1983, 48 consultants, four of whom were financed by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and two by the World Bank, carried out technical missions in 41 postal administrations. Also, 164 fellowships were granted, most of which were used to attend courses, study cycles, seminars and technical meetings.

In addition, the Special Fund programme included a contribution by Belgium to continue a project to assist the drought-stricken Sahelian region of Africa. Several countries also offered contributions in kind within the framework of the Special Fund, mainly in the form of scholarships and the organization of workshops.

UPU continued its programme of technical assistance subject to payment, by which member States could finance assistance themselves by funds on deposit. It also continued its efforts to promote technical co-operation among developing countries, particularly by furnishing assistance to regional training centres.

Budget

The 1983 financial year was the third year of UPU's self-financing system introduced by the 1979 Universal Postal Congress, by which contributions were payable in advance on the basis of the following year's budget. At its April/May 1983 session, the Executive Council approved a budget of 23,451,200 Swiss francs for 1984 (see table).

Chapter XII

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

As at 31 December 1983, 158 countries were members of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), Saint Vincent and the Grenadines having become a member on 25 March.

Administrative Council

The thirty-eighth session of the Administrative Council of ITU was held from 2 to 20 May 1983 at ITU headquarters, Geneva. It reviewed administrative matters, approved a revised schedule of conferences, and drew up the agenda for the second (1984) session of the Regional Administrative Conference for FM (frequency modulation) sound broadcasting in the VHF (very high frequency) band (Region I-Africa and Europe and certain countries in Region 3—Asia and Australasia) and for a 1985 Regional Administrative Radio Conference for the Maritime Mobile Service and the Aeronautical Radionavigation Service in certain parts of the MF (medium frequency) band in Region 1.

Administrative radio conferences

The World Administrative Radio Conference for the Mobile Services was held at Geneva from 23 February to 18 March 1983. It adopted a partial revision of the Radio Regulations, notably with regard to frequency allocations, the notification and recording of frequency assignments, distress and safety communications, and aeronautical and maritime mobile-satellite services.

The Regional Administrative Conference for the Planning of the Broadcasting-Satellite Service in Region 2 (the Americas), held at Geneva from 13 June to 17 July, adopted provisions for the broadcasting-satellite service in the frequency band 12.2-12.7 gigahertz.

International consultative committees

The International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR) made further important progress in the study of standards for satellite broadcasting, high definition television, digital television transmission and recording. An improved and simplified propagation calculation method was developed for HF (high frequency) broadcast planning, and a comprehensive set of technical criteria and characteristics for HF broadcasting was presented to an HF broadcasting conference. Improvements of compatibility were studied between aeronautical radionavigation reception in the band above 108 megahertz and broadcasting in the band below it. Further studies were to be carried out in a joint interim working party of two study groups. Technical preparatory work was under way for the World Administrative Radio Conference (scheduled for 1985 and 1988) on the use of the geostationary satellite orbit and the planning of the space services using it. Seminars were held on propagation in tropical regions (Lomé, Togo) and domestic satellite communications (Shanghai, China).

Study groups of the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (CCITT) concentrated on preparing the final drafts of recommendations and replies to questions assigned to them by the 1980 CCITT plenary assembly. Topics covered in the principal study groups included: transmission systems; telephone operation and quality, data transmission on the public-switched telephone network and public data networks; digital networks; switching and signalling; maintenance and protection; and general tariff principles. Special study groups produced manuals and case studies of interest to developing countries on subjects such as: general network planning; primary sources of energy; rural telecommunications; regional satellite communications; transition from analogue to digital telecommunication networks; effects of inflation on telecommunications organizations; allocation of scarce resources and application of information technology; and socioeconomic implications of teleprocessing.

The CCITT Regional Plan Committee for Africa met (during 1983 (Libreville, Gabon, 1-8 June) to co-ordinate development of telecommunications facilities and to prepare a plan for 1983-1987 and forecasts for 1987-1990. The Plan Committee for Europe and the Mediterranean Basin (Nicosia, Cyprus, 28 September-4 October) drew up a plan for 1983-1986.

International Frequency Registration Board

The International Frequency Registration Board continued to implement the decisions taken at the 1979 World Administrative Radio Conference, including a review of the Master International Frequency Register (MIFR), activities related to computer analysis and the search for replacement frequencies, conversion and transfer of MIFR resulting from revision of the International Frequency List, and conversion of MIFR to a new method of designating emissions.

Among the Board's other activities were follow-up actions to the 1981 Regional Administrative MF Broadcasting Conference (Region 2) and to the first (1982) session of the Regional Administrative Conference for FM sound broadcasting in the VHF band (Region 1 and certain countries in Region 3); assistance to member administrations in applying the provisions and obligatory procedures of the Radio Regulations; and examining frequency assignment notices received from member countries, recording them in MIFR and applying co-ordination procedures.

Technical co-operation

In 1983, ITU continued its technical co-operation activities. However, there was a certain slowing down during the course of the year in the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) mainly due to financial stringency, which gave rise to delays in the authorization of certain expenditures. The same constraints were experienced with trust fund projects. Since ITU is the executing agency in the telecommunications sector for UNDP and the bulk of ITU funds for technical co-operation are provided by or through UNDP, this reflected adversely on the implementation of many projects.

Under ITU programmes of technical co-operation in developing countries, 583 expert missions were carried out, 827 fellows were trained abroad and equipment valued at $5,643,999 was delivered for various field projects. The total cost of this assistance amounted to $28,335,851. Countries and territories aided were the following:

Africa: Algeria, Angola, Botswana, Burundi, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ivory Coast, Lesotho, Malawi, Mauritania, Mozambique, Namibia, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, Zaire.

The Americas: Argentina, Brazil, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Nicaragua, Panama, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay.

Asia and the Pacific: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Burma, China, India, Indonesia, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Mongolia, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Samoa, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Tokelau, Tonga.

Europe and the Middle East: Albania, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Greece, Jordan, Kuwait, Oman, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

The main objectives of ITU technical co-operation continued to be: promoting development of regional telecommunications networks in Africa, the Americas, Asia, the Pacific, the Middle East and the Mediterranean Basin; strengthening telecommunication technical and administrative services in developing countries; and vocational training.

ITU continued to promote development of regional telecommunication networks and their integration into the world-wide telecommunication system, in accordance with objectives established by the World Plan Committee and regional plan committees.

The Pan-African Telecommunications Network continued to be extended across the African continent; the most important activities of the project remained the development of the principal international arteries and the resolution of interface problems, mainly in the western subregion of Africa.

Special attention was paid to the question of tariffs, especially in central African countries, in order to promote a tariff structure that could be applied to all countries of the continent. Work was started in the area of international accounting procedures with a survey of English-speaking countries and publication of a draft manual on international telecommunication accounting.

With regard to maintenance, a global strategy was finalized and elaborated in a manual, the National Plan for Improvement of Maintenance, distributed to all countries. Three seminars on this subject were organized at Lomé, Dakar (Senegal) and Addis Ababa (Ethiopia).

Regional assistance was provided by ITU to the Panafrican News Agency to establish a news collection and dissemination network.

Progress was made in formulating the Inter-American Plan for Telecommunications Development, with increased co-ordination between the Steering Committee of the Inter-American Telecommunication Conference and CCITT.

In Central America, all activities related to telecommunications development were carried out by the Central American Telecommunications Commission (COMTELCA) through its supervisory group, assisted by the ITU regional adviser. Activities included: preparation of general technical specifications for international digital telephone exchanges to be used by the administrations of the five member countries of COMTELCA; opening of two telex transit centres in Guatemala and Costa Rica; and the integration of telex service into the regional network, progressively abandoning the facilities provided by international carriers.

ITU collaborated with the Asia-Pacific Telecommunity on preparations for a development survey with a view to extending and upgrading the regional network. It prepared proposals for a regional telecommunications network, including various options-terrestrial, satellite and submarine cable-for consideration by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific. It assisted the least developed countries of the region in developing rural networks, and the Organization of Asian News Agencies to develop a news network.

A UNDP/ITU regional project for the development of telecommunications helped Fiji, Kiribati, Papua New Guinea and Tuvalu to assess tender bids and provided technical back-up and contract management. These countries were receiving grants and loans from the European Economic Community to fund satellite earth stations and to extend telex exchanges and equipment.

Activities continued in the Middle East and Mediterranean Basin to develop the regional network, under the 1978 Middle East and Mediterranean telecommunication network master plan. This included assistance to implement a subregional microwave network and the international switching centres in Aden, Djibouti and Nouakchott (Mauritania); some additional links within the region also were completed. Assistance also was given in drawing up equipment supply contracts and sub-contracting agreements for ARABSAT earth stations to be installed in Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Mauritania, Somalia and the Sudan. Mauritania received assistance to set up its "Standard A" earth station. A study of the Maghreb-Machrek submarine cable system was carried out, with Arab Telecommunication Union experts.

In collaboration with GULFVISION, ITU conducted a study of radio propagation in the area in Bands III, IV and V. The results of the study will enable the countries of the region to make the best use of the allocated bands for television and sound/FM broadcasting services.

Through an ITU European regional project for developing international telecommunications, UNDP agreed to finance assistance to 12 countries in East Europe and the Mediterranean Basin to introduce new technology and modernize planning and maintenance systems.

World Communications Year

World Communications Year: Development of Communications Infrastructures was observed in 1983 and ITU, as the lead agency for the Year, maintained close contacts with numerous organizations, particularly the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the Universal Postal Union, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Meteorological Organization. Together with FAO, ITU prepared a special issue of the World Communications Year Bulletin dealing with the frequently neglected role of telecommunications in the development of agriculture. The basic objectives for the Year as laid down by the United Nations General Assembly in 1981^a were to provide the opportunity for all countries to undertake an in-depth review and analysis of their policies on communications development and stimulate the accelerated development of communications infrastructures. (See ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter V.)

The budget for 1983 shown in the opposite column was adopted by the Administrative Council's session in 1982.

Each member of ITU chooses the class of contribution in which it wishes to be included and pays in advance its annual contributory share to the budget on the basis of the budgetary provision. In accordance with the 1982 International Telecommunication Convention, new classes of contribution were chosen by ITU members with effect from 1 January 1984. The classes of contribution for 1984 for members are listed in ANNEX I below.

As at the end of 1983, the total of units for members was 427 5/8. The contributory unit for 1983 was

Chapter XIII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

In 1983, the Ninth World Meteorological Congress, which convenes at least once every four years as the highest body of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), met at Geneva from 2 to 27 May and established the organization's programme and budget for the ninth financial period (1984-1987), approving a maximum expenditure of $77.5 million. It appointed G. O. P. Obasi (Nigeria) as Secretary-General of WMO for a four-year period beginning on 1 January 1984.

By amendments to the WMO Convention, the Ninth Congress changed the name of the WMO Executive Committee to Executive Council and increased its membership from 29 to 36. The Council, which supervises implementation of Congress resolutions and regulations, held its thirty-fifth session, also at Geneva, from 30 May to 3 June 1983.

The Congress decided to introduce long-term planning for the scientific and technical programmes of WMO so as to provide guidance to the Executive Council and to other WMO bodies, as well as to help members in developing and planning their meteorological and hydrological services. It agreed that long-term plans should cover a 10-year period, but be replaced at four-year intervals, each Congress adopting a new plan for the decade following the Congress. The Ninth Congress adopted the first part of the long-term plan for 1984-1993 and requested the Executive Council to prepare the second part of the plan.

The Congress, deciding to give the highest priority to the World Weather Watch (WWW) Programme, agreed that other major programmes of WMO were those concerned with world climate, research and development, applications of meteorology, hydrology and water resources, education and training, and regional activities.

It revised the terms of reference of WMO's eight technical commissions-composed of experts nominated by members and working on a voluntary basis-and decided that the commission presidents should participate more actively in the work of the Congress and the Executive Council. The presidents subsequently met at Geneva from 26 to 28 October to consider the follow-up action on relevant Congress decisions, including those relating to the long-term plan.

WMO carried out its 1983 programmes in accordance with the programme and budget as approved for 1980-1983 by the Eighth (1979) Congress. WMO's membership remained at 157 in 1983, composed of 152 States and five territories.

The twenty-eighth annual International Meteorological Organization Prize, which commemorates the non-governmental organization which preceded WMO, was awarded jointly to M. F. Taha (Egypt), WMO President from 1971 to 1979, and J. J. Burgos (Argentina), President of the WMO Commission for Agricultural Meteorology from 1951 to 1958, for their outstanding contributions to meteorology, operational hydrology and international co-operation.

Activities in 1983

World Weather Watch

As the basic programme of WMO, WWW continued to provide in 1983 the observational data and processed information required by members for operational and research purposes. Its essential elements were: the Global Observing System (GOS), whereby observational data were obtained; the Global Data-processing System (GDPS), which provided for processing, storage and retrieval of observational data and made available processed information; and the Global Telecommunication System (GTS), which offered telecommunication facilities and arrangements for rapid and reliable collection, exchange and distribution of observational data and processed information.

During 1983, operations of GOS, consisting of surface-based and space-based sub-systems, continued to be maintained and improved. The surface-based sub-system provided conventional basic data from regional basic synoptic networks, other observational networks of stations on land and at sea, and aircraft meteorological observations required for operations and research. In the space-based system, meteorological satellites in near-polar orbiting and geostationary systems took direct observations and provided data collection and dissemination. GOS provided member States with both quantitative information, such as measurements of atmospheric pressure, humidity, air temperature and wind velocity, and qualitative information which described the state of the sky, forms of clouds and types of precipitation. Progress was achieved in developing the Aircraft to Satellite Data Relay system and the Automated Shipboard Aerological Programme for meteorological observations, two important elements for an improved GOS in the future.

With regard to GDPS, a number of www processing centres installed new-generation electronic computers, thus improving their capability to produce analysis and forecast products for global and regional exchange in real-time.

Upgrading to high-speed data transmission was accomplished on many GTS circuits during 1983, in particular those of the Main Telecommunication Network, and a number of radio point-to-point circuits were converted to satellite communications, thus making the system more reliable.

The Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme emphasized standardization of instruments and observing methods. The fifth edition of the WMO Guide to Meteorological Instruments and Methods of Observation was published, and efforts continued to develop performance specifications for instruments and regulatory and guidance material.

Ocean affairs

In 1983, the Ninth Congress urged all WMO members to strengthen their marine meteorological services programmes, to develop improved observing systems, and to make full use of modern telecommunication means involving satellites, for the timely acquisition of the data. It also decided that the United Nations and members of WMO should be informed of the relevant implications of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.^a

Efforts continued to promote the use of drifting buoys as a source of meteorological data from ocean areas and for collecting data using satellite communication techniques. A second edition of the "Guide to Marine Meteorological Services", which was expected to be particularly useful to developing countries in the process of organizing a marine meteorology programme, was issued. A seminar on Marine Meteorological Services was organized in December at Bombay, India, for member countries in the Asian and South-West Pacific regions.

The Integrated Global Ocean Services System, a joint WMO/Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission programme, continued to collect and exchange oceanic data for operational and research activities. WMO maintained support to the meteorological component of the investigation of the phenomenon known as "El Niño" on the Pacific coast of equatorial South America.

Aviation

tivities of national meteorological services and adopted an outline of the Aeronautical Meteorology Programme for 1984-1987. The Programme's 1983 activities focused on improving meteorological services to ensure the safety, efficiency and economy of air navigation. The WMO Commission for Aeronautical Meteorology paid particular attention to the provision of meteorological information before and during flight and the implementation of the World Area Forecast System.

World Climate Programme

The Ninth Congress decided that the World Climate Programme (WCP), instituted in 1979 to aid nations in applying climate information to human activities, should continue to receive high priority; it approved the institutional arrangements for coordinating the Programme and defined the division of responsibilities within WCP, which comprised: the World Climate Applications Programme (WCAP), the World Climate Data Programme (WCDP), the World Climate Impact Studies Programme (WCIP) and the World Climate Research Programme (WCRP). The Congress also renamed the Commission for Climatology and Applications of Meteorology as the Commission for Climatology, with the lead role, under its revised terms of reference, for activities in WCAP and WCDP.

As part of the WCAP activities under the WMO Plan of Action in the Field of Energy Matters, endorsed by the Ninth Congress, short-term missions of experts were undertaken in 1983 to assist several developing countries in applying climate data to energy-related questions, mainly the development of solar and wind energy.

In 1983, action was taken under WCDP to establish climate data requirements, set up data banks, and assist countries in strengthening national and subregional climate data banks; the Ninth Congress endorsed a project involving the use of a relatively low-cost microcomputer system for processing and using climate data. Progress was made in developing a World Climate Data Information Referral Service; some components of the Climate Applications Referral System project, for information on operationally used methods in applied climatology, were completed.

Activities within WCIP, carried out by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) in collaboration with WMO, focused on reduction of the vulnerability of food systems to climate, anticipation of impacts of man-induced climatic changes (especially increased atmospheric carbon dioxide), improvement of the methodology for cli-

Research under WCRP, conducted jointly by WMO and the International Council of Scientific Unions to determine the extent of climate predictability and of man's influence on climate, dealt with prediction of short-term climate anomalies, inter-annual variability and long-term climate trends.

Research and development

The Research and Development Programme continued to focus on weather prediction, tropical meteorology, environmental pollution monitoring and weather modification research. Future activities of the WMO Commission for Atmospheric Sciences (CAS), responsible for promoting and co-ordinating research activities, were examined by its Advisory Working Group (sixth session, Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, 10-12 August 1983).

In 1983, the CAS Co-ordinating Group on Experimentation in Numerical Weather Prediction was established at the request of the Ninth Congress to oversee the relevant research on all time scales. The Congress also approved a programme for long-range forecasting research, as well as an expanded plan prepared by the CAS Working Group on Short- and Medium-range Weather Prediction Research (Geneva, 24-28 January) involving research on applying high-resolution quantitative satellite data, limited-area weather prediction modelling, objective interpretation methods, and very short-range forecasting. The Symposium on Maintenance of the Quasi-stationary Components of the Flow in the Atmosphere and in Atmospheric Models (Paris, 29 August-2 September), co-sponsored by WMO and the International Association of Meteorology and Atmospheric Physics, examined research results aimed at improving weather forecasting techniques. Informal meetings of experts were held at Reading, United Kingdom (September), and at Sofia, Bulgaria (November/December), concerning new study projects on phenomenological studies and on Mediterranean cyclones.

Under the research programme in tropical meteorology, a long-term Asian monsoon study project commenced with the participation of States in monsoon-affected regions; activity centres were established in India and Malaysia for the summer and winter monsoon studies, respectively. Ongoing projects included radiation flux studies, with pilot studies in Australia and India, and moisture budget studies in the Sahelian region of Africa.

The Ninth Congress stressed the importance of WMO's involvement in environmental pollution monitoring and research, recognized the need for a permanent environmental and climate-related monitoring system of adequate global coverage, and observed that member States were soon likely to study problems caused by chemical contaminants in the atmosphere. The WMO Technical Conference on Observation and Measurement of Atmospheric Contaminants (Vienna, Austria, 17-21 October) established the current state of knowledge of man-induced climate and environment-related chemical and physical variables and their possible future developments.

By the end of the year, 98 countries operated or were planning to operate Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network stations, and data were reported by 47 countries. With funds supplied partially or entirely by UNEP, sampling equipment was provided for new stations in China and the Dominican Republic, and expert assistance was provided to 10 countries. An expert meeting on quality assurance in the Network discussed quality assurance procedures used in national networks.

WMO also continued to collaborate in projects on long-range transmission of air pollutants in Europe, assessment of air pollutants' contribution to the contamination of the Mediterranean Sea and global ozone research and monitoring.

A major component of the weather modification programme-field activity involving seeding experiments in Spain, under the Precipitation Enhancement Project-was discontinued by the Ninth Congress, which decided that the site was unsuitable for achieving the project's objectives; analysis of data collected was to be completed, however, and options were to be explored for an alternative demonstration project. Other 1983 activities included a meeting of experts on cumulus (single) cloud modification (Mexico City) and a planning session for the International Cloud Modelling Conference/Workshop (Aspen, Colorado, United States).

Hydrology and water resources development

The Ninth Congress re-established the Hydrology and Water Resources Programme as a major programme for the 1984-1987 period, to be composed of the Operational Hydrology Programme, applications and services to water resources, and co-operation with water-related programmes of other international organizations.

The first phase of the Hydrological Operational Multi-purpose Subprogramme, for transferring operational hydrological technology and integrating techniques for data collection and processing, was completed in 1983 and the Ninth Congress approved the second phase for further strengthening the Subprogramme's institutional and technical aspects.

Technical support to the hydrological components of other programmes, such as WCP and the Tropical Cyclone Programme, continued to be provided. In addition to technical conferences and meetings of working groups, WMO, in the framework of a WMO/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) regional project, organized a nine-week regional training course (Niamey, Niger, August-October) for hydrological supervisors and senior technicians to enable them, in turn, to train hydrological technicians in their own countries.

Education and training

The main activities of the Education and Training Programme in 1983 were the awarding of fellowships, strengthening of regional meteorological training centres, organization and co-sponsorship of courses, seminars and workshops, preparation of training publications and other training aids, surveys of training needs, provision of advice and information on education and training, and collaboration with other organizations.

Twenty-eight training events organized or co-sponsored by WMO during 1983 covered: hydrological forecasting, hydrologic techniques, satellite data for operational purposes, advances in tropical meteorology, and remote sensing (United States); a course for hydrological technicians, and remote sensing applications to operational agrometeorology in semi-arid countries (Niger); agrometeorology, and applied statistics (Belgium); background air pollution measurements (Hungary); understanding climate (United Kingdom); Mediterranean cyclogenesis and Alpex, climatological aspects of desertification, and satellite applications to flood monitoring and forecasting (Italy); mesometeorology (Sweden); application of satellite remote sensing to disaster preparedness, and a course for agrometeorological technicians (Colombia); management and applications of meteorological data, and a course for meteorological instrumentation inspectors (Brazil); real-time river flow forecasting and hierarchical modelling of agricultural production, weather, soils and crops (Netherlands); application of radar data to tropical cyclone forecasting (Thailand); marine meteorological services (India); archiving, storage, quality control and retrieval functions of national meteorological centres in Africa (Algeria); a regional training seminar for national instructors (Senegal); a roving seminar on satellite meteorology (Bangladesh and Burma); and utilization of satellite cloud pictures in weather analysis and forecasting (Iraq).

Some 470 participants, mainly from developing countries, participated in WMO training events, and 227 fellowships were awarded and commenced during the year; financial assistance was also provided to 56 participants in various WMO-supported training events.

Technical co-operation

In 1983, WMO's technical co-operation activities continued through UNDP, the Voluntary Co-operation Programme (VCP), trust-fund arrangements and the WMO regular budget.

Under UNDP, assistance was provided to 94 countries in 1983 to a value of approximately $11.3 million, compared to $11.8 million in 1982; developing countries received assistance in meteorological and hydrological services development and for personnel training. Under UNDP sectoral support in meteorology and operational hydrology, missions were undertaken to 10 countries for the formulation of new UNDP projects.

The total value of assistance provided under VCP in 1983 amounted to some $4.9 million; support was given mainly to WMO's GOS and to the establishment or updating of automatic picture transmission/weather facsimile and upper-air stations. Fellowships for training meteorological personnel were also awarded.

Under WMO's technical co-operation programme, 494 fellows received meteorological or hydrological training during the year: 248 under UNDP, 183 under VCP, 42 under the WMO regular budget and 21 under trust funds. Under the associate expert programme, five young professionals with limited experience worked in association with, and under the guidance of, senior experts. Nine United Nations Volunteers served in WMO-executed projects during the year-seven in Yemen, one in Bangladesh and one in Botswana.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1983, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding 69 professionals on technical assistance projects) on permanent and fixed-term contracts stood at 303. Of these, 128 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 57 nationalities) and 175 in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The year 1983 was the fourth and final year of the eighth financial period (1980-1983), for which the Eighth (1979) Congress had established a maximum expenditure of $74.4 million, and authorized additional expenditures of not more than $1 million to provide for such circumstances as losses resulting from currency exchange rate changes or urgent unforeseen programme activities.

The regular budget for 1983 amounted to $18,558,700; the budget for technical co-operation activities, financed from overhead allocations and other extrabudgetary sources, amounted to an additional $2,401,700.

In a resolution on members' contributions for the ninth financial period (1984-1987), the Ninth Congress decided that, with effect from 1 January 1984, a combination of the United Nations assessment for 1983-1985 and the WMO scale of assessments for the eighth financial period would be used.

At its May/June 1983 session, the Executive Council approved the following regular budget of $18,750,000 for 1984.

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

On 17 March 1983, the International Maritime Organization (IMO) celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary. The thirteenth regular session of the IMO biennial Assembly was held from 7 to 18 November at its new headquarters at 4 Albert Embankment on the south bank of the River Thames in London. The 45 resolutions adopted by the Assembly dealt with the prevention of marine pollution and improving maritime safety and included amendments to the International Convention on Load Lines, 1966. The Assembly also adopted the budget and work programme of IMO for 1984-1985 and took decisions regarding the future of the World Maritime University (see below) and the IMO long-term work plan.

In other action, the Assembly elected 24 States to serve on the IMO Council, the organization's governing body between Assembly sessions (see ANNEX II). In anticipation of the entry into force, on 10 November 1984, of the 1979 amendments to the IMO Convention, the Assembly elected another eight member States to serve on the Council as of that date when the Council's membership would be increased from 24 to 32. The eight States elected were Argentina, Bulgaria, Chile, Gabon, Ghana, India, Italy and Liberia.

Membership of IMO as at 31 December 1983, stood at 125, plus one associate member. New members admitted during the year were Fiji (14 March), Guatemala (16 March) and Togo (20 June).

Activities in 1983

The World Maritime University, established by IMO, was opened on 4 July 1983 at Malmö, Sweden. Its purpose was to provide high-level training in various maritime subjects for students from developing countries and the 72 students who joined at the start of its operations came from 42 countries. The University received financial assistance from Sweden, the United Nations Development Programme and a number of IMO member States.

The new IMO headquarters was officially opened by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II at a ceremony attended by 800 guests on 17 May. World Maritime Day was celebrated by IMO on 29 September with the theme "Maritime telecommunications for safety, efficiency and seafarers' welfare".

At a special ceremony held on 18 November, George A. Maslov (USSR) was presented with the International Maritime Prize for 1982. The Prize is awarded annually to the individual or organization judged by the IMO Council to have made the most significant contribution to the organization's aims.

Intervention Protocol

The 1973 Protocol to the International Convention relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties, 1969, entered into force on 30 March 1983. The Protocol establishes the circumstances under which, and the procedures by which, States may act when threatened by pollution following major maritime accidents. The 1969 Convention applied only to incidents threatening pollution by oil. The 1973 Protocol extends the application to other substances listed in an annex to the Protocol.

Collision regulations

Amendments to the Convention on the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1972, entered into force on 1 June 1983. These amendments had been adopted by the IMO Assembly in November 1981.

Safety of life at sea

On 17 June 1983, the IMO Maritime Safety Committee adopted further amendments to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1974. These amendments, expected to enter into force on 1 July 1986, mainly affected Chapter III on life-saving appliance and arrangements, which was completely rewritten, and Chapter VII on the carriage of dangerous goods, under which the International Bulk Chemical Code and the International Gas Carrier Code were to become mandatory to all States parties to the Convention.

Prevention of pollution

The International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the 1978 Protocol (MARPOL 73/78), entered into force on 2 October 1983. The instrument contained measures designed to combat pollution from shipborne substances such as oil, liquid noxious substances, harmful substances in packaged forms, sewage and garbage.

Standards of training, certification and watchkeeping

The conditions for entry into force of the International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers, 1978, were fulfilled on 27 April 1983 when the twenty-fifth ratification was received. The Convention, generally regarded as the first attempt to establish minimum international professional standards for seafarers, was to enter into force on 28 April 1984.

Publications

Among publications issued by IMO during 1983 were the following: amendments 20-82 to the International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code; Official Records of the International Conference on Limitation of Liability for Maritime Claims, 1976; amendments to the Convention on the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1972; Basic Documents-Volume 1; amendment No. 4 to Ships' Routing; Guidelines for Surveys under Annex I of MARPOL

73/78; Recommendations on the Safe Transport, Handling and Storage of Dangerous Substances in Port Areas; Crude Oil Washing Systems; Fresh Water Tanker Ballasting; Inert Gas Systems; and amendment No. 10 to the Code for the Construction and Equipment of Ships Carrying Dangerous Chemicals in Bulk.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1983, the IMO secretariat consisted of 238 full-time staff members (excluding those on technical assistance projects). Of these, 82 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 34 nationalities) and 156 were in the General Service and related categories. There were 39 Professional staff employed on technical assistance projects in the field.

Budget

In November 1983, the IMO Assembly adopted a budget of $25,772,000 for the 1984-1985 biennium, with $12,593,800 allocated to 1984 and $13,178,200 to 1985.

Chapter XV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

During 1983, membership of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) rose to 105 with the admission of Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Panama and the United Republic of Tanzania. Berne Union membership increased to 75 as a result of the accession by Barbados to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Mauritania deposited its instrument of accession to the Patent Co-operation Treaty (PCT), thus bringing PCT Union membership to 33. At the end of the year, total membership in WIPO and its various Unions, taken together, was 123.

Sixteen intergovernmental Unions in the two main fields of intellectual property were administered by WIPO in 1983. They were founded on the multilateral treaties, conventions and agreements listed below in order of adoption:

Industrial property: Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; Madrid Agreement for the Repression of False or Deceptive Indications of Source on Goods; Madrid Agreement concerning the International Registration of Marks; The Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs; Nice Agreement concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purpose of the Registration of Marks; Lisbon Agreement for the Protection of Appellations of Origin and Their International Registration; Locarno Agreement establishing an International Classification for Industrial Designs; Patent Co-operation Treaty; International Patent Classification (IPC) Agreement; Trademark Registration Treaty; Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Micro-organisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure; Nairobi Treaty on the Protection of the Olympic Symbol.

Copyright and neighbouring rights: Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; Rome Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations; Geneva Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms against Unauthorized Duplication of Their Phonograms; Brussels Convention relating to the Distribution of Programme-Carrying Signals Transmitted by Satellite.

At the fourteenth series of meetings, held at Geneva in September/October 1983, the governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by it approved reports on activities, and the programme and budget for 1984-1985.

The one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the Paris Convention was celebrated in 1983, with WIPO representation, at a ceremony organized in Paris (May) by France and the International Association for the Protection of Industrial Property, and at a solemn meeting held at Geneva (September).

Activities in 1983

Development co-operation activities

Two WIPO permanent programmes, supervised by intergovernmental permanent committees, provided the framework for development co-operation relating to industrial property and to copyright and neighbouring rights.

In the field of industrial property, WIPO organized a Round Table on the Promotion of Indigenous Inventive and Innovative Activity in Asia and the Pacific, and a Workshop on Industrial Property Licences and Technology Transfer Arrangements, both at Manila, Philippines; a Seminar on the Roles of Government Industrial Property Authorities and the Legal Profession in Administering Industrial Property Rights in Asia and the Pacific, at Bangkok, Thailand; a High-Level Meeting of Government Officials of South Pacific Countries to Consider Co-operation in the Field of Industrial Property, at Suva, Fiji; a Seminar on Trademarks and Patents in ASEAN (Association of South-East Asian Nations) Countries, at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia; and a Workshop on Patents in the Service of Development, at Harare, Zimbabwe.

Medals and prizes for inventors were awarded by WIPO at exhibitions or contests held in Bulgaria, France, Japan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and the USSR.

In continuation of a programme started in 1975, 287 state-of-the-art search reports on technology disclosed in patent documents and related literature were provided to developing countries free of charge under agreements concluded between WIPO and contributing industrial property offices in developed countries. Most of the reports were prepared by the Austrian, German Democratic Republic and Swedish Patent Offices.

Development co-operation activities in copyright and neighbouring rights included the convening, jointly or in co-operation with other organizations—notably the United Nations

Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)-of regional committees (Africa, Asia) of experts on means of implementation of model provisions on intellectual property aspects of protection of expressions of folklore, at Dakar, Senegal, and New Delhi, India, respectively; a Consultative Committee on the Access by Developing Countries to Works Protected by Copyright, at Geneva; a Congress on the Intellectual Property Rights of Performers, at Buenos Aires, Argentina; and a Committee of Governmental Experts on the Drafting of Model Statutes for Institutions Administering Authors' Rights in Developing Countries, at Geneva.

The WIPO training programmes in industrial property and in copyright continued to grow, with 210 fellowships granted in 1983 to nationals of 75 developing countries or individuals recommended by various organizations. Twenty-eight countries, including nine developing countries, and three intergovernmental organizations provided individual training, in addition to study opportunities and courses for groups organized at Berlin (West), Budapest (Hungary), Geneva, The Hague (Netherlands), Lyon (France), Madrid (Spain), Moscow, Munich (Federal Republic of Germany), Paris, Quito (Ecuador), Rio de Janeiro (Brazil), Stockholm (Sweden), Strasbourg (France), Vienna (Austria) and Zurich (Switzerland). Regional and national meetings and seminars were organized by WIPO in Argentina, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, El Salvador, Fiji, Guatemala, India, Malaysia, Peru, the Philippines, Senegal, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Viet Nam and Zimbabwe.

During 1983, WIPO co-operated with Governments of 66 developing countries and with seven intergovernmental organizations in their development projects relating to intellectual property, by providing assistance in the preparation of legislation, or establishment or modernization of national or regional institutions, including patent documentation and information services.

Industrial property

An extraordinary session of the Paris Union Assembly in February 1983 decided that the fourth session of the Diplomatic Conference on the Revision of the Paris Convention would take place at Geneva from 27 February to 24 March 1984. The objective of the revision was to introduce provisions to meet the needs of developing countries more effectively and to incorporate new provisions giving full recognition to inventors' certificates, a form of protection of inventions existing in several socialist countries.

In resolution 143(VI) on the technological transformation of developing countries (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XII), UNCTAD VI invited countries attending the Conference to co-operate in concluding the revision, taking fully into account the interests particularly of the developing countries.

Work continued on keeping up to date IPC and other classifications relating to industrial designs or registration of trade marks and service marks. As in the past, WIPO assisted the International Patent Documentation Centre and remained on its Supervisory Board, while efforts continued towards early conclusion of the Computerized Administration of Patent Documents Reclassified According to IPC. The revised (fourth) edition of the Guide to the International Patent Classification was prepared for publication.

At the end of 1983, thirty-three States were party to PCT. During the year, 5,050 international applications were filed in 19 receiving offices. Twenty-nine issues of the PCT Gazette were published during the year, containing information on 4,466 published international applications.

The Committees of Experts on Joint Inventive Activity (Geneva, May) examined a draft guide to the legal regulation of questions concerning the results of joint inventive activity in the course of international scientific, technological and economic co-operation. The Committee of Experts on the Legal Protection of Computer Software (second session, Geneva, June) discussed the question on the basis of a draft treaty and model provisions for national legislation, as prepared by WIPO, but concluded it premature to decide on such international protection.

Publications in the industrial property field included those on industrial property statistics, industrial property laws and treaties, the monthly review Industrial Property, The Role of Industrial Property in the Protection of Consumers and the third volume of the WIPO Handbook on Patent Information and Documentation. A special publication on industrial property statistics, 1883-1982, was issued on the occasion of the Paris Convention centenary.

Copyright and neighbouring rights

A Consultants' Meeting on Television by Cable, convened jointly with ILO and UNESCO (Geneva, March) dealt with the protection of various interests relating to the cable distribution of programmes. WIPO also held at Geneva a World-Wide Forum on the Piracy of Broadcasts and of the Printed Word.

Publications in the copyright field included the WIPO Glossary of Terms of the Law of Copyright and Neighboring Rights in a three-language edition (English, French, Portuguese) and the monthly periodicals Copyright and Le Droit d'auteur.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1983, WIPO employed 250 full-time staff members. Of these, 91 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 39 member States) and 159 were in the General Service category. In addition, 110 experts were employed by WIPO on technical assistance projects during the year.

Budget

The principal sources of the WIPO budget—expected to approximate 86 million Swiss francs for the biennium 1984-1985—are ordinary and special contributions from member States and income derived from international registration services.

Ordinary contributions are paid on the basis of a class-and-unit system by members of the Paris, Berne, Nice and Locarno Unions and by member States of WIPO that are not members of any of the Unions.

States members of those four Unions are placed in seven classes (I to VII) to determine the amounts of their ordinary contributions. States members of WIPO not members of any of the Unions are placed in three classes (A, B or C) for the same purpose. States in Class I or A pay the highest contributions of their group and those in Class VII or C the lowest. The class in which a State is placed is decided solely by the State. The rights of each State are the same, irrespective of class chosen.

The contribution class for each member State of WIPO and of the Paris or Berne Unions, together with the amount of the ordinary contribution of each State, is given in ANNEX I below (the class indicated for the Paris Union also applies to the Nice, Locarno and IPC Unions). Members of one or more Unions do not pay separate contributions to WIPO; the Unions themselves contribute towards the costs of WIPO's International Bureau.

The amounts of ordinary contributions payable for 1983 are given in the table below.

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), which completed its sixth year of operation in 1983, continued to provide concessional-term resources for agricultural development and reduction of rural poverty in its developing member States. As in previous years, the Fund's lending policies reflected its conviction that food problems could be solved only if the rural poor were enabled to participate in the development process. In 1983, emphasis continued to be on projects which were quick-maturing and based on increased and improved use of water, fertilizers and pest control.

The 18-member Executive Board of IFAD met three times in 1983 (20-22 April, 12-15 September, 12-14 December) and approved 24 projects. At the seventh session of the Governing Council (6-9 December), the term of IFAD President Abdelmuhsin M. Al-Sudeary was extended until December 1984. Meetings on the replenishment of IFAD's resources were held on 25 and 26 July and on 18 and 19 October. All meetings were held at Rome, Italy.

Membership of IFAD remained at 139 countries during 1983. Of these, 20 were in Category I (developed countries), 12 in Category II (oil-exporting developing countries) and 107 in Category III (other developing countries).

With the approval of 24 additional projects in 1983, the total assistance provided by the Fund to some 80 member countries since 1978 amounted to about $1,656 million, of which approximately $1,580 million was committed for 135 projects, and $76 million was provided as technical assistance grants.

Of the 135 loans provided since 1978, 46 were for projects in Africa, 40 in Asia, 27 in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 22 in the Near East and North Africa. Most of the Fund's loans (66 per cent) were made on highly concessional terms, with a service charge of 1 per cent per annum, a 50-year maturity period and a 10-year grace period. Another 28 per cent of the loans were made available on intermediate terms (at 4 per cent, 20 years maturity and a live-year grace period) and the remaining 6 per cent were on ordinary terms (8 per cent, 15-18 years maturity and a three-year grace period). The Fund paid particular attention to the needs of the poorest developing countries—some 67 per cent of total loan commitments since 1978 went to those countries with a per capita income of less than $300 (in 1976 terms); about 32 per cent went to those countries classified as least developed.

Since 1979, approved loans were denominated in special drawing rights (SDRs), an international unit of account. Dollar figures in this chapter are based on the SDR/United States dollar conversion rate at 31 December 1983 (SDR 1 = $US 1.04695).

Resources

The Fund was faced with growing resource difficulties in 1983. The first replenishment contribution payments which should have been completed by the end of 1983 were considerably delayed. Contributions pledged by Category I and II members towards the first replenishment amounted to $1,050 million at the valuation date, 11 December 1980. As a result of changes in exchange rates, these pledges totalled $948,566,000 at 31 December 1983; payments towards these pledges by Category I and II countries totalled $623,972,392. Payments by Category III countries as of 31 December 1983 totalled $31,151,733, against pledges totalling $32,409,363. Consultations began in 1983 on the second replenishment to cover the 1984-1986 programmes.

Investments

Investment of the Fund's liquid assets, which totalled $587 million at the end of 1983, continued to be restricted to obligations (bonds) issued or fully guaranteed by Governments and to time deposits with major banks. Of these assets, $14.5 million was held on demand deposit, and $274.9 million was held on time deposit with, or in obligations issued by, commercial banks, while the balance of $297.6 million was in bonds and similar securities issued or guaranteed by member Governments. While the maximum maturity for any of these investments was live years, the average length of an investment in the Fund's portfolio was 16 months.

At 31 December 1983, the Fund had a total of $188 million, or 32 per cent of its total liquid assets, deposited with banks of developing countries or in bonds or similar securities issued by their Governments and international development institutions.

Interest rates, which had dropped in the second half of 1982, stabilized somewhat in 1983.

However, the average rate of return on the Fund's investments in 1983 was about 11 per cent, compared to 12.4 per cent in 1982.

Activities in 1983

During 1983, IFAD approved 24 new loans totalling some $260 million and technical assistance grants of about $19 million, bringing the total financial assistance provided in 1983 to $279 million, compared with $322 million in 1982.

Because of the Fund's difficult resource position in 1983, the work programme, initially projected and approved for $422 million, was reduced to $300 million. In addition, the Executive Board decided to limit new loans and grants to resources actually available. These measures had a significant impact on operations throughout the year: efforts to mobilize resources from external donors, through co-financing, were increased; priority, was given to countries which had not previously received loans, and to other countries, particularly in Africa, facing chronic food shortages; and the size of loans was reduced in cases in which the Government or other co-financiers could increase their contribution.

Overall, in 1983, IFAD contributed about 27 per cent of total investment costs, the balance being financed by external donors (39 per cent) and recipient countries (34 per cent). In 1980 and 1981, IFAD had contributed some 31 per cent of project costs; the 1983 reduction emphasized the mobilizing of external resources and efforts to protect IFAD's lending programme.

In 1983, the emphasis on Africa continued, with 11 projects, involving loans of some $108.6 million, approved. Of these projects, three emphasized rural development and two agricultural production, two would provide credit to co-operatives and small farmers for agricultural production, marketing and processing, two pertained to national research and extension, one was to assist in developing an inland fisheries area, and one would finance fertilizer imports and widen their distribution.

Six projects emphasizing food production in Asia involving loans of $96.2 million were approved in 1983: five were selected for co-financing from co-operating institutions; the other was to be financed exclusively by IFAD. Since land was scarce in Asia, irrigation was emphasized. Two projects were for irrigation, one was for agricultural development including irrigation, and the remaining three were credit projects, the outcome of the success of similar ones enabling the poor to gain access to credit.

Of four loans totalling some $21.3 million approved for Latin America and the Caribbean, three were for rural development and the fourth was for agricultural development.

In the Near East and North Africa, three projects involving loans of $33.6 million were approved, all for irrigation to increase agricultural production.

One was for northern Sudan, an area which had not previously benefited from public investments.

As regards technical assistance, IFAD provided some $1.7 million to assist 12 member States in project preparation activities. Grant financing also continued for elements of technical assistance included in projects such as training, agricultural extension and special studies, with Guinea-Bissau, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Malawi receiving some $2.4 million. In support of international agricultural research, IFAD made grants totalling $8.6 million to research centres co-ordinated by the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research (CGIAR). Grants amounting to $5.4 million were also made to institutions outside the CGIAR network.

The tables below show technical assistance grants approved during 1983 for project preparation and for research. Technical assistance grants as components within loans are shown in the table on project loans.

IFAD also organized programming missions to selected member countries to assist Governments to analyse the constraints and potentials of the agricultural sector in expanding food production. By the end of 1983, the Fund had organized 22 such missions, including two in 1983 to the Dominican Republic and Pakistan.

Income and expenditures

Total revenue in 1983 was $70.2 million, of which $65.2 million was investment income and $5 million was income from interest and service charges on loans. Expenses amounted to $18.6 million compared with the budget of $22.7 million approved by the Governing Council in December 1982. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year was $51.6 million.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1983, the secretariat of IFAD totalled 160, of whom 68 were executive or technical staff (Professional category and above) drawn from 42 countries, and 92 were support staff (General Service category).

Chapter XVII

Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment, held at Havana, Cuba, between November 1947 and March 1948, drew up a charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) and established an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO). Since the charter itself was never accepted, ITO was not established. However, while drawing up the charter, the Preparatory Committee's members negotiated on tariffs among themselves, and also drew up the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). The Agreement—a multilateral treaty embodying reciprocal rights and obligations—is the only multilateral instrument that lays down agreed rules for international trade. It entered into force on 1 January 1948 with 23 contracting parties. Since then, ICITO has provided the GATT secretariat.

By the end of 1983, the number of contracting parties to GATT had risen to 90 with the addition of Maldives (April) and Belize (October). One other country, Tunisia, had acceded provisionally. The contracting parties conducted about 85 per cent of all international trade while 31 other countries applied the rules of GATT.

Implementation of the Tokyo Round agreements

Of two distinct strands of the multilateral work programme pursued within GATT during 1983, the first was the continuation of work resulting from the conclusion of the Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations in 1979.^a The agreements of the Tokyo Round, the seventh "round" of multilateral trade negotiations in the 36-year history of GATT, provided an improved framework for the conduct of world trade and were adopted as an integral part of the rules of GATT.

Tariff negotiations during the Tokyo Round resulted in agreement on import duty reductions to be effected in eight annual cuts by the industrialized countries. With the fourth of such cuts being made on 1 January 1983, the half-way point in the Tokyo Round reductions was reached.

During 1983, the GATT Committee on Tariff Concessions continued work on establishing a loose-leaf system of tariff schedules to permit easier and more systematic access to changes made during rounds of tariff negotiations. In February, the Committee adopted procedures for renegotiating tariff schedules in the light of the decision of the 1982 ministerial session of GATT member States to adopt the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System developed by the Customs Co-operation Council in Brussels, Belgium. This system would facilitate analysis of trade statistics and monitor and protect the value of tariff concessions.

The Committee on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures agreed on the need to achieve greater transparency in the area of subsidies and to settle outstanding differences of interpretation between the various signatories to the Agreement on the subject. The Committee also considered two panel reports on complaints by the United States on alleged subsidies by the European Community (EC) on exports of wheat flour and pasta products. A further panel was established to examine a complaint by EC relating to United States subsidies on exports of wheat flour to Egypt.

The Committee on Government Procurement continued to examine laws, procedures and regulations relating to implementation of the Agreement on Government Procurement and set up its first dispute panel to consider a complaint by the United States against exclusion by EC of value added tax from the contract price of government purchases in its member States.

During 1983, the Committee on Trade in Civil Aircraft recommended the inclusion of a further 32 categories of products in the Agreement on such trade as from 1 January 1985 and the conditions for the elimination of duties and other charges relating to aircraft repairs were agreed.

The Arrangement regarding Bovine Meat and the International Dairy Arrangement were the multilateral agreements relating to trade in agricultural products negotiated during the Tokyo Round. The 25 signatories to the bovine meat Arrangement accounted for approximately 90 per cent of the world's exports of fresh, chilled and frozen beef and veal. The International Dairy Products Council, which supervised the International Dairy Arrangement, met three times during 1983. Its work included consideration of a complaint by EC arising from United States sales of dairy products to Egypt. A report on the world market for dairy products was published in October.

Work continued in committees overseeing the agreements on anti-dumping practices, technical barriers to trade, customs valuation and import licensing. The updating of the inventory of non-tariff measures affecting industrial products also proceeded. By the end of 1983, the inventory, which was originally prepared as an information base for the Tokyo Round negotiations, included over 600 measures.

Ministerial work programme

The second strand of the 1983 multilateral work programme of GATT was continuation of the plan set out by the 1982 GATT Ministerial Meeting. The ministerial declaration had called for new efforts to achieve a comprehensive understanding on safeguards. In this context, safeguards referred to the right of GATT contracting parties to impose temporary trade restrictions on imports which seriously injured a domestic industry or threatened to do so. Consultations took place throughout 1983 but did not progress sufficiently for a comprehensive understanding to be presented to the session of contracting parties in November.

The Committee on Trade in Agriculture, established by the Ministerial Meeting, held four meetings in 1983. It compiled information on measures affecting agricultural trade in 45 countries and went on to examine trade measures of 36 of them, including EC. The Committee considered, in particular, measures affecting market access and supplies, the operation of GATT with respect to agricultural subsidies and measures maintained under exceptions or derogations from GATT.

In 1983, the Committee on Trade and Development initiated the first five of a series of consultations with individual developed countries aimed at reviewing their trade policies in the context of Part IV of the General Agreement, which envisaged special treatment for developing countries. The Committee also set in motion a new round of consultations covering trade in tropical products, and a sub-committee began a programme of consultations aimed at examining barriers affecting the trading prospects of the least developed countries.

Other aspects of the ministerial work programme included the establishment of a group to examine quantitative restrictions and other non-tariff measures with a view to eliminating those not in conformity with GATT, and a review of the adequacy and effectiveness of the Tokyo Round agreements and obstacles to their acceptance by non-signatories.

Other GATT activities

Contracting parties session

In November 1983, GATT contracting parties met at senior official level and heard first progress reports on the ministerial work programme.

Council of Representatives

The Council of Representatives, GATT's highest body between sessions of the contracting parties, in 1983 acted on many international trade policy issues, and trade disputes between GATT parties. Four new dispute panels were set up during the year. Two reports were adopted by such panels and seven other disputes were considered further.

Consultative Group of Eighteen

At its two meetings held in 1983, the Consultative Group of Eighteen reviewed developments in trade policy since the 1982 GATT Ministerial Meeting and discussed the relationship between trade policy and the international financial system. It also discussed dispute settlement in the light of the 1982 ministerial declaration.

Committee on Trade and Development

During 1983, the Committee on Trade and Development continued to review trade issues affecting the developing countries, as did its two sub-committees: the sub-committee on trade of the least developed countries and the sub-committee on protective measures. The latter sub-committee continued to examine new measures implemented by developed countries which affected the exports of developing countries. Among measures considered were restrictions and other actions against steel, footwear, tableware, sugar, meat and quartz watches.

Balance-of-payments restrictions

During 1983, the GATT Committee on Balance-of-Payments Import Restrictions held full consultations with Brazil, Ghana, Hungary, Israel and Portugal, whose balance-of-payments difficulties had led them to restrict imports. Consultations under a simplified procedure took place with Egypt, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka, Tunisia and Turkey.

Textiles Arrangement

By the end of 1983, the second extension of the Arrangement regarding International Trade in Textiles,^b known as the Multifibre Arrangement (MFA), had been operating for two years. Agreements under MFA covered most of the textiles and clothing exported by MFA members in the developing world to those in the developed world (worth approximately $15 billion annually).

^bYUN1981, p. 1484.

In December, the Textiles Committee conducted the second annual review of the second extension, which was due to expire on 31 July 1986.

Technical assistance

In 1983, the GATT secretariat's Technical Co-operation Division organized missions to, or seminars in, the following developing countries: Argentina, Burundi, Haiti, Indonesia, Malaysia, Maldives, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Rwanda, Senegal, Thailand and Venezuela. GATT officials also participated in seminars sponsored by a number of regional organizations.

Training programme

Two commercial policy training courses with a total of 44 participants were held at Geneva during 1983. These were the fifty-fifth and fifty-sixth in the series which began in 1955 and which, by the end of 1983, had been attended by 882 officials from 109 countries and six regional organizations. The courses were held in French and English but were to be supplemented, as from 1984, by a course in Spanish.

International Trade Centre

Established by GATT in 1964 and jointly operated by GATT and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development since 1968, the International Trade Centre continued to provide trade information and trade promotion advisory services for developing countries. The Centre's work was directed towards helping developing countries to formulate and implement trade promotion programmes and activities. The value of its technical co-operation programme in 1983 was estimated at $15 million.

Publications

Publications issued in 1983 included the annual volumes of GATT Activities and International Trade, and the monthly newsletter GATT Focus.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1983, the GATT secretariat employed 284 staff members; of these, 123 were in the Professional and higher categories and 161 were in the General Service category. They were drawn from 43 nationalities.

Financial arrangements

Member countries of GATT contribute to the budget in accordance with a scale assessed on the basis of each country's share in the total trade of the contracting parties and associated Governments. The budget for 1983 was 48,538,000 Swiss francs. The scale of contributions for 1983 is given below. (The United Nations rate of exchange for December 1983 was SwF 2.18 = $US 1.00.)

¹Egypt and Syria, both of which became Members of the United Nations on 24 October 1945, joined together—following a plebiscite held in those countries on 21 February 1958—to form the United Arab Republic. On 13 October 1961, Syria, having resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations; it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

²By a letter of 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

³On 16 September 1963, Sabah (North Borneo), Sarawak and Singapore joined with the Federation of Malaya (which became a United Nations Member on 17 September 1957) to form Malaysia. On 9 August 1965, Singapore became an independent State and on 21 September 1965 it became a Member of the United Nations.

⁴Tanganyika was admitted to the United Nations on 14 December 1961, and Zanzibar, on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member: the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar; it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971, and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council," the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and

AND FOR THESE ENDS
