In addition, the Agency maintained its regular programme, with education and health services as priorities. In 1983, education and training accounted for 64.2 per cent ($125.5 million) of the Agency's total regular programme expenditure. Under an agreement between UNRWA and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the latter was responsible for the professional aspects of the education programme which included general education at elementary and preparatory (lower secondary) levels in Agency schools, vocational and teacher training at Agency centres and a university scholarship programme. In October, a total of 342,245 pupils were enrolled in the Agency's 653 elementary and preparatory schools in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, served by a teaching force of 10,027. A further 98,044 refugee pupils were known to be enrolled in government and private elementary and secondary schools in the same areas, and about 45,100 non-eligible children were in Agency schools.

Expenditure on health services in 1983 totalled almost $40 million, while expenditure on relief services was $19.4 million.

Report of the Commissioner-General. In a report covering UNRWA activities for the period 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983,⁽²⁾ the Commissioner-General stated that throughout that period, the situation in Lebanon following the June 1982 Israeli invasion had attracted much of UNRWA's efforts and resources. He added that although the operation in Lebanon had been the major preoccupation of UNRWA, conditions in the occupied territories, particularly in the West Bank (see above), had also been the cause of deep concern. The period was marked by numerous disturbances by Palestinians and Israeli settlers and by security measures taken by the Israeli army. Demonstrations by Palestinians, often accompanied by violence, had caused the occupation authorities to close UNRWA schools and training centres and to impose curfews on refugee camps. Though in general UNRWA had been able, with the co-operation of the Israeli authorities, to maintain minimum essential services to camp inhabitants under curfew, the distress caused to them by prolonged curfews was intense. Clashes between Palestinians and members of the Israeli security forces had been followed by the entry of troops into the three UNRWA training centres in the West Bank.

The Commissioner-General reported that UNRWA had made every effort to limit the interruption of its services and to secure the reopening of training centres and schools. However, he cautioned that as long as the tension in the territories remained high, it had to be feared that incidents involving UNRWA programmes and staff would continue to occur.

The Commissioner-General also recorded Israeli interference with UNRWA building activities in Gaza, which, he said, created serious problems. The Israeli civil administration in Gaza continued to interfere even with minor construction projects in camps and had caused work already started to be halted. Discussions continued with those authorities in the hope of overcoming that obstruction which, in the Agency's view, contravened the agreement concluded between Israel and UNRWA in 1967.

The Commissioner-General stated that, the distribution of foodstuffs to eligible refugees having been suspended in September 1982 with the exception of Lebanon,⁽³⁾ available resources were devoted to the highest priority programmes, education and health. Before the general ration distribution to the Palestine refugees in all fields could be resumed, as called for by the General Assembly in December 1982,⁽⁴⁾ the Agency would have to cover its financial needs for the education and health programmes and for its welfare programmes for the poorest section of the refugee community.

With regard to the financing of regular UNRWA programmes (see below), the Commissioner-General expressed deep concern; the Agency's relatively favourable cash situation in 1983, he stated, was due to exceptional circumstances which would not be repeated in 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/83 A by recorded vote.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/120 K of 16 December 1982 and all previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Eking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East should be relocated to its former site within its area of operations as soon as practicable;

4. No/es with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but not later than 1 October 1984;

5. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

6. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

7. Calls upon all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

8. Decides to extend until 30 June 1987, without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), the mandate of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Israel.

Speaking after adoption of the 11 resolutions on UNRWA in the Assembly, Iran said that they were all second-hand approaches to a second-hand problem; the first-hand problem was to remove the Zionist entity in the Middle East.

Before the Assembly votes, Israel said that the drafts reflected the total irrelevance of the decisions to be taken on the subject of the Palestine refugees and disregarded the background facts; the resultant texts made demands on the world to maintain a lopsided policy regarding the Palestinian refugees in continuing contributions 10 times greater per head than the amounts spent on other refugees in Africa, Latin America and Asia.

In the Committee, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya registered reservations to any direct or indirect reference in the drafts that might imply legitimacy of the Zionist occupation of Palestine.

In resolution 38/201 of 20 December, on the liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund, the Assembly decided to allocate 18 per cent of the Fund's remaining balance to UNRWA's educational programme.

UNRWA financing and administration

Financing

In 1983, total UNRWA expenditure amounted to $195.4 million, while income was $174.5 million, resulting in an excess of expenditure over income of $20.9 million. Despite that shortfall, the balance in the working capital as of 31 December 1983 had increased by $10 million as compared with the end of 1982, the reason for this being that the accumulated provision of $30.7 million for termination indemnities had been reverted to working capital at the year-end. The 1983 income for the Lebanon emergency relief, totalling $9.3 million, fell short by $0.8 million in relation to expenditure and commitments of $10.1 million, while income for the Lebanon Reconstruction Programme covered the expenditure and commitments of $5.4 million.

Working Group on financing UNRWA. In November 1983, the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, established under a 1970 General Assembly resolution,(5) submitted a report on its activities and on UNRWA's financial situation in 1983.(6) The Working Group reported that at a meeting on 28 September, the UNRWA Deputy Commissioner-General had provided it with up-to-date information on UNRWA's financial situation.

In its concluding remarks, the Group expressed concern that UNRWA would again have insufficient funds to finance its budgeted expenditure, even at the revised and reduced levels-$207.5 million-established at the beginning of the year. With expected income in 1983 at $166 million, there would be a shortfall of $41 million. Though recognizing that this gap would be bridged by deferring some non-cash items, the Group expressed concern that the major portion would be met by drawing down cash balances, which would seriously affect the Agency's cash position at the beginning of 1984. The Group considered the shortfall of income during 1983 to be particularly disturbing as income for the regular programme had actually decreased by $16 million as compared with income for 1982, despite some sizeable conversions of contributions in kind into cash. This was due to lower contributions from some of the traditional donors, partly as a result of increases in the value of the United States dollar against the currencies in which they contributed and partly due to the absence of special additional contributions.

In the Group's opinion, the financial outlook for 1984 gave rise to very serious concern. The Commissioner-General had projected expenditures for 1984 at $233 million, an increase of about $25 million over 1983 resulting from expected inflation and additional costs associated with the annual increase in the refugee population served by UNRWA. If income in 1984 did not exceed the level of 1983, there would be a shortfall of $66 million for financing the Agency's activities. The Group agreed that the financial support of UNRWA must be increased.

The willingness of some of the major contributors to convert their contributions in kind into cash or to allow UNRWA to sell their contributions for cash had been a decisive factor in maintaining the educational programme at its current level, the Group found. It expressed the hope that the contributors concerned would continue to assist the Agency in that respect.

The Group also considered the implications of the Agency's contingent liability for termination indemnities to its staff, amounting to $59 million, should UNRWA be forced to close down its operations. During the Group's consideration of that question, it was pointed out that, if the responsibility for termination indemnities could be assumed by the United Nations regular budget, UNRWA would be able to carry on its programmes for several more months during which strenuous attempts could be made to solicit additional contributions. On the other hand, it was pointed out that the proposal represented a financial risk to the United Nations and would also be contrary to the principle of voluntary financing for operational activities.

Stressing the need to ensure a continuation of the Agency's humanitarian assistance to the Palestine refugees, the Group urged for more and generous contributions, and for contributions as early as possible in the calendar year.

JIU recommendations. As requested by the General Assembly in March 1982,(7) the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) carried out a comprehensive review of the organization, budget and operations of UNRWA, with a view to assisting the Commissioner-General to make the most effective and economical use of the limited funds available to the Agency. In its report, transmitted to the Assembly in August 1983 by a note of the Secretary-General,(8) JIU examined the results of UNRWA's three main programmes on education, health and relief. An examination of operational difficulties and methods led to the problems of budget and finance, personnel, structure and decentralization, and issues related to UNRWA's mandate and institutional setting.

Addressing in particular the Agency's financing problems and the cost effectiveness of the use of its scarce resources, JIU discovered that the financial constraints were the source of serious difficulties for the fulfilment of UNRWA's mandate. In this context, JIU remarked that it seemed obvious that helping UNRWA to have the best possible management would reinforce the confidence of Member States in its effectiveness, improve its image and credibility, and facilitate regular and stable financing.

In that context, JIU noted that UNRWA's budgetary and financial practices were at variance with the usual practice of the United Nations system. JIU suggested that UNRWA's recurrent financial crisis could be alleviated if the methods used for informing the contributing States on the needs of the Agency were improved. Instead of several presentations of estimated expenditure with different figures during the year, a detailed biennial budget should be established, which would be discussed and approved by Member States. On the basis of the approved budget, Member States could then determine their contributions.

Concluding its review, JIU stated that UNRWA's substantial accomplishments should be measured primarily in humanitarian terms and its shortcomings should be judged against the background of the lack of prospects for a political solution and a just settlement of the question of Palestine refugees. Despite the difficult conditions including increasing financial needs and continued uncertainty concerning the availability of resources, the Agency had developed services of a recurrent, quasi-governmental nature directed towards establishing and maintaining levels of education, health and relief which enabled a large proportion of the Palestine refugees to be socially productive, and also helped in maintaining a Palestinian identity. In that process, UNRWA had acquired specific institutional functions and had given training to thousands of Palestinian staff members; this was the Agency's strongest asset and must be maintained until a just settlement of the Palestinian question was reached, JIU stated.

In spite of the satisfactory nature of UNRWA's operations, JIU noted basic problems such as the deplorable state of many UNRWA installations and buildings, which could be solved only through adequate funding. JIU also felt that improvements in policies and procedures, especially in programming and budgeting, in staffing and in organizing services, were required. The uncertainty of sufficient and stable financing had resulted in the repeated fear of interruption of certain services or discontinuance of entire programmes; this, together with the prolonged displacement of the Agency's headquarters from the area of operations, had led to a weakening of confidence in UNRWA's ability to meet minimum requirements in the future. JIU regarded as urgent the need to redress these weaknesses.

JIU made 15 specific recommendations with regard to UNRWA's programme and operations, management and institutional questions. They concerned in particular: biennial work plans for all programmes; supplementary funding; use of self-help projects; construction and equipment of UNRWA schools, and curricula; strengthening of the education programme, in particular vocational training; new approaches to the relief programme; clearer and more precise budget presentation; review by the Assembly of the question of separation benefits; improvement of recruitment methods for international professionals; comprehensive career planning for area staff and an improved classification system; reorganization of administrative structures, with greater delegation of authority from headquarters to field offices; possible co-operation between UNRWA and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with regard to protection of the Palestinian refugees; and reactivating and strengthening the role of the Advisory Commission of UNRWA. (For further details on individual recommendations, see below.)

In an addendum to the report,(9) the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General submitted their comments on the JIU recommendations (see below, under specific subsections). The latter commented on several recommendations which, he believed, required qualification, while the Secretary-General took note specifically of JIU's recommendations on liability for separation payment to Agency staff and on refugee protection.

Action by the Conference on the Palestine question. In its Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights (see above, under PALESTINE QUESTION), the International Conference on the Question of Palestine,(10) in September 1983, recommended that all States should ensure that UNRWA could meet the essential needs of the Palestinians without interruption or diminution of services. The Conference also recommended that the Secretary-General convene a meeting of United Nations agencies and organizations, with representatives of PLO and those countries hosting Palestinian refugees, to develop co-ordinated assistance to Palestinians and to look into inter-agency machinery for United Nations assistance.

Ad Hoc Committee for the announcement of contributions. On 22 November 1983, the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to UNRWA met at United Nations Headquarters. In his closing statement, the Commissioner-General expressed satisfaction that the pledges for 1984 represented an increase over 1983 funding and urged Governments to pay their contributions as early as possible. He added, however, that if those Governments not currently in a position to announce their contributions later pledged at the same level as in 1983, UNRWA would still have far less than the $233 million needed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/83 B.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, whereby it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and adopted the recommendations contained therein,

Having considered the report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983.

Gravely concerned at the critical financial situation of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, which has already reduced the essential minimum services being provided to the Palestine refugees and which threatens even greater reductions in the future,

Emphasizing the urgent need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at their present minimum level, the activities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the Agency's financial security;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the 'Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Accounts for 1982

For the year ended 31 December 1982, expenditure and commitments of UNRWA amounted to $234,696,749 under its General Fund.⁽¹¹⁾ The Board of Auditors noted that UNRWA's financial regulation on the carry forward of funds from one year to another had not been properly complied with and that field offices, prior to their request for headquarters' approval to carry forward funds, had failed to review carefully the need for such action. The Auditors further noted that the new system of remuneration for locally recruited staff, based on comprehensive local surveys of the conditions of service of comparable employees in the public and private sectors, had not been implemented in the field office in Jordan and that budget provisions for salary increases on behalf of the field office's staff had not been properly calculated.

The Auditors also commented on some of the amounts recorded in the accounts, as well as on other budgetary and administrative matters, including procurement, loss of property, inventory, travel and temporary assistance.

In a statement of 5 October 1983 before the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, an UNRWA representative said the Agency had already taken corrective action, or was in the process of doing so, in response to the Auditors' recommendations; there were, however, some differences of opinion with regard to certain recommendations on procurement, contracts, property survey boards and vehicle accidents, which UNRWA intended to discuss further with the Auditors.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in its report of September 1983⁽¹²⁾ on the financial reports and audited financial statements and reports of the Board of Auditors, stated that it had no comments on the Board's report on the financial statements of UNRWA.

The Assembly, in its resolution 38/30 of 25 November (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I), accepted the UNRWA financial reports and accounts and requested remedial action as required by the Board's comments and observations.

Personnel questions

Recommendations with regard to personnel questions were made by JIU in its August 1983 report on UNRWA.⁽⁸⁾ Stating that the rules concerning geographical distribution of international professional staff had not been applied to UNRWA and that the academic and professional qualifications of that staff and its knowledge of Arabic were insufficient, JIU recommended that geographical distribution be improved as a matter of urgency; that a recruitment plan be established, and that strict conditions for recruitment be developed.

With regard to area staff, JIU recommended that a comprehensive career planning system be formulated, based on the definition of occupational groups, redefinition of job classifications and the establishment of an internal training system. For all staff, it recommended that an adequate computerized personnel information and management system be set up.

Commenting on JIU's recommendations,⁽⁹⁾ the Commissioner-General agreed that the academic qualifications and Arabic knowledge of the international staff should be improved; however, he added that the discussion of academic qualification requirements inadequately reflected UNRWA's nature as an operating rather than an advisory agency, and many occupations did not require high academic qualifications.

Staff security

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report providing information on arrests and detention of UNRWA staff, with an addendum of 12 November.⁽¹³⁾

The Secretary-General stated that from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983, UNRWA had reported 17 cases of arrest and detention in the West Bank and 10 in the Gaza Strip. Of these, one staff member was still in detention in Gaza as at 12 November; another had been arrested there since 30 June and remained in detention. In the West Bank, a staff member had been arrested on 12 September and remained under detention, as did two of three staff members arrested since 1 July in Jordan. In the Syrian Arab Republic, two staff members, one of them arrested after 1 July, were still under detention, and no further information had been given on one detained since September 1980 and another missing since April of that year. In Lebanon, five staff members (of 50 arrested since 1 July 1982) were still detained by the authorities as of 1 November.

Apart from having affected the safety and security of UNRWA staff, the situation in Lebanon also had led to interference with the performance of official functions; the Secretary-General noted that all those cases had been taken up with the Israel Defence Forces as occupying Power or with the Lebanese authorities. UNRWA also had taken up with the Israeli occupation authorities in the Gaza Strip their practice of daily interrogation of some Agency staff on several consecutive days, usually in relation to offences allegedly committed by children or other family members. The Agency also had taken up cases in which UNRWA staff were required by the authorities to serve as guards in government schools.

Annexed were the names and occupations of UNRWA staff members detained in the West Bank and in Gaza, as well as of staff understood to be detained in Lebanon by the Lebanese authorities as of 30 June 1983.

In another October report, on UNRWA staff detained in Lebanon by the Israeli authorities,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General noted that, following the June 1982 Israeli invasion of south Lebanon, more than 200 cases of arrest of UNRWA staff had been reported, 29 of whom were arrested in 1983. On 17 October, 68 UNRWA staff members there were still believed to be in detention. The Secretary-General outlined attempts made to obtain information regarding those staff, to secure access to them and to obtain their early release. Such attempts had included contacts between UNRWA and Israeli officials, as well as several communications by the Secretary-General addressed to Israel.

The Secretary-General reported that Israel had stated its position in several replies. On 13 June, it had stated that it had the right to decide unilaterally what constituted an official function of a United Nations official and that it considered that the Organization had no standing with regard to proceedings against its staff members. In his reply of 28 June, the Secretary-General had noted that the Israeli position was not in conformity with international law and practice, and that it was exclusively for the Secretary-General to determine the extent of the duties and functions of the officials. On 12 October, Israel had stated that it had detained certain individuals in Lebanon on account of their involvement in hostile activities and that their detention had no connection with their professional activities but only with actions which had violated their official functions. Israel had added that a number of UNRWA employees would be released as soon as their background and activities had been fully investigated; all detainees were being visited on a regular basis by a representative of ICRC and were permitted to appeal their detention before an Administrative Appeals Board. On 25 October, the Secretary-General had expressed the hope that the release of UNRWA officials would take place without delay. In a related development, he had taken note of a judgement on 13 July in the Supreme Court of Israel sitting as the High Court of Justice; in the Secretary-General's view, the proceedings in the Supreme Court, in so far as they addressed the right of access and legal representation of detainees under the rules of the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention, reinforced the United Nations position which was based on the right of functional protection.

The Secretary-General reiterated his request that the continued detention of UNRWA staff be urgently reconsidered by Israel and that the Organization's right of functional protection be recognized. He added that he would continue to monitor the release of the UNRWA detainees and, in view of Israel's assurance, would provide to the Assembly an updated list of those detainees, taking into account any actions since 30 June 1983.

Annexed to the report was a list of UNRWA staff understood to be detained in Lebanon by the Israeli armed forces as at 17 October.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/230 of 20 December 1983 on privileges and immunities of the international civil service (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter III), the General Assembly expressed particular concern at the detention of a great number of UNRWA officials and about the cases in which full exercise of the right of functional protection was impossible.

In resolution 38/83 I of 15 December, on protection of Palestine refugees, the Assembly called again on Israel to release all detained Palestine refugees, including the employees of UNRWA.

A draft resolution on the detention of UNRWA personnel by Israeli authorities, sponsored by Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Mali, Pakistan and Senegal, was circulated in the Special Political Committee but not submitted for action at the sponsors' request. By the text,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Assembly would have condemned Israel for its persistent violation of the privileges and immunities of personnel of the United Nations and its agencies. It would have demanded the immediate release of the illegally detained UNRWA personnel and would have requested the Secretary-General and the UNRWA Commissioner-General to continue efforts in order to achieve their earliest release.

Organizational structure

In its report on UNRWA,⁽⁸⁾ JIU also made recommendations concerning the Agency's administrative structures. It stated that implementation of the recommended reforms in budget, finance and personnel matters required a reorganization of those structures and a greater delegation of authority from headquarters to the field offices.

JIU held it indispensable to entrust the UNRWA Management Division with the monitoring and evaluation of programme implementation; in order to facilitate that task and to guarantee the functioning of the new biennial programme budget system, also recommended by JIU (see above), the Budget Division should be associated with programme formulation. Furthermore, JIU suggested that the Audit Division be attached to the Management Division, to facilitate the modernization of audit methods and the carrying out of more management and programme audits.

Commenting on JIU's recommendation⁽⁹⁾ the Commissioner-General said he accepted the role envisaged for the Management Division, and a close association of the Audit Division with it; he stated that he would give consideration to the combination of the two Divisions, but would not wish to be committed to total integration.

JIU also found that from both the financial and operational point of view it would be highly desirable to have UNRWA headquarters transferred immediately to the region of operations. However, as conditions in Lebanon did not allow a complete transfer, JIU recommended that at least some functions be moved to the Amman section of headquarters or to field offices.

Expressing full support for the General Assembly's requests—reiterated in a December 1982 resolution⁽¹⁶⁾—to relocate UNRWA headquarters, the Commissioner-General stated that he recognized the desirability of reducing the distance between the Vienna headquarters and the five UNRWA field offices. However, he added, as the Middle East situation remained volatile, it was not possible to determine when it might become feasible to reunite headquarters at Beirut. In his comments on JIU's recommendations, the Commissioner-General stated that, pending implementation of the Assembly's 1982 resolution, he would again review the possibility of transferring certain headquarters functions from Vienna to Amman.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/83 A of 15 December 1983 on assistance to Palestine refugees, reiterated its request that UNRWA headquarters be relocated to its former site within its area of operations as soon as practicable.

Other aspects

Assistance to displaced persons

In 1983, the General Assembly again endorsed the efforts of UNRWA to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, also to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities.

Education and training

In 1983, the General Assembly called again for measures to establish a university at Jerusalem for Palestine refugees and reiterated its appeal for grants and scholarships.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in December 1982,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October 1983 on the question of establishing a university at Jerusalem.⁽¹⁸⁾ As endorsed by the Assembly, he had appointed a group of three experts (Richard Moreton Mawditt, Secretary and Registrar, University of Bath, United Kingdom; Dr. Calvin H. Plimpton, Chairman, Board of Trustees, American University of Beirut; and Abdus Salam, Director, International Centre for Theoretical Physics, Trieste, Italy, and Professor of Theoretical Physics, Imperial College of Science and Technology, London) to prepare a feasibility study, which was annexed to his report. The group held two meetings, one in June and the other in August, during which it visited Jordan to hold consultations with government ministries, university representatives and other officials concerned with higher education in the West Bank, East Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip. Prior to completing its report, the group met with representatives of UNESCO, UNRWA and the United Nations Secretariat; it also corresponded with the United Nations University (UNU).

Summarizing its findings, the group stated that the principal difficulty in establishing the proposed institution lay in the requirement that it should be a university for Palestine refugees. The group added that in all its meetings with officials, it had become clear that they wished to establish a university but not one designed to cater exclusively to the needs of Palestine refugees. During the course of 1983, the group had been informed of several steps taken to create the proposed new University of Al-Quds. In January, an association of four colleges had drawn up certain fundamental principles for the University, as a seat of Arab higher learning. As further measures, a Higher Board for the University had been formed of the senior officials and trustees of the constituent colleges, and the Union of Arab Universities had recognised the University as a full member. The University was intended to serve principally the Arab students of the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and East Jerusalem. Forming as it would a part of the system of higher education for those territories, the University would be autonomous, non-exclusive in its admissions and non-sectarian. These measures, the group stated, were the initial steps in establishing the University by drawing into an association existing institutions in and near Jerusalem.

In the group's opinion, UNESCO and other United Nations bodies were mandated to help build the University; also, more vigorous involvement by UNU would be welcomed.

With regard to financing, the group suggested that the endowment for the University should initially be that of UNU, i.e., $100 million. The group endorsed the establishment by the Secretary-General of a trust fund for an advanced fellowship programme for university teachers and scholars. The programme's cost had been estimated by the Secretary-General at $1.7 million, which would enable 20 fellows to receive fellowships for up to four years each over a six-year period.

In conclusion, the group expressed the belief that Israel's hesitations, expressed to the Secretary-General in 1981,(19) had been substantively met and that all concerned might now be able to support the arrangements discussed in the group's report. The group envisaged that the proposed University, together with the associated existing universities co-operating in a common graduate facility, particularly for science and technology, would play the role for the Arab community that the Hebrew University of Jerusalem had played in the development of the Jewish community. Financing from external sources should be found. The new University should be aimed at preserving and enriching the life of the Arab community, nurturing Arab scholarship and reviving science and technology.

Against: Israel, United States.

Israel said it would continue to do everything it could to improve the existing universities in Judaea, Samaria and Gaza where there were already more students per 100,000 inhabitants than in Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Democratic Yemen, India, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, Yemen and other countries. Those who had looked into the matter had made it clear that a project such as establishing a university only for Palestinian refugees was impractical and illogical; the plan was nothing but a political ploy against Israel.

Stating that the text was not a reasonable or practical approach for meeting the educational needs of the Palestine refugees, the United States said its doubts with regard to the text's being purely political had been confirmed by the revised version; the sponsors had apparently dissociated themselves from the Secretary-General's report in which the professional educators had considered the matter in a serious and practical manner.

The United Kingdom welcomed the report as well as the group's proposals which, it believed, were the best available basis for progress.

Scholarships

Report of the Secretary-General. In a report submitted to the General Assembly in August 1983(20) in accordance with a December 1982 request,(21) the Secretary-General presented information on responses by Member States and United Nations agencies to the Assembly's appeal for increased special allocations for grants and scholarships to Palestine refugees. He reported that nine scholarships to graduates of UNRWA vocational training centres had been offered by the Federal Republic of Germany and that two awards by Australia for tertiary studies were being negotiated. UNESCO had granted five fellowships to Palestine refugee education staff of UNRWA for special training courses in overseas countries; more were expected later in the year. The World Intellectual Property Organization had invited the UNRWA Commissioner-General to propose candidates for fellowships. UNRWA had declared its readiness to act as the recipient and trustee of special allocations and scholarships for Palestine refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/83 D.

Offers by Member States of grants and scholarships for higher education, including vocational training, for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

5. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and the United Nations University to contribute generously to the Palestinian universities in the territories occupied by Israel in 1967, including, in due course, the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees;

6. Also appeals to all States, specialized agencies and other international bodies to contribute towards the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees;

7. Requests the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to act as the recipient and trustee for such special allocations and scholarships and to award them to qualified Palestine refugee candidates;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Food aid

The General Assembly, in December 1983, again called for resumption of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees, which had been suspended in September 1982(3) with the exception of Lebanon.

Report of the Commissioner-General. In his report for the year ended 30 June 1983,(2) the Commissioner-General stated that the general distribution of foodstuffs to eligible refugees had been suspended in September 1982 with the exception of Lebanon where, because of the emergency situation caused by the 1982 Israeli invasion, the distribution of rations had in fact increased. This major change in UNRWA programmes had been undertaken in order to divert available resources to the highest priority programmes-education and health. Before it would be possible to devote resources to the resumption of the general ration distribution, the Commissioner-General added, the Agency would have to be enabled to cover its financial needs for the education and health programmes and for its welfare programmes for the poorest section of the refugee community.

Until March 1983, the emergency ration provided about 2,000 calories per person per day. From 1 April, it was reduced to just over 1,600 calories for all recipients except for some 28,500 persons identified as in special need.

The number of persons receiving emergency rations as a result of the situation in Lebanon was about 178,000, of whom some 7,200 were Palestinians not registered with the Agency and approximately 7,900 had found refuge in the Syrian Arab Republic.

Food rations continued to be distributed to hardship cases, which included widows, orphans, the aged, the physically and mentally handicapped and the chronically sick. In the Syrian Arab Republic, the programme of assistance to hardship cases was introduced from June 1983. At the end of that month, 89,110 persons Agency-wide were benefiting from that assistance. Following cessation of the basic ration programme, there had been a significant and steady increase in the number of applications for hardship assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/83 F.

Resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 F of 16 December 1981, 37/120 F of 16 December 1982 and all previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 302(IV) of 8 December 1949,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983,

Taking note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit of 1 August 1983,

Deeply concerned at the interruption by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, owing to financial difficulties, of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields in the occupied Palestinian territories, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic,

1. Regrets that resolution 37/120 F of 16 December 1982 has not been implemented;

2. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible and to offer the necessary resources to meet the needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the interruption by the Agency of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

3. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to resume on a continuing basis the interrupted general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields.

The United States said it favoured the gradual elimination of the general ration distribution and did not support the efforts reflected in the text to limit the Commissioner-General's discretionary powers in that regard.

Sweden observed that the Agency's financial situation required the setting of strict priorities. In 1982, the Commissioner-General had decided to grant the highest priority to educational and health needs and to helping the destitute; without sufficient financial resources, the resumption of the ration distribution would endanger those vitally important activities. Because of the categorical way in which the request was formulated, the Commissioner-General would not be able to maintain the necessary order of priority.

Greece, on behalf of the EC member States, said they wished to draw attention to the issues raised in connection with the December 1982 resolution on the subject.(4)

Turkey viewed the request to resume the general ration distribution on a continuing basis in the context of an increase in contributions.

Jordan said it attached great importance and urgency to the resumption of the ration distribution; it rejected some of the options suggested by the Commissioner-General for the distribution of the rations, in reaffirmation of the decision of the Palestine refugees themselves who had also rejected them.

Refugee protection

On 15 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted five resolutions on several other aspects relating to UNRWA and Palestine refugees: protection of the refugees (38/83 I); revenues derived from their properties (38/83 H); the return of refugees displaced since 1967 (38/83 G); and Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip (38/83 E) and in the West Bank (38/83 J). It also considered the issuance of identity cards for Palestinians, but did not act on a draft resolution appealing to Member States to provide information allowing the Secretary-General to issue such cards to all Palestine refugees and their descendants. Reports on these aspects were submitted by the Secretary-General. Information on Palestine refugee properties was also provided by the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a report submitted to the General Assembly in October 1983,(22) the Secretary-General presented information on the protection of Palestine refugees, as requested in a December 1982 resolution.(23) He reported that the Permanent Observer of PLO had submitted to him and to the President of the Security Council a number of complaints concerning actions said to have been taken by Israeli authorities against Palestinian refugees in occupied territories. The Secretary-General and senior United Nations officials, particularly the UNRWA Commissioner-General, had been in touch with those authorities on the question.

International organizations being obliged to act within a given territory with the consent and co-operation of the authorities in control, it had not been possible for the Secretary-General to undertake the measures requested of him by the Assembly.(23) The Commissioner-General, however, had initiated actions towards the ends specified. In the West Bank and Gaza, he or his representatives had immediately taken up with the authorities any actions, such as the closing of schools and the imposition of camp curfews, interfering with the Agency's education, health and relief services. In south Lebanon, the personal security of refugees continued to be a matter of deep concern. The Commissioner-General had repeatedly drawn the attention of the Lebanese and Israeli Governments, as well as other Governments concerned, to the dangers to the security of Palestine refugees in Lebanon and had urged that adequate measures be taken for their protection.

The Secretary-General reported that on 14 February UNRWA New Israel's attention to incidents in south Lebanon, particularly in the Sidon area, where unidentified persons had killed Palestine refugees, destroyed or damaged houses and forced refugees to leave their homes. UNRWA had pointed out that in the circumstances existing in south Lebanon, the Israeli armed forces were obliged to ensure the protection of the lives and property of the inhabitants, in accordance with the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention. On 21 March, Israel had replied that it was aware of the responsibilities of the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) for the security of the population, including Palestinians, and that they would do their utmost to provide protection, both in and outside the refugee camps. In this connection, IDF had already adopted a number of measures, such as intensified military presence in the refugee camps and high-level meetings with various authorities and local leaders.

On 1 June, UNRWA had informed the Israeli authorities that since March the situation had deteriorated considerably; several Palestine refugees had been harassed and some killed. The Agency requested that it be informed urgently of such additional steps as the Israeli authorities intended to take to ensure the safety of Palestine refugees in south Lebanon. On 26 August, Israel had informed the Secretary-General that its position remained as stated on 21 March and that the description of the measures taken by IDF to improve the security of all residents of south Lebanon remained valid.

With regard to restoring services to Palestine refugees in Lebanon, the Commissioner-General had supplied the following information: UNRWA education, health and relief services had been gradually re-established in southern Lebanon in late 1982 and all schools had reopened by early 1983; the Agency was in continuous contact with the Lebanese government department responsible for the Palestine refugees in Lebanon and the Commissioner-General had consulted the Government on rehousing the refugees which UNRWA was assisting at a current cost of $8 million; after cessation of hostilities in south Lebanon, UNRWA had commenced a survey of loss and damage to its facilities, which was estimated at $4,610,143.

The Secretary-General added that he and the Commissioner-General had also pursued with the Israeli authorities the question of the continued detention of UNRWA employees by Israel (see above).

JIU recommendations. In its August 1983 report on UNRWA,⁽⁸⁾ JIU recommended that, in studying measures to implement the Assembly's December 1982 request for measures to guarantee the safety and security and legal and human rights of the Palestine refugees,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General should consult with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) on possible co-operation. JIU felt that the involvement of UNHCR, so far specifically excluded from a role in protecting Palestine refugees, could have a positive effect and that the problem of protection required region-wide consideration.

Commenting on JIU's recommendation,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he shared the concern for legal and physical protection of Palestinian refugees. However, in the absence of a specific mandate from the international community and the consent of the sovereign or occupying Power, an international organ could not assume such responsibility, lacking both legitimacy and the means of carrying out that responsibility. Currently, neither UNHCR nor UNRWA was mandated to provide legal and physical protection to Palestinian refugees in the region.

Report of the Commissioner-General. In his report for the year ended 30 June 1983,⁽²⁾ the UNRWA Commissioner-General, noting that responsibility for protecting the civilian population lay with the occupying Power, stated that he considered it to be the Agency's moral duty to assist in ensuring the safety of the Palestine refugees. He stated that, although the situation in Beirut and south Lebanon had been at the forefront of attention, UNRWA also feared for the safety of non-combatant Palestine refugees living in the Beqa'a Valley and north Lebanon, where sporadic clashes and the factional fighting from June 1983 among Palestinian forces and their supporters had put at risk the lives of the inhabitants of the Wavel camp and camps close to the town of Tripoli.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/83 I.

Protection of Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 19 October 1983,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983,

Referring to the humanitarian principles of the Geneva convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to the obligations arising from the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907,

Deeply distressed at the sufferings of the Palestinians resulting from the Israeli invasion of Lebanon,

Reaffirming its support for Lebanese sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity,

1. Urges the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to undertake effective measures to guarantee the safety and security and the legal and human rights of the Palestine refugees in all the territories under Israeli occupation;

2. Calls once again upon Israel, the occupying Power, to release forthwith all detained Palestine refugees, including the employees of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

3. Also calls upon Israel to desist forthwith from preventing those Palestinians registered by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East as refugees in Lebanon from returning to their camps in Lebanon;

6. Urges the Commissioner-General to provide housing, in consultation with the Government of Lebanon, to the Palestine refugees whose houses were demolished or razed by the Israeli forces;

7. Calls upon Israel to compensate the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, without prejudice to Israel's responsibility for all damage resulting from that invasion;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its thirty-ninth session, on the implementation of the present resolution.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

The United States pointed out that the United Nations Legal Counsel had stated in December 1982(24) that practical and legal problems would arise if the Secretary-General were entrusted with guaranteeing the security and rights of refugees in the occupied territories. Also, the text made Israel solely responsible for damage to UNRWA facilities in Lebanon without attempting to identify other responsible parties as had been the case with the recent fighting in the refugee camps in and around Tripoli. The text called only on Israel to release the detained UNRWA employees, ignoring the fact that Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic were also detaining UNRWA employees; the paragraph in question did not take account of Israel's recent announcement concerning the release of UNRWA employees detained in southern Lebanon.

Speaking for the EC member States, Greece said they wished to draw attention once again to the issues they had raised in 1982.(25)

Sweden declared that its vote demonstrated its deep concern for the security and rights of the Palestine refugees. Although it considered that the Secretary-General did not have the means to guarantee their security—which was the responsibility of the occupying Power—he should do everything in his power to promote the objectives set forth in paragraph 1.

Finland, voicing strong support for all viable measures to improve the protection of Palestine refugees, nevertheless had grave doubts concerning the practical aspects and effectiveness of paragraphs 1 and 7.

Peru also had reservations on paragraph 1 on the grounds that the responsibility and the mandate entrusted to the Secretary-General were not practical and were questionable from the legal viewpoint.

Property rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on revenues derived from Palestine refugee properties,(26) as requested by the Assembly in a December 1982 resolution.(27) He reported that on 25 February and 16 March 1983, respectively, he had brought that resolution and the 10 others on UNRWA adopted by the Assembly in December 1982(28) to the attention of the Chairman of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine and to Israel's attention, requesting the latter to communicate to him—preferably by 30 June 1983—any information on their implementation. Also on 16 March, he had drawn States' attention to the relevant provisions of those resolutions, including the call to Governments concerned, especially Israel, to assist the Secretary-General in implementing the resolution on revenues from Palestine refugee properties.(27)

In the absence of any reply, he had on 26 July again requested information from all States on implementation of that resolution. Israel's reply of 26 August covered various aspects of the 11 resolutions. With regard to that resolution particularly specified, Israel stated that its position had been set out in 1981 before the Special Political Committee.(29)

In a November 1983 addendum(30) to his report, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that he had received a reply dated 28 October from the Syrian Arab Republic, informing him that the General Administration for Palestinian Arab Refugees (GAPAR), the competent authority dealing with Palestinian refugee affairs in the Syrian Arab Republic, had stated that it did not keep records of Palestinian properties in Palestine and revenues derived therefrom; GAPAR believed that such information on revenues should be provided by the Conciliation Commission for Palestine and by the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General noted that neither he nor the Commission had the required information, and it was for that reason that he had requested information from Israel and other States.

Report of the Conciliation Commission. In its report covering the period from 1 October 1982 to 30 September 1983,(31) the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine also provided information on Palestine refugee properties. The Commission reported that, upon formal request in November 1982 from PLO for a copy of the microfilm on property and land in Palestine, it had decided to grant the Office of the Permanent Observer of PLO access to the relevant records, on the understanding that the materials would continue to be treated confidentially. Early in 1983, the Commission had received an unprecedented request from a representative of certain individual claimants of land and property in Palestine for access to the records in the Commission's custody or to appear before the Commission; therefore, it had sought the opinion of the United Nations Legal Counsel on the matter. In July, in response to a request from Jordan, the Commission had authorized a government official to examine and make extracts from records connected with the immovable properties of the Palestinian refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/83 H.

Revenues derived from Palestine refugee properties
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/13 A to F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981, 37/120 H of 16 December 1982 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 2 September and 8 November 1983,

Taking note also of the report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, covering the period from 1 October 1982 to 30 September 1983,

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of international law uphold the principle that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her private property,

Considering that the Palestinian Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived from their property, in conformity with the principles justice and equity,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestinian Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in its twenty-second progress report, of 11 May 1964, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, for the protection and administration of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel, and to establish a fund for the receipt of income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners;

2. Calls once again upon the Governments concerned, especially, Israel, to render all facilities and assistance to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israel said that no Government would accept outside intervention in administering and regulating public or private property inside its own country. Property rights and income from property were exclusively subject to domestic laws, a proposition not altered by the fact that possible or potential claimants happened to be refugees. For many years, derelict lands and properties in Israel had been managed so as to bring them into productive use.

In the opinion of the United States, the text prejudged questions concerning the repatriation of the refugees and their compensation, which should be settled through negotiations between the parties concerned.

Though supporting in principle the idea that the Palestine refugees were entitled to their property and to compensation for it, Sweden considered that such claims should not be approached in isolation but in the context of a comprehensive Middle East solution.

Speaking on behalf of the EC member States, Greece drew attention to the issues they had raised in 1982.(32)

Proposed repatriation

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on population and refugees displaced since 1967,(33) as requested in a December 1982 resolution.(34) He reported that, on 16 March 1983, he had requested information from Israel relevant to the resolution and on 26 August Israel had stated that its position had been set out in successive annual replies, most recently in August 1982.(35) Since the submission of that reply and until the end of March 1983, Israel added, another 5,065 persons had returned to Judaea and Samaria; the total number of those returning since 1967 stood at 61,058 persons.

The Secretary-General reported that he had obtained from the UNRWA Commissioner-General information on the return of refugees registered with the Agency; that information was based on requests by returning registered refugees for transfer of their entitlements for services to the areas to which they had returned. Between 1 July 1982 and 30 June 1983, 139 refugees registered with UNRWA had returned to the West Bank and 47 to the Gaza Strip, bringing the estimated total number of displaced registered refugees who were known by UNRWA to have returned to the occupied territories since June 1967 to about 10,200.

Report of the Conciliation Commission. In its September 1983 report,(31) the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine stated that with regard to implementation of paragraph 11 of the 1948 Assembly resolution(36) resolving that refugees wishing to return to their homes should be permitted to do so and instructing the Commission to facilitate their repatriation, the events in the area had further complicated an already very complex situation and had limited the Commission's possibilities of action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/83 G.

Population and refugees displaced since 1967

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2452 A (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2535 B (XXIV) of 10 December 1969, 2672 D (XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2792 E (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C and D (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 D of 23 November 1976, 32/90 E of 13 December 1977, 33/112 F of 18 December 1978, 34/52 E of 23 November 1979, ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 35/13 E of 3 November 1980, 36/146 B of 16 December 1981 and 37/120 G of 16 December 1982,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983, and the report of the Secretary-General of 3 October 1983,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967 and declares once more that any attempt to restrict, or to attach conditions to, the free exercise of the right of return by any displaced person is inconsistent with that inalienable right and inadmissible;

2. Considers any and all agreements embodying any restriction on or condition for the return of the displaced inhabitants as null and void;

3. Strongly deplores the continued refusal of the Israeli authorities to take steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants;

4. Calls once more upon Israel:

(a) To take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants;

(b) To desist from all measures that obstruct the return of the displaced inhabitants, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its thirty-ninth session, on Israel's compliance with paragraph 4 above.

The United States said that the text was simplistic and biased and condemned Israel in a severe manner.

Sweden, although supporting the right of the Palestinians displaced by the 1967 war to return to their homes, considered that the text seemed to rule out the possibility of initiating negotiations or discussing the terms of repatriation.

In another resolution of the same date--38/83 A on assistance to Palestine refugees--the Assembly noted with regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees had not been effected and that no substantial progress had been made in the reintegration of refugees by repatriation or resettlement. The Assembly requested the Commission to exert continued efforts towards that goal and to report to it not later than 1 October 1984.

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1983, the Secretary-General submitted a report on Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip,(37) in accordance with a December 1982 General Assembly resolution.(38) He reported that on 16 March 1983 he had requested information from Israel on implementation of that resolution. On 26 August, Israel had replied that its position had been set out in successive annual replies, the latest dated August 1982.(39) With regard to the situation since then, Israel added that it had rehabilitated more than 7,000 families within the refugee rehabilitation programme, while for 1983 the projected number of families involved in that programme was more than 1,000, and during the first half of the year two new rehabilitation projects had been implemented; more than 400 families which had had to transfer their homes from the international boundary between Egypt and Israel near Rafah had been financially compensated and provided with new plots of land, including the necessary infrastructure, in Tel-el-Sultan, and the majority had completed construction of their homes and were residing in them.

The Secretary-General also provided information received from the UNRWA Commissioner-General stating that, in the year under review, Israeli authorities had demolished, on punitive grounds, the housing of 12 families. As a result, some 94 persons had lost their homes and 43 rooms had been destroyed, of which 20 had been built by UNRWA or with its assistance. UNRWA had protested these demolitions, pointing out that such action, amounting to collective punishment, was contrary to Israel's obligations under international law. Claims for compensation had been lodged but not met. The families whose shelters had been demolished in 1979 and 1980 had not been rehoused, although they had found some kind of alternative accommodation. Those whose shelters had been demolished in 1981 had been rehoused by UNRWA. Updating an earlier survey, UNRWA determined that of 440 families regarded as inadequately housed, 126 families remained so and 88 were hardship cases. The Israeli authorities continued to take the position that they had no further obligations with regard to those families. UNRWA had taken up the matter with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Israel, but had not received a reply.

From 28 June to mid-July 1983, 73 refugee shelter rooms on the perimeter of Beach camp had been destroyed on the orders of the Israeli authorities, which considered that they had been built without proper authority on State land outside the camp's boundaries. The 35 families (more than 200 persons) affected were virtually homeless. Some had already suffered eviction in 1971 and had then no alternative but to establish rudimentary accommodation on the outskirts of the camps. Individual cases of destruction of "unauthorized" shelters had occurred in former years. UNRWA had made representations to the Israeli authorities to abstain from further demolitions until alternative accommodation could be provided. The authorities, however, had not agreed to that, claiming that the families would be encouraged to squat on State land as a means of obtaining land in a housing project. They had informed UNRWA that the Civil Administration Accommodation (Housing) Branch would determine whether any assistance might be given to those families. Meanwhile, the refugees lived in unsanitary conditions or were an additional burden on other already poorly accommodated refugees.

According to information available to the Commissioner-General, 655 refugee families from the camps had moved into homes built on land purchased in one or another housing project established by the Israeli authorities. During the reporting period, a total of 863 shelter rooms were thus demolished. While the refugees' new accommodation was superior to the shelters, the pressure on housing still remained, partly because of the pre-condition that shelters in the camps be demolished prior to the acquisition of new housing in the housing projects.

A total of 2,932 plots of land in the Gaza Strip had been allocated by the Israeli authorities for housing projects for refugees. On 1,323 of these, houses had been built and were occupied by 1,732 refugee families comprising 10,647 persons. Houses were under construction on 499 plots, and 1,013 plots were still vacant, although it was understood that the majority had already been purchased by refugees. On 97 plots, houses had been built by non-refugee families. In addition, 17,665 refugees had moved to ready-built accommodation in the housing projects.

The three new housing projects at Beit Lahia and Nazleh (near Jabalia camp) and Tel-el-Sultan (near Rafah camp) were still under development; 218, 94 and 443 new houses respectively had been constructed and were occupied. Construction of more new houses was under way.

Since the re-establishment of the border between Egypt and the Gaza Strip, following the return of the Sinai peninsula to Egypt in April 1982, a total of 764 refugee shelter rooms housing 258 families (1,613 persons) had been demolished by, or on the order of, the Israeli authorities to make way for a security zone and border fence. The authorities had paid compensation to all the families concerned, who had availed themselves of the Israeli offer of plots of land in a housing project.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/83 E.

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 2792 C (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 E of 23 November 1976, 32/90 C of 13 December 1977, 33/112 E of 18 December 1978, 34/52 F of 23 November 1979, 35/13 F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 A of 16 December 1981 and 37/120 E of 16 December 1982,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983, and the report of the Secretary-General of 3 October 1983,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948 and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip away from the homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

Alarmed by the reports received from the Commissioner-General that the Israeli occupying authorities, in contravention of Israel's obligations under international law, persist in their policy of demolishing, on punitive grounds, shelters occupied by refugee families,

1. Reiterates its demand that Israel desist from the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and from the destruction of their shelters;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its thirty-ninth session, on Israel's compliance with paragraph 1 above.

Against: Israel, United States

The United States opposed the text because it felt that it was simplistic and biased and condemned Israel in a severe manner.

Introducing the draft, Pakistan stated that the demand that Israel desist from removing and resettling refugees in the Gaza Strip and from destroying their shelters was necessary in view of the alarming reports from the Commissioner-General that Israel persisted in its policy in contravention of its obligations under international law.

Palestine refugees in the West Bank

Report of the Commissioner-General. In his report on UNRWA activities for the year ended 30 June 1983,(2) the Commissioner-General stated that the conditions in the occupied territories, particularly in the West Bank, had caused concern. The period under review had again been marked by numerous disturbances by Palestinians and Israeli settlers and by security measures by the Israeli army. The continued establishment of Israeli settlements in increasing numbers in the West Bank had led to clashes with and demonstrations by the Palestinians. There had been many instances of harassment of Palestine refugees by armed Israeli settlers. Stone-throwing and other forms of violence had caused the occupation authorities to close UNRWA schools and training centres and to impose curfews on refugee camps.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The resettlement of Palestine refugees in the West Bank was the subject of resolution 38/83 J, adopted by the General Assembly on 15 December 1983 by recorded vote, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee.

Palestine refugees in the West Bank

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983,

A/armed by the reports that Israel plans to remove and resettle the Palestine refugees of the West Bank and to destroy their camps,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948 and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the West Bank away from the homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

1. Calls upon Israel to abandon its plans and to refrain from the removal, and from any action that may lead to the removal and resettlement, of Palestine refugees in the West Bank and from the destruction of their camps;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to keep the matter under close supervision and to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its thirty-ninth session, on any developments regarding this matter.

Against: Israel, United States.

Israel termed the text a hysterical, if revealing reaction to the possibility of providing the refugees still living in camps with better housing, not forcibly but on a voluntary basis. The plan so disparaged by the resolution had not even been approved by the Israeli Government; the alarm regarding "plans to remove and resettle" the refugees and destroy the camps was a sad and tragic testimony to the determination of the Arab leaders that refugees remain in misery and squalor so that they could be more easily recruited for the internecine warfare of those leaders.

The United States said the draft was designed to eliminate any programme which might attempt to improve the quality of life for the refugees until an overall political solution was found; no other country sheltering refugees had been requested to take the steps contained in the text.

Though expressing support for the text's general thrust, the United Kingdom had reservations on the wording of the third preambular paragraph and paragraph 1, as it understood that the Israeli Cabinet had not formally approved the plan; it also would have preferred paragraph 1 to state more clearly that the call on Israel was to refrain from removing and resettling Palestinian refugees against their wishes.

Introducing the draft in the Committee, Pakistan said it had been necessitated by the alarming reports about measures which violated the refugees' right to return and which might have grave consequences; it was feared that those policies were part of a calculated Israeli plan to squeeze the Palestinian refugees into areas near the Jordan River and then, in a massive strike, push them across the frontier, thereby creating instability in Jordan.

Jordan said that on 20 November 1983 the Israeli Government had stated that its plan was to demolish Palestinian camps in the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip. For the first time since 1948, Israel was implementing a plan to liquidate the refugees and terminate the existence of the camps.

Identification cards

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1983, the Secretary-General submitted a report concerning special identification cards for all Palestine refugees, (40) which the General Assembly in a December 1982 resolution had requested that he issue to them. (41) The Secretary-General reported that he had established a team of United Nations experts, including representatives of the Division of Palestinian Rights, the Office of Legal Affairs, the Office for Special Political Affairs, the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs and UNRWA, to assist him in implementing that resolution. The team had considered two broad categories of Palestinians; those registered with UNRWA, numbering some 1.9 million, and those not so registered. With regard to the former category, the team had noted that, prior to the Assembly decision, the UNRWA Commissioner-General had already decided to issue individual registration cards to all refugees registered with the Agency instead of the family cards used (see below). In respect of those not registered with UNRWA, the team had considered the steps to be taken in the process of identifying them, as well as the related issues involved.

Since large numbers of Palestinians were dispersed over many countries, the Secretary-General had sought information from Governments as to the number residing in each country and had solicited views on ways of implementing the resolution. The Permanent Observer of PLO had been asked for similar information. Half of the 20 Governments replying had declared either that there were no Palestinians residing in their countries or that there were none covered by the resolution. Two Governments had replied that the ethnic backgrounds of their resident aliens were unknown. Others provided the numbers of Palestinian residents, but the total of those referred to was fewer than 500. PLO had requested that UNRWA proceed with issuing identity cards to those Palestinian refugees registered with the Agency.

In the circumstances, the Secretary-General stated, he was unable to proceed further with implementing the resolution. However, should significant additional information become available through further replies from Governments, he would reassess the situation and inform the Assembly.

Report of the Commissioner-General. In his report for the year ended 30 June 1983,(2) the Commissioner-General stated that UNRWA had decided in 1982 to issue individual registration cards to Palestine refugees, instead of family registration cards. The preparatory work for the introduction of the new cards had been completed by the end of the period under review, he added, and it was expected that all persons registered with UNRWA who requested an individual card would receive it by June 1984. The decision to issue individual cards had been taken prior to the 1982 Assembly resolution(41) and the procedure was independent of any action to be taken by the Secretary-General in pursuance of that resolution.

Draft resolution. At the request of the sponsors (Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Mali, Pakistan, Senegal), a draft resolution circulated in the Special Political Committee was not submitted for action. By the draft,(42) the Assembly would have appealed to Member States to provide the necessary information allowing the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the UNRWA Commissioner-General, to issue identification cards to all Palestine refugees and their descendants, irrespective of whether they were recipients or not of Agency rations and services, as well as to all displaced persons and to those who had been prevented from returning to their home as a result of the 1967 hostilities, and their descendants.

Chapter X

Other political questions

Various aspects of information were considered by the General Assembly and its Committee on Information in 1983. In December, the Assembly made recommendations aimed at building the communications capabilities of developing countries and at improving United Nations public information activities.

Also in December, the Assembly commended the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for its work on the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and requested that its work continue.

In other action that month, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to prepare a study on Antarctica, because of increasing international interest in the region.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: public information. Africa: South Africa and apartheid-public information. Middle East: Palestine question-public information. Transport and communications: communications. General decolonization questions: public information. Namibia: public information. Other administrative and management questions: proposed UN communication satellite.

Information

During 1983, United Nations information activities focused on two areas-building up the information gathering and dissemination capabilities of developing countries, thus making them less dependent on outside sources, and achieving a more comprehensive and realistic image of the United Nations throughout the world. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the Secretariat were the main bodies concerned with those activities. Within the United Nations system, the Committee on Information continued to co-ordinate action in the information field and to report to the General Assembly.

The Assembly, on 15 December, adopted two resolutions on information questions, both calling for steps towards the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

By the first resolution (38/82 A), the Assembly called for efforts to make better known the issues underlying the demand for the development of communication capacities in developing countries. It reaffirmed its satisfaction with three UNESCO projects as steps towards a new order-the International Programme for the Development of Communication (a project to help developing countries develop communication infrastructure), the Global Satellite Project for Dissemination and Exchange of Information (planned by UNESCO in co-operation with other organizations), and an appeal for reduction of telecommunication tariffs for news exchanges.

In the second resolution on information (38/82 B), the Assembly approved the recommendations of the Committee on Information and requested it to continue to examine DPI's policies and activities, to promote the establishment of a new order and to seek the co-operation of all United Nations organizations. The Assembly called on DPI and UNESCO to convene a second round table for media representatives in 1985 on a new order. It called for the strengthening of DPI radio and television programmes as well as two United Nations information centres. The Assembly requested that the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), the inter-agency co-ordinating body concerned with public information, be strengthened. DPI was requested to cover policies and practices which violated international law relative to belligerent occupation.

The two resolutions were based largely on recommendations by the Committee on Information, established by the Assembly in 1978(1) to examine United Nations public information policies and activities. Having held an organizational session on 28 and 29 March 1983, the Committee convened its fifth substantive session in New York from 20 June to 8 July. In its report on the sessions to the Assembly⁽²⁾ the Committee made 62 recommendations on promoting a new order and on United Nations public information activities, all of which were approved by the Assembly.

Mass communication

UNESCO activities. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report by the UNESCO Director-General,⁽³⁾ describing progress during the period 1981-1983 in implementing the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC), a UNESCO project to help developing countries establish and strengthen communication infrastructure; on activities related to the establishment of a new world information and communication order (see below); and on the impact of technological developments. The report was issued in response to a December 1982 Assembly request⁽⁴⁾

The IPDC Intergovernmental Council held its fourth session at Tashkent, USSR, from 5 to 12 September 1983. Of 32 projects submitted to the Council, 19 (6 interregional and regional and 13 national) were approved for funding. In addition, the Council recommended that four interregional and regional projects and four national projects which could not be funded at that time be given priority for review at the fifth session, tentatively scheduled for April 1984. The six approved interregional and regional projects were: a refresher course for experienced journalists in the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, a seminar for improving the services of the Pool, an inter-State school for communication systems in African States where Portuguese was the official language, a programme for developing human resources in the graphic arts, a training seminar for news agency journalists belonging to the Latin American Network of National Information Systems, and the creation of a distribution system for Andean television programmes. The 13 national projects approved for funding had been submitted by Benin, Botswana, Burundi, Chad, Ethiopia, Kenya, Madagascar, Mozambique and Zimbabwe for Africa; Somalia and the Sudan for the Arab States; and Jamaica and Mexico for Latin America and the Caribbean.

In order to fund the 19 projects, the IPDC Council approved a supplementary budget of $629,000. That amount, added to the budget of $1,912,000 adopted in December 1982, brought the total IPDC budget for the year ending 31 March 1984 to $2,541,000.

During the triennium 1981-1983, UNESCO implemented 29 other national, regional and interregional projects in communication development, amounting to a total of almost $19 million from extrabudgetary resources. Among those projects, 13 were funded by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in the amount of $7,263,285 and 16 by member States which set up trust funds in the amount of $11,571,439. Trust fund contributions were received from Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Iraq, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, the Arab Gulf Programme for the United Nations Development Organizations (comprising Bahrain, Iraq, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates) and the African Development Bank. (For other 1983 UNESCO activities related to communications, see PART TWO, Chapter IV.)

Activities of the Committee on Information. In its 1983 report to the General Assembly,⁽²⁾ the Committee on Information recommended that all countries, the United Nations system and others concerned be called on to give UNESCO support in information and communication activities. It suggested that the Assembly mark the fifth anniversary of the Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racism, Apartheid and Incitement to War,⁽⁵⁾ adopted by UNESCO in 1978. It proposed that the Secretary-General present to the Assembly in 1983 a report of the round-table discussion on a new world information and communication order (Innsbruck, Austria, September 1983) (see below). It called for strengthening the information and communication infrastructures of the developing countries and stated that support for IPDC, which constituted an important step in the development of those infrastructures, should be emphasized.

In addition to supporting UNESCO activities, the Committee urged the United Nations to support developing countries with regard to their interests and needs in information. DPI was called on to strengthen its co-operation with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, as well as with regional news agencies of developing countries. The Committee proposed that DPI activities be strengthened to ensure better coverage of the United Nations and its work, especially in its priority areas (see below, under DPI ACTIVITIES).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly on 15 December adopted resolution 38/82 A without vote. The resolution was adopted under the agenda item on questions relating to information.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/181 and 34/182 of 18 December 1979, 35/201 of 16 December 1980, 36/149 A of 16 December 1981 and 37/94 A and B of 10 December 1982,

Stressing anew the importance of the establishment of a new world information and communication order and, in this regard, recalling the relevant provisions of the Political Declaration of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, as well as the relevant provisions of the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979, of the Declaration of the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 9 to 13 February 1981, and of the fifth and sixth meetings of the Intergovernmental Council of Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Georgetown in May 1981 and at Valletta in June 1982,

Recalling the relevant resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its eighteenth ordinary session, held at Nairobi from 24 to 27 June 1981,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975, and those of the Concluding Document of the meeting of representatives of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, held at Madrid from 11 November 1980 to 9 September 1983,

Recalling, on the occasion of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, its article 19, which provides that everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression and that this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers, and article 29, which stipulates that these rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Reckoning also resolutions 4/19 and 4/21 adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-first session, held at Belgrade from 23 September to 28 October 1980, and resolution 2/03 adopted by the General Conference at its fourth extraordinary session, held in Paris from 23 November to 3 December 1982, Recalling also the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace.

Recalling further the relevant resolutions adopted by the Council of Ministers of Information of the members of the League of Arab States at its nineteenth regular session, held at Tunis on 9 and 10 October 1983,

Considering that international co-operation in the field of communication development should take place on the basis of equality, justice, mutual advantage and the principles of international law,

Conscious that, in order progressively to remedy existing imbalances, it is essential to strengthen and intensify the development of infrastructures, networks and resources in the communication field and thus encourage a wider and better balanced dissemination of information,

Conscious that the development of communication infrastructures, including national and regional capacity for indigenous message production and dissemination, is one of the important factors of genuine participation by a large majority of developing countries in international exchanges,

Emphasizing its full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which constitutes an important step in the development of the infrastructures of communication in the developing countries and the establishment of a new world information and communication order,

Recognizing the central role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the field of information and communication within its mandate, as well as the progress accomplished by that organization in that field,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the implementation of the International Programme for the Development of Communication and the establishment of a new world information and communication order, and on the impact of current technological developments and practices and their application in the communication and information sector;

2. Underlines, on the occasion of the fifth anniversary of the Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racism, Apartheid and Incitement to War, the importance of efforts made so far for its implementation;

3. Again calls upon all Member States, and all organizations of the United Nations system, international, governmental and non-governmental organizations and professional organizations in the field of communication to exert every effort to make better known through all means at their disposal the issues underlying the demand for the development of communication capacities in developing countries as a step towards the establishment of a new world information and communication order;

4. Considers that the International Programme for the Development of Communication represents a significant step towards the establishment of a new world information and communication order and welcomes the decisions adopted by the Intergovernmental Council of the Programme at its fourth session, held at Tashkent, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, from 5 to 12 September 1983;

5. Notes with satisfaction the co-operation existing between the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and all other organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the International Telecommunication Union, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Universal Postal Union, whose projects have been approved by the Intergovernmental Council of the Programme;

6. Expresses its appreciation to all Member States that have made or pledged a contribution towards the implementation of the Programme;

7. Again calls upon Member States and organizations and bodies of the United Nations system as well as other international governmental and non-governmental organizations and concerned public and private enterprises to respond to the appeals of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to contribute to the Programme by making greater financial resources available, as well as more staff, equipment, technologies and training resources;

8. Notes with satisfaction the progress made under the Global Satellite Project for Dissemination and Exchange of Information, executed by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in co-operation with INTELSAT and INTERSPUTNIK, and with the regional radio broadcasting unions in Africa, Asia, Europe and the Arab States and supported by the Programme;

9. Notes that very few countries have responded positively to resolution 4/22 concerning the reduction of telecommunication tariffs for news exchanges, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-first session, and calls once again upon Member States to respond positively and effectively to that resolution;

10. Reaffirms its strong support for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and its efforts to establish a new world information and communication order, as well as for that organization's second medium-term plan for 1984-1989 and its stimulation of research with a view to meeting the challenges of accelerated technological development and the increasing role of communication in societies and cultures;

11. Requests the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue his efforts in the information and communication field and to submit to the General Assembly, at its thirty-ninth session, a detailed report on the application of the Programme and the activities relating to the establishment of a new world information and communication order and, in co-operation with the International Telecommunication Union, on the effects of the accelerated development of communication technologies on societies and cultures.

Proposed new world
information and communication order

United Nations efforts during 1983 to promote a new world information and communication order were carried out mainly by UNESCO and DPI.

The Director-General of UNESCO, in an October report,⁽³⁾ described UNESCO activities aimed at the progressive establishment of the new order. A study on the relationship between a new international economic order and a new world information and communication order was completed in 1982 and scheduled for publication in 1984. It included an analysis of data flow and the role of transnational information industries, particularly in relation to transfers of communication technologies from industrialized to developing countries. A global study was published on the right to communicate and a meeting of experts took place in 1983. Twenty-five studies were commissioned and two consultations of experts were organized in 1982-1983 on the concept of the democratization of communication, dealing with such questions as the threats and promise of communication technologies to the democratization of societies, relationships between communication and power, the contribution of communication to the democratization of culture, education and economy, and the transnationalization of information.

In April 1983, UNESCO organized an international seminar at Nairobi, Kenya, on media and disarmament, which discussed information sources for armament and disarmament matters and the possibility of enhancing disarmament through the mass media.

As part of its programme to enhance circulation and better balanced dissemination of information, a consultation on the establishment of an international network for exchanging television films was held in Paris from 21 to 23 February. A study on the international circulation of television programmes and televised news, currently under way under UNESCO auspices, indicated a tendency towards an increase in regional exchanges, while some exporting countries continued to dominate television exchanges. The increase in regional exchanges was particularly noteworthy in the Arab States and in Latin America.

In regard to UNESCO's call for the reduction of telecommunication tariffs, some countries—Malaysia, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and the USSR—reported reductions. Almost all professional organizations concerned with communication and many news agencies supported tariff reductions. A series of regional meetings between telecommunication and information managers was planned to discuss reduction in tariffs.

Research work initially concentrated on strengthening national or regional research institutions, generally associated with universities or other educational institutions. With regard to theoretical research, the UNESCO secretariat carried out studies on the relationship between advertising and communication and on the self-regulation efforts made by the advertising industry. A preliminary study was carried out on the independence and autonomy of the media, on the basis of studies conducted in Asian and Latin American countries.

Within the United Nations Secretariat, DPI took measures to promote a new world information and communication order, and it co-operated with UNESCO in several projects for this purpose. Those projects included a series of round tables for world mass media leaders, the DPI training programme for broadcasters and journalists and the strengthening of ties with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies. DPI was trying to stimulate the media to co-operate with the United Nations in producing information programmes, as had been done with a consortium of television organizations in producing a television series entitled "Agenda for a Small Planet".

The Committee on Information, in its 1983 report to the General Assembly,⁽²⁾ recommended that all countries, the United Nations system and all others concerned should collaborate in establishing a new order, based on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing the diversity of sources of information and free access to information, and, in particular, the need to change the dependent status of the developing countries in information and communication. The Committee suggested that the contribution of DPI to UNESCO efforts should be maximized, in particular by disseminating information on UNESCO activities in establishing a new world order and on the Committee's work.

As requested by the Assembly in December 1982,(6) the United Nations and UNESCO jointly organized a Round Table on a New World Information and Communication Order. In October, the Secretary-General issued a report on the Round Table,(7) held at Innsbruck from 14 to 19 September. Twenty-six experts, mostly communications professionals, from 26 countries took part, selected by the host organizations to reflect geographical and cultural diversity. They considered working documents prepared by the United Nations and discussed the current situation of information and communication, inequalities in world communication and the causes of those imbalances, technological progress and its socio-cultural consequences, the one-way flow of information from North to South and ways to rectify the situation, and development of communication infrastructures in third-world countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/82 A of 15 December (see above), the Assembly reiterated its call for Member States and United Nations and other organizations in the communications field to make better known the issues underlying the demand for the development of communication capacities in developing countries as a step towards establishing a new world information and communication order. The Assembly considered that UNESCO's IPDC was a step towards that goal. It reaffirmed its support for UNESCO's efforts to establish a new order, for its 1984-1989 medium-term plan and for its stimulation of research with a view to meeting the challenges of accelerated technological development and the increasing role of communication.

Taking similar action in resolution 38/82 B (see below) of the same date, the Assembly expressed satisfaction with the work of the Round Table, and proposed that the United Nations and UNESCO convene a second round table in 1985 to follow up progress made towards establishing a new order. The Assembly requested that JINIC, as the essential instrument for inter-agency co-ordination in public information, be strengthened and that its secretariat elaborate new work methods and longer-term indicative planning and joint action, especially in the promotion of a new order.

UN public information

The Committee on Information, in its 1983 report to the General Assembly,(2) made a number of recommendations on United Nations public information activities, including specific suggestions for the work of DPI (see below). It proposed that an appeal be addressed to the United Nations system to co-operate, through its information services, in promoting United Nations development activities and, in particular, the improvement of living conditions in developing countries. That appeal should be aimed at achieving a more comprehensive and realistic image of United Nations activities and potential.

Reaffirming the primary role of the Assembly in formulating United Nations information activities and recognizing the important role of UNESCO in information and communications, the Committee suggested that co-operation between the United Nations and UNESCO in promoting a new world information and communication order (see above) take more regular forms, especially at the working level, through the contribution of DPI to UNESCO efforts.

The Committee recommended the following activities to support developing countries in regard to information: assistance in training journalists and technical personnel and in setting up educational and research institutions; granting favourable conditions to provide access to communication technology needed for a national communication system; creation of conditions that would gradually enable developing countries to produce communication technology suited to their needs; and assistance in establishing telecommunication links at subregional, regional and interregional levels, free from conditions.

1. The forty-three recommendations of the Committee on Information approved by the General Assembly in resolution 37/94 B of 10 December 1982, as well as all provisions of the resolution, are reiterated. Those recommendations pending implementation should be implemented in full, taking into account the views expressed by delegations at the 100th plenary meeting of the thirty-seventh session of the Assembly on 10 December 1982.

2. The mandate of the Committee on Information should be renewed as set forth in General Assembly resolution 34/182 of 18 December 1979 and reaffirmed in Assembly resolutions 35/201 of 16 December 1980, 36/149 of 16 December 1981 and 37/94 of 10 December 1982.

Promotion of the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order intended to strengthen peace and international understanding and based on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information

3. All countries, the United Nations system as a whole, and all others concerned, should collaborate in the establishment of a new world information and communication order based, inter alia, on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing the diversity of sources of information and free access to information, and, in particular, the urgent need to change the dependent status of the developing countries in the field of information and communication as the principle of sovereign equality among nations extends also to this field, and intended also to strengthen peace and international understanding, enabling all persons to participate effectively in political, economic, social and cultural life, and promoting understanding and friendship among all nations and human rights.

4. An appeal should be addressed to the international media to obtain their support for the efforts of the international community towards global development and, in particular, for the efforts of the developing countries for their own economic, social and cultural progress.

5. An appeal should be addressed to the whole United Nations system to co-operate in a concerted manner, through its information services, in promoting the development activities of the United Nations, in particular the improvement of the conditions of the lives of the people of the developing countries.

6. Such appeals should be aimed at achieving a more comprehensive and realistic image of the activities and potential of the United Nations system, in all its purposes and endeavours, as laid down in the Charter of the United Nations.

7. The need should be noted for the creation of a climate of confidence in relations among States as a means of easing tension and, in this context, an appeal should be addressed to all States and mass media to help promote the purposes of strengthening peace and understanding.

8. Reaffirming the primary role which the General Assembly is to play in elaborating, co-ordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information and recognizing the central and important role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the field of information and communication, the co-operation between that organization and the United Nations in promoting the establishment of a new world information and communication order should take more regular forms, especially at the working level, through which the contribution of the Department of Public Information to the efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization should be maximized.

9. The Department of Public Information should disseminate as widely as possible information on the activities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the establishment of a new world information and communication order and on the work of the Committee on Information in that field.

10. The Committee on Information, noting the valuable effort of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the promotion of a new world information and communication order, recommends that the Department of Public Information take steps to avoid any overlapping of its activities on this subject with those of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, while stressing at the same time the ever-growing significance of the close working co-operation between the United Nations and the latter organization

11. All countries, the United Nations system as a whole, and others concerned should be called upon to give the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization adequate support and assistance in the field of information and communication. The fifth anniversary of the Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racism, Apartheid and Incitement to War, should be marked by the General Assembly.

12. The Secretary-General should be requested to present to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session the report of the Round Table on a New World Information and Communication Order, held at Innsbruck, Austria, from 14 to 19 September 1983.

13. An appeal should be addressed to the whole United Nations system and the developed countries to co-operate in a concerted manner towards strengthening the information and communication infrastructures of the developing countries in accordance with the priorities attached to such areas by the developing countries. In this regard, full support for the International Programme for Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which constitutes an important step in the development of these infrastructures, should be emphasized.

14. The Department of Public Information should further strengthen its co-operation with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, as well as with regional news agencies of developing countries, as this co-operation constitutes a concrete step towards a more just and equitable world flow of information, thus contributing to the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

15. The United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, should aim at the provision of all possible support and assistance to the developing countries with regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to actions already adopted within the United Nations system, including, in particular:

(a) Assistance to developing countries in training journalists and technical personnel and in setting up appropriate educational institutions and research facilities;

(b) The granting of favourable conditions to provide developing countries with access to such communication technology as is requisite for the establishment of a national information and communication system and correspondent with the specific situation of the country concerned;

(c) The creation of conditions that will gradually enable the developing countries to produce the communication technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, specifically for radio and television broadcasting, by using their own resources;

(d) Assistance in establishing telecommunication links at subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries, free from any kind of conditions.

16. All the information activities of the Department of Public Information should be guided by, and carried out in conformity with, the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the aspiration for a new world information and communication order, as well as conform to the consensus reached among States in resolutions 4/19, 4/21 and 4/22 adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-first session.

17. The Secretary-General should be requested to ensure that the activities of the Department of Public Information, as the focal point of the public information tasks of the United Nations, should be strengthened, keeping in view the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and along the lines established in the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and the recommendations of the Committee on Information, to ensure a more coherent coverage of, and a better knowledge about, the United Nations and its work, especially in its priority areas, such as those stated in section III, paragraph 1, of Assembly resolution 35/201, including international peace and security, disarmament, peace-keeping and peace-making operations, decolonization, the promotion of human rights, the struggle against apartheid and racial discrimination, economic, social and development issues, the integration of women in the struggle for peace and development, the establishment of the new international economic order and of a new world information and communication order, the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia and programmes on women and youth.

Continuation of examination of United Nations public information policies and activities, in the light of the evolution of international relations, particularly during the past two decades, and of the imperatives of the establishment of the new international economic order and of a new world information and communication order

18. The Department of Public Information should ensure that the daily dispatches of the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies which it receives are appropriately utilized in the performance of the public information tasks of the United Nations.

(a) With a view to further promotion and development of functional and mutually beneficial co-operation between the Department and the Pool, the existing arrangements in the Department for the conduct of this co-operation should be established on a more regular basis;

(b) In view of the successful joint coverage by the Pool of important conferences and other events within the United Nations system, this practice should be continued and further strengthened;

(c) The Department should consider the possibility of utilizing the dispatches received from the Pool to establish a data base on the information and communication facilities in the non-aligned countries.

19. In connection with the training programme for journalists and broadcasters from developing countries that the Department of Public Information organizes every year, the possibility should be considered of allocating the last week of the programme for a visit by them to one of the developing countries for the purpose of acquainting themselves with the ways in which information on the United Nations is received and utilized.

20. The Secretary-General should be requested to make available to the Committee on Information, at its substantive session in 1984, a report on the outcome of the activities conducted by the International Telecommunication Union with regard to the World Communications Year.

21. The exchange of information between the Committee on Information and the Commission on Transnational Corporations in matters pertaining to the mandate of the Committee should be encouraged.

22. The Secretary-General should be requested to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session the final report on the acquisition of a United Nations communications satellite, in the manner outlined in paragraph 20 of Assembly resolution 37/94 B.

23. The Secretary-General should be requested to implement fully the request, in paragraph 14 of General Assembly resolution 36/149 B, that present United Nations short-wave broadcasts over rented transmitters should be placed on a daily schedule throughout the year, to the extent that this can be accomplished through more effective utilization of existing resources.

24. The Secretary-General should be requested to continue the co-operation between the Department of Public Information and the Union of National Radio and Television Organizations of Africa, as well as with radio stations which are members of that Union, in order to broadcast United Nations radio programmes on those radio stations, and further requests the Secretary-General to co-operate with the national radio broadcasting organizations in Africa for wider broadcasting of United Nations radio programmes.

25. The Secretary-General should be requested to present to the substantive session of the Committee on Information in 1984 a comprehensive report on the viability of a world-wide United Nations short-wave network, taking into account the views expressed at the fifth substantive session of the Committee.

26. The Secretary-General should be requested to implement fully the proposals contained in his report regarding programming in the Portuguese language in the African Unit of the Radio Service and to take immediate steps for the strengthening of programming in the French language.

27. The Secretary-General should be requested to maintain the functions of the Middle East/Arabic Unit as the producer of Arabic television and radio programmes, to strengthen and expand this unit through the redeployment of existing resources to enable it to function in an effective manner, and to report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1984 on the measures taken in implementation of this recommendation.

28. In view of the importance of United Nations broadcasting for the European region, steps should be taken to maintain and enhance the functions of the European Unit in the Radio Service through redeployment of existing resources.

29. The inclusion of Bengali and Indonesian among the languages of the Asian Unit of the Radio Service for the purpose of undertaking programming at a meaningful level, as approved in 1982, should be implemented in full and Bahasa Malaysia (Malay) should also be included among the languages of the unit through redeployment of available resources.

30. Whereas the French Language Production Section of the Press and Publications Division hardly has available the means to provide press releases in sufficient numbers to meet the needs of the numerous delegations from all geographic areas wishing to use French as their working language, the Committee on Information requests that the Secretary-General should provide that Section with the appropriate means through better and more equitable use of available resources. The Committee recommends to the Department of Public Information that it make appropriate use of the official languages of the General Assembly in documents and audiovisual materials, in view of the need to disseminate more broadly and effectively information on the activities of the United Nations to the greatest cross-section of the public, using the greatest number of communications media.

31. United Nations information centres should continue to assist press and information media in their respective countries, and, inter alia, promote the establishment of a new world information and communications order.

32. While co-operation between the Department of Public Information and the United Nations Development Programme in the field should be promoted to the maximum extent, it is also important to bear in mind the intrinsic functions of United Nations information centres as distinct from those of United Nations development activities. The United Nations information centres should redouble their efforts to publicize the activities and achievements of operational activities for development, including those of the Programme, taking into account the priorities determined by the General Assembly.

33. In countries where the size, population, the state of media and non-governmental and other organizations, or the role being played by their Governments in United Nations affairs warrant it, separate United Nations information centres should be established, as and when resources become available. In other cases, the resident representatives or resident co-ordinators of the United Nations Development Programme may be entrusted with being acting directors of United Nations information centres, provided that they are periodically briefed and evaluated by the Department of Public Information with regard to their information tasks and provided that appropriate local staff and equipment can be allocated to them within available resources.

34. The Committee on Information, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the study on ways and means to enhance the role of the United Nations information centres within the structure of the Department of Public Information recommends that the effectiveness of United Nations information centres should continue to be improved:

(a) Through the continued review of the extent of decentralization which can be achieved within the overall guidance of the Department of Public Information;

(b) Through better training of centre directors and their personnel;

(c) Through an improved feedback and reporting system;

(d) Where appropriate, through reallocation of available resources for local reproduction and other necessary expenditures;

(e) Through appointing the best qualified persons with professional experience from all different geographical regions to the posts of centre directors, in view of the increased importance of the work of the United Nations information centres network, taking into account Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations;

(f) Through filling existing vacancies at the level of information centre director without further delay, in order to assure the continuation of the work of the centres under the necessary professional guidance of the Department of Public Information;

(g) Through enabling the External Relations Division of the Department of Public Information to fulfil its important role of management, guidance, supervision and monitoring of United Nations information centres in order to ensure that the universal character of the United Nations and the manifold mandate of the Department be duly reflected in the work of the information centres;

(h) Through strengthening the capacity of and improving the services rendered by the centres within the existing resources of the Department of Public Information, so that the centres can play their indispensable role of fostering an informed public opinion about the United Nations throughout the world.

35. The Department of Public Information should focus on, and give wider coverage to, economic, social and development activities throughout the United Nations system, with the aim of achieving a more comprehensive image of the activities and potential of the United Nations system, taking into account the priorities set by the General Assembly. The United Nations information centres, among others, should play an important role in this regard. The Department of Public Information should encourage the organization of round-table discussions between chief editors for press, radio and television services of different countries.

36. The Department of Public Information should promote an informed understanding of the work of the United Nations in the area delineated in General Assembly resolutions 34/146 of 17 December 1979, 36/109 of 10 December 1981 and 37/108 of 16 December 1982.

37. The Committee on Information takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the study on ways and means to enhance the role of the United Nations information centres within the structure of the Department of Public Information. The Secretary-General should be requested to submit to the Committee at its substantive session in 1984 a detailed report containing concrete proposals in respect of the suggestions presented in paragraphs 44 to 46 of the report.

38. The Secretary-General should be requested to ensure that United Nations information centres orient their activities to disseminate information on questions according to the mandates and priorities of the Department of Public Information established by the General Assembly.

39. Urgent steps should be taken to ensure that the United Nations Information Service at Vienna give, as a matter of priority, adequate service in the German language in order to act as information centre for Austria and the Federal Republic of Germany. Such steps, which are to be taken within existing resources, may involve redeployment of posts, including those originally assigned to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization-United Nations Information Service. The Committee should be informed about the implementation of this recommendation at its substantive session in 1984.

40. Taking into account the request of the Government of Nicaragua for the opening of a United Nations information centre at Managua, the Secretary-General should be requested to take the appropriate steps for the prompt establishment of the centre, through the redeployment of existing resources.

41. The United Nations information centres should be requested to intensify direct and systematic communication exchange with local information and educational communities in a mutually beneficial way, especially in areas of particular interest to host countries.

42. A detailed and well documented factual summary account of the coverage by widely representative world media of developments affecting the Palestinian people from June to December 1982 should be prepared, within existing resources, and be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session.

43. The Committee on Information, taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the development of systematic evaluation procedures for the activities of the Department of Public Information and on the in-depth evaluation of the work of the Department of Public Information, encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to develop a system for monitoring and evaluating the effectiveness of the activities of the Department, particularly in the priority areas determined by the General Assembly. This systematic evaluation process should be pursued and a progress report should be submitted to the Committee at its substantive session in 1984. The Committee looks forward to receiving in due course the progress report on the implementation of decisions taken on the basis of the Secretary-General's report which is to be presented to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-sixth session.

44. Future reports of the Department of Public Information to the Committee on Information and to the General Assembly, in particular on new programmes or on the expansion of existing programmes, should contain:

(a) More adequate information on the output of the Department in respect of each topic included in its work programme, which forms the basis of its programme budget;

(b) The costs of the activities undertaken in respect of each topic;

(c) More adequate information on target audiences, end-use of the Department's products and an analysis of feedback data received by the Department;

(d) The Department's evaluation of the effectiveness of its different programmes and activities;

(e) A statement detailing the priority level which the Secretary-General has attached to current or future activities of the Department, in documents dealing with such activities.

45. The Committee on Information notes the steps taken by the Department of Public Information in redressing the imbalance in the staff of that Department, particularly in the Radio and Visual Services Division. The Department should continue to intensify its efforts to that end, and, until equitable geographical distribution is achieved, the Secretary-General should take urgent steps to increase the representation of under-represented groups of countries, in accordance with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolutions 33/143, 35/201, 36/149 and 37/94 B; in this regard, the Secretary-General is requested to submit a report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1984.

46. Member States should be called upon to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Economic and Social Information.

47. The General Assembly should take note of the report of the Secretary-General on various aspects of the regionalization of the Radio and Visual Services Division of the Department of Public Information and examine it in the light of its resolutions 35/201 and 36/149 B.

48. The World Disarmament Campaign should give full consideration to the role of the mass media as the most effective way to promote in world public opinion a climate of understanding, confidence and co-operation conducive to peace and disarmament, the enhancement of human rights and development. Within the context of the World Disarmament Campaign and Disarmament Week, the Department of Public Information should fulfil the role assigned to it by the General Assembly by utilizing its expertise and resources in public information to ensure maximum effectiveness.

49. The quality, usefulness and coverage of the daily press releases and the weekly news summary issued by the Department of Public Information in all working languages should be further enhanced and improved in view of the important public information tasks which they can perform. The Department should continue to co-operate closely with and provide assistance to the United Nations Correspondents Association. Services provided at the Press Section of the Department of Public Information booth for the media and delegations should be improved.

50. The Committee recommends, in view of the importance of graphic presentation for a variety of public information activities, including posters, exhibits and publications, that the Secretary-General should consider redeploying a post of graphic designer from the Department of Conference Services to the Department of Public Information.

51. The role of the Department of Public Information, as defined by the General Assembly in several relevant resolutions, as the focal point for the formulation and implementation of information activities of the United Nations should be re-emphasized, and the Secretary-General should be requested to study the full implications of this matter and submit a report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1984.

52. The operations of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services (Geneva and New York), as inter-agency projects reaching specific target audiences in the industrialized countries on international development issues, should be continued on a stable financial basis through United Nations participation in these services. The Committee further recommends that the Secretary-General should be requested to urge all the specialized agencies to make long-term contributions to the financing of these services, thereby stressing their inter-agency character.

53. The Department of Public Information and the United Nations Development Programme, as important elements of United Nations information and development activities, should be requested to co-operate more closely with each other, both at Headquarters and in the field, in order to concentrate their resources, avoid duplication and effectively foster the process of development.

54. The Joint United Nations Information Committee, as the essential instrument for inter-agency co-ordination and co-operation in the field of public information, should be enhanced and given more responsibility, thus improving its co-ordination and cost-benefit efficiency of the public information activities of the entire United Nations system.

55. The Joint United Nations Information Committee should continue to strengthen its activities in the fields of development education and development-support communications.

56. The recommendations contained in the report of the Joint United Nations Information Committee on public perceptions of the United Nations system should be implemented. An appeal should be addressed to Governments and the mass media to transmit accurate information on major activities of the United Nations, especially those listed in Article I of the Charter of the United Nations.

57. The Joint United Nations Information Committee should continue to report on its programmes and activities to the Committee on Information for guidance and support.

58. Since Development Forum is the only inter-agency publication of the United Nations system which concentrates on development issues, the Secretary-General should continue, in accordance with pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly, to support its publication from the regular budget while intensifying his efforts to secure a sound and independent financial basis for its continued publication. All the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should be urged to contribute to the financing of this system-wide publication, thereby recognizing its inter-agency character.

59. Having taken note of the report on the relocation of Development Forum, the Committee on Information recommends that the Secretary-General should be requested to ensure that Development Forum will retain its editorial policy of intellectual independence, thus enabling this publication to continue to serve as a world-wide forum in which diverse opinions on issues related to economic and social development can be freely expressed.

60. The Secretary-General should be requested to submit a report to the Committee on Information on the current status of financial arrangements for the publication of the World Newspaper Supplement project.

61. In view of the fact that, as is pointed out in the report of the Secretary-General on the in-depth evaluation of the work of the Department of Public Information, the production of the UN Chronicle is administratively separate from its distribution and sales, thus adding to the problem of its wider and more effective dissemination, it is recommended that the Secretary-General should consider transferring the sales activity of the UN Chronicle to the Department of Public Information.

62. The importance of the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace should be noted and Member States called upon to implement it.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

In the Special Political Committee, a United States amendment(8) to add an additional paragraph was rejected by a recorded vote of 70 to 22, with 15 abstentions. By that paragraph, the Assembly would have decided that the resources required to implement the specified activities would be provided through offsetting programmatic or administrative adjustments, and consideration would be given to terminating activities designated lowest priority in the public information section (27) of the programme budget for 1984-1985 (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I).

At the request of the USSR, the Committee took recorded votes on paragraphs 9, 11, 12 and 13. They were adopted by votes of 88 to none, with 24 abstentions, 92 to 3, with 16 abstentions, 87 to 2, with 23 abstentions, and 88 to 2, with 23 abstentions, respectively.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Committee, a number of countries expressed concern over the financial implications of the resolution. Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Mexico, the Netherlands, Poland, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States protested additional costs. Canada, for example, felt that DPI should respond to requests for new programmes by redeploying existing resources. France reiterated its commitment to the establishment of a new world information and communication order but felt that, in view of the considerable means available to DPI, it should be able to absorb the new activities proposed each year. Similarly, Italy said that the programme budget of DPI should be sufficient if proper priority were given to the activities to be undertaken.

The Netherlands was convinced of the need for DPI to exercise budgetary restraint, but it understood that exceptions were sometimes inevitable; accordingly it was willing to support some of the paragraphs with financial implications but not those which had been introduced at the last minute or those which had not been previously submitted to the Committee on Information and negotiated. The latter viewpoint was shared by the United Kingdom. Maintaining reservations on the amount of funds to be allocated for the implementation of paragraphs 9, 11, 12 and 13 and desiring austerity measures, Poland nevertheless agreed that exceptions had to be made in certain cases, such as the one described in paragraph 11. The United Kingdom said the text reflected the Special Political Committee's continuing failure to deal effectively with the question of DPI's limited resources, the cost-effectiveness of its activities and the need to set responsible priorities among the recommendations made by the Committee on Information and the Special Political Committee.

In regard to the United States amendment, Finland and Mexico supported the principle of financial restraint but objected to the proposed amendment. Finland said it was arbitrary, while Mexico felt it would call into question the position of the developing countries. Reaffirming support for a new order, the USSR, on the other hand, said that, because considerable financial implications were directed towards activities not of the highest priority, it could not support additional financing for such activities and it supported the United States proposal.

Algeria and the Congo stated that the United Nations should allocate the funds necessary for those activities called for in the resolution. The Congo appealed to those countries which did not support the resolution for financial reasons to reconsider their positions and to try to understand that the requests were fully in keeping with United Nations objectives.

A group of States expressed reservations about the twenty-first preambular paragraph which referred to a December 1982 Assembly resolution on principles for use of satellites for television broadcasting. (9) Austria, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and Sweden made similar observations in this regard. Sweden felt that some principles could be interpreted as authorizing government control over television programmes broadcast by satellite, and such control was contrary to Swedish laws, which provided for freedom of the mass media, a position shared by Denmark.

Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden and the United Kingdom objected to paragraph 15, in which DPI was called on to cover policies and practices violating international law on belligerent occupation. Finland said the paragraph had political elements which were extraneous to questions relating to information and were incompatible with efforts to find a comprehensive settlement to the Middle East problem through negotiations. According to the Federal Republic of Germany, paragraph 15 singled out one particular political item to be covered by DPI and contained unacceptable wording; although the Federal Republic of Germany supported the Palestinian people's right to self-determination, it viewed any interpretation of that right as an anticipation of results which were to be achieved in the framework of a comprehensive settlement. Sweden and Denmark supported the paragraph's main thrust, but believed that the final part did not logically fit with the rest.

The United Kingdom and the United States expressed regret about what they viewed as a tendency to politicize information matters. The United States pointed out that two issues—the question of Namibia and the rights of the Palestinian people had been selected as threats to international peace and security; it believed that an omnibus resolution on information should deal with generally shared principles regarding the free flow of information and with the efficient, cost-effective operation of DPI. The Netherlands and the United States believed that the resolution should have included a call for evaluation and a system of priorities for DPI activities.

Both Algeria and Canada praised the Group of 77 for the flexibility it had shown in drafting the resolution. In view of that flexibility, Algeria was disappointed that the text had not been adopted by consensus.

Austria felt that consideration might also be given to financing the staffing requirements of the United Nations Information Service at Vienna so as to ensure adequate service in German; it also believed that paragraphs 12 and 13 constituted interference in questions falling within the Secretary-General's competence. The German Democratic Republic said the resolution contained important guidelines for a constructive international exchange regarding information and for the further development of DPI activities, and it believed that resolutions on information should reflect the need for co-operation in the establishment of a new order based on the desire for stronger peace and security and for disarmament measures.

In many other 1983 resolutions, the Assembly called for efforts by the United Nations and others to disseminate information in specific areas, including political, economic and social, and decolonization issues (for texts, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

In the political area, the Assembly in resolution 38/73 D called for wide publicity of the World Disarmament Campaign. In resolution 38/183 F, it called for dissemination of the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament. The Assembly, by resolution 38/183 L, invited the relevant specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to disseminate information on the consequences of the arms race.

Having commended the Programme of Action against Apartheid to the attention of Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals by resolution 38/39 B, the Assembly recommended that DPI ensure the Programme's widest publicity. In resolution 38/39 A, the Assembly appealed to writers, artists and others working in the mass media to foster the role of the media in disseminating information commensurable with the need to eradicate apartheid. In this connection, the Special Committee against Apartheid was requested to pay special attention to mobilizing public opinion and encouraging public action against collaboration with South Africa. The Assembly, in resolution 38/39 F, requested the Special Committee to publicize information on relations between Israel and South Africa and especially the July 1983 Declaration of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel.

The Assembly also called for dissemination of information on certain Middle East issues. In resolution 38/58 E, it requested DPI to disseminate information on United Nations activities relating to Palestine, including the August/September 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine, expand its coverage of Palestine, and publicize Israeli violations of human rights of Arabs living in the occupied territories. The Assembly, in resolution 38/58 B, requested the Secretary-General to provide the Division for Palestinian Rights with the resources to carry out its work through, among other means, closer contacts with the media and wider dissemination of the Division's information material, particularly where information on the question of Palestine was inadequate. The Secretary-General was also requested to ensure the continued co-operation of DPI and other Secretariat units in enabling the Division to perform its tasks and in covering the Palestine question. In resolution 38/79 D, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure the widest circulation, by means available through DPI, of reports and activities of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories.

The Assembly also called for publicizing economic and social issues. Resolution 38/34 included an appeal to Member States to encourage the mass media and educational and cultural institutions to arouse a greater awareness with regard to the return or restitution of cultural property to its country of origin. In resolution 38/148, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the 1984 International Conference on Population and issues to be discussed there were widely publicized. By resolution 38/14, the Assembly approved the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (beginning 10 December 1983). That Programme recommended that national institutions inform the public of the nature of their human rights, as provided for in international instruments and national legislation directed towards combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and mobilize public opinion against violations of human rights. The Programme also outlined the role the mass media could play in combating racism and racial discrimination and ways to achieve this goal. In resolution 38/19, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to distribute to States the list compiled by the Commission on Human Rights of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,(10) and to bring such facts to the attention of the public by all the means of mass communication. The Secretary-General was also requested to intensify efforts to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification or accession.

The Commission on Human Rights, taking action on a related issue by a resolution of 10 March,(11) also called for further promotion and encouragement of human rights and fundamental freedoms, through dissemination of information. In particular, it requested the Secretary-General to report annually on the dissemination of international instruments on human rights and to develop further the promotional and public information activities of the Centre for Human Rights.

In resolution 38/99, the Assembly called for DPI to disseminate information on the fortieth anniversary, in 1985, of the conclusion of the Second World War, exposing totalitarian and other ideologies and practices based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred or denial of human rights. In resolution 38/116, the Secretary-General was urged to ensure that adequate publicity and other arrangements were made to enable the Human Rights Committee and the Economic and Social Council to carry out their functions under the International Covenants on Human Rights.(12)

By resolution 38/118, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to disseminate widely the 1982 Principles of Medical Ethics(13) and to issue them in the six official United Nations languages. Governments were called on to distribute the Principles widely and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations were invited to bring them to the attention of the widest possible group of individuals.

By resolution 38/105, the Assembly called on the Secretary-General to disseminate widely in the official United Nations languages the 1982 Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation,(14) and invited Governments to ensure its publicity. The Assembly called for publicity of the International Youth Year (1985) in resolution 38/22. Specifically, it requested the Secretary-General to publicize United Nations activities and other information concerning youth. In resolution 38/120, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the action by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to initiate public information programmes to increase awareness of the refugee situation in Africa and the objectives of the Second (1984) International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa and requested DPI and other competent United Nations bodies to co-operate with the Commissioner to ensure maximum publicity of the African refugee situation and of the Conference.

The Assembly called for publicizing several decolonization issues. Resolution 38/55 dealt with dissemination of information on these questions in general. By that text, the Assembly approved the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, describing dissemination of such information. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to give publicity to United Nations work in decolonization, and invited States and organizations to disseminate such information.

In resolution 38/50, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue, through DPI, a campaign to inform world public opinion of the pillaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and, in respect of Namibia, the support they rendered to South Africa. By decision 38/419, the Assembly made a similar request with regard to informing world public opinion of the military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories which were impeding the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.(15) In resolution 38/53, the Assembly urged the administering Powers of Non-Self-Governing Territories to ensure the widespread dissemination in their Territories of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States. Resolution 38/36 D dealt with dissemination of information and mobilization of international public opinion in support of Namibia.

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in December 1982,(6) the Secretary-General reported, in October 1983, on various aspects of the work: of DPI. The report(16) described the Secretariat's work in implementing the 1982 resolution, dealing with DPI activities other than those described in separate reports to the Committee on Information.

In order to strengthen the co-operation of DPI with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, as well as with regional news agencies of developing countries, DPI had established a direct link between United Nations Headquarters and the Pool, through a computerized word-processing system which fed United Nations news dispatches by a telephone line, made available by the Tanjug News Agency of Yugoslavia, to the Tanjug satellite channel between the United States and Belgrade. A full-time Press Officer sent some 10 to 15 daily dispatches in English, French and Spanish through the line for the Pool. They were retransmitted to the Pool's 84 client agencies, which supplied local and regional redisseminators. DPI invited Pool correspondents from developing countries to cover several United Nations conferences, and four Pool correspondents were invited to participate in the 1983 programme for broadcasters and journalists which took place during the Assembly session.

The report added that, in compliance with an Assembly request (6) that reports of the Secretariat to the Committee on Information and the Assembly contain certain information, DPI began to propose activities in the programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985 along subprogramme lines and priority categories rather than by organizational units. DPI had established a monitoring system which provided its programme managers with comprehensive quarterly reports on DPI activities. It intended to consolidate those reports in its next biennial programme performance report. Two further stages of the evaluation process would be to determine which activities warranted in-depth evaluation and to assess end-users' reactions to those information activities or materials. In response to another request, DPI supplied the Committee on Information with samples of booklets, pamphlets, features, fact sheets and cassettes with radio programmes. Exhibits, posters and books published by external publishers in co-operation with the United Nations were also displayed to Committee members.

By the same 1982 resolution,(6) DPI had been requested to publish the UN Chronicle, a magazine on United Nations activities issued 11 times during 1983, in the six official United Nations languages and to expand its coverage. In addition to the existing Arabic, English, French, Russian and Spanish editions, arrangements were being made to produce a Chinese version by late 1983. New sections were added to the publication and its format had been improved, while subscription sales were increasing after a previous decline in circulation.

Other activities reported on were aimed at strengthening the production of United Nations radio programmes (see below).

In a separate report to the Assembly on the World Disarmament Campaign, the Secretary-General described DPI work in regard to an Assembly request (6) that it use its expertise and resources to ensure the maximum effectiveness of the Campaign (see Chapter I of this section).

Activities of the Committee on Information. The Committee on Information, in its annual report to the Assembly,(2) proposed that activities of DPI, as the focal point of the public information tasks of the United Nations, be strengthened to ensure a more coherent coverage of, and a better knowledge about, the United Nations, especially in priority areas, such as those stated by the Assembly in 1980,(17) including international peace and security, disarmament, peace-keeping and peace-making operations, decolonization, the promotion of human rights, the struggle against apartheid and racial discrimination, economic, social and development issues, the integration of women in the struggle for peace and development, the establishment of the new international economic order and of a new world information and communication order, the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia and programmes on women and youth. The Committee suggested that DPI focus on United Nations economic, social and development activities in order to achieve a more comprehensive image of the Organization, and that it encourage the organization of round-table discussions between chief editors for press, radio and television services of different countries.

As to co-operation between DPI and the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, as well as with regional news agencies, the Committee called for further co-operation on a more regular basis, including joint coverage by the Pool of United Nations events. It recommended dissemination of information by DPI on UNESCO activities in establishing a new world information and communication order (see above). The Committee stated that the Secretariat had reported some progress in response to 1980,(17) 1981(18) and 1982(6) resolutions calling for an improvement in the geographical balance of DPI staff, and that the Under-Secretary-General for Public Information had noted the need to continue those efforts. DPI should continue efforts to redress the imbalance by increasing representation of underrepresented groups of countries, the Committee said.

Public information activities in connection with International Youth Year (1985) (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XX) were another concern of DPI in 1983; projects included a film on youth, a series of radio programmes, pamphlets and other printed materials. The Under-Secretary-General pointed out that, while DPI had made efforts to promote the Year, there was a limit to what could be done within available resources.

The Committee called on the Secretary-General to report on activities of the International Telecommunication Union with regard to the World Communications Year (1983) (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter V). It was also suggested that he present a final report on the acquisition of a United Nations communications satellite, in the manner outlined by the Assembly in 1982.(6)

Regarding the use of official languages in DPI products, the Committee called for the wider use of those languages in documents and audio-visual materials. It also requested the Secretary-General to provide the French Language Production Section of the Press and Publications Division of DPI, through better use of available resources, with the means to produce press releases in sufficient quantity to meet the needs of the numerous delegations using French as their working language.

The Committee also made recommendations on United Nations radio programmes, the functioning of United Nations information centres and on evaluation procedures for information activities (see below under the relevant subject headings). In regard to the World Disarmament Campaign and Disarmament Week (see Chapter I of this section), DPI was called on to fulfil the role assigned to it by the Assembly by utilizing its expertise and resources in public information to ensure the effectiveness of the role of the mass media in promoting a climate conducive to peace and disarmament.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 38/82 B (see above), the General Assembly approved the Committee's report and recommendations on DPI activities, and urged full implementation of its requests. Reaffirming the importance of the increasing role of United Nations public information programmes in fostering public understanding and support of United Nations activities, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue reviewing DPI activities with a view to ensuring a better use of its resources. It also requested DPI to cover policies and practices which violated the principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation wherever they occurred, especially those relating to the denial of the rights of the Palestinian people (see Chapter IX of this section).

Radio and Visual Services Division

In April 1983, the Secretary-General issued four reports on different aspects of the work of the Radio and Visual Services Division of DPI, in accordance with December 1982 requests by the General Assembly.⁽⁶⁾ The reports were submitted to the Assembly through the Committee on Information.

One report dealt with the regionalization of the Division.⁽¹⁹⁾ Regionalization referred to the process of tailoring broadcasting production to the interests of specific regions, a concept which had been debated in the Committee on Information and the Special Political Committee for two years. Regionalized programming dealt with all global issues of special concern to the United Nations as well as with regional interests. As radio, film and television production required different specialized knowledge, United Nations activities in those areas had been separated into two units: a Radio Service and a Visual Service. The Radio Service consisted of seven regional units (Africa, Asia, the Caribbean, Europe, Latin America/Iberia, North America, and the Middle East/Arabic region) and a News and Central Programmes Section, which provided uniform radio news coverage. The Visual Service was divided into a News Production Section (television), a Feature Production Section (film), a Photographs and Exhibits Section, and a Visual Materials Library.

On the basis of considerations of professionalism and cost-effectiveness, the Secretary-General concluded that: separation of the two Services should be maintained; the output of the regional units of the Radio Service should continue to be balanced by a strong central news and programme element; separation of television and film production should be maintained and all television production should be the responsibility of the Visual Service; efforts should be made to diversify the television news output, within the existing structure and with existing resources; film production should be globally oriented, with more use of qualified outside producers and with due emphasis on adaptations into other languages; and efforts should be made to recruit qualified nationals of developing countries.

A second report by the Secretary-General was on the viability of a world-wide United Nations short-wave network.⁽²⁰⁾ Because more time was needed to complete the studies for a comprehensive presentation on the subject, the Secretary-General stated that the 1983 report was intended as an interim study, and was confined mainly to the question of viability of such a network and to possible transmission schedules of its regional segments. A 1984 report would deal with construction, staffing and operational requirements, frequencies, and the alternative of continuing to rent broadcasting time on existing national short-wave transmitters.

According to the 1983 report, the United Nations had the legal right to establish and operate short-wave broadcasting facilities at United Nations Headquarters and at the headquarters of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at Bangkok, Thailand. The possibility of obtaining legal authorization for short-wave facilities at the other regional commissions' headquarters was likely. As for technical questions, the major task of obtaining available and suitable short-wave frequencies could also be overcome. The question of whether a meaningful audience for United Nations programming existed was difficult to assess, however. The report listed possible broadcasting schedules, in terms of hours of broadcasting, languages and target areas, of the four targeted regions of a world-wide United Nations short-wave network-Africa, Asia/Pacific, Latin America and Western Asia/North Africa.

A third report by the Secretary-General concerned the programming of the African Unit of the Radio Service.⁽²¹⁾ It described the programmes prepared in English, French, Lingala, Portuguese and Swahili, and listed the staff employed for producing them-currently three Professional staff members to be joined by a fourth after redeployment, three General Service staff and three outside contractors. Most programmes were prepared at Headquarters and distributed on tape to radio stations in the region, and covered current affairs, news bulletins, listener question-and-answer programmes or other short-wave broadcasts.

It had been the experience of the Radio Service that those services did not adequately meet the needs of African listeners and broadcasting organizations, at least as far as United Nations material in English, French and Portuguese was concerned, since demand exceeded what could be supplied with current resources. Over the previous two years, there had been an increase in requests from permanent missions and broadcasting organization for special reports via radio/telephone circuits; it had not been possible to respond adequately because of staffing constraints. In order to meet the existing demand and considering the need for budgetary restraint, the Secretary-General proposed that a full-time writer/producer at the P-3 level be added for both English and Portuguese production. If this were agreed, the Portuguese-language outside-contractor funds thus released could be used to commence programme production in Hausa, a major regional African language. The additional work of the African Unit would require one more General Service staff member.

The fourth report described the possible expansion of the Caribbean Unit of the Radio Service,⁽²²⁾ which was established to provide United Nations programmes to all except Spanish-speaking audiences and broadcasting organizations in the Caribbean. For the purposes of this Unit, the Caribbean included Belize, French Guiana, Guyana and Suriname. The Spanish-speaking audiences of the Caribbean were served by the Latin American/Iberian Unit.

Current staffing comprised two staff members in the Professional category and two at the General Service level. The Unit's radio programmes, both short-wave broadcasts and taped programmes, were produced in English. In addition to English and Spanish, there were seven languages or dialects used by one or more Caribbean broadcasting stations. The two leading language combinations in terms of population were French/Creole and Dutch/Papiamentu, with population figures of 6 million and 650,000 respectively. Therefore, the Secretary-General suggested that any expansion of the Unit's programming concentrate on those two language combinations. As with other regional units of the Radio Service, effective programming was considered to require a combination of short-wave news broadcasts and taped in-depth programmes for medium-wave broadcast by radio stations in the subregion. Accordingly, any meaningful work programme would require one full-time writer/producer at the Professional level and one assistant at the General Service level. In the light of the financial situation, the Secretary-General recommended expanding the Caribbean Unit in phases, introducing both language combinations, but with limited programming and utilizing initially the services of two writer/producers on special service agreements along with a full-time assistant/secretary.

The Secretary-General, in his report to the Assembly⁽¹⁶⁾ dealing with the implementation of the 1982 recommendations of the Committee on Information approved by the Assembly in December 1982,⁽⁶⁾ included new radio programming activities. In response to the request for the inclusion of Bengali and Indonesian among the languages of the Asian Unit of the Radio Service, production of a taped weekly 15-minute programme in Bengali and of a monthly programme in Indonesian began in 1983. Also requested by the Committee, production of a similar weekly programme in Lingala, provided to the Congo and Zaire, was begun by the African Unit. The Radio Service at Geneva began production of a similar programme in Serbo-Croat which was sent to seven radio stations in Yugoslavia. In regard to the request that the Spanish Radio Production Officer position at Geneva be filled as soon as possible, the Secretary-General reported that the post was temporarily occupied by a Press Officer but would revert to the Radio Service as soon as possible. Since resources were not available, the recommendation that United Nations short-wave broadcasts over rented transmitters be placed on a daily schedule throughout the year had not been implemented.

Another recommendation had called for co-operation between DPI and the Union of National Radio and Television Organizations of Africa and its member radio stations. DPI had contacted broadcasting organizations in live African countries and was awaiting information concerning the fees, if any, they would charge for the use of their transmitters. Any pilot project would require renting satellite radio circuits to ensure timely delivery. In response to the Assembly's request for balance in the use of all the official United Nations languages in radio programmes covering United Nations conferences held away from Headquarters, coverage in all six languages was provided at the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence (Paris, April) (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III), and at the International Conference on the Question of Palestine (Geneva, August/September) (see Chapter IX of this section).

The Committee on Information, in its annual report to the Assembly,⁽²⁾ described its discussions and made recommendations relating to the four reports of the Secretary-General. It proposed that he: implement the Assembly's 1981 request⁽¹⁸⁾ that United Nations short-wave broadcasts over rented transmitters be placed on a daily schedule throughout the year, to the extent possible within existing resources; continue the co-operation between DPI and African broadcasting organizations in order to broadcast United Nations radio programmes; report in 1984 on the viability of a world-wide United Nations short-wave network; implement his proposals regarding United Nations radio programming in Portuguese and immediately strengthen programming in French; strengthen the functions of the Middle East/Arabic Unit as the producer of Arabic television and radio programmes, within existing resources; enhance the broadcasting functions of the European Unit of the Radio Service; and include Bengali, Indonesian and Bahasa Malaysia (Malay) among the languages of the Asian Unit.

Among its recommendations which might have financial implications, the Committee made proposals concerning the Caribbean Unit and regional television news magazines, which were subsequently approved by the Assembly when it adopted resolution 38/32 B.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Assembly, in resolution 38/82 B on United Nations information activities (see above), approved the Committee's recommendations, affirmed its requests and appeals, and urged their full implementation. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to enable the Caribbean Unit, within the next programme budget, to begin a meaningful work programme, in particular by introducing full programming in French/Creole and limited programming in Dutch/Papiamentu. He was also requested to ensure that regional television news magazines were produced on a regular basis for national broadcasting organizations which requested them.

Yearbook of the United Nations

In the context of revised estimates for the United Nations programme budget for 1984-1985, the Secretary-General proposed in 1983 to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee a small temporary staff increase intended to improve the timeliness of the Yearbook of the United Nations. In a November report to the (Committee,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the delay in publication beyond the goal of issuing the book 18 months after the period covered had risen from 8 months in 1974 to 16 months in 1982, dropping to 14 months in 1983 following the redeployment to the Yearbook of one editor and the temporary assignment of one General Service post. With the introduction of technological innovations, including word processing and internal typesetting, it was considered feasible to produce the Yearbook at 12-month intervals with no increase in the regular staff of the Yearbook Section-five Professional and four General Service posts. However, elimination of the 14-month backlog by 1988, when the 1986 edition was scheduled to be produced, would require the temporary addition, through 1987, of one more editor and one General Service post. The Secretary-General estimated the cost for 1984-1985 at $150,400.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a November report to the Assembly,⁽²⁴⁾ recalled an observation it had made in 1976⁽²⁵⁾ that effective means must be devised of ensuring that Secretariat drafts of Yearbook articles were well prepared and submitted to the Yearbook Section on time. In view of reported improvements in the submissions, and in order to enable the Section to cope with the resulting increase in work, ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General's request be approved. It asked him to submit in 1985 a progress report indicating whether the production schedule outlined in his 1983 report had been met, after which it would review the request for continued temporary assistance in 1986-1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/234 on the programme budget for 1984-1985, the General Assembly, on 20 December, endorsed the ACABQ conclusions and called for a review of the Yearbook format.

On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly adopted section V of resolution 38/234 without vote.

Yearbook of the United Nations

Bearing in mind the desirability of making the Yearbook of the United Nations more widely used by the general public,

Recalling the problems which have been encountered in the timely issuance of the Yearbook of the United Nations,

Taking note of the paragraphs of the Secretary-General's report which relate to the measures to eliminate the backlog in publication of the Yearbook of the United Nations and of the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake a comprehensive review of the current format of the Yearbook of the United Nations, with a view to developing a new format in order to make it more usable and accessible;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of this section of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

General Assembly resolution 38/234, section VI

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/760 & Corr.1) without vote, 23 November (meeting 46); draft by United States (A/C.5/38/L.11), orally amended by Morocco; agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session, 5th Committee 44, 46; plenary 104.

In the Fifth Committee, Morocco orally proposed two amendments to the draft on the Yearbook format which were accepted by its sponsor, the United States. The amendments deleted a preambular paragraph recalling a 1982 recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) that the delay in publication should be reduced to no more than two years, and inserted at the end of paragraph 1 "in order to make it more usable and accessible" in place of "which reduces its complexity, length and cost". The Committee decided, by 76 votes to 17, with 1 abstention, to approve the additional appropriation of $150,400 for the Yearbook for 1984-1985.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Belgium said it was willing to accept the United States draft and the Moroccan amendments, which should lead to some improvement in the regrettable situation that had prevailed for some years. Canada felt that merely adding staff to the Yearbook Section was attempting to cope with the results of the problem without getting at its cause and that effective means had to be devised to ensure that drafts from the Secretariat departments concerned were timely and well prepared; it wondered whether the book's current format was the best that could be devised.

UN information centres and services

Report of the Secretary-General. In April 1983, the Secretary-General reported on ways to enhance the role of the United Nations information centres within the structure of DPI.⁽²⁶⁾ The centres served as the main disseminators of information on the United Nations system in the field. In accordance with a 1982 General Assembly request,⁽⁶⁾ the study was aimed at determining measures to increase the centres' functional independence and flexibility, to adjust their work to the needs of countries they served and to assess their financial, material and personnel requirements. The study reviewed the centres' activities, their administration through the DPI External Relations Division, the reporting system and flow of information between Headquarters and the centres, personnel matters, methods of communications and equipment, the kinds of requests for additional funds, and the centres' relationship with non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

The study suggested that an important step to strengthen the capacity of the centres and to develop their relationship with NGOs in their region would be the holding of periodic regional conferences with those organizations, in different areas of the world as often as financially feasible.

In the view of the centre directors, the centres needed a larger degree of discretionary authority in carrying out their work, including production of information material more suited to local needs and interests. More timely delivery of information material from Headquarters was needed, and they believed that a reduction and streamlining of procedural requirements was desirable, and that all communications should be channelled through DPI in order to minimize duplication and confusion. On personnel matters, the directors felt most of their posts needed to be upgraded to levels commensurate with their responsibilities. It was observed that efforts were being made to increase contacts between the centres and Headquarters, and that DPI was trying to bring about more mobility among directors, and between Headquarters and the field. The training programme should be extended to reference assistants. In response to their request, more flexibility was given to the centres to transfer funds among different areas of expenditure within their approved budgets. Most centres requested additional operational funds for purposes such as travel, translation and production of information material, communication, temporary assistance, and organizing seminars and exhibits. DPI would give consideration to all requests for resources and try to satisfy them, on a priority basis, through redeployment whenever possible. Additional funds would enable DPI to satisfy more requests and assist centres in improving their performance, the report concluded.

Activities of the Committee on Information. The Committee on Information considered the Secretary-General's report and made its own recommendations to the Assembly.⁽²⁾ The Under-Secretary-General for Public Information informed the Committee that the United Nations Information Centres Manual, which gave guidance for directors, was about to be revised and that DPI had taken action to establish a national information officer category for locally recruited information assistants and to fill vacancies in posts of centre directors. Among its recommendations, the Committee called on the centres to promote the establishment of a new world information and communication order (see above). Noting that field representatives of UNDP frequently also served as centre directors, the Committee said that co-operation between DPI and UNDP in the field should be promoted, while bearing in mind the centres' functions as distinct from those of development activities. The Committee recommended that, in countries where the size, population, the state of the media or the role being played by Governments in United Nations affairs warranted it, separate information centres should be established, as resources became available. In other cases, the UNDP resident representatives might be entrusted with being acting centre directors.

The Committee suggested that the effectiveness of the centres could be improved through: better staff training; improved reporting; reallocation of resources for local reproduction and other necessary expenditures; appointing the best qualified persons as centre directors; filling existing vacancies of directors without delay; enabling the External Relations Division to fulfil its role of management, supervision and monitoring of the centres; and improving the services rendered by the centres. The Committee proposed that the Secretary-General ensure that centres orient their activities according to the mandates and priorities established by the Assembly. It recommended that, within existing resources, the United Nations Information Service in Vienna provide adequate service in German in order to act as the information centre for Austria and the Federal Republic of Germany. Taking into account Nicaragua's request for an information centre at Managua, the Secretary-General should be requested to establish the centre through the redeployment of existing resources. In addition, the Committee proposed that the centres intensify communication exchange with local information and educational communities, especially in areas of particular interest to host countries. The Committee recommended that DPI accept Indonesia's invitation to reopen the Centre at Jakarta, the only recommendation concerning the centres with possible financial implications.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/82 B (see above), approved the Committee's recommendations not requiring additional financial resources. In addition, it invited DPI to reopen, as a matter of priority, the Jakarta Information Centre; and to agree to the requests of the United Republic of Cameroon and Burundi that the Yaoundé Centre and the Bujumbura Centre, respectively, be strengthened and full-time directors appointed.

In resolution 38/73 D on the World Disarmament Campaign (see Chapter I of this section), the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to instruct the information centres and regional commissions to give wide publicity to the Campaign and, whenever necessary, to adapt, as far as possible, United Nations information materials into local languages.

Programme evaluation

In April 1983, the Secretary-General submitted an in-depth evaluation of the work of DPI(27) to CPC. The report, covering the period 1971-1982, evaluated DPI's achievement in attaining six objectives of information activities.

The report pointed out that the primary function of DPI was to assist information agencies, educational institutions and NGOs by making available to them services and materials, including physical facilities such as office space, and radio and television studios, and material services such as press releases, press briefings, radio bulletins, live television feeds and documentation. The second objective was to provide information on United Nations activities by relying on redissemi-nators (mainly correspondents, the press, NGOs, outside authors and publishers, broadcasting organizations, film organizations, educational institutions, students and national information commissions). The third objective-serving the needs of selected groups and institutions with a high opinion-building potential-included efforts to reach target audiences such as the specialized press, schools, universities, professions and NGOs. Fourthly, the report evaluated whether DPI was equipped with the necessary technical facilities to enable it to perform its functions and to provide direct access to the United Nations. Establishment of a mechanism at Headquarters for formulating information policy and activities was another objective. The Planning, Programming and Evaluation Unit (PPEU) was established in 1980 to deal with those and related functions. The sixth objective-establishment of a mechanism at Headquarters for continuous information on the utilization and effectiveness of DPI activities-was currently being performed by PPEU, although there had been some doubt about the locus of the responsibility for the analysis and use of feedback. The data collected continued to be erratic and unreliable, making useful analysis difficult to obtain.

In reviewing the six objectives, the Secretary General said that some progress had been made during the period under review. At the departmental level, there was commitment to planning, but that was not fully reflected at the operating level. In particular, the separation between production and distribution had been so pervasive that frequently the linkage of particular output to the fulfilment of the basic mandate of DPI had been forgotten. Progress in establishing a programme planning mechanism had been slow, but the current arrangements, namely, directors' meetings, thematic task forces and a planning group serviced by PPEU, should be adequate for that task. Improvement was needed in the means by which management informed itself of DPI activities.

Another area of concern was the means for collection, analysis and sharing of data; quantitative and qualitative data on DPI's production and on the demands for its services were of uneven coverage and utility. The identification of ways to improve the use of existing resources would depend on better feedback, appropriate equipment and the more precise identification of target audiences. In the absence of reliable output statistics and feedback data, it was difficult to assess whether there had been significant improvements in the provision of supporter services. The development of the capacity to make such judgements would be crucial in future attempts to provide such services efficiently and effectively. If support services were to remain accessible to the redissemulators, equipment capable of meeting the technological requirements of the users was needed. When target audiences had been better defined and their interests identified, distribution could be improved and, in some cases, particular products could be tailored to the needs of specific users.

The Secretary-General stated his intention to take appropriate action on the issues raised by the evaluation, taking into account any comments of CPC and the Committee on Information.

By a note of 28 April,(28) the Secretariat reported to the Committee on Information on progress in the establishment of systematic procedures for monitoring and evaluating DPI activities. The mechanisms for monitoring and evaluation were to be reviewed periodically to improve activities and to ensure that they reflected intergovernmental objectives and the concerns of programme managers and end-users. The procedures consisted of four forms soliciting information on DPI activities—three of the forms required quarterly reports, and the fourth was filled out after every activity was begun or completed. PPEU analysed the data and quarterly reports were provided to the Under-Secretary-General, directors, chiefs of information services and directors of information centres.

In order to evaluate DPI activities, special questionnaires were devised to assess end-user reactions to DPI materials. The assessment was intended to ascertain whether the materials reached intended audiences and were useful to them. This data was supplemented with an analysis of correspondence and other information. Preliminary studies were under way on the annual editors' round tables, the United Nations fellowship programme for educators 1975-1981 and The World Chronicle, a weekly television programme produced by the United Nations at which correspondents interviewed United Nations officials.

CPC consideration. In May, CPC considered the Secretary-General's report on evaluation and the Secretariat's note. As stated in its annual report to the Assembly,(29) CPC considered the Secretary-General's report informative and useful, expressed concern about DPI's preoccupation with production and stressed the importance of focusing attention on distribution. Noting that efforts to eliminate the backlog in the publication of the Yearbook of the United Nations (see above) had not been effective, and that there had been a decline in demand for certain DPI products and services such as subscriptions to the UN Chronicle and visitors taking the guided tour at Headquarters, CPC suggested that DPI reassess the utility of those services as public information tools and define their potential users. CPC requested that further work be done on assessing the impact as well as on the identification and reaction of end-users, and that all future evaluations deal with those aspects.

With respect to DPI activities, CPC recommended that: the imbalance between production and dissemination efforts be corrected; the feedback system be relined and include analysis of the data collected; the target audiences be better identified; the timeliness of the Yearbook be improved; and the decline in paid circulation of the Chronicle be reversed through proper targeting of the output. The internal evaluation studies planned for 1984-1985 should include distribution of photo materials and radio tapes (in addition to anti-apartheid radio programmes, activities to highlight the 1985 Conference on the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, and films on disarmament). CPC decided to consider at its 1986 session a progress report on the action taken by the Secretary-General in regard to the issues raised by the current evaluation.

Consideration by the Committee on Information. The Committee on Information also made recommendations on evaluation procedures for DPI activities.(2) It encouraged the development of the DPI monitoring and evaluating system, particularly in the priority areas determined by the General Assembly, and requested a progress report on the process for its 1984 session. The Committee recommended that future DPI reports, particularly on new or expansion of existing programmes, should contain: information on DPI output on each topic included in its work programme, which formed the basis of its programme budget; the costs of each activity; information on target audiences and end-use of DPI products; an analysis of feedback data received; DPI's evaluation of its effectiveness; and a statement detailing the priority which the Secretary-General attached to current or future activities. The Committee also considered, but not did reach agreement on, other proposals on evaluation procedures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/82 B adopted in December, the General Assembly approved the recommendations of the Committee on Information (see above) and affirmed its requests and appeals.

Co-ordination in the UN system

JUNIC activities. The inter-agency committee established to co-ordinate information activities in the United Nations system, JUNIC, held a special session as well as its tenth regular session in 1983.

At the special session, held at Geneva from 7 to 9 March,(30) JUNIC drew up proposals on information support for development activities which it presented to its parent body, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), as requested. JUNIC emphasized that the proposals would not be fully effective unless adequate resources were applied. It recommended that Development Forum, an inter-agency publication on development questions, be strengthened through assured funding rather than on unpredictable voluntary contributions. JUNIC reached a consensus on the design of a common strategy, by which its members would review existing programmes and activities to stress such themes as the interdependence of economies of developed and developing countries, the need for a global approach to world problems, the complementarity of assistance channelled through the United Nations system, the favourable performance of the system relative to bilateral co-operation and the worsening plight of the least developed countries.

Another recommendation called for units launching new projects with widespread interest to alert information units throughout the system and allocate funds for information activities. As for operational services, JUNIC proposed the establishment of a daily telex news and feature service, to be managed by Development Forum, for use by the media. It called for a monthly United Nations system operations report to be added as an insert in Development Forum, and for an early warning briefing service to identify important future international issues and provide background information for the media. JUNIC felt that the Non-Governmental Liaison Services at Geneva and New York could contribute to more regular exchanges of information among NGOs and between NGOs and the United Nations system. It proposed that special materials be prepared on subjects of global importance, such as world economic recovery and the United Nations, aid through the United Nations system, and the United Nations system in the development efforts of the developing countries. JUNIC proposed commissioning an internationally known writer to write a book on the last-mentioned topic. Another proposal called for a fellowship programme offering senior journalists the opportunity to work on Development Forum for three months.

At its tenth session held at Vienna from 19 to 22 April,(31) JUNIC discussed its 1982 report to ACC on public perceptions of the United Nations, (32) and noted that action had been initiated on a number of its proposals, including: information programmes of the United Nations system were being co-ordinated, starting with the preparation of the draft JUNIC plan of action for 1984-1985; and UNESCO was requested to initiate contacts with journalism and communications faculties. JUNIC agreed to undertake a common strategy for public information activities related to development assistance within existing resources by reordering and refocusing current projects and activities.

JUNIC approved the relocation of Development Forum from Geneva to New York with effect from January 1984. It agreed that the basic costs of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services at Geneva and New York should be assured on a long-term, predictable basis, where possible through regular budgetary support, and that JUNIC members which benefited from their services should ensure funding for special projects.

JUNIC discussed information projects on a number of future international conferences and years, international decades and special observances or campaigns. It accepted an invitation to United Nations organizations to participate in the 1985 international exposition in Japan (Tsukuba Expo) and decided to establish a task force to define guidelines for participation in such expositions in the future. Work was nearly completed on a television series on women and development, JUNIC noted. It agreed that an updated version of Periodicals of the United Nations and Specialized Agencies should be prepared.

With regard to its own planning, JUNIC noted that its biennial plan of action served as a framework for co-operation among United Nations organizations, and progress had been achieved as a result of the decision to base the plan on several specific projects related to priority topics, which were conceived, prepared, financed and implemented jointly. It agreed that the plan of action should be more clearly aligned with the programme budget biennium as was done in nearly all United Nations organizations.

In May, the JUNC secretariat issued a report on its programme and updated plan of activities for 1982-1983.⁽³³⁾ The report identified items for ACC action, including: review of the 1981 and 1982 work of the Committee on Information; the 1982 JUNC report on public perceptions of the United Nations;⁽³²⁾ and obtaining long-term financing for Development Forum.

According to the JUNC secretariat, the activities of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services at Geneva and New York had enlarged in the light of new trends on the international scene, notably the emergence of the peace movement. The link between environment and development and that between disarmament and development were among the new areas which the Services were addressing. Regarding audio-visual production, the secretariat noted distribution problems and the question of a uniform pricing policy. In preparation for a special meeting of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Audio-Visual Matters, JUNC recommended that an evaluation of United Nations organizations' experience in films and television over the previous 10 years be carried out. It noted that the co-operative venture entitled "Agenda for a Small Planet", a television series on North-South issues co-produced with national broadcasting organizations from 10 developed countries, had been completed in 1980 and was being expanded in a second series.

JUNC said that the pooling of resources would lead to greater economy and efficiency and that jointly planned and financed projects should be pursued when objectives had been agreed for carefully identified audiences. It cautioned, however, that United Nations organizations needed to sustain separate profiles before the world community and it was possible that few subjects lent themselves to an overall approach. In that context, the JUNC plan of action, which provided a framework for joint undertakings, needed to be flexible enough to accommodate all members of the system and should reflect efforts to promote a new world information and communication order.

In addition to ongoing joint projects, JUNC planned new joint projects for 1983 in the areas of apartheid, disarmament and environment. Thirteen areas were chosen for individual projects to be co-ordinated through JUNC: apartheid, disarmament, outer space, environment, the United Nations Decade for Women, aging, youth, trade and development, communications, the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, population, the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, and the world food problem.

CPC consideration. CPC considered the JUNC programme and plan of activities in June 1983.⁽²⁹⁾ It recommended that JUNC present a progress report, including a draft plan of action for 1984-1982, to CPC in 1984, and that JUNC, together with UNESCO, study ways of strengthening co-operation in development education (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I).

Consideration by the Committee on Information. At its 1983 session,⁽²⁾ the Committee on Information also considered JUNC activities. Among its recommendations to the General Assembly, the Committee proposed that JUNC be enhanced and given more responsibility, thus improving the co-ordination and cost-benefit efficiency of United Nations public information activities, and that it strengthen its activities regarding development education and development-support communications. It proposed that the JUNC recommendations on public perceptions be implemented, and that an appeal be addressed to Governments and mass media to transmit accurate information on United Nations activities. It called on the Secretary-General to support the publication of Development Forum from the regular budget while intensifying efforts to secure a sound and independent financial basis for continued publication. All United Nations organizations should be urged to contribute to financing the publication, which should retain its independent editorial policy. The Committee also recommended that the Secretary-General report on the status of financial arrangements for the publication of the World Newspaper Supplement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/82 B of 15 December, approved the Committee's recommendations, affirmed its requests and urged their implementation. The Assembly requested that JUNC be strengthened and made more effective and that its secretariat elaborate new methods of work and longer-term indicative planning and joint action, especially in the promotion of a new world information and communication order.

Radiation effects

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation (UNSCEAR) continued work on increasing knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources. At its thirty-second session (Vienna, 20-24 June 1983),⁽¹⁾ it reviewed a document on dose-response relationships for radiation-induced cancer, which was being revised to include new dosimetry statistics of the survivors of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. It decided to study: the scientific bases for the evaluation of radiation risk and detriment; doses from natural sources of radiation with emphasis on the variability of such doses as a function of time and location; doses to the world population from nuclear explosions; the exposure arising from the nuclear fuel cycle, with emphasis on radioactive wastes; doses from medical use of radiation; the biological effects of pre-natal irradiation; the early effects of high doses of radiation on man; the genetic effects of irradiation; and radiation-induced tumours.

UNSCEAR discussed the type of information it would seek to continue its assessments of radiation exposure and effects, and provided guidance on the format and contents of the Secretariat documents to be produced for its studies. It hoped that United Nations Member States, the specialized agencies and IAEA would continue to assist in its work, especially by providing information relevant to its future programme of study, so that its deliberations could be based on the broadest and most up-to-date scientific and technical information. UNSCEAR believed that the United Nations Environment Programme would continue to support its activities and that the joint relationship would be maintained.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 38/78 without vote.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 37/87 of 10 December 1982, by which the Assembly, inter alia, requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation,

Antarctica

In a letter dated 11 August 1983 to the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁾ Antigua and Barbuda, and Malaysia, stating that there was a need to examine the possibility for a more positive and wider international concert to ensure that activities carried out in Antarctica were for the benefit of mankind as a whole, requested that the question of Antarctica be included in the agenda of the 1983 General Assembly session. Referring to that letter on 5 October,⁽²⁾ Australia, on behalf of the consultative parties to the Antarctic Treaty (1959), said that the Treaty, which was open to all countries and was of unlimited duration, served the international community well and had averted international strife and sovereignty disputes over Antarctica; for these reasons, the parties had reservations about the initiative of Antigua and Barbuda and Malaysia and about any attempt to revise or replace the current Treaty system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/77 without vote, on the recommendation of the First Committee.

Question of Antarctica

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Conscious of the increasing international awareness of and interest in Antarctica,

Bearing in mind the Antarctic Treaty and the significance of the system it has developed,

Taking into account the debate on this item at its thirty-eighth session,

Convinced of the advantages of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Affirming the conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue forever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

Recalling the relevant paragraphs of the Economic Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive, factual and objective study on all aspects of Antarctica, taking fully into account the Antarctic Treaty system and other relevant factors;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of all Member States in the preparation of the study;

3. Requests those States conducting scientific research in Antarctica, other interested States, the relevant specialized agencies, organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and relevant international organizations having scientific or technical information on Antarctica to lend the Secretary-General whatever assistance he may request for the purpose of carrying out the study;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

Chapter XI

Institutional machinery

During 1983, the membership of the United Nations rose to 158 with the admission of Saint Christopher and Nevis.

In addition to its agenda, the Security Council considered ways of enhancing its role as an instrument for the maintenance of international peace and security, focusing on five aspects: preventing conflicts, promoting negotiations and peaceful settlement procedures, implementing its resolutions and decisions and strengthening its peace-keeping operations, giving effect to Article 43 of the Charter of the United Nations including the role envisaged for the Military Staff Committee, and improving procedures for the Council's efficient functioning.

The General Assembly resumed and concluded its thirty-seventh session in 1983. During its thirty-eighth session, the Assembly considered 141 items of its 146-item agenda and decided to consider the remainder in 1984.

Among the major political activities of the Secretary-General in 1983 was the exercise of his good offices on the questions of Cyprus, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and Namibia. His annual report to the Assembly on the Organization's work (p. 3) stressed that institutional machinery should be utilized.

The Assembly acted on co-operation between the United Nations and six intergovernmental organizations.

In other action, the Assembly also set in motion preparatory activities for the commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1982.

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: co-operation between OAU and the UN system. Regional economic and social activities: co-operation between the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and the United Nations. Institutional machinery (economic and social): organization of work of the General Assembly's Second and Third Committees; co-operation between the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation and the United Nations. Intergovernmental organizations and international law: UN institutional machinery; implementation of UN resolutions; rules of procedure of UN conferences. Other legal questions: co-operation between the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee and the United Nations. Other administrative and management questions: calendar of meetings.

UN Members

During 1983, the number of Member States of the United Nations rose to 158 when Saint Christopher and Nevis was admitted to membership on 23 September. The General Assembly took this action when it adopted resolution 38/1, as recommended by the Security Council in resolution 537(1983).

Saint Christopher and Nevis

Saint Christopher and Nevis, a Caribbean island country formerly administered by the United Kingdom, attained independence on 19 September 1983 and applied for membership by a letter of the same date.⁽¹⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 September, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 537(1983).

The Security Council,

Having examined the application of Saint Christopher and Nevis for admission to the United Nations, Recommends to the General Assembly that Saint Christopher and Nevis should be admitted to membership in the United Nations.

Admission of Saint Christopher and Nevis to membership in the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having received the recommendation of the Security Council of 22 September 1983 that Saint Christopher and Nevis should be admitted to membership in the United Nations,

Security Council

The Security Council held 98 meetings in 1983 and adopted 17 resolutions.

Meeting numbers. SC: 2411-2508.

On 12 September, in accordance with a decision taken during consultations held on 17 August, on the Secretary-General's 1982 report on the work of the Organization,⁽¹⁾ the Council President issued the following note:⁽²⁾

"1. In the context of their constant endeavours to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council and against the background of a precarious international situation, the members of the Council welcomed the valuable, thought-provoking ideas and observations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, which contributed to wide-ranging exchanges of views among members of the Council, carried out in a constructive spirit.

"2. In order to initiate and facilitate these exchanges in a flexible manner, discussion was structured under live main aspects, as follows:

"(a) The role of the Council in the prevention of conflicts, including both measures by the Council under the relevant Articles of the Charter and its response to situations brought to its attention by Member States or by the Secretary-General under Articles 35 and 99:

"(b) The role of the Council in promoting negotiations or other peaceful settlement procedures between the parties to a dispute, including the part which the Council might itself play in such procedures;

"(c) Implementation of resolutions of the Council, including measures to give effect to its decisions as well as to strengthen United Nations peace-keeping operations and ensure respect for the tasks assigned to peace-keeping forces by the Council;

"(d) Measures for giving effect to Article 43 of the Charter, including the role envisaged for the Military Staff Committee in Articles 43 to 47;

"(e) Procedural improvements designed to facilitate the effective exercise by the Council of its functions under the Charter,

"3. In the course of the discussion, spread over 18 meetings in informal consultations, many ideas were generated and specific suggestions were also made under each aspect; it was self-evident that most of them required careful analysis and detailed study.

"4. The members of the Council therefore recognized that the examination of suggestions on possible ways and means to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council, including those contained in the Secretary-General's report, was an ongoing exercise, not yet completed, that required further detailed consideration.

"5. Throughout the debate, members stressed the validity and vitality of the purposes and principles of the United Nations and of the Charter and, in the first instance, the duty of all Member States to fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them under the Charter, particularly those relating to the peaceful settlement of disputes and the maintenance of international peace and security.

"6. Within this context, they recalled the obligation of Member States to accept and carry out decisions of the Council, as well as the need for their continuing support to enhance implementation of those decisions.

"7. Members reaffirmed the need to strengthen the effectiveness of the Security Council in fulfilling its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, including procedures for promoting more systematic use of the Council.

"8. Members considered essential the further development of a 'collegial spirit' among the members of the Council, including adequate working relations among its permanent members.

"9. Members of the Council noted the clear distinction envisaged in the Charter between the functions and specific powers of the Council and those of the other principal organs of the United Nations and urged all Member States to keep that important distinction in mind.

"10. Members stressed the option for the establishment of subsidiary organs in accordance with Article 29 as a practical measure when considered necessary.

"11. Members of the Council also stressed the importance of, and sensed positive prospects in the future for, timely and appropriate action by the Council to prevent, under the relevant provisions of the Charter, aggravation of particular situations or disputes.

"12. To this end, members of the Council considered measures which would facilitate prompt and effective action by the Council and enable it to recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.

"13. In this context, consideration was given to making more effective the existing technical information-gathering capabilities of the Secretariat of the United Nations and the accessibility of this information to members of the Council.

"14. In the same context, consideration was also given to enhancing the means for the Council to dispatch fact-finding missions or missions of inquiry.

"15. The members considered the question of holding periodic meetings of the Council and the desirability of holding occasional meetings outside Headquarters, as well as holding meetings at the highest possible level.

"16. Consideration was also given to strengthening and ensuring respect for United Nations peace-keeping operations.

"17. Members heard suggestions on the possibility of activating the work of the Military Staff Committee in fulfilling the tasks assigned to it under the Charter.

"18. Members considered many other aspects of the work of the Security Council, including suggestions designed to revitalize the concept of collective international security, and other innovative proposals designed to enhance the effectiveness of the Council.

"19. Members sensed that certain elements of convergence in their discussions, which offered greater prospects for progress, merited priority consideration. They are prepared to examine these and all other relevant aspects that may still be raised or brought to their attention."

Acting on the suggestions put forward by the Council President's note, the General Assembly, by resolution 38/73 H on disarmament and international security, requested the Council to expedite the conclusion of agreements making armed forces available to the Council to render operative the collective security system provided for in the Charter and thereby facilitate disarmament negotiations. Also, by resolution 38/190 on the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Assembly emphasized the urgency of examining all existing mechanisms and working methods to enhance the Council's authority and enforcement capacity, and the need to hold periodic meetings of the Council to review outstanding problems and crises; taking note of the Council's failure to report on its implementation of the foregoing, the Assembly hoped that the Council would do so in 1984.

The question of maintenance of international peace and security was considered in 1983 by a Working Group of the whole of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization⁽³⁾ (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV). The Group discussed a revised draft recommendation on ways to enhance the Council's effectiveness, presented in 1982 by Egypt on behalf of Committee members belonging to the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries⁽⁴⁾—including suggestions made by Japan relating to the principle of unanimity among Council permanent members in non-procedural matters; examined two proposals submitted previously by France⁽⁴⁾—one containing draft amendments to the Assembly's rules of procedure concerning emergency special sessions and the other a proposal for informal hearings by the Council of the views of parties to a conflict; and discussed a draft list of proposals that had been made on the question, prepared by Romania, identifying those of special interest, as requested by the Assembly in December 1982.⁽⁵⁾

During 1983—its thirty-eighth year—the Security Council considered 19 agenda items. It continued the practice of adopting at each meeting the agenda for that meeting. (For list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.)

Nine of the items were included for the first time in the Council's agenda. They concerned complaints by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya against the United States (two items), complaints by Chad against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (two items), complaints by Nicaragua (three items), the downing of a Korean Air Lines passenger airliner, and the situation in Grenada.

In a 22 September note⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the United Nations Charter, of 15 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification.⁽⁷⁾ He listed 94 other matters of which the Council remained seized but which it had not discussed during the period.

In addition, the Council, in fulfilment of its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security, was asked by the Assembly, in resolution 38/69 on Israeli nuclear armament, to implement Council resolution 487(1981)⁽⁸⁾ and ensure that Israel complied and placed its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards. The Council was also asked, in resolution 38/181 B on the nuclear capability of South Africa, to take enforcement measures to prevent any racist régimes from acquiring arms or arms technology and to block loopholes in the arms embargo, as recommended by the Committee established by Council resolution 421(1977)⁽⁹⁾ concerning the question of South Africa.

General Assembly

The General Assembly met in two separate sessions during 1983, to conclude its thirty-seventh regular session and to hold the major part of its thirty-eighth session.

The thirty-seventh session, which had opened on 21 September 1982 and had been suspended on 21 December⁽¹⁾ was resumed from 10 to 13 May 1983 and on 19 September, closing that day.

The thirty-eighth regular session was opened on 20 September and continued until 20 December, when it was suspended. During the period of the Assembly's general debate, from 26 September to 14 October, 146 statements were made by heads of State or Government and by other heads or members of delegations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following a statement by its President that consideration of the agenda had been concluded with the exception of five items and one sub-item, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/456 without vote.

Suspension of the thirty-eighth session

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 20 December 1983, the General Assembly decided to resume its thirty-eighth session, at a date to be announced, for the sole purpose of considering the following agenda items:

Item 15 (b): Election of one member of the Economic and Social Council;

Item 38: Launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development;

Item 40: Observance of the quincentenary of the discovery of America;

Item 41: Question of Cyprus;

Item 42: Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations;

Item 138: Consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq.

General Assembly decision 38/456

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 8.
Meeting number. GA 38th session: plenary 104.

Agenda

As decided by the General Assembly in December 1982,⁽²⁾ four items remained on the agenda for consideration at its resumed thirty-seventh session. However, only two were considered, including the substantive one on the question of Cyprus. On the recommendation of its General Committee⁽³⁾ the Assembly decided to consider the item directly in plenary meetings⁽⁴⁾ In the Committee, a proposal by Cyprus to allocate the item to the plenary Assembly had been adopted by 21 votes to 1, with 5 abstentions; as a result, no action was taken on a proposal by Turkey to have it allocated to the Special Political Committee. The other two items, on launching global economic negotiations and on implementing United Nations resolutions, were deferred to the thirty-eighth session and included in that session's draft agenda by Assembly decisions 37/456 and 37/457.

The items inscribed in the agenda of the Assembly's thirty-eighth session⁽⁵⁾ (annotated by the Secretariat⁽⁶⁾ numbered 146, all of which were recommended by the General Committee without vote. The Committee's action was taken on 21 September on the basis of a provisional agenda of 138 items⁽⁷⁾ and a supplementary list of 4 items⁽⁸⁾ and a sub-item proposed prior to the session; and on 4, 11 and 31 October and 14 December, of an additional 5 items and a sub-item proposed for inclusion during the session. One item, concerning East Timor (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV), was recommended, also without vote, for deferment to the thirty-ninth (1984) session. The Committee also recommended allocating each of the items, with the exception of the question of Cyprus, to one of the Assembly's Main Committees or directly to plenary meetings.⁽⁹⁾

The additional items recommended for inclusion were on: condemnation of nuclear war, a nuclear-weapon freeze, preparations for the 1985 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and conclusion of a treaty prohibiting the use of force in outer space (see Chapter I of this section); the situations in Central America and in Grenada (see Chapter VI of this section); the Iran-Iraq conflict (see Chapter VII of this section); Antarctica (see Chapter X of this section); and the commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1985 (see below). The new sub-items were on the new international human order (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I) and the appointment of a member of the International Civil Service Commission (see APPENDIX III).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following its examination of the General Committee's recommendations, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/402 without vote.

Adoption of the agenda and allocation of agenda items

At its 3rd, 4th, 21st, 28th, 32nd, 41st and 96th plenary meetings, on 23 September, 6, 11 and 13 October, 1 November and 14 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its first, second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth reports, adopted the agenda and the allocation of agenda items for the thirty-eighth session.

At its 3rd plenary meeting, on 23 September 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Question of East Timor".

General Assembly decision 38/402

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/38/250 & Add.1-5). 21 September, 4, 11, 13 and 31 October and 14 December (meetings 1-7); agenda item 8.

Organization of work

Based on suggestions by the Secretary-General⁽¹⁰⁾ and the Committee on Conferences⁽¹¹⁾ the General Committee, in its first report dated 21 September⁽¹²⁾ made a number of recommendations concerning the organization of the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly.

These organizational arrangements set a daily timetable for meetings, fixed the duration of the general debate, and recommended 20 December as the session's closing date. They called for limits on explanations of vote and on the reproduction of speeches in meeting records, agreement among regional groups on the distribution of Main Committee chairmanships for the following session, setting a deadline of not later than 1 December for submitting draft resolutions with financial implications as well as deadlines for submitting subsidiary organ reports requiring consideration by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, and providing a 48-hour period between submission of and voting on proposals involving expenditure, to permit preparation of statements of administrative and financial implications. The Assembly was to urge all Member States and subsidiary organs to exercise maximum restraint in requesting circulation of material as official documents.

Also recommended were authorization—subsequently granted by Assembly decision 38/403—for certain subsidiary organs to meet during the session; and for smoking to be prohibited in small conference rooms and discouraged in large ones. The rationalization of work of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee was the subject of Assembly decision 38/429.

Pursuant to a 1982 Assembly request⁽¹³⁾ a Working Group of the whole of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV) held eight meetings between 14 and 18 April 1983 to consider Member States' proposals to rationalize existing United Nations procedures. The proposals were contained in working papers submitted by 11 States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the General Committee's recommendations, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/401 without vote.

Organization of the thirty-eighth session

At its 3rd plenary meeting, on 23 September 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its first report, adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the thirty-eighth session.

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/38/250) without vote, 21 September (meeting 1); suggestions by Secretary-General (A/BUR/38/1) and by Committee on Conferences (A/38/414 and Add.1); agenda item 8.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: General Committee 1; plenary 3.

Credentials

On 12 October 1983, the Credentials Committee examined a memorandum dated the day before from the Secretary-General on the status of credentials of representatives to the General Assembly's thirty-eighth session. The memorandum indicated that formal credentials had been submitted by 115 Member States. At the meeting, the Legal Counsel provided supplementary information that credentials had been received from a further five Members.

Statements in connection with the credentials of Afghanistan, Chile and Democratic Kampuchea were made during the debate.

China and the United States, while not raising formal objection to the credentials of Afghanistan, said their position did not imply acceptance of a régime installed by foreign occupation; the USSR on the other hand considered those remarks inadmissible interference in the internal affairs of a Member State. The USSR also reaffirmed its non-recognition of the credentials of Chile, and reiterated its opposition to those of Democratic Kampuchea (see Chapter VII of this section). Colombia and the United States held that there was no basis for questioning Chile's credentials.

The Committee, acting without vote, adopted a resolution orally proposed by its Chairman by which it accepted the credentials received, taking into account the various reservations expressed during the debate. It also submitted a draft resolution to the Assembly recommending approval of its report.⁽¹⁴⁾

On 20 October, on the recommendation of the Credentials Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/2 without vote.

on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Sweden. Reservations concerning those credentials had been entered by 50 States (see Chapter IX of this section).

Kampuchea's representation in United Nations bodies was also the subject of communications (see Chapter VII of this section).

Secretary-General

The urgent necessity of developing and using international institutional machinery was stressed by the Secretary-General in his September 1983 annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (p. 3).

The Assembly took note of the report when it adopted decision 38/410 in December.

Good offices

During 1983, the Secretary-General pursued several missions of good offices which had been entrusted to him by either the Security Council or the General Assembly. These efforts concerned the questions of Cyprus, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and Namibia.

With regard to Cyprus, the Secretary-General's efforts were aimed at bringing about a resumption of the intercommunal negotiating process between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities (see Chapter VIII of this section).

On the question of Namibia, the Secretary-General held discussions with South African authorities on the urgency of communicating to him their choice of an electoral system for electing the Constituent Assembly of Namibia in order to facilitate the immediate and unconditional implementation of Council resolution 435(1978) embodying the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III).

The Secretary-General also undertook a renewed mission of good offices to assist Argentina and the United Kingdom to resume negotiations in order to find a peaceful solution to their sovereignty dispute over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV).

Co-operation between the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations

In 1983, the General Assembly adopted without vote five resolutions and a decision on co-operation between the United Nations and the following intergovernmental organizations: the League of Arab States, and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (see below); the Organization of African Unity (see Chapter V of this section); the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapters VIII and XXIV); and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VII).

In accordance with a November 1982 request by the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in 1983⁽²⁾ on the state of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, resulting from a meeting which they held from 28 June to 1 July at Tunis, Tunisia.

The Secretary-General noted that, at the meeting, the United Nations system and the League's General Secretariat and specialized organizations considered six main areas of co-operation: international peace and security (disarmament matters and settlement of the Middle East conflict and the Iran-Iraq war, among others); economic, financial and technical co-operation for development (trade and development, development financing, industrial development, energy, minerals, transnational corporations, human settlements, environment, population, civil aviation, maritime transport, postal services), within the framework of the Strategy for Joint Arab Economic Development adopted in 1980;⁽³⁾ food and agriculture; social development, labour, human resources and cultural affairs; refugees, disaster prevention and emergency relief and human rights promotion; and information and communications.

Proposed general principles for the strategy of co-operation between the two organizations were also considered.

The meeting's Chairman observed that the recommendations agreed upon could be categorized as specific proposals lending themselves to early consideration by competent parties at either the bilateral or multilateral level, and general proposals requiring further elaboration. Certain other proposals were regarded as expressions of intent or interest and needed to be developed. Follow-up action was also recommended.

Earlier in the year, at the request of the League's Secretariat, Jordan transmitted to the Secretary-General on 28 February⁽⁴⁾ a document entitled "Charter of National Economic Action", adopted at the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference (Amman, Jordan, November 1980), for dissemination to Member States.

During the year, the League's Permanent Observer to the United Nations made a statement at four Security Council meetings, to which he had been invited to participate in accordance with rule 39^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Those meetings dealt with the dispute between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States, Namibia, the settlement policy in territories occupied by Israel, and the situation in Grenada.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/6 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, in particular resolutions 36/24 of 9 November 1981 and 37/17 of 16 November 1982,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Having heard the statement of the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States and having noted the emphasis placed therein on follow-up projects, actions and procedures on the recommendations adopted at the meeting between representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, held at Tunis from 28 June to 1 July 1983, as well as on various sectoral activities related to development priorities in the Arab region,

Recalling the relevant articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional arrangements for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the desire of the League of Arab States to consolidate and develop the existing ties with the United Nations in all areas relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, and to co-operate in every possible way with the United Nations in the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East,

^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give it other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Noting that the convening of the Tunis meeting in compliance with General Assembly resolution 37/17 afforded both sides an opportunity to review, in a comprehensive manner, the state of co-operation that has developed during more than three decades between their respective agencies and organizations,

Aware of the vital importance for the countries members of the League of Arab States of achieving a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict,

Realizing that the strengthening of international peace and security is directly related, inter alia, to disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Convinced that the strengthening and furtherance of co-operation between the United Nations and the organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the work of the United Nations system and to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting that the Tunis meeting defined the framework of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States in certain priority sectors, without determining specific projects that could lend themselves to joint implementation,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in realizing the goals and objectives set forth in the Strategy for Joint Arab Economic Development adopted by the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference, held at Amman from 25 to 27 November 1980,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts towards the organization of the meeting between representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, held at Tunis from 28 June to 1 July 1983, as well as to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system for their substantive contributions to that meeting;

3. Commends the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations for their active involvement in the preparations for the Tunis meeting and for their sustained endeavours towards its success;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts towards the implementation of United Nations resolutions relevant to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East;

5. Requests the secretariats of the United Nations and the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, to intensify their co-operation towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and the organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States in order to enhance their ca-capacity to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

7. Calls upon the competent bodies of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to give urgent consideration to the various recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and to inform the Secretary-General of the action taken on them not later than 15 May 1984;

8. Takes note of the proposals and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and requests him to take the necessary steps to ensure their implementation, including the following measures:

(a) Setting up of joint sectoral inter-agency working groups for follow-up of multilateral projects;

(b) Promotion of contacts and consultations regarding projects of a multilateral nature between the counterpart agencies, programmes and bodies concerned;

(c) Promotion of contacts and consultations regarding projects of a bilateral nature between the counterpart agencies, programmes and bodies concerned;

9. Requests the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to consider holding at Rome, not later than 31 August 1984, a meeting on food and agriculture in the Arab region to consider action to be taken and projects to be launched jointly pursuant to the recommendations adopted at the Tunis meeting;

10. Also recommends that another sectoral meeting on social development be organized, in January/February 1985, under the aegis of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, in a country member of that organization, to give careful consideration to projects prepared for joint implementation, in conformity with the priorities set forth in paragraphs 61 and 62 of the report of the Secretary-General, including joint sectoral meetings;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, to convene ad hoc meetings between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States for consultations on follow-up policies, projects, actions and procedures;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, at its thirty-ninth session, a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States".

General Assembly resolution 38/6

28 October 1983 Meeting 39 Adopted without vote

20-nation draft (A/38/L6/Rev.1); agenda item 27.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: plenary 39. SC: 2416, 2451, 2461, 2491.

Before adopting the 20-nation revised draft, the General Assembly voted separately on paragraph 4, retaining it by a recorded vote of 90 to 2, with 23 abstentions. The vote had been requested by the United States.

Israel said it had voted against the paragraph and would have voted against the draft as a whole had a vote been taken, to reflect its rejection of the entire text, which ignored the fact that the League, in its hostility to Israel, had consistently and deliberately violated the Charter and, rather than further the cause of peace, had impeded it, emerging as an instrument of warmongering.

The United States, recalling that with others it had opposed some of the resolutions mentioned in the paragraph, said that its inclusion interjected partisan politics into a text which should be apolitical and acceptable to all; it had joined in the consensus in the belief that co-operation between the League and the United Nations could be beneficial.

A similar position was taken by the 10 members of the European Community (EC), on whose behalf Greece stated that it would be better if texts such as that adopted addressed questions of co-operation in terms precluding divisive elements and further burdens on the United Nations budget, and, concerning paragraph 4—on which the EC members except Greece had abstained—without prejudicing the Secretary-General's role. Canada, which welcomed the co-operation promoted by the text, had also abstained on the paragraph, saying that it placed a heavy burden on the Secretary-General in an area of high political sensitivity. Sweden, speaking for the five Nordic countries, said they had participated in the consensus on the understanding that elements with political implications were not relevant to the text's substance and could not prejudice their position on it, hence their abstention on paragraph 4.

The League's Permanent Observer regretted the abstentions on the paragraph, contending that the call for intensified efforts to implement previous resolutions enhanced the text's credibility and the seriousness of United Nations deliberations; that those resolutions were politically sensitive did not warrant attempts to dilute the effectiveness of the majority decisions on Palestinian rights and on the modalities of a just, durable and comprehensive Middle East settlement.

Organization of the Islamic Conference

In a report on the state of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference⁽⁵⁾ submitted in response to an October 1982 General Assembly request⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General stated that his consultations with the Secretary-General of the Islamic Conference on 28 January 1983 emphasized the need for continuous consultations on such issues as the Middle East problem, the Palestine question, the Iran-Iraq war, the Afghanistan situation, and disarmament. Participation and increased representation by both organizations in the meetings of the other had continued, as had consultations between the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference to the United Nations and the United Nations Secretariat. The Department of Political Affairs, Trusteeship and Decolonization had remained the focal point for all co-operation issues.

The Secretary-General noted that the first annual meeting of the secretariat of the Islamic Conference and the secretariats of the United Nations system was held at Geneva on 15 July. The meeting considered modalities of co-operation in five priority areas (see below), and specific proposals were put forward.

The meeting designated a lead agency from the United Nations system for each priority area, as follows: the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), for food security and agriculture; the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, assisted by the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, for science and technology; the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, for investment mechanisms and joint ventures; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, for eradication of illiteracy; and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, for refugee assistance. Designation of focal points to facilitate contact between the two organizations was also recommended.

Co-operation in political matters continued to centre on disarmament, apartheid, outer space and decolonization.

Agreements for economic and social co-operation on specific projects continued to be formulated, and one such agreement was signed between the Conference and FAO on 7 April. Consultations and exchange of information also continued in lieu of formal agreements. Forums which provided for such exchanges in 1983 included an expert group meeting on forestry held by the Islamic Conference (Peshawar, Pakistan, 27-29 March), in which FAO participated; the first session of the Standing Committee for the Programme of the Economic Commission for Western Asia (Baghdad, Iraq, May); an Arab Aid Co-ordination Group/World Bank policy meeting (Washington, D. C., 25 September), with the Islamic Development Bank participating; and the Tenth Session of the Islamic Commission for Economic, Cultural and Social Affairs (Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 2-5 October), at which the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) were represented.

In October, UNCTAD arranged a short training programme for a group of experts from the Islamic Development Bank on the establishment of a trade information system. With the inception, also in October, of the United Nations Development Programme global project on action-oriented technical co-operation activities among developing countries, Islamic Conference members began benefiting through a trainee-exchange programme. In December, the Islamic Centre for Promotion of Trade completed arrangements for documentation and information exchange with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The United Nations Fund for Population Activities provided seed money in 1983 for a Muslim scholar congress on health, population and development, to be co-financed with the Islamic Conference.

Fortieth anniversary of the United Nations (1985)

An item entitled "Commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1985" was included in the 1983 agenda of the General Assembly on the recommendation of its General Committee; it was to be considered by the plenary Assembly. Inclusion of the item had been requested by the Secretary-General in a note of 12 December 1983.⁽¹⁾

In a memorandum annexed to his note, the Secretary-General explained that he considered it appropriate that the occasion be used not only to review the Organization's four decades of performance but also to encourage a rededication to the Charter's principles and purposes, to promote support for the Organization and to reinvigorate international co-operation in all fields of human endeavour. Given the occasion's importance, adequate time was needed to prepare thoughtful proposals. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly decide to commemorate the anniversary and establish a mechanism to suggest proposals for suitable activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On an oral proposal by its President, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/455 without vote.

Commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1985

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic co-operation

The critical world economic situation and the threat it posed to the developing countries continued to be considered in various United Nations bodies during 1983. The need for closer co-operation between developed and developing countries and among developing countries themselves was stressed in several economic reports and during discussions on the subject.

In his annual report on the work of the Organization (p. 3), the Secretary-General, noting the apparent retreat from multilateral economic co-operation, stressed that a major economic imperative was the accelerated development of the developing countries—particularly the least developed—and the eradication of poverty.

The growing interdependence of the world economy was emphasized by the sixth (June/July) session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD VI), which held wide-ranging discussions on the economic situation and adopted a statement highlighting the need for multilateral economic co-operation.

With the approach of the mid-point of the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s), preparations began for the 1984 review and appraisal of the implementation of the Decade's International Development Strategy. Work on contributions for submission to the review and appraisal Committee, which held its first meeting in December, was started by UNCTAD, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Committee for Development Planning (CDP). In December, the General Assembly reaffirmed the need for the review exercise to identify and appraise the real causes for shortfalls encountered in the Strategy's implementation and, if necessary, to adjust the policy measures foreseen in it in order to contribute effectively to the development of developing countries.

Discussion on the launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, originally scheduled to start in 1980, continued throughout 1983. In December, the Assembly decided to keep the item open after suspension of its 1983 session and to reconvene to consider any agreements that might emerge from informal consultations. Discussions continued throughout the year on various aspects of the proposed new international economic order, including its legal aspects.

Following transmittal by the Economic and Social Council of a draft declaration on a new international human order: moral aspects of development, the Assembly invited Member States to comment on the subject.

Resolutions requesting a study on confidence-building measures in international economic relations and deploring the adoption of economic sanctions against developing countries were adopted for the first time by the Assembly in 1983.

During the year, the question of economic co-operation among developing countries (ECD/C) was discussed in several United Nations arenas, including UNCTAD VI, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board and its Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, and CDP. Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries was the main item discussed at the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and ACC, which agreed that a cross-organizational review should be carried out on the subject. On the question of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, both the Council and the Assembly agreed that the regional commissions should be provided with resources to meet their responsibilities for their related programmes.

The World Economic Survey 1983, which analysed current trends and policies in the world economy, was the background document for the annual discussion in the Council on international economic and social policy. UNCTAD produced the third in its series of annual reports on trade and development issues, the Trade and Development Report, 1983, which, in addition to analysing the world economic situation, focused on ECDC with particular reference to trade and finance. A further assessment of the economic situation was also carried out by CDP, which made a number of recommendations to promote world economic recovery.

Broad areas of economic and social development were considered in several United Nations forums during the year. The Assembly repeated its invitation to Governments to provide information on experience acquired in applying a unified approach to socio-economic development. After a report was submitted to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council on the role of the public sector in economic development, the Secretary-General was invited to submit a further report in 1987.

The improvement of various aspects of development planning, education, administration and information continued to be studied, while support for public administration was given through a programme of technical co-operation.

Rural and regional development activities also continued throughout the United Nations system during 1983.

The Organization's continuing concern for countries particularly affected by the world economic crisis was shown in its adoption of resolutions calling for action on behalf of the developing countries in general and the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries in particular. The Assembly called for immediate measures in favour of the developing countries to ease their economic problems and to promote development. Implementation of the 1981 Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) was considered at UNCTAD VI and by CDP. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) reported on action taken with the World Bank in organizing and holding country review meetings for individual LDCs. The status of the UNDP Special Measures Fund for LDCs was reported on as was that of the United Nations Capital Development Fund, whose programme covered 41 countries, 36 of which were LDCs. The particular problems of land-locked countries were discussed at UNCTAD VI, which called for action on their behalf. The Assembly also discussed the issue and made a further request for contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries. The problems of island developing countries were also discussed at UNCTAD VI, which urged the international community to provide financial and technical support for them.

International economic relations

Development and economic co-operation

During 1983, several United Nations bodies, including UNCTAD VI, discussed the need for greater international co-operation in the light of the economic situation which threatened the developing countries in particular. ECDC was widely discussed, with the UNCTAD Committee on ECDC holding its third session in 1983.

Discussions also took place in various United Nations bodies on preparations for the review and appraisal, scheduled for 1984, of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade. In December, the Committee on the Review and Appraisal held its first meeting to discuss organizational aspects of its work.

The Assembly adopted resolutions calling for confidence-building in international economic relations and deploring economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries. Proposals for global economic negotiations, a new international economic order and a new international human order concerned with the moral aspects of development continued to be considered in various United Nations forums throughout the year, with no agreement being reached.

CDP activities. At its April 1983 session⁽¹⁾ CDP found that the deep crisis and mounting disorder in the world economy called for an urgent response to new initiatives for collaboration. The most serious threats to recovery were the chaotic situation prevailing in international financial relations and protectionist policies in international trade (see also Chapter IV of this section). Referring to countries with large foreign debts, CDP stated that, if recovery was too long delayed and rescheduling done at high interest rates, the need for extensive cancellation would arise.

An overhaul of international co-operation machinery was required for renewed expansion of the international economy. CDP believed that there was justification for a proposed conference on the interrelated areas of trade, money and finance, but that an extensive review of the issues and of the likelihood of securing agreement on new arrangements was necessary. Therefore, it proposed the establishment of an ad hoc group of high-level experts to examine proposals for reform and consider modalities for negotiating change.

The Committee believed that large potential gains could be derived from closer co-operation among developing countries in trade and finance, but that realization of such schemes required establishment of a third world secretariat (for further details, see below, under ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION AMONG DEVELOPING COUNTRIES).

Progress towards disarmament was essential to a relaxation of international tension and would also be a great economic relief, CDP said, adding that resources released would assist the advancement of all nations and contribute to bridging the gap between developed and developing countries.

The Committee also considered measures in favour of the least developed and other low-income developing countries (see below).

As a follow-up to a 1981 decision by CDP to study particular aspects of the world economic situation and prospects,⁽²⁾ the Working Group on Development Patterns and Styles in the Context of Longer-term World Economic Prospects met at Santiago, Chile, from 10 to 14 January 1983.⁽³⁾

The Group considered the structural aspects of the world economic situation, including maladjustment among developed market economies, the crisis of the international banking system, and indebtedness of developing countries. In order to indicate some options open to developing countries to accelerate their development, the Group drew a number of conclusions from their experiences with alternative policy approaches and development styles. These related to autonomous decision-making, more equitable patterns of income distribution and effective investment planning. The Group described ways of strengthening developing countries' economic leverage by controlling such key resources as technology, financial resources, markets, non-renewable resources and access to cheap labour, and concluded by considering ways to accelerate progress in ECDC.

In December 1983, the CDP Working Group on the International Monetary and Financial System met at United Nations Headquarters to prepare material for the CDP study of the subject at its 1984 session⁽⁴⁾ (see Chapter IV of this section).

ACC activities. In its annual report to the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁵⁾ ACC stressed the need for interdependence of countries and groups of countries in finding and implementing solutions to the economic crisis. The economic recovery of developed countries was essential for reactivating and accelerating development in developing countries, which was equally essential to global economic recovery.

Among issues considered by ACC to be of major concern were the global effect of adjustment policies adopted to deal with the economic crisis and expansion of protectionism in international trade. The recession's impact on agriculture, particularly in developing countries, was reviewed, and the relatively good global performance in 1983 was acknowledged. It was observed, however, that agricultural support programmes and protectionism by developed countries posed problems at the international level. Also, developing countries needed to adopt policies to provide incentives to agricultural producers.

Referring to the major role played by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank in assisting developing countries during the crisis, ACC considered it important to maintain, even if at a reduced level, participation of commercial banks. Although there were signs of recovery in some developed countries, that recovery should also benefit developing countries. Action could include strengthening their liquidity and reserve positions and increasing concessional aid flows. Among other areas for possible action were commodities and compensatory financing and the food sector. It was noted that a stable exchange-rate market could also contribute significantly. ACC emphasized that solutions to fundamental problems of developing countries which pre-dated the recession required more than mere correction of transitory imbalances.

ACC concluded that its central objective was to assist Governments in defining and implementing a framework for international economic co-operation and development. If the United Nations system was to succeed in its efforts, Governments had to make full use of the instrumentalities they had created and provide coherent direction and necessary resources.

At its eleventh session, held at Geneva from 2 to 4 March⁽⁶⁾ the ACC Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives assessed the world economic situation and prospects in the light of development objectives and decided on the organization of its contribution to the 1984 review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade⁽⁷⁾ The latter topic was also considered at the twelfth session of the Task Force (New York, 10-12 October)⁽⁸⁾ (see below).

The Task Force, in an overview of the world economic situation, noted signs of recovery but doubted its strength and duration. It went on to discuss economic interdependence and the need for action at the global level to bring lasting worldwide recovery, adjustment policies and the need for a long-term perspective, the linkage between international and domestic measures for recovery and development, and the need for greater co-operation among developing countries.

In considering the current economic situation and prospects, the Task Force concentrated on the world economic recession and the deteriorating social situation. Economic stagnation aggravated the serious problems faced by many developing countries in providing food, education, health, housing and employment for their rapidly growing populations.

The Task Force observed that the process of adjusting national economies to the crisis took different forms in various groups of countries. The nature of adjustment depended on the degree of integration with the world economy, export structure, debt burden, and availability and cost of external finance. Possible adjustment policies considered by the Task Force included budget retrenchment, cuts in public expenditure, subsidies and imports, and changes in tax systems, salaries and wages. The process should also include consideration of the socio-political environment that would emerge from adjustment policies. The need to make short-term measures development-oriented by allowing a longer period for adjustment was emphasized.

The Task Force discussed several areas in which policy reorientation was required for global recovery and development, paying particular attention to financial and trade issues since they had a strong impact on longer-term development and structural change.

World Economic Survey 1983. During its annual discussion of international economic and social policy, which took place in July (see below), the Economic and Social Council had before it the World Economic Survey 1983,⁽⁹⁾ prepared by the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA) and based on information available as at 31 March 1983.

The Survey stated that, without greater international co-operation, individual countries' efforts to revive output and investment would yield meagre results. Experience had shown that, without some international co-ordination of macro-economic policies, volatility of exchange rates, interest rates and short-term capital flows tended to increase, which heightened uncertainties and deterred investment. Strengthened consultations on exchange rates, resistance to protectionism and dismantling of non-tariff barriers were required for a favourable investment climate.

More broadly-based international co-operation was needed than in past financial emergencies, the Survey said, including action by IMF to enable developing countries to draw more resources from it. Revival of investment in developing countries also required increased official development assistance and increased transfers of resources through the World Bank and regional development banks. Lengthening maturities of developing countries' outstanding debt could be decisive in stepping up fixed investment.

Co-operation among developing countries and East-West economic co-operation were important for recovery efforts. ECDC in finance and joint production ventures, explored since the early 1970s, had proved particularly effective and there was scope for further co-operation in those areas as well as in more traditional areas such as trade. UNCTAD VI (see Chapter IV of this section) would provide an opportunity to discuss structural reforms in the international economic system and seek agreement on a wide range of measures to reactivate the world economy and accelerate economic development, the Survey indicated.

In the general discussion of international economic and social policy in the Economic and Social Council⁽¹⁰⁾ there was consensus that the world economy had been passing through a period of difficulty not seen since the end of the Second World War, affecting all groups of countries but particularly the developing ones. There was widespread agreement that economic recovery had been indicated in some industrialized countries but there was also concern that such recovery might not prove strong or lasting, or might not spread, particularly to the developing countries.

Issues of major concern to many speakers were the prospect of grossly inadequate financial flows to developing countries, the debt crisis and protectionism. Support was expressed for high-level international meetings on an improved international monetary system. Attention was also devoted to trends in multilateral co-operation efforts, including international trade and finance, energy, food production and food security, and ECDC.

UNCTAD action. Two documents on the world economic crisis were prepared for UNCTAD VI.

A report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on development and recovery: the realities of the new interdependence⁽¹¹⁾ described the critical international economic situation and went on to outline an economic recovery programme requiring mutually reinforcing growth and expansion in both the developed and developing countries.

A further chapter of the report dealt with the longer-term economic perspective and stressed the interdependence of economies. Possible economic scenarios for the 1980s for the developed market-economy countries, the developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe were discussed.

The report concluded by examining the limitations of multilateral arrangements in the areas of money, finance and trade and described how the "systems" (multilaterally accepted rules, principles, policies and institutions underpinning international economic relations) should adapt to the growing interdependence of the world economy.

A policy paper on the current world economic crisis and perspectives for the 1980s,⁽¹²⁾ prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat, described the impact of the crisis on developing countries, developed market-economy countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. Although there were signs that the economies of some major industrial countries were improving, the crisis had caused severe curtailment of growth in developing countries and had impaired their prospects for years to come.

The paper discussed aspects of interdependence in the world economy, some of which involved mainly relations among developed market-economy countries or among developing countries. Many, however, were related to the growing importance of developing countries, as reflected in their rising share of world production, income and trade, their growing role as suppliers of certain key commodities and their rising share of both the deposits and liabilities of the international banking system.

After describing the international economic system's response to the crisis and paying particular attention to weaknesses in monetary and financial systems, the paper devoted chapters to the revival of the world economy and to major areas for long-run reform, such as macro-economic management, money and finance, and trade.

An annex to the paper⁽¹³⁾ gave estimates of growth and associated external financial flows based on a number of scenarios, which assumed various rates of growth, patterns of trade, relative prices and terms of finance.

The world economic situation with special emphasis on development: approaches to the current world economic crisis and perspectives for the 1980s, including issues, policies and measures relevant to the attainment of a new international economic order was considered by UNCTAD VI in conjunction with its general debate.

In a statement on the subject adopted on 2 July,⁽¹⁴⁾ the effects of the world economic crisis on multilateral economic co-operation were described. International monetary institutions had not been sufficiently adapted to cope with changes in the world economy and the multilateral trading system had been seriously endangered. The development process required urgent changes in the international economic system.

The United States dissociated itself from the statement because it found the text too negative, one-sided and ideological.

The statement outlined the increasingly important role played by developing countries in the international economy and described how the crisis had brought out growing interlinkages between national economies and between different economic sectors, particularly in raw materials, energy, trade, development, money and finance. Coherent international policies addressing short-term conjunctural problems and longer-term structural problems were called for.

Since the crisis threatened the stability of both developed and developing countries, the launching of a programme of concerted measures to reactivate the global economy was needed. In an increasingly interdependent world, the statement said, the economic future and political stability of all countries were interlinked. The adoption of disarmament measures would release resources for development.

In debating this issue, the Conference had before it, in addition to the documents mentioned above, a Declaration (the Buenos Aires Platform)⁽¹⁴⁾ by the Fifth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77 (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 28 March-9 April). Included in the Platform but not in the UNCTAD statement were references to non-fulfilment of commitments and retreat from internationally agreed obligations, erosion by developed countries of accepted norms for international trade by means of retrogressive agreements and policies, and resort by some developed countries to coercive and discriminatory economic measures against developing countries. Reference was also made to the unacceptable concentration of international decision-making power in the developed countries and their lack of positive response to developing countries' attempts to negotiate on global economic issues.

References to international financial and trading institutions in the Platform were reformulated in the UNCTAD statement. The Platform described those institutions as being designed to serve the interests of the developed world and said that efforts to restructure them to support the development process had been to no avail. The institutions were being subordinated to political and other considerations, there was a retreat from multilateralism in both trading and financial co-operation, the official components of the international monetary and financial system had declined in relative importance and the system was being privatized.

The UNCTAD statement contained two paragraphs not included in the Buenos Aires Platform: one stated that developed market-economy countries had taken successful counter-inflationary measures and had agreed to pursue policies to support economic recovery and promote development; and the other indicated that specific regional problems of developing countries, dealt with in such strategies as the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa,⁽¹⁵⁾ would be included in the programme for reactivating development in developing countries.

At its October/November session, UNCTAD's Trade and Development Board considered the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, as well as debt and development problems of developing countries. Annexed to the Board's report⁽¹⁶⁾ was a draft resolution, submitted by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77, by which the Board would have decided to convene its thirtieth session in the first half of 1985 at the ministerial level, to review the world economic situation and progress in implementing the UNCTAD VI programme of immediate measures, which incorporated elements contained in the Conference's resolutions on commodities, trade, money and finance, and implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries⁽¹⁷⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In his September 1983 report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization (p. 3), the Secretary-General addressed the international economic situation and the role of the United Nations in economic issues. Recent trends and events marked a clear retreat from multilateral co-operation efforts and, while the effects of economic interdependence were widely acknowledged, opportunities to address the major issues were being repeatedly missed. More than ever, individual nations were affected by trends elsewhere and by decisions of others. International mechanisms were needed to bring about greater harmonization of national policies.

UNCTAD VI had provided an opportunity to demonstrate the capacity and will of Governments to act together, the Secretary-General stated, but there was a failure to respond to the need for concerted international action. There was a need to activate the negotiation process between developed and developing countries on long-term problems in several interrelated areas and at a high political level.

The Secretary-General stated that the United Nations had been successful in various sectors of economic activity. However, there was a need for more concerted action by United Nations organizations in dealing with development and international economic co-operation issues and in their work at the field level.

Communications. Several communications dealing with general aspects of international economic relations were received by the Secretary-General in 1983.

On 6 May⁽¹⁸⁾ Brazil and Mexico transmitted the text of the "Cancún Declaration", signed by the Presidents of Mexico and Brazil on 29 April at the first meeting of heads of State and Government on international co-operation for development, held at Cancún, Mexico. The Presidents expressed concern over the state of the world economy and its effect on developing countries and on the Latin American region in particular. They called for measures to give the region's exports access to developed countries' markets and for adequate financial resources on appropriate terms. Convinced that conditions were ripe for a new phase of constructive North-South dialogue, the Presidents addressed themselves to heads of State and Government of the industrialized nations, in the hope that they would adopt a decisive stand to bring about international economic co-operation for development and deal effectively with the crisis.

In a communiqué transmitted by Luxembourg on 20 May⁽¹⁹⁾ the Council of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, which met at ministerial level on 9 and 10 May, indicated policies to be adopted by member Governments to strengthen the international trading, monetary and financial systems.

On 10 October,⁽²⁰⁾ Bangladesh transmitted a Declaration adopted by the Foreign Ministers of the Group of 77 at their meeting held in New York on 6, 7 and 10 October. The Declaration covered economic issues of multilateral co-operation for development as well as other issues of concern to the General Assembly.

The communiqué of the thirty-seventh session of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance⁽²¹⁾ (Berlin, 18-20 October) was transmitted by the German Democratic Republic on 27 October. The communiqué included an expression of support for the demands of developing countries regarding the reshaping of international economic relations.

Joint statements by some countries with centrally planned economies (Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR) were transmitted on their behalf on 6 October⁽²²⁾ and 22 November⁽²³⁾ by the Byelorussian SSR and Czechoslovakia, respectively. The former statement dealt with the restructuring of economic relations on a just, equal and democratic basis, while the latter called for measures to be taken against economic coercion.

Bulgaria's economic assistance to developing countries and national liberation movements was outlined in a statement annexed to a letter dated 26 October.⁽²⁴⁾ On 6 July⁽²⁵⁾ Bulgaria had sent an identical text to the President of the Economic and Social Council. A statement annexed to a letter of 5 October⁽²⁶⁾ described aid provided by the German Democratic Republic to developing countries and national liberation movements. Information on the USSR's economic co-operation with developing countries was annexed to a letter of 8 November.⁽²⁷⁾

The General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee devoted a major part of its 1983 session to development and international economic co-operation, making recommendations on a large number of specific topics (see APPENDIX IV, agenda item 78). A list of pertinent documents was included in the first part of the Committee's report on this item⁽²⁸⁾ which the Assembly took note of when it adopted without vote decision 38/436, as orally proposed by its President.

Development and international economic co-operation

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly took note of part I of the report of the Second Committee.

General Assembly decision 38/436

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 78.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 15-24, 38-45; plenary 102.

In its 19 December resolution (38/155) on the report of UNCTAD VI, the Assembly called on countries to implement measures to revitalize the development process of developing countries and deal with structural problems in the global economy. It took note of the UNCTAD VI statement on the world economic situation and called on countries to take action at the national and international levels on UNCTAD VI resolutions and on measures set out in the statement (see Chapter IV of this section).

Proposed global economic negotiations

Discussions on the launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, originally scheduled to begin in 1980,⁽²⁹⁾ continued throughout 1983.

On 28 October, the General Assembly President reported that a series of international meetings and conferences had failed to help third world countries to promote their development. He believed that it was the Assembly's duty to alleviate short-term problems leading to negotiations, which would ensure a balanced development of the international economy and of the economies of the developing countries in particular.

On 20 December, when the Assembly again took up the matter, the President described bilateral meetings and high-level multilateral consultations which had taken place during the 1983 regular session. He reported that there had been discernible progress and indicated that most of the elements of doubt or great controversy had been resolved. In the light of this, the President proposed that the consultation process should continue for a concentrated, uninterrupted time period, after which he would convene a multilateral meeting, not later than the end of March 1984, to hear a progress report on the consultations so that the Assembly could adopt appropriate decisions in order to launch the global negotiations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

At the closing meeting of its resumed thirty-seventh session on 19 September, the General Assembly adopted decision 37/456 without vote, as orally proposed by the President.

Launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development

At its 122nd plenary meeting, on 19 September 1983, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its thirty-eighth session the item entitled "Launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development".

General Assembly decision 37/456

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 38.

Meeting number. GA 37th session: plenary 122.

On 20 December, at its thirty-eighth session, the Assembly adopted decision 38/448 A without vote, as orally proposed by the President.

Launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 20 December 1983, the General Assembly decided to keep the item open in order to allow for the continuation of informal consultations after the suspension of the session and to reconvene on short notice to consider any decisions or agreements that might emerge from the negotiations.

General Assembly decision 38/448 A

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 38.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: plenary 39, 104.

A number of other 1983 Assembly decisions related to the item. On 20 December, the Assembly decided by decision 38/456 to resume its thirty-eighth session at a date to be announced to consider five agenda items and one sub-item, including the item on the launching of global negotiations.

In a preambular paragraph of its 19 December resolution (38/152) on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade⁽⁷⁾ the Assembly expressed regret at the lack of progress in launching the negotiations, which were intended to facilitate the Strategy's implementation.

In a resolution of 20 December (38/190) reviewing the implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security⁽³⁰⁾ the Assembly urged States to proceed without delay to a global consideration of ways to revive the world economy and to restructure international economic relations within the framework of global negotiations.

Again on 20 December, by resolution 38/200 on immediate measures for developing countries, the Assembly urged Governments to pursue effective negotiating efforts, within the United Nations system, with a view to adopting concrete measures in favour of developing countries.

International Development Strategy for the Third UN Development Decade

During 1983, preparations continued for the 1984 review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s), as provided for in the Strategy adopted by the Assembly in 1980⁽¹⁷⁾ and reaffirmed by that body in December 1982.⁽³¹⁾

UNCTAD action. On 28 April, UNCTAD's Trade and Development Board decided⁽³²⁾ to establish an open-ended high-level intergovernmental group to consider the review and appraisal of the Strategy's implementation. The group was to meet before February 1984 and its report was to be submitted to a special session of the Board.

In preparation for the review and appraisal exercise, a report by the UNCTAD secretariat⁽³³⁾ reviewed the basic goals and targets of the Strategy and developments in the world economy. The report also presented the results of a quantitative exercise, which suggested that vigorous policies to foster development together with an improved international economic environment could reverse current unfavourable economic conditions in developing countries. Another UNCTAD secretariat report⁽³⁴⁾ reviewed progress on specific policy recommendations in the Strategy in areas of interest to UNCTAD.

In resolution 164(VI) on official development assistance,⁽¹⁴⁾ adopted on 2 July, UNCTAD VI urged developed countries to reaffirm commitments undertaken under the Strategy with respect to the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product as official development assistance, with the target of 1 per cent to be reached as soon as possible thereafter.

UNIDO action. In a 13 May conclusion⁽³⁵⁾ on follow-up to the Third (1980) General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and the eleventh special session of the General Assembly,⁽³⁶⁾ held in 1980 to assess progress made by the United Nations system towards establishing a new international economic order, the UNIDO Industrial Development Board (IDB) requested UNIDO's Executive Director to provide suitable material to the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Strategy—set up in December 1982 by the Assembly⁽³¹⁾—through IDB or its Permanent Committee.

As requested by IDB on 13 May⁽³⁵⁾ the UNIDO secretariat submitted a report⁽³⁷⁾ to the Permanent Committee's November/December session. The report covered the Strategy's implementation in relation to: the role of industrialization in the Strategy, the Strategy as an instrument of policy for UNIDO programme formulation, progress of industrialization in developing countries, the impact on it of the current world economic crisis and prospects for the remainder of the Decade. In noting efforts to incorporate the Strategy in UNIDO programmes, the Permanent Committee noted with concern not only the lack of progress in attaining the Strategy's industrialization targets but also the real decline in the manufacturing value-added (the value added to manufactures) in developing countries during the Decade's first three years. The Committee requested that its comments and the secretariat's report be transmitted to the Committee on the Review and Appraisal in accordance with the Assembly's December 1982 request.⁽³¹⁾

ACC action. The Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ(PROG)) of ACC discussed the review and appraisal of the Strategy at both its first (Geneva, 10-15 March)⁽³⁹⁾ and second (New York, 7-13 October)⁽⁴⁰⁾ regular 1983 sessions. At its first session, it agreed that, because of the relevance of the synthesis and assessment to be carried out by the ACC Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives (see below), it would review the Task Force's report. In addition, a close working relationship should be maintained between CCSQ(PROG) and the Task Force and a joint meeting would be desirable.

At its second session, CCSQ(PROG) noted that the Committee on the Review and Appraisal would have before it a comprehensive report of the Secretary-General, which would draw, inter alia, on the work of the Task Force, sectoral reports from ACC member organizations, a CDP report and a report on progress in social development. The prevailing view in CCSQ(PROG), therefore, was that it would not be necessary to prepare another inter-agency paper. CCSQ(PROG) and the Task Force held a brief joint meeting to exchange views on ACC's role in the review and appraisal process.

At its first session in 1983 (Geneva, 2-4 March),⁽⁶⁾ the ACC Task Force discussed its contribution to the Strategy's review and appraisal. It decided that its report would be a synthesis and assessment of contributions of United Nations agencies and organizations and that those contributions would be sectoral, regional or global in scope. The report would be discussed at its second 1983 session, finalized and submitted to ACC and CDP.

At its second session (New York, 10-12 October), the Task Force adopted a consensus report⁽⁸⁾ which reviewed the state of the Strategy's implementation and considered what had to be done to achieve its central objective—the accelerated development of developing countries in the context of an equitable and efficient world order.

The review of the first three years of the Strategy's implementation depicted a period of crisis and economic stagnation, marked also by differences in the performance of regions and groups of countries and by insufficient international economic co-operation. The appraisal of possible future action to reverse negative trends and perspectives stressed the need for active implementation of short- and long-range policies involving the entire international community. The report emphasized that clusters of measures outlined in the Strategy—the creation of a supportive environment for development, stronger international economic co-operation, and greater self-reliance of developing countries—were both important and complementary. It also stressed the crucial role of a favourable overall political context for improving the world economy and the economic and social situation in developing countries, with the central issue of disarmament and development being part of that context.

The report concluded that, three years after the adoption of the Strategy, the Third Development Decade was in serious jeopardy. At stake was not only the achievement of specific targets but the continuation of growth and development and the functioning of the world economy.

CDP consideration. In accordance with the Assembly's December 1982 resolution on the review and appraisal of the Strategy,⁽³¹⁾ CDP proposed to focus at its 1984 session on critical problems hampering progress in the Strategy's implementation, particularly those issues on which negotiations had stalled. At its April 1983 session⁽⁷⁾ it proposed convening a working group to assess progress made and identify factors responsible for shortfalls in the Strategy's implementation.

The working group met at United Nations Headquarters from 13 to 18 December. In the overall assessment contained in its report,⁽⁴¹⁾ the group stated that, although the Strategy's purpose remained sound and widely shared, its targets had been overtaken by events. Not only had the advances in developing countries projected in the Strategy not been achieved, but their situation had further deteriorated as the deep recession in the industrialized economies spread hardship to virtually all groups through lowered terms of trade and increased interest rates, compounded by a collapse in net capital flows and growing protectionist trends. The consequences of the critical economic situation were more than economic, the group stated, as the erosion of growth and welfare heightened tensions and raised the potential for turbulence both within and between countries. There was an urgent need to reverse prevailing trends, for which purpose the group proposed adoption of an ambitious but realistic package of immediate measures for recovery and development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In section VI of decision 1983/184 of 29 July, the Economic and Social Council requested the General Assembly, at its 1983 session, to schedule one session of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and decided to consider the Committee's report at the Council's second regular session of 1984.

In a 26 May resolution (1983/9), the Council invited the Committee to examine progress in achieving the Strategy's social goals and objectives (for social aspects of the Strategy, see Chapter XIII of this section). In a 28 July resolution (1983/57), the Council reaffirmed the importance of implementing the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan⁽⁴²⁾ and the objectives of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) within the context of the Strategy and recommended to the Assembly that the Committee should consider the role played in the Strategy by water resources development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/152 without vote.

Review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and reiterating the goals and objectives contained therein,

Recalling also its resolution 37/202 of 20 December 1982, by which it established a committee of universal membership to carry out in 1984 the first overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy, and provided for the necessary arrangements for fulfilling this task,

Recalling further its resolution 37/203 of 20 December 1982, in which it requested, inter alia, that, as part of the preparations for the review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy, an analysis also be made of the negative trends in the world economy which affect international economic co-operation,

Recalling the relevant provisions of Economic and Social Council decision 1983/184 of 29 July 1983,

Deeply conscious that the early part of the Third United Nations Development Decade has been a period of widespread economic stagnation and crisis, particularly in those developing countries where per capita income declined significantly, in marked contrast to the annual growth rate of about 4.5 per cent envisaged in the International Development Strategy,

Expressing its deep regret at the lack of progress in the launching of global negotiations, which are intended to be one of the principal instruments for facilitating the implementation of the International Development Strategy,

Reaffirming, in the context of the International Development Strategy, the continuing need to address the long-term structural economic problems,

Convinced of the urgent need for substantially greater efforts towards the implementation of the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy in the remaining period of the Decade,

1. Reiterates the importance of achieving the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

2. Reaffirms that, in accordance with paragraphs 169 to 180 of the International Development Strategy, the process of review and appraisal of the implementation of the Strategy should consist of systematic scrutiny, within the context of an overall review of the international economic situation, of the progress made towards achieving the goals and objectives of the Strategy, and should ensure its effective implementation and strengthen it as an instrument of policy;

3. Reaffirms also the need, in the review and appraisal exercise, to identify and appraise the real causes for shortfalls encountered in the implementation of the International Development Strategy and to carry out, if necessary, the adjustment, intensification or reformulation of the policy measures foreseen in the Strategy in the light of evolving needs and developments, in order for the instrument to contribute effectively to the development of developing countries, with a view to the establishment of a new international economic order;

4. Urges all Governments and all concerned to implement fully the provisions of General Assembly resolution 37/202 in order to ensure the successful preparation and conclusion of the review and appraisal exercise;

5. Recommends that informal consultations be conducted by the Chairman of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, prior to the substantive session of the Committee, to initiate preliminary discussions and an exchange of views on the review and appraisal of the Strategy as envisaged in paragraphs 2 and 3 above, and to review the preparation of documentation for the Committee;

6. Decides that documentation to be submitted to the Committee by relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should be concise and brief and should focus on the issues envisaged in paragraphs 2 and 3 above, as well as on questions addressed to them in the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 37/202;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in pursuance of General Assembly resolutions 37/202 and 37/203, to prepare and submit to the Committee an analytical, comprehensive, consolidated and synthesized report on the implementation of the International Development Strategy, addressing the issues envisaged in paragraphs 2 and 3 above and drawing on the reports of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system.

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.1) without vote. 14 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.112), based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.90); agenda item 78 (a). Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 38-45, 52, 56; plenary 102.

In addition to drafting changes, the adopted text differed from that submitted by the Group of 77 in several respects, including the addition of a preambular paragraph recalling Council decision 1983/184 and the addition of operative paragraphs 2 and 5 to 7.

By the Group's text, the Assembly would have expressed deep regret at the failure to tackle long-term structural problems of the world economy, whereas by the final text the Assembly reaffirmed the continuing need to address those problems.

An operative paragraph in the Group's text was reformulated and became paragraph 3. By the former draft, the Assembly would have reaffirmed the need to review progress made towards achieving the Strategy's objectives, to identify causes for lack of compliance with the Strategy's policy measures, goals and objectives, and to propose the necessary corrective measures in order for it to contribute to achieving those goals, the development of developing countries and the strengthening of the United Nations system, with a view to establishing the new international economic order.

Omitted from the final text was a paragraph by which the Assembly would have urged Governments, particularly those of developed countries, to implement paragraphs 10 and 11 of the Assembly's December 1982 resolution⁽³¹⁾ (inviting Governments to reflect the Strategy's goals, objectives and policy measures in their policy formulation and developed countries to transmit reports of their development assistance).

A number of other 1983 Assembly resolutions dealt with the review and appraisal process. In resolution 38/195 of 20 December, on implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (see below), the Assembly invited the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Strategy to take into account the adoption and implementation process of SNPA and related developments in its review and appraisal exercise at all levels.

In resolution 38/200 on immediate measures in favour of the developing countries, also adopted on 20 December, the Assembly agreed that policy measures of an immediate nature should be taken into account in the review and appraisal of the Strategy.

In resolution 38/179 of 19 December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the application by Governments of a unified approach to development analysis and planning, taking into account the results of the first review and appraisal of the Strategy, and to submit it to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly in 1985, with a view to using it as input for future reviews and appraisals.

In resolution 38/199 of 20 December, on special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s, the Assembly recalled that there was a need for a thorough evaluation of the implementation of those measures during the mid-term review and appraisal of the Strategy.

Committee on the Strategy. The Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, established by the General Assembly in 1982,⁽³¹⁾ held an organizational session on 16 December 1983 in New York,⁽⁴³⁾ at which it decided to hold a substantive session from 7 to 25 May 1984 and agreed that informal consultations would take place in January and towards the end of April and beginning of May. The provisional agenda for the Committee's 1984 session was approved.

Proposed new international economic order

During 1983, the establishment of a new international economic order, called for by the General Assembly in 1974,⁽⁴⁴⁾ continued to be considered in several United Nations bodies.

In the statement on the world economic situation adopted at UNCTAD VI on 2 July⁽¹⁴⁾ (see above), it was pointed out that what was needed was an integrated set of policies, encompassing short-term measures in areas of critical importance to developing countries and long-term changes relevant to the attainment of a new international economic order. In drafting this text, UNCTAD VI had considered the Buenos Aires Platform, which called for an integrated set of policies encompassing both immediate measures in areas of critical importance to developing countries and the restructuring of the world economic system and relations needed for the establishment of the new order.

The third and final phase of an analytical study on the progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order was to have been prepared by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) for the Assembly's 1983 regular session. In September, the Secretary-General explained why UNITAR had not completed that phase of the study. On 19 December, in resolution 38/128, the Assembly requested UNITAR to continue preparing the final phase of the study and a summary and outline of it to facilitate debate. The Secretary-General was requested to submit a report on UNITAR's final study in 1984 (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI).

A study on the new international economic order and the promotion of human rights was prepared for the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights and a resolution on the subject was adopted by the Sub-Commission on 6 September (see Chapter XVIII of this section).

At its May/June session, the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) had before it a report by its Working Group on the New International Economic Order concerning a draft legal guide on drawing up contracts for construction of industrial works. The Group stressed that the guide should be prepared in the context of the new international economic order (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI).

On 19 December, in resolution 38/134, the Assembly called on UNCITRAL to continue to take account of its 1974 and 1975 resolutions concerning the new international economic order and took note of UNCITRAL's work on drafting the legal guide.

In other related action, the Assembly, by resolution 38/5 of 28 October, reaffirmed the determination of the United Nations to work closely with the Organization of African Unity towards the establishment of the new international economic order.

Proposed new international human order

During 1983, a proposal for the drafting of a declaration on a new international human order, concerned with the moral aspects of development, was considered by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. The item had been suggested by the Philippines in August 1982⁽⁴⁵⁾ and in December⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Assembly had referred the matter to the Council for further study.

The Secretary-General submitted a note⁽⁴⁷⁾ to the Council's July 1983 session, summarizing replies from 12 Member States to his request for comments on the question. Also before the Council was a note verbale⁽⁴⁸⁾ containing the comments of the Philippines.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July in the Economic and Social Council, the Philippines introduced a draft resolution containing a draft declaration on a new international human order: moral aspects of development. By the draft resolution, the Council would have recommended the declaration for adoption by the Assembly.⁽⁴⁹⁾ On the same day, the Philippines, on behalf also of eight other States, introduced a draft decision transmitting the draft resolution to the Assembly.

On 25 July, the Council adopted without vote the nine-nation draft, as decision 1983/171.

A new international human order:
moral aspects of development

At its 39th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1983, the Council decided to transmit to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session the draft resolution annexed to the present decision, the relevant documents submitted to the Council pursuant to Assembly resolution 37/225 of 20 December 1982, and the comments made thereon by Governments and by the Council during its consideration of the matter at its second regular session of 1983.

ANNEX

Declaration on a new international human order:
moral aspects of development

The General Assembly

Adopts the following Declaration:

Declaration on a new international human order:
moral aspects of development

We, the Members of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind certain of the principles and objectives enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, such as reaffirmation of faith in the dignity and worth of the human person, promotion of social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, and employment of international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling that, as stated in Article 55 of the Charter, the United Nations shall promote higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development,

Recognizing that the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Declarations of the Rights of the Child, on Social Progress and Development, on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, on the Rights of Disabled Persons, on the Rights of Mentally Retarded Persons, and the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination reflect the concern of the United Nations for all members of the human family,

Also bearing in mind that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights sets a common standard of human rights and obligations to be achieved for all peoples and that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Declaration can be fully realized,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Noting that the United Nations has not fully and effectively achieved its objectives, as embodied in the Charter, in the field of economic and social development,

Reaffirming the principles contained in those covenants, conventions and declarations, particularly that:

(a) The recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

(b) These rights derive from the inherent dignity of the human person,

(c) The ideal of human beings enjoying freedom from fear and want can be achieved only in conditions in which everyone is guaranteed the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, as well as civil and political rights,

(d) The obligations of States under the Charter of the United Nations include the promotion of universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms,

(e) The individual, having duties to other individuals and to the community to which he belongs, has a responsibility to promote and respect the rights of his fellow human beings,

Stressing that the primary responsibility for the development of developing countries rests with them and that it will greatly facilitate their efforts to meet desired development goals under a just and equitable international economic order if economic and social disparities are reduced among peoples and nations,

Recognizing that a contributing factor to the failure of development has been the lack of political will, co-operation and understanding and of a full appreciation of the reality of interdependence and common interest among peoples and States,

Believing that all countries and peoples have to draw from the moral well-springs of equity, justice, mutual understanding and co-operation in the resolution of the economic and social ills that afflict mankind today,

Recognizing that it is in the interest of all States members of the international community that the developing countries should be able to achieve their development goals, and that the developed countries have a moral responsibility to assist in facilitating that process,

Realizing the need to promote the simultaneous attainment of economic and social goals and to create a condition of global growth and prosperity based on a new international human order which emphasizes the moral and humanistic approach to development,

Reaffirming that human beings, as well as States, constitute the membership of the international community,

Solemnly proclaim our common determination to establish and enhance the development and evolution of a new international human order, with emphasis on the moral aspects of development, based on the principles of equity, sovereign equality, common interest and co-operation among all States, regardless of their political and economic systems, and on the principles of equality, mutual respect and co-operation among all peoples,

And to that end

Declare that:

I

1. The growth and progress of societies, and the stability of Governments and States, are inextricably and inseparably linked to the growth, progress and stability of the human being;

2. The growth and development of the human being is the fundamental goal of any society, Government or State;

3. The development of a human being must consist in a balanced development of body and mind and of spiritual faculties;

4. The human being—man, woman or child—is simultaneously the subject and the object of development;

5. As the subject of development, the human being should be the ultimate beneficiary of the development process;

6. The development process must aim at furthering the collective well-being and happiness of all humankind;

7. Governments and States are in the best position to provide the environment that would ensure the balanced development of the human being and his self-realization;

8. In order to provide for such an environment, development must, inter alia, aim towards the following goals:

(a) Meeting the basic needs and wants of human beings, which are essential for the sustenance of life under acceptable standards of living;

(b) Furthering the economic betterment of all peoples;

(c) Improving their quality of life by providing the minimum elements in their pursuit of happiness and meaning beyond mere existence and subsistence;

(d) Helping in the fulfilment of the human being in his wholeness and in the total realization of his economic, social and spiritual needs and aspirations;

II

1. In order to achieve a new international human order, development programmes should be designed and carried out at the level of the people, who are the principal instruments and beneficiaries of the development process; development should be carried out to the full extent of popular participation, the people who are the beneficiaries of development being fully involved so as to ensure that their interests are respected, and bearing in mind that popular participation is necessary for the success of development programmes;

2. A new international human order also requires the strengthening and expansion of programmes of assistance to refugees, the disabled, the physically handicapped and the aged; the United Nations should similarly sustain and expand assistance to children; it should extend assistance programmes to human beings in the greatest need, regardless of sex, race or religion, bearing in mind that all humankind is the concern of the United Nations;

3. States, in pursuit of the new international human order, should furthermore work towards the implementation of United Nations declarations on, inter alia, the peaceful settlement of international disputes, the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and the prohibition of the use of nuclear and thermonuclear weapons, international co-operation for disarmament, the suppression and punishment of the crime of apartheid and the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, the protection of the human environment and the establishment of a new international economic order;

4. It is in the interest of the international community if nations and peoples in a position to do so assist the less well-endowed among them, and that the former have a moral responsibility to facilitate the process of economic and social development of the latter;

5. In order to achieve a new international human order, all States, Governments, governmental and non-governmental organizations and entities, as well as individuals, are called upon to use all efforts to apply the principles and to attain the goals set forth in the present Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 12 August,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Philippines requested that the agenda item on the new international human order: moral aspects of development be inscribed as a sub-item of the item on development and international economic co-operation. The Assembly agreed to this request when it adopted decision 38/402.

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/170 without vote.

New international human order: moral aspects of development

Recalling its resolution 37/225 of 20 December 1982 entitled "New international human order: moral aspects of development",

Taking note of the report of the Economic and Social Council on its consideration of this question and Council decision 1983/171 of 25 July 1983,

Taking note also of the comments of Governments on the question, as well as statements made during the second regular session of 1983 of the Economic and Social Council and at the current session of the General Assembly,

1. Invites Member States that have not yet done so to submit their comments on this question and Member States that have already done so to submit additional comments, particularly on the draft declaration transmitted to the General Assembly by Economic and Social Council decision 1983/171, preferably before 31 July 1985;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on this question to the General Assembly at its fortieth session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session the sub-item entitled "New international human order: moral aspects of development".

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.12) without vote, 14 November (meeting 39); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.361, based on informal consultations on draft transmitted by Economic and Social Council decision 1983/171 (A/C.2/38/L.6) and on draft by Philippines (A/C.2/38/L.14); agenda item 78 (n). Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 15-24, 30, 39; plenary 102.

In the light of the Committee's approval of the draft which became resolution 38/170, another draft by the Philippines was withdrawn. By this text, the Assembly would additionally have requested the Secretary-General to finalize the draft declaration with the assistance of a small ad hoc group of governmental experts, and to report on its preparation in 1984.

The Committee also decided to take no action on the text annexed to Council decision 1983/171.

Confidence-building measures

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/196 on confidence-building in international economic relations.

Confidence-building in international economic relations

The General Assembly,

Taking into account the Charter of the United Nations, article 32 of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 and 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970,

Concerned about the present deterioration in the conditions for the conduct and expansion of international economic relations, and about the increasing departure from the multilateral platform of economic exchanges and negotiations,

Convinced that international economic co-operation should be placed on a long-term stable basis, a basis of broad exchange of relevant information through the United Nations system, and that it should take due account of the principles of equal rights and sovereignty of States,

Conscious that confidence-building in international economic relations can be achieved only through the sustained development of the developing countries,

Convinced also that the protection of economic co-operation among States against the adverse impact of international political tensions, and the reinforcement of confidence among all States in their economic relations, would introduce into those relations desirable elements of stability and reliability, as a valuable contribution to efforts aimed at reviving world trade and consolidating economic recovery, developing peaceful international economic co-operation and establishing a new international economic order,

Requests the Secretary-General to consult all States, as well as the United Nations organizations and bodies concerned, especially the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions, about the scope of possible confidence-building measures which would lead to the promotion and acceleration of international economic co-operation and to report on his findings to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session through the Economic and Social Council.

Coercive economic measures against developing countries

In 1983, both UNCTAD VI and the General Assembly urged developed countries to refrain from coercive economic actions against developing countries.

UNCTAD action. On 2 July, by a roll-call vote of 81 to 18, with 7 abstentions, UNCTAD VI adopted resolution 152(VI)⁽¹⁴⁾ by which it reiterated that all developed countries should refrain from applying trade restrictions, blockades, embargoes and other economic sanctions against developing countries as a form of political coercion which affected their economic, political and social development.

A similar call had been made in a paragraph on protectionism of a resolution on international trade in goods and services contained in the Buenos Aires Platform—the final document of the March/April Fifth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77.⁽¹⁴⁾

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/197.

Economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolutions 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling further article 32 of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, which states that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing international trade relations and trade policies for development contained in its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964,

Recalling resolution 152(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, entitled "Rejection of coercive economic measures",

Bearing in mind the principles and rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and paragraph 7 (iii) of the Ministerial Declaration adopted on 29 November 1982 by the Contracting Parties of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade at their thirty-eighth session,

Recognizing that some developed countries are resorting more and more frequently to threats or the application of coercive and restrictive measures of increasing scope as an instrument for exerting political pressure on some developing countries,

Recognizing also that these measures are at variance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade,

Considering that coercive measures have a negative effect on the economies of the developing countries and their development efforts and do not help to create a climate of peace and friendly relations among States,

1. Deplores the adoption by certain developed countries, taking advantage of their predominant position in the international economy, of economic measures to exert coercion on the sovereign decisions of developing countries;

2. Urges those developed countries, therefore, to refrain from adopting measures aimed at exerting coercion or pressure in order to interfere in the exercise of the sovereign rights of the developing countries;

3. Reaffirms that developed countries should refrain from threatening or applying trade restrictions, blockades, embargoes and other economic sanctions, incompatible with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and in violation of undertakings contracted multilaterally or bilaterally, against developing countries as a form of political and economic coercion which affects their economic, political and social development;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to compile information provided by Governments on the adoption and the effects of the economic measures mentioned in paragraph 3 above, taken by developed countries as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries, and to submit that information to the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Appeals to Governments to provide the necessary information to the Secretary-General, as requested in paragraph 4 above.

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 119-19-5 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.13) by recorded vote (112-19-5), 28 November (meeting 52); draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L46); agenda item 78.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tomé and Príncipe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Finland, Greece, Spain, Sweden.

The recorded vote in the Second Committee was requested by the United States. Almost all those who spoke in explanation of vote—Austria, Greece (on behalf of the States members of the European Economic Commission), Israel, Japan, Norway, Spain and Sweden—said they could not support the draft as it referred only to developed countries. Austria and Sweden added that coercive measures should be applied only on the basis of Security Council decisions; furthermore, they did not want to prejudge results of ongoing negotiations in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Japan felt that the Second Committee was not the proper forum to take up political questions. Portugal, Spain and Turkey stated that they held the position which they had set forth at UNCTAD VI on the question of coercive economic measures: Portugal that the resolution was unilateral and essentially political in nature; Spain that it should have been couched in general terms; and Turkey that the subject-matter did not fall within the competence of UNCTAD. Israel subscribed to the relevant provisions of the November 1982 Ministerial Declaration of GATT, which applied to all countries.

In the Assembly, the German Democratic Republic, speaking on behalf of the socialist States of Eastern Europe and Mongolia, pointed out that since the policy of nationalization being followed by developing countries was unfavourable to monopolies, those countries were liable to economic sanctions and other measures which maintained economic dependence.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

During 1983, the United Nations continued to promote economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC), mainly through UNCTAD. Technical co-operation among developing countries received the support of UNDP (see Chapter II of this section).

UNCTAD activities. On 2 July, in resolution 139(VI) adopted without dissent,⁽¹⁴⁾ UNCTAD VI recognized that ECDC was an integral part of a global development effort and of an interdependent world economy. It decided to continue implementing its resolution 127(V)⁽⁵¹⁾ and to request the Trade and Development Board and the Committee on ECDC to adopt forward-looking decisions and consider effective measures of support, and to call on the Committee to consider ways to give further impetus to ECDC, particularly in relation to continuing work towards establishing the global system of trade preferences among developing countries, co-operation among their State trading organizations, establishing multinational marketing enterprises and promoting multinational production enterprises among developing countries, strengthening subregional, regional and interregional economic co-operation and integration among them, and relevant aspects of their monetary and financial co-operation.

The Conference reiterated the need for appropriate support for ECDC by the UNCTAD secretariat, requested the Committee on ECDC to consider adopting further measures of support by UNCTAD and forward-looking decisions, and to give guidance to the secretariat in that respect, and called on other competent international bodies and on the developed countries to support developing countries' efforts to implement economic co-operation programmes as a contribution towards attaining the objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.⁽⁷⁾

In taking this action, the Conference considered the Buenos Aires Platform, the final document of the March/April Fifth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77, which included a draft decision on ECDC⁽¹⁴⁾ on which the UNCTAD text was largely based. By that text, UNCTAD would have decided to support full implementation of resolution 127(V), rather than continue implementing it, and would have reiterated the need for a substantial technical and administrative contribution by the UNCTAD secretariat and other competent international organizations, particularly in relation to the areas of ECDC specified in the adopted text.

During its consideration of ECDC, UNCTAD VI had before it a policy paper by the UNCTAD secretariat, reviewing activities in the major programme areas and proposals for future work concerning ECDC.⁽⁵²⁾

Also in that context, the Conference, in resolution 142(VI), called on developing countries to provide assistance to the least developed countries (see below, under LEAST DEVELOPED COUNTRIES).

The Trade and Development Board's Committee on ECDC, at its third session (Geneva, 12 September-5 October), adopted by consensus a resolution⁽⁵³⁾ in which it reiterated the need for the UNCTAD secretariat to continue supporting developing countries' mutual co-operation. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was called on to take further measures in trade expansion and promotion, and monetary and financial co-operation, to report on developments and present proposals for further work in those areas to the Committee.

The Committee noted the programme for co-operation among economic co-operation and integration groupings of developing countries adopted at the June/July 1982 session of the Working Party on Trade Expansion and Regional Economic Integration among Developing Countries⁽⁵⁴⁾ and called on UNCTAD's secretariat to continue programme support activities. The Committee recommended to the Trade and Development Board that a session of the Working Party be held in 1984, took note of support requirements indicated by the Working Party, and requested UNCTAD's Secretary-General to consider convening during 1984 a meeting of secretariats of economic co-operation and integration groupings of developing countries and multilateral development finance institutions to examine problems of promoting and financing integration projects.

Progress achieved in elaborating and establishing the Trade Information System regarding foreign trade of developing countries was welcomed by the Committee. It expressed appreciation to UNDP for financial assistance in support of this work and invited it to consider continuing such assistance. The Committee noted the need for continuing support of related ongoing activities on ECDC in other programme areas, particularly technical co-operation in development and transfer of technology.

In carrying out the ECDC work programme, UNCTAD's Secretary-General was requested to avoid duplication of work and to continue collaborating with international institutions and agencies in support of work in the area of monetary and financial co-operation among developing countries as an integral activity for trade expansion and promotion.

The Committee stressed the importance of technical assistance in achieving the objectives of ECDC and called on donor agencies to consider priorities established by developing countries themselves in this area. Developed countries were urged to contribute to ECDC projects through the United Nations development system.

In other action, the Committee recommended that the Trade and Development Board take into account the Committee's proposals on the global system of trade preferences among developing countries, among others those annexed to the Committee's report.⁽⁵⁵⁾

A three-volume report⁽⁵⁶⁾ on economic co-operation and integration among developing countries, reviewing recent developments in subregional, regional and interregional organizations and arrangements, was prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for the Committee's meeting. The volumes updated a 1976 study and dealt with Latin America, Africa, and Asia and the Pacific, Arab States and interregional.

On 15 October, the Trade and Development Board requested UNCTAD's Secretary-General to provide in the UNCTAD 1984 calendar for up to four weeks of meetings enabling developing countries participating in negotiations on a global system of trade preferences among them to continue working towards establishment of the system (see Chapter IV of this section).

During 1983, several meetings were held in connection with the UNCTAD programme for co-operation among economic co-operation and integration groupings of developing countries, which was established in 1982,⁽⁵⁴⁾ including: a meeting of the Informal Contact Group of Secretariats (ICGS) (Geneva, January); and ICGS study team meetings on market integration, industrial integration, and agricultural integration and co-operation (Geneva, 27 January).

A meeting of the Intergovernmental Follow-up and Co-ordination Committee (Tunis, Tunisia, 5-10 September) recommended that: the flow of information should be encouraged between the economic groupings and the Chairman of the Group of 77 in New York; those groupings be encouraged to strengthen ICGS; they be invited to attend technical meetings of the Group of 77 on ECDC, to appoint a liaison officer with the Group's Chairman, and to consider the results of technical meetings under the 1981 Caracas Programme of Action⁽⁵⁷⁾ in formulating their work programmes; ICGS be invited to explore capacities of economic groupings for interregional ECDC activities; and those groupings be further encouraged to co-operate among themselves.

Other 1983 meetings under UNCTAD auspices included a meeting enabling the developing countries participating in the negotiations on a global system of trade preferences inter alia to define the nature, scope and extent of the support requested from UNCTAD (see Chapter IV of this section); and an expert group meeting on energy co-operation among economic co-operation and integration organizations (see Chapter X of this section).

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Report, 1983⁽⁵⁸⁾ also considered ECDC and gave a preliminary analysis of trends in and prospects for trade among developing countries, and of financial flows. It concluded: that considerable potential existed for further initiatives in financial co-operation that could underpin future co-operation in trade and related areas, such as the establishment of joint ventures; that further orientation of imports towards greater collective self-reliance in industrial inputs for the agricultural sector would increase the developing countries' aggregate growth rate but, as this growth would accrue mainly to countries with a broad industrial base, specific corrective measures would be required; that closer mutual trade and financial links could yield indirect benefits in the form of increased bargaining strength vis-à-vis Governments and enterprises in developed countries; and that options towards effective collective self-reliance would need to be complemented by far-reaching policy measures to be taken by developing countries as a group to reinforce initiatives in trade and finance, with joint action in transport and communications being necessary in certain cases before trade policy measures could become effective in stimulating mutual trade.

CDP recommendations. Addressing the issue of ECDC or "South-South co-operation" at its April 1983 session, CDP⁽¹⁾ noted that promotion of trade among developing countries seemed to hold special promise in reciprocal intra-industry trade which combined gains from trade with economies of scale. Agreements to allocate new industries in accordance with a pattern of allocation were necessary and could be implemented by lifting import restrictions only for the country to which the product had been assigned and by sharing the cost of protecting infant industries. The number of industries and products allocated among participants should continue to be limited, CDP stated.

Continued and enlarged access to international financial markets would be important in promoting reciprocal trade flows among developing countries. However, regional and subregional financial institutions had a great responsibility in financing trade expansion and should enable multilateral bond flotations and bank borrowing by groups of developing countries which would pool the risks. Payments unions, by which members pooled part of their foreign reserves and settled mutual transactions with minimal use of outside currencies, had renewed appeal in view of current foreign exchange shortages.

CDP was convinced of the large potential gains to be derived from closer co-operation in trade and finance among developing countries but believed that a third world secretariat was necessary for such co-operation and to serve them in international negotiations.

ACTION BY UN PRINCIPAL ORGANS

The question of ECDC was dealt with in several December 1983 Assembly resolutions. In resolution 38/151, the Assembly reaffirmed the need for the United Nations system to support developing countries' efforts to enhance economic and technical co-operation among themselves for the development of energy resources.

The United Nations system was requested to support and assist developing countries' efforts for technical and economic co-operation among themselves regarding new and renewable sources of energy in resolution 38/169 on immediate implementation of the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy.⁽⁵⁹⁾

In its resolution 38/158, the Assembly called on the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to give priority support to economic and technical co-operation among developing countries with regard to food and agriculture. A similar call to the competent entities of the United Nations system had been made by the Economic and Social Council on 29 July (resolution 1983/71).

In resolution 38/201 on liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund, the Assembly decided that 12 per cent of the remaining balance of the Fund should be channelled through UNDP for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC. Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries was the main item discussed at Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and ACC (Geneva, 4 and 5 July).⁽⁶⁰⁾ General issues discussed were: the importance of ECDC and technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC), particularly in the context of the world economic crisis; the role and work of the United Nations in those areas; practical application of concepts; and the obstacles encountered in implementation.

There was widespread agreement on the fundamental importance of ECDC and TCDC for the achievement of developing countries' goals and it was unanimously underlined that they should reinforce other forms of international co-operation.

While it was agreed that the United Nations system had an important role as catalyst, it was generally recognized that the developing countries themselves were responsible for the promotion, support and implementation of ECDC and TCDC concepts. That the regional commissions had an important role to play, particularly regarding regional co-operation, was also agreed.

There was disagreement as to whether additional resources or more efficient use of existing resources would enable more effective implementation of ECDC and TCDC activities in the United Nations system. Other obstacles encountered in the application of ECDC and TCDC included some divergence of interpretation and lack of definitional precision regarding the concepts, and lack of overall perspective defining major issues and providing a framework for coherent planning and programming of activities.

It was agreed that the United Nations organizations would review their work on ECDC and TCDC and that ACC would submit a report thereon to CPC, in order to provide Governments with a comprehensive picture of what was being done.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1983/50, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on economic and technical co-operation among developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, containing the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in which, inter alia, the Assembly stressed that economic and technical co-operation among developing countries based on the principle of collective self-reliance constituted a dynamic and vital component of an effective restructuring of international economic relations,

Recognizing that the primary responsibility for activities in economic and technical co-operation rests with the developing countries and that there is an increasing political commitment on the part of those States towards the implementation of programmes in economic and technical co-operation,

Noting the initiatives taken in this regard within the framework of the Caracas Programme of Action adopted by the High-level Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Caracas from 13 to 19 May 1981,

Noting also resolution 139(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development concerning economic co-operation among developing countries, which was adopted by consensus,

Reaffirming the role of the organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, competent regional and subregional organizations of developing countries, as well as the developed countries, to support the full implementation of programmes in economic and technical co-operation as a contribution towards attaining the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Emphasizing the importance of enhancing awareness of the considerable potential for activities in economic and technical co-operation, through the exchange of information and the conduct of in-depth social and economic analyses, with a view to highlighting achievements and problems and proposing international policies for dealing with them,

1. Takes note of the agreement by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination at the eighteenth series of Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to carry out a review of the work in the area of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, with a view to improving the co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations system in this field and to making them more responsive to the needs of developing countries, and to report thereon to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination after the nineteenth series of Joint Meetings;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the cross-organizational programme analysis of the activities of the United Nations system in economic and technical co-operation, scheduled for review by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in 1985, is carried out with due regard to the support provided by the United Nations system towards the implementation of the Caracas Programme of Action, in accordance with the mandates adopted by the organizations of the United Nations system;

3. Recommends that the initial report on the cross-organizational programme analysis requested by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

4. Further recommends that the work programmes and plans of the organizations of the United Nations system should be presented in such a manner as to identify clearly activities in economic and technical co-operation carried out by those organizations, in compliance with General Assembly resolutions 31/119 of 16 December 1976, 32/180 of 19 December 1977, 33/195 of 29 January 1979 and 34/202 of 19 December 1979 and that information on activities in economic and technical co-operation should be submitted periodically to Member States;

5. Invites the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies and United Nations bodies, in the light of their mandates, to pay particular attention to the assessment of their capacities and potentials for the promotion of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries and to suggest, as appropriate, ways and means of strengthening the activities in this field in their respective organizations, and to play an active role in supporting the efforts of the developing countries to implement economic co-operation programmes among themselves, as a contribution towards the attainment of the objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to develop, within existing resources, activities in the departments concerned, including the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, in the field of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, while avoiding duplication with activities carried out by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme and other competent bodies and organizations of the United Nations system; the World Economic Survey should in future contain, on a regular basis, in-depth reviews of activities in economic co-operation among developing countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/50

28 July 1983 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/120/Add.1) without vote, 27 July (meeting 19); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1983/C.3/L11/Rev.1), based on informal consultations on draft by Bangladesh for Group of 77 (E/1983/C.3/L11), orally amended by Chairman; agenda item 19.
Meeting number. ESC 40.

The text approved by the Third Committee differed in a number of respects from the draft submitted by the Group of 77.

Changes included the addition of the fourth preambular paragraph and the rewording of several operative paragraphs. By paragraph 1 of the Group's text, the Council would have welcomed the commitment undertaken by ACC to intensify its efforts in economic and technical co-operation. Paragraph 2 had referred to the cross-organizational analysis scheduled for review in 1984 and had omitted the final phrase "in accordance with the mandates adopted by the organizations of the United Nations system". Paragraph 5 was originally two separate paragraphs, in one of which the Secretary-General would have been requested to play a more active role in promoting and co-ordinating economic and technical co-operation activities and reference to the International Development Strategy had been omitted. In paragraph 6 (formerly paragraph 7), the Council would have requested the Secretary-General to strengthen existing activities; omitted were the phrase "within existing resources" and the reference to avoiding duplication of activities with other United Nations bodies.

In another resolution of 28 July (1983/56), the Council requested the Committee on Natural Resources to discuss at its 1985 session the identification of new possibilities for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries concerning natural resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In its 20 December resolution (38/227 B) on co-ordination within the United Nations system, the Assembly requested CPC and the Economic and Social Council in 1984 to review the initial report on the cross-organizational programme analysis of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

Co-operation among regional commissions

Report of the Secretary-General. In June 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report⁽⁶¹⁾ on the promotion of programmes of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries by the United Nations regional commissions. This subject had been recommended for the Council's discussion in 1983 by the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, in compliance with a July 1982 decision⁽⁶²⁾ by which the Council had decided to identify each year a subject relating to interregional co-operation for consideration under its agenda item on regional co-operation.

In the light of the prevailing international economic situation, the report's conclusions and recommendations included a list of important issues of immediate concern to developing countries, such as food security, food and agricultural production, energy sources development, fair and equitable prices for primary exports, technology exchange, identification of commodities for inter-regional trade, co-operation in balance of trade and payments adjustments, and operational transport programmes.

There was a need, the report stated, for a facility to develop a portfolio of projects for joint ventures among developing countries and provide training to officials concerned with co-operative projects.

Other recommendations included a proposal that an inter-secretariat meeting of the regional commissions and other United Nations agencies be held to develop further the scope of issues discussed and identify projects for interregional co-operation; the Council might wish to call on potential sources to support immediate steps to be taken by the regional commissions in the areas of priority concern, and might also wish to underscore the need for an adequate and timely response by member Governments and the United Nations system towards meeting the regional commissions' requirements for implementing projects and programmes at the interregional level.

Meeting of executive secretaries of regional commissions. Promotion of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries by the regional commissions was discussed during 1983 at a meeting of the executive secretaries of the five regional commissions (Geneva, 11 and 12 July). Reporting in July to the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁶³⁾ the Secretary-General said that the executive secretaries agreed unanimously that the inter-secretariat meeting proposed for consideration by the Council,⁽⁶¹⁾ would be essential to achieve optimal co-ordination of activities between different components of the United Nations system.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1983/66 without vote.

Promotion of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1982/174 of 30 July 1982 concerning interregional co-operation, by which it requested the executive secretaries of the regional commissions to submit to the Council at its annual organizational session their joint recommendations for the identification of a subject related to interregional co-operation, of common interest to all regions,

Recalling also that, in its resolution 2043(LXI) of 5 August 1976 concerning the strengthening of the regional commissions, it recognized, without prejudice to the special needs and conditions of each region, that the regional commissions, with their experience in promoting regional and subregional co-operation, were the appropriate institutions within the United Nations to act as centres for the formulation, co-ordination and implementation of programmes for the promotion also of interregional co-operation,

Recalling further the mandate provided for the regional commissions by the General Assembly in section IV of the annex to its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, relating to structures for regional co-operation, in which it stated that the regional commissions should be enabled to play their role fully as the main general economic and social development centres within the United Nations system for their respective regions and, as a consequence of that role, inter alia, urged the commissions, taking fully into account the relevant global policy decisions of the competent United Nations organs, to intensify their efforts, with the assistance of the competent organizations of the United Nations system and at the request of Governments concerned, to strengthen and enlarge economic co-operation among developing countries at the subregional, regional and interregional levels,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for economic co-operation among developing countries and of the United Nations Development Programme for technical co-operation among developing countries,

Reaffirming the role of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation as stipulated in General Assembly resolution 32/197,

Having due regard to the Caracas Programme of Action adopted by the High-level Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Caracas from 13 to 19 May 1981, which provides the objectives, priorities and framework for activity relating to economic co-operation among developing countries,

Conscious of the fact that the regional commissions, by virtue of their location and multidisciplinary approach, have been called upon to initiate and implement a rapidly expanding range of projects and programmes involving co-operation among developing countries in all regions,

Noting that the Secretary-General, at the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, held on 4 and 5 July 1983, stated that the regional commissions had an important role in promoting co-operation among countries at the regional and interregional levels and reaffirmed the commitment of the United Nations bodies and programmes involved to supporting the efforts of developing countries to strengthen and implement their programmes of economic and technical co-operation,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the promotion of programmes of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries by the regional commissions, prepared pursuant to Council decision 1982/174,

1. Reaffirms the important role of the regional commissions in the promotion of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, including the identification of areas for practical co-operation and the initiation, co-ordination and implementation of co-operative programmes and projects, as appropriate;

2. Calls upon States Members of the United Nations to provide their support to the regional commissions to meet those responsibilities effectively;

3. Further calls upon the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, in the light of the responsibility of the commissions for the exercise of team leadership at the regional level, as stipulated by the General Assembly in resolution 32/197, to organize periodic consultations between their respective commissions and United Nations organizations and entities and specialized agencies active at the regional and interregional levels, with a view to ensuring the effective co-ordination of projects and programmes carried out under the auspices of the bodies involved for the promotion of co-operation among developing countries at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, those periodic consultations to take place on the occasion of meetings already scheduled within the United Nations system;

4. Takes note of the conclusion in the report of the Secretary-General on the promotion of programmes of interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries by the regional commissions that urgent action should be taken, in particular with regard to the areas of immediate concern to the developing countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps to ensure co-ordination and co-operation in the preparation and implementation of relevant programmes and activities of the regional commissions for interregional co-operation among developing countries;

6. Recommends the General Assembly:

(a) To continue to provide appropriate resources to enable the regional commissions to mobilize and to ensure their existing capability to meet effectively their responsibility for programme formulation, implementation and co-ordination in regard to subregional, regional and interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries;

(b) To request the Secretary-General to keep the Assembly informed, through the Economic and Social Council, on a continuing basis, of progress made by the Organization in the promotion of subregional, regional and interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/66

29 July 1983 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/1231 without vote, 27 July (meeting 25); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1983/C.1/L.31), based on informal consultations on draft by Bangladesh, for Group of 77 (E/1983/C.1/L.20); agenda item 7. Meeting number: ESC 41.

The text approved by the First Committee differed from the Group of 77 draft in a number of respects. Added to the second preambular paragraph were the phrases "without prejudice to the special needs and conditions of each region" and "with their experience in promoting regional and subregional co-operation". Added to the third preambular paragraph were the phrases "taking fully into account the relevant global policy decisions of the competent United Nations organs" and "with the assistance of the competent organizations of the United Nations system and at the request of Governments concerned". The fourth and fifth preambular paragraphs were also added to the final text.

Paragraph 2 of the earlier draft would have had the Council call on "all" States Members to provide support to the regional commissions. Paragraph 3 did not include the final phrase stating that periodic consultations would take place on the occasion of scheduled meetings. Paragraph 4 would have had the Council endorse the conclusion in the Secretary-General's report rather than take note of it.

By paragraph 5, the Council would have requested the Secretary-General to make appropriate inter-secretariat arrangements to ensure co-ordination and co-operation among the regional commissions in the preparation and implementation of relevant programmes and activities for interregional co-operation among developing countries, including the organization of an inter-secretariat meeting of the regional commissions and other relevant agencies and programmes of the United Nations system.

In paragraph 6, the Council would have recommended that the Assembly provide appropriate resources, rather than continue to provide them, and that it request the Secretary-General to keep the Assembly informed, through the Council, on an ongoing and continuing basis, of progress made.

Economic and social trends and policy

Economic reports prepared by the United Nations Secretariat in 1983 focused on the elusiveness of world economic recovery and the effect of the continuing recession on the developing countries. In addition to two major reports, which were submitted as background documents for the annual discussion of international economic and social policy in the Economic and Social Council and the Trade and Development Board, the world economic crisis was also discussed in documents prepared for UNCTAD VI (see Chapter IV of this section).

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic Survey 1983,⁽¹⁾ prepared by DIESA and issued in mid-1983, reported that the world economy had remained in the grip of recession during 1982 and, despite prospects of a mild recovery in the main industrial countries, the outlook for developing countries was bleak.

The Survey, which was based on information available to the Secretariat as at 31 March, pointed out that the economic performance of most developing countries in 1982 was worse than the poor record of 1981: per capita income fell by close to 3 per cent, growth in agricultural output was weak and the decline in industrial activity was unprecedented. Since 1979, developing countries had seen their growth rates decline. In 1982, however, for the first time in 40 years, their aggregate output actually fell. According to preliminary estimates, average growth rates of gross domestic product (GDP) fell from 0.6 per cent in 1981 to -0.7 per cent in 1982. In the net energy-exporting developing countries, policies veered towards retrenchment as export revenues fell abruptly because of weakened demand for oil. Weakening export receipts and growing cautiousness in international financial markets tightened the balance of payments for most developing countries and, for several of them with large external debts, the situation became critical in the second half of 1982. Only South and East Asia (particularly the more industrialized exporters of manufactures) increased their per capita output levels, although their aggregate rate of growth slackened. For many developing countries, international reserves were at unprecedented low levels, export earnings were unlikely to recover strongly in the near future and the outlook for 1983 remained bleak.

In 1982, most developed market economies experienced falling or stagnant levels of real output, sharply rising unemployment, very high real interest rates, record numbers of business insolvencies, continuing weak demand for private investment, large fiscal deficits, and a general weakening of currencies vis-à-vis the United States dollar. The average growth rate of GDP for these countries for 1982 was estimated at -0.3 per cent. A modest recovery to about 2 per cent was forecast for 1983, making it the fourth successive year of sluggish performance. By the end of 1982, the number of unemployed in this group of countries soared to 32 million—a record average of 8.5 per cent of the civilian labour force, with only Japan maintaining a low rate of 2.3 per cent. The severe reduction in economic activity was felt most by industry. Rigidity of wage costs, together with downward pressures on producer prices and the high cost of financing inventories, reduced corporate profit margins in some developed market economies, particularly the United States. In the major industrial countries there was an average reduction in inflation of 2 to 3 percentage points, measured in terms of consumer prices, while in the smaller countries the decline was only marginal. The difference could be attributed largely to the varying impact of trade price changes.

Although 1982 was the fourth consecutive year of below-plan output levels and slow growth in the centrally planned economies, economic activity in those countries was more buoyant than in other major groups of developed or developing market economies. The growth in aggregate output of this group virtually equalled that of 1981, namely 2.5 per cent. In the Eastern European countries, aggregate economic activity declined marginally; Poland had its fourth consecutive year of negative growth and the USSR's aggregate growth decelerated to 2.6 per cent. Forecasts for 1983 suggested that most of the European centrally planned economies would not fulfil their five-year plan (1981-1985) targets. The Asian planned economies regained substantial growth during 1982 in both industry and agriculture in spite of shortages of skilled workers and materials, the latter being caused partly by import constraints. China achieved a 5 per cent rate of growth because of good grain and cash crops, accelerated coal output and successful adjustment to external constraints. China's 1983 plan envisaged that growth rates of aggregate output, of industry and of agriculture would be 4 per cent.

The Survey stated that the prevailing economic situation had reminded countries of how much more interrelated their economies had become. It was not novel for the external environment virtually to eliminate any room for manoeuvre in economic policy in individual developing countries, but it was notable that the vigour of recovery in individual developed countries was also severely constrained by external circumstances. If the uncertain recovery could not be translated into sustained growth, the interdependence linking developing and developed countries would increasingly be seen as an impediment to growth and cause for pursuit of alternative patterns of industrialization.

International trade and finance issues (see Chapter IV of this section) and development and economic co-operation (p. 402) were also addressed in the Survey.

A supplement to the Survey⁽²⁾ contained articles on recent experience in economic co-operation among developing countries and possibilities for progress in the 1980s, some effects of rising public expenditure in developed market economies, and the impact of workers' remittances on the balance of payments.

In a pessimistic assessment, the Trade and Development Report, 1983⁽³⁾ stated that, despite unmistakable signs of recovery in some major developed market economies, the outlook for the world economy was uncertain at best, and the immediate outlook for the developing countries was grim. This assessment could be altered if the international community adopted and vigorously implemented policy measures to reinforce recovery in those countries where it had already begun and to reactivate the economies of the developing countries.

The Report, which was based on information and data available in June 1983, stated that the world economy continued in crisis. The terms of trade of primary commodities remained depressed, prospects for the volume of traded goods remained highly uncertain, interest rates remained high compared to inflation rates, and difficulties of managing external debt increased as access to capital markets worsened.

In the developed market economies, unemployment continued to increase, pressure for increased protectionism had emerged, and government budgets were strained, leading several countries to cut back official development assistance and domestic social programmes. Capital formation growth rates were also sharply reduced, which retarded the restructuring of these countries' economies.

The effect of the world-wide recession on the developing countries had been to bring their growth to a standstill. The growth of debt relative to export earnings, combined with high real interest rates, had progressively reduced the possibility of financing for any significant length of time the large deficits which had emerged. Immediate international measures were needed to allow prompt acceleration of growth in developing countries. This process, together with additional measures in the developed market economies, designed in some cases to reduce fiscal deficits and in others to stimulate further demand, could underpin the fragile world recovery which appeared to be under way.

The world economic crisis had also compounded problems of economic planning in the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. Their efforts to restructure their economies had been set back by the emergence of external financial constraints in a number of them, causing them to reduce their demand for imports by constraining consumption or slowing investment while enlarging the share of investment allocated to export industries.

The Report reflected the view that recovery in the developed market economies would continue during 1984. That assessment contained a large element of uncertainty, however, since failure to buttress the incipient recovery could reduce growth prospects for both developed and developing countries, particularly towards the end of 1984. On the other hand, immediate measures in favour of developing countries could increase their growth rates and those measures, combined with domestic policy measures in the developed market economies, could accelerate growth in those countries as well.

Other documents on the world economic crisis included two prepared for UNCTAD VI. A report by UNCTAD's Secretary-General on development and recovery: the realities of the new interdependence⁽⁴⁾ gave some economic indicators which it described as alarming. In the developing countries, the growth rate of gross national product for 1982 was even lower than the 1981 rate of only 1.5 per cent, total external debt mounted to over $600 billion, commodity prices plummeted in real terms to the lowest level in 45 years, investment and consumption were being curtailed with consequences for current employment and future growth, and, in 1981 and 1982, apart from the oil exporters, they had lost $34 billion through a decline in their terms of trade. In the developed market economies, growth rates averaged 1 per cent over those two years, and investment and employment declined with the unemployed exceeding 30 million. In the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, growth rates declined to less than 2 per cent.

In 1981 and 1982, the report stated, world trade had stagnated and capital flows contracted. The systems that had sustained international economic relations during the post-war years in the areas of money, finance and trade were themselves in crisis.

A policy paper on the current world economic crisis and perspectives for the 1980s,⁽⁷⁾ prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat, stated that the world economic crisis threatened the economic future of all countries and, although there were signs of improvement in some major industrial countries, it was likely to be too slow to alleviate the underlying malaise.

The impact of the crisis on the development of developing countries had been dramatic: output per capita stagnated in 1980, declined by 2 per cent in 1981 and fell by more than 3 per cent in 1982. There was a danger that these countries would face continued difficulties in financing their balance-of-payments deficits, which would prevent them from realizing their growth potential for many years to come. Among major adjustments required to relax external constraint were: the need to overcome low commodity prices, high interest rates, sluggish demand for exports, reduced capital flows and rising protectionism; the need for shifts in the global pattern of resource allocation; and additional investment in developing countries requiring greater mobilization of domestic savings and an increase in external financial assistance. Such efforts, however, had to be accompanied by a swift upturn of the world economy and by an accelerated pace of structural change.

In contrast to the developing countries, slower growth in the developed countries was much more attributable to endogenous factors, including cyclical ones related primarily to policy choices regarding demand and longer-term ones related to the underlying potential for growth. The policy of using demand contraction to deal with cost-push inflation had proved costly to the developed market economies in terms of unemployment, output and investment, and had seriously affected the payments position of developing countries. A change in monetary policy, particularly in the United States, involving an attempt to control the money supply, resulted in an abrupt rise in interest rates for both domestic and foreign borrowers. The change in monetary policy in the United States caused the effective exchange rate of the dollar to rise by one third, which in turn had major consequences for the competitiveness of that country's industry, for energy prices in other countries and for the debt-servicing burden of developing countries.

Slower growth also characterized the economies of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. Although the external sector of these countries was small, the slower growth of their trade owing to recession in the developed market economies and the growth of protectionism had affected their overall economic performance. Thus, the general trend in their economies had been similar since the mid-1970s to the trend in many other countries. A return to a faster growth trend would require substantial investment and greater flexibility of the planning system and of sectoral allocation of resources.

Regarding the short-term outlook, the paper said that, despite indications of recovery in the developed market economies, unemployment was likely to continue to rise. The weak recovery could bring about an expansion of world trade of some 1 to 2 per cent—not sufficient to reverse the decline in world market prices. The outlook for socialist countries of Eastern Europe was for a continuation of modest growth. External trade would continue to suffer from weakness of world markets and for some countries servicing of external debt would remain a burden. For the developing countries, the modest growth in the developed market economies was not expected to be sufficient to improve their export performance in 1983. With stagnating or falling export earnings, high debt-service burdens, restraints on fresh borrowing and the need to rebuild international reserves, little growth in import volumes was likely. A continued fall in output and in real income per capita for the third consecutive year was likely—a situation without precedent since the Great Depression.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1983/177, adopted without vote on an oral proposal by its President, the Economic and Social Council took note of the World Economic Survey and other reports submitted in connection with its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including those prepared on current economic conditions in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and Western Asia (see Chapter VIII of this section).

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 28 July 1983, the Council took note of the following documents:

- (a) World Economic Survey 1983: Current Trends and Policies in the World Economy;
- (b) Report of the Committee for Development Planning on its nineteenth session;
- (c) Summary of economic conditions in Africa;

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/177

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 3.
Meeting numbers. ESC 17-30, 38, 40.

By decision 1983/130, the Council also took note of a report of the Secretary-General on some social trends in developing countries and the influence of current economic conditions (see Chapter XIII of this section).

Population, natural resources, environment and development

An Expert Group on Population, Resources, Environment and Development (Geneva, 24-29 April 1983), one of four expert groups convened as part of preparations for the 1984 International Conference on Population, discussed current and projected trends in those areas and made a number of recommendations concerning food and nutrition, resources and the environment, economic and social development, integration in policy, planning and programmes, and research (see Chapter XIV of this section).

In an October report,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly about progress achieved in implementing the programme of work on interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development, which had been initiated in response to a 1981 Assembly request.⁽⁷⁾

A general trust fund for the programme had been established by the Secretary-General in June 1981⁽⁸⁾ to provide financing for co-ordinated research and for the commissioning of specific activities. As at 31 August 1982, three Member States (Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Cameroon) had contributed a total of $164,080 to the fund. In addition, at the request of Sweden, the fund had transferred to it the balance ($105,195) of the trust fund for the 1979 United Nations symposium on the interactions between resources, environment population and development.⁽⁹⁾

The report gave details of two projects for which financing from the trust fund had been approved: the carrying capacity of Kenya—interactions between population, food, energy and material standards—and the first phase of a project on deforestation of the Himalayan foothills.

The Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, who had been entrusted with management of the trust fund, had decided to postpone the proposed establishment of an advisory body to assist in overall guidance of the programme until the fund's resources became more substantial. Inter-agency co-ordination continued to be arranged through CCSQ(PROG).

Among proposals for future action mentioned in the report were: obtaining increased resources for the trust fund, continuing research studies, and identifying, selecting and screening projects proposed for financing. This last activity would be carried out by CCSQ(PROG), with final approval to remain the prerogative of the Director-General.

On 19 December, in decision 38/442, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and decided to keep the matter under review.

Development planning, education, administration and information

During 1983, various aspects of development planning, education, administration and information were considered by United Nations bodies, including CDP, which considered the issue in the context of the world economic crisis.

Preparation of educational materials for the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985) continued and consideration was given to preparing a kit for International Youth Year (1985). The Assembly decided to continue the computerized development information system operated by the Information Systems Unit (ISU) of DIESA and took note of a suggestion that ISU be established as a distinct unit within the Dag Hammarskjöld Library.

Development planning

CDP activities. The Committee for Development Planning held its nineteenth session at United Nations Headquarters from 18 to 27 April 1983.⁽¹⁾

Composed of 24 experts appointed by the Economic and Social Council, CDP examined the state of the world economy and suggested improvements in international economic co-operation. It considered reports by its November 1982 Working Group on Development Prospects⁽²⁾ and its January 1983 Working Group on Development Patterns and Styles in the Context of Longer-term World Economic Prospects. Ways in which developing countries could attain greater autonomy and freedom of manoeuvre in the international economic arena, including economic co-operation among developing countries, were also considered, as were measures in favour of the least developed and other low-income developing countries and the identification of the least developed among the developing countries (see under relevant subject headings in this chapter).

Unified approach to development planning

Responding to a 1981 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in January 1983 a report on a unified approach to development analysis and planning.⁽⁴⁾ The Assembly had requested that, based on government information, the Secretary-General report in 1983, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, on experience acquired in applying such an approach in socio-economic development at the national level as well as in activities of United Nations economic and social bodies. The Secretary-General stated that, by 1 October 1982, six replies had been received from Governments containing their views on the subject, one in the form of official publications and another communicating that no information could be provided. In view of the paucity of replies, it was not considered feasible to prepare a report as requested.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 4 February 1983, the Council, by decision 1983/101 on its basic programme of work for 1983 and 1984, transmitted the Secretary-General's report⁽⁴⁾ to the General Assembly without debate. On 11 May, the Chairman of the Council's First Committee stated that the Committee's understanding was that any additional replies received by the Secretariat, as well as any future replies that it might receive on the question, would be brought to the attention of the Assembly. Delegations could return to the question at the Council's July 1983 session in the context of considering the review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see above).

On 26 May, the Council adopted resolution 1983/11, in which it resolved to urge that high priority be given to analysing the interrelationship of social and economic policies, and called for specific action by the United Nations and Member States in this area. Also on 26 May, the Council adopted resolution 1983/13 on the unified approach to development analysis and planning in the field of social integration through popular participation, by which it requested the Secretary-General to arrange a study on the subject and to inform the Commission for Social Development of the results.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Assembly on 19 December adopted resolution 38/179 without vote.

Unified approach to development analysis and planning

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, containing the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, 3409(XXX) of 28 November 1975, concerning a unified approach to development analysis and planning, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and 37/202 of 20 December 1982, concerning the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolution 1747(LIV) of 16 May 1973, which contains recommendations concerning a unified approach to development analysis and planning,

Believing that development is an integral process, embodying both economic and social objectives,

Further believing that a unified approach to analysis and planning of development at the national level is a possible and effective tool for promoting economic, social and human development and for providing increasing opportunities to all people for a better life,

Reaffirming that each State has the sovereign and inalienable right to choose its economic and social system in accordance with the will of its people and without outside interference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the status of replies received from Governments on the experience acquired in applying a unified approach to the process of socio-economic development;

2. Reaffirms its decision 36/405 of 19 November 1981 to continue consideration of the question of a unified approach to development analysis and planning, taking into account its importance for the process of development, as stressed in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

3. Invites interested countries to send information to the Secretary-General on the experience acquired in applying a unified approach to the process of socio-economic development at the national level;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to study the question of a unified approach to the analysis and planning of development, in order to make available to all States the national and international experience gained in this field;

(b) To prepare, on the basis of the information offered by interested countries, a report on the application by Governments of a unified approach to development analysis and planning, taking into account both the experience gained in this field in the United Nations economic and social organs concerned and the results of the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

(c) To submit the report to the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1985, and to the General Assembly for consideration at its fortieth session, with a view to its utilization as an input in the future reviews and appraisals of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/7041) without vote, 28 November (meeting 52); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.78), based on informal consultations on draft by German Democratic Republic (A/C.2/38/L.49); agenda item 80 (c).

The text approved by the Second Committee differed in a number of respects from the earlier draft by the German Democratic Republic, which was subsequently withdrawn.

By this text, the Assembly would, in the fourth preambular paragraph, have described the unified approach as "one of the most effective tools" for promoting development. In paragraph 2, it would have reaffirmed its decision, without specifying which one, to continue considering the question regularly. By paragraph 3, the Assembly would have invited Governments that had not done so to submit information to the Secretary-General. In sub-paragraph 4 (a), "in particular developing countries" would have been added after "all States". In sub-paragraph 4 (b), the Assembly would have requested that a comprehensive report be prepared on both the application by Governments of a unified approach and the application of that approach in the regional commissions and other United Nations bodies concerned, taking into account the results of the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy. Sub-paragraph 4 (c) would also have referred to a "comprehensive" report and would have omitted reference to future reviews and appraisals of the Strategy.

Two other paragraphs were also included in the earlier text. By these, the Assembly would have requested the Economic and Social Council to include a separate item on a unified approach to development analysis and planning in the provisional agenda of its second regular session of 1985 and decided to include the same item in that of the Assembly's 1985 session.

Other activity. In December, the incorporation of women into development planning and programming was discussed at a seminar organized by the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (see Chapter XIX of this section).

Public sector in economic development

Report of the Secretary-General. Responding to a 1979 General Assembly request,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in May 1983, through the Economic and Social Council, the second comprehensive report on the role of the public sector in the economic development of developing countries,⁽⁶⁾ the first having been prepared in 1979.

The report dealt with aspects of the role of the public sector specified by the Assembly in 1979: mobilizing national resources for economic and social development; planning, regulating and promoting other sectors; the role of public enterprises as the main instruments of the public sector and ways of increasing their efficacy; ways of strengthening the public sector as a possible means of developing appropriate national and international measures; and the exchange of experience and information among developing countries.

The report's conclusions stated that the public sector played a dominant role in the development of developing countries. It mobilized, in the form of government revenue or loans, a large proportion of a country's economic resources and in allocating them largely determined the main directions of economic and social development. In economies where the major financial institutions were government-owned, mobilization of resources in the private sector occurred through banks that were public enterprises; monetary and credit policies of the public sector contributed to decisions regarding the allocation of those resources.

Planning, laying down economic and social infrastructure, determining critical prices and regulating activities of other sectors comprised a powerful set of policy instruments at the command of the public sector. In many least-developed countries, the public sector constituted the principal institution for structural change, although scarcity of resources, institutional rigidities, domestic management capacity and international conditions substantially circumscribed its power.

With regard to public enterprises, the report noted that they were a source of strength to the public sector and were widely used as instruments of government policy, constituting an effective means of collaborating with other sectors of the economy. Problems concerning their efficacy as instruments of the public sector ranged from the need for clearer definition and articulation of objectives and the institution of systematic and useful methods of control and supervision to improved internal management.

Analysis, discussion and dissemination of information on accumulated experience of the role of the public sector in economic and social development could contribute to a better appreciation of it, the report concluded.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

As decided in 1981,⁽⁷⁾ the Economic and Social Council discussed the report of the Secretary-General at its July 1983 session. On 28 July, it adopted resolution 1983/61 without vote.

Role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1978/60 of 3 August 1978, 1978/75 of 8 November 1978, 1979/48 of 31 July 1979 and 1981/45 of 20 July 1981,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 34/137 of 14 December 1979, in which the Assembly, inter alia, invited the Secretary-General to continue his detailed study of the role of the public sector and to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive report to the Assembly at its thirty-eighth session, paying special attention to several aspects of the matter indicated in that resolution,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Noting that, in paragraph 31 of section II of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, it was stated that due account should be taken of the positive role of the public sector in mobilizing internal resources, formulating and implementing overall national development plans and establishing national priorities,

Bearing in mind that every State has the sovereign and inalienable right to choose its economic and social system in accordance with the will of its people, without outside interference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to study the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries and to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, a further comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, taking into account information supplied by Member States and comments and suggestions on the subject made by delegations at meetings of intergovernmental bodies, and, inter alia, paying special attention to the provisions of paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 34/137;

3. Reaffirms Council resolution 1978/60, in which it, inter alia, invited the regional commissions and other appropriate organizations of the United Nations system to assist the Secretary-General regularly in his continuing study of the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, while implementing the present resolution, to consider, if necessary, organizing, in close co-operation with competent bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, a seminar on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to include reference to the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries in the reports called for under General Assembly resolutions 37/202 and 37/204 of 20 December 1982.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the Assembly adopted decision 38/430 without vote.

Role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries.

General Assembly decision 38/430

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/701/Add.1) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 56; plenary 102.

Development administration

In 1983, the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) carried out a $10.9-million programme of assistance to Governments in public administration and finance. The programme encompassed personnel administration and training, institution building, administrative reform and improvement and financial management. The main source of funds was UNDP, which provided $8.7 million.

During the year, over 100 technical co-operation projects were executed in 66 developing countries, primarily in the areas of administrative reform, personnel administration and training, and financial and public enterprise management.

A study⁽⁸⁾ was issued based on the results of an interregional seminar on regulatory administration for promoting national development (Bangkok, Thailand, 9-13 May), organized by DTCD in collaboration with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and on research carried out by DTCD's Development Administration Division.

DTCD also convened an expert working group meeting on modern management and information systems for public administration in developing countries (New York, 12-16 December).⁽⁹⁾

Development education and information

Development education

At its April 1983 session,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC) reviewed the work of its Ad Hoc Working Group on Development Education, requested it to continue preparing a women and development education kit and continue to explore the possibility of an International Youth Year (1985) development education kit. JUNIC suggested that, in addition to providing its annual report, the Working Group consider focusing on one or two substantive development education issues in its 1984 presentation.

The United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs reported that its Advancement of Women Branch had made financial contributions to the JUNIC/Non-Governmental Organizations Sub-Group on Women and Development and would be the lead organization for preparing the following publications under the aegis of the sub-group: three JUNC development education kits on the principal objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985) (equality, development and peace); and 10 Decade notes on priority issues of the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the Decade. The Branch had made an allocation to the United Nations Department of Public Information for a television series on women and development, which it hoped could be used by educational institutions as well as television stations.

At its May/June session, CPC recommended⁽¹¹⁾ that JUNC, together with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, should study ways of strengthening co-operation in the field of development education.

Information Systems Unit

In response to a 1982 request by CPC,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽¹³⁾ on the Information Systems Unit in DIESA to CPC's May/June 1983 session. In 1982, CPC had noted a report submitted to it in response to a 1981 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁴⁾ and requested additional information on, inter alia, the use, value and cost of the computerized Development Information System (DIS) maintained by ISU, and the relationship between ISU and the bibliographic information systems of the regional commissions.

The report described the two major areas of ISU's work as: management and dissemination of unpublished information by means of DIS; and exchange of information through co-operation with the regional commissions and other information systems. DIS activities included collection, selection and analysis of documents and entry of bibliographical data into the computer, preparation of six issues per year of Development Information Abstracts, a journal which informed users of the latest items added to the DIS data base, and providing on-line searches, selective dissemination of information services, and copies of documents to users. While the DIS data base had increased by over 30 per cent, ISU costs had shrunk in all areas by 14 to 40 per cent.

Co-operation between ISU and the regional commissions was being carried out in the major areas of compatibility of data structure record format and bibliographical description; maintenance of a common indexing vocabulary—the trilingual (English, French, Spanish) Macrothesaurus for Information Processing in the Field of Economic and Social Development; and bibliographical data exchange. Arrangements had been made, the report said, for ISU to serve as a focal point for expanding, merging and distributing development-related data bases of the regional commissions and maintaining the common indexing vocabulary.

Also in response to the 1981 Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted a report⁽¹⁵⁾ by the Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems (ACCIS) evaluating the performance and utility of ISU. Annexed to the report was an assessment and review of ISU's programme, prepared by a consultant. ACCIS endorsed the consultant's conclusions and recommendations, in particular: establishing ISU as a distinct unit within the Dag Hammarskjöld Library; identifying ISU as a specific programme with identifiable budgetary support in the Library's programme and budget; continuing all current ISU features and services and the database merger programme and other co-ordination programme elements; and incorporating the Macrothesaurus project with the project for revision of the United Nations Bibliographic Information System Thesaurus.

In May, CPC noted with satisfaction progress made by ISU in increasing its productivity and advancing its work.⁽¹¹⁾ It felt that care should be taken that merging data bases of regional commissions and distributing to them the resulting products should contribute to proper co-ordination, information dissemination and strengthening of their information systems. The importance of ISU's continuing to collect valuable unpublished material and to co-operate with other information systems was recognized. CPC proposed that the Secretary-General examine integrating ISU within the Dag Hammarskjöld Library and report to CPC on his decision.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Rural and regional development

Rural and regional development activities continued throughout the United Nations system during 1983.

Rural development

The inter-agency Task Force on Rural Development, a body of ACC, met at Rome, Italy, from 11 to 13 April.⁽¹⁾ The publication that month of the first issue of the Task Force's newsletter was welcomed and improvements suggested for future issues. Since the newsletter contained accounts of each agency's work concerning rural development, the general progress report presented at the Task Force's meeting dealt with areas of common interest, such as the poverty-oriented focus and joint action. Main discussions centred on the three priority areas of work: joint action at the country and regional level; people's participation in rural development; and monitoring and evaluation of rural development.

Regarding inter-agency missions to countries requesting assistance on agrarian reform and rural development policies, several suggestions were made for more effective inter-agency preparation and follow-up and for the use of missions for better inter-agency co-ordination. Progress in establishing national co-ordinating mechanisms had been slow and it was agreed that priority be given to countries visited by inter-agency missions. It was recommended that efforts to establish United Nations working committees at country level be pursued. A 1983-1984 work programme approved by the Task Force included provision for regional inter-agency meetings and missions to individual countries.

An interregional seminar on integrated rural development was organized by DTCD at Shanghai, China, from 16 to 30 August.⁽²⁾ DTCD also organized an expert group meeting on monitoring and evaluation of rural development programmes at United Nations Headquarters from 6 to 14 September.⁽³⁾

ACTION BY UN PRINCIPAL ORGANS

By resolution 1983/10 of 26 May on social aspects of rural development, the Economic and Social Council called on Governments to give special attention to the social impact of democratic land reforms, promotion of co-operative movements, introduction of rural development planning, strengthening the role of qualified national personnel in rural development, and encouragement of popular participation in the development process in rural areas (see Chapter XIII of this section).

Calls for Governments to implement agrarian reform and rural development within national plans and objectives and in accordance with recommendations of the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development were made in Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/71 of 29 July and in General Assembly resolution 38/158 of 19 December, both of which dealt with food problems.

Regional development

Among publications issued during 1983 by the United Nations Centre for Regional Development (UNCRD) (Nagoya, Japan) was Administration of Regional and Local Development: Studies on Co-ordination. The periodicals Regional Development Dialogue, vol. 4, No. 1, and UNCRD Newsletter, No. 15, were also issued during the year.

Special economic areas

The General Assembly in 1983 took a number of actions aimed at trying to ease problems in special economic areas.

Addressing the needs of developing countries, the Assembly, in resolution 38/200, urged Governments to adopt immediate measures in specific economic areas and, in resolution 38/195, continued to monitor implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries.

The problems of land-locked developing countries, particularly in the transit and transport areas, were considered by UNCTAD. A draft resolution on the subject was referred by the Assembly, in decision 38/437, to its 1984 session. A renewed appeal for resources for the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries was made in resolution 38/174, while in decision 38/315, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's decision not to submit an appointment for the post of Executive Director of the Fund and in decision 38/319 deferred until 1984 the election of members of the Fund's Board of Governors.

The problems of island developing countries were also considered by UNCTAD.

Developing countries

In 1983, the General Assembly again took up the question of immediate measures in favour of developing countries and, among other things, reiterated its call for such measures made in December 1982.⁽¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As recommended by the Second Committee, the Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted without vote resolution 38/200.

Immediate measures in favour of the developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and in particular the policy measures envisaged in the Strategy,

Recalling further its resolution 37/252 of 21 December 1982 on immediate measures in favour of the developing countries,

Taking into account, inter alia, the immediate measures adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its sixth session, and noting related efforts in favour of developing countries by the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system,

Taking note of the Programme of Immediate Measures in Areas of Critical Importance to Developing Countries, contained in section V of the Economic Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, and the proposals contained in the Buenos Aires Platform, adopted at the Fifth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77, held from 28 March to 9 April 1983,

Taking note of the proposals on the immediate measures contained in the Declaration of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77, adopted in New York on 10 October 1983,

Noting that while effective action by the international community is indispensable for the creation of an environment that is fully supportive of the national and collective efforts of the developing countries for the realization of their development goals, the primary responsibility for the development of developing countries rests with those countries themselves,

Aware that certain economic indicators point to the recovery of some major developed market-economy countries, but that, while the recovery of the developed market-economy countries could be potentially beneficial to the developing countries, by itself it would not be sufficient and could be aborted unless policy measures address both the revitalization of the world economy and the reactivation of the development process in the developing world,

Gravely concerned about the present world economic climate of crisis and its negative impact on the developing countries and their development prospects,

Reiterating, in that context, the need for the immediate adoption of concrete measures in areas of critical importance to the developing countries,

Also aware, in that context, that both immediate and structural problems must be addressed fully and in a coherent manner,

1. Agrees that concrete immediate measures in favour of the developing countries should be taken in order to contribute to the easing of current economic problems, to promote the accelerated growth and development of the developing countries on a sustained basis and to promote the reactivation of the world economy;

2. Agrees that immediate measures within the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should include measures directed, inter alia, at progress in the following areas:

(a) Food and agriculture, including special food aid measures as required for seriously affected food-deficit countries in Africa;

(b) Money and finance, transfer of resources, including official development assistance, indebtedness and multilateral development activities;

(c) Trade and raw materials, including access to markets for the exports of developing countries, and urgent appropriate action in the area of commodities;

(d) Development of the energy resources of the developing countries;

(e) Implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

3. Urges all Governments, bearing in mind the particular contribution developed countries can make, to pursue effective negotiating efforts, within the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, with a view to the adoption of concrete measures in the areas described in paragraph 2 above;

4. Agrees that policy measures of an immediate nature should be taken into account in the review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

5. Requests the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in their areas of competence and in accordance with their decisions, to take the appropriate action necessary for the implementation of immediate measures in the areas referred to in paragraph 2 above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the executive heads of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.13) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.119), based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.87); agenda item 78. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 50, 56; plenary 104.

The draft approved by the Second Committee differed in several ways from that put forward by the Group of 77 and subsequently withdrawn.

In addition to drafting changes, the approved text added the fourth, seventh and eighth preambular paragraphs.

Other revisions included the deletion from the final text of references to continuing the concrete immediate measures within the framework of global negotiations, the establishment of a food security system, action on the international monetary system and assistance by the World Bank in energy resources development. Also deleted from the approved text was a request for a progress report on implementation of the resolution to be submitted to the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the International Development Strategy.

In another 20 December resolution (38/197), the Assembly dealt with economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries (see above).

Least developed countries

The special problems of the 36 officially-designated least developed countries (LDCs) were considered in several United Nations forums during 1983, including UNCTAD, the Governing Council of UNDP, the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO, ACC and the General Assembly.

Programme of Action for the 1980s

During 1983, the United Nations system continued to monitor the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, adopted in 1981 by the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries⁽²⁾ and endorsed later that year by the General Assembly.⁽³⁾

In response to a December 1982 request,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in October 1983 a report⁽⁵⁾ on steps taken to accelerate implementation of SNPA by the United Nations system and others concerned, in the light of the outcome of UNCTAD VI (see Chapter IV of this section) and other developments.

The report contained a brief account of recent economic events in LDCs and the short-term outlook for their economy, including action being taken by them to achieve SNPA targets. The report also included information on international support measures by organizations of the United Nations system and action outside the system. Follow-up and monitoring of the implementation of SNPA, including individual country review meetings, were reported on, with the importance of these meetings to the success of SNPA being strongly emphasized. One section of the report related to the outcome of UNCTAD VI with respect to SNPA implementation.

Despite the commitment by all concerned to SNPA, the report stated, the general economic situation of LDCs had further deteriorated and their living standards continued to be totally inadequate.

A number of the 36 LDCs⁽⁶⁾ had implemented SNPA: they had appointed a governmental focal point to review its implementation at the national level and decided on consultative arrangements required; 11 countries had prepared reports giving details of economic and financial strategies and objectives and external resource requirements, which were presented to country meetings with their development partners; and others were preparing such reports and making arrangements for country meetings. The importance of country review meetings for the implementation of SNPA was stressed and LDCs which had not held first meetings were advised to do so as soon as possible and to prepare for them effectively.

Within the United Nations system, LDCs had been accorded high priority, with the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation being responsible for system-wide mobilization and co-ordination. Operational activities of the system were essential in offsetting some inequalities in distributing official development assistance (ODA) to LDCs.

Attention was drawn to the serious resource situation of UNDP, the main source of multilateral technical co-operation to LDCs. Financial constraints faced by other agencies could also adversely affect their ability to assist LDCs. Therefore there was an urgent need for donor countries to provide substantially greater resources through UNDP, its Special Measures Fund for LDCs and the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF).

The report noted that, although the 1981 Conference on LDCs had urged donor countries to attain 0.15 per cent of their gross national product as ODA or to double their ODA to LDCs by 1985, a number of major donors had not met either target. Developed donor countries should implement fully and rapidly commitments undertaken in pursuance of Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX)⁽⁷⁾ and should respond positively to requests from individual LDCs for alleviation of their debt burden resulting from ODA loans. Noting an upsurge of debt types not covered by that resolution, the report stated in conclusion that urgent attention should be devoted to the problem.

In a report⁽⁸⁾ to the Economic and Social Council, CDP stated that, despite commitments made at the Conference on LDCs, little had been done to help them or other low-income developing countries whose position had deteriorated catastrophically in 1982. It observed that action could be taken in both IMF and the World Bank to assist those countries. Although the World Bank had announced a Special Assistance Programme (see PART TWO, Chapter VI) aimed at increasing programme lending in view of the gravity of the situation, the Bank's lending level had virtually stagnated in real terms during the previous three years. Noting that commitment to the International Development Association (IDA) had been weakened by actions and attitudes of some donors, CDP stated that it attached the greatest importance to speedy restoration of IDA to the full operational level previously agreed. In parallel with the eighth quota review of IMF, there was also a need for an early increase in the total capital of the World Bank.

Few bilateral donors had announced increases in levels of ODA, while some had reduced aid in real terms. Many developing countries were unable to secure essential items and their need for short-term balance-of-payments support was compelling.

CDP referred to the need to increase food-aid levels and targets and to the decline in UNDP resources. In connection with the need to improve efficiency of use of most forms of aid, CDP urged renewed international efforts for aid co-ordination, especially in Africa. Trading problems of low-income countries also deserved attention.

In accordance with an Economic and Social Council decision of February 1982,⁽⁹⁾ CDP considered the eligibility of Liberia for inclusion in the list of LDCs, based on new data and information supplied by its Government. Reporting to the Council,⁽⁸⁾ CDP concluded that Liberia was not eligible for inclusion in the list on the basis of standard criteria relating to per capita gross domestic product (GDP), share of manufacturing output in GDP and the adult literacy rate.

The Committee considered that an overall review of the list of LDCs should be undertaken and reiterated that the criteria used to identify LDCs deserved to be reappraised. It also indicated that no useful purpose would be served by referring further countries to it for identification as LDCs under the existing criteria.

UNDP action. Together with the World Bank, UNDP continued to serve as lead agency in organizing country review meetings, whose aim was to enable individual LDCs to consult with their aid partners on the recipient country's economic situation, on progress in SNPA implementation, on aid conditions and on needs for additional assistance. During 1983,⁽¹⁰⁾ such round-table review meetings were held, with UNDP assistance, for Benin and Djibouti; for Afghanistan, Bhutan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Maldives and Samoa in an Asia/Pacific round-table meeting for each country at Geneva; and for Somalia, organized by the World Bank with UNDP assistance.

Funds for this assistance, and for other activities benefiting LDCs, were provided by the UNDP Special Measures Fund for LDCs. Contributions to the Fund in 1983 totalled $16.1 million and eight Governments pledged $14.1 million for 1984. Expenditures on round-table conferences from the Fund were limited to $100,000 for each LDC.

(For 1983 payments and 1984 pledges to the Special Measures Fund, see Chapter II of this section: table "Contributions to UNDP, 1983 and 1984").

During the year, UNDP continued to give highest priority to assisting the poorest countries (for indicative planning figures and UNDP project expenditures relating to individual countries, see Chapter II of this section). In addition, by the end of the year the UNCDF programme was covering 41 countries comprising the 36 LDCs and five countries which the UNDP Governing Council directed should be given similar consideration. Contributions amounting to $24.2 million were received from UNCDF in 1983. New project commitments in LDCs during the year in the areas of basic needs and productive sector and economic infrastructure development amounted to $30 million, bringing total project commitments since the 1981 Conference on LDCs to $120 million.

In December, the UNDP Administrator established an LDC trust fund for a special contribution of $6,600,660 from the Netherlands.⁽¹¹⁾ The fund's objectives were to enhance the effectiveness of LDC round-table conferences, to mobilize additional resources to implement projects and programmes identified therein, and to contribute to achieving LDC development goals for which UNDP resources were lacking.

To improve implementation and follow-up of SNPA, the UNDP Governing Council, on 24 June,⁽¹²⁾ reiterated its appeal to States to increase assistance to LDCs through contributions to the Special Measures Fund and UNCDF, and through other channels. The Council urged the UNDP Administrator to continue to support SNPA implementation by acting as lead agency, when requested by Governments, in support of national consultation mechanisms. It also urged member States to give careful attention to round-table and donor conferences, contribute to the success of such conferences and follow through on pledges.

UNCTAD action. Following a debate in a sessional committee, UNCTAD's Trade and Development Board took note on 28 April⁽¹³⁾ of the report and agreed conclusions of the Second Meeting of Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of LDCs, convened by UNCTAD in October 1982.⁽¹⁴⁾

Responding to a December 1982 request,⁽⁴⁾ a report on progress in implementing SNPA⁽¹⁵⁾ was prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for UNCTAD VI (June/July 1983). It included a short description of the economic situation and prospects of LDCs and went on to describe actions undertaken by LDCs themselves and international support measures required to achieve SNPA objectives. Arrangements for follow-up and monitoring were also discussed. The report's conclusions and recommendations dealt with financial assistance, international commercial policy measures and economic co-operation among developing countries. An appeal was made to donors to fulfil promptly specific commitments made with respect to aid targets while others were urged to accept the SNPA target and implement it by 1985. An addendum to the report contained basic data in tabular form on LDCs.

On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent resolution 142(VI) on progress in implementing SNPA.⁽¹⁶⁾ Most of the provisions of this text were subsequently incorporated into General Assembly resolution 38/195 (see below). The Conference called on developing countries in a position to do so to assist LDCs, in the context of economic co-operation among developing countries (see above) and in the spirit of collective self-reliance, by giving preferential treatment to imports from LDCs; assisting LDCs to develop production potential in food, energy, etc.; providing under preferential terms results of scientific and technological development; providing increased flows of financial and technical assistance and goods; promoting and expanding joint ventures involving transfer of equipment and technology; exploring long-term arrangements to assist LDCs to achieve reasonable sales of products; strengthening subregional and regional co-operation arrangements; and assisting in developing human resources.

UNCTAD VI recognized the dependence of many LDCs on commodity exports for foreign exchange earnings, noted that developed countries' progress reports on ways to help LDCs offset damaging effects of fluctuations in commodity exports, as referred to in SNPA, had not been submitted, and urged submission of such reports by the end of the year. It also welcomed recommendations relating to facilitating trade of LDCs made in a November 1982 Ministerial Declaration by the Contracting Parties to GATT.⁽¹⁷⁾

The international community was urged to provide substantial financial and material assistance to LDCs in order to mitigate the effects of major man-made and natural disasters.

Stressing the importance of country review meetings, UNCTAD urged lead agencies to assist in preparing and convening them and requested donor and recipient countries to work with agencies to promote their success.

With reference to global monitoring of progress in implementing SNPA, specifically the 1985 mid-term review, the Conference recognized that UNCTAD's role was of great importance and requested its Secretary-General to ensure the effectiveness of the unit responsible.

A recommendation on ODA flows to LDCs was made in UNCTAD resolution 164(VI).

Resolution 142(VI), agreement on which was reached in consultations, was adopted after another draft on implementing SNPA contained in the Buenos Aires Platform—the final document of the Fifth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77 (Buenos Aires, 28 March-9 April)—was withdrawn.

The Buenos Aires Platform text⁽¹⁶⁾ differed from the Conference resolution in several respects. The Platform text included a call for donor countries to make substantial contributions to various funds and a request that IMF review principles on which conditionality rested and allocate substantial portions of special drawing rights (SDRs), trust fund facilities and compensatory financial facilities to LDCs, whereas the Conference text reiterated the SNPA call for Governments to make adequate contributions to multilateral development institutions and stressed the critical importance of IDA to LDCs.

A paragraph requesting increased financial transfers to LDCs, including international tax schemes for development, further gold sales by IMF, linking the creation of SDRs to development assistance, and using interest subsidy techniques, was not included in the final text. A further paragraph referring to SNPA paragraph 85, which recommended financial resources for transport infrastructure development, was also not included.

UNIDO action. The progress of industrialization of LDCs was considered by the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO at its April/May session. The Board adopted a conclusion⁽¹⁸⁾ expressing concern about UNIDO's limited resources for technical co-operation for LDCs, and calling for increased contributions to assist them and for immediate implementation of SNPA. The UNIDO secretariat was requested to contribute to the SNPA 1985 mid-term global review and to carry out uncompleted technical co-operation projects in certain LDCs (see Chapter VI of this section).

ACC action. In accordance with a December 1982 General Assembly resolution⁽⁴⁾ and a 1981 decision by ACC,⁽¹⁹⁾ a second inter-agency consultation on SNPA follow-up was held at Geneva on 1 and 2 March 1983.⁽²⁰⁾ The consultation reviewed experience gained from African review meetings and preparations for the round-table meeting of LDCs in the Asia and Pacific region. Action taken by organizations to implement SNPA and arrangements for its global monitoring were discussed, as were measures to be taken concerning the five countries identified by the United Nations as LDCs in December 1982.⁽⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted resolution 38/195 without vote.

Implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Reaffirming the provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade relating to the least developed countries,

Reaffirming the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, adopted unanimously by the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 36/194 of 17 December 1981,

Recalling its resolutions 36/194 of 17 December 1981 and 37/224 of 20 December 1982,

Expressing serious concern at the continued deterioration of the economic and social situation of the least developed countries in spite of their national efforts at development, as well as efforts made by the international community, including donor countries, even two years after the adoption of the Substantial New Programme of Action, and stressing the immediate need for greatly expanded support measures, including a major increase in the transfer of additional resources for the realization of the objectives of the Programme,

Bearing in mind the debt problems faced by the least developed countries,

Reaffirming also that the main objectives of the Substantial New Programme of Action are to transform the economies of the least developed countries towards self-sustaining development, to promote the structural changes necessary to overcome the extreme economic difficulties of the least developed countries, to provide fully adequate and internationally accepted minimum standards of nutrition, health, transport and communications, housing and education, as well as job opportunities, to all their citizens, to identify and support major investment opportunities and priorities and to mitigate the adverse effects of natural disasters,

Recognizing that only a substantial increase in official development assistance in real terms during the present decade will enable the least developed countries to achieve the objectives of their country programmes within the framework of the Substantial New Programme of Action, in accordance with aid targets and modalities contained in the Programme, and emphasizing that external assistance complements and reinforces domestic efforts in the least developed countries themselves,

Alarmed at the negative impact of the current world economic crisis on the least developed countries,

Deeply concerned at the very slow pace at which the Substantial New Programme of Action has been implemented so far,

Recalling resolution 142(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on progress in the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

1. Emphasizes that, in view of their deteriorating socio-economic situation, the least developed countries need the urgent and special attention of the international community and its large-scale support on a continuous basis to enable them to progress towards self-reliant development, consistent with the plans and programmes of each least developed country;

2. Reaffirms the commitment of the international community to the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries and urges all countries, international institutions and others concerned to implement fully and effectively their commitments under the Programme;

3. Welcomes the adoption by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its sixth session of resolution 142(VI), reflecting the unanimous support of the international community;

4. Urges donor countries, within the overall context of the Substantial New Programme of Action, as adopted, and of progress towards the 0.7 per cent target, to attain 0.15 per cent of their gross national product as official development assistance or to double their official development assistance to the least developed countries by 1985 or as soon as possible thereafter, and recognizes the importance to the least developed countries of flows of official development assistance to them being doubled by 1985, in relation to the transfers to them during the period 1976-1980;

5. Calls upon the international community to provide support measures for the efforts of the least developed countries in the priority sectors established by the Governments of the least developed countries in their country programmes and embodied in the Substantial New Programme of Action, particularly food and agriculture, manufacturing industries, exploration and development of energy and natural resources, human resources development, expansion and diversification of exports, development of transport and communications, and improvement in planning, implementation and management capabilities;

6. Reaffirms that the least developed countries have primary responsibility for their overall development and that, although international support measures are vitally important, the domestic policies that those countries pursue will be of critical importance for the success of their development efforts;

7. General Assembly resolution 38/195

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.11) without vote, 9 December (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.96), based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.74); agenda item 78 (ml financial implications. 5th Committee, A/38/738; S-G, A/C.2/38/L.84, A/C.5/38/95. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 50, 55; 5th Committee 66; plenary 104.

The draft approved by the Second Committee differed in a number of respects from that put forward by the Group of 77 and subsequently withdrawn.

The sixth and seventh preambular paragraphs and the reference in the fifth to efforts made on behalf of LDCs by the international community, including donor countries, were added to the approved text. Also added were paragraphs 6 and 8. A paragraph by which the Assembly would have called for resources for developing transport and communications in LDCs was deleted and other calls for assistance to LDCs in specific areas were reformulated as paragraph 5. By paragraph 9 of the earlier text, the Assembly would have urged developed countries to convert all outstanding bilateral ODA loans into grants for all LDCs without discrimination and to extend relief to LDCs for private debts.

In the Group's text, paragraphs 10 to 13 had formed one paragraph, by which the Assembly would have urged all countries concerned to fulfil immediately their commitment to provide ODA to LDCs fully in the form of grants, to provide highly concessional loans and to fulfil urgently their commitments to provide ODA grants and loans to LDCs on an untied basis without discrimination, to improve the quality and effectiveness of aid and eliminate the time-lag between aid commitment and disbursement, and to implement the recommendations of the Second Meeting of Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of LDCs.

The special needs of LDCs were also addressed in several other 1983 resolutions. In resolution 38/171 on a policy review of operational activities for development, the Assembly urged substantial increases in financial resources to United Nations funds and programmes engaged in such activities to enhance implementation of SNPA.

In resolution 38/200 on immediate measures in favour of the developing countries, the Assembly agreed that measures within the United Nations system should include those directed at progress in implementation of SNPA.

Awareness of the need for special measures for LDCs in energy resources development was expressed by the Assembly in resolution 38/151, and a call was made for greater participation by financial institutions in financing energy projects in LDCs.

In resolutions on food problems, both the Assembly (38/158) and the Economic and Social Council (1983/71) expressed concern at expanding food-import requirements in LDCs and called for adequate resources to assist them to increase food production and raise nutritional standards.

Land-locked developing countries

During 1983, the special needs and problems of land-locked developing countries were considered by UNCTAD and the General Assembly. Matters related to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries were taken up by the Governing Council of UNDP and the Assembly.

UNCTAD action. The question of land-locked developing countries was considered at UNCTAD VI (June/July 1983) (see Chapter IV of this section).

In resolution 137(VI) on UNCTAD activities on the question,⁽¹⁶⁾ adopted without dissent on 2 July, the Conference requested the international community to provide financial assistance to improve transit-transport infrastructure in land-locked developing countries and their transit countries, and listed areas in which specific action could be taken. Member States were invited to ratify and implement relevant provisions of international conventions on transit trade.

The Conference requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to pursue the work of the technical advisory services of UNCTAD in order to assist Governments of land-locked developing countries to improve their transit-transport situation and recommended that suitable ways of financing such advisory services be found. The Secretary-General was further invited to appoint a group of experts to study ways of improving transit-transport infrastructures and services, to keep under review progress in implementing specific action related to the needs and problems of those countries and to report annually to the General Assembly through the Trade and Development Board.

Agreement on this resolution was reached after consultations on a draft text contained in the Buenos Aires Platform.

In addition to drafting changes, the Platform resolution⁽¹⁶⁾ had included in the list of agreed areas for further action the granting of benefits to land-locked developing countries by taking their export prices as a basis for levying import duties to compensate for higher transport costs incurred in exporting their products. In its text, UNCTAD VI took note of concerns expressed, particularly by land-locked countries, relating to levying of customs tariffs on a basis which included high transport costs.

Also, whereas in its text the Conference invited UNCTAD's Secretary-General to appoint a small group of experts to study transit-transport infrastructures and services and requested him to review implementation of specific action regarding land-locked developing countries, the Platform resolution had invited him to hold periodic meetings to review such implementation and suggested that they could take place before the regular General Assembly debate on land-locked developing countries.

In considering this item, UNCTAD VI had before it a policy paper⁽²¹⁾ which cited specific problems of the countries in question and described current and future activities by UNCTAD and the international community in favour of them.

Technical co-operation assistance to land-locked developing countries during 1983 included inter-regional advisory services in transit transport (financed by the Swedish International Development Authority) and in trade facilitation (financed by UNDP), four UNDP-financed regional projects on transit transport—one for Asian countries and three for African subregions—and UNDP-financed long-term advisers in transit-transport problems for four countries in Africa and Asia. In addition to selecting the most cost-efficient transit corridors and transport modes in order to reduce the cost: of access to the sea for these countries, the projects also aimed to promote co-operation between them and their transit neighbours in order to develop infrastructure and facilitate movement of goods in transit.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 38/437 on the recommendation of its Second Committee.

Specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to refer to its thirty-ninth session for consideration the draft resolution entitled "Specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries".

General Assembly decision 38/437

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.2) without vote, 28 November (meeting 52); oral proposal by Chairman, based on informal consultations; agenda item 78 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 52; plenary 102.

The draft resolution⁽²²⁾ referred to in decision 38/437 had been referred to the Assembly's 1983 session in 1982.⁽²³⁾ By the draft, the Assembly would have reaffirmed the land-locked developing countries' rights to access to the sea and to freedom of transit, urged provision of aid for transport and transit facilities, and invited transit States to co-operate with those countries in transport planning and in promoting joint transport ventures.

UN Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

In September 1983, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²⁴⁾ on implementation of a December 1982 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁵⁾ on the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries. The Secretary-General shared the concern for the future of the Fund expressed by the UNDP Administrator in his biennial report⁽²⁶⁾ to the 1983 session of the UNDP Governing Council. The Administrator had concluded that the Fund's future must be called into question unless substantial increases in contributions were made.

As at 31 December 1983, payments totalling $51,627 were received from 11 States and 15 States pledged $57,834 for 1984⁽²⁷⁾ (see table below). Most of these States were themselves land-locked. During the year, expenditures from the Fund for projects in Nepal, Rwanda and Swaziland totalled some $179,000.⁽²⁸⁾

UNDP action. The UNDP Governing Council, on 24 June,⁽²⁹⁾ requested the Administrator to submit in 1985 a report on the Fund's resources and activities since its inception, giving reasons for the low level of such resources and making pertinent suggestions. It appealed to all countries to review their position with respect to the Fund and to contribute urgently and generously to it.

UNCTAD action. In resolution 137(VI) on UNCTAD activities in the field of land-locked developing countries⁽¹⁶⁾ (see above), UNCTAD VI requested developed countries and developing countries in a position to do so to pledge substantial contributions to the Special Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/174 by recorded vote.

United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/177 of 21 December 1976, by which it approved the statute of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, and its subsequent resolutions on the Fund, including resolution 37/230 of 20 December 1982,

Taking note of resolution 137(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and decision 83/28 of 24 June 1983 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, Recalling further the relevant paragraphs of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Convinced that access to world markets at the least possible cost is an integral part of the meaningful economic development of land-locked developing countries,

Expressing deep concern at the consistently very low level of contributions that have been pledged to the Fund since its establishment,

Noting that the demands for assistance from the Fund are additional to, and generally different from, the types of activities financed from other sources in the United Nations system,

1. Expresses concern at the lack of implementation of its resolutions on the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, as noted by the Secretary-General in his report;

2. Urges the international community to give full consideration to the special constraints facing the land-locked developing countries in their economic and social development;

3. Renews its appeal for adequate resources to be provided to the Fund;

4. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the executive heads of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to pursue action in favour of the land-locked developing countries within the framework of the interim arrangements, bearing in mind that each country concerned should receive appropriate technical and financial assistance.

Appointment of an Executive Director

In 1983, the General Assembly considered the question of appointing an Executive Director of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries. The Secretary-General submitted a note⁽³⁰⁾ in which he indicated that he was not submitting for the Assembly's confirmation an appointment for the post. He recalled the circumstances surrounding the setting up of the Fund and the interim arrangements for its management by the UNDP Administrator; he also gave details of the amount pledged for its 1984 operations (see above).

Island developing countries

In 1983, the problems of island developing countries were discussed at UNCTAD VI (June/July) (see Chapter IV of this section), which had before it an UNCTAD policy paper⁽³¹⁾ citing specific problems faced by those countries, such as smallness and remoteness. The paper described priority areas for action in their favour: communications and transport; natural disasters; marine space; self-reliance; environment; and population, manpower and migration. Action by the international community was suggested and UNCTAD's role and work programme in favour of the countries was outlined.

On 2 July, the Conference adopted without dissent resolution 138(VI) on UNCTAD activities concerning island developing countries,⁽¹⁶⁾ by which it urged the international community to provide financial and technical support to them and listed areas for specific action. International financial institutions were urged to increase substantially resource flows by applying policies and credit criteria appropriate to their economic and financial situation.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to continue in-depth studies of common problems of island economies and of constraints inhibiting their economic development. The UNCTAD secretariate was asked to pursue its role as the focal point for global action in favour of them, and was further requested to continue work on inter-island and feeder transport in collaboration with the United Nations system and other organizations. Efforts were requested to improve methods of mitigating or preventing social and economic damage from natural disasters.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was invited to study ways of minimizing handicaps resulting from the geographical situation of island developing countries and to report his findings to the Trade and Development Board. He was also asked to review progress in implementing the resolution and to report to the General Assembly through the Board in 1984.

Agreement on this resolution was reached after consultations on a draft text contained in the Buenos Aires Platform.

The Conference resolution differed from the Platform text⁽¹⁶⁾ in several respects. By that text, the Conference would have requested the UNCTAD secretariat, in co-operation with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and other United Nations agencies to expand activities related to foreign-sector aspects of natural disaster prevention and reconstruction measures, to mitigate their immediate impact on the balance-of-payments of island developing countries, given the openness of their economies. The final text requested efforts to improve methods of mitigating or preventing damage from natural disasters, given the vulnerability of the countries concerned.

The Platform text would also have had UNCTAD request its Secretary-General to hold periodic meetings to review implementation of the programme of specific action suggesting that they take place before the debate on them, normally held every two years in the Assembly.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

Total operational assistance for development by the United Nations system amounted to $4.1 billion in 1983. Of this total, technical co-operation expenditures amounted to approximately $255 million, compared to $303 million in 1982.

Total contributions (exclusive of cost-sharing and other similar contributions) from Governments and other sources to development activities of the United Nations system amounted to $6 billion in 1983, as compared with $7.2 billion in 1982. These figures included contributions to the World Bank and the International Finance Corporation (IFC) and to the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), which also fell in 1983, to $3.6 billion from more than $4.8 billion in 1982.

The General Assembly, by resolution 38/171 of 19 December 1983, urged that United Nations organizations and bodies continue to attach priority to operational activities for development, noting that, although the outcome of the November United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities reflected a positive trend, the overall level of resources remained unsatisfactory.

The share of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in total system-wide grant-financed technical co-operation (i.e., exclusive of World Bank lending operations) was 40 per cent in 1983, as compared with 45 per cent in 1982. Expenditures by UNDP totalled $751 million, almost $120 million lower than forecast. During 1983, there was an $87.2 million surplus of main programme income over expenditure; UNDP's revenue reserve, showing a $5.7 million deficit at the end of 1982, became a surplus of $57.9 million as at 31 December 1983. In June, the UNDP Governing Council adopted measures to improve the Programme's short- and long-term financing, including measures for improving its own work, an action welcomed by the Assembly in December in resolution 38/172; the Assembly also stressed the necessity of significantly increased contributions.

Responsibility for the management and substantive support for the system's technical co-operation activities rested with the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) which executed in 1983 a programme comprising more than 1,400 projects amounting to $112 million, $15 million less than in 1982. This reduction resulted from a decline in resources and led to a streamlining of DTCD operations.

In 1983, the number of United Nations Volunteers (UNV) serving technical co-operation projects in about 90 countries increased to 1,423, with over 80 per cent of recruits from developing countries themselves. The Assembly, in resolution 38/173 of 19 December, reaffirmed that the programme should continue preparing for the International Youth Year (1985) and its youth-related programmes, and appealed for increased contributions.

The High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, in June, made several recommendations aimed at furthering technical co-operation among developing countries. Measures to further the exchange of skilled manpower among developing countries were suggested in a study by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

With slightly over $24 million in contributions to the United Nations Capital Development Fund in 1983, the Fund did not reach anticipated levels; however, trust fund and cost-sharing contributions enabled it to approve new commitments totalling $30.2 million, over half of which went to drought-stricken African countries.

General aspects

During 1983, operational activities for development, carried out by more than 30 bodies of the United Nations system, comprised the programmes of UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) and other funds and programmes covered by the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities; the technical co-operation and related operational activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system; and the food aid provided by the World Food Programme (WFP).

Total United Nations official development assistance (ODA)—expenditures and disbursements from all organizations, including the International Development Association (IDA), IFAD, the refugee, humanitarian and related activities and the programmes of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP)—to developing countries amounted to $4,067 million in 1983, or about 12 per cent of total net ODA, about the same proportion as in earlier years. Of this amount, about $2,710 million was channelled through the grant-financed operations of the system; the balance represented disbursements by IDA and IFAD. Total concessional resources (grants and concessional loans) amounted to 58 per cent of the total net transfer of resources through the system, compared with 60 per cent in 1982. Aggregate contributions received by organizations engaged in operational activities declined slightly, from $2,515 million in 1982 to $2,465 million in 1983, while expenditures on operational activities amounted to $2,092 million (exclusive of cost-sharing and similarly financed activities), almost exactly the same level, in nominal terms, as in 1982.

Least developed countries (LDCs) received over one third of resources, about the same as in 1982. The share of resources for country and regional programmes in Africa increased from 30 per cent in 1982 to 37 per cent in 1983. The share of UNDP main programme resources in system-wide grant-financed technical co-operation amounted to 40 per cent in 1983, compared with 45 per cent in 1982.⁽¹⁾

Report of the Director-General. In his 1983 annual report⁽²⁾ to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) gave an overview of United Nations operational activities for development. The report, prepared after consultation with the organizations of the system, was submitted in June 1983 to assist the Council and the Assembly in a comprehensive policy review of those activities.

Among issues addressed by the Director-General were: priority areas requiring special attention; mobilization of resources; quality and cost-effectiveness of operational programmes; and intergovernmental reviews of operational activities. He stressed the need to adapt modalities for technical co-operation to the growing capabilities of the developing countries and the availability of qualified national personnel. He also felt that South-South co-operation was a major objective of the developing countries to which United Nations operational activities could make a greater contribution; that linkages among such activities could be enhanced through collaboration among funding and other organizations; and that capital assistance and technical co-operation could be made more complementary by ensuring better combinations of capital and technical programme and project components and by closer collaboration among technical assistance agencies, other United Nations organizations and multilateral development banks.

Priority areas requiring special attention to ensure that the system remained fully responsive to developing countries' needs included: transfer of know-how and skills in keeping with their growing capabilities; increased support to the development efforts of LDCs; help in mobilizing additional resources for the countries of sub-Saharan Africa; and continued assistance to middle- and high-income developing countries through provision of such things as sophisticated technology.

With regard to mobilizing resources for operational activities, the Director-General held that the period of rapid growth in contributions had ended. Diversification of funding sources for multilateral technical co-operation had continued, marked by the emergence of a number of new modalities for financing technical co-operation, the growth of cost-sharing and similar arrangements whereby developing countries increasingly financed activities from their own resources, and the growth in expenditures on technical co-operation financed through the operations of the World Bank. Addressing the difficulties in mobilizing resources on a more predictable and assured basis, it was recommended that, for the short term, consideration be given to the adoption of targets, greater involvement of members of governing bodies in resource mobilization efforts, and more effective use of annual pledging conferences for consultations among contributors and organizations. For the medium term, it was suggested that more formal arrangements, such as multi-year pledging or negotiated replenishments, be considered.

The Director-General drew attention to the positive aspects of the new modalities for financing technical co-operation which, he said, provided flexibility to both donors and recipients in addressing specific development problems and in improving the system's responsiveness to the particular requirements of developing countries. However, he felt a need to address such issues as the growing trend towards providing contributions tied to the procurement of goods and services in the donor country; in that context, he recommended that contributions made to special purpose funds and programmes be consistent with the principles of multilateralism and remain a proportion of general purpose contributions.

The quality, efficiency and cost-effectiveness of operational programmes as well as action at the country level were also reviewed. It was noted that efficiency and effectiveness of operational activities were to a considerable extent determined by the willingness and capacity of the recipient countries clearly to delineate national priorities, promote co-ordination within national administrations and establish procedures to assess and evaluate the usefulness of operational activities for their development.

The Director-General felt it was necessary to focus attention on ways to implement technical co-operation policies; of particular concern, he believed, was the need to adapt the system to the growing capabilities of developing countries and to the increasing trend towards the use of short-term consultants rather than long-term resident experts. Among options were greater recourse to alternative sources for qualified expertise, greater use of twinning of institutions, and streamlined recruitment procedures.

Progress continued with respect to the further strengthening of evaluation systems within organizations, the Director-General stated; developments included reports by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on co-operation by the United Nations system in developing the evaluation capabilities of Governments and on strengthening the evaluation system of UNDP, the decision to establish a Central Evaluation Office in UNDP, and the decisions of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) to improve the monitoring and evaluation of operational activities at the country level.

The system was improving its coherence of action at that level. ACC had decided to improve complementarity and coherence of programmes and projects (see below). After reviewing the functions of resident co-ordinators and the new arrangements for inter-agency co-operation, ACC had noted the satisfaction expressed by a number of Governments with these arrangements which, it felt, should be allowed to develop in a flexible and pragmatic manner. Other important mechanisms in facilitating co-ordination of external assistance at the country level on a more predictable basis were the round tables of UNDP and the consultative group meetings of the World Bank, which the Director-General suggested should be further developed according to the interests of each particular country.

In the light of the General Assembly's decision to conduct a triennial policy review of operational activities, beginning in 1983, with the Director-General being requested to provide information and statistics, he suggested that the Council and the Assembly might wish to see how best the Assembly might carry out its overview responsibilities for the system's activities, in close conjunction with reviews by other intergovernmental bodies of their activities. The coverage of statistical reporting on operational activities and on overall flows of technical co-operation might be further improved. An ad hoc high-level consultation among senior government officials to examine the responsiveness of the system to the changing needs of developing countries could be organized in relation to the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) (see Chapter I of this section).

As requested by the Assembly in December 1982,⁽³⁾ the Director-General initiated in 1983, as a follow-up to his 1982 annual report,⁽⁴⁾ a review, in consultation with the organizations of the system, of prospects for harmonizing procedures regarding operational activities, particularly the system's effectiveness and responsiveness. The results were to be placed before ACC which, as also requested by the Assembly, would report on its consideration of the matter in its annual overview report for 1983/84.

ACC action. ACC, on 31 March 1983, adopted a decision⁽⁵⁾ approving a number of recommendations by its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ(OPS)) concerning ways to improve country-level action. The recommendations had been made pursuant to a 1982 ACC request.⁽⁶⁾ It was stressed that the ACC decisions should be understood within the principle that the sovereign right of countries to determine their own priorities was fundamental to the role and activities of the United Nations system, as well as the most appropriate arrangement for the co-ordination of external aid inputs and their integration with national programmes and activities.

Among measures suggested were: continued assistance to developing countries in enhancing their planning and programming capacity, and in strengthening their central and sectoral planning units and related mechanisms for external inputs, programming and co-ordination; assistance in preparing national programmes and identifying inputs to be financed; adjusting country programming to the specific circumstances of each country and using it as a frame of reference for consultations between national authorities and multilateral and other agencies; strengthening the periodic meetings between the resident co-ordinator and representatives of United Nations organizations, with the results being taken into account when formulating or revising operational plans for programmes and projects; and more systematic selection of specific projects—especially those of an innovative or experimental nature, investment-oriented or involving the establishment or strengthening of national institutions—for subsequent evaluation.

Further measures recommended to improve, monitor and evaluate field-level operations were: improved project format, with well-defined objectives and precise outputs, relevant external assumptions and practical indicators, procedures for periodic monitoring and timely evaluation, and financial provisions; increased involvement of recipient countries in project monitoring and evaluation; specific arrangements for follow-up by Governments after project completion; training of staff in carrying out effective evaluations; improved feedback mechanisms, including establishment of an evaluation memory bank in United Nations organizations to facilitate a synthesis of evaluation results and provide a basis for future programming and project formulation, as well as to refine evaluation methodology, criteria and procedures; more impact studies; and expansion of the exchange of experience among United Nations organizations and between them and bilateral aid agencies.

ACC noted that CCSQ(OPS) would report later on guidelines to influence the direction and flow of bilateral aid, simplification and harmonization of aid modalities to lessen the burden on national administrations, and further strengthening technical back-stopping of operational activities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July 1983, on oral proposals by its President, the Economic and Social Council adopted two decisions in connection with its consideration of a number of reports concerning operational activities for development. The Council adopted decision 1983/186 without vote.

Comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development

At its 42nd plenary meeting, on 29 July 1983, the Council took note of the note by the Secretary-General, to which was annexed the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on a comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-eighth session, together with the summary records of the discussion held by the Council on the question during its second regular session of 1983.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/187

Adopted without vote

Draft orally proposed by President; agenda item 18.

Annexed to the Council's report for 1983⁽⁷⁾ was a statement, made during its discussion of operational activities for development, by the Group of 77 developing countries, welcoming the Director-General's report and voicing concern at the impact of the world economic crisis on the development process and at the weakening of United Nations operational activities for development. The Group expressed the view that substantially increased resources, including resources for United Nations operational activities, would contribute to world economic recovery, and that activities must be based on universal access to technical assistance and must respond to the priorities determined by the recipient countries themselves.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

After considering the Director-General's report,⁽²⁾ the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted on 19 December 1983 resolution 38/171 without vote.

Comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further its resolutions 2688(XXV) of 11 December 1970 on the capacity of the United Nations development system and 3405(XXX) of 28 November 1975 on new dimensions in technical co-operation,

Reiterating its resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977, 33/201 of 29 January 1979 and 35/81 of 5 December 1980 on a comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, 36/199 of 17 December 1981 and 37/226 of 20 December 1982 on operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the exclusive responsibility of the Government of the recipient country in formulating its national development plan, priorities and objectives, as set out in the consensus contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 2688(XXV), and emphasizing that the integration of the operational activities of the United Nations system with national programmes would enhance the impact and relevance of those activities,

Emphasizing the importance that developing countries, through their actions, including increased financial contributions, have attached to the operational activities of the United Nations system, in recognition of the role of those activities in their overall economic development,

Expressing its deep concern about the increasing elements of bilateralism in multilateral economic co-operation and the increased channelling of tied resources through multilateral programmes,

Concerned at the increasingly high cost of experts and consultants and the financial effect on the programmes and projects being implemented, and convinced of the need, as far as possible, to use the services of national experts and consultants and to implement programmes and projects in a cost-effective manner,

Aware that a substantial part of world resources, material as well as human, continues to be diverted to armaments, with detrimental effect on international security and on efforts to achieve the new international economic order, including the operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Reaffirming that one primary objective of operational activities for development of the United Nations system is to promote the economic self-reliance of developing countries,

Having examined the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation for 1983 on the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

2. Reaffirms the important contribution that operational activities of the United Nations system make to the development of developing countries and urges the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to attach priority to operational activities in their plans and programmes;

3. Notes that, although the outcome of the 1983 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities reflected a positive trend, the overall level of resources remains unsatisfactory, falling short, in many cases, of the various types of targets set by the relevant intergovernmental bodies, thus hampering the ability of the system to respond to the growing needs of developing countries;

4. Strongly reiterates the need for a substantial and real increase in the flow of resources for operational activities on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis, so as to enable the organizations of the system to maintain and, where possible, increase the level of their operational programmes and, in that context, strongly urges all countries, particularly developed countries, whose overall performance is not commensurate with their capacities, to increase rapidly and substantially their voluntary contributions for operational activities for development, taking into account the targets that have been set by relevant intergovernmental bodies;

5. Reaffirms that the operational activities of the United Nations system should be in accordance with the national plans, priorities and objectives of the recipient countries in order to enhance their impact on and relevance to the national development process of those countries;

6. Invites the World Bank to continue to carry out its country activities in accordance with the national plans and priorities of recipient countries, in order to promote the economic self-reliance of developing countries;

7. Emphasizes the need to maintain the multilateral character of the operational activities of the United Nations system and urges all Governments to enhance their commitment in this regard;

8. Calls upon all Governments, in the interest of preserving the multilateral principles of the system, to refrain from the practice of tying aid for operational activities of the United Nations system to the procurement of goods and services from the donor countries, restricting it to those funds that have a mandate to accept it on an experimental basis;

9. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system dealing with the flows of concessional resources to developing countries to pay greater attention, in their reviews of these issues, to the funding needs of the United Nations funds and programmes in support of the development plans formulated by the recipient Governments;

10. Urges the international community to provide a substantial increase in financial resources to United Nations funds and programmes engaged in operational activities in order to enhance their contributions to the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, bearing in mind the need of those countries for official development assistance from multilateral sources;

11. Urges all Governments concerned to conclude negotiations regarding the seventh replenishment of the International Development Association, with a view to ensuring an appropriate increase in resources, and calls for those negotiations to be completed as soon as possible so that the seventh replenishment may become effective in July 1984;

12. Urges all Governments concerned to strengthen the International Fund for Agricultural Development, particularly by releasing their contributions according to agreed schedules and responding positively during the negotiations regarding the second replenishment;

13. Welcomes the progress made towards the attainment of the 1983-1984 target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme and urges Governments to make every effort to ensure the full attainment of that target, as well as the proposed 1985-1986 target;

14. Takes note of the recommendations made in section III of the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, designed to enhance the responsiveness of operational activities to the needs and requirements of all developing countries in accordance with their objectives and priorities, as formulated in their national development plans and programmes, and their efforts to promote greater economic and technical co-operation among themselves;

15. Invites all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system engaged in operational activities for development, with a view to achieving, inter alia, higher cost effectiveness, to make greater use of the capacities of developing countries by:

- (a) Engaging national experts and personnel;
- (b) Utilizing local or regional sources for the procurement of material, equipment and services;

16. Decides that the guidelines on procurement to be issued pursuant to paragraph 7 of decision 81/28 of 30 June 1981 and section II, paragraph 2, of decision 82/34 of 18 June 1982 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme should govern the procurement activities of organs and bodies under the authority of the General Assembly in their execution of projects financed by the Programme;

17. Welcomes decision 82/8 of 18 June 1982 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, designed to promote government execution of projects funded by the Programme, the support cost savings that could result therefrom becoming available for programmes and plans, on the basis of the illustrative indicative planning figure;

18. Reiterates the set of principles which, in the programming of the resources at the disposal of the different organizations of the United Nations system, should be uniformly applied; those principles, embodied in the consensus of 1970 and decision 80/30 of 26 June 1980 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme include, inter alia, the following:

- (a) Equity, particularly in the distribution of resources among developing countries;
- (b) Assistance to be provided only in response to the express needs of the recipient countries;
- (c) Assistance to be integrated with the overall development objectives and priorities of the country concerned;
- (d) Programming to be seen as an integrated process, of which the different phases, such as programming, project formulation, assessment, approval and evaluation, constitute integral parts;

19. Emphasizes the important role of the United Nations system in assisting developing countries, upon request, in developing their evaluation capacity and requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the organs, organizations and bodies of the system, to elaborate, in the light of the conclusions and recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit contained in its report, proposals to promote the evaluation capacity of recipient Governments;

20. Recognizes that, concerning operational activities for development of the United Nations system, evaluation is an important part of the programming process in order to achieve a rational and optimal utilization of the overall resources available;

21. Reaffirms the general guidelines embodied in the new dimensions in technical co-operation adopted by the Governing Council in 1975 and urges their full application;

22. Recommends improved coherence of action and co-ordination of the operational systems at the country level, under the overall responsibility of the resident co-ordinator and in consultation with the Governments concerned, in order to cut down expenses on administrative and support costs, minimize waste through avoidance of duplication of work and facilitate the task of the host country in co-ordinating external assistance, and considers that further efforts should be undertaken in this regard;

23. Invites the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the President of the World Bank, as well as the heads of regional development banks, to examine further possibilities of co-operation between the Programme and those institutions regarding the complementarity of their respective technical co-operation programmes, in order to enhance the implementation of the present resolution and, in so doing, ensure greater utilization of the facilities available in the various organizations of the United Nations system regarding projects financed by those funding agencies, and requests the Administrator to report thereon to the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme;

24. Urges the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to increase their support for the process of technical co-operation among developing countries by orienting their programmes and projects, as appropriate, towards strengthening such co-operation;

25. Urges the Secretary-General and the executive heads of organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, bearing in mind the need to maintain an appropriate level of support functions, to seek to minimize administrative and other support costs without affecting the field programmes and the network of United Nations Development Programme offices in developing countries, with a view to increasing the proportion of resources available to improve programme delivery to developing countries;

26. Requests the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system receiving resources of an extrabudgetary nature to include information on those resources and their utilization in their budgets and reports and to make that information available to the Governments concerned and to the resident Co-ordinator in the recipient country;

27. Recommends that, in accordance with its resolution 32/197, due consideration should be given to the technical expertise of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development for its designation as an executing agency for the implementation of projects within its mandate, as well as its role in the execution of technical co-operation activities of the United Nations system, in order to reaffirm the role of the Department within the existing technical and administrative structures and to avoid duplication and accomplish economies of scale;

28. Urges all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in the light of the recommendations contained in section V of the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, to take the necessary steps to ensure the harmonization of administrative, financial, personnel, planning and procurement procedures, and requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to report annually on specific action taken;

29. Reiterates the importance of the co-ordination of multilateral development assistance at the field level, and requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, while preparing his next report on operational activities, to pay particular attention to the need for improved coherence of action and effective integration at the country level, in accordance with section V of the annex to resolution 32/197 and paragraph 11 of resolution 35/81, and to the role of resident co-ordinators in the co-ordination of operational activities of the United Nations system;

30. Requests the Joint Inspection Unit to study in depth the structure of the field representation of the organs and organizations of the United Nations system, particularly with regard to the tasks allotted to the resident co-ordinators;

31. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include in his report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session:

(a) An examination of the extent and implications of the continuation of the practice of contributions being provided to organizations with conditions attached to their use, taking into account the information to be provided by the heads of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies;

(b) An in-depth analysis of the subject mentioned in paragraph 22 above concerning improved coherence of action and co-ordination of the operational systems at the country level;

(c) A comparative analysis of the relationship between programme delivery and administrative costs pertaining to operational activities for development executed by the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as an assessment of agency support costs;

32. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include in his report for the 1986 comprehensive policy review:

(a) A study, with supporting data, on the progress achieved with respect to the issues identified in paragraph 15 above;

(b) A system-wide review of the activities identified in paragraph 24 above relating to technical co-operation among developing countries as carried out by different organizations, with particular reference to the approaches and methods devised and followed, the kind of activities undertaken by these organizations and the relevant institutional arrangements;

33. Requests the Secretary-General, for the purpose of the 1986 comprehensive policy review, as part of the continuous review by the General Assembly, to entrust the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation with the preparation of a report on policy issues pertaining to operational activities for development undertaken by the United Nations system, taking into account the views and comments of delegations at the second regular session of 1983 of the Economic and Social Council and at the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly, for submission to the Assembly at its forty-first session through the Council at its second regular session of 1986;

34. Strongly reiterates its desire for a coherent and co-ordinated United Nations system in the field of operational activities for development and, in that context, requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to continue to provide effective leadership in the co-ordination of the various components of the United Nations system in that field and in exercising overall co-ordination within the system, as set forth in resolution 32/197, and requests all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to co-operate fully with the Director-General.

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/703) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.115), based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.101); agenda item 79. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 45-54, 56; plenary 102.

Apart from drafting changes, the adopted text differed from that submitted by the Group of 77 in a number of ways. Paragraphs 6, 20, 30, 32 and 34 were added. Provisions were deleted, by which the Assembly would have: reaffirmed that the country activities by the World Bank group should be in accordance with the national plans and priorities of recipient countries in order to promote the economic self-reliance of the developing countries; reaffirmed that the main objective of United Nations operational activities for development was to promote such self-reliance; called on the governing bodies of UNDP, UNICEF and other programmes to study the effect of the cost of experts and consultants on the various programmes and projects and to propose solutions, in particular the possibility of using national experts and consultants and those from other developing countries; and requested that the next report on a policy review of operational activities should contain a detailed section on the progress by the organizations of the system in making increased use of national experts and institutions and greater procurement in recipient and other developing countries.

Paragraph 24 of the adopted text was shortened; originally, it had enumerated various measures to be taken into account for strengthening technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC), including: a review of rules and procedures for providing assistance, with a view to removing possible constraints against TCDC-related activities; a system-wide review of such activities, with particular reference to the approaches and methods followed; and a review of arrangements in the system for collecting, generating and disseminating data related to the needs and capabilities of the developing countries. Instead of endorsing and urging full implementation of various recommendations embodied in the new dimensions in technical co-operation adopted by the UNDP Governing Council in 1975,⁽⁸⁾ including a number of measures that were detailed in the withdrawn draft, the Assembly (in paragraph 21) simply reaffirmed the general guidelines embodied in those new dimensions and urged their full application. To paragraph 15, inviting United Nations organs and bodies to make greater use of the capacities of developing countries, was added that this should be done with a view to achieving, inter alia, higher cost effectiveness. Also added, in paragraph 31, was the request to the Director-General to include in his 1984 report an analysis of the issue of improved coherence of action and co-ordination of the operational systems at the country level, and to include in his comparative analysis of the relation between programme delivery and administrative costs an assessment of agency support costs. To paragraph 22, recommending improved coherence of action and co-ordination at the country level, was added that the Assembly considered that further efforts should be undertaken in that regard.

Financing of operational activities

Contributions (exclusive of cost-sharing and other similar contributions) to the funds and programmes of the United Nations and the operational activities of the specialized agencies and WFP amounted to $2,465 million in 1983, a slight decline in nominal dollar terms from $2,515 million in 1982. Contributions to the World Bank (including IDA), IFC and IFAD also fell in 1983, to $3,586 million from $4,840 million in 1982.

Expenditures on United Nations operational activities in 1983 amounted to $6.5 billion, including concessional and non-concessional loans of $4.4 billion and grants of $2.1 billion; expenditures from cost-sharing and other similar contributions increased to $161 million.

By far the greater share of operational activities went directly to developing countries in support of national development programmes (about 93 per cent). The balance was directed towards operational activities carried out on a regional, interregional and global basis. Operational activities were increasingly concentrated in regions with a large number of low-income countries. Forty per cent of activities took place in LDCs. Nearly 50 per cent was allocated to three sectors: agriculture, health and population. About 20 per cent was allocated to regional, interregional and global programmes. United Nations operational programmes were carried out in about 150 countries and territories, and the number of projects financed partly or wholly by the system was well above 5,000.

Total gross disbursements by the World Bank (including IDA) and IFC amounted to $9.7 billion in 1983, net disbursements to $7.2 billion and net transfers to $4.2 billion. Disbursements by IDA declined, by about 8 per cent compared with 1982. Gross disbursements by the World Bank on technical co-operation embodied in their lending programmes (i.e., on training and consultants) reached $873 million in 1983, a level more than doubled since 1979. A growing number of World Bank borrowers were beginning to disburse parts of loan funds earmarked for technical co-operation by using services of United Nations organizations. Gross disbursements by IFAD reached $156 million in 1983, a rapid increase over the 1982 level of $110 million, with further increases expected in the light of commitments of over $1.6 billion.

Loans from the World Bank, IFC and IFAD, on a net transfer basis, fell by about 3 per cent in 1983 to $4.4 billion, the result of a drop in IDA disbursements.

The Director-General pointed out that the rapid growth of contributions for operational activities in the 1970s had not been sustained in the first years of the 1980s and that prospects for a significant overall real increase in contributions were not good.⁽²⁾

At its April 1983 session,⁽³⁾ the Committee for Development Planning, calling for a number of measures to remedy the acute crisis in the poorest countries, singled out redress of the decline in UNDP's resources, an increased level of ODA, a larger aid transfer in rapidly disbursing form, renewed international efforts, and raised food-aid levels and targets.

Expenditures

Total ODA transferred through all United Nations organizations to developing countries amounted to $4,067 million in 1983, or about 12 per cent of net developing country ODA receipts. United Nations ODA comprised expenditures and disbursements from all organizations, including IDA, IFAD, the refugee and humanitarian programmes and related activities and the programmes of the Environment Fund of UNEP, but did not include cost-sharing and self-supporting contributions to organizations and programme expenditures financed therefrom. On a more limited basis, i.e., excluding the concessional funds provided by IDA and IFAD, the share of developing country net ODA receipts channelled through United Nations organizations (excluding IDA and IFAD) had grown from 5.7 per cent in the early 1970s to about 8 per cent in the early 1980s. There was, however, a significant falling off of the rate of increase of net ODA receipts of developing countries channelled through the United Nations system which had grown at an average rate of about 17 per cent over the period 1973 to 1979, but then declined to about 7 per cent.

For operational activities as a whole, the 1983 decline in UNDP main programme expenditures of about $100 million (see below, under TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION THROUGH UNDP) was offset by increased WFP expenditures by 15 per cent to $629 million and by a 6 per cent growth in UNICEF delivery to $246 million. Technical co-operation expenditures financed from regular budgets also increased in 1983 to $258 million, while expenditures financed from other extrabudgetary sources fell to about $305 million. With the stagnation in overall delivery, per capita expenditures on operational activities declined in 1983 as the population of developing countries grew by about 2 per cent.

Total United Nations system-wide expenditures on technical co-operation amounted to $2,257 million in 1983, compared with $2,166 million in 1982, including the technical co-operation embodied in World Bank lending operations. Grant-financed activities other than those financed by UNICEF and WFP and including cost-sharing and similar expenditures totalled $1,384 million, about 5 per cent less than in 1982. Of that amount, UNDP financed 40 per cent; in 1982, the share of UNDP in total system-wide grant-financed technical co-operation (i.e., exclusive of World Bank lending operations) had been 45 per cent.

Extrabudgetary resources placed directly at the disposal of the specialized agencies and other organizations were the next single most important source of funding, amounting to 29 per cent. WHO (23 per cent) and FAO (19 per cent) accounted for over two fifths of total technical co-operation expenditures, followed by DTCD (8 per cent), UNESCO and ILO (both 7 per cent), UNIDO (6 per cent), and ICAO and the Office for Projects Execution of UNDP (both 5 per cent).

Cost-sharing and other similarly financed expenditures reached $161 million in 1983. UNDP cost-sharing expenditures corresponded roughly to the sectoral distribution of country programmes. Unilateral or self-supporting expenditures of the specialized agencies appeared to be concentrated in such sectors as transport and communications, and agriculture, forestry and fisheries. Whereas developing countries with per capita incomes greater than $2,500 accounted for over two thirds of self-supporting expenditures, a wider range of developing countries undertook cost-sharing with UNDP.

United Nations operational activities reflected both universality and a focus on least developed and other low-income countries. Countries with a per capita GNP of less than $500 accounted for 69 per cent of grant-financed expenditures on operational activities, about the same proportion as in earlier years. The proportion reached a high level, over 80 per cent, in the case of UNICEF and funds administered by UNDP. There was a fairly even distribution of resource flows among the developing regions of the world on a per capita basis.

The sectoral distribution of expenditures for technical co-operation was heavily influenced both by the source of funding (i.e., regular or extrabudgetary) and by the organizations involved. Regular budget-financed technical co-operation expenditures tended to be dominated by the health sector (74 per cent), reflecting the size of the regular budget of the World Health Organization (WHO) and its very heavy concentration on technical co-operation. UNDP expenditures financed by indicative planning figure (IPFs) reflected an aggregation of developing country priorities and were concentrated in such sectors as agriculture, forestry and fisheries (23 per cent), natural resources (14 per cent) and general development issues (13 per cent). Two fifths of system-wide expenditures on technical co-operation took place in two sectors—health (23 per cent) and agriculture, forestry and fisheries (17 per cent). Social sectors other than health, but including education, employment, population and social conditions, absorbed about 17 per cent of total technical co-operation expenditures.

Contributions

Total contributions from Governments and other official and non-official sources to development activities of the United Nations system, amounted to $6 billion in 1983 (see table above) compared with $7.2 billion the previous year. Covered in these totals were all United Nations funds and programmes, the operational activities of the specialized agencies and WFP.

The main features of the pattern of contributions received in 1983 were:

—Aggregate contributions to United Nations funds and programmes amounted to $1,300 million, the same level as in 1982. Most funds and programmes participating in the Pledging Conference experienced a slight decline or no growth at all in the dollar value of contributions in 1983, despite a number of countries increasing the national currency value of their contributions. Most organizations had been adversely affected by exchange rate movements; had exchange rates remained at their end 1982 levels, total 1983 contributions would have amounted to nearly $1,400 million.

—Contributions to the main programme of UNDP (excluding cost-sharing), which represented about 50 per cent of total contributions to the Pledging Conference, stagnated for the fourth consecutive year at around $700 million. UNFPA also experienced no growth in contributions and remained at around $130 million. Contributions to the general resources of UNICEF (i.e., excluding supplementary funding), which had been increasing in the recent past, declined in 1983 by about 5 per cent to $207 million.

—Total contributions (in nominal dollar terms) over the years 1979-1983 to all funds and programmes of the Pledging Conference increased by about 13 per cent, compared with a growth of 5 per cent in total net ODA over the same period.

—Member countries of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) contributed by far the largest share of resources for operational activities, amounting to nearly 90 per cent in 1983.

—Assessed budget contributions for the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations and specialized agencies reached $257 million in 1983, compared with about $200 million in 1982: Most of that amount was incurred by WHO which allocated 60 per cent of its regular programme budget to technical co-operation and the provision of services to member States.

—Extrabudgetary contributions placed directly at the disposal of specialized agencies and other organizations for their operational activities declined by 10 per cent in 1983 to $247 million, the first time that such a decline had been recorded. In 1983, seven countries (in descending order of total contributions: Italy, Sweden, Netherlands, Norway, Denmark, Belgium, Federal Republic of Germany) provided more than three quarters of total individual country contributions of $168 million. International organizations (particularly the World Bank and IFC and funds associated with OPEC countries) provided a total of $73 million. WHO and FAO received two thirds of total contributions, ILO and UNESCO a further 25 per cent.

Contributions in 1983 to the main programme resources of UNDP, the general resources of UNICEF and the main UNFPA programme amounted to $1,051 million, or 81 per cent of total contributions to United Nations funds and programmes. Other contributions amounting to $249 million were provided to the variety of special-purpose and trust funds administered by UNDP, UNDP third party cost-sharing, supplementary funding through UNICEF, other funds and programmes participating in the annual Pledging Conference and multilateral/bilateral contributions to UNFPA and other United Nations entities. Contributions to all such funding arrangements since 1979 had grown at an annual average rate of about 10 per cent.

Resources provided to developing countries through United Nations organizations were increasingly used to attract supplementary funding from other sources; cost-sharing and other similar contributions from middle- and higher-income developing countries were an important component of that type of financing. In 1983, an increase in such contributions to UNDP was offset by a fall in similar contributions to other organizations.

Contributions for refugee, humanitarian and special economic assistance programmes and disaster relief activities—not included in the above data—amounted to about $500 million in 1983, down from $582 million in 1982.

Contributions to the World Bank and IFC declined in 1983, the result of a slight drop in payments to IDA and in capital subscription payments. The first replenishment agreement payments to IFAD amounted to $1.2 billion for 1981-1983.

In his 1983 report on operational activities⁽²⁾ the Director-General submitted several proposals for resource mobilization. He noted that the diversification of funding sources for multilateral technical co-operation had continued, marked by the emergence of a number of new modalities for financing within United Nations agencies and organizations; the growth of cost-sharing and similar arrangements, with developing countries increasingly financing operational activities from their own resources; and the growth in expenditures on technical co-operation financed through the operations of the World Bank.

In the light of those trends, he stated, three areas were identified for consideration: mobilizing sufficient resources; setting desirable and attainable targets to mobilize resources on a more predictable and assured basis; and maintaining a degree of uniformity in distributing resources among the organizations of the system.

The UNDP Governing Council, at its June 1983 session, adopted several measures to improve the longer-term mobilization of resources for UNDP. The General Assembly, on 19 December, adopted resolution 38/172 on the situation of the financial resources of UNDP (see below, under TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION THROUGH UNDP). In resolution 38/171 of the same date, on operational activities for development (see above), the Assembly strongly reiterated the need for and urged a substantial increase in resources, including an increase for IDA and IFAD, and urged for attainment of the 1983-1984 target for contributions to WFP.

By a letter of 17 November,⁽¹⁰⁾ the United States pointed out that on 14 November its President had signed into law a resolution authorizing, for the fiscal year 1984, voluntary contributions to United Nations agencies of $336.7 million, or 16.9 per cent over the previous year.

UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities. The 1983 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held at United Nations Headquarters on 8 and 9 November to receive government pledges for 1984 to United Nations funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance.

Contributions to the funds and programmes participating in the Pledging Conference grew only slightly in 1983, totalling $1,076 million, compared with $1,073 million in 1982. Pledges for 1984, as at 30 June 1984, amounted to $1,046 million, more than half of which was for UNDP.

Inter-agency co-operation

Resident co-ordinators

In 1983, resident co-ordinators continued to be responsible for co-ordinating operational activities for development in individual countries. These arrangements for field representation of the whole United Nations system had become operational in 1980.⁽¹¹⁾ At the end of 1983, 104 UNDP resident representatives were also acting as co-ordinators,

On 20 June,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the comments of ACC, submitted in accordance with a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽³⁾ on the arrangements for the functioning of co-ordinators. ACC's CCSQ(OPS) had prepared the recommendations, based on a synthesis of reports from the co-ordinators resulting from their consultations with Governments as well as comments from United Nations organizations. On 31 March,⁽⁵⁾ ACC approved the recommendations of CCSQ(OPS) on improving the complementarity and coherence of programmes and policies at the country level and on improving, monitoring and evaluating operations at the field level;

it decided that the practice of periodic meetings between the Co-ordinator and agency representatives should be further strengthened. Also on that date,⁽¹³⁾ ACC stated that the co-ordinators, the majority of whom had been in that capacity for 12 to 18 months, had been in place for too brief a period to permit a firm judgement regarding new arrangements. The manner in which they had been exercising their functions varied from country to country, conditioned by the views of the Government concerned and of its own arrangements for co-ordinating external assistance, the extent of agency representation in each country and the nature of operational activities carried out by the organizations of the system in the country concerned. ACC drew attention to the satisfaction expressed by a number of Governments with the arrangements for co-ordinating country-level operational activities and noted with satisfaction the comment by the vast majority of the resident co-ordinators that the procedures followed by the organizations of the system were such as to ensure that the activities conformed with national objectives. Arrangements for inter-agency collaboration at the country level, including those for the functioning of the Co-ordinator, should be allowed to develop further in a flexible and pragmatic manner, ACC stated; it would continue to keep the system of resident co-ordinators under review.

Programme and project evaluation

In August 1983, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of JIU on United Nations system co-operation in developing evaluation by Governments,⁽¹⁴⁾ one of a series of reports on evaluation progress since 1977. The report, prepared by Alfred N. Forde and Earl D. Sohm, dealt with conceptual and policy aspects of the problem, past efforts and constraints, future prospects, United Nations co-operation, and factors influencing evaluation. Concluding, the Inspectors stated that evaluation had been slow to emerge as an integral element of development management, but during the past few years there had been new international policy initiatives, accompanied by a growing interest and understanding of evaluation and increasing co-operative efforts to help develop government evaluation. Encouraging evaluation as a normal development management function on a wide scale would be a long, gradual and challenging task, they added.

They made several recommendations for United Nations action, stressing the potential leadership role of UNDP in strengthening government evaluation. They suggested: assessment by the organizations of their own evaluation systems; arrangements for co-operation and co-ordination in monitoring and evaluation activities with Governments and other development organizations when formulating and implementing projects and programmes; developing data on evaluation needs, resources, skills and contacts; identification and use of institutions in evaluation work; sharing of monitoring and evaluation experience and information through workshops, seminars and reports; and co-operative training in monitoring and evaluation, particularly in developing countries, as part of broader development management training.

Further recommendations were that the United Nations governing bodies might consider issuing a statement of policy to encourage government evaluation; that ACC consider specific areas, roles, arrangements and mechanisms to encourage and co-ordinate joint United Nations and other activities to help strengthen government evaluation; and that the United Nations, under the leadership of the Director-General for DIEC, determine what continuing actions it could take to develop the role of Governments in the internal evaluation system being designed for its economic and social sectors, to include support to government evaluation as a more specific part of its development issues and policies and public administration and finance programmes, and to enlist United Nations entities in a co-operative network to encourage and strengthen government evaluation.

Commenting on the JIU report in November,⁽¹⁵⁾ ACC supported the thesis that, both within the United Nations system and in Governments, evaluation should be seen as essential and integral to policy formulation, programme planning, budgeting and implementation management. It believed that the report was an excellent basis for further review of the direction which United Nations organizations were taking, in further improving their efforts towards harmonizing their evaluation systems and in supporting government evaluation activities.

ACC expressed full support for the recommendation calling for actions to address various aspects of evaluation on a continuing and co-ordinated basis. With regard to the suggestion that ACC consider specific ways to encourage joint activities to help strengthen government evaluation, ACC stated that it would ensure that information was regularly exchanged among agencies of the system. In addition, it noted that, at its March 1983 session, it had decided to improve monitoring and evaluation of country-level operational activities, through involvement of recipient Governments in United Nations-sponsored projects. With respect to the role of Governments in the internal evaluation system being designed for the economic and social sectors of the United Nations, ACC noted that guidelines for management-oriented evaluation were being developed under which programme managers would be requested to specify in their individual evaluation plans the type and extent of participation by Member States, as a regular feature of medium-term planning. ACC emphasized, however, that for assistance to Governments to be effective, certain pre-conditions must be fulfilled, namely: adequate institutional capability within the United Nations should first be built up; there was a need first to achieve co-ordinated and harmonized planning and implementation of evaluation within the United Nations, in order to secure methodologies appropriate to developing countries' needs and to avoid inconsistent, wasteful and counter-productive assistance; and a more adequate level of technical capability was required, based on a more developed information system. With regard to the proposal to include assistance for evaluation by Governments as a specific part of United Nations programme activities, ACC felt that the rationale for limiting the scope to development issues and policies and public administration and finance was not clear; since assistance for evaluation related essentially to individual developing countries, it added, responsiveness to diverse conditions and specific needs should be emphasized. ACC concluded that the thrust of United Nations support to Governments should come from regional commissions, regional institutions and other entities, with the United Nations Secretariat performing a co-ordinating role.

Technical co-operation through UNDP

In his annual report for 1983(1) the UNDP Administrator reported that there had been new developments in Programme management and evaluation, in UNDP's relations with the World Bank, regional development banks and other agency partners. A more solid resource foundation had been established for UNDP, confirmed by modestly improved results at the 1983 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities and evident in new activities for resource mobilization at the developing country level. Additional resources had been mobilized through increased cost-sharing in country projects, in services and funding to LDCs, and in operational activities for increased TCDC.

Highlights of UNDP action following the June 1983 Governing Council session were: involvement in the Secretary-General's initiative for action to meet Africa's food and development crisis, with resident co-ordinators preparing reports on priorities and UNDP field offices providing centres of operational support for large-scale international action; establishment of a new Central Evaluation Office to co-ordinate and oversee all aspects of project and programme evaluation; arrangements with Governments for the provision of additional and complementary funds for UNDP-assisted projects; restoration of programming levels to 80 per cent of illustrative indicative planning levels for some 23 small, mainly island developing countries at a total cost of $4.3 million for the Third Development Co-operation Cycle; further strengthening of UNDP's relationship with the World Bank family and regional development banks, aimed at increasing joint activities; intensified collaboration with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees; continued collaboration with UNFPA and UNICEF under the Joint Consultative Group on Policy, joined in 1983 also by WFP, to achieve more effective co-operation; appointment of a Co-ordinator of Assistance to the Least Developed Countries within the UNDP Planning and Co-ordination Office; continuation of the UNDP Development Study Programme, designed to promote better understanding of operational issues in development policy; establishment, in collaboration with WHO, UNICEF and the United Nations Centre for Social and Humanitarian Affairs, of a joint programme to promote adoption of already proven, low-cost measures to prevent disabilities and impairment of hundreds of millions of people in the developing countries (see Chapter XV of this section); and initiation of a number of administrative actions, including the issuance of updated and consolidated financial management guidelines and instructions to the field network, implementation of revised procedures for government execution of projects, development of model agreements for cost-sharing, trust fund and similar agreements, initiation on a pilot scale of automated systems for financial management and accounting and for project management in field offices, and introduction of new control systems for administrative budgets and appropriations at headquarters, together with the development of new data processing systems for special funds administered by UNDP.

At least partly in response to those activities, UNDP made new special funding arrangements, including the establishment, through transfer of funds from the liquidated United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund, of two new UNDP trust funds—one of $34 million for developing countries afflicted by drought, famine and malnutrition, and another of $5.8 million for increased economic and technical co-operation among developing countries. Forty-nine projects—33 in Africa, 10 in Asia and 6 in Latin America—had been approved for $14.3 million in commitments under the drought, famine and malnutrition fund, while project identification and consultation for the second fund was under way. Another arrangement was the allocation, under another trust fund established by the Administrator, of $6.6 million from the Netherlands to strengthen round-table conferences in augmenting development resources for LDCs.

With its growing number of allies and agency partners (the International Trade Centre became the twenty-seventh executing agency of UNDP in 1983) and its new Programme initiatives under way, UNDP was able to pursue more vigorously its co-ordinating role as a central funding organization for technical co-operation, playing a leadership role in each of the priority areas identified by the DIEC Director-General. Priorities for technical co-operation were also discussed in the 1983 development co-operation review of the main donor group, the OECD Development Assistance Committee, which cited the need for more effective evaluation, greater intensity of personnel devoted to rural development projects and projects in low-income countries with weak administrative structures, more careful recruitment and preparation of technical assistance experts, more effective participation of programme representatives in policy dialogues with recipient countries and better participation in co-ordination at the country level, as well as on the governing boards of multilateral organizations.

In its main policy paper, UNDP addressed the need to shift training from pre- and post-entry level courses to in-service training for mid-level personnel, the need to create incentives for greater "bottom-up" responsiveness by planners and the need for more precise terms of reference and selection of project experts. With respect to greater concentration of personnel in rural development and among low-income countries, the emphasis on grass-roots initiatives was especially relevant.

Improved co-ordination at the country level assumed special importance in the context of the Secretary-General's initiative on Africa (see Chapter VIII of this section). He had requested resident coordinators in the countries concerned to begin consultations with host Governments, bilateral and multilateral representatives, as well as representatives of non-governmental organizations, in order to identify or update country needs, priorities and gaps in resources.

With regard to strengthening UNDP's field network, during 1983 a number of efforts were taken to improve co-ordination through CCSQ(OPS) and inter-agency consultative meetings at headquarters. Due to resource constraints, many of UNDP's most effective and important field offices had been severely taxed; some of the steps taken in 1983—such as the new financial management guidelines and the pilot programme for field office automation—were projected to ease staffing pressures. Co-ordination remaining only one aspect of their responsibilities, field offices also had to respond to new and evolving technical co-operation requirements, grass-roots initiatives, a growing number of special funds administered by UNDP and country-level resource generation such as cost-sharing, co-financing and parallel financing arrangements.

In 1983, there were many examples of such country-level resource generation. The European Economic Community (EEC) provided $1.6 million for follow-up to the UNDP-supported seed production project for medium and small farms in Yemen. In the Sudan, $9.7 million in co-financing by EEC, France and the Netherlands was being co-ordinated under four UNDP-supported projects for development of the Jonglei Canal. A project for rural access roads in Kenya was being replicated in the Sudan and, with assistance from the Finnish International Development Agency, in Zambia. The UNDP-supported International Centre for Public Enterprises in Developing Countries in Ljubljana, Yugoslavia, had drawn parallel financing of $685,000 from the Netherlands and $461,000 from Sweden. For every dollar contributed by UNDP to various National Household Survey Capability Programmes, two dollars were contributed by bilateral donors. An irrigation project in the United Republic of Tanzania was being co-financed with a $1.3 million food-for-work grant from the World Bank and $1 million for equipment and materials from Australia. In China, 70 per cent of external assistance was provided by multilateral organizations, with UNDP being a leading on-the-scene-representative and with much new bilateral assistance being channelled through UNDP-supported activities.

In its relation with its agency partners, its services to Governments and its managerial and organizational effectiveness, UNDP acted in 1983 to improve the responsiveness and impact of its operational activities.

During 1983, the Inter-Agency Task Force at UNDP headquarters was preoccupied with various responsibilities assigned to it by ACC as a follow-up to the 1982 work by CCSQ(OPS) on the evolution of operational activities for development in the 1980s. The subjects covered by the Task Force included improving complementarity and coherence of United Nations action at the country level; better monitoring, evaluation and impact studies of field operations; strengthening of technical back-stopping of operational activities; and making effective use of knowledge and experience of the United Nations development system to influence more effectively the direction and flow of bilateral aid.

Task Force members reviewed the UNDP study on measures to be taken to meet the changing technical co-operation requirements of the developing countries. In addition, UNDP continued to profit from the advice of the Task Force on issues affecting UNDP/agency co-operation, particularly in synthesizing the agencies' comments on the JIU report on UNDP's Office for Projects Execution.

During 1983, the Administrator also consulted with several agencies on ways to strengthen the Task Force. The reduction in the number of full-time permanent members and their substitution by part-time associate members by some agencies was a matter of concern. The Administrator invited the executive heads of the agencies to resume full-time representation and to advise him on ways of ensuring more effective participation by other agencies in the Task Force's activities.

UNDP also searched out other means for strengthening system-wide collaboration. In 1983, WFP joined the Joint Consultative Group on Policy, formed among UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF, which negotiated an agreement to improve co-ordination in programming—to ensure that staff worked together in the early planning stages to make sure activities of their organizations were mutually reinforcing, to maximize the use of scarce resources and to work out a harmonized strategy within the context of Governments' development priorities. As a first step, the organizations were defining how to attain these objectives in selected countries in Africa, where an increased flow of resources was taking place in response to the drought crisis, with special reference to vulnerable groups, particularly women and children.

Efforts to enhance collaboration between UNDP and the World Bank and regional development banks, begun in 1982, gained momentum in 1983. These efforts were guided by a task force which met periodically to work out modalities for improved collaboration in specific areas, such as UNDP management services for World Bank-funded projects, joint technical co-operation assessment missions, and co-financing or cost-sharing. Other areas of close collaboration in 1983 included joint responsibilities under the Energy Assessment Programme, the Energy Management Assistance Programme, the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), and increased use by UNDP of the Bank's Economic Development Institute.

UNDP and the regional banks also began collaborating along new lines; for example, co-operation with the Asian Development Bank was expanded to include training in pre-investment activities.

In 1983, the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Unit continued inter-agency collaboration in equipment purchases, improvement in delivery and development of new sources of supply, particularly in developing countries, and also published its annual general business guide for potential suppliers of goods and services to the United Nations system.

UNDP stepped up efforts to extend further the usefulness of the field offices and to broaden support for their activities; for the first time, Governments could potentially draw on the services of the central co-ordinating mechanism of the United Nations system as they considered the optimal use and management of external technical inputs. UNDP also improved further field office capabilities. First steps were taken to computerize field office administration; 10 pilot field offices were selected in 1983 for systems development, with initial emphasis on financial management and accounting and Programme project management systems. Updated and consolidated guidelines and instructions for financial management and accounting procedures were issued.

Among steps taken to improve Programme effectiveness were preparations for the establishment of a focal point within UNDP for all matters related to the increased needs for LDCs.

Activities under the UNDP Development Study Programme also continued to expand. Four headquarters lectures were held, and the Istanbul Round Table, organized jointly with the North-South Round Table of the Society for International Development, brought together some 40 leading financial and development experts, bankers and international policy makers to discuss aspects of world financial and human resources development. Another round table was held jointly with the Development Policy Forum of the German Foundation for Development of the Federal Republic of Germany on technical co-operation in the development process and human resources building. A third seminar, on partnerships for development, was organized jointly with the United Nations Association of the United States at Pittsburgh.

During 1983, there were also further improvements in UNDP's data-based management system. New administrative budget and appropriation control systems were implemented, as were new data systems for the Office for Projects Execution and UNV, while plans were initiated to provide data processing services to UNDP-administered trust funds, including the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) and the United Nations and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFRNRE).

UNDP emergency operations reached an all-time high. The Programme provided emergency/disaster relief assistance to 14 countries, while following up on earlier similar assistance to numerous other countries.

UNDP Council action. In New York, the UNDP Governing Council, held an organizational meeting on 14 February, a special meeting from 14 to 18 February to consider country and intercountry programmes and projects, and its thirtieth session from 6 to 24 June.⁽²⁾ The Council adopted three decisions in February, on its programme and organization of work during the year; on country and intercountry programmes (see below), and on assistance to Yemen for rehabilitation and reconstruction of the areas affected by an earthquake (see Chapter III of this section).

The 40 decisions adopted by the Council in June dealt with resource mobilization; the Administrator's annual report; recruitment and reduction of the cost of project professional personnel; pre-investment activities; implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs (p. 431); special assistance to Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND COLONIZATION, Chapter III); assistance to the Palestinian people (p. 282); evaluation; illustrative IPFs; country and intercountry programmes and projects; Special Programme Resources; technical co-operation activities; UNFPA (see Chapter XIV of this section); UNV; UNCDF; UNRFRNRE; TCDC; United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD) (see Chapter XII of this section); energy development programmes (see Chapter X of this section); implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification; financial matters concerning the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) UNDP/UNEP joint venture (see Chapter XVI of this section); implementation of the recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region; other assistance to drought-stricken countries in Africa (see Chapter III of this section); United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries; annual review of the financial situation in 1982; revised budget estimates for 1982-1983; budget estimates for 1984-1985; trust funds conditioned on procurement from a donor country; trust funds established by the Administrator; guidelines on procurement; matters on which consensus was not achieved at the Council's 1983 session (concerning financial regulations and other questions); support cost reimbursement arrangements for activities financed from resources of UNCDF and UNSO and for projects executed directly by UNDP; ex post facto reporting on agency support costs; audit reports; sectoral support (see below) and financing of technical field advisers in the SIDFA programme (see Chapter VI of this section); measures concerning Governing Council documentation; provisional agenda for the Council's 1984 session; arrangements for Council meetings in 1984; and other reports considered by the Council in 1983.

UNDP operational activities

Country and intercountry programmes

The UNDP Governing Council, on 18 February 1983,⁽³⁾ approved country programmes and projects for the following: Cape Verde, Ethiopia, Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Nigeria, Sao Tomé and Príncipe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo, Upper Volta (Africa); Algeria, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Sudan (Arab States); Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Mongolia, Papua New Guinea, Republic of Korea, Tonga, Vanuatu (Asia and the Pacific); Greece (Europe); Uruguay (Latin America). It also approved a country programme for Yemen which exceeded the cost-sharing level established by the Council in June 1982,⁽⁴⁾ and took note of a one-year extension of programmes approved by the Administrator for Afghanistan and Benin. It took note with appreciation of an intercountry programme for Latin America and the Caribbean for 1982-1986, presented by the Administrator, and of arrangements for its implementation. The Council authorized him to approve requests for country and regional assistance, keeping expenditures in reasonable conformity with IPFs, with government contributions, and within financial resources; and requested him in implementing programmes to take into account government views.

On 16 June,⁽⁵⁾ the Council approved country programmes for: Central African Republic, Chad, Equatorial Guinea, Ghana, Ivory Coast, Liberia, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon (Africa); Syrian Arab Republic (Arab States); Iran, Kiribati, Niue, Sri Lanka, Tokelau, Tuvalu (Asia and the Pacific); Cyprus (Europe); Belize, Colombia, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Trinidad and Tobago (Latin America). The Council authorized the Administrator to approve requests for UNDP country assistance and to approve assistance for Lebanon and Swaziland until new programmes for them had been approved. It decided to extend through 1983 the programmes for Benin, Bolivia and Suriname, and took note of one-year extensions approved by the Administrator for El Salvador and Indonesia, as well as of a regional programme presented by him for the Arab States, 1983-1986, and of arrangements for its implementation.

By the same decision, the Council took note of the Administrator's note on UNDP support to the Technical Advisory Committee of the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research, of oral explanations and of the comments expressed thereon, and decided that UNDP support to that Committee should continue to be charged against the UNDP biennial budget under a separate appropriation line. It approved supplementary assistance for a global project to increase the fixation of soil nitrogen and the efficiency of soil water use in rainfed agricultural systems in the countries of North Africa and Western Asia, and authorized the Administrator to arrange for its execution.

The Council took note of the Administrator's intention to safeguard the financial integrity of UNDP by approving programmes and projects within the limit of 55 per cent of IPFs and by regulating expenditures accordingly. That action notwithstanding, the Council requested him, subject to available resources, to apply 80 per cent of the respective IPFs to countries to which the supplementary criteria applied and whose IPFs were $1.5 million or less, and a minimum IPF of $1.2 million (80 per cent of $1.5 million) to developing countries with IPFs above $1.5 million. The Council took note of his proposal to issue fact sheets for projects to which the UNDP contribution, including cost-sharing, totalled $400,000 or more.

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/172 of 19 December 1983, also dealt with the financial resources situation of UNDP (see below). In resolution 38/192 of 20 December, the Assembly urged the Governing Council to consider increasing its allocation of financial resources for assistance to African countries and intergovernmental organizations in planning their programmes for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990). In doing so, the Assembly repeated a call by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1983/70 of 29 July.

On 15 June,⁽⁶⁾ the Governing Council approved revised illustrative IPFs for 1982-1986 for the following, in view of their designation as LDCs: Equatorial Guinea, by $1 million to $12,750,000; Sierra Leone, by $2.4 million to $34.9 million; Togo, by $1.8 million to $23.5 million. The Council noted a request by Liberia to be accorded treatment as a least developed country, the third country programme for that country, and that the Committee for Development Planning had concluded that Liberia did not qualify for designation as least developed (p. 431). The Council decided that its 1981 decision concerning an interim IPF for Lebanon⁽⁷⁾ should continue until a specific recommendation on a final IPF for the 1982-1986 programming cycle could be submitted. The Council also adopted the Administrator's proposal to establish a separate IPF for Anguilla of $800,000, and authorized the increase of the IPF for 1982-1986 for St. Kitts-Nevis from $1.3 million to $1,995,000, conditional on accession to independence.

In March 1983,⁽⁸⁾ the Administrator submitted a report on the use of country IPFs for TCDC during 1980-1982.

Special Programme Resources

On 18 June 1983,⁽⁹⁾ the Governing Council approved an allocation of $610,000 from the Special Programme Resources for the 1982-1986 programming cycle for information and communications support for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) from 1 July 1983 to 31 December 1985 (see Chapter IX of this section). It further approved $600,000 from those Resources for 1982-1986 for promotional activities for TCDC during 1984-1985, subject to consideration of a possible increase as recommended by the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC, following a mid-term review of the 1982-1986 cycle to take place at the 1984 Council session. The Council decided that $600,000 for the Information Referral System (INRES) for TCDC during 1984-1985 be appropriated separately in the 1984-1985 budget. Further provisions of the decision also related to INRES (see below, under TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION AMONG DEVELOPING COUNTRIES).

UNDP's Budgetary and Finance Committee⁽¹⁰⁾ reviewed the financial aspects of the use of Special Programme Resources for promotional activities for TCDC and for support for the Decade, based on a May note by the Administrator⁽¹¹⁾ and parts of the report of the High-level Committee. Introducing the topic, the Deputy Administrator recalled that in 1980 the Governing Council had authorized $83.4 million as a planning figure for the Resources for 1982-1986. Since that amount was subject to an across-the-board reduction to 55 per cent of the established level of resources, the planning level of Special Programme Resources was reduced to $45,879,000 for 1982-1986. Referring to UNDP activities relating to the Water Decade, the Deputy Administrator noted that they had been funded from the programme development portion of the Resources. Under guidelines for the use of funds from that portion, no further amounts could be allocated, nor could intercountry IPFs be utilized given their cut-back to 55 per cent of their levels. Therefore, the Administrator had requested an allocation of $610,000 from the contingency portion of the Resources for support of those activities until the end of 1985. Referring to the May/June session of the High-level Committee (see below, under TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION AMONG DEVELOPING COUNTRIES), the Deputy Administrator reported that the Committee proposed that INRES should continue to be financed from the UNDP budget, rather than from Special Programme Resources, to ensure permanent funding. He remarked, however, that INRES was a compendium of information of countries' capacities and its activities should more appropriately be regarded as a project undertaking. He also stated that the High-level Committee recommended that the Governing Council consider allocating $1 million for promotional work for TCDC for 1984-1985, which meant an additional $400,000 to the $600,000 already recommended by the Administrator.

Training programme for pre-investment studies

As requested by the Governing Council in 1981 and 1982,⁽¹²⁾ the Administrator reported in March 1983 on the evaluation of special training in investment development for resident and deputy resident representatives.⁽¹³⁾ Under the programme, organized in conjunction with the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank, two seminars were scheduled for April and December 1983. For 1984 and 1985, the Administrator felt, two additional seminars each year would be necessary. By 1986 he expected that one special seminar per year would be sufficient for UNDP to provide Governments with staff trained to assist them effectively in their pre-investment requirements. Financial resources to implement the proposal for 1984-1985 would amount to $320,000, which had been taken into account in the 1984-1985 budget estimates.

The Governing Council, on 24 June 1983⁽¹⁴⁾ endorsed the proposal for two seminars in 1984 and 1985.

UNDP programme planning

Among measures approved by the Governing Council on 24 June 1983⁽¹⁵⁾ to mobilize increased resources for UNDP were some for strengthening the role of the Council and participating Governments in programme planning and review. They included: briefing meetings and informal consultations between Governments and the UNDP secretariat; better feedback from evaluations and reports on programme implementation into the planning process; greater efforts by the secretariat to provide official documentation to delegations well in advance of Council sessions; and detailed information to help them better understand UNDP's work.

In resolution 38/172 on the financial resources situation of UNDP (see below), the General Assembly reiterated recipient Governments' full responsibility in preparing country programmes, as well as the Administrator's authority to assist Governments in that process.

Programme evaluation

In 1983, UNDP's system of in-depth evaluation with systematic feedback was reviewed by the Governing Council. On 1 October, the Administrator announced the establishment of a small Central Evaluation Office and a Technical Advisory Division within UNDP. The Office was charged with four key functions: further development and monitoring of evaluation policy; programme analysis with a view to its improvement and that of the special purpose funds; collaboration with agencies and Governments on evaluation policies; and provision of evaluation results. The Division was charged with a broad range of technical support activities.

UNDP continued to undertake new thematic evaluations in collaboration with its agency partners. Four such evaluations were published in 1983: one with UNIDO, on industrial research and service institutes; one with UNESCO, on educational innovation and reform; one with the International Trade Centre, on trade promotion; and one on human resources development for primary health care, for which follow-up guidelines prepared with WHO were simultaneously issued for field office staff. Other evaluations under way in 1983 included one with FAO on agricultural research, one with ILO on industrial training, and one on women's participation in development in response to a 24 June 1983 Governing Council decision⁽¹⁶⁾

Evaluation issues were also discussed at various inter-agency meetings. An inter-agency working group on evaluation was established, with the first meeting scheduled for January 1984. The Administrator's proposals on evaluation were considered by the UNDP Governing Council's Inter-sessional Committee of the Whole in February 1983 (see below, under FINANCIAL SITUATION), and by the Council at its June session.

Report of the Administrator. In April, the Administrator submitted to the Governing Council a progress report on UNDP's evaluation programme⁽¹⁷⁾ analysing UNDP and agency experience to improve identification, design and implementation of future projects. An inquiry had been addressed to all UNDP field offices in January 1983. Also reviewed were evaluations in national agricultural research institutes and manufactures industries. Annexed to the report was a summary of a study by UNDP and WHO of human resources development for primary health care (see Chapter XV of this section).

JIU report. In May, the Administrator transmitted to the Governing Council a report on the evaluation system of UNDP, prepared by Inspector Earl D. Sohm of JIU.⁽¹⁸⁾ Stressing the importance of evaluation as part of UNDP operations, he stated that new management arrangements were needed to strengthen the evaluation system on an integrated basis. He endorsed the proposal to set up a Central Evaluation Office which, he believed, should also co-operate with evaluation officers from other United Nations organizations in an inter-agency working group.

In addition, he called for further action by the Administrator to: ensure that the evaluation system's role be clearly defined; revise the 1975 guidelines for UNDP project evaluation; combine tripartite reviews, more disciplined project evaluations, an evaluative component in country programming and a tighter programme of thematic evaluations to determine effectiveness and improve operations; strengthen key linkages of evaluation with the new project design process, with Governments through increased support to their evaluation efforts, and with executing agencies through a new inter-agency working group; ensure effective system operation through revised responsibilities, particularly in the Central Evaluation Office, for evaluation planning and oversight, guidelines and training, and analysis of information and its feedback into operations; and co-ordinate these elements at the unit and bureau level for overall assessment of UNDP technical co-operation activities and reporting on Programme effectiveness.

Commenting in December⁽¹⁹⁾ on the JIU report, the Secretary-General observed that there was wide support among the United Nations organizations for the recommendations, especially concerning a Central Evaluation Office. He noted that collaborative action with the agencies had begun, policy guidelines were being revised and the thematic evaluation programme was under review. In particular, he supported the call for an effective tripartite evaluation system with emphasis on evaluation as an essential element within an integrated management system, and expressed his strong support for the need to clarify and activate UNDP's responsibilities for evaluation.

UNDP Council action. In two decisions of 24 June, one on measures to mobilize increased resources for UNDP,⁽¹⁵⁾ the other on UNDP's evaluation programme,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Governing Council took note with satisfaction of the decision to establish a Central Evaluation Office and to develop a strengthened programme, and noted that the Office's cost in 1983 would be covered from savings in the 1982-1983 budget through redeployment of existing resources. The Council also decided that it should meet as a committee of the whole, to consider, among other things, reports on evaluation studies, and requested the Administrator report in 1984 on the progress made and on the results of the evaluation work. By the latter decision, the Council also dealt with the joint United Nations/UNDP/UNIDO evaluation on manufactures (see Chapter VI of this section).

UNDP financing

Financial situation

In his annual report on the UNDP financial situation in 1983,⁽²⁰⁾ the Administrator stated that total income amounted to $838.2 million ($4 million lower than forecast), while total expenditure was $751 million. Mainly as a result of the $62.7 million surplus of main programme income over expenditure (as against the forecast of an excess of expenditure over income of $31.9 million), the revenue reserve of UNDP, which had been in deficit to the extent of $5.7 million at 31 December 1982, became a surplus of $57.9 million as at 31 December 1983 (as against the forecast of a negative balance of $37.7 million). Income from voluntary contributions amounted to $697.8 million (including $1 million relating to future years' pledges) which was higher than the forecast by $4.4 million, mainly because most Governments paid their pledges before the end of the year. Miscellaneous income, mainly investment income and gains or losses on exchange and revaluation of currencies, amounted to $17.4 million as against the forecast of $10 million.

Total expenditure in 1983 was $119.9 million lower than forecast. The shortfall occurred mostly in expenditures relating to the main field programme and cost-sharing. Administrative and programme support costs of $109 million were $5.8 million less than estimated, due to reduced costs (because of a stronger United States dollar), lower than anticipated inflation and the continuation of a recruitment freeze.

Due to improved donor payment patterns and reductions in programme expenditure, the amounts available for short-term investments at year's end were higher than anticipated. The increased level of operating funds held by the agencies was partly the result of unexpected savings realized by the cancellation of some 1982 obligations by some agencies, which had not been reflected in earlier expenditure forecasts.

Cash, letters of credit and investments as at 31 December 1983, exclusive of investments made on behalf of fully funded reserves, totalled $304.9 million, compared to $243.6 million as at 31 December 1982. Cash balances as at 31 December 1983 amounted to $19.2 million (excluding holdings in accumulated non-convertible currencies), of which $2.1 million was held in the central account of UNDP and $17.1 million represented operating cash balances in the field offices.

Inter-sessional Committee of the Whole. The Inter-sessional Committee of the Whole, established in June 1982,⁽²¹⁾ reported to the Governing Council in April 1983 on its three sessions,⁽²²⁾ all held at United Nations Headquarters. The first session had been held in September 1982.⁽²³⁾ In 1983, the Committee met for its second and third sessions, from 9 to 11 February and from 6 to 8 April.

The short-term financing situation of UNDP, with particular reference to a one-shot supplementary financing effort, was one of the main subjects considered. Two Governments—Canada and Norway—responded to the appeal for supplementary contributions and, in April, Sweden announced an extraordinary contribution, subject to parliamentary approval, while Switzerland stated that it was seriously considering the question. The Committee's February conclusions on short-term financing, as well as its April recommendations for the long-term mobilization of resources, were taken up by the Governing Council in June (see below).

With regard to additional and alternative ways of financing and providing development assistance through UNDP and the funds administered by it, the Committee recommended that the Administrator's March proposals⁽²⁴⁾—which included the conversion of contributions in kind to cash, the provision by UNDP of management and other support services for Governments—be considered further by the Council in the light of additional clarification on the methodology for cost calculation.

Concerning measures to promote better understanding of UNDP's activities and resource requirements, the Committee recognized the need for strengthening information work and recommended that the Administrator be encouraged to explore and implement the proposals he had suggested in that regard in December 1982.⁽²⁵⁾

UNDP Council action. Based on the suggestions of the Committee of the Whole, the Governing Council, on 24 June 1983, adopted measures to mobilize more resources on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis.⁽¹⁵⁾ Among those to improve longer-term financing were: informal intergovernmental consultations prior to the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, with Governments able to do so making firm pledges for the pledging year and statements on their pledging for the following two years, expressed in special drawing rights if they so chose; and informal consultations among participating Governments to discuss the growth of UNDP, prior to establishing resource target levels. The Council recommended that Governments maintain the real value of their contributions and inform the Administrator of their intentions at the earliest possible time. It requested him to submit proposals based on the preliminary discussion in the Committee of the Whole on a possible three-year rolling system of pledges and programme implementation.

Concerning UNDP's short-term financing, the Council noted with appreciation that several Governments had provided additional resources, and hoped that others would act similarly. It appealed to all net contributors to transfer to UNDP, at the end of their fiscal years, development assistance resources that could not be disbursed through other channels, and strongly urged Governments to draw attention at international assemblies to UNDP's critical financial situation.

The Council, among additional and alternative ways of financing and providing development assistance through UNDP and UNDP-administered funds, authorized the Administrator to provide management and other support services on behalf of Governments. In providing these services, he was requested to take into account the views expressed by Governments in the Committee of the Whole and in the Council, and to ensure that the central multilateral character of the Programme not be eroded and that the activities remained marginal to government contributions, core resources and the implementation of the UNDP programme. The Council also requested the Administrator to follow the general guidelines set forth by him on further clarification of the proposals on management and other support services in charging donor Governments for such services so as to ensure that they did not entail any financial implications. It further requested him to report annually on the development of those activities, and decided to assess after two years the experience gained.

In order to facilitate longer-term financing, the Council also approved measures to strengthen its role and that of participating Governments (see above, under PROGRAMME PLANNING). The Council recognized the need for strengthening timely information about UNDP. It agreed that the Administrator should explore and implement the proposals made in December 1982⁽²⁵⁾ and report thereon to the Council.

By another decision of 24 June,⁽²⁶⁾ the Council, having considered the Administrator's report on the UNDP financial situation in 1982,⁽²⁷⁾ noted with concern the decline in programme delivery, due to stagnating contributions, and erosion of the Programme's financial reserves. It called on Governments, in particular those whose contributions might have been below their capacity, to increase them. The Council reiterated its concern over delays in payments, urged Governments to make them as early as possible and called on those whose currencies had accumulated and on the Administrator to continue reducing the balance of accumulated non-convertible currencies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly on 19 December adopted resolution 38/172 without vote.

Situation of the financial resources of the United Nations Development Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Stressing the urgent need to strengthen multilateral co-operation for development as a desirable and effective means for promoting mutually beneficial co-operation between developed and developing countries,

Emphasizing the importance of multilateral technical co-operation in the economic and social development of developing countries and the urgent need for a substantial and real increase in the level of financial resources on an increasingly predictable, continuous and assured basis,

Reiterating the unique and central role of the United Nations Development Programme in the field of technical co-operation for development,

Reaffirming the exclusive responsibility of the Government of the recipient country in formulating its national development plan, priorities and objectives, as set out in the consensus contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 2688(XXV) of 11 December 1970,

Stressing that the indicative planning figures established for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, of the United Nations Development Programme should be maintained, to the extent possible, and financed through efforts to increase contributions by the international community.

Having considered the difficult financial situation of the United Nations Development Programme, even in the light of the encouraging outcome of the 1983 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, and its serious impact on the level of technical assistance provided to developing countries through the Programme,

Aware that, together with efforts to obtain additional voluntary contributions, steps are being taken to increase further the quality, efficiency and effectiveness of the United Nations Development Programme,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme for the year 1983,

1. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme for the year 1983 and the decisions contained therein;

2. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/53 of 29 July 1982, in which the Council, inter alia, took note of decision 82/5 of 18 June 1982 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, by which the Governing Council reaffirmed its decisions 80/30 of 26 June 1980 and 81/16 of 27 June 1981, including those provisions relating to the indicative planning figures, the assumed overall average annual rate of growth of voluntary contributions and the level of resources envisaged for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, for the purposes of forward planning;

3. Welcomes the adoption by consensus of decision 83/5 of 24 June 1983 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme;

4. Notes that, although the outcome of the 1983 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities has shown that there is a trend towards ending the erosion of the resources of the United Nations Development Programme, greater efforts remain necessary to strengthen that trend in order to lead to a process of growth of resources by increasing significantly the level of contributions on a more equitable basis;

5. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments, of both developed and developing countries, which, at the 1983 Pledging Conference, announced their voluntary contributions or their intention to contribute to the United Nations Development Programme for 1984 in amounts approaching, equalling or exceeding an average annual increase of 14 per cent in their contributions, and to those Governments that have consistently maintained their contributions at a high level;

6. Urges all other Governments, especially those whose overall performance is not commensurate with their capacities, to renew their efforts, consistent with paragraph 1 (c) of section I of decision 83/5 of the Governing Council, to provide the United Nations Development Programme with the resources necessary to establish a sound financial basis for the implementation of its planned activities for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, which, for the purpose of forward planning, would assume an overall average annual rate of growth of resources of at least 14 per cent;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for his tireless efforts to obtain the necessary level of resources envisaged for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, in order to secure the financial viability of the Programme and to improve further its quality, efficiency and effectiveness, and encourages the Administrator to continue those efforts, taking into account, inter alia, the need to restrain administrative expenditures in order to maximize programme delivery, in accordance with paragraph 4 of Governing Council decision 81/16;

8. Reaffirms the mandate of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, reiterates its confidence in the authority of the Governing Council to consider and approve the programmes formulated by recipient Governments and requests the Governing Council, in accordance with the principles and objectives reflected in the consensus set forth in the annex to General Assembly resolution 2688(XXV), to ensure full implementation, to the extent possible, of the planned activities of the Programme for the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, and beyond;

9. Reiterates the full responsibility of recipient Governments in the preparation of country programmes, as well as the authority of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to assist, upon request, those Governments in that process in order to submit the programmes, with his recommendations, to the Governing Council for its consideration and approval;

10. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to exercise the utmost vigilance over the financial management of the Programme so that most of the funds are channelled towards programme delivery, with the maximum reduction in expenditure of support and administrative costs, and requests the Administrator to report to the Governing Council in that regard.

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/703) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.117), based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.102) and orally revised; agenda item 79 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 45-54, 56; plenary 102.

Apart from drafting changes, the adopted text differed from that submitted by the Group of 77 mainly in the following: in paragraph 2 of the Group's text, the Assembly would have endorsed the July 1982 Economic and Social Council resolution on the report of the UNDP Governing Council;⁽²⁸⁾ in paragraph 3, it would have merely taken note of the Council decision on measures to mobilize increased resources;⁽¹⁵⁾ and in paragraph 4, it would have noted that greater efforts remained necessary to strengthen the trend towards ending the erosion of resources in order to lead to a process of growth and renewal of resources, commensurate with the needs of developing countries.

Deciding—in resolution 38/201 of 20 December 1983—to liquidate the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund (see Chapter III of this section), the Assembly allocated 70 per cent of the remaining balance to UNDP-administered funds to finance urgently needed projects; decided that 12 per cent would be channelled through UNDP for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries; and requested the Administrator to report to the Governing Council in 1984 on action taken to implement these decisions.

Expenditures

Field programme expenditure in 1983 was $560.1 million, of which $466.6 million represented expenditure against IPFs, $68.7 million against cost-sharing (exclusive of support costs) and $24.8 million against supplementary programmes in the UNDP account. The reduction of $100.4 million (or approximately 15.2 per cent) from 1982 resulted from a 1982 decision⁽²⁹⁾ to reduce IPF planning targets to 55 per cent of the illustrative IPFs. In order to provide for smooth transition to a lower level of programming, the Administrator had set progressively declining limitations on IPF expenditures from 1983 to 1985. Thus, the limitations on IPF expenditures for 1983 and 1984 had been set at $530 million and $500 million, respectively. The continued strength of the United States dollar in 1983 had a moderating impact on programme expenditure, as had cautious planning by Governments and resident representatives which resulted in major reductions in project budget approvals in 1983, rather than more gradually as planned. In addition, the savings realized in 1983 from the cancellation of some obligations by executing agencies contributed to the lower levels of expenditure. Cost-sharing expenditures of $68.7 million in 1983 were also influenced by those factors; there was a shortfall of $26.3 million from the forecast of $95 million. Despite the shortfall, however, the amount apportioned to cost-sharing in 1983 showed an increase of $6.5 million, or 10.5 per cent over 1982; cost-sharing expenditure increased from 9.4 per cent in 1982 to 12.2 per cent in 1983. Expenditure chargeable to Special Programme Resources amounted to $4 million, of which $1.5 million was expended for disaster-related projects and $2.5 million for other activities, including assistance to the Palestinian people.

Budgets

Programme support and administrative services costs constitute the UNDP administrative budget, adopted biennially.

Budget for 1982-1983

On 24 June 1983,⁽³⁰⁾ the Governing Council approved revised appropriations for 1982-1983, covering the administrative costs of the main Programme and of five other activities managed by UNDP: UNV, UNCDF, UNRFRNRE, UNSO and the UNSO UNDP/UNEP joint venture (see Chapter XVI of this section).

The Council approved revised appropriations of $301,134,100 gross and resolved that income estimates of $62,718,200 be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $238,415,900 (i.e., $14,128,100 less than it had approved in June 1982).⁽³¹⁾ Included in the main Programme allocation of $227,748,000 was $1.5 million authorized for use during the biennium for staff separation costs. The Administrator was authorized to carry forward support cost earnings of the Office for Projects Execution (OPE) at the end of each biennium up to a maximum of 10 per cent of the gross appropriations for the Office for the following biennium, and was asked to report on the use of that authority.

The figures were based on the May 1983 recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).⁽³²⁾ In April,⁽³³⁾ the Administrator had proposed net appropriations of $238,215,900, or $14,328,100 less than the Council had approved in 1982.⁽³¹⁾ Core activities accounted for $12.9 million net ($21.7 million gross) of the decrease, while staff separation costs had been decreased by $1 million. The remainder of the decrease, approximately $1.1 million gross ($400,000 net) was mainly attributable to OPE, the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Unit, UNV and the UNSO UNDP/UNEP joint venture; net decreases in estimates for UNCDF and UNRFRNRE were nearly offset by a projected increase in estimates for UNSO.

ACABQ noted that $400,000 was shown as an estimate of income from the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund; it pointed out that as a result of the December 1982 General Assembly resolution on improving the Fund's actuarial balance,⁽³⁴⁾ the estimate for 1983 would have to be deleted, with a consequent increase of $200,000 in the net expenditure budget.

With regard to the Administrator's proposal to allow OPE to carry over savings from one biennium for use in the next, ACABQ noted that, currently, any unused agency support cost earnings in respect of OPE activities reverted to UNDP general resources. It noted the potential difficulties cited by the Administrator involving the rigidity of tying agency support cost earnings to a specific biennium. In the opinion of ACABQ, a system of automatic carry-overs to finance future OPE deficits might also create difficulties and a situation could arise where a series of surpluses over several bienniums could result in a potential cumulative carry-over larger than required. It also saw the possibility that even with the utilization of carry-overs, administrative support might eventually have to be reduced in a situation where delivery rates had not risen to anticipated levels. Therefore, ACABQ believed that the Governing Council should review proposed carry-overs in the light of facts existing when the need was foreseen. Such a review, it added, could take place at the Council's June session in the last year of a biennium. Should the Administrator desire to carry over an OPE support cost surplus, he should be required to seek the Council's prior authority and to justify his request in terms of funds available and anticipated rates of delivery. The Administrator's request should be stated in the context of his proposed biennial budget estimates, where it would be considered by ACABQ before being taken up by the Council.

Report of the Administrator. In an April 1983 report,⁽³³⁾ the Administrator proposed budget estimates for 1984-1985 amounting to $355,062,200 (gross) and $276,631,100 (net), an increase of $53.9 million (gross) and $38.4 million (net) over the revised budget estimates for 1982-1983 (see above). The gross increase was composed of currency adjustments of minus $1.5 million, of inflation adjustments of $48.6 million, and of adjustments for other costs of $8.9 million as well as of a volume decrease of $2.1 million. The 1984-1985 budget had been calculated at exchange rates applicable on 1 February 1983, and currency changes were to be reflected in revisions of the estimates; the new budget formulation system allowed for detailed identification of their financial impact.

The inflation forecast for 1984-1985 reflected the decrease in inflation rates, which were expected to continue at substantially higher rates in the developing countries than in the industrialized countries. The forecasts for headquarters and Geneva had been co-ordinated with those of the United Nations, while the forecasts for the field were based on information from resident representatives, co-operating commercial banks and international financial institutions. The new budget format allowed for improved capability to monitor actual price movements against forecasts by country and expenditure category, and the related financial impact on the budget estimates.

The adjustment for other costs in respect of all funds reflected: an increase related to within-grade increment of $12.6 million; an additional $1 million for changes in staff entitlements, which became effective in 1983 and were only partially reflected in the 1982-1983 revised estimates; a $1.5 million decrease in the appropriation for transitional measures; a $3 million decrease for UNDP core activities due to a 1.5 per cent vacancy rate proposed by the Administrator; and a $0.2 million decrease in respect of reimbursement to UNDP by non-core activities for services rendered.

With respect to volume changes for UNDP core activities, the overall decrease was $1,559,500. Of this, $700,000 referred to the UNDP contribution to the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research and $521,200 referred to the cost of the INRES project. It was proposed that those items, charged to the UNDP biennial budget, be transferred to other sources of funds. To that extent, it was noted, the volume decrease for core activities represented only the transfer of costs to other financing sources. Should the Council not agree to that transfer, the amount would be reinstated in the biennial UNDP budget. The remaining volume decrease of $338,300 could be described as marginal.

ACABQ report. In its May 1983 report,⁽³²⁾ ACABQ noted that the new budget format was much better than previous ones and trusted that it would be used in future, thus facilitating comparisons between budgets for different bienniums. ACABQ recommended that information on projection and use of UNDP resources be included in future budgets and that information on temporary posts be incorporated in the tables.

ACABQ recommended approval of the 1984-1985 budget estimates as proposed, taking into account a deletion of $400,000 as income from the Joint Staff Pension Fund, resulting from a December 1982 Assembly resolution;⁽³⁴⁾ the amounts to be appropriated were therefore $355,062,200 gross and $277,031,100 net, with income estimated at $78,031,100.

UNDP Council action. On 24 June 1983,⁽³⁵⁾ the Governing Council approved appropriations amounting to $356,603,900 gross for the administrative costs of the main Programme and the five other activities managed by UNDP. It resolved that income estimates of $77,072,800 be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $279,531,100. Noting with appreciation that the Administrator had applied a zero growth rate in real terms in the budget, the Council requested him to reduce administrative costs further. It decided to review in 1984 the extrabudgetary administrative expenditures, to determine how they should be presented in the 1986-1987 budget, and requested the Administrator to report on that matter.

Support costs

In May 1983, the Administrator submitted to the Governing Council a note on ex post facto reports on agency support costs,⁽³⁶⁾ stating that, as part of arrangements agreed between UNDP and the agencies in 1982 on format, content and due dates for such reports,⁽³⁷⁾ he had conducted a trial report exercise with agencies in late 1982 to identify possible problem areas. The results of that exercise had been discussed with the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary Questions) at its March 1983 session. The Administrator also stated his intention to report orally to the Council on those discussions, including a proposal for minor changes in the due dates for submitting ex post, facto reports.

The Council on 24 June⁽³⁸⁾ noted with satisfaction the results of the trial reporting exercise. It authorized the Administrator to proceed with the proposed change-over to a biennial ex post facto report covering all executing agencies, and requested him to submit his first report in 1984 covering all those agencies for 1982-1983. On the same date,⁽³⁹⁾ the Council also requested him to examine the feasibility and financial implications of waiving agency support costs for projects financed from the United Nations Fund for Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III).

Support cost reimbursement

Agency support costs reimbursed by UNDP in 1983 were $73.1 million, down from $85.1 million in 1982.⁽³¹⁾

In April 1983,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Administrator reported to the Governing Council on support cost reimbursement arrangements for activities financed by UNCDF and UNSO, and for projects executed directly by OPE. In accordance with a 1982 Council decision,⁽³⁷⁾ he had carried out a comprehensive review of a 1981/82 study in order to determine the correctness of 11 per cent and 5 per cent support cost rates associated with OPE execution of IPF-funded and UNCDF-funded projects, respectively, and to determine a support cost rate associated with OPE execution of UNSO-funded activities based on more precise calculations for UNSO. Based on the further studies and reviews carried out, the Administrator stated, the validity of the 11 per cent and 5 per cent support cost rates determined in 1982 had been confirmed, and an 8 per cent support cost rate for UNSO-funded projects had been determined.

On 24 June 1983,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's proposals. Based on his recommendations, it decided that the following rates should apply to the reimbursement of support costs for projects executed by OPE: 11 per cent of project expenditure for technical co-operation activities financed from IPF resources, cost-sharing contributions and any trust fund for activities of a similar nature; 5 per cent for UNCDF-financed activities; and 8 per cent for UNSO-financed activities. The Council decided that reimbursement of support costs to executing agencies for activities financed from UNCDF or UNSO would continue for the time being and would be agreed upon between the funding organization and the agency concerned. It requested the Administrator to keep the matter under review with the agencies and report to the Council whenever significant developments occurred.

Also on 24 June, the financing of institutional support costs of the UNSO UNDP/UNEP joint venture (see Chapter XVI of this section) was dealt with by the Council,⁽⁴²⁾ as was the question of reimbursement for programme support costs to the World Bank.⁽⁴³⁾

Sectoral support

In 1983, $1,150,000 was allocated to 11 executing agencies for sectoral support activities—principally regional advisers and short-term missions of experts—designed to complement similar activities by the agencies from their own resources. This was in addition to $3,693,000 for the largest programme of this type, the Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAs), managed by UNIDO (see Chapter VI of this section).

The 1983 amount for sectoral support was only 64 per cent of the original tentative allocation made in 1981;⁽⁴⁴⁾ the amount had been reduced in line with the across-the-board reductions in programming levels for all countries to 55 per cent of illustrative IPFs, to which the sectoral support funds were also subject. In accordance with a June 1982 Governing Council decision,⁽⁴⁵⁾ sectoral support financing in 1983 was mainly provided to the smaller agencies.

In an April 1983 report,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Administrator stated that the funds for sectoral support in 1984-1985 would be further reduced; for agencies other than UNIDO, they would decline from $3,192,000 in 1982-1983 to $1,824,000 in 1984-1985. Should the resource situation improve, the allocation would be adjusted upwards as required and the possibility of reinstating sectoral support financing to the larger agencies would be considered. The Administrator believed that the arrangements for distributing individual allocations to agencies, approving these on a case-by-case basis, had worked satisfactorily; he suggested that the Council might again wish to delegate to him the responsibility for distributing the sectoral support allocation among the agencies. For UNIDO's SIDFA programme, an allocation of $4,061,000 for 1984-1985 was suggested.

Following the recommendation of the Budgetary and Finance Committee,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Governing Council on 24 June 1983⁽⁴⁷⁾ endorsed the Administrator's proposal and approved the suggested allocation for 1984-1985. It decided to review the question of sectoral support in 1984. Other provisions of the Council decision dealt with the SIDFA programme and its financing.

Contributions

At the November 1983 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, 10 of UNDP's 18 major donors maintained the real value of their contributions in line with the Governing Council's appeals, while 28 countries (24 of them developing) met or exceeded the 14 per cent growth target set for the 1982-1986 programming cycle in terms of their national currencies. Both the largest developed country donor (United States) and the largest developing country donor (India) substantially increased their support level (by 14.8 and 6 per cent, respectively). In response to the Council's appeal for supplementary contributions, Canada, Italy, Norway and Sweden together provided almost $15 million in additional resources for 1983, while Canada, Denmark and the Netherlands pledged a further $14 million in supplementary contributions for 1984.

As a result of these and other developments, voluntary contributions pledged for 1984 rose by almost $20 million, compared with 1983, to a total of $695.2 million, the first substantial increase recorded since the 1979 Pledging Conference. Another $14.1 million was pledged for 1984 to the Special Measures Fund for LDCs.

Total contributions for 1983 amounted to $697.8 million, $22 million more than originally pledged and the highest total ever received. In addition, 1983 marked the first year since 1979 in which total income exceeded total expenditures. Against expenditures of $751 million, total main programme income in 1983 was $838.2 million, including $94.4 million in cost-sharing contributions, $16.1 million in contributions to the Special Measures Fund for LDCs, other contributions of $5.6 million, and miscellaneous income (mostly interest earned) of $24.3 million. Of the cost-sharing contributions, $71.1 million was provided for projects and programmes by recipient Governments and $23.3 million by third parties—18 donor countries and development assistance organizations—of which Italy, the Netherlands and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries supplied almost 70 per cent. Since 1973, such cost-sharing contributions had advanced, on average, by more than 15 per cent a year, and in 1983 they rose by more than 25 per cent compared with 1982.

Income under newly established sub-trust funds rose even more dramatically, from $1.7 million in 1982 to $50.2 million in 1983. During the year, five new sub-trust funds were established under the Administrator's authority, the largest out of contributions from the Netherlands and the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund. In addition, 10 training projects were under implementation in 1983 through the USSR/UNDP Trust Fund, while four new sub-trust funds were also established on behalf of UNCDF and five on behalf of UNFSSTD.

UNDP also administered a number of special purpose funds and programmes, which themselves garnered substantial additional voluntary support totalling $45.5 million, in addition to which another $17.7 million was contributed under cost-sharing and sub-trust-fund arrangements.

Total contributions to UNDP's main programme, the special purpose funds under its administration, sub-trust funds and cost-sharing arrangements amounted to more than $925 million for 1983, with third-party co-financing and parallel financing generating an additional $186 million, an amount substantially greater than that generated by third-party cost-sharing. Co-financing or parallel financing differed from third-party cost-sharing only in a technical or accounting sense: the funds were provided directly to the project by the participating Government or agency without, as in cost-sharing arrangements, UNDP's own accounting procedures being drawn into play.

In resolution 38/172 (see above), the General Assembly noted that, although the 1983 Pledging Conference had shown a trend towards ending the erosion of UNDP resources, greater efforts were necessary in order to lead to a growth of resources by increasing significantly the level of contributions on a more equitable basis. The Assembly expressed its appreciation to those countries which had announced their contributions or intention to contribute to UNDP in amounts approaching, equalling or exceeding an average annual increase of 14 per cent, and to those that had consistently maintained their contributions at a high level. It urged all others, especially those whose overall performance was not commensurate with their capacities, to renew their efforts to provide UNDP with the resources necessary to establish a sound financial basis for implementing its activities for the 1982-1986 programming cycle.

In resolution 38/145, the Assembly endorsed a Governing Council decision of 24 June calling for additional special contributions to UNDP amounting to at least $8 million during 1982-1986, so as to ensure implementation of the UNDP assistance programme for the Palestinian people (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX).

Trust funds

In 1983, the Administrator established 14 trust funds, 5 each on behalf of UNDP and UNFSSTD, and 4 on behalf of UNCDF. In addition, further contributions were received in 1983 to a USSR/UNDP Trust Fund established in 1982, to continue the funding of the training of specialists from developing countries in the USSR. Information on the trust funds established in 1983 was contained in a March 1984 report.⁽⁴⁸⁾ Agreements were reached in 1983 on 18 projects financed by contributions on procurement in the donor country, 4 of them for UNCDF, 6 for UNSO and 8 for UNFSSTD.

In April 1983,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Administrator reported to the Governing Council on trust funds he had established in 1982, three on behalf of UNDP and one each for UNCDF and UNFSSTD.

In a June 1983 report to the Council,⁽⁵⁰⁾ he noted that the period of one year since the authorization by the Council in 1982⁽⁵¹⁾ had not been sufficient to finalize most negotiations for the es-establishment of trust funds conditioned on procurement from a donor country and more time was required for assessing the full potential of that new instrument. He added that, from the number and size of the negotiations, it appeared that those trust funds could result in significant, additional aid to developing countries channelled through the United Nations system.

The Governing Council, on 24 June,⁽⁵²⁾ requested the Administrator to provide each year comprehensive and detailed information on trust funds established by him, as well as on the individual projects financed from those trust funds.

On the same date,⁽⁵³⁾ the Council authorized him to continue to accept until 30 April 1984 trust funds conditioned on procurement from donor countries; in doing so, he should bear in mind the comments of the Budgetary and Finance Committee at its May/June session. The Council requested him to submit a comprehensive report in 1984 on the results of the experimental period and to present recommendations. The report should include: statistical information on the relation between contributions to general resources and those conditioned on procurement; an analysis of the choices by donors of projects and categories of assistance; an analysis of the effect of those trust funds on the geographical distribution of resources channelled through UNDP and the three organizational entities concerned; an analysis of the effect on sectoral activities of each of those entities; and an estimate of the cost of goods and services purchased from such trust funds in relation to the cost that would have prevailed had the normal UNDP procurement practices been applied.

Accounts and auditing

Reporting procedures

The Governing Council, on 24 June 1983,⁽⁴³⁾ took note of the Administrator's note transmitting the audit reports of the participating and executing agencies for 1981,⁽⁵⁴⁾ as well as of his comments on the substantive observations made by the external auditors and a description of the action taken by the Administrator in response to the Governing Council's June 1982 decision on audit reports.⁽⁵⁵⁾ The Council also welcomed the agreement of the panel of external auditors to use a similar reporting style in the various audit reports and to increase the emphasis in its reports on the audit of the effectiveness of financial management. It requested the Administrator to convey to the auditors and to the executing agencies concerned the Council's view that those improvements should be introduced as soon as possible.

The Council noted with appreciation the proposals by the external auditors of the World Bank regarding the estimated additional audit costs involved in expanding the scope of their audit work and their audit report, and agreed with their proposal to prepare, at a total additional cost of approximately $18,500 a long-form audit report which would include their significant findings resulting from a review of: procurement procedures; project performance compared with budgeted performance; internal audit work on UNDP-financed projects; and project progress reports. The Administrator was authorized to reimburse the World Bank for those additional costs and to charge them against the expenditure for reimbursement of programme support costs.

Accounts for 1982

The financial statements of UNDP for the year ended 31 December 1982, together with the report of the Board of Auditors, were submitted to the General Assembly in August 1983.⁽⁵⁶⁾ The financial statements also covered the trust funds for which the Administrator had been assigned responsibility.

In its report, the Board observed that due to a sharp decline in voluntary contributions, delays in payment of government contributions, the cumulative and continuing excess of expenditure over income and heavy losses from currency exchange transactions, the financial situation of UNDP as at 31 December 1982 was critical and required action to find new sources of income, reduce expenditures, monitor carefully programme support and administrative costs and improve the role and involvement of executing agencies and staff in implementing UNDP-assisted projects.

The Board noted that its review of programme support and administrative costs had revealed that some consultants and experts had been engaged to carry out administrative work normally performed by UNDP staff members. The audit of projects had revealed that the assistance provided by recipient Governments to UNDP in project implementation had not always been adequate and timely and that there had also been a lack of involvement by participating and executing agencies in project implementation. In the Board's opinion, UNDP field offices needed more substantive and technical backstopping from headquarters as well as active support at critical stages in programme and project cycles. With regard to the Internal Audit Service of UNDP, the Board noted that its terms of reference were not comprehensive and did not cover some areas. Further comments related to, among other things, international agricultural research centres, regional projects, certain field offices, travel and special service agreements.

In response to the Board's observations and recommendations, the Administrator noted that, while the financial statements showed a deficit in the revenue reserve at the end of 1982, a deficit which was likely to increase somewhat in 1983, the programme planning for 1984, 1985 and 1986 was based on reduced programme levels. He expressed his conviction that the measures taken to restrict the 1982-1986 cycle programme to 55 per cent of IPFs, together with the system of annualized forward planning of availability and use of resources, were adequate to control the financial situation; the main thrust of his efforts were accordingly directed towards mobilizing additional contributions. He stated that he had established a Resource Mobilization Advisory Committee and a Resource Mobilization Unit; in addition, country coordinators would assist in resource mobilization and collect specific information which might have resource implications. With regard to cuts in expenditure, the Administrator pointed out that careful management of available and projected resources had limited the actual cuts in projects and personnel; thus, no premature termination of expert contracts had been caused by programme reductions, although the total number of recruitments had been reduced due to the decline in new project approvals.

In a September 1983 report,⁽⁵⁷⁾ ACABQ expressed agreement with several of the Board's comments and recommendations. It found pertinent the Board's recommendations on further steps to be taken in order to find new sources of income and reduce expenditures, to monitor carefully programme support and administration services costs as well as programme expenditures and to improve involvement by executing agencies as well as by UNDP staff with a view to achieving maximum efficiency and effectiveness in the use of funds. With regard to the nature of the heavy losses from currency exchange transactions stated by the Board, ACABQ said it had been informed that $40.6 million appeared in the financial statements as net losses on exchange and revaluation of currencies—an amount related not only to exchange losses on transactions, but also to losses suffered on the revaluation of UNDP holdings of national currencies. Of the total losses of $40.6 million, $38.9 million resulted from revaluation of holdings, attributable to the increasing strength of the United States dollar in relation to other currencies in the course of 1982, while the remaining $1.7 million related to losses on individual currency exchange transactions.

On the subject of project implementation and evaluation, including monitoring the role of agencies in implementing programmes, the Administrator had referred to proposals made to the UNDP Inter-sessional Committee of the Whole designed to improve current practices in that regard. ACABQ had been informed of some of the specific measures taken by the regional bureaux to achieve better delivery and greater effectiveness, as well as of measures being taken to improve agency backstopping, which would be the subject of inter-agency discussion in 1984. Concerning the Board's finding that consultants and experts had carried out administrative work normally performed by UNDP staff, ACABQ noted that the Administrator had responded that it had been necessary, in exceptional cases, to recruit individuals temporarily on special service agreements to perform normal staff duties, because the UNDP Appointment and Promotion Board had not been convened to make recommendations on recruitment since July 1981, owing to the continuing recruitment freeze.

Referring to the Board's discussion of global agricultural projects, most of which had been entrusted to international agricultural research centres of the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research (CGIAR) for execution, ACABQ noted UNDP's description of its sponsorship of CGIAR and the monitoring procedures applied by CGIAR with the involvement of sponsors, including UNDP. However, ACABQ considered that, in view of the high priority given by UNDP to global and interregional projects, UNDP should keep a close watch on its relationships with implementing centres, to ensure that programme implementation, and in particular the need for programme changes, were kept under constant scrutiny.

Referring to the Board's discussion of administrative support to UNDP projects in the form of programme support projects (PSPs) and the recommendation that administrative expenditures not envisaged in the project budget be regularized by charging them to the administrative budget, ACABQ said it had been informed that the purpose of PSPs was to provide administrative and/or logistical support or technical facilities in support of a group of UNDP-financed country projects, but that it was uneconomical to provide on an individual basis. Such projects were established by means of a project document, including a detailed project budget, and they required the approval of the Government concerned.

With regard to the Internal Audit Service, ACABQ considered that it had a significant role to play in the management of UNDP and welcomed its strengthening. ACABQ had been informed that in 1983 internal audit coverage of field activities was expected to represent about 65 per cent of total internal audit work.

As to cases of fraud referred to by the Board, ACABQ said that, according to additional information, 75 cases of fraud were discovered in 1982, involving a total of approximately $190,000. Of these cases, 72 related to a single field office. ACABQ had been informed that, as at 31 July 1983, approximately $65,000 was recovered, while $28,000 was considered to be uncollectable and the remainder was subject to further collection procedures.

By resolution 38/30 of 25 November 1983 on the 1982 accounts of various United Nations programmes and funds (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I), the General Assembly accepted the UNDP accounts for the year ended 31 December 1982, concurred with the ACABQ comments and requested the UNDP Administrator to take such remedial action as might be required by the Board.

Financial regulations

The Governing Council, on 24 June 1983,⁽⁵⁸⁾ decided that the revised financial regulations approved in 1981⁽⁵⁹⁾ were fully in effect. Existing regulations should apply in the absence of a consensus on certain proposed regulations dealing with the currencies of contributions, until a decision was reached in 1984. The Council also decided that the Budgetary and Finance Committee would consider, within the framework of the provisional agenda for the Council's 1984 session, the parts of the regulations and other questions on which consensus had not been achieved in 1983. The text of the regulations on which there had been no consensus was transmitted in the annex to a January 1983 note of the Administrator.⁽⁶⁰⁾

UNDP administration and staff

Field offices

During 1983, UNDP stepped up efforts to broaden support for field office activities and to improve field office capabilities. First steps were taken to computerize field office administration, and updated financial management guidelines and instructions were issued. In his annual report for 1983,⁽¹⁾ the Administrator stated that implementation of UNDP's reassignment policy, in particular the rotation of international professional staff, also helped strengthen office capabilities.

In May, the Administrator transmitted to the Governing Council a report by JIU on UNDP field offices,⁽⁶¹⁾ prepared by Julio C. Rodniguez-Arias and Earl D. Sohm. The study examined the policy framework governing development co-operation by the United Nations system, and reviewed the main issues of inter-agency country-level co-ordination, including the responsibilities of the offices, their staffing and organization.

The report discussed the functions of the field offices, which included support to host Governments in preparing, implementing, co-ordinating, evaluating and day-to-day management of UNDP-financed projects, as well as co-ordination of the sectoral operations of United Nations organizations and agencies, and provision to them of central administrative and logistical support. The report did not cover the responsibilities of the resident co-ordinators since they had not been operational long enough; it therefore focused on resident representatives as heads of the field offices while recognizing that they were normally designated as co-ordinators.

The Inspectors found that, although the actual supportive role played by the field offices depended very much on individual country situations and the extent to which Governments involved them in inputs from the United Nations system, that role had, in general, expanded over the past decade well beyond the basic functions of the field offices, particularly in LDCs. The range of activities could in their opinion no longer be viewed in relation to the level of UNDP programme resources, but should be seen in the context of the support provided by these offices to a wide spectrum of activities, notably those funded from special purpose funds, agency regular budgets, some multilateral financial institutions, rapidly increasing cost-sharing arrangements and multi-bilateral funds, all of which had greatly increased demands on the offices.

In view of UNDP's critical resource situation, the Inspectors stated, field office staff had been reduced by 8 per cent and recruitment had been frozen at a time when those offices were barely able to cope with their extensive work-load. In 1982, each office had virtually the same number of budgeted Professional posts (3.6) as 10 years previously, notwithstanding the considerable evolution of activities. Because staff were hard pressed by routine administration, they had been unable to pay adequate attention to programme management, analytical and evaluation functions, and new technical co-operation techniques and concepts were not sufficiently reflected in projects and programmes.

The Inspectors concluded that the offices should be strengthened to enable them to assist host Governments more effectively, and proposed a number of policy options, including increased government contributions to local field costs; redeployment of some posts from UNDP headquarters to the field, especially to LDCs; secondment of government officials; financing some functions from a "core" budget supported by the United Nations regular budget; and the gradual merging of the system's country representation to form United Nations field offices, financed through proportional contributions of United Nations organizations and agencies. Other recommended measures included more systematic field staff assignment, career development and recruitment policies, as well as increased use of local professional officers and system-wide staff secondments and exchanges.

In a decision of 24 June 1983 on the Administrator's annual report,⁽⁶²⁾ the Governing Council requested him to take into account those JIU recommendations designed to enhance the quality of UNDP-supported programmes and projects and to increase the Programme's overall efficiency and effectiveness.

Commenting in December on the JIU report,⁽⁶³⁾ the Secretary-General underlined the need, when considering organizations other than UNDP contributing to field offices, to preserve existing authority on staffing, responsibilities and functions and to maintain clearly the lines of command and objectivity. He pointed out that a policy recommendation regarding general contributions to the cost of UNDP field offices could not be considered without full examination of all United Nations field offices. Accordingly, he proposed that a further review of the JIU proposals should await such an examination.

Project professional personnel

In his annual report for 1983,⁽¹⁾ the Administrator stated that the role of local professional staff or national officers had been further strengthened during the year. Through additional salary surveys, the remuneration of those officers was regularized. By the end of 1983, 112 national officers were serving in 47 countries in all the regions serviced by UNDP.

In March, the Administrator submitted, in accordance with a June 1982 Governing Council decision,⁽⁶⁴⁾ a report on recruitment and reduction of cost of project professional personnel.⁽⁶⁵⁾ The report dealt with improving recruitment of national officers and reducing the cost of internationally recruited officers. It concluded that, while it did not appear possible to reduce the unit cost of internationally recruited project personnel, viable alternatives, such as nationally recruited professional project personnel, should be used to reduce the cost of personnel inputs to UNDP-supported projects. The report called for more careful project design and appraisal to take advantage of a number of alternatives to internationally recruited personnel which were available at lesser cost for similar levels of work, such as United Nations Volunteers.

In an addendum to the report, information was summarized from eight agencies—IAEA, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, ICAO, ITU and WMO—and from the United Nations Department of Technical Cooperation for Development on measures taken to improve their recruitment policies.

The Governing Council, on 24 June,⁽⁶⁶⁾ invited executing agencies to continue improving policies and procedures for recruiting project professional personnel, and requested them to pursue cost-effective recruitment, including the increased use of nationally recruited personnel. It requested the Administrator to arrange for more active UNDP involvement in the clearance process to fill vacant

UNDP-supported project posts; to implement the recommendations for reducing the cost of project personnel; and to report in 1985 on progress achieved in reducing those costs.

Guidelines for purchasing equipment and supplies

In a March 1983 note on guidelines for procuring equipment, supplies and services,⁽⁶⁷⁾ the Administrator stated that he had continued trying to find a workable solution to the question and that numerous consultations had been held within UNDP and with the executing agencies. A number of steps were being taken which might lead to a solution and he expected to report orally to the Council in June on the progress made.

The Governing Council, on 24 June,⁽⁶⁸⁾ expressed appreciation for the Administrator's efforts to evolve practical guidelines, and urged him to pursue vigorously with the executing agencies the study on their procurement practices to be carried out by the Inter-Agency Procurement Working Group with the assistance of the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Unit. The Council requested him to submit a progress report in 1984.

Other technical co-operation

UN programmes

The United Nations continued its work in 1983 to further the economic and social progress of the developing countries by supplying experts and advisory services, awarding fellowships and organizing workshops and study tours. These activities covered a broad range of subjects, including development planning and administration, rural and social development, international trade, industrial development, transnational corporations, mineral resources, energy, ocean economics, environment, science and technology, population, women, human rights and statistics.

In 1983, the United Nations delivered a technical co-operation programme of $255 million compared to $303 million in 1982, a 16 per cent decrease in project expenditures. Responsibility for the management and substantive support for the system's technical co-operation activities rested with the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), a separate organizational entity of the Secretariat. DTCD executed in 1983 a programme amounting to $112 million comprising more than 1,400 projects, compared with $127 million in 1982. This reduction resulted primarily from a decline in resources of its main funding partners—UNDP and UNFPA.

Technical co-operation activities were also carried out under the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation. Funds from that programme financed activities by a number of United Nations entities, including DTCD, the Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the regional commissions and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

DTCD's catalytic role helped generate new development activities, emphasized TCDC approaches and gave priority to requests for assistance from LDCs. Activities financed under the regular programme were also implemented in close reference with other technical co-operation activities to make maximum use of complementary and innovative efforts.

DTCD's interregional advisory services were made available to nearly all developing countries. Examples of advisory missions included those to Rwanda for assistance in preparing a long-term development plan; to Peru for advice to the National Planning Institute on investment proposals; to Egypt in relation to energy planning; to Guatemala for evaluating the mineral sector's development; to Aruba to help set up administrative government machinery prior to its independence; to China on taxation of offshore oil exploration; to Jamaica on social aspects of reconstruction planning; and to Nicaragua, the Niger and Pakistan in the development of economic statistics.

Training workshops and seminars were organized to respond to specific development needs of developing countries, particularly those of LDCs, in various sectors. The Department followed the TCDC approach wherever possible, using case studies from developing countries as a basis for the exchange of information among those countries on their specific experience and assisting them in establishing guidelines and methodologies particularly responsive to their own needs. Regarding public administration, for example, an interregional workshop on public enterprises in developing countries reviewed different experiences and agreed on criteria, methodology and institutional arrangements for performance evaluation.

A project for training statisticians and programmers from developing countries continued to organize on-the-job training in the statistical offices of other developing countries. Started in late 1982, the project had placed about 20 trainees by the end of 1983. A variety of interregional seminars were financed under the regular programme in 1983, such as one on regulatory administration for national development, organized in collaboration with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, to identify optimal modalities for the public regulation of selected sectors. Another interregional seminar, on integrated rural development, was organized in China.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report(1) on United Nations technical co-operation activities in 1982,(2) the General Assembly adopted decision 38/445 without vote, as recommended by the Second Committee.

Report of the Secretary-General on United Nations technical co-operation activities

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on United Nations technical co-operation activities.

DTCD activities

At the end of 1983, DTCD's programme of technical co-operation amounted to $145 million in approved budgets, with expenditures totalling $112 million. Of these expenditures, $79 million was for UNDP-financed projects, $11 million for UNFPA, $7 million under the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation and $15 million under trust funds. Budgets fell by 4 per cent as compared with 1982, a decline particularly noticeable in UNFPA funding, where the decrease of 34 per cent was due to a change in resources allocation. Expenditures also fell in 1983 by 11 per cent overall, in the case of UNFPA by 41 per cent. The share of UNDP financing in 1983 budgets, however, rose from 69 per cent in 1982 to 73 per cent in 1983.

Budgets continued to grow in Asia, but declined in all other regions. The distribution of expenditure was little changed from that of 1982, with Africa remaining the most important programme, accounting for $43 million, or 39 per cent of the total, in comparison with $51 million or 40 per cent in 1982, and Asia representing $29 million, or 26 per cent, compared with $30 million or 25 per cent in 1982.

With 46 per cent of DTCD's total budgets, natural resources and energy continued to account for the largest share of the programme. Expenditures in that sector also increased, from 37 per cent ($47 million) in 1982 to 44 per cent ($49 million) in 1983. Development planning was the second most important DTCD activity; although its total budgets had declined, in monetary terms it represented 20 per cent of the total. Expenditures in that sector accounted for 22 per cent, compared with 21 per cent in 1982, but fell by $1.6 million in monetary terms.

The reduction in project expenditures was also reflected in a reduction in DTCD's programme support cost earnings, which amounted to $13.5 million—$10.5 million from UNDP, $1.6 million from UNFPA, $1.2 million from trust funds, and $200,000 from other income. DTCD administrative costs against programme support cost earnings were $16.8 million in 1983, including costs incurred by units outside DTCD in support of its technical co-operation activities. These comprised $15.9 million for staff costs and $900,000 for non-staff costs.

DTCD's financial plan for 1983 envisaged a deficit of $1.5 million at the end of the year, to be offset in 1984 by continued overhead earnings and reduced overhead expenditures, the latter made possible by staff reductions already effected in 1983. Owing to the shortfall in delivery, however, overhead earnings fell by $2.9 million below the expected level of resources. This shortfall, when added to the envisaged $1.5 million deficit, would have increased the total deficit to over $4 million in 1983 had it not been for reductions in expenditures from an estimated $18.6 million to $16.8 million. The savings of approximately $1.8 million were due to various cost-cutting measures as well as to low inflation. By the end of the year, the deficit was $2.6 million, to be offset in 1984-1985.

To counteract the continued decrease in support cost earnings and an increase in salaries and common staff costs, DTCD took measures along the lines of those initiated in 1982; these resulted in a further reduction of nearly one third of the Department's previous manning table.

In 1983, the main substantive areas of DTCD were: development issues and policies, natural resources and energy, development administration and finance, statistics, population, ocean economics and technology, and social development and humanitarian affairs.

DTCD implemented 240 field projects in economic and social development, including integrated rural development, in 75 countries. The 1983 budgets of these projects totalled $35 million. In natural resources and energy, infrastructure, cartography and remote sensing, DTCD executed 490 projects. In the minerals field, it supported 189 projects; some 75 missions were undertaken to more than 60 countries. In the energy sector, including conventional energy, planning, electric power, and new and renewable sources of energy, 117 projects were executed.

The number of projects in the water resources sector was 153; in cartography, 21 technical assistance projects were executed. In the areas of administrative reform, personnel administration and training, and financial and public enterprise management, over 100 projects were executed in 66 developing countries.

The number of fellowship awards in training and upgrading the skills of officials in public services of developing countries was 128. DTCD carried out 43 advisory missions in as many developing countries, dealing with the analysis of problems in administration organization, personnel administration and training, information management and use of computers, tax policy and administration, accounting, budgeting and auditing.

In development planning and programming, 158 projects were under execution; they covered a wide variety of statistical subjects, including general statistical development, national accounts, trade and industrial statistics, demographic and social statistics, censuses, surveys and statistical data processing. Sixteen countries from all regions benefited from on-the-job statistical training. The number of UNFPA-supported demographic projects executed by DTCD was 76.

The Department provided 3,242 fellowships, of which more than 1,500 were in developing countries to further TCDC. DTCD also published the 1983 Directory of Training Courses and Programmes in Europe and Neighbouring Areas, which included more than 400 courses in all fields of DTCD competence.

During 1983, DTCD country programming missions were carried out in Ghana and Uganda, and other missions by both interregional and technical advisers were undertaken to identify project proposals. Draft country programmes were reviewed in detail before their consideration by the UNDP Governing Council. The thrust of DTCD's assistance was to help Governments in undertaking sectoral reviews and financial analysis and to develop rational criteria for selecting programmes and projects that would be implemented by United Nations organizations, as well as to formulate proposals for financing by other sources. DTCD was also involved in the review of country programmes.

As the principal United Nations entity with responsibility for developing and strengthening human and physical infrastructure, DTCD carried out a large number of its field programmes in LDCs. Finance from its regular programme resources continued to be provided on a priority basis in order to meet the requests of LDCs for advisory services and other specific activities. Field projects in LDCs covered a broad range of sectors, including the formulation of development plans and strengthening of project evaluation capability, administrative reform and personnel and financial management, statistics, population and various stages of natural resources exploration and development. For example, assistance was provided to Rwanda and Tonga in intensifying certain aspects of their national planning and to the Sudan for the establishment of a population centre at the University of Gezira. A natural resources exploration project was carried out in Democratic Yemen and Yemen, and rural water supply projects were undertaken in Benin, Guinea-Bissau, Togo and other African LDCs affected by drought.

With regard to the integration of women, the thrust of DTCD's efforts in 1983 was to link activities focusing specifically on women with those in various economic and social sectors in order to promote global priorities, including training.

Special attention was given to relatively new technologies for use by developing countries in meeting some of their priority needs, in particular those that could contribute to a significant increase in energy resources, such as geothermal energy and hydropower. DTCD also attached particular importance to expanding the use of microcomputer technology. It organized in New York in 1983 an expert group on the application of microcomputers in mineral information systems, exploration, geological resources modelling, mining planning and economics as well as management of operations and control. The group recommended that computer training courses be offered to managers and engineers in developing countries, and encouraged the United Nations to increase the application of computer techniques in its technical co-operation projects. This was followed up in Oman with a series of conferences to train nationals in electronic data processing techniques. In Benin, Burundi and other countries, microcomputers were installed to assist government officials in the application of such technology to mineral evaluation.

DTCD participated in missions organized by the United Nations Office for Special Political Questions both with regard to humanitarian assistance programmes and in conjunction with the implementation of special economic assistance programmes (see Chapter III of this section). The Department also provided technical support to the Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific (see Chapter IX of this section).

In the areas of pre-investment and investment follow-up, DTCD continued in 1983 to respond to the needs of developing countries. Reported investment commitments relating to DTCD projects totalled $218 million: $134 million in Asia, $41 million in Latin America, $25 million in Africa, and $18 million in Europe and the Middle East. Domestic investments were secured in the Dominican Republic, India, Pakistan, Thailand and Yugoslavia.

DTCD investment seminars initiated in 1982 were continued in 1983 and attended by high-level representatives of the World Bank, as well as by staff from the Asian and African Development Banks. The aim was to assist DTCD in identifying ways of strengthening linkages between technical co-operation and capital assistance. A complete bibliography of all feasibility and United Nations project reports in Africa and Asia was prepared by the Information Systems Unit of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA).

Taking full account of the recommendations of JIU (see below), a major streamlining of DTCD's organizational structure was undertaken to accommodate drastic staff cuts, while retaining to the extent possible the wide range of technical and programming services needed for effective programme implementation. Staff were redeployed to promote a more integrated approach to programme management, placing the major emphasis on the substantive aspects of technical co-operation. Managerial and technical personnel were grouped together along sectoral lines, and a merger of recruitment and administrative services was effected to improve the administration of project personnel.

Despite those measures, which were implemented on 1 July 1983, DTCD was able to deliver in 1983 a programme equivalent to nearly 90 per cent of that delivered in 1982.

As part of the streamlining of DTCD during 1983, responsibility for evaluation was assigned to a newly created Country Programming and Evaluation Branch. Internal guidelines were completed but their application was deferred pending revision of UNDP's procedures on evaluation. Projects continued to be evaluated in 1983 under existing UNDP guidelines, and efforts were made to improve project monitoring.

JIU report. By a note of 28 April,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a JIU report on DTCD, prepared by Mark E. Alien, Earl D. Sohm and Miljenko Vukovic. The report examined the progress made by the Department since its inception in March 1978.⁽⁴⁾ The Inspectors' main conclusion was that DTCD had positive achievements to its credit, notably the improvement in its delivery rate, but that it was urgent to re-examine its structure and staffing in order to ensure that operations were cost-effective, to remove uncertainties as to its future and to help provide it with a recognized identity. They noted that DTCD had been operating under temporary terms of reference and had been organized partly on substantive and partly on geographical lines, an arrangement which might not represent an optimum use of resources and was not conducive to giving sufficient attention to the impact of the work. The Inspectors concluded that a structure that emphasized substance and not geography would give the best results most economically; such structure would still require a group of small geographical units with liaison, control and expediting functions and constituting a service for the substantive divisions.

The Inspectors recommended that the Secretary-General ensure the issuance of DTCD's terms of reference and that, in its forthcoming administrative review of the Department, the Administrative Management Service (AMS) look into the question of organization for dealing with technical co-operation and concentrate on its rationalization and streamlining. The Inspectors suggested that part of the resources released through that rationalization be used to set up a small unit within DTCD for central evaluation, reporting to the Under-Secretary-General.

In the Inspectors' opinion, the Department's field work was handicapped to some extent because it had no field representation. However, they did not consider the establishment of field offices, even at the regional level, to be an economical solution. They suggested a series of measures such as: entrusting, on a part-time basis, senior experts with liaison functions on substantive questions between resident representatives/co-ordinators and DTCD headquarters; briefing of resident representatives/co-ordinators to acquaint them with DTCD's needs and activities; establishing direct continuous relations between DTCD headquarters and the offices of the resident representatives/co-ordinators responsible for DTCD; and outposting some of the Development Advisory Services staff to the regional commissions and their subregional offices to assist in country and intercountry programming.

The Inspectors noted that the administration of DTCD field experts had to be referred to the Office of General Services and the Office of Personnel Services for action, since DTCD had no authority to deal with administrative, personnel and financial matters. They recommended that the Department be given more authority to deal with those matters concerning its experts in the field.

They also noted that DTCD suffered from a lack of intergovernmental authority which would give directly the attention required for such issues as the programme of work and policy matters concerning the Department, prior to their examination by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. One solution, they thought, might have been to have DTCD report to a single governing body responsible at the intergovernmental level for United Nations operational activities for development, as suggested by the Assembly in 1977.⁽⁵⁾ As such a body had not been established, the Inspectors concluded that the UNDP Governing Council was the most suitable to supervise the work of DTCD. They recommended that the Governing Council consider devoting at least a day once a year to DTCD affairs and take any necessary policy decisions, without infringing on the responsibilities of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination for policy and programme guidance and direction.

The Inspectors also dealt with DTCD's relationship with other Secretariat entities, noting that the absence of a clear definition of its role had led to some conflict, and that a number of unresolved issues of restructuring, particularly those related to the decentralization and redeployment of resources, continued to add to those difficulties. The Inspectors stated that they had formed the impression that problems flowing from the break-up of the old Department of Economic and Social Affairs were still influencing relations between the two successor Departments (DTCD and DIESA), notably in the areas of statistics and the servicing of joint conferences and seminars.

Comments of the Secretary-General. Commenting in July 1983⁽⁷⁾ on the JIU report, the Secretary-General welcomed it as a useful contribution to clarifying and strengthening DTCD's role and that it could serve as a basis for further consideration of issues not yet fully resolved. The Secretary-General believed that further intergovernmental review of DTCD activities was warranted and that, as suggested by JIU, the UNDP Governing Council could devote more time to the review and guidance of United Nations technical co-operation activities. He also noted that his annual report on those activities would be made available in future to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council.

The Secretary-General stressed that the following considerations should be kept in mind. Although the Inspectors had taken into account the decline in resources and its effects on DTCD, some of their arguments had become even more acute as a result of further erosion of traditional funding sources. In view of the fact that DTCD staff were financed largely out of overhead earnings on programme delivery, the severe financial constraints were having direct implications on the Department's size and structure and would be a crucial factor in any decision concerning its internal organization; those constraints were also the result of the proliferation and expansion of executing capabilities outside DTCD.

In his comments on specific recommendations, the Secretary-General said he concurred in particular with the need to establish a proper degree of co-ordination and uniformity of approach within the United Nations Secretariat and he intended to address those issues in the following months, including the clustering together in DTCD of relevant functions pertaining to the management of United Nations technical co-operation activities.

With regard to clearly defined terms of reference for DTCD, he noted that, given the context in which the Department had to operate, that question was linked to interrelated issues, including proliferation of execution capabilities within the Secretariat; relationship between DIESA and DTCD and the allocation of activities between the two in such subject areas as statistics and ocean economics; relations of DTCD with its funding partners and criteria for the designation of executing agencies by UNDP, DTCD's main funding partner. These and other areas of concern to DTCD would also be treated in the forthcoming JIU reports on DIESA and UNDP's Office for Projects Execution.

With regard to a rationalization and streamlining of DTCD, the Secretary-General stated that the Department had over the previous year carried out an extensive analysis of its internal organization and that many of JIU's suggestions had already been reflected in DTCD's own streamlining proposals; in his programme budget submission, he would report on measures taken in that regard.

The Secretary-General fully supported the view that current efforts to ensure a more effective field representation of DTCD should be maintained; with regard to the suggestion that regional commissions and their subregional offices could be requested to assist DTCD on specific issues, he pointed out that, for financial and other reasons, no change in existing arrangements could be contemplated.

He fully agreed with the importance attributed to evaluation which, he added, was fully reflected in the various steps taken by DTCD over the previous year to devise methodology, guidelines and procedures for more systematic application in field projects. The setting up of a separate evaluation unit, however, awaited the outcome of decisions on DTCD's structure and also depended on the availability of finances.

Concurring with the thrust of the recommendation on the need of DTCD for greater flexibility in dealing with administrative, personnel and financial matters, the Secretary-General stated that certain measures had already been adopted to increase delegation of authority to the Department in such areas as the establishment and management of trust funds and to streamline administrative systems. He agreed that further steps could be taken, particularly relating to the management of expert personnel and finance in the field, adding that appropriate action was under way.

With regard to a recommendation that Chief Technical Advisers in DTCD-executed projects be authorized to spend up to $10,000 for local or international purchases, the Secretary-General noted that they had the authority to do so, with funds allocated without limit but individual orders not exceeding $5,000.

ACABQ report. In a November 1983 report on DTCD,⁽⁸⁾ ACABQ also dealt with the JIU recommendations. It stressed that DTCD's terms of reference, which were being worked out, should be finalized as soon as possible. With regard to the need to establish a proper degree of co-ordination and uniformity of approach within the Secretariat, ACABQ noted the Secretary-General's intention to address the matter in the following months and to provide in the 1984-1985 programme budget the relevant intergovernmental bodies with the opportunity to consider the progress achieved. However, ACABQ questioned whether the revised budget submission⁽⁸⁾ could be considered to have fully addressed the issues raised by the Inspectors.

Concerning the forthcoming review of DTCD by AMS, during which AMS should consider the setting up of an organization of substance which integrated backstopping with the work of the substantive specialists, and the Secretary-General's comment that many of JIU's suggestions had already been reflected in DTCD's own proposals for streamlining, ACABQ considered that a more detailed analysis of that streamlining could have been provided in the Secretary-General's revised budget.

Regarding the call for a small evaluation unit, ACABQ noted the Secretary-General's statement that various steps had been taken by DTCD during the year for a more systematic evaluation of field projects and, as stated in the Secretary-General's revised budget report, the country programming and evaluation function would henceforth be carried out in the Policy, Programming and Development Planning Division of the Department. ACABQ said it trusted that DTCD would be able to implement its evaluation activities as an integral part of its operations.

Referring to JIU's observations on DTCD's relations with other Secretariat entities, in particular DIESA, ACABQ noted that the JIU report on DIESA (see Chapter XXIV of this section) recommended that an improved mechanism for co-operation on statistics between the two be worked out.

UNDP Council action. The Governing Council, on 24 June 1983,⁽⁹⁾ noted with great concern the impact on DTCD of the decline in availability of resources, particularly with regard to technical co-operation in certain key economic and social areas. It welcomed DTCD's efforts to streamline its operational capabilities so as to maximize the use of limited resources, to strengthen collaboration with UNDP and its field offices as well as with other United Nations entities, and to intensify its co-operation with Governments in order to ensure the responsiveness of its programmes to the needs of developing countries, particularly of the least developed.

The Council recommended that full account be taken of DTCD's technical expertise in decisions to designate executing agencies for the implementation of UNFPA and UNDP projects, as well as projects financed from other funds under the Administrator's authority. It invited the Secretary-General to provide to it in 1984 detailed information on the relationship between programme delivery and administrative costs, the level and use of programme support cost earnings, and expenditures, in particular information on extrabudgetary resources and the associated manning tables, and on United Nations procurement procedures for technical co-operation projects. The Council reiterated its request that action on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system be completed, to enable DTCD to achieve greater flexibility with regard to administrative, personnel and financial matters related to the implementation of technical co-operation projects, and urged that clearer terms of reference for the Department be issued to avoid duplication of existing structures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on questions relating to the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985, the General Assembly on 20 December 1983 adopted resolution 38/234, section XI, without vote. The Assembly took this action on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

Report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development

(The General Assembly . . .)

Takes note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and the comments thereon by the Secretary-General and of the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

General Assembly resolution 38/234, section XI

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote
Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/760 & Corr.1) without vote, 1 December (meeting 52); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 109.
Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 5th Committee 52; plenary 104.

In resolution 38/171, the Assembly recommended that due consideration be given to DTCD's technical expertise for its designation as an executing agency for the implementation of projects within its mandate, as well as its role in the execution of technical co-operation activities of the United Nations system, in order to reaffirm the Department's role within the existing technical and administrative structures and to avoid duplication and accomplish economies of scale.

The Fifth Committee, on 1 December 1983,⁽¹⁰⁾ approved without vote revised estimates for DTCD of $17,507,200 for 1984-1985, $89,300 less than the original estimates. The revised estimates were proposed in July 1983 by the Secretary-General (8) and endorsed by ACABQ in October. (11)

In his report, the Secretary-General stated that the decrease of $89,300 was due to reduced requirements for external printing and reduced estimated costs associated with posts being transferred from Geneva to New York in the programme support of field operations. He noted that, as a result of a freeze on appointments to vacant posts at DTCD and to all vacant overhead-financed posts in other Secretariat units, introduced with effect from 1 January 1982, by the end of May 1983 some 115 overhead posts had been abolished and it was expected that during the remainder of 1983 some 40 additional overhead posts would be similarly abolished. Those staff reductions, he added, had required certain organizational modifications to enable DTCD to continue its activities effectively. Consequently, the following organizational modifications were planned to be introduced effective July 1983: the Programming and Implementation Division was to be discontinued, and one D-2 post would be cancelled. DTCD would carry out its functions of policy formulation, programme and project operations and support substantively and managerially through four main divisions, namely: the Policy, Programming and Development Planning Division, which would be concerned with policy co-ordination, resources planning and procedures, and the broad policy aspects of country programming and evaluation, and which would also encompass the Development Advisory Services; two substantive divisions—the Natural Resources and Energy Division and the Development Administration Division—which would be responsible for the operational aspects of all phases of project implementation from design through follow-up, and which would continue all activities required to provide guidance and support for technical co-operation, including training, workshops, seminars and the preparation of studies and publications; and the Programme Support Division, which would, in addition to functions in support of projects with regard to expert recruitment and administration, also carry out project financial management and budgetary control.

In his analysis of overall costs of DTCD, the Secretary-General estimated extrabudgetary resources available during 1984-1985 at $277,740,300, comprising $24,060,000 for services in support of extrabudgetary programmes, $1,420,300 for substantive activities, and $252,260,000 for operational projects, the last figure being identical to the 1982-1983 total for project delivery. An estimated $46,690,000 represented the delivery of projects back-stopped by other United Nations units (most notably DIESA), but executed by DTCD. Extrabudgetary resources comprised notably the reimbursement for programme support costs; the Secretary-General added that if support cost income continued to decline in 1984-1985, DTCD would be obliged to make further proposals for remedies to the appropriate bodies.

In its October report,⁽¹¹⁾ ACABQ stated that it had been informed that "overhead" income would be earned on approximately $242,600,000 of the $252,260,000 expected delivery. The balance of $9.6 million represented projects on which programme support had been waived, such as the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and certain activities of the United Nations Fund for Namibia. The overhead income earned from actual delivery of projects (normally calculated at 13 per cent of project delivery) was placed in a central fund for programme support of technical co-operation activities. Other offices contributing to that fund included the Centre for Transnational Corporations and the Division of Narcotic Drugs. Provided that the estimated programme delivery was achieved, an amount of $24,060,000, which represented the bulk of the total overhead earnings, was expected to be allocated in 1984-1985 to meet the extrabudgetary costs incurred by DTCD in executing technical co-operation projects. The balance would be apportioned among other offices.

With regard to the number of extrabudgetary posts for DTCD in 1984-1985, estimated at 218 (102 Professional and above and 116 General Service), as compared with the total of 372 originally budgeted for 1982-1983, ACABQ said it had been informed that 364 of those posts had been authorized as at 1 January 1982; by 31 December 1982, that number had decreased to 339. Further reductions in overhead posts had been made during 1983; the number of extrabudgetary posts in 1984-1985 would also depend on the support cost income received during the biennium.

ACABQ also noted that it had been informed that, by 31 July 1983, DTCD had delivered $75 million in technical co-operation in 1983. According to representatives of the Secretary-General, the approved project budgets ($142.7 million as at 31 August 1983) justified the assumption that DTCD could achieve a delivery of $125 million by the end of 1983, despite the disruption brought about by the streamlining of DTCD's organizational structure. The Department also expected to maintain that level of delivery in 1984 and 1985, which would generate an estimated $16.3 million in overhead earnings in each year of the biennium. However, ACABQ cautioned that those expectations might be somewhat optimistic when viewed in the context of a number of factors, including the budget/delivery ratio of previous years. It considered it essential that the Secretary-General keep DTCD's delivery situation under constant scrutiny, with a view to anticipating additional remedial measures, both in DTCD and other Secretariat units, should the Department fail to achieve the projected level of support cost income.

United Nations Volunteers

In 1983, the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme continued to respond to the expressed needs for cost-effective middle and higher level operational expertise from some 90 developing countries, including the 36 LDCs where more than half of all serving volunteers were assigned. Demands for that expertise continued to increase; the total number of UNV posts requested in 1983 was 1,423, compared with 1,356 in 1982. The increase was possible because of certain recipient countries funding volunteers through cost-sharing, additional contributions from bilateral donors, and the increase in the number of posts fully funded by United Nations agencies. Information on UNV activities was provided by the UNDP Administrator in his annual reports for 1983 on the programme⁽¹²⁾ and on UNDP.⁽¹³⁾

With over 80 per cent of its recruits from developing countries themselves, technical co-operation among those countries (see below) remained an important feature of the programme.

As requested by the UNDP Governing Council in June 1982,⁽¹⁴⁾ new efforts were made in 1983 to increase the participation in the programme and to develop further working relations with United Nations organizations and agencies. Additional measures were taken to increase the programme's monitoring capacity and the conditions of service for the volunteers were revised.

Efforts continued to broaden participation in UNV. Co-operation agreements were concluded with four new countries: New Zealand, Poland, the Republic of Korea and Yugoslavia.

A UNV Consultative Meeting on international volunteer service and development—the first convened in accordance with the 1982 Sana'a Declaration⁽¹⁵⁾—was held at Geneva from 6 to 8 April 1983, with 41 representatives and six observers of Governments and co-operating organizations from developed and developing countries participating.

During the year, UNV undertook efforts to further programme development and fulfilment of its mandate, both as the focal point for international volunteerism in the United Nations system and as a major contributor of operational expertise for multilateral technical co-operation activities. In particular, it put into practice a programme development strategy involving missions to Bhutan, Chad, China, Fiji, Indonesia, Madagascar, Papua New Guinea and Singapore. UNV also participated in tripartite reviews of technical co-operation projects and in donor round-table meetings for LDCs to present more fully UNV's capabilities as a technical co-operation instrument.

Closely related to those programme development initiatives was a new emphasis on quality of UNV operations and on internal analysis through such mechanisms as project reviews, visits to volunteers in the field and the introduction of a revised and improved UNV periodic reporting system.

Parallel to those activities, more active information and media programmes provided fuller and more timely information about UNV. In addition, numerous publications were prepared. A totally revised edition of the World Statistical Directory was published containing information on the activities of over 1,000 volunteer and development service organizations. A briefing kit summarizing living and working conditions in China was completed for the use of serving volunteers and potential candidates for that country. A new information kit specifically designed for UNV use was under preparation, and priority was to be given to such kits for Bhutan, Papua New Guinea and the Upper Volta.

In 1983, a new focus was the question of changing requirements for TCDC. There was a trend towards financing technical co-operation from loan assistance. Governments were also beginning to programme volunteers in activities executed by themselves which contained technical assistance components financed by credits of development banks.

UNV also stepped up contacts with the World Bank and the regional development banks, all of which had begun to employ volunteers in projects executed by them. Fifty-three volunteers were provided to UNHCR, UNICEF and WFP.

During 1983, interest in community-based development activities—"grass-roots" rural development—increased rapidly, with UNV being widely involved. Its youth and domestic development services (DDS) programme—aimed at establishing networks among rural grass-roots level activities, for the purpose of sharing experience in technical co-operation—continued to develop.

A new phase of the regional Asia and Pacific DDS project began in January 1983; Fiji, Solomon Islands, Tonga and Vanuatu were to join the six other countries already receiving teams of volunteers. The new project phase included a subproject of assistance to groups of young people to start income-generating activities in rural areas. A modest DDS project was approved for Africa. A programming workshop for that project was co-hosted by the Ministry of Culture, Sports and Arts of Mali and was organized at Bamako in December 1983; the workshop resulted in a work plan to make the pilot project operational in the first quarter of 1984.

DDS also provided on-the-job training, technology training and advisory services. Technical co-operation between DDS organizations was stimulated through study visits, workshops, publications and short-term personnel exchanges.

UNV also participated in ILO-executed labour-intensive public works projects and other, particularly agricultural, activities whose common denominator was the provision of additional assistance in the form of technical skills.

The preparatory work of UNV at the local level in relation to the International Youth Year (1985) continued (see Chapter XX of this section).

Despite repeated appeals to donor countries, contributions to the UNV Special Voluntary Fund decreased to $1.2 million in 1983; project expenditures totalled $1.8 million. The deficit between income and expenditure during 1983 was to some extent offset by investment income of approximately $300,000 and by income expected from a scheme established in May to finance part of the external costs from IPF allocations, cost-sharing arrangements, etc. Those arrangements would be reviewed annually, taking into account the level of contributions to the Fund for that year and making the necessary adjustment. The status of the Fund forced the Administrator to resort to other resources to meet part of UNV's external costs.

UNDP Council action. Taking note of the Administrator's report on UNV for 1982, submitted in April 1983,⁽¹⁶⁾ the UNDP Governing Council on 23 June⁽¹⁷⁾ decided not to change the financial arrangements for the programme, and appealed to Governments to solve the problem of financing the Special Voluntary Fund.

In his report, the Administrator concluded that, in response to increasing requests for assistance, it would be necessary to formulate and support proposals that would enable the programme to assume its increased responsibilities. He recommended that the Council decide that support costs should be charged in respect of UNDP-financed, UNV-executed projects.

On 24 June⁽¹⁸⁾ the Council approved revised budget appropriations for UNV for 1982-1983 of $5,720,700 gross ($4,771,900 net). For 1984-1985, it approved⁽¹⁹⁾ $6,680,100 gross ($5,572,200 net).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/173 without vote.

United Nations Volunteers programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2659(XXV) of 7 December 1970 and its subsequent resolutions on the United Nations Volunteers programme, including resolution 37/229 of 20 December 1982,

Taking note of decision 83/18 of 23 June 1983 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Bearing in mind the recommendations of the Sana'a Declaration, adopted at the High-level Symposium on International Volunteer Service and Development,

1. Notes with satisfaction the continued achievements of the United Nations Volunteers programme during the past year;

2. Reaffirms that the United Nations Volunteers programme continues to be an effective instrument of multilateral technical co-operation programmes responding to the needs of the developing countries, particularly to those of the least developed among them;

3. Expresses the hope that full consideration will be given to the use of United Nations Volunteers, as requested in decision 83/7 of 24 June 1983 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on recruitment and reduction of the cost of project professional personnel;

4. Considers that the use of United Nations Volunteers offers particular advantages for community development activities in rural areas;

5. Notes the expanding activities of the United Nations Volunteers programme in the field of youth and domestic development services;

6. Reaffirms that the United Nations Volunteers programme should continue its involvement in the preparations for the International Youth Year and its activities in the implementation of programmes relating to youth;

1. Appeals again to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute or to increase their contributions to the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers programme to enable the programme to meet the external cost of volunteers recruited from developing countries.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

In 1983, UNDP, with other United Nations organizations, continued to carry out its special responsibility for technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC)—a major effort by developing countries to promote their collective self-reliance. Those activities paralleled action in favour of economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC), taken by UNCTAD and others (p. 413).

At its May/June session, the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC made several recommendations to further active support for and promotion of TCDC, most significant among them one on strengthening the TCDC multisectoral Information Referral System (INRES), and another on the use of Special Programme Resources for supporting TCDC activities. Both recommendations were considered favourably by the UNDP Governing Council, which decided on 24 June to provide during 1984-1985 $600,000 (net) from UNDP's administrative budget for the support of INRES and another $600,000 from Special Programme Resources for TCDC operational and promotional activities.

With this support, UNDP continued to develop INRES, listing institutional capacities of developing countries in education and training, research, technological development, consultancy and expert services, together with the bilateral and multi-lateral project experiences of those institutions. UNDP's Special Unit for TCDC also co-operated with the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Unit to support a pilot study on additional information concerning the suppliers of equipment from developing countries for the use of United Nations development organizations and of other developing countries.

During 1983, UNDP also participated in inter-governmental meetings to promote TCDC, notably a technical meeting on the multisectoral information network, convened by the Chairman of the Group of 77 in New York in May; a meeting of experts to draft a model contract for the interchange of experts among developing countries, held at Caracas, Venezuela, in August under the auspices of the Group of 77; a non-aligned meeting of experts on small island developing countries, held in Grenada in September; and the second intergovernmental follow-up and co-ordination committee of the Group of 77 for the follow-up of the 1981 Caracas Plan of Action⁽²⁾ on ECDC, held at Tunis, Tunisia, in August.

UNDP also pursued TCDC in its field operations. Pursuant to an 18 June Governing Council decision on Special Programme Resources,⁽²¹⁾ an interregional project costing $400,000—promotion of action-oriented TCDC activities—was approved. By the end of 1983, 12 activities had been set for implementation under that project, involving TCDC between Haiti and Jamaica, Brazil and Cape Verde, Yemen and Yugoslavia, Brazil and Chile, Somalia and Yugoslavia and the United Republic of Tanzania and Kenya/Ethiopia in such areas as bauxite exploration, public administration, education through television, biological nitrogen fixation and geothermal power.

Along similar lines, Brazil, China and India approved TCDC projects for the 1982-1986 programming cycle under their country programmes. The regional intergovernmental consultations on TCDC, at Beijing, China, in November, provided an example of one such project. During those consultations, 32 TCDC exchanges between China and seven other countries of Asia and the Pacific were identified. Under the Indian project, in addition to various TCDC-oriented workshops and symposia, training was provided to technicians from the United Republic of Tanzania in small-scale industries, and the services of 50 engineers were provided to Sri Lanka to implement the Mahaweli project. Brazil, under its TCDC project, provided training in airline safety to over 80 students from Bolivia, Colombia, Panama, Paraguay and Peru in Latin America, and Angola and Mozambique in Africa.

Action of the Committee on TCDC. The third session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries was held in New York from 31 May to 8 June 1983.⁽²³⁾ Its tasks were to review TCDC activities within the United Nations system, to ensure that efforts to strengthen such activities were sustained, to support new policies to further the development of TCDC, to consider the availability of funds and their effective use, and to ensure co-ordination of TCDC activities. These functions had been defined by the Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, adopted in 1978 by the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Buenos Aires, Argentina.⁽²³⁾

The Committee adopted 12 decisions on 6 June, aimed at promoting TCDC. In one of these,⁽²⁴⁾ it invited developing countries to strengthen their national focal points for TCDC and to utilize the opportunities provided by the multilateral institutions set up by the developing countries; and invited developed countries to continue their support by increasing their contributions to the operational programmes of the United Nations development system and by accelerating the process of untying their aid resources, as recommended in the Buenos Aires Plan of Action. Progress made by the United Nations in implementing that Plan was the subject of another decision⁽²⁵⁾ by which the Committee urged the system to grant adequate importance to TCDC and to support specific projects; it also requested UNDP to increase its support to TCDC, and invited other United Nations bodies to review their procurement policies with a view to increasing procurement in developing countries and to support intergovernmental consultations on the co-ordination of national plans and on arrangements for TCDC. By a third decision,⁽²⁶⁾ the Committee recommended that the UNDP Governing Council consider subregional and regional intergovernmental organizations in the use of resources established by the regional and interregional IPFs for TCDC activities.

In a decision on measures to facilitate TCDC⁽²⁷⁾ the Committee requested the UNDP Administrator to study the possibility of introducing greater flexibility in the use of country IPFs, and to assist Governments and development organizations in pursuing the recommendations on TCDC of the 1981 High-level Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries⁽²⁸⁾ which had recognized the crucial role of TCDC for promoting ECDC. Under the same decision, the Committee noted with deep concern that the activities of UNDP's Special Unit for TCDC were being scaled down and urged the restoration of the Unit's staffing resources.

By another decision⁽²⁸⁾ the Committee requested the Governing Council to allow the use of IPFs to cover fully the local currency expenditure on TCDC projects; permit reimbursement, in convertible currency, of local currency expenditure on TCDC projects covered by country IPFs; and ensure procurement of equipment, services and experts from developing countries.

By another decision⁽²⁹⁾ the Committee requested the Administrator to provide support in preparing TCDC meetings, and invited the international community to support developing countries' efforts to carry forward TCDC activities by themselves, at all levels.

Other decisions dealt with: INRES (see below); skilled workers (see below); the United Nations Decade for Transport and Communications in Africa, 1978-1988 (see Chapter VIII of this section); rural-urban migration (see Chapter XIV of this section); women in development (see Chapter XIX of this section); and the Committee's provisional agenda for its 1985 session.

The Administrator submitted to the Committee in March 1983 a report⁽³⁰⁾ on the progress made by United Nations bodies in promoting and supporting TCDC in major areas of activity, namely: information collection and exchange; institution-strengthening and networking; training; legal arrangements; and resource mobilization.

In his conclusions, he stated that efforts by United Nations bodies to promote and support TCDC during 1981-1983 had met with moderate success. Gains were registered particularly in information transfer; in training of developing countries' personnel through fellowship programmes, intercountry workshops and study tours, and improvement of training materials; in the utilization of national experts and advisers to other developing countries in development programmes and training activities; and in expanding institutional networks as a basis for closer intercountry co-operation. He added that some agencies had taken significant new policy decisions designed to increase their effectiveness in promoting TCDC.

The absence of sufficient information on countries' needs and technical capabilities remained a serious constraint to operational TCDC, he observed; greater efforts were needed towards developing simple, cost-effective information systems to provide countries with up-to-date useful information for practical programme purposes. More information on countries' programme and management experiences as well as on available technologies was a particular need. The INRES inquiry service being developed by UNDP was expected to improve the situation, but other organizations also needed to consider how more information directly related to TCDC programming could be built into their sectoral technical information systems; developing countries on their side should consider what mechanisms were needed for effective evaluation and use of TCDC-related information.

While workshops and seminars on general TCDC aspects were still needed in some areas, greater emphasis should be placed on promoting and supporting intergovernmental consultations aimed at identifying operational issues; on co-ordinating national plans and strategies in key development areas of mutual interest; and on negotiating concrete TCDC arrangements.

As promotional efforts by most agencies and organizations had been of a rather ad hoc and uncoordinated nature, efforts should be made to identify development issues and problems within their fields of competence particularly amenable to TCDC approaches; to co-ordinate information, training and promotional activities; and to review mechanisms for collecting information and reporting on TCDC activities. In the current strained financial situation, the Administrator considered that it would be very helpful if more co-operating countries would consider using their country IPFs for TCDC activities.

In another March 1983 report to the Committee⁽³¹⁾ the Administrator gave an account of the status of the use of country IPFs for TCDC during 1980-1982.

UNDP Council action. The Governing Council on 23 June⁽³²⁾ took note of the recommendations of the High-level Committee and urged the Administrator to enable UNDP's Special Unit for TCDC to carry out its functions effectively, paying particular attention to field and action-oriented TCDC activities and having regard to the need to contain administrative costs. It decided to review in 1984 the Unit's staffing pattern in connection with the review of UNDP resources, and requested the Administrator to submit an assessment of the related implications for the Unit's work.

On 18 June, in a decision on Special Programme Resources⁽²¹⁾ the Governing Council approved $600,000 for specific promotional activities for TCDC during 1984-1985.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1983/50 of 28 July 1983, the Economic and Social Council took note of an agreement reached at Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to carry out a review of the work in ECDC and TCDC, with a view to improving United Nations co-ordination and making United Nations activities more responsive to the needs of developing countries. It invited the Secretary-General and United Nations bodies to pay particular attention to the assessment of their capacities and potentials for promoting ECDC and TCDC, and requested the Secretary-General to develop ECDC and TCDC activities.

On 29 July, the Council adopted a resolution (1983/66) on promoting interregional ECDC and TCDC; the recommendations made therein were endorsed by the General Assembly in decision 38/435 of 19 December.

In resolution 1983/56 of 28 July, on permanent sovereignty over natural resources, the Council requested the Committee on Natural Resources to identify new possibilities for ECDC and TCDC. In another resolution of the same date (1983/57), on water resources development, the Council called on UNDP and other United Nations organizations to intensify their roles in promoting TCDC.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/441 without vote.

Report of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries.

General Assembly decision 38/441

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/3W/702Add.6) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); draft orally proposed by Chairman; agenda item 78 (f).
Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 56; plenary 102.

Several 19 December Assembly resolutions contained provisions on TCDC.

In resolution 38/171 on a comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, the Assembly urged United Nations organizations and bodies to increase their support for TCDC by orienting their programmes towards strengthening such co-operation.

In resolution 38/151, the Assembly reaffirmed the need for the United Nations system to support developing countries' efforts to enhance their economic and technical co-operation for the development of their energy resources. In resolution 38/169, the Assembly requested United Nations bodies to support developing countries' efforts for technical and economic co-operation in the field of new and renewable sources of energy. In resolution 38/158, the Assembly called on United Nations organizations and the international community to support economic and technical co-operation among developing countries with regard to food and agriculture.

In a 20 December resolution (38/201) on the liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund, the Assembly decided to transfer 12 per cent of the Fund's remaining balance to UNDP for promoting economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, according to the priorities set by them. A UNDP Trust Fund for Economic and Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries was established on 31 December.

Information Referral System for TCDC

In May 1983, the UNDP Administrator submitted to the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC a report⁽³³⁾ on the status and development of the Information Referral System (INRES), designed to provide comprehensive and up-to-date information on the skills and capacities in developing countries which could be utilized for TCDC. Following its computerization, INRES comprised around 25,000 entries, pertaining to about 1,000 institutions. The Administrator indicated that steps would be taken to facilitate linkages of the INRES data base with national, regional and United Nations information systems. He believed that, with the completion of an initial data base, it would be appropriate to finance the further development and maintenance of INRES as a programme activity from UNDP's Special Programme Resources as distinct from its administrative budget, as had been the case. Accordingly, he proposed that the Governing Council approve $599,200 from Special Programme Resources for INRES for 1984-1985. In addition, he stated that treating INRES as a self-contained project activity promoting programme development in support of TCDC would also facilitate future consideration by developing countries as a group of the possibility of their taking over that activity.

The High-level Committee, on 6 June,⁽³⁴⁾ requested the Administrator to take immediate measures with regard to a reorientation of INRES and to report in 1985 on its progress and effective use through a multisectoral information network, including the increase of the coverage of institutions and sendees which could be accessed through a multilingual on-line inquiry service. It urged him to continue to finance the development and expansion of INRES from UNDP's administrative budget.

The Governing Council, in a decision of 18 June on Special Programme Resources⁽²¹⁾ appropriated $600,000 for INRES under a separate appropriation line in the 1984-1985 budget, and requested the Administrator to report in 1984 on its progress.

Skilled workers

In February 1983, the UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the Trade and Development Board a study on institutional and policy issues relating to the co-operative exchange of skills⁽³⁵⁾ in accordance with a 1981 Board resolution.⁽³⁶⁾ In carrying out the study, UNCTAD was assisted by two consultants from India, working in their personal capacity—T. S. Pappola, Director of Giri Institute, Lucknow, and K. K. Subrahmanian, Sardar Patel Institute of Economic and Social Research, Ahmedabad.

The study stressed the urgent need for institutionalizing export and import of skilled manpower among developing countries in order to avoid unnecessary costs to migrants and employers as well as imbalances in the labour markets of home and host countries, and to utilize the system of inter-developing country migration as a means of exploiting resource complementarities for the benefit of the national and collective development of developing countries.

To examine the feasibility of such modalities in depth, the study suggested: that a group of experts be convened and that interregional, regional and subregional workshops be organized with the participation of high-level officials in charge of labour and migration; that the High-level Committee and the Committee on Transfer of Technology of UNCTAD review periodically progress made in co-operative exchange of skills and make recommendations; and that national and regional policies for the co-operative exchange of skills and institutional mechanisms to implement them be set up with the assistance of UNDP, UNCTAD and other organizations.

On 22 April, the Board decided to transmit the study to the High-level Committee⁽³⁷⁾

The Committee on 6 June⁽³⁸⁾ invited the Board to examine the modalities for co-operation and to recommend ways of establishing co-operative policies for the exchange of skills among developing countries, while considering the possibility of entrusting that task to a group of governmental experts. It invited the Board to inform it of implementation of that recommendation and requested the UNDP Administrator to incorporate in his 1985 progress report information on implementation of the recommendation in the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action⁽²³⁾ that, in view of the global nature of the problem of migration of professional and skilled manpower from developing countries and of such manpower's potential as an asset for TCDC, United Nations development organizations should assist developing countries in formulating measures for strengthening their capacities to encourage patterns of voluntary migration between them, but also the return of scientific, professional and technical personnel living outside their countries.

To be able to take a decision on the convening of a group of governmental experts, the Board on 20 October 1983⁽⁹⁾ requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consult UNCTAD member States, particularly the developing countries concerned.

International skill exchange was also dealt with in an UNCTAD report submitted to the August/September Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Reverse Transfer of Technology (see Chapter XII of this section).

UN Capital Development Fund

In his annual report on the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) for 1983,⁽¹⁾ the UNDP Administrator described the Fund's programme operations and related activities, as well as its financial situation under the partial funding system.

Programme operations. In 1983, UNCDF approved $29.2 million in commitments for 20 new projects, plus $1 million for increases in existing project budgets, bringing outstanding commitments at year-end to $143.7 million for 193 ongoing projects in 35 LDCs. Of the $30.2 million of approvals in 1983, $23.9 million was funded directly from general resources; the balance was made possible as a result of the conclusion of $6.3 million in trust fund and cost-sharing arrangements.

The situation in Africa, with successive droughts over the previous two or three years, had had a devastating effect on crop and livestock production, resulting in widespread shortages of staple foods and severe economic hardships, particularly for small farmers; the Fund, therefore, identified and developed projects that would help increase food production and food storage and distributions systems. Of the 20 projects approved in 1983, 14 totalling $18 million in UNCDF grant assistance were in that category.

Net project expenditures in 1983 amounted to $24.8 million against outstanding commitments of $148 million for 185 projects carried over from 1982. In addition, approximately $3 million in expenditures was incurred in 1983 against trust fund and cost-sharing contributions.

As authorized by the UNDP Governing Council on 24 June⁽²⁾ UNCDF accepted new trust fund contributions conditioned on procurement from donor countries (Austria, Italy) totalling $5.6 million for three projects in Mali, the Niger and Somalia. Another trust fund agreement was formally signed in 1983 for a second project in Mali, covering a contribution of $306,000 from Belgium. A fourth such contribution was for a project urgently requested by Mali in mid-1983, which UNCDF could not approve within the ceiling set for new commitments against its general resources in 1983. Of those trust fund contributions, 36.4 per cent was untied.

In 1983, UNCDF and the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations concluded cost-sharing agreements, with the latter contributing $700,000 for two projects, bringing its total cost-sharing contributions to $2.1 million for four projects.

During the year, nine programming missions were fielded by the Fund. Following review of project proposals identified by those missions, 24 project preparation missions were sent to 18 countries and, subsequently, 20 projects were put to the UNCDF Projects Committee for approval. At year-end, there were 52 projects in the active pipeline at various stages of preparation, totalling some $77 million.

UNCDF also participated in two round-table donor meetings organized by UNDP for LDCs.

Programme resources. Voluntary contributions received by UNCDF in 1983 amounted to $24.2 million (down from $27.9 million in 1982)⁽³⁾ In addition, UNCDF received in 1983 $4.2 million in trust fund contributions conditioned on procurement of goods and services in the donor countries (against commitments of $5.6 million), as well as cost-sharing contributions totalling $200,000 (against a commitment of $700,000). As at 31 December, pledges for 1984 amounted to $16.5 million (see table above).

Of the 12 major donors contributing to UNCDF, 10 made their annual pledges in national currencies. Some increased their contributions for 1983 and 1984; those increases, however, were offset by the strength of the United States dollar and also by reduced contributions from two major donors. Although contributions did not reach anticipated levels, trust fund and cost-sharing contributions enabled the Fund to approve $30.2 million in new commitments.

At year-end, total cumulative commitments amounted to $307.4 million, while outstanding commitments under partial funding amounted to $143.7 million (net of amounts related to trust fund and cost-sharing contributions which by their nature required full funding). The Fund's total available resources at year-end amounted to $121.1 million, including the operational reserve of $28.6 million.

Expenditures in 1983 were $27.3 million—$25.3

million in project costs and $2 million for administrative and programme support costs.

UNDP Council action. The Governing Council, on 23 June⁽⁴⁾ took note of the Administrator's report on UNCDF for 1982⁽⁵⁾ and in particular of his resource projections for 1983-1986. The Administrator projected annual project approvals of $34 million for 1983, rising to $40 million in 1986. Project commitments in excess of balance of resources and operational reserve were expected to be $52.3 million in 1983, rising to $64.5 million in 1986, while total resources were projected at $101.9 million for 1983, dropping to $91 million in 1986.

On 24 June 1983, in a decision on the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs (p. 431), the Council reiterated its appeal for increased contributions to the Special Measures Fund for LDCs and UNCDF. Also on 24 June,⁽⁶⁾ the Council took a decision on trust funds conditioned on procurement from a donor country (see above), which also had a bearing on UNCDF's operations. Support cost reimbursement arrangements (see above) for activities financed also from UNCDF resources were dealt with in another decision⁽⁷⁾ The Council decided that a 5 per cent rate should be applied to the reimbursement of support costs for projects financed from UNCDF resources and executed by UNDP's Office for Projects Execution, and that reimbursement of such costs to executing agencies for activities financed from UNCDF resources would continue.

Chapter

Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief

The United Nations continued in 1983 to provide special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance to affected countries, notably in Africa.

The Economic and Social Council, at its second session of 1983, heard the United Nations Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes report on the situation in 14 African countries and Tonga, and took note of oral reports by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator on measures to alleviate the effects of disasters, and by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) on assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Africa.

In December, the General Assembly adopted a series of resolutions calling for economic assistance to Benin (resolution 38/210), Cape Verde (38/219), the Central African Republic (38/211), Chad (38/214), the Comoros (38/209), Djibouti (38/213), Equatorial Guinea (38/224), the Gambia (38/212), Ghana (38/203), Guinea-Bissau (38/221), Lesotho (38/215), Mozambique (38/208), Sierra Leone (38/205) and Uganda (38/207). In other regions, the Assembly urged such assistance to Democratic Yemen (38/206), Nicaragua (38/223) and Vanuatu (38/218).

The United Nations system, notably the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO), continued to respond to emergency situations arising from natural disasters, and the Assembly urged assistance to countries in the Sudano-Sahelian region (resolution 38/225) and East Africa (38/216), which suffered from drought; Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru (38/222), which were victims of floods; Honduras and Nicaragua (38/217), which coped with the effects of floods and drought; and Yemen (38/204), in its recovery following a 1982 earthquake. The Assembly also adopted resolution 38/202 on strengthening the capacity of the United Nations to respond to natural and other disaster situations.

Emergency humanitarian assistance continued to be provided to displaced persons, as well as Palestinians, in Lebanon, and the Assembly, in resolution 38/220, called for intensified assistance to meet Lebanon's reconstruction and development needs. In other action, the Assembly, by resolution 38/201, dissolved the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund, established in 1974 to help low-income developing countries cope with the economic crisis situation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, which considered the question of special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance at its second regular session of 1983, adopted decision 1983/172 without vote on 28 July, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

Special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 28 July 1983, the Council:

- (a) Took note of:
 - (i) The oral report made by the Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, on behalf of the Secretary-General, on assistance to Benin, Botswana, Cape Verde, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Comoros, Djibouti, the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Liberia, Mozambique, Sierra Leone, Tonga and Uganda;
 - (ii) The oral report made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, on behalf of the Secretary-General, on assistance to refugees in Somalia, assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia, humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti and assistance to student refugees in southern Africa;

(b) Took note further of the statements made by delegations during the discussion of the item entitled "Special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance" at the second regular session of 1983 of the Council;

(c) Decided to appeal to all Member States, organs and organizations of the United Nations system, and to other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to continue their efforts to provide the necessary assistance, pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/172

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/116) without vote, 22 July (meeting 16); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 17.

Economic assistance

The United Nations continued in 1983 to mobilize special economic assistance programmes for a number of developing countries identified by the General Assembly as facing particularly onerous economic difficulties. Often, those difficulties had been aggravated by such unpredictable events as internal strife, natural disasters or an unexpected economic malaise; their fragile economies had been exacerbated by the global recession, foreign exchange position and domestic economic performance, characterized by reduced government revenues and curtailed investment expenditures.

The United Nations Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, Sotirios Mousouris, told the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 10 November that although some countries had averted further deterioration in their economies and a few were showing signs of recovery, many others faced heightened economic precariousness and an increased severity in their adjustment programmes. In addition, large population groups were suffering the consequences of adverse climatic conditions, which had sharply reduced food availability and eroded nutritional standards. The influx of refugees, displaced persons or repatriates in some countries was an additional strain.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (SNPA)⁽¹⁾ adopted by the 1981 United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries⁽²⁾ and endorsed that year by the Assembly⁽³⁾ SNPA was aimed at transforming the economies of the least developed countries (LDCs) towards self-sustained development and enabling them to provide their people—particularly the rural and urban poor—with internationally accepted minimum standards of nutrition, health, transport, communication, housing and education. It recognized that only a substantial increase in official development assistance (ODA), in real terms, during the current decade would enable these countries to achieve the objectives of their national programmes.

The report described recent economic performance and national action in the 36 LDCs (see Chapter I of this section), United Nations and other international assistance, follow-up and monitoring of SNPA implementation, and the outcome of the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see Chapter IV of this section).

Within the United Nations system, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, in consultation with the UNCTAD Secretary-General, convened inter-agency consultations on a regular basis to mobilize and co-ordinate all United Nations activities for SNPA implementation. While the system continued to provide to LDCs a high proportion of the grant resources at its disposal—an average of 36 per cent over the 1980-1982 period—its total expenditure in, and the share of concessional loans to, LDCs decreased by 10 per cent in 1982 as compared to 1981, reflecting the stagnating or declining availability of resources. According to the latest estimate, some $45.6 billion in net capital was required for 1981-1985 simply to maintain the dismal growth trend of the past in LDCs. The operational activities of the United Nations system were considered to be essential in offsetting the inequalities in the overall ODA distribution to LDCs.

The Secretary-General warned that, unless greater resources were forthcoming, financial constraints facing the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—the main source of multi-lateral technical co-operation to those countries—and other United Nations agencies could affect their ability effectively to assist LDCs in achieving SNPA objectives.

In a September report⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General described special programmes of economic assistance to 12 African countries—Benin, Botswana, Cape Verde, the Central African Republic, the Comoros, Djibouti, the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Liberia, Mozambique and Uganda. The report, based on information submitted by the countries concerned, was intended as an interim summary document pending the dispatch of visiting missions in 1984; the countries opted for this measure in the belief that a longer interval between missions would allow for observing sufficiently significant evolution in situations and thus result in reports of greater depth and usefulness than in the past when missions were dispatched annually.

The report noted that those countries had an average per capita income of less than one third of that of oil-importing developing countries, suffered from severe balance-of-payments deficits and precarious reserves, and often depended on one or two commodities for most of their export earnings. Despite compensatory financing provided under the compensatory financing facility of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the STABEX scheme of the European Economic Community (EEC), debt-servicing was consuming a substantial proportion of the already reduced export earnings in low-income African countries, rising from 8.8 per cent in 1980 to 28.3 per cent in 1983, including accumulated commercial arrears. Import curtailment to reduce external accounts had seriously affected not only the manufacturing sector but also agriculture, transport and health care; in more than half of the countries concerned, real per capita income had fallen dramatically during the previous decade. While SNPA targeted the ODA flows to LDCs at 0.15 per cent of the gross national product (GNP) of the industrialized countries by 1985, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development estimated the figure in 1982 at 0.09 per cent.

The Secretary-General observed that, in addition to political uncertainties and changes that were not conducive to attracting investment, the combination of negligible past investment, lack of domestic resources from which to generate capital formation and inadequate aid flows augured poorly for economic progress, making it virtually impossible for the countries in question to make significant progress in development on the basis of their own efforts and resources. Often the issue at hand was simply to meet the food requirements and other basic needs of the population.

By an October report⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of economic assistance provided by the United Nations to 16 countries—including all those covered in his September report, as well as Chad, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone and Tonga—in accordance with the 1982 Assembly resolutions adopted on each of them.⁽⁶⁾ Such assistance generally focused on food, agriculture, water resources and development of a wide range of basic infrastructures and services.

Africa

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/5 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, thanked the Secretary-General for mobilizing special programmes of economic assistance for African States experiencing grave economic difficulties, in particular for newly independent African States, the front-line States and other independent States of southern Africa (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V). It expressed appreciation to the World Bank, UNDP and other concerned international financial institutions for their assistance to the countries that were least developed or requiring special economic assistance programmes, and called on the international community to provide assistance to these and other African States, including those affected by natural calamities.

In addition, the Assembly, by resolution 38/216, called for assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda.

By resolution 38/39 C on the effects of apartheid on the countries of southern Africa, the Assembly called for international assistance to enable the independent States in the subregion to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity, and rebuild their economies.

Benin

The Secretary-General, in his September report on special programmes of economic assistance⁽⁴⁾ observed that Benin, whose economic base rested on a few export commodities, continued to suffer a chronic trade deficit. The Government needed food aid urgently, as the late arrival of the rainy season had set back the planting of the staple crop (maize), and below-average yields were expected; the repatriation of its people from Nigeria in early 1983 had also taken a serious toll.

However, the country's gross domestic product (GDP) had shown a modest growth, the social infrastructure was improving, and administrative reforms had been introduced to facilitate implementation of its second development plan (1983-1987), which incorporated the special programme of economic assistance consisting of 51 projects. The programme's cost, initially estimated at $149.3 million, was revised at $257.2 million after a review in July 1983; in mid-1983, financing amounting to some $96 million had been secured or pledged. A round-table conference, organized by the Government at Cotonou from 1 to 4 March 1983, planned the strategy for 1983-1987 and proposed 138 projects with a total requirement of $822 million in external financial assistance, in such areas as agriculture, water control, animal production, fishing resources, forestry, industrial development, energy, transportation, housing, education and health. At the conference, 10 countries and several organizations and private companies announced interest in providing financial and technical assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/210 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Benin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/88 of 5 December 1980, 36/208 of 17 December 1981 and 37/151 of 17 December 1982, in which it appealed to the international community to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to Benin so as to help that country overcome its financial and economic difficulties,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, in which the Council appealed to all States and all appropriate international organizations, including the United Nations and the specialized agencies, to assist Benin,

Having heard the statement made by the representative of Benin on 10 November 1983 describing his country's serious economic and financial situation and the measures adopted by his Government to address those difficulties,

Having considered the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Noting from that report that, despite a variety of adverse factors, Benin continues to make some progress in its development efforts as a result of the measures adopted by the Government and the assistance provided by the international community,

Deeply concerned, however, by the fact that Benin continues to experience serious economic and financial difficulties, characterized by a severe balance-of-payments disequilibrium, heavy burdens of external debt and a lack of resources to implement its planned economic and social development programme,

Noting also that continued unfavourable climatic conditions in the coastal and northern areas of Benin have entailed losses in agricultural and livestock production,

Having noted the efforts of the Government of Benin to mobilize international support for the country's development plan through the organization of a round-table conference held at Cotonou in March 1983 with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme,

Bearing in mind that Benin is classified as one of the least developed countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he has taken to organize and mobilize support for the international programme of economic assistance for Benin;

2. Reiterates its endorsement of the assessment and recommendations of the review mission dispatched to Benin in July 1982, contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Notes with satisfaction the interest and support for the development plan of Benin expressed by the participants in the round-table conference;

4. Appeals to Member States, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to respond generously and urgently to the needs of Benin, as set out in the country's development plan for 1983-1987;

5. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance already given or pledged to Benin by Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and regional, interregional and intergovernmental organizations;

6. Notes with appreciation the measures that are being taken by the Government of Benin to strengthen the country's economy through financial and administrative reforms;

7. Reiterates the appeal it has addressed to all Member States to provide substantial and appropriate assistance bilaterally and multilaterally, if possible in the form of grants-in-aid or loans granted on favourable terms, in order to enable Benin to carry out fully the recommended special programme of economic assistance;

8. Requests the appropriate bodies and programmes of the United Nations—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the United Nations Children's Fund—to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Benin, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the measures they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

9. Requests the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of Benin to meet the critical humanitarian needs of the population through the provision of food aid, medicines and equipment for areas affected by drought;

10. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Benin and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1984;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Benin;

(b) To ensure that the necessary financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to Benin and the mobilization of that assistance;

(c) To keep the situation in Benin under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for Benin;

(d) To arrange for a review of the economic situation in Benin and the status of the special programme of economic assistance and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/705 & Corr.1¹ without vote, 28 November (meeting 52); 22-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.55); agenda item 81.

Benin told the Second Committee that the underdeveloped and deteriorating state of the national economy and the negative impact of the international economic crisis, coupled with its efforts to cope with the effects of creeping desertification in the north and the drought in the coastal region, justified continuation of the special economic assistance programme.

Botswana

Three factors adversely affected Botswana's economy in 1983—the volatile political situation in southern Africa and refugee inflows; a recurrent and serious drought in the region threatening the majority of the population dependent on agriculture and livestock production, and necessitating food imports; and weaknesses in world mineral markets, especially diamonds, which affected GDP, government revenue and foreign exchange earnings.⁽⁴⁾

Assistance to refugees was provided by UNHCR, the World Food Programme (WFP), EEC and three non-governmental organizations. In view of the poor harvests caused by drought, the Government appealed in April for international assistance in food aid, seeds, water, drilling equipment and financial support; special relief measures were needed for 445,000 affected persons, almost half the national population. As at mid-1983, additional food assistance pledged amounted to 10,000 metric tons, leaving a gap of 40,000 tons to be met. The livestock sector, producing the second largest revenue after diamonds, needed assistance of $800,000 for the purchase of animal feed.

The Secretary-General reported that Botswana's needs for special economic assistance above and beyond normal international aid flows, because of the economic impact of political tensions in the region since 1977,⁽⁷⁾ had largely been met. Donors were financing or had pledged to finance public works construction, but additional funds were needed for telecommunications. Most of the remaining needs related to projects encompassed under the programmes of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference.

Cape Verde

In 1983, as in the previous 15 years, drought seriously affected the agricultural sector of Cape Verde—a least developed country—comprised of 10 major and 3 smaller islands.⁽⁴⁾ Although 65 per cent of the total population lived in rural areas, the agricultural output accounted for only 17 per cent of GDP. Almost half of the population was less than 15 years old and some 30 per cent of the potential labour force was unemployed.

Cape Verde's balance of payments was characterized by a large and growing trade deficit covered by an inflow of foreign assistance and remittances by its emigrant population. While its regular budget had a small surplus until 1982, a relatively small deficit of $4.6 million was expected for 1983, as a result of greater indebtedness, increased value of the dollar, expansion of government services and absorption of the expenditures previously included in the investment budget. The First National Development Plan (1982-1985), approved in December 1982, proposed the creation of 6,000 to 7,000 permanent jobs and improvements in various sectors, and provided for investments of some $417 million, an amount three times higher than the investments undertaken during the previous four years.

Due to continued drought, the 1983 production of maize and beans was estimated to meet only 18 per cent of the national requirements; Cape Verde faced a food deficit of 37,830 tons, after taking into account purchases and confirmed food aid expected during the year. The Government negotiated with donors for multiyear commitments tied to selected food security goals and financing for urgent development projects.

The Government informed the first round table of its development partners that about 60 per cent of the financial requirements of its National Development Plan had been mobilized, and that lack of funding affected mainly housing, administration and the investment programme of the national development fund (soil and water conservation, and road networks). Of the 10 biggest projects, funding appeared assured for 6 (Maio cement plant, naval workshop at Sao Vicente, electricity and water for Sal Island, telecommunications, food storage and the National People's Assembly) and discussions continued with the donors for three other major projects (promotion of small and medium-sized enterprises, ports of Fogo and Brava, and Sal airport).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/219 without vote, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee.

Assistance to Cape Verde

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/99 of 13 December 1977, 33/127 of 19 December 1978, 34/119 of 14 December 1979, 35/104 of 5 December 1980, 36/211 of 17 December 1981 and 37/152 of 17 December 1982, in which the international community was requested to provide an appropriate level of resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance to Cape Verde as envisaged in the reports of the Secretary-General,

Recalling resolutions 142(VI) and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the progress in the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, and on activities in the field of island developing countries,

Noting that Cape Verde is one of the least developed countries and a small archipelagic State, with a fragile and open economy, aggravated by endemic and severe drought,

Reiterating that increased substantial, continuous and predictable assistance from the international community is needed for the effective implementation of the First National Development Plan (1982-1985),

Gravely concerned at the critical food situation in Cape Verde resulting from the failure of seasonal rains and the continuing recurrence of drought,

Recognizing the strenuous efforts deployed by the Government and people of Cape Verde towards the eco-conomic and social development of their country despite existing constraints,

1. Takes note of the summary report of the Secretary-General prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 37/152;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts deployed in mobilizing resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance to Cape Verde;

3. Expresses its gratitude to States and to international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations for their contribution to the programme of assistance to Cape Verde;

4. Reaffirms the need for all Governments and international organizations to implement their commitments undertaken within the framework of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, particularly those undertaken at the round table of Cape Verde's partners in development, held in June 1982;

5. Urges Governments and international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations to extend and intensify substantially their assistance with a view to implementing the programme of assistance to Cape Verde as soon as possible;

6. Invites the international community, in particular donor countries, to take appropriate and urgent measures to support the realization of the First National Development Plan (1982-1985) of Cape Verde;

7. Requests the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue and increase their assistance to Cape Verde, to co-operate with the Secretary-General in his efforts to mobilize resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the measures they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

8. Calls upon the international community to continue to contribute generously to all appeals for food and fodder assistance made by the Government of Cape Verde, or on its behalf by the specialized agencies and other competent organizations of the United Nations system, to help it cope with the critical situation in the country;

9. Once again draws the attention of the international community to the special account established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/99, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Cape Verde;

10. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to continue to consider, through their governing bodies, the special needs of Cape Verde and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1984;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for implementing the programme of development assistance to Cape Verde;

(b) To keep the situation in Cape Verde under constant review and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation in Cape Verde and to make a substantive report on further progress in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Central African Republic

A drought, lasting from November 1982 until May 1983, had catastrophic effects on the Central African Republic, whose economic slow-down had resulted in loss of fiscal revenues. The landlocked country suffered a loss of food and cash crops, destruction by bush fire of many plantations and forest areas, shortages of electricity, disruption of trade and transport which depended on river navigation, and increased health hazards caused by a shortage of potable water.

The Government appealed for international emergency assistance. As the drought was likely to affect the implementation of the National Programme for 1982-1985, the priorities reflected in the current special economic assistance programme appeared in need of adapting to the new circumstances.

In his September 1983 report on special programmes of economic assistance,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General observed that the 1982 production of cotton, the country's major export crop, had amounted to only 40 per cent of the 1977 level, and the coffee crop, another export commodity, was expected to produce in 1983/84 only 30 per cent of the normal yield.

The drought also affected the output and the cost of power supply, which relied on one thermal and two hydroelectric stations. The interruption of river transport led to shortages in the stocks of large volume commodities, and the lack of materials led to a virtual standstill in construction. Industries, particularly the breweries and the factories producing shoes, sheet-metal and aluminium goods, suffered considerable losses.

The losses of government revenue were expected to bring about rising deficits, thus jeopardizing the financial recovery plan prepared with the assistance of IMF. Additional external budgetary support was needed to meet the situation.

Among the United Nations special programmes of economic assistance⁽³⁾ an evaluation mission for a hydropower station was planned for late 1983 by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/211 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the Central African Republic

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/87 of 5 December 1980, 36/206 of 17 December 1981 and 37/145 of 17 December 1982, in which it affirmed the urgent need for international action to assist the Government of the Central African Republic in its reconstruction, rehabilitation and development efforts and invited the international community to provide sufficient resources to carry out the programme of assistance to the Central African Republic,

Noting the statement made by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Co-operation of the Central African Republic on 10 October 1983, in which he described the serious economic and financial problems of the country and observed that the situation had not improved, owing to the insufficiency of financial resources, and that external assistance continued to be essential,

Noting also the statement made by the representative of the Central African Republic on 10 November 1983, according to which the response of the international community to the urgent appeal of the General Assembly had not been adequate to meet the needs of the situation,

Bearing in mind that the Central African Republic is land-locked and is classified as one of the least developed countries,

Recalling the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, which called for increased aid to these countries,

Particularly concerned that the Government of the Central African Republic is unable to provide the population with adequate health, educational and other essential social and public services because of an acute shortage of financial and material resources,

Taking account of the fact that the economic and social situation in the Central African Republic has been further aggravated by an unprecedented drought and a sharp and considerable decrease in export earnings,

Noting with satisfaction the considerable efforts exerted by the Government and people of the Central African Republic for national reconstruction, rehabilitation and development, despite the limitations confronting them,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General, to which is annexed the report of the mission dispatched to the Central African Republic in June 1982 to carry out a study of the economic situation and the progress being made in organizing and carrying out the special programme of economic assistance for that country, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 36/206,

Having also examined the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Noting that, according to those reports, the budgetary situation of the Central African Republic continues to make it impossible for the Government to undertake a programme of reconstruction, rehabilitation and development, owing to inadequate external financial assistance,

1. Expresses its gratification to the Secretary-General for the efforts he has made to mobilize resources for carrying out the programme of assistance to the Central African Republic;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the States, the international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations for their contribution to the programme of assistance to the Central African Republic;

3. Notes with concern, however, that the assistance provided under this heading continues to fall far short of the country's urgent needs;

4. Urgently draws the attention of the international community to table 6 of the annex to the Secretary-General's report, which indicates the projects for which financing is partially assured and those for which no financing has been forthcoming;

5. Reiterates its appeal to all States to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the Central African Republic;

6. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization—to maintain their programmes of assistance to the Central African Republic, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in his efforts to organize an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

7. Calls upon regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations—in particular the European Economic Community, the European Development Fund, the African Development Bank, the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' Fund for International Development, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the Kuwaiti Fund and the Abu Dhabi Fund—to give urgent consideration to the establishment of a programme of assistance to the Central African Republic or, where one is already in existence, to the expansion and considerable strengthening of that programme with a view to its implementation as soon as possible;

8. Urges all States and relevant United Nations bodies—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization—to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of the Central African Republic to cope with the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide, as appropriate, food, medicines and essential equipment for schools and hospitals, as well as to meet the emergency needs of the population in the drought-stricken areas of the country;

9. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of the Central African Republic and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1984;

10. Again draws the attention of the international community to the special account opened by the Secretary-General at United Nations Headquarters, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/87, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to the Central African Republic;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to organize a special emergency assistance programme with regard to food and health, especially medicaments, vaccines, hospital equipment, generating sets for field hospitals, water pumps and food products in order to help the vulnerable populations, whose steadily deteriorating situation is becoming a matter of increasingly serious concern;

(b) To continue also his efforts to mobilize necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Central African Republic;

(c) To ensure that the necessary financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to the Central African Republic and the mobilization of that assistance;

(d) To keep the situation in the Central African Republic under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Central African Republic;

(e) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of the Central African Republic and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Chad

As requested by the General Assembly in December 1982,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General reported in June 1983 on the status of special economic assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Chad.⁽⁹⁾ Annexed to the report were the findings of a mission (2-10 May), led by the Director of the United Nations Office for Special Political Questions.

The mission found that nearly 17 years of unrest had taken their toll on Chad (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V), a situation which had not been made easier by periods of drought and irregular rainfall, a recent outbreak of a cattle disease (peste bovine) and lack of trained manpower and of resources for essential education, medical and health services.

Capital flows continued the negative trend of previous years, presumably because of economic conditions in the country, coupled with the high level of external interest rates. Nevertheless, in spite of the decline in exports and a modest growth in imports, there was an overall balance-of-payments surplus at the end of 1982 due to the high level of public transfers. At the end of the first quarter of 1983, only 10 per cent of the Government's revenue budget approved for the year had been received. In the virtual standstill the country's banking system found itself, the Government decreed, in April 1983, the continuation of a credit moratorium to alleviate the burden of previous obligations. With the assistance of UNDP, the Government undertook studies on the possible establishment of a bank for reconstruction and development.

In the five months following a November 1982 international pledging conference on special aid for Chad⁽¹⁰⁾ there had been a significant response in the form of food and other emergency supplies, as well as commitments to finance projects. While the most immediate emergency situation could thus be dealt with, Chad's continuing need for international assistance was demonstrated, in part, by an estimated food deficit of 192,000 tons in 1983, of which 50,000 tons needed to be distributed before the rainy season in June. UNDRO issued an international appeal in May 1983, urging donors to help avoid disaster by forwarding food aid in time. In connection with food distribution, the Government had received transport equipment, and logistical support pledged by United Nations organizations amounted to a trucking/trailing capacity of 473.5 tons; an additional 337 tons had been provided by non-governmental organizations and a further 762 tons bilaterally. There remained a deficit of some $1.6 million in the logistical resources for food aid distribution. Resources were also needed to increase storage capacity.

The food situation had been made more critical by the return of approximately 400,000 Chadian nationals from neighbouring countries, for whom the Government pursued a policy of economic and social reintegration.

Chad's priority programme, which had been submitted at the 1982 pledging conference to cover medium-term needs for rehabilitation and reconstruction during 1983-1984, consisted of 122 projects in various sectors at a total cost of about $341 million; of those projects, 32 had been funded to the level of $107 million, 59 were in the planning or negotiating stage with interested donors, and 31 were without response.

Among several United Nations organizations providing aid to Chad during 1983,⁽⁵⁾ WFP was continuing three development projects valued at $17.5 million and five emergency operations valued at $16.9 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/214 without vote. It acted on the recommendation of the Second Committee.

Special economic assistance to Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/155 of 17 December 1982 and its previous resolutions on the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Chad, emergency humanitarian assistance to Chad and special economic assistance to that country,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on special economic assistance to Chad, relating, inter alia, to the economic and financial situation of Chad, the status of assistance provided for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country and the progress made in organizing and executing the special programme of economic assistance for that country,

Noting that the stability of the situation in Chad enabled the Secretary-General to organize an International Conference on Assistance to Chad, in November 1982 at Geneva, in close co-operation with the Government of Chad,

Aware that the resumption of fighting in Chad has prevented the States and agencies that participated in the International Conference on Assistance to Chad from fully honouring their commitments,

Noting with concern that the resumption of fighting is aggravating the situation of dire need in Chad resulting from the systematic destruction of the economic and social infrastructure during seventeen years of war and from the effects of natural disasters,

Considering that Chad is included in the list of the least developed countries and is therefore entitled to the benefits provided for in the relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Recognizing the need for the provision by the international community of emergency humanitarian assistance, particularly in the areas of food and health, to the population of Chad,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and organizations that responded to the appeals of the Government of Chad and of the Secretary-General by furnishing assistance to Chad;

2. Also expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for his efforts to mobilize assistance to Chad;

3. Again appeals to the international community to provide, as a matter of urgency, the necessary assistance to the people of Chad, who have suffered from the war;

4. Renews the request made to States, appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations and international financial institutions to contribute to the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Chad through bilateral or multilateral channels;

5. Takes note of the desire of Chad to organize, as soon as circumstances permit, a conference of donors and contributors of funds to consider a general programme of reconstruction and development and to finance detailed projects in the areas of priority;

6. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to give all the necessary assistance to Chad for the preparation and organization of the conference, in accordance with the arrangements agreed upon at the International Conference on Assistance to Chad held in November 1982;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To monitor, in close collaboration with the humanitarian agencies concerned, the humanitarian needs, particularly in the areas of food and health, of the people affected by the war and the drought;

(b) To mobilize the humanitarian assistance of the international community for the persons who have suffered as a result of the war in Chad;

(c) To pursue his efforts to organize the programme of financial assistance to Chad;

(d) To apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the situation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Comoros

The economic situation of the Comoros, a least developed country extremely poor in natural resources, was further aggravated by a cyclone that hit the archipelago in January 1983.⁽⁴⁾ The rapid population growth of 3.5 per cent per annum exacerbated an already difficult food situation heavily dependent on imports, and there was widespread malnutrition, especially protein deficiency. The physical infrastructure and basic utilities remained insufficient.

The Comorian economy depended on a few exports crops with large year-to-year fluctuations in the world market: vanilla, ylang-ylang perfume essence, cloves and copra. While agriculture generated some 45 per cent of GDP and was slowly expanding, rice production fell short of national needs, and imports had risen to between 20,000 and 25,000 tons per year; efforts were being made to stimulate maize production as a substitute for rice in the national diet.

An intermediate development plan for 1983-1986 was being finalized for presentation to a donor's conference in early 1984. The plan's six priority areas were: food self-sufficiency; improved inter-island communication; energy production and water supplies; health and population programmes; training; and land and human settlements development. It envisaged an investment programme of $340.6 million, of which $108.5 million had been mobilized as at mid-1983. Of the remainder still being sought, $80.6 million was needed for 1983-1986 and the balance for 1987-1990. From the 98 projects in the investment programme, the Government had selected 19, costing $89.7 million, for inclusion in the special economic assistance programme.

Several United Nations organizations gave such assistance to the Comoros in 1983.⁽⁵⁾ Following the cyclone in January, UNDRO launched an appeal for assistance, generating $1.9 million in emergency aid as at mid-February. Among others, WFP had an ongoing project worth $7.75 million and an emergency project costing $1.6 million. A UNDP project on rural development and poultry, worth $3.2 million, was being implemented by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). The International Development Association (IDA), an affiliate of the World Bank, approved a $2.3 million credit to help strengthen the newly created Development Bank of the Comoros by providing it with funds needed for lending during 1983-1986 to small- and medium-scale enterprises and by furnishing it with technical assistance and training.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/209 without vote.

Assistance to the Comoros

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/154 of 17 December 1982 and its previous resolutions on assistance to the Comoros, in which it appealed to the international community to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to the Comoros in order to help that country overcome its financial and economic difficulties,

Taking note of the special problems confronting the Comoros as a developing island country and as one of the least developed countries,

Noting that the Government of the Comoros has given priority to the questions of infrastructure, transport and telecommunications,

Noting also the economic difficulties arising from the country's scarcity of natural resources, compounded by the recent drought and cyclones,

Noting further the grave budgetary and balance-of-payments problems facing the Comoros,

Aware of the intention of the Government of the Comoros to convene a donors' conference at the end of the first quarter of 1984,

Having examined the summary report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for the Comoros;

2. Notes with satisfaction the response by various Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other organizations to its appeals and those of the Secretary-General for assistance to the Comoros;

3. Notes with concern, however, that the assistance thus far provided continues to fall short of the country's urgent requirements and that assistance is still urgently required to carry out the projects identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Appeals to those States and organizations invited to the donors' conference to be held in the Comoros early in 1984 to contribute generously to the programme of assistance that will be presented by the Government of the Comoros at that time;

5. Renews its appeal to Member States, the appropriate organs, programmes and organizations of the United Nations system, regional and international organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial institutions, to provide the Comoros with assistance to enable it to cope with its difficult economic situation and pursue its development goals;

6. Requests the appropriate programmes and organizations of the United Nations system to increase their current programmes of assistance to the Comoros, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Comoros;

(b) To keep the situation in the Comoros under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Comoros;

(c) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of the Comoros and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Djibouti

Djibouti, which had been added in 1982⁽¹⁾ to the United Nations list of least developed countries, was faced with chronic water shortages and recurrent drought, according to the Secretary-General's September report on special programmes of economic assistance⁽⁴⁾. The latest population estimate of 382,000 included 42,000 refugees (see Chapter XXI of this section) and 10,000 foreigners. The Government followed a cautious budgetary policy, with income exceeding recurrent expenditures and capital expenditures limited to the available domestic and external resources. Its revenue depended mainly on indirect taxes, largely on products consumed by the expatriate community.

Djibouti, which had received some $478 million in special economic assistance during 1978-1982, organized a donors' conference (21-23 November 1983), at which it presented an investment programme costing $570 million for 1983-1988. In addition to 72 projects for which financing of $310 million was sought at the conference, the investment programme included 45 projects for which $240 million had already been secured or pledged. The balance of $20 million was to be raised domestically for the programme, which aimed at raising the living standards of the low-income groups—directly by assisting herdsmen, fishermen and farmers, and by improving living conditions of the urban poor, and indirectly by increasing employment opportunities and training facilities.

Among United Nations agencies providing special programmes of economic assistance to Djibouti,⁽⁵⁾ WFP had ongoing projects with a total value of $13.1 million. A $6.4 million credit had been approved by IDA in support of a three-year road-improvement programme and for transport cost reduction.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/213 without vote.

Assistance to Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/153 of 17 December 1982 and its previous resolutions on assistance to Djibouti, in which it drew the attention of the international community to the critical economic situation confronting Djibouti and to the country's urgent need for assistance,

Recalling also its resolution 37/176 of 17 December 1982, in which it called upon the international community to continue to support the efforts made by the Government of Djibouti to cope with the needs of the refugee population,

Recalling further its resolution 36/221 of 17 December 1981, in which it appealed to the international community to contribute generously towards the projects and programmes to help the drought-affected populations,

Having in mind its resolution 37/133 of 17 December 1982, in which it decided to include Djibouti in the list of the least developed countries,

Having examined the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Noting the critical economic situation of Djibouti and the list of urgent and priority projects, formulated by the Government, that require international assistance,

Noting also that the Government of Djibouti convened a donors' conference from 21 to 23 November 1983 in order to seek international support for the country's economic and social development,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to organize an international programme of economic assistance for Djibouti;

2. Notes with appreciation the assistance already provided or pledged to Djibouti by Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other organizations;

3. Again draws the attention of the international community to the difficult economic situation confronting Djibouti and to the severe structural constraints to its development;

4. Renews its appeal to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and international organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial institutions, to provide assistance bilaterally and multilaterally, as appropriate, to Djibouti in order to enable it to cope with its difficult economic situation and to implement its development strategies;

5. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to maintain and to increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Djibouti, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

6. Expresses its appreciation to those States and organizations which participated in the donors' conference, held in Djibouti from 21 to 23 November 1983, and urges them to respond generously to the programme of assistance that was presented by the Government of Djibouti at that time;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

(b) To continue to ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to mobilize resources and to co-ordinate international assistance to Djibouti;

(c) To keep the situation in Djibouti under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Djibouti;

(d) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of Djibouti and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Equatorial Guinea

In 1983, Equatorial Guinea's outstanding external public and publicly guaranteed disbursed debt was estimated at $90 million, approximately 50 per cent more than the estimated GDP, and the short-term debt was also growing rapidly. The total debt was about six times the value of exports, while the balance-of-payments deficit for 1983 was estimated at $12.8 million. The Governments's overall budgetary deficit grew by about 35 per cent between 1982 and 1983.

Equatorial Guinea pursued efforts to improve its statistical data base. A demographic census was carried out in 1983 and yielded basic preliminary figures on the national population (estimated at 300,000) and its regional distribution. Projects funded by UNDP in economic planning and statistics were under way to draw up a GDP estimate for the country, which had been added in 1982⁽¹⁾ to the United Nations list of least developed countries. Total GDP for 1982, estimated at $65 million, gave a per capita income of about $216. The decline during the previous decade of cocoa production was halted, and annual production of the leading export crop, stabilized at around 8,000 metric tons, provided a relatively stable annual foreign-exchange inflow of $11 million to $13 million between 1980 and 1983. Timber exports had increased markedly, from 4,530 tons in 1979 to 62,800 in 1982, providing an income of almost $4 million in 1982 as well as in 1983.

Lack of agricultural statistics on food production made the assessment of the food situation difficult. No large-scale food-crop production projects were in operation; several initiatives in the agricultural sector, undertaken with external assistance, had produced limited results. In 1982-1983, food aid totalled 8,236 tons, of which 48 per cent was provided by WFP. Endowed with a rich loam soil, the country, with external assistance, was expected to achieve self-sufficiency in food in the years to come. Major improvements in the supply of goods in domestic markets were expected to result from the country's integration into the Union Douanière des Etats d'Afrique Centrale, formally achieved at the end of 1983. Integration into the Banque des Etats d'Afrique Centrale monetary and banking system was under way—an action expected to affect all major economic policy decisions.

Equatorial Guinea's capacity to absorb aid effectively had been strengthened by the efforts to reinforce the administrative and planning machinery. Although the majority of the projects previously proposed had been funded, water and sanitation had received practically none and the Government identified eight projects in that sector that were ready for implementation with external assistance, at a total cost of $6.3 million. In addition, food production and fisheries needed substantial support. A follow-up meeting was held in 1983 to review the results of the 1982 International Conference of Donors for the Economic Reactivation and Development of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea⁽²⁾ and the Government's Ministry of Planning was conducting a general evaluation of the 1982-1984 programme presented at that Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/224 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Equatorial Guinea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/105 of 5 December 1980 and 36/204 of 17 December 1981, in which, inter alia, it recognized the need for the adoption of special measures of assistance to enable Equatorial Guinea to rebuild its economy and to restore to normal the social and public services of the country, and drew the attention of the international community to the critical situation confronting Equatorial Guinea and to the list of urgent short-term and long-term projects required by the Government to carry out its programme of rehabilitation,

Recalling its resolution 37/133 of 17 December 1982, by which Equatorial Guinea was included in the list of the least developed countries,

Recognizing the critical situation still confronting Equatorial Guinea and the difficult task of reconstruction and development facing the Government of that country,

Recognizing also the essential role of both short-term and long-term international assistance in support of the efforts of the Government of Equatorial Guinea,

Noting that the International Conference of Donors for the Economic Reactivation and Development of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea took place at Geneva in April 1982 under the auspices of the United Nations Development Programme and the Government of Equatorial Guinea,

1. Appeals to all Member States to respond generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the reconstruction and development needs of Equatorial Guinea as presented at the International Conference of Donors;

2. Calls upon régional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial and development institutions, to give urgent consideration to the establishment of a programme of assistance to Equatorial Guinea or, where one is already in existence, to the expansion of that programme, in response to the International Conference of Donors;

3. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Bank, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities—to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Equatorial Guinea, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance, to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country and to provide, as appropriate, all possible assistance to meet the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide food, medicines and essential equipment for hospitals and schools;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Equatorial Guinea;

(b) To keep the situation in Equatorial Guinea under review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the status of assistance to Equatorial Guinea;

(c) To submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report on the economic situation of Equatorial Guinea and the progress made in implementing the present resolution, in particular the response of the international community to the International Conference of Donors.

Gambia

A recovery took place in ground-nut production and in the tourist industry of the Gambia in 1982/83, according to the Secretary-General's September report on special programmes of economic assistance.⁽⁴⁾ The effects of the upturn in those two key sectors, which generated nearly 40 per cent of GDP, however, were limited by various factors, such as a 41 per cent decline in the export prices of ground-nuts, the acute shortage of foreign exchange and some serious budgetary difficulties. A comprehensive five-year tourism marketing plan, included in the special economic assistance programme recommended in 1982,⁽¹³⁾ with an estimated $4.9 million required in external funding, had received no assistance as at September 1983.

Although 80 per cent of the population depended on agriculture for livelihood, the extensive cultivation of ground-nuts—the main cash crop accounting for over 90 per cent of export earnings—left the local grains production meeting only 70 per cent of the country's food requirements and about 350,000 tons of cereals were imported annually. The situation was made worse by a severe drought, which resulted in the loss of half of the 1983 cereal production; the Government launched in August an appeal for food assistance and, with an FAO/WFP mission confirming the seriousness of the situation in December, WFP immediately pledged an emergency grant of 7,200 tons of rice.

The Government's budget showed a deficit in 1982/83, after having a small surplus the year before. Budgetary difficulties seriously affected development expenditure; in 1982/83 such expenditure was about 64 per cent of the planned outlay, which meant a reduction in expenditure on the maintenance of essential services and infrastructure, with consequent effects on the welfare of the population. In addition, the Government faced difficulties in meeting the counterpart costs of externally-financed development projects and the costs of projects wholly financed from domestic sources. A one-year credit by IMF provided significant balance-of-payments and budgetary support, and in general the donor community continued to support the Gambia's development effort; some new projects were started during the year in agriculture, forestry, livestock, manufacturing, transport and communications, and tourism. Funding was still needed for the six projects recommended in 1982 for economic assistance⁽¹³⁾ The Government, which in October conducted a mid-term review of its Second Five-Year Plan for Economic and Social Development (1981/82-1985/86), planned to organize a donors' conference in 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/212 without vote on 20 December.

Assistance to the Gambia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/159 of 17 December 1982, in which it, inter alia, noted that the Gambia is a least developed country with acute economic and social problems arising from its weak economic infrastructure and that it also suffers from many of the serious problems common to countries of the Sahelian region, notably drought,

Having heard the statement made by the representative of the Gambia on 11 November 1983 describing her country's serious economic and financial situation and the measures adopted by her Government to deal with these difficulties,

Having considered the summary report of the Secretary-General, in which the recent economic situation in the Gambia is described,

Concerned that the Gambia continues to encounter serious balance-of-payments and budgetary problems and noting that the lack of domestic resources is the most important constraint on development, since the Government lacks the funds to meet the counterpart costs of donor-assisted projects,

Noting that external assistance is still required to enable the Government of the Gambia to implement the six projects recommended by the Secretary-General in his report,

Aware of the intention of the Government of the Gambia to organize, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, a round-table conference of donors in November 1984 to discuss the country's development needs and to consider ways and means of helping the Government in its efforts to meet those needs,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for the Gambia;

2. Expresses its appreciation also to those States and organizations that have provided assistance to the Gambia;

3. Draws the attention of the international community to the need for assistance for the projects and programmes identified by the Secretary-General in his reports;

4. Renews its urgent appeal to Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as international development and financial institutions, to give generous assistance to the Gambia, through bilateral or multilateral channels, and to provide financial, technical and material assistance for the implementation of the projects and programmes recommended by the Secretary-General in his reports;

5. Urges donors, as appropriate, to provide financial assistance to the Gambia to help meet the local counterpart costs of externally-assisted projects, bearing in mind that the Gambia is classified as a least developed country;

6. Urges Member States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and interregional bodies, financial and development institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to respond generously to the needs of the Gambia at the round-table conference to be held in November 1984;

7. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development—to increase their current and future programmes of assistance to the Gambia, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist that country;

8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of the Gambia and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1984;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Gambia;

(b) To keep the situation in the Gambia under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Gambia;

(c) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of the Gambia and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth

Ghana

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a February 1983 request from Ghana, the Secretary-General sent a multi-agency mission to the country from 10 to 19 May 1983 to assess the need for a short- and medium-term assistance programme geared towards revitalizing the fragile national economy and facilitating the rehabilitation and resettlement of about 1 million returnees from Nigeria.

The mission noted in its report⁽¹⁴⁾ that Ghana's economy, which had been in decline in the last two decades, had been marked by unemployment and underemployment, an acute shortage of foreign exchange, severe strains on the government budget, a high rate of inflation, a major shift in the distribution of income from the poorer working classes to the self-employed in the commercial sector and an exodus from the country, particularly of trained and skilled manpower. In 1982 and 1983, those difficulties were compounded by drought which resulted in reduced food supply at the time the demand for food rose significantly due to the sudden influx of returnees; by mid-1983, Ghana was encountering a serious food shortage.

In early 1983, the Government announced an economic recovery programme for 1983-1986 aimed at reducing the serious financial imbalances in the economy, increasing agricultural and industrial production, reducing inflation, and improving the distribution of goods, services and incomes. In order to bring domestic and external prices into balance, a two-tier structure of bonuses on foreign exchange earnings and surcharges on foreign exchange payments was adopted—a procedure equivalent to using dual exchange rates, or a devaluation of about 810 per cent. Under the 1983 budget, the Government would continue its efforts to reduce public expenditures and improve revenue collection. It was negotiating a balance-of-payments loan with IMF and a general import credit with the World Bank.

The mission recommended 79 projects to be financed by external assistance, at an estimated cost of $188.9 million. The programme comprised emergency-related projects to alleviate immediate problems arising from the influx of returnees (estimated at $49.9 million to be raised in six to eight months), and projects contributing to Ghana's longer-term recovery plan (amounting to $139 million to be implemented from mid-1983 to mid-1985). Forty per cent of the assistance programme fell in the agricultural sector, a further 27 per cent in manufacturing, and 11 per cent in transportation. Those projects were aimed at expanding employment opportunities for the returnees; raising food production for domestic needs and expanding export crops to increase foreign exchange; reviving the manufacturing sector to produce agricultural tools, basic items for construction and certain consumer essentials; and rehabilitating critical transportation arteries to sustain increased economic activity.

Guinea-Bissau

The economy of Guinea-Bissau, which suffered a recurrent large food deficit and irregular rainfall, was characterized by a weak economic and social infrastructure and shortages of trained manpower and equipment, according to the Secretary-General's September report on special programmes of economic assistance.⁽⁴⁾

The total government revenue in 1982 showed a 7 per cent decline while total expenditure increased by nearly 23 per cent as compared to 1981. The overall budget deficit of $21 million in 1981 increased to $33.3 million in 1982. The Government expected the deteriorating deficit trend to continue for the coming three or four years. The external debt and debt servicing also increased, and in 1982 debt repayment totalled 59 per cent of export earnings; at the end of 1982, overdue payments on loans and on the trade account had reached $51.8 million. Despite an improvement in agricultural production in 1982/83, the food shortage remained critical, and the Government estimated its 1983 food aid requirements to be about 82,000 metric tons at a cost of $24 million.

In 1983, the Government was finalizing its first national development plan (1983-1986) in time for a donors' round table scheduled for early 1984, at which it expected to seek external assistance for 59 projects costing $177.8 million. The plan dealt with budget management, money and rates of exchange, wages, State enterprises and sectoral investments; those projects in the special economic assistance programme which were still unfunded or partially funded would be included in the plan. The Government also hoped that the creditors would consider rescheduling, converting or cancelling the overdue debt. In anticipation of the 1984 round table, the Government held a preparatory meeting of donors at Lisbon, Portugal, from 17 to 19 November.

Various United Nations organizations provided special economic assistance to Guinea-Bissau in 1983.⁽⁷⁾ Among them, WFP's ongoing assistance consisted of three development projects valued at $6.1 million and two emergency operations valued at $1.4 million. Two credits totalling $29.1 million were approved by IDA: $13.1 million in support of an oil-exploration project and a $16 million transportation project to increase the efficiency of Bissau Port.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly on 20 December adopted resolution 38/221 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Guinea-Bissau

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/95 of 5 December 1980, in which it reiterated its appeal to the international community to provide continuous financial, material and technical assistance to Guinea-Bissau to help it overcome its financial and economic difficulties and to permit the implementation of the projects and programmes recommended by the Secretary-General in his report submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 34/121 of 14 December 1979,

Having examined the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling that Guinea-Bissau is one of the least developed countries,

Noting with concern that Guinea-Bissau continues to be beset by serious economic and financial difficulties,

Also noting with concern that the gross national product has dropped in real terms, that the balance-of-payments deficit continues to increase, that the external debt is imposing a heavy burden on the economy and that the budget deficit has also risen substantially,

Noting that Guinea-Bissau continues to face a serious food shortage and needs more than 82,000 tonnes of foodstuffs,

Noting with satisfaction that the Government of Guinea-Bissau has prepared a comprehensive development strategy aimed at stabilizing the country's finances and ensuring the country's economic recovery within the framework of a four-year development plan (1983-1986),

Noting also that the Government of Guinea-Bissau, in view of the seriousness of the economic situation, has decided to implement a rigorous economic and financial stabilization programme, the main purpose of which is to remedy the economic situation,

Noting further that the Government of Guinea-Bissau had proposed, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, to hold a round table of donors at Geneva in January 1984 and that, to this end, it held a preparatory meeting of donors at Lisbon from 17 to 19 November 1983,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance to Guinea-Bissau;

2. Draws the attention of the international community to the requirements for assistance for the projects and programmes identified in the Secretary-General's reports mentioned above;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those States and organizations that have provided assistance to Guinea-Bissau in response to appeals by the General Assembly and the Secretary-General;

4. Calls upon Member States and the international organizations concerned to be generous in granting Guinea-Bissau the food aid it needs;

6. Urges Member States, organizations of the United Nations system, regional and interregional bodies and financial and development institutions, as well as governmental and non-governmental organizations, to respond generously to the needs of Guinea-Bissau at the round table of donors in January 1984;

7. Appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/100, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Guinea-Bissau;

8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Guinea-Bissau and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1984;

9. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Guinea-Bissau;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Guinea-Bissau;

(b) To keep the situation in Guinea-Bissau under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular sessions of 1984 and 1985, as well as the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for Guinea-Bissau;

(c) To arrange for a review of the results of the round table of donors scheduled to be held in January 1984, and of the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for Guinea-Bissau in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Lesotho

In response to a 1982 Security Council resolution⁽¹⁵⁾ following South Africa's attack of 9 December that year on Lesotho's capital, Maseru, the Secretary-General sent a mission from 11 to 16 January 1983 to consult with Lesotho and United Nations agencies on ensuring the welfare of South African refugees in that land-locked country entirely surrounded by South Africa (see Chapter XXI of this section). In its report, transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Council on 9 February⁽¹⁶⁾ the mission described economic assistance needed to enhance Lesotho's capacity to receive and maintain refugees. The Government's main concerns were the country's inability to defend itself against South African aggression or intimidation, the resultant problem of national security and the growing need to reduce its dependence on South Africa, primarily in economic terms, while strengthening its ties with the international community. The Government maintained that its security needs entailed not only protection from physical harm but safeguards in such areas as food needs, health and education services, employment opportunities and the development of resources for the benefit of its inhabitants.

The mission reported that Lesotho's economic performance had slackened since 1980, following poor harvests and reduced export earnings from wool and mohair. There was little industrial production, and most food needs were met by imports, with its grain import requirements expected to reach an all-time high of about 200,000 tons in 1983. About 90 per cent of Lesotho's imports came from South Africa, and its exports were either to South Africa or through it to other countries. The income Lesotho received from South Africa under a revenue-sharing formula accounted for about 55 per cent of government revenue in 1982/83; in 1983/84, it was expected to approach 70 per cent. Because Lesotho's currency was based on the South African rand, its payment of foreign financial commitments was guaranteed, but the availability of monetary policy instruments was severely limited, and there were no exchange control restrictions on imports from South Africa. In fiscal 1981/82, the budget deficit amounted to $70 million (almost 20 per cent of GDP), compared to a small surplus in 1978/79. Government borrowing had to be short-term at high rates, resulting in a rapid increase in the debt-service burden.

Lesotho was dependent on South Africa in a number of other areas, including energy (petroleum products, electricity supply) and a labour market. About half of its male labour force and 4 per cent of the female counterpart worked in South Africa; their remittances were the single most important resource in Lesotho's economy. In the event of an expulsion of workers from South Africa, Lesotho would face rising unemployment and a severe reduction in national income.

Lesotho sought international assistance for priority projects directly related to areas where South Africa's actions or pressures added to its vulnerability. The mission consequently identified 10 projects of an immediate nature at an estimated cost of $46 million, addressing the emergency needs arising from South Africa's December 1982 air attack on Maseru and urgent needs arising from the country's vulnerability to political and economic pressures because of its refugee policies. They covered such needs as strengthened police services, an emergency reserve of medical supplies and improved hospital facilities/services, a fire brigade, a silo for grain reserves, afforestation, labour-intensive public works, expansion of industrial estates, construction of a small-scale hydroelectric power plant, and funding for a national airport.

The mission pointed out that the country's fragile economy and weak infrastructure, coupled with the Government's policy of integrating refugees into the community upon their arrival, made it difficult to formulate projects exclusively for refugees. The mission stated that, while Lesotho's economy would continue for the foreseeable future to be heavily dependent on South Africa, there were areas where the dependence could be reduced with international support.

By resolution 535(1983) of 29 June 1983, the Security Council endorsed the mission's findings and requested Member States, international organizations and financial institutions to assist Lesotho in the fields identified in the report (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V).

The Secretary-General also described the economic situation and assistance to Lesotho in his September report on special economic assistance, giving updated statistics.⁽⁴⁾ He noted that Lesotho had complained of new border restrictions affecting the normal movement of people, goods and services. As a result of a severe drought, domestic grain production covered only one fifth of national requirements and the grain shortfall during 1983/84, after taking account of estimated imports and donations amounting to 91,000 tons, was anticipated to reach 119,000 tons. The Government's budget deficit continued to increase and its considerable expenditures on national security diverted funds from development. In support of the national effort to generate employment opportunities and in the context of SNPA, the United Nations was helping the Government prepare a donors' round table, to be held at Maseru in early 1984, on employment creation and income-generating activities for national economic self-reliance.

United Nations assistance to Lesotho in 1983⁽⁵⁾ included WFP's ongoing projects with a total value of $42.74 million. Six projects ($4.1 million), funded by UNDP and implemented by FAO, covered rural development, fruit and vegetable canning, poultry vaccination, forests and veterinary science. Six trust fund projects ($3.5 million) covered storage, land use planning, forestry, seed production and rural development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/215 without vote.

Assistance to Lesotho

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 402(1976) of 22 December 1976, in which the Council, inter alia, expressed concern at the serious situation created by South Africa's closure of certain border posts between South Africa and Lesotho aimed at coercing Lesotho into according recognition to the bantustan of the Transkei,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 535(1983) of 29 June 1983, in which the Council endorsed the report of the mission dispatched to Lesotho in response to resolution 527(1982) of 15 December 1982,

Commending the decision of the Government of Lesotho not to recognize the Transkei, in compliance with United Nations decisions, particularly General Assembly resolution 31/6 A of 26 October 1976,

Also commending the Government of Lesotho for its steadfast opposition to apartheid and its generosity to the South African refugees,

Fully aware that the decision of the Government of Lesotho not to recognize the Transkei and its acceptance of refugees from South Africa have imposed special economic burdens upon its people,

Strongly endorsing the appeals made in Security Council resolutions 402(1976) of 22 December 1976, 407(1977) of 25 May 1977 and 535(1983) of 29 June 1983, in General Assembly resolutions 32/98 of 13 December 1977, 33/128 of 19 December 1978, 34/130 of 14 December 1979, 35/96 of 5 December 1980, 35/219 of 17 December 1981 and 37/160 of 17 December 1982, and by the Secretary-General, calling upon all States, regional and intergovernmental organizations and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system to contribute generously to the international programme of assistance to enable Lesotho to carry out its economic development and enhance its capacity to implement fully the resolutions of the United Nations,

Having examined the summary report of the Secretary-General, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 37/160, in which the economic situation was reviewed, as well as the progress in the implementation of the special programme of economic assistance for Lesotho,

Noting the priority which the Government of Lesotho accords to raising levels of food production through increased productivity, thus lessening the country's dependency on South Africa for food imports,

Aware that the high prices paid by Lesotho for its imports of petroleum products as a result of the oil embargo on South Africa have become a serious impediment to the development of the country,

Recognizing, in connection with such embargoes, the obligation of the international community to help countries such as Lesotho that act in support of the Charter of the United Nations and in compliance with General Assembly resolutions,

Recalling its resolutions 32/160 of 19 December 1977 and 33/197 of 29 January 1979 concerning the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and, in this regard, noting Lesotho's geopolitical situation, which necessitates the urgent development of air and telecommunication links with neighbouring countries of Africa and the rest of the world,

Taking account of Lesotho's need for a national network of roads, both for its planned social and economic development and to lessen its dependence on the South African network, to reach various regions of the country affected by the imposition of travel restrictions by South Africa,

Taking note of Lesotho's special problems associated with the employment of large numbers of its able-bodied men in South Africa,

Taking note also of the priority which the Government of Lesotho has accorded to the problem of absorbing into the economy the young generation, as well as migrant workers returning from South Africa,

Welcoming the action taken by the Government of Lesotho to make more effective use of women in the development process by promoting their participation in the economic, social and cultural life of the country,

Taking account also of Lesotho's position as a least developed, most seriously affected and land-locked country,

Recalling its resolution 32/98, in which it, inter alia, recognized that the continuing influx of refugees from South Africa imposed an additional burden on Lesotho,

1. Expresses its concern at the difficulties that confront the Government of Lesotho as a result of its decision not to recognize the so-called independent Transkei, and of its rejection of apartheid and acceptance of refugees from apartheid oppression;

2. Endorses fully the assessment of the situation contained in the report of the mission to Lesotho, dispatched in response to Security Council resolution 527(1982), and in the summary report of the Secretary-General;

3. Takes note of the requirements of Lesotho, as described in the reports of the mission to Lesotho and of the Secretary-General, to carry out the remainder of its development programme, to implement projects necessitated by the present political situation in the region and to lessen its dependence on South Africa;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he has taken to organize an international programme of economic assistance for Lesotho;

5. Notes with appreciation the response made thus far by the international community to the special programme of economic assistance for Lesotho, which has enabled it to proceed with the implementation of parts of the recommended programme;

6. Reiterates its appeal to Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Lesotho for the implementation of several projects and programmes that are still unfunded, as identified in the reports of the mission to Lesotho and of the Secretary-General;

7. Calls upon Member States and the appropriate agencies, organizations and financial institutions to provide assistance to Lesotho so as to enable it to achieve a greater degree of self-sufficiency in food production;

8. Also calls upon Member States to give all possible assistance to Lesotho to ensure an adequate and regular supply of oil to meet its national requirements;

9. Further calls upon Member States to assist Lesotho in developing its internal road and air systems and its air communications with the rest of the world;

10. Commends the efforts of the Government of Lesotho to integrate women more fully into development efforts and requests the Secretary-General to consult with the Government on the type and amount of assistance it will require to achieve this objective;

11. Draws the attention of the international community to the meeting of donors held in Lesotho in November 1979, as well as the agricultural sector conference held in Lesotho in October 1980, and urges Member States and the appropriate agencies and organizations to provide assistance to Lesotho in accordance with the outcome of those meetings;

12. Also draws the attention of the international community to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with Security Council resolution 407(1977), for the purpose of facilitating the channeling of contributions to Lesotho;

13. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring further to the attention of their governing bodies the special needs of Lesotho and to report to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1984 on the steps they have taken;

14. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance to Lesotho and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist that country;

15. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Lesotho;

(b) To consult with the Government of Lesotho on the question of migrant workers returning from South Africa and to report on the type of assistance which the Government requires in order to establish labour-intensive projects to deal with their absorption into the economy;

(c) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to Lesotho and the mobilization of assistance;

(d) To keep the situation in Lesotho under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Lesotho;

(e) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of Lesotho and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Liberia

The Secretary-General observed in his September 1983 report on special economic assistance⁽¹⁾ that Liberia continued to face serious budgetary deficits, due mainly to rapid increases in wages and salaries and low revenues connected with the stagnant domestic economy and depressed export prices. The situation remained serious even after temporary relief had been provided by the rescheduling, at the Government's request, of some $44 million of debt-service payments by the "Paris Club" of bilateral lenders and about $27 million due by mid-1983 by the "London Club" of commercial creditors.

A short-term stabilization programme, introduced by the Government in collaboration with IMF to reduce the budget deficit and achieve a sustainable balance-of-payments position, aimed at annual GDP growth of 3.3 per cent in real terms, equal to the rate of population growth, and a resource balance improvement from a $76 million deficit in 1983 to a positive $2 million in 1987.

Implementation of the public investment programme 1981-1985, comprising a major element of Liberia's National Socio-Economic Plan for the same period, had been extended to 1987; an additional $698 million was required in external assistance in order to implement fully the Government's overall investment programme. A comprehensive list of development projects and their funding status was presented at a round-table meeting of donors at Geneva in October 1983. The projects, some of which had been recommended for international assistance in 1982 and still needing funding⁽¹⁷⁾ covered agriculture and rural development, electricity, highways, port rehabilitation, air transport, communications and health; in 1983, the Government identified additional projects requiring funding in those areas and in energy, water supply, and population and housing censuses.

United Nations organizations provided assistance to Liberia in several areas⁽³⁾ IMF had granted 177 million special drawing rights (SDR) in credits and loans to Liberia by the end of 1982, while WFP's ongoing assistance, as at April 1983, consisted of four development projects valued at $20 million. As a result of a November 1982 mission to review the current compilation methods of balance-of-payments statistics, publication of such data for Liberia was expected later in 1983, for the first time in 20 years.

Mozambique

Mozambique issued an appeal on 28 May 1983 for international assistance for the victims of South Africa's attack five days earlier on a suburb of Maputo and for reconstruction (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V). As in the past, it continued to suffer from drought, a foreign exchange shortage and armed disturbances, according to the Secretary-General's September report on special programmes of economic assistance⁽⁴⁾ Those problems were compounded by a 6.9 per cent decline in GNP in 1982.

The drought, which had developed in the southern half of the country early in 1982, had become critical by mid-1983, lasting over two harvest cycles; rainfall in January-April 1983 reached only half the normal level, causing almost total crop failure in the south and severe losses in the central area. Some 4 million people or one third of the national population were affected, and 1.8 million people found themselves totally dependent on external food supplies. Largely because of the drought, the health situation deteriorated, and water shortages for irrigation, drinking and industrial purposes appeared. The United Nations and three countries funded an emergency ground-water development project to meet the critical water shortage in the capital. The continuation of armed disturbances hampered relief operations for rural populations, the distribution of agricultural surpluses from the north and the internal transport system.

With the evident failure of the 1982/83 crop season, the Government appealed in January 1983 for supplemental international assistance amounting to 255,000 tons of grain; as at mid-1983, several donors, including WFP, pledged assistance amounting to almost half of the expressed needs. At the end of August, most of the food shortages directly attributable to the drought were reportedly met, but serious problems existed with internal distribution. In order to establish a food security reserve, a silo was being constructed, with international assistance being sought for two additional silo complexes.

Mozambique's manufacturing and agro-industrial sector was substantial and diversified, but the foreign exchange constraint and economic dislocations had resulted in shortages of certain inputs and replacement parts and machinery, forcing many industries to operate below capacity. The country's rail and port systems, which contributed significantly to its foreign exchange earnings, had been affected in recent years by armed disturbances and sabotage, for which the Government held South Africa responsible.

In early 1983, UNDRO launched an appeal for assistance to the central and southern provinces of Mozambique and the international contribution totalled over $18.8 million⁽⁵⁾ Other United Nations assistance was provided by WFP, with ongoing projects totalling over $74 million and over $9 million in emergency operations. Nine projects, worth more than $16 million in total, were funded by UNDP and implemented by FAO; they concerned livestock, seed and crop production, land and water use, forestry, and fisheries development. Trust fund assistance consisted of 18 similar projects worth $20.5 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/208 on 20 December without vote.

Assistance to Mozambique

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976, in which the Council appealed to all States to provide, and requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize, with immediate effect, financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to carry out its economic development programme,

Recalling further its resolutions 31/43 of 1 December 1976, 32/95 of 13 December 1977, 33/126 of 19 December 1978, 34/129 of 14 December 1979, 35/99 of 5 December 1980, 36/215 of 17 December 1981 and 37/161 of 17 December 1982, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously with assistance to Mozambique,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on assistance to Mozambique and noting with concern that the economic and financial position of that country remains grave and beset by budgetary and balance-of-payments deficits,

Noting with deep concern the loss of life and the destruction of essential infrastructures such as roads, railways, bridges, petroleum facilities, electricity supply, schools and hospitals, as identified in the reports of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that the food deficit of over 300,000 tonnes in 1982 has been further exacerbated by continued drought, poor rainfall, severe crop infestation and epidemics of animal diseases, as well as by chronic shortages of production inputs,

Bearing in mind the international appeal, launched by the Government and supported by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, for urgent food aid for central and southern Mozambique,

Recognizing that substantial international assistance is required for the implementation of a number of reconstruction and development projects,

1. Strongly endorses the appeals made by the Security Council and the Secretary-General for international assistance to Mozambique;

2. Also endorses the appeals made by the Government and supported by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator for urgent food aid for central and southern Mozambique;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he has taken to organize an international economic assistance programme for Mozambique;

4. Also expresses its appreciation for the assistance provided to Mozambique by various States and regional and international organizations and humanitarian institutions;

5. Regrets, however, that the total assistance provided to date falls far short of Mozambique's pressing needs;

6. Draws the attention of the international community to the additional financial, economic and material assistance identified in the reports of the Secretary-General as urgently required by Mozambique;

7. Calls upon Member States, regional and inter-regional organizations and other governmental, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Mozambique, wherever possible in the form of grants, and urges them to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Mozambique in their programmes of development assistance, if it is not already included;

8. Urges Member States and organizations that are already implementing or negotiating assistance programmes for Mozambique to strengthen them, wherever possible;

9. Appeals to the international community to provide financial and material assistance to Mozambique to meet its food and other relief requirements arising out of the continued drought;

10. Also appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account for Mozambique established by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Mozambique;

11. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund—to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Mozambique, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

12. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique;

(b) To keep the situation in Mozambique under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions and other bodies concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Mozambique;

(c) To prepare, on the basis of sustained consultations with the Government of Mozambique, a report on the development of the economic situation and the implementation of the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/705 & Corr.1) without vote, 28 November (meeting 52); 37-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.53), orally revised in informal consultations; agenda item 81.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 34-38, 44, 52; plenary 104.

In approving the draft, the Second Committee, on the basis of informal consultations, changed the text of the fourth preambular paragraph, which had originally attributed loss of life and destruction to actions of "armed bandits supported by the apartheid régime of South Africa".

Sierra Leone

In pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General dispatched a multi-agency mission to Sierra Leone from 14 to 21 March 1983 to discuss with the Government the additional assistance needed for the country's economic and social development. The mission's findings were annexed to the Secretary-General's June report to the Assembly⁽¹⁹⁾

The mission found Sierra Leone, added in 1982(11) to the United Nations list of least developed countries, undergoing economic difficulties. While prices of many imports, especially petroleum, were rising, total revenues from the principal export items—diamonds, bauxite, coffee, cocoa and palm kernels—were declining. Despite reductions in the total import bill, the trade balance remained in substantial deficit, in addition to arrears in external debt payments. The shortage of foreign exchange had depressed activity throughout the economy: trade and commercial credits were drying up, commercial activity and employment had fallen, and the industrial and manufacturing sector accounted for only 5 per cent of GDP. With its budget in serious deficit largely because of reduced revenue from export and import taxes, the Government was unable to improve health and other basic social services or to strengthen the transport infrastructure, on which much of the country's economic and social development depended.

The mission asserted that, given the needed external assistance, Sierra Leone, well endowed with natural resources, had excellent potential for accelerated development. The Second National Development Plan for 1982/83-1985/86, which was in the final stage of preparation, aimed at creating the appropriate economic and financial climate for national development. The Government hoped that the major part of the public investment programme would be financed by external resources and the bulk of the domestic funds would go into the agriculture and energy sectors.

The mission recommended 71 projects for external assistance, costing some $275 million; of those, 27, costing $124 million, were considered especially urgent. The projects concerned agriculture, energy, mining, industry and manufacturing, transportation, health, water and sanitation, housing, education and training, and social welfare.

Preliminary evidence on major crops for 1983 suggested a large increase. The Government abolished in July 1983 the two-tier exchange rate system, which it had adopted in late 1982 to divert foreign resources to the official banking system and consequently reduce parallel market activities.

United Nations assistance⁽²⁰⁾ included a UNDP grant of $236,000 for 1983 and an additional $100,000 to help organize a donors' conference. Three UNDP projects ($1.96 million), implemented by FAO, covered land and water use, swamp rice development and agricultural data collection. IDA approved a $20 million credit for development of educational programmes. At the end of 1982, Sierra Leone's use of IMF credit stood at some SDR 46 million and Trust Fund loans at SDR 24 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/205 without vote.

Assistance for the development of Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Having heard the statement made by the Head of State of Sierra Leone before the General Assembly on 30 September 1983, in which he called for support from the international community for the economic and social development of Sierra Leone,

Recalling its resolution 37/158 of 17 December 1982, in which it appealed to all States, the specialized agencies and international development and financial institutions to provide all possible assistance for the development of Sierra Leone,

Further recalling its resolution 37/133 of 17 December 1982, in which it decided to include Sierra Leone in the list of the least developed countries,

Reiterating that the weak growth rate experienced by the economy of Sierra Leone during the period of the first National Development Plan (1973/74 to 1978/79) and the decline in real terms of per capita gross domestic product during that period have continued to persist,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, to which was annexed the report of the multi-agency mission he dispatched to Sierra Leone in March 1983 to consult with the Government on the additional assistance required for the economic and social development of Sierra Leone,

Aware of the need for effective mobilization of international assistance in order to implement fully the programme of assistance outlined in the report of the multi-agency mission,

Noting the intention of the Government of Sierra Leone to organize, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, a round-table conference of donors in 1984 to discuss the country's development needs and to consider ways and means of supplementing the development efforts of the Government,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his reports on the economic situation of Sierra Leone and the assistance required by that country for its economic and social development;

2. Endorses the assessment and recommendations of the multi-agency mission contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General pertaining to assistance for the development of Sierra Leone;

3. Urgently reiterates its appeal to the international community, including organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations, to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the economic and social development of Sierra Leone;

4. Urges all States and relevant United Nations bodies—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities—to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of Sierra Leone meet the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide, as appropriate, food, medicines and essential equipment for hospitals and schools;

5. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank, the African Development Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Sierra Leone and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1984;

6. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank to provide all possible assistance to the Government of Sierra Leone in organizing the proposed round-table conference of donors;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Sierra Leone;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial arrangements are made for the organization of an effective international programme of assistance to Sierra Leone and for the mobilization of international assistance;

(c) To apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the assistance granted to Sierra Leone;

(d) To keep the situation regarding assistance to Sierra Leone under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Uganda

The economic recovery of Uganda showed discernible momentum, according to the Secretary-General's September 1983 report on special economic assistance.⁽⁴⁾ Real GDP, which had been falling during the previous decade, increased by 7.3 per cent in 1983, and the price incentives given to farmers had led to a substantial increase in agricultural production. Its trade deficit declined sharply from $122.5 million in 1982 to an estimated $51.6 million in 1983. The objectives of the dual exchange-rate system, introduced in August 1982 as a mechanism for allocating scarce foreign exchange, were largely achieved, improving government finances in 1982 and 1983. In contrast to the severe inflation rate of over 100 per cent per annum in 1979 and 1980, the 1982 rate, following 1981 fiscal reforms, had fallen to an estimated 50-60 per cent, with the 1983 rate expected to have fallen further.

Government revenue was heavily dependent on export and import taxes, which contributed a little over half the recurrent revenues in 1982/83; with economic recovery under way and the maintenance of fiscal restraint, its overall deficit was expected to fall substantially in 1982/83; in the first half of that fiscal year, it amounted to 1.5 per cent of GDP.

By mid-1983, a little over 60 per cent of $737 million needed for the Government's Investment Programme (1982-1984)⁽²⁰⁾ had been mobilized. In November, the Government issued a Revised Recovery Programme for 1983-1985, to be presented to a donors' meeting in 1984.

United Nations economic assistance to Uganda included financing by the World Bank affiliates—IDA and the International Finance Corporation—for projects in agriculture, education, postal services and telecommunications, totalling some $134 million.⁽⁵⁾ UNICEF provided assistance valued at $2.4 million, while WFP had ongoing projects with a total value of some $40 million and emergency operations worth $9 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/207 without vote.

Assistance to Uganda

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/103 of 5 December 1980, 36/218 of 17 December 1981 and 37/162 of 17 December 1982 on assistance to Uganda,

Bearing in mind the enormous economic and social setbacks suffered by Uganda and the resultant precipitous decline in the well-being of its people,

Taking into account the Recovery Programme (1982-1984) presented by the Government of Uganda to the meeting of the Consultative Group on Uganda, held in Paris in May 1982 under the auspices of the World Bank,

Recognizing that Uganda is not only land-locked but also one of the least developed and most seriously affected countries,

Noting the appeals of the Secretary-General for assistance to Uganda,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 36/218, to which was annexed the report on Uganda's needs for assistance,

Taking note also of the summary report of the Secretary-General, in which it is stated that substantial additional assistance is required to finance the remaining projects in the Investment Programme which have not yet attracted the support of the international community,

Reaffirming the urgent need for further international action to assist the Government of Uganda in its continuing efforts for national reconstruction, rehabilitation and development,

Encouraged that the economic policies of the Government of Uganda and the support assistance provided by the donor countries and international organizations have produced positive signs of economic recovery,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Uganda;

2. Further expresses its appreciation to those States and organizations which have provided assistance to that country;

3. Reaffirms fully its endorsement of the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made for the continued mobilization of resources to finance the international programme of assistance to Uganda;

5. Invites the international community, in particular the United Nations system and donor countries and organizations, to make available more resources to implement the country's Recovery Programme (1982-1984) and meet the remaining needs described in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General and in his summary report;

6. Urgently renews its appeal to all Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and international economic and financial institutions to contribute generously, through bilateral and multilateral channels, to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs of Uganda and to its emergency requirements;

7. Invites Member States to participate fully in and support effectively the meeting of the World Bank Consultative Group on Uganda, to be held in Paris early in 1984;

8. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Uganda and to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

9. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the International Labour Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and the World Bank to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Uganda and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1984;

10. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his humanitarian assistance programmes in Uganda;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Uganda;

(b) To keep the situation in Uganda under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Uganda;

(c) To report on the progress made in the economic situation in Uganda and in organizing international assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Other regions

Democratic Yemen

In pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in June 1983 a progress report on assistance to Democratic Yemen,⁽²²⁾ which had suffered an estimated $975 million in damage and loss of 482 lives following serious nation-wide flooding in March 1982.⁽²³⁾

The international community had responded to calls made in 1982 by the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council⁽²⁴⁾ as well as to UNDRO's appeal for rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance. Some donors provided technical and/or financial assistance; others sent missions to draw up aid programmes. Special assistance covered such projects as repairing wells and irrigation systems, rehabilitation of crop production, land reclamation, meteorological forecasting and flood warning systems, housing construction, and road and bridge reconstruction.

The Secretary-General called for further assistance, asserting that the mounting burden of rehabilitation and reconstruction was still beyond the capacity of the Government.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/206 without vote.

Assistance to Democratic Yemen

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/6 of 28 April 1982 and 1982/59 of 30 July 1982 concerning the extensive devastation caused by the heavy floods in Democratic Yemen,

Recalling also resolution 107(IX) of 11 May 1982 of the Economic Commission for Western Asia, in which the Commission called for the urgent establishment of a programme for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the flood-stricken areas of Democratic Yemen,

Having considered the report prepared by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator on the extent and nature of the damage caused by the floods,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Democratic Yemen,

Recognizing that Democratic Yemen, as one of the least developed countries, is unable to bear the mounting burden of rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected areas,

Recognizing also the efforts made by Democratic Yemen to alleviate the suffering of the victims of the floods,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken regarding assistance to Democratic Yemen;

2. Expresses its gratitude to those States and international, regional and intergovernmental organizations that have provided assistance to Democratic Yemen;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective, comprehensive programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Democratic Yemen in order to help mitigate the damage inflicted on it and implement its rehabilitation and reconstruction plans;

4. Appeals to Member States to contribute generously through bilateral or multilateral channels to the reconstruction and development process in Democratic Yemen;

5. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization—to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Democratic Yemen and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective programme of assistance to that country;

6. Calls upon regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue their assistance to the development requirements of Democratic Yemen;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the situation in Democratic Yemen under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the progress made on the implementation of the present resolution.

Nicaragua

In response to a December 1982 General Assembly request⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to it in October 1983 a report⁽²⁶⁾ containing information on assistance to Nicaragua as reported by the country, along with information received from Member States (Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Federal Republic of Germany, Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden) and from the United Nations system.

Nicaragua reported having received between mid-July 1979 and March 1983 nearly $242 million in grants and about $2 billion in loans and credit. Grants were provided by sources in Western Europe (47 per cent), Latin America (28 per cent), North America (12 per cent) and the United Nations system (10 per cent). About 30 per cent of total credit and loans was provided by multilateral agencies and the remainder by bilateral sources: Latin American countries ($513 million), socialist countries ($461 million), Western European countries ($237 million) and North American countries ($73 million).

The United Nations system provided some $221 million between mid-July 1979 and 30 April 1983. The largest share of resources under technical assistance was approved for security and social justice, followed by health, humanitarian assistance, and agriculture, forestry and fisheries. Other areas of assistance approved dealt with, among others, development policy and planning, education, employment, industry, international trade and development, population, science and technology, and transport and communications.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/223 without vote.

Assistance to Nicaragua

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/8 of 25 October 1979, 35/84 of 5 December 1980, 36/213 of 17 December 1981 and 37/157 of 17 December 1982 concerning assistance for the reconstruction of Nicaragua,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1982/168 of 29 July 1982,

Recalling further resolution 982 adopted by the Seventeenth Regional Conference for Latin America of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, held at Managua from 30 August to 10 September 1982,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Nicaragua,

Noting with satisfaction the support that Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system have given to the efforts of the Government of Nicaragua for the reconstruction of the country,

Noting that from June to September 1982 Nicaragua suffered a serious drought that considerably affected the agricultural and livestock sectors, which constitute the most important economic activities of the country,

Considering that, despite the efforts of the Government and people of Nicaragua, the economic situation has not returned to normal and continues to worsen,

Deeply concerned that Nicaragua is experiencing serious economic difficulties directly affecting its development efforts,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts regarding assistance to Nicaragua;
2. Expresses its appreciation to the States and organizations that have provided assistance to Nicaragua;
3. Urges all Governments to continue contributing to the reconstruction and development of Nicaragua;
4. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system to continue and to increase their assistance in this endeavour;
5. Recommends that Nicaragua should continue to receive treatment appropriate to the special needs of the country until the economic situation returns to normal;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Vanuatu

In 1983, the General Assembly called for international assistance to help Vanuatu, a small archipelagic developing country, meet its development needs.

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly, on 20 December, adopted resolution 38/218 without vote.

Economic assistance to Vanuatu

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3421(XXX) of 8 December 1975 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

Recalling also its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976, 32/185 of 19 December 1977, 34/205 of 19 December 1979, 35/61 of 5 December 1980 and 37/206 of 20 December 1982, in which it urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of island developing countries, and in which it also called upon all organizations of the United Nations system to implement, within their respective spheres of competence, appropriate specific actions in favour of island developing countries,

Recalling further resolutions 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, III(V) of 3 June 1979, and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development concerning special action related to the particular needs and problems of island developing countries,

Recognizing the difficult problems faced by island developing countries, owing mainly to their smallness, remoteness, constraints in transport, great distances from market centres, highly limited internal markets, lack of natural resources, heavy dependence on a few commodities, shortage of administrative personnel and heavy financial burdens,

Taking into account the fact that Vanuatu is an island developing country and is small and archipelagic, which makes the provision of services difficult and entails very high overhead costs, because of inter-island distances,

Concerned at the severe constraints on the economic development of Vanuatu, particularly those ensuing from its geographical isolation,

Concerned also at the continued structural imbalances in the economy of the country, particularly its overwhelming dependence on imports,

Noting that the disadvantageous demographic and geographic features of Vanuatu, such as its physical remoteness, small area and small population, pose special development problems,

Noting also that, without good transport and communications links, any development will be difficult,

1. Calls the attention of the international community to the special problems confronting Vanuatu as an island developing country with a small population;

2. Appeals to Member States, regional and inter-regional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Vanuatu to enable it to establish the social and economic infrastructure that is essential for the well-being of its people;

3. Invites the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Telecommunication Union, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Maritime Organization and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Vanuatu and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1984;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular the developed countries and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to meeting the short-term and long-term development needs of Vanuatu;

5. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Vanuatu, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

6. Requests the Committee for Development Planning at its twentieth session, as a matter of priority, to give due consideration to the question of the inclusion of Vanuatu in the list of the least developed countries and to submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984;

7. Calls upon Member States, pending consideration by the Committee for Development Planning at its twentieth session of the report submitted to it and in view of the critical economic situation of Vanuatu, to accord Vanuatu special measures and, as a matter of priority, to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Vanuatu in their programmes of development assistance;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep this matter under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Disasters

During 1983, UNDRO continued to respond to needs arising from natural disasters such as drought, floods, storms and earthquakes, by co-ordinating the relief and assistance activities of the United Nations system. In a series of resolutions, both the General Assembly (38/204, 38/216, 38/217, 38/222 and 38/225) and the Economic and Social Council (1983/45, 1983/46 and 1983/68) dealt with assistance needs resulting from the continuing drought in certain areas of Africa, in particular in the Sudano-Sahelian region and in East Africa; floods in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru; floods and drought in Honduras and Nicaragua; and an earthquake in Yemen. In addition, the Assembly and the Council, in resolutions 38/202 and 1983/47, respectively, called for the strengthening of the United Nations capacity to respond to disasters.

Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

UNDRO activities

In 1983, as in previous years, UNDRO provided comprehensive programmes of disaster management at the request of the Governments concerned, in order to reduce the economic and social impact of natural or man-made disasters such as flood and drought emergencies, cyclones, earthquakes, civil strife, and situations involving displaced persons or a massive influx of returnees from abroad. UNDRO's 1983 activities were described in reports of the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in June 1983⁽¹⁾ and June 1984.⁽²⁾

Between 1 April 1983 and 31 March 1984, UNDRO issued 235 situation reports to inform the international community of relief needs in particular disasters; it helped organize concerted relief programmes through inter-agency consultations, and 23 relief assessment missions were undertaken either by UNDRO alone or jointly with other agencies. An assessment of damage and relief needs was communicated to UNDRO at Geneva, taking into account the data supplied by the Governments concerned.

Revised Disaster Management Guidelines, prepared by UNDRO, were issued by UNDP in October 1983 for the benefit of its resident representatives/co-ordinators, who provided the focal point at the country level for international disaster relief co-ordination.

UNDRO continued to provide technical assistance in disaster preparedness/prevention, and organized seminars or missions dealing with earthquakes, floods, volcanic eruptions, industrial accidents and health and housing (see below). An UNDRO study on expediting international emergency relief, with particular reference to the principles of relevant international law, was examined at a meeting of an informal group of experts in August at Geneva, attended also by observers from United Nations agencies; the participants prepared a draft international convention on the question⁽³⁾ for submission to the Economic and Social Council.

Improvements in information-gathering and data-processing capabilities contributed to UNDRO's increased effectiveness. The Country Profile Data Base, established in 1982, had by the end of 1983 been enlarged to contain basic information on more than 100 countries. The preliminary design of the new Suppliers/Stockpiles Profile Data Base was completed in 1983 and input prepared for approximately 75 suppliers of specialized relief items. The design of the Bibliographic Data Base of disaster publications was also initiated. In conjunction with the Centre national d'études spatiales (CNES) in France, UNDRO carried out experiments during 1983 using a portable satellite transmitting beacon supplied by CNES; the beacon contained a keyboard, which allowed on-site entry by an UNDRO relief officer and automatic satellite transmission of detailed information on a disaster and relief requirements.

The bimonthly publication UNDRO News, which described UNDRO activities and provided information on technical developments in disaster-related fields, was expanded during 1983.

In several cases of major man-made emergencies, such as those occurring in Angola, Chad, Lebanon (see below) and West Africa, UNDRO organized meetings with relevant United Nations organizations to develop large-scale relief programmes, as follows:

—Angola. Relief activities needed as a result of drought and military operations began in 1981 and were completed in February 1983. By that time, contributions to the programme totalled almost $14 million. During a follow-up mission organized by UNDRO that month, Angola was advised of UNDRO's readiness to launch the second phase of the programme, providing relief to displaced persons in the Central Plateau, as soon as the Government viewed it opportune.

—Chad. Airlifted food relief was transported to affected areas of Chad, which suffered from drought (see below, under SUDANO-SAHELIAN REGION) and a prolonged civil strife. UNDRO continued to co-ordinate relief efforts of the United Nations system with those of bilateral and international non-governmental organizations. By the end of March, 49,442 tons of food had been received or pledged, and 191 trucks contributed by various donors had been delivered.

—West Africa. In mid-January, Nigeria ordered foreign workers illegally in the country to leave (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V). The majority of those expelled were from Ghana and to reach their country they had to transit through Benin and Togo. Other countries affected were Benin, the Central African Republic, Chad, Guinea, Mali, the Niger, Togo, the Upper Volta and the United Republic of Cameroon. At the request of the Secretary-General, UNDRO co-ordinated relief to the affected people and sent missions to assess needs and to assist in relief distribution. It convened meetings with donor Governments, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations to launch a relief programme, and donations amounted to over $21 million.

In addition to a number of disaster situations concerning which the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council took action to provide relief assistance (see below, under DISASTER RELIEF), UNDRO took note of several other, mostly natural, disasters, such as those listed below, often responding by launching international appeals at the request of the Governments concerned or by providing cash grants.

—Afghanistan. An earthquake, measuring 7.0 on the Richter scale, struck a region on its border with Pakistan, on 31 December, seriously affecting some 27,000 persons.

—Argentina. Torrential rains in the north-east during the first six months of the year caused heavy material damage and evacuation of 150,000 people. UNDRO responded to Argentina's appeal with a cash grant of $21,500.

—Benin. Severely deficient and erratic rainfall throughout 1983 led to crop failures and a significant lowering of water tables throughout the country.

—Colombia. An earthquake on 31 March struck a region 300 kilometres south-west of the capital, causing over 200 deaths and rendering some 30,000 people homeless. UNDRO provided an emergency cash grant of $20,000 and assisted in assessing and co-ordinating relief.

—Comoros. A severe cyclone, between 10 and 12 January, caused extensive damage to crops, housing, public buildings, roads and sea walls; 30,000 people were in need of emergency assistance. A cash grant of $10,000 was provided for local purchase of relief supplies.

—Fiji. A cyclone, considered to be the most severe in the past decade, hit several islands on 1 and 2 March, causing heavy crop, forestry and housing damage. International emergency relief was provided for 200,000 people, representing one third of the national population.

—Guinea. A major earthquake of 22 December killed 275 people, injured 1,436 and rendered 20,000 homeless. Relief was provided to ensure inland transport of supplies.

—Madagascar. A cyclone of 8 December and subsequent flooding caused an emergency situation involving crop loss and destruction of communication and transportation systems.

—Mozambique. Inadequate rainfall affected the central and southern provinces. Assistance included a water supply project to drill 80 wells in the Maputo area and transport of food.

—Nepal. Heavy rains in September resulted in severe flooding affecting some 200,000 persons and causing extensive damage to property, public utilities, communications, crops and livestock. UNDRO released a cash grant of $25,000 for local purchase of emergency relief items.

—Nicaragua. Two huge oil tanks exploded in Corinto in October, forcing the Government to evacuate the town. UNDRO provided a cash grant of $30,000.

—Paraguay. Continuous heavy rain during the year caused severe flooding, affecting some 120,000 persons, including 36,000 children under five years of age. UNDRO made a $20,000 cash grant for the purchase of essential medicines.

—Portugal. Flash floods following storms and heavy rains on 18 and 19 November caused what the Government estimated to be $95 million worth of damage to infrastructure, agriculture, industry, commerce and housing. UNDRO responded with a cash grant of $25,000.

—Turkey. A major earthquake of 30 October in the northern provinces caused 1,346 deaths and intensive damage, including destruction of infrastructure and homes, and heavy cattle losses. UNDRO assisted in the relief operation by, among other things, co-ordinating relief and issuing an international appeal; the donors' response covered all relief needs within one month of the earthquake.

—Viet Nam. Four typhoons in late 1983 caused extensive damage in the northern and central provinces, including 658 deaths and food loss of 341,500 tons. UNDRO launched an international appeal for relief aid.

UNDRO finances

The activities of UNDRO in 1983 continued to be financed mainly from the United Nations regular budget and the voluntary UNDRO Trust Fund.⁽²⁾ The Trust Fund for General Disaster Relief, which supplemented those resources, was used as a reserve fund to guarantee sums pledged by donors for particular relief operations in order to bridge the gap between the date of the pledge and actual receipt of the donation. Net budget appropriations from the regular budget for the biennium 1982-1983, as finalized by the General Assembly in resolution 38/226 A of 20 December 1983, amounted to $5,328,000; for 1984-1985, the Assembly, by resolution 38/236 A of the same date, appropriated $5,236,400.

Expenditures under the Trust Funds during 1983 were $7,147,359, including $6,124,148 to 23 countries. Contributions from 22 Governments and EEC paid to the Trust Funds in 1983 totalled $8,673,758. The UNDRO Trust Fund had three main sub-accounts—for strengthening UNDRO, for disaster relief assistance and for disaster prevention and pre-disaster planning—as well as separate sub-accounts for emergency relief assistance earmarked for given countries (see tables below).

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) reported to the Assembly in October on requests by the United Nations Controller for ACABQ's concurrence on the use of funds from the Working Capital Fund on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the 1982-1983 biennium in connection with UNDRO's emergency assistance grants.⁽⁴⁾ Pointing out that the regular budget appropriation of $720,000 for the biennium for such assistance had been expended fully by July 1983, the Controller considered that an advance from the Fund would be required to cover the needs that might arise for the remainder of the year. The Controller therefore sought, on 5 August, commitments up to $100,000, and subsequently revised the figure, on 20 September, to $240,000, adding that, since July, four requests for emergency assistance grants had been received from countries (Argentina, Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru) stricken by major disasters and that, based on recent experience, four additional major disasters could be anticipated before the end of the year. In making the requests, the Controller drew attention to a July 1983 Economic and Social Council recommendation (resolution 1983/47, see below) that the Assembly authorize the Secretary-General to allow UNDRO to respond, within existing resources, to emergency assistance requests up to a maximum of $600,000 in any one year.

ACABQ, having considered the circumstances under which regular budget contributions had been made in the past for emergency disaster assistance grants, concluded that in the case of either the December 1982 Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁾ which had raised the ceiling of the total maximum grants allowable per year or the 1983 Council recommendation, responses to requests for such assistance must be made from within the existing appropriation. ACABQ outlined for the Assembly several options for action in response to the 1983 situation.

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/202, authorized the Secretary-General to permit UNDRO to allocate up to a total of $600,000 in any one year for emergency disaster assistance, with a normal ceiling of $50,000 per country in the case of any one disaster, within existing resources as far as possible (see below). It called on States to respond to the Secretary-General's appeals for contributions to meet disaster situations and to make voluntary contributions, channelled through the UNDRO Trust Fund, to help cover UNDRO's unforeseen expenses in connection with disaster relief operations.

Prior to the Assembly action, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee had informed the Assembly that adopting the text entailed no additional appropriations at that time.⁽⁶⁾ In related action, the Committee rejected—by 60 votes to 21, with 11 abstentions—a United States proposal,⁽⁷⁾ by which the Assembly would have decided to maintain the existing cost-sharing arrangements for grants for emergency assistance.

Co-ordination in the UN system

In June 1983, the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly requests of 1981^A and 1982,⁽⁵⁾ submitted to it through the Economic and Social Council a report on strengthening the United Nations capacity to respond to natural and other disaster situations.⁽⁶⁾ In addition to describing steps taken by United Nations organizations to that end, the report contained suggestions on ensuring that the needs of people affected by disasters were met through a co-ordinated international effort in which each organization played its specific role.

The Secretary-General observed that, for each emergency, UNDRO drew up a concerted relief programme based on, among other things, an on-the-spot assessment, the request of the country concerned, and a meeting of the concerned United Nations organizations, followed by action by the relevant organization in areas of its competence. In view of the cost and time involved in holding inter-secretariat meetings of the various disaster units and focal points for developing and revising, as necessary, any relief programme, the Secretary-General suggested the use of a teleconferencing system, including video display devices. As regards appeals for resources to respond to emergencies, it was suggested that, following a united appeal, each of the concerned organizations continue its efforts to obtain the necessary funds, while keeping UNDRO as the information focal point informed.

Delivery of relief supplies to and within the affected country continued to be a problem, with an average of a four-month delay between the request for emergency food assistance and delivery. As the few stocks and depots currently maintained by the United Nations and others could meet only a fraction of the immediate emergency needs, it was felt that a small amount of money that could be used in a flexible manner could improve the United Nations capacity to deliver emergency supplies. Programmes had been worked out by FAO to create national and regional food reserves, but little progress had been made. A proposal had also been made to have WFP establish under its control a small stock of strategically located essential supplies; a further approach was to provide it with more cash pledges so that it could use the most appropriate method of meeting emergency food needs, often by commercial purchases in the region.

When local authorities required more than technical advice and requested the United Nations system to assume operational responsibility for transporting and distributing relief supplies, the most appropriate organization needed to be identified on a case-by-case basis and be given the necessary support; this, and the training of officials in disaster-prone countries, were areas in which an UNDRO roster of experts, combined with some general-purpose funding, could contribute to improved United Nations responsiveness to disasters.

Reaffirming the importance of the availability of a general-purpose fund for unearmarked emergency relief, and the UNDRO Trust Fund as the most appropriate channel in that regard, the Secretary-General reiterated that UNDRO's task was to promote, facilitate and co-ordinate international relief efforts, while operational responsibilities rested with other United Nations organizations; the precise funding role for UNDRO, therefore, needed to be spelt out. As regards programme evaluation, the Secretary-General said that, in addition to the existing procedures, assessment should also be made of the way the international community as a whole provided disaster relief in specific cases so as to devise new arrangements, as appropriate. The Secretary-General also considered it helpful to development agencies if UNDRO, in consultation with the Government and the United Nations agencies concerned, included in its report to potential donor countries some reference to the known priority needs for rehabilitation and reconstruction. Donors and development organizations could then pursue matters bilaterally without further UNDRO involvement.

The Secretary-General concluded that a generally satisfactory and workable structure had been set out by the Assembly for promoting, facilitating and co-ordinating relief activities system-wide. Together with the approaches outlined by him, and by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) in 1981⁰) and 1982,⁽¹¹⁾ the relevant Assembly resolutions had provided the basis for continuing collaboration, and the role of the Disaster Relief Co-ordinator was being more clearly defined and appreciated.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/47 without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee.

Strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural disasters and other disaster situations

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, by which the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator was established, and 36/225 of 17 December 1981, in which the Assembly reaffirmed the mandate of the Office and, inter alia, called for the strengthening and improvement of the capacity and effectiveness of the Office,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 37/144 of 17 December 1982, in which the Assembly recognized that, in order to attain an effective co-ordination system of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance, it was essential to strengthen and improve the capacity and effectiveness of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the United Nations system as a whole,

Recognizing that, as a result of those resolutions and other relevant resolutions and decisions, there is now in place a workable system to promote, facilitate and co-ordinate relief activities carried out by the United Nations system, in co-operation with Governments and voluntary agencies,

Noting that the operation of that system has been much improved but that there remains a need for its full application,

Noting further with appreciation the effective responses of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to recent major disasters,

Recognizing that shortage of resources has been a constraint on an effective response of the United Nations to disaster situations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural disasters and other disaster situations, which is complemented by his report on the work of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator;

2. Notes with particular interest the observations and conclusions of the Secretary-General relating to the transportation, more rapid delivery and distribution of relief supplies, reconstruction and rehabilitation, and the need for evaluation procedures to assess the way in which the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the international community as a whole have dealt with the mobilization and provision of disaster relief in particular cases;

3. Recognizes the importance of disaster preparedness and prevention activities, and calls upon the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, Governments and agencies involved to ensure that due priority attention is given to them;

4. Reaffirms the sovereignty of individual Member States, recognizes the primary role of each State in caring for the victims of disasters occurring in its territory, and stresses that all relief operations should be carried out and co-ordinated in a manner consistent with the priorities and needs of the countries concerned;

5. Stresses that the material and other assistance provided by the international community should be appropriate to the particular needs of the populations of disaster-affected areas;

6. Repeats its call to all Governments and competent organs and organizations to co-operate with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and to improve in particular their flow of information on relief assistance, action, plans and needs;

7. Requests the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to continue and improve further the flow of information to Governments, organizations and agencies concerned, so that a more complete picture of relief activities, assistance received and further requirements may be provided to all concerned;

8. Recommends that the General Assembly should authorize the Secretary-General to permit the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to respond, within existing resources, to requests for emergency disaster assistance up to a total of $600,000 in any one year;

9. Appeals to Governments to consider the possibility of urgent voluntary contributions, channelled directly or through the Trust Fund of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, to enable the Office to cover, inter alia, unforeseen expenses in connection with disaster relief operations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Governments and appropriate agencies, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984, specific proposals to follow up conclusions and problems identified in his comprehensive report, taking into account the views and observations expressed during the second regular session of 1983 of the Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By a recorded vote of 126 to 1, with 15 abstentions, the General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted resolution 38/202 as recommended by the Second Committee.

Strengthening of the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural disasters and other disaster situations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, by which the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator was established, and 36/225 of 17 December 1981, by which it reaffirmed the mandate of the Office and, inter alia, called for the strengthening and improvement of its capacity and effectiveness,

Recalling also its resolution 37/144 of 17 December 1982, in which the Assembly recognized that, in order to attain an effective co-ordination system of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance, it was essential to strengthen and improve the capacity and effectiveness of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and of the United Nations system as a whole,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/47 of 28 July 1983,

Recognizing that, as a result of those resolutions and other relevant resolutions and decisions, there is now in place a workable system to promote, facilitate and co-ordinate relief activities carried out by the United Nations system, in co-operation with Governments and voluntary agencies,

Noting that the operation of that system has been much improved but that there remains a need for its full application,

Noting further with appreciation the effective response of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to recent major disasters,

Recognizing that shortage of resources has been a constraint on an effective response of the United Nations to disaster situations,

Recognizing also that the primary responsibility for administration, relief operations and disaster preparedness lies with the affected countries and that the major part of the material assistance and human effort in disaster relief comes from the Governments of those countries,

Recognizing further the importance of the contribution of the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and appropriate voluntary organizations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural disasters and other disaster situations, as well as of his report on the work of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and of the statement made by the Co-ordinator on 10 November 1983;

2. Notes with particular interest the observations and conclusions of the Secretary-General relating to the transportation, more rapid delivery and distribution of relief supplies, reconstruction and rehabilitation and the need for more effective monitoring and evaluation procedures to assess the way in which the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the international community as a whole have dealt with the mobilization and provision of disaster relief in particular cases;

3. Recognizes the importance of disaster preparedness and prevention activities, and calls upon the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, Governments and agencies involved to ensure that a high level of attention is given to them;

4. Reaffirms the sovereignty of individual Member States, recognizes the primary role of each State in caring for the victims of disasters occurring in its territory and stresses that all relief operations should be carried out and co-ordinated in a manner consistent with the priorities and needs of the countries concerned;

5. Stresses that the quality and appropriateness of material and other assistance provided by the international community should meet the particular needs of the populations of disaster-affected areas;

6. Repeats its call to all Governments and competent organs and organizations to co-operate with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and to improve, in particular, their flow of information on relief assistance, action, plans and needs;

7. Requests the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to continue and improve further the flow of information to Governments, organizations and agencies concerned, so that a more complete picture of relief activities, assistance received and further requirements may be provided to all concerned;

8. Stresses the need for the continuance and further strengthening of relations between the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and appropriate voluntary organizations working in the area of disaster relief, including the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, and requests the Secretary-

General to consider the establishment of a small consultative group composed of executives of these major relief organizations, in their individual capacity, to provide advice, upon request, to the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in the assessment of relief needs and in the preparation and execution of concerted relief programmes;

9. Authorizes the Secretary-General to permit the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to respond to requests for emergency disaster assistance up to a total of $600,000 in any one year, with a normal ceiling of $50,000 per country in the case of any one disaster, within existing resources as far as possible;

10. Once again urgently calls upon all States to respond positively and expeditiously to the Secretary-General's appeals for contributions to meet natural disasters and other disaster situations;

11. Appeals to Governments for urgent voluntary contributions, channelled through the Trust Fund of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, to enable the Office to cover, inter alia, unforeseen expenses in connection with disaster relief operations;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Governments of both donor and recipient countries, as well as with appropriate agencies, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984, specific proposals to follow up the conclusions and problems identified in his comprehensive report, as well as in the present resolution.

Abstaining: Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Japan, Luxembourg, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

The Second Committee considered two oral amendments before approving the text. A USSR proposal to delete from paragraph 8 the request for consideration of establishing a consultative group was rejected by 91 votes to 26, with 10 abstentions, and the paragraph in its original form was retained by a recorded vote of 107 to 11, with 11 abstentions. A United States proposal to delete the words "as far as possible" from the end of paragraph 9 was rejected by 97 votes to 21, with 9 abstentions, and the original wording of the paragraph was retained by a recorded vote of 106 to 16, with 8 abstentions.

Several States explained their votes, particularly in relation to paragraphs 8 and 9.

Among those voting for the proposed amendment to paragraph 9 out of concern over budgetary implications, Australia and the United Kingdom said the Organization's regular budget should be kept within certain limits. Sharing that view, the United States felt that the United Nations budget should be kept within zero-growth limits, and the existing funds for disaster relief were adequate. Canada, which supported the proposal to amend paragraph 9, could not vote in favour of paragraph 8; while it did not oppose the idea of a consultative group, that paragraph did not reflect a number of proposals which it had made during informal consultations. France abstained in the vote on paragraph 8, considering it premature to talk of establishing a group before consulting the interested voluntary organizations; it voted against paragraph 9 because UNDRO should not be assigned operational duties, which, it maintained, fell within the competence of Governments and appropriate non-governmental organizations.

Speaking on behalf of the five Nordic countries, Sweden said their support of the text was based on the understanding that the Secretary-General would take account of the views of all interested organizations, when considering the establishment of a consultative group. The USSR objected to paragraph 8, because it felt the proposed group could interfere in the internal affairs of States or weaken the essentially intergovernmental character of UNDRO; it also opposed paragraph 9 for its budgetary implications.

Canada and the USSR expressed concern that the Secretariat had not supplied the Committee with information on the programme implications of the text, as had been called for by the Assembly in 1982.⁽¹²⁾

Disaster relief

Drought-stricken areas of Africa

In 1983, drought again triggered a situation in Africa requiring urgent action and increased aid, particularly in regard to the food situation in the Sudano-Sahelian region and in East Africa. The General Assembly, in resolutions 38/216 and 38/224, and the Economic and Social Council, in resolutions 1983/46 and 1983/68, took action to help overcome the difficulties, and UNDP, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) and WFP were among the United Nations bodies actively assisting in the efforts.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1983/68 without vote.

Climatic situation and drought in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 37/147 of 17 December 1982 on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda, 37/165 of 17 December 1982 on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region, and 37/216 of 20 December 1982 on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Recalling also resolution 239(XI) on drought in the Sahelian zone, adopted on 23 February 1973 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa,

Aware that drought, which had affected the Sahel region in the 1970s, is now seriously affecting thirty-four African countries, twenty-four of which, are among the least developed countries and some of which are located outside the Sudano-Sahelian region and the Kalahari desert region,

Realizing that drought is now a chronic natural phenomenon whose causes, frequency and trends are currently difficult to control and must be studied scientifically,

Conscious of the linear relationship between drought, desertification and underdevelopment,

Recalling further resolution 446(XVII) adopted on 30 April 1982 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa,

Deeply concerned about the worsening climatic situation and the dire effects of recurring drought, erosion, cyclones and famine on the peoples of Africa and on the African economy in general,

1. Urgently requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to organize a special scientific round-table meeting on the problems of the climatic situation in Africa, to which all States members of the Commission should be invited and which should consist of national experts from the countries invited and of international experts on climate, land, water and soil resources, ecology and the environment, with a view to examining the causes, periodicity, trends and effects of drought on the African economy and to proposing measures to be taken in the short, medium and long terms to deal with the problem;

2. Appeals to the competent organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, such as the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations

Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Meteorological Organization, and to the Organization of African Unity and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, to collaborate actively with the Economic Commission for Africa in this urgent task;

3. Calls upon African Governments to give high priority, through the allocation of both financial resources and manpower, to the problem of understanding climatic variability in their countries, in order to facilitate advance planning for drought, erosion, cyclones, famine and their related effects;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Economic Commission for Africa, by redeploying regular resources of the United Nations, adequate financial resources to enable it to undertake this most important task;

5. Further requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to submit a report on the outcome of the scientific round-table meeting on the climatic situation in Africa to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984;

6. Calls upon the international community to grant adequate financial resources to the countries affected by drought and desertification and to the institutions engaged in combating those phenomena.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/68

29 July 1983 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/23) without vote, 27 July (meeting 25); draft by Benin, for African Group (E/1983/C.1/L.14), orally amended in informal consultations; agenda item 7.

Sudano-Sahelian region

UNSO, operating within UNDP, continued in 1983 to co-ordinate United Nations efforts to help drought-stricken areas of the Sahel—an arid zone in West and Central Africa south of the Sahara—to implement medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programmes. Those programmes were aimed at mitigating the effects of future droughts, achieving self-sufficiency in food staples and accelerating socio-economic development. The countries assisted—Cape Verde, Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta—were members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel (CILSS), a non-United Nations body through which the participating States co-ordinated national and regional projects.

Under a separate mandate, UNSO also assisted those and 11 additional countries in Central, East and West Africa to control desertification through a joint venture between UNDP and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) (see also Chapter XVI of this section).

An UNSO assessment of the state of desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region undertaken in 1983, in pursuance of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,⁽¹³⁾ showed that the drought of 1968-1973 not only had continued but had intensified and spread since then, and that the overall desertification situation had generally worsened.

The UNDP Administrator, in a May 1984 report⁽¹⁴⁾ describing the drought's effects during 1983 on the region, also noted the spread of the worsening drought and reported that the level of rainfall in the region in 1983 was comparable to that registered during the disastrous 1972-1973 drought. In addition to causing famine, malnutrition, disease and livestock losses, the drought had almost ruined the already weak economies of the Sahel countries, six of which were among the least developed countries.

The Secretary-General, in reports to the General Assembly in 1983⁽¹⁵⁾ and early 1984,⁽¹⁶⁾ described the activities undertaken in 1983 under the drought-related recovery programme and noted that the number of UNSO-assisted projects reached 136 during the year (33 regional and 103 national), at a total cost of $729 million.

In 1983, UNSO mobilized over $23 million to finance priority projects for drought-related recovery and rehabilitation and an additional $5 million for desertification control for the States members of CILSS; of the former amount, almost $14 million was channelled through the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities (see below).

The largest of the UNSO-supported regional activities was a $203 million programme for construction, improvement and maintenance of a 5,000-kilometre system of all-weather secondary roads in the Sahel, executed by UNDP. Almost $160 million had already become available for the construction of more than 4,100 kilometres of roads in the CILSS member States, including $117.5 million for UNSO projects. The return of the drought in 1983 emphasized the urgent need for all-weather passable roads in order to guarantee the transport of emergency food supplies to remote areas. Negotiations were conducted with bilateral donors to allow a further, significant expansion of the road programme, while a proposal, prepared by UNSO and UNDP, on the programme's maintenance requirements was finalized at a Paris meeting in February.

UNSO continued to support the programme for the ecological rehabilitation of the Fouta-Djallon massif in Guinea, the watershed area for all the major rivers of West Africa. It also collaborated with States in developing fuel-efficient stoves as a means of reducing the high demand for ligneous materials for domestic energy, as well as of promoting better management, conservation and protection of over-exploited forest resources. It initiated jointly with the West African Economic Community a programme, executed by FAO, for developing village-level storage facilities to reduce post-harvest losses. The Institute of the Sahel—a specialized agency of CILSS—continued to benefit from United Nations assistance in carrying out its operational activities; its training programme in management and conservation of pasture lands, for instance, was supported by UNSO, UNDP and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). Other training activities included a regional seminar on the production and commercialization of gum arabic and the role of the gum-producing tree, Acacia Senegal, as a means of desertification control (Saint Louis, Senegal, April).

JIU report. In a January 1983 report transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in May,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) recommended that the planning and programming of UNSO projects for drought and desertification control be carried out in such a way that they would be compatible with the priorities and criteria contained in national economic and social development plans. A number of suggestions were made regarding ways to mobilize funds, focusing on increased direct involvement of potential donors in identifying and developing projects, and a recommendation was made for an increase in the unearmarked part of contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities in order to enhance UNSO's flexibility and effectiveness in project planning.

Other recommendations called for more frequent project implementation by Governments concerned and more involvement of the local populations; emphasis on on-the-job training or training within, rather than outside, the region; strengthening collaboration between UNSO and regional intergovernmental organizations; and assisting interested Governments to establish national committees to co-ordinate drought and desertification control activities. JIU also recommended that UNSO—if its mandate and the geographic area covered remained unchanged—should retain its current staff size (11 Professional and 21 General Service staff members in New York, and 6 Professional and 16 General Service staff members at its Regional Office in Ouagadougou, Upper Volta), while strengthening the Regional Office and diversifying the specialized skills of the Professional staff, thus dispensing with consultants' services.

The Secretary-General, in his June comments⁽¹⁸⁾ on the JIU report, agreed with most of the recommendations, and endorsed the convening, in collaboration with UNEP of an inter-agency task force for a joint strategy on drought and desertification in Africa, whose report would be reviewed subsequently by an UNSO regional seminar. The Secretary-General also agreed to ask ACC to examine the methods used by UNSO in mobilizing financial resources. While agreeing with the JIU recommendation on UNSO staff, he considered that the staffing should depend on the volume of activities.

UNDP action. During 1983, the UNDP Governing Council⁽¹⁹⁾ adopted a number of decisions related to the Sudano-Sahelian region (see Chapter II of this section).

By a decision of 22 June⁽²⁰⁾ it took note with satisfaction of the Secretary-General's April 1983 report⁽¹⁵⁾ on the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the region, commended the UNDP Administrator for the priority attention given to the drought-affected countries, and appealed to Governments and other donors to strengthen their support for UNSO, including by means of voluntary contributions through the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, so as to enhance its responsiveness to the needs of the CILSS member States.

The Governing Council, by a 24 June decision,⁽²¹⁾ on revised appropriations for the 1982-1983 UNDP budget, approved $3,539,200 (gross) for UNSO projects. In regard to budget estimates for 1984-1985, the Council, by another decision of 24 June,⁽²²⁾ approved appropriations of $3,885,200 for UNSO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/225 without vote.

Implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3054(XXVIII) of 17 October 1973, 3253(XXIX) of 4 December 1974, 3512(XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/180 of 21 December 1976, 32/159 of 19 December 1977, 33/133 of 19 December 1978, 34/16 of 9 November 1979, 35/86 of 5 December 1980, 36/203 of 17 December 1981 and 37/165 of 17 December 1982,

Taking note of decision 83/26 of 22 June 1983 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme concerning the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region,

Noting with satisfaction the important activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in helping to combat the effects of drought and to implement the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region adopted by the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, as well as in mobilizing the necessary resources to finance priority projects,

Noting also the continued collaboration of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization with the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel through its arid and semi-arid zone programmes,

Bearing in mind the statement made before the General Assembly on 28 September 1983 by the President of the Republic of Cape Verde, as current Chairman of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, in which he emphasized the continuing gravity of the drought situation in the countries of the Sahel and its devastating consequences on the development of those countries,

Noting with concern the critical food situation in the countries of the Sahel as highlighted in the statement made by the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on 27 October 1983,

Noting with satisfaction the collaboration between the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Club du Sahel and urging that this collaboration be continued and strengthened,

Taking into account the fundamental priorities of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel aimed at implementing strategies for rural development and striving to achieve food self-sufficiency and food security, as well as restoration of an ecological balance in the region,

Considering the nature and magnitude of the needs of the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the need for the continuation and further strengthening of the support of the international community for assisting the recovery efforts and the economic development of those countries,

Taking into account that the First-Generation Programme, adopted by the Biennial Conference of the Heads of State of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, has received only 60 per cent of the financing required,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region, as well as the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region;

2. Welcomes the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, in particular its recommendation that the Office should energetically continue its specific activities, under its first mandate, to combat drought in the countries of the Sahel;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations, private organizations and individuals that have contributed to the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region;

4. Strongly urges all Governments to make special efforts to increase the resources of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, including through voluntary contributions to the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, as well as through bilateral channels, so as to enable it to respond more fully to the priority requirements of the Governments of the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel;

5. Requests the international community to support the implementation of the Second-Generation Programme of the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, inter alia, in regard to:

(a) Development projects already conceived and approved by the respective Governments;

(b) Regional projects for the struggle against desertification;

(c) Basic surveys needed for establishment of the potential for development at national and regional levels;

(d) Strengthening and/or establishment of institutions for research and training, at national and subregional levels, designed to find solutions to the problems confronting the Sahelian countries;

(e) Strengthening of national and subregional capacity for planning, management and evaluation of integrated development actions;

6. Requests all Governments and the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to give special attention to the critical food situation in the countries of the Sahel;

7. Commends the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for the results achieved, through the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, in assisting the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel in the implementation of their medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme;

8. Reaffirms the role of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office as the Co-ordinator of the efforts of the United Nations system to help the countries of the Sahel to implement their recovery and rehabilitation programme;

9. Invites the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to continue to strengthen its co-operation with the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and with the Committee itself, with a view to hastening the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to the General Assembly, through the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region.

East Africa

In pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly request,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General reported in July 1983 on assistance provided to six countries of East Africa—Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda—in combating the effects of drought and other natural disasters⁽²⁴⁾ He stated that while rainfall had increased in 1982 except in Ethiopia and the Sudan, all six countries continued to receive United Nations and other assistance; the UNDP Governing Council approved respective country programmes, but its assistance was limited due to lack of resources. The Sudan was the only Government of the region to request assistance, as suggested by the Assembly in 1982, for establishing a national drought monitoring office by seeking $935,000 from UNSO.

Assistance to Djibouti included food aid, particularly from WFP, and project implementation or formulation for water resources utilization, construction of an animal feed plant, husbandry and agricultural and rural development. The serious drought situation affecting some 3 million people prompted Ethiopia to launch several international appeals for emergency assistance covering food, medical supplies, clothing, shelter and transport equipment; UNDP projects approved in 1983 included expansion of irrigated areas, soil and water conservation and resettlement of people from drought-affected areas. An inter-agency mission, led by UNDRO, visited Ethiopia from 29 September to 8 October 1983 and submitted its recommendations in December⁽²⁵⁾ on the relief needs in the drought-stricken northern areas. Although drought in Kenya had ended in 1981, assistance to nomadic peoples affected was continued, while relief distribution was terminated in all but one affected district. In addition to food, United Nations and other assistance to Somalia included strengthening the national machinery for combating drought, and provision of low-cost housing and exploration of the use of renewable energy as part of a scheme to settle nomadic populations from drought-prone areas; future projects approved by UNDP included livestock development. Food aid was also sent to the Sudan, where the pasture and rain-fed cultivation had been affected by the drought of 1982-1983 and the deteriorating grazing potential was combined with an outbreak of rinderpest, a cattle disease. Malnutrition was a problem for Uganda, where inadequate rainfall portended very low harvest yield and potential for famine conditions developing later in the year; United Nations assistance included agricultural development activities, and UNDP continued to assist the Government in strengthening its ability to receive, store and distribute food relief.

By a decision of 24 June⁽²⁶⁾ the UNDP Governing Council recommended that reports pertaining to African countries other than the CILSS members (see above) be submitted in the future as warranted.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1983/46 without vote.

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 35/90 and 35/91 of 5 December 1980, 36/221 of 17 December 1981 and 37/147 of 17 December 1982 on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda,

Having heard the statement made by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator on 11 July 1983,

Noting the statements made by representatives of the States concerned, in which the catastrophic nature of the disaster was highlighted,

Aware of the adverse effects of the drought on the economic and social development of the countries concerned, and on their agricultural and food output,

Conscious of the high costs incurred in the distribution of assistance to the remote areas of the countries concerned,

Noting with deep concern the grave effects in the countries concerned, particularly Ethiopia, of successive years of drought and the resulting shortage of food-stuffs, livestock, fodder and water,

Deeply concerned at the intensity and the permanent and expanding nature of the drought in the subregion,

1. Notes with appreciation the measures already taken by the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and other agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, to ensure the speediest and most effective relief aid for the victims of drought in Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda;

2. Reiterates its appeal to all States and to international governmental and non-governmental organizations to make generous contributions to assist the affected populations financially, materially and technically;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-ordination with the countries concerned, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, the competent specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system:

(a) To extend all necessary assistance to the Governments of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda in establishing, within the context of their national development programmes, detailed policies for dealing with drought as a recurring phenomenon;

(b) To mobilize international assistance for the affected population in the countries concerned;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and other organizations of the United Nations system, to give high priority in their programmes of work to the East African subregion, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council annually, at its second regular session, of the status of this question;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep the situation under review and to apprise the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session of the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

28 July 1983 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/116) without vote, 20 July (meeting 14); 7-nation draft (E/1983/C.3/L.7), orally revised, and orally amended in Council on Secretariat suggestions; agenda item 17.

Prior to adopting the draft, the Council amended paragraphs 4 and 5, thereby asking the Secretary-General to apprise, rather than report to, the Council and the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/216 without vote.

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/90 and 35/91 of 5 December 1980, 36/221 of 17 December 1981 and 37/147 of 17 December 1982 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/46 of 28 July 1983,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda,

Deeply concerned at the intensity and the permanent and expanding nature of the drought in the subregion,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 36/221 and 37/147 on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda;

2. Takes note of the ongoing consultations between the Governments concerned on the establishment of an intergovernmental body to combat the effects of drought and other natural disasters and urges them to finalize, as soon as possible, the necessary arrangements for the establishment of that body;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-ordination with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to continue to extend all necessary assistance to those countries in their efforts to combat the effects of drought on the basis of the recommendations of various multi-agency missions, pending the establishment of the intergovernmental body;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in close co-ordination with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to assist the Governments of the region, at their request, in establishing or improving national machinery to combat the effects of drought and other natural disasters, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Floods and storms

Floods in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru

The climatic changes associated with disturbances in the ocean current in the South Pacific in 1982-1983, known as the "El Niño" phenomenon, led to flooding in Bolivia (March 1983), Ecuador (December 1982) and Peru (January-May 1983) as well as extensive droughts in highland areas of Bolivia and Peru. The Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) estimated the overall losses from disasters at $3,480 million—$840 million for Bolivia, $640 million for Ecuador and $2,000 million for Peru.

In Bolivia, some 1.6 million people in rural areas were directly affected. The drought, in particular, created a situation of national emergency and aggravated existing problems; current and future food production suffered a severe set-back, including a shortage of seeds for future crops due to their diversion for immediate nourishment.⁽²⁷⁾ Scarcity of some products led to a marked increase in consumer prices, in some cases up to 600 per cent. In both the flood- and drought-stricken areas, mortality increased due to proliferation of disease carriers and consumption of polluted water. In addition to food and seeds, the affected population was in need of water pumps and drilling rigs, as well as cash and spare parts for vehicles for purchase and transport of food supplies from neighbouring countries.

In Ecuador, 950,000 persons were affected, of whom 200,000 were reported in need of emergency assistance. The floods destroyed harvests and widespread food shortages occurred; physical and social infrastructures-including roads and irrigation systems-were damaged. Strong tidal waves and changes in sea-water temperature and salinity levels caused damage to the fishery sector.

The drought, followed by severe frosts and hailstorms, placed a strain on Peru's national resources just when the authorities were engaged in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the areas earlier affected by floods. Up to 450,000 persons were directly affected by the drought and required emergency assistance, while 83,000 were affected by the floods.⁽¹⁾ The drought caused damage to farming and livestock production; future crops were threatened as food shortages led to the consumption of seed grain. Floods had caused damage to roads, bridges, agricultural fields, houses, and sewage and water evacuation systems.

In addition to appeals launched earlier in the year by UNDRO at the request of the Governments concerned, the Secretary-General issued an appeal, on 10 August, at a donors' meeting he convened in New York. A programme of action was drawn up on the basis of the recommendations of an evaluation mission (30 June-21 July), led by the Secretary-General's Personal Representative for the affected countries, Hugo Navajas-Mogro, with the participation of ECLA, UNDP and UNDRO.⁽²⁸⁾ The Secretary-General also designated UNDRO as the focal point for co-ordinating international assistance during the emergency phase.

Following the Economic and Social Council's adoption of resolution 1983/45 on 28 July (see below), the Secretary-General dispatched a technical inter-agency mission (22 August-30 September), financed by UNDP and led by an ECLA representative. Observing that the economic deterioration caused by the disasters would have long-term effects until the infrastructure was rehabilitated and production levels restored, the mission, in consultation with the Governments concerned, identified rehabilitation and reconstruction projects totalling $425 million for international funding—$129 million in Bolivia, $97 million in Ecuador, $181 million in Peru and $17 million for subregional projects.

Overall international contributions reported to UNDRO as at 31 January 1984 amounted to: $49,591,996 for Bolivia; $5,073,876 for Ecuador; and $33,109,105 for Peru. In addition to the emergency assistance already provided by FAO, UNDP, UNESCO, UNICEF, WFP and WHO, the United Nations system responded to the Secretary-General's appeal by mobilizing $2.3 million for the three countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1983/45 without vote.

Assistance to Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned about the large-scale devastation wrought by the heavy rain and floods which have recently affected extensive areas of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru and by the drought being suffered by Bolivia and Peru,

Further hearing in mind that those sectors are important bases of the economies of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru,

Considering that the urgent problems created require programmes of assistance, rehabilitation and reconstruction,

Affirming the urgent need for prompt and concerted international action to assist the peoples and Governments of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru to cope with the emergency confronting those countries and to engage in rehabilitation and reconstruction,

Observing with satisfaction the assistance provided by Governments, the United Nations system and governmental and non-governmental organizations during the initial emergency period,

Noting with appreciation the work done by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

1. Expresses its gratitude to States and organizations that have provided assistance to Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru;

2. Appeals urgently to all States, governmental and non-governmental organizations and specialized agencies to co-operate in financing a reconstruction and rehabilitation programme for the affected areas of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru and to participate actively in its implementation;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To take the necessary measures to assist the Governments of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru to prepare a broad programme for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the areas and sectors affected;

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/222 without vote.

Assistance to Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru to alleviate the effects of natural disasters

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/45 of 28 July 1983, in which the Council expressed its deep concern about the large-scale devastation wrought by the heavy rain and floods that had recently affected extensive areas of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru and by the drought suffered by Bolivia and Peru,

Recognizing that those phenomena have devastated urban and rural areas and caused serious damage to agriculture, stock-raising and agro-industry, which are important sectors of economic activity in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru,

Also recognizing the serious damage to basic services, resulting in impaired living conditions, particularly conditions affecting health, in those areas, and also the serious damage to the transport and communications infrastructure,

Bearing in mind the statements made by the representatives of the Governments of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru at the special meeting on emergency assistance to Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru, convened by the Secretary-General on 10 August 1983, and the documents submitted to that meeting, containing a preliminary evaluation of the damage caused by the natural phenomena in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru and the identification of immediate international assistance requirements,

Having received information from the Co-ordinator of the Special Economic Assistance Programmes on the measures taken by the Secretary-General, with particular reference to the findings of the multi-agency mission, which evaluated the damage and proposed a programme of reconstruction and rehabilitation for the affected areas and sectors,

Affirming the urgent need for prompt and concerted international action to assist the peoples and Governments of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru to cope with the emergency situation resulting from natural disasters and to carry out the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the areas and sectors affected,

Noting with appreciation the work done by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the United Nations Development Programme and the assistance provided by Governments, the programmes and organizations of the United Nations system and governmental and non-governmental organizations during the emergency phase,

Noting with satisfaction the timely action taken by the Secretary-General during the emergency, through the appointment of a personal representative and the dispatch of a multisectoral mission to prepare a special programme of economic assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected areas and sectors in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru,

1. Takes note of the efforts made by the peoples and Governments of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru to cope with the emergency situation and to initiate rehabilitation and reconstruction;

2. Expresses its gratitude to all States, programmes and organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations that have provided assistance to Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru during the emergency;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the timely action which he took during the emergency and also for the dispatch of the multisectoral mission to the three countries for the preparation of special programmes of economic assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected areas and sectors in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru on the basis of their needs;

4. Urgently reiterates the appeal of the Economic and Social Council to all States, governmental and non-governmental organizations, specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to co-operate in the financing of programmes for the reconstruction of the infrastructure and for the rehabilitation of the affected areas of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru and to participate actively in their implementation;

5. Requests the appropriate programmes and organizations of the United Nations system to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru in support of the rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in those countries;

6. Also requests regional and interregional organizations, non-governmental organizations and international financial institutions to give urgent consideration to the establishment of assistance programmes for rehabilitation and reconstruction in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru or to the expansion of existing programmes;

7. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the International Labour Organisation, the World Meteorological Organization, the World Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and other appropriate programmes and operational funds, to refer the special needs of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru to their governing bodies, for their consideration, and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1984;

8. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts and to take appropriate steps in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme for the mobilization of resources for the implementation of special programmes of economic assistance for rehabilitation and reconstruction in Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional organizations and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the status of the mobilization of assistance;

(b) To keep the situation regarding special economic assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional organizations and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the status of the mobilization of assistance;

(c) To report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Floods and drought in Honduras and Nicaragua

Honduras and Nicaragua, which had not recovered from the damage caused by the May 1982 tropical storm and floods,⁽²⁹⁾ experienced a worsening economic and social situation in parts of the countries as a result of a prolonged drought in 1983.

Further, Nicaragua requested UNDR0, on 14 October, to launch an international appeal for assistance in the aftermath of two oil tank explosions and the subsequent fire that spread to several other tanks.⁽²⁾ In addition to cash grants from UNDR0, the response of the donor community as at early 1984 amounted to some $156,000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/217 without vote.

Special assistance to alleviate the economic and social problems faced in regions of Honduras and Nicaragua as a result of the May 1982 floods and other subsequent natural disasters

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3440(XXX) of 9 December 1975 on assistance in cases of natural disaster and other disaster situations and 37/144 of 17 December 1982 on the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

Taking note of resolution 419(PLEN.15) on international assistance to alleviate the economic and social problems faced by Honduras and Nicaragua as a result of the May 1982 floods, adopted by the Committee of the Whole of the Economic Commission for Latin America at its fifteenth special session, held in New York on 22 and 23 July 1982,

Taking into account Economic and Social Council decision 1982/168 of 29 July 1982, by which the Council endorsed resolution 419(PLEN.15) of the Economic Commission for Latin America,

Mindful that by its decision 37/433 of 17 December 1982, adopted in pursuance of Economic and Social Council decision 1982/168, it endorsed resolution 419(PLEN.15),

Bearing in mind that the damage caused by the May 1982 floods in Honduras and Nicaragua has still not been made good,

Bearing in mind also that, during 1983, weather conditions in the south-west region of Honduras and the north-west region of Nicaragua have again been detrimental owing to a prolonged drought, which has caused heavy losses in the production of basic grains and other agricultural products, a phenomenon unprecedented in the past fifty years in Honduras, and which has affected thousands of rural families in those regions in both countries,

Considering that, because of the current drought and despite national efforts in both countries, the economic and social situation of those regions has worsened and the need for assistance from the international community is even greater,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States Members, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system that have provided emergency aid to Honduras and Nicaragua, in order to enable them to cope with the disaster;

2. Appeals to the States Members, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system to continue to provide assistance to Honduras and Nicaragua, in order to counter the serious economic and social consequences of the natural disasters experienced during the past two years in the regions referred to above;

3. Makes an urgent appeal to the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to take immediate steps to prevent the situation from becoming a state of emergency;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 38/217

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/705 & Corr.1) without vote, 1 December (meeting 531; 15-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.62/Rev.1); agenda item 81.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 34-38, 50, 53; plenary 104.

In a related action, the Assembly, in resolution 38/223, called for contributions to the reconstruction and development of Nicaragua, which had suffered a drought from June to September 1982.

Storm in Saint Lucia

Saint Lucia, in a note verbale dated 23 September 1983 addressed to the Secretary-General,⁽³⁰⁾ reported that gale-force winds on 19 September had destroyed up to 90 per cent of the crops in some areas and damaged housing and infrastructural facilities.

Earthquake in Yemen

The Secretary-General, in a June 1983 report,⁽¹⁾ stated that contributions worth more than $41 million had met most of the immediate emergency needs of Yemen, which had been struck in mid-December 1982 by an earthquake measuring 6.0 on the Richter scale. The relief phase was considered over by mid-January, and emphasis shifted to reconstruction and rehabilitation.

At a special meeting for the consideration of country and intercountry programmes and projects, the UNDP Governing Council, by a decision of 18 February 1983,⁽³¹⁾ called on the UNDP Administrator, bearing in mind a December 1982 General Assembly request,⁽³²⁾ to consider providing additional assistance to Yemen from the Special Programme Resources beyond the normally authorized amount.

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, by resolution 150(VI) of 2 July, appealed to States as well as appropriate United Nations and other organizations to contribute to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction of Yemen.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/204 without vote.

Assistance to Yemen

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/166 of 17 December 1982 and resolution 150(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Fully aware of the grave devastation and substantial loss of life and property caused by the earthquake that struck large areas of Yemen on 12 December 1982,

Concerned about the damage caused to infrastructure, which has a far-reaching effect on the implementation of the national development plan in that country,

Taking cognizance of the fact that the cost of the reconstruction of the affected areas is estimated at approximately $622 million,

Recognizing that Yemen, as one of the least developed countries, is unable to bear the mounting burden of the relief efforts and the reconstruction of the affected areas,

Recognizing also the efforts being made by the Government of Yemen to alleviate the effects of the earthquake,

1. Appeals to the developed countries and to those developing countries that are in a position to do so to contribute generously to the relief efforts and the reconstruction of the affected areas through financial contributions and the provision of the construction materials and equipment necessary to restore infrastructure and basic services in the affected areas;

2. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Yemen;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the States, the international and regional organizations and the non-governmental organizations that have participated in the ongoing efforts undertaken for the reconstruction of the affected areas in Yemen;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1984, of the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Disaster preparedness and prevention

In addition to its disaster relief activities, UNDRO continued in 1983 its pre-disaster planning functions by assisting countries so requesting in preparing national emergency plans or strengthening relevant national administrative structures, and organizing or participating in inter-agency missions or international meetings, seminars and training courses on disaster preparedness and prevention.

UNDRO assisted Chad, Indonesia and the United Republic of Tanzania in strengthening their national systems of disaster readiness. In June, an evacuation plan in case of a volcanic eruption was completed for the province of East New Britain in Papua New Guinea, following expert advice provided by UNDRO. Among regional projects, UNDRO in April handed over to the Caribbean Community secretariat the administrative responsibility for the Pan-Caribbean Disaster Preparedness and Prevention Project, covering 28 island countries and territories; work proceeded for establishing an emergency-communications link among the islands and between national meteorological and emergency offices.

UNDRO participated in several programmes on disaster prevention, among them the WMO/ESCAP Panel on Tropical Cyclones (March), the WMO Tropical Cyclone Committee for the South-West Indian Ocean (September), a seminar on disaster-preparedness strategies in the south-west Pacific (Suva, Fiji, March), and an ESCAP/UNDRO seminar on flood plain management for technical personnel from Asian countries (Bangkok, Thailand, October). UNDRO agreed to finance the participation of two disaster relief officials each from Bangladesh, Burma, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Thailand at a disaster management training programme in India for South Asian countries; the first course was conducted in June. A Disaster Experts Meeting of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (Singapore, 6-8 October) recommended the establishment of an UNDRO-supported regional disaster research and training centre in the Philippines, and requested UNDRO to approach donors for assistance.

An Expert Meeting on Space Applications for the Acquisition and Dissemination of Disaster-Related Data (Geneva, 14-17 June), in which UNDRO participated along with disaster managers from six disaster-prone countries, recommended that the United Nations keep the disaster-management community informed of relevant advances in communications, remote sensing and meteorological satellite application. A training course on satellite applications to flood control and forecasting (Rome, Italy, 7-18 November) acquainted personnel from 24 countries with the use of space technology for those purposes.

Activities relating to disaster preparedness and prevention were also carried out by a number of other United Nations organizations, notably FAO, UNESCO, UNHCR, WFP and WHO. UNCTAD's secretariat conducted, in collaboration with UNDRO, a study on the economic and social effects of natural disasters in island developing countries.⁽³⁴⁾ Five such countries (Antigua and Barbuda, Cape Verde, Comoros, Maldives, Samoa) were studied in terms of their vulnerability to natural disasters, with particular reference to their effect on the balance of payments.

In resolution 1983/57 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council recommended that, to mitigate effects from floods and droughts, countries give high priority to early-warning and forecasting systems, and integrate the relevant management projects in overall plans for the development of water resources.

Earthquakes

As in previous years, UNDRO participated in or contributed to several 1983 international and regional seminars on earthquake prediction and risk reduction.

A Balkan Regional Seminar on Earthquake Preparedness (Athens, Greece, 11-14 January), part of a joint UNDP/UNESCO project, stressed the need for greater co-operation between civil authorities and the scientific community, and pointed out the problems of protecting "life-line" systems and cultural/historical property, and providing emergency shelter. Establishment of a permanent international co-ordinating committee on earthquake risk reduction in the region was recommended by a meeting in January (Skopje, Yugoslavia). An UNDRO/UNESCO Seminar on Earthquake Vulnerability (Bucharest, Romania, 5-8 December) concluded that a wide gap existed between theoretical and applied vulnerability analysis and that further studies were needed.

An International Earthquake Conference (Los Angeles, California, United States, February), focusing on earthquake disaster management in countries surrounding the Pacific, recommended the setting up of a task force for urban earthquake planning, with UNDRO participation.

A Seminar on Seismicity and Seismic Risk in the Ibero-Maghrebian Region (Córdoba, Spain, November), organized by the Ibero-Maghrebian Working Group of the European Seismological Commission, brought together, for the first time, scientists and civil defence officials from Algeria, Morocco, Portugal, Spain and Tunisia.

A study-funded by UNDRO at the request of the Peruvian Civil Defence and carried out by the National University of Engineering was completed in March on tsunami hazard zoning of low coastal areas in the vicinity of Lima, for the Government's use in emergency planning.

Emergency relief and assistance

The United Nations continued in 1983 its emergency humanitarian assistance to displaced persons, as well as to Palestinians, in Lebanon (Economic and Social Council decision 1983/170). The Council, in decision 1983/112, and the General Assembly, in resolution 38/220, called for intensified international assistance to meet Lebanon's reconstruction and development needs.

In December, the Assembly, in resolution 38/201, liquidated the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund, which had been established in 1974, and decided to allocated the remaining balance to other similarly, mandated existing United Nations funds and programmes.

Lebanon

In 1983, the greater part of Lebanon remained outside the Government's control, and the uncertain political situation and the resumption of fighting resulted in a serious decline in production and economic activity and an increase in the number of displaced persons requiring further international emergency humanitarian assistance (see also POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In an oral report to the the Economic and Social Council in May, the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon, Iqbal A. Akhund, said the successful implementation of the reconstruction programme depended on mobilizing the necessary funds, strengthening and modernizing the country's administrative structures and practices, formulating national policies in key sectors and establishing a system for long-term planning. Lebanon informed the Council that the financing of its reconstruction efforts would require a vast mobilization of national and foreign resources for at least 10 years, adding that the success of such efforts depended on the country's political stability, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

On 17 May, the Council, on an oral proposal by its President, adopted decision 1983/112 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

At its 7th plenary meeting, on 17 May 1983, the Council decided:

(a) To take note with appreciation of the oral report made by the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the 'Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon pursuant to General Assembly resolution 37/163 of 17 December 1982, and of the statement made by the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations at the first regular session of 1983 of the Council;

(b) To appeal to all Member States, organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to mobilize all possible assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/112

Adopted without vote

Draft orally proposed by President; agenda item 1.
Meeting number. ESC 7.

The Secretary-General, in response to a December 1982 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ reported to the Assembly, through the Council, that the international community had continued to provide humanitarian assistance to the Palestinian people in Lebanon.⁽²⁾

On 25 July, the Council, acting on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted decision 1983/170 without vote.

Report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the Palestinian people in Lebanon

At its 39th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1983, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the Palestinian people in Lebanon.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/170

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/114) without vote, 18 July (meeting 121; oral proposal by Chairman: agenda item 22.

UNCTAD action. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), in resolution 149(VI) of 2 July 1983,⁽³⁾ urged donors to assist Lebanon in overcoming the economic and social ordeal resulting from eight years of "wars and disturbances", including the 1982 "Israeli invasion". It invited international financial institutions, particularly the World Bank, to consider granting Lebanon financing for reconstruction. It also appealed to the international community to consider appropriate trade measures that would help revive Lebanon's industrial and agricultural commodity exports, and requested the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to assist the country in regaining its traditional markets.

The text, adopted on a proposal of the UNCTAD President, was based on consultations on a draft originally submitted by Somalia on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a September report on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon,⁽⁴⁾ submitted to the General Assembly at its December 1982 request,⁽⁵⁾ stated that most of the United Nations emergency relief assistance to the affected population had been completed by mid-1983.

A World Bank mission, which had visited Lebanon in November 1982 and February 1983 at the Government's request, submitted recommendations in March for a three-year (1983-1985) programme of essential reconstruction projects costing $6 billion, to be financed through external grants, foreign borrowing and domestic fund-raising. The programme covered such projects as roads, ports, an airport, power and water supply, sewerage, telecommunications, education, health, urban development, housing and public buildings, and assistance to the private sector; other suggestions concerned improvements in Lebanon's financial management and in public administration. A number of other United Nations bodies also sent special missions in response to the Government's appeal, and made further project proposals in the social and primary sectors, at a total cost of over $68 million. United Nations assistance, by programme and agency for the period from 1 September 1982 to 31 August 1983, was described in an October addendum to the Secretary-General's report.⁽⁴⁾ Among them, UNICEF continued its emergency relief operations,⁽⁶⁾ assisting in procurement of relief goods in the local market, improvement of water supply, education and rehabilitation projects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Speaking in the General Assembly's Second Committee in November, the United Nations Co-ordinator observed that the resumption of fighting and systematic violation of the cease-fire since the Secretary-General's report was prepared at the end of August made it necessary to revise the estimated resource and time requirements for Lebanon's reconstruction and development. At the Government's request in early September, the Secretary-General launched an international appeal for emergency relief assistance totalling $10 million for some 150,000 displaced persons; such aid reached the affected population within four days of the Government's request. Among the United Nations bodies responding, the Committee on Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon assisted government authorities in organizing and monitoring the distribution of food and basic household articles to displaced families, and UNHCR and UNHCR distributed rations (see Chapter XXI of this section). In November, Lebanon requested further emergency assistance for 4,000 families-victims of a worsening situation in Tripoli, which had caused displacement of Palestinian refugees and Lebanese citizens. The Co-ordinator observed that since the massive displacement of people had disrupted administrative and social services and had seriously set back productive activity and the economy in general, relief work could not be confined to the provision of basic necessities but must be accompanied by a well-planned and comprehensive programme for the rehabilitation of housing and the physical and social infrastructure.

On 20 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/220 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/146 of 20 December 1978, 34/135 of 14 December 1979, 35/85 of 5 December 1980, 36/205 of 17 December 1981 and 37/163 of 17 December 1982 on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/15 of 29 April 1980 and decision 1983/112 of 17 May 1983,

Noting with deep concern the continuing heavy loss of life and the additional destruction of property, which have caused further extensive damage to the economic and social structures of Lebanon,

Welcoming the determined efforts of the Government of Lebanon in undertaking its reconstruction and rehabilitation programme,

Reaffirming the urgent need for further international action to assist the Government of Lebanon in its continuing efforts for reconstruction and development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the statement made by the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon on 10 November 1983,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report and for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance to Lebanon;

2. Commends the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon and his staff for their valuable and unstinting efforts in the discharge of their duties;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the relentless efforts undertaken by the Government of Lebanon in the implementation of the initial phase of the reconstruction of Lebanon, despite adverse circumstances;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help the Government of Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts;

5. Requests the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to intensify their programmes of assistance and to expand them in response to the needs of Lebanon;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984 and to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Dissolution of the UN Emergency Operation Trust Fund

The Secretary-General, in a November 1983 report to the Assembly,⁽⁷⁾ proposed, on the basis of consultations, liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund and allocation of its remaining balance to other United Nations funds and programmes.

The Fund had been established by the Assembly in 1974 as part of a special programme of emergency measures to mitigate the difficulties confronting the low-income developing countries most seriously affected by the then economic crisis.⁽⁸⁾ As at 31 October 1983, the Fund-whose income had totalled some $309.5 million during its existence-had a balance of $47.8 million, resulting mainly from interest earned from short-term investments.

The Secretary-General proposed that the Fund's balance be used for purposes as close as possible to its original intent, and suggested the ratio of allocation as follows: 70 per cent to the United Nations Capital Development Fund, the UNDP Special Measures Fund for Least Developed Countries and the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities; 15 per cent to the UNDP Energy Account and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration; and 15 per cent to UNDP for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries. He anticipated reporting to the Assembly in 1985 on the utilization of funds transferred to those programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/201 without vote.

Liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund and allocation of the remaining balance

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the need for liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund,

Fully aware of the original objectives for which the Fund was created,

Deeply concerned about the exceptional situation faced by many developing countries, in particular African countries, which are afflicted by drought, famine and malnutrition,

Concerned also about the special plight of the Palestine refugees and the financial situation of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Taking into account that developing countries, through the Caracas Programme of Action, have taken it upon themselves to implement a series of actions in the field of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, designed, inter alia, to help them face their critical development problems and attain their objectives, giving due regard to the special needs of the least developed among them,

I. Decides to liquidate the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund and to allocate the remaining balance to existing funds and programmes of the United Nations as follows:

(a) Seventy per cent shall be channelled through United Nations Development Programme-administered funds to finance urgently needed projects, primarily in the food and agricultural sectors in countries afflicted by famine and malnutrition as a result, particularly, of severe or prolonged drought, with special emphasis on African countries;

(b) Eighteen per cent shall be channelled through the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, especially to its educational programme;

(c) Twelve per cent shall be channelled through the United Nations Development Programme for the purpose of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries; these funds shall be allocated to activities in economic and technical co-operation among developing countries of critical importance to developing countries, according to the priorities set by them;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to ensure that the funds are allocated in accordance with the present resolution as soon as possible;

3. Also requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to report to the Governing Council at its thirty-first session on action taken to implement the present resolution;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to monitor closely the implementation of the present resolution, to make available progress reports and to report fully to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.13) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); 7-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.110/Rev.1); agenda item 78.

Sponsors: Algeria, Iran, Kuwait, Netherlands, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Venezuela.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 56; plenary 104.

In the Second Committee, Bangladesh orally proposed, but later withdrew, an amendment to the third preambular paragraph, by which the Assembly would have expressed concern over the situation faced by the least developed countries and other developing countries, rather than by "many developing countries".

Chapter IV

International trade and finance

The major United Nations event concerning international trade and finance for development in 1983 was the sixth (June/July) session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD VI), whose central themes, reflected in an end-of-Conference statement, were development and recovery in the world economy and the complementary character of those two processes. Against the background of the world economic crisis, wide-ranging discussions were held on virtually all major concerns in the area of international co-operation for development, including commodities, international trade, protectionism and structural adjustment, monetary and financial questions, the problems of the least-developed, land-locked and island developing countries, the transfer of technology, shipping, economic co-operation among developing countries, and assistance to individual countries and liberation movements. The Conference adopted 32 resolutions and decisions on these and other issues.

In his annual report on the work of the Organization (p.3), the Secretary-General said that, although UNCTAD VI had provided an important opportunity to counter negative trends in multilateral co-operation, its results were not commensurate with the gravity of the situation in developing countries and the requirements of the world economy in general. The consensus achieved on several issues could, however, constitute a worthwhile step provided there was continuing dialogue and action, in which context the process of negotiation between the developed and developing countries on long-term problems had to be activated at a high political level.

In December, the General Assembly echoed the Secretary-General's views on the results of UNCTAD VI and urged Governments to exercise the necessary political will to reach agreement on the follow-up to the Conference and ensure timely implementation of its results (resolution 38/155).

Following its second annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment, regarded as a key issue for UNCTAD VI, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board drew attention to new forms of protectionist measures, including discriminatory ones.

UNCTAD VI urged increased contributions to strengthen the commodity-related activities of the International Trade Centre (ITC), which continued to assist developing countries in promoting their exports and facilitating movement of goods in international commerce.

In the area of commodity issues, UNCTAD VI urged early signature and ratification of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities, as did the Assembly in December (resolution 38/156). Although the Agreement was open for signature and ratification at Belgrade during the Conference, it had not received the required number of ratifications by the end of the year for entry into force.

The International Sugar Conference held two sessions in 1983 without reaching agreement. However, the United Nations Conference on Tropical Timber culminated in November in the adoption of the International Tropical Timber Agreement, 1983. Early resumption of the United Nations Conference to Negotiate an International Arrangement to replace the International Wheat Agreement, 1971, as extended, was urged by UNCTAD VI, the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1983/71) and by the General Assembly (resolution 38/158). In March, the Committee on Manufactures reviewed trends, developments and restrictions to trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures.

Both the Council (decision 1983/174) and the Assembly (resolution 38/147) called for finalization and adoption of a set of draft guidelines on consumer protection.

International financial relations, described as chaotic by the United Nations Committee for Development Planning (CDP), were the subject of several resolutions adopted at UNCTAD VI. The question of external debt of developing countries was of particular concern to CDP, the Trade and Development Board and the Conference. With regard to development assistance, the Conference urged developed countries to increase their official development assistance, and multilateral development institutions were invited to expand programme lending.

Trade-related finance was discussed at the March meeting of the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade, at the Trade and Development Board and at UNCTAD VI. The Conference invited the Board to finalize consideration of a proposed export guarantee facility.

A proposed complementary financing facility for commodity-related shortfalls in export earnings was discussed in the Committee on Commodities and at UNCTAD VI, which invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene an expert group on the subject.

In December, the United Nations Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters finalized a set of guidelines for international co-operation against tax evasion.

Sixth session of UNCTAD

The sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), known as UNCTAD VI, was held at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, from 6 June to 2 July 1983. The Conference was preceded on 2 and 3 June by an organizational meeting of senior officials representing States participating in the Conference.

The Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD had adopted the Conference's provisional agenda in July 1982 and, in September, approved distribution of its items among plenary meetings and four main committees.⁽¹⁾ The twelfth special session of UNCTAD's Trade and Development Board met at Geneva from 25 to 30 April and on 6 May 1983 to complete preparatory work for the Conference. On 6 May, the Board established the composition of the Conference's Bureau and drew up a tentative schedule for the Conference,⁽²⁾ and also adopted a set of agreed conclusions⁽³⁾ urging informal consultations on outstanding matters before the pre-Conference meeting of senior officials.

Also in preparation for the Conference, the African, Asian and Latin American regional groups of UNCTAD member States met at the ministerial level during February at Libreville (Gabon), Baghdad (Iraq) and Cartagena (Colombia), respectively, to consider matters proposed for the agenda. The results of these meetings were considered by the Fifth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77 developing countries, held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, from 28 March to 9 April. It adopted as its final document the Buenos Aires Platform-the Group's position paper on issues to be discussed at the Conference. In the Platform, the Ministers of the Group of 77 also reviewed the state of the world economy and its functioning in relation to the development of developing countries (see p. 399 et seq.). The document was annexed to the report of the proceedings of the Conference.⁽⁴⁾

Preparations were also discussed by Ministers of Foreign Trade of countries members of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (Moscow, April) and at the ministerial level by representatives of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (Paris, May). The Economic Declaration of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 7-12 March) included a section on the Conference.⁽⁵⁾

On 6 June, the Conference established four main open-ended committees, among which the agenda items not handled in plenary meetings were distributed as follows: Committee I—commodities; Committee II—international trade in goods and services; Committee III—financial and monetary issues; Committee IV—UNCTAD activities in technology, shipping, land-locked and island developing countries, trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems, economic co-operation among developing countries, assistance to national liberation movements, and institutional matters.

The Conference was attended by 148 member States of UNCTAD, as well as by representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, the regional commissions and other United Nations organizations, eight specialized agencies, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and the International Trade Centre (ITC). Also represented were 36 intergovernmental bodies, 25 non-governmental organizations and four national liberation movements: the African National Congress of South Africa, the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania and the South West Africa People's Organization.

At its opening meeting on 6 June, the Conference elected as its President Lazar Mojsov (Yugoslavia); it also elected a Rapporteur and 29 Vice-Presidents. (For Conference participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

The Conference's inaugural ceremony was addressed by Mr. Mojsov, in his capacity as Federal Secretary for Foreign Affairs of Yugoslavia, who welcomed participants on behalf of his Government, and by Mika Spiljak, President of the Presidency of Yugoslavia, who reviewed the current world economic crisis, stressed the interdependence of the economies of all countries and called for concerted action to revitalize the world economy.

The United Nations Secretary-General, in an address to the opening meeting, felt that four imperative tasks faced the Conference: action on urgent measures to arrest a decline in the economic activity in the developing countries; that those measures should be an integral part of efforts to revive the global economy; that they be supplemented by appropriate domestic policies; and that the basic framework of international economic relations, covering especially the trading, monetary and financial systems, be strengthened. Above all, he stated, action was needed to offer a glimmer of hope to the hundreds of millions who saw no prospect except that of unemployment and continued deprivation.

Referring to the close relationship between economic and social well-being and peace and security, the Secretary-General said that the great challenge for UNCTAD VI was to help develop the spirit of partnership between North and South, on which humanity's economic and political equilibrium greatly depended.

On 2 July, UNCTAD VI concluded by adopting a statement on the main item on its agenda—the world economic situation with special emphasis on development: approaches to the current world economic crisis and perspectives for the 1980s including issues, policies and measures relevant to the attainment of a new international economic order. The statement's main part described the world economic situation (p. 403) and in the inter-related fields of commodities, trade, money and finance, and the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (resolution 142(VI)) (see also p. 430)—UNCTAD VI adopted a programme of immediate measures incorporating elements contained in some of the Conference's resolutions and provided for urgent action on them.

The resolutions on commodities dealt with the Common Fund for Commodities (153(VI)), implementation of the Integrated Programme for Commodities in the area of stabilizing and strengthening commodity markets (155(VI)), implementation of the Integrated Programme for Commodities in the area of processing, marketing and distribution, including transportation (156(VI)), and compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls (157(VI)). The trade resolution dealt with international trade in goods and services: protectionism, structural adjustment and the international trading system (159(VI)). The money and finance resolutions dealt with external debt (161(VI)), international monetary issues (162(VI)), an international export credit guarantee facility (163(VI)), official development assistance (164(VI)), and multilateral development institutions (165(VI)) (for details of these resolutions, see subject headings below).

Further action by the Conference on the various aspects of trade and financial matters included decisions on UNCTAD activities regarding trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems and all trade flows resulting therefrom (145(VI)), and the work programme on protectionism and structural adjustment (160(VI)); and resolutions on the United Nations Conference to Negotiate an International Arrangement to Replace the International Wheat Agreement, 1971, as extended (154(VI)), and strengthening the International Trade Centre, particularly in relation to commodities (158(VI)) (see subject headings below).

In other action, the Conference adopted resolutions on: rejecting coercive economic measures (152(VI)) (p. 412); UNCTAD activities concerning land-locked (137(VI)) (p. 435) and island (138(VI)) (p. 438) developing countries; economic co-operation among developing countries (139(VI)) (p. 413); the technological transformation of developing countries (143(VI)) (see Chapter XII of this section); UNCTAD activities in shipping (144(VI)) (see Chapter V of this section); assistance to the Palestinian people (146(VI)) (p. 282); assistance to the peoples of Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III) and those of South Africa (147(VI)) (p. 160); provision of assistance for Lebanon (149(VI)) and Yemen (150(VI)); and implementation of the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region (151(VI)) (see Chapter III of this section).

The Conference decided to remit several texts to the October/November session of UNCTAD's Trade and Development Board for further consideration, including two draft texts on institutional matters—one submitted by Somalia on behalf of the States members of the Group of 77 developing countries, and the other by Canada on behalf of the States members of Group B (developed market economies)—as well as an informal text on trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems (see below) and proposals for a work programme on protectionism and structural adjustment.

Trade and Development Board action. At its twenty-seventh session (Geneva, 3-20 October and 2 November),⁽⁶⁾ UNCTAD's Trade and Development Board considered several matters arising from UNCTAD VI decisions, including resolutions 146^(VI) on assistance to the Palestinian people (p. 282) and 147(VI) on assistance to the peoples of Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III) and those of South Africa (p. 160).

By decision 148(VI), the Conference had remitted two draft texts on institutional matters to the Board (see above). The Board decided to consider the decision further at its twenty-eighth (March/April 1984) session.

The Board also considered Conference resolution 159(VI) on international trade in goods and services: protectionism, structural adjustment and the international trading system, and decision 160(VI) on a work programme on protectionism and structural adjustment (see below) and decided⁽⁷⁾ to remit both consideration of the work programme and a draft text on it, submitted by Venezuela for the Group of 77, to its March/April 1984 session.

In resolution 163(VI) on an international export credit guarantee facility, the Conference had requested the Board to finalize its consideration of the issue at its twenty-seventh session. On 20 October, the Board decided to refer a draft text on the subject, submitted by Venezuela for the Group of 77, to its Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade at its eleventh session (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

After considering the work of UNCTAD VI and the Trade and Development Board, the General Assembly, on 19 December, adopted resolution 38/155 without vote. It took this action on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

Report of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on its sixth session
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further its resolution 37/208 of 20 December 1982,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on its sixth session, held at Belgrade from 6 June to 2 July 1983, and the report of the Trade and Development Board on its twenty-sixth, twelfth special and twenty-seventh sessions,

Taking note of the Economic Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, and the proposals contained in the Buenos Aires Platform, adopted at the Fifth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven, held from 28 March to 9 April 1983, as well as the intensive preparations at a high political level by other groups in this regard,

Considering that the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development took place against the background of the harmful effects of the world economic crisis, especially on the economic development of developing countries, and accordingly affirming the importance of achieving a sustained world economic recovery and ensuring a rapid expansion of international trade that is supportive of economic growth and development, in particular that of developing countries,

Recognising the leading responsibility of developed countries in promoting conditions conducive to world recovery, the need for reviving development momentum in the developing countries and the need for sound policies in both developed and developing countries to restore sustainable development and growth,

Urging accordingly developed countries to take fully into account the international implications of their policy decisions, including their impact on developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on its sixth session and the report of the Trade and Development Board on its twenty-sixth, twelfth special and twenty-seventh sessions;

2. Notes with concern that the Conference was unable to yield results commensurate with the dimension of the problems confronting the developing countries and the world economy as a whole;

3. Further notes with concern that the Trade and Development Board was unable, at its twenty-seventh session, to translate into a work programme and action resolutions and decisions of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its sixth session;

4. Takes note of resolutions 146(VI), 147(VI), 152(VI) and 157(VI) adopted on 2 July 1983 by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its sixth session;

5. Endorses all other resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its sixth session;

6. Urges all Governments, bearing in mind the particular contribution developed countries can make, to exercise the necessary political will so as to enable the Trade and Development Board, at its twenty-eighth session, to reach agreement on the follow-up to the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and to ensure timely implementation of its results;

7. Calls upon all countries to exert every effort to adopt and implement the measures necessary for the revitalization of the development process in the developing countries and for dealing with structural problems in the global economy, and emphasizes the continuing important role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in this regard;

8. Takes note of the statement on the world economic situation with special emphasis on development: approaches to the current world economic crisis and perspectives for the 1980s, including issues, policies and measures relevant to the attainment of a new international economic order, adopted at the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

9. Calls upon all countries to take appropriate action at the national and international levels on the resolutions of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its sixth session and on the immediate measures set out in paragraph 14 of the statement mentioned above;

10. Requests the Trade and Development Board, at its twenty-eighth session, and the subsidiary organs of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to take the appropriate necessary action on the resolutions and decisions adopted by the Conference at its sixth session;

11. Invites all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to respond positively to the requests addressed to them in the relevant parts of the resolutions of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its sixth session.

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.2) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.118), based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.86); agenda item 78 (b). Meeting numbers GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 50, 56; plenary 102.

The draft approved by the Second Committee differed in a number of respects from that put forward by the Group of 77 and subsequently withdrawn.

The fifth preambular paragraph of the approved text consolidated two paragraphs in the Group's draft by which the Assembly would have noted the views and recommendations of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries relating to global economic problems and, in particular to UNCTAD VI, and noted further the Buenos Aires Platform setting forth the objectives and specific proposals of the developing countries at UNCTAD VI.

By a preambular paragraph of the Group's draft (corresponding to the sixth of the adopted text), the Assembly would have considered that UNCTAD VI had taken place against the background of the continuation of the most pervasive and dangerous crisis experienced since the Great Depression, the burden of which had fallen most heavily on developing countries, particularly the least developed.

By other preambular paragraphs in the Group's draft, the Assembly would have: reiterated that the strategy for surmounting the economic crisis had to recognize developing countries as full partners in world development and that the situation called for a coherent set of international policies addressing short- and longer-term problems; recognized that the revitalization of the development process in the developing countries and the accompanying requirement of structural changes in the global economy had to be central to any programme for its reactivation and for the development of developing countries; and recalled that UNCTAD VI was to deal with important issues of trade, development and related problems, taking fully into account their interrelationship and thus contributing effectively to overcoming grave difficulties facing the world economy, to the economic development of developing countries and to the attainment of a new international economic order.

References in the Group's draft to "continued lack of political will" and "the negative attitude" of some developed countries were omitted from the final text. Also, by that draft, the Assembly would have endorsed all resolutions of UNCTAD VI, rather than the formulation contained in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the final text, and would also have urged the United Nations system to respond positively to those resolutions.

In a paragraph of the Group's text corresponding to paragraph 6 of the final text, the Assembly would have urged the developed countries (rather than all Governments) to exercise the necessary political will. In a paragraph corresponding to paragraph 9 of the final text, the Group would have had the Assembly call on all countries, "in particular the developed countries," to take appropriate action. The Group's draft would also have had the Assembly endorse the UNCTAD VI statement rather than take note of it.

By the Group's draft, paragraph 10 of the final text would have concluded with the phrase "particularly those in the areas of trade, money and finance and commodities, including the compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls".

International trade

During 1983, international trade issues were discussed by various United Nations bodies. Several resolutions dealing with international trade were adopted at UNCTAD VI, where concern was expressed about the lowest non-oil commodity prices in fifty years and shrinking export markets due to the economic recession and protectionist trends in many developed countries. Commodity issues were widely discussed, with the UNCTAD Committee on Commodities holding its tenth session in 1983 and several meetings on individual commodities also taking place. The General Assembly strongly urged States to sign and ratify the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities.

The Trade and Development Board conducted its second annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment, which was also a major issue on the agenda of UNCTAD VI. The Assembly also considered this subject and referred a related draft resolution to its 1984 session (decision 38/438).

The generalized system of preferences, the global system of trade preferences among developing countries, and trade among countries having different economic and social systems were all the subjects of UNCTAD VI resolutions.

In the area of trade promotion and facilitation, increased financial support for the International Trade Centre (ITC)-- the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes—was urged by UNCTAD VI, and an intergovernmental group of experts met to discuss restrictive business practices.

A set of draft guidelines on consumer protection was discussed by the Economic and Social Council (decision 1983/174) and by the Assembly (resolution 38/147), which adopted a resolution urging Governments to comment on the draft guidelines and requesting the Secretary-General to extend assistance towards their finalization and adoption.

Trade policy

Although an incipient economic recovery appeared to have set in since the second quarter of 1983, it seemed unlikely to prove strong enough to provide a major boost to non-oil commodity prices, which fell precipitously from 1979 to 1982, said the UNCTAD Trade and Development Report, 1983.⁽¹⁾ The UNCTAD combined index of non-oil primary commodities exported by developing countries, measured in United States dollars, dropped by 16.1 per cent in 1982, following a decline of 15.6 per cent in 1981. The two-year fall of more than 30 per cent was the highest for over 20 years. For the first quarter of 1983, the index was about 3 per cent higher than the average for the fourth quarter of 1982, but still lower than the average for the whole year. With a modest economic recovery widely expected, conditions in international commodity markets were likely to improve in 1983 and 1984.

Weakness in world demand was also reflected in the volume of traded goods, which fell in 1982 by about 2 per cent. While the greatest decline occurred in oil exports, the volume of export of manufactured goods fell as well, although exports of agricultural commodities increased slightly.

At its April 1983 session,⁽²⁾ the Committee for Development Planning, noting the need for order in world trade, said that despite frequent appeals for a halt to protectionism—which was not only disruptive to the world economy, but infused bitter conflicts in international relations—the disruption of the trading system had gathered momentum.

In a February report⁽³⁾ to the June ministerial session of the World Food Council, the Executive Director, stressing that international trade must contribute to a more rapid recovery of the world economy, said that the results of UNCTAD VI could have a great impact on developing countries' capacity to solve food problems.

UNCTAD VI action. On 2 July, by resolution 159(VI), adopted without dissent, on international trade in goods and services,⁽⁴⁾ UNCTAD VI agreed that the Trade and Development Board should review developments in the international trading system. The Board could recommend policies related to international trade and make proposals on strengthening the trading system.

By the Buenos Aires Platform resolution⁽⁴⁾ on the same subject, the Conference would have recognized that the existing rules of the trading system were not equitable or effective, and decided that the Board should study them with a view to establishing a new set of rules leading to a universal system. It would also have decided that the special problems of the least developed countries (LDCs) be kept in view while undertaking that task.

Protectionism and structural adjustment

Trade and Development Board activities. The Trade and Development Board at its twenty-sixth session (Geneva, 18-28 April) conducted its second annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment. Several documents were prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat according to guidelines laid down by the Board at its March 1982 session, when it carried out its first review of the issue.⁽⁵⁾

An overview of protectionism and structural adjustment⁽⁶⁾ by the UNCTAD secretariat stated that during the second half of the 1970s, trade disputes emerged as a major strain on the international economy. A combination of two broad trends—increased openness in the economies of major trading countries to external influences and increased resistance to structural change—best explained the difficulties facing the international trading system, the report said.

The report attempted broadly to define the terms structural change and structural adjustment and went on to concentrate on some quantifiable aspects of those processes: the direction and extent of structural change, the changes in comparative advantage, and the relationship between the two.

In its final chapter, the report discussed the need for greater transparency in trade relations and the role of public inquiry in that context. Among its proposals for national public inquiry procedures for assistance to industries were that such bodies would: solicit information to determine short- and long-term prospects for industries; consider claims and interests of all parties; and ensure publication of information, including reports on its operations which could facilitate observance of international notification requirements. These bodies would also establish procedures whereby industries could substantiate the need for assistance, and would review evidence on the basis of nationally defined and multilaterally acceptable criteria.

Action proposed at the international level included: establishing internationally agreed criteria for government assistance to industry; gathering and disseminating information on countries' production and trade policies; and co-ordinating industrial policy to reduce the risk of competitive action, other than commercial action, to attain objectives by means not covered in existing trade rules.

Also before the Board was an UNCTAD report⁽⁷⁾ on protectionism and structural adjustment in agriculture, which gave the background to policy issues, reviewed trends in agricultural production, employment, consumption and trade, analysed the application of tariffs and non-tariff barriers and the effects and costs of such trade intervention measures, and discussed possible international co-operative action in agricultural production and trade.

Another UNCTAD report⁽⁸⁾ submitted to the Board reviewed progress in compiling an inventory of non-tariff barriers affecting the trade of developing countries, and indicated that a comprehensive inventory was an essential step towards securing greater transparency in the international trading system.

An UNCTAD report on production and trade in services, policies and their underlying factors bearing upon international services transactions⁽⁹⁾ provided a conceptual overview of the nature of such transactions, discussed some principal determinants of structural patterns in the international services sector, presenting statistical information on production, employment and trade in that sector, and dealt with measures affecting international services activities, including trade- and investment-related measures.

On 28 April, following its discussion of the item, the Trade and Development Board adopted a set of agreed conclusions⁽¹⁰⁾ on protectionism and structural adjustment, in which it referred to the danger of new forms of protectionist measures, including discriminatory ones. The Board reaffirmed the need for an UNCTAD work programme for the Board's future annual reviews of the topic and noted that proposals had been made on some elements for a work programme for consideration by UNCTAD VI. Since the Board could not conclude its consideration of such proposals, the subject, regarded as a key issue for UNCTAD VI, would be dealt with by that Conference.

On 22 March, the UNCTAD Committee on Manufactures adopted a set of agreed conclusions in which it expressed concern about growing protectionism in international trade (see below).

UNCTAD VI action. A policy paper⁽¹¹⁾ on protectionism, trade relations and structural adjustment was submitted by the UNCTAD secretariat to UNCTAD VI. The report gave an overview of trading conditions and analysed protectionism in its various forms, with an effort to consider all groups of countries, regardless of levels of development or economic and social systems. The report examined policies and practices for international trade relations and the conflicting tendencies that had emerged in their application.

The report also attempted to identify the reasons for protective measures, considering that if those objectives could be accomplished by other measures, particularly, by structural adjustment policies--the strains on the trading system would be alleviated.

In conclusion, the report recommended a comprehensive approach, combining trade, adjustment and development policies, for the recovery of international trade. Action recommended at the national level included: review of legislation and regulations to remove features leading to harassment: of trade; creation of independent bodies, accessible to the public, including representatives of trading partners, to assess whether protective action was justified and to advise on appropriate means of implementing it; and refraining from arbitrary actions by subjecting all decisions affecting trade to those procedures.

Action recommended at the international level included: refraining from unilateral actions adversely affecting trade of other countries; creating an international mechanism to exchange information on trade measures; reviewing policies and practices in international trade relations; establishing criteria for taking protective action in various situations; framing principles and techniques for future multilateral trade negotiations; and providing technical assistance to improve developing countries' understanding of trade-related regulations.

Recommended structural adjustment actions at the national level included: reviewing existing protective measures used in industry, assessing their effects on other producers and consumers, including costs; creating information exchange mechanisms among governments, producers and consumers on production objectives; and adopting structural adjustment policies to encourage less competitive enterprises to move into more viable lines of production.

Recommendations for structural adjustment action at the international level included: reviewing production and trade in various goods and services to prepare the basis for future trade liberalization; giving priority in this context to sectors where protective actions were most prevalent; and framing general principles relating to territorial jurisdiction in respect of investment and business practices.

On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent a four-part resolution (159(VI))⁽⁴⁾ on international trade in goods and services. In part I, dealing with protectionism and structural adjustment, the Conference agreed that protectionism harmed trade and development, in particular that of developing countries, and should be resisted. The Conference also agreed that developed countries would: work towards reducing and eliminating quantitative restrictions and periodically review the progress of this process; recognize the role which trade liberalization could play in achieving economic growth and development; fulfil their commitments in international trade and provide more favourable treatment to developing countries; and review their existing procedures relating to anti-dumping and countervailing duties, to assure that there were no unjustifiable impediments to the trade of other countries, especially developing countries, and take remedial action as appropriate.

The Trade and Development Board, in its annual review, was entrusted with monitoring and making recommendations regarding the resolution and continuing its work on non-tariff barriers.

It was also agreed that countries should note the results of the 1982 ministerial session of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT),⁽¹²⁾ in particular the decision to examine prospects for increasing trade between developed and developing countries, and that work under way in GATT on a comprehensive understanding based on the Agreement's principles should be continued with a view to reaching results within the agreed time-frame.

With regard to structural adjustment, it was agreed that it was a global and ongoing phenomenon which should be facilitated for optimum overall growth, including developing and diversifying the economies of developing countries to increase their share in production of and trade in processed goods and manufactures. Developed countries were urged to facilitate structural adjustment based on a dynamic pattern of comparative advantage; industrial collaboration arrangements, including international subcontracting, could be employed in that regard.

It was agreed that the Trade and Development Board would continue annually to review patterns of production and trade in the world economy and in that context would provide a forum for discussion of structural adjustment to foster greater transparency and would monitor trade developments and make recommendations to encourage internationally competitive production in the light of comparative advantage. The sessional committee of the Trade and Development Board established in 1981⁽¹³⁾ would review progress on structural adjustment and make recommendations to the Board if necessary.

The Conference stressed that particular attention be paid to the special problems of LDCs in dealing with the issues of both protectionism and structural adjustment.

The Conference noted that trade in services was a growing phenomenon worldwide and that the issue needed further study and understanding. The UNCTAD Secretary-General would continue to study the issues involved and UNCTAD would consider the role of the services sector in the development process. The Trade and Development Board was invited to consider at its twenty-ninth (1984) session future work on the subject by UNCTAD.

The resolution also dealt with the international trading system (see above) and the generalized system of preferences (see below).

In addition to the UNCTAD secretariat policy paper,⁽¹¹⁾ the Conference also had before it a resolution contained in the Buenos Aires Platform⁽⁴⁾ on international trade in goods and services. By that text, the Conference would have agreed that developed countries should abstain from imposing new protectionist measures against exports of developing countries, and from unilateral decisions adversely affecting their trade. Developed countries would also eliminate all other measures they were applying to protect their domestic industries which adversely affected the trade of developing countries.

Among other major differences in the two resolutions was the inclusion in the Buenos Aires text of a paragraph by which the Conference would have agreed that developed countries would refrain from applying economic sanctions against developing countries as a form of political coercion. A separate resolution (152(VI)) on rejection of coercive economic measures was adopted by the Conference (see p. 412).

On 2 July, the Conference adopted without dissent decision 160(VI)⁽⁴⁾ by which it took note of the agreed conclusions on protectionism and structural adjustment adopted by the Trade and Development Board at its April session (see above) and decided that the Board at its twenty-seventh (October/November) session should establish a work programme taking into account Conference resolution 159(VI) and other proposals by both the Group of 77 and Group B (developed market economies) annexed to the decision.

Follow-up action to UNCTAD VI. The Trade and Development Board at its twenty-seventh session (Geneva, 3-20 October and 2 November) considered UNCTAD VI resolution 159(VI) and decision 160(VI). It also had before it a background note⁽¹⁴⁾ on work being done by the UNCTAD secretariat to facilitate the Board's tasks in complying with Conference resolutions on protectionism and structural adjustment.

On 20 October the Board adopted a decision⁽¹⁵⁾ by which it welcomed the discussion on a work programme on the subject and decided to remit the question to its twenty-eighth (1984) session together with a draft resolution submitted by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77, outlining priority areas for attention, on which the Board had been unable to reach agreement. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to assist the deliberations on the subject and the Board reiterated that the review of protectionism and structural adjustment should be based on Conference resolutions 131(V)⁽¹⁶⁾ and 159(VI), a 1981 Board resolution⁽¹⁷⁾ and a 1982 Board decision.⁽¹⁸⁾

In its December resolution (38/155) on the report of UNCTAD VI (see above), the General Assembly noted with concern that the Board had been unable to translate the resolutions and decisions of UNCTAD VI into a work programme and action.

General Assembly consideration. A draft resolution⁽¹⁹⁾ on protectionism and structural adjustment and the international trading system was submitted to the Second Committee in November by Mexico on behalf of the Group of 77. By this draft the General Assembly would have, among other things: urged States to implement fully UNCTAD resolution 159(VI); emphasized that developed countries should facilitate structural adjustment based on a dynamic pattern of comparative advantage, reiterated the need to accelerate negotiations on protectionism and structural adjustment in the Board; invited the Board to initiate at its March/April 1984 session its annual review of trading developments with a view to formulating trade policies and to make proposals to strengthen the international trading system; and urged the Board to study the generalized system of preferences (see below).

Following withdrawal of the draft text by Mexico on behalf of the sponsors, the Second Committee decided to recommend that the Assembly should refer to its 1984 session a draft resolution contained in a note by the Secretariat.⁽²⁰⁾

This draft, originally submitted in 1980⁽²¹⁾ and revised in 1981,⁽²²⁾ had been considered in 1982,⁽²³⁾ when it was decided to consider the question again in 1983 in the light of the outcome of UNCTAD VI. The draft resolution, addressed mainly to developed countries, would have the Assembly urge them to limit protectionist policies and facilitate measures to increase the share of developing countries in international trade. A table containing suggestions by some developed countries for changes in the draft was annexed to it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted decision 38/438.

Protectionism and structural adjustment

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to refer to its thirty-ninth session for consideration the draft resolution entitled "protectionism and structural adjustment".

General Assembly decision 38/438

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.2) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); oral proposal by Chairman: agenda item 78 (b).
Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 50, 56; plenary 102.

Multilateral trade negotiations

Trade and Development Board activities. The Trade and Development Board continued in April 1983 its discussion of multilateral trade negotiations, with particular reference to the implementation of agreements reached at the 1979 Tokyo Round of negotiations conducted by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).⁽²⁴⁾

The Board had before it a background note⁽²⁵⁾ prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat on recent developments in international trade relations, particularly at the 1982 ministerial session of GATT.⁽²⁶⁾

On 28 April,⁽²⁷⁾ the Board expressed satisfaction over the debate at its current session, took note of discussions on the issue at previous sessions of the Board, including statements by the Director of the UNCTAD Manufactures Division, and decided to defer until its October 1983 session negotiations on a draft resolution on developments in the international trading system, submitted in 1981 on behalf of the Group of 77,⁽²⁸⁾ calling for an annual Board review of international trading system developments, taking into account decisions by UNCTAD VI.

Trade preferences

During 1983, UNCTAD and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) continued their joint technical assistance project on the generalized system of preferences. Discussion also continued on a proposed global system of trade preferences among developing countries.

Generalized system of preferences

The UNCTAD Committee on Manufactures, which met at Geneva from 14 to 22 March 1983 (see below), reviewed the report of the Special Committee on Preferences on its eleventh (1982) session⁽²⁹⁾ and adopted a set of agreed conclusions, in which it reaffirmed the objectives of the generalized system of preferences and agreed that there should be improvements in the system, taking into account the needs of developing countries, particularly LDCs. The Committee invited UNDP to extend beyond 1983 the UNCTAD/UNDP project on assistance to developing countries for the fuller utilization of the generalized system. On 28 April, the Trade and Development Board decided that the report of the Special Committee on its 1982 session should be remitted to the Special Committee's 1984 session.

UNCTAD VI action. In July, UNCTAD VI adopted resolution 159(VI)⁽⁴⁾ on international trade in goods and services, part III of which dealt with the generalized system of preferences (GSP). By this resolution, the Conference agreed that developed countries should make improvements in their schemes in accordance with GSP. It was also agreed that special attention be given to products not adequately covered by existing schemes in both the agricultural and industrial sectors and to those of interest to LDCs. The interests of developing countries enjoying special advantages and the need to find ways of protecting their interests should be taken into account.

The Conference further agreed that: preference-giving countries modifying their schemes should afford adequate opportunity for consultations on difficulties or other matters; the Trade and Development Board should study the operation of GSP to assess its stability and effectiveness; the rules of origin should be further liberalized and harmonized and their operation simplified; and the rules for cumulative origin should also be improved. UNDP was invited to continue to support the UNCTAD/UNDP technical assistance programme beyond 1983 to permit developing countries to benefit adequately from the schemes, and the programme's scope should be expanded to cover other laws and regulations of preference-giving countries affecting the exports of developing countries.

The Conference also agreed that special attention be given to LDCs to provide the fullest possible duty-free treatment.

In taking this action, UNCTAD VI considered a resolution on the subject in the Buenos Aires Platform.⁽⁵⁾ By that text, the Conference, considering the importance of GSP for the expansion of trade of developing countries and keeping in view the problems being faced by them in the operation of those programmes, would have decided that developed countries should significantly improve GSP, broaden its scope of application and incorporate a greater degree of flexibility into the related procedure.

The Platform text also included a paragraph by which the Conference would have decided that more stability and security should be introduced into GSP schemes, their non-discriminatory nature be ensured and the existing benefits to developing countries be preserved, avoiding the introduction of discriminatory measures such as those applied under the concept of graduation or its use to exert political or economic pressure. The Platform text would have had the Conference decide that the Trade and Development Board should establish a set of multilateral guidelines for the operation of GSP rather than study its operation. Also, whereas the final text called for the UNCTAD/UNDP technical assistance programme to be expanded to cover laws of preference-giving countries, the Platform text called for the Board to establish a study programme on this issue.

The reference to providing the fullest possible duty-free treatment for LDCs, contained in the last paragraph of the final text, was not included in the Platform resolution.

Technical co-operation

During 1983, assistance to developing countries for fuller utilization of GSP continued through a joint UNCTAD/UNDP technical assistance project. The main objectives of the project were: to promote expansion and diversification of exports from developing countries; to assist preference-receiving countries by providing information on GSP schemes and training officials dealing with GSP and related matters; and to mobilize support from preference-giving countries and preference-receiving countries in a position to do so, in order to enable the latter to derive the fullest possible benefits from GSP.

During the year, the project organized workshops in Burundi, Ethiopia, Paraguay and Tunisia. It also provided assistance to the regional project for Asia and the Pacific for seminars/workshops in Burma, China, India, Malaysia, Nepal and the Republic of Korea. Assistance was also provided for the regional project's advisory missions to Bhutan, Maldives and Viet Nam.

Details on 1982 and 1983 technical co-operation activities were contained in a report⁽³⁰⁾ to the Special Committee on Preferences.

Global system of trade preferences among developing countries

UNCTAD VI action. UNCTAD VI had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report⁽³¹⁾ on economic co-operation among developing countries. In reviewing major programme areas, the report pointed out that developing countries had continued preparations to establish a global system of trade preferences (GSTP) with the technical support of the UNCTAD secretariat.

Following adoption in October 1982 of the Group of 77 Ministerial Declaration on GSTP⁽³²⁾ and of a Trade and Development Board resolution⁽³³⁾ requesting UNCTAD secretariat support for a 1983 meeting on the subject, it was expected that future secretariat work would entail providing support for the negotiations in the form of analytical studies, trade data and meetings servicing. There would also be a need to assist individual countries and groups of developing countries wishing to participate in the negotiations.

On 2 July, in resolution 139(VI)⁽⁴⁾ on UNCTAD activities regarding economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC) (p. 413) UNCTAD VI decided to continue implementing resolution 127(V),⁽³⁴⁾ to request the Trade and Development Board and the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries to adopt forward-looking decisions and to consider effective support measures, and to call on the Committee to consider ways of giving further impetus to ECDC, particularly in relation to establishing GSTP, taking into account a proposal submitted by the Group of 77 (see below).

By the Buenos Aires Platform decision⁽⁴⁾ on economic co-operation among developing countries, the Conference would have decided to support full implementation of resolution 127(V) and reiterated the need for a substantial technical and administrative contribution by the UNCTAD secretariat and other international organizations, particularly in establishing GSTP among developing countries, ensuring the participation of interested Group of 77 members.

Action by the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries. In 1983, the third session of the UNCTAD Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries (p. 414) considered the question of GSTP. In a 5 October resolution,⁽³⁵⁾ the Committee called on the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to continue ECDC activities designed to promote trade expansion, particularly in relation to GSTP. The Committee also recommended that the Trade and Development Board take into account proposals made on GSTP during its third session, including those annexed to the Committee's report, with a view to taking a decision on all outstanding aspects of the matter.

Annexed to the report were a draft resolution on support for the negotiation of GSTP, submitted by Lebanon on behalf of the Group of 77, and two informal texts submitted to the Committee Chairman's informal consultations.

The Committee on ECDC had before it a report⁽³⁶⁾ of a meeting convened to enable the developing countries participating in the negotiations on GSTP inter alia to define the nature, scope and extent of the support requested from UNCTAD (Geneva, 2-11 May), held pursuant to an October 1982 Board resolution.⁽³⁷⁾ Annexed to the meeting's report was a proposal submitted on behalf of the Group of 77 on support required from the UNCTAD secretariat for negotiation of GSTP.

Trade and Development Board action. On 15 October, after considering the report of the Committee on ECDC,⁽³⁸⁾ the Trade and Development Board adopted by a roll-call vote of 49 to none, with 9 abstentions, a resolution⁽³⁹⁾ on provision in the UNCTAD calendar for meetings on GSTP.

By this resolution, the Board requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to provide in the 1984 calendar for up to four weeks of meetings enabling the developing countries participating in the negotiations on GSTP to continue the necessary work towards the establishment of the system. On 20 October, this resolution was reaffirmed by the Board without vote, following which Group B (developed market economies) reiterated that it dissociated itself from any assertion that a decision to reaffirm the resolution had been taken by consensus.

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

UNCTAD VI action. In considering trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems and all trade flows resulting therefrom, UNCTAD VI had before it an UNCTAD policy Paper on the problems of expansion of trade and intensification of economic co-operation among those groups and suggested possible multi-lateral action.

On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent decision 145(VI)⁽⁴⁾ on UNCTAD activities related to the subject. By that decision the Conference requested member States and the UNCTAD secretariat to further implement UNCTAD IV resolution 95(IV)⁽⁴¹⁾ and decided to remit to the October session of the Trade and Development Board an informal text, which had been remitted to the Conference by the Board in 1982⁽⁴²⁾ and amended during negotiations.

The four-part informal text, annexed to the decision, called for further expansion of East-West trade and trade between developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, called on those socialist countries and the developing countries to give new impetus to their co-operation and expand its volume, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to take action in several specific areas, and decided to establish within UNCTAD an advisory service on developing trade between the two country groupings.

The Buenos Aires Platform text⁽⁴⁾ on this item contained a number of suggestions regarding trade expansion and increased economic relations between the developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. It was recommended that the latter should: contribute to developing countries' efforts to diversify and intensify their trade; embody in their economic plans measures to provide increased imports from developing countries; improve their economic assistance to developing countries and fulfil the targets for transfer of resources set out in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)⁽⁴³⁾ and the 1981 Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;⁽⁴⁴⁾ and take various financial measures to benefit the developing countries. The Platform text also suggested that the UNCTAD secretariat be requested to support member States in strengthening trade and economic relations between the developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

Trade and Development Board action. On 29 October, the Trade and Development Board decided⁽⁴⁵⁾ to remit to its 1984 autumn session the informal text annexed to Conference decision 145(VI) (see above). By this decision, the Board also requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene, for one week in 1984, an ad hoc group of experts to consider expanding trade and economic relations between countries having different economic and social systems. It further requested him to ensure support for implementing UNCTAD technical assistance projects and programmes concerning trade between developing countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe, invited UNDP to contribute to their financing and invited voluntary contributions.

For the Board's consideration of this item, the UNCTAD secretariat had prepared a report⁽⁴⁶⁾ which reviewed trends and policies in this area, with an addendum containing statistics in tabular form.

Technical co-operation

In 1983, a special trust fund arrangement was set up under the USSR/UNDP Trust Fund for Training in the USSR of Specialists from Developing Countries⁽⁴⁷⁾ for UNCTAD activities for development of trade between socialist countries of Eastern Europe and developing countries. For this purpose, the USSR made a contribution to UNDP (75 per cent in rubles and 25 per cent in convertible currency) for a period of 3 years. Under this programme, a seminar was held in Moscow in September/October for officials, trade representatives and economic counsellors from Arab countries to widen their knowledge of trading with socialist countries in Eastern Europe and of the prospects of expanding and diversifying exports.

UNDP-financed regional projects included assistance to African countries in expanding economic relations with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and studies on economic relations between Latin American countries and countries members of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance.

Trade promotion and facilitation

During 1983, United Nations bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and to facilitate the movement of goods in international commerce by harmonizing procedures, standardizing documents and developing new data processing and communication methods for exports, imports and transit. The main originator of technical co-operation projects in this area was the International Trade Centre (ITC). A resolution on strengthening ITC, particularly in relation to commodities, was adopted by UNCTAD VI. An UNCTAD intergovernmental group of experts met to consider ways of eliminating restrictive business practices as barriers to trade flows.

International Trade Centre

During 1983, the International Trade Centre (ITC), under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and GATT, continued its technical co-operation activities, serving as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes.⁽⁴⁸⁾

ITC reported an overall decrease in expenditures on projects implemented in 1983, citing serious stagnation in financial resources available for multilateral co-operation activities. Trust fund resources had declined during the year, partly due to the appreciation of the dollar in relation to currencies of some donor countries. The number of UNDP-financed projects, however, had increased. Thus, UNDP's share in total resources available increased significantly, reflecting the higher priority given to trade promotion activities by a number of developing countries.

In Africa, country projects increased to 19 from 16 in 1982 and regional projects increased from 5 to 9, with almost all new projects being implemented in LDCs. In Asia and the Pacific, country projects increased to 28 from 23, with 7 regional projects compared to 9 in 1982. In Latin America, country projects rose to 16 from 10 in 1982 and regional projects remained at 12. In Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East, technical co-operation activities were again negatively affected in 1983 by scarcity of resources and delays in launching new projects.

Approximately 35.6 per cent of the ITC programme was devoted to export market development, 20.9 per cent to institutional infrastructure for national trade promotion, 16.9 per cent to manpower development, 12.9 per cent to specialized national trade promotion services, 4.4 per cent to import operations and techniques, 3.6 per cent to multinational trade promotion, 2.8 per cent to the special programme of technical co-operation with LDCs, 1.9 per cent to technical co-operation with national chambers of commerce, and 1 per cent to trade promotion oriented to rural development.

ITC activities in 1983 for export market development included expansion of its computerized import and export information systems. Under its import-export contact programme, the Centre increased the number of company profiles on exporters in developing countries and importers in developed and developing countries to almost 15,000. Publication of information began in September with a series of trilingual trade contacts directories, about 15 issues of which were produced in 1983 and 50 planned for 1984. The Centre dealt with about 1,300 requests for special trade information, up 9 per cent over 1982. It added some 7,000 items to its information files by scanning periodicals and other materials, and issued four monographs on trade channels. The first edition of a World Directory of Trade Promotion Organisations and Other Foreign Trade Bodies was also published. Market development services included: generic market research for products of interest to several developing countries; programme and project formulation missions; specific marketing research for individual countries and dissemination of the results, including recommended marketing strategies for target markets; development of products showing export potential; lecturing at product-oriented workshops and seminars; and selection and back stopping of experts and advisers. Supply and demand surveys continued in Asia and the Caribbean, as did an inter regional UNDP-financed supply and demand survey project.

With regard to institutional infrastructure for trade promotion at the national level, the Centre appointed a senior adviser on institutional aspects of foreign trade promotion to develop an integrated national trade promotion programme planning approach, with special consideration to the needs of LDCs. Programming and consultancy missions were undertaken to Egypt, Ghana, Guatemala and Turkey.

In the area of specialized national trade promotion services, a course was held for packaging designers from Pakistan and the Philippines (Karachi, Pakistan, October) and a package design clinic to improve the graphic designs of Egyptian export packages and labels took place (Amsterdam, the Netherlands, December), followed by a four-day symposium in Cairo on the development of export packages. A two-day workshop was held on the same subject (Manila, the Philippines, July) and included an exhibition of over 300 European consumer and industrial packages. Shorter presentations on packaging were given in various countries.

With regard to multinational trade promotion, ITC continued market promotion projects for jute and jute products in Western Europe and the United States, and completed implementation of a UNDP-financed project to assist the international pepper community in market intelligence. Work also continued on establishing an international spice group.

ITC's special programme of technical co-operation with LDCs attempted to identify critical export problems in programme countries. Fact-finding and programming missions were undertaken to Cape Verde, the Gambia and Guinea-Bissau.

Trade promotion activities oriented to rural development included an advisory mission for a Pakistani national project on exporting fresh fruits and vegetables to some Middle East countries. Fact-finding and programming missions on product selection and assessment of export development needs were carried out for Malawi, Sierra Leone and Zimbabwe.

Total ITC expenditure in 1983 was $27.5 million. Of this amount, technical co-operation activities accounted for $14.9 million compared to $16.1 million in 1982.⁽⁴⁹⁾ Trust fund contributions furnished $9.5 million of the 1983 amount for technical co-operation; the remainder, $5.4 million, was provided by UNDP. The Centre's 1983 regular budget of $8.3 million, covering operations at its Geneva headquarters, was contributed in equal parts by the United Nations and GATT. As at 31 December, ITC had a headquarters-based staff of 71 Professionals and 128 in the General Service category. It had 517 experts assigned to projects during the year.

JAG action. The Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on the ITC, at its sixteenth session (Geneva, 21-28 March),⁽⁵⁰⁾ endorsed the ITC third medium-term programme (1983-1985). Among recommendations made by the Group on ITC technical co-operation activities were that priority be given to identifying export potential in developing countries and to encouraging development of products for export. It also suggested that ITC activities emphasize: trade problems of LDCs; product adaptation and development in Africa; consideration of level of development in providing assistance; and technical co-operation with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe to expand trade between them and developing countries.

Regarding financing and organization, JAG recommended that the Centre continue to search for new donors and further to develop relations with the World Bank, the regional development banks, bilateral aid programmes and the Commission of the European Communities. The Group unanimously recommended that ITC should seek, through its parent bodies, executing agency status with UNDP.

As a special topic, JAG discussed a consultant's report on the ITC import operation and techniques programme,⁽⁵¹⁾ and generally endorsed its recommendations.

UNCTAD VI action. On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent resolution 158(VI)⁽⁴⁾ on strengthening ITC, particularly in relation to commodities. By this resolution the Conference requested ITC to support the implementation of the Integrated Programme for Commodities (see below), and to this end to co-operate closely with other agencies, particularly UNCTAD and GATT, and to enlarge its programme for providing technical assistance to developing countries, in particular the LDCs, in market research, market development and promotion in the commodity field. The Conference invited the Executive Director of ITC to take action to increase the level of voluntary contributions to ITC to provide for the commodity promotion programme, and urged States members of UNCTAD to consider making such contributions, to strengthen commodity-related ITC activities.

Trade and Development Board action. On 20 October, following its consideration of the JAG report,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Trade and Development Board adopted a resolution⁽⁵²⁾ on the status of ITC vis-à-vis UNDP and strengthening of the Centre. By this resolution, the Board endorsed the JAG recommendation that the Centre should seek executing agency status with UNDP in respect of trade promotion activities and called on the Centre to maintain close collaboration with UNCTAD and GATT. It also invited Governments, in implementing Conference resolution 158(VI) (see above), to announce voluntary contributions to the Centre for its 1984 and 1985 activities at the 1984 session of JAG and to complete such announcements at the twenty-ninth session of the Trade and Development Board in 1984.

Trade facilitation

During 1983, the UNCTAD Special Programme on Trade Facilitation (FALPRO) continued to provide the focal point in an international network of national trade facilitation bodies and interested international organizations. FALPRO's activities included advising Governments on the simplification and harmonization of trade procedures and documentation in order to eliminate technical obstacles to trade. Various manuals, directories and code systems in trade facilitation, established jointly by UNCTAD and the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), were maintained and updated during the year. Four issues of Trade Facilitation News were issued by ECE and FALPRO in 1983.

Restrictive business practices

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices held its second session at Geneva from 21 to 30 November,⁽⁵³⁾ the first having been held in 1981.⁽⁵⁴⁾ The Group was established by the Trade and Development Board as a forum for consultation on matters related to the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices, approved by a United Nations conference and adopted by the General Assembly in 1980.⁽⁵⁵⁾

The Group had before it two studies by the UNCTAD secretariat on restrictive business practices related to the provisions of the principles and rules: one on collusive tendering,⁽⁵⁶⁾ and the other on the effects on international trade transactions of restrictive business practices in the services sector by consulting firms and other enterprises in relation to the design and manufacture of plant and equipment.⁽⁵⁷⁾

Also before the Group was a note by the UNCTAD secretariat⁽⁵⁸⁾ which reported on steps taken by States to meet their commitments under the principles and rules, and reviewed legislative and other developments in restrictive business practices, including the technical assistance needs of developing countries.

For its consideration of the revised draft of a model law or laws on restrictive business practices, the Group had before it a paper⁽⁵⁹⁾ prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat giving elements for provisions of such a model law.

On 30 November, the Group adopted a resolution⁽⁶⁰⁾ by which it decided to consider at its third session, scheduled for November 1984, proposals to develop further the principles and rules for submission to the 1985 United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices. The Group expressed regret that its invitation to UNDP and member States to make financial contributions-for technical assistance and advisory and training programmes on restrictive business practices, particularly for developing countries-had not produced the desired result, reiterated that invitation and invited member States to pursue in the UNDP Governing Council the allocation of resources for such programmes.

The Group recognized the adverse effects of collusive tendering, especially on the trade of developing countries, took note of the UNCTAD report⁽⁵⁶⁾ and comments made on it by the Group, requested the UNCTAD secretariat to consider further developing the study in the light of additional information from Governments, and called on States to legislate to control collusive tendering.

The Group also took note of the UNCTAD study on restrictive practices in the services sector⁽⁵⁷⁾ and of the Group's comments, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to identify restrictive business practices in that field, primarily those faced by prospective new exports, in particular from developing countries, and decided to consider the study in 1984.

The revised draft of the model law(s) on restrictive business practices⁽⁵⁹⁾ and the Group's comments thereon were welcomed, and it was decided that the next steps in that work should be: to revise the model law(s), taking into account Government comments, and to submit the new draft to the Group's 1984 meeting; and to compile a handbook on restrictive business practices legislation.

The Group took note of the 1982 Annual Report on Restrictive Business Practices and the quarterly information notes by the UNCTAD secretariat, which were to be continued. It called on States to provide information and asked the UNCTAD secretariat to inform States of information available.

Commodities

Various aspects of commodity issues were considered in UNCTAD's specialized bodies during 1983.

The UNCTAD Committee on Commodities held its tenth session at Geneva from 26 January to 8 February 1983.⁽⁶¹⁾ The Committee reviewed the world commodity situation in general, progress in implementing UNCTAD resolutions relating to commodities, including resolution 93(IV) on the Integrated Programme for Commodities,⁽⁶²⁾ and international activities outside UNCTAD concerning individual commodities, and discussed liberalization of barriers to trade in primary and processed commodities. The Committee also discussed a policy paper on commodity issues (see below) prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for UNCTAD VI. No conclusions were reached on issues discussed; the Committee Chairman, however, was asked to prepare a summary of proceedings on his own responsibility.

The Chairman's summary covered all agenda items discussed. He stated that there had been general agreement on the gravity of the world commodity crisis, which was a source of great difficulty for the developing countries in particular, although some countries felt that it was only part of the deep economic recession.

A report⁽⁶³⁾ prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat reviewed developments in world commodity trade, with emphasis on developing countries, and evaluated the immediate prospects for trade in major primary commodities. The report analysed patterns of world trade in major groups of primary commodities during the two preceding decades, and developments in individual commodity markets were surveyed. In concluding remarks, the growing importance of developing countries in world trade was noted, as was the fact that trade among developing countries had been rising faster than their total world trade. Manufactured goods seemed to be the most dynamic sector of trade among developing countries. Since demand for agricultural raw materials and minerals depended on industrial growth, there was potential for expansion of trade among developing countries in those products, too, if the rate of industrial growth in developing regions was to accelerate. Available information indicated that the granting of mutual tariff preferences within regional integration schemes may have contributed to the rapid expansion of intraregional trade.

The Committee had before it the report of its Permanent Sub-Committee on its third session, held at Geneva from 17 to 26 January.⁽⁶⁴⁾ The Sub-Committee had before it live studies prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat on the processing, marketing and distribution of coffee, copper, jute, sugar and tea. Other reports prepared by the secretariat contained suggestions on a framework of international co-operation on processing, marketing and distribution of primary commodities, and a synthesis of comments of Governments, international organizations and other bodies on the studies discussed at the Sub-Committee's 1982 session.⁽⁶⁵⁾

On 28 April, the Trade and Development Board took note of the Committee's report.⁽¹⁰⁾

UNCTAD VI action. For its consideration, UNCTAD VI had before it a policy paper⁽⁶⁶⁾ prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat on commodity issues. The paper discussed the sharp fall in primary commodity prices between 1980 and 1982 and its implications for the world economy. The paper noted that the fall, which had driven many prices to their lowest level: in half a century, had compounded the burden of developing countries in coping with the severe recession in the developed market-economy countries.

Measures proposed in the report included that Governments ratify the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities⁽⁶⁷⁾ by September 1983 for it to become operational by January 1984 (see below), that UNCTAD consider holding an intergovernmental review to identify guidelines to strengthen commodity agreements, and that there should be negotiations on new and more flexible commodity agreements.

Regarding commodity prices, it was proposed that interim agreements be negotiated for commodities listed in Conference resolution 93(IV)⁽⁶²⁾ but not covered by existing agreements, that interim stocking and/or supply management be considered, that the Common Fund arrange financing for interim commodity agreements, that IMF liberalize its buffer stock financing facility, and that the World Bank and regional development banks increase their assistance to developing countries in meeting transitional costs of internationally agreed supply management measures. It was recommended that IMF expand and liberalize its compensatory financing facility for shortfalls in export earnings and that the socialist countries of Eastern Europe consider a programme of support for shortfalls in developing countries' earnings from commodity exports to those countries.

Proposed longer-term measures included negotiations to establish a complementary facility for commodity-related shortfalls in export earnings and agreement on intergovernmental machinery for those negotiations, commitment by developed market-economy countries to improve market access for primary and processed commodities, and a request to the socialist countries of Eastern Europe to enlarge commitments to purchase primary and processed commodities from developing countries. Regarding processing and marketing of primary commodities, it was recommended that there should be agreement in principle on a facility for financing investment in non-fuel mining, that there should be a commitment to improve market transparency, including monitoring of commodity contracts in international trade, and agreement on increased support for marketing and distribution of commodity exports of developing countries.

The report proposed special measures for commodity exports of LDCs, including special arrangements for those countries as part of the proposed enlargement and liberalization of the IMF compensatory financing facility. Especially advantageous terms for LDCs should be incorporated in any new commodity-related compensatory financing facilities and in a new investment facility to finance mining investment and processing of raw materials in developing countries, should these be established. It was also recommended that special attention be paid to LDCs within a programme of technical support for developing countries in processing and marketing their primary commodities.

On 2 July, the Conference adopted two resolutions on implementing the Integrated Programme for Commodities.

It adopted without dissent resolution 155(VI)⁽⁴⁾ on stabilizing and strengthening commodity markets. By this resolution, the Conference, expressing concern about the limited progress in negotiating international commodity agreements under the Integrated Programme and about the vulnerability of commodity markets, urged Governments to reaffirm their commitments made in adopting resolution 93(IV). It urged countries to stabilize commodity markets and join existing commodity agreements to strengthen their effectiveness.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to convene, at an early date, negotiating conferences on commodities on which preparatory work had reached an advanced stage, to conclude international agreements. The Conference also requested that preparatory work on other commodities be finalized. The Committee on Commodities was requested to provide a forum for interested Governments to consider project proposals or other arrangements on hides and skins within the context of the Integrated Programme.

The Conference decided that the Committee should examine, in the area of commodities of particular export interest to developing countries which were not covered by international arrangements, the feasibility of provisional arrangements to be applied temporarily to mitigate sudden price collapses. It reaffirmed that commodity agreements could be revised only according to their respective provisions and by member countries in their own forums, and requested the Trade and Development Board to convene a special session of the Committee on Commodities to examine the role of international commodity agreements negotiated within UNCTAD in the Integrated Programme.

Countries were requested to participate actively in negotiating a new International Sugar Agreement and the Conference urged that negotiations on an international tropical timber agreement be finalized (see below).

Multilateral and bilateral sources, including UNDP, were requested to consider financing the elaboration into full projects of the summary project proposals on developmental measures approved by preparatory meetings under the Integrated Programme, and the UNCTAD Secretary-General was invited to take action in this regard. These sources were further requested to consider financing activities such as seminars and workshops to promote the objectives of the Integrated Programme.

Governments were urged to minimize disruptions of international commodity markets when disposing of government-held non-commercial reserves, and the Committee on Commodities was requested to review problems in implementing that decision and to report thereon to the Board.

There were several major differences between resolution 155(VI) and the Buenos Aires Platform text on this item.⁽⁴⁾ By the Platform resolution, UNCTAD would have recalled its resolution 126(V)⁽⁶⁸⁾ on the United Nations Conference to Negotiate an International Arrangement to Replace the International Wheat Agreement, 1971, as extended, and urged all Governments to resume negotiations to conclude a new International Wheat Agreement. The Conference adopted a separate resolution on the International Wheat Agreement (see below). By the Platform text, UNCTAD would have reaffirmed the indicative character of the list of commodities covered by resolution 93(IV)⁽⁶²⁾ and would have decided to include hides and skins and leather in that list.

The Platform text would also have had UNCTAD request its Secretary-General to explore sources of finance for interim commodity agreements and requested the Committee on Commodities to adopt a set of guidelines or code of conduct for national stockpile operations which disrupted international markets, including establishing arrangements within UNCTAD for international surveillance of such operations.

UNCTAD VI also adopted without dissent resolution 156(VI)⁽⁴⁾ on implementing the Integrated Programme for Commodities in the area of processing, marketing and distribution, including transportation. By this resolution, the Conference reaffirmed the need for increased local processing by developing countries and greater participation by them in marketing and distribution, including transportation, of commodity exports. It requested the Permanent Sub-Committee on Commodities to proceed with its consideration of studies on processing, marketing and distribution of individual commodities, decided that a special session of the Committee on Commodities be convened to elaborate frameworks for international co-operation in processing, marketing and distribution of commodities of export interest to developing countries, and requested the Committee to report on that session to the Trade and Development Board not later than 31 December 1984. The Trade and Development Board was requested, preferably at a special session, to decide, on the basis of that report, on further action to be taken.

The Buenos Aires Platform resolution⁽⁴⁾ on the same issue differed in a number of respects from resolution 156(VI), including the addition of a paragraph to have UNCTAD urge developed countries to abstain from applying new restrictive measures, to eliminate customs duties and internal taxes levied on commodities imported from developing countries, as well as other restrictions, and in particular to eliminate all forms of tariff escalation affecting exports of semi-processed and processed commodities from those countries. The Platform text would also have had UNCTAD request its Secretary-General to convene a negotiating conference on frameworks for international co-operation in processing, marketing, transportation and distribution of commodity exports of developing countries.

Common Fund for Commodities

Preparations continued in 1983 on arrangements for the Common Fund for Commodities, a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing. Additional States adhered to the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities.⁽⁶⁹⁾ Although the Agreement was open for signature and ratification at Belgrade during UNCTAD VI, by the end of the year it had not been ratified, accepted or approved by the required minimum of 90 States necessary for its entry into force.

UNCTAD VI action. After considering a report by the UNCTAD secretariat,⁽⁷⁰⁾ submitted in response to a 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁷¹⁾ on progress made towards the entry into force of the Agreement, UNCTAD VI, on 2 July, adopted without dissent resolution 153(VI).⁽⁴⁾ It expressed concern at the slow progress in signing and ratifying the Agreement, reaffirmed its support for the Fund and for the entry into force of the Agreement without further delay, and urged that efforts be made for the Fund's operations to begin as soon as possible after the Agreement entered into force, preferably by 1 January 1984. The Conference hoped that LDCs and other developing countries whose ratification had been delayed by inability to pay their capital subscriptions would be able to ratify by taking advantage of offers by the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries, Norway and the European Economic Community to pay their subscriptions.

Governments parties to commodity agreements providing for either international buffer stocks or internationally co-ordinated national stocks were invited to consider ways of associating their international commodity organizations with the Fund for the purposes of the First Account, and all countries, particularly developed ones, which had not announced pledges to the Second Account were invited to do so at an early date. Governments were further invited to consider projects for financing through that Account.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to report to the Assembly's 1983 session on progress towards entry into force of the Agreement, and the Preparatory Commission for the Fund was requested to finalize its work.

In addition to drafting changes, the major difference between the Conference text and the Buenos Aires Platform resolution on the same subject⁽⁴⁾ was the addition of the invitations to Governments to consider associating international commodity organizations with the Fund and to consider projects for financing through the Second Account.

Signatures and ratifications

As at 31 December 1983, the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities⁽⁶⁹⁾ had been signed by 111 States and the European Economic Community, and 68 States had formally adhered by ratifying, accepting or approving it. Of these, 17 States signed the Agreement and 29 adhered during 1983 (italicized in the lists below).

The States which had both signed and adhered to the Agreement as at 31 December were:

Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Burundi, Canada, Central African Republic, China, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

In addition, the Agreement had been signed but not adhered to by the following States:

Afghanistan, Angola, Belgium, Bhutan, Brazil, Cape Verde, Chad, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, Italy, Jamaica, Liberia, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Peru, Portugal, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Spain, Suriname, Thailand, Togo, Turkey, United States, Yemen.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with UNCTAD VI resolution 153(VI), a report⁽⁷²⁾ on the status of the Agreement was submitted to the General Assembly in October 1983. The report recalled that the Agreement was to enter into force after: (i) it had been ratified, accepted or approved by a minimum of 90 States, accounting for at least two thirds of the Fund's directly contributed capital of $470 million; and (ii) at least 50 per cent of the $280 million target for pledges of voluntary contributions to the Second Account had been met. While the latter requirement had been met by 31 March 1982, the initial deadline for entry into force, the former requirement had not. In June 1982,⁽⁷³⁾ the deadline had been extended until 30 September 1983.

By 30 September, the Agreement had been signed by 110 States and ratified, accepted or approved by 64 States accounting for 41.47 per cent of the Fund's capital. Conditions for entry into force had, therefore, not been fulfilled.

The report noted that, since the States that had ratified the Agreement were empowered to decide on a new period for fulfilment of requirements for its entry into force, the UNCTAD Secretary-General would be consulting the States concerned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/156 without vote.

Signature and ratification of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and 37/211 of 20 December 1982 and resolution 153(VI) adopted on 2 July 1983 by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its sixth session,

Noting with appreciation the offer made by the States members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, as well as by Norway and the European Economic Community, to pay the full capital subscriptions of the least developed countries and a number of other developing countries concerned,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities,

Reiterating its concern at the slow rate of progress in the signing and ratification of the Agreement, and regretting that the Agreement did not enter into force on 30 September 1983,

1. Reaffirms its strong support for the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities and for its early entry into force;

2. Expresses the hope that all States that have signed but not yet ratified, accepted or approved the Agreement will expedite the necessary action to that effect and strongly urges all States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Agreement without any further delay;

3. Decides to review the implementation of the present resolution at its thirty-ninth session.

General Assembly resolution 36/156

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.2) without vote, 14 December (meeting 56); draft by Vice-Chairman, based on informal consultations (A/C.2/38/L.113); agenda item 78 (b).

Financial implications for the 1984-1985 budget

In a note of 15 September 1983 to the General Assembly concerning preparatory work for bringing the Common Fund into operation,⁽⁷⁴⁾ the Secretary-General requested $942,000 under the UNCTAD section of the 1984-1985 programme budget, representing the unspent balance of an advance of $1,750,500 made by the Assembly in 1980.⁽⁷⁵⁾ The amount was to be fully reimbursed by the Common Fund once it was declared operational.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions recommended approval of the Secretary-General's request, also involving an additional provision of $49,000 for staff assessment.⁽⁷⁶⁾

On 17 November, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee approved without vote the additional appropriations for 1984-1985.

individual commodities

Agricultural products

In a policy paper⁽⁶⁶⁾ on commodity issues, prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for UNCTAD VI, it was reported that positive steps had been achieved in the continuing negotiation of agreements for certain agricultural products which focused on commodity development issues, such as research and development, productivity improvement and cost reduction and market promotion. The report noted, however, that a number of the commodities involved also suffered from substantial market instability and/or unfavourable price trends, and that remedial action was an essential element in a longer-term commodity development strategy.

Trade in agricultural products was referred to in identical provisions of resolutions dealing with food problems adopted by the Economic and Social Council in July (1983/71) and by the General Assembly in December (38/158). Both bodies urged that, in implementing food aid policies and programmes, a greater volume of food and agricultural products be acquired from food-exporting developing countries, including through triangular transactions. Additional measures by developed countries to liberalize agricultural trade were called for, as was improved international co-operation by cereal-exporting and -importing countries to avoid instability in the international cereals market adversely affecting developing countries. There was an expression of urgent need to find multilateral solutions to problems of trade, access, competition and supply relating to agricultural products, and relevant institutions were called on to find solutions, taking into account the special needs of developing countries.

Jute. The first session of the Preparatory Committee for the International Jute Council, established in accordance with the International Agreement on Jute and Jute Products, 1982,⁽⁷⁷⁾ was held at Geneva from 24 to 27 May 1983. The Agreement was opened for signature from 3 January 1983. As of 31 August, the requirements for entry into force of the Agreement on the part of exporting countries was fulfilled, with four countries representing almost 99 per cent of world exports having signed. Requirements for entry into force would be met when 20 countries, representing 65 per cent of world imports, had deposited instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession. By 31 August, six importing countries accounting for some 8.5 per cent of world imports had deposited such instruments, and a further nine importing countries accounting for some 32 per cent of world imports had notified that they would apply the Agreement provisionally.

Sugar. In 1983, two sessions of a United Nations Sugar Conference were held at Geneva under the auspices of UNCTAD to prepare a successor agreement to the 1977 International Sugar Agreement.⁽⁷⁸⁾ The objective of drawing up a new agreement was to stabilize the world price of sugar, which was 6 cents a pound, compared with the range of 13 to 23 cents built into the 1977 Agreement, which was still in force, and with a peak of 28.67 cents in 1980. At the conclusion of the first part of the Conference (2-20 May), a resolution⁽⁷⁹⁾ was adopted, by which the Conference, noting the progress made in preparing a successor Agreement, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to reconvene the Conference for three weeks later in the year and requested the Conference President to undertake consultations to facilitate its work.

The second session of the Conference (12-30 September) resulted in progress on the regulatory mechanism and price structure of the new Agreement, and on rules for small exporter participants. It also appointed a new working group on the role of medium-sized exporters. The Conference asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene a third session in February 1984 and requested its President to continue consultations with delegations in the mean time.

By resolution 155(VI) (see above), UNCTAD VI requested all producing and consuming countries to participate actively in negotiating a new International Sugar Agreement to stabilize the world sugar market.

Tea. Following the agreement reached at the 1982 Third Preparatory Meeting on Tea⁽⁸⁰⁾ on the need to further consider elements of an international tea agreement, the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Tea held its fourth session at Geneva from 6 to 13 October 1983.⁽⁸¹⁾ The Group decided that the Fourth Preparatory Meeting on Tea would be provisionally scheduled for March 1984, assuming that a meeting of tea-exporting countries planned for January 1984 was successfully concluded. Meanwhile, the UNCTAD secretariat, in consultation with FAO, would prepare an annotated framework for an international tea agreement.

Among documents before the Group was the report of the Meeting of Experts from Tea-Exporting Countries on Minimum Export Standard!; (Geneva, 3-5 October).⁽⁸²⁾ Although the experts confirmed that a minimum export standard would be a desirable feature of any tea agreement, some felt that outstanding technical work on tea analysis should be completed before they could commit themselves to specific levels for any parameters.

Tropical Timber. In 1983, pursuant to a request made by the Sixth Preparatory Meeting on Tropical Timber in 1982,⁽⁸³⁾ the UNCTAD Secretary-General convened the United Nations Conference on Tropical Timber, which culminated on 18 November in the adoption of the International Tropical Timber Agreement, 1983.⁽⁸⁴⁾ The Conference was held at Geneva in two parts (14-31 March and 7-18 November).

The Agreement's objectives were to: provide a framework for co-operation between tropical timber-producing and -consuming countries to expand and diversify trade in tropical timber and improve structural conditions in the market; promote research and development to improve forest management and wood utilization; encourage the processing of tropical timber in producing member countries; improve marketing and distribution; and encourage reforestation and forest management, and development of national policies for utilizing and conserving tropical forests and maintaining their ecological balance.

The Agreement was to be opened for signature from 2 January 1984, and would enter into force on 1 October 1984 or any date thereafter, if 12 Governments of producing countries holding at least 55 per cent of the total votes and 16 Governments of consuming countries holding at least 70 per cent of the total votes had signed the Agreement definitively or had ratified, accepted, approved or acceded to it.

The Agreement established an International Tropical Timber Organization, which would function through the International Tropical Timber Council and three permanent committees. The location of the Organization's headquarters would be decided by the Council at its first session. The Council and permanent committees would formulate and implement projects in research and development, market intelligence, processing, and reforestation and forest management, and would monitor trade and ongoing activities in the tropical timber economy. The Organization would seek financing for projects approved by the Council.

A Conference resolution established a Preparatory Committee for the Council, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene a first meeting of the Preparatory Committee, and to convene the first session of the Council as soon as possible after the entry into force of the Agreement.

By resolution 155(VI) (see above), UNCTAD VI had urged that negotiations on the Agreement be finalized as soon as possible.

Wheat. On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent resolution 154(VI),⁽⁴⁾ on the United Nations Conference to Negotiate an International Arrangement to Replace the International Wheat Agreement, 1971, as extended. UNCTAD VI recalled its 1979 resolution 126(V)⁽⁸⁵⁾ on the same subject, noted ongoing co-operation between producers and consumers in the International Wheat Council, recalled the Council's extension of the International Wheat Agreement, 1971, to 30 June 1986, upon its expiry on 30 June 1983,⁽⁸⁶⁾ noted the commitments of donor countries under the Food Aid Convention, 1980,⁽⁸⁷⁾ and the increasing reliance of developing countries on imports of cereals, particularly wheat. UNCTAD VI urged Governments to consider within the Council the early resumption of the Conference, in order to conclude as soon as possible a new agreement to contribute to the efficient operation of the international wheat market, taking into account the interests of developing countries.

A Buenos Aires Platform resolution on implementing the Integrated Programme for Commodities urged resumption of the Conference in order to conclude a new Agreement as soon as possible but no later than 30 June 1984 (see above).

The provision of the UNCTAD VI text was echoed in resolutions by the Economic and Social Council in July (1983/71) and by the General Assembly in December (38/158), with both urging that the International Wheat Council act at its next session.

Minerals and metals

In a policy paper⁽⁶⁶⁾ on commodity issues prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for UNCTAD VI, it was pointed out that for minerals-unlike agricultural commodities, for which Governments were expected to provide solutions to market problems-producers and processors had developed their own means of protection against market instability. Examples were long-term contracts, hedging on commodity exchanges, producer pricings and the maintenance by mining corporations of a favourable ratio of debt to equity. Attempts to stabilize mineral markets by international regulation had thus been seen as unnecessary by large segments of the industry, even in many developing producing countries.

Tungsten. The UNCTAD Committee on Tungsten held its fifteenth session at Geneva from 12 to 16 December 1983 to determine action to enable producing and consuming countries to reach agreement on measures to stabilize the market and convene a negotiating conference.⁽⁸⁸⁾ The Committee also reviewed UNCTAD reports on developments in the tungsten market, on tungsten price indicators, and on ways of improving the quality of the quarterly bulletin Tungsten Statistics.

The UNCTAD secretariat was asked to continue to follow developments concerning tungsten price indicators, structural and technological change within the industry, and the demand for tungsten in certain sectors, and to report to the Committee at its sixteenth (1984) session.

The Committee suggested establishing a sessional working group to assess the current tungsten situation and the outlook for the next year, as well as certain new statistical issues. The secretariat was requested to prepare a paper outlining the composition, terms of reference and operating procedures of the proposed group.

Regarding the quarterly bulletin Tungsten Statistics, the Committee made several suggestions on how to fill gaps in the statistics and improve the timeliness of the publication.

Manufactures

The UNCTAD Committee on Manufactures, at its tenth session (Geneva, 14-22 March 1983), reviewed developments and restrictions of trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures.⁽⁸⁹⁾

Among documents before the Committee was an UNCTAD secretariat report⁽⁹⁰⁾ on trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures of developing countries, which noted that developed market-economy countries continued to be the most important export markets for manufactured products of developing countries, accounting for 58 per cent of the total in 1980. However, there had been a marked deceleration in 1981 in the rate of growth of such exports, with many developing countries experiencing actual declines. In contrast, the reverse flow of trade grew at a faster rate in 1981 than in the 1970s, indicating the relative importance of developing countries as markets for the developed countries. Trade among developing countries grew rapidly during the 1970s, and between 1979 and 1980 the increase approached 34 per cent. Exports from those countries to the centrally planned economies increased by more than 70 per cent in 1980 over 1979. However, this still accounted for less than 3 per cent of the developing countries' total exports in 1980.

Following its review, the Committee adopted a set of agreed conclusions expressing concern about growing protectionism in international trade (see above) and stressing that progress in that area could not be attained without restoring confidence in trade relations. The Committee also stressed the importance of continuing to examine trade issues within its mandate, taking into account the interest of all countries, in particular the developing and especially the least developed among them.

Following its consideration of trade-related industrial collaboration arrangements, the Committee adopted a decision⁽⁹¹⁾ by which it requested the UNCTAD secretariat, in co-operation with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), to continue work on trade-related industrial collaboration between enterprises of developed and developing countries, devoting special attention to new forms of co-operation, including joint ventures to strengthen production of and trade in manufactures of developing countries, including those manufactures involving the use of advanced technology. The secretariat was further requested, in co-operation with UNIDO and other international organizations, to compile and analyse information on industrial collaboration arrangements, to provide the salient features of such arrangements, and to submit recommendations for further work.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to prepare a report on the secretariat's work in this area for the Committee's eleventh session.

Trade and Development Board action. On 28 April, the Trade and Development Board took note of the agreed conclusions adopted by the Committee on Manufactures and of the Committee decision on trade-related industrial collaboration, and decided that the report of the Special Committee on Preferences on its 1982 session, which had been noted by the Board in 1982, should be remitted to the Special Committee's 1984 session.⁽¹⁰⁾

Consumer protection

During 1983, the question of elaborating a set of general guidelines for consumer protection, taking particularly into account the needs of developing countries, was considered by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

In accordance with a 1981 Council request,⁽⁹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁹³⁾ to the Council's July 1983 session containing a set of draft guidelines based on the conclusions of his 1981 report on consumer protection.⁽⁹⁴⁾ The draft guidelines also drew on international legal instruments and the work of international organizations, as well as on the findings of a 1981 intergovernmental regional consultation held at Bangkok, Thailand.⁽⁹⁵⁾ They had also been revised in the light of Government comments which were summarized in the 1983 report to the Council.

The draft guidelines focused on the physical safety of consumers and the protection of their economic interests, and the related questions of safety and quality standards, distribution facilities, consumer redress and consumer education and information. Special measures were proposed for food, water and pharmaceutical products because of their importance to developing countries. Finally, the guidelines dealt with international co-operation on consumer protection.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1983/174, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee:

Consumer protection

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 28 July 1983, the Council decided:

(a) To take note of the report of the Secretary-General on consumer protection and of the statements made on the draft guidelines contained therein by delegations during the discussion of the item entitled "International co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system" at the second regular session of 1983 of the Council;

(b) To take note also of the comments made during a preliminary exchange of views on the draft guidelines for consumer protection, conducted at the second regular session of 1983 of the Council;

(c) To transmit the report of the Secretary-General, together with a synopsis of the comments made thereon and any written comments on the guidelines that have been or will be received from Governments, to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session;

(d) To urge strongly that those Governments that have not yet provided comments on the draft guidelines do so at the earliest opportunity;

(e) To recommend the General Assembly to determine the procedure for the consideration of the draft guidelines in the light of paragraphs (c) and (d) above, with a view to their adoption by the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/174

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/120) without vote, 25 July (meeting 17); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1983/C.3/L.17); agenda item 19.
Meeting number. ESC 40.

In October, in accordance with the above decision, the Secret General transmitted to the General Assembly a note⁽⁹⁶⁾ containing a synopsis of Government comments which were both of a general nature and on specific sections of the guidelines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/147.

Consumer protection

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/62 of 23 July 1981, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue consultations on consumer protection with a view to elaborating a set of general guidelines for consumer protection,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on consumer protection, containing the draft guidelines on consumer protection,

Noting Economic and Social Council decision 1983/174 of 28 July 1983, in which the Council, inter alia, recommended that the General Assembly should determine the procedure for the consideration of the draft guidelines with a view to their adoption by the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session,

1. Urges Governments that have not already provided comments on the draft guidelines in response to the Secretary-General's note verbale dated 17 September 1982 to do so as quickly as possible;

2. Decides that the draft guidelines on consumer protection should be considered by the Economic and Social Council during its first and second regular sessions of 1984, perhaps in a sessional working group, with a view to their adoption by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the importance of the guidelines for consumers in general and for those in the developing countries in particular, to extend all possible assistance towards the finalization and adoption of the draft guidelines.

General Assembly resolution 39/147

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/701) without vote, 21 November (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.75), based on informal consultations on 5-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.29); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 36, 45; plenary 102.

The text approved by the Second Committee differed from the 5-nation draft (Bangladesh, Ivory Coast, Pakistan, Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago) which was withdrawn. By that text the Assembly would have established a working group to consider the draft guidelines during the Council's 1984 first regular session and agreed that the Council would consider the group's results at its second regular session with a view to finalizing the guidelines and ensuring their adoption by the Assembly in 1984.

Finance

International financial and monetary issues were discussed in various United Nations bodies during 1983, with the question of external debt of developing countries being of particular concern. At UNCTAD VI, resolutions were adopted calling for assistance to developing countries with debt-servicing difficulties, and for policy decisions by developed countries and IMF to revive development momentum in the developing countries. Developed countries were also urged to reaffirm their commitments under the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade regarding official development assistance (ODA) targets, and adequate funding of multilateral development finance institutions was called for. The Conference also called for the establishment of an expert group to consider the need for an additional complementary financing facility to compensate for the export earnings shortfalls of developing countries and requested the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board to finalize its consideration of a possible international export credit guarantee facility to finance export credits extended by developing countries.

In December, the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters finalized guidelines for co-operation against tax evasion.

Financial policy

The Committee for Development Planning (CDP), meeting in April,⁽¹⁾ considered the most serious threat to world economic recovery to be chaotic international financial relations. Real interest rates remained very high and major exchange rates were still badly out of line. Investment was held back by large excess capacity and pervasive uncertainties.

The CDP Working Group on the International Monetary and Financial System met at United Nations Headquarters on 19 and 20 December to prepare material for CDP's study of the subject at its 1984 session.⁽²⁾ The Working Group discussed: the international economic situation and monetary and financial obstacles to recovery; measures to be taken within the existing international framework; the need for new arrangements or institutional change; and prospects for negotiations on monetary and financial reform.

The Group noted that lack of effective co-ordination of macro-economic policies was most conspicuous with regard to industrialized countries. While high interest rates were not an absolute deterrent to investment in those countries, they compounded international debt problems, had a devastating impact on the balance of payments in developing countries and ruled out development projects.

Regarding negotiations on monetary and financial reform, the Group suggested that there was need to oversee the re-examination of the arrangements for international economic co-operation which was under way on many political levels, and in that connection the Group cited a number of high-level economic summits or meetings. It proposed that the Secretary-General appoint a small high-level expert group, assisted by organizations concerned, to monitor these discussions, identify areas of agreement and conflict, and report back within 18 months.

For its consideration of international monetary and financial issues, UNCTAD VI had before it a report on the subject prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat.⁽³⁾ The paper reviewed external payments problems of developing countries; trends in the international monetary and financial system; adjustment, financing and development; the global dimension of payments adjustment and financing; private finance and development; prospects for multilateral development finance and ODA.

The report stated that the previous decade had seen the international monetary and financial system become increasingly privatized, while the capacity of Governments to influence variables such as exchange and interest rates, and the magnitude and direction of international capital flows had progressively diminished. In the mid-1970s, some developing countries were able to secure substantial external financing but many, such as the least developed and other low-income countries, continued to depend on the Bretton Woods institutions, regional development banks and bilateral donors. Flows from such sources grew in the 1970s but failed to keep abreast of needs, thereby constricting severely the policy choices open to those countries. More recently, private flows had fallen off, accentuating the liquidity and financing shortage and making all groups of developing countries increasingly dependent on official institutions.

The report's proposals for improving the financial position of developing countries included: that IMF should review its conditionality policies, increase its allocations of special drawing rights (SDRs), double its quotas and liberalize its compensatory financing facility; that the World Bank should accelerate its regular lending programme and enlarge its structural adjustment lending programme; that negotiations on the seventh replenishment of IDA, covering the fiscal period 1985-1987, be intensified; that donor countries accelerate progress towards the target of 0.7 per cent of ODA contained in the International Development Strategy for the 1980s;⁽⁴⁾ that generalized debt measures be taken regarding developing countries' debt obligations; and that private banks be encouraged to make a full contribution to the financial effort required, including debt rescheduling.

In the longer term, a process of reform was needed to correct structural deficiencies in the international monetary and financial system and should be set in motion swiftly, the report stated.

On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent resolution 162(VI)⁽⁵⁾ on international monetary issues. In a preamble to the five-part resolution, the Conference recognized the responsibility of developed countries in promoting conditions conducive to world recovery, urged them to consider the international implications of their policy decisions, recognized the importance for world economic growth and sustained development of promoting convergence of economic performance and greater exchange rate stability and a stable monetary framework, and recognized IMF's responsibility in the world monetary system.

Regarding SDR allocations, the Conference stressed the importance for world economic growth of an adequate, non-inflationary supply of global liquidity, noted that IMF should review allocation of SDRs based on growth trends, inflation and international liquidity, noted the difficult world economic situation and especially the inadequacy, of reserves of many developing economies, and invited IMF to consider those factors in its deliberations on allocating SDRs.

With respect to resources, the Conference urged IMF members to recognize the need for the Fund to be adequately provided with resources to meet its members' financing and adjustment needs, and invited the Fund to consider: timely quota increases; activating the general arrangements to borrow; and recourse to other borrowed resources.

Regarding access, the Conference noted the severe impact of external developments on the balance of payments of many IMF members, emphasized the importance of maintaining an adequate level of access to Fund facilities, and invited IMF to complete expeditiously the reviews of its compensatory financing facility and the policy of enlarged access to its resources.

On conditionality, the Conference encouraged IMF members to consult with the Fund at an early stage of emerging difficulties in their balance of payments and invited the Fund to encourage such approaches to establish how it could help, including financing of a suitable programme to restore a sustainable external position and help to maintain external confidence. It invited IMF to keep under review and respond positively and pragmatically to financing and adjustment problems faced by its members, in particular by developing countries, and underlined that, besides sound demand management policies, measures to improve supply conditions and strengthen the productive base of the economy also needed to be emphasized, having regard to avoiding disruption of the development process of developing countries. IMF was encouraged to maintain its principle of uniform treatment of its members, paying due regard to their domestic social and political objectives, economic priorities and circumstances, including the causes of balance-of-payments problems.

With respect to surveillance, IMF members were urged to co-operate with the Fund to ensure its surveillance of the exchange rate and economic policies of all members. In that connection, the Conference took note of the commitment of several major industrialized countries to co-operate with the Fund in near-term policy actions leading to convergence of economic conditions in the medium term. The Conference invited IMF to give close attention to exchange-rate policies, to improve its monitoring of exchange-rate developments, in particular those of major economies which had wide-ranging impact, and to draw attention to policies that should be pursued by members to reduce exchange-rate instability. It noted the interest of developing countries in further study of the following questions: establishing a link between SDRs and development finance, reviving the IMF Trust Fund, establishing a low-conditional, medium-term facility, and making a special adjustment of small quotas below ten million SDRs.

The Buenos Aires Platform⁽⁵⁾ contained a position paper by the Group of 77 on financial and monetary issues which described the development crisis and proposed immediate policy measures in connection with IMF, the World Bank, regional development banks, UNDP, IFAD, export credits, ODA, direct private foreign investment, external debt and the 1981 Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries.⁽⁶⁾ Medium- and long-term actions were proposed for international monetary reform, the framework of international financial cooperation for development and institutional arrangements.

Also contained in the Buenos Aires Platform was a resolution on multilateral financial institutions and international monetary reform calling for immediate, medium- and long-term measures. Immediate measures to be taken by IMF included substantial allocations of SDRs, establishment of a link between SDRs and development finance, substantial increase of Fund quotas and expansion and liberalization of its compensatory financing facility with special arrangements for LDCs, a review of the principles of conditionality, and greater participation of developing countries in negotiations on the international monetary system.

Immediate measures to be taken by the World Bank included accelerated disbursement of its lending programmes, raising the share of programme loans to at least 25 per cent of total lending, revising conditions of structural adjustment lending and increasing its volume, enlarging its resources, considering co-financing as a supplement to its regular resources, raising the permissible margin of preference to 25 per cent, ending its policy of graduation for access to regular capital resources, providing for increased lending to all recipients in real terms in the seventh replenishment of IDA, and improving the position of developing countries in the World Bank.

The strengthening of multilateral regional development finance institutions through capital increases in real terms was called for, and they were urged to adopt special programmes to accelerate disbursements.

Medium- and long-term measures for international monetary reform included negotiations to correct structural deficiencies in the international monetary system.

By this resolution, the Conference would also have invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to keep the implementation of the measures under review and report on progress to the Trade and Development Board.

On 14 December, a draft decision⁽⁷⁾ was introduced in the General Assembly's Second Committee by Mexico on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries. By this decision, the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to consult with Governments on an international conference on money and finance for development and to report to the Assembly not later than at its thirty-ninth (1984) session. The Committee Chairman stated that there would be a further exchange of views in due time within the possible framework of that proposal.

Debt servicing

In a March report⁽⁸⁾ to the Trade and Development Board, the UNCTAD secretariat reviewed implementation of a 1980 Board resolution⁽⁹⁾ calling for action relating to the debt problems of developing countries. The report stated that the full potential of the set of detailed features to deal with debt-servicing problems, annexed to the resolution, had not been realized. Most debt renegotiation exercises had not attached great importance to the development of debtor countries, but had focused primarily on restoring debt-servicing capacity in the short term.

Although IMF conditionality was central to solving a country's debt problems, the Fund's programmes were primarily short-term in nature and the associated conditionality was appropriate primarily to situations of excess demand, which precluded consideration of a problem before it manifested itself in a balance-of-payments crisis.

In that the timing of debt-rescheduling exercises and the length of the consolidation period remained tightly linked to Fund programmes, improvements in some aspects of the procedures for debt renegotiation appeared to depend on changes in Fund practices.

There had been a few cases where the central role of an investment programme supported by aid donors, multilateral development institutions, IMF and official and private creditors had been recognized. Those isolated cases suggested that arrangements could be substantially improved.

The report proposed that: least developed and other low-income countries could consider requesting international consideration of their debt problems in the context of a donor group, aid consortium or consultative group, which would frame an action programme including recommendations on the amount of debt rescheduling required; middle-income countries, for which official and officially guaranteed export credits were especially important, could make use of a special preparatory session of the Paris Club creditor group for a similar purpose; and countries whose debt-servicing difficulties involved mainly commercial banks could benefit by consideration of their problems by a special tripartite commission involving Governments, bank representatives and international institutions.

In the report on its April session⁽¹⁾ CDP noted that for countries with large foreign debts the years ahead would be difficult. If economic recovery was too long delayed and rescheduling done at high rates of interest, the need for extensive cancellation would arise. With regard to rescheduling official debt, the Committee stated that more systematic criteria and practices, including renegotiation, would be in the interest of both creditors and debtors. Establishing an international banking institute as a clearing-house for information among private banks might serve a stabilizing function. The Committee supported the idea of a debtors' club or institute with the object of sharing market experience.

On 22 April, the Trade and Development Board decided⁽¹⁰⁾ to consider further the subject of debt at its October session. Although the subject was discussed at that session, the Board took no action.⁽¹¹⁾

In its report on international financial and monetary issues⁽³⁾ prepared for UNCTAD VI, the UNCTAD secretariat stated that debt-servicing problems had become widespread and increasingly unmanageable. Major disruptions during the preceding decade included large swings in the prices of primary commodities, food and energy, rapid increases in prices of manufactured goods imported by developing countries, slackening of import demand in developed countries, the deep and continuing recession that began in 1980, the precipitous rise in interest rates and associated swings in exchange rates, the collapse of primary commodity prices and growing protectionism in developed countries. Current account deficits of non-oil-exporting developing countries had risen threefold from $10 billion in 1972 to $30 billion in 1978, and had then more than doubled, reaching $70 billion in 1981.

On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent resolution 161(VI)⁽⁵⁾ on external debt, by which it urged developed countries to implement commitments undertaken under a 1978 Trade and Development Board resolution⁽¹²⁾ calling for retroactive adjustment of terms of ODA to relieve the debt problems of developing countries. Developed countries were called on to respond in a positive manner to requests from LDCs for alleviation of debts resulting from ODA loans provided by the developed country concerned. The Conference invited developed countries to consider alleviating immediately the debt service of developing countries resulting from official and officially guaranteed loans.

The Conference invited Governments, within the context of commitments undertaken under a 1980 Board resolution⁽⁹⁾ (see above) to continue to improve the functioning of official creditor groups in response to debtor countries in acute debt-servicing difficulties, requested the Board to review implementation of the guidelines contained in that resolution at its twenty-eighth (1984) session, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare a report on the issue for the Board at that session and, in that respect, invited him to consult with the Chairman of the Paris Club and with multilateral organizations and Governments, with a view to augmenting the basis for review of the resolution's implementation.

In pursuance of the commitment to implement the Board's 1980 resolution, the Conference stressed that debt-restructuring operations should contribute to debtor countries' efforts to re-establish their creditworthiness and regain access to financial resources on appropriate terms, thereby restoring their development momentum; stressed the need for continued collaboration between all parties involved in dealing with debt-servicing problems and noted the results achieved through co-operation between debtors, official and private creditors and multilateral institutions; and invited bilateral and multilateral donors to ensure that their actions were based on an adequate assessment of the economic situation and medium-term development objectives of the countries concerned.

The Conference emphasized the desirability of a debtor country's approaching IMF in the early stages of emerging debt difficulties and invited

IMF and the World Bank to continue to respond to adjustment problems faced by developing countries in particular. All bilateral official creditors were urged to facilitate debt rescheduling operations on an equitable basis.

The desirability of the competent multilateral institutions improving information on capital market operations and other financial flows was also stressed and debtor countries were invited to collaborate with those institutions to improve external debt data. Multilateral institutions were invited to respond favourably to developing countries' requests for technical support in dealing with debt situations.

The Buenos Aires Platform⁽⁵⁾ contained a position paper by the Group of 77 on financial and monetary issues (see above), part of which dealt with external debt. The Group of 77 felt that, at UNCTAD VI, Governments should agree to restructure the external debt of developing countries and review the procedures governing the rescheduling of official debt owed to developed countries. Measures with respect to official debt to be adopted by developed countries would include: rapid implementation of the 1978 Board resolution on debt;⁽¹²⁾ and emergency and generalized measures to reduce the debt burden of developing countries for payments on official and officially guaranteed loans.

Principles and procedures governing debt rescheduling would include: for official debt, review and modification of the guidelines contained in the 1980 Board resolution;⁽⁹⁾ establishment of a framework for developing countries, prior to debt renegotiations, to convene ad hoc meetings of official and private creditors to consider the country's economic situation and development objectives.

Regarding private debt, the position paper noted that the absence of internationally agreed guidelines for their restructuring had seriously undermined developing countries' efforts to reschedule in a manner commensurate with their development requirements. There was need for close monitoring of capital market operations to increase information available to debtor countries. In the light of developments in the institutional framework in which debtors and creditors operated, developing countries needed to formulate appropriate responses to promote their interests, with assistance from international institutions such as UNCTAD.

By a resolution on external debt contained in the Buenos Aires Platform, the Conference would have urged that the following emergency measures be agreed for debt payments on official and officially guaranteed loans: amortization payments on bilateral ODA loans due in 1984-1985 be added to the end of the scheduled repayment period; for official and officially guaranteed export credits from developed countries, a substantial proportion of scheduled interest and amortization payments be consolidated, with the consolidated amount to be repaid over ten years with a five-year grace period; and that multilateral development finance institutions contribute to the emergency relief measures by providing additional programme assistance at least equal to the debt-service obligation of the borrower to the institutions.

By this resolution, the Conference would also have decided to establish a framework for debtor countries to convene meetings with creditors, urged monitoring of capital market operations and called on international institutions to assist developing countries to formulate appropriate responses to promote their interests.

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/195 on implementing the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) (p. 433) in which it urged developed donor countries to implement fully and rapidly the commitments undertaken in the 1978 Trade and Development Board resolution⁽¹²⁾ in respect of LDCs, and called upon developed countries to respond positively to requests from LDCs for alleviation of their debt burdens resulting from ODA loans provided by the developed country concerned.

Development finance

Official development assistance

The UNCTAD secretariat report⁽³⁾ on international financial and monetary issues prepared for UNCTAD VI contained a chapter on ODA which stressed that such assistance played a unique role in supporting developing countries' efforts towards structural transformation of their economies through providing concessional finance to activities and sectors that did not normally respond to commercial incentives. However, the flow of concessional finance had failed to respond to the enlarged needs of developing countries, despite efforts by, members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and some developed donors.

Aid from members of the Development Assistance Committee (DAC) of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) in 1981 was still only half of that called for in the International Development Strategies for the Second⁽¹³⁾ and Third⁽⁴⁾ United Nations Development Decades, and the level of DAC aid was virtually unchanged from the early 1970s. However, the performance of some other donors had improved and a number had adapted their programmes to provide programme assistance and payments support.

On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent resolution 164(VI)⁽⁵⁾ on ODA by which it urged the developed countries to reaffirm their commitment under the current International Development Strategy⁽⁴⁾ with respect to the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product (GNP) as ODA, and recognized the importance to the LDCs that flows of ODA be doubled by 1985. The Conference also recognized that: donor and recipient countries should together ensure that aid was provided in support of development objectives and used with increasing effectiveness; more flexible ODA be provided; improved co-ordination between donors and recipients be encouraged; efforts be made to improve the modalities and quality of aid; ODA be on an increasingly assured, continuous and predictable basis; and ODA loans and grants be untied.

The Conference also instructed the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade to monitor the above measures, and urged developed donor countries to provide the necessary information for the Committee at its eleventh (1984) session.

A resolution on ODA contained in the Buenos Aires Platform⁽⁵⁾ would have had UNCTAD VI urge that developed countries that had not met the 0.7 per cent target do so by 1985, and in any event not later than the second half of the decade, with the target of 1 per cent being reached as soon as possible thereafter, as envisaged in the Strategy.⁽⁴⁾

By this text UNCTAD would also have urged that: interim targets be fixed for achieving the objective over the period; developed donor countries fulfil their commitment to double ODA to LDCs and/or to meeting a 0.15 per cent target by 1985; there be a significant increase in programme lending in ODA flows and ODA not be a vehicle for trade promotion activities by developed countries; and that UNCTAD VI agree on measures to increase ODA flows.

In a 20 December resolution on implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCs (p. 433), the General Assembly urged donor countries, within the context of the SNPA and of progress towards the 0.7 per cent target, to attain 0.15 per cent of their GNP as ODA or to double their ODA to LDCs by 1985 or as soon as possible thereafter.

Multilateral development finance

The UNCTAD secretariat report⁽³⁾ to UNCTAD VI on international financial and monetary issues pointed out that during the previous decade, long-term development finance channelled through multilateral development finance institutions had grown at an average annual rate of 22 per cent. However, the share of multilateral finance in the net flow of long-term financing to developing countries had remained unchanged at about 13 per cent between 1970 and 1981.

On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent resolution 165(VI)⁽⁵⁾ by which it agreed that an adequate level of funding of multilateral development finance institutions was essential for continuing growth in their lending in pursuance of their development role. The Conference invited the World Bank to: study the scope for a 5 per cent per annum expansion in real terms of its lending programme, beginning in 1985; review, preferably every six months, its special action programme of accelerated disbursements; consider increases in programme lending; consider, in the design of structural adjustment loans, the burden of adjustment carried by the disadvantaged in recipient countries; pursue its efforts to increase co-financing with public funds and the banking sector; maintain priority on investment in energy development, and review institutional proposals for an energy affiliate and other similar arrangements; continue to apply flexibility in its policy of graduation, avoiding premature phasing out of access by developing countries to ordinary lending, taking into account the availability of alternative sources of long-term development finance; and keep under review the permissible margin of preference.

The Conference called on donors to meet expeditiously their commitments to the sixth replenishment of IDA and urged that all contributions be completed in the Bank's financial year 1984. It stressed the need for negotiations on the seventh replenishment, covering fiscal 1984-1985, to be completed as soon as possible for it to become effective by 1 July 1984 at a substantial level.

Regarding regional development finance institutions, UNCTAD VI noted their important role in development efforts, welcomed their recent capital increase and fund replenishments and urged member countries to meet pledges as committed, and encouraged those institutions to adopt special programmes to accelerate disbursements.

The Conference urged Governments to provide adequate funding for UNDP and invited the UNDP Governing Council to formulate proposals to ensure long-term predictable financing. Member States were also invited to discuss, as early as possible, a second replenishment of IFAD resources.

The Buenos Aires Platform⁽⁵⁾ contained both a position paper by the Group of 77 on financial and monetary issues and a resolution on multilateral financial institutions and international monetary reform which included the Group's views on measures to be taken by multilateral institutions to assist developing countries in resuming their development momentum (see above under FINANCIAL POLICY).

Trade-related finance

The second part of the tenth session of the UNCTAD Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade was held at Geneva from 1 to 17 March 1983,⁽¹⁴⁾ the first part having been held in December 1982.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Committee evaluated the operational features of an export credit guarantee facility (see below). It also discussed: requirements of an effective system of international financial co-operation, flow of financial resources to and from developing countries, access to capital markets, international monetary issues, and financial resources for development. The Committee used the report⁽³⁾ on international financial and monetary issues, prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for UNCTAD VI, as a basis for its discussions; the Committee Chairman summed up that debate on his own responsibility.

Export credit insurance

At its March meeting,⁽¹⁴⁾ acting in response to a 1982 Trade and Development Board decision,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade set up a sessional committee to evaluate the operational features of an export credit guarantee facility. The proposed facility would assist developing countries in refinancing their medium-term export credits in international capital markets. In order to meet the requirements of international competition, those countries had to provide medium-term credits-causing them problems because of the delay in receiving their exchange earnings. The sessional committee had before it the 1982 report of an Intergovernmental Group of Experts on an Export Credit Guarantee Facility⁽¹⁶⁾ and an UNCTAD secretariat report⁽¹⁷⁾ dealing with the financial viability of the proposed facility, the possible implications of international guidelines for the facility, eligibility criteria for the facility's guarantees, and the experts' comments on elements of a draft agreement to establish a facility. Addenda to the report described the rules and guidelines of the International Union of Credit and Investment Insurers (Berne Union) and of the OECD on export credit, analysed the financial and administrative viability of the proposed facility, and discussed eligibility criteria, focusing on the type of export transactions which would be eligible for guarantee.

On 11 March, the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade took note of the sessional committee's report and requested the Trade and Development Board at its April session to arrange for further consideration of an international export credit guarantee facility with a view to taking an early decision on its establishment.

On 22 April, the Board decided⁽¹⁸⁾ to remit the above decision to UNCTAD VI.

On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent resolution 163(VI)⁽⁵⁾ by which it requested the Board, at its October session, to finalize its consideration of the issue.

On 20 October, the Board took note⁽¹⁹⁾ of the report of the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade on the second part of its tenth session⁽¹⁴⁾ and referred to the Committee's eleventh session a draft resolution on an international export credit guarantee facility. This draft, submitted by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77, would have had the Board urge developed countries to increase the volume of export credits available to developing countries, lift country limits on borrowing, and not impose minimum interest rates on export suppliers' credits. It would also have urged an immediate review of the OECD Arrangement on Export Credits, with a view to fully exempting export credits extended to developing countries from its stringent provisions on terms, and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to review the international arrangements in that area from the standpoint of their implications for developing countries and to report to the Board at its twenty-eighth (1984) session.

Export earnings

As it had decided in 1982,⁽²⁰⁾ the UNCTAD Committee on Commodities at its tenth session⁽²¹⁾ (26 January-8 February) resumed consideration of a proposed complementary financing facility for commodity-related shortfalls in export earnings. In addition to a 1982 report on the subject,⁽²⁰⁾ the UNCTAD secretariat also prepared reports on the operation of the IMF compensatory financing facility for temporary shortfalls in export earnings or for excessive increases in cereal import costs,⁽²²⁾ and on the functioning of commodity export earnings stabilization schemes of the 1975 Lomé (Togo) Convention⁽²³⁾ as reinforced in 1979 (a trade co-operation agreement between the EEC and the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of countries).⁽²⁴⁾

On 28 April, the Trade and Development Board took note of the Committee's report.⁽¹⁸⁾

On 2 July, UNCTAD VI adopted resolution 157(VI)⁽⁵⁾ on compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls by a roll-call vote of 90 to 1 (United States) with 10 abstentions. By this resolution, the Conference invited IMF to complete expeditiously the forthcoming review of its compensatory financing facility and to consider establishing special arrangements for LDCs. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to convene an expert group on the compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls which was instructed to consider: the need for an additional complementary facility to compensate for the export earnings shortfalls of developing countries, bearing in mind the needs of those countries most dependent on commodity exports, particularly LDCs; the nature, sources of finance and operational rules of such a facility; and the relationship of such a facility to existing facilities and inter-governmental organizations. In conducting its analysis, the group was to examine the nature and causes of export earnings instability, the role and impact of existing facilities, the impact of export earnings stabilization on commodity markets, the financial and economic costs of stabilizing export earnings, and the possible stabilizing influence of commodity agreements and the Common Fund for Commodities.

Governments were invited to make suggestions on these issues before the end of 1983; the expert group was instructed to complete its work not later than September 1984 and the UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to transmit its report to a special session of the Trade and Development Board before the end of 1984. The Board was instructed to decide on follow-up action, including the convening of a possible negotiating conference on an additional complementary facility.

The Buenos Aires Platform resolution⁽⁵⁾ on the same issue would have requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene, not later than December 1983, a preparatory meeting for a negotiating conference on the complementary facility, and in the light of progress, to convene a conference. It would also have decided that immediate relief be provided to developing countries, pending completion of the negotiation, and to that end would have urged IMF to expand and liberalize its compensatory financing facility and provide special arrangements for the LDCs within that facility, and urged the socialist countries of Eastern Europe to create a special fund to guarantee an annual supply of transferable roubles for the developing countries to compensate for shortfalls in their earnings from commodity exports to those countries.

Taxation

Following a July 1982 decision by the Economic and Social Council⁽²⁵⁾ to consider in 1983 measures to enable the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters to carry out its future work effectively, the Secretary-General submitted a July note⁽²⁶⁾ listing the Group's functions: to formulate guidelines for international co-operation to combat tax evasion; to examine the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries, adopted by the Group in 1979, and consider countries' experiences in applying it; and to study possibilities of enhancing the efficiency of tax administrations reducing potential conflicts among tax laws of various countries, and formulating policy and methodology suggestions.

The note stated that a predecessor Group had met for two weeks every two years and for that reason had taken 12 years to complete its work on the Model Double Taxation Convention; the Ad Hoc Group had been working at a similar rhythm. Since the Council had called for expeditious action in solving the problem of international tax evasion, the periodicity of the Group's meetings was highly relevant to the Council's consideration of measures to enable the Group to carry out its future work effectively, the note concluded.

On 28 July, by decision 1983/177, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Activities of Group of Experts. At its second meeting held at Geneva from 5 to 16 December 1983,⁽²⁷⁾ the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters finalized a set of guidelines for international co-operation against tax evasion, with special reference to taxes on income, profits, capital and capital gains.⁽²⁸⁾

The guidelines, together with commentaries and background information, were divided into four categories: an introduction on general aspects of information exchange and on co-operation; specific aspects of information exchange, comprising devices used by residents and non-residents, allocation of head office or parent company expenses, remuneration of employees of non-resident employers, artificial transfer prices, adjustment in artificial transfer pricing cases, and other aspects; guidelines on co-operation concerning the use of low-tax countries as tax havens, bank secrecy and the abuse of tax treaties (treaty shopping); and a guideline relating to mutual assistance between tax authorities in implementing tax laws and the recovery of tax.

The introductory guideline noted that international co-operation against tax evasion would most satisfactorily take place under the terms of treaties for the avoidance of double taxation. It could, however, be governed by provisions in a bilateral or multilateral agreement on general mutual assistance by tax authorities, or in other agreements providing for exchange of tax information.

Regarding its future work, the Ad Hoc Group proposed, in accordance with a 1982 Economic and Social Council request,⁽²⁵⁾ to review the experiences of countries in bilateral application of the Model Double Taxation Convention and monitor the Convention's impact. There was consensus that, early in 1984, a questionnaire should be sent to tax authorities of States Members inquiring about their experience in applying the Model Convention.

Also to be studied were possibilities of reducing potential conflicts among the tax systems of countries, enhancing the efficiency of tax administrations, and formulating appropriate policy and methodology suggestions.

Programme and finances of UNCTAD

Since UNCTAD VI adopted a number of resolutions affecting the work programme of UNCTAD for the 1984-1985 biennium, revised estimates for the UNCTAD section of the United Nations programme budget for that biennium were presented to the General Assembly. That section of the 1984-1985 programme budget was also discussed at the October/November meeting of the UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget.

UNCTAD programme

The Trade and Development Board--the executive body of UNCTAD--held three sessions in 1983, all at Geneva. Its twenty-sixth session was held from 18 to 28 April; its twelfth special session from 25 to 30 April and on 6 May, in conjunction with the Board's twenty-sixth session, in order to consider substantive proposals for action by UNCTAD VI (see above); and its twenty-seventh session from 3 to 20 October and on 2 November.

The Board adopted 2 resolutions and 24 decisions during 1983. Both the resolutions were adopted in October; the first called for provision to be made in the UNCTAD 1984 calendar for meetings on the global system of trade preferences among developing countries, and the second dealt with the status of the International Trade Centre (see subject headings above).

The Board's report for 1983⁽¹⁾ and the report of UNCTAD VI⁽²⁾ were considered by the General Assembly, which on 19 and 20 December adopted five resolutions dealing with various aspects of the UNCTAD programme. In those resolutions, the Assembly took note of the statement and resolutions of UNCTAD VI,⁽²⁾ decided to convene a sixth session of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology not later than the first half of 1985, called for meetings on the reverse transfer of technology, urged signature and ratification of the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities,⁽³⁾ and called for implementation of the 1981 Substantial New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries.⁽⁴⁾

Programme policy decisions

The seventh session of the Trade and Development Board's Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget⁽⁵⁾ (Geneva, 17 October-2 November 1983) completed only one substantive item of its agenda, namely its review of the UNCTAD section of the United Nations programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985 (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I). Other main issues on which work was not completed were UNCTAD's technical assistance activities, and programme evaluation, which it was agreed would be included in the agenda of the Working Party's eighth (1984) session. Meanwhile, the strengthening of UNCTAD programme evaluation was examined by other United Nations bodies during 1983 (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter II).

On 2 November, the Working Party adopted a set of agreed conclusions submitted by its Chairman, which declared that the proposed 1984-1985 United Nations programme budget relating to UNCTAD should reflect all resolutions and decisions taken by UNCTAD intergovernmental bodies and conferences, particularly UNCTAD VI. While expressing gratitude to the UNCTAD Secretary-General for information provided on the proposed programme budget, the Working Party called for increased clarity in presenting the subprogrammes and programmes when submitting the UNCTAD programme budget for 1986-1987.

A Working Party decision recommended to the Board that it schedule the eighth session of the Working Party for two weeks, before the Board's twenty-eighth (March/April 1984) session, and that it decide on the timing of the Working Party's ninth session at its twenty-eighth session.

On 2 November,⁽⁶⁾ the Board took note of the Working Party's report, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to transmit it together with comments made thereon to the appropriate United Nations bodies for consideration, and agreed that the matter of scheduling the eighth session be considered at consultations held by the UNCTAD Secretary-General.

On 3 August, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly revised estimates for the UNCTAD section of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985,⁽⁷⁾ based on a preliminary assessment of the results of UNCTAD VI, which had adopted a number of resolutions giving new direction to the UNCTAD work programme.

On 17 November, the Assembly's Fifth Committee approved by 87 votes to 2, with 7 abstentions, an appropriation of $54,505,500 as well as an additional appropriation of $689,200 for the UNCTAD 1984-1985 proposed programme budget.

Technical co-operation

Total project expenditure incurred by UNCTAD in 1983 for technical co-operation activities amounted to $15.3 million, a decline of $1 million from 1982. Allocations from UNDP totalling $13 million were the main source of funds.

The main sectors in which UNCTAD provided assistance were: shipping, ports and multimodal transport; economic co-operation among developing countries; assistance to the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries; manufactures and semi-manufactures; trade facilitation; money, finance and development; commodities; transfer of technology; trade among countries having different economic and social systems; and assistance to liberation movements.

In addition to these UNCTAD activities, the International Trade Centre (ITC) continued to provide technical co-operation for trade promotion (see above).

The third annual report⁽⁸⁾ on UNCTAD technical co-operation activities, prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for the seventh session of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget, was modified to reflect views expressed at previous sessions and included a description of UNDP programming methods and a list of ongoing projects. The report also focused on the financial crisis in multilateral co-operation and its adverse effects on UNCTAD operational activities.

Organizational questions

Conferences and meetings

Calendar of UNCTAD meetings

On 28 April, the Trade and Development Board approved a calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1983 and a tentative schedule for 1984 and 1985.⁽⁹⁾ On 2 July, by decision 166(VI)⁽²⁾ adopted without dissent, UNCTAD VI approved the 1983 calendar. On 20 October, the Board also approved the 1983 calendar, that for 1984 and the 1985 schedule.⁽¹⁰⁾

Also on 20 October, the Board adopted a decision⁽¹¹⁾—recalling a 1976 UNCTAD resolution which stated that the Board should meet at the ministerial level every two years between sessions of the Conference and noting a proposal contained in a draft resolution submitted by Venezuela on behalf of the Group of 77 that the thirtieth (1985) session be convened at the ministerial level—to postpone a decision on the matter until its twenty-eighth (1984) session and request the UNCTAD Secretary-General to hold consultations on the proposal and report to that session on their outcome.

Scheduling of Trade and Development Board meetings

On 22 April,⁽¹³⁾ the Trade and Development Board decided to refer to UNCTAD VI, through the Board's twelfth special session, consideration of Economic and Social Council decision 1983/101 by which the Board was invited to consider rescheduling its meetings so that its report, starting in 1984, could be submitted to the General Assembly through the Council at its second regular session, normally held each July. On 6 May,⁽¹³⁾ at its twelfth special session, the Board referred the matter to UNCTAD VI.

On 2 July,⁽²⁾ UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent resolution 140(VI), by which it decided that the Board should continue to hold two regular sessions annually and considered that it had no possibility of rescheduling Board sessions to conform to a 1980 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁴⁾ and to Economic and Social Council decision 1983/101.

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council considered a letter dated 5 July⁽¹⁵⁾ from the President of UNCTAD VI attaching Conference resolution 140(VI), and adopted decision 1983/184 in which it requested the Assembly at its 1983 session to consider scheduling the meetings of the Board so that, starting in 1984, its report could be submitted to the Assembly through the Council at its second regular session.

On 19 December, in decision 38/429 on rationalization of the work of the Second Committee, the Assembly requested the Board to consider scheduling its second regular session so that its reports might be available in all Assembly working languages in time for the Assembly's consideration.

Report of the Trade and Development Board

On 28 April, the Trade and Development Board adopted a decision⁽¹⁶⁾ regarding a November 1982 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁷⁾ requesting that reports of its subsidiary bodies be no longer than 32 pages. Recalling that in 1982 the Board had approved revised guidelines⁽¹⁸⁾ for its annual report and noting that its 1983 report to the Assembly would be produced in accordance with those guidelines, the Board considered that every effort was being made to comply with the request but that it might not be possible to contain Conference or Board reports within the limit.

On 2 July,⁽²⁾ UNCTAD VI adopted without dissent resolution 141(VI) by which it noted the Board's 1982 action, invited the Board to attempt to abide by the limit and authorized it to exceed the limit when fuller reporting to the Assembly was indispensable to its understanding of Board matters. The Conference informed the Assembly that it would not be possible to confine the report on its sixth session within the limit. It requested the Board, should it continue preparing the full version of its reports on its sessions, to consider dispensing with the summary records provided for its plenary meetings.

Documentation

On 20 October,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Trade and Development Board established an Ad Hoc Working Group on Documentation to identify difficulties encountered with respect to late issuance of UNCTAD documentation and to propose solutions.

Also on 20 October,⁽⁶⁾ the Board endorsed continued publication of Trade and Development: an UNCTAD Review on the following conditions: it would continue to be published annually and in English only; the number of copies would not exceed 5,000; income from sales would contribute to its financing; it would include original articles; its publication would not interfere with producing documentation for UNCTAD's normal work; and its financing would not come from funds allocated to other purposes.

Chapter V

Transport, communications and tourism

In 1983, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) continued its work on international transport issues. In addition to reviewing the world situation and UNCTAD activities in regard to maritime transport, UNCTAD subsidiary bodies and its secretariat continued work on providing training assistance, drawing up shipping legislation for marine hull and cargo insurance, investigating sea transport of bulk cargoes, proposing measures to prevent maritime fraud and harmonizing regulations on the transport of dangerous goods.

At its sixth session in June/July, UNCTAD outlined future work for the secretariat. It called for completion of drafting work on an international agreement on conditions for registration of ships, aimed at establishing a genuine link between a vessel and its flag, and jurisdiction of a flag State over ships flying its flag. The Preparatory Committee for a 1984 plenipotentiary conference on the subject adopted a draft text with alternative formulations for the conference's consideration.

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/7 calling for amended recommendations for regulations concerning the transport of dangerous goods to be submitted to Governments for their comments.

The 1974 Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences entered into force in October 1983; by year's end, 59 countries had become contracting parties. The Code was intended to open up the international shipping trade, organized in a system of liner conferences, to more countries, especially developing ones.

The United Nations marked 1983 as World Communications Year, for which the International Telecommunication Union acted as the lead agency in co-ordinating activities such as conferences, seminars and pilot projects, with special emphasis on stimulating the development of communications infrastructures.

Activities during 1983 to promote tourism included seminars and studies, concentrating on implementation of the 1980 Manila Declaration on World Tourism which provided guidelines for developing tourism, especially in developing countries. In resolution 38/146, the General Assembly urged States to apply the principles of the Declaration when formulating tourism policies and requested the World Tourism Organization to promote tourism along those lines.

Transport

UNCTAD, the main United Nations body dealing with transport, and its subsidiary bodies, particularly the Committee on Shipping, continued in 1983 to deal with problems of transport.

Maritime transport

In its 1983 annual Review of Maritime Transport,⁽¹⁾ the UNCTAD secretariat analysed the main developments in world maritime transport and assessed expected future short-term developments. Emphasis was given to developing countries, in particular to development of their merchant marines. The report, prepared in accordance with the work programme of the Committee on Shipping, stated that, for the fourth consecutive year, the annual total volume of world seaborne trade in 1983 had declined; however, the last quarter of 1983 showed some improvement, as cargo volume was 3 to 4 per cent higher than in the first quarter. Preliminary estimates for 1983 showed that world trade declined to 3.2 billion tons, as compared with 3.3 billion the year before, or a reduction of 3 per cent. The rate of decline was, however, less than in the two previous years-annual seaborne trade had declined by 8 per cent in 1982 and 3.9 per cent in 1981.

Ownership of ships involved in international trade remained concentrated in developed market-economy countries and open-registry country fleets, whose combined tonnage represented 76.1 per cent of the mid-year 1983 world merchant fleet. The share of those vessels from developing countries, however, increased to 15.3 per cent (13.6 per cent in 1982) while that of the socialist countries remained unchanged. The low participation of developing countries in the world merchant fleet continued to be disproportionate to their share of international seaborne trade. Specifically, in 1982 developing countries generated 37.9 per cent of world cargo of international trade but owned only 13.6 per cent of the deadweight tonnage, while developed market-economy countries, either directly or indirectly through open-registry countries, owned 78.4 per cent of world tonnage and generated approximately 55 per cent of world trade.

The world shipping industry continued in 1983 to be over supplied, as reflected in lower levels of the annual average freight rate indices as compared with those for 1982, with the exception of dry cargo tramp trip and crude tanker indices.

The United Nations Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences entered into force on 6 October 1983 and, by the end of the year, 59 countries had become contracting parties (see below).

The Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships continued work on the draft text for an international agreement and considered that it had advanced its work sufficiently for the holding of a plenipotentiary conference, scheduled for July/August 1984 (see below).

Shipping

In preparation for the sixth session of UNCTAD (known as UNCTAD VI) (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 6 June-2 July 1983) the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a report in January on UNCTAD shipping activities.⁽²⁾ The report provided an overview of maritime transport issues in international trade policy which had been discussed in UNCTAD, particularly those relating to structural adjustment. It described UNCTAD'S response since 1965 to shipping issues.

The report noted that the current world economic situation, accompanied by increasing protectionism, had affected the shipping industry. The institutional structure of the liner sector-the conference system-and the economic organization of the bulk market through self-regulated "exchanges" and through controls exercised by transnational corporations gave rise to problems of entry when the developing countries decided to participate in shipping. Consequently, those countries had sought to obtain an equitable and substantial share in shipping within UNCTAD. The importance they attached to shipping was highlighted by the fact that the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (1981-1990)⁽³⁾ called for structural change in the industry and for a 20 per cent share of world shipping for developing countries by 1990.

Self-regulation through market forces had not worked in liner shipping owing to market controls exercised by a few large shipowners, as personified in the conference system which inhibited entry into the market and removed price competition.

The high concentration of fleet ownership by traditional maritime countries (developed countries) had impaired the ability of developing countries to compete and increase their shipping operations.

In the report, the UNCTAD secretariat called for a practical approach to current problems and suggested that, to defuse existing tensions, UNCTAD VI reaffirm its faith in the international negotiating processes for settling disputes among States, thereby discouraging the non-observance of international agreements and existing UNCTAD mechanisms for the practical solution of problems. It was also suggested that UNCTAD VI reassert support for shipping activities being implemented by UNCTAD, and call for countries' dedication to United Nations Conventions such as that of 1974 on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences (see below),⁽⁴⁾ that of 1978 on the Carriage of Goods by Sea (the Hamburg Rules)⁽⁵⁾ and that of 1980 on International Multimodal Transport of Goods.⁽⁶⁾ The review conferences foreseen in the those Conventions would be useful in addressing problems. Emphasizing a pragmatic approach in negotiations, the report pointed to the work of the 1981 Group of Experts on bulk cargoes (see below), which, while disagreeing on the nature and extent of the barriers to entry in the bulk trades, unanimously adopted several practical recommendations to facilitate the participation of developing countries in relevant markets.

UNCTAD VI, in resolution 144(VI) of 2 July on UNCTAD shipping activities,⁽⁷⁾ requested its Secretary-General to review and update the secretariat's 1980 report on ship and port financing for developing countries⁽⁸⁾ in order to determine the availability of financial resources and organizational arrangements for those countries to increase their participation in the world seaborne transport of international trade, as envisaged in the International Development Strategy,⁽³⁾ bearing in mind UNCTAD resolutions on the financing of ships, and paying particular attention to the special problem of the least developed countries. The Secretary-General was also requested to undertake several studies: one on Governments' policies in the world shipping industry which might be detrimental to developing countries' interests, particularly investment and support policies; a preliminary study on the freight rate levels and structures of liner shipping and of selected non-liner commodities, covering dry cargoes of all kinds and liquid cargoes of vegetable origin, and of their possible effects on the exports of developing countries; a preliminary study on a non-mandatory model agreement for feeder services and trans-shipment ports; and an in-depth study on bulk terminals. Furthermore, he was called on to elaborate a standard form and model for multimodal transport documents, guidelines on the application of computer software packages to multimodal transport, and a draft programme of action for co-operation among developing countries in shipping, ports and multimodal transport, UNCTAD VI also urged the completion of international negotiations on liens and mortgages, and maritime fraud. States not contracting parties to the Convention on International Multimodal Transport of Goods and the Hamburg Rules were invited to ratify or accede to them.

In an April report⁽⁹⁾ to the May/June session of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, the United Nations Secretary-General described developments regarding the international transport of goods (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI), including UNCTAD'S work for the previous several years on marine insurance, transport by container and freight forwarding.

Preparations for the 1984 conference on registration of ships

The question of open registries of ships had been considered within UNCTAD for more than nine years. In resolution 144(VI),⁽⁷⁾ UNCTAD VI urged the expeditious completion of work on conditions for the registration of ships, particularly a genuine link between a vessel and the flag it flew and the need for flag States to exercise control over those ships. UNCTAD invited its members to participate in the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships, set up in pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly resolution.⁽¹⁰⁾

The Committee met at Geneva from 7 to 18 November 1983⁽¹¹⁾ to prepare for the 1984 plenipotentiary Conference and draft an international agreement on conditions for registration of ships. A set of basic principles governing conditions under which vessels should be accepted on national shipping registers had been elaborated in 1982⁽¹²⁾ but there remained a number of outstanding issues, in particular relating to manning, management and ownership. Elements taken into consideration by the Committee were: the contribution of the merchant fleet to the national economy of the country, the inclusion of shipping revenues in the national balance-of-payments accounts, the employment of nationals on vessels, and the beneficial ownership of the vessel. The Committee adopted a composite text for transmission to the Conference, which it annexed to its report along with a text proposed by the Chairman on manning, management and equity, and a proposal by the USSR on behalf of States members of Group D (centrally planned economies) for a draft international agreement on ship registration.

The Committee welcomed a 20 October Trade and Development Board decision⁽¹³⁾ on the dates for the Conference (5-23 March 1984). It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare draft final provisions for an international agreement concerning the time-frame for the registration of vessels, and procedures for reporting on, and review of, implementation and definitions. The draft text prepared by the Committee contained alternative formulations, reflecting the positions of different groups on such key issues as manning of vessels, equity participation in capital, bareboat charters, and identification and accountability.

In related action concerning the registration of ships, the Economic and Social Council in May adopted resolution 1983/4 on measures to improve international co-operation in the maritime interdiction of illicit drug traffic (see Chapter XXII of this section).

Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences

The Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences came into force on 6 October 1983, six months after 24 States, the combined tonnage of which amounted to at least 25 per cent of world tonnage, became contracting parties—a requirement which was met in April.

The Convention, adopted by UNCTAD in 1974,⁽⁴⁾ provided an internationally accepted regulatory framework for the operations of liner conferences. At the time it came into force, the following 59 countries, accounting for 28.7 per cent of world tonnage, had become contracting parties (those in italics became parties during 1983): Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bulgaria, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lebanon, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, USSR, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.⁽¹⁾

The fundamental objectives of the Code were to ensure the right of participation of national lines in trade to entitle them to carry a substantial share of their country's foreign trade, to balance the interests of shippers and shipowners, and to facilitate the orderly expansion of liner trade. To this end, the Code regulated the relationship between member lines of conferences, in particular the rights of admission of national shipping lines to conferences serving their country's foreign trade, and set rules for establishing pools or other types of trade-sharing arrangements in conferences as well as other internal conference activities, such as self-policing. The Code also regulated the relationship between shippers and liner conferences by establishing equitable principles for the use of loyalty arrangements as well as providing that conferences were required to hold consultations with shippers or their representative organizations on matters of concern, such as changes in freight rates and loyalty arrangements.

In resolution 144(VI),⁽⁷⁾ UNCTAD VI invited States members which had not become contracting parties to the Convention to consider ratifying or acceding to it and called on those which had already done so to implement it promptly. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to prepare a comprehensive progress report on the Convention's implementation for the Committee on Shipping.

In accordance with the Convention, the UNCTAD Secretary-General convened a meeting of the contracting parties on 13 October to receive their views on the appointment of a Registrar to administer the conciliation process provided for in the Convention. On 29 November,⁽¹⁴⁾ the United Nations Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of the financial implications for the required staff and operating expenses, requesting approval for an appropriation of $250,200 for the 1984-1985 biennium.

The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee considered the proposal on 5 December. The United States proposed that the Committee decide that the resources required to implement the activities be provided through offsetting programmatic or administrative adjustments. The Committee rejected that proposal by 64 votes to 24, with 12 abstentions. The Committee then approved without vote an additional appropriation of $142,000 for 1984-1985.

Bulk cargoes

Responding to a 1982 request by the UNCTAD Committee on Shipping,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Group of Experts on International Sea Transport of Liquid Hydrocarbons in Bulk held its first session at Geneva from 25 to 29 April 1983 and submitted an interim report concerning problems faced by developing countries seeking to participate in such transport.⁽¹⁶⁾ The report included a questionnaire for communication through Governments to major importers, exporters, traders and providers of shipping services, concerning their operations in international seaborne transport of crude oil and liquid petroleum products. The Group requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to submit the questionnaire to UNCTAD member States so that the information thus obtained could be used in preparation of a final report. This and other information would be assessed to determine whether the operations of the major importers, exporters, traders and providers of shipping services placed any barriers to the ability of shipping companies of developing countries to compete in the international seaborne transportation of those commodities, and, if so, what recommendations could be made to reduce and eliminate such barriers.

In resolution 144(VI),⁽⁷⁾ UNCTAD VI requested its Secretary-General to examine the structure of the world shipping industry with the aim of identifying the causes and effects of protectionist policies and monopolistic practices where they might exist, particularly with respect to the carriage of bulk and refrigerated cargo and taking into account the report and recommendations of the Group when they became available (the Group was scheduled to hold its second session in January/February 1984), and those of the 1981 Group of Experts on Problems Faced by the Developing Countries in the Carriage of Bulk Cargoes,⁽¹⁷⁾ with a view to drawing up conclusions and recommendations, if needed, on possible adjustments of those policies and practices and to report thereon to the Committee on Shipping.

International shipping legislation

The Working Group on International Shipping Legislation, at its ninth session held at Geneva from 31 January to 18 February 1983,⁽¹⁸⁾ considered marine hull and cargo insurance. This was the fourth session devoted to marine insurance and was aimed at formulating a set of standard clauses as non-mandatory model legislation, thus creating a more equitable, understandable and internationally acceptable legal base for marine insurance contracts. Composite texts on the two kinds of marine insurance were amended and annexed to the report.

In resolution 144(VI),⁽⁷⁾ UNCTAD VI called for the early completion of ongoing international negotiations on maritime legislation, including marine insurance, and the elaboration of model national maritime legislation.

Technical assistance and training

During 1983, the UNCTAD secretariat executed 36 technical assistance projects⁽¹⁾ financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), recipient countries and funds-in-trust, as compared with 30 in 1982. Those projects were basically concerned with providing advisory services and consultants, training (fellowships and group training), and, to a lesser degree, equipment procurement. In addition, two shipping feasibility studies were completed for two developing countries. Ten projects were initiated and six were completed. A total of 43 experts were engaged in the projects, and 970 fellows/course participants were trained. The total project budget was $2.5 million.

TRAINMAR, the interregional training programme, entered its second phase and expanded its activities to cover eight different projects. The basic objectives of TRAINMAR were: to create and strengthen local training institutions; to develop training materials for use by local instructors; and to exchange training material. By the end of 1983, 10 countries had been associated with TRAINMAR, and 12 courses were completed, attended by 870 participants.

Proposed establishment of the World Maritime University

In 1982, the International Maritime Organization (IMO), UNDP and Sweden had agreed on steps to establish a World Maritime University at Malmö, Sweden.⁽¹⁹⁾ Both UNDP and Sweden had contributed towards its establishment. Resources were being sought to cover the difference between Sweden's pledge of $1 million yearly and the estimated yearly operating costs (an additional $1 million). Those efforts to establish the proposed University, including the hiring of five administrative staff members, were described by the UNDP Administrator in a report to the UNDP Governing Council.⁽²⁰⁾ By a decision of 18 February,⁽²¹⁾ the Governing Council took note of that report.

Maritime fraud

In September 1983, the UNCTAD secretariat concluded a study on possible measures to minimize the occurrence of maritime fraud and piracy,⁽²²⁾ as requested by the Committee on Shipping in 1982.⁽¹⁵⁾ The study was prepared for submission to the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group to Consider Means of Combating All Aspects of Maritime Fraud, including Piracy, established by the Committee,⁽¹⁵⁾ which was to meet in February 1984. The report dealt with a wide variety of types of fraudulent acts and proposed reforms to minimize fraud. It divided fraudulent activities into six categories: documentary, charter party, marine insurance, deviation, miscellaneous, and piracy. In addition, it reviewed activities of other international organizations involved in combating maritime fraud and piracy, in particular IMO. It noted that the introduction of computerization had vastly expanded capabilities in handling, collating and presenting information in readily usable form and that the shipping community had begun to take advantage of this capability. It cited, as an example, the International Maritime Bureau, a non-governmental non-profit-making organization designed as a central clearing-house for information concerning maritime fraud.

According to the report, various suggestions had been made for international action to combat maritime fraud, but most had not been implemented. They involved some alteration in the existing system of conducting international shipping and trade—some requiring governmental action in the form of altering the applicable law, pursuant to international conventions or otherwise, and others requiring action only by private parties. Among the suggestions was an international convention with provisions to facilitate the exchange of information. Special mention was made of a proposal by Lebanon to IMO for a convention to suppress barratry (wrongful acts committed by the ship's master or crew to the prejudice of the owner or charterer) and unlawful seizure which would provide for broad reciprocal judicial assistance between contracting States in accordance with penal procedures.

Other proposals for further study included: establishing a central registry in which bills of lading would be deposited upon issuance and through which the transfer of title would be effected by communication by the seller and buyer, thus reducing the opportunities for documentation fraud; measures to prevent the forging of bills of lading; co-operation of banks which granted credit in investigating the validity of the documents representing the goods before paying out on the credit; the ongoing work within UNCTAD on conditions for registration of ships to reduce deviation frauds and certain types of marine insurance and charter party frauds, by improving the identifiability and accountability of shipowners and operators, as well as mortgage frauds; improved monitoring of ship movement; governmental procedures concerning the sale of goods by shipowners on voyage termination; and measures to avoid cargo insurance and port-related frauds in handling and storage.

Transport of dangerous goods

In 1983, work continued on harmonizing codes and regulations relating to the transport of hazardous substances such as liquefied gases, radioactive and toxic materials and explosives. The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods published the third revised edition of its recommendations.⁽²³⁾ In March, the Secretary-General issued a report to the Economic and Social Council describing the Committee's 1981-1982 activities and recommendations on the listing, classification, packaging and labelling of existing and new products and other matters to ensure safety during transport.⁽²⁴⁾ The report included a recommendation that, in view of the volume and urgency of its work, the Council should increase the staff of the unit for the transport of dangerous goods by one Professional and one General Service post.

In preparation for the Committee's 1984 session, the Group of Rapporteurs of the Committee met from 1 to 12 August 1983 (thirtieth session)⁽²⁵⁾ and the Group of Experts on Explosives met from 12 to 16 September (twenty-third session),⁽²⁶⁾ both at Geneva. The Group of Rapporteurs made recommendations on regulations on intermediate bulk containers, multimodal tank containers for refrigerated liquefied gases, specific aspects of packing, classification of dangerous goods and consignment procedures. The Group of Experts discussed test methods and criteria to be included in an explosives test manual, regulations on charging and transport of intermodal freight containers, and new entries or amendments to classification of dangerous goods.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1983/7 without vote. The text was based on a draft approved by the Committee of Experts and annexed to the Secretary-General's March report.⁽²⁴⁾

Work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 468 G (XV) of 15 April 1953, 645 G (XXIII) of 26 April 1957, 994 (XXXVI) of 16 December 1963, 1110 (XL) of 7 March 1966, 1488 (XLVIII) of 22 May 1970, 1744 (LIV) of 4 May 1973, 1973 (LIX) and 1974 (LIX) of 30 July 1975, 2050 (LXII) of 5 May 1977, 1979/42 of 11 May 1979 and 1981/3 of 4 May 1981,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods for the harmonization of codes and regulations relating to the transport of dangerous goods,

Bearing in mind the need to maintain safety standards at all times and to facilitate trade, as well as the importance of this to the various organizations responsible for modal regulations, while meeting the growing concern for the protection of life and property through the safe transport of dangerous goods,

Noting the increasing volume of dangerous goods being introduced into world-wide commerce and the rapid expansion of technology and innovation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and of the recommendations contained in its report with respect to the listing, classification, packaging and labelling of existing and new products, and to other matters that will ensure safety during transport;

2. Takes note of the fact that increased importance and reliance is being placed on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods by the specialized agencies and other international organizations and by Member States, which take the recommendations more and more as a guideline for their own recommendations and regulations in order to achieve internationally harmonized laws;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the contents of the report of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods:

(a) To incorporate into a new text all the new and amended recommendations made by the Committee of Experts at its twelfth session, together with any consequential changes to be introduced into existing recommendations;

(b) To publish the resulting revised text of the recommendations of the Committee of Experts in all the official languages of the United Nations as quickly as possible and in the most cost-effective manner, in accordance with the proposal in the report of the Committee;

(c) To circulate the recommendations as soon as possible to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations concerned;

(d) To make available, within existing resources and in order to maintain the standard of work at the requisite level, the improved staffing requested by the Committee for the secretariat unit servicing the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic and Social Council in their work on the transport of dangerous goods;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to examine all the implications of proposals to enlarge the membership of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods by, inter alia, converting observers into full members in view of their active participation in its work over a continuous period, and, at the same time, of widening the decision-making base of the Committee through broader geographical representation, and to report thereon to the Council;

5. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations concerned to transmit to the Secretary-General such comments as they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

6. Invites all Governments and international organizations concerned to take account of the recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods when developing appropriate codes and regulations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/7

Communications

World Communications Year

The United Nations commemorated 1983 as World Communications Year: Development of Communications Infrastructures (WCY), in accordance with a 1981 resolution of the General Assembly.⁽¹⁾ As the lead agency for WCY, the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) co-ordinated United Nations activities and follow-up action through an inter-agency committee made up of 17 international organizations. In October, the United Nations Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, the report⁽²⁾ of the ITU Secretary-General on the Year.

WCY was promoted through three main elements: national committees to co-ordinate communications policies and to serve as a forum for concerted action, conferences and seminars to provide analytical material on issues relating to communications policies and development, and pilot projects to stimulate the development of communications infrastructures. The role of UNDP representatives was stressed with regard to their continued assistance to national committees. As at 11 May 1983, 57 countries had created their own WCY committees. Pilot projects, funded by voluntary contributions, were selected for their applicability to a number of countries. Since the establishment of the WCY secretariat in 1982, five information bulletins had been published and sent to hundreds of organizations, companies and individuals wishing to participate in the Year. Two press kits were prepared and dispatched to 6,000 journalists and editors and to all United Nations information centres. Within the framework of WCY, ITU organized the Fourth World Telecommunication Exhibition, known as Telecom 83, which presented the latest advances in communications technology. A series of seminars covered key issues highlighting the telecommunications requirements of both industrialized and developing countries and the efforts to finance national, regional and world-wide development plans.

The 1982 ITU Plenipotentiary Conference⁽³⁾ set up an Independent International Commission for World-Wide Telecommunications Development, composed of high-level representatives and financed by independent non-commercial sources. In follow-up action on WCY, the Commission was to examine relationships between countries in telecommunications involving technical co-operation and a transfer of resources, to recommend methods for stimulating telecommunications development in the developing world, and to consider how ITU could stimulate activities to achieve a more balanced expansion of telecommunications.

Other agencies and organizations carried out special activities in connection with the Year. The Universal Postal Union urged postal administrations to issue special commemorative WCY stamps and to co-ordinate activities with national committees for the Year. It issued three brochures for postal administrations designed to improve postal service. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations collaborated in producing a bulletin on telecommunications for agriculture development. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization planned various national, regional and international projects. Among the international projects, a feasibility study for the exchange of news and programmes by satellite was carried out, and a low-cost audio unit was developed. Publications on various aspects of telecommunications were issued. The International Civil Aviation Organization held an international meeting of experts on aeronautical communications which discussed ways to improve the global aeronautical telecommunications network, taking advantage of new technology, including computers and satellites, and emphasizing meteorological information and other air navigation data.

Tourism

Implementation of the 1980

Manila Declaration on World Tourism

As requested by the General Assembly in 1981,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization (WTO) reported on progress made in implementing the Manila Declaration on World Tourism, adopted in 1980 by the World Tourism Conference⁽²⁾ and providing guidelines for the development of national and international tourism, especially in developing countries. The WTO report was transmitted in June 1983 by the United Nations Secretary-General⁽³⁾ to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

WTO activities included technical meetings at regional and subregional levels, and international seminars on subjects dealt with in the Declaration (including tourism and culture, national and intra-regional tourism, and the financing of tourist attractions). Statistics, previously confined to international movements, were expanded by research on national tourism and motivations for travel. Studies were made on the social effects of tourism, the extent to which paid leave was available, national tourism, and new tourist products offered to different economic strata of the population, particularly the less wealthy. It had been found that certain States, in particular the industrialized ones, had provision for the measures called for in the Declaration, such as paid leave assistance to the least privileged strata of the population to enable them to have vacations, cultural activities, measures to protect the environment and facilities for travel. In many States, because of their levels of economic development, the labour legislation did not provide for paid leave for all categories of employees.

Annexed to the WTO report was a document adopted by the World Tourism Meeting, organized by WTO (Acapulco, Mexico, 21-27 August 1982). Attended by 79 countries, the Meeting supported implementation of the Declaration. It stated that the right to rest must be affirmed as a fundamental right in terms of human happiness, which implicitly entailed the right to the use of leisure time and access to holidays. It noted that the development of tourism was closely linked to the social, economic and cultural context of each country. The Meeting recognized that the issue of freedom of movement and of travel, dealt with in the Declaration, was of great importance for the development of world tourism, and said it was incumbent on WTO to foster freedom of movement and of travel within the framework of international co-operation in tourism. The Meeting invited States and all public and private bodies concerned, as well as WTO, to take into account the guidelines and considerations emerging from its work, so as to fulfil the aims proposed for a fresh, more balanced expansion of tourism, within the framework of their development policies and in the spirit of the Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/146 without vote.

World Tourism Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/156 and 32/157 of 19 December 1977, 33/122 of 19 December 1978 and 34/134 of 14 December 1979, concerning the World Tourism Organization,

Recalling also its resolution 36/41 of 19 November 1981, which pertains, inter alia, to the Manila Declaration on World Tourism,

Recalling further its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, by which it proclaimed the Third United Nations Development Decade and adopted the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Taking note of paragraph 5 of its resolution 36/41 and of subparagraph (c) of Economic and Social Council decision 109(LIX) of 23 July 1975, in which the General Assembly and the Council decided that the World Tourism Organization might participate, on a continuing basis, in the work of the Assembly and the Council in areas of concern to that organization,

Noting that the World Tourism Meeting was convened from 21 to 27 August 1982 at Acapulco, Mexico, and that it adopted the Acapulco Document on World Tourism as a follow-up to the Manila Declaration,

Recognizing the new dimension and role of tourism as a positive instrument towards the improvement of the quality of life for all peoples, as well as a significant force for peace and international understanding,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization on the progress made in the implementation of the Manila Declaration on World Tourism;

2. Urges Member States to give due attention to the principles of the Manila Declaration and the Acapulco Document on World Tourism while formulating and implementing, as appropriate, their tourism policies, plans and programmes, in accordance with their national priorities and within the framework of the programme of work of the World Tourism Organization;

3. Requests the World Tourism Organization, in co-operation with the United Nations system, to continue its efforts towards the future development and promotion of tourism, especially in the developing countries, bearing in mind the principles and guidelines contained in the Manila Declaration and the Acapulco Document;

4. Requests the United Nations Development Programme and other relevant United Nations bodies, as well as other international, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations directly or indirectly interested in tourism, to extend their assistance, in co-operation with the World Tourism Organization and in accordance with the priorities of the Governments concerned, towards the implementation of the Manila Declaration and the Acapulco Document;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the Manila Declaration and the Acapulco Document.

General Assembly resolution 38/146

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/701) without vote, 21 November (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.44), based on informal consultations on J-nation draft (A/C.2/38/L.27): agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 36, 45; plenary 102

The resolution was based on a draft text which was submitted to the Second Committee by Bangladesh, Jamaica and the Philippines and subsequently withdrawn. Two changes were made to that version. In the last preambular paragraph, tourism was first described as a vital force for peace and international understanding; the adopted text described it as a significant force for that purpose. By the second change, which applied to paragraph 4, an addition was made so that assistance would be extended "in accordance with the priorities of the Governments concerned".

Chapter VI

Industrial development

In 1983, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued to help developing countries raise their share of world industrial production to the target of 25 per cent by the year 2000. This goal was contained in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation,⁽¹⁾ adopted in 1975 at the Second General Conference of UNIDO (Lima, Peru). The 1983 UNIDO endeavours were described by its Executive Director in his annual report⁽²⁾ to the Industrial Development Board, UNIDO's policy-making body.

The 45-nation Board held its seventeenth session at UNIDO headquarters, Vienna, Austria, from 26 April to 13 May 1983.⁽³⁾ At that session, the Board adopted 17 conclusions on various programme, industrial development and organizational matters; these included technical assistance to the Namibian people (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III) and Palestinian people (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX, under "Palestine question"), and integration of women in development (see Chapter XIX of this section). In addition, the Board adopted a resolution on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (see Chapter VIII of this section). The Board's Permanent Committee met twice at Vienna, for its nineteenth (25 and 29 April)⁽⁴⁾ and twentieth (28 November-2 December)⁽⁵⁾ sessions.

The work of UNIDO and the Board's report were reviewed by the General Assembly, which adopted in December resolution 38/192 on various programme policies for UNIDO, with continued emphasis on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa and preparations for the Fourth (1984) General Conference of UNIDO, for which the Assembly set both place (Vienna) and dates (2-18 August 1984). Revisions made by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) to the 1984-1985 UNIDO work programme and their consequent financial implications were noted by the Economic and Social Council in July (resolution 1983/49) and by the Assembly in December (resolution 38/234).

An evaluation study on technical co-operation activities in manufactures financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and executed by UNIDO was completed early in the year. In resolution 1983/49, the Council requested the Secretary-General to submit a report to CPC in 1983 and a comprehensive report in 1984 (which would include comments by UNIDO and UNDP). The Assembly endorsed that request in resolution 38/227 A.

In May, UNIDO met to conclude arrangements for its conversion into a specialized agency. Steps to accelerate the process were set forth in December by Assembly resolution 38/193. In anticipation of the conversion, modifications to the current arrangements for sharing common services among the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), UNIDO and other United Nations units headquartered at Vienna were outlined by the Secretary-General and noted by the Assembly in December (resolution 38/234).

As a result of the admission of Saint Christopher and Nevis to the United Nations, the Assembly, by its December resolution 38/194, included that country among the States eligible for Board membership.

Topics related to this chapter. Regional economic and social activities: industrial development-Africa; Asia and the Pacific; Europe; Latin America; Western Asia. Energy: industrial uses. Science and technology: technology transfer. Environment: ecosystems-environment and industry. Women: women in development.

Programme and finances of UNIDO

Programme policy

As in the previous two years, UNIDO activities in 1983 focused on the priority areas identified in 1980 by the Industrial Development Board⁽⁶⁾ as a follow-up to decisions of UNIDO's Third General Conference,⁽⁷⁾ and recommended in 1982 by the Economic and Social Council⁽⁸⁾ and the General Assembly⁽⁹⁾ for continued priority attention during 1983-1985. Those priorities were: energy-related and other industrial technology, industrial production, human resources development, special measures for the least developed countries (LDCs) and the System of Consultations, established on a permanent basis by the Board in 1980⁽¹⁰⁾ to promote industrialization of developing countries. Other activities included restructuring world industrial production, industrial financing, the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (see Chapter VIII of this section), and monitoring.

Activities were planned and carried out taking into account the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)⁽¹¹⁾ and related Assembly decisions and recommendations. Having considered a progress report⁽¹²⁾ by the UNIDO Executive Director in follow-up to the Third General Conference and the Strategy, the Board, on 13 May 1983,⁽¹³⁾ expressed concern at the lack of progress since the beginning of the Decade in increasing the share of developing countries in world industrial production.

As requested by the Board on the same date, the UNIDO secretariat submitted to the Board's Permanent Committee, for consideration at its November/December session, a report on implementation of the Strategy relevant to industry.⁽¹⁴⁾ In addition to requesting UNIDO to strengthen co-operation with intergovernmental regional and subregional organizations in industrial development, the Committee asked the Executive Director to transmit its comments and the report to the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see Chapter I of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/192 without vote on 20 December 1983.

Industrial development co-operation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in which, inter alia, the importance of industrialization in the development of developing countries is stressed,

Recalling also the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation, in which were laid down the main measures and principles for industrial development and co-operation within the framework of the establishment of the new international economic order, and the New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrialization of Developing Countries and International Co-operation for their Industrial Development, in which a strategy was spelt out for the further industrialization of developing countries, and 37/212 of 20 December 1982 on industrial development co-operation,

Recalling its resolutions 36/182 of 17 December 1981

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/50 of 28 July 1983, in which the Council recommended that the work programmes of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should be geared towards supporting the full implementation of programmes of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries,

Recognizing that economic co-operation among developing countries is an integral part of a global development effort and of an interdependent world economy,

Stressing that interdependence in all sectors, including the industrial sector, should contribute to the prosperity of all countries, and believing that the industrial development of developing countries should constitute an essential part of the process of reactivation of the world economy,

Expressing its concern at the negative impact of the very difficult world economic situation on the industrialization of the developing countries and reiterating the need for a substantially increased transfer of financial and technical resources to developing countries for their accelerated industrial development,

Conscious of the role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as the central co-ordinating organ, having primary responsibility within the United Nations system for the promotion of industrial development co-operation, for facilitating the transfer of industrial technology and for the delivery of increased technical assistance to developing countries,

Noting with concern that, in spite of the co-operative efforts of some countries, contributions to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund have remained far below the agreed desirable level of $50 million, and that the value of the Fund has declined in real terms since its establishment,

Recalling paragraph 10 of conclusion 1983/8 of the Industrial Development Board, in which the Board re-emphasized the importance and effectiveness of the Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers Programme in implementing the wide range of programmes and services rendered by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, noting further the reduction made by the United Nations Development Programme in its allocations for senior industrial development field advisers in the biennium 1984-1985 and expressing concern at the absence of adequate and predictable resources for the Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers Programme,

Bearing in mind the positive effects, inter alia, of economic policies of co-operation between different economic sectors -including the public, private, co-operative, social or mixed sectors, as appropriate-as well as of sustained growth and development,

Bearing in mind that, within the framework of the new international economic order, far-reaching changes in the structure of the world economy involve the restructuring of world industry, taking fully into account the capacities and potential of the developing countries,

I

Report of the Industrial Development Board on its seventeenth session

1. Takes note of the report of the Industrial Development Board;

2. Commends the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for his efforts to enhance the role of the organization in promoting the industrialization of developing countries;

3. Decides that adequate resources should be provided to enable the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to implement fully its mandate, particularly in support of the activities established in priority areas: industrial technology, energy-related industrial technology, industrial production, development of human resources, special measures for least developed countries, the system of consultations and the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, declared by the Board to be one of the most important programmes of that organization;

4. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to adjust, on the basis of the above agreed priorities, the proposed programme budget for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for the biennium 1984-1985;

5. Decides that adequate resources should be provided from the United Nations regular budget for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in 1984 to maintain the total staffing of the Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers Programme at the existing level of already appointed senior industrial development field advisers, in addition to the utilization in full of the allocation in the United Nations Development Programme budget, including the carry-over from 1983, as well as voluntary funding through the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

6. Appeals to all States, particularly developed countries, to provide voluntary contributions for the Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers Programme, aimed at maintaining and increasing the number of posts;

7. Invites the United Nations Development Programme to finance the maximum possible number of senior industrial development field advisers during the biennium 1984-1985;

8. Urges all States, in particular developed countries, to contribute or raise their contributions to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund in order to achieve the agreed desirable annual level of $50 million;

9. Endorses the decisions of the Industrial Development Board, contained in its conclusion 1983/4 of 13 May 1983, concerning consultations to be held during the biennium 1984-1985;

10. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to ensure that experts and expertise from developing as well as developed countries shall be associated with the process of preparation of consultations, having due regard for equitable geographical distribution, and that consultations shall be organized sufficiently in advance so as to allow enough time for a fuller exchange of views among participants, and expresses the hope that future consultations will result in action-oriented recommendations and conclusions;

11. Reaffirms its support for strengthening the system of consultations, in the light of experience gained, paying particular attention to measures that could increase the industrial capacities of developing countries;

12. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to ensure that the documentation submitted to consultations for discussion focuses more narrowly on practical and well-defined subjects directly related to furthering progress in the industrialization of developing countries;

13. Takes note of the decision of the Industrial Development Board to begin an appraisal of the system of consultations at its eighteenth session on the basis of material provided by States, drawing on the experiences of their participants in the consultations, and to request the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization also to provide material for that appraisal;

II

Industrial Development Decade for Africa

Recalling its resolution 37/212 of 20 December 1982, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/70 of 29 July 1983 emphasizing the Industrial Development Decade for Africa as one of the most important programmes of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization,

Recalling further Industrial Development Board resolution 56(XVII) of 13 May 1983, in which the Board, inter alia, expressed its deep concern at the scarcity of resources, including resources made available by the United Nations Development Programme for the Decade, which had contributed to the limited progress achieved in the implementation of the preparatory phase of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, whereas almost one third of the Decade had already elapsed,

Considering that the attainment of the objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos will, to a large extent, depend on the sustained development of industry and on structural adjustment in the industrial sector, with emphasis on selected strategic core industries,

Noting the deteriorating economic situation in Africa and that the number of the least developed countries in Africa has increased to twenty-six out of the present global total of thirty-six,

Noting also with serious concern the slow progress being made towards the realization of the African regional target of 1.4 per cent of world industrial production by 1990,

Mindful of the high level of investment expenditure required for promoting the objectives of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Noting with appreciation the decision of the African Development Bank to provide increased financing for industrial projects in Africa during its 1982-1986 programme period,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the second progress report on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, prepared jointly by the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa;

2. Welcomes the efforts made by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to assist the African countries and intergovernmental organizations in the formulation of national and subregional programmes for the Decade, as well as in maintaining continuous and harmonious co-ordination with the secretariat of the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Commission for Africa and other relevant international organizations;

3. Supports Industrial Development Board resolution 56(XVII) on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa and reiterates the repeated appeals already made to the international community to increase their contributions to the industrial development of Africa within the framework of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, with a view to accelerating the pace of industrial development, in order to ensure that the target set by the African Governments of a 1.4 per cent share of world industrial production will be achieved by the African region during the Decade;

4. Decides to accord high priority to the Industrial Development Decade for Africa among the programmes of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Economic Commission for Africa and, consequently, requests the Secretary-General to ensure that this priority shall be fully reflected in the programme budgets of those organizations;

5. Decides further to increase the allocation to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, to the extent possible through overall savings from the United Nations regular budget, by $1 million in 1984 for assistance to African countries and to intergovernmental organizations in the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa and in the popularization of the Decade, priority being accorded to the formulation of industrial policies, strategies and plans, the development of core industries, industrial manpower, technological capabilities and institutional infrastructures, the development of energy technology and equipment, the promotion of intra-African industrial co-operation, the development of the least developed countries and the mobilization of financial resources;

6. Appeals to all countries and institutions to increase their contributions to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund, taking into account the financial requirements of the projects directed towards the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa;

7. Urges the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to consider increasing its allocation of financial resources for assistance to African countries and intergovernmental organizations in planning and formulating their programmes for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa and to accord high priority to industrial projects, especially for the development of core industries, in its national and regional programmes for Africa;

8. Appeals to donor countries, international financial institutions and regional development banks to increase the flow of financial resources for the implementation of national, subregional and regional projects and activities of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa;

9. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in co-operation with the Economic Commission for Africa, to submit, through the Industrial Development Board at its eighteenth session and the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984, a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the progress made in the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa;

III

Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization

1. Decides that the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization shall be held at Vienna, at the seat of the organization, from 2 to 18 August 1984;

2. Notes with satisfaction the progress made in the preparations for the Conference;

3. Recommends that preparatory meetings should take place at the regional and interregional levels, in order that there might be the fullest possible consultation among all States prior to the convening of the Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to invite:

(a) All States to participate actively in the Conference;

(b) Representatives of organizations that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate in the sessions and the work of all international conferences convened under its auspices, in the capacity of observers, to participate in the Conference in that capacity, in accordance with Assembly resolutions 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and 31/152 of 20 December 1976;

(c) Representatives of the national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity to participate in the Conference in the capacity of observers, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3280(XXIX) of 10 December 1974;

(d) The specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, the regional commissions and the interested organs of the United Nations to be represented at the Conference;

(e) Interested intergovernmental organizations to be represented by observers at the Conference;

(f) Directly concerned non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to be represented by observers at the Conference;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the necessary arrangements are made for the effective participation in the Conference of the representatives referred to in paragraph 4 (b) and (c) above, including the requisite financial provisions for their travel expenses and per diem;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to seek extrabudgetary resources for the effective participation in the Conference of the representatives of the least developed countries, including the requisite financial provisions for the travel expenses and per diem of two representatives from each of these countries.

Evaluation

In 1983, the principal mechanism for reviewing the work of UNIDO as a whole remained the biannual implementation review meeting of senior officers under the chairmanship of the Executive Director. The first meeting, convened in May, reviewed technical co-operation project approvals and implementation targets for 1983 and considered other aspects of the UNIDO work programme; the second, in November, concentrated on the adverse effects of the shortfall in contributions to UNDP and set targets for 1984.

The secretariat reviewed implementation of the 1982-1983 programme budget in December and submitted a report to the Secretary-General for incorporation into his performance report to both CPC and the General Assembly in 1984.

In addition, UNIDO headquarters staff participated in 63 tripartite reviews and evaluation exercises, undertaken jointly by the Government involved, the executing agency and UNDP—the tripartite review being the principal tool for monitoring field projects.

A report describing the operation of UNIDO's new internal evaluation system for field projects, from its inception in May 1982 until February 1983,⁽¹⁵⁾ was prepared by the secretariat and submitted to the Permanent Committee in April. The Committee noted that evaluation reports for 61 per cent of the 142 large-scale projects scheduled for internal evaluation had been received and welcomed the secretariat's continued efforts at increasing the compliance rate in 1983. In requesting a further report on the system's operation, the Committee reiterated that the report should include those elements it had specified in May 1982.⁽¹⁶⁾ It welcomed management's use of evaluations and looked forward to information on how it was using that tool.

The third and final phase of a special joint United Nations/UNDP/UNIDO in-depth evaluation of UNDP-financed and UNIDO-executed technical co-operation activities in manufactures was completed in January 1983. The evaluation was undertaken in response to a 1980 CPC request and had been initiated in 1981⁽¹⁷⁾ (see TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION below).

Action by UNIDO meeting. Pursuant to article 25 of the Constitution and to a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁹⁾ a formal meeting was convened at Vienna, from 16 to 20 May 1983, on the conversion of UNIDO from an organ of the Assembly into a specialized agency. The meeting adopted a number of conclusions by consensus on the new UNIDO.

Apart from arrangements stipulated by the Constitution, the conclusions included an agreement that ongoing programmes should not be disrupted in the transition period. Existing arrangements governing the United Nations Industrial Development Fund would apply to the new Industrial Development Fund; every effort was to be made to avoid reducing activities financed by the UNIDO regular programme of technical co-operation at the time of transition; and a recommendation was to be made to the Assembly to transfer a share of the Working Capital Fund to the new agency. The agency's structure would be determined by the guiding principles established by the Constitution, Assembly resolutions, the UNIDO General Conferences and the Industrial Development Board; questions relating to staff regulations and conditions of service would continue under existing rules. A provisional agenda of the first General Conference of the new agency was drawn.

A recommendation was made that the Economic and Social Council set out the terms of reference of the Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies, which would draft the text of a relationship agreement between the United Nations and UNIDO as a specialized agency. Documentation was to be prepared by the UNIDO secretariat to permit a speedy decision with regard to the agency's participation in the International Civil Service Commission, the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and the Joint Inspection Unit, and as to whether it should submit to the Administrative Tribunal of the United Nations or of the International Labour Organisation. Arrangements for the administration and management of common services at the United Nations Office at Vienna would be modified and a new headquarters agreement with the host country should be concluded. It was agreed that the date of entry into force of the Constitution should be fixed only when the new agency's financial viability had been ensured.

The formal meeting's report was transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General through a note of 17 August,⁽²⁰⁾ and to the one-day closing meeting-to be convened in New York at a date to be determined. The closing meeting would execute individual notifications to the Secretary-General of agreement for the Constitution's entry into force.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/193 on 20 December 1983.

Conversion of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization into a specialized agency

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/96 of 13 December 1979,

Bearing in mind the Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, which has been ratified, accepted or approved by more than the minimum number of States whose agreement is required for its entry into force,

Recalling its resolution 37/213 of 20 December 1982 in which it laid down the schedule of consultations as required in accordance with article 25, paragraph 1, of the Constitution,

1. Takes note of the report of the formal meeting on the conversion of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization into a specialized agency, held at Vienna from 16 to 20 May 1983;

2. Urges all States that have not yet done so to ratify the Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To undertake consultations with States that have deposited instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval, with a view to determining, inter alia, if financial viability is adequately ensured, and, subsequently, to convene the one-day meeting foreseen in paragraph 1 (c) of General Assembly resolution 37/213 to execute individual notifications to the Secretary-General for the entry into force of the Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

(6) To undertake, also, consultations with all interested States with a view to facilitating early ratification of the Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization by those States that have not yet done so;

4. Invites the competent organs of the new United Nations Industrial Development Organization to consider without delay the question of establishing a working capital fund, and to this end the present United Nations Industrial Development Organization secretariat should study possible modalities for that purpose and report thereon to the first General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to initiate the necessary action to implement the recommendations made in paragraphs 27 and 29 of the report of the formal meeting on the conversion of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization into a specialized agency;

6. Decides that adequate resources be provided in the regular budget of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for the biennium 1984-1985 to ensure the provision of the necessary funds, in accordance with paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 34/96, for the first General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other costs associated with the conversion of the organization into a specialized agency;

7. Decides further that the financial implications pertaining to paragraph 6 above will be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.3) without vote, 9 December (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.105), based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.13); agenda item 78 (c). Financial implications for the 1984-1985 budget. In a report of 7 December 1983 to the General Assembly,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General described the impact of the conversion of UNIDO into a specialized agency on existing arrangements, on a cost-sharing basis, for the management and administration of common services shared by IAEA, UNIDO and other United Nations units at the United Nations Office at Vienna (UNOV). Under these arrangements-formalized in a March 1977 memorandum of understanding by the Secretary-General, the IAEA Director-General and the UNIDO Executive Director-IAEA was responsible for computer and library services, printing and reproduction, commissary, and medical services; UNIDO for buildings management and operations, catering facilities and language training; and UNOV for security and safety. With the subsequent transfer of other United Nations units to Vienna, UNIDO had been assigned additional responsibility for finance, personnel, public information, and conference and general services; in most cases, it had been provided with resources for the additional work-load.

Emphasizing that the conversion of UNIDO should not alter the premise on which the common services were based, namely, that they should not be duplicated, the Secretary-General suggested modifications entailing revised estimates under the UNIDO and public information sections of the proposed United Nations programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985. He suggested creating separate United Nations services for public information and personnel services, to be initiated forthwith, establishing a joint co-ordinating mechanism for the administration of conference services, and continuing financial and general services by UNIDO on a reimbursable basis.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/234, section XVIII, without vote on 20 December 1983.

Preparations for the 1984 General Conference

As provided for by the General Assembly in 1982,⁽⁹⁾ five high-level expert group meetings were organized in 1983 on the following topics proposed for the Fourth (1984) General Conference of UNIDO: technology, strategies and policies, human resources development, industrial co-operation among developing countries, and energy and industrialization (see Chapter X of this section). The meetings were to examine issues before the Conference and to provide a means for wide participation in the preparatory process. The contribution of United Nations bodies to those expert meetings and towards documentation for the Conference was discussed at an inter-agency meeting held at Vienna in March. The open-ended working group established by the Board in 1982⁽²²⁾ held its third meeting on 8 July 1983, also at Vienna, to discuss pre-Conference activities.

Acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO, the Board, on 13 May,⁽²³⁾ took note of a progress report on preparatory arrangements by the Executive Director and recommended that the Assembly, at its 1983 session, determine the dates for the Conference.

The Board's Permanent Committee, at its November/December session,⁽⁵⁾ took note of a subsequent report on Conference arrangements by the Executive Director,⁽²⁵⁾ describing the outcome of the expert meetings. The Committee expressed appreciation for the meetings' reports and requested the Executive Director to ensure completion of all arrangements for the Conference as scheduled. It welcomed Austria's offer to host the Conference and recommended that the Board President arrange informal consultations to identify areas of potential agreement on the items of the provisional agenda.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1983, the General Assembly decided that the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO be held at Vienna from 2 to 18 August 1984. It recommended that preparatory regional and interregional meetings be held to permit the fullest prior consultation among States and requested that extrabudgetary resources be sought for the participation of representatives from LDCs. These actions were contained in section III of Assembly resolution 38/192 on industrial development co-operation (see PROGRAMME POLICY above).

Co-ordination in the UN system

Despite co-ordination efforts and increased inter-agency co-operation, a shortfall in 1983 in UNDP resources for technical co-operation activities resulted in fewer jointly executed projects than in 1982. Co-operation in studies and research programmes fared somewhat better. This assessment was made by a UNIDO secretariat report on co-ordination activities with other United Nations bodies and organizations in industrial development covering November 1982 to October 1983.⁽²⁶⁾ During that period, seven inter-secretariat co-ordinating meetings and six meetings of joint technical working groups had taken place; for budgetary reasons UNIDO had declined 200 out of 373 invitations to conferences and meetings of other United Nations organizations.

Apart from policy co-ordination, UNIDO maintained co-ordination and close co-operation with the regional commissions and other United Nations bodies through its System of Consultation; (see above) and in such areas as industrial manpower training, science and technology for development, and energy, as well as in activities related to the Industrial Development Decade for Africa and to preparations for the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO.

At the close of its November/December session, the Permanent Committee of the Industrial Development Board,⁽⁵⁾ having reviewed the report, requested the secretariat to continue co-ordinating industrial development activities within the United Nations system, taking into account the comments made, and to draw up a programme for UNIDO's co-ordinating role. It reiterated its request that future reports on co-ordination include an analysis of costs, benefits and problems encountered, as well as co-ordination efforts in respect of economic co-operation among developing countries.

Financial questions

UN Industrial Development Fund

In 1983, the UNIDO secretariat continued to improve project design and establish more systematic monitoring and reporting of the financial and substantive aspects of projects financed by the United Nations Industrial Development Fund (UNIDF). These measures, together with continued dialogue with current and potential donors, were aimed at producing more effective programming and donor confidence in the Fund's management and use, according to a report by the UNIDO Executive Director.⁽²⁷⁾

Approved for UNIDF financing were 160 projects with a total value of $15.3 million, including overheads. Of these, 124 projects, valued at $7.3 million, were financed from the Fund's general-purpose segment, and 36, valued at $8.0 million, from the special-purpose convertible segment.

The nine priority programme components endorsed by the Industrial Development Board continued to be applied to Fund activities. Within that framework, emphasis was given to innovative pilot projects of relevance to the largest number of developing countries. Among these were a global coconut technology consultancy service; a model scheme to utilize Balanites aegyptiaca fruits for producing edible oils and pharmaceutical raw materials, based on a 1982 study;⁽²⁸⁾ and programmes for the production and application of non-metallics in agriculture (activated bentonite and expanded perlite, for soil improvement and as fertilizer carriers and animal feed additives), and for blending alcohols with diesel fuels. Special attention was given to Africa within the context of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, as well as to LDCs by inviting them to participate in many interregional programmes.

*Including $1,056,338 pledged for 1985

A total of $13,276,519 was paid in voluntary contributions to the Fund in 1983 by 86 countries and one organization, and a total of $13,755,543 was pledged for 1984 by 68 countries, as at 31 December 1983 (see table above).⁽²⁹⁾

A review of yearly pledges by Fund components revealed a decline in 1983 in the general-purpose non-convertible segment, attributable in part to exchange rate fluctuations and in part to a switch in pledges from the general- to the special-purpose segment, although the combined total of both segments remained virtually static. Saudi Arabia remained the largest donor to the general-purpose convertible segment, with an annual pledge of $1 million since the Fund's creation in 1976,⁽³⁰⁾ followed by India; together they continued to provide more than 70 per cent of that segment's total resources.

At its 1983 session, the Board, having considered the Executive Director's report on the Fund's programme for 1984 and plan for 1984-1985,⁽³¹⁾ approved the proposed programme and plan, including establishment of an operational reserve equal to 5 per cent of the total annual pledge to the general-purpose convertible segment to ensure the Fund's liquidity.⁽³²⁾ The Board agreed to continue delegating authority to the Executive Director to approve projects for financing under the Fund in 1984-1985, and took note of the Special Financial Rules promulgated by the Secretary-

General to be applied to the Fund.⁽³³⁾ Noting the decline in the value of the Fund in real terms since its inception, the Board urged all countries, in particular the industrialized ones, to contribute or raise their contributions with maximum flexibility so as to achieve the agreed desirable annual funding level of $50 million.

This appeal for increased funding was repeated by the General Assembly in resolution 38/192, section I (see PROGRAMME POLICY above).

Industrial development activities

Technical co-operation

In 1983, 1,580 projects were completed or being implemented under the UNIDO programme of technical co-operation. Of these, 122 were of more than $1 million in value, 453 of more than $150,000 and 1,005 below that value. Approved were 509 new projects with a total value of $70.5 million, compared with 717 the previous year with a value of $99.3 million, a 29 per cent drop in technical assistance delivery.

Programme expenditures for the year totalled some $78 million, a decrease from the $91.9 million recorded for 1982.⁽¹⁾ By main programme component, chemical industries accounted for $17.1 million; agro-industries, $10.9 million; institutional infrastructure, $10.4 million; engineering industries, $9.5 million; training, $6.1 million; metallurgical industries, $5.7 million; feasibility studies, $4.5 million; industrial planning, $4.4 million; and factory establishment, $3.2 million. Some $6.2 million represented the share of other related activities.

Africa accounted for $27.5 million (35.2 per cent); Asia and the Pacific, $24.7 million (31.6 per cent); the Americas, $10.0 million (12.8 per cent); the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), $4.8 million (6.2 per cent); Europe, $2.8 million (3.6 per cent); and global and interregional, $8.2 million (10.5 per cent).

By project component, personnel accounted for $42.1 million (53.9 per cent); equipment, $14.7 million (18.9 per cent); fellowships and training, $11.4 million (14.6 per cent); sub-contracts, $7.8 million (10.0 per cent); and miscellaneous, $2.0 million (2.6 per cent).

Notable among UNIDO technical co-operation activities in Africa were the continued formulation of industrial master plans defining priority industrial subsectors, development of agro- and small-scale industries, improvement of repair and maintenance capabilities, and development of national standardization bodies and of new and renewable energy sources, including agricultural wastes. In Asia and the Pacific, as in Africa, emphasis was placed on industrial planning, as well as on development of national management consultancy capacities, particularly for the rehabilitation of existing enterprises, fuller utilization of capacities and improvement of productivity. Activities on behalf of Arab States continued to centre on strengthening industrial institutional infrastructure, developing industrial manpower at all levels, promoting new industries and improving the performance of existing ones. Activities in European countries were aimed at upgrading national institutions for the development of new and advanced technologies for their own needs and eventually to assist other developing countries.

Approximately 67.8 per cent of UNIDO technical co-operation was financed by UNDP, including UNDP-administered trust funds; 27.1 per cent from UNIDF, various trust funds and other sources; and 5.1 per cent from the United Nations regular budget. UNIDO continued to be the third largest executing agency for projects financed by UNDP.

United Nations financing amounted to some $4 million. Almost one half went for personnel training in developing countries through fellowships, group training programmes and study tours, and strengthening training facilities. One fourth of the amount was spent for LDC needs, including national and regional training programmes, establishment and strengthening of small-scale industries, construction of pilot plants and development of institutional infrastructure to explore, exploit and process natural resources.

Tentative allocations of the UNIDO regular programme of technical co-operation for 1984-1985 as proposed by the Executive Director⁽²⁾ were considered by the Permanent Committee of the Industrial Development Board at its April session.⁽³⁾ In recommending approval of the proposed allocations, the Committee also proposed that the Board seek to maintain the programme's real value, in particular the component on special needs of LDCs. The Executive Director was to be invited to consider increasing allocations for co-operation among developing countries and group training by redeploying resources within the programme. He was to be asked to report on the programme's real value, taking 1973 as the base year.

Evaluation study

A summary of the conclusions and recommendations of the third and final phase of a special joint United Nations/UNDP/UNIDO in-depth evaluation of UNDP-financed technical co-operation activities of UNIDO in manufactures, together with the comments of UNIDO and UNDP,⁽⁴⁾ was submitted by the Secretary-General to CPC at the first part (May/June) of its 1983 session. The evaluation, undertaken in response to a 1980 CPC request, had been completed in January 1983. The full study was distributed shortly thereafter to senior policy-level officials of the participating organizations, as well as to the UNIDO Programme Planning and Budgeting Board in its capacity as the steering committee for evaluation.

The evaluation expressed concern at the lack of definition of responsibilities at the operational level and of results-oriented data from the field. It concluded that, due to the broad and varied nature of UNIDO technical assistance in manufactures—with 1,200 active projects—there were inadequacies in current UNDP and UNIDO staff resources and insufficient participation of the industrial sector in project design. It recommended that UNDP assume the primary responsibility in the tripartite system.

In an October note on the evaluation,⁽⁵⁾ UNIDO pointed out two findings of interest: one, that since a high percentage (depending on project category, between 50 and 67 per cent) of the projects examined were found to have achieved the planned degree of impact, the tripartite system, developed pragmatically over the years, could be seen to have its merits; and two, that weaknesses identified at several stages of the project cycle, especially at project identification and design, were generally attributed to difficulties affecting the United Nations development system as a whole rather than to those peculiar to the industrial sector or UNIDO.

The Secretary-General noted that the evaluation raised fundamental policy issues beyond the manufacturing sector. In view of these and the concerns expressed by the UNDP Administrator and the UNIDO Executive Director—on the evaluating team's approach, its methodology, its conclusions and their implications—the Secretary-General believed that the UNDP Governing Council and the Industrial Development Board should examine the findings before he submitted a comprehensive report to CPC in 1984.

Accepting that opinion, CPC decided on 19 May⁽⁶⁾ to transmit the summary and CPC comments to the UNDP Governing Council and the Board's Permanent Committee for consideration. It recommended that the complete evaluation be made available to Member States.

On 24 June,⁽⁷⁾ the Governing Council requested the UNDP Administrator to examine further the evaluation's conclusions and recommendations in order to determine those on which action could be taken and to improve project identification and implementation in the industrial sector; the Council decided that a report on the results of this further examination should be prepared for its consideration in 1984 and submission to CPC.

The Permanent Committee asked the UNIDO Executive Director on 2 December⁽⁸⁾ to take action on those recommendations he deemed feasible in the light of comments made and to transmit those comments to the Secretary-General, to be taken into account in his comprehensive report on the subject to CPC.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By section II of resolution 1983/49 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council regretted that the comprehensive outcome of the evaluation study had not been submitted formally to CPC as a report of the Secretary-General, whom it therefore requested so to do when CPC resumed its 1983 session (in August/September), on the understanding that his comprehensive report would be submitted in 1984. He was further requested to ensure that the procedure followed in this instance—submitting the evaluation study to organizations covered by it before formally submitting it to CPC—would not constitute a precedent for future evaluations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in section IV of resolution 38/227 A of 20 December, endorsed the CPC recommendations and the Council's decisions on the study. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit his comprehensive report on the evaluation to CPC in 1984, taking into account the views of the Industrial Development Board's Permanent Committee at its November/December session and of the UNDP Governing Council at its next (1984) organizational session.

Further action. Pursuant to the Economic and Social Council's request of 28 July, the Secretary-General submitted his formal report on the evaluation of the UNDP-financed, UNIDO-executed technical co-operation activities in manufactures⁽⁹⁾ to CPC at the second part (August/September of its 1983 session. In noting this submission,⁽⁶⁾ CPC regretted that the report failed to refer to certain points made by the Council regarding the importance it attached to evaluation procedures, the formal submission to CPC of the evaluation as a report of the Secretary-General, and the need to ensure that the procedure followed in this case—submitting the evaluation study to organizations covered by it before formally submitting it to CPC—would not be a precedent for future evaluations.

Training of personnel

In 1983, the UNIDO programme of technical co-operation among developing countries emphasized the training of trainers and organization of training, in an effort to accelerate development of human skills. Increased LDC participation in training activities continued to be a goal. Priority was given to areas with a potential multiplier effect, and emphasis was placed on systematic approaches to curriculum design, training methodologies and techniques, and development of training aids.

Expenditures for the fellowships and training component of all technical co-operation projects implemented by UNIDO in 1983 amounted to $11.4 million, against $12 million in 1982.⁽¹⁰⁾ Of the 1983 amount, fellowships and study tours accounted for $6.7 million, and group training programmes and meetings for $4.7 million.

Compared with 1982, the number of individual training programmes (fellowships) started in 1983 decreased by 2 per cent (1,220, down from 1,246), while the number of placement arrangements by host countries increased by 5.9 per cent (1,949, up from 1,841). Of these, 424 were arranged in developing countries, 177 of the trainees came from LDCs and 150 were women. The trend towards study tours by high-level industrial personnel continued, with a 40:60 ratio between fellowships and study tours.

Among activities undertaken in 1983 were a regional workshop organized for selected African countries on industrial energy management (Zambia); group training programmes in energy conservation in the metallurgical (United Kingdom), ceramic (Czechoslovakia) and cement (France) industries; waste-heat recovery in industrial processes (Australia); maintenance and repair of railway equipment (Belgium, Ivory Coast, Upper Volta) and of ships and smaller craft (Belgium); packaging and conditioning technologies (Italy); environmental assessment and management of air and water pollution by industry (Belgium); computerized maintenance systems in metallurgy at the interregional level, for Asian and Arab countries (Czechoslovakia); and management of public enterprises (Colombia, Tunisia). The concept of energy management was introduced in in-plant group training programmes on: iron and steel, and electric welding (USSR); diesel engine operation and maintenance (China, Czechoslovakia); industrial planning (German Democratic Republic); and cement, iron and steel, and sugar (Turkey).

In keeping with the recommendations of the First (1982) Consultation on the Training of Industrial Manpower,⁽¹⁰⁾ a methodology to assess the training needs of the iron and steel industry was being formulated in 1983. Steps were taken to identify national training needs and to establish an information base on the supply of and demand for training facilities (Nepal, Pakistan); a similar activity aimed at upgrading managerial skills was carried out by a multidisciplinary team in selected LDCs (Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Senegal). In addition, seminars to examine methodologies for the training of trainers were organized (Colombia, Mexico, Tunisia, USSR, Yugoslavia).

A meeting on Accelerated Development of Human Resources for Industrial Development (Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon, 30 May-3 June)⁽¹¹⁾ examined developing countries' problems in this area. One of live expert group meetings convened in 1983 in preparation for the Fourth (1984) General Conference of UNIDO, the meeting was attended by 50 experts from 28 countries.

The meeting concluded that assimilation of modern technology and upgrading of traditional technology depended on developing countries' ability to develop and utilize a range of skilled manpower. National policies and plans for human resources development should be integrated with policies for education and economic development. International organizations, particularly UNIDO, had an important role to play in assisting those countries, especially LDCs, in their development of human resources. Notable among the meeting's recommendations was for each developing country to establish a central body to co-ordinate and oversee the various national, institutional and infrastructural mechanisms for human resources development for industrialization. The need for a national manpower information data base for effective manpower planning was stressed, as was co-operation among developing countries through a network of national training institutions.

SIDFA Programme

In 1983, the Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAS) Programme continued to assist in programming and implementing technical co-operation projects. As focal points of UNIDO activities in countries of their assignment, SIDFAS promoted co-ordination with Governments and UNDP resident representatives, participation in the UNIDO System of Consultations (see below) and project evaluation. They assisted in implementing field projects on energy, investment promotion and technology transfer, and represented UNIDO at 56 meetings.

A second regional SIDFA meeting for Africa (Douala, United Republic of Cameroon, December) discussed UNIDO programmes in the context of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990) proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1980,⁽¹²⁾ with a view to strengthening and harmonizing them. These included industrial planning, rural development, energy, integration of women in industrial development, co-operation among developing countries, and preparations for the Fourth (1984) General Conference of UNIDO. Project implementation was reviewed and sources of financing other than UNDP were studied.

On 13 May,⁽¹³⁾ the Industrial Development Board, re-emphasizing the importance of the SIDFA Programme and reiterating that it required strengthening, invited the UNDP Governing Council to finance the maximum number of SIDFAs in 1984-1985 and called on member States, in particular the developed ones, to provide voluntary contributions to permit the number of posts in the Programme to be maintained or increased. It decided to convey to the General Assembly in 1983 the views expressed at the current Board session, including concern over the absence of reliable resources for the Programme in the United Nations budget, and suggestions for such alternative financing sources as the UNDP indicative planning figures, the developing countries themselves and special-purpose contributions.

The UNDP Council, on 24 June,⁽¹⁴⁾ approved $4.06 million to cover the net costs to UNDP for SIDFA services during 1984-1985, subject to resource availability. It reaffirmed that priority be given to those countries which had agreed to finance some or all of the cost of those services from national indicative planning figures and/or other national sources. Like the Board, it called on member States to provide voluntary contributions to the SIDFA Programme.

These actions, as reflected in the reports of the Board and of the Council's Budgetary and Finance Committee,⁽¹⁵⁾ were drawn to the Assembly's attention in an October note by the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In section I of resolution 38/192 of 20 December, the General Assembly, repeating the appeal for voluntary contributions and the invitation to UNDP to finance the maximum number of SIDFAS in 1984-1985, decided that adequate resources should be provided from the United Nations regular budget for UNIDO in 1984 to maintain the SIDFA Programme's current staffing, in addition to full utilization of the allocation in the UNDP budget, as well as voluntary funding through UNIDO.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/236 on the 1984-1985 budget, appropriated an additional $1 million to UNIDO for 1984 from the United Nations regular budget, thereby financing nine SIDEA posts and operational costs including 18 local staff.

Special Industrial Services

The Special Industrial Services (SIS) programme, funding created to permit action in areas not covered by existing financing methods, was designed primarily to enable UNIDO to meet urgent requirements through the rapid provision of experts to developing countries.

During 1983, 73 requests were received from 53 countries; 34 new projects were approved and 30 projects were extended. Funding for these approvals and extensions amounted to slightly over $1 million. Technical assistance under the programme continued, as in 1982, to be concentrated in the chemical, metallurgical, agro- and engineering industries. There was an increase in assistance in industrial planning, and factory establishment and management.

While the nature of the programme called for quick responses on a first-come, first-served basis, priority was given to LDC needs. Projects for LDCs accounted for about 44 per cent of the value of project approvals and 31.5 per cent of project expenditures during the year.

Industrial co-operation

System of Consultations

In 1983, UNIDO organized three sectoral consultations under its System of Consultations: on wood and wood products (the first on this topic), on the agricultural machinery industry (second) and on the pharmaceutical industry (second), bringing to 21 the number of consultation meetings since 1977.⁽¹⁷⁾ Preparatory and follow-up activities were pursued in other sectors, including leather and leather products, food processing, fisheries, building materials, fertilizers, petrochemicals, iron and steel, non-ferrous metals, and capital goods, with emphasis on energy-related technology and equipment. Follow-up activities were also pursued on two aspects common to all sectors of industry and the subject of previous consultations: training of industrial manpower and industrial financing. The consultations had led to the identification of developing countries' problems, some of which were dealt with through the technical co-operation programmes of UNIDO.

On 13 May 1983, the Industrial Development Board,⁽¹⁸⁾ taking note of the UNIDO Executive Director's report on the 1982 consultations, decided that consultations on the following sectors should be held during 1984-1985: food processing, with emphasis on vegetable oils and fats; fertilizers; leather and leather products; capital goods, with emphasis on energy-related equipment and technology; petrochemicals; and building materials. The Executive Director was asked to start preliminary preparations for possible consultations during 1986-1987 on the fisheries industry, industrial manpower training, agricultural machinery, non-ferrous metals, iron and steel, and pharmaceuticals.

The Board endorsed the co-sponsorship arrangement between UNIDO and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)⁽¹⁹⁾ for the first consultation on wood and wood products and recommended a similar arrangement for the proposed consultation on the fisheries industry, and with other international organizations in respect of any other sector where there was shared competence between them and UNIDO. The Board hoped that future consultations would result in action-oriented recommendations and decided to begin an appraisal of the System in 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In section I of resolution 38/192 of 20 December, the General Assembly endorsed the consultations proposed for 1984-1985 and echoed the Board's hope. It requested the Executive Director to ensure that experts and expertise from developing as well as developed countries be associated with the preparatory process for those consultations, and that consultations be organized well in advance to allow for a full exchange of views among participants.

Programme of work for 1984-1985

Following examination of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985,⁽²⁰⁾ CPC. at the May/June part of its 1983 session,⁽⁶⁾ recommended revisions pertaining to the System of Consultations. The revisions included assigning the highest priority to the consultations proposed for the biennium by the Industrial Development Board; deleting programme elements covering consultations on wood and wood products (since they would be completed in 1983) industrial financing, and trade and trade-related aspects of industrial collaboration arrangements (since no consultations on these sectors were envisioned for the next two bienniums); and merging the elements for consultations on the capital goods industry and on energy-related technology and equipment.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By section VI of resolution 1983/49 of 28 July 1983, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the CPC recommendations, on the understanding that UNIDO would carry out follow-up work, if necessary, on the wood and wood products industry, industrial financing, and trade and trade-related aspects of industrial collaboration arrangements, subject to a decision by the Industrial Development Board. The Secretary-General was asked to report to CPC in 1984 on the questions it had raised on various programme elements, to enable it to avoid duplication and achieve a more rational organization of the UNIDO work programme, in anticipation of that Organization's conversion into a Specialized agency (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/234, section I, without vote on 20 December 1983.

United Nations Industrial Development Organization

Co-operation among developing countries

During 1983, UNIDO activities to promote economic and technical co-operation among developing countries continued to focus on organizing solidarity meetings in LDCs and round-table ministerial meetings, to bring together developing countries interested in promoting industrialization; following up agreements reached at such meetings and recommendations on technical co-operation reached through the System of Consultations (see above); and developing joint programmes for specific industrial subsectors, and a work programme based on recommendations of various international forums in the context of the action programme adopted by the 1981 High Level Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries.⁽²¹⁾

Preparatory work was completed for three solidarity meetings scheduled to be held in Burundi, Rwanda and Yemen in 1984. Follow-up activities continued for the fulfilment of commitments made at previous solidarity meetings held in Haiti and the United Republic of Tanzania (1979); Bangladesh (1980); the Sudan and the Upper Volta (1981); and Lesotho, Mauritania and Nepal (1982).

In co-operation with Brazil, UNIDO organized discussions at the First International Latin America/Africa Symposium (Rio de Janeiro, 1-5 August 1983), on promoting industrial co-operation between Latin America and Africa. Follow-up activities included an in-plant group training programme in Brazil on the maintenance and repair of railway equipment for participants from Portuguese-speaking African countries. UNIDO arranged for six consultants from other Latin American countries to assist Bolivia in formulating project evaluation, standardization and quality control, small-scale industry, and institutional infrastructure. In addition, a staff mission explored the possibility of a joint economic and technical co-operation programme in live Central American countries.

Subsectors of industry chosen for joint programmes included food processing, a subsector given priority; agricultural machinery; energy, including new and renewable energy sources; and building materials. A project on industrial manpower development, for co-operation among African developing countries, was formulated by UNIDO and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) for consideration by UNDP and other financing sources. UNIDO participated in a regional intergovernmental meeting (Beijing, China, November) organized by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), the purpose of which was to match China's technical co-operation capabilities with those of other developing countries in the region; of 32 projects agreed upon, four (embroidery technology, silverware manufacturing, black tea processing, and bamboo and rattan weaving) were to receive UNIDO support.

An expert group meeting on industrial co-operation among developing countries (Bangkok, Thailand, 18-22 July)⁽²²⁾ reviewed the issues involved in such co-operation and formulated recommendations at all levels, as well as for UNIDO. This meeting, one of five convened in 1983 in preparation for the Fourth (1984) General Conference of UNIDO, was attended by 44 experts from 25 countries. The meeting agreed that this type of co-operation was not a substitute for North-South co-operation, but could help provide an alternative in terms of access to or availability of the requisites of production-human resources, technology, energy and finance. UNIDO was called on to collect and disseminate information on supply and demand of industrial co-operation among developing countries in order to promote the flow of technology, capital and industrial skills, and those countries were urged to establish policies and incentives for promoting industrial co-operation among themselves.

International trade aspects

In 1983, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and UNIDO continued to review trade and trade-related aspects of industrial collaboration arrangements (see also Chapter IV of this section under TRADE AMONG COUNTRIES HAVING DIFFERENT ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL SYSTEMS). Pursuant to a 1982 decision of the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD,⁽²³⁾ the Committee on Manufactures, at its March 1983 session, examined the final report⁽²⁴⁾ of an Ad Hoc UNCTAD/UNIDO Group of Experts that had met on the subject in 1979 and 1981.

On 22 March 1983,⁽²⁵⁾ the Committee requested the UNCTAD secretariat, in co-operation with UNIDO, to continue work on trade-related industrial collaboration between enterprises of developed and developing countries. Attention was to be given to new forms of co-operation, including joint ventures, aimed at strengthening production of and trade in manufactures of developing countries, including manufactures using advanced technology in their production. The Board also requested the secretariat, in co-operation with UNIDO and other international organizations, to compile and analyse information on industrial collaboration arrangements and recommend further work in this area.

UNIDO work during the year centred on the legal and technical aspects of contractual arrangements, ranging from check-lists to model contracts, as drawn up by experts from developed and developing countries representing a variety of interests, notably in the agricultural machinery, fertilizer, leather and leather products, pharmaceutical and petrochemical industries. Various frameworks of international co-operation in agricultural machinery, food processing, and wood and wood products were being elaborated, through which small- and medium-scale enterprises in developed countries and their partners in developing countries could be better informed of conditions governing their co-operation. Such frameworks would include provisions on joint ventures, co-management and repatriation of funds regulated by national laws.

Industrial co-operation contracts

UNCITRAL activities. At its fourth session, held at Vienna, Austria, from 16 to 20 May 1983,⁽²⁶⁾ the Working Group on the New International Economic Order of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) began drafting a legal guide on drawing up contracts for supply and construction of industrial works. The Group considered an outline of the guide's structure and sample chapters on choice of contract types, exemptions and hardship clauses. There was wide support for the inclusion of an index, summaries, check-lists as appropriate, a glossary and model clauses. It was stressed that the guide should carry out the principle; laid down by the General Assembly in 1974 in its Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order⁽²⁷⁾ and accord with the principles of equality, mutual benefit, equity and reasonableness. The guide's objectives should be to assist developing countries in establishing independent national economies and to promote international economic co-operation.

At its May/June session,⁽²⁸⁾ UNCITRAL, expressing appreciation for the Group's progress in a complex field, agreed on the need to prepare the legal guide expeditiously.

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/134 on the UNCITRAL report, took note of the Group's commencement of, work on drafting the guide, identifying the legal issues involved and suggesting possible solutions to assist parties, in particular from developing countries, in their negotiations. (See also LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI.)

Industrial development of LDCs

UNIDO efforts to assist LDCs—in line with the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,⁽²⁹⁾ endorsed by the General Assembly in 1981⁽³⁰⁾—encountered severe resource constraints in 1983, when a shortfall in contributions caused UNDP to reduce its indicative planning figures for individual countries and financing for the Special Industrial Services programme (see above) to 55 per cent of the levels originally planned. Since the bulk of UNIDO technical co-operation projects was financed from UNDP resources, many projects for which approval had been expected in 1983 had to be curtailed or deferred, and budgets of ongoing projects were either revised downwards or cancelled. Although a reasonable share of UNIDO resources was allocated to LDCs, it was not possible to compensate fully for the shortfall in UNDP resources.

To mobilize financial resources for LDCs, the UNIDO secretariat strengthened its contacts with the United Nations Capital Development Fund, the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, the World Bank and various regional financial institutions, such as the Islamic Development Bank.

Financial support was provided for LDC participation in the three consultations held during the year (see SYSTEM OF CONSULTATIONS above) and in the regional investment promotion meeting for southern African countries (see INVESTMENT PROMOTION below), as well as for advisory services to 12 African LDCs on pre-investment studies.

Work on the potential for resource-based industrial development in LDCs continued, with studies on Malawi and Somalia completed and similar studies on the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Lesotho and Nepal in progress. Country reviews were completed for Afghanistan and the United Republic of Tanzania, and were in progress for Bangladesh and the Sudan.

Training programmes designed to meet the special needs of LDCs included seminars on public enterprises management (Guinea-Bissau) and on small-industries development (United Republic of Tanzania), and a workshop to assist small- and medium-scale industrial enterprises. Group training programmes were also organized on such topics as project preparation, small-scale foundry operation and small-business consultancy. Two preparatory missions, covering four African LDCs, were undertaken to establish a long-term programme of co-operation in agro-industries development.

In 1983, UNIDO assisted three more LDCs in preparing for round-table meetings organized with logistic support from UNDP, bringing to nine the LDCs assisted in this manner.

On 13 May 1983,⁽³¹⁾ the Industrial Development Board, having examined the progress of the industrial development of LDCs, took note of UNIDO efforts to increase the level of project approvals in 1982 despite financial constraints. The Board expressed concern over the limited resources for the programme of technical co-operation for LDCs, noting that the number of LDCs had increased from 31 to 36,⁽³²⁾ while resources had remained at the same level. The Board called on all countries, in particular the industrialized ones, to increase their contributions to UNIDF with flexibility, so that larger proportions could be applied to LDC assistance within the framework of the Programme. The UNIDO secretariat was asked to continue to contribute to the round-table and consultative group meetings for LDCs prior to the mid-term (1985) global review of the Programme's implementation, and to find ways to carry out technical co-operation projects remaining uncompleted owing to UNDP financial constraints.

Redeployment of industrial production to developing countries

In a report of 28 February 1983⁽³³⁾ to the Industrial Development Board, the Executive Director described the 1982 UNIDO study and research programme on industrial redeployment and restructuring from developed to developing countries as involving a two-pronged approach: surveillance of structural changes in industry and the driving forces behind them in developed-market economies, centrally planned economies and developing countries; and country analyses of the medium- and long-term policy problems confronting specific industries in developing countries that had requested an assessment of their restructuring prospects.

The report on restructuring of world industrial production indicated a change in the pattern of industrial redeployment which had occurred in the 1960s and 1970s, a period of trade liberalization and internationalization of production. Factors such as the current economic crisis, stagnation in industrial production, increasing trade restrictions, fierce international competition in manufacturing and severe strains on the financial system were forcing both developed and developing countries to reassess policies and seek new ways to secure growth and employment. Thus the processes of redeployment and restructuring were expected to proceed at a slower pace and in a different and more complex pattern than before. During the 1980s redeployment was expected to decline, be increasingly subject to government interventions, and require increasing financing from the traditional banking system.

The report suggested that UNIDO continue to build its expertise and data base on the subject, and provide direct advisory and analytical services to developing countries. For this purpose, UNIDO should expand its contacts with specialists from private and public industries able to provide pragmatic advice.

On 13 May,⁽³⁴⁾ the Board reaffirmed its previous decisions on restructuring of world industrial production, including redeployment; it also reaffirmed that those activities should be carried out in accordance with national policies and priorities of member States, in particular the developing ones. The Board noted the report's suggestions and agreed that future studies be action-oriented. It requested the Executive Director to report in 1984 on how UNIDO could strengthen its role regarding participation of all parties in the redeployment of industry from developed to developing countries.

An expert group meeting on industrial development strategies and policies for developing countries (Lima, Peru, 18-22 April)⁽³⁵⁾ considered studies analysing past strategies and policies, reviewing challenges generated by the current international economic situation for the industrialization of developing countries, and identifying possible reorientations of, and new opportunities for, their long-term industrialization process. This meeting, one of five convened in 1983 in preparation for the Fourth (1984) General Conference of UNIDO, was attended by some 50 experts from 32 countries. The meeting called for expanded international industrial co-operation as a framework for individual national strategies and policies, and for increased UNIDO participation in the conceptualization and surveillance of such strategies and policies.

Industrial financing

In 1983, UNIDO initiated follow-up action on the recommendations of the 1982 First Consultation on Industrial Financing⁽³⁶⁾ by testing, at sectoral consultations, such issues as financing to revitalize the leather industry, and for iron and steel projects. In these cases, efforts were directed towards promoting programme lending to cover related services, pre-investment activities, and repair and maintenance. Work was also undertaken to strengthen links between training and establishment of new plants-by linking the financing of training operators and managers to that of plant and equipment costs-and to provide financial support to industry-linked infrastructure in developing countries.

In addition, UNIDO promoted more flexible regulations for the supply of risk capital and more effective lending to small- and medium-scale industries, as well as development of skills in designing financial packages to obtain loans. In this connection, an Expert Group Meeting on Venture Banking was convened by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development in co-operation with UNIDO (Paris, 7-9 November), to examine terms and conditions of financing for risk capital purposes and for the loan portion of financial packages.

Proposed international bank for industrial development

The Industrial Development Board continued, at its April/May session, to consider the UNIDO Executive Director's 1981 proposal for the establishment of an international bank for industrial development.⁽³⁷⁾ Unable to agree on that proposal, the Board decided to consider the subject again at its 1984 session.⁽³⁸⁾

Investment promotion

Under the Investment Co-operative Programme of UNIDO, the Investment Promotion Services continued in 1983 to promote the flow of external financial, technological and managerial resources to developing countries by identifying potential partners in industrialized countries, providing information on the host country and assisting in the preparation of the financial package. The existing network of Services-at Brussels, Belgium;

Cologne, Federal Republic of Germany; New York; Paris; Tokyo; Vienna, Austria; and Zurich, Switzerland-was increased to eight with the opening of a Service at Warsaw, Poland, on 24 November. The Services at Cologne and Vienna were extended to the end of 1987 and of 1985, respectively. Establishment of Services in selected developing countries, including India and one of the Gulf States, remained under consideration.

During the year, the Services promoted some 68 industrial investment projects in 29 countries; 54 of the projects had a known investment value of $322 million. Country presentation meetings were organized for 13 countries-Barbados, Colombia, Egypt, Kenya, Lesotho, Mauritius, Paraguay, Peru, Senegal, Sri Lanka, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe-to provide them an opportunity to inform entrepreneurs, banks, manufacturers' associations and federations of industry of investment opportunities and the advantages of investing in their countries. The Services accommodated a total of 40 officials from 30 developing countries who were promoting investment in their countries by putting them in contact with potential partners and providing guidance in promotion techniques.

National investment promotion meetings were organized for Pakistan (Karachi, September) and Peru (Lima, November), and a regional meeting for southern African countries (Lusaka, Zambia, October). Held to attract investment from the Gulf Arab countries, the conference in Pakistan, to which 34 investment proposals were submitted, resulted in potential investors signing four letters of intent for projects in the agro-industry, chemicals and engineering sectors. The meeting in Zambia discussed more than 150 proposals and closed with 32 signed letters of intent. The investors' forum in Peru discussed 110 projects with a total investment value exceeding $2 billion; two contracts and six letters of intent were known to have been signed, and 30 projects were selected for future negotiation.

The Investment Promotion Information System became operational in mid-1983. Consisting of two computerized data banks-the Project File and the Investor File-the System contained a summary of over 660 industrial investment project proposals and information on some 2,500 public and private enterprises in industrialized and developing countries that were suitable and willing to participate in specific industrial projects. Other promotional tools included: the Roster of Resources, listing potential partners in industrial investment projects for more than 4,000 products; and a directory of financial resources for industrial projects, covering 313 development institutions and four associations, which was revised and published in four volumes during the year.⁽³⁹⁾

Industrial management

In 1983, technical co-operation expenditures for factory establishment and management amounted to $3.2 million, with 93 per cent of total implementation financed from UNDP resources. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 70 per cent; the Americas, 5; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 14; and Asia and the Pacific, 13. Completed or under implementation were 54 projects, 6 of them greater than $1 million in value, 19 greater than $150,000 and 29 less than that value.

Consultancy-oriented projects, which received increasing emphasis, together with direct management assistance to industry, made up the bulk of the year's technical assistance activities. Other assistance was in such specialized areas as the introduction of management information systems, and the application and use of computers in administrative, maintenance and energy management.

The preliminary phase of a regional programme for the development of a network of industrial consultancy services in the ESCAP region was completed; a similar project for Africa was in preparation. A large-scale project in Somalia demonstrated the need for effective management, at the institutional and factory levels, to improve capacity utilization and productivity. The project involved management seminars for both middle- and high-level staff; information dissemination through publications; and industrial management assistance to public enterprises in organizational matters, finance and accounting, production and maintenance, and management information systems. In the Sudan, efforts to enhance management techniques focused on three industrial subsectors: textile, leather and food industries.

Demonstrations were held for Government officials from Mauritius, Mexico and Pakistan of the potential applications of computers in management and training in developing countries. Management projects involving the use of computers were in operation in Egypt, Guyana, Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic.

In the construction industry, a comprehensive programme was being developed to strengthen the management skills and capabilities of project personnel to control the contracting and construction management processes for developing countries. Areas of emphasis included: analysis of project risk factors and development of specific techniques for controlling and monitoring them, strengthening contract management procedures, and design and installation of management information systems to facilitate data collection.

Industrial planning

In 1983, technical co-operation expenditures for industrial planning amounted to $4.4 million, with some 87 per cent of total implementation financed from UNDP resources. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 41 per cent; the Americas, 25; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 5; Asia and the Pacific, 27; and Europe, 2. Completed or under implementation were 60 projects, 10 of them greater than $1 million in value, 24 greater than $150,000 and 26 less than that value.

Technical co-operation activities consisted of industrial surveys; formulation of industrial strategies and policies; preparation, monitoring and implementation of national industrial development programmes; planning of capital goods manufacture; and industrial planning at the subregional level on behalf of regional organizations.

For example, UNIDO provided assistance in the formulation of an industrial master plan for Malaysia, for which 14 potential industrial subsectors, 7 of them resource-based, were identified. The first phase of a project to prepare such a plan for the United Republic of Cameroon was also completed. In Mali, UNIDO assisted in developing key industrial branches for the exploitation of natural resources, and similar projects were under way in Benin, Cape Verde and Lesotho.

Special attention was given to key industrial subsectors such as the capital goods industries, as a means of reducing technological dependence. Assistance in this area was provided to Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Pakistan, Turkey and Venezuela. In Venezuela, a team of UNIDO and local experts analysed the demand for machinery and equipment in the preceding five years and prepared a study on equipment production for the petroleum industry. In Pakistan, the first phase of a programme for the development of capital goods industries was completed, with an analysis of national suppliers and producers in transport equipment, machine tools, textile machinery, agricultural implements and construction equipment.

Industrial studies

UNIDO industrial studies and research in 1983 continued to analyse the economic development process and map out new approaches to industrial development at the global, regional, country and sectoral levels.

In its work on global restructuring (see above, under REDEPLOYMENT OF INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES), UNIDO examined the ongoing process of international industrial restructuring and the impact of protectionism and other trade and finance policies on the strategic options of the developing countries. Studies were completed on trends, action and perspectives in global restructuring, the changing pattern of world production in the automotive industry, and the restructuring process in the European centrally planned economies, with a focus on the implications of the changes for developing countries. Studies were also undertaken on the impact of the world economic crisis on major industries as well as on the industrial output in the developing countries.

New policy-related research included an assessment of recent development strategies and policies in developing countries. An analytical study on regional integration among those countries was published, and a reassessment was made of export-processing zones, the role of multinationals in developing countries, and general trading companies as instruments of development. New studies were also initiated on the impact of foreign exchange constraints on the choice of industrialization strategies and policies, and on the emergence, implications and possible solution of the external debt problem.

Regional and country studies on prospects for industrialization dealt with industrial development strategies. Particular attention was given to servicing both national policy makers and UNIDO operational activities. A study was issued on industrial strategies and policies in developing South, South-east and East Asia and a similar study on Africa was being prepared. A preliminary study was completed on the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, highlighting prospects and constraints facing industrial development in the region. A composite document on the changing role of the public industrial sector in development was issued, and a study was completed on performance evaluation in the public sector.

In preparing in-depth country studies, particular attention was given to endogenous resource potentials and trends in the international restructuring process in order to provide an optimal basis for policy-making and industrial strategy formulation. Two studies assessed the potential for resource-based industrial development in Malawi and Somalia; two others on the Gambia and Lesotho were under revision, while work was initiated on a similar study on Guinea-Bissau. Reports were submitted to Thailand on industrial restructuring in the automotive, plastics and chemical industries, together with proposals related to export policy instruments and institutions. Work was nearing completion on a study of the Indonesian industry sector, and a study was undertaken on the potential for resource-based industrial development in Nepal. Work was initiated on a similar study in Haiti, with particular attention to long-term prospects and restructuring of the manufacturing sector. Country reviews providing updated information on the industrial sector were completed on Afghanistan, Argentina, Bangladesh, Costa Rica, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Paraguay, Peru, the Sudan, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania and Uruguay.

Industrial technology

Under the UNIDO industrial technology programme, while work continued on specific technological advances, there was a sharper focus in 1983 on the cumulative impact on developing countries of the interaction of such advances, and on the consequent need of each of those countries to formulate an overall policy integrating national industrial and technological activity. Efforts were aimed at strengthening developing countries' negotiating capacities for technology selection and acquisition. Such activities included assistance in establishing or strengthening government institutions for this purpose, and expanding the UNIDO Technological Information Exchange System (joined in 1983 by Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru), complemented by information provided by the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (see below).

Concerning specific technologies, UNIDO issued papers on problems of software development in developing countries, the impact of micro-electronics on biomedical applications in those countries, and informatics for industrial development. As in the past, UNIDO organized workshops at the national level to stimulate technology policy formulation and technological planning (Malaysia and Trinidad and Tobago).

The International Forum on Technological Advances and Development (Tbilisi, USSR., 12-16 April)⁽⁴⁰⁾ helped the secretariat relate the activities on technological advances to measures and policies needed for industrialization. One of five expert group meetings convened in preparation for the Fourth (1984) General Conference of UNIDO, the Forum was attended by experts from 23 countries. The Forum recommended that, in the context of technological advances, developing countries examine individually and collectively their existing state of technological capabilities and take steps to create or reorient national institutions and structures so as to maximize potential benefits and avoid adverse consequences. Each country should assess; the socio-economic impact of technological advances, make careful choices of technologies to be imported, and strengthen the negotiating capability for their acquisition.

The Forum reviewed selected technological advances in genetic engineering and biotechnology (see below), micro-electronics, new materials and related technologies, petrochemicals (see below), and energy from biomass and solar photovoltaic cells.

Industrial and Technological Information Bank

The Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB), in its fourth year of operation in 1983, continued to increase and update sources of information, to generate information of relevance to developing countries and to meet end-user requirements. Besides developing further linkages with other data banks and specialized correspondents, efforts were made to promote wider use of INTIB. To that end, UNIDO participated in two seminars (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania; Bordeaux, France) which helped to focus attention on industrial information needed by developing countries and available INTIB services.

Roughly 1,300 inquiries were received by INTIB's Industrial Inquiry Service during 1983. The inquiries, from industrial enterprises, information sources, research organizations, Governments and consultants, concerned chemicals, food, fabricated metal products, construction and energy.

Publication of four further volumes of the Industrial Development Abstracts (IDA) during the year brought the IDA data base up to 13,000 abstracts of UNIDO documents. Preparatory work was begun on a cumulative index for all such abstracts. A revised edition of the Thesaurus of Industrial Development Terms in English-French and French-English was published,⁽⁴²⁾ and the On-Line Information Key (LINK) data base-containing information on institutions, inquiries received by INTIB, subject files and technology suppliers-brought out two directories, one listing institutions engaged in the industrial conversion of biomass and another on acronyms of organizations included in the data base. The monthly UNIDO Newsletter⁽⁴³⁾ generated more than 11,000 requests for some 115,000 documents and publications.

On 13 May,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Industrial Development Board stressed the particular significance of UNIDO work in transferring appropriate and advanced technologies to developing countries (see above). The Board also stressed the utility of INTIB to developing countries, in particular its regional linkages and programmes assisting small- and medium-scale industries. Development of specific industries

Many of UNIDO's technical co-operation activities, studies and meetings during 1983 related to specific industrial sectors or industries. The major sectors were agro-industries, chemical industries, engineering industries, and metallurgical and mineral industries.

Agro-industries

In 1983, technical co-operation expenditures for activities in the agro-industries amounted to $10.9 million, with some 70 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 25 per cent; the Americas, 20; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 1; Asia and the Pacific, 50; Europe, 1; and interregional and global, 3. A total of 183 projects were completed or being implemented, 16 of them greater than $1 million in value, 61 greater than $150,000 and 106 below that value.

Activities focused on the improvement of industrial production and, as in the past, covered a wide range of light industries including textiles and clothing, food-processing, leather and leather products, packaging, rubber products, and wood and wood products.

Food industry

Work was begun in 1983 on a world-wide study of the vegetable oils and fats industry, a sector to be given special emphasis at a second consultation on the food-processing industry, scheduled for 1984-1985.⁽¹⁾ The study was to give an overview of the vegetable oils and fats industry, describing the developing countries' current and potential contribution to the industry, as well as certain aspects of planning and promotion at the national and subregional levels. Also begun was a study on the integrated development of the industry, based on a new methodology for analysing food production and consumption.

UNIDO contributed to the Organization of the International Conference on Co-operative Food-Processing in Developing Countries (Ottawa, Canada, 22-26 August). The Conference demonstrated the readiness of Canadian co-operatives to co-operate with developing countries. Integrated development of the industry was the subject of an expert group meeting (Alexandria, Egypt, 24-27 October), based on investigations of measures to promote the development of the vegetable oils and fats industry. Surveys of the two industries and of related equipment and spare parts manufacturing were carried out in 19 developing countries to identify and develop specific technical co-operation projects.

In the related area of the fisheries industry, preliminary work was begun in 1983 for a first consultation on this subject, scheduled for 1986-1987.⁽¹⁾ Fish-processing technology and the required industrial equipment and machinery were the topics of concentration. Two country papers on the status of the industry, emphasizing its role in the national economy and constraints on its development, were prepared.

Leather industry

In 1983, activities on the rationalization of world production, marketing and trade in leather and leather products centred on how developing countries could make full use of their existing production capacities and how international co-operation could support this objective.

Two issues were selected for consideration by a third consultation on the industry, scheduled for 1984-1985:⁽¹⁾ revitalization of industrial capacity in this sector in developing countries and development of regional co-operation in the production of basic tanning chemicals and footwear auxiliaries (heels, soles, laces, metallic attachments). Preparations for the consultation included analyses of the prospects of the industry in 40 countries in Africa, 30 in Asia and 15 in Latin America; a case study of the industry's integrated development in the Sudan; and an examination of prospects for regional co-operation in the production of footwear auxiliaries. Two studies on the industry were completed during 1983 for presentation at the consultation-one appraising production, consumption and trade trends since 1977, the other assessing prospects for the production of tanning chemicals in developing countries.

In other action related to the leather industry, UNCTAD VI, on 2 July, requested its Committee on Commodities to take action to provide a forum for interested producer and consumer countries to consider preparing project proposals or other arrangements on hides and skins in the context of the Integrated Programme for Commodities (see Chapter IV of this section).

Wood-using industry

Pursuant to a 1981 decision of the Industrial Development Board,⁽²⁾ the First Consultation on the

Wood and Wood Products Industry was held at Helsinki, Finland, from 19 to 23 September 1983.⁽³⁾ It was attended by 165 participants from 54 countries and 18 international organizations. The Consultation considered two issues-development of primary and secondary wood-processing industries, and measures to promote the use of wood and wood products-as recommended by a global preparatory meeting (Vienna, Austria, 24-26 January).⁽⁴⁾

On the first issue, it was concluded that the share of developing countries in total world production of wood and wood products was not commensurate with national resources. Contributing factors were difficulty in obtaining financing for processing plants and lack of transportation infrastructure and managerial and skilled labour at all levels. The Consultation recommended that UNIDO develop, in co-operation with a panel of international experts, contractual check-lists for elaborating arrangements in joint ventures, training and marketing; identify specialized research and development institutions in both developed and developing countries and areas of co-operation between them; give priority to a transport study for use at the next consultation; promote collaborative efforts in the preparation and dissemination of training manuals; and develop, in co-operation with FAO and UNCTAD, the regional and global information base necessary for the industry's development.

Concerning the second issue, the Consultation emphasized promotion of commercially less-accepted species of timber, research on the properties and availability of such species, and greater use of such wood for national housing programmes. The Consultation recommended that UNIDO, in collaboration with appropriate organizations, examine the possibility of developing internationally acceptable stress-grading rules and a strength-grouping system for tropical timber and other, species from developing countries; compile and disseminate information on existing and new uses of wood in construction; promote education and training in wood technology; and undertake studies on developing countries' participation in world trade of wood and wood products, including technical requirements. The Consultation also recommended that the Board consider convening a second consultation that would emphasize the secondary wood-processing industry.

Chemical industries;

In 1983, technical co-operation expenditures for activities in the chemical industries amounted to $17.1 million, with some 51 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 38 per cent; the Americas, 11; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 3; Asia and the Pacific, 38; Europe, 5; and interregional and global, 5. Completed or under implementation were 321 projects, 27 of them greater than $1 million in value, 93 greater than $150,000 and 201 projects below that value.

Projects were mainly in the sectors of building materials, fertilizers, petrochemicals including pesticides, and pharmaceuticals. Energy-related industrial technology, including biomass processing which involved microbiological processes for producing fuels and chemicals, continued to feature prominently among projects (see Chapter X of this section). Projects were also being implemented in glass and ceramics manufacture, the pulp and paper industry, salt production and pollution control.

Building materials industry

In 1983, a symposium on appropriate building materials for low-cost housing for the African region (Nairobi, Kenya, 7-14 November) was organized with UNIDO co-operation, and a regional project on low-cost construction in the Asian and Pacific region was begun. A project on the development of carbon fibre technology in Brazil, financed by the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development, made considerable progress in developing materials and components for various applications. An international conference was held (Sao José dos Campos and Salvador, Brazil, 5-9 December) to demonstrate the project's achievements and to explore possibilities of co-operation among developing countries in acquiring technologies for carbon fibres and carbon fibre composites. Support was provided for the first mechanized brick plant in the Gambia, which started production in 1983, and missions were sent to several countries to provide technical assistance for cement production.

Work continued on the first world-wide study on the construction and building materials industry, for presentation to the first consultation on that industry, scheduled by the Industrial Development Board to take place during 1984-1985.⁽¹⁾ The study would introduce strategies to promote a self-reliant construction sector in developing countries.

Fertilizer industry

In 1983, activities for the development of the fertilizer industry were largely devoted to preparations for a fourth (1984) consultation on the industry, as well as to following up recommendations made by previous consultations.

UNIDO finalized work on the cost-reimbursable and turnkey model contracts for the construction of fertilizer plants, and continued work on drafts of two other model contracts—semi-turnkey contracts and licensing, and engineering services agreements—for submission to the fourth consultation. Efforts continued towards establishing a programme of co-operation among developing countries in the fertilizer industry. Under the programme, UNIDO carried out a survey on training needs and facilities and began discussions with Indonesia on holding a training course for engineers in the operation and maintenance of fertilizer plants.

Regional meetings were held in April to exchange experiences in the construction and operation of such plants in Asia and the Middle East (New Delhi, India, 4-8 April) and in Latin America and the Caribbean (Salvador, Brazil, 18-23 April). Two other regional meetings—on packaging, storage and distribution systems and on the development of agricultural credit facilities and fertilizer pricing policies—were held as part of a project on fertilizer production and utilization in Arab States.

A draft directory of technological capabilities of developing countries related to the fertilizer industry was prepared on the basis of a 30-country survey; it would be used in preparing UNIDO technical co-operation programmes. A guide on evaluating mini-fertilizer plants was being prepared for use by developing countries in establishing small-scale, modern fertilizer plants. A study was prepared on capital cost control of fertilizer plants in developing countries.

Petrochemical industry

Work continued on updating supply and demand estimates, revising guidelines for Joint ventures and developing training schemes related to the petrochemical industry.

A seminar on co-operation among developing countries in petrochemical industries (Vienna, Austria, 7-9 March) was jointly held by UNIDO, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) and the OPEC Fund for International Development; UNIDO submitted to the seminar a study of potential areas for co-operation in building capacities needed to meet demand in 1990 and beyond. An Advisory Panel on Petrochemicals was created to assist those three organizations in implementing the seminar's recommendations, among them the preparation of directories on the technological capabilities and on petrochemical products of developing countries.

A model licensing agreement for the industry was completed by a group of experts from developed and developing countries, and distributed to UNIDO member countries.

In regard to the pesticide industry, a regional network was established for the production, control and use of pesticides in Asia and the Far East. Two expert meetings were held on a pesticide data collection system and pesticide registration requirements.

Pharmaceutical industry

The Second Consultation on the Pharmaceutical Industry, convened at Budapest, Hungary, from 21 to 25 November 1983,⁽⁵⁾ was attended by 216 participants from 66 countries and by 18 observers from 12 international organizations. The Consultation discussed four issues: contractual arrangements on the production of drugs; availability, pricing and transfer of technology for bulk drugs and their intermediates; development of drugs based on medicinal plants; and biologicals (production of vaccines).

Differences of opinion were expressed on the documents presented on contractual arrangements for the transfer of technology on the manufacture of bulk drugs, for formulating pharmaceutical dosage forms, and for setting up production plants. It was recommended that those documents be revised and others prepared for submission to a third consultation on the industry. Information on technology holders willing to transfer technology was to be updated. The UNIDO directory of supply sources for 26 essential bulk drugs (deemed suitable for production in developing countries), their chemical intermediates and some raw materials was to be enlarged to include all items in the World Health Organization model list of essential drugs. Other recommendations called for the compilation of a data base and directory of plants used as therapeutic agents; the addition of vaccines, serums and immunoglobulins to the UNIDO illustrative list of biologicals; and a step-by-step approach for establishing infrastructural capabilities for the production of vaccines.

Earlier in the year, at the request of developing countries, a draft report on the establishment of an international centre on information, training and development of pharmaceutical technology for developing countries⁽⁶⁾ was presented to a Meeting on Co-operation among Developing Countries on Pharmaceuticals (Tunis, 2-5 September). UNIDO projects in pharmaceuticals included industrial utilization of medicinal plants; establishment of drug factories, training programmes and facilities for quality control; and production of immunologicals and ophthalmic products.

Engineering industries

In 1983, technical co-operation expenditures for activities in the engineering industries amounted to $9.5 million, with some 80 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 28 per cent; the Americas, 10; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 11; Asia and the Pacific, 44; and Europe, 7. Completed or under implementation were 160 projects, 20 of them greater than $1 million in value, 63 greater than $150,000 and 77 below that value.

Technical assistance continued to be based on appropriate and proven technology, taking into account the recipient country's existing infrastructure and available and potential resources. As in the past, activities focused on industrial production, energy-related technology, and human resources development. Integrated activities aimed at improving the design, manufacture, maintenance and repair of engineering products in five product groups: agricultural machinery and implements, metalworking and machine tools, land-based and water-borne transport equipment, electronic and electrical machinery and equipment, and computers and computer-related equipment.

Some 56 projects were proposed for developing countries in all regions, in response to requests for technical assistance, mostly for development of agricultural machinery, expansion of electronic and related industries, and increased use of computers in industry.

Genetic engineering

At a ministerial-level plenipotentiary meeting held at Madrid, Spain, from 7 to 13 September 1983,⁽⁷⁾ the Statutes establishing the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology were adopted. The Centre, through a network of affiliated national, subregional and regional centres, would promote international co-operation in the development and application of the peaceful uses of genetic engineering and biotechnology, especially for developing countries. It would assist those countries in strengthening their scientific and technological capabilities in this field, and stimulate and assist activities at regional and national levels. The Centre would act as a focal point for affiliated research centres and link existing national, subregional, regional and international networks. It would also serve as a forum for information exchange among scientists of member State.

By the end of 1983, 28 countries had signed the Statutes, which would enter into force when at least 24 States, including the host State, had deposited instruments of ratification and after they had ascertained that sufficient financial resources were ensured. A Preparatory Committee consisting of the States which had signed the Statutes was to determine the Centre's location and accelerate work towards making it operational.

At the national and regional levels, UNIDO assisted in organizing workshops in genetic engineering and biotechnology and carried out studies.

Agricultural machinery

The Second Consultation on the Agricultural Machinery Industry was held at Vienna, Austria, from 17 to 21 October 1983.⁽⁸⁾ It was attended by 124 participants from 58 countries and observers from 7 international organizations. The Consultation considered three issues: prospects for international co-operation in the agricultural machinery industry; integrated manufacture of agricultural machinery and capital goods; and the main items for inclusion in model contracts for the import, assembly and manufacture of agricultural equipment, including training.

The Consultation proposed convening a group of experts to work out the application of a multi-product approach and elaborate a framework for co-operation in the industry, with emphasis on small- and medium-scale enterprises. It also suggested that a regional consultation in Latin America, and possibly also in Asia, be convened to promote regional and subregional co-operation. Guidelines were to be drawn up by UNIDO for the elaboration, by a group of experts, of a model licensing agreement for the import, assembly and manufacture of agricultural equipment, and training.

During the year, technical co-operation activities in support of the industry were concerned with improving national capabilities in product design, production, repair and maintenance. In Africa (Ethiopia, Somalia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania), assistance was provided in establishing development centres and pilot plants for national design and production technology. In Asia and the Pacific (Bangladesh, China, India, Mongolia, Nepal and Pakistan), assistance was given in establishing national applied research bases, and in Europe (Poland), in strengthening research and design. Other assistance centred on the simultaneous development of the agricultural machinery industry and subsidiary or related industries so as to fully utilize production capacities (Togo, Upper Volta).

Metallurgical and mineral industries

In 1983, UNIDO technical co-operation expenditures for activities in metallurgical industries amounted to $5.7 million, with some 70 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 40 per cent; the Americas, 15; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 8; Asia and the Pacific, 26; Europe, 9; and inter-regional and global, 2. Completed or under implementation were 127 projects, 11 of them greater than $1 million in value, 49 greater than $150,000 and 67 below that value.

As in previous years, the UNIDO programme in the metallurgical sector concentrated on the development, transfer, application and adaptation of metallurgical technology in the following subsectors: light (aluminium, titanium) and heavy (copper, lead, zinc, rare metals) non-ferrous metals; iron and steel industry; ferrous and non-ferrous foundries; and metal transformation processes (rolling, forging, extruding, heat treatment, welding). Units and institutions of metallurgical technology were either established or strengthened.

Technical assistance consisted mainly in providing expertise for the efficient operation of existing metallurgical plants, selection and application of appropriate technologies, standardization of metal products, the introduction of plant maintenance systems, and energy conservation, including utilization of solid wastes. Assistance for setting up new metallurgical plants included not only planning, design and operational know-how, but also techno-economic and market studies.

Reflected in developing countries' requests for technical assistance was the need for foundry and forge pilot plants and demonstration centres, laboratories or evaluation units for developing metallurgical technology and processing methods for metallurgical minerals. Some 11 projects for the development of foundry industries were under implementation in a number of LDCs (Afghanistan, Democratic Yemen, Lesotho, Nepal, Niger, Somalia, Sudan, United Republic of Tanzania).

A fully equipped metallurgical laboratory was installed in Paraguay in 1983, part of a project begun in 1982 to strengthen that country's metallurgical industry. Another such laboratory was under construction in Morocco to assist that country's foundry industry. Centres for metallurgical technology, established with UNDP/UNIDO assistance, became fully operational and self-sufficient, among them the National Welding Research Institute (Tiruchirapalli, India), which had developed into a national centre for research and development, consultancy, training and documentation. In Nigeria, a similar institute was being established, and a nucleus of laboratories was formed for research in mineral beneficiation, coal metallography, refractories and high-temperature furnaces for heat treatment and general laboratory use.

Work proceeded on a development centre for silicon technology in Pakistan, and equipment was shipped to the project site. Preparatory assistance in terms of concept formulation was provided to Mozambique for a technological, metallurgical and non-metallic testing and development laboratory.

A demonstration workshop on maintenance in metallurgical and foundry industries, organized under UNIDO auspices (Cairo, Egypt, 26 March-15 April), was attended by 19 participants from African developing countries. An interregional in-plant training programme on computerized maintenance systems in metallurgy was also organized (Czechoslovakia, 17 October-11 November).

Aluminium industry

In the non-ferrous metals subsector, the aluminium industry continued to be the main recipient of UNIDO technical assistance. Although the world economic situation had led to a decline in aluminium production over the last few years—notably in Japan and the United States—there had been a recent improvement in the industry and demands had increased. Events of the preceding two years had accelerated the process of the restructuring of aluminium production from developed to developing countries.

UNIDO continued assistance to the Guangzhou factory in China for a pilot plant manufacturing aluminium alloy door and window frames. It contributed a paper on the aluminium industry in the Arab world to the First International Arab Aluminium Conference (Kuwait, 24-26 October), and undertook a feasibility study for the reconstruction in India of an alumina calciner designed to reduce fuel oil consumption. Also in India, a team of experts examined possibilities for improving anode performance in aluminium smelting, and a detailed project report was prepared on the establishment of an aluminium research, development and design centre in that country.

Assistance was also continued for upgrading the scientific and technological capabilities of the Jamaica Bauxite Institute, and for the Aluminium Project Bureau in Mozambique, with a view to establishing an aluminium smelter. Under the Joint UNIDO/Hungary Aluminium Industry Programme, a number of technical assistance activities were carried out in support of the bauxite/alumina/aluminium industry in developing countries. These included a five-week training programme on alumina production; preparation of two training kits, one on the environmental aspects of bauxite/alumina production and another on possibilities for energy conservation; preparation of a manual on laboratory practice in alumina production; and a study related to establishment of linkages of a vertically integrated aluminium industry. Within the programme, a number of Hungarian experts in the aluminium industry were made available for technical co-operation projects in China, India, Jamaica and Mozambique. Assistance was provided to Zimbabwe for the investigation of prospects for producing lithium salts and alumino-silicate-based products together with potential market outlets.

Iron and steel industry

During 1983, technical co-operation activities in the metallurgical sector were predominantly related to the iron and steel industry.

Whereas in 1982 world output of raw steel totalled some 643.6 million tons (metric), down from 707.7 million in 1981 due largely to reduced output by industrialized countries, the output of developing countries was either maintained or increased. As a result of favourable supply and demand trends, projections for the next 10 years were for the growth of steel production facilities in India, Latin America and the Middle East, based on raw materials. High transportation costs and increased utilization of steel scrap had encouraged establishment of mini-steel plants at centres of consumption. In support of this trend, UNIDO undertook techno-economic studies in this area for some countries (Afghanistan, Democratic Yemen, Yemen), as well as a techno-economic evaluation for the establishment of the iron and steel industry in the United Republic of Tanzania, using domestic coal and iron ore.

A $1.4 million project designed to strengthen a research and development centre for the industry in Argentina became fully operational during the year. Drilling for iron ore deposits in Niger was completed, and some 13 tons of ore samples were being tested to determine ore beneficiation, pelletizing and direct reduction characteristics. A regional programme was prepared for the development of the Arab iron and steel industry, including upgrading the technical manpower skills of the Arab Iron and Steel Union. Jointly with Brazil, UNIDO organized and financed an international seminar on steel standardization (Rio de Janeiro, 21-25 November), which generated awareness of the importance of standards and quality certification.

Chapter VII

Transnational corporations

The Commission on Transnational Corporations held a special session during March and May 1983 to complete formulation of a code of conduct on transnational corporations (TNCs); significant progress was achieved although not completion. The session's report, containing the agreed provisions and an outline of outstanding issues, was transmitted by the Economic and Social Council (decision 1983/183) in July to the General Assembly. By decision 38/428 of December, the Assembly decided to reconvene the special session in 1984 to continue work on the code.

The Commission's Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting held its first session during February/March 1983. The Commission held its ninth regular session in New York, from 20 to 30 June,⁽¹⁾ and reviewed the work of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the main Secretariat unit for TNC-related matters.

In 1983, the Council took several other actions relating to TNCs. Decision 1983/104 and resolution 1983/75 concerned further preparations for the Commission's 1985 public hearings on TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia, while resolution 1983/74 also dealt with those activities and TNC collaboration with the racist régime in South Africa (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V).

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: transnational corporations. International trade and finance: restrictive business practices and commodity trade.

Draft code of conduct

Special session of the Commission. Pursuant to an October 1982 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽²⁾ the Commission on TNCs held a special session in 1983, open to the participation of all States, in order to complete formulation of a draft code of conduct on TNCs. As background, the Centre on TNCs provided an information paper to Governments to brief them on the code's structure and evolution, the status of the negotiations and the major outstanding issues. In addition, during January and February, the Centre organized briefing meetings at Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Bangkok (Thailand) and New York and in most countries of the Economic Commission for Western Asia.

The special session was held in New York from 7 to 18 March and from 9 to 21 May;⁽³⁾ the work was conducted in both formal and informal meetings.

In March, the Commission established two working groups to formulate proposals on sections and key issues of the draft code identified as outstanding when the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct had finalized its work in May 1982.⁽⁴⁾ Working Group I dealt with the sections on the preamble and objectives, and on definitions and scope of application; Working Group II considered sections on activities of TNCs and on their treatment.

In May, the Commission considered a working paper, submitted jointly by the Chairmen of the working groups, containing a set of proposals relating to the sections on definitions and scope of application, on TNC activities and on TNC treatment; the proposals on each section were presented as a package which, according to the Chairmen, represented a delicate balance among the various positions that was likely to be upset by any major change in a particular text. The Commission reached agreement on the paragraphs concerning adherence to economic goals and development objectives, policies and priorities; ownership and control; balance of payments and financing, accepted ad referendum by some delegations; and the treatment of issues relating to competition and restrictive business practices, although the paragraph's placement remained to be resolved.

No final decision was taken on the paragraph on non-collaboration by TNCs with racist minority regimes in southern Africa: many delegations supported the text on the understanding that the paragraph heading formed an integral part of the text; one delegation stated that the text should also include racist regimes in other areas, while others could not arrive at a decision. No agreement was reached on the paragraphs relating to non-interference in internal political affairs and in intergovernmental relations. As to the proposals on definitions and scope of application and on TNC treatment, they were considered as not meeting a number of substantial concerns and therefore were to be amended considerably; in particular, concern was expressed that applicability of the definitions to enterprises and entities of all countries had not been clarified adequately.

A working paper on the preamble and objectives submitted by the Chairman of Working Group I was not considered by the Commission in May. While many delegations supported the proposed text as an adequate expression of the main issues, others felt that, among other modifications, more elements on the positive contribution of TNCs should be included.

Although formulation of the draft code had not been completed, the Commission, on 21 May, adopted the report on its special session, annexing the agreed paragraphs and the texts that had been evolved for further consideration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1983, during consideration of the agenda item on TNCs by the First (Economic) Committee of the Economic and Social Council, Bangladesh introduced a draft resolution on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries.⁽⁵⁾ By that text, the Council would have: reconvened the special session of the Commission on TNCs early in 1984 to complete formulation of the draft code of conduct; had the session submit to the Council in 1984 the completed draft, for transmittal to the General Assembly that year; reaffirmed that the first objective of the code was to embody rules and guidelines addressed to TNCs and that no provision should be construed as indicating acceptance of conduct by corporations not allowed by host country legislation; and urged all concerned to demonstrate the political will and commitment to conclude the draft code without further delay. Following statements on the draft resolution, the Committee decided to transmit it to the Council for further consideration.⁽⁶⁾

At the Council meeting on 29 July, Bangladesh stated that the Group of 77 had decided to withdraw the draft, having concluded that, to avoid repetition of the unsatisfactory outcome of the Commission's March/May special session, the most appropriate step was to take the matter up at the 1983 Assembly session.

Acting on an oral proposal by its President, the Council adopted decision 1983/183 without vote.

Report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on its special session

At its 41st plenary meeting, on 29 July 1983, the Council decided to transmit the report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on its special session to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session for consideration and action.

In related actions, the Council, in resolution 1983/56 on permanent sovereignty over natural resources, affirmed the importance of the Commission's ongoing work on a code of conduct as it related to natural resources. In resolution 1983/74 on TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia, the Council reaffirmed that the code should include effective measures against TNC collaboration with the racist minority regime in southern Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, acting without vote on a recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted decision 38/428.

Special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to reconvene for one week early in 1984 the special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations, open to the participation of all States, for the purpose of assessing the work on the draft code of conduct on transnational corporations to facilitate the negotiation of outstanding issues, on the understanding that, if the outcome of that assessment was favourable, the Commission, at the end of its reconvened special session, would recommend the Economic and Social Council, at its Organizational session for 1984, to reconvene further the special session for the completion of the code.

Definition of TNC

In March 1983, at the first part of the special session of the Commission on TNCs,⁽³⁾ it was agreed that certain elements of the definition of the term "transnational corporation" would be elaborated in the provisions relating to the scope of the code's application. Accordingly, a set of proposals was evolved that included a paragraph setting out the essential characteristics of a TNC—an enterprise (a) comprising entities in two or more countries, regardless of the entities' legal form and fields of activity, that (b) operated under a system of decision-making, permitting coherent policies and a common strategy through one or more decision-making centres, (c) in which the entities were so linked, by ownership or otherwise, that one or more might be able to exercise significant influence over the activities of others and, in particular, to share knowledge, resources and responsibilities; a paragraph providing for the code's application to all enterprises having those characteristics regardless of ownership; and a paragraph stipulating that the code was universally applicable in and open for adoption by all countries.

These proposals were also considered in May, at the second part of the special session; however, no agreement was reached on the matter.

On 27 June,⁽¹⁾ during its 1983 regular session, the Commission noted the status of negotiations on the section of the code relating to definitions and scope of application.

Standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, established by the Economic and Social Council in October 1982,⁽⁷⁾ held its first session in New York from 22 February to 4 March 1983.⁽⁸⁾ Before it were two studies prepared by the Centre on TNCs: on specific issues of corporate accounting and reporting (information disclosure in relation to user needs, standard-setting approaches, financial accounting concepts, comparability, enforcement of standards); and on efforts to regulate and standardize corporate accounting and reporting in 20 selected countries.

During the general discussion, several delegations, stressing that information disclosure by TNCs was a matter of great importance to developing countries, urged attention to two priority issues: how to meet the information needs of those countries and enforcement of the Group's recommendations.

In accordance with its terms of reference, the Group formulated a programme of work, by which it agreed to review annually issues giving rise to divergent TNC accounting and reporting practices and to identify areas requiring harmonization, based on the work of standard-setting bodies and related studies and reports; to consider regularly accounting and reporting issues arising out of comprehensive information systems maintained by the Centre on TNCs and out of the code of conduct on TNCs currently being formulated; to designate, at each session, the issues to be considered at the following session from among those identified as outstanding by the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting in 1982;⁽⁹⁾ to identify issues arising out of the needs of home and host countries, particularly developing countries; to discuss measures that would give effect to its work, disseminate its results and develop education and training in accounting and reporting in Member States, especially the developing ones; and to discuss any other appropriate business.

The issues considered by the Group in 1983 included the concepts of "true and fair view" and of "accurate and honest" with respect to preparation of financial statements, equity method of accounting for investments, and accounting and reporting of contingent assets and liabilities. Attention was drawn to the importance of an auditor's association with certain financial and non-financial information.

On the Group's recommendation, the Commission on TNCs approved the Group's programme of work on 23 June;⁽¹⁾ it also took note of the Group's report⁽⁸⁾ and approved the provisional agenda and documentation recommended for its second (1984) session.

Centre on TNCs

During 1983, the United Nations Centre on TNCs, the main Secretariat unit for matters relating to TNCs, continued to develop a comprehensive information system, carried out research, and conducted and supervised technical co-operation activities. It assisted in work related to the formulation of a code of conduct, and prepared studies for the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting. It co-operated with other organizations and units inside and outside the United Nations system, in particular with the joint units operated by the Centre and the United Nations regional commissions.

Taking note of the Secretary-General's report summarizing the Centre's activities since mid-1982,⁽¹⁰⁾ together with a report on the financial implications of its 1983 work programme,⁽¹¹⁾ the Commission on TNCs, on 23 June 1983,⁽¹⁾ requested the Centre to take account in future of delegation views expressed during the discussion of its activities.

Information system

In 1983, the Centre on TNCs continued developing its comprehensive information system on TNCs and responded to a wide variety of requests for information. Collection and analysis of information under the various components of the system continued to expand-trends in TNC activities; policies, laws and regulations relating to TNCs; studies on TNC activities in selected sectors; individual corporations; contracts and agreements between TNCs and host country entities; sources of information; and standards of accounting and reporting. Information collection and analysis also extended to TNC involvement in the manufacture and distribution of toxic or hazardous chemicals and pharmaceuticals, and to TNC activities in colonial Territories, as requested by the General Assembly in December⁽¹²⁾ and November⁽¹³⁾ 1981.

As in the past, special emphasis was given to those elements accorded priority by the Commission on TNCs: legal information (policies, laws and regulations; contracts and agreements), macro data, industry studies of special importance to host developing countries and corporate profiles of selected individual corporations. The work accomplished was described by the Secretariat in a progress report⁽¹⁴⁾ to the Commission's 1983 regular session, which also described such operational aspects of the system as co-ordination with information systems of other United Nations bodies, information dissemination and the Centre's resources.

According to that report and to a subsequent one covering activities for the remainder of 1983,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Centre continued collecting material on legal enactments, administrative provisions, policy statements and related studies and reports, in addition to a significant number of bilateral and multilateral investment treaties and related agreements. Studies on selected international industries were in progress (see below).

Information on the 382 largest industrial TNCs was updated in respect of original data (on total and foreign components of sales, net assets, earnings, employment, and research and development expenditures) and expanded to cover total and foreign components of earnings before taxes, capital outlay, and wages and salaries. In addition, data on sales, net assets and earnings had been broken down by line of business and geographic areas. Some 170 corporate profiles had been completed and verified by the corporations concerned; another 150 were at various stages of preparation.

The Centre obtained some 90 additional contracts for analysis during the year, bringing the total number of its collection to over 800 contracts, and began a filing and coding system for effective access to them.

The Centre continued to enhance its knowledge of relevant public and private sources of information and their content. Its computer system currently included 13 data bases; it also had on-line access to some 200 data bases through which information could be obtained on developments related to industries in general or in specific countries, on activities of individual corporations and on measures taken by Governments.

Responding to a request from China, the Centre sent a mission there in April to help establish a transnational information centre. Requests for similar assistance had been received from Kenya and the Syrian Arab Republic. A request for assistance from Poland to improve and expand its data base was also received.

In December, the Centre made available the first issue of a list of chemical products deemed toxic or hazardous. It had compiled the list in co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme. By resolution 38/149 of 19 December, the Assembly urged the Centre, among other relevant United Nations bodies, to continue to co-operate in providing information for and updating the consolidated list.

In other action, the Centre, in response to a 1982 Assembly request,⁽¹⁶⁾ submitted a register showing profits derived by TNC activities in colonial Territories, which the Assembly took note of by resolution 38/50 of 7 December 1983 (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter I).

On 28 June,⁽¹⁾ the Commission on TNCs, having considered the Secretariat's progress report⁽¹⁴⁾ on the Centre's information system on TNCs, requested the Centre to continue developing the system, taking account of delegation views.

Joint units with regional commissions

Joint units established between the Centre on TNCs and the United Nations regional commissions in developing areas continued to operate during 1983 in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and Western Asia. Each unit's work programme, tailored to the region's specific needs and to complement the work of the Centre, included research on the economic, social and institutional issues of TNCs, mainly through case-studies, information dissemination, and training and advisory services.

The work of the units during the year was described in two Secretariat reports, one covering May 1982 to April 1983,⁽¹⁷⁾ submitted to the Commission on TNCs at its 1983 session, and another covering May 1983 to March 1984,⁽¹⁸⁾ prepared for its 1984 session.

Research completed or under way included country case-studies on the TNC role in banking and balance of payments and in primary commodity production and exports (Africa); studies on the socio-economic aspects of TNC impact on the food and beverages industry, on primary commodities and on transfer pricing practices, and a project on taxation of natural resource-based industries (Asia and the Pacific); a survey of investment and licensing practices of six European-based transnational bus-and-truck manufacturers in selected industrializing countries, two reports on the TNC role in the industrialization and trade of developing countries, and in relation to economic welfare and public policy (Europe); analysis of TNC impact on economic development in general and on the growth of external debt in particular (Latin America); and two country studies on transnational banks (Western Asia).

Information activities included updating lists or compiling inventories of TNCs operating or based in the region; collecting, analysing and disseminating basic information on them; direct mailing of publications and bibliographic lists; and initiating development of national information systems. In the area of advisory and training services, the joint units organized in co-operation with the Centre, participated in or provided resource persons for a number of meetings, seminars and workshops at which the work of the Commission on TNCs, the Centre and the units themselves were presented; advisory missions were undertaken.

On 23 June,⁽¹⁾ taking note of the 1982/83 Secretariat report,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission requested the Centre to take into account the views expressed by delegations, among them that the joint units should undertake additional work on regional investment planning and government policies towards TNCs, to be co-ordinated with the Centre's work in this regard.

Research

Research activities of the Centre on TNCs continued to be aimed at attaining three main objectives: to increase knowledge and understanding of the nature of TNCs and their impact, particularly on developing countries; to strengthen the position of host countries, particularly developing ones, in their dealings with TNCs; and to examine the TNC role in relation to the broader aspects of the development process.

In 1983, the Centre completed work on a comprehensive integrated study on TNCs in world development.⁽¹⁹⁾ The study, the third live-yearly review of the role of TNCs in the world economy, had been the centre-piece of the Centre's research activities in 1981 and 1982. A complementary report to examine the TNC role in implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) was in preparation. The second edition of the bibliography of company directories worldwide was also completed and published.⁽²⁰⁾

Studies on the following international industries were in progress: armaments, textile and synthetic fibre, construction and engineering, computer and data processing, biotechnology, telecommunications, petrochemicals and pharmaceuticals. An analysis of engineering and industrial consultancy contracts was under way.

Research work also continued on the TNC role in transborder data flows and their impact on home and host countries, particularly developing ones, with the main emphasis on TNCs and remote-sensing data; relationships between TNCs and State-owned enterprises; multilateral, regional and bilateral arrangements related to TNCs; and operations of transnational banks in host developing countries. Other research related to TNCs in South Africa and Namibia, TNCs and the employment of women, and TNCs and the environment.

Following consideration of the Centre's research programme, the Commission on TNCs, on 29 June,⁽¹⁾ orally amended and adopted a draft decision submitted by the Chairman.

By this decision, the Commission, reaffirming that the Centre's research must continue to conform with the objective of avoiding the negative effects of TNC activities on developing countries while maximizing their contribution to development, took note of the Secretariat's report on ongoing and future research⁽²¹⁾ and requested the Centre to pay particular attention to: the role of transnational banks as lenders and financial investors in developing countries; the role of TNCs in the commercial, industrial and services sectors in the movements of short-term capital between countries; their contribution to new patterns of production and consumption in developing countries, oriented to conserve energy and other natural resources; their impact on employment in developing countries, and on the development process and international division of labour; conflicts of jurisdiction relating to TNCs; implications and effects of policies on transfer prices of goods and services exported to developing countries by TNCs; and their contribution to investment promotion in the least developed of the developing countries.

Also on 29 June, after considering the agenda item on recent developments related to TNCs and international economic relations, the Commission took note of the Secretariat report⁽²²⁾ presenting an overview of the Third Survey and of the publication itself, and decided to discuss further the issues it had raised. At the same meeting the Commission, by 26 votes to 10, postponed consideration of a draft resolution proposed for action by the Economic and Social Council. The text would have had the Council request the Centre to prepare a study on the activities of State-owned enterprises from both market and centrally planned economy countries conducting transnational operations, for presentation to the Commission in 1984, and to include material on such enterprises in all other studies on TNCs.

On the same date, the Commission took note of the Secretariat progress report on TNCs and transborder data flows and requested the Centre to continue work in this area, taking into account the comments made during its discussion.

Technical co-operation

The programme of technical co-operation in advisory and training services of the Centre on TNCs continued in 1983 to respond to a wide variety of requests from developing countries in numerous sectors and areas. The Centre completed or initiated advisory projects in over 40 developing countries and conducted 18 training workshops attended by some 740 participants from 62 developing countries. These activities were described in two Secretariat reports, for the period July 1982 to March 1983⁽²⁴⁾ and for April to December 1983.⁽²⁵⁾

As in the past, the advisory assistance delivered was largely for countries in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America, with only a small part for Europe and the Western Asia subregion.

About one third of the projects related to policies, laws and regulations, involving assistance to Governments in (a) drafting, revising or evaluating laws and regulations related to TNC activities generally (foreign investment legislation and implementation procedures) or in specific sectors (petroleum, mining, forestry and export processing zones) and issues (technology acquisition); (b) examining overall policy options, or options on specific issues (ownership and control, fiscal régimes, performance requirements, incentives and guarantees, access to domestic financial resources, repatriation of capital and investment income); and (c) developing guidelines and procedures for projects involving foreign participation, as well as relevant administrative arrangements.

The other two thirds of the projects related to specific arrangements with TNCs in natural resources sectors (petroleum, mining, agriculture, forestry and fisheries) and in manufacturing and service industries (electronics, chemicals, textiles, telecommunications, electric power generation, hotels and airlines). Advisory assistance involved evaluating the merits of alternative forms of contractual arrangements; evaluating legal, financial, economic and operational issues; and providing staff support in preparation for negotiations.

Of the 18 training workshops conducted, seven were general, dealing on a cross-sectional basis with policy matters and specific issues arising from relationships between host countries and TNCs; 11 were specialized, dealing with those same topics in relation to the specific sectors of engineering and construction, fisheries, sugar, mining, petroleum and pharmaceuticals, and to the specific issues of negotiating loans on international capital markets, screening and monitoring industrial projects, and special economic and export processing zones. There were regional and subregional workshops for Asia (nine, including one each for Western Asia, the Pacific islands and the Association of South-East Asian Nations), Africa (one) and Latin America (one); and national workshops for Bangladesh, China, Kenya, Liberia, Mauritius, Namibia (two), Somalia and Zambia.

On 28 June,⁽¹⁾ the Commission took note of the Secretariat report ended March 1983.⁽²⁴⁾ It reaffirmed the importance it attached to the Centre's technical co-operation programme and urged the Centre to undertake an evaluation of the usefulness of completed projects and to report to the Commission in 1984. Expressing appreciation to Governments that had made voluntary contributions, the Commission urged others to make similar contributions and recipient Governments to cover local project costs.

Financing

In 1983, the Trust Fund for the United Nations Centre on TNCs, the main source of funding for implementation of the Centre's technical co-operation programme, had an income of $1,740,599.⁽²⁵⁾ That amount included contributions by three Governments of $436,900 (Finland, $27,700; Norway, $209,300; Sweden, $199,900), interest and miscellaneous income of $114,500 and $139,200 respectively, and a contribution to the programme of $1,049,999 by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Expenditures during the year came to $1,736,699, of which the UNDP share was approximately 60.4 per cent or $1,049,999, compared to 30 per cent in 1982.⁽²⁶⁾ Pledged in 1983 for 1984 was a total of $427,170.

Chapter VIII

Regional economic and social activities

At a time when the global economic situation made it more urgent to increase economic and technical co-operation among themselves, increased efforts were made by all the regional commissions in 1983 to promote interregional co-operation..

In 1983, four of the five regional commissions held their regular intergovernmental sessions at their respective headquarters: the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia (27 April-3 May); the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) at Bangkok, Thailand (19-29 April); the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) at Geneva, Switzerland (12-23 April) and the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) at Baghdad, Iraq (7-11 May). The Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) did not meet in regular session during the year.

Among issues of concern to the regional commissions considered by the General Assembly in 1983 were the food and agriculture situation in Africa (resolutions 38/159, 38/198), implementation of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for economic development of Africa (38/199), Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988) (38/150), Zaire's transport and transit problems (38/143), co-operation between the United Nations system and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (38/160) and administrative questions involving restructuring and decentralization (decision 38/432).

Adequacy of the conference facilities at ECA and ESCAP headquarters was also discussed (sections XXIII and VII of resolution 38/234, respectively), as well as the funding arrangements for the Regional Commissions Liaison Office in New York (section X of resolution 38/234).

The Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1983, took action on: the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar (resolution 1983/62), Zaire's transit problems (1983/64), special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s (1983/65), the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1983/67), the Transport and Communications Decade in Asia and the Pacific (1983/69), and the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1989) (1983/70). The Council decided that the provision of summary records should remain discontinued for a number of its subsidiary bodies, among them ECA, ESCAP, ECE and ECLA ((decision 1983/184)) (see Chapter XXIV of this section).

Summaries of the annual survey of current economic conditions in each region, prepared by commission secretariats, were examined and taken note of by the Council in July during its discussion of the world economic situation. (see p. 422). The Council further took note of the report on the meetings of the commissions' executive secretaries on promoting interregional co-operation (decision 1983/180), as well as the Addis Ababa declaration on the occasion of the silver jubilee anniversary celebration of ECA (resolution 1983/63). The Assembly also took note of that declaration (decision 38/434).

Regional co-operation

Interregional co-operation

In 1983, the regional commissions placed particular emphasis on promoting effective interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

Reports of the Secretary-General. Reporting to the Economic and Social Council in June 1983, with a July addendum, on the two meetings (New York, 5 November 1982; Geneva, 11 and 12 July 1983)⁽¹⁾ which the executive secretaries of the five regional commissions had held since the Council's July 1982 session, the Secretary-General noted the unanimous endorsement among them of a Council proposal for an inter-secretariat meeting to achieve optimal co-ordination of activities between different components of the United Nations system (see p. 418). The executive secretaries also agreed to establish an intra-secretariat task force that would assist the Secretary-General in preparing a report to the Assembly, as requested in 1982.⁽²⁾ on progress made in decentralizing United Nations activities. The Secretary-General's report also described the work of the commissions and issues brought by them to the Council for consideration or action.

Another June report, prepared by the regional commissions for submission to the Council by the Secretary-General,⁽³⁾ stressed the need for the commissions to help establish and strengthen co-operative arrangements among their member countries in order to ensure effective pooling of capabilities in support of interregional economic and technical co-operation. Considering it advisable in the initial stage to concentrate on priority areas based on resource availability and programme impact, the regional commissions identified some of the issues of immediate concern to the developing world, requiring urgent inter-regional action. The issues included: food security, where developing countries could pledge mutual assistance and establish a progress monitoring mechanism; joint ventures in agro- and marine-based industries; a "safety network" among developing countries ensuring exchange of technology, production and trade in energy other than oil; co-operation for fair and equitable pricing for primary exports, including agreed production and export arrangements; technological exchanges in agriculture; identification of commodities for interregional trade; short-term co-operation in balance-of-trade and payments adjustments; programmes for intercontinental transport links and freight-rate negotiation.

While aware of the need to avoid proliferation of new institutional arrangements, the regional commissions saw need for a facility which would develop a continuously enlarged portfolio of feasible projects for joint ventures among developing countries as well as train officials in all phases of co-operative projects; the commissions felt that a beginning could be made with the creation of a strong joint arrangement among themselves.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1983, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted decision 1983/180.

Meetings of the executive secretaries of the regional commissions

At its 41st plenary meeting, on 29 July 1983, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the meetings of the executive secretaries of the regional commissions.

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/180

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/123) without vote, 27 July (meeting 25); agenda item 7.
Meeting number. ESC 41.

The Council, in resolution 1983/66 of 29 July, called on the executive secretaries to organize periodic consultations between their respective commissions and relevant United Nations bodies with a view to ensuring the effective co-ordination of projects and programmes. That call was subsequently endorsed by the General Assembly in decision 38/435 of 19 December (see p. 418).

Restructuring

In an October 1983 report to the General Assembly,⁽⁴⁾ prepared in response to its December 1982 resolution⁽²⁾ concerning decentralization of resources and responsibilities throughout the United Nations system, the Secretary-General stated that such a policy aimed at making the Organization more responsive to the needs of the developing countries was gradually emerging in the administrative but not in the substantive programme areas, where difficulties were encountered in developing and applying consistent approaches and criteria. He reported that arrangements were being made to institute more systematic consultations between United Nations Headquarters and the regional commission secretariats at all stages of programme planning and budgeting, and that senior-level intersecretariat meetings were envisaged to contribute to the most effective distribution of responsibilities for implementing relevant Assembly and Council resolutions.

The decentralization and restructuring efforts continued in the regional commissions, with noteworthy results reported with regard to transport and water resources. A comprehensive review of the public administration programme was undertaken by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) in 1982⁽⁵⁾ and modalities were suggested to improve co-operation in that area. A review was being planned for decentralization of activities in such areas as public administration, development issues and policies, social development, science and technology, population, and advisory services.

In the proposed programme budget of the United Nations for 1984-1985,⁽⁶⁾ which involved an overall real growth of 0.7 per cent (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I), a 3.5 per cent growth was proposed for the four commissions in developing regions, in line with the efforts at decentralization through reinforcing their capacities as major instruments in realizing the potential of economic co-operation among developing countries. That growth was to provide additional posts to sustain the work in the population field in those commissions and to respond to their priority programme needs in such areas as industry and trade. The General Assembly dealt with the question of decentralization and restructuring, as they related to regional commissions, in decision 38/432 (see below, under AFRICA).

In related action, the Assembly, in resolution 38/106, urged the Secretary-General, in consultation with the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, to ensure continuation of senior women's programme officers posts at those commissions (see Chapter XIX of this section).

Regional commissions liaison office

In reviewing the proposed 1984-1985 programme budget for the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), which included the Regional Commissions Liaison Office, CPC⁽⁷⁾ concluded that the appropriations for the Office should not be part of the programme budget section of a regional commission, and requested the Secretary-General to make appropriate recommendations to the Assembly.

The Secretary-General subsequently proposed establishing a new section in the proposed budget,⁽⁸⁾ adding that the move entailed separation of staff and other associated resources proposed for that office from ESCAP, without additional financial implications or other changes.⁽⁹⁾ The Regional Commissions Liaison Office, in operation at Headquarters since 1981, served as a link between the commission secretariats and Headquarters as well as with relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in New York.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted section X of resolution 38/234 without vote.

Africa

The critical climatic situation in Africa, with severe drought continuing to affect food production and cause loss of livestock, overshadowed the work of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in 1983.

The twenty-fifth Anniversary of the establishment of ECA, coinciding with the eighteenth session of the Commission and the ninth meeting of its Conference of Ministers (the highest policy body of the Commission), was observed at ECA Headquarters at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 27 April to 2 May 1983.⁽¹⁾ A review of the socio-economic development in Africa, 1958-1983, and a preliminary perspective study of ECA and Africa's development, 1983-2008, highlighted the Silver Jubilee agenda.

Regarding socio-economic development, 1958-1983, a paper prepared by the secretariat: stated that, despite progress made, Africa was still faced with a menacing economic crisis challenging its survival. The ECA Executive Secretary told the session that there had, however, been significant progress since the 1960s when many African countries had become politically independent, especially when it was realized that the colonial period did not prepare the Continent for socio-economic development.

On development, 1983-2008, a secretariat preliminary perspective study presented two scenarios: one based on the assumption of continuation of current policies and socio-economic and growth patterns, and the other on the assumption that the goals and objectives of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos⁽²⁾ would be achieved. The implication of the first scenario was that, half a century after independence, Africa would still depend on foreign sources of supply in almost all essential areas, which could be expected to have disastrous effects on the food and energy situation and on such social services as education, health and housing. The second scenario supported a radical and substantive transformation of African economies in a desirable change as recommended in the Lagos Plan.

On 29 April, the Addis Ababa Declaration on the Occasion of the Silver Jubilee Anniversary Celebration⁽¹⁾ was adopted. Among other things, it dedicated Commission members to total liberation of Africa; denounced the "linkage proposal" regarding Namibian independence (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III); denounced inhuman oppression of the South African people by the Pretoria regime and called for majority rule in that country; reaffirmed the 1980

Lagos Plan of Action; and expressed serious concern over devastating crises of chronic food deficits, pernicious drought, natural disasters, high costs of imports, particularly manufactured goods, capital goods and energy, deteriorating terms of trade, mounting external debts and problems of economic management. It further noted with concern the erroneous belief that development and economic growth depended mostly on external demand and supply factors; consequent neglect of the development of adequate indigenous entrepreneurs, high-level manpower and national, subregional and regional markets; and inappropriate agricultural and industrial policies.

The Declaration further expressed grave concern that, if past and current policies continued, ECA's Golden Jubilee in 2008 would witness a highly marginalized Africa, beset with worse crises of food and energy shortages and balance-of-payments deficits with most factor inputs coming from abroad. It resolved that implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action and the Final Act rested on African Governments and peoples; called, at the same time, on the international community to provide moral, technical and financial support to that endeavour; appealed for immediate initiation of global negotiations for an equitable new order in the international economic and social system; appealed to developed countries to increase official development assistance to developing countries to the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product and to earmark 0.15 per cent of gross national product for aid to least developed countries (LDCs). Twenty-six of the world's 36 LDCs were among the 50 independent African countries.

The Declaration called for United Nations specialized agencies and African intergovernmental organizations to provide assistance to achieve: food self-sufficiency and security; a physically integrated continent in transport and communications; self-sufficiency in supply of middle- and high-level manpower; the objectives of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990);⁽³⁾ increased intra-Africa trade and finance co-operation; reinforced transfer, development and adaptation of appropriate development technologies; full knowledge and better exploration, development and utilization of natural resources; and economic co-operation and integration for collective self-reliance.

The Conference of Ministers of ECA, at its 1983 session, adopted 27 resolutions,⁽¹⁾ on various issues of socio-economic development in Africa. Among them were issues brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council including: support to African land-locked and island countries; United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988); problems of freedoms of the air; the climatic situation and drought; development of cartographic services; and development of resources of the sea.

Other substantive resolutions adopted dealt with: survey of economic and social conditions, situation of food and agriculture, assistance to the livestock sector, implementation of the Industrial Development Decade, establishment of an African Monetary Fund, interregional economic and technical co-operation, statistical services, perspective studies in African countries, Africa and the ongoing international economic negotiations, women in development, strengthening of African capabilities in environmental matters, human settlements, evaluation and harmonization of the activities of African multinational institutions sponsored by ECA and OAU, strengthening of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres, support to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development, measures for accelerating the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action in African Least Developed Countries, first round of review meetings for the African least developed countries, and activities of the secretariat.

ECA Committee meetings in 1983 were (held at Addis Ababa, unless otherwise specified): Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning (third meeting, Cairo, Egypt, 8-11 March); Follow-up Committee (of the Whole) on Industrialization in Africa (Kigali, Rwanda, 16-19 March); Inter-governmental Committee of Experts of African Least Developed Countries (third meeting, 11-13 April); Meeting of Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole (fourth meeting, 14-22 April); Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries (third meeting, 25 and 26 April); and Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development (second meeting, 14-18 November).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1983/63 without vote.

Addis Ababa Declaration on the Occasion of the Silver Jubilee Anniversary Celebration of the Economic Commission for Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977, 33/202 of 29 January 1979 and 34/206 of 19 December 1979, concerning the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, by which the Assembly assigned specific additional tasks to regional commissions, including assuming the role of main general economic and social development centres for their respective regions, providing team leadership and responsibility for co-ordination and co-operation at the regional level and acting as executing agencies,

Mindful of the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Africa, under which, inter alia, the Commission shall participate in measures for facilitating concerted action for the economic development of Africa, including its social aspects, with a view to raising the level of economic activity and levels of living in Africa, and shall assist in the formulation and development of co-ordinated policies as a basis for practical action in promoting economic and technological development in the region,

Noting with satisfaction that in April 1983 the Economic Commission for Africa celebrated the Silver Jubilee Anniversary of its establishment, and noting further that during the past twenty-five years Africa has made noteworthy progress in various aspects of economic and social development, including regional co-operation and integration, as noted in the Addis Ababa Declaration on the Occasion of the Silver Jubilee Anniversary Celebration of the Economic Commission for Africa, adopted on 29 April 1983 by the Conference of Ministers of the Commission,

Expressing its appreciation to the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa for his introduction to the general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, in which he apprised the Council of the economic and social conditions prevailing in the African region over the past twelve months,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on regional co-operation;

2. Notes the Addis Ababa Declaration on the Occasion of the Silver Jubilee Anniversary Celebration of the Economic Commission for Africa, particularly the full commitment of the African Governments and peoples to the realization of the goals and objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos, which are an integral part of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;

3. Congratulates the Economic Commission for Africa on its many positive contributions to Africa in economic and social development and integration during the past twenty-five years;

4. Encourages the Commission to intensify its efforts so that the socio-economic development of Africa can be accelerated and national and collective self-reliance at subregional and regional levels can be achieved;

5. Expresses its confidence in the dedicated work being undertaken by the secretariat of the Commission and in the ability of the Commission to discharge fully its increased responsibilities for the welfare of the African peoples;

6. Also expresses its deep concern with regard to the economic and food prospects for Africa in the year 2000 if the present obstacles to the development of the continent are not quickly removed;

7. Recommends the General Assembly to call upon the international community to support the endeavour of the African Governments towards achieving the accelerated development and integration of their continent, by making available to them the necessary moral, technical and financial assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/434 without vote in December.

Addis Ababa Declaration on the Occasion of the Silver Jubilee Anniversary Celebration of the Economic Commission for Africa

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to endorse Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/63 of 29 July 1983 and called upon the international community to support the endeavour of the African Governments towards achieving the accelerated development and integration of their continent by making available to them the necessary moral, technical and financial assistance.

General Assembly decision 38/434

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/701/Add.1) without vote. 14 December (meeting 56); draft orally proposed by Chairman: agenda item 12.
Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 56; plenary 102.

Economic and social trends

Many countries of Africa continued to suffer in 1982 from balance-of-payment difficulties because of lower export revenues originating from lower prices and volume, according to a summary,⁽⁴⁾ issued in March 1983, of the ECA survey of economic conditions in Africa. Official development assistance (ODA) flows remained insufficient in real terms to cover the needs of developing countries, while some countries found it necessary to enter into debt rescheduling exercises because of their inability to raise the corresponding revenue. In 1982, world demand remained weak for most of the primary commodities exported by Africa, and export revenues continued to fall; oil production for the year was projected to be 21 per cent less than in 1981, and copper prices reached in mid-1982 their lowest level since the Second World War.

Recovery in 1983 depended on climatic conditions, and on the performance of the countries belonging to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). If the economy recovered in the OECD area, revived demand for oil and other African exports, along with increased capital outflows, would boost Africa's output, but it was improbable that growth would exceed 3 per cent.

The summary was noted by the Economic and Social Council, in decision 1983/177 of 28 July (see p. 422).

Social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s

In a report,⁽⁵⁾ submitted in June 1983 to the Council and the Assembly, the Secretary-General reviewed special measures taken by the international community, in accordance with a 1980 Assembly resolution,⁽⁶⁾ for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s. The report, the third since the 1980 Assembly action, focused on identifiable measures introduced for facilitating the implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action.⁽²⁾

It pointed out that the regional programme for Africa of the United Nations Development Programme, planned at $283,400,000 for 1982-1986, for example, currently stood at $137,208,000. In addition, ECA had witnessed in its negotiations a severe tightening of the purse of traditionally friendly donors of multilateral assistance. At the same time, while 51 non-African countries were invited to the Fourth Biennial Pledging Conference at Addis Ababa on 2 May in connection with the Silver Jubilee Anniversary meetings, not one developed country had made a direct cash contribution to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development. Contributions were made by China and India.

At the Third Meeting of the Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries (Addis Ababa, 25 and 26 April), it was noted with great concern that the declining trends of overall ODA flows to African LDCs, which started in 1980, had continued.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1983/65 without vote.

Special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also section II of General Assembly resolution 36/182 of 17 December 1981 and section II of Assembly resolution 37/212 of 20 December 1982 on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, as adopted, and Assembly resolutions 37/140 of 17 December 1982 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and 37/245 of 21 December 1982 on the situation of food and agriculture in Africa,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 37/139 of 17 December 1982, by which the Assembly, inter alia, urged donor countries to provide substantial and sustained levels of resources for promoting the accelerated development of African countries and the effective implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, and to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development,

Deeply concerned at the continuing low level of economic activities in Africa and the devastating effects of the current world economic crisis on the particularly vulnerable economies of the countries in the region, twenty-six of which are now classified in the category of the least developed among the developing countries,

Fully aware that the Lagos Plan of Action and the Final Act of Lagos provide a framework of priority action for achieving the rapid overall economic and social development of Africa, as reiterated in the Addis Ababa Declaration on the Occasion of the Silver Jubilee Anniversary Celebration of the Economic Commission for Africa, adopted on 29 April 1983 by the Conference of Ministers of the Commission,

Recognizing the primary responsibility of the African countries for their development and the importance of the mobilization of their national resources for their socio-economic development,

Convinced of the need for increased and sustained external resources in order to achieve the aims and objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action and the Final Act of Lagos,

Recalling that there is a need for a thorough evaluation of the application of special measures for the economic and social development of Africa during the mid-term review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Having considered the third report of the Secretary-General on special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s, which reviews special measures taken by the international community for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s,

1. Takes note of the third report of the Secretary-General on special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s;

2. Expresses i/s regret that, despite efforts undertaken by the international community over the last three years, the resources thus provided are not commensurate with African development requirements;

3. Notes the disappointing results of the Fourth Biennial Pledging Conference for the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development, held at Addis Ababa on 2 May 1983;

4. Renews its call to the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to examine measures to increase the resources for the execution of the programmes for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa and the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and to apply the special measures in a comprehensive and co-ordinated manner;

5. Urges donor countries to provide substantial and sustained levels of resources for promoting the accelerated development of African countries and the effective implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action and the Final Act of Lagos, and to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development;

6. Invites all international financial institutions, particularly the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Development Association and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, to continue actively to consider increasing substantially their development assistance to Africa and to treat the matter of making a special effort in support of African economic and social development with the urgency it requires;

7. Stresses its deep concern at the gravity of the food situation in Africa and the continuing decline in the food self-reliance ratio, and urgently calls upon the African countries to accord due priority to food and agricultural production in their national and subregional plans, and also urges donor countries and international agencies to increase their support for the implementation of the measures contained in the Lagos Plan of Action in the area of food and agriculture;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to allocate the necessary resources to the Economic Commission for Africa, taking into account its role as the main economic and social development centre within the United Nations system for the African region, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977 and 33/202 of 29 January 1979;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984, a comprehensive report, prepared on a uniform basis and including figures, on the activities throughout the United Nations system in relation to Africa, and on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/123) without vote, 27 July (meeting 25); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1983/C.1/L.30), based on informal consultations on draft by Bangladesh, for Group of 77 (E/1983/C.1/L.19); agenda item 7.
Meeting number. ESC 41.

In related action, the Council, in resolution 1983/63, recommended that the General Assembly call on the international community to support the endeavour of the African Governments towards achieving the accelerated development, by providing moral, technical and financial assistance (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/199 without vote on 20 December.

Special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September

1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/64 of 5 December 1980 and 36/180 of 17 December 1981, concerning the adoption of a wide range of special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s,

Recalling further section II of its resolution 36/182 of 17 December 1981 and section II of its resolution 37/212 of 20 December 1982, on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, and its resolutions 37/140 of 17 December 1982 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and 37/245 of 21 December 1982 on the situation of food and agriculture in Africa,

Recalling its resolution 37/139 of 17 December 1982, in which it, inter alia, urged donor countries to provide substantial and sustained levels of resources for promoting the accelerated development of African countries and the effective implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, and to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development,

Deeply concerned at the negative effects of the current world economic crisis on the economies of African countries and at the scourges that ravage the African continent, which suffers mainly from structural problems, inter alia the lowest level of literacy and training and rudimentary structures in the field of health and housing, as well as the extremely precarious living conditions of the largest number of refugees in the world,

Expressing its deep concern at the extreme gravity of the food situation in Africa, which is aggravated by chronic droughts, the continued decrease in food self-reliance and the continued increase in volume of the imports of food products in Africa, particularly in the Sudano-Sahelian and southern regions, and noting that, among other factors, the rate of increase of food production in Africa continues to lag behind population growth,

Recognising that Africa is the least industrialized region in the world, that this specific situation necessitates the full implementation of the objectives set out in the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa and that, in order to reverse the existing situation, sustained efforts by the international community are required to achieve the effective implementation of the objectives of the Decade,

Recognising also that Africa is confronted with exceptionally serious economic and social problems, highlighted, inter alia, by the fact that it contains three quarters of the least developed countries and half of the land-locked countries of the world,

Convinced of the need for increased and sustained external resources on a predictable and continuous basis in order to achieve in a co-ordinated manner the aims and objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action and the Final Act of Lagos,

Recalling that there is a need for a thorough evaluation of the implementation of special measures for the social and economic development of Africa during the mid-term review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Having considered the third report of the Secretary-General on special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s which reviews special measures taken by the international community to that end,

1. Takes note of the third report of the Secretary-General on special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s;

2. Expresses its regret that, despite efforts undertaken by the international community over the past three years, the resources thus far provided are not commensurate with African development requirements;

3. Notes the disappointing results of the Fourth Biennial Pledging Conference for the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development, held at Addis Ababa on 2 May 1983, particularly for projects aimed at assisting the least developed countries of Africa;

4. Expresses its gratitude to all countries which participated and made pledges during that conference;

5. Strongly urges all donor countries to implement their commitments, as contained in paragraphs 61 to 69 of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, as adopted, so as to achieve, in that regard, a substantial increase in resources for the development of the least developed countries, twenty-six of which are in Africa;

6. Welcomes the steps taken by a number of donor countries to increase their contributions to the United Nations Development Programme, expresses its concern at the decline in real terms in the United Nations Development Programme assistance given to the developing countries through the United Nations system, reflecting a general decrease in multilateral concessional assistance in real terms, which adversely affects the country and regional programmes for Africa of the Programme during the third programming cycle, 1982-1986, and urges all countries, particularly those that have not done so, to increase their annual contributions to the Programme;

7. Also urges donor countries to provide substantial and sustained levels of resources for promoting the accelerated development of African countries and the effective implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos, and to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development;

8. Recognizes the important contribution consultative groups and round-table meetings can make to African development by enhancing aid co-ordination and mobilizing additional resources and urges African and donor countries to continue to co-operate to that end;

9. Invites all international financial institutions, particularly the World Bank, the International Development Association and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, to continue actively to consider increasing substantially their development assistance to Africa and to treat the matter of making a special effort in support of African economic and social development with the urgency it requires;

10. Renew's its call to the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to examine measures to increase the resources for the execution of the programmes for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa and the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and to apply the special measures in a comprehensive and co-ordinated manner;

11. Stresses its deep concern at the gravity of the food situation in Africa and the continuing decline in the food self-reliance ratio, urgently calls upon the African countries to accord due priority to food and agricultural production in their national and subregional plans and also urges donor countries and international agencies to increase their support for the implementation of the measures contained in the Lagos Plan of Action in the area of food and agriculture;

12. Supports the urgent appeal launched by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in favour of the twenty-two African countries threatened by food shortages and urges the international community to respond generously to that appeal by providing the additional food aid and rehabilitation inputs required;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to convene, in co-operation with the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Fifth Biennial Pledging Conference for the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development and to take the necessary measures to ensure its success and, in this regard, appeals to donor countries, relevant United Nations organs, international and regional financial institutions and other interested public and private bodies to participate fully and contribute generously to the Fund;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to allocate the necessary resources to the Economic Commission for Africa, taking into account its role as the main economic and social development centre within the United Nations system for the African region, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977 and 33/202 of 29 January 1979;

15. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984, a comprehensive report, prepared on a uniform basis and including figures, on the activities throughout the United Nations system in relation to Africa and on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.13) without vote, 9 December (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.107), based on informal consultations on draft by Sierra Leone, for African Group (A/C.2/38/L.81); agenda item 78. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 41.46.50,52,54,55; plenary 104.

The Assembly in resolution 38/5 (see p. 192) as well as in decision 38/434 (see above), also called on the international community to provide African countries with necessary assistance.

Activities in 1983

Food and agriculture

Critical situation

The year 1983 was a bad year for agriculture in Africa because of the severe drought both in southern and West Africa.

The worsening food crisis and nutritional status of the African populace at large made it clear that the only option was to promote individual and collective food self-sufficiency as the major objective of agricultural development in the region. Other major activities to implement the objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action and the Regional Food Plan for Africa dealt with livestock development, reduction of food waste and post-harvest losses, and forest resources development and conservation. A region-wide survey of food problems led to publication of The situation of food and agriculture in Africa.

Food and agricultural activities were oriented towards helping member States improve their agricultural development policies, planning and programming; promoting integrated rural development, institution building and provision of services; improving market services and facilities; and reducing food losses. Inter-agency consultative meetings were held in 1983 on: food and agriculture technology (May), livestock research and development in Africa (September), and establishment of a subregional maize research centre for Eastern and Southern Africa (September).

The intensity of drought affecting the region was reflected in the drop of gross agricultural output by 2.6 per cent in 1983, the downturn reaching 6.6 per cent in western Africa (see also below, under ENVIRONMENT). The drought created serious dislocations of life in a number of countries, with significant numbers of people migrating in search of food either within or beyond national borders. Emergency measures were required to cope with the situation, despite severe problems of transportation, storage and distribution encountered in relief operations (see p. 523).

On a longer-term basis, African countries were jolted by the drought and the crisis into seeking solutions to their deep-seated problems. Across the Continent, agricultural policies were adjusted to provide more incentives to farmers, and increased amounts of resources were allocated to agriculture to bring about a definite increase in productivity. At the same time, more attention was paid to the initiative of the small producers, with precedence given to decisions at the local level rather than the previous centralized approach.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a June 1983 report on the state of technology for food and agriculture in Africa,⁽⁷⁾ submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council, in pursuance of a December 1982 Assembly resolution,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General noted that total food production in Africa rose by 1.5 per cent against the demographic growth of 2.8 per cent during the 1970s. While other regions of the world succeeded in achieving some notable progress in increasing the production of a number of major crops, Africa continued to witness worsening food production, and its food self-sufficiency ratio dropped from 98 per cent in the 1960s to about 86 per cent in 1980.

The widening food gap had eroded the objective for self-reliance and self-sufficiency in food, subjected millions of people of the region to malnutrition and hunger, and halted development efforts of many African countries by forcing them to resort to imports to cover the deficit hence draining their badly needed foreign exchange for development.

The importance of agriculture to the economies of African countries remained paramount: in 1981, agriculture in Africa made up to 24 per cent of the gross domestic product (at factor cost) and provided occupation to 67.7 per cent of the active population. Lagging behind in the adoption and development of suitable technology for agriculture, African countries had not been able to make full use of and benefit from the vast natural resources to increase agricultural productivity, which was expected to serve as a base for industrialization; while Africa's potential arable land was estimated at about 1.7 hectares for each person, only about 0.55 hectares per person were being utilized. The factors responsible for the slow growth of the agricultural sector in Africa included droughts and desertification, inadequate investments, poor incentives to farmers through distorted pricing systems, fragmentation and sub-division of holdings, inadequate land tenure systems, limited agricultural research, rural-urban migration and institutional constraints.

The Secretary-General felt that the international community and donor agencies should support the development of research and development capacity in Africa and assist in the design and adaptation of technology appropriate for Africa's factor endowment (factor-supply conditions) and for various ecological zones. Along with a long list of requirements for improvements in the available food and agricultural technology, the Secretary-General observed the need for strengthening national research organizations and for providing greater incentives for African agricultural scientists to stay on in their own countries and play their part in the eradication of hunger and malnutrition. Other recommendations were given in the report for bridging the technology gap.

In his October report to the Assembly, on the food and agriculture situation in Africa,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that Africa's total imports of agricultural, forestry and fisheries products were worth some $17.4 billion in 1981; imports of agricultural products alone, which consisted almost entirely of food products, cost the continent $15.7 billion, against export earnings from agricultural products of $9.8 billion.

The Secretary-General concluded that the improvement of the food situation in Africa required, among other things, a strong political will to channel greater volume of resources to agriculture as well as inter-country co-operation, measures to understand and combat drought and desertification, and encouragement by Governments for changes in food habits and consumption patterns, from wheat-based products to those based on locally produced foodstuffs. In the coming few years (1983-1985) a foundation should be laid for the advancement of self-sufficiency in cereals, livestock, and fish production; efforts should focus on reduction of food waste, attainment of a higher degree of food security and a large increase in production of tropical cereals vis-à-vis the production of industrial crops. Member States needed to implement more effectively the recommendations of the Lagos Plan of Action through improved project co-ordination, improved research in appropriate fields and the elimination of intra-regional trade barriers for all locally produced raw materials pertaining to food and agriculture.

Concern for the gravity of the food and agriculture situation in Africa was expressed in a number of 1983 resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council in July and the General Assembly in December.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Council, in resolution 1983/65 on special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s (see above), expressed its deep concern at the gravity of the food situation in Africa and the continuing decline in the food self-reliance ratio, and urgently called on the African countries to give priority to food and agricultural production. In resolution 1983/71 on food problems (see Chapter XI of this section), the Council supported the appeal of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in favour of the African countries threatened by food shortages, and urged the international community to respond generously to that appeal. Further, in resolution 1983/68 on the climatic situation and drought in Africa (see p. 524) the Council requested the ECA Executive Secretary to organize a special scientific round-table meeting with a view to examining the effects of drought on the African economy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/159.

Critical situation of food and agriculture in Africa
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, in which the General Assembly emphasized agricultural and rural development and the eradication of hunger and malnutrition as being among the principal objectives of the Decade,

Recalling also the Programme of Action of the World Food Conference, containing the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition adopted by the Conference, and the Declaration of Principles and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development,

Recalling further its resolutions 35/69 of 5 December 1980, 36/186 of 17 December 1981 and 37/245 of 21 December 1982 on the situation of food and agriculture in Africa,.,

Recognizing the high priority attached to food and agriculture and the commitment and determination of Africa to devote its limited resources on a priority basis to agricultural development, as reflected in and in accordance with the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa,

Noting with grave concern that, over the past two decades, the situation of food and agriculture in Africa has undergone a drastic deterioration, resulting in a decline in food production per capita with detrimental effects on dietary standards, which are well below the minimum requirements, as well as in an alarming increase in the number of people exposed to malnutrition, hunger and starvation,

Gravely concerned at the increasing and painful drain of scarce foreign exchange resulting from the growing dependence of African countries on food imports owing to the critical food shortage, which has had a detrimental effect on their overall development,

Deeply concerned also at the unabated encroachment of the desert and the recurring problem of drought in many countries of Africa, which have continued to accentuate the food problem on that continent,

Recognizing that the food supply crisis has been further exacerbated by such factors as poor rainfall, brush-fires, unusually severe crop infestation, epidemics of animal diseases and chronic shortages of production inputs,

Recognizing that the responsibility for the development of food and agricultural production lies primarily with the developing countries themselves and that there is an increasing effort and growing commitment by the developing countries to accelerate the development of their food and agricultural sectors,

Recognizing the role of food-sector strategies, which emerged from the World Food Council as a means for interested developing countries to adopt an integrated approach for increasing food production, improving consumption and attracting the necessary additional international resources,

Reaffirming the call in the Lagos Plan of Action regarding the application of policies providing incentives for increasing production, particularly for small farmers, while at the same time safeguarding the interests of the poorer consumers,

Convinced that increased international support to combat drought, desertification, epidemics of animal diseases, crop infestation and post-harvest losses, among other problems, is crucial to the attainment of food self-sufficiency in Africa,

Further convinced that international support measures can reinforce the efforts of the African countries to resolve the technological, managerial and financial resource gaps impeding food and agricultural production in Africa,

Noting with serious concern that the findings of the Special FAO/WFP Task Force established by the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Executive Director of the World Food Programme have further highlighted the worsening food supply crisis, which has resulted in increased hunger and malnutrition affecting as many as 150 million people in twenty-two African countries,

Noting with deep concern that the high-level meeting of the African countries concerned and of the potential donor countries, convened by the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in Rome on 19 October 1983, has not so far resulted in the significant additional food aid resources needed, which have been estimated by the Special FAO/WFP Task Force at 3.2 million tons, of which a minimum of 1 million tons should be provided in the months ahead, including 700,000 tons to be provided on an emergency basis in the next few months in order to maintain supplies to the twenty-two affected countries,

Noting the current unfavourable world economic situation, reflected in, inter alia, weak foreign export markets, balance-of-payments deficits and high interest rates, which, together with, in certain cases, a stagnation in aid and other related factors, have seriously undermined the ability of African countries both to sustain a reasonable level of food and agricultural production and to cover food deficits through commercial imports,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 35/69, 36/186 and 37/245 and calls for their full implementation on an urgent basis;

2. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the situation of food and agriculture in Africa and on the state of technology for food and agriculture in Africa;

3. Welcomes the conclusions and recommendations of the World Food Council at its ninth ministerial session, in particular those relating to the African region;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the timely and important initiative of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in convening a special meeting on the African food supply situation and urges the international community to respond favourably and immediately to the appeal made by the Director-General for alleviation of the present critical food supply situation in Africa;

5. Supports the urgent appeal launched by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in favour of the twenty-two African countries threatened by food shortages, and urges the international community to respond generously to that appeal by providing the additional food aid required, which has been estimated by the Special FAO/WFP Task Force at 3.2 million tons, of which a minimum of 1 million tons should be provided in the months ahead, including 700,000 tons to be immediately provided to maintain food supplies in the affected countries, as well as $76 million in agricultural inputs for the rehabilitation of agriculture and animal husbandry;

6. Recognizes the role of the international community, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme, the World Food Council, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the World Bank in mobilizing food aid and agricultural assistance for Africa, and requests existing and new donor countries to increase the resources required to meet African needs for food aid and agricultural development;

7. Urges all the countries of Africa to continue to accord priority to food and agriculture, in accordance with their national development plans and programmes, and to continue to implement measures to raise substantially their food and agricultural production in keeping with the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, and in this context reaffirms the important role that national food strategies, plans and programmes could play in this process;

8. Urges the international community to supplement, through increased financial and technical assistance, on a priority and long-term basis, the national efforts of African countries to achieve the goals and objectives set forth in the Lagos Plan of Action relevant to food and agriculture, taking into account the recommendations of the African Ministers for Food and Agriculture at the Twelfth FAO Regional Conference for Africa, in particular the following objectives:

(a) Significant improvement in their food situation and laying of the foundations for the attainment of self-sufficiency in cereals, livestock and fish;

(b) Significant progress towards attaining a 50 per cent reduction in post-harvest losses, through, inter alia, the construction of storage facilities;

(c) Improved transport infrastructure to facilitate food distribution at the national, subregional and regional levels;

(d) Support of indigenous research efforts through expanded and more effective agricultural research, with special emphasis on animal husbandry, improved seeds and an adequate supply of fertilizers, pesticides and other chemicals suitable to African conditions;

9. Further urges all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to expand their training programmes for the building up of national capabilities for the preparation, execution, monitoring and evaluation of agricultural sector projects;

10. Calls upon the international community to continue to support efforts undertaken by African countries at the national, subregional and regional levels to increase food production through, inter alia, the provision, on a priority and long-term basis, of additional financial and technical assistance to Africa by organizations of the United Nations system, such as the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations Development Programme and other organizations involved in the financing of agriculture development, and through an increase in lending by the World Bank to the agricultural sector in Africa;

11. Recognizes that an international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources for food and agriculture in Africa would be a useful mechanism for focusing international attention on the problem and could accelerate the process that would lead to a significant improvement of food and agricultural production in Africa;

12. Notes that the report of the Secretary-General on the state of technology for food and agriculture in Africa was incomplete in certain respects and that data are still being gathered, and requests that an updated report be submitted to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984, a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution.

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.5) without vote, 21 November (meeting 45); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.73), based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.17); agenda item 78 (e). Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 30, 39, 45; plenary 102.

In related action, the Assembly, in resolutions 38/158 and 38/199, reiterated its support for the FAO appeal in favour of the 22 African countries threatened by food shortages and urged the international community to respond generously; and in resolution 38/200, it agreed that immediate measures taken by the United Nations system in favour of the developing countries should be directed, among other things, at progress in food and agriculture, including special food aid measures as required for seriously affected food-deficit countries in Africa (see Chapter XI of this section). Further, the Assembly, in liquidating the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund, decided in resolution 38/201 to channel 70 per cent of the funds thus available primarily to food and agricultural projects, with special emphasis on African countries (see Chapter III of this section).

Proposed international year

Report of the Secretary-General. In June 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council, for transmittal to the General Assembly in accordance with that body's December 1982 request,⁽¹⁰⁾ a report on the implications of declaring an international year to mobilize financial and technological resources for food and agriculture in Africa.⁽¹¹⁾ Based on ECA's assessment of various prerequisites for proclaiming and organizing such a year, the Secretary-General observed that, according to past experience, mere declaration of an international year was not likely to result in an appreciable increase in the inflow of resources; without the removal of policy, social, economic, administrative and technical bottlenecks at all levels, availability of additional resources could hardly help to improve the situation.

On 28 July, the Council, in decision 1983/175, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 38/198 without vote.

International year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/246 of 21 December 1982 on an international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources for food and agriculture in Africa,

Noting with great alarm that, since the adoption of its resolutions 35/69 of 5 December 1980, 36/186 of 17 December 1981 and 37/246 of 21 December 1982, the situation of food and agriculture in Africa has worsened, as evidenced by a drastic decline in self-reliance in food,

Recognizing the critical financial gap which seriously hinders the growth of the agricultural sector in African countries,

Recognizing also that the technological gap in Africa has a direct relationship with declining agricultural productivity, which is aggravated by natural factors such as drought and desertification,

Recognizing further that all countries of Africa should implement, in accordance with their national development programmes and priorities, measures to increase substantially their national food and agriculture programmes through, inter alia, national, subregional and regional measures, including economic and technical co-operation among developing countries,

Recognising the role of food-sector strategies, which emerged from the World Food Council as a means for interested developing countries to adopt an integrated approach for increasing food production, improving consumption and attracting the necessary additional international resources,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implications of declaring, an international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources for food and agriculture in Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes that the year 1991 might be designated international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa, bearing in mind the relevant criteria set forth in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to elaborate action-oriented proposals in respect of the international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa and to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.13) without vote, 5 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.98), based on informal consultations on draft by Sierra Leone, for African Group (A/C.2/38/L.76); agenda item 78. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 50, 54; plenary 104.

Implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa

Efforts to promote industrial development focused on implementing the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) (1980-1990),⁽³⁾ with greater emphasis on continuous and closer co-operation with other United Nations agencies and programmes. The Follow-up Committee on Industrialization in Africa (seventh meeting, Kigali, Rwanda, 16-19 March)—including the secretariats of ECA, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)—reviewed and adopted guidelines for priority action at the national and subregional levels and modalities for implementing IDDA activities. The Joint Committee of the ECA, OAU and UNIDO secretariats concerned with implementing the Decade's programme held its second meeting in June and its third meeting in October to examine issues arising from the Follow-up Committee meeting, the organization of subregional meetings and preparations for the Fourth (1984) General Conference of UNIDO.

Manufacturing output averaged only 1.5 per cent from 1980, as compared to IDDA targets which provided for a growth rate of 12.8 per cent. While government control and planning was stressed in the past, there was an emerging trend towards liberalization and improvement of the climate for foreign investment.

A subregional meeting on promoting intra-African industrial co-operation within the framework of IDDA (Addis Ababa, November) issued its final report regarding co-operation in the Eastern and Southern African subregion.

UNIDO action. On 13 May, the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO adopted a resolution⁽¹²⁾ on the Decade. Taking note of a second progress report by the executive heads of UNIDO and ECA⁽¹³⁾ the Board expressed deep concern at the scarcity of resources made available, including UNDP resources, which had contributed to limited progress in implementing the Decade's preparatory phase whereas almost one third of the Decade had elapsed. It appealed to donor countries and institutions for increased contributions to African industrial development so as to achieve the target set by African Governments for a 1.4 per cent share for Africa in world industrial production during the Decade, and reaffirmed its request to UNDP to allocate adequate funds, taking into account the high priority established for the Decade.

In a June 1983 note⁽¹⁴⁾ submitted to the Economic and Social Council through the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO at its April/May session, in pursuance of requests made in 1982 by the Council in July⁽¹⁵⁾ and by the General Assembly in December⁽¹⁶⁾ the UNIDO Executive Director summarized the activities carried out by the secretariats of ECA, OAU and UNIDO in implementing the programmes for IDDA.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1983/70 on 29 July by a roll-call vote.

Industrial Development Decade for Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1982/66 B of 30 July 1982 and section II of General Assembly resolution 37/212 of 20 December 1982, as adopted, in which the Assembly, inter alia, recalled that the Industrial Development Decade for Africa was one of the most important programmes of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization,

Recalling further Industrial Development Board resolution 56(XVII) of 13 May 1983, in which the Board, inter alia, expressed its deep concern at the scarcity of resources, including resources made available for the Decade by the United Nations Development Programme,

Noting resolution (I) adopted by the Follow-up Committee on Industrialization in Africa at its seventh meeting, held at Kigali, Rwanda, from 16 to 19 March 1983, and resolution 466(XVIII) adopted on 2 May 1983 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, both concerning the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Considering that the effective implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for the implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos will, to a large extent, depend on the sustained development of industry as a supplier and user of goods and services and therefore on the structural adjustment in the industrial sector, with emphasis on selected strategic core industries,

Noting with appreciation the decision of the African Development Bank to provide increased financing for industrial projects in Africa during its 1982-1986 programme period,

Noting further the deteriorating economic situation in Africa and the fact that the number of the least developed countries in Africa has increased from twenty-one to twenty-six, out of the present global total of thirty-six,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the second progress report on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, prepared jointly by the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa;

2. Welcomes the efforts made by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in assisting the African countries and intergovernmental organizations in the formulation of national and subregional programmes for the Decade, and in maintaining continuous and harmonious co-ordination with the secretariats of the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Commission for Africa and other international organizations concerned;

3. Supports Industrial Development Board resolution 56(XVII) on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa and reiterates the repeated appeals made to the international community to increase its contribution to African industrial development within the framework of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, with a view to ensuring that the target set by the African Governments of a 1.4 per cent share of world industrial production is achieved by the African region during the Decade;

4. Decides to accord priority to the Industrial Development Decade for Africa among the programmes of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Economic Commission for Africa and, consequently, requests the Secretary-General to ensure that this priority is fully reflected in the programme budgets of those organizations and that adequate resources will be provided for the co-ordination and monitoring of the Decade, subject to approval by the General Assembly;

5. Appeals to all countries and institutions to increase their contributions to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund, taking into account the financial requirements of the projects directed towards the implementation of the programme for the Decade;

6. Urges the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to consider increasing its allocation of financial resources for assistance to African countries and intergovernmental organizations in planning and formulating their programmes for the Decade and to accord high priority to industrial projects, especially for the development of core industries, in its national and regional programmes for Africa, taking into account the priorities of the African countries;

7. Recommends that the General Assembly, at its thirty-eighth session, should continue to provide the United Nations Industrial Development Organization with adequate funds from the United Nations regular technical assistance programmes for assistance to the African countries and to intergovernmental organizations, necessary for the full implementation of the programme for the Decade and for its popularization. priority being accorded to the formulation of industrial policies, strategies and plans, the development of core industries, industrial manpower, technological capabilities and institutional infrastructures, the development of energy technology and equipment, the promotion of intra-African industrial co-operation, the development of the least developed countries, and the mobilization of financial resources.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/70

29 July 1983 Meeting 41 44-1-5 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/126) by vote (32-1-5), 27 July (meeting 25); draft by Bangladesh, for Group of 77 (E/1983/C.1/L.11), orally amended in informal consultations; agenda item 13.
Meeting number: ESC 41.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Benin, Brazil, Burundi, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, India, Japan, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, St. Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, German Democratic Republic, USSR.

Prior to adopting the text as a whole, the Council adopted paragraph 4 by a roll-call vote of 42 to 6, with 2 abstentions, the paragraph having been similarly approved by the First Committee by 29 to 7, with 2 abstentions.

Financial considerations—chiefly opposition to measures leading to regular budget increases—were cited in explanation of vote by the United States, which voted against paragraph 4, the German Democratic Republic on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Poland and the USSR, also against paragraph 4, and Canada, which abstained on that paragraph.

In related action, the Council, in resolution 1983/65, called on the United Nations system to examine measures to increase the resources for the execution of programmes, among others, for IDDA.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Support to the IDDA programme was called for in two 1983 General Assembly resolutions.

In section II of resolution 38/192, the Assembly decided to increase the allocation to UNIDO by $1 million in 1984 for assistance to African countries and to intergovernmental organizations in implementing the programme for the Decade; and appealed to all countries and institutions to increase their contributions to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund (see p. 582). In resolution 38/199 (see above), the Assembly called again on the United Nations system to increase the resources for the execution of the programmes for the Decade.

Environment

The ECA Conference of Ministers, on 2 May 1983, adopted a resolution on the climatic situation and drought in Africa,⁽¹⁾ urging the secretariat to organize a scientific round table, in co-operation with other bodies of the United Nations system, to examine the causes, frequencies and trends, if any, of drought in Africa and to propose ways of dealing with the phenomenon.

A joint ECA/UNEP regional workshop on industrial environment impact assessment and environmental criteria for siting of industry (Addis Ababa, 27-30 June) provided African industrial experts and environmental advisers with an opportunity to discuss applicability of UNEP guidelines to local conditions.

A February 1983 progress report of the Joint Inspection Unit, prepared by Inspectors Toman Hutagalung and Joseph A. Sawe, on the implementation of recommendations on regional programmes in the conservation and management of African wildlife, was submitted to the Economic and Social Council by the Secretary-General in a September note.⁽¹⁷⁾ The report made a number of conclusions and recommendations on support to training programmes in wildlife conservation and on an integrated regional living resources conservation strategy.

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/225, expressed concern for the drought situation in the Sudano-Sahelian region (see p. 526), and, in resolution 38/164, urged all Governments to assist the countries in the region in combating desertification (see Chapter XVI of this section.).

International trade and finance

The largest and most serious deterioration in the terms of trade since 1970 was observed in 1982-1983, with a 7.9 per cent decline registered in 1983. While exports declined, particularly because of the fall of oil prices, imports declined faster and the trade and current account positions improved. In 1983, the trade deficit fell to $0.5 billion compared with the 1982 peak of $9.7 billion, and the total current account deficit fell to $13.6 billion compared with $24.7 billion in 1982. The decrease in deficit reflected binding constraints on the availability of external financing rather than a real improvement in the external position. In fact, outstanding external debt had risen to $150 billion at the end of 1983, representing 180 per cent of goods and services exports, while external debt servicing rose to 22.4 per cent of exports of goods and services compared with only 10.7 per cent in 1980. There was a record number of rescheduling exercises in an unprecedented number of countries.

In the area of domestic and intra-African trade, a preliminary study was made of the situation of domestic trade in Africa, focusing on the need to promote such trade and on techniques for rationalizing channels of distribution. Poor performance in developing intra-African trade was attributed, among other things, to lack of clear policies, concentration of trade expansion on long-established links with developed countries and unsatisfactory payment arrangements and credit facilities, coupled with limited production capacity and inadequate transport and communications facilities.

The Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States (PTA) became operational on 1 January 1983 and the secretariat prepared studies to help the PTA secretariat in its initial phase. The ECA secretariat also assisted in establishing the Economic Community of Central African States, and the Treaty establishing the Community was signed at Libreville, Gabon, in October, by 10 of its 11 potential members. A feasibility study was prepared for the establishment of an agricultural commodity exchange for Eastern and Southern Africa. Assistance was also given in setting up the African Federation of Chambers of Commerce, and a constitution was adopted at a meeting at Cairo, Egypt, in November.

Steps were taken to convene meetings of the heads of major economic groupings for forging closer links between them, in line with the call of the Lagos Plan of Action for an African economic community by the year 2000. The chief executives of ECA-sponsored institutions (fourth meeting, Dakar, Senegal, December) agreed on the establishment of a buffer fund to tide institutions over in times of temporary financial need.

Regarding South-South collective reliance, a study was undertaken of products of interest to African countries within the framework of the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries (GSTP), in order to assist ECA members in adopting effective negotiating strategies.

In the field of trade with non-African countries, the major concern was assistance to African countries in finding effective responses to the world trade crisis, particularly resulting from the collapse of commodity prices in the world market, accompanied by higher inflation, interest rates, balance-of-payments deficits and mounting external debt. A study prepared by the secretariat, in collaboration with OAU and the African Development Bank (ADB), on the external indebtedness of African countries analysed, and made recommendations dealing with, the impact of indebtedness on social and economic development, balance-of-payments related issues, debt rescheduling, debt servicing and terms of credit.

Transnational corporations

ECA 1983 activities relating to the role of transnational corporations (TNCs) in African economic development focused on research studies, the implications of the proposed international code of conduct for TNCs (see Chapter VII of this section), technical co-operation and advisory services, and development of comprehensive information on TNCs in Africa. Emphasis was placed on strengthening the negotiating capacity of African countries vis-à-vis the corporations, and an integrated paper was prepared on their role in African banking and financial institutions.

The second African regional meeting on a code of conduct on TNCs (Cairo, January and February) recommended that TNCs be called upon to cease investments in South Africa and progressively wind up existing activities and operations, and that the completed code should help strengthen the position of African Governments in their dealings with TNCs.

ACTION BY PRINCIPAL UN ORGANS

A number of 1983 decisions by United Nations major bodies concerned the activities of TNCs in Africa. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/74, dealt with collaboration with the racist racist of South Africa, and in decision 1983/104 and resolution 1983/75 took action on preparations for 1984 public hearings on TNC activities there (see p. 144). The General Assembly condemned TNCs that had increased collaboration with that regime and requested the Secretary-General to take all measures to deny facilities to and refrain from investment in corporations operating in South Africa (see p. 122); and, in resolution 38/50, took note of a register indicating TNC profits derived from colonial Territories (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter I).

Natural resources, energy and cartography

In regard to mineral resources, ECA provided technical and administrative assistance to the Eastern and Southern African Mineral Resources Development Centre (Dodoma, United Republic of Tanzania) and hosted the Second Technical Advisory and Fifth Governing Council (Addis Ababa, 9-12 August 1983). The inaugural meeting of the Governing Council of the Central African Mineral Resources Development Centre took place at Brazzaville, Congo (27-30 June), and the ECA secretariat was entrusted with the Centre's day-to-day management until the end of 1984. A workshop on the role of coal in accelerated economic growth in Africa was held at Addis Ababa from 11 to 14 July.

Concerning water resources, a project in progress since July 1980, in co-operation with the World Meteorological Organization, was completed in October 1983. The project, on the planning and development of hydrometeorological networks and related services in Africa, benefited some 29 countries.

Activities began in 1983 for collecting and compiling information on indigenous abilities of ECA member States to explore, exploit, develop and manage marine resources, with a view to recommending a comprehensive agenda for action in the African region.

In respect to energy, technical advisory services were given to a number of countries in: the formulation of national energy policies; the evaluation, development, exploitation and use of energy resources; and the development and use of solar, wind and biogas energy. The secretariat organized a seminar and study tour in China, in August and September, on biomass conversion, solar energy and mini-hydropower; made preparations for establishing an African Regional Centre for Solar Energy; and contributed to making fully operational ECA's solar energy demonstration centre.

Assistance was given in developing two regional cartographic centres—the Regional Centre for Services in Surveying, Mapping and Remote Sensing at Nairobi, Kenya, and the Regional Centre for the Training of Aerial Surveys at Ile-Ife, Nigeria. The secretariat also continued implementing and developing the African Remote Sensing Programme.

Science and technology

A seminar, organized by ECA in collaboration with the USSR, on planning methodologies for the science and technology component in national development plans (Moscow, 22 August-1 September 1983), enabled senior African government officials to learn such methodology, examine the structure and organization of the relevant State machinery in the USSR, pool information and experience, and consider measures for strengthening national capabilities in technological planning in their own countries. The secretariat also organized a meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development (14-18 November), which reviewed, among other things, the implementation of the science and technology chapter of the Lagos Plan of Action.

Transport

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988)

In 1983, the Third Inter-Governmental Meeting of Experts in Transport, Communications and Planning met at Addis Ababa in January, followed by the Third Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning (Cairo, March). A revised programme for the second phase (1984-1988) of the United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988) was prepared on the basis of the guidelines emerging from that Conference. A round table, held in Paris in June, reviewed the draft programme and advised on methods of presentation.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In June, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council,⁽¹⁸⁾ that the Conference of transport ministers viewed the estimated cost of $31.7 billion for the draft programme for the second phase as being too large and unrealistic and recommended that individual African countries reduce their programmes to a reasonable level, given the difficulties experienced in financing the programme for the first phase (1980-1983) and continuing turbulent world economic conditions substantially reducing assistance flows. The Secretary-General stated that African countries had made substantial contributions to funding the Decade's programme, much more than was received from external sources. Such funding was mostly from national projects and the only funds for regional and subregional projects came from UNDP. The report concluded that the results of the upcoming second phase depended on a more dynamic role to be played by ECA, backed by funds that were commensurate with the task.

The Secretary-General also noted that the ECA Conference of Ministers had observed in 1983 that less than 50 per cent of the first phase programme had been achieved in financial terms and that the performance of the communication and air transport subsectors had been particularly poor. The Conference was also disturbed that the regional and subregional projects, the most important element in the Decade programme, had fared worse in securing financing than had national projects; feeling that this was contradictory to the order of priority established in the global strategy and plan of action, the Conference urged a reversal of that situation in the second phase. The ECA Conference of Ministers endorsed the call of the Conference of transport ministers for a reduction of the programme in the second phase and the launching of the programme early in 1984. It noted with regret the tendency of donors to introduce unacceptable conditions after pledges had been made so that disbursements were much less than amounts pledged.

In a June note⁽¹⁹⁾ to the Assembly through the Council, the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the ECA Executive Secretary in pursuance of a December 1982 Assembly request,⁽²⁰⁾ concerning the preparation of a plan of action for the second phase of the Decade. The Executive Secretary concluded that the implementation of the programme for the first phase had been impressive in terms of projects and funds secured (77.5 per cent of some $8,747 million). Projects for the second phase had been successfully carried out and 22.5 per cent of the funds required had been secured.

ECA activities for the Decade since July 1981 were described in a March 1983 report by the UNDP Administrator, submitted to the third session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (New York, 31 May-6 June).⁽²¹⁾

General Assembly resolution 38/150

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 137-1-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/701/Add.1) by recorded vote (119-1-8), 9 December (meeting 551): draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.30), orally revised in informal consultations; agenda item 12.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/38/751; S-G. A/C.2/38/L.42, A/C.5/38/94. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 36, 55; 5th Committee 68, 69; plenary 102.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

In the Second Committee, approval of the draft followed a decision-by a recorded vote requested by the USSR, of 116 to 9, with 4 abstentions-to retain paragraph 10. The recorded vote on the text as a whole was taken at the request of the United States.

In explanation of vote, the need to control the growth of the United Nations regular budget was cited by the United States, which voted against the paragraph, the German Democratic Republic, on behalf also of the Eastern European socialist countries, also against the paragraph, and Canada, which abstained in that vote. The United States added that the activities for the Decade should be financed by voluntary contributions. Morocco abstained in the vote on the paragraph, as it believed setting a particular sum in advance could result in a reduction of the activities envisaged.

Mexico, speaking for the member States of the Group of 77 developing countries, expressed regret that some delegations had disregarded the gentleman's agreement which had been reached after lengthy consultations and a large number of concessions had been made by the draft's sponsors in the hope of achieving a consensus. Kenya would have preferred the original version of the draft; it could not support a dangerous tactic whereby a text was limited in scope in the hope of achieving a consensus, only to be voted on and approved in a weakened form.

On 16 December, the Fifth Committee had decided, by recorded vote of 83 to 9, to inform the Assembly that additional appropriations of $1 million would be required under the ECA section of the 1984-1985 programme budget. The Committee took this action on the oral recommendation of the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

In related action, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/199 (see above), called again on the United Nations system to examine measures for increasing the resources for the execution of the programmes for the Decade.

Transport and trade problems of Zaire

The ECA secretariat continued during 1983 to provide technical advice and assistance to help the semi-land-locked State of Zaire with its international trade and transit problems, in response to several past requests by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

Report of the Secretary-General. In 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council and the Assembly a June report, with an August addendum,⁽²²⁾ focusing on a round-table meeting (Kinshasa, Zaire, 28 and 29 June), on the financing of projects for opening up the land-locked southern and eastern regions of the country. The Secretary-General reported that the meeting considered 59 projects totalling $2.239 billion, of which external sources were expected to provide $1.555 billion. Projects essential to maintaining the potential of existing transport were assigned top priority, with the largest investment being made in railways. It was suggested at the Kinshasa meeting that a second meeting should be organized in 1985 or 1986 to consider the progress made.

Europe-Africa transport link

In pursuance of a July 1982 request of the Economic and Social Council,⁽²³⁾ representatives of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), ECA and Morocco, at a meeting at Addis Ababa in January 1983, agreed on the terms of reference of a consultancy mission for preparing a synthesis and an evaluation of the various reports and studies currently available on the proposed permanent link connecting Africa and Europe across the Strait of Gibraltar. The Executive Secretaries of the two Commissions concerned stated in their joint report to the Council in June⁽²⁴⁾ that the mission, made up of four consultants, visited Rabat, Madrid and Geneva during March and April, and orally presented their findings, in April, to ECE and to ECA.

An addendum to the report dealt with issues such as the impact of the project and its integration into the region, technical options, economic soundness of the project and legal questions. In its conclusions and recommendations, the two Commissions noted that the permanent link was technically feasible, that its cost would be high but that the anticipated economic, political and social benefits would probably be considerable. The execution of such a project would radically improve relations between the north and south sides of the Mediterranean and between the African and European continents. While recognizing that the project concerned primarily the two coastal States which had conceived and studied it, the Commissions noted that it was of international and even intercontinental importance and that its execution, therefore, deserved the assistance of the international community.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1983/62 without vote.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2097(LXIII) of 29 July 1977 and General Assembly resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977, in which the Assembly proclaimed the period 1978-1988 the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Noting the decision taken by the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning at its third session, held at Cairo from 8 to 11 March 1983, concerning the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar and the Tangiers-Lagos axis,

Noting also decisions G(XXXVII) of 2 April 1982 and I(XXXVIII) of 22 April 1983 of the Economic Commission for Europe, in which the Executive Secretary of that Commission was requested to continue to co-operate with the secretariats of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Western Asia on projects of interest to the Mediterranean countries,

Bearing in mind the recommendation adopted at the fifth session of the African Highway Conference, held at Libreville from 6 to 11 February 1983, concerning the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar and the Tangiers-Lagos axis,

Bearing in mind also the results of the seminar on the transport situation in the Mediterranean region, held at Barcelona in June 1983,

Noting with satisfaction the progress made by the Joint Moroccan-Spanish Committee in studies for the project for a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Convinced of the importance of the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar for the Mediterranean region and for the African and European continents with regard to the development of interregional and good-neighbourly relations,

Referring to its resolution 1982/57 of 30 July 1982, in which the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa were requested to evaluate the studies available regarding such a link and to identify, on that basis, the problems related to its establishment,

Taking note with satisfaction of the interim report prepared by the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa,

Also taking note of the conclusions of that interim report,

1. Recommends the Governments of Morocco and Spain to take account of those conclusions in their further technical, economic and legal studies of the feasibility of such a link and, in particular, to undertake consultations with all the countries of the subregions concerned;

2. Invites the Governments and international organizations concerned, as well as research agencies, to co-operate with the Governments of Morocco and Spain in the pursuit of those studies and in the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the interim report, taking duly into account the international geopolitical, economic and cultural consequences of the project;

3. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa:

(a) To continue their efforts in accordance with the recommendations in the interim report, particularly with regard to the choice of the method of construction, the updating of the economic appraisal, the international legal problems deriving from the method of construction selected, and the coherence of the transport infrastructures in Europe and Africa;

(b) To report, through the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa, to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984 on the progress made;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the efforts that have already been made to provide, within the limits of the resources available, to the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe the resources for the discharge of those tasks.

Social development

A regional meeting on the 1985 International Youth Year (Addis Ababa, 20-24 June 1983), held in collaboration with the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA), adopted a regional plan of action on youth, aimed at promoting substantial participation by young people in all areas of national development. The secretariat also collaborated with CSDHA in organizing the African Regional Preparatory Meeting for the Seventh (1985)

United Nations Congress on Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders (Addis Ababa, 28 November-2 December), where recommendations were adopted on such aspects as new dimensions of criminality and crime prevention in the context of development and the new international economic order.

A workshop on mass media and African society (Tripoli, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 1-5 November) was organized by, the secretariat, in collaboration with the African Centre for Applied Research and Training in Social Development, to review the role of the mass media in African development.

A report was prepared on a review and appraisal of the United Nations Decade for Women in Africa, and a joint ECA/UNU Expert Group held a meeting on household, gender and age at Addis Ababa in May.

Statistics

Programmes included the African Household Survey Capability Programme, the Statistical Training Programme for Africa, the National Accounts Capability Programme and the development of a statistical data base. The third meeting of Directors of Centres participating in the Statistical Training Programme for Africa was held at Addis Ababa from 31 October to 4 November.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1983 report to the General Assembly,⁽²⁵⁾ submitted in pursuance of its December 1982 request,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General described the co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC)—a subregional organization, established in 1980 to forge links between member States (Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe)—for creating regional integration and harmonizing action to secure international co-operation in the framework of the strategy for economic liberation. The Secretary-General stated that at a summit meeting of SADCC in July 1983 it had been decided that the question of appropriate forms of co-operation would be addressed further at the meeting of the Council of Ministers of SADCC in January 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/160 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/248 of 21 December 1982, by which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to promote co-operation between the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference,

Noting that some progress has been made by some organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in formulating co-operation programmes with the Conference,

Noting that some organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system are exploring ways and means of forging co-operation links with the Conference,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 37/248;

2. Commends the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that have already established contacts with the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, in response to resolution 37/248, and urges them to intensify positively such contacts in order to accelerate the achievement of the objectives envisaged in that resolution;

3. Appeals to all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that have not as yet done so to consult constructively with the secretariat of the Conference to ensure full implementation of resolution 37/248

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Secretary of the Conference, to take appropriate measures to promote and harmonize contacts between the United Nations and the Conference;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

In related action, the Assembly, in resolution 38/36 A, condemned South Africa's attempts to thwart the work of SADCC, and called on all States to assist the Conference in its efforts to promote regional economic co-operation and development.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions concerning ECA Restructuring

In October 1983, the Secretary-General, following up on a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁷⁾ reported to the Assembly⁽²⁸⁾ on the status of the implementation of recommendations made in 1982 by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU)⁽²⁹⁾ regarding improving the capacity of the ECA secretariat to programme and manage its activities.

The Secretary-General concluded that a new ECA post (D-2) for programme supervision was not currently required, nor was the establishment of a separate organizational element for management services work; endorsed a recommendation by the Administrative Management Service on increasing the functions delegated to the Deputy Executive Secretary; and reported that most other JIU recommendations had been acted on. Information on the implementation of recommendations on regional programming, operations, restructuring and decentralization issues facing ECA, was also provided in another October report of the Secretary-General.⁽³⁰⁾

In the course of 1983, a number of other United Nations bodies examined plans to strengthen Secretariat machinery for programme evaluation, including the possibility of an increase of staff of the ECA evaluation unit (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter 11).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/432 without vote.

Economic Commission for Africa: regional programming, operations, restructuring and decentralization issues

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Assembly resolution 37/214 of 20 December 1982 and of his intention to submit a further report on the subject to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Economic and Social Council, as called for in paragraph 3 of resolution 37/214.

In pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽³¹⁾ an architectural and engineering study was conducted in 1983 for the construction of new conference facilities at ECA Headquarters at Addis Ababa. The Secretary-General, in a December report to the Assembly,⁽³²⁾ recommended that it approve, in principle, the construction project-for one large, two medium and four small conference rooms to be built a over a seven-year period-at a total estimated cost of $83,200,000.

In addition, an appropriation totalling $320,700 was requested for alterations and improvements ($75,600) and major maintenance ($245,100) of the existing EGA complex.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted section XXIII of resolution 38/234, concerning the EGA conference facilities.

Adequacy of the conference facilities of the Economic Commission for Africa at Addis Ababa [The General Assembly ...]

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) held its thirty-ninth session at its headquarters at Bangkok, Thailand, from 19 to 29 April 1983.⁽¹⁾ Food supply and distribution was the session's main theme, accompanied by such other items as the patterns and practices of fiscal policy in the region, the 1984 review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) adopted by the General Assembly in 1980,⁽²⁾ and the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs), adopted in 1981 by the United Nations Conference on LDCs,⁽³⁾ and consideration of an Asian and Pacific transport and communications decade. The Commission also considered policy matters, including the structure, frequency and duration of its annual sessions, the setting of its programme priorities and the future of its regional institutions.

The Commission's Executive Secretary told the 1983 session that there was need for taking remedial action on commodities and for exploiting opportunities for more trade, joint ventures and economic co-operation in general within the region; he felt it timely for the Governments of the region to consider holding an Asian economic summit and evolving a suitable mechanism for collective decisions aimed at increasing their influence and manoeuvrability on issues of mutual concern. He also drew attention to bleak prospects faced by ESCAP's regional institutions, which had generally failed to assure a permanent character or found themselves without stable funding.

According to the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1982,⁽⁴⁾ a summary of which was noted by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1983/177 of 28 July (see p. 422) nearly all economies in the region were recording, by 1982, significantly lower rates of growth, increased payment deficits, intensified unemployment and greater fiscal and monetary policy problems than in preceding years.

Efforts were made in bringing technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) into operation by identifying and marketing the needs and capacities of co-operating countries, as exemplified by a November meeting in Beijing, where China and nine other ESCAP member Governments agreed on 32 bilateral TCDC projects. Nevertheless, the vast potential of regional co-operation and collective self-reliance in many areas remained yet to be exploited.

ESCAP, at its 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ adopted four resolutions for attention by the Economic and Social Council, dealing with regional co-operation on programmes for youth development, social aspects of rural development, implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, and the transport and communications decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994).

ESCAP committees meeting in 1983 were: Statistics (June), Population (August), Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment (September), Natural Resources (October), Agricultural Development (November), and Shipping, and Transport and Communications (November).

Reports of those committees that had met in 1982⁽⁵⁾ were endorsed by ESCAP at its 1983 session.

Activities in 1983

Food and agriculture

Overall, rapid population growth surpassed the gains in agricultural production in many countries of Asia and the Pacific, widening the gap between cereal output and requirements. This was especially true of the LDCs of the region (Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Maldives, Nepal, Samoa) where cereals constituted the major component in people's diet.

A growing consciousness about food security led the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) to a reserve of 50,000 tons (metric) of rice. With so many varied needs in the region, it was difficult to find common interests regarding a food security scheme, but an Expert Group Meeting on Food Supply and Distribution in Asia and the Pacific, Food Security, Trade and Investment (Bangkok, January) agreed in principle to establish a food security reserve for the South Asian subregion, as existed in South-East Asia. The Commission, while recognizing the need for further studies, supported the idea; it agreed, however, that foodgrain stockpiling could detract from food self-sufficiency efforts by the countries in the Pacific subregion, and asked the South Pacific Forum to consider the question further. The Commission emphasized that food self-sufficiency through increased domestic production was essential for achieving food security, and called for a study regarding promotion of a greater capital flow for food and agricultural development in the developing countries of the region.

In a March report to the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General suggested a number of areas where overlap and duplication in the work of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and ESCAP appeared to exist and possible improvements could be made, although no major problems were found in co-operation and co-ordination between the two bodies in programme implementation in the region.

An April addendum to the report carried the text of a joint statement by the FAO Director-General and the ESCAP Executive Secretary on harmonization of their respective work programmes in the region, indicating that ESCAP would concentrate on economic and social aspects of selected issues in agriculture in a way complementary to FAO's activities within its broader, global mandate.

Seminars and workshops held in 1983 dealt with such issues as agro-pesticides and fertilizers, and farm broadcasting.

Development planning

In its first review of the International Development Strategy for the 1980s⁽²⁾ in the ESCAP region, the Commission found that the severe world recession had seriously threatened the achievement of the Strategy's targets and objectives; none of the ESCAP developing countries had achieved the regional strategy targets in the second year of the Decade and immediate prospects for the third year permitted only cautious optimism.

Concern was expressed over lack of progress in restructuring global economic relations and over intensified protectionist and isolationist tendencies. The need for new initiatives for expanding regional co-operation was stressed, together with economic complementarities and the harmonization of national industrialization efforts in the region. A substantial increase in assistance flows was also required.

The Commission endorsed the secretariat's activities in monitoring and evaluating the Strategy's implementation and for a full-scale review in 1984 coinciding with the global review by the General Assembly (see p. 406).

In 1983, ESCAP made a preliminary review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the LDCs⁽³⁾. The Commission adopted a resolution on 28 April⁽¹⁾ calling on the Executive Secretary to conduct a comprehensive review of the Programme's implementation and to report to it at its fortieth (1984) session.

The Commission supported creating a comprehensive information service on development planning and endorsed the secretariat's continuing activities in macro-economic modelling and projections.

Among meetings held during the year were a seminar on sectoral planning techniques and the mechanism for intersectoral linkages (Moscow, USSR, October), and the Expert Group on Development Issues and Policies (Bangkok, November).

Transnational corporations

ESCAP, at its 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ noted the significant growth of investment in the region by transnational corporations (TNCs) and the emergence of newer and more complex modes of their participation, and stressed the importance of ensuring that TNCs respected national sovereignty and acted in accordance with the host country's needs and goals. It also drew attention to the emergence of third-world-based TNCs and the trend towards increasing intraregional investments.

An Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Meeting on TNCs (Bangkok, January) considered various aspects of TNC involvement in developing Asian and Pacific countries and an Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Meeting on Code of Conduct of TNCs (Bangkok, January) briefed ESCAP member countries on the status of a draft code under preparation in view of the special session (March and May) of the United Nations Commission on Transnational Corporations (UNCTC) (see p. 605).

A workshop on the role of TNCs in special economic and export processing zones (Guangzhou and Shenzhen, China, November) provided an opportunity for senior officials from China, India, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka and Thailand to discuss ways of maximizing the contribution of such zones to national development. The inter regional seminar on TNCs and -primary commodity exports (New York, August/September) discussed the ESCAP/ECA/ECLA Inter regional Project on the subject. The first workshop on regulating and negotiating with TNCs in the pharmaceutical industry (Bangkok, December), organized by UNCTC, ESCAP's health and development programme and the ESCAP/UNCTC Joint Unit on TNCs, focused on solutions to practical problems.

Industry, technology and human settlements

At its April 1983 session, the Commission agreed that the secretariat should undertake phase II of its studies on industrialization trends in developing ESCAP countries and industrial growth performance and restructuring, which would include a detailed survey of sectoral development. Endorsing the report of its Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environments which had met in 1982, the Commission recommended biennial meetings of the ESCAP Club for Industrial Co-operation, establishment of a revolving fund for assistance to member countries, and a study of sick industries in the private sector.

A UNIDO/ESCAP Expert Group Meeting on a Regional Programme for Development of Industrial Consultancy (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, January), held in co-operation with the Asian and Pacific Development Centre, discussed ways of strengthening national consultancy capabilities and establishing a regional network for that purpose.

Other meetings held during 1983 included one on industrial co-operation among developing countries (July), and a High-level Expert Group Meeting on Industrialization (December), highlighting the important role of public enterprises especially in financing primarily from domestic sources.

A UNIDO/ESCAP Symposium on Contracts for Construction of Oil and Gas Pipelines (Jakarta, Indonesia, August-September) discussed contractual arrangements for the construction of international off- and on-shore pipelines, and urged the symposium organizers to prepare a manual or guidelines on preparation and negotiation of such contracts.

An ESCAP/Regional Centre for Technology Transfer regional workshop on management of research and development institutes was held at Seoul, Republic of Korea, in December. A High-level Expert Group on Technology for Development (Bangkok, December) prepared a draft ESCAP plan of action on the subject, for submission to the Intergovernmental Meeting on Technology for Development and to the Commission.

Regarding human settlements, ESCAP drew attention to the urgent need to assist millions of homeless people and refugees through provision of housing facilities, infrastructure and other social services. Other priority areas in its work programme were rural-urban migration, development of small and medium towns, urban land policies, rural settlements, training needs and appropriate technology for human settlements development. The need for self-reliance and enhancing the capacity of communities in housing and infrastructure was emphasized. The Commission also reiterated support for broader utilization of indigenous building materials and construction techniques, urging the secretariat to assess techniques and materials focusing on resource conservation and cost reduction.

Among 1983 meetings were the Expert Group Meeting on a Human Settlement Atlas for the ESCAP region (February) and the Expert Group Meeting on an Integrated Programme for Improvement of Slums and Squatter Settlements with Special Emphasis on Appropriate Infrastructure, Services and Technologies (New Delhi, India, March) which considered policy guidelines developed based on information provided by 10 countries in the region.

Environment

ESCAP, at its 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ endorsed the convening in 1985 of a ministerial-level conference on the environment for Asia, the convening of a Working Group of Experts on the Environment to provide the secretariat with technical and advisory assistance, and the terms of reference of the Environmental Co-ordinating Unit.

Considering the increasing threat of marine pollution in the region, the Commission stressed the need to strengthen the secretariat's programme for the protection of the marine environment. Noting, among other things, that the environment had been and was being polluted in some parts of the ESCAP region in a deliberate effort to endanger human and marine life, and asserting that Iran's repeated attempts to prevent environmental pollution had been stopped in a very persistent manner, the Commission condemned such action resorted to by any State anywhere in the world.

A regional symposium on environmental management of mangrove, coral and island ecosystems in South Asia was held at Dhaka, Bangladesh, in August, and a study tour was organized in September to observe the management of arid and semi-arid lands in China.

Concerning typhoons, the Third Planning Meeting for the Typhoon Operational Experiment (TOPEX) and the seventh session of the TOPEX Management Board took place at Tokyo in February. A working group met in the Philippines in June and prepared a draft medium- to long-term programme for the Typhoon Committee. The second TOPEX was successfully carried out from 1 August to 15 October, and the sixteenth session of the Committee and the eighth session of the Management Board were held at Tokyo in December.

A two-member roving mission on the establishment of a cyclone council for the South Pacific was undertaken jointly by ESCAP and the World Meteorological Organization from October to December to explore with Governments in the subregion the need for, and structure of, the proposed body and the scope of its work.

International trade

At its April 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ ESCAP discussed a number of trade issues, including trade liberalization and effects of protectionist measures, preparations for a future meeting of trade ministers and the need to study policies and institutional arrangements at the national level for counter-trade. It requested the secretariat to assist developing member countries in preparing for their participation in the global system of trade preferences under the programme of economic co-operation among developing countries.

Among the 1983 meetings held at Bangkok were a January/February Expert Group Meeting on Preparations for the sixth (June/July) session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD VI) (see p. 538), a regional seminar on trade policy (September), a workshop on special measures in favour of the least developed land-locked countries (November), and a special body on land-locked countries (seventh session, November).

Meetings on specific commodities included the Governmental Consultation among Jute Producing Countries (seventh session, Bangkok, August), the Second Meeting of the Intergovernmental Consultative Forum of Developing Tropical Timber Producing/Exporting Countries (Jakarta, September) and the Regional Consultative Group on Silk (second session, Bangkok, December).

Representatives of central banks met at Bangkok in December to consider enlargement of the Asian Clearing Union (ACU) and made recommendations.

Natural resources, energy and cartography

The ESCAP Committee on Natural Resources (tenth session, Bangkok, October) endorsed recommendations on implementing the Mar del Plata Action Plan, adopted by the United Nations Water Conference in 1977,⁽⁷⁾ and agreed, among other things, on the need for natural water policies and for development of shared water resources in the region. It also endorsed establishment of a regional network for training in water resources development and the setting up of an overall river basin authority as an advisory body to decision-makers.

The ESCAP Committee called for a comprehensive approach for improving irrigation efficiency to include engineering, managerial, agricultural, socio-economic and institutional measures. It recommended the strategies for overcoming pollution and health problems related to low-cost technology applications to water supply and sanitation in the region, and supported convening a seminar on water quality monitoring systems. The Committee also stressed the importance of evolving a regional remote sensing programme as well as a plan of action for joint projects.

At its April 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ ESCAP suggested that a report be prepared on exploration and exploitation of coal in south Asia, looking towards comprehensive development of coal in the region. The steering committee of the regional energy development programme, in May, recommended a future meeting of energy ministers of the region to discuss energy policies and problems.

Meetings held in 1983, at Bangkok, unless otherwise specified, included: a seminar on rural energy planning for the developing countries in Asia (Beijing, April), the second Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on the Establishment of a Co-operation Mechanism in the Field of Offshore Exploration and Prospecting for Mineral Resources in the Indian Ocean (January), a Meeting on Water Resources Development in the South Pacific (Suva, Fiji, March), the Interagency Task Force on Water for Asia and the Pacific (eleventh session, July), and a seminar on the principles of flood plain management for flood loss prevention (October).

The Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific was held in Bangkok, Thailand, in January. In resolution 1983/121 of May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Conference. (See Chapter IX of this section.)

Population

The 1983 population of the ESCAP region was calculated at 2,600 million, with current United Nations projections providing a 1.3 per cent average growth rate to the year 2000 and a population then of 3,382 million.

ESCAP endorsed the Asia-Pacific Call for Action on Population and Development—adopted at the Third (1982) Asian and Pacific Population Conference,⁽⁸⁾ at Colombo, Sri Lanka—whose overriding theme was the improvement of the quality of life through an integrated approach to population and related programmes of economic and social development. ESCAP called for greater co-operation and collaboration among member countries, especially regarding exchange of information concerning the formulation of plans, programmes and strategies for integrating population elements, with the development process. The Commission noted that unless serious consideration were given to population problems, national development efforts would be thwarted, leading to progressive deterioration in the quality of life.

Transport, communications and tourism

Transport and communications continued to be major sectors in the national plans of most ESCAP developing countries, claiming large proportions of total national outlays and often drawing heavily on scarce foreign exchange resources, by using roughly 50 per cent of total consumption of petroleum-based energy. Inadequacies in transport and communications infrastructure were seriously constraining socio-economic growth in various other sectors, creating severe chain reactions.

ESCAP, at its 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ stressed the need for a long-term strategy for integrated development of transport, allowing for an optimum inter modal mix, and commended the secretariat on its realistic and pragmatic approach to the relevant work programme.

Regarding railway transport, a meeting of Ministers Responsible for Railways (Bangkok, 28 February-2 March) adopted a declaration calling for the establishment of an Asian-Pacific railway co-operation group to facilitate closer collaboration among the railway administrations of the region; the meeting called on the ESCAP Executive Secretary to convene the group, and urged the United Nations Development Programme and others to provide financial and technical assistance. The Commission, at its April 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ welcomed the declaration, signed by 16 ESCAP members and associate members, as a historic development in promoting regional co-operation and collective self-reliance in railway transport. The Asia-Pacific Railway Co-operation Group subsequently held its first session at Bangkok in July to formulate its work programme and establish subgroup's to deal with specific tasks set out under the declaration.

ESCAP endorsed the strategy for road and road transport development for the 1980s developed by the Intergovernmental Meeting of Highway Experts (Bangkok, February), which had identified 12 crucial areas for action, including the use and potential of alternative sources of energy for road transport, techniques for setting road maintenance priorities, traffic safety, facilitation of international traffic and standardization of vehicle weights and dimensions.

In respect to tourism, the ESCAP region continued to show the highest growth among regions of the world in terms of the volume of international tourist arrivals. In March, the Intergovernmental Meeting on Tourism Development took place in Tokyo to consider the role of Governments in tourism development, economic impact studies in several countries and tourism project formulation and evaluation in member countries.

Among other meetings were: regional seminar on planning and operations in the telecommunications sector (Bangkok, May), seminar/symposium on the post in the 1980s (Bangkok, May/June), seminar-cum-study tour on urban public transportation, with emphasis on integration and co-ordination of various modes of transport (Belgium, June/July), expert meeting on energy audit in the transport sector (Bangkok, July/August), seminars-cum-study tours, on rural road construction and maintenance, and on upgrading of operational efficiency of railway transport (China, September), seminar on promotion of international airfreight transport at international airports of South-East Asia and the Pacific (Federal Republic of Germany, September), and seminar on organization and mechanization of postal services (USSR, October).

Proposed transport and communications decade (1985-1994)

Various meetings held in the region in 1983 recommended proclamation of 1985-1994 as a transport and communications decade for Asia and the Pacific. They included the Intergovernmental Meeting of Highway Experts (February), the Intergovernmental Meeting on Tourism Development (March), and the Meeting of Ministers Responsible for Railways (February/March). The decade aimed at mobilizing political support for an integrated approach regarding the important role of the transport and communications sectors for attaining and sustaining the economic growth and social development of the region and improving the infrastructure and services in those sectors.

ESCAP, in a resolution adopted on 29 April,⁽¹⁾ recommended early proclamation of the proposed decade and asked the Executive Secretary to consider setting up an ad hoc intergovernmental group to prepare a phased action programme for the decade, assess the financial implications and ensure United Nations inter-agency co-ordination. A first meeting of the ad hoc group was held at Bangkok in October.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1983/69 without vote.

Transport and Communications Decade in Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting resolutions 230(XXXVIII) of 1 April 1982 and 234(XXXIX) of 29 April 1983 of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific regarding a transport and communications decade in Asia and the Pacific during the period 1985-1994,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in particular the development objectives for the transport and communications sectors,

Convinced of the critical role of all modes of transport as enabling elements in economic development and of the importance, therefore, of the improvement and growth of transport infrastructure and services in a manner commensurate with the anticipated growth of various sectors of the economy generating the demand for transport, and also of the importance of communications in modernizing transport and other sectors of the economy,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on regional co-operation, in particular section II.B thereof,

1. Emphasises the urgent need to upgrade the standards of transport and communications infrastructures in Asia and the Pacific region;
2. Takes account of the proposal for the proclamation of a transport and communications decade in Asia and the Pacific during the period 1985-1994;
3. Endorses resolution 234(XXXIX) of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, relating, inter alia, to the preparation of a phased programme of action for the transport and communications decade in Asia and the Pacific region;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all necessary facilities and support to enable the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to prepare a comprehensive programme of action for the decade;
5. Calls upon the Economic Commission for Western Asia to take appropriate action to collaborate with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific for the incorporation of the Western Asian region in the programme of action for the decade;
6. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/69

----	------	------	---------	----	---------	---------	------

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/123) without vote, 27 July (meeting 25): draft by Bangladesh, for Group of 77 (E/1983/C.1/L.18), orally revised, and orally amended in informal consultations: agenda item 7.

Meeting number, ESC 41.

Shipping, ports and inland waterways

ESCAP noted that the difficult situation in the maritime sector had deteriorated further in 1982, with serious setbacks in the oil, bulk and general cargo trades, and an increased tonnage imbalance resulting in large lay-ups, thus depressing freight rates to below break-even point. Shipbuilding activity had slowed down considerably and a further downtrend was expected.

The Commission called for closer and more meaningful co-operation in shipping services, containerization, multimodal transport and related technologies. It also stressed the need for financial assistance to the developing countries in introducing relevant advanced technologies.

Among meetings held were: Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Meeting on Maritime Legislation (Bangkok, January), seminar on port development policy (Bangkok, January), meeting of chief executives of port authorities (third session, Hong Kong, February), seminar on modern port management (Hong Kong, February-March), regional workshop on implications of currency fluctuations in shipping (Bangkok, March), Conference on Coastal Port Engineering in Developing Countries (Colombo, Sri Lanka, March), seminar on freight rate making (Bangkok, May), seminar on port containerization for Pacific island countries (Suva, Fiji, May), workshop on shipping policy (Shanghai, China, May), seminar on dredging (Wuhan, China, June), seminar on inland waterways (France, June/July), seminars on seafarers' training and certification and on coastal shipping (Japan, October), seminar on management of the dredging industry (Shanghai, December).

Social development

At its April 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ ESCAP adopted two resolutions relating to social development—one on youth and the other on rural development.

On youth, it appealed to Governments to ensure that youth enjoyed the right of full participation in national development, and recommended that the ESCAP Executive Secretary assist Governments so requesting in increasing public understanding and awareness so as to maximize youth's participation in national development, in promoting programme activities to enhance the potential of youth for rural and urban community work, and in encouraging greater involvement of youth leaders in youth programmes and projects.

On the social aspects of rural development, the Commission invited Governments to give special attention to the social impact of policies relating to integrated rural development programmes, and to present country papers; the Executive Secretary was asked to report to the Commission on the matter at its 1984 session.

Expressing concern over the massive social problems which had existed even before the current economic downturn, ESCAP called for creating more employment opportunities, especially for women, youth and disabled persons; improving essential social services, particularly for the poor and underprivileged; making education more relevant and widely available, as well as extending compulsory education for children and youth; devising special programmes for out-of-school children and youth; extending primary health care, especially to neglected people in rural and remote areas and in urban slums; and extending social security to all.

The Commission endorsed the recommendation of the Intergovernmental Meeting on Health and Development (Bangkok, June), convened jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, which advised the secretariat on ways to strengthen and co-ordinate its health-related activities for improving the quality of life of the poor.

The Interagency Committee on Women in Development held a special session (Bangkok, January) to consider guidelines for development of indicators on the situation of women in the region. Other meetings, held at Bangkok unless otherwise specified, included: Expert Group Meeting on the Development and Utilization of Local Manpower and Technology for Disability-related Services in Rural and Poverty Areas (Manila, Philippines, February/March), Sixth Regional Seminar on Basic Community Services through Primary Health Care (Seoul, July/August.), Regional Preparatory Meeting for the International Youth Year (July), Expert Group Meeting on Social Development Manpower Planning (October), and Expert Group Meeting on Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women (November/December).

Statistics

ESCAP, at its 1983 session, expressed support for the continuing emphasis of the secretariat's work programme in building statistical capabilities among countries of the region. It noted with satisfaction that a number of countries had initiated action towards participating in the 1983 round of industrial censuses and reiterated its support for the National Household Survey Capability Programme.

Among 1983 activities, the Training Course on Electronic Data Processing (New Delhi, India, July-November) aimed at developing relevant capabilities in the countries in the region, and covered programme languages, systems analysis, statistical data processing and advanced computer concepts.

Mekong river basin development

The Interim Committee for Co-ordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin held three sessions in 1983: sixteenth, Vientiane, Lao People's Republic, 13-19 January; seventeenth, Bangkok, 2-4 June; and eighteenth, Ho Chi Minh City, Viet Nam, 8-15 September.⁽⁹⁾ At its eighteenth session, the Committee, which had held three sessions a year, decided to hold two meetings a year in future, in January and June, in order to achieve savings.

Total investment cost for the Indicative Basin Plan (1970-2000) was estimated in 1983 at $138,080 million. By 1983, 14 tributary projects had been completed at an investment cost of $225 million, and $520 million had been committed to the work programme as a whole.

In 1983, basic needs relating to food production, agricultural development and energy production were covered in the various projects for the inhabitants of the basin, where more than 475,000 million cubic metres of water flowed each year, almost completely unutilized, into the sea. Basic planning was further elaborated, including more effective use of the computerized Lower Mekong Information System and through remote sensing techniques. Programmes were also carried out in navigation improvement, fisheries and agro-industrial development.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions concerning ESCAP

Expansion of ESCAP conference facilities

In an October report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General recalled the history of United Nations accommodation at Bangkok, and discussed the need to expand the ESCAP conference facilities. He pointed to the unsuitability of current arrangements by which headquarters' office space had been converted to makeshift conference rooms, absence of available facilities in Bangkok that could meet the ESCAP conference requirements, and the resulting fact that close to half the number of 1982 meetings had to be held outside Bangkok. He described his assessment of the possible scope of the proposed expanded conference facilities at ESCAP, related conference support facilities as well as possible future office accommodation requirements.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended to the Assembly in a November report⁽¹¹⁾ approval of the Secretary-General's request for $400,000 under the proposed programme budget for 1984-1985 for conducting an independent preliminary architectural and engineering study for the new construction required and retention of an independent quantity surveyor and energy consultant. The results of the study were to be ready for review by the Assembly at its thirty-ninth (1984) session. In view of the Secretary-General's statement that construction of new conference facilities at ESCAP would have no impact on proposed alterations and improvements and major maintenance projects, all relating to the existing ESCAP building complex, ACABQ recommended acceptance of his request for $374,200 under the proposed programme budget for the biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted section VII of resolution 38/234, relating to the ESCAP conference facilities.

Expansion of the conference facilities of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at Bangkok

(The General Assembly...)

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the expansion of the conference facilities of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at Bangkok and of the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;
2. Concurs with the observations of the Advisory Committee as contained in its report;
3. Accepts with appreciation the offer by the Government of Thailand of additional land for the proposed construction of expanded conference facilities for the Commission;

General Assembly resolution 38/234, section VII

20 December 1983 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/38/760) without vote, 23 November (meeting 46); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: Fifth Committee 46; plenary 104.

Restructuring

In the course of 1983, a number of United Nations bodies examined plans to strengthen Secretariat machinery for programme evaluation, including the possibility of an increase of staff of the ESCAP evaluation unit (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter II).

On 20 December, the General Assembly, in section X of resolution 38/234, decided to finance the Regional Commissions Liaison Office, under a new section of the programme budget for 1984-1985, rather than from funds allocated to ESCAP (see above, under REGIONAL CO-OPERATION).

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) at its thirty-eighth session (Geneva, 12-23 April 1983)⁽¹⁾ examined the main economic problems facing Europe and North America, reviewed the ECE activities and approved plans for its future work.

In a resolution of 22 April on its work and future activities,⁽¹⁾ ECE called on its members to continue taking full advantage of its potential as an instrument for strengthening regional economic relations and multilateral co-operation, adding that implementation of and respect for the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki (Finland) Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe were essential for fostering such activities. The ECE Executive Secretary told the Commission that he considered east-west trade central to ECE programmes and that all Governments might benefit from some confidence-building measures in the economic field as well.

The Commission also invited its subsidiary bodies to pay special attention in their work programmes to the efficiency and effectiveness of their activities, and requested the Executive Secretary to evaluate the activities' impact and usefulness to member Governments.⁽¹⁾

Several ECE principal bodies met at Geneva during 1983 and reviewed the work of their subsidiary bodies (see under specific topics below).⁽²⁾

Among a number of conventions and other instruments, the ECE Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution entered into force in 1983 (see below, under ENVIRONMENT), as did the European Agreement on Main International Traffic Arteries (see below, under TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS). The International Convention on the Harmonization of Frontier Control of Goods in the region was opened for signature (see below, under INTERNATIONAL TRADE).

The programme budget for ECE for 1984-1985 was approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/236 A of 20 December 1983; there were no requests for an increase in personnel resources for the Commission.

Economic trends

The forecasts of recovery in 1982 proved false in western Europe and North America, according to a document⁽³⁾ prepared by the ECE secretariat on recent economic developments in the region and noted by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1983/177 of 28 July (see Chapter I of this section). In western Europe, growth was a bare 0.1 per cent, with 1982 gross domestic product (GDP) falling in 7 of the 13 more industrialized countries; in the United States, gross national product fell by some 2 per cent between the fourth quarters of 1981 and 1982. Unemployment continued to increase, while there was general decline in the inflation rate. Forecasts for 1983 were modest, with aggregate GDP growth projected at less than 1 per cent.

The survey found that 1982 was another difficult year for the economies of southern Europe, where unemployment continued to be a serious problem, though the agricultural sector contributed positively in all countries to the maintenance of overall output.

In eastern Europe and the USSR, the net material product increased by less than 2 per cent, significantly below the aggregate 2.8 per cent growth implied by the annual plans of the countries concerned. The bulk of adjustment policies fell upon imports, which in most countries contracted in both value and volume, leading to a further decline in overall economic growth and an even more pronounced deceleration in the growth of resources for domestic use.

In 1982, the volume of western exports to, and imports from, the USSR increased by 7 and 13 per cent, respectively, making this an exceptionally dynamic two-way flow. There was a significant swing in the pattern of trade balances between east and west, with a turnaround of about $3 billion in a single year, highlighting the profound adjustment in east-west economic relations under way. Eastern external debt in convertible currencies cies was estimated to have declined by $8 billion, reversing a decade-long upward trend.

As regards developments in 1983, the Economic Survey of Europe in 1983⁽⁴⁾ reported a recovery in economic growth throughout the region, with improvement expected to continue in 1984. In western Europe and North America, the recovery of output started in early 1983 against the background of large amounts of unused capacity, both of labour and capital, while inflation rates continued to fall; the outlook for business investment was improving. The upturn in the rate of economic growth in the centrally planned economies of eastern Europe and the USSR continued in 1983, reflecting an easing of supply bottle-necks in several critical sectors, a more efficient use of material inputs, tighter management and planning and, in the case of eastern Europe, a loosening of the balance-of-payments constraint.

Accelerated growth of imports into the ECE region-especially the pronounced recovery of North American imports-contributed to a modest upturn in the volume of world trade, by some 1 to 2 per cent in 1983 following three years of stagnation or decline. In western Europe, trade growth was still weak in 1983, owing to the hesitant recovery of demand. Trade of the east European countries and the USSR grew more strongly, with a marked acceleration in the growth of imports. East-west trade, within the ECE region, was more dynamic than trade with the rest of the world. The upswing in the volume of trade gathered strength in the course of 1983.

The Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments (nineteenth session, 21-25 February 1983), in their continuing review of economic developments in the region, agreed to examine further, among other topics, international trade and structural changes in the market and the centrally planned economies of ECE, and a preliminary outline of the overall economic perspective to the year 2000. A seminar on the assessment of the impact of science and technology on long-term economic prospects (Rome, Italy, May) was held jointly with the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology.

In 1983, ECE requested its Executive Secretary to continue co-operating with the secretariats of ECWA and ECA and other United Nations bodies and to pursue his contacts with all Mediterranean countries not members of ECE, on subjects within ECE competence of common interest to the Mediterranean countries.⁽¹⁾

International trade

On 1 April 1983, the International Convention on the Harmonization of Frontier Control of Goods was opened for signature. The 25-article Convention sought to facilitate international movement of goods-across one or more maritime, air or inland frontiers-by reducing the requirements for completing formalities as well as the number and duration of controls.

The Committee on the Development of Trade (thirty-second session, 5-9 December 1983) focused on obstacles to trade development and on the participation of small- and medium-sized enterprises in intraregional trade; it examined developments in compensation trade on the basis of the report of the Special Experts' Meeting on Compensation Trade (July).

In keeping with the changes taking place in trade facilitation, especially the introduction of automatic interchange of trade data, increased attention was given by the Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures (March, September) to implementing its recommendations, in particular through co-operation with the Special Programme on Trade Facilitation of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (see Chapter IV of this section) and with national facilitation bodies. Co-operation was maintained with other relevant bodies, including the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI).

In 1983, expert groups met on data elements and automatic data interchange (March, September), procedures and documentation (March, September), international contract practices in industry (July, December) and obstacles to trade (September).

In a related field, the Group of Experts on Standardization Policies (Helsinki, Finland, and Stockholm, Sweden, May/June) and a one-day Seminar on Testing (Prague, Czechoslovakia, November) dealt with various standardization issues, including harmonization of standards and technical regulations, consumer protection, conformity certification and testing. ECE decided, on 20 April 1983,⁽¹⁾ to convene prior to its 1984 session the Eighth Meeting of Government Officials Responsible for standardization Policies.

Industry

The Chemical Industry Committee (sixteenth session, 4-7 October 1983) continued to study trends in feed stocks for organics, low- and non-waste technologies in the production of organics, and the role and place of the chemical industry in the ECE economies. The Committee decided to undertake a sample study on food additives, and to initiate a second Informal Meeting of Experts on Olefins, with a view to preparing world-wide statistics on the production and consumption of specific groups of chemicals.

Among meetings held in 1983 were an Ad Hoc Meeting for the Study on the Role and Place of the Chemical Industry in the Economies of ECE Member Countries (November) and a Seminar on Chemicals from Synthesis Gas (June).

The Steel Committee (fifty-first session, 26-28 October 1983), serving as a forum for information exchange between national steel industries representing 85 per cent of world steel production, studied factors influencing the structure of steel production costs, improvement of steel consumption forecasting, and economic problems related to the creation of steel plants using direct reduction.

The Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation (third session, February) issued studies in 1983 on techno-economic aspects of the international division of labour in the automotive industry and on production and use of industrial robots. Work was under way on various other topics, including engineering equipment for more effective energy use or for water pollution prevention, diffusion of robots in the ECE region, and recent developments in electrical and electronic engineering. Meetings included a Seminar on Innovation in Biomedical Equipment (Budapest, Hungary, May), which focused on the socio-economic consequences of the introduction of sophisticated, mostly micro-electronic, equipment as well as the rapid overall development of national health care systems in the region. On 22 April 1983,⁽¹⁾ ECE agreed to consider in 1984 a possible change in the status of the the Working Party.

Also meeting in 1983 was a Group of Experts on International Contract Practices in Industry (twenty-second and twenty-third sessions, 11-13 July and 12-16 December).

Transport and communications

In 1983, technical studies continued for the Trans-European North-South Motorway, a 10,000-kilometre road transport network that would link the Baltic to the Aegean and the southern parts of the region. On 15 March, the European Agreement on Main International Traffic Arteries came into force, providing a new framework for adapting the European road network to the needs of international traffic. Progress continued to be made in developing a European railway network.

The text of the Consolidated Resolution on the Facilitation of Road Transport, consisting of technical and administrative provisions on such transport in the continent, was completed, as was a major revision of the European Agreement concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road. Ten new Regulations concerning the construction of vehicles were finalized and amendments to 12 of the existing 59 Regulations were elaborated. Recommendations were adopted on technical requirements for the construction and the equipment of new and existing inland navigation vessels for application on all European waterways. General provisions developed by ECE for packagings were adopted at a world-wide level for the marine and air modes. As regards a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/62 of 29 July 1983, requested the Executive Secretaries of ECE and ECA to continue their efforts in that regard (see above, under AFRICA).

In addition to the Inland Transport Committee (forty-fourth session, 31 January-4 February 1983), a large number of subsidiary bodies met, also at Geneva, in the course of the year. Among them were groups of rapporteurs on crashworthiness, protective devices, pollution and energy, development of a European railway network, brakes and running gear, customs questions concerning containers, general safety provisions, and safety provisions on motor coaches and buses. Issues discussed by expert groups included transport of dangerous goods, customs questions, transport economics, road traffic safety and construction of vehicles. A seminar on the transport situation in the Mediterranean region (Barcelona, Spain, June) examined the subregion's importance in linking Africa, Asia and Europe. At its April 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ ECE requested its Executive Secretary to continue his efforts in the field of transport in the Mediterranean in co-operation with competent organizations.

ECE also suggested in April 1983 that all Governments which introduced or intended to introduce summer time might determine henceforth that the transition to and from summer time be on the last Sundays in March and September.⁽¹⁾

Food and agriculture

The Committee on Agricultural Problems (thirty-fourth session, 7-11 March 1983) reviewed recent developments in European trade in agricultural products and the work of its subsidiary bodies. A project on economic, technological, sanitary and environmental aspects of large scale intensive livestock production was completed with a synoptic report in 1983.

Efforts continued in reaching agreement on, or revising, agricultural products standards. Meetings, held at Geneva unless otherwise specified, included: the Joint FAO/ECE Working Party on Mechanization of Agriculture (September), focusing on energy and environment aspects of its programme; and the Working Party on Standardization of Perishable Produce (October). Expert groups met to discuss Standardization of poultry meat (Kulmbach, Federal Republic of Germany, January), co-ordination of standardization of fresh fruit and vegetables (Zurich, Switzerland, February; Geneva, October), standardization of dry and dried produce (fruit) (May), and standardization of egg products (May/June).

Timber

The Timber Committee (forty-first session, 10-14 October 1983) noted some indications of recovery, after three years of declining markets, in the forest products sector of the region. Efforts continued in 1983 on collecting and analysing new data on forest resources, and the Committee collaborated closely with others, including the Executive Body for the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution (see below), in assessing the impact of air pollution damage to forests.

Seminars and study tours held during the year dealt with: machines and techniques for forest plant production (Czechoslovakia, June); silvicultural, technological, economic and other problems connected with the mechanization of thinning operations (German Democratic Republic, September); and the Timber Committee's study tour of the United Kingdom.

Subsidiary bodies meeting at Geneva in 1983 included an Ad Hoc Meeting on the Impact of Energy Developments on the Forestry and Forest Products Sector (May), the Steering Committee of the Joint FAO/ECE/ILO Committee on Forest Working Techniques and Training of Forest Workers (May) and the Joint FAO/ECE Working Party on Forest Economics and Statistics (June).

Environment

The ECE Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution, opened for signature in 1979,⁽⁵⁾ entered into force on 16 March 1983. It detailed provisions on such matters as information exchange, consultations, research and monitoring. Under the instrument, contracting parties were to develop policies and strategies for combating the discharge of air pollutants, using the best available technology.

The Executive Body created by the Convention (first session, 7-10 June 1983) recognized the need for effective reduction of the total annual emissions of sulphur compounds, or transboundary fluxes, by 1993-1995. It decided to convene a meeting to elaborate a formal instrument to provide for long-term funding of the Co-operative Programme for the Monitoring and Evaluation of Long-range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe (EMEP), according to an equitable cost-sharing system. The EMEP steering body (seventh session, 10 and 11 November) discussed various issues, including financing, co-operation with North American projects and plans for the third phase. EMEP, begun in 1978 and carried out by ECE in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Meteorological Organization, embraced in mid-1983 more than 75 monitoring stations in 21 ECE countries.

In April 1983, ECE adopted a number of decisions on the environment.⁽¹⁾ On air pollution, it appealed to ECE member countries which had not ratified the Convention to do so at an early date, and stressed the urgent need for action to decrease sulphur emissions. It recognized the significance of intraregional co-operation and co-ordination in water pollution control matters, including transboundary water pollution. It also invited its Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems to continue their efforts relating to the 1979 Declaration on Low- and Non-waste Technology and Reutilization and Recycling of Wastes,⁽⁵⁾ to expand co-operation in protecting flora and fauna and their habitats, and to elaborate a strategy for environmental protection and rational use of natural resources in ECE member countries up to the year 2000 and beyond.

In addition to the Senior Advisers (eleventh session, 14-17 February), bodies meeting at Geneva in 1983 were National Focal Points for the Compilation of a Compendium on Low- and Non-waste Technology (October), Working Party on Low- and Non-waste Technology and Reutilization and Recycling of Wastes (October) and Group of Experts on Environmental Impact Assessment (November/December).

Natural resources and energy

Natural resources

The Coal Committee (seventy-ninth session, 26-29 September 1983) examined coal-related technical and socio-economic issues and prepared a new ECE industrial classification of medium- and high-rank coals. Expert groups met in 1983, at Geneva unless otherwise specified, to discuss: open cast mines (Ankara, Turkey, May), productivity and management problems in the coal industry (June), coal statistics (June), and utilization and preparation of solid fuels (June). Other activities included: Ad Hoc Meeting on the Preparation of a New ECE Classification of Coals (March), Working Party on Coal Trade (June), Symposium on the Utilization of Waste from Coal Mining and Preparation (Tatabánya, Hungary, October), and a Seminar on Integrated Utilization of Low-Calorific-Value Fuels (Moscow, October).

The Committee on Electric Power (forty-first session, 24-28 January 1983), in co-operation with the International Atomic Energy Agency, focused on nuclear power stations and related problems, such as operational conditions and the study of the duration of down-time for checks, maintenance and refueling of such facilities. Issues discussed by expert groups meeting at Geneva in 1983 concerned problems of planning and operating large power systems (May), electric power stations (October), and the relationship between electricity and the environment (November). The ECE region accounted for about 75 per cent of total world electricity consumption in 1982.

The Committee on Gas (twenty-ninth session, 17-21 January 1983) added to its work programme the development of international co-operation in the field of liquefied petroleum gas. Work continued on revising international maps of Europe-one of gas transmission networks and another of natural gas fields. Among expert groups meeting at Geneva in 1983 were those concerned with natural gas resources (May), use and distribution of gas (June), transport and storage of gas (June) and gas statistics and forecasting problems (November).

The Committee on Water Problems (fifteenth session, 14-18 November 1983) completed preparation of, and recommended for adoption by the Commission, an ECE Declaration of Policy on the Rational Use of Water, providing guidelines on water management. It completed a study on techniques and means for industrial and municipal sewage effluent purification, and decided that a set of ECE recommendations should be elaborated. A Seminar on Ground-water Protection Strategies and Practices (Athens, Greece, October) opened the possibility for preparing ECE guiding principles for ground-water management. Meeting at Geneva in 1983 was the Group of Experts on Aspects of Water Quality and Quantity (May).

Energy

A second ad hoc Meeting on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (NRSE), convened in November 1983 in pursuance of the Commission's April decision,⁽¹⁾ reviewed the current status and prospects of NRSE in ECE countries and noted that the NRSE supply was expected to grow in the region by some 70 per cent between 1980 and 2000, covering between 11 and 12 per cent of total energy supplies by 2000, compared with about 9 per cent in 1980.

A Symposium on the Rational Utilization of Secondary Forms of Energy in the Economy, particularly in Industry (Bucharest, Romania, October), stressed the topic's importance in enhancing energy economy and efficiency, substituting for oil and reducing the environmental damage of energy use; it recommended the creation of an ad hoc group within ECE. An ad hoc Meeting on Energy Conservation (November) found that progress had been made in reducing oil imports, improving overall energy efficiency, using more indigenous fuels and substituting other fuels for oil.

A 1983 publication, An Efficient Energy Future-prepared by ECE on the basis of its two-year research of energy demand in Europe and North America-suggested that, although energy conservation was the most common policy priority among ECE countries, it was seldom reflected in recent government forecasts, which might have overestimated the needs of industrial countries in the year 2000 by about one fifth.

Science and technology

In 1983, the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology (eleventh session, 19-23 September) decided to convene in 1985 or 1986 two symposia, one on biotechnology for future economic development, and the other on integrated use of raw materials in industry. Work continued on such issues as NRSE, low-calorific-value fuels and low-calorie coal technology, as well as on science and technology statistics with the aim of describing international flows of technology. Other meetings in 1983 included a seminar on the assessment of the impact of science and technology on long-term economic prospects (Rome, May).

Population

A regional meeting on population (Sofia, Bulgaria, 6-12 October 1983) convened in pursuance of an April 1983 Commission decision⁽¹⁾ as part of the contribution to the preparatory work for the 1984 World Conference on Population, adopted a number of suggestions and recommendations.

Work was started in 1983 on studies on the economic and related aspects of the aging of populations in the region, and on the relationship between population and development in southern Europe.

Human settlements

The Committee on Housing, Building and Planning (forty-fourth session, Ottawa, Canada, 5-9 September 1983) discussed, among other things, problems and policies related to improving post-war housing areas and decided to undertake several projects on urban renewal and modernization policies.

Among the meetings held in 1983 were: Group of Experts on Urban and Regional Research (April), Working Party on Urban and Regional Planning (April), Seminar on Integrated Planning (Rovaniemi, Finland, June), Seminar on Research on Long-term Perspectives for Human Settlements Development (Budapest, October), and Group of Experts on Human Settlements Problems in Southern Europe (Crete and Athens, November).

Social development

At its April 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ ECE requested its Executive Secretary to prepare a revised study on the economic role of women in the ECE region, for presentation to the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see Chapter XIX of this section), and to convene a seminar in 1984 on that role.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (thirty-first session, 13-17 June 1983) focused on comparing statistical aggregates and harmonizing economic classifications and nomenclatures. Work continued in economic, social, demographic and environmental statistics, while the European Comparison Programme was finalized. As part of the intercountry project on use of computers for statistical purposes, the secretariat continued to develop a medium-scale computer-based interactive data base for data processing and management.

Subsidiary bodies meeting at Geneva in 1983 included: Working Party on Electronic Data Processing (March), Joint ECE/ILO Meeting on Manpower Statistics (May), Joint FAO/ECE Study Group on Food and Agricultural Statistics in Europe (May), joint ad hoc Meeting on Questions of Statistics concerning Engineering Industries and Automation (May/June), and Meeting on Statistical Methodology (November).

Latin America

The economic situation of Latin America in 1983 was characterized by three principal features, a crisis of dimensions not witnessed since the depression of the 1930s, the adjustment effort to reduce the profound disequilibrium of the external sector, and an extraordinary contraction of net capital inflows, with accompanying transfer of resources abroad by Latin American countries. During the year, gross domestic product (GDP) fell, the employment situation worsened and inflation increased markedly.⁽¹⁾

Faced with the crisis, the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA), which did not hold a session in 1983, called a meeting at Bogotá, Colombia (18-21 May), of personalities from a number of Latin American countries to consider its impact and possible solutions.⁽²⁾ The meeting concluded that the region was facing its most severe economic crisis in the past 50 years as a consequence of the profound imbalances in the international economy and of the accumulation of unresolved problems at the level of its development strategies and internal economic policies.

A Santo Domingo Pledge, based on a document prepared by ECLA and the Latin American Economic System at the request of the President of Ecuador, was adopted at a meeting (1-3 August)⁽³⁾ in the Dominican Republic, where the nations of the region agreed to hold an economic conference at Quito, Ecuador in 1984.

In another development during 1983, the Secretary-General convened a special meeting at United Nations Headquarters on 10 August and appealed for international emergency relief to Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru, following the disastrous impact of the 1983 climatic situation. ECLA became executing agency for the subsequent United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) multi country project of assistance. Following a request by the Government, ECLA sent a mission to Paraguay to assess the damage caused by heavy rains and floods (see p. 519).

Economic trends

In 1982, Latin America suffered its worst economic crisis since the 1930s, according to the Economic Survey of Latin America, 1982. The Economic and Social Council took note of a summary of the survey⁽⁴⁾ in its decision 1983/177 of 28 July (see p. 422).

The survey stated that the growth rate of GDP fell by almost 1 per cent, the first such decline in 40 years. The loss of dynamism was accompanied by a further rise in urban unemployment, and inflation for the region as a whole reached a record high of 80 per cent. The continued decline in the region's terms of trade led to an unprecedented balance-of-payments deficit of some $14 billion.

During 1983, the region's GDP was estimated to have declined by 2.8 per cent and, given the population growth, the per capita product fell by more than 5 per cent and declined in 17 of the 19 countries in the region, for which there were comparable data. This amounted to a per capita product almost 9 per cent less than 1980, or equivalent to what the region had already reached six years earlier in 1977. The real standard of living fell even more sharply, with national income per capita declining during the previous three years by almost 12 per cent.⁽¹⁾

At the same time, inflation accelerated spectacularly, reaching unprecedented levels. For the region as a whole, the simple average rate of increase of consumer prices rose from 48 per cent in 1982 to 66 per cent in 1983; the rate weighted by population rose from 86 per cent in 1982 to 130 per cent in 1983. During the year, prices more than quintupled in Argentina, more than quadrupled in Bolivia, tripled in Brazil and more than doubled in Peru. Prices rose by 80 per cent in Mexico, and by more than 50 per cent in Ecuador and Uruguay.

While the overall balance of payments closed with a deficit of almost $2.9 billion, much lower than the $19.6 billion of 1982, the result was a new fall in the level of international reserves of Latin America. The growth rate of external debt fell to 7 per cent as a result of the decline in net flows of capital, a rate well below the 13 per cent of 1982, or the 23 per cent average of 1978-1981. Despite a slight fall in 1983 in the proportion of export earnings absorbed by interest payments, it continued to be very high, at 34.5 per cent.

The fall in net capital flows was so strong that the inflow was inferior to payments of interest and profits on foreign capital. As in 1982, instead of receiving a net transfer of resources from abroad, there was a transfer of resources to the rest of the world. This transfer reached almost $30 billion in 1983, equivalent to 28 per cent of the value of exports of goods and services, or a 36 per cent fall in the terms of trade between 1981 and 1983. The overall result was an extremely severe contraction in the volume of imports, constituting the principal cause of the decline in internal economic activity in the region.

In 11 of the 19 countries for which comparable information was available, GDP dropped and remained virtually at a standstill in two others. Only in Argentina, the Dominican Republic and Nicaragua did the rate of increase of overall economic activity rise above the growth rate of population. In the two largest economies of Latin America, Brazil, which by itself generated around one third of the region's GDP, registered a more than 3 per cent fall in global economic activity, while Mexico's GDP fell by 4.5 per cent.

Inflation was particularly virulent in Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Ecuador, Peru and Uruguay and very high in Mexico. It dropped dramatically in Costa Rica and steadily in Colombia and was very low in Barbados, the Dominican Republic and Panama.

Consumer prices continued to rise sharply in Argentina (430 per cent), Bolivia (330 per cent) and Brazil (almost 180 per cent, after rises of 100 per cent in 1980 and 1982). Peru also suffered a seriously accelerated inflation rate (125 per cent, after 70 per cent rises in 1981 and 1982).

By the end of 1983, the total external debt of Latin America, on preliminary estimates, amounted to some $333 billion. The considerably lower rate of growth (7 per cent in 1983) was mainly the result of the restrictive policy adopted by international commercial banks with respect to Latin America; those banks granted virtually no new autonomous loans to the region, channelling their credit through renegotiations of external debt initiated by several Latin American countries. A substantial part of the debt increase was accounted for by banks capitalizing interest payments, partly due to International Monetary Fund (IMF) pressure to refinance part (usually about 50 per cent) of the interest earned, as a contribution to Fund-sponsored adjustment programmes.

In some countries, the percentage of the value of exports devoted to interest payments in 1983 was considerably higher than the region's average of 35 per cent (20 per cent generally being considered an acceptable ceiling): Argentina (51 per cent); Brazil (44 per cent); and Costa Rica (42 per cent).

Report of Bogotá meeting. The economic crisis facing Latin America was discussed by personalities from a number of Latin American countries, at a meeting, called by the ECLA secretariat at Bogotá from 18 to 21 May.⁽²⁾

The participants noted that the crisis had been exacerbated by the pincer effect created by the simultaneous drop in export values and sudden increase in interest payments, which had come on top of an abrupt reversal in net capital movements towards the region. The burden of servicing the external debt was debilitating, and it was practically impossible for Latin American countries to obtain trade surpluses and redress the external accounts balance, in view of the slow growth of international trade and the protectionism practised by industrialized countries as a result of the world recession.

They asserted that countries of the region should not deal with the economic situation just by demanding changes in the external sector, but should review their international development policies. There was need to ensure rational conduct of monetary and exchange policies; to bring into greater harmony the objectives of growth and consumption and generation of domestic savings; to base national development strategies increasingly on domestic savings rather than on external indebtedness; to combine import substitution and export promotion policies in a more dynamic and effective way; to confront the industrialization crisis within the context of the current restructuring of world industry; and to make social action and the State apparatus more efficient. At the same time, the lion's share of resources should be allocated to development with consequent reduction in weapons expenditures to the extent politically possible.

Recognizing that the most overwhelming problem confronting the region was the debt-servicing burden, the meeting suggested, among other things, that a regional mechanism be established to provide information on debt management and refinancing, and that IMF modify its loans criteria so that the level of economic activity and employment did not suffer an exaggerated drop in countries entering into agreements with the Fund. It also advocated doubling resources of the Inter-American Development Bank and the World Bank for making loans to Latin America, as well as a new set of international instruments to control the process of creating world financial liquidity.

Regarding regional economic co-operation, it was unanimously considered appropriate to re-examine the potential offered by intra-regional economic co-operation to mitigate the effects of the international recession and to promote adoption of national development strategies. Sharing of markets, promotion of joint action to resolve common problems and co-ordination initiatives vis-à-vis third party countries should be a fundamental part of any action programme to overcome the crisis. While various concrete measures were advocated, it was recognized that the most important element for intra-regional co-operation was the raising of its political profile when formulating the economic policies of the various countries of the region.

The meeting called for an international framework better adapted to the debt renegotiation process. The framework should provide for participation of international financial institutions, private banks and financial authorities of creditor countries, and consideration should be given to providing additional resources both to cover debt-servicing commitments and to meet the minimum financial needs of trade and development. Substantial reductions in interest rates were required and the costs of the international adjustment process should be distributed equitably among creditor countries and banks and debtor countries.

Activities in 1983

Development issues and policies

As in previous years, the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) promoted co-operation among development planning organizations and provided assistance in advisory services, training and research. The Fourth Conference of Ministers and Heads of Planning of Latin America and the Caribbean was held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, on 9 and 10 May.

In the area of advisory assistance, special attention was given to the less developed countries and the less advanced regions of developing countries; assistance was provided to planning bodies in Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama and Venezuela⁽⁵⁾

Research activities concentrated on: planning and co-ordination of economic policy decisions in the short-, medium- and long-term; the region's future standing in the world economy; the territorial effects of global and sectoral economic policies; and the role of the public sector, with special emphasis on social development policy.

ILPES carried out a first mission (September-October) designed to evaluate horizontal co-operation among national planning bodies, involving interviews with more than 100 authorities in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru and Venezuela. Areas identified by the mission for new services dealing with such co-operation included formulating plans and policies; programming public sector activities; monitoring macro-economic aspects and conjunctural analysis; support for regional development bodies; pre-investment and project activities; science and technology; technical co-operation; and social development. Work continued on the systematic study of the economic evolution of individual countries and the region as a whole, and the analysis and appraisal of the various development policies and strategies applied in the region.

Regarding poverty, a project report found that, unless a significant change was made in development styles, some 30 per cent of the Latin American population would still be living in a state of poverty in the year 2000. Overcoming poverty would call for vigorous State intervention, since economic growth alone could not be expected to satisfy the basic needs of the population.

Food and agriculture

The ECLA programme in food and agriculture focused on such questions as food security, rural poverty and peasant economy, styles of development and agricultural policies, training in agricultural and rural development, and relevant co-operation and integration.⁽⁵⁾ Rural poverty research efforts concentrated on the economic and social trends and processes in agricultural and rural activities which determined the state of poverty affecting rural populations.

Meetings held, at ECLA headquarters, included one on the peasantry as a producer of basic food-stuffs and its links to food markets (July), and an ECLA/FAO Expert Meeting on Styles of Development and Agricultural Policies (November).

Environment

Efforts continued in 1983 to strengthen the capacity of the ECLA secretariat and the region to manage the environment and its resources in order to promote regional development and integration and to improve living conditions of the lowest-income groups.⁽⁵⁾ Studies on the economy and the environment and incorporation of the environmental dimension in planning were presented to the Fourth Conference of Ministers and Heads of Planning of Latin America and the Caribbean (Buenos Aires, May).

Various seminars held during 1983 dealt with the environment and technologies for settlements in arid zones: research and experience in Argentina and Chile (Antofagasta, Chile, March and April), agricultural processes of importance in Latin America from the environmental standpoint (Santiago, Chile, June), and human settlements and development in arid ecosystems (Mendoza, Argentina, November).

Human settlements

ECLA activities were oriented towards analysing traditional criteria for selection of technology, the nature of appropriate technologies as well as their economic and social impact, and their application to the processes of building human settlements and the supply of housing services and infrastructure.⁽⁵⁾ Other activities concerned examination of metropolitanization and social change, particularly in connection with planning and management of large cities and co-operation among metropolitan areas of the region, the role of local governments in promoting and managing municipal development and decentralization, community participation and planning prospects.

Meetings and seminars included one on technologies for human settlements (Bogota), the Ad Hoc Consultative Meeting of Experts in Municipal Planning Methodologies (Cali, Colombia, August), and one on makeshift settlements (Santiago, October).

Industrial development

The High-level Preparatory Meeting for the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO): Strategies and Policies for Industrial Development in the Developing Countries (Lima, Peru, 18-22 April) considered, among other things, a study on the Latin American industrialization strategy, which re-examined the strategy of the 1980s in the light of new factors emerging from the recessive internal situation and the international crisis. The study emphasized correction of extreme forms of technological and social heterogeneity, improvement of production structures, export promotion and correction of intra-regional heterogeneities.⁽⁵⁾

Field work was completed on demand for equipment in the mining sector (metallic minerals and coal) and an analysis began of the industrial significance of that demand; field work began in August on evaluation of the demand for oil prospecting and extraction equipment.

A review of the main industrial sectors indicated that the recessive Situation in the region had particularly affected the capital goods production sector, with a large proportion of iron and steel projects suspended or postponed.

Meetings held in 1983 included: a special meeting with senior executives of electricity companies (November); and the ECLA/UNIDO Expert Meeting on Capital Goods Industries in Latin America (Santiago, December), which considered the objectives, results and directions of the regional project on capital goods supply and production in Latin America and identified areas of co-operation.

International trade

ECLA submitted to the May Bogotá meeting of leading Latin American personalities a document on the international economic crisis and Latin America's capacity to respond to it, which analysed the trade problems faced by countries of the region, including the negative impact of the growing tendency towards protectionism at the world level, and suggested possible regional responses.⁽⁵⁾

Another study, presented at the Latin American Ministerial Co-ordination Meeting prior to UNCTAD VI (Cartagena, Colombia, 21-26 February), identified possible policies, programmes and measures for a new Latin American approach to and strategy on basic commodities.

A round-table meeting, on policy options in the external sector: the Latin American case, was held at ECLA headquarters in October. Other meetings and seminars included: special conference on external financing, organized by the Inter-American Economic and Social Council (Caracas, Venezuela, September); Expert Consultation on Commodity Trade, Especially Livestock and Meat, organized by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (ECLA headquarters, September); seminar on export promotion (Brasilia, Brazil, September-October); and Meeting of Officials Responsible for External Trade in Latin America (Santiago, March).

Co-operation among developing countries

Co-operation in the field of planning included a meeting on agricultural planning in Trinidad and Tobago, November, in addition to the Third Meeting of Caribbean Heads of Planning, also in Trinidad and Tobago in April-May.⁽⁵⁾

In the transport area, a national subgroup meeting was held in Mexico in September; from this and earlier meetings, a Caribbean maritime search and rescue plan emerged. Also during the year, a subregional workshop on removal of language barriers was held in the Netherlands Antilles, August/September; a regional intensive course in demography was organized in Trinidad and Tobago, June/August; and an ad hoc expert group meeting was held in Cuba in October to review draft national trade procedures guides and to recommend future action for facilitating trade.

Natural resources and energy

In 1983, ECLA prepared a report on activities of international agencies in the region in the field of water resources,⁽⁵⁾ and began preparations for Latin America's participation in the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy (see Chapter X of this section).

With the objective of identifying the region's capacity for utilizing the sea and its resources and promoting future co-operation in ocean matters, inventories were under preparation for each country in order to build up an information service.

Meetings included a seminar-workshop on evaluations of the environmental impact on the marine environment and coastal areas in the south-east Pacific (Santiago, November); and the Seventh Latin American Seminar on Irrigation (Santiago, November-December), organized by the Inter-American Institute for Agricultural Co-operation.

Population

In 1983, the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE) gave, in Trinidad and Tobago, an intensive demography course for the first time for English-speaking Caribbean countries. Work continued regarding processing, utilization and analysis of the 1980s censuses in the region.⁽⁵⁾

The seventh session of the Committee of High Level Government Experts (CEGAN), within the framework of which the Latin American Regional Preparatory Meeting for the 1984 International Conference on Population was held, met in Havana, Cuba, from 16 to 19 November.

Resolutions adopted concerned the reports of activities and programme of work of the Latin American Demographic Centre and Latin American Regional Population Programme, 1984-1987; support for activities of the Latin American Demographic Centre; and a Latin American proposal to the International Conference on Population.⁽⁶⁾

Science and technology

A report regarding application of biotechnology to solving the region's development problems was examined in 1983 by the ECLA/UNESCO Expert Meeting on Implications for Latin America of Advances in Biotechnology, including Genetic Engineering (Montevideo, Uruguay, November).⁽⁵⁾

Social development and humanitarian affairs

Systematic surveys continued-using the 1960, 1970 and 1980 census series, household surveys and statistical sources-of the changes which had taken place in the occupational structure, education, levels of consumption, and other areas, in order to define the various social groups comprising the Latin American structure and the forms which their demands for development and participation might assume. Particular attention was paid to the peasant sectors and lowest-income urban social groups in order to facilitate their incorporation into the social development process.⁽⁵⁾

Consideration was given to the effects of the economic crisis on styles and forms of development as changes took place in Latin American social structure and stratification as well as in the economy, science and technology and social organization in the developed countries. A seminar on changes in the economies and societies of the developed countries and options for Latin America was held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in October.

The Latin American Regional Preparatory Meeting for the International Youth Year (San Jose, Costa Rica, October) adopted a regional plan of action to be submitted in connection with the activities for the Year (1985). In addition, ECLA continued to promote the participation of women within the framework of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)⁽⁷⁾ and the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985).

Statistics

Advance estimates were made towards the end of the year, of the future evolution of domestic external sector economic activity and of the countries of the region, to serve as the basis for preliminary overviews of the Latin American economy.⁽⁵⁾

Technical assistance continued to be provided for household surveys and population censuses.

ECLA participated in the biennial session of the Co-ordinating Board of the Commission for the Improvement of National Statistics at Buenos Aires, in October. Other meetings held included the Latin American Seminar on National Accounts (Lima, October).

Transport

Work by ECLA in the transport area included consideration, at the request of the Latin American Integration Association, of a study on an information system on international transport. To develop this system, a seminar on the uniform system of maritime transport statistics was organized, in conjunction with the Government of Peru and the United Nations Statistical Office, at Lima in November 1983. In co-operation with the International Maritime Organization, ECLA convened the first meeting on regional maritime co-operation among the South American countries, Mexico and Panama (Santiago, October). Other 1983 meetings included the Pan American Transport Congress (Buenos Aires, May/June), and a seminar on road maintenance experience in Latin America (Santiago, August).

Women

The Third Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico City, 8-10 August) adopted 12 resolutions, one of which concerned continuation of integration activities beyond the end of the United Nations Decade for Women.⁽⁵⁾

Other resolutions adopted by the Conference concerned guidelines for action to improve the status of women, measures to promote integration of women in development, and financial and technical support for specific programmes.⁽⁸⁾

Western Asia

The Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) held its tenth session at its headquarters at Baghdad, Iraq, from 7 to 11 May 1983. Its Executive Secretary emphasized the need for co-ordination and co-operation in developmental integration efforts, in view of the economic recession, the consequent decrease in public spending and the rationalization of energy consumption, leading to reduced demand for petroleum.⁽¹⁾

The Commission adopted nine resolutions, four of which were for consideration by the Economic and Social Council. The four concerned: its programme of work and priorities for 1984-1985, staff and administration questions, international assistance to earthquake-stricken areas of Yemen, and programme of action for the 1980s for the least developed countries (LDCs). One of the texts included a request that the Council propose to the General Assembly assignment of a quota of posts in the ECWA secretariat to the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) as a full member of the Commission. Under another, it called on the secretariat to focus its advisory activities on LDCs of the region (Democratic Yemen, Yemen), and to utilize its resources to strengthen infrastructures, expand training opportunities and plan, monitor and implement joint ventures between those countries in line with the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs,⁽²⁾ which was adopted by the 1981 United Nations Conference on LDCs and endorsed the same year by the General Assembly. ECWA also adopted a resolution on a study of the economic and social situation and potential of the Palestinian Arab people (see below).

Survey of economic and social development

The survey of economic and social developments in the ECWA region in 1983,⁽³⁾ the summary of which was taken note of by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1983/177 of 28

July (see p. 422), stated that the decline in growth rates had affected both the developed market economies and developing countries, and that, in 1982, a combination of lower oil outputs and a downward shift in the terms of trade had reversed the past trend of consistently high growth rates in oil-exporting countries.

In early 1983, negotiations among countries belonging to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries led to some 15 per cent reduction of official posted prices of oil from $34 to $29 a barrel; it remained to be seen whether that move would help the developed market economies in ending their recession, the survey stated. The decline in oil revenue surpluses of the oil-exporting countries, however, diminished prospects of their continued aid to the non-oil-exporting countries of the region. At the same time, there were signs of a downward trend in many labour-exporting, least developed and other non-oil-exporting countries of the region, whose economies depended on remittances from their workers in Gulf oil countries; problems of return migration, settlement and aggravation of the domestic employment situation could also be expected.

Activities in 1983

Study on Palestinian Arab people

The Final Report on the Economic and Social Situation and Potential of the Palestinian Arab People in the Region of West Asia,⁽⁴⁾ a study commissioned by ECWA, was published in May 1983. The decision to carry out the study had been made in 1976, following the acquisition by PLO of a permanent observer status in ECWA in 1975.

The report stated that most Palestinian communities showed the economic, political and social characteristics and attributes of minorities, in terms of both numbers and power relations, and that they tended to be isolated from the mainstream of social change in their area of residence. It observed that the cohesion of the Palestinian communities resulted partly from their 35 years of geographic dispersion, statelessness and minority status.

The report stated that PLO served, among other things, as a force of unity, assertion and cohesion among the Palestinians; they saw PLO as a welfare institution, a source of moral and social authority, a conduit for maintaining family ties, a potential platform for self-realization, a framework for settling grievances and a symbol for asserting national rights. Thus, Palestinians affiliated themselves with PLO as a means of defeating socio-political alienation, and as an act of asserting their Palestinianism, the report stated.

Among recommendations concerning Palestinians made in the report was that there should be a complete release by all States of socio-economic and demographic data on them; a census; and the establishment of a United Nations registry for them, to record such information as demographic changes, land holdings, and other property and cultural treasures. The report also suggested that ECWA enhance the capabilities of the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics; that assistance be given to PLO's documentation, research and planning institutions; and that ECWA should encourage intensive research in all its member countries regarding trends in the occupied territories. It called for studies on the disintegration/integration of the Palestinian people, society and economy, as well as on migration, settlement and resettlement.

ECWA, at its 1983 session,⁽¹⁾ referred the report to member States for study, and established a sub-committee to redraft the report in the light of observations to be received, for submission to the August/September International Conference on the Question of Palestine (see p. 274).

In connection with the proposed census, the ECWA secretariat reported that the United Nations Fund for Population Activities planned to send a consultant on a fact-finding mission to determine possibilities for rendering assistance,⁽⁵⁾ in accordance with a 1978 General Assembly resolution.⁽⁶⁾

Assistance to flood-stricken areas of Democratic Yemen

High priority was given to obtaining international assistance for Democratic Yemen, which had been struck by severe floods in March 1982⁽⁷⁾ (see p. 514).

A rehabilitation and reconstruction programme by the Government, as assessed by ECWA, included examination of needs, rehabilitation of the displaced population, rehabilitation of agricultural land and compensation for livestock and other flood-destroyed property, reconstruction of physical infrastructures, development of a disaster warning system, replacement of development programme resources which had been redeployed to meet immediate relief requirements, and budgetary support to recover losses in production and transport cost and to meet balance-of-payments deficits. Those activities were to be consolidated into ECWA's programme of action for LDCs of the region.

The secretariat proposed that it participate in the assessment and operations of the rehabilitation and reconstruction programme, and assist the country in bringing the programme to the attention of donors.

Earthquake in Yemen

At its May 1983 session, ECWA adopted a resolution⁽¹⁾ on international assistance to the area of Yemen which had been struck by a December 1982 earthquake (see p. 533), and expressed satisfaction over the joint mission-of ECWA, the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development, the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development, the World Bank and the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries-in preparing a preliminary programme for reconstruction. It also expressed appreciation for relief offers, appealed for further contributions, and asked the Executive Secretary to report on the subject to ECWA at its eleventh session.

Food and agriculture

An Expert Group Meeting on Review of Experiences with Rural Development Projects in the Countries of Western Asia (Baghdad, 29 September-2 October) reviewed national case-studies and submitted its results to the FAO/ECWA Regional Intergovernmental Consultation on Rural Development in the Near East Region (Baghdad, 3-6 October).⁽⁸⁾

An Expert Group Meeting on Constraints in Agricultural Planning and Resource Mobilization for Food Security Programmes in the ECWA Region was held at Baghdad in December.

Several studies and reports were in different stages of preparation in 1983. Among them, a pilot case-study on long-term agricultural development alternatives, efficient resource use and agricultural adjustment in the Syrian Arab Republic was completed in draft form.⁽⁹⁾

A first study on agricultural development in Saudi Arabia-evaluating land and water resources potential, regional cropping patterns, production costs of traditional and commercial farms, and agricultural prices and marketing margins-was discussed at a national in-service workshop at Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, in April. Lebanon was considering a UNDP/FAO study on the reconstruction and development of its agriculture, which included a proposed strategy and policy options for agricultural development, a medium-term reconstruction and development programme and a proposal for reorganization of the agricultural administration.

A case-study on agricultural price policy in Iraq was in progress, while a report on the organization and management of state farms in that country was completed. Rural poverty alleviation in Egypt was the subject of another completed case-study. Papers were prepared dealing with food security issues in Egypt, Iraq and Saudi Arabia, as was one surveying national food grain policies in all ECWA countries.⁽⁵⁾

A joint FAO/ECWA/UNDP mission visited Egypt, Iraq, Kuwait and the Sudan in November to initiate assessment of training needs in agricultural planning and project analysis.⁽⁸⁾

In October, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/6, requested FAO to consider holding at Rome, Italy, not later than 31 August 1984, a meeting on food and agriculture in the Arab region.

Industrial development

A report on the latest industrial development plans of ECW member countries was issued.⁽⁹⁾ Several studies were under way on various aspects of industrial development, including feasibility studies on specific industrial sectors.

The Expert Panel Meeting on Capital Goods and Heavy Engineering Industries (Turbines and Generators), meeting at Baghdad in October, discussed such topics as capacities and skill buildup, technology transfer and development, and technological and manufacturing requirements for components.⁽⁸⁾ Steps were taken for the formation of an Arab electric equipment manufacturing company, as recommended by a meeting at Tunis, Tunisia, in November, of the Arab Industrial Development Organization and the Arab Fund.

Natural resources and environment

A draft report was issued on a regional programme for new and renewable sources of energy, with special reference to rural applications.⁽⁸⁾ Other reports dealt with electric power generation and distribution opportunities for co-operation in the region, mineral resources development, assessment of skilled manpower needs in the oil and gas sector, and waste-water treatment for reuse.

Meetings held in 1983 included the Expert Group Meeting on Electrical Network Interconnection of the Mesreq Arab Countries (Kuwait, 25-27 October).

ECWA's Environmental Co-ordination Unit continued to assess the state of environment, and provided support to the regional seas programme.

Science and technology

A workshop was held at Baghdad in October on strategic problems involving the importation of technology for industrial advancement.

Reports prepared or published included: development of consulting and engineering design capabilities in selected ECWA countries, proceedings of the ECWA seminar on technology policies in the Arab States, a preliminary outline and plan of action regarding the international movement of highly qualified specialists and technologies with special reference to selected ECWA countries, technological decision-making with the investment process, relations between processes of importing technology and the development of technological capabilities, and education and training of high-level scientific and technological manpower.

Population

Evaluation continued in 1983 of population data provided by censuses and surveys in Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen and the United Arab Emirates.⁽⁹⁾

On population estimates and projections, the revised third issue of the Demographic and Related Data Sheets and the 1982 Adjusted Age-Sex Structure of Population in the ECW region had been completed. A demographic estimates and projections workshop on the ECWA region was held.

Transport, communications and tourism

A programme on inter-country and regional transport projects was terminated and resources were concentrated, instead, on the training needs of the region, with the ultimate aim of establishing a regional training institution and improving existing centres.

On the question of transport harmonization in the region, difficulties encountered at border crossings were investigated in order to improve the situation and standardize documents.

A report was prepared on the need and potential for developing national merchant marines, and activities for developing inland waterways continued in Egypt and Iraq. A possible maritime information system for monitoring trade and port traffic was investigated. Efforts also continued to improve road maintenance with the aim of preserving a high-standard regional highway network, while a programme on integration and improvement of railways networks was terminated. Continuing also was the programme on monitoring developments in the transport field.

Work was undertaken to formulate a new development strategy for tourism in Western Asia, leading, ultimately, to a master tourism plan for ECWA countries; a report on the strategy, including recommendations, was published in November. Tourism flows were monitored as were payments and policies in the region. A report on a strategy for tourism development in the region was prepared in anticipation of an expert group meeting in 1984.⁽⁹⁾

Contacts were continued with the Economic Commission for Europe in regard to the Trans-European North-South Motorway project, passing through 10 European countries and terminating at the frontiers of the ECWA region. In July, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/69, called on ECWA to collaborate with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific in incorporating the Western Asia region in the programme of action for a transport and communication decade, which had been proposed for the Asia and the Pacific region (see above, under ASIA AND THE PACIFIC).

Human settlements

Data collection continued for analysis of the human settlement situation, with priority given to profiles of the least developed ECWA member countries (Democratic Yemen, Yemen).⁽⁹⁾

Technical assistance was given to Lebanon on housing policies and schemes. Work was initiated on the assessment and improvement of the building materials and construction industry.

Social development

A regional meeting on International Youth Year (1985) was held at Baghdad in October and a study was made of youth in the region.

ECWA assisted in organizing the Western Asia Regional Preparatory Meeting (Baghdad, December) for the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders; the meeting adopted a resolution requesting the United Nations Secretary-General to take measures towards establishing a United Nations Arab Regional Institute for the Prevention of Crime.⁽⁸⁾

Other activities dealt with technical or advisory assistance in planning institutions and programmes for the aged, and policies and programmes for the integration of women in development. Among meetings held on the latter was a Regional Expert Group Meeting on Policy Formulation for Developmental Images of Women in the Mass Media (Baghdad, December).

Statistics

Work was initiated on the standardization of national statistics, and assistance was given in developing national accounts and improving the implementation of the United Nations system of national accounts. Publications included: the fourth bulletin of the series Studies on Prices and Index Numbers in the ECWA Region (1971-1981), and the National Accounts Studies.⁽⁹⁾

The ECWA secretariat participated in, or contributed to, the Technical Committee for Harmonization of the Statistical Classification in the Arab World (Amman, Jordan, August-September), the Statistical Committee of the Council of Arab Economic Unity (Amman, 3-5 September), the Training Workshop on Statistics of the Distributive Trades and Services for Arab Countries (Amman, 3-31 October), and the Statistical Standing Committee of the Arab League (Tunis, 20-24 November).

Technical co-operation

ECWA continued to provide advisory services in public finance, development planning, human resources development, industrial project identification and formulation, financial development, economic statistics and national accounts, household survey design and execution, and transport and communications.⁽¹⁰⁾ Regarding the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) consultancy services were provided to all ECWA member States in support of development plans and programme improvement.

A meeting was held on upgrading the capability of industrial planners to assess imported technologies, and a subregional workshop met on development of skills for organization and participation in training workshops.

Public finance

Assistance was given to UNDP in preparing a project document on establishing a Regional Arab Institute in Banking and Financial Management⁽⁹⁾

Work on public enterprises and economic development in the countries of Western Asia was completed, while work on financial resources availabilities and needs in ECWA countries was initiated.

Chapter IX

Natural resources and cartography

During 1983, the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE) continued its financing activities in developing countries. The Committee on Natural Resources held its eighth session in New York from 8 to 17 June; on the basis of its recommendations, the Economic and Social Council in July adopted resolutions on: developing non-metallic raw materials (1983/52); standardizing terminology for mineral resources (1983/53); applying computer technology in mineral exploration (1983/54); permanent sovereignty over natural resources (1983/56); water resources development (1983/57); utilizing subsurface space (1983/58); co-ordinating United Nations programmes on natural resources (1983/59); and UNRFNRE (1983/55). A resolution on developing the energy resources of developing countries was also adopted (see Chapter X of this section).

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination again took up the matter of programme co-ordination in mineral resources.

Reformulations of a new major programme in marine affairs, for inclusion in the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989, were adopted by the General Assembly.

The Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific was held in January at Bangkok, Thailand.

Topics related to this chapter. Law of the sea: sea-bed mining. Middle East: permanent sovereignty over natural resources in the occupied territories. Operational activities for development: technical co-operation. Regional economic and social activities. Energy. Namibia.

General aspects of natural resources

Exploration

UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

Activities

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration continued to make good progress in all its activities during 1983. Under the administration of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), work was carried out in four main areas: Pre-investment assistance to countries where mineral finds had been made; management of operational mineral projects; pre-project evaluation and development; and evaluation of projects in the geothermal energy field. UNRFNRE's 1983 activities were outlined in a February 1984 report⁽¹⁾ by the UNDP Administrator.

The Fund provided a number of developing countries with scarce, high-risk financing, expertise and technology for the technical and economic assessment of mineral resources. Eleven exploration projects had been completed by the end of 1983, with seven discoveries recorded. Interest in considering the feasibility of investment was expressed by the mining sector in four of the projects.

To assist Governments, UNRFNRE began to develop documentation which they would be able to use to attract investment. A survey was conducted of private mining groups, the public sector, private and international financing institutions, and regional and national banks to establish a cross-section of opinion on mining development. The survey's results would bring to the attention of user Governments factors critical to obtaining financing and know-how.

Argentina, Benin, the Congo and Ecuador were given assistance in promoting investment follow-up. Activities came to a close in Guyana and Liberia, and were being wound down in Kenya, Suriname and the Upper Volta. The start-up of a project in Haiti and the ratification of a project in Peru were on schedule.

Following a gold-silver discovery in Argentina, UNRFNRE completed a feasibility study which attracted the interest of the country's private mining sector.⁽³⁾ In Benin, testing showed that a kaolin deposit was suitable for ceramics production and, with treatment, could be applied to various industrial uses for local and export markets. In the Congo, an exploration programme used advanced technological methods to delineate the extent and thickness of sea-bottom phosphate deposits. With the aim of obtaining investment for the development of a silver mine in Ecuador, a reappraisal was made of its end-product concentrate possibilities.

Evaluation was completed of low-grade gold mineralization in Guyana and Liberia. An exploratory study revealed grades of about 3 per cent copper and 3 ounces of silver per ton at a site in Kenya; in addition, kimberlitic rock (host rock for diamonds) was discovered and its potential initially evaluated.

Ore-grade gold was discovered in Suriname, with an average grade well above the economic cut-off level.

Since 1981, more than 33 missions had visited 21 countries to review the development of geothermal energy for electricity production. Installed capacity was continuing to grow in the developing countries, almost doubling from an estimated 670 megawatts (MW) in seven countries at the end of 1981 to 1,200 MW in nine countries at the end of 1983.

The Fund's current financial resources were inadequate, the report stated, and would inhibit its response to new projects. Owing to a depressed mineral market, there was little interest among the industrialized countries in world-wide mining exploration. However, it was important that voluntary contributions to the Fund be increased, given the period necessary to bring projects to the pre-investment stage. Projects would not be ready for implementation if contributions were forthcoming only when the international minerals market improved.

On 23 June 1983, the UNDP Governing Council approved exploration for precious and base metals in northern Haiti and for base metals and gold in Peru, subject to availability of funds.⁽⁴⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1983, the Economic and Social Council had before it the UNDP Administrator's report on the 1982 activities of UNRFNRE.⁽⁵⁾ On 28 July, the Council, acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1983/55 without vote.

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3167(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1762(LIV) of 18 May 1973, concerning the establishment of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration,

1. Takes note of the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration;

2. Welcomes the efforts of the Fund to identify the requirements for feasibility and post-discovery follow-up work in order to bring successful exploration projects to the production stage;

3. Takes note also of the Fund's evaluation of potential geothermal exploration projects;

4. Recognizes the need to increase financial support to the Fund in order to meet effectively the exploration requirements of developing countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/55

28 July 1983 Meeting 40 Adopted without VOTE

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/122) without vote. 19 July (meeting 171); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1983/19 & Corr.1): agenda item 9. Meeting number. ESC 40.

The Council also took note of the Administrator's report on the 1982 activities of UNRFNRE when it adopted decision 1983/187 on 29 July.

Contributions and expenditures

Programme expenditures were estimated at $4.8 million in 1983, a decline of $1.6 million from the previous year. Funding availability of about $10 million was sufficient only to cover projects in an advanced stage of development. With only $2.1 million in voluntary contributions having been received in 1983 and a similar amount expected in 1984 (see tables on next page), funding for new projects remained inadequate.

The Fund's cumulative expenditure on completed projects and programme commitments was $32.1 million, which included an estimate on an actuarial basis for subsequent work.

The Fund obtained in 1983 its first co-financing participation from the United States Government for the second phase of offshore phosphate exploration work in the Pointe-Noire sector of the Congo.

On 23 June,⁽⁴⁾ the UNDP Governing Council endorsed the efforts by UNRFNRE aimed at promoting follow-up pre-investment work leading to economic development and appealed urgently to Governments to increase their voluntary contributions to the Fund.

New exploration techniques

In March 1983, the Secretary-General presented to the Committee on Natural Resources a report on new techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying, exploring and assessing natural resources,⁽⁶⁾ as requested by the Committee in 1981.

The report, a follow-up to one submitted in 1981,⁽⁷⁾ concluded that, with the introduction of lower-cost microprocessors, the importance of electronic data processing was growing in ore reserve calculations, geostatistical and simulation studies applied to exploration programmes, and project evaluation. It proposed that current developments be reviewed with the aim of making maximum use of them. Further, in the area of remote sensing, the report said that more sophisticated equipment had become available for the interpretation of satellite imagery. Regarding exploration geophysics and geochemistry, progress had taken place in hardware and programmes for complex interpretation processes and, in diamond-core drilling, a major change had occurred with the increased application of hydraulics in all drilling-rig operations. These new technologies made greater demands, however, in operator skills, maintenance services and initial costs. It was proposed that developing countries be assisted in acquiring new technologies through training seminars, feasibility studies and other catalytic activities, making use of funds available under UNDP country programming. It was also proposed that microcomputer and computer software developments be reviewed to make maximum use of them in mineral-sector training and other technical co-operation activities.

The latest applications of remote sensing technology were being introduced in a number of countries for the exploration of natural resources by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD). The Department also organized in New York in 1983 an expert group on the application of microcomputers in mineral exploration and development (see Chapter II of this section).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1983/54 on the application of computer technology in mineral exploration and development. It followed the recommendation of its First Committee.

Application of computer technology in mineral exploration and development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognising the importance of the use of computer processing methods in mineral exploration and development, in particular, but not limited to, remote sensing, geochemistry, ore reserve calculation, mine planning, economic and financial analysis, and data storage and retrieval,

Bearing in mind the advantages that developing countries could derive from a wider application of such techniques,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on new techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying, exploring and assessing natural resources and of the information on the current activities in this field of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the United Nations Secretariat,

Mindful of the importance of the transfer of technology, in particular new technology, that will strengthen the national capabilities of developing countries,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Natural Resources at its ninth session on the use of computer techniques, particularly in the developing countries, in the exploration and development of natural resources;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee at its ninth session on the progress made in the application of such techniques in the activities of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development;

3. Urges Governments to consider how the application of such techniques can be strengthened in their mineral exploration and development activities and invites Governments and institutions to provide facilities for seminars and symposia on this subject.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/54

28 July 1983 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/122) without vote, 13 July (meeting 17); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1983/19 & Corr.1); agenda item 9. Meeting number. ESC 40.

Utilization of subsurface space

A report on the utilization of subsurface space for storage of food, water and energy, and for transportation, public utilities and other purposes⁽⁸⁾ was submitted in March 1983 by the Secretary-General to the Committee on Natural Resources. The report, responding to a 1981 request by the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁹⁾ stated that research on rock mechanics and engineering geology was a prerequisite to the development of subsurface space, that lack of financial resources would continue to limit its utilization in developing countries, and that the United Nations could assist by providing information on the potential of subsurface space, planning, costs and construction techniques. It recommended that the United Nations system encourage subsurface space utilization by providing information and technical assistance and training.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1983/58, as recommended by its First Committee.

Utilization of subsurface space

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1981/82 of 24 July 1981,

Deeply concerned by the problems of population, urbanization and overcrowding and the need to provide people with food, water and an adequate energy supply,

Recognising the potential of subsurface space for, inter alia, the storage of water, fuel, food and other commodities, as well as for water supply, sewerage and the conservation of energy,

Taking into account the experience in the use of subsurface space already gained in many parts of the world and in specialized international organizations, and the long lead time required for the planning and construction of subsurface facilities,

Having taken note of the report of the Secretary-General on the utilization of subsurface space and its potential in developing countries,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen support mechanisms in the United Nations for making known the scope with respect to the utilization of subsurface space as a potentially important facet of development activity in developing countries;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a progress report on the development and utilization of subsurface space and the activities of the competent organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in this area, for the consideration of the Committee on Natural Resources at its ninth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/58

28 July 1983 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/122) without vote, 19 July (meeting 17); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1983/19 & Corr.1); agenda item 9. Meeting number. ESC 40.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources

Developments in the exercise of control by developing countries over their natural resources were discussed in an April 1983 report by the Secretary-General to the Committee on Natural Resources.⁽¹⁰⁾ This was the latest in a series of such reports prepared pursuant to a request by the Economic and Social Council in 1977.⁽¹¹⁾

According to the report, probably the most important current concern was the impact of the worldwide recession on mineral investment in developing countries. Growing difficulties in attracting investment funds had led to a re-examination of existing investments and of mining and tax legislation. Current development agreements had assigned a priority to investment promotion, reflecting a change from the 1960s and 1970s when many developing countries were in a stronger position because equity and loan capital for mineral projects were scarce. Much hope was being placed on the development of mineral deposits to overcome the financial and economic effects of the recession.

The report said that developing countries could choose to postpone mineral development, finance a national mining industry with public funds, or encourage foreign investment. It observed that in many countries there was no clear, viable procedure for action after the discovery of mineral deposits, and that experience suggested that countries could increase their bargaining power if, rather than waiting passively for investors, they carried out an active promotion policy. It pointed out that international organizations offered advice to developing countries, covering bargaining strategy, negotiations, contracts, mining, investment and tax legislation; the United Nations Secretariat provided advisory services through interregional advisers, assisted by ad hoc consultants. The report added that experience had shown that the elaboration of model agreements could be of considerable use to Governments, both in obtaining expertise and formulating policies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1983/56.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the problems caused by the present international economic situation to most countries, in particular the developing countries,

Noting the importance for all countries, in particular the developing countries, to maximize the benefits from the exploration, exploitation and processing of their natural resources in order to strengthen their economic development,

Having noted the report of the Secretary-General on permanent sovereignty over natural resources and the comments made thereon by the Committee on Natural Resources at its eighth session,

1. Requests the Committee on Natural Resources to continue to discuss, at its ninth session, the question of permanent sovereignty over natural resources, including:

(a) The strengthening of national capabilities to finance and manage the exploration, exploitation and processing of natural resources for the national benefit;

(6) The promotion of investments in natural resources according to basic priorities;

(c) The identification of new possibilities for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries in the field of natural resources;

- (d) The conservation of natural resources;
- (e) The environment and natural resources;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a further report on the subject of permanent sovereignty over natural resources, taking into account the matters referred to in paragraph 1 above and the comments made by the Committee at its eighth session;

3. Affirms in this context the importance of the ongoing work of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on a code of conduct for transnational corporations, as it relates to natural resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/144 on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, condemned Israel for its exploitation of those resources; called on States, international organizations, specialized agencies, business corporations and other institutions not to co-operate with Israel in their exploitation; emphasized the right of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples to sovereignty over those resources; and reaffirmed their right to full compensation (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX).

Economic and Social Council decision 1983/176

Adopted without vote.

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/122) without vote, 19 July (meeting 17); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1983/19 & Corr.1), orally amended in Council by Bangladesh, for Group of 77: agenda item 9
Meeting number. ESC 40.

Before adopting the decision, the Council amended item 4 on energy resources by adding "trends and salient issues", and deleting from the documentation required a report of the Secretary-General on prospects and salient issues in the world energy situation, contained in the draft submitted by the Committee on Natural Resources. At a meeting of the Council's First Committee on 26 July, Bangladesh, on behalf of the Group of 77, had proposed that no decision be taken on a draft resolution entitled "Energy development", submitted by the Committee on Natural Resources; the First Committee adopted the proposal by 24 votes to 11, with 4 abstentions. At the 28 July meeting of the Council, Bangladesh pointed out that the report in question was no longer justified, and proposed the above amendment, which was adopted by a roll-call vote of 32 to 11, with 7 abstentions. The roll-call vote was requested by Greece, on behalf of the members of the European Economic Community.

In another action-decision 1983/184 of 29 July the Council decided to maintain, for a further period of two years, the discontinuance of the provision of summary records for the Committee on Natural Resources.

Mineral resources

Technical co-operation

In 1983, in addition to UNRPNRE activities, DTCD carried out projects in mineral exploration, mining development, institution building, training, mining legislation and contract negotiation, and mineral sector planning. DTCD supported 189 mineral projects, with a comparable number under preparation. Some 75 missions by inter-regional advisers and others were undertaken in more than 60 countries. The projects were described by the Secretary-General in an addendum to his report on United Nations technical co-operation activities in 1983.⁽¹⁾

Exploration for gold continued, for example: in Benin, where small-scale production of gold was begun for the first time since 1956; in Haiti, where further encouraging results were achieved during continuing exploration; and in Suriname: where feasibility studies were under way. Exploration for tin continued in Thailand, and Colombian geologists and engineers were trained in electronic data-processing techniques.

In Argentina, the Bajo La Alumbrera copper-gold deposit continued to be evaluated, and in Burundi, a promising vanadium occurrence was being investigated. Several projects in India provided technical co-operation in gold mining and exploration for gold and other metals, while a highly successful project in the Philippines was concerned with institution strengthening and regional co-operation. In several countries, including Ethiopia, Gabon, Somalia, the United Republic of Cameroon and the United Republic of Tanzania, activities aimed at strengthening national institutions continued. In Bolivia, the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development assisted COMIBOL, the national mining company.

Survey of investments

A March 1983 note to the Committee on Natural Resources by the Secretary-General,⁽²⁾ prepared in accordance with a 1981 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽³⁾ commented on the question of investments in mining. The note stated that demand for most major metals and minerals, with the exception of precious metals, had declined during 1981 and 1982. Since output had not been reduced enough, or not early enough, to compensate for the decline in demand, prices had fallen for virtually all minerals. Many mining companies were operating at a loss, the note added. The result was that investment in exploration and production facilities, including maintenance of existing mines and plants, had decreased substantially. Investment in new production capacity had reached a very low level. However, it was expected that with improvement in the economies of the developed market-economy countries, demands for minerals would increase and investment in new production facilities would have to be reconsidered. Therefore, it seemed justified for a survey of planned investment to be undertaken. The guidance of the Committee on Natural Resources was requested.

The Committee on Natural Resources^() noted with regret that the survey of planned investment in mineral exploration and development, requested by the Council in its 1981 resolution,^() had not been undertaken. While investment in the international mining industry had declined substantially, investment continued to be made in some developing countries and in centrally planned economies. Investment would be forthcoming if international mineral markets were stabilized and just prices were ensured for producers and exporters, the Committee added.

Phosphates

In March 1983, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁵⁾ to the Committee on Natural Resources on new locations for exploration for phosphate rock in developing countries, pursuant to a request by the Economic and Social Council in 1981.⁽⁶⁾ The report identified areas in many developing countries that would warrant exploration. The largest new resources of phosphate rock had been found in Egypt, Iraq, Morocco, Peru and Saudi Arabia, while significant discoveries also had been made in India and the Upper Volta. Although excellent world surveys of phosphate rock deposits were available, the report observed, a detailed reassessment was desirable in view of technological and economic changes that had taken place in recent years. It suggested that the Committee on Natural Resources might wish to support efforts by developing countries to increase production of phosphate rock to meet their agricultural needs—a recommendation endorsed by the Committee at its June session⁽⁴⁾—and that additional funds could be made available from UNDP.

Rare metals

Trends and salient issues, with particular reference to rare metals, were the subjects of an April 1983 report,⁽⁷⁾ submitted by the Secretary-General to the Committee on Natural Resources in response to a request by the Council in 1981.⁽⁸⁾ The report said that 1982 had been the worst year in many decades for the international mineral sector. Consumption and prices had fallen to very low levels owing to a continuing recession in the developed market-economy countries. Several developing countries that were dependent on exports of minerals and metals had experienced difficult times. A threat that other materials might be substituted for metals in many situations was a major long-term consideration. The report discussed tantalum and lithium as rare metals, pointing out that they were “rare” in the sense that production and consumption of them was small. Production was highly concentrated regionally, and consumption was mainly in chemical products (lithium) and electrical components (tantalum). Known reserves were vast in relation to projected consumption levels. The report also examined sea-bed mining, observing that technological developments had virtually stopped in recent years and that metal prices were currently far too low to justify investment.

Non-metallic raw materials

A report dealing with prospects for developing non-metallic minerals for the construction, paper, ceramics and glass industries⁽⁹⁾ was presented to the Committee on Natural Resources by the Secretary-General in March 1983, in response to a 1981 Economic and Social Council resolution.⁽¹⁰⁾ Particular attention was paid to cement and its raw materials, mineral aggregates, dimension stone, asbestos, clays, including kaolin, and silica sand. The report said that the trend towards industrialization and higher standards of living provided a basis for increased use of these materials; however, there were barriers to their development. These included limited knowledge of the existence of deposits, their geological variety, limited domestic demand, lack of information on markets, and transportation problems. Geological mapping and basic mineral exploration had so far covered only a small percentage of most developing countries. The report also dealt with potash resources, which, it said, were not widely distributed throughout the world. It pointed out that the delineation of the evaporite basins in which potash deposits might occur was still incomplete, and that all thick evaporate sequences should be investigated in detail for suspected potash mineralization.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted without vote on 28 July resolution 1983/52.

Prospects for the development of non-metallic raw materials

The Economic and Social Council,

Pursuant to its resolution 1954(LIX) of 25 July 1975 on problems of availability and supply of natural resources,

Recognizing the importance of natural resources for economic development, in particular non-metallic raw materials,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on prospects for the development of non-metallic minerals,

Request the Secretary-General to prepare for the Committee on Natural Resources at its ninth session a further report, based on existing literature, on prospects for the development of non-metallic raw materials, with special reference to bentonite, mica, magnesite, feldspar, fluorspar and baryte.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/52

28 July 1983 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/122) without vote, 19 July (meeting 171: draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1983/19 & Corr.1); agenda item 9. Meeting number. ESC 40.

Co-ordination of programmes

At its June 1983 session,⁽⁴⁾ the Committee on Natural Resources had before it two reports by the Secretary-General, dealing with co-ordination of programmes⁽¹¹⁾ and programme evaluation within the United Nations system, the latter having been submitted to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) in 1982.⁽¹²⁾

The report on co-ordination of programmes dealt specifically with non-fuel minerals and was submitted in accordance with an Economic and Social Council decision of 1981.⁽¹³⁾ Twenty-six main areas of activity were identified, and 14 units of the United Nations and five specialized agencies and organizations were found to have a role in them. In financial terms, the report said, loans were the largest type of activity, with an estimated cost during 1982-1983 of $839.3 million for 51 financial assistance activities. The United Nations also played a dominant role in technical co-operation, with 200 activities costing $57.3 million, and in programme activities, with 46 activities costing $15.1 million. The main financial assistance activities were in direct prospecting, mining production technology and transfer of technology; the main areas most frequently covered by technical co-operation were geological surveys, mineral processing and direct prospecting; and the most numerous programme activities were in geological surveys, policy and planning, and marketing and trade.

Analysed by main area, the report stated that the level of co-operation among United Nations organizations varied widely, ranging from 100 per cent for pollution control to no reported co-operation in 10 of the 26 main areas. It concluded that activities related to mineral resources showed a high degree of concentration in a few organizational units as well as a fairly distinct pattern of main areas of activity, adding that, in such circumstances, the need for highly articulated co-operative arrangements might not be as great as in more diffuse situations.

For co-ordination in the implementation of programmes, the Committee on Natural Resources⁽⁴⁾ noted that one recommendation had resulted from the evaluation of mineral activities by CPC in 1982.⁽¹⁴⁾ CPC had recommended that the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) seek enhanced co-operation on mineral resources but the recommendation had not been implemented.

Programme evaluation

CPC took up in May 1983⁽¹⁵⁾ the implementation of the recommendations which it had made in 1982⁽¹²⁾ on the United Nations mineral resources programme. It considered a note by the Secretariat on their implementation.⁽¹⁶⁾ The note covered the responses of several United Nations units involved in mineral resources development, including the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA), DTCD, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Economic Commission for Africa, UNDP and UNRPNRE. The responses related to programme method and to mineral resources activities.

DIESA, for example, indicated that submissions for its proposed 1984-1985 programme budget had been carefully reviewed, as recommended; UNRPNRE reported that it had strengthened its association with other entities in the United Nations system; and UNDP said that problems in procurement, delivery and recruitment had been brought to the attention of the agencies involved but that it was too early to record any significant improvement.

A representative of the Secretary-General explained that the Secretariat, in following up the CPC recommendations, was constrained to depend on reports by the implementing organizations and that, since no objective assessment had been possible: the information had been transmitted as received. CPC requested the Secretariat to provide a more objective analysis in the future.

By section II of resolution 38/227 B, of 20 December 1983, on co-ordination within the United Nations system, the General Assembly endorsed the CPC request.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council on 28 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1983/59.

Co-ordination of programmes within the United Nations system in the field of natural resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the terms of reference of the Committee on Natural Resources, as set forth in Council resolution 1535(XLIX) of 27 July 1970,

Bearing in mind the debates held in the Committee on the co-ordination of programmes within the United Nations system in the field of natural resources,

Reaffirming that one of the principal responsibilities of the Committee is to provide the Council with guidance in the programming and implementation of these programmes,

Recognizing that that guidance relates in part to the avoidance of duplication of effort by ensuring that the programmes of the many organizational units of the United Nations are co-ordinated,

Further recognizing the advantages of co-ordinating the efforts of the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system which also carry out work in the natural resources field,

Affirming that the Committee was again unable to discharge this responsibility on the basis of the report submitted by the Secretary-General for consideration at its eighth session,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its future sessions reports that contain an analysis of the level of co-operation and co-ordination among various organs of the United Nations system in the field of natural resources, in order to enable the Committee to identify existing problems, to assess the extent, if any, to which there is duplication of effort, and to formulate appropriate recommendations in this area;

2. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General by providing him with the information needed for the elaboration of the reports referred to in paragraph 1 above;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to take full account of the points made in the discussion of this question by the Committee at its eighth session and, in particular, to consider how best to avoid duplication of responsibility and effort within the Secretariat.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/59

28 July 1993 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/122) without vote, 19 July (meeting 171); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1983/19 & Corr.1); agenda item 9. Meeting number. ESC 40.

Standardization of terminology

Pursuant to a 1979 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in May 1983 a report on the work of the group of experts on the standardization of definitions and terminology for statistics on mineral production and consumption.⁽¹⁸⁾ Meeting in New York from 11 to 19 January 1983, the group stressed that its recommendations on definitions and terminology were not intended to be comprehensive, but should be viewed as an attempt to establish minimum standards for the uniform reporting, compilation and publication of mineral statistics. The definitions and terminology were oriented towards the generation of statistics on mineral production and consumption at the national level. Mineral statistics faced special problems arising out of the large number of mineral forms, the variety of processes for recovery and treatment and the range of uses to which mineral products were put.

The group recommended that mine production should be measured at the stage of first marketable form of a mineral material following its mining. Statistical measurement of metal production should be focused on the production of the final unwrought (unworked) form of a metal, which was frequently the locus of a metal's price formation. Measurement of consumption of a mineral commodity should relate to its use as an industrial raw material or in industrial processes, the group said. Reporting of "apparent" consumption was preferred at the international level since "reported" consumption data were not readily available from many countries. Furthermore, the group recommended that consumption statistics should refer to the final unwrought form as well as the first marketable form where appropriate.

Confusion would be minimized if countries used a common basis of measurement; therefore, the group recommended that all measurements should be in accordance with the metric system.

Endorsing the group's recommendations, the Secretary-General suggested that the Committee on Natural Resources might want to provide guidance to the Secretariat on how to give those recommendations the widest application, and might wish to request the Economic and Social Council to refer the matter to the Statistical Commission for consideration at its 1985 session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/53 without vote.

Standardization of definitions and terminology for mineral resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the continuing need for internationally consistent and easily understood statistics on mineral production and consumption,

Taking into account the discussions in the Committee on Natural Resources at its eighth session on the report of the Secretary-General on the standardization of definitions and terminology for mineral resources, which summarized the results of the meeting of the group of experts appointed by the Secretary-General in pursuance of Council resolution 1979/72 of 3 August 1979.

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the standardization of definitions and terminology for mineral resources;

2. Notes that the Council, in resolution 1979/72, requested that the group of experts should report to the Committee on Natural Resources, and expresses its concern that the report, which was unanimously adopted by the group, had been amended by the Secretary-General before it was issued;

3. Requests, therefore, that the action to be taken in response to the requests contained in the paragraphs below be based on the report in its original form;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account the recommendations in the report relating to the activities of the United Nations in the reporting, compilation and publication of statistics on mineral production and consumption;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to consider which additional activities would be required to implement those recommendations, including those concerning definitions and terminology for individual minerals and metals, and statistics on the secondary recovery of metals;

6. Urges Governments to take into account the recommendations of the group of experts and to give the report the widest possible distribution;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to report the progress made in pursuance of the requests contained in paragraphs 4 and 5 above to the Statistical Commission at its twenty-third session.

Water and marine resources

Water and marine resources were considered by a number of United Nations bodies during 1983. Particular attention was paid to progress and prospects in implementing the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan for the development of water resources and the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) in the context of the 1984 review of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) (see Chapter I of this section).

The Economic and Social Council in resolution 1983/57 urged developing countries to assign priority to the development of their water resources and called on bilateral and multilateral donors and financing institutions to assist in that regard. In resolution 1983/48 on marine affairs, the Council endorsed a proposed major programme in marine affairs for 1984-1989, which was subsequently adopted by the General Assembly.

Water resources development

In April 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources a report⁽¹⁾ on progress in implementing the Mar del Plata Action Plan, adopted by the United Nations Water Conference in 1977,⁽²⁾ and the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1980⁽³⁾ The report was intended as a contribution to the 1984 review of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and was prepared in pursuance of a 1981 Economic and Social Council resolution.⁽⁴⁾

The report said that progress in the development of water resources in developing countries had been below the level required to achieve the goals of the International Development Strategy. Regarding agricultural water use, development was not commensurate with the production needed to eliminate hunger; concerning industrial water use, considerable effort was needed in the treatment of waste water, together with mechanisms for the more efficient use of water.

Hydrological and meteorological data were essential for the development of water resources. In addition, attention needed to be given to soil surveys, topographical surveys, mapping and the application of remote-sensing techniques. Efforts to reduce the damage caused by natural disasters needed to be intensified. A basic water policy had to be formulated and the related legal and institutional frameworks established in most countries. The shortage of qualified manpower continued to be critical, and training facilities lacked long-term focus. Above all, there was the ever-growing constraint of lack of adequate financial resources, not only for investment but for feasibility studies; resources ranging from 5 to 10 times the current annual commitments of Governments were needed.

The report pointed out that in future reviews of the water sector, it was necessary for Governments to undertake national assessments, within the framework of their socio-economic plans. Since water was a multisectoral area, a national co-ordinating organization was required to assess the different sectors.

The Committee on Natural Resources was informed at its June 1983 session⁽⁵⁾ that a colloquium on technical co-operation among developing countries for ground-water resources development had been held at Zagreb, Yugoslavia, in May 1982. Participants had agreed that in the development of ground water, there was a need for the establishment of a data base, including a roster of expertise on the subject, and for the dissemination of information. It was also agreed that the Centre for Waters at Zagreb should serve as the international centre to carry out the information function.

UNDP action. At its June 1983 session, the Governing Council of UNDP considered a note by the Administrator on the use of Special Programme Resources for promotional activities for technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) and for support for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade,⁽⁶⁾ as well as decisions on using those resources⁽⁷⁾ and on developing the UNDP Information Referral System for TCDC,⁽⁸⁾ adopted by the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC on 6 June 1983. On 18 June,⁽⁹⁾ the Governing Council allocated from Special Programme Resources $610,000 for information and communications support for the Decade from 1 July 1983 to 31 December 1985 and $600,000 for promotional activities for TCDC during 1984-1985. Also for the same period, the Council appropriated $600,000 for the Information Referral System, and requested the Administrator to report in 1984 on the System's progress.

UNEP activities. In keeping with a 24 May 1983 decision⁽¹⁰⁾ of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) (see Chapter XVI of this section), requesting the Executive Director to sharpen the focus of the UNEP water programme, he established an Advisory Group on Water Resources, consisting of four specialists.⁽¹¹⁾ The Group was to advise UNEP on the development of a strategy for its water programme and the implementation of Governing Council decisions concerning water. At its first meeting at Geneva in mid-1983, it made recommendations with regard to the implementation of the water programme during 1984-1985; special emphasis was placed on water pollution control, waste-water management (including recycling of water), rational water management (including river basin management), support for the implementation of the programme for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade and development of inland fisheries and aquaculture.

UNEP was represented at the fourth session of the ACC Inter-Secretariat Group for Water Resources (Rome, Italy, 5-9 December 1983).⁽¹²⁾ The Group discussed United Nations activities concerning water resources development and considered progress in implementing the Mar del Plata Action Plan and the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, as well as education and training measures. It agreed that an assessment of the co-ordination of field projects would be desirable and must be related to the effects of the decline in project financial resources.

As a member of the Steering Committee for Co-operative Action of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, UNEP also participated in the eleventh meeting of the Committee at Rome at the end of 1983. It was recognized that co-operative action at the country level was not progressing as well as expected, and agencies were urged to try to remedy the situation.

During 1983, UNEP continued its support to the International Training Centre for Water Resources Management. The project was evaluated with the aim of recommending guidelines on future co-operation. UNEP indicated that it planned to continue support to the Centre for specific training sessions, particularly those held in developing countries, which were given high priority by the Centre's International Scientific Council. The Council, with the participation of UNEP, held its seventh session in 1983 (Sophia Antipolis, France, 1-3 June).

The first meeting of a working group on Large-scale water projects was held on the occasion of the eighteenth General Assembly of the International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics (Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, 21-27 August). The group, composed of 10 experts from all regions, together with representatives of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and UNEP, analysed the environmental and social impacts of large-scale water transfers, based on case studies in Africa, Asia, Europe and North America. The working group's recommendations were to be published in 1984.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council on 28 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1983/57.

Water resources development: progress and prospects in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan and the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling paragraph 4 of section VI of its resolution 1981/80 of 24 July 1981, and other relevant resolutions of the Council and the General Assembly concerning the adoption, implementation and monitoring of the Mar del Plata Action Plan and the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade,

Recognizing that water resources development is an interdisciplinary and multisectoral process which cuts across many sectors of economic and social development, such as food production, environment and health, energy, human settlements, desertification, industrialization, transport, economic and technical co-operation among developing countries and disaster relief,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress achieved and prospects in the implementation by Governments of the Mar del Plata Action Plan and the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, in the context of the review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, prepared in consultation with the Inter-Secretariat Group for Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, in pursuance of paragraph 4 of section VI of Council resolution 1981/80;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the implementation, within the context of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, of the Mar del Plata Action Plan and the objectives of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, and notes the progress being made in that context by Governments, with the support of multilateral and bilateral co-operation;

3. Expresses its concern that, notwithstanding this progress, the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan has so far been well below the level required to meet the needs of developing countries, in large part owing to the gap between the need for financial resources and their availability;

4. Urges Governments of developing countries to assign high priority in their national development planning to the development of their water resources and to take active steps to formulate proposals for financial and technical assistance;

5. Urges bilateral and multilateral donors and financing institutions to respond positively to requests from developing countries and to increase, under favourable terms and conditions, the flow of financial assistance to developing countries for the promotion of the development of water resources;

6. Stresses the needs of the least developed countries in this context;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the organizations concerned, to compile information on the activities of bilateral aid programmes and international organizations and on present capacities and the terms and conditions under which they provide finances for water resources development, with a view to examining possible measures to increase the flow of resources and to improve the terms and conditions, and to disseminating relevant information to countries and international organizations, and to report thereon to the Committee on Natural Resources at its tenth session;

8. Reaffirms the benefits of establishing national mechanisms to co-ordinate all water policies and programmes;

9. Calls upon the regional commissions, in co-operation with the organizations of the United Nations system concerned, to examine measures to promote the accelerated development of water resources in their respective regions;

10. Recommends to the General Assembly that the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade should, at its session in 1984, give due consideration to the role played by water resources development in the various elements of the Strategy;

11. Recommends that Governments should re-evaluate the current status of their respective resources in surface and ground water, with a view to formulating specific programmes for reaching the targets recommended in the Mar del Plata Action Plan and, on the basis of national evaluation of problems, needs and constraints, indicate requirements in respect of technical assistance and advisory services, equipment, expertise and fellowships;

12. Urges Governments of developing countries to adopt national targets for drinking water supply and sanitation services, at the highest possible rate commensurate with resource availability, absorptive capacity and ability, and to formulate action plans and programmes for reaching the targets set, taking also into consideration resolution WHA36.13 of 13 May 1983 of the World Health Assembly;

13. Recommends that Governments of developing countries should:

(a) Estimate present and future needs for trained manpower for the development and management of water in agriculture, and take concrete steps to formulate plans and programmes to expand training capabilities;

(b) Evolve plans and programmes for improving the efficiency of agricultural water management, including appropriate measures to motivate farmers for this purpose;

(c) Promote the development of medium-scale and small-scale village irrigation schemes, so as to form the pool of experience and expertise necessary for the planning and implementation of large schemes;

14. Recommends that Governments should intensify efforts to implement the recommendations on industrial water use made at Mar del Plata and, in particular:

(u) Initiate studies on the present and potential use of water by specific industries;

(b) Integrate industrial water use in overall policies and projects for the development of water resources;

(c) Conduct research on the use, treatment and recycling of water;

(d) Evolve appropriate economic and regulatory mechanisms for more efficient water use in industry and waste-water treatment;

15. Urges Governments to consider action to integrate plans for the development of hydropower in overall plans for the development of water resources and electric power systems, and provide for improved co-ordination at the national level between the water-related and energy-related institutional frameworks;

16. Culls upon Governments to formulate programmes and projects for the improvement of transport on rivers and lakes, and to promote inter-country co-operation in this field;

17. Recommends that, with regard to the mitigation of effects from floods and droughts, countries should give high priority to early-warning and forecasting systems, as well as to structural and other measures, and integrate projects for the management of flood and drought losses in overall plans for the development of water resources;

18. Urges Governments to take the steps necessary to intensify efforts to develop and utilize appropriate techniques for the assessment and monitoring of the environmental impact of water projects, and to ensure that environmental and human health considerations will be systematically incorporated in the planning, implementation and operation of water schemes;

19. Recommends that Governments should direct their efforts towards developing appropriate hydraulic techniques and systems for the rational utilization and conservation of water resources in rural areas, for example, by means of small-scale dams and ponds, particularly in arid and semi-arid areas;

20. Calls upon Governments to co-operate fully in promoting education, training and research in the field of water resources, and to give priority to the teaching of science and technology at secondary and university levels: in particular subjects related to this field;

21. Culls upon the United Nations Development Programme and other organizations of the United Nations system concerned to intensify their catalytic roles in the promotion of technical co-operation among developing countries in the field of water resources;

22. Urges Governments of developing countries to take appropriate steps to co-operate among themselves and with the United Nations system in compiling, in a systematic manner, information on technical co-operation among developing countries and arranging for its dissemination at periodic intervals, in order to provide further stimulus to the promotion of technical co-operation in water development;

23. Welcomes the conclusions of the colloquium held at the Centre for Waters at Zagreb on support for the establishment within that Centre of a small international technical unit dealing with technical co-operation among developing countries in the water resources sector, and requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme and other competent agencies, to study the matter further, especially with regard to a review of possible financial sources for non-local cost components; and to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1984.

Marine resources

As it had decided in 1981,⁽¹³⁾ CPC considered in May 1983 a cross-organizational programme analysis of United Nations activities in marine affairs.⁽¹⁴⁾ The analysis showed that 28 United Nations bodies with a multiplicity of mandates and working relationships were active in marine affairs. It suggested that while in specialized fields the relationships among programmes were harmoniously determined, there might be an advantage in keeping the whole range of marine-related activities under review.

CPC also had before it an April report⁽¹⁵⁾ by the Secretary-General containing the replies of six countries to his June 1982 request that all Member States indicate their priorities for action by the United Nations system. The replies were summarized in a working list of activities. Most areas of activity had been given priority by at least one Government. Several areas had been given priority by most of the six, including prevention, reduction and control of pollution; development and transfer of marine technology; environmental monitoring; marine science; marine meteorology and services; and national legislative and administrative development. In addition, one country replied that it was particularly interested in those United Nations activities which had a bearing on the situation of land-locked countries and which encouraged their maritime interests.

A number of recommendations were made by CPC:⁽¹⁶⁾ ACC should review periodically the work of the United Nations system in marine affairs through existing co-ordination mechanisms, with a view to ensuring that the consistent approach demonstrated in the cross-organizational programme analysis continued; the International Maritime Organization and UNCTAD should increase their level of co-operation in the field of maritime transport and should report to CPC in 1984 on their joint efforts; United Nations organizations should co-operate closely in the follow-up to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,⁽¹⁷⁾ using existing ACC mechanisms, with particular emphasis on joint approaches for assisting developing countries in marine science, technology and ocean service infrastructures; and, as intergovernmental bodies considered new legislative mandates on marine affairs, the servicing secretariat should advise Member States about possible conflict with the mandates of other organizations.

In section I of resolution 38/227 B, dealing with co-ordination, adopted on 20 December 1983, the General Assembly endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of CPC.

The Secretary-General also presented to CPC his proposed reformulations of the new major programme in marine affairs⁽¹⁸⁾ for inclusion in the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989, adopted by the Assembly in 1982.⁽¹⁹⁾ Components included a programme on law of the sea affairs (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter III), a programme on economic and technical aspects of marine affairs, and regional programmes of marine affairs in Africa and Latin America. The reformulations were revised and recommended for adoption by CPC,⁽¹⁶⁾ endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1983/48 (see below), and adopted by the Assembly in resolution 38/227 A (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter II).

Responding to a 1980 request by the Council,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to it in June 1983 a note briefly describing developments in marine resource planning and management, non-living marine resources and ocean science in relation to them, and marine technology.⁽²¹⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, acting on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/48 by vote.

Marine affairs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its long-standing interest in marine affairs and its numerous resolutions on various aspects of the subject dating from 1966,

Recalling also its resolution 1980/68 of 25 July 1980, in response to which the Secretary-General has submitted to the Council a note entitled "Marine affairs: economic and technical developments",

Taking note of the adoption by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea at its eleventh session of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and the related resolutions, as well as the resolution entitled "Development of national marine science, technology and ocean service infrastructures", and of General Assembly resolution 37/66 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly, inter alia, welcomed the adoption of the Convention and the related resolutions and approved the assumption by the Secretary-General of the responsibilities entrusted to him under the Convention and the related resolutions,

Taking note also of the recommendations, decisions and observations made by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-third session concerning the cross-organizational programme analysis of activities in marine affairs and the new major programme in marine affairs, particularly the Committee's recommendation that the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly should adopt the new programme, as revised, for inclusion as chapter 25 in the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989,

Bearing in mind that the present activities of the Secretary-General relating to marine affairs already contribute to a large extent to the fulfilment of his responsibilities and the exercise of his functions resulting from the adoption of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and the related resolutions,

Believing firmly that the growing needs of Member States, particularly developing countries, for information, advice and assistance regarding legal, economic and technical aspects of marine affairs warrant an appropriate and commensurate effort on the part of the United Nations and the organizations of the United Nations system to respond to those needs,

1. Invites the organizations of the United Nations system, each within its sphere of competence, and with due regard for the efficient co-ordination of activities on a system-wide basis, to continue to make their respective programmes of activities fully responsive to the growing needs of Member States in the field of marine affairs, particularly in the light of the adoption of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and the related resolutions;

2. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination regarding the new major programme in marine affairs, as revised;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue, within existing budgetary resources, and taking into account the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its resumed twenty-third session with regard to the relevant sections of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1984-1985, the programme of activities, including the collection, analysis and dissemination of information and data, dealing with:

(a) Planning and management, with a view to the national development and utilization of the resources of coastal areas and exclusive economic zones;

(b) Economic and technical issues related to the development of marine mineral resources in connection with the role of non-renewable resources and their impact on the economies of developing countries, as well as on the world economy;

(c) Issues relating to the acquisition and introduction of marine technologies for the development of the resources of the sea, bearing in mind the need to avoid duplication of work in other competent organizations of the United Nations system in their respective areas of competence;

4. Recommends to the General Assembly, when it considers the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Assembly resolution 37/66, that it should give due consideration to the continuation of activities concerned with information, assistance and advice in matters relating to the new legal regime of the oceans;

Invites the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the competent organizations of the United Nations system, to submit to the Council, at its second regular session of 1985, a comprehensive report on economic and technical trends and developments in marine affairs.

28 July 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/48 Meeting 40 34-0-7

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/120) by vote (31-0-5), 20 July (meeting 14): 2-nation draft (E/1983/C.3/L.5/Rev.1); agenda item 19.

Sponsors: Colombia, Mexico.

Meeting number. ESC 40.

The revised draft resolution approved by the Third Committee was initially introduced by a Committee Vice-Chairman, on the basis of informal consultations on a draft by Colombia and Mexico.⁽²²⁾ In view of the lack of consensus in the Committee, however, the Vice-Chairman withdrew it and Colombia and Mexico then assumed its sponsorship.

Cartography

Standardization of geographical names

The Secretary-General, in a 1983 report⁽¹⁾ to the Economic and Social Council, summarized the recommendations of the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, held in 1982.⁽²⁾ The recommendations dealt with the future work programme of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names; the standardization of geographical names; writing systems; toponymic guidelines for map and other editors; co-ordination of the preparation of a list of country names; the use of exo-nyms; and education in cartographic toponymy. The Fourth Conference had also recommended that the Fifth Conference be held in Canada, at that country's invitation, not later than the second half of 1987. The Secretary-General suggested that the Council might wish to request him to implement the recommendations. In an addendum to the report,⁽³⁾ servicing costs for the Fifth Conference were estimated at $359,300.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, the Economic and Social Council acted on a recommendation of its First Committee and adopted without vote decision 1983/120.

Standardization of geographical names

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 26 May 1983, the Council decided:

(a) To take note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names and to endorse the recommendation to convene the Fifth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names not later than the second half of 1987;

(b) To accept with appreciation the invitation of the Government of Canada to act as host to the Fifth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, bearing in mind the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 31/140 of 17 December 1976;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to take practical measures within existing resources for the implementation of the recommendations addressed to him by the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, including the recommendation to investigate the possibility of the provision of funds for the financing of the meetings of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names.

Tenth UN Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

The Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific was held at Bangkok, Thailand, from 17 to 28 January 1983.⁽⁴⁾ The Conference was attended by 185 representatives and observers from 38 countries and territories and six intergovernmental and international scientific organizations. The Secretary-General submitted his report on the Conference⁽⁵⁾ to the Economic and Social Council in March.

The Conference considered the latest techniques and recent developments related to conventional and satellite geodesy; aerial photography, photogrammetry and orthophoto mapping; remote sensing from space for cartography; automated cartography, computer mapping and digital terrain models; topographic and large-scale mapping; small-scale and thematic mapping, national and regional atlases, the International Map of the World on the Millionth Scale (IMW) and other international map series; cadastral surveying and urban mapping; aeronautical charting; hydrographic surveying and nautical charting; reproduction and printing of maps; and distribution and sale of maps and charts.

In addition, it took up matters dealing with the standardization of geographical names; technical assistance and transfer of technology; education and training; and the feasibility of holding United Nations interregional cartographic conferences.

The Conference adopted 20 resolutions recognizing, in particular, the fundamental importance of surveying, mapping and charting infrastructures, the need for increasing assistance to developing countries in this field, an urgent need for new hydrographic surveys and updated charts of coastal waters of developing countries, the further potential benefits of remote sensing data application for cartography, the necessity of improving the utility of small-scale thematic maps, and the need for an adequate system of land registration and land information as a basis for development. The use of satellites for geodesy and of electronic data processing for cartography were recommended. Member countries were urged to co-ordinate activities among the cartographic services of the region and to co-operate with the United Nations on IMW.

The Tenth Conference had also recommended that the Eleventh Conference be convened in the first half of 1987. The Secretary-General suggested that the Council might wish to request him to implement the other recommendations. In an addendum to the report,⁽⁶⁾ servicing costs for the Eleventh Conference were estimated at $598,500.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Decision 1983/121 on the Conference was adopted by the Economic and Social Council in May, following the recommendation of its First Committee.

Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 26 May 1983, the Council decided:

(a) To take note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Tenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific and to endorse the recommendation that the Eleventh United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific should be convened in the first half of 1987;

(b) To request the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the specialized agencies concerned to take measures within existing resources to implement the recommendations addressed to them by the Tenth

United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific.

Chapter X

Energy resources

Throughout 1983, the main thrust of United Nations energy-related activities was aimed at searching for alternatives, nuclear as well as non-nuclear, to reduce world-wide dependence on depletable supplies of petroleum and gas, with particular emphasis on the development of the indigenous energy resources of developing countries. The efforts of various United Nations entities in this sphere, co-ordinated by the inter-agency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), were geared towards implementing the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, endorsed by the General Assembly in 1981. Recommendations on specific ways of reaching this goal were worked out at the first session of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy in April 1983 and endorsed in December by the Assembly in resolution 38/169. Geothermal energy was regarded as a particularly promising source, with the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration carrying out extensive work on its research and development.

With regard to the development of energy resources of the developing countries, an effort to assess the prospects of conventional commercial energy sources in energy-deficient countries was undertaken in an analysis by the Secretary-General, while a study of the technological aspects of energy resources development was made by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). Upon reviewing their reports in December, the Assembly requested, by resolution 38/151, a comprehensive report on this issue and urged greater international support for the accelerated exploration and development of the energy resources of developing countries. Meanwhile, additional funds in support of energy programmes in developing countries were mobilized by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), with total expenditures of $3.1 million under its Energy Account in 1983, representing a substantial increase over the previous year. In view of industry's role as the major single market for energy, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) pursued an intensive technical co-operation and research and development programme, with particular emphasis on such sources as hydropower and biomass energy, and the questions of industrial energy management and provision of capital goods for the energy sector. Issues related to technology transfer figured prominently in the activities of UNCTAD.

Concerning nuclear energy, the General Assembly considered in November the annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), the chief United Nations body carrying out technical work related to nuclear power, and urged, in resolution 38/8, all States to co-operate in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of nuclear science and technology for peaceful purposes. In 1983, preparations continued for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy. The Assembly endorsed, in December by resolution 38/60, the conclusions of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference and decided to hold it in 1986, with the venue and actual dates to be determined at the 1984 Assembly session.

General aspects

In a report submitted in June 1983 to the Committee on Natural Resources,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General gave an overview of trends and salient issues in energy resources development, with special emphasis on the problems and policy responses in the medium term, up to 1990. Assessing the current energy balance, the report cited findings contained in the World Economic Survey 1983, published by the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA),⁽²⁾ which showed how the reduced total energy demand affected prices and led to cut-backs in production levels.

While attempting to project the evolution of the energy sector over the remainder of the decade, the report noted the effects of past events and policies, such as the drive for energy conservation and oil substitution, the upsurge in the development of crude oil, the interest in alternative energy sources and the hardening of public attitudes towards nuclear power. Another factor to have a strong impact on the energy supply-demand variables in 1990 was the manner in which some key uncertainties, such as the prospects for economic growth, energy conservation in developing countries, oil production policies and the role of nuclear power, would be resolved. Taking these factors into consideration, the report projected development of energy supply and demand in two different scenarios, characterized respectively by high and low expansion rates in the energy sector.

The report also dealt with some international energy problems, such as financing of energy resources development in developing countries, energy planning and technology transfer. It stressed the important role of UNCTAD and the World Intellectual Property Organization in coordinating efforts related to the transfer of technology and technical knowledge. In this context, it reiterated the recommendations of the October/November 1982 Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Transfer, Application and Development of Technology in the Energy Sector.⁽³⁾ The report also called for increased national and international efforts in such areas as energy conservation and assessment of energy sector investments.

Energy resources development

Report of the Secretary-General. Development of the energy resources of the developing countries was the subject of an analysis presented by the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council in June 1983,⁽⁴⁾ as requested by the General Assembly in December 1982.⁽⁵⁾ In view of the limited time available for preparation of a full report, the submitted document was described as a preliminary analysis, with the main emphasis on the energy-deficient countries and conventional commercial energy sources, especially hydrocarbons in oil and natural gas, which accounted for a major share of total commercial energy use in the developing world.

The report gave an overview of the energy situation in the developing countries, summarizing available information on conventional hydrocarbon and other resources potential and providing commercial energy demand projections. This demand was expected to grow at an average of 5 per cent per annum in the period 1982-2000, alongside of a widening gap between indigenous supply and requirements in the energy-deficient developing countries. On the other hand, the report noted that the vast conventional and unconventional energy resources potential in the developing countries, if adequately exploited, could ensure them a significant degree of self-sufficiency by the turn of the century. There were several important factors, however, that hampered the development of energy resources, particularly in the energy-deficient countries, such as the limited knowledge of the resource base, and the lack of necessary technology, skilled manpower and adequate national energy planning. In addition, there was a persistent tendency of directing only a small fraction of exploration efforts towards the developing countries, to the detriment of the productivity of the world's energy economy.

The analysis also dealt with a broad scope of issues related to energy investment requirements and energy development financing. It was estimated that in order to ensure a modest acceleration of energy exploration and development in the energy-deficient developing countries over the period 1982-2000, a fourfold increase over existing levels would be required. Comparing investment needs and current availability of external financing for those countries, the report projected an energy financing gap for 1990 of $20 billion to $25 billion, for the exploration and production side alone.

With regard to possible ways of accelerating the development of energy resources, the report stressed the need for additional funding, particularly, for exploratory drilling, and argued for creation of an energy affiliate within the World Bank, an idea already put forward by the Assembly in December 1982.⁽⁵⁾ Reviewing several other proposals and mechanisms, the report emphasized that all should have certain common traits, such as a critical minimum size, flexibility to adjust to particular conditions and inclusion of a significant grant element. Most importantly, they should provide concessional financing for the risky, exploratory phases. The report called for concerted action on the part of the international community, urging new initiatives from multilateral, regional and bilateral institutions concerned with financial and technical aspects, as well as from transnational corporations. It was suggested that a more comprehensive report could be submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1984.

Aspects of energy resources development were also dealt with in the Secretary-General's report on trends and salient issues in energy (see above).

UNCTAD activities. A meeting of the Expert Group on Energy Co-operation among Economic Co-operation and Integration Organizations was held at Quito, Ecuador, from 26 to 30 September 1983, organized jointly by UNCTAD, the Latin American Energy Organization (OLADE) and the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC), with support from the Government of Ecuador.⁽⁶⁾ Taking part were experts from 19 subregional and regional co-operation and integration organizations, as well as energy research institutions representing the different regions of the developing world. In preparation for the meeting, UNCTAD had compiled two documents, on energy co-operation within and between economic co-operation groupings in trade-related areas and on major issues in the strengthening of the technological capacity of developing countries in the energy sector, which dealt, inter alia, with current and future UNCTAD work on energy technology.

Emphasizing the need for an expanded exchange of experiences among subregional and regional groupings and international organizations, the Expert Group adopted a number of conclusions and recommendations related to the development of energy sources and requested OLADE, OAPEC and UNCTAD to work towards their speedy implementation.

UNDP action. During 1983, UNDP made increased efforts to mobilize additional funds from donor countries in support of energy programmes in developing countries, particularly for the joint UNDP/World Bank Energy Sector Assessment Programme and the Energy Sector Management Assistance Programme (ESMAP). Voluntary contributions to the UNDP Energy Account 'in 1983 totalled $841,335 ($441,250 from Australia, $366,972 from Finland and $33,113 from New Zealand),⁽⁸⁾ augmented by another $4 million in cost-sharing contributions. Total expenditures under the Energy Account in 1983 amounted to $3.1 million (see table below), an increase of over $1 million as compared with the previous year.⁽⁹⁾

With regard to the Energy Sector Assessment Programme, aimed at diagnosing the most serious problems and evaluating options for their alleviation, the UNDP Administrator reported in his annual report for 1983⁽¹⁰⁾ completion of 29 assessments, with another 19 under way. Assessment recommendations helped Governments in such areas as energy pricing policies, reorientation of energy sector strategies and improvement of organizational and institutional arrangements. Providing assistance in implementing these recommendations was the goal of ESMAP, which helped developing countries by formulating and justifying high-priority pre-investment and investment projects as well as by rendering management, institutional and policy support. Initiated in April 1983, ESMAP had 26 specific activities completed or in progress in 13 countries by the end of that year. Nearly all projects generated by its reports were under consideration by donor agencies for possible financing.

While the UNDP Energy Account gave priority to financing those Programmes, several other projects were completed in 1983. Among them, a set of training modules for energy management at enterprises was produced and tested in co-operation with the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training of the International Labour Organisation (Turin, Italy). In February, a training seminar in energy and power was instituted by the World Bank's Economic Development Institute at Istanbul, Turkey. Two World Bank-executed projects were approved, one global for monitoring biomass gasifiers, the other one regional, to assist Caribbean countries in negotiations on petroleum exploration, contracting, legislation and promotion.

By a decision of 24 June,⁽¹¹⁾ the UNDP Governing Council expressed satisfaction at the increased support provided by UNDP to developing countries in the development of indigenous energy resources and improvement of the utilization of energy. It recommended that United Nations expertise be taken fully into account in energy assessment studies, and requested the Administrator to report in 1985 on the results of actions taken in respect of energy programmes. In other provisions, the Council dealt with new and renewable energy sources and implementation of the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action (see below, under NON-CONVENTIONAL ENERGY SOURCES).

UNU activities. Following an agreement concluded with the International Development Research Centre in June 1983 to pursue energy research jointly, the United Nations University (UNU) established a 10-member Energy Research Group of energy analysts and policy-makers from developing countries, to survey the capacity of those countries for energy research and development. At its first meeting in Canada in August, the Group commissioned 120 papers to be submitted to it within a year, to review the field of energy research and technology.

Other UNU activities included training in energy systems and policy. By December 1983, 14 fellows and 1 special fellow completed such training, and 10 other fellows were in training.⁽¹³⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Following consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on the development of the energy resources of the developing countries (see above), the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1983/60 without vote on 28 July.

Development of the energy resources of the developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/251 of 21 December 1982, as adopted, on the development of the energy resources of the developing countries,

Reaffirming the importance of continued study and discussion of this question by the international community,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General on the development of the energy resources of the developing countries,

Regretting the delay in the submission of the report on this question to the Economic and Social Council,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the completed report, in accordance with the mandate given by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/251, to the Assembly at its thirty-eighth session, to enable it to consider this question in depth and to take action as appropriate;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to take into account, in completing the report, the preliminary views expressed by Governments at the second regular session of 1983 of the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/60

28 July 1983 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/121) without vote 26 July (meeting 24): draft by Bangladesh, for Group of 77 (E/1983/C.1/L.22), orally revised, and orally amended in informal consultations; agenda item 10.

Meeting number. ESC 40.

In another resolution of the same date (1983/57), the Council urged Governments to integrate plans for the development of hydropower in overall plans for the development of water resources and electric power systems, and to improve national co-ordination between the water-related and energy-related institutional frameworks.

The Council's First Committee, considering the report of the Committee on Natural Resources on its 1983 session,⁽¹⁴⁾ ruled on 26 July that no decision be taken on a draft resolution on energy development approved by that Committee on 17 June. The First Committee action, proposed by Bangladesh on behalf of the Group of 77, was taken by 24 votes to 11, with 4 abstentions.

By that draft, the Council would have requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee's 1985 session a report on the world energy situation, prospects and salient issues, including an analysis of progress and of obstacles in implementing policy measures in the energy field, and to improve co-ordination within the United Nations system to promote the most effective and timely development and utilization of energy resources and technologies, in both developing and developed countries.

Consequently, the Council, in decision 1989/176 of 28 July, amended item 4 of the provisional agenda for the 1985 session of the Committee on Natural Resources to read "Energy resources: trends and salient issues", deleting reference to the report on prospects and salient issues in the world energy situation (see Chapter IX of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with the request of the Council, the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly supplementary information mainly on new and renewable energy sources, annexed to a note of 26 October 1983 (see below, under NON-CONVENTIONAL ENERGY SOURCES).

On 19 December! on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/151.

Development of the energy resources
of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, and resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, which, inter alia, called for the promotion of the exploration, development, expansion and processing of all energy resources of the developing countries at a rate commensurate with their development objectives and for the provision of adequate financial and technical resources for this purpose,

Recalling its resolution 37/251 of 21 December 1982,

Recalling also the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy,

Recalling further section II.A of resolution 112(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development concerning the strengthening of the technological capacity of the developing countries in the development of their energy resources, including that relating to transition from conventional sources to a more diversified pattern of energy consumption,

Considering that the principal impediments to the realization of the indigenous energy potential of the developing countries are, in addition to inadequate exploration, the scarcity of financial resources, insufficient exploration data, inadequate access to technology and a shortage of skills,

Reaffirming that effective and urgent measures should be taken by the international community to assist and support the efforts of the developing countries for developing the domestic energy resources of those countries, in particular the energy deficient among them, in order to meet their needs through co-operation, assistance and investment in the field of conventional and of new and renewable sources of energy, consistent with their national plans and priorities, as called for in the International Development Strategy.

Aware that special measures are required in this regard for the least developed countries,

Aware that multilateral financial and technical assistance for the exploration, development, expansion and processing of the energy resources of the developing countries continues to be necessary in order to realize their indigenous energy potential and meet their development objectives,

Recognising the need for an accelerated effort devoted to the exploration and development of the indigenous energy resources of developing countries.

Reaffirming that the developing countries continue to bear the main responsibility for the development of their indigenous energy potential, which would require vigorous measures for a fuller mobilization of their domestic financial and other resources, while external resources, public and private, particularly concessional flows and official development assistance, can constitute an element of support for the developing countries' own efforts,

Emphasizing the importance of intensifying the capabilities of the United Nations in the collection, analysis and dissemination of information relating to all phases of the development of energy resources in the developing countries,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the development of the energy resources of the developing countries,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the strengthening of the technological capacity of the developing countries in the development of their energy resources.

1. Requests the Secretary-General to complete his comprehensive report on the development of the energy resources of the developing countries, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/251 and the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1983/60 of 28 July 1983, and to report to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to explore in his report, in consultation with appropriate international financial institutions, ways and means of mobilizing adequate and additional resources for the development of the energy resources of developing countries and, at the same time, encourages interested Governments, in co-operation with appropriate United Nations bodies, to hold, at an early date, symposia and other similar undertakings in order to explore ways and means of supporting the efforts of developing countries in the exploration and development of their energy resources;

3. Urges the international community to mobilize adequate and additional technological resources as well as adequate financial support for the accelerated exploration and development of the energy resources of developing countries;

4. Urges, in this connection, accelerated consideration of other possible avenues that would increase energy financing, including, inter alia, the mechanisms being examined by the World Bank, such as an energy affiliate, and calls upon Member States to make appropriate efforts to this end in the relevant forums;

5. Urges Member States and international bodies and institutions to undertake actions oriented towards the effective implementation of General Assembly resolution 37/251 and stresses that international co-operation in this regard should be focused on developing the indigenous capabilities of developing countries in this field, using domestic resources to the maximum extent possible;

6. Culls for greater participation by the international and regional financial institutions in the financing of energy projects in developing countries, in particular those located in the least developed countries, so as to bring about an increase in the flow of resources;

7. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue, in consultation with other relevant United Nations bodies and in the context of avoiding duplication, to analyse further the issues contained in his report on the strengthening of the technological capacity of the developing countries in the development of their energy resources;

8. Reaffirms the need for the United Nations system to support the efforts of the developing countries to enhance economic and technical co-operation among themselves for the development of their energy resources;

9. Invites regional bodies and institutions of economic, technical and financial co-operation to increase their support and assistance to the efforts that the developing countries are making for the development of their energy resources;

10. Reaffirms also the significance and importance of the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy and urges all Governments, organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, specialized inter-governmental agencies and institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations concerned with new and renewable sources of energy, to take effective action for the implementation of the Programme of Action.

19 December 1983 General Assembly resolution 38/151 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/701/Add.1) without vote, 9 December (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.106), based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.35); agenda item 12. Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/38/751; S-G. A/C.2/38/L.109, A/C.5/38/96. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 41, 55; 5th Committee 67; plenary 102.

In addition to drafting changes, the adopted text differed in a number of respects from that of the Group of 77, which was withdrawn. Added were the eleventh preambular paragraph, regarding the developing countries' continuing to bear the main responsibility for developing their indigenous energy potential, and the last preambular paragraph, on the UNCTAD Secretary-General's report. In paragraph 1, "comprehensive" was added, as was the phrase, in paragraph 2, encouraging interested Governments to support developing countries in exploring and developing their energy resources through symposia and similar undertakings. Paragraph 4 was reformulated-the Group's text would have had the Assembly emphasize the role which an energy affiliate for the development of energy resources of developing countries within the World Bank could play to generate additional resources, urge its early establishment, and stress the importance of other complementary frameworks to mobilize finances in order to assure urgently the needs of developing countries. Paragraph 5 was changed to have the Assembly stress that developing countries' domestic resources should be used to the maximum extent possible in developing indigenous capabilities, instead of stressing that international co-operation not concentrate on creating investment and expert opportunities for developed countries. Also added was the phrase, in paragraph 7, concerning consultation with other United Nations bodies to avoid duplication.

The Assembly adopted a number of other resolutions dealing with the question of energy resources, agreeing in resolution 38/200 that immediate measures within the United Nations system should be directed at progress in the development of the energy resources of the developing countries, and calling on the international community in resolution 38/195 to support the efforts of the least developed countries in exploring and developing energy and natural resources (for texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS). Resolution 38/169 also dealt with various aspects of energy resources development (see below, under NON-CONVENTION ENERGY SOURCES).

Technology transfer

In 1983, UNCTAD activities in the field of technology transfer were guided by the recommendations of the 1982 Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Transfer, Application and Development of Technology in the Energy Sector⁽³⁾ and had two broad orientations: the elaboration of alternative approaches to energy technology policy at the national level in developing countries, and promotion of regional and international co-operation. To examine the technology issues involved in planning the development of the energy sector at the national level, the UNCTAD secretariat was undertaking a research programme, including case studies, with the financial support of the Swedish Government. With respect to regional and international co-operation, it circulated, jointly with the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), a questionnaire on the technological capacity of developing countries in petroleum resources exploration. A September 1983 meeting of the Expert Group on Energy Co-operation among Economic Co-operation and Integration Organizations (see above, under ENERGY RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT), in which UNCTAD took part, expressed interest in studying the technology transfer aspects of petroleum contracts negotiated by the developing countries. Focusing on formulation and implementation of concrete policies, UNCTAD called for an agreement by Governments on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology, which would also facilitate energy technology transfer.

Information on UNCTAD's work related to energy technology, in particular technology transfer, was presented to the General Assembly in an August 1983 report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General,⁽¹⁵⁾ who submitted the information in response to a December 1982 request.⁽⁵⁾ Annexed to the report were the conclusions and recommendations of the 1982 Meeting of Governmental Experts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote decision 3/1439.

Report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the strengthening of the technological capacity of the developing countries in the development of their energy resources

At its 102nd plenary meeting, on 19 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the strengthening of the technological capacity of the developing countries in the development of their energy resources prepared pursuant to Assembly resolution 37/251 of 21 December 1982.

General Assembly decision 38/439

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.2) without vote. 14 December (meeting 56); draft orally proposed by Chairman; agenda item 78 (b) Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 50, 52, 56; plenary 102.

In resolution 38/151 (see above), also adopted on 19 December, the Assembly requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to continue to analyse further the issues contained in his report, in consultation with other United Nations bodies.

Energy resources in industry

Having completed in 1982 most of the work to define a comprehensive, integrated and balanced energy programme,⁽¹⁶⁾ UNIDO steered its energy-related activities in 1983 in three main directions: selecting priority areas and implementing projects in those areas; participating in United Nations system-wide developments of new and renewable sources of energy; and intensifying the co-ordination of energy activities with other organizations. Information on UNIDO energy activities in 1983 was contained in the Executive Director's annual report.⁽¹⁷⁾ These activities included 49 technical co-operation projects at various stages of implementation with a total value of $15.8 million; expenditures under these projects were about $5 million during the year. Seventy-eight energy project proposals were under consideration for financing. UNIDO also organized 18 meetings, participated in another 39 meetings and issued some 50 documents and working papers on a variety of energy-related subjects.

With respect to local energy resources for industry, UNIDO devoted particular attention in 1983 to hydropower and biomass energy. As part of its assistance in this sector, it aided Solomon Islands in establishing a micro-hydroelectric power plant. Recognizing the growing significance of small hydropower (SHP) as a source of renewable energy in developing countries, UNIDO participated in the organization of the Third Workshop on SHP, held at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, from 7 to 15 March.⁽¹⁸⁾ Attended by representatives from 19 developing countries, five United Nations bodies, the Asian Development Bank and OLADE, and some 45 observers, the Workshop made recommendations on such issues as the policy-planning methodologies of management and feasibility studies for SHP, promotion of local design and manufacturing of SHP equipment, cost reduction techniques, and advancement of SHP development in Africa through a network of experts in that field. UNIDO assisted in organizing a similar workshop at Hangzhou, China, in May/June. It also co-operated with OLADE in publishing a manual for decision makers on mini-hydropower stations. It continued its efforts to assist developing countries in manufacturing capital goods for the energy sector, through studies, expert group meetings and technical co-operation projects such as the regional Latin American project on design and manufacture of axial flow water turbines.

The question of providing the capital goods and other products necessary for energy generation, transmission and distribution was considered at a high-level expert group meeting on energy and industrialization (Oslo, Norway, 29 August-2 September).⁽¹⁹⁾ One of five expert group meetings convened preparatory to the Fourth (1984) General Conference of UNIDO, the meeting was attended by 34 experts from 27 countries and seven observers from international organizations, as well as representatives of United Nations bodies, including UNIDO. Stressing the importance for countries of establishing their own energy capital goods industry, the meeting indicated ways of reaching that goal through such stages as the development of a repair and maintenance capacity for energy equipment and establishment of joint activities with manufacturers in developed countries.

The meeting identified other issues common to the various resource/technology combinations. It called for the creation of an information network to provide developing countries with detailed data on costs, performance specifications, experience in applications and manufactures, emphasized the significance of strategic planning in establishing an integrated national planning capability on a continuous basis, and stressed that social and environmental considerations should become an integral part of energy development strategies and programmes.

Addressing the problem of industrial energy management, the meeting adopted a number of recommendations for specific actions by developing countries, among them: extensive use of energy audits to improve energy savings; strengthening of energy institutions and creation of a scientific technological milieu favourable to the development of energy professionals; and launching of promotion and information campaigns and training programmes to enhance awareness of the benefits of energy savings.

The meeting also worked out a set of specific action-oriented proposals for UNIDO and other international organizations, including extended UNIDO assistance for the manufacture of capital goods and provision of services; extension of UNIDO's project feasibility services by establishing regional centres for project analysis, training and assistance in the preparation of project proposals; and initiating a mini-hydro development programme in Africa.

The meeting recommended that developing countries, with UNIDO assistance, launch a comprehensive-national and regional-energy conservation programme, and that they consider establishing their own corporate entity for that purpose. Industrial energy conservation received a new strong emphasis within UNIDO during 1983, resulting in the formulation of a large-scale regional project for developing countries in Europe and implementation of several small-scale national projects.

Following the reaffirmation in December 1982 by the General Assembly of the importance of new and renewable resources of energy,⁽²⁰⁾ UNIDO broadened the scope of its activities in this sphere. It participated in the first session of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy in April 1983 (see below, under NON-CONVENTIONAL ENERGY SOURCES), and prepared specific proposals on upgrading charcoal and solar energy production technologies for industry, the use of industrial and urban waste for energy production, and industrial energy conservation. Nineteen of the projects approved by UNIDO and 47 of the project proposals were related to new and renewable energy sources. UNIDO also worked to improve co-ordination of activities and exchange of information among various agencies, in part making suggestions on the design of a focal point information unit set up within DIESA to deal specifically with multilateral, bilateral and other programmes on new and renewable sources of energy.

In an effort to expand further inter-agency co-operation on energy matters, UNIDO discussed the establishment of new joint committees with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and DTCD. At the intergovernmental level, UNIDO provided assistance to the Group of 77 for their Meetings on Technical Co-operation in Energy and on Energy Development, Supplies and Rationalization of Energy Consumption, held, respectively, in May and August 1983 at Vienna, Austria, and Bangkok, Thailand. Ways of advancing co-operation in energy training, energy data banks and energy modelling were examined within the framework of the "Vienna Energy Club" comprising members from the Government of Austria, IAEA, UNIDO, the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Non-conventional energy sources

Implementation of the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action

In 1983, the United Nations continued its efforts to implement the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy endorsed by the General Assembly in 1981.⁽¹⁾ Most of the activities of various United Nations bodies aimed at implementing the Programme followed recommendations made by the Assembly in December 1982.⁽²⁾

As requested by the Assembly, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽³⁾ to the April 1983 session of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy (see below) with proposals regarding guidelines on the preparation and holding of consultative meetings and ways of improving inter-agency co-ordination. With regard to mobilizing additional financial resources, the report pointed out that a number of ways had been envisaged to achieve this end, including: establishing an energy affiliate within the World Bank; establishing a new voluntary financing mechanism for new and renewable energy sources; increasing contributions through existing channels; and enhancing private investment. It noted, however, that to formulate specific proposals, more precise information on flows of financial resources and on consultations with donors and recipients was required.

The Secretary General also reported to the Assembly⁽⁴⁾ on the implementation of its 1982 resolution⁽²⁾, concerning the Nairobi Programme of Action. The report summed up the Committee's work and described the steps made to improve secretariat arrangements and co-ordination within the United Nations system. It announced the appointment of a Special Co-ordinator for New and Renewable Sources of Energy in the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, and the establishment of a Unit for New and Renewable Sources of Energy in DIESA.

United Nations regional commissions were also involved in activities related to new and renewable energy sources. Among others, the Economic Commission for Europe held an ad hoc meeting in November 1983 to review the effects of budgetary restrictions and reduced oil prices and energy demand forecasts on the prospects of those sources.⁽⁵⁾ The Economic Commission for Africa focused on technical co-operation activities and assistance to African Governments in the preparation of energy programmes and policies.⁽⁶⁾

Questions related to greater use of new and renewable energy sources in developing countries were considered in a report on the development of the energy resources of those countries, submitted to the Assembly in October as an annex to a note by the Secretary-General.⁽⁷⁾ The report was presented in response to a December 1982 Assembly request⁽⁸⁾ and supplemented a preliminary report submitted to the Economic and Social Council in June 1983 (see above, under ENERGY RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT). The Secretary-General provided information on the timing of application and investment costs of some 12 different new and renewable energy sources. Covering the near-, medium- and far-term prospects for utilization of modern energy resources, he analysed such solar energy technologies as photovoltaics, photoelectric cells and solar concentrators, and described a variety of biomass energy-producing methods like pyrolysis, anaerobic digestion of organic wastes and cultivation of plants for their energy value. He also examined the possibilities of wind energy systems, ocean thermal-energy conversion and liquid fuel production from oil shale and tar sands.

ACC activities. In accordance with a December 1982 Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ ACC established in 1983⁽⁹⁾ an ad hoc Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, to increase the United Nations responsiveness to the Nairobi Programme of Action and to improve co-ordination within the system. All interested United Nations bodies were invited to participate in the Group. ACC stressed that the Group's programme of work should be prepared in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy and decided that the Group should meet as required and report to the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities or Programme Matters).

The Group held its first session in New York on 17 and 18 February 1983,⁽¹⁰⁾ concentrating on preparations for the first session of the Committee on new and renewable sources of energy (see below). As a possible input to the Secretary-General's report to the Committee, the Group worked out guidelines for United Nations bodies on the preparation and convening of consultative meetings. It also proposed ways of mobilizing financial resources for new and renewable energy sources and of promoting inter-agency co-ordination. These issues, as well as the formulation and recommendation of action-oriented plans and programmes, were identified as the main areas for contribution by interested United Nations entities.

The Group's second session was held in New York on 19 and 28 April to consider the contributions of those entities to the first session of the Committee on new and renewable sources of energy, which was taking place at the same time, and to plan a co-ordinated follow-up to the Committee's recommendations. The resulting conclusions, which formed a part of the Group's report on its session,⁽¹¹⁾ stressed the importance of incorporating the May 1982 ACC proposals⁽¹²⁾ in the work programmes of United Nations entities and urged mobilization of additional financial resources, inter alia, through consultative meetings at the global, regional, subregional and national levels. In the context of inter-agency co-operation, discussions were held on the modalities of operation of the Unit within DIESA set up in December 1982 as a focal point for information on activities concerning new and renewable sources of energy. The Group made suggestions on formal reporting requirements, the input of the organizations of the system and ways to ensure wider dissemination of the collected information.

Activities of the Committee on new and renewable sources of energy. The Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, established by the General Assembly in December 1982⁽²⁾ to promote implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action, held its first session in New York from 18 to 29 April 1983. In its report on the session,⁽¹³⁾ the Committee stated that the Programme of Action should be viewed as an integral part of international efforts to accelerate the development of developing countries in accordance with the 1980 International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,⁽¹⁴⁾ and the declarations and resolutions related to the establishment of the new international economic order (see Chapter I of this section). Noting the gradual exhaustion of fossil fuel resources, the Committee called for strengthened commitments and efforts at all levels to implement the Programme of Action.

The Committee reiterated that the primary responsibility for promoting the development and utilization of new and renewable energy sources rested with individual countries. International co-operation, however, was indispensable and should be directed towards supporting national efforts. The developed countries bore a special responsibility for ensuring that both their bilateral and multilateral efforts contributed actively to that end.

With regard to action-oriented plans and programmes, the Committee recommended that the United Nations bodies prepare their detailed projects for immediate implementation based on proposals made in the May 1982 ACC report.⁽¹²⁾ These projects were to be accompanied by accurate cost estimates, be consistent with national plans, and give particular attention to the least developed countries and other developing countries whose needs were greatest. The Committee proposed guidelines for the preparation of these projects, emphasizing such aspects as the use of standardized methodologies for resource evaluation, adaptability of energy technologies to local conditions and availability of technical options. The Committee invited UNDP and the World Bank to submit to its next session an updated joint study on the financial requirements for development and utilization of new and renewable sources of energy in developing countries during the 1980s.

In the Committee's view, there was an urgent need for sustained mobilization of financial resources which could be met, in part, by speedy implementation of the June 1982 recommendations of the Interim Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy.⁽¹⁵⁾ All countries were urged to provide adequate financial resources to the relevant United Nations entities, while additional resources should be directed, inter alia, through such channels as the general resources, of UNDP and its Energy Account, the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (see Chapter XII of this section), and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (see Chapter IX of this section). The consultative meetings were indicated as another effective mechanism for mobilizing additional financial resources. There was also a need for a substantial increase in capital investment and in net flow of non-concessional capital. Noting that the Secretary-General could not submit in his report⁽³⁾ substantive proposals on ways of mobilizing finances, the Committee requested him to report on that issue at its second session.

The Committee also reaffirmed that inter-agency co-ordination was essential for effective implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action and welcomed the organizational arrangements made to ensure greater efficiency of the co-operative effort.

UNDP action. By a decision of 24 June 1983,⁽¹⁶⁾ as called for by the Committee on new and renewable sources of energy, the UNDP Governing Council recommended that developed countries and developing countries in a position to do so provide additional resources for pre-investment and technical assistance activities related to the development of new and renewable sources of energy in developing countries. UNDP's general resources and the Energy Account (see above, under ENERGY RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT) were suggested as possible channels for such support. The Council also invited UNDP to help in implementing the Nairobi Programme of Action and, in particular, to assist interested countries in arranging consultative meetings for consideration of projects and programmes and mobilization of finances.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July 1983, acting on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1983/166.

Development and utilization of new and renewable sources of energy

At its 39th plenary meeting, on 25 July 1983, the Council took note of the report of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy on its first session and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session for consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly, on 19 December 1983, adopted without vote resolution 38/169.

Immediate implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further its resolution 36/193 of 17 December 1981, in which it endorsed the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy and, in particular, its resolution 37/250 of 21 December 1982 on the immediate implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action,

Convinced of the importance of developing new and renewable sources of energy in order to contribute to meeting the requirements for continued economic and social development, particularly in the developing countries, through, inter alia, the transition from the present international economy based primarily on hydrocarbons to one based increasingly on new and renewable sources of energy,

Reaffirming that, while the primary responsibility for promoting the development and utilization of new and renewable sources of energy rests with individual countries, international co-operation is indispensable and should be directed to assisting and supporting the national efforts of developing countries, that developed countries should play a special role in contributing actively to this end and that other countries in a position to do, so should also continue to promote efforts in this regard,

Aware that the present world energy situation should not reverse or halt the efforts of the international community to implement the Nairobi Programme of Action,

Recognizing the need to take urgent and concerted measures for the mobilization of additional and adequate resources necessary for the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action,

Recalling that specialized intergovernmental organizations and institutions in the field of new and renewable sources of energy are invited to extend their co-operation in order to strengthen the co-operative action of the international community and to ensure that further resources are made available for the development of new and renewable sources of energy, that national public and private entities in interested countries, as appropriate, have a role to play and that, in certain countries, non-governmental entities will also have a significant role to play,

Recognizing also that the United Nations system has initiated the necessary steps towards its full participation in and support of the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action and that it is imperative to increase the responsiveness of the system in this respect, through, inter alia, the provision of additional and adequate resources and increased co-ordination of the activities of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system,

Emphasising the importance of the subregional, regional and interregional efforts for implementing the Nairobi Programme of Action,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy on its first session, held at United Nations Headquarters from 18 to 29 April 1983,

I

Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy

Requests the Secretary-General to present to the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, at its second session, substantive proposals on further ways and means of mobilizing financial resources for new and renewable sources of energy, as requested in General Assembly resolution 37/250;

9. Urges, in this connection, all interested parties to accelerate consideration of other possible avenues that would increase financing in this field, including, inter alia, the mechanisms being examined by the World Bank, such as an energy affiliate, as stated in paragraph 94 of the Nairobi Programme of Action;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to elicit the views of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations as to how they can best co-operate in generating additional financial resources for the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action;

IV

Inter-agency co-ordination and Secretariat support arrangements

General Assembly resolution 38/169

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.1) without vote, 5 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/38/L.91), based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/38/L.16); agenda item 78 (/) Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 34, 54; plenary 102.

Apart from drafting changes, the adopted text differed from that put forward by the Group of 77. A new preambular paragraph was added emphasizing the importance of subregional, regional and interregional efforts for implementing the Nairobi Programme of Action. The Assembly emphasized, in a new paragraph, that early implementation of the Programme required the mobilization of additional and adequate resources, with each country bearing the main responsibility for the development of its new and renewable energy sources. In addition, it noted that the May 1982 ACC proposals⁽¹²⁾ for action-oriented plans and programmes presented a useful framework for developing programmes in areas of priority and stressed the need for the full implementation of the December 1982 Assembly decisions on secretariat arrangements.⁽²⁾ The adopted version also contained specific references to section III.A on areas for priority action of the Programme of Action and section V.B on action-oriented plans and programmes of the report of the Committee on new and renewable sources of energy, which were absent in the Group of 77's draft. A paragraph calling for consultative meetings was reworded to include reference to paragraph 81 (on consultative meetings) of the Committee's report, rather than calling for financial and technical support by the international community.

Also on 19 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/151 reaffirming the significance and importance of the Programme of Action and urging Governments, United Nations entities, specialized intergovernmental agencies and institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations concerned with new and renewable sources of energy, to take effective action for its implementation.

Geothermal exploration

Following a June 1982 decision of the UNDP Governing Council,⁽¹¹⁾ exploration of geothermal energy became one of the important areas of activities for the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration.

In a report on the Fund's activities in 1983,⁽¹⁸⁾ the UNDP Administrator noted that a comprehensive data base had been established as a result of more than 30 missions to 21 countries undertaken by the Fund since 1981 to review the status of high - enthalpy geothermal energy development. Installed capacity continued to grow, reaching an estimated 1,200 megawatts (MW) in nine countries by the end of 1983. There were 38 countries with established and probable high-enthalpy geothermal resources suitable for electricity production, and another 26 with indicated potential where reconnaissance work was in progress.

Project identification was a significant part of the Fund's activities in 1983. Initial evaluation was completed in 8 of the 10 countries which had targets ready for drilling large-diameter exploratory holes and had expressed interest in Fund financing. The most promising prospect appeared to be in Las Planillas, Mexico, with other project possibilities identified in the Philippines, Saint Lucia and Turkey. It was expected that production from a successful project could start within two to three years by means of inexpensive trailer-mounted 5-10 MW turbine-generator units.

The Fund established and maintained contacts, both technical and financial, with national laboratories and research organizations, international and regional banks and funding organizations, and co-operated actively with DTCD and the Energy Office of UNDP in pursuing the Nairobi Programme of Action (see above).

For its part, DTCD⁽¹⁹⁾ was carrying out a major project in China, funded through cost-sharing arrangements by UNDP and Italy. The project involved the provision of training and equipment for production drilling as well as pre-feasibility work, including geological and geophysical investigation, reservoir engineering and assistance in dealing with corrosion problems. Another project, started by DTCD in 1983 in Kenya, focused on reconnaissance, with emphasis on exploratory drilling. Projects were also under implementation in Djibouti, Ethiopia, India, the Philippines, Romania and Thailand.⁽²⁰⁾

Nuclear energy

Most of the United Nations technical work in nuclear energy was carried out by IAEA (for information on IAEA activities in 1983, see PART II, Chapter I). After reviewing the IAEA report for 1982, the General Assembly, in November 1983, urged all States to co-operate in IAEA work and to implement strictly its statute in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of nuclear science and technology for peaceful purposes. The Assembly also considered the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, which held its fourth session in 1983. Since the Committee was unable to reach agreement on an agenda or rules of procedure, it decided to recommend to the Assembly not to convene the Conference in 1983. In December, the Assembly requested the Committee to submit a report in 1984, in the light of which it would consider the venue and actual dates for the Conference in 1986.

Nuclear disarmament and nuclear power sources in outer space were dealt with in several other resolutions adopted by the Assembly in 1983 (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapters I and II). In his October report to the Assembly on the development of the energy resources of the developing countries (see above, under ENERGY RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT), the Secretary-General also submitted his findings⁽¹⁾ as to nuclear power investment requirements in developing countries where, by the end of 1982, there were nine nuclear power plants in operation and another 19 units under construction. The share of nuclear power in total electricity production in the developing countries was projected to be less than 10 per cent at the end of the century, its rapid growth hindered by such obstacles as the comparatively small size of electricity grids and the array of technical skills required for safe operation of nuclear facilities. Also according to World Bank projections, the investment requirements of developing countries in the nuclear power sector over the 1982-1992 period amounted to $53.1 billion (1982 dollars), or about 8 per cent of their investment requirements in the electric power sector as a whole..

IAEA report

The report of IAEA for 1982 was transmitted to the 1983 General Assembly session by the Secretary-General on 30 August.⁽²⁾

Introducing the report to the Assembly on 4 November and updating the information it contained, the IAEA Director General singled out several developments of particular significance for the Agency's efforts in promoting the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and preventing the further proliferation of nuclear weapons. Among such events in 1983 were the resumption in February of United States participation in the Agency's activities; an International Conference on Radioactive Waste Management, held at Seattle, United States, in May; progress at IAEA negotiations with the USSR on that country's offer to submit some of its peaceful nuclear installations to Agency safeguards; and, finally, approval by the IAEA General Conference in October of China's application for membership of the Agency.

In the area of electricity production, the Director General noted a slow but steady progress, with the number of operating reactors in the world passing 300 early in 1983 and continuing to grow. The share of nuclear reactors in world electricity production accounted for about 10 per cent in 1983 and was estimated to reach 20 per cent by 1990, despite the continuing trend in some countries to constrain their plans for construction of nuclear power facilities.

While in several developed countries production of electricity by nuclear power increased to over 30 per cent, the use of nuclear energy in developing countries was hindered by the fact that their electricity demands and grids were too limited for commercially available large nuclear reactors. In its search for a solution to the problem, IAEA initiated a study of small and medium-sized power units.

With regard to safety, the Director General stated that the total radiological impact of the nuclear industry showed a consistent decrease in terms of collective doses per unit of energy generated. To promote nuclear safety further, IAEA had set up operational safety review teams to assist national regulatory bodies in maintaining the required standards and was seeking to establish a world-wide incident reporting system.

Recognizing that practical application of nuclear techniques in such fields as agriculture, medicine and industry was of more immediate importance to the majority of IAEA member States than nuclear power as a source of electricity, the Agency actively promoted these applications through its technical co-operation and assistance programme. With regard to food preservation by radiation processing, for example, the Director General reported that a significant step was made in July when the Codex Alimentarius Commission, a joint body of the World Health Organization and FAO, adopted a revised International Code of Practice for the Operation of Radiation Facilities for the Treatment of Food. Useful results which could lead to large-scale practical application were also achieved in pest eradication and animal husbandry. IAEA joint ventures with other United Nations organizations yielded promising results in medicine, agriculture, energy planning and environment protection, underscoring the need for broader inter-agency co-operation.

Describing activities related to international security, the Director General informed the Assembly that in 1982 IAEA did not detect any diversion of safeguarded nuclear material. He also reported that in 1983 the technical measures necessary to perform fully adequate verification in two cases about which the Agency had had a reservation in 1981 were agreed on and implemented. Stressing the importance of the safeguards system, the Director General called for its further expansion and continued efforts to improve efficiency and cost-effectiveness. Another security-related area in which IAEA had a great responsibility was non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and other disarmament issues (see POLITICAL AND SECUR-RITY QUESTIONS, Chapter I). For example, at the invitation of the Secretary-General, it was taking part in a new study on nuclear-weapon-free zones.

OF vital importance to nuclear security was the problem of attacks on nuclear installations. The IAEA General Conference in October 1983 had called for early conclusion of an international agreement to prohibit attacks such as the 1981 bombing by Israeli aircraft of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad, Iraq (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX). It also had urged all member States to work towards the adoption of binding international rules prohibiting armed attacks against any nuclear installation devoted to peaceful purposes (see PART II, Chapter I). The Director General drew attention to Additional Protocol I of 1977 (related to the protection of victims of international armed conflicts) to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims. Protocol I already contained an article prohibiting attacks on nuclear electricity-generating stations, and its early ratification, in the Director General's view, would be conducive to achieving the protection needed in this field.

With regard to South Africa's nuclear capability, the Director General reported that the General Conference in October had demanded that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations and facilities to Agency safeguards. It had also requested the IAEA Board of Governors and the Director General to consider implementing the Assembly's December 1982 request⁽⁵⁾ to exclude South Africa from the Agency's technical working groups.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 November 1983, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/8 without vote.

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency
The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1982.

The Assembly adopted a number of other resolutions that also concerned IAEA (for texts, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS). By resolution 38/39 A, it again requested IAEA to refrain from extending to South Africa facilities which might assist it in its nuclear plans and, in particular, to exclude South Africa from its technical working groups. In two other resolutions—38/181 A and B—the Assembly demanded again that South Africa submit its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by IAEA. By resolution 38/64, it called on States in the Middle East that had not done so to agree to place their nuclear activities under IAEA safeguards. By resolution 38/69, the Assembly requested the Security Council to ensure that Israel placed its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards, as the Council had asked Israel to do in 1981,⁽⁴⁾ and requested IAEA to suspend any scientific co-operation with Israel which could contribute to its nuclear capabilities.

Preparations for the Conference on nuclear energy

Preparatory Committee activities. The Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, established by the General Assembly in 1980,⁽⁵⁾ held its fourth session in New York from 28 March to 8 April 1983 and reported its results to the first part of the Assembly's resumed thirty-seventh session in May.⁽⁶⁾

After intensive discussions during 11 formal and a number of informal group meetings, the Committee was unable, as at previous sessions, to agree on such basic matters as the content and substance of the agenda of the Conference, its rules of procedure and the preparatory work. In an effort to facilitate the task of negotiating outstanding issues, an informal open-ended contact group was set up, which regularly informed the Committee about the progress of its work. In its final statement on 8 April, the group listed 10 proposals made by delegations on the draft provisional agenda and noted several suggestions in respect of the decision-making process, concluding, however, that no agreement was reached.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly should decide not to convene the Conference in 1983 and that it should determine the date and venue of the Committee's fifth session. The Committee also decided that the Conference secretariat should proceed with the Conference preparations in accordance with the relevant Assembly resolutions. Annexed to the report were the Committee's decisions, statements of the Committee Chairman and the Secretary-General of the Conference at the opening of the session, and excerpts from the Political and Economic Declarations of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi, India, from 7 to 12 March 1983.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly took up the question of the Conference on two occasions in 1983: in May when it resumed its thirty-seventh session with four items, including the Conference preparations, remaining from its 1982 agenda;⁽⁷⁾ and in December at its thirty-eighth session.

On 10 May, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 37/453.

Arrangements for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy and the Preparatory Committee for the Conference

At its 116th plenary meeting, on 10 May 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy as set forth in its decision 5(IV) of 8 April 1983, decided:

(a) Not to convene the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy in 1983;

(b) To take a decision at its thirty-eighth session, on the date and venue of the fifth session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference.

Chapter XI

Food

In a year plagued by the continuing uncertainty of the world food economy and chronic hunger and malnutrition in many developing countries, various United Nations bodies stepped up their food-related activities in three main directions: providing emergency aid, rendering development assistance and working to identify priorities and devise policies for solving major food problems in different parts of the world.

The World Food Council (WFC) proposed a number of national and international measures to combat hunger, improve agricultural production, stocking and distribution in developing countries, and upgrade world trade and market stability. These recommendations were welcomed in resolutions of the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1983/71) and the General Assembly (resolution 38/158), which called for urgent action by the international community to improve the world food situation.

While WFC formulated strategies for solving food problems, the World Food Programme (WFP) concentrated on supplying food to those suffering from natural and man-made disasters, and providing financial and technical assistance to developing countries to achieve their national food objectives. Entering its twentieth year of existence, WFP reached its highest level of development and emergency commitments in 1983, with shipments of food exceeding 1.5 million metric tons.

The General Assembly, in December 1983, established a new $1.35 billion pledging target for the Programme's regular resources for the 1985-1986 biennium (resolution 38/176). It acted on the recommendations of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA), the governing body of WFP, submitted through the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1983/73). The problem of improving co-ordination of United Nations activities with regard to food and agriculture was addressed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1983/77.

Food problems

World Food Council activities. The ninth ministerial session of WFC was held at United Nations Headquarters from 27 to 30 June 1983,⁽¹⁾ preceded by a preparatory meeting at Rome, Italy, from 10 to 13 May. The 36-member Council-the world's highest-level body dealing solely with food problems-reaffirmed that peace and disarmament were prerequisite to enhanced food security, that food was a universal human right and that it should not be used as an instrument of political pressure. The Council expressed concern over the adverse effect of the world-wide economic recession on the food situation in developing countries. It described ample food supplies in the developed regions as an important resource for helping to eradicate hunger in the food-deficit regions and acknowledged the significance of a mutually reinforcing integration of food aid among the developed and developing countries. The Council also adopted conclusions and recommendations on food trends, strategies and priorities in developing regions, and on food security and trade issues.

While focusing on regional food policies peculiar to Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean, WFC identified areas of common concern for the developing countries. To combat increasing rural poverty and undernourishment of the population, it called for a greater emphasis on the smallholder traditional farm sector, particularly the role of farm women in the rural family, and reiterated its support for the recommendations of the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development.⁽²⁾ With regard to low-income, food-deficit countries, WFC reaffirmed the significance of increased food production and said the efforts of the International Development Association, the regional development banks and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) were essential in helping the developing countries meet their food objectives. In view of the need for a comprehensive approach to the food problem, WFC reaffirmed its role as a centre for co-ordinating activities of various agencies and expressed satisfaction with the increased technical and economic co-operation among the developing countries.

Reviewing the food situation in Africa, WFC noted growing food deficits, and that racism and neo-colonialism were compounding food problems, especially in the developing countries of southern Africa. It also drew attention to serious outbreaks of livestock-threatening rinderpest. Faced with the challenge to push food production ahead of population growth, African countries needed additional urgent aid from the international community; WFC urged the community to respond generously to appeals. The Council reported that, in an effort to alleviate food deficits, some 30 countries were engaged in policy reform within the framework of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa(3)—a plan based on collective self-reliance and self-sustainment. WFC welcomed widespread adoption of food strategies and supported the May 1983 conclusions of the Committee on World Food Security of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) regarding food production constraints in food-deficit countries. In order to increase effectiveness of aid to the African countries, WFC proposed a number of policy adjustments by assistance agencies in such areas as allocation and continuity of aid, integration of food and other aid within the framework of national food strategies, and training, research and institutional development.

Addressing the situation in Asia, WFC stressed that, despite significant gains in production, food remained a top priority concern for most countries, with an estimated 300 million to 500 million people endemically undernourished. It endorsed a number of recommendations urging improvements in such areas as organization and management, utilization of agricultural production potentials, action-oriented research, productivity of smallholders, irrigation, employment of landless workers, family planning programmes and food programmes for vulnerable groups.

Serious economic and political considerations prompted WFC to accord high priority to the food sector in Latin America and the Caribbean, where one third of the population lived in poverty and some 50 million people suffered from malnutrition. Endorsing policy recommendations for the region, WFC stressed that national macro-economic policies should be coherent with food priorities of the national development plans. It also called for increased productivity in the food sector and in the food processing and distribution chains, and urged the improvement of marketing systems. With regard to externally financed projects, WFC stressed the importance of their social component and recommended that international finance institutions contributing to regional food development should increase overall sectoral loans.

Focusing on world food security and trade issues, the Council called for increased International political support for actions aimed at eliminating hunger. It expressed concern over the excessive concentration of food grain supplies in North America and an adverse impact that a rapid depletion of world stocks could have on the balance-of-payments position of developing countries. Two lines of action to attain greater food security emerged from the Council's deliberations. First, WFC urged full utilization of the existing instruments of food security such as the International Emergency Food Reserve, the Food Aid Convention and WFP (see below, under FOOD AID). Secondly, it stressed that improved food production, storage, marketing and distribution were the central objectives of developing countries national food strategies. WFC also reviewed reports of CFA and the FAO Committee on World Food Security, welcoming the high amounts of pledges to WFP (see below) and the adoption by the FAO Committee of a new integrated concept of food security (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

The Council also reaffirmed its 1982 decision to prepare in 1984 an assessment on progress in meeting the objectives of the 1974 World Food Conference(4) and the priority tasks for the period ahead. In addition, it requested its Executive Director to prepare, in co-operation with United Nations entities and other governmental and non-governmental organizations involved in food issues, a report on progress in improving the world food situation since the 1974 Conference.

The Council's conclusions and recommendations were reiterated by the WFC Executive Director in his statement to the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 28 October 1983. Expressing concern over the structural imbalance in the world food economy, he stressed that food strategies should be placed in the context of the development process, with national efforts being the key to a secure future.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/71 without vote.

Food problems

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, Assembly resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Recalling the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition, as adopted by the World Food Conference, and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolutions 37/245 on the situation of food and agriculture in Africa, 37/246 on an international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources for food and agriculture in Africa, and 37/247 on food problems, all of 21 December 1982,

Recognizing the need for keeping food and agriculture issues at the centre of the global agenda,

Concerned that the achievement of the food and agriculture objectives of the developing countries is being severely constrained by the world-wide economic recession and political environment and that those countries are faced with depressed prices in commodity markets, sluggish demand, restricted access to markets, declining concessional flows in real terms and protectionist policies, coupled with the obligations of servicing a large international debt, and with monetary market instability,

Expressing its deep concern at the fact that a substantial part of world resources, material as well as human, continues to be diverted to armaments, which has a detrimental effect on international security and on efforts to achieve the new international economic order, including the solution of food problems, and calling upon Governments to take effective measures in the field of real disarmament that would increase the possibilities of the allocation of the resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, especially the development of developing countries, and to improving their food situation,

Emphasizing that food objectives should be pursued within the framework of national food strategies, plans and programmes and that food self-reliance is an essential element of national sovereignty and of political and social policy, that food security should be based, to the maximum extent feasible, on a vigorous domestic food sector and that, consequently, the development of the food sector should be recognized as a dynamic element in the economic development of the developing countries,

Emphasising the need to adopt, according to priorities identified in the field of food and agriculture, comprehensive national and international measures, with a view to achieving the aims and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade concerning the promotion of food and agricultural development in the developing countries,

Recognizing that a substantial increase in the export earnings of developing countries is essential for the adequate financing of their overall economic development, and even for that of their imports of food and agricultural inputs,

Noting the need for all countries, particularly the developed countries, to adopt policies designed to bring about the reduction and elimination of obstacles in order to avoid the disruption of international trade in agricultural products and to facilitate access to international markets for agricultural exports, especially those of developing countries,

Noting with concern the continuing hunger and malnutrition in many developing countries, especially in Africa and in the least developed countries,

Concerned about the anomaly of large crops and stock accumulation in some developed countries, while many developing countries are facing problems of growing food deficits and hunger,

Stressing that measures taken by certain developed countries to reduce future food and agricultural production should not adversely affect the food problems faced by developing countries,

Further concerned about the uncertainty in the world food economy and the risks of an unstable supply and price situation in the international grain market,

Calling for progressive increases in grain production in developing countries to achieve a better balance in the production and distribution of global stocks,

Endorses the decision of the World Food Council to welcome the adoption by the Committee on World Food Security of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations of the enlarged and integrated concept of world food security, focusing on the adequacy of food supplies and production, stability in food supplies and markets, and security of access to supplies, and calls for its widest possible implementation by the international community;

9. Reaffirms that national food strategies, plans and programmes should play a central role in the process of establishing priorities, in co-ordinating national and international funding and the application of technology, promoting food production and increasing the national food self-reliance of the developing countries;

countries have themselves defined for the eradication of hunger and malnutrition;

13. Reaffirms that increased food production is one of the most important elements in meeting the food needs of the developing countries;

14. Invites Governments concerned to adopt direct hunger-reduction measures integrated with productive development within the framework of national strategies and policies, including more assistance to rural development to reach smallholder producers and co-operatives, special attention to the needs of women farmers, investment in human capacities through programmes for mothers and children, the creation of productive employment for poor landless families and an increase in food aid;

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/158 without vote.

Reaffirming its resolutions 37/245 on the situation of food and agriculture in Africa, 37/246 on an international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources for food and agriculture in Africa and 37/247 on food problems, of 21 December 1982,

Recognizing the need for keeping food and agriculture issues at the centre of the global agenda,

Concerned that the achievement of the food and agriculture objectives of developing countries is being severely constrained by the world-wide economic recession and political environment, and that those countries are faced with depressed prices in commodity markets, sluggish demand, restricted access to markets, declining concessional flows in real terms and protectionist policies, coupled with the obligations of servicing a large international debt and with monetary market instability,

Expressing its deep concern at the fact that a substantial part of world resources, material as well as human, continues to be diverted to armaments, which has a detrimental effect on international security and on efforts to achieve the new international economic order, including the solution of food problems, and calling upon Governments to take effective measures in the field of real disarmament that would increase the possibilities of the allocation of the resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, especially development of developing countries, and to improving their food situation,

Emphasizing that food objectives should be pursued within the framework of national food strategies, plans and programmes and that food self-reliance is an essential element of national sovereignty and of political and social policy, that food security should be based, to the maximum extent feasible, on a vigorous domestic food sector and that, consequently, the development of the food sector should be recognized as a dynamic element in the economic development of the developing countries,

Emphasizing the need to adopt, according to priorities identified in the field of food and agriculture, comprehensive national and international measures with a view to realizing the aims and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade in the promotion of food and agricultural development in the developing countries,

Recognizing that a substantial increase in the export earnings of developing countries is essential for the adequate financing of their overall economic development, including even their imports of food and agricultural inputs,

Noting the need for all countries, particularly the developed countries, to adopt policies designed to bring about the reduction and elimination of obstacles in order to avoid the disruption of international trade in agricultural products and to facilitate access to international markets for agricultural exports, especially those of developing countries,

Noting with concern the continuing hunger and malnutrition in many developing countries, especially in Africa and in the least developed countries,

Concerned about the anomaly of large crops and stock accumulation in some developed countries while many developing countries are facing problems of growing food deficits and hunger,

Stressing that measures taken by certain developed countries to reduce future food and agricultural production should not adversely affect the food problems faced by developing countries,

Further concerned about the uncertainty in the world food economy and the risks of an unstable supply and price situation in the international grain market,

Culling for progressive increases in grain production in developing countries to achieve a better balance in the production and distribution of global stocks,

General Assembly resolution 38/158

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/702/Add.5) without vote, 4 November (meeting 301; draft by Vice-Chairman, based on informal consultations (A/C.2/38/L21); agenda item 78 (e).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 21, 30; plenary 102.

Two other 1983 Assembly resolutions related to food situations in specific areas. In resolution 38/6 of 28 October, the Assembly requested FAO to consider holding at Rome, not later than 31 August 1984, a meeting on food and agriculture in the Arab region with a view to taking joint action pursuant to recommendations adopted at a June/July 1983 meeting on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States. On 19 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/159 on the critical situation of food and agriculture in Africa.

The Second Committee also dealt with a draft resolution on food and agriculture submitted by the Philippines in 1981. Following 1981⁽⁵⁾ and 1982⁽⁶⁾ Assembly decisions to refer that text to its next session, the Second Committee in 1983 decided to take no action on it. The Philippine draft would have had the Assembly invite the Secretary-General, together with FAO, WFC, IFAD and others, to develop strategies to solve global food problems.

Food aid

World Food Programme

The World Food Programme, a joint undertaking of the United Nations and FAO, marked its twentieth anniversary in 1983 by the highest level of development and emergency commitments in its history.

The anniversary, observed by the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and the FAO Conference, and marked by a joint message from the Secretary-General and the FAO Director-General as well as by commemorative stamps, gave WFP an impulse to review its own experience and examine major food aid policy issues at an October seminar at The Hague in co-operation with the Netherlands. There was also a continuous effort by WFP to reassess its policies and working methods, with particular emphasis on in-depth impact studies.

WFP activities

The annual report of CFA,(1) the WFP governing body, stated that development commitments in 1983 totalled $696 million, representing over 1.4 million metric tons of food, with about 80 per cent made to low-income, food-deficit countries. An additional $200 million was allocated to emergency operations. Over the year, total shipments of WFP assistance, for development projects and emergency operations, exceeded 1.5 million tons. The Programme's major emergency effort was directed towards sub-Saharan Africa, which accounted for 34 per cent of its emergency deliveries. WFP also participated in a joint task force with FAO set up in April to monitor the food and agriculture situation in the region. The Programme continued to play a co-ordinating role in major emergency operations on the Thai/Kampuchean border, in Pakistan for Afghan refugees, in Somalia and in Chad. An in-depth evaluation of a food-for-work project in Bangladesh was begun, while preliminary work was started on similar projects in Malawi and Pakistan.

CFA activities. The fifteenth and sixteenth sessions of CFA were held in 1983 at Rome, from 16 to 27 May(2) and from 20 to 28 October.(3)

In May, following its eighth annual review of food aid policies and programmes, CFA submitted its conclusions(4) to the Economic and Social Council, supporting WFP's efforts to integrate food aid into the national plans of developing countries and endorsing its continued emphasis on low-income, food-deficit countries. With regard to food aid targets, no agreement was reached on the figure of 10 million tons; however, there was consensus on the estimate of 20 million tons per year as an indicator of requirements for cereals food aid by 1985. CFA approved a pledging target of $1.35 billion for the regular resources of WFP for the biennium 1985-1986 (see below). It approved 23 projects at a total cost of $282 million and budget increases for 18 previously approved projects, bringing the total of new commitments for approval at the session to $304.4 million. CFA also considered interim evaluation and terminal reports, agreed with the recommendations on a grain sales procedure designed to help meet internal costs in least developed countries and approved the Executive Director's proposals to reduce the size and change the format of reports on WFP emergency operations. In order to strengthen its work, CFA decided to begin, at its October session, reviewing experiences of individual countries with food aid programmes and policies, on a voluntary basis.

In October, CFA took up the first two such reviews-for Bangladesh and Tunisia. It noted the usefulness of these selected analyses, not only for the countries concerned, but also for donors and recipient countries in general, as well as for food aid organizations within and outside the United Nations, and agreed that such reviews should proceed on a continuing basis. With regard to emergency operations, CFA noted an update of their costs and volumes and expressed satisfaction at the effectiveness of co-ordination between WFP and other United Nations agencies and donors in bringing food relief to distressed people. It also reviewed the fee/cost situation in bilateral services and approved a new fee schedule for WFP's bilateral activities from 1 January 1984.

In resolution 38/158 of 19 December 1983, the General Assembly welcomed the CFA report covering 1982,(4) and urged that, in the implementation of food aid policies and programmes, a greater volume of food and agricultural products be acquired from food-exporting developing countries, including through triangular transactions.

Development assistance

In 1983, 67 new development projects valued at $577 million were approved, and a further $119 million was provided in additional commitments for ongoing projects. CFA approved 93 per cent of these new projects by value, while the remainder were approved by the Executive Director(1) (for development projects approved, see table below). WFP continued to concentrate on low-income, food-deficit countries, which received 80 per cent of commitments for development projects. Among the food-deficit countries, those identified by the United Nations as least developed received 36 per cent of the 1983 commitments--five times the amount, for size of population, of WFP assistance to other developing countries. With regard to regional distribution, WFP 1983 commitments in percentage terms showed a substantial increase over 1982 for both the Asia and Pacific region, and the Latin American and Caribbean region, but a decrease for Africa south of the Sahara, which nevertheless had actual deliveries of food aid rise from 405,000 tons in 1982 to 502,000 tons in 1983. However, because of its acute food situation, Africa received a higher share of WFP emergency food aid than other regions (see below).

The various types of WFP development projects approved in 1983 would provide a nutrition supplement to approximately 4 million people, employment to about 800,000 workers and settlement benefits to some 500,000 people, and would generate over $150 million in local currency in five countries to be invested in dairy production.

Emergency operations

In 1983 emergency operations, WFP committed a record $200 million to provide 577,000 tons of food to 12 million people in 38 countries (including additional aid for operations approved earlier). Funds for these operations were provided from the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR) and from the $45 million that WFP set aside from its regular resources for this purpose.

Compared with 1982, the distribution of WFP emergency assistance by type of operation underwent considerable changes in 1983, with more than a twofold gain in the share of aid directed to drought-stricken people (43 per cent versus 20 per cent), a drop from 11 to 3 per cent in aid to the victims of natural disasters, and a decrease from 69 to 54 per cent in assistance to refugees and displaced persons following man-made disasters. With respect to geographical distribution, more than half (59 per cent) of the aid went to 42 operations in sub-Saharan Africa, 28 per cent to 11 operations in Asia, 11 per cent to 11 operations in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 2 per cent for 4 operations in North Africa and the Near East (for emergency operations approved, see table below).

As in previous years, in 1983 WFP was involved in a number of large-scale emergency operations. It continued co-ordinating the procurement and delivery of food aid for Kampuchea and relief operations along the Thai/Kampuchean border. By year's end, this aid amounted to $330 million, some two thirds of which had gone to border relief operations in Thailand, and the rest to Kampuchea itself. In total, 237,000 tons of food were provided under IEFR and 565,000 tons bilaterally. Funds were mobilized through live donor meetings, which yielded pledges of nearly $35 million, and a series of special appeals. In Pakistan, WFP provided nearly 200,000 tons of food to 2.2 million Afghan refugees, bringing the total WFP commitment for these refugees to almost 800,000 tons since 1979. In Latin America and the Caribbean, WFP supplied over 22,000 tons of emergency food aid valued at $9 million to displaced persons in El Salvador, Honduras and Mexico, and sent $12.7 million worth of food (more than 24,000 tons) to Cuba and Ecuador, affected by floods, and to Bolivia, Nicaragua and Panama, suffering from drought.

Special emphasis in 1983 was placed on meeting the urgent food needs of Africa, with almost two thirds of WFP emergency operations (42 out of 68) being launched in sub-Saharan Africa. Commitments of emergency food supplies reached all-time highs in that region, both in terms of value ($120 million) and volume (303,000 tons). WFP was the largest provider of food aid in Ghana and in relief efforts for Somalian refugees. It also played a major co-ordinating role in Chad and Mozambique, where low-crop yields and civil strife had left millions of people in extreme distress. In Europe, WFP was a major contributor of food for Greek Cypriot, Maronite and Turkish Cypriot communities as part of the United Nations relief effort in Cyprus.

Twentieth anniversary

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July 1983, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1983/72 without vote.

Twentieth anniversary of the World Food Programme

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 1714(XVI) of 19 December 1961, 2095(XX) of 20 December 1965 and 3404(XXX) of 28 November 1975 and resolutions 1/61 of 24 November 1961, 4/65 of 6 December 1965 and 22/75 of 26 November 1975 of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, setting up the World Food Programme as a programme jointly undertaken by the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and establishing, for the purposes of providing guidance on policy, administration and operations, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes,

Taking note of the eighth annual report of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes,

Noting that the World Food Programme is celebrating its twentieth anniversary in 1983,

Noting also the activities of the Programme during the past twenty years in the use of food aid to promote development and to relieve distress, especially in emergencies,

Conscious that the Programme, originally established on an experimental basis, is now an important element in the development activities of the United Nations system,

Noting the versatility of food aid as an instrument for promoting general economic and social development, including rural development,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the World Food Programme on its twentieth anniversary and for the initiatives of the Programme to provide added impetus as it enters the third decade of its existence;

2. Also expresses its appreciation to Governments and to organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system for their support of the Programme;

3. Calls upon Governments to intensify their efforts to enable the Programme to fulfil its assigned role in accordance with its mandate even more effectively and for this purpose to channel, to the maximum extent possible and feasible, their food aid through the Programme;

4. Encourages the Programme to continue to explore opportunities to improve the constructive use of food aid in support of the economic and social development of the developing countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/72

29 July 1983

Meeting 41

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/124) without vote, 27 July (meeting 25); draft by Chairman (E/1983/C.1/L.23/Rev.1), orally revised and orally amended by Bangladesh: agenda item 16.
Meeting number. ESC 41.

The oral amendment by Bangladesh added the words "possible and" in paragraph 3.

Contributions to WFP

Contributions for 1983-1984

The annual report of CFA(1) pointed out that combined WFP resources stood at a record $1.2 billion for the 1983-1984 biennium. These resources included regular pledges, reported by CFA to be within reach of its $1.2 billion biennium target, as well as contributions made through IEFB and the 1980 Food Aid Convention,⁽⁵⁾ as extended in 1981,⁽⁶⁾ which established minimum annual contributions of 7.6 million metric tons in grains for each of its parties and had the objective of reaching the 1974 World Food Conference target of at least 10 million metric tons of food aid annually.⁽⁷⁾ The Convention had been further extended from 1 July 1983 until 30 June 1986 by the International Wheat Agreement made up of the Food Aid Convention together with the 1971 Wheat Trade Convention. By the end of 1983, 534, 121 tons of food, at a value of $149 million, had been contributed to IEFB by 21 donors, the highest number recorded in any one year. Almost the entire quantity of commodities at the disposal of WFP, including both regular pledges and Food Aid Convention contributions of all donors, had been called forward by the end of 1983, and for the most part shipped. Cash pledges and contributions from all sources totalled $127.5 million.

Pledging target for 1985-1986

At its May 1983 session, CFA approved a pledging target of $1.35 billion for WFP's regular resources for 1985-1986. A $1.5 billion target figure had been proposed by the Executive Director and endorsed by the Secretary-General and the FAO Director-General. It was felt by some delegations that the $1.35 billion figure was unrealistic, and by others that it was inadequate in view of the urgent food aid needs of developing countries, particularly the low-income, food-deficit countries. However, it was pointed out that the original figure allowed for an inflation factor which might be too high and that real growth would be possible with a $1.35 billion target. The Committee proposed that the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council should adopt the relevant draft resolution, annexed to the CFA report.

for the period 1985-1986

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the eighth annual report of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes,

Noting the comments of the Committee concerning the minimum target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme for the period 1985-1986,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2462(XXIII) of 20 December 1968 and 2682(XXV) of 11 December 1970, in which the Assembly recognized the experience gained by the World Food Programme in the field of multilateral food aid,

1. Submits to the General Assembly for consideration and adoption the draft resolution annexed hereto;
2. Urges States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to undertake the necessary preparations for the announcement of pledges at the Eleventh Pledging Conference for the World Food Programme.

ANNEX

Target for World Food Programme pledges
for the period 1985-1986

[Text as in General Assembly resolution 38/176 below, except for minor drafting changes.]

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/73

29 July 1983 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1983/124) without vote, 27 July (meeting 25); draft by CFA (E/1983/92); agenda item 16.
Meeting number. ESC 41.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/176 without vote.

Target for World Food Programme pledges
for the period 1985-1986

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 2095(XX) of 20 December 1965 to the effect that the World Food Programme is to be reviewed before each pledging conference,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 4 of its resolution 36/202 of 17 December 1981 specifying that, subject to the review mentioned above, the next pledging conference should be convened, at the latest, early in 1984, at which time Governments and appropriate donor organizations should be invited to pledge contributions for 1985 and 1986 with a view to reaching such a target as may be then recommended by the General Assembly and the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Noting that the review of the Programme was undertaken by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme at its fifteenth session and by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1983,

Having considered Economic and Social Council resolution, 1983/73 of 29 July 1983, as well as the recommendations of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes,

Recognizing the value of multilateral food aid as furnished by the World Food Programme since its inception and the necessity for continuing its action both as a form of capital investment and for meeting emergency food needs,

1. Establishes for the two years 1985 and 1986 a target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme of $1.35 billion, of which not less than one third should be in cash and/or services in aggregate, and expresses the hope that such resources will be augmented by substantial additional contributions from other sources in recognition of the prospective volume of sound project requests and the capacity of the Programme to operate at a higher level;

2. Urges States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and appropriate donor organizations to make every effort to ensure the full attainment of the target;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to convene a pledging conference for this purpose at United Nations Headquarters early in 1984;

4. Decides that, subject to the review provided for in General Assembly resolution 2095(XX), the subsequent pledging conference, at which Governments and appropriate donor organizations should be invited to pledge contributions for the biennium 1987-1988 with a view to reaching such a target as may be then recommended by the Assembly and the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, should be convened, at the latest, early in 1986.

General Assembly resolution 38/176

19 December 1983 Meeting 102 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/38/703) without vote, 1 December (meeting 53); draft recommended by Economic and Social Council (resolution 1983/731; agenda item 79 (h)).
Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 2nd Committee 53; plenary 102.

In resolution 38/158 of 19 December on food problems, the Assembly also endorsed the $1.35 billion target approved by CFA for 1985-1986 for WFP regular resources, and called on contributing countries to ensure its timely achievement. In resolution 38/171 of the same date, the Assembly welcomed the progress made towards the attainment of the 1983-1984 target for voluntary contributions and urged Governments to make every effort to ensure full attainment of both targets.

Co-ordination of food activities

Cross-sectoral review

In an effort to enhance its role in co-ordinating economic and social activities of the United Nations system, the Economic and Social Council had decided in 1982(1) to review every six years, beginning in 1983, selected major issues in the proposed medium-term plans of United Nations organizations, and to recommend to the Assembly relative priorities for action. In February 1983, the Council, in decision 1983/101, identified food and agriculture as one of the two areas for such cross-sectoral review in 1983. The other area identified was population (see Chapter XIV of this section).

A June report ⁽²⁾ by the Secretary-General was organized in accordance with the provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade⁽³⁾ which required action by United Nations organizations. Accordingly, it concentrated on three major issues: agricultural production, food security, and trade in food and agricultural products. Despite favourable overall statistics of world food production, many countries were suffering from acute food shortages or expecting serious crop shortfalls, while an increasing number relied on grain imports for their survival. In developing countries as a whole, agricultural production had grown at a rate lower than the Strategy's 4 per cent annual target. For low-income countries in general and for a majority of African countries, food production had not kept pace with population growth. The number of people in the world suffering from malnutrition continued to rise and was estimated at 450 million to 500 million. While external assistance in food and agriculture had never reached desirable levels, contributing Governments had reduced their financial support to major multilateral sources of assistance, thus weakening the ability of the United Nations system to fulfil its mandated responsibilities. Continuing along existing lines would not lead to the achievement of the Strategy's goals, the Secretary-General believed.

Among areas which required further strengthening, the Secretary-General named world food security, stressing that access to food should be seen as an issue as vital as that of production. He noted the need for increased activities regarding vulnerable groups in the population, nutritional issues and the role of women in food and agricultural development. He also underscored the importance of protecting the world's natural resource base-soil, water and genetic resources-a problem which transcended developing countries and required special emphasis by the United Nations system.

While noting the increasing programme emphasis on research as an example of sound co-operation among various United Nations entities, the Secretary-General reported absence of progress in initiatives concerned with trade issues, market stability and price structures, and urged improved dialogue among Governments to allow realization of these needed agency programmes.

Chapter XII

Science and technology

With the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action providing the framework for restructuring international scientific and technological relations, various United Nations entities continued their efforts to strengthen the related capacities of developing countries in 1983 by mobilizing financial resources, enhancing institutional arrangements and improving the balance of technology transfer.

To appraise progress in implementing the Vienna Programme and map ways of strengthening developing countries' endogenous capacities, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC), responsible for overall co-ordination in science and technology within the United Nations system, prepared a first biennial review and a report on the guidelines for future projects. Several ad hoc panels of specialists were held to provide expert advice on specific problems such as human resources development, the role of regional organizations, and linkages between research and production.

The United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD) played a central role in financing various activities. Despite severe resource constraints, the System contributed to the development of projects financed by donors through trust fund arrangements, increased its portfolio of bankable projects and was instrumental in launching several projects on science and technology policy, planning and information, as well as several conferences promoting international scientific and technological co-operation. At the end of the year, total commitments stood at $44.2 million and its overall income at $45.1 million. In December, the General Assembly decided to convene another pledging conference for UNFSSTD in 1984 and invited Governments to indicate the amounts of their contributions at the earliest possible time (resolution 38/157).

Directing and policy-making functions were carried out by the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development and its Advisory Committee with assistance from the United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development. The Intergovernmental Committee held its special session in April/May 1983 to assess the UNFSSTD resource and contribution situation and consider the financing plan and the voting pattern for UNFSSTD'S Executive Board. At its regular fifth session in June, it covered a broad range of matters related to institutional arrangements, including the effectiveness of its own work, the role of regional advisory bodies, participation of non-governmental organizations (NGOs), as well as the activities of the Advisory Committee and the Centre for science and technology.

Providing substantive support to the Intergovernmental Committee and co-ordinating United Nations activities at the secretariat level, the Centre proceeded with establishing an advance technology alert system (ATAS), analysed levels of attainment of scientific and technological development and organized specialist panels. On the recommendation of the Intergovernmental Committee, the Assembly noted the revised estimates for a number of activities undertaken by the Centre in addition to the output indicated in the 1984-1985 programme budget (resolution 38/234). The Assembly also recommended that the Committee consider adopting, on an experimental basis, a biennial cycle of meetings, in conformity with the work of the Assembly's Second Committee (decision 38/429). The question of inter-agency co-operation was considered by the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, which held its fourth session at Geneva in January.

Regulation and promotion of the flow of technology from industrialized to developing countries was another important area of United Nations activities in 1983. At its sixth session, the United Nations Conference for Trade and Development (UNCTAD VI) (see Chapter IV of this section), reiterated the importance of an adequate legal and institutional framework for the transfer, acquisition and development of technology. The United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology at its October/November session made progress in formulating the code but left a number of issues unresolved, prompting the Assembly to decide on convening another conference in 1985 to complete the negotiations (resolution 38/153). The Assembly also addressed the question of the reverse transfer of technology-or brain drain-urging improved co-ordination of United Nations efforts and full participation by all Member States (resolution 38/154).

Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action

General aspects

Proceeding in 1983 with its efforts to implement the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology,⁽¹⁾ the United Nations strove to upgrade further the effectiveness of the Programme's 1981 operational plan⁽²⁾ which identified eight major programme areas to help make the advantages of science and technology more accessible to developing countries.

As requested by the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development in June 1982,⁽³⁾ the DIEC Director-General submitted a report proposing guidelines for the formulation of projects and programmes in order to strengthen the endogenous scientific and technological capacities in developing countries. The report was transmitted to the Committee by the Secretary-General on 25 April 1983.⁽⁴⁾ The proposed guidelines were based on information provided by 55 countries from the African, Asian, Latin American and other regions in response to a questionnaire sent to Member States, as well as on data from relevant national and international publications.

At a first stage, the guidelines were to assist countries, organizations and institutions at the national, subregional, regional and international levels in identifying the dimensions of specific programmes and projects and areas in which they could be developed. The Director-General suggested that the Committee might invite Member States to utilize, and United Nations entities to take into account the guidelines, and that it might call on the developed countries to keep the guidelines in view when supporting projects of developing countries.

Another major effort in promoting the Vienna Programme was the preparation of a first biennial review and appraisal of progress in implementing its operational plan, as requested by the Committee in 1981.⁽²⁾ Submitted by the Secretary-General in May 1983,⁽⁵⁾ the DIEC Director-General's review analysed information received from 55 countries in response to a questionnaire. Because the response rate for the African and Asian regions was much lower than the average of the whole response rate of 35 per cent, the Director-General called for caution in drawing inferences from the review, particularly in regional situations where data had been missing. In addition to testing the received data against other information, a statistical survey of indicators of scientific and technological achievements had been undertaken by the Centre for Science and Technology. Progress was appraised in each of the eight programme areas and some recommendations were made on ways to speed up implementation of the operational plan.

Intergovernmental Committee action. The Intergovernmental Committee welcomed, in a resolution of 17 June,⁽⁶⁾ the Director-General's report on the first biennial review. It requested that those Member States which had not responded to his questionnaire to do so not later than the end of 1983 and requested the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development and its 1984 ad hoc panels to assist in improving the analytical structure of future biennial reviews.

The Committee took note of the Director-General's report on guidelines for project formulation. Proposing that the report should form a basis for identifying areas for development of such projects, the Committee invited Member States, United Nations entities, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to take the guidelines into account and called on developed countries to keep them in view in assisting developing countries. It further invited the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD) to take into account the guidelines in assisting developing countries in formulating projects to be financed by it. The Committee requested the Director-General to review periodically the guidelines and propose additions when necessary.

In a decision of 20 June,⁽⁷⁾ the Committee took note of the Secretary General's April 1983 annual report on 1982 United Nations activities in science and technology for development.⁽⁸⁾

In a further decision of the same date,⁽⁹⁾ the Committee called for submission of an analytical report conforming with the United Nations biennial budgetary cycle and decided that from 1984 the report would be submitted at the end of each cycle. It further decided that the report should contain a progress review on implementation of the operational plan and that in alternate years, the Committee should be provided with written information on United Nations activities in science and technology.

Scientific and technological information

Proposed advance technology alert system

Preparation of proposals for the establishment of an advance technology alert system (ATAS) was a major area of activity of the Centre on Science and Technology, following the Intergovernmental Committee's 1981 decision to consider early assessment of new scientific and technological developments as an important element of the operational plan.⁽¹⁰⁾ In 1982, the Centre's proposal had been considered by the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC)⁽¹¹⁾ and by the Advisory Committee's ad hoc panel of specialists on the Integrated application of emerging and traditional technologies for development.⁽¹²⁾

At its February 1983 session (see below),⁽¹³⁾ the Advisory Committee suggested that the Centre proceed with developing ATAS based on an interdisciplinary, cross-sectoral analysis of existing information and the analysis and packaging of that information in a form most useful to policy makers and planners. The Advisory Committee also suggested that information on the integration of emerging and traditional technologies be taken into account and that developing countries be alerted to the potential of the most advanced technologies and their possible impact on traditional sectors.

Deliberations by these bodies resulted in a progress report and the proposal for the establishment and development of ATAS, which was annexed to a report by the Secretary-General to the Intergovernmental Committee on activities of the Centre.⁽¹⁴⁾ The major objectives of ATAS included alerting developing countries to the implications of new scientific and technological advances; assisting Governments in choosing new technologies and allocating human and financial resources, and assisting Member States in building national ATAS capacities. The expected primary output of ATAS was a semi-annual publication focusing on major scientific and technological breakthroughs and their implication in specific areas. As envisaged, the system was to rely heavily on inputs from a network of specialized research institutions and the international scientific community and to have links with United Nations regional commissions and national decision-making structures. It was proposed to launch ATAS early in 1984 as a four-year pilot project and convene a workshop of experts later in the year to evaluate the first issue of the ATAS publication.

By a decision of 17 June 1983,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee took note of the activities of the Centre with regard to initiating ATAS and welcomed the Advisory Committee's recommendations. It encouraged the Centre to proceed with the planned semi-annual publication and other related activities and recommended that all potential donors give financial support to ATAS during its launching phase in 1984-1985. The Centre was requested to present a progress report in 1984.

Proposed information network

By a decision of 17 June 1983,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee requested the Centre for science and technology, in co-operation with the Advisory Committee, United Nations organizations, the ACC Task Force for science and technology and other intergovernmental institutions, to prepare a study on the long-term plan of action for the establishment of a global scientific and technological information network. It requested the Centre to submit a progress report in 1984 and a final report in 1985. The Committee encouraged United Nations entities to continue strengthening or establishing national scientific and technological information systems and invited the Task Force to review the joint activities in this field in the light of the proposed study.

Scientific research and development

Emerging and traditional technologies

At its February 1983 session,⁽¹³⁾ the Advisory Committee endorsed the recommendations of a December 1982 ad hoc panel of experts at Los Baños, Philippines, on the integrated application of emerging and traditional technologies for development.⁽¹⁷⁾ It urged Governments and multilateral and bilateral institutions to promote such application through an immediate launching of pioneer and pilot projects in accordance with the criteria established by the panel, and suggested guidelines for compiling a portfolio of United Nations experiments and projects. With a view to wider dissemination of the panel's report, the Committee called for its publication along with the Advisory Committee's comments and supplementary information on United Nations activities. It proposed to organize in 1984 follow-up action on the design, management and implementation of pioneer projects, welcoming the possibility of assistance by China and some Japanese organizations.

The Advisory Committee recommendations were welcomed by the Intergovernmental Committee in a decision of 17 June 1983.⁽¹⁸⁾

Role of regional associations

At its February 1983 session,⁽¹³⁾ the Advisory Committee outlined background documentation for an ad hoc panel meeting on the role of regional associations and organizations in strengthening research and development and in the popularization of science and technology in developing countries. The panel was convened in accordance with an Advisory Committee February 1982 decision, subsequently approved by the Intergovernmental Committee.

The panel met at Tunis, Tunisia, from 6 to 9 April 1983.⁽¹⁹⁾ Describing NGOs and associations as an important resource in the use of science and technology, the panel called for their institutional interaction with Governments, full involvement in policy-making and planning and a greater role in promoting research and development and creating a demand for it. The main thrust of their efforts to popularize science and technology, the panel believed, should be directed to the issues concerning people's daily lives, leading to a democratization of knowledge and greater participation in decision-making. The panel also saw NGOs as playing an effective role in developing non-conventional approaches to the dissemination of knowledge on science and technology.

Link between research and production

Following its February 1982 decision⁽¹⁷⁾ to convene an ad hoc panel of specialists on linkages between research and development activities and the production system, the Advisory Committee, at its February 1983 session,⁽¹³⁾ suggested an outline for preparing background documentation for that panel. It stressed that in accordance with the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action it was useful to explore the role of national research and development corporations as intermediaries between research institutions, entrepreneurs and financing institutions, develop consulting firms and services, and pay greater attention to the demonstration and cost-benefit analysis of research and development. Hosted by the National Council of Science and Technology, the panel met from 11 to 14 October at Lima, Peru.⁽²⁰⁾ It offered a set of recommendations directed towards three groups of audiences. With regard to research and development institutions, the panel stressed that they should work together with public and private enterprises to assess the needs of the production system, deliver technical information to it and urge its involvement in the creation and management of comprehensive financing systems; extend access to the informal sector; provide technical services correlated with production needs; establish commercial infrastructure within research and development institutions; and urge multinational corporations operating in developing countries to contract the services of local research and development organizations. It also stressed the importance of appropriate management capabilities, training of researchers and industrial staff, mobility-oriented personnel policies and co-operation with consulting engineering organizations.

The panel addressed a number of recommendations to Governments, urging them to ensure representation of the production system in national science and technology bodies; confront the problems of informal urban and traditional rural sectors; expand the use of policy, planning and legal instruments; facilitate execution of joint research and development projects with other countries; and examine the role of external assistance in enhancing research and development links with production. In the panel's view, the United Nations, when giving assistance, should require participation of leaders from the production system in formulating and executing research and development projects; assist the least developed countries (LDCs) through national and sectoral studies and review the impact of new large loans from multilateral and bilateral funding agencies on the research and development sectors in developing countries.

To illustrate some of the concepts of reinforcing linkages between research and development activities and the production system, the panel proposed several pioneer projects in various countries and devised a methodology for their initiation. The suggested projects were grouped into three main categories covering user-oriented technology delivery mechanisms, linkages to improve productivity in under-utilized capacity, and identification of needs in LDCs.

Management training

The question of human resources development for the planning, management and implementation of science and technology programmes in developing countries was considered by an ad hoc panel of specialists (Kuwait, 8-11 January 1983), jointly organized by the Centre for Science and Technology and the Kuwait Institute for Scientific Research.⁽²¹⁾ The panel made a number of recommendations, directing attention towards the specific course of actions by entities concerned with the development process and application of science and technology, to it. It stressed that persons at policy and decision-making levels and middle-level managerial personnel, as well as practitioners of science and technology, should be sensitized to various aspects of science and technology management through seminars and flexible training schemes, which would take into account on-the-job experience and specific environmental and organizational factors. The panel recommended organizing inventories of management development schemes, training activities and research programmes to disseminate knowledge on opportunities and experiences and generate new training and research schemes. The United Nations, regional intergovernmental and some non-governmental organizations could be instrumental in promoting those activities and facilitating exchanges of expertise.

The panel suggested that maximum efficiency of those modular-type training schemes could be achieved through a balanced participation of various scientific research and educational institutions, government agencies involved in science and technology regulation and promotion, and productive sector enterprises. It offered guidelines for developing training schemes and proposed maintaining an informal network of their ex-participants. The panel stressed the need for inculcating principles and techniques of science and technology management at the national level and at individual institutions, and called for introducing those topics in university graduation and post-graduation courses in developing countries. It recommended continuous training of tutors and periodic updating of a roster of experts and management research projects for use by interested countries and organizations, and urged the United Nations and other international and regional organizations to promote improvement of science and technology management in developing countries. The panel urged the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development to keep the subject under constant review and called for concrete actions by the Intergovernmental Committee.

At its February 1983 session,⁽¹²⁾ the Advisory Committee endorsed the report of the Kuwait panel, noting that concentrated efforts to improve indigenous managerial capacity, through an introduction of various training projects in both developed and developing countries, could bring major benefits to the developing countries over a relatively short period of time. The Advisory Committee specifically underlined the panel's recommendations regarding the development of modular training schemes and compilation of inventories of various management and training activities and research projects at regional and sub-regional levels, and emphasized a need for enlarging national pools of training talent in developing countries. It stressed the important promotional and advisory role of the United Nations, particularly, the ACC Task Force of science and technology. While suggesting several essential prerequisites for fostering successful management systems in developing countries, the Advisory Committee said it would re-evaluate its views and recommendations on an annual basis.

The Advisory Committee's recommendations were welcomed by the Intergovernmental Committee on 17 June.⁽¹⁸⁾

Assessment of levels of attainment

The activities of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development aimed at analysing the levels of attainment of scientific and technological development among different countries, were summarized in a May 1983 report by the Secretary-General, covering the period from April 1982 to March 1983.⁽¹⁴⁾ To permit the designing of guidelines for programme evaluation, information exchange and the formulation of situation profiles on science and technology strategies, the Centre was establishing a computerized data base of relevant scientific and technological and socio-economic indicators of a non-sectoral nature. The data, obtained in co-operation with various United Nations entities, were organized in the form of country profiles and covered about 50 variables within the framework of the eight programme areas of the operational plan for implementation of the 1979 Vienna Plan of Action. The information was also analysed to develop alternative indicators for scientific and technological activities.

As a first step in the efforts to study the feasibility of developing suitable indicators, a meeting of nine United Nations entities and agencies—The Centre, UNESCO, UNIDO, UNCTAD, ILO, FAO, UNEP, WHO and UNRISD—was held at UNESCO headquarters in Paris, in November 1983. The Secretary-General's report covering the Centre's activities from March 1983 to February 1984,⁽²²⁾ noted that the participants discussed the purposes and criteria for selecting indicators and the limitations of the existing approaches, and proposed new methodologies to be elaborated under an inter-agency programme. An Advisory Committee panel was scheduled to meet at Vienna in May 1984 to measure the impact of science and technology on selected development objectives, its report to be considered by the Advisory Committee in 1985.

The Intergovernmental Committee, at its June 1983 session, considered the March 1982 report of the DICE Director-General on the assessment of levels of attainment,⁽²³⁾ along the guidelines suggested by the Secretary-General in a note of 14 April 1983. The Intergovernmental Committee took note of the report in a decision of 17 June.⁽¹⁸⁾
